Clair County, whose fertility is beyond description. These furnish to the husbandman bounteous return for his labors. Underneath these extend the almost inexhaustible fields of coal.

Founded in 1813, Belleville was incorporated as a city in the early 50's. Selected as the County Seat of St. Clair County, because of its central locality as well as its natural advantages, the history of its progress has amply justified the wisdom of its selection.

In its earlier years Belleville was an agricultural community, occupying the most prominent position among the cities of the Prairie State. In 1852 the first coal mine was sunk, opening a new era in its life. From this time, Belleville, while drawing none the less from its agricultural resources, entered upon its active career as an industrial community. The new industry not only furnished employment for a large multitude, but also a substantial basis for successful manufacturing.

Never a "boom" city, its growth from that day has been steady, until to-day Belleville is a city of twenty-five thousand people, the center of a rich and prosperous territory of twice as many more. As an industrial center it stands at the fore-front of the manufacturing centers of the state, and to-day it is forging forward with an impetus that astonishes even its warmest champions.

BELLEVILLE, ILLINOIS---A SKETCH.

Belleville, Illinois, a few of whose salient features we present herewith, is one of the most prosperous cities of our country, and with this present prosperity, it enjoys bright prospects for the future excelled by but few, if any, of the cities of to-day.

In the immediate vicinity of St. Louis, it lies in the very heart of the great industrial center of our nation, from which the mighty arteries of trade and industrial life pulsate to every confine of the land.

Surrounding Belleville, roll the richest of the alluvial prairies of St.

And yet there is no real foundation for such astonishment, for a moment's consideration of Belleville's natural advantages will convince the most skeptical that Belleville stands to-day but at the threshold of its real activities.

To its agricultural resources, which for almost a century have ministered to its prosperity, we have already alluded. Surpassing even these, however, are the advantages for manufacturing, to a few of which we will briefly refer.

First and foremost are its coal fields, furnishing the cheapest fuel to be found anywhere. Lake and deep wells supply water in abundance and of the best quality. Transportation facilities are ample. Three great trunk lines, the Southern, L. & N. and Illinois Central, connect Belleville with the outer world. These are united by a Belt Line built by Belleville, by means of which, without additional charge, any industry on either line has the benefit of all. But a few miles away at the river front all the great trunk lines converge. Belleville enjoys the rate of this center, to all points of the country. Add to this a large, intelligent labor supply, and you have the description of what might be deemed an ideal industrial center, and of what Belleville actually possesses.

This will explain the great diversity of industrial life prosperously flourishing in Belleville, glimpses of which may be gleaned from these pages. Here abound founderies, breweries, distilleries, agricultural implement manufactories, boiler works, brick manufactories, glass works, shoe factories, flour mills, nail mills and other industries too numerous to mention. These, together with the mining industries, give steady employment to an army of more than 7,000 men, the weekly pay-roll averaging $125,000 whilst the annual output runs upwards of $5,000,000. The products find a ready market all over the land as well as in foreign fields, and the trade mark of "Belleville, Ill." on any manufactured product has become the synonym of honest quality.

What is true of the industrial field applies equally favorably to the commercial activity. The business men while progressive, have built up their success upon true foundations of conservative honesty. Fearlessly have they met the opposition of the nearby metropolitan center, and how successfully the history of their progress tells. And it can safely be affirmed that in no city of its size were there less commercial failures during the last twenty-five years than in Belleville. For Belleville has in addition to its own population, tributary to it, a large prosperous farming community with numerous towns and villages, all connected, or soon to be, with Belleville by trolley lines. Amongst these prosperous communities are Lebanon, O'Fallon, Caseyville, Mascoutah, Millstadt, Smithton, Freeburg, Marissa and others.

Nor is this prosperous condition confined to manufacturers and merchants. It is most generally diffused amongst all the people, and is reflected in the savings accounts and the homes of the people. For Belleville is pre-eminently a city of homes. Merchant prince and clerk, manufacturer and employee, none are satisfied without homes owned by themselves. And Belleville proudly boasts that more homes are owned and less rented than in any other city of its size.

The financial prosperity of the people is even more fully reflected in the banks, of which the city has three. The Belleville Savings and First National have existed for years, meeting without a tremor financial cyclones that have swept others out of existence. The third, The Belleville Bank and Trust Company is of more recent date, but built upon the same solid foundations. These banks have a capital of $550,000 with surplus and undivided profits of over $300,000 more. The deposits reach nearly $4,000,000 of which almost $2,500,000 are time deposits, representing the savings of the prosperous and thrifty people of Belleville.

While thus advancing along material lines, Belleville has not neglected the equally important "cultural" side of life.

Long before the free school system was called into life, the pioneers had founded schools of note. Its public schools have always borne the reputation for depth, breadth and solidity. Its educational leaders were leaders indeed as the names of Bunsen, Slade and Raab will show. The thoroughness of the work is best attested by the high rank gained and held by Belleville students in the higher institutions of learning to which they advanced.

The school houses are many and commodious, and no child has ever been turned away for lack of room. In addition to the public schools, the various parochial schools care for hundreds of the children of their flocks.

Long before Carnegie's day, Belleville felt the need of a library and one was established under the auspices of the "Saengerbund." This latter organization has long since passed away, but its legacy formed the nucleus of the splendid Public Library of Belleville with its more than 23,000 volumes housed in its own building.

The influence of Germanic blood in Belleville is seen in its musical activities. Organizations both instrumental and vocal, have fostered and nourished this spirit. Amongst these are the Philharmonic, an orchestral organization of high rank, the Liederkrantz and Krunthalers, German, and the Choral Symphony, an American vocal society. All these are liberally supported by the citizens and serve to keep alive the musical spirit of the fathers. The opera house managed by Charles Linke, Jr., gives a good class of dramatic entertainment now, and present agitation will probably soon result in a more pretentious house.

The fraternal spirit is also very prominent, the following organizations being represented by flourishing local societies, Masonic, Elks, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, A. O. U. W., Knights of Honor, Harugari, Treubund, G. A. R. and numerous other benevolent orders connected with religious organizations.

The religious side has not been neglected. With the early pioneers came the church, and the denominations are all represented by flourishing congregations worshipping in structures worthy the cause. Protestantism is represented by numerous branches, both English and German, and the Catholic church in addition to three large churches has hospitals, orphanages and a large building for educational, social and recreational purposes.

With such influences at work it is not to be wondered at that Belleville has always been the nursery of great men, leaders in forum, legislative halls and in the fields of conflict. To mention all of these would transcend the limits of this booklet. A few of the many might be recalled, all of whom have wielded a potent influence in the affairs of state and nation. Amongst these of earliest days are Snyder, Hay, Reynolds, with Bissell, Shields, Trumbull, Koerner, Baker and Hay of a later generation, General Merritt, of the navy Niles, Kempff and Coghlan might also be mentioned, representatives of the great host who have achieved renown in their country's service.

The press of Belleville has always been of a high character. To-day five dailies, two German and three English are supported, and to their enterprise and enthusiasm much of Belleville's prosperity is due.

For years Belleville enjoyed the distinction of being the best macadamized city in the state. Whilst other cities still wallowed in the miry clay, Belleville with miles of macadamized streets and brick side walks was the envy of all. At the present time these streets are rapidly being supplanted by brick paved, and soon Belleville will again lead as she did in days gone by.

The civic spirit and pride is of the highest order. The business world is progressive, ever alert for the welfare of the city. Never polluted by politics, the municipal affairs are guarded by an organization of citizens known as the Good Government League, under whose inspiration the best citizens have sacrificed themselves for municipal service, and the municipal government in consequence is organized on lines of business principles of official rectitude and enterprise that comes near fulfilling the ideal of the municipal sociologist. In other lines the same spirit is active. The commercial world has its Merchants' Association, whilst the industrial is represented by a progressive Manufacturers' Association, and these, with other enterprising citizens, have formed a Commercial Club. All these organizations under the leadership of the Commercial Club, are ever alert to the interests of the city and its advancement, and the many new manufacturing secured as well as many local enterprises fostered, encouraged and forwarded bear witness to the enterprise and ability of the latter organization.

Situated upon rolling hills, Belleville enjoys the best natural advantages for sewerage. Its health record is enviable. It is well lighted by gas and electricity. The absence of crime, as well as of great conflagration, attest the efficiency of the police and fire departments; for both crime and fires are almost unknown. With food supply abundant, living is cheap. Connected with St. Louis by railroads, as well as by a trolley system which is at service every fifteen minutes, and which transports its passengers to all parts of the city without additional charge, Belleville enjoys all the advantages of city life without its disadvantages. For these reasons with others already given, Belleville is an ideal spot for true family life.

Such is Belleville, offering to industry a site for most profitable investment, to the commercial world a field for successful activity, to the wage-earner the opportunity for steady, remunerative employment, to the family an ideal home, to all "A fair show for every man."

THE ST. CLAIR COUNTY COURT HOUSE.

SOUTH SIDE OF THE PUBLIC SQUARE.

This is one of the finest Court Houses in the State. The front was built about the year 1860, and the addition about ten years ago. It is headquarters for all the county officers. The Circuit Court, the County Court and the Probate Court have each fine rooms and many famous lawyers have appeared in these court rooms. Much of the East St. Louis legal business has to come here to be finally adjudicated. * * * The County Jail is near, on First, between South Illinois and Spring streets. It is a fine modern institution capable of accommodating about 250 prisoners.

The trolleys of the East St. Louis Railway Company make their Belleville terminus here, and many lawyers occupy offices in the buildings back of the hotel. The National Hotel replaces one of the original taverns of the city, 'The Taunehill.

SOUTH ILLINOIS STREET.

THE PUBLIC SQUARE, LOOKING SOUTH.

South Illinois Street comes in here. The Public Library, City Hall, Central or High School, Illinois Central Depot, the offices of many leading lawyers and several prominent business houses are located on this important thoroughfare. The County Fair Grounds and the City Water Works are near the end of the street. The proposed City Park will also undoubtedly be established in this section at no distant day.

EAST MAIN STREET, LOOKING WEST.

The Old Mansion House on the corner of North High and East Main streets, still standing and now used as a liquor saloon, was made famous by reason of its having sheltered for a night in 1842 Charles Dickens, the great English author. It was noticed in his "American Notes." Directly opposite, in the 50's, stood the American House, a celebrated tavern in those days. Next to the Mansion House, on the other corner to the west, is the Thomas House, built about 1857 by Colonel John Thomas, one of the County pioneers.

BELLEVILLE BANK AND TRUST COMPANY.

Banking Rooms located at the Northeast section of the Public Square. Has a Capital Stock of $150,000, and began business in 1803. Does a general banking business. It has a fine Safe Deposit Department with boxes to rent, and Vaults protected by the latest burglar alarm system.

THE READING ROOM OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

LOCATION, CORNER SOUTH ILLINOIS AND WEST FIRST STREETS.

The importance of the Public Library as one of the educational institutions of Belleville may be realized when we consider that about 25,000 books are taken annually from these shelves to the homes of the readers, while over 13,000 persons, during the last year, sought profit and pleasure by using the Reading Room. Many young men spend much of their leisure time here in study.

THE NEWSPAPERS OF BELLEVILLE.

Belleville supports five dailies and a number of weeklies. They occupy buildings of their own, with modern machinery and facilities, and represent various phases of life and politics in the community. The News-Democrat is Democratic in faith, The Advocate-Republican, The Post-Zeitung is also Republican, The Record is an Independent, and The Tageblatt and Arbeiter-Zeitung represents the Independent-Social-Democratic elements.

THE CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL.

SOUTH ILLINOIS AND THIRD STREETS.

The public school system of Belleville ranks with the highest in the State. The school buildings are among the best and the Board of Education is liberal in policy in making appropriations, the expenditure during the past year being about $60,000. In the Central School there are ten recitation rooms beside the Assembly Hall and laboratories.
