Survey devoted to Massac County, alludes to a remarkable group of earthworks in the Black Bend of the Ohio, as an "extensive" system of "fortifications and mounds which probably belong to the same class as those in the Mississippi Bottom opposite St. Louis and at other points farther up the Ohio." In the report of Government survey by Dan W. Beckwith, in 1834, mention is made of a very large mound on the Kankakee River, near the mouth of Rock Creek, now a part of Kankakee County. This had a base diameter of about 100 feet, with a height of twenty feet, and contained the remains of a large number of Indians killed in a celebrated battle, in which the Illinois and Chippewas, and the Delawares and Shawnees took part. Near by were two other mounds, said to contain the remains of the chiefs of the two parties. In this case, mounds of prehistoric origin had probably been utilized as burial places by the aborigines at a comparatively recent period. Related to the Kankakee mounds, in location if not in period of construction, is a group of nineteen in number on the site of the present city of Morris, in Grundy County. Within a circuit of three miles of Ottawa it has been estimated that there were 3,000 mounds—though many of these are believed to have been of Indian origin. Indeed, the whole Illinois Valley is full of these silent monuments of a prehistoric age, but they are not generally of the conspicuous character of those found in the vicinity of St. Louis and attributed to the Mound Builders.—A very large and numerous group of these monuments exists along the bluffs of the Mississippi River, in the western part of Rock Island and Mercer Counties, chiefly between Drury's Landing and New Boston. Mr. J. E. Stevenson, in "The American Antiquarian," a few years ago, estimated that there were 2,500 of these within a circuit of fifty miles, located in groups of two or three to 100, varying in diameter from fifteen to 150 feet, with an elevation of two to fifteen feet. There are also numerous burial and sacrificial mounds in the vicinity of Chilli-cothe, on the Illinois River, in the northeastern part of Peoria County.—There are but few specimens of the animal or effigy mounds, of which so many exist in Wisconsin, to be found in Illinois; and the fact that these are found chiefly on Rock River, leaves no doubt of a common origin with the Wisconsin groups. The most remarkable of these is the celebrated "Turtle Mound," within the present limits of the city of Rockford—though some regard it as having more resemblance to an alligator. This figure, which is maintained in a good state of preservation by the citizens, has an extreme length of about 150 feet, by fifty in width at the front legs and thirty-nine at the hind legs, and an elevation equal to the height of a man. There are some smaller mounds in the vicinity, and some bird effigies on Rock River some six miles below Rockford. There is also an animal effigy near the village of Hanover, in Jo Daviess County, with a considerable group of round mounds and embankments in the immediate vicinity, besides a smaller effigy of a similar character on the north side of the Pecatonica in Stephenson County, some ten miles east of Freeport. The Rock River region seems to have been a favorite field for the operations of the mound-builders, as shown by the number and variety of these structures, extending from Sterling, in Whiteside County, to the Wisconsin State line. A large number of these were to be found in the vicinity of the Kishwaukee River in the southeastern part of Winnebago County. The famous prehistoric fortification on Rock River, just beyond the Wisconsin boundary—which seems to have been a sort of counterpart of the ancient Fort Azatlan on the Indiana side of the Wabash—appears to have had a close relation to the works of the mound-builders on the same stream in Illinois.

MOUND CITY, the county-seat of Pulaski County, on the Ohio River, seven miles north of Cairo; is on a branch line of the Illinois Central and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad. The chief industries are lumbering and ship-building; also has furniture, canning and other factories. One of the United States National Cemeteries is located here. The town has a bank and two weekly papers. Population (1890), 2,550; (1900), 2,705; (1903, est.), 3,500.

MOUNT CARMEL, a city and the county-seat of Wabash County; is the point of junction of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Southern Railroads, 132 miles northeast of Cairo, and 24 miles southwest of Vincennes, Ind.; situated on the Wabash River, which supplies good water-power for saw mills, flouring mills, and some other manufactures. The town has railroad shops and two daily newspapers. Agriculture and lumbering are the principal pursuits of the people of the surrounding district. Population (1890), 3,376; (1900), 4,311.

MOUNT CARROLL, the county-seat of Carroll County, an incorporated city, founded in 1843; is 128 miles southwest of Chicago, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. Farming, stock-raising and mining are the principal industries. It has five churches, excellent schools, good libraries, two daily and two semi-weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,836; (1900), 1,965.

MOUNT CARROLL SEMINARY, a young ladies' seminary, located at Mount Carroll, Carroll County; incorporated in 1852; had a faculty of thirteen members in 1896, with 126 pupils, property valued at $100,000, and a library of 5,000 volumes.

MOUNT MORRIS, a town in Ogle County, situated on the Chicago & Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 108 miles west by north from Chicago, and 24 miles southwest of Rockford; is the seat of Mount Morris College and flourishing public school; has handsome stone and brick buildings, three churches and two newspapers. Population (1900), 1,048.

MOUNT OLIVE, a village of Macoupin County, on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways, 68 miles southwest of Decatur; in a rich agricultural and coal-mining region. Population (1880), 709; (1890), 1,986; (1900), 2,935.

MOUNT PULASKI, a village and railroad junction in Logan County, 21 miles northwest of Decatur and 24 miles northeast of Springfield. Agriculture, coal-mining and stock-raising are leading industries. It is also an important shipping point for grain, and contains several elevators and flouring mills. Population (1880), 1,125; (1890), 1,357; (1900), 1,643.

MOUNT STERLING, a city, the county-seat of Brown County, midway between Quincy and Jacksonville, on the Wabash Railway. It is surrounded by a rich farming country, and has extensive deposits of clay and coal. It contains six churches and four schools (two large public, and two parochial). The town is lighted by electricity and has public water-works. Wagons, brick, tile and earthenware are manufactured here, and three weekly newspapers are published. Population (1880), 1,445; (1890), 1,635; (1900), 1,960.

MOUNT VERNON, a city and county-seat of Jefferson County, on three trunk lines of railroad, 77 miles east-southeast of St. Louis; is the center of a rich agricultural and coal region; has many flourishing manufactories, including car-works, a plow factory, flouring mills, pressed brick factory, canning factory, and is an important shipping-point for grain, vegetables and fruits. The Appellate Court for the Southern Grand Division is held here, and the city has nine churches, fine school buildings, a Carnegie library, two banks, heating plant, two daily and three weekly papers. Population (1890), 3,233; (1900), 5,216.

MOUNT VERNON & GRAYVILLE RAILROAD.
(See Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway.)

MOWEAQUA, a village of Shelby County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 16 miles south of Decatur; is in rich agricultural and stock-raising section; has coal mine, three banks and two newspapers. Population (1890), 848; (1900), 1,478.

MUDD, (Col.) John J., soldier, was born in St. Charles County, Mo., Jan. 9, 1820; his father having died in 1833, his mother removed to Pike County, Ill., to free her children from the influence of slavery. In 1849, and again in 1850, he made the overland journey to California, each time returning by the Isthmus, his last visit extending into 1851. In 1854 he engaged in the commission business in St. Louis, as head of the firm of Mudd & Hughes, but failed in the crash of 1857; then removed to Chicago, and, in 1861, was again in prosperous business. While on a business visit in New Orleans, in December, 1860, he had an opportunity of learning the growing spirit of secession, being advised by friends to leave the St. Charles Hotel in order to escape a mob. In September, 1861, he entered the army as Major of the Second Illinois Cavalry (Col. Silas Noble), and, in the next few months, was stationed successively at Cairo, Bird's Point and Paducah, Ky., and, in February, 1862, led the advance of General McClelland's division in the attack on Fort Donelson. Here he was severely wounded; but, after a few weeks in hospital at St. Louis, was sufficiently recovered to rejoin his regiment soon after the battle of Shiloh. Unable to perform cavalry duty, he was attached to the staff of General McClelland during the advance on Corinth, but, in October following, at the head of 400 men of his regiment, was transferred to the command of General McPherson. Early in 1863 he was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, and soon after to a colonelcy, taking part in the movement against Vicksburg. June 13, he was again severely wounded, but, a few weeks later, was on duty at New Orleans, and subsequently participated in the operations in Southwestern Louisiana and Texas. On May 1, 1864, he left Baton Rouge for Alexandria, as Chief of Staff to General McClelland, but two days later, while approaching Alexandria on board the steamer, was shot through the head and instantly killed. He was a gallant soldier and greatly beloved by his troops.

MULBERRY GROVE, a village of Bond County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis (Vandalia) Railroad, 8 miles northeast of Greenville; has a local newspaper. Pop. (1890), 750; (1900), 632.

MULLIGAN, James A., soldier, was born of Irish parentage at Utica, N. Y., June 25, 1830; in 1836 accompanied his parents to Chicago, and, after graduating from the University of St. Mary's of the Lake, in 1850, began the study of law. In 1851 he accompanied John Lloyd Stephens on his expedition to Panama, and on his return resumed his professional studies, at the same time editing "The Western Tablet," a weekly Catholic paper. At the outbreak of the Rebellion he recruited, and was made Colonel of the Twenty-third Illinois Regiment, known as the Irish Brigade. He served with great gallantry, first in the West and later in the East, being severely wounded and twice captured. He declined a Brigadier-Generalship, preferring to remain with his regiment. He was fatally wounded during a charge at the battle of Winchester. While being carried off the field he noticed that the colors of his brigade were endangered. "Lay me down and save the flag," he ordered. His men hesitated, but he repeated the command until it was obeyed. Before they returned he had been borne away by the enemy, and died a prisoner, at Winchester, Va., July 26, 1864.

MUNN, Daniel W., lawyer and soldier, was born in Orange County, Vt., in 1834; graduated at Thetford Academy in 1852, when he taught two years, meanwhile beginning the study of law. Removing to Coles County, Ill., in 1855, he resumed his law studies, was admitted to the bar in 1858, and began practice at Hillsboro, Montgomery County. In 1862 he joined the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, with the rank of Adjutant, but the following year was appointed Colonel of the First Alabama Cavalry. Compelled to retire from the service on account of declining health, he returned to Cairo, Ill., where he became editor of "The Daily News"; in 1866 was elected to the State Senate, serving four years; served as Presidential Elector in 1868; was the Republican nominee for Congress in 1870, and the following year was appointed by President Grant Supervisor of Internal Revenue for the District including the States of Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. Removing to Chicago, he began practice there in 1875, in which he has since been engaged. He has been prominently connected with a number of important cases before the Chicago courts.

MUNN, Sylvester W., lawyer, soldier and legislator, was born about 1818, and came from Ohio at thirty years of age, settling at Wilmington, Will County, afterwards removing to Joliet, where he practiced law. During the War he served as Major of the Yates Phalanx (Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers); later, was State's Attorney for Will County and State Senator in the Thirty-first and Thirty-second General Assemblies. Died, at Joliet, Sept. 11, 1888. He was a member of the Illinois State Bar Association from its organization.

MURPHY, Everett J., ex-Member of Congress, was born in Nashville, Ill., July 24, 1852; in early youth removed to Sparta, where he was educated in the high schools of that place; at the age of fourteen he became clerk in a store; in 1877 was elected City Clerk of Sparta, but the next year resigned to become Deputy Circuit Clerk at Chester, remaining until 1882, when he was elected Sheriff of Randolph County. In 1886 he was chosen a Representative in the General Assembly, and, in 1889, was appointed, by Governor Fifer, Warden of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester, but retired from this position in 1892, and removed to East St. Louis. Two years later he was elected as a Republican to the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Twenty-first District, but was defeated for re-election by a small majority in 1896, by Jehu Baker, Democrat and Populist. In 1899 Mr. Murphy was appointed Warden of the State Penitentiary at Joliet, to succeed Col. R. W. McClaghry.

MURPHYSBORO, the county-seat of Jackson County, situated on the Big Muddy River and on main line of the Mobile & Ohio, the St. Louis Division of the Illinois Central, and a branch of the St. Louis Valley Railroads, 52 miles north of Cairo and 90 miles south-southeast of St. Louis. Coal of a superior quality is extensively mined in the vicinity. The city has a foundry, machine shops, skewer factory, furniture factory, flour and saw mills, thirteen churches, four schools, three banks, two daily and three weekly newspapers, city and rural free mail delivery. Population (1890), 3,380; (1900), 6,463; (1903, est.), 7,500.

MURPHYSBORO & SHAWNEETOWN RAILROAD. (See Carbondale & Shawneetown, St. Louis Southern and St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroads.)

NAPERVILLE, a city of Du Page County, on the west branch of the Du Page River and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 30 miles west-southwest of Chicago, and 9 miles east of Aurora. It has three banks, a weekly newspaper, stone quarries, couch factory, and nine churches; is also the seat of the Northwestern College, an institution founded in 1861 by the Evangelical Association; the college now has a normal school department. Population (1890), 2,216; (1900), 2,629.

NAPLES, a town of Scott County, on the Illinois River and the Hannibal and Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, 21 miles west of Jacksonville. Population (1890), 452; (1900), 398.

NASHVILLE, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Washington County, on the Centralia & Chester and the Louisville & Nashville Railways; is 120 miles south of Springfield and 50 miles east by south from St. Louis. It stands in a coal-producing and rich agricultural region. There are two coal mines within the corporate limits, and two large flouring mills do a considerable business. There are numerous churches, public schools, including a high school, a State bank, and four weekly papers. Population (1880), 2,222; (1890), 2,084; (1900), 2,184.

NAUVOO, a city in Hancock County, at the head of the Lower Rapids on the Mississippi, between Fort Madison and Keokuk, Iowa. It was founded by the Mormons in 1840, and its early growth was rapid. After the expulsion of the "Saints" in 1846, it was settled by a colony of French Icarians, who introduced the culture of grapes on a large scale. They were a sort of communistic order, but their experiment did not prove a success, and in a few years they gave place to another class, the majority of the population now being of German extraction. The chief industries are agriculture and horticulture. Large quantities of grapes and strawberries are raised and shipped, and considerable native wine is produced. Population (1880), 1,402; (1890), 1,208; (per census 1900), 1,321. (See also Mormons.)

NAVIGABLE STREAMS (by Statute). Following the example of the French explorers, who chiefly followed the water-ways in their early explorations, the early permanent settlers of Illinois, not only settled, to a great extent, on the principal streams, but later took especial pains to maintain their navigable character by statute. This was, of course, partly due to the absence of improved highways, but also to the belief that, as the country developed, the streams would become extremely valuable, if not indispensable, especially in the transportation of heavy commodities. Accordingly, for the first quarter century after the organization of the State Government, one of the questions receiving the attention of the Legislature, at almost every session, was the enactment of laws affirming the navigability of certain streams now regarded as of little importance, or utterly insignificant, as channels of transportation. Legislation of this character began with the first General Assembly (1819), and continued, at intervals, with reference to one or two of the more important interior rivers of the State, as late as 1867. Besides the Illinois and Wabash, still recognized as navigable streams, the following were made the subject of legislation of this character: Beaucoup Creek, a branch of the Big Muddy, in Perry and Jackson Counties (law of 1819); Big Bay, a tributary of the Ohio in Pope County (Acts of 1833); Big Muddy, to the junction of the East and West Forks in Jefferson County (1835), with various subsequent amendments; Big Vermilion, declared navigable (1831); Bon Pas, a branch of the Wabash, between Wabash and Edwards Counties (1831); Cache River, to main fork in Johnson County (1819); Des Plaines, declared navigable (1839); Embarras (1831), with various subsequent acts in reference to improvement; Fox River, declared navigable to the Wisconsin line (1840), and Fox River Navigation Company, incorporated (1855); Kankakee and Iroquois Navigation & Manufacturing Company, incorporated (1847), with various changes and amendments (1851-65); Kaskaskia (or Okaw), declared navigable to a point in Fayette County north of Vandalia (1819), with various modifying acts (1823-67); Macoupin Creek, to Carrollton and Alton road (1837); Piasa, declared navigable in Jersey and Madison Counties (1861); Rock River Navigation Company, incorporated (1841), with subsequent acts (1845-67); Sangamon River, declared navigable to Third Principal Meridian—east line of Sangamon County—(1822), and the North Fork of same to Champaign County (1845); Sny-Carty (a bayou of the Mississippi), declared navigable in Pike and Adams Counties (1859); Spoon River, navigable to Cameron's mill in Fulton County (1835), with various modifying acts (1845-53); Little Wabash Navigation Company, incorporated and river declared navigable to McCawley's bridge—probably in Clay County—(1826), with various subsequent acts making appropriations for its improvement; Skillet Fork (a branch of the Little Wabash), declared navigable to Slocum's Mill in Marion County (1837), and to Ridgway Mills (1846). Other acts passed at various times declared a number of unimportant streams navigable, including Big Creek in Fulton County, Crooked Creek in Schuyler County, Lusk's Creek in Pope County, McKee's Creek in Pike County, Seven Mile Creek in Ogle County, besides a number of others of similar character.

NEALE, THOMAS M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Fauquier County, Va., 1796; while yet a child removed with his parents to Bowling Green, Ky., and became a common soldier in the War of 1812; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1824, and began the practice of law; served as Colonel of a regiment raised in Sangamon and Morgan Counties for the Winnebago War (1827), and afterwards as Surveyor of Sangamon County, appointing Abraham Lincoln as his deputy. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, for a number of years, at Springfield. Died, August 7, 1840.

NEECE, William H., ex-Congressman, was born, Feb. 26, 1831, in what is now a part of Logan County, Ill., but which was then within the limits of Sangamon; was reared on a farm and attended the public schools in McDonough County; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1858, and has been ever since engaged in practice. His political career began in 1861, when he was chosen a member of the City Council of Macomb. In 1864 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1869, a member of the Constitutional Convention. In 1871 he was again elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1878, to the State Senate. From 1883 to 1887 he represented the Eleventh Illinois District in Congress, as a Democrat, but was defeated for re-election in 1890 by William H. Gest, Republican.

NEGROES. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

NEOGA, a village of Cumberland County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 20 miles southwest of Charleston; has a bank, two newspapers, some manufactories, and ships grain, hay, fruit and live-stock. Pop. (1890), 829; (1900), 1,126.

NEPONSET, a village and station on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in Bureau County, 4 miles southwest of Mendota. Population (1880), 652; (1890), 542; (1900), 516.

NEW ALBANY & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

NEW ATHENS, a village of St. Clair County, on the St. Louis & Cairo "Short Line" (now Illinois Central) Railroad, at the crossing of the Kaskaskia River, 31 miles southeast of St. Louis; has one newspaper and considerable grain trade. Population (1880), 603; (1890), 624; (1900), 856.

NEW BERLIN, a village of Sangamon County, on the Wabash Railway, 17 miles west of Springfield. Population (1880), 403; (1900), 533.

Newberry, an early business man of Chicago, who left half of his estate (aggregating over $2,000,000) for the purpose. The property bequeathed was largely in real estate, which has since greatly increased in value. The library was established in temporary quarters in 1887, and the first section of a permanent building was opened in the autumn of 1893. By that time there had been accumulated about 160,000 books and pamphlets. A collection of nearly fifty portraits—chiefly of eminent Americans, including many citizens of Chicago—was presented to the library by G. P. A. Healy, a distinguished artist, since deceased. The site of the building occupies an entire block, and the original design contemplates a handsome front on each of the four streets, with a large rectangular court in the center. The section already completed is massive and imposing, and its interior is admirably adapted to the purposes of a library, and at the same time rich and beautiful. When completed, the building will have a capacity for four to six million volumes.

NEWBERRY, Walter C., ex-Congressman, was born at Sangerfield, Oneida County, N. Y., Dec. 23, 1835. Early in the Civil War he enlisted as a private, and rose, step by step, to a colonelcy, and was mustered out as Brevet Brigadier-General. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Fourth Illinois District in the Fifty-second Congress (1891-93). His home is in Chicago.

NEWBERRY, Walter L., merchant, banker and philanthropist, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Sept. 18, 1804, descended from English ancestry. He was President Jackson's personal appointee to the United States Military Academy at West Point, but was prevented from taking the examination by sickness. Subsequently he embarked in business at Buffalo, N. Y., going to Detroit in 1828, and settling at Chicago in 1833. After engaging in general merchandising for several years, he turned his attention to banking, in which he accumulated a large fortune. He was a prominent and influential citizen, serving several terms as President of the Board of Education, and being, for six years, the President of the Chicago Historical Society. He died at sea, Nov. 6, 1868, leaving a large estate, one-half of which he devoted, by will, to the founding of a free reference library in Chicago. (See Newberry Library.)

NEW BOSTON, a city of Mercer County, on the Mississippi River, at the western terminus of the Galva and New Boston Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. Population (1890), 445; (1900), 703.

NEW BRIGHTON, a village of St. Clair County and suburb of East St. Louis. Population (1890), 868.

NEW BURNSIDE, a village of Johnson County, on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 53 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1880), 650; (1890), 596; (1900), 468.

NEW DOUGLAS, a village in Madison County, on the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad; in farming and fruit-growing region; has coal mine, flour mill and newspaper. Population (1900), 469.

NEWELL, John, Railway President, was born at West Newbury, Mass., March 31, 1830, being directly descended from "Pilgrim" stock. At the age of 16 he entered the employment of the Cheshire Railroad in New Hampshire. Eighteen months later he was appointed an assistant engineer on the Vermont Central Railroad, and placed in charge of the construction of a 10-mile section of the line. His promotion was rapid, and, in 1850, he accepted a responsible position on the Champlain & St. Lawrence Railroad. From 1850 to 1856 he was engaged in making surveys for roads in Kentucky and New York, and, during the latter year, held the position of engineer of the Cairo City Company, of Cairo, Ill. In 1857 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, as Division Engineer, where his remarkable success attracted the attention of the owners of the old Winona & St. Peter Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern system), who tendered him the presidency. This he accepted, but, in 1864, was made President of the Cleveland & Toledo Railroad. Four years later, he accepted the position of General Superintendent and Chief Engineer of the New York Central Railroad, but resigned, in 1869, to become Vice-President of the Illinois Central Railroad. In 1871 he was elevated to the presidency, but retired in September, 1874, to accept the position of General Manager of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad, of which he was elected President, in May, 1883, and continued in office until the time of his death, which occurred at Youngstown, Ohio, August 25, 1894.

NEWHALL, (Dr.) Horatio, early physician and newspaper publisher, came from St. Louis, Mo., to Galena, Ill., in 1827, and engaged in mining and smelting, but abandoned this business, the following year, for the practice of his profession; soon afterward became interested in the publication of "The Miners' Journal," and still later in "The Galena Advertiser," with which Hooper Warren and Dr. Philleo were associated.

In 1830 he became a Surgeon in the United States Army, and was stationed at Fort Winnebago, but retired from the service, in 1832, and returned to Galena. When the Black Hawk War broke out he volunteered his services, and, by order of General Scott, was placed in charge of a military hospital at Galena, of which he had control until the close of the war. The difficulties of the position were increased by the appearance of the Asiatic cholera among the troops, but he seems to have discharged his duties with satisfaction to the military authorities. He enjoyed a wide reputation for professional ability, and had an extensive practice. Died, Sept. 19, 1870.

NEWMAN, a village of Douglas County, on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway, 52 miles east of Decatur; has a bank, a newspaper, canning factory, broom factory, electric lights, and large trade in agricultural products and livestock. Population (1890), 990; (1900), 1,166.

NEWSPAPERS, EARLY. The first newspaper published in the Northwest Territory, of which the present State of Illinois, at the time, composed a part, was "The Centinel of the Northwest Territory," established at Cincinnati by William Maxwell, the first issue appearing in November, 1793. This was also the first newspaper published west of the Allegheny Mountains. In 1796 it was sold to Edmund Freeman and assumed the name of "Freeman's Journal." Nathaniel Willis (grandfather of N. P. Willis, the poet) established "The Scioto Gazette," at Chillicothe, in 1796. "The Western Spy and Hamilton Gazette" was the third paper in Northwest Territory (also within the limits of Ohio), founded in 1799. Willis's paper became the organ of the Territorial Government on the removal of the capital to Chillicothe, in 1800.

The first newspaper in Indiana Territory (then including Illinois) was established by Elihu Stout at Vincennes, beginning publication, July 4, 1804. It took the name of "The Western Sun and General Advertiser," but is now known as "The Western Sun," having had a continuous existence for ninety-five years.

The first newspaper published in Illinois Territory was "The Illinois Herald," but, owing to the absence of early files and other specific records, the date of its establishment has been involved in some doubt. Its founder was Matthew Duncan (a brother of Joseph Duncan, who was afterwards a member of Congress and Governor of the State from 1834 to 1838), and its place of publication Kaskaskia, at that time the Territorial capital. Duncan, who was a native of Kentucky, brought a press and a primitive printer's outfit with him from that State. Gov. John Reynolds, who came as a boy to the "Illinois Country" in 1800, while it was still a part of the "Northwest Territory," in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," has fixed the date of the first issue of this paper in 1809, the same year in which Illinois was severed from Indiana Territory and placed under a separate Territorial Government. There is good reason, however, for believing that the Governor was mistaken in this statement. If Duncan brought his press to Illinois in 1809—which is probable—it does not seem to have been employed at once in the publication of a newspaper, as Hooper Warren (the founder of the third paper established in Illinois) says it "was for years only used for the public printing." The earliest issue of "The Illinois Herald" known to be in existence, is No. 32 of Vol. II, and bears date, April 18, 1816. Calculating from these data, if the paper was issued continuously from its establishment, the date of the first issue would have been Sept. 6, 1814. Corroborative evidence of this is found in the fact that "The Missouri Gazette," the original of the old "Missouri Republican" (now "The St. Louis Republic"), which was established in 1808, makes no mention of the Kaskaskia paper before 1814, although communication between Kaskaskia and St. Louis was most intimate, and these two were, for several years, the only papers published west of Vincennes, Ind.

In August, 1817, "The Herald" was sold to Daniel P. Cook and Robert Blackwell, and the name of the paper was changed to "The Illinois Intelligencer." Cook—who had previously been Auditor of Public Accounts for the Territory, and afterwards became a Territorial Circuit Judge, the first Attorney-General under the new State Government, and, for eight years, served as the only Representative in Congress from Illinois—for a time officiated as editor of "The Intelligencer," while Blackwell (who had succeeded to the Auditorship) had charge of the publication. The size of the paper, which had been four pages of three wide columns to the page, was increased, by the new publishers, to four columns to the page. On the removal of the State capital to Vandalia, in 1820, "The Intelligencer" was removed thither also, and continued under its later name, afterwards becoming, after a change of management, an opponent of the scheme for the calling of a State Convention to revise the State Constitution with a view to making Illinois a slave State. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

The second paper established on Illinois soil was "The Shawnee Chief," which began publication at Shawneetown, Sept. 5, 1818, with Henry Eddy—who afterwards became a prominent lawyer of Southern Illinois—as its editor. The name of "The Chief" was soon afterwards changed to "The Illinois Emigrant," and some years later, became "The Shawneetown Gazette." Among others who were associated with the Shawneetown paper, in early days, was James Hall, afterwards a Circuit Judge and State Treasurer, and, without doubt, the most prolific and popular writer of his day in Illinois. Later, he established "The Illinois Magazine" at Vandalia, subsequently removed to Cincinnati, and issued under the name of "The Western Monthly Magazine." He was also a frequent contributor to other magazines of that period, and author of several volumes, including "Legends of the West" and "Border Tales." During the contest over the slavery question, in 1823-24, "The Gazette" rendered valuable service to the anti-slavery party by the publication of articles in opposition to the Convention scheme, from the pen of Morris Birkbeck and others.

The third Illinois paper—and, in 1823-24, the strongest and most influential opponent of the scheme for establishing slavery in Illinois—was "The Edwardsville Spectator," which began publication at Edwardsville, Madison County, May 23, 1819. Hooper Warren was the publisher and responsible editor, though he received valuable aid from the pens of Governor Coles, George Churchill, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, Morris Birkbeck and others. (See Warren, Hooper.) Warren sold "The Spectator" to Rev. Thomas Lippincott in 1825, and was afterwards associated with papers at Springfield, Galena, Chicago and elsewhere.

The agitation of the slavery question (in part, at least) led to the establishment of two new papers in 1822. The first of these was "The Republican Advocate," which began publication at Kaskaskia, in April of that year, under the management of Elias Kent Kane, then an aspirant to the United States Senatorship. After his election to that office in 1824, "The Advocate" passed into the hands of Robert K. Fleming, who, after a period of suspension, established "The Kaskaskia Recorder," but, a year or two later, removed to Vandalia. "The Star of the West" was established at Edwardsville, as an opponent of Warren's "Spectator," the first issue making its appearance, Sept. 14, 1822, with Theophilus W. Smith, afterwards a Justice of the Supreme Court, as its reputed editor. A few months later it passed into new hands, and, in August, 1823, assumed the name of "The Illinois Republican." Both "The Republican Advocate" and "The Illinois Republican" were zealous organs of the pro-slavery party.

With the settlement of the slavery question in Illinois, by the election of 1824, Illinois journalism may be said to have entered upon a new era. At the close of this first period there were only five papers published in the State—all established within a period of ten years; and one of these ("The Illinois Republican," at Edwardsville) promptly ceased publication on the settlement of the slavery question in opposition to the views which it had advocated. The next period of fifteen years (1825-40) was prolific in the establishment of new newspaper ventures, as might be expected from the rapid increase of the State in population, and the development in the art of printing during the same period. "The Western Sun," established at Belleville (according to one report, in December, 1825, and according to another, in the winter of 1827-28) by Dr. Joseph Green, appears to have been the first paper published in St. Clair County. This was followed by "The Pioneer," begun, April 25, 1829, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, with the indomitable Dr. John M. Peck, author of "Peck's Gazetteer," as its editor. It was removed in 1836 to Upper Alton, when it took the name of "The Western Pioneer and Baptist Banner." Previous to this, however, Hooper Warren, having come into possession of the material upon which he had printed "The Edwardsville Spectator," removed it to Springfield, and, in the winter of 1826-27, began the publication of the first paper at the present State capital, which he named "The Sangamo Gazette." It had but a brief existence. During 1830, George Forquer, then Attorney-General of the State, in conjunction with his half-brother, Thomas Ford (afterwards Governor), was engaged in the publication of a paper called "The Courier," at Springfield, which was continued only a short time. The earliest paper north of Springfield appears to have been "The Hennepin Journal," which began publication, Sept. 15, 1827. "The Sangamo Journal"—now "The Illinois State Journal," and the oldest paper of continuous existence in the State—was established at Springfield by Simeon and Josiah Francis (cousins from Connecticut), the first issue bearing date, Nov. 10, 1831. Before the close of the same year James G. Edwards, afterwards the founder of "The Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye," began the publication of "The Illinois Patriot" at Jacksonville. Another paper, established the same year, was "The Gazette" at Vandalia, then the State capital. (See Forquer, George; Ford, Thomas; Francis, Simeon.)

At this early date the development of the lead mines about Galena had made that place a center of great business activity. On July 8, 1828, James Jones commenced the issue of "The Miners' Journal," the first paper at Galena. Jones died of cholera in 1833, and his paper passed into other hands. July 29, 1829, "The Galena Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald" began publication, with Drs. Horatio Newhall and Addison Philleo as editors, and Hooper Warren as publisher, but appears to have been discontinued before the expiration of its first year. "The Galenian" was established as a Democratic paper by Philleo, in May, 1832, but ceased publication in September, 1836. "The Northwestern Gazette and Galena Advertiser," founded in November, 1834, by Loring and Bartlett (the last named afterwards one of the founders of "The Quincy Whig"), has had a continuous existence, being now known as "The Galena Advertiser." Benjamin Mills, one of the most brilliant lawyers of his time, was editor of this paper during a part of the first year of its publication.

Robert K. Fleming, who has already been mentioned as the successor of Elias Kent Kane in the publication of "The Republican Advocate," at Kaskaskia, later published a paper for a short time at Vandalia, but, in 1827, removed his establishment to Edwardsville, where he began the publication of "The Corrector." The latter was continued a little over a year, when it was suspended. He then resumed the publication of "The Recorder" at Kaskaskia. In December, 1833, he removed to Belleville and began the publication of "The St. Clair Gazette," which afterwards passed, through various changes of owners, under the names of "The St. Clair Mercury" and "Representative and Gazette." This was succeeded, in 1839, by "The Belleville Advocate," which has been published continuously to the present time.

Samuel S. Brooks (the father of Austin Brooks, afterwards of "The Quincy Herald") at different times published papers at various points in the State. His first enterprise was "The Crisis" at Edwardsville, which he changed to "The Illinois Advocate," and, at the close of his first year, sold out to Judge John York Sawyer, who united it with "The Western Plowboy," which he had established a few months previous. "The Advocate" was removed to Vandalia, and, on the death of the owner (who had been appointed State Printer), was consolidated with "The Illinois Register," which had been established in 1836. The new paper took the name of "The Illinois Register and People's Advocate," in 1839 was removed to Springfield, and is now known as "The Illinois State Register."

Other papers established between 1830 and 1840 include: "The Vandalia Whig" (1831); "The Alton Spectator," the first paper published in Alton (January, 1834); "The Chicago Democrat," by John Calhoun (Nov. 26, 1833); "The Beardstown Chronicle and Illinois Bounty Land Advertiser," by Francis A. Arenz (July 29, 1833); "The Alton American" (1833); "The White County News," at Carmi (1833); "The Danville Enquirer" (1833); "The Illinois Champion," at Peoria (1834); "The Mount Carmel Sentinel and Wabash Advocate" (1834); "The Illinois State Gazette and Jacksonville News," at Jacksonville (1835); "The Illinois Argus and Bounty Land Register," at Quincy (1835); "The Rushville Journal and Military Tract Advertiser" (1835); "The Alton Telegraph" (1836); "The Alton Observer" (1836); "The Carthaginian," at Carthage (1836); "The Bloomington Observer" (1837); "The Backwoodsman," founded by Prof. John Russell, at Grafton, and the first paper published in Greene County (1837); "The Quincy Whig" (1838); "The Illinois Statesman," at Paris, Edgar County (1838); "The Peoria Register" (1838). The second paper to be established in Chicago was "The Chicago American," whose initial number was issued, June 8, 1835, with Thomas O. Davis as proprietor and editor. In July, 1837, it passed into the hands of William Stuart & Co., and, on April 9, 1839, its publishers began the issue of the first daily ever published in Chicago. "The Chicago Express" succeeded "The American" in 1842, and, in 1844, became the forerunner of "The Chicago Journal." The third Chicago paper was "The Commercial Advertiser," founded by Hooper Warren, in 1836. It lived only about a year. Zebina Eastman, who was afterwards associated with Warren, and became one of the most influential journalistic opponents of slavery, arrived in the State in 1839, and, in the latter part of that year, was associated with the celebrated Abolitionist, Benjamin Lundy, in the preliminary steps for the issue of "The Genius of Universal Emancipation," projected by Lundy at Lowell, in La Salle County. Lundy's untimely death, in August, 1839, however, prevented him from seeing the consummation of his plan, although Eastman lived to carry it out in part. A paper whose career, although extending only a little over one year, marked an era in Illinois journalism, was "The Alton Observer," its history closing with the assassination of its editor, Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, on the night of Nov. 8, 1837, while unsuccessfully attempting to protect his press from destruction, for the fourth time, by a pro-slavery mob. Humiliating as was this crime to every law-abiding Illinoisan, it undoubtedly strengthened the cause of free speech and assisted in hastening the downfall of the institution in whose behalf it was committed.

That the development in the field of journalism, within the past sixty years, has more than kept pace with the growth in population, is shown by the fact that there is not a county in the State without its newspaper, while every town of a few hundred population has either one or more. According to statistics for 1898, there were 605 cities and towns in the State having periodical publications of some sort, making a total of 1,709, of which 174 were issued daily, 34 semi-weekly, 1,205 weekly, 28 semi-monthly, 238 monthly, and the remainder at various periods ranging from tri-weekly to eight times a year.

NEWTON, the county-seat of Jasper County, situated on the Embarras River, at the intersection of subsidiary lines of the Illinois Central Railroad from Peoria and Effingham; is an incorporated city, was settled in 1828, and made the county-seat in 1836. Agriculture, coal-mining and dairy farming are the principal pursuits in the surrounding region. The city has water-power, which is utilized to some extent in manufacturing, but most of its factories are operated by steam. Among these establishments are flour and saw mills, and grain elevators. There are a half-dozen churches, a good public school system, including parochial school and high school, besides two banks and three weekly papers. Population (1890), 1,428; (1900), 1,630.

NEW YORK, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY (Nickel Plate), a line 522.47 miles in length, of which (1898) only 9.96 miles are operated in Illinois. It owns no track in Illinois, but uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad (9.96 miles in length), of which it has financial control, to enter the city of Chicago. The total capitalization of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis, in 1898, is $50,222,568, of which $19,425,000 is in bonds.—(HISTORY.) The New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad was incorporated under the laws of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois in 1881, construction begun immediately, and the road put in operation in 1882. In 1885 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1887, and reorganized by the consolidation of various eastern lines with the Fort Wayne & Illinois Railroad, forming the line under its present name. The road between Buffalo, N. Y., and the west line of Indiana is owned by the Company, but, for its line in Illinois, it uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad, of which it is the lessee, as well as the owner of its capital stock. The main line of the "Nickel Plate" is controlled by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway, which owns more than half of both the preferred and common stock.

NIANTIC, a town in Macon County, on the Wabash Railway, 27 miles east of Springfield. Agriculture is the leading industry. The town has three elevators, three churches, school, coal mine, a newspaper and a bank. Pop. (1900), 654.

NICOLAY, John George, author, was born in Essingen, Bavaria, Feb. 26, 1832; at 6 years of age was brought to the United States, lived for a time in Cincinnati, attending the public schools there, and then came to Illinois; at 16 entered the office of "The Pike County Free Press" at Pittsfield, and, while still in his minority, became editor and proprietor of the paper. In 1857 he became Assistant Secretary of State under O. M. Hatch, the first Republican Secretary, but during Mr. Lincoln's candidacy for President, in 1860, aided him as private secretary, also acting as a correspondent of "The St. Louis Democrat." After the election he was formally selected by Mr. Lincoln as his private secretary, accompanying him to Washington and remaining until Mr. Lincoln's assassination. In 1865 he was appointed United States Consul at Paris, remaining until 1869; on his return for some time edited "The Chicago Republican"; was also Marshal of the United States Supreme Court in Washington from 1872 to 1887. Mr. Nicolay is author, in collaboration with John Hay, of "Abraham Lincoln: A History," first published serially in "The Century Magazine," and later issued in ten volumes; of "The Outbreak of the Rebellion" in "Campaigns of the Civil War," besides numerous magazine articles. He lives in Washington, D. C.

NICOLET, Jean, early French explorer, came from Cherbourg, France, in 1618, and, for several years, lived among the Algonquins, whose language he learned and for whom he acted as interpreter. On July 4, 1634, he discovered Lake Michigan, then called the "Lake of the Illinois," and visited the Chippewas, Menominees and Winnebagoes, in the region about Green Bay, among whom he was received kindly. From the Mascoutins, on the Fox River (of Wisconsin), he learned of the Illinois Indians, some of whose northern villages he also visited. He subsequently returned to Quebec, where he was drowned, in October, 1642. He was probably the first Caucasian to visit Wisconsin and Illinois.

NILES, Nathaniel, lawyer, editor and soldier, born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1817; attended an academy at Albany, from 1830 to '34, was licensed to practice law and removed west in 1837, residing successively at Delphi and Frankfort, Ind., and at Owensburg, Ky., until 1842, when he settled in Belleville, Ill. In 1846 he was commissioned a First Lieutenant in the Second Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Colonel Bissell's) for the Mexican War, but, after the battle of Buena Vista, was promoted by General Wool to the captaincy of an independent company of Texas foot. He was elected Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives at the session of 1849, and the same year was chosen County Judge of St. Clair County, serving until 1861. With the exception of brief periods from 1851 to '59, he was editor and part owner of "The Belleville Advocate," a paper originally Democratic, but which became Republican on the organization of the Republican party. In 1861 he was appointed Colonel of the Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but the completion of its organization having been delayed, he resigned, and, the following year, was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirtieth, serving until May, 1864, when he resigned—in March, 1865, receiving the compliment of a brevet Brigadier-Generalship. During the winter of 1862-63 he was in command at Memphis, but later took part in the Vicksburg campaign, and in the campaigns on Red River and Bayou Teche. After the war he served as Representative in the General Assembly from St. Clair County (1865-66); as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; on the Commission for building the State Penitentiary at Joliet, and as Commissioner (by appointment of Governor Oglesby) for locating the Soldiers' Orphans' Home. His later years have been spent chiefly in the practice of his profession, with occasional excursions into journalism. Originally an anti-slavery Democrat, he became one of the founders of the Republican party in Southern Illinois.

NIXON, William Penn, journalist, Collector of Customs, was born in Wayne County, Ind., of North Carolina and Quaker ancestry, early in 1832. In 1853 he graduated from Farmers' (now Belmont) College, near Cincinnati, Ohio. After devoting two years to teaching, he entered the law department of the University of Pennsylvania (1855), graduating in 1859. For nine years thereafter he practiced law at Cincinnati, during which period he was thrice elected to the Ohio Legislature. In 1868 he embarked on journalism, he and his older brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, with a few friends, founding "The Cincinnati Chronicle." A few years later "The Times" was purchased, and the two papers were consolidated under the name of "The Times-Chronicle." In May, 1872, having disposed of his interests in Cincinnati, he assumed the business management of "The Chicago Inter Ocean," then a new venture and struggling for a foothold. In 1875 he and his brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, secured a controlling interest in the paper, when the former assumed the position of editor-in-chief, which he continued to occupy until 1897, when he was appointed Collector of Customs for the City of Chicago—a position which he now holds.

NOKOMIS, a city of Montgomery County, on the "Big Four" main line and "'Frisco" Railroads, 81 miles east by north from St. Louis and 52 miles west of Mattoon; in important grain-growing and hay-producing section; has waterworks, electric lights, three flour mills, two machine shops, wagon factory, creamery, seven churches, high school, two banks and three papers; is noted for shipments of poultry, butter and eggs. Population (1890), 1,305; (1900), 1,371.

NORMAL, a city in McLean County, 2 miles north of Bloomington and 124 southwest of Chicago; at intersecting point of the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads. It lies in a rich coal and agricultural region, and has extensive fruit-tree nurseries, two canning factories, one bank, hospital, and four periodicals. It is the seat of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, founded in 1869, and the Illinois State Normal University, founded in 1857; has city and rural mail delivery. Pop. (1890), 3,459; (1900), 3,795.

NORMAL UNIVERSITIES. (See Southern Illinois Normal University; State Normal University.)

NORTH ALTON, a village of Madison County and suburb of the city of Alton. Population (1880), 838; (1890), 762; (1900), 904.

NORTHCOTT, William A., Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Murfreesboro, Tenn., Jan. 28, 1854—the son of Gen. R. S. Northcott, whose loyalty to the Union, at the beginning of the Rebellion, compelled him to leave his Southern home and seek safety for himself and family in the North. He went to West Virginia, was commissioned Colonel of a regiment and served through the war, being for some nine months a prisoner in Libby Prison. After acquiring his literary education in the public schools, the younger Northcott spent some time in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., after which he was engaged in teaching. Meanwhile, he was preparing for the practice of law and was admitted to the bar in 1877, two years later coming to Greenville, Bond County, Ill., which has since been his home. In 1880, by appointment of President Hayes, he served as Supervisor of the Census for the Seventh District; in 1882 was elected State's Attorney for Bond County and re-elected successively in '84 and '88; in 1890 was appointed on the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, and, by selection of the Board, delivered the annual address to the graduating class of that year. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Congress for the Eighteenth District, but was defeated in the general landslide of that year. In 1896 he was more fortunate, being elected Lieutenant-Governor by the vote of the State, receiving a plurality of over 137,000 over his Democratic opponent.

NORTH PEORIA, formerly a suburban village in Peoria County, 2 miles north of the city of Peoria; annexed to the city of Peoria in 1900.

NORTHERN BOUNDARY QUESTION, THE.

The Ordinance of 1787, making the first specific provision, by Congress, for the government of the country lying northwest of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi (known as the Northwest Territory), provided, among other things (Art. V., Ordinance 1787), that "there shall be formed in the said Territory not less than three nor more than five States." It then proceeds to fix the boundaries of the proposed States, on the assumption that there shall be three in number, adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, however, and it is further understood and declared, that the boundaries of these three States shall be subject so far to be altered that, if Congress shall hereafter find it expedient, they shall have authority to form one or two States in that part of the said Territory which lies north of an east and west line drawn through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan." On the basis of this provision it has been claimed that the northern boundaries of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio should have been on the exact latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan, and that the failure to establish this boundary was a violation of the Ordinance, inasmuch as the fourteenth section of the preamble thereto declares that "the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States and the people and States in the said Territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent."—In the limited state of geographical knowledge, existing at the time of the adoption of the Ordinance, there seems to have been considerable difference of opinion as to the latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan. The map of Mitchell (1755) had placed it on the parallel of 42° 20', while that of Thomas Hutchins (1778) fixed it at 41° 37'. It was officially established by Government survey, in 1835, at 41° 37' 07.9". As a matter of fact, the northern boundary of neither of the three States named was finally fixed on the line mentioned in the proviso above quoted from the Ordinance—that of Ohio, where it meets the shore of Lake Erie, being a little north of 41° 44'; that of Indiana at 41° 46' (some 10 miles north of the southern bend of the lake), and that of Illinois at 42° 30'—about 61 miles north of the same line. The boundary line between Ohio and Michigan was settled after a bitter controversy, on the admission of the latter State into the Union, in 1837, in the acceptance by her of certain conditions proposed by Congress. These included the annexation to Michigan of what is known as the "Upper Peninsula," lying between Lakes Michigan and Superior, in lieu of a strip averaging six miles on her southern border, which she demanded from Ohio.—The establishment of the northern boundary of Illinois, in 1818, upon the line which now exists, is universally conceded to have been due to the action of Judge Nathaniel Pope, then the Delegate in Congress from Illinois Territory. While it was then acquiesced in without question, it has since been the subject of considerable controversy and has been followed by almost incalculable results. The "enabling act," as originally introduced early in 1818, empowering the people of Illinois Territory to form a State Government, fixed the northern boundary of the proposed State at 41° 39', then the supposed latitude of the southern extremity of Lake Michigan. While the act was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Pope offered an amendment advancing the northern boundary to 42° 30'. The object of his amendment (as he explained) was to gain for the new State a coast line on Lake Michigan, bringing it into political and commercial relations with the States east of it—Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York—thus “affording additional security to the perpetuity of the Union.” He argued that the location of the State between the Mississippi, Wabash and Ohio Rivers—all flowing to the south—would bring it in intimate communication with the Southern States, and that, in the event of an attempted disruption of the Union, it was important that it should be identified with the commerce of the Lakes, instead of being left entirely to the waters of the south-flowing rivers. “Thus,” said he, “a rival interest would be created to check the wish for a Western or Southern Confederacy. Her interests would thus be balanced and her inclinations turned to the North.” He recognized Illinois as already “the key to the West,” and he evidently foresaw that the time might come when it would be the Keystone of the Union. While this evinced wonderful foresight, scarcely less convincing was his argument that, in time, a commercial emporium would grow up upon Lake Michigan, which would demand an outlet by means of a canal to the Illinois River—a work which was realized in the completion of the Illinois & Michigan Canal thirty years later, but which would scarcely have been accomplished had the State been practically cut off from the Lake and its chief emporium left to grow up in another commonwealth, or not at all. Judge Pope’s amendment was accepted without division, and, in this form, a few days later, the bill became a law.—The almost superhuman sagacity exhibited in Judge Pope’s argument, has been repeatedly illustrated in the commercial and political history of the State since, but never more significantly than in the commanding position which Illinois occupied during the late Civil War, with one of its citizens in the Presidential chair and another leading its 250,000 citizen soldiery and the armies of the Union in battling for the perpetuity of the Republic—a position which more than fulfilled every prediction made for it.—The territory affected by this settlement of the northern boundary, includes all that part of the State north of the northern line of La Salle County, and embraces the greater portion of the fourteen counties of Cook, Dupage, Kane, Lake, McHenry, Boone, DeKalb, Lee, Ogle, Winnebago, Stephenson, Jo Daviess, Carroll and Whiteside, with portions of Kendall, Will and Rock Island—estimated at 8,500 square miles, or more than one-seventh of the present area of the State. It has been argued that this territory belonged to the State of Wisconsin under the provisions of the Ordinance of 1787, and there were repeated attempts made, on the part of the Wisconsin Legislature and its Territorial Governor (Doty), between 1839 and 1843, to induce the people of these counties to recognize this claim. These were, in a few instances, partially successful, although no official notice was taken of them by the authorities of Illinois. The reply made to the Wisconsin claim by Governor Ford—who wrote his “History of Illinois” when the subject was fresh in the public mind—was that, while the Ordinance of 1787 gave Congress power to organize a State north of the parallel running through the southern bend of Lake Michigan, “there is nothing in the Ordinance requiring such additional State to be organized of the territory north of that line.” In other words, that, when Congress, in 1818, authorized the organization of an additional State north of and in (i. e., within) the line named, it did not violate the Ordinance of 1787, but acted in accordance with it—in practically assuming that the new State “need not necessarily include the whole of the region north of that line.” The question was set at rest by Wisconsin herself in the action of her Constitutional Convention of 1847-48, in framing her first constitution, in form recognizing the northern boundary of Illinois as fixed by the enabling act of 1818.

NORTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, created by Act of the Legislature, approved, April 16, 1869. The Commissioners appointed by Governor Palmer to fix its location consisted of August Adams, B. F. Shaw, W. R. Brown, M. L. Joslyn, D. S. Hammond and William Adams. After considering many offers and examining numerous sites, the Commissioners finally selected the Chisholm farm, consisting of about 155 acres, 1½ miles from Elgin, on the west side of Fox River, and overlooking that stream, as a site—this having been tendered as a donation by the citizens of Elgin. Plans were adopted in the latter part of 1869, the system of construction chosen conforming, in the main, to that of the United States Hospital for the Insane at Washington, D. C. By January, 1872, the north wing and rear building were so far advanced as to permit the reception of sixty patients. The center building was ready for occupancy in April, 1873, and the south wing before the end of the following year. The total expenditures previous to 1876 had exceeded $637,000, and since that date liberal appropriations have been made for additions, repairs and improvements, including the addition of between 300 and 400 acres to the lands connected with the institution. The first Board of Trustees consisted of Charles N. Holden, Oliver Everett and Henry W. Sherman, with Dr. E. A. Kilbourne as the first Superintendent, and Dr. Richard A. Dewey (afterwards Superintendent of the Eastern Hospital at Kankakee) as his Assistant. Dr. Kilbourne remained at the head of the institution until his death, Feb. 27, 1890, covering a period of nineteen years. Dr. Kilbourne was succeeded by Dr. Henry J. Brooks, and he, by Dr. Loewy, in June, 1893, and the latter by Dr. John B. Hamilton (former Supervising Surgeon of the United States Marine Hospital Service) in 1897. Dr. Hamilton died in December, 1898. (See Hamilton, John B.) The total value of State property, June 30, 1894, was $882,745.66, of which $701,330 was in land and buildings. Under the terms of the law establishing the hospital, provision is made for the care therein of the incurably insane, so that it is both a hospital and an asylum. The whole number of patients under treatment, for the two years preceding June 30, 1894, was 1,797, the number of inmates, on Dec. 1, 1897, 1,054, and the average daily attendance for treatment, for the year 1896, 1,296. The following counties comprise the district dependent upon the Elgin Hospital: Boone, Carroll, Cook, DeKalb, Jo Daviess, Kane, Kendall, Lake, Stephenson, Whiteside and Winnebago.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution, incorporated in 1884, at Dixon, Lee County, Ill., for the purpose of giving instruction in branches related to the art of teaching. Its last report claims a total of 1,639 pupils, of whom 885 were men and 744 women, receiving instruction from thirty-six teachers. The total value of property was estimated at more than $200,000, of which $160,000 was in real estate and $45,000 in apparatus. Attendance on the institution has been affected by the establishment, under act of the Legislature of 1895, of the Northern State Normal School at DeKalb (which see).

NORTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, an institution for the confinement of criminals of the State, located at Joliet, Will County. The site was purchased by the State in 1857, and comprises some seventy-two acres. Its erection was found necessary because of the inadequacy of the first penitentiary, at Alton. (See Alton Penitentiary.) The original plan contemplated a cell-house containing 1,000 cells, which, it was thought, would meet the public necessities for many years to come. Its estimated cost was $550,000; but, within ten years, there had been expended upon the institution the sum of $934,000, and its capacity was taxed to the utmost. Subsequent enlargements have increased the cost to over $1,600,000, but by 1877, the institution had become so overcrowded that the erection of another State penal institution became positively necessary. (See Southern Penitentiary.) The prison has always been conducted on "the Auburn system," which contemplates associate labor in silence, silent meals in a common refectory, and (as nearly as practicable) isolation at night. The system of labor has varied at different times, the "lessee system," the "contract system" and the "State account plan" being successively in force. (See Convict Labor.) The whole number of convicts in the institution, at the date of the official report of 1895, was 1,566. The total assets of the institution, Sept. 30, 1894, were reported at $2,121,308.86, of which $1,644,601.11 was in real estate.

NORTH & SOUTH RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway.)

NORTHERN STATE NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution for the education of teachers of the common schools, authorized to be established by act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1895. The act made an appropriation of $50,000 for the erection of buildings and other improvements. The institution was located at DeKalb, DeKalb County, in the spring of 1896, and the erection of buildings commenced soon after—Isaac F. Ellwood, of DeKalb, contributing $20,000 in cash, and J. F. Glidden, a site of sixty-seven acres of land. Up to Dec. 1, 1897, the appropriations and contributions, in land and money, aggregated $175,000. The school was expected to be ready for the reception of pupils in the latter part of 1899, and, it is estimated, will accommodate 1,000 students.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY. The name formerly applied to that portion of the United States north and west of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The claim of the Government to the land had been acquired partly through conquest, by the expedition of Col. George Rogers Clark (which see), under the auspices of the State of Virginia in 1778; partly through treaties with the Indians, and partly through cessions from those of the original States laying claim thereto. The first plan for the government of this vast region was devised and formulated by Thomas Jefferson, in his proposed Ordinance of 1784, which failed of ultimate passage. But three years later a broader scheme was evolved, and the famous Ordinance of 1787, with its clause prohibiting the extension of slavery beyond the Ohio River, passed the Continental Congress. This act has been sometimes termed "The American Magna Charta," because of its engrafting upon the organic law the principles of human freedom and equal rights. The plan for the establishment of a distinctive territorial civil government in a new Territory—the first of its kind in the new republic—was felt to be a tentative step, and too much power was not granted to the residents. All the officers were appointive, and each official was required to be a land-owner. The elective franchise (but only for members of the General Assembly) could first be exercised only after the population had reached 5,000. Even then, every elector must own fifty acres of land, and every Representative, 200 acres. More liberal provisions, however, were subsequently incorporated by amendment, in 1809. The first civil government in the Northwest Territory was established by act of the Virginia Legislature, in the organization of all the country west of the Ohio under the name "Illinois County," of which the Governor was authorized to appoint a "County Lieutenant" or "Commandant-in-Chief." The first "Commandant" appointed was Col. John Todd, of Kentucky, though he continued to discharge the duties for only a short period, being killed in the battle of Blue Licks, in 1782. After that the Illinois Country was almost without the semblance of an organized civil government, until 1788, when Gen. Arthur St. Clair was appointed the first Governor of Northwest Territory, under the Ordinance of 1787, serving until the separation of this region into the Territories of Ohio and Indiana in 1800, when William Henry Harrison became the Governor of the latter, embracing all that portion of the original Northwest Territory except the State of Ohio. During St. Clair's administration (1790) that part of the present State of Illinois between the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers on the west, and a line extending north from about the site of old Fort Massac, on the Ohio, to the mouth of the Mackinaw River, in the present county of Tazewell, on the east, was erected into a county under the name of St. Clair, with three county-seats, viz.: Cahokia, Kaskaskia and Prairie du Rocher. (See St. Clair County.) Between 1830 and 1834 the name Northwest Territory was applied to an unorganized region, embracing the present State of Wisconsin, attached to Michigan Territory for governmental purposes. (See Illinois County; St. Clair, Arthur; and Todd, John.)

NORTHWESTERN COLLEGE, located at Naperville, Du Page County, and founded in 1865, under the auspices of the Evangelical Association. It maintains business, preparatory and collegiate departments, besides a theological school. In 1898 it had a faculty of nineteen professors and assistants, with some 360 students, less than one-third of the latter being females, though both sexes are admitted to the college on an equal footing. The institution owns property to the value of $207,000, including an endowment of $85,000.

NORTHWESTERN GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway.)

NORTHWESTERN NORMAL, located at Geneseo, Henry County, Ill., incorporated in 1884; in 1894 had a faculty of twelve teachers with 171 pupils, of whom ninety were male and eighty-one female.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, an important educational institution, established at Evanston, in Cook County, in 1851. In 1898 it reported 2,599 students (1,980 male and 619 female), and a faculty of 234 instructors. It embraces the following departments, all of which confer degrees: A College of Liberal Arts; two Medical Schools (one for women exclusively); a Law School; a School of Pharmacy and a Dental College. The Garrett Biblical Institute, at which no degrees are conferred, constitutes the theological department of the University. The charter of the institution requires a majority of the Trustees to be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the University is the largest and wealthiest of the schools controlled by that denomination. The College of Liberal Arts and the Garrett Biblical Institute are at Evanston; the other departments (all professional) are located in Chicago. In the academic department (Liberal Arts School), provision is made for both graduate and post-graduate courses. The Medical School was formerly known as the Chicago Medical College, and its Law Department was originally the Union College of Law, both of which have been absorbed by the University, as have also its schools of dentistry and pharmacy, which were formerly independent institutions. The property owned by the University is valued at $4,870,000, of which $1,100,000 is real estate, and $2,250,000 in endowment funds. Its income from fees paid by students in 1898 was $215,288, and total receipts from all sources, $482,389. Co-education of the sexes prevails in the College of Liberal Arts. Dr. Henry Wade Rogers is President.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY MEDICAL SCHOOL, located in Chicago; was organized in 1859 as Medical School of the Lind (now Lake Forest) University. Three annual terms, of five months each, at first constituted a course, although attendance at two only was compulsory. The institution first opened in temporary quarters, Oct. 9, 1859, with thirteen professors and thirty-three students. By 1863 more ample accommodations were needed, and the Trustees of the Lind University being unable to provide a building, one was erected by the faculty. In 1864 the University relinquished all claim to the institution, which was thereupon incorporated as the Chicago Medical College. In 1868 the length of the annual terms was increased to six months, and additional requirements were imposed on candidates for both matriculation and graduation. The same year, the college building was sold, and the erection of a new and more commodious edifice, on the grounds of the Mercy Hospital, was commenced. This was completed in 1870, and the college became the medical department of the Northwestern University. The number of professorships had been increased to eighteen, and that of undergraduates to 107. Since that date new laboratory and clinical buildings have been erected, and the growth of the institution has been steady and substantial. Mercy and St. Luke's Hospital, and the South Side Free Dispensary afford resources for clinical instruction. The teaching faculty, as constituted in 1898, consists of about fifty instructors, including professors, lecturers, demonstrators, and assistants.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY WOMAN'S MEDICAL SCHOOL, an institution for the professional education of women, located in Chicago. Its first corporate name was the "Woman's Hospital Medical College of Chicago," and it was in close connection with the Chicago Hospital for Women and Children. Later, it severed its connection with the hospital and took the name of the "Woman's Medical College of Chicago." Co-education of the sexes, in medicine and surgery, was experimentally tried from 1868 to 1870, but the experiment proved repugnant to the male students, who unanimously signed a protest against the continuance of the system. The result was the establishment of a separate school for women in 1870, with a faculty of sixteen professors. The requirements for graduation were fixed at four years of medical study, including three annual graded college terms of six months each. The first term opened in the autumn of 1870, with an attendance of twenty students. The original location of the school was in the "North Division" of Chicago, in temporary quarters. After the fire of 1871 a removal was effected to the "West Division," where (in 1878-79) a modest, but well arranged building was erected. A larger structure was built in 1884, and, in 1891, the institution became a part of the Northwestern University. The college, in all its departments, is organized along the lines of the best medical schools of the country. In 1896 there were twenty-four professorships, all capably filled, and among the faculty are some of the best known specialists in the country.

NORTON, Jesse O., lawyer, Congressman and Judge, was born at Bennington, Vt., April 25, 1812, and graduated from Williams College in 1835. He settled at Joliet in 1839, and soon became prominent in the affairs of Will County. His first public office was that of City Attorney, after which he served as County Judge (1846-50). Meanwhile, he was chosen a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1850 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1852, to Congress, as a Whig. His vigorous opposition to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise resulted in his re-election as a Representative in 1854. At the expiration of his second term (1857) he was chosen Judge of the eleventh circuit, to fill the unexpired term of Judge Randall, resigned. He was once more elected to Congress in 1863, but disagreed with his party as to the legal status of the States lately in rebellion. President Johnson appointed him United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, which office he filled until 1869. Immediately upon his retirement he began private practice at Chicago, where he died, August 3, 1875.

NORWOOD PARK, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad (Wisconsin Division), 11 miles northwest of Chicago. Incorporated in City of Chicago, 1893.

NOYES, George Clement, clergyman, was born at Landaff, N. H., August 4, 1833, brought by his parents to Pike County, Ill., in 1844, and, at the age of 16, determined to devote his life to the ministry; in 1851, entered Illinois College at Jacksonville, graduating with first honors in the class of 1855. In the following autumn he entered Union Theological Seminary in New York, and, having graduated in 1858, was ordained the same year, and installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Laporte, Ind. Here he remained ten years, when he accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Evanston, Ill., then a small organization which developed, during the twenty years of his pastorate, into one of the strongest and most influential churches in Evanston. For a number of years Dr. Noyes was an editorial writer and weekly correspondent of "The New York Evangelist," over the signature of "Clement." He was also, for several years, an active and very efficient member of the Board of Trustees of Knox College. The liberal bent of his mind was illustrated in the fact that he acted as counsel for Prof. David Swing, during the celebrated trial of the latter for heresy before the Chicago Presbytery—his argument on that occasion winning encomiums from all classes of people. His death took place at Evanston, Jan. 14, 1889, as the result of an attack of pneumonia, and was deeply deplored, not only by his own church and denomination, but by the whole community. Some two weeks after it occurred a union meeting was held in one of the churches at Evanston, at which addresses in commemoration of his services were delivered by some dozen ministers of that village and of Chicago, while various social and literary organizations and the press bore testimony to his high character. He was a member of the Literary Society of Chicago, and, during the last year of his life, served as its President. Dr. Noyes was married, in 1858, to a daughter of David A. Smith, Esq., an honored citizen and able lawyer of Jacksonville.

OAKLAND, a city of Coles County on the Vandalia Line and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad, 15 miles northeast of Charleston; is in grain center and broom-corn belt; the town has two banks and one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 995; (1900), 1,198.

OAK PARK, a village of Cook County, and popular residence suburb of Chicago, 9 miles west of the initial station of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, on which it is located; is also upon the line of the Wisconsin Central Railroad. The place has numerous churches, prosperous schools, a public library, telegraph and express offices, banks and two local papers. Population (1880), 1,888; (1890), 4,771.

OBERLY, John H., journalist and Civil Service Commissioner, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1837; spent part of his boyhood in Allegheny County, Pa., but, in 1853, began learning the printer's trade in the office of "The Wooster (Ohio) Republican," completing it at Memphis, Tenn., and becoming a journeyman printer in 1857. He worked in various offices, including the Wooster paper, where he also began the study of law, but, in 1860, became part proprietor of "The Bulletin" job office at Memphis, in which he had been employed as an apprentice, and, later, as foreman. Having been notified to leave Memphis on account of his Union principles after the beginning of the Civil War, he returned to Wooster, Ohio, and conducted various papers there during the next four years, but, in 1865, came to Cairo, Ill., where he served for a time as foreman of "The Cairo Democrat," three years later establishing "The Cairo Bulletin." Although the latter paper was burned out a few months later, it was immediately re-established. In 1872 he was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1877, was appointed by Governor Cullom the Democratic member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, serving four years, meanwhile (in 1880) being the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State. Other positions held by him included Mayor of the city of Cairo (1869); President of the National Typographical Union at Chicago (1865), and at Memphis (1866); delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore (1872), and Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee (1882-84). After retiring from the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, he united in founding "The Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin," of which he was editor some three years. During President Cleveland's administration he was appointed a member of the Civil Service Commission, being later transferred to the Commissionership of Indian Affairs. He was subsequently connected in an editorial capacity with "The Washington Post," "The Richmond (Va.) State," "The Concord (N. H.) People and Patriot" and "The Washington Times." While engaged in an attempt to reorganize "The People and Patriot," he died at Concord, N. H., April 15, 1899.

ODD FELLOWS. "Western Star" Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Alton, June 11, 1836. In 1838 the Grand Lodge of Illinois was instituted at the same place, and reorganized, at Springfield, in 1842. S. C. Pierce was the first Grand Master, and Samuel L. Miller, Grand Secretary. Wildey Encampment, No. 1, was organized at Alton in 1838, and the Grand Encampment, at Peoria, in 1850, with Charles H. Constable Grand Patriarch. In 1850 the subordinate branches of the Order numbered seventy-six, with 3,291 members, and $25,392.87 revenue. In 1895 the Lodges numbered 838, the membership 50,544, with $475,252.18 revenue, of which $135,018.40 was expended for relief. The Encampment branch, in 1895, embraced 179 organizations with a membership of 6,812 and $23,865.25 revenue, of which $6,781.40 was paid out for relief. The Rebekah branch, for the same year, comprised 422 Lodges, with 22,000 members and $43,215.65 revenue, of which $3,122.79 was for relief. The total sum distributed for relief by the several organizations (1895) was $144,972.59. The Order was especially liberal in its benefactions to the sufferers by the Chicago fire of 1871, an appeal to its members calling forth a generous response throughout the United States. (See Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home.)

ODD FELLOWS' ORPHANS' HOME, a benevolent institution, incorporated in 1889, erected at Lincoln, Ill., under the auspices of the Daughters of Rebekah (see Odd Fellows), and dedicated August 19, 1892. The building is four stories in height, has a capacity for the accommodation of fifty children, and cost $36,524.76, exclusive of forty acres of land valued at $8,000.

ODELL, a village of Livingston County, and station on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 82 miles south-southwest of Chicago. It is in a grain and stock-raising region. Population (1880), 908; (1890), 800; (1900), 1,000.

ODIN, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railways, 244 miles south by west from Chicago; in fruit belt; has coal-mine, two fruit evaporators, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,180.

O'FALLON, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 18 miles east of St. Louis; has interurban railway, electric lights, water-works, factories, coal-mine, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,267.

OGDEN, William Butler, capitalist and Railway President, born at Walton, N. Y., June 15, 1805. He was a member of the New York Legislature in 1834, and, the following year, removed to Chicago, where he established a land and trust agency. He took an active part in the various enterprises centering around Chicago, and, on the incorporation of the city, was elected its first Mayor. He was prominently identified with the construction of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad, and, in 1847, became its President. While visiting Europe in 1853, he made a careful study of the canals of Holland, which convinced him of the desirability of widening and deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal and of constructing a ship canal across the southern peninsula of Michigan. In 1855 he became President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railroad, and effected its consolidation with the Galena & Chicago Union. Out of this consolidation sprang the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, of which he was elected President. In 1850 he presided over the National Pacific Railroad Convention, and, upon the formation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, he became its President. He was largely connected with the inception of the Northern Pacific line, in the success of which he was a firm believer. He also controlled various other interests of public importance, among them the great lumbering establishments at Peshtigo, Wis., and, at the time of his death, was the owner of what was probably the largest plant of that description in the world. His benefactions were numerous, among the recipients being the Rush Medical College, of which he was President; the Theological Seminary of the Northwest, the Chicago Historical Society, the Academy of Sciences, the University of Chicago, the Astronomical Society, and many other educational and benevolent institutions and organizations in the Northwest. Died, in New York City, August 3, 1877. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railroad.)

OGLE, Joseph, pioneer, was born in Virginia in 1741, came to Illinois in 1785, settling in the American Bottom within the present County of Monroe, but afterwards removed to St. Clair County, about the site of the present town of O'Fallon, 8 miles north of Belleville; was selected by his neighbors to serve as Captain in their skirmishes with the Indians. Died, at his home in St. Clair County, in February, 1821. Captain Ogle had the reputation of being the earliest convert to Methodism in Illinois. Ogle County, in Northern Illinois, was named in his honor.—Jacob (Ogle), son of the preceding, also a native of Virginia, was born about 1772, came to Illinois with his father in 1785, and was a "Ranger" in the War of 1812. He served as a Representative from St. Clair County in the Third General Assembly (1822), and again in the Seventh (1830), in the former being an opponent of the pro-slavery convention scheme. Beyond two terms in the Legislature he seems to have held no public office except that of Justice of the Peace. Like his father, he was a zealous Methodist and highly respected. Died, in 1844, aged 72 years.

OGLE COUNTY, next to the "northern tier" of counties of the State and originally a part of Jo Daviess. It was separately organized in 1837, and Lee County was carved from its territory in 1839. In 1900 its area was 780 square miles, and its population 29,129. Before the Black Hawk War immigration was slow, and life primitive. Peoria was the nearest food market. New grain was "ground" on a grater, and old pounded with an extemporized pestle in a wooden mortar. Rock River flows across the county from northeast to southwest. A little oak timber grows along its banks, but, generally speaking, the surface is undulating prairie, with soil of a rich loam. Sandstone is in ample supply, and all the limestones abound. An extensive peat-bed has been discovered on the Killbuck Creek. Oregon, the county-seat, has fine water-power. The other principal towns are Rochelle, Polo, Forreston and Mount Morris.

OGLESBY, Richard James, Governor and United States Senator, was born in Oldham County, Ky., July 25, 1824; left an orphan at the age of 8 years; in 1836 accompanied an uncle to Decatur, Ill., where, until 1844, he worked at farming, carpentering and rope-making, devoting his leisure hours to the study of law. In 1845 he was admitted to the bar and began practice at Sullivan, in Moultrie County. In 1846 he was commissioned a Lieutenant in the Fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's regiment), and served through the Mexican War, taking part in the siege of Vera Cruz and the battle of Cerro Gordo. In 1847 he pursued a course of study at the Louisville Law School, graduating in 1848. He was a "forty-niner" in California, but returned to Decatur in 1851. In 1858 he made an unsuccessful campaign for Congress in the Decatur District. In 1860 he was elected to the State Senate, but early in 1861 resigned his seat to accept the colonelcy of the Eighth Illinois Volunteers. Through gallantry (notably at Forts Henry and Donelson and at Corinth) he rose to be Major-General, being severely wounded in the last-named battle. He resigned his commission on account of disability, in May, 1864, and the following November was elected Governor, as a Republican. In 1872 he was re-elected Governor, but, two weeks after his inauguration, resigned to accept a seat in the United States Senate, to which he was elected by the Legislature of 1873. In 1884 he was elected Governor for the third time—being the only man in the history of the State who (up to the present time—1899) has been thus honored. After the expiration of his last term as Governor, he devoted his attention to his private affairs at his home at Elkhart, in Logan County, where he died, April 24, 1899, deeply mourned by personal and political friends in all parts of the Union, who admired his strict integrity and sterling patriotism.

OHIO, INDIANA & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Peoria & Eastern Railroad.)

OHIO RIVER, an affluent of the Mississippi, formed by the union of the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, at Pittsburg, Pa. At this point it becomes a navigable stream about 400 yards wide, with an elevation of about 700 feet above sea-level. The beauty of the scenery along its banks secured for it, from the early French explorers (of whom La Salle was one), the name of "La Belle Riviere." Its general course is to the southwest, but with many sinuosities, forming the southern boundary of the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and the western and northern boundary of West Virginia and Kentucky, until it enters the Mississippi at Cairo, in latitude 37° N., and about 1,200 miles above the mouth of the latter stream. The area which it drains is computed to be 214,000 square miles. Its mouth is 268 feet above the level of the sea. The current is remarkably gentle and uniform, except near Louisville, where there is a descent of twenty-two feet within two miles, which is evaded by means of a canal around the falls. Large steamboats can navigate its whole length, except in low stages of water and when closed by ice in winter. Its largest affluents are the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Kentucky, the Great Kanawha and the Green Rivers, from the south, and the Wabash, the Miami, Scioto and Muskingum from the north. The principal cities on its banks are Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, New Albany, Madison and Cairo. It is crossed by bridges at Wheeling, Cincinnati and Cairo. The surface of the Ohio is subject to a variation of forty-two to fifty-one feet between high and low water. Its length is 975 miles, and its width varies from 400 to 1,000 yards. (See Inundations, Remarkable.)

OHIO & MISSISSIPPI RAILWAY. (See Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad.)

OLNEY, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Richland County, 31 miles west of Vincennes, Ind., and 117 miles east of St. Louis, Mo., at the junction of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Peoria Division of the Illinois Central and the Ohio River Division of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad; is in the center of the fruit belt and an important shipping point for farm produce and live-stock; has flour mills, a furniture factory and railroad repair shops, banks, a public library, churches and five newspapers, one issuing daily and another semi-weekly editions. Population (1890), 3,831; (1900), 4,260.

OMELVENY, John, pioneer and head of a numerous family which became prominent in Southern Illinois; was a native of Ireland who came to America about 1798 or 1799. After residing in Kentucky a few years, he removed to Illinois, locating in what afterwards became Pope County, whither his oldest son, Samuel, had preceded him about 1797 or 1798. The latter for a time followed the occupation of flat-boating, carrying produce to New Orleans. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818 from Pope County, being the colleague of Hamlet Ferguson. A year later he removed to Randolph County, where he served as a member of the County Court, but, in 1820-22, we find him a member of the Second General Assembly from Union County, having successfully contested the seat of Samuel Alexander, who had received the certificate of election. He died in 1828.—Edward (Omelveny), another member of this family, and grandson of the elder John Omelveny, represented Monroe County in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), and was Presidential Elector in 1852, but died sometime during the Civil War.—Harvey K. S. (Omelveny), the fifth son of William Omelveny and grandson of John, was born in Todd County, Ky., in 1823, came to Southern Illinois, in 1852, and engaged in the practice of law, being for a time the partner of Senator Thomas E. Merritt, at Salem. Early in 1858 he was elected a Justice of the Circuit Court to succeed Judge Breese, who had been promoted to the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1861. He gained considerable notoriety by his intense hostility to the policy of the Government during the Civil War, was a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and was named as a member of the Peace Commission proposed to be appointed by the General Assembly, in 1863, to secure terms of peace with the Southern Confederacy. He was also a leading spirit in the peace meeting held at Peoria, in August, 1863. In 1869 Mr. Omelveny removed to Los Angeles, Cal., which has since been his home, and where he has carried on a lucrative law practice.

ONARGA, a town in Iroquois County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 85 miles south by west from Chicago, and 43 miles north by east from Champaign. It is a manufacturing town, flour, wagons, wire-fencing, stoves and tile being among the products. It has a bank, eight churches, a graded school, a commercial college, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1890), 1,061; (1890), 994; (1900), 1,270.

ONEIDA, a city in Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles northeast of Galesburg; has wagon, pump and furniture factories, two banks, electric lights, several churches, a graded school, and a weekly paper. The surrounding country is rich prairie, where coal is mined about twenty feet below the surface. Pop. (1890), 699; (1900), 785.

OQUAWKA, the county-seat of Henderson County, situated on the Mississippi River, about 15 miles above Burlington, Iowa, and 32 miles west of Galesburg. It is in a farming region, but has some manufactories. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank and three newspapers. Population (1900), 1,010.

ORDINANCE OF 1787. This is the name given to the first organic act, passed by Congress, for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio River, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The first step in this direction was taken in the appointment, by Congress, on March 1, 1784, of a committee, of which Thomas Jefferson was Chairman, to prepare a plan for the temporary government of the region which had been acquired, by the capture of Kaskaskia, by Col. George Rogers Clark, nearly six years previous. The necessity for some step of this sort had grown all the more urgent, in consequence of the recognition of the right of the United States to this region by the Treaty of Paris of 1783, and the surrender, by Virginia, of the title she had maintained thereto on account of Clark's conquest under her auspices—a right which she had exercised by furnishing whatever semblance of government so far existed northwest of the Ohio. The report submitted from Jefferson's committee proposed the division of the Territory into seven States, to which was added the proviso that, after the year 1800, "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of said States, otherwise than in punishment of crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted." This report failed of adoption, however, Congress contenting itself with the passage of a resolution providing for future organization of this territory into States by the people—the measures necessary for temporary government being left to future Congressional action. While the postponement, in the resolution as introduced by Jefferson, of the inhibition of slavery to the year 1800, has been criticised, its introduction was significant, as coming from a representative from a slave State, and being the first proposition in Congress looking to restriction, of any character, on the subject of slavery. Congress having taken no further step under the resolution adopted in 1784, the condition of the country (thus left practically without a responsible government, while increasing in population) became constantly more deplorable. An appeal from the people about Kaskaskia for some better form of government, in 1786, aided by the influence of the newly organized "Ohio Company," who desired to encourage emigration to the lands which they were planning to secure from the General Government, at last brought about the desired result, in the passage of the famous "Ordinance," on the 13th day of July, 1787. While making provision for a mode of temporary self-government by the people, its most striking features are to be found in the six "articles"—a sort of "Bill of Rights"—with which the document closes. These assert: (1) the right of freedom of worship and religious opinion; (2) the right to the benefit of habeas corpus and trial by jury; to proportionate representation, and to protection in liberty and property; (3) that "religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged"; (4) that the States, formed within the territory referred to, "shall forever remain a part of this confederacy of the United States of America, subject to the Articles of Confederation and to such alterations therein as shall be constitutionally made"; (5) prescribe the boundaries of the States to be formed therein and the conditions of their admission into the Union; and (6—and most significant of all) repeat the prohibition regarding the introduction of slavery into the Northwest Territory, as proposed by Jefferson, but without any qualification as to time. There has been considerable controversy regarding the authorship of this portion of the Ordinance, into which it is not necessary to enter here. While it has been characterized as a second and advanced Declaration of Independence—and probably no single act of Congress was ever fraught with more important and far-reaching results—it seems remarkable that a majority of the States supporting it and securing its adoption, were then, and long continued to be, slave States.

OREGON, the county-seat of Ogle County, situated on Rock River and the Minneapolis Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 100 miles west from Chicago. The surrounding region is agricultural; the town has water power and manufactures flour, pianos, steel tanks, street sprinklers, and iron castings. It has two banks, water-works supplied by flowing artesian wells, cereal mill, and two weekly newspapers; has also obtained some repute as a summer resort. Pop. (1880), 1,088; (1890), 1,566; (1900), 1,577.

ORION, a village of Henry County, at the intersection of the Rock Island Division of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 19 miles southeast of Rock Island. Pop. (1890), 624; (1900), 584.

OSBORN, William Henry, Railway President, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 21, 1820. After receiving a high school education in his native town, he entered the counting room of the East India house of Peele, Hubbell & Co.; was subsequently sent to represent the firm at Manila, finally engaging in business on his own account, during which he traveled extensively in Europe. Returning to the United States in 1853, he took up his residence in New York, and, having married the daughter of Jonathan Sturges, one of the original incorporators and promoters of the Illinois Central Railroad, he soon after became associated with that enterprise. In August, 1854, he was chosen a Director of the Company, and, on Dec. 1, 1855, became its third President, serving in the latter position nearly ten years (until July 11, 1865), and, as a Director, until 1877—in all, twenty-two years. After retiring from his connection with the Illinois Central Railroad, Mr. Osborn gave his attention largely to enterprises of an educational and benevolent character in aid of the unfortunate classes in the State of New York.

OSBORN, Thomas O., soldier and diplomatist, was born in Licking County, Ohio, August 11, 1832; graduated from the Ohio University at Athens, in 1854; studied law at Crawfordsville, Ind., with Gen. Lew Wallace, was admitted to the bar and began practice in Chicago. Early in the war for the Union he joined the "Yates Phalanx," which, after some delay on account of the quota being full, was mustered into the service, in August, 1861, as the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, the subject of this sketch being commissioned its Lieutenant-Colonel. His promotion to the colonelcy soon followed, the regiment being sent east to guard the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, where it met the celebrated Stonewall Jackson, and took part in many important engagements, including the battles of Winchester, Bermuda Hundreds, and Drury's Bluff, besides the sieges of Charleston and Petersburg. At Bermuda Hundreds Colonel Osborn was severely wounded, losing the use of his right arm. He bore a conspicuous part in the operations about Richmond which resulted in the capture of the rebel capital, his services being recognized by promotion to the brevet rank of Major-General. At the close of the war he returned to the practice of law in Chicago, but, in 1874, was appointed Consul-General and Minister-Resident to the Argentine Republic, remaining in that position until June, 1885, when he resigned, resuming his residence in Chicago.

OSWEGO, a village in Kendall County, on the Aurora and Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 6 miles south of Aurora. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 618.

OTTAWA, the county-seat and principal city of La Salle County, being incorporated as a village in 1838, and, as a city, in 1853. It is located at the confluence of the Illinois and Fox Rivers and on the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is the intersecting point of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway and the Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, 98 miles east of Rock Island and 83 miles west-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region abounds in coal. Sand of a superior quality for the manufacture of glass is found in the vicinity and the place has extensive glass works. Other manufactured products are brick, drain-tile, sewer-pipe, tile-roofing, pottery, pianos, organs, cigars, wagons and carriages, agricultural implements, hay carriers, hay presses, sash, doors, blinds, cabinet work, saddlery and harness and pumps. The city has some handsome public buildings including the Appellate (formerly Supreme) Court House for the Northern Division. It also has several public parks, one of which (South Park) contains a medicinal spring. There are a dozen churches and numerous public school buildings, including a high school. The city is lighted by gas and electricity, has electric street railways, good sewerage, and water-works supplied from over 150 artesian wells and numerous natural springs. It has one private and two national banks, five libraries, and eight weekly newspapers (three German), of which four issue daily editions. Pop. (1890), 9,985; (1900), 10,588.

OTTAWA, CHICAGO & FOX RIVER VALLEY RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

OUTAGAMIES, a name given, by the French, to the Indian tribe known as the Foxes. (See Sacs and Foxes.)

OWEN, Thomas J. V., early legislator and Indian Agent, was born in Kentucky, April 5, 1801; came to Illinois at an early day, and, in 1830, was elected to the Seventh General Assembly from Randolph County; the following year was appointed Indian Agent at Chicago, as successor to Dr. Alexander Wolcott, who had died in the latter part of 1830. Mr. Owen served as Indian Agent until 1833; was a member of the first Board of Town Trustees of the village of Chicago, Commissioner of School Lands, and one of the Government Commissioners who conducted the treaty with the Pottawatomie and other tribes of Indians at Chicago, in September, 1833. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 15, 1835.

PADDOCK, Gaius, pioneer, a native of Massachusetts, was born in 1758; at the age of 17 he entered the Colonial Army, serving until the close of the Revolutionary War, and being in Washington's command at the crossing of the Delaware. After the war he removed to Vermont; but, in 1815, went to Cincinnati, and, a year later, to St. Charles, Mo. Then, after having spent about a year at St. Louis, in 1818 he located in Madison County, Ill., at a point afterwards known as "Paddock's Grove," and which became one of the most prosperous agricultural sections of Southern Illinois. Died, in 1821.

PAINE, (Gen.) Eleazer A., soldier, was born in Parkman, Geauga County, Ohio, Sept. 10, 1815; graduated at West Point Military Academy, in 1839, and was assigned to the First Infantry, serving in the Florida War (1839-40), but resigned, Oct. 11, 1840. He then studied law and practiced at Painesville, Ohio, (1843-48), and at Moumouth, Ill., (1848-61), meanwhile serving in the lower branch of the Eighteenth General Assembly (1852-53). Before leaving Ohio, he had been Deputy United States Marshal and Lieutenant-Colonel of the State Militia, and, in Illinois, became Brigadier-General of Militia (1845-48). He was appointed Colonel of the Ninth Illinois in April, 1861, and served through the war, being promoted Brigadier-General in September, 1861. The first duty performed by his regiment, after this date, was the occupation of Paducah, Ky., where he was in command. Later, it took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, the battles of Shiloh, New Madrid and Corinth, and also in the various engagements in Northern Georgia and in the "march to the sea." From November, 1862, to May, 1864, General Paine was guarding railroad lines in Central Tennessee, and, during a part of 1864, in command of the Western District of Kentucky. He resigned, April 5, 1865, and died in Jersey City, Dec. 16, 1882. A sturdy Union man, he performed his duty as a soldier with great zeal and efficiency.

PALATINE, a village of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 26 miles northwest from Chicago. There are flour and planing mills here; dairying and farming are leading industries of the surrounding country. Population (1880), 731; (1890), 891; (1900), 1,020.

PALESTINE, a town in Crawford County, about 2 miles from the Wabash River, 7 miles east of Robinson, and 35 miles southwest of Terre Haute, on the Illinois Central Railway; has five churches, a graded school, a bank, weekly newspaper, flour mill, cold storage plant, canning factory, garment factory, and municipal light and power plant. Pop. (1890), 732; (1900), 979.

PALMER, Frank W., journalist, ex-Congressman and Public Printer, was born at Manchester, Dearborn County, Ind., Oct. 11, 1827; learned the printer's trade at Jamestown, N. Y., afterwards edited "The Jamestown Journal," and served two terms in the New York Legislature; in 1858 removed to Dubuque, Iowa, and edited "The Dubuque Times," was elected to Congress in 1860, and again in 1868 and 1872, meanwhile having purchased "The Des Moines Register," which he edited for several years. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and became editor of "The Inter Ocean," remaining two years; in 1877 was appointed Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving eight years. Shortly after the accession of President Harrison, in 1889, he was appointed Public Printer, continuing in office until the accession of President Cleveland in 1893, when he returned to newspaper work, but resumed his old place at the head of the Government Printing Bureau after the inauguration of President McKinley in 1897.

PALMER, John McAuley, lawyer, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Scott County, Ky., Sept. 13, 1817; removed with his father to Madison County, Ill., in 1831, and, four years later, entered Shurtleff College, at Upper Alton, as a student; later taught and studied law, being admitted to the bar in 1839. In 1843 he was elected Probate Judge of Macoupin County, also served in the State Constitutional Convention of 1847; after discharging the duties of Probate and County Judge, was elected to the State Senate, to fill a vacancy, in 1852, and re-elected in 1854, as an Anti-Nebraska Democrat, casting his vote for Lyman Trumbull for United States Senator in 1855, but resigned his seat in 1856; was President of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in the latter year, and appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia; was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress in 1859, and chosen a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket in 1860; served as a member of the National Peace Conference of 1861; entered the army as Colonel of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; was promoted Brigadier General, in November, 1861, taking part in the campaign in Tennessee up to Chickamauga, assuming the command of the Fourteenth Army Corps with the rank of Major-General, but was relieved at his own request before Atlanta. In 1865 he was assigned, by President Lincoln, to command of the Military Department of Kentucky, but, in September, 1866, retired from the service, and, in 1867, became a citizen of Springfield. The following year he was elected Governor, as a Republican, but, in 1872, supported Horace Greeley for President, and has since cooperated with the Democratic party. He was three times the unsuccessful candidate of his party for United States Senator, and was their nominee for Governor in 1888, but defeated. In 1890 he was nominated for United States Senator by the Democratic State Convention and elected in joint session of the Legislature, March 11, 1891, receiving on the 154th ballot 101 Democratic and two Farmers' Mutual Alliance votes. He became an important factor in the campaign of 1896 as candidate of the "Sound Money" Democracy for President, although receiving no electoral votes, proving his devotion to principle. His last years were occupied in preparation of a volume of personal recollections, which was completed, under the title of "The Story of an Earnest Life," a few weeks before his death, which occurred at his home in Springfield, September 25, 1900.

PALMER, Potter, merchant and capitalist, was born in Albany County, N. Y., in 1825; received an English education and became a junior clerk in a country store at Durham, Greene County, in that State, three years later being placed in charge of the business, and finally engaging in business on his own account. Coming to Chicago in 1852, he embarked in the dry-goods business on Lake Street, establishing the house which afterwards became Field, Leiter & Co. (now Marshall Field & Co.), from which he retired, in 1865, with the basis of an ample fortune, which has since been immensely increased by fortunate operations in real estate. Mr. Palmer was Second Vice-President of the first Board of Local Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition in 1891.—Mrs. Bertha M. Honore (Palmer), wife of the preceding, is the daughter of H. H.

Honore, formerly a prominent real-estate owner and operator of Chicago. She is a native of Louisville, Ky., where her girlhood was chiefly spent, though she was educated at a convent near Baltimore, Md. Later she came with her family to Chicago, and, in 1870, was married to Potter Palmer. Mrs. Palmer has been a recognized leader in many social and benevolent movements, but won the highest praise by her ability and administrative skill, exhibited as President of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

PALMYRA, a village of Macoupin County, on the Springfield Division of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul Railway, 33 miles southwest from Springfield; has some local manufactories, a bank and a newspaper. Population (1900), 813.

PANA, an important railway center and principal city of Christian County, situated in the southeastern part of the County, and at the intersecting point of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Illinois Central and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads, 35 miles south by west from Decatur, and 42 miles southeast of Springfield. It is an important shipping-point for grain and has two elevators. Its mechanical establishments include two flouring mills, a foundry, two machine shops and two planing mills. The surrounding region is rich in coal, which is extensively mined. Pana has banks, several churches, graded schools, and three papers issuing daily and weekly editions. Population (1890), 5,077; (1900), 5,530.

PARKS, Gavion D. A., lawyer, was born at Bristol, Ontario County, N. Y., Sept. 17, 1817; went to New York City in 1838, where he completed his legal studies and was admitted to the bar, removing to Lockport, Ill., in 1842. Here he successively edited a paper, served as Master in Chancery and in an engineering corps on the Illinois & Michigan Canal; was elected County Judge in 1849, removed to Joliet, and, for a time, acted as an attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Michigan Central and the Chicago & Alton Railroads; was also a Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; was elected Representative in 1852, became a Republican and served on the first Republican State Central Committee (1856); the same year was elected to the State Senate, and was a Commissioner of the State Penitentiary in 1864. In 1872 Mr. Parks joined in the Liberal-Republican movement, was defeated for Congress, and afterwards acted with the Democratic party. Died, Dec. 28, 1895.

PARKS, Lawson A., journalist, was born at Mecklenburg, N. C., April 15, 1813; learned the printing trade at Charlotte, in that State; came to St. Louis in 1833, and, in 1836, assisted in establishing "The Alton Telegraph," but sold his interest a few years later. Then, having officiated as pastor of Presbyterian churches for some years, in 1854 he again became associated with "The Telegraph," acting as its editor. Died at Alton, March 31, 1875.

PARK RIDGE, a suburban village on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 13 miles northwest of Chicago. Population (1880), 457; (1890), 987; (1900), 1,340.

PARTRIDGE, Charles Addison, journalist and Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic, was born in Westford, Chittenden County, Vt., Dec. 8, 1843; came with his parents to Lake County, Ill., in 1844, and spent his boyhood on a farm, receiving his education in the district school, with four terms in a high school at Burlington, Wis. At 16 he taught a winter district school near his boyhood home, and at 18 enlisted in what became Company C of the Ninety-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, being mustered into the service as Eighth Corporal at Rockford. His regiment becoming attached to the Army of the Cumberland, he participated with it in the battles of Chickamauga and the Atlanta campaign, as well as those of Franklin and Nashville, and has taken a just pride in the fact that he never fell out on the march, took medicine from a doctor or was absent from his regiment during its term of service, except for four months while recovering from a gun-shot wound received at Chickamauga. He was promoted successively to Sergeant, Sergeant-Major, and commissioned Second Lieutenant of his old company, of which his father was First Lieutenant for six months and until forced to resign on account of impaired health. Receiving his final discharge, June 28, 1865, he returned to the farm, where he remained until 1869, in the meantime being married to Miss Jennie E. Earle, in 1866, and teaching school one winter. In 1869 he was elected County Treasurer of Lake County on the Republican ticket, and re-elected in 1871; in January of the latter year, purchased an interest in "The Waukegan Gazette," with which he remained associated some fifteen years, at first as the partner of Rev. A. K. Fox, and later of his younger brother, H. E. Partridge. In 1877 he was appointed, by President Hayes, Postmaster at Waukegan, serving four years; in 1886 was elected to the Legislature, serving (by successive elections) as Representative in the Thirty-fifth, Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies, being frequently called upon to occupy the Speaker's chair, and, especially during the long Senatorial contest of 1891, being recognized as a leader of the Republican minority. In 1888 he was called to the service of the Republican State Central Committee (of which he had previously been a member), as assistant to the veteran Secretary, the late Daniel Shepard, remaining until the death of his chief, when he succeeded to the secretaryship. During the Presidential campaign of 1892 he was associated with the late William J. Campbell, then the Illinois member of the Republican National Committee, and was entrusted by him with many important and confidential missions. Without solicitation on his part, in 1894 he was again called to assume the secretaryship of the Republican State Central Committee, and bore a conspicuous and influential part in winning the brilliant success achieved by the party in the campaign of that year. From 1893 to 1895 he served as Mayor of Waukegan; in 1896 became Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois—a position which he held in 1899 under Commander James S. Martin, and to which he has been re-appointed by successive Department Commanders up to the present time. Mr. Partridge's service in the various public positions held by him, has given him an acquaintance extending to every county in the State.

PATOKA, a village of Marion County, on the Western branch of the Illinois Central Railway, 15 miles south of Vandalia. There are flour and saw mills here; the surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 640.

PATTERSON, Robert Wilson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born in Blount County, Tenn., Jan. 21, 1814; came to Bond County, Ill., with his parents in 1822, his father dying two years later; at 18 had had only nine months' schooling, but graduated at Illinois College in 1837; spent a year at Lane Theological Seminary, another as tutor in Illinois College, and then, after two years more at Lane Seminary and preaching in Chicago and at Monroe, Mich., in 1842 established the Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, of which he remained the pastor over thirty years. In 1850 he received a call to the chair of Didactic Theology at Lane Seminary, as successor to Dr. Lyman Beecher, but it was declined, as was a similar call ten years later. Resigning his pastorate in 1873, he was, for several years, Professor of Christian Evidences and Ethics in the Theological Seminary of the Northwest; in 1876-78 served as President of Lake Forest University (of which he was one of the founders), and, in 1880-83, as lecturer in Lane Theological Seminary. He received the degree of D.D. from Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1854, that of LL.D. from Lake Forest University, and was Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly (N. S.) at Wilmington, Del., in 1859. Died, at Evanston, Ill., Feb. 24, 1894.

PAVEY, Charles W., soldier and ex-State Auditor, was born in Highland County, Ohio, Nov. 8, 1835; removed to Illinois in 1859, settling in the vicinity of Mount Vernon, and, for a time, followed the occupation of a farmer and stock-raiser. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Eightieth Illinois Volunteers for the Civil War, and became First Lieutenant of Company E. He was severely wounded at the battle of Sand Mountain, and, having been captured, was confined in Libby Prison, at Salisbury, N. C., and at Danville, Va., for a period of nearly two years, enduring great hardship and suffering. Having been exchanged, he served to the close of the war as Assistant Inspector-General on the Staff of General Rousseau, in Tennessee. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880, which nominated General Garfield for the Presidency, and was one of the famous "306" who stood by General Grant in that struggle. In 1882 he was appointed by President Arthur Collector of Internal Revenue for the Southern District, and, in 1888, was nominated and elected State Auditor on the Republican ticket, but was defeated for re-election in the "land-slide" of 1892. General Pavey has been prominent in "G. A. R." councils, and held the position of Junior Vice-Commander for the Department of Illinois in 1878, and that of Senior Vice-Commander in 1879. He also served as Brigadier-General of the National Guard, for Southern Illinois, during the railroad strike of 1877. In 1897 he received from President McKinley the appointment of Special Agent of the Treasury Department. His home is at Mount Vernon, Jefferson County.

PAWNEE, a village of Sangamon County, at the eastern terminus of the Auburn & Pawnee Railroad, 19 miles south of Springfield. The town has a bank and a weekly paper. Population (1900), 595; (1903, est.), 1,000.

PAWNEE RAILROAD, a short line in Sangamon County, extending from Pawnee to Auburn (9 miles), where it forms a junction with the Chicago & Alton Railroad. The company was organized and procured a charter in December, 1888, and the road completed the following year. The cost was $101,774. Capital stock authorized, $100,000; funded debt (1895), $50,000.

PAW PAW, a village of Lee County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 8 miles northwest of Earlville. The town is in a farming region, but has a bank and one weekly paper. Population (1890), 635; (1900), 765.

PAXTON, the county-seat of Ford County, is situated at the intersection of the Chicago Division of the Illinois Central and the Lake Erie & Western Railroads, 103 miles south by west from Chicago, and 49 miles east of Bloomington. It contains a court house, two schools, water-works, electric light and water-heating system, two banks, nine churches, and one daily newspaper. It is an important shipping-point for the farm products of the surrounding territory, which is a rich agricultural region. Besides brick and tile works and flour mills, factories for the manufacture of carriages, buggies, hardware, cigars, brooms, and plows are located here. Pop. (1890), 2,187; (1900), 3,036.

PAYSON, a village in Adams County, 15 miles southeast of Quincy; the nearest railroad station being Fall Creek, on the Quincy and Louisiana Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has one newspaper. Population (1900), 465.

PAYSON, Lewis E., lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Providence, R. I., Sept. 17, 1840; came to Illinois at the age of 12, and, after passing through the common schools, attended Lombard University, at Galesburg, for two years. He was admitted to the bar at Ottawa in 1862, and, in 1865, took up his residence at Pontiac. From 1869 to 1873 he was Judge of the Livingston County Court, and, from 1881 to 1891, represented his District in Congress, being elected as a Republican, but, in 1890, was defeated by his Democratic opponent, Herman W. Snow. Since retiring from Congress he has practiced his profession in Washington, D. C.

PEABODY, Selim Hobart, educator, was born in Rockingham County, Vt., August 20, 1829; after reaching 13 years of age, spent a year in a Boston Latin School, then engaged in various occupations, including teaching, until 1848, when he entered the University of Vermont, graduating third in his class in 1852; was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Engineering in the Polytechnic College at Philadelphia, in 1854, remaining three years, when he spent five years in Wisconsin, the last three as Superintendent of Schools at Racine. From 1865 to 1871 he was teacher of physical science in Chicago High School, also conducting night schools for working men; in 1871 became Professor of Physics and Engineering in Massachusetts Agricultural College, but returned to the Chicago High School in 1874; in 1876 took charge of the Chicago Academy of Sciences, and, in 1878, entered the Illinois Industrial University (now University of Illinois), at Champaign, first as Professor of Mechanical Engineering, in 1880 becoming President, but resigning in 1891. During the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, Professor Peabody was Chief of the Department of Liberal Arts, and, on the expiration of his service there, assumed the position of Curator of the newly organized Chicago Academy of Sciences, from which he retired some two years later.

PEARL, a village of Pike County, on the Kansas City branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 14 miles west of Roodhouse. Population (1890), 928; (1900), 722.

PEARSON, Isaac N., ex-Secretary of State, was born at Centreville, Pa., July 27, 1842; removed to Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., in 1858, and has ever since resided there. In 1872 he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1876. Later he engaged in real-estate and banking business. He was a member of the lower house in the Thirty-third, and of the Senate in the Thirty-fifth, General Assembly, but before the expiration of his term in the latter, was elected Secretary of State, on the Republican ticket, in 1888. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated, although, next to Governor Fifer, he received the largest vote cast for any candidate for a political office on the Republican State ticket.

PEARSON, John M., ex-Railway and Warehouse Commissioner, born at Newburyport, Mass., in 1832—the son of a ship-carpenter; was educated in his native State and came to Illinois in 1849, locating at the city of Alton, where he was afterwards engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements. In 1873 he was appointed a member of the first Railway and Warehouse Commission, serving four years; in 1878 was elected Representative in the Thirty-first General Assembly from Madison County, and was re-elected, successively, in 1880 and '82. He was appointed a member of the first Board of Live-Stock Commissioners in 1885, serving until 1893, for a considerable portion of the time as President of the Board. Mr. Pearson is a life-long Republican and prominent member of the Masonic fraternity. His present home is at Godfrey.

PEARSONS, Daniel K., M.D., real-estate operator and capitalist, was born at Bradfordton, Vt., April 14, 1820; began teaching at 16 years of age, and, at 21, entered Dartmouth College, taking a two years' course. He then studied medicine, and, after practicing a short time in his native State, removed to Chicopee, Mass., where he remained from 1843 to 1857. The latter year he came to Ogle County, Ill., and began operating in real estate, finally adding to this a loan business for Eastern parties, but discontinued this line in 1877. He owns extensive tracts of timber lands in Michigan, is a Director in the Chicago City Railway Company and American Exchange Bank, besides being interested in other financial institutions. He has been one of the most liberal supporters of the Chicago Historical Society, and a princely contributor to various benevolent and educational institutions, his gifts to colleges, in different parts of the country, aggregating over a million dollars.

PECATONICA, a town in Pecatonica Township, Winnebago County, on the Pecatonica River. It is on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, midway between Freeport and Rockford, being 14 miles from each. It contains a carriage factory, machine shop, condensed milk factory, a bank, six churches, a graded school, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,059; (1900), 1,045.

PECATONICA RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which rise in Iowa County, Wis. They unite a little north of the Illinois State line, whence the river runs southeast to Freeport, then east and northeast, until it enters Rock River at Rockton. From the headwaters of either branch to the mouth of the river is about 50 miles.

PECK, Ebenezer, early lawyer, was born in Portland, Maine, May 22, 1805; received an academical education, studied law and was admitted to the bar in Canada in 1827. He was twice elected to the Provincial Parliament and made King's Counsel in 1833; came to Illinois in 1835, settling in Chicago; served in the State Senate (1838-40), and in the House (1840-42 and 1858-60); was also Clerk of the Supreme Court (1841-45), Reporter of Supreme Court decisions (1849-63), and member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Mr. Peck was an intimate personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, by whom he was appointed a member of the Court of Claims, at Washington, serving until 1875. Died, May 25, 1881.

PECK, Ferdinand Wythe, lawyer and financier, was born in Chicago, July 15, 1848—the son of Philip F. W. Peck, a pioneer and early merchant of the metropolis of Illinois; was educated in the public schools, the Chicago University and Union College of Law, graduating from both of the last named institutions, and being admitted to the bar in 1869. For a time he engaged in practice, but his father having died in 1871, the responsibility of caring for a large estate devolved upon him and has since occupied his time, though he has given much attention to the amelioration of the condition of the poor of his native city, and works of practical benevolence and public interest. He is one of the founders of the Illinois Humane Society, has been President and a member of the Board of Control of the Chicago Athenæum, member of the Board of Education, President of the Chicago Union League, and was an influential factor in securing the success of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in 1893, serving as First Vice-President of the Chicago Board of Directors, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and member of the Board of Reference and Control. Of late years, Mr. Peck has been connected with several important building enterprises of a semi-public character, which have added to the reputation of Chicago, including the Auditorium, Stock Exchange Building and others in which he is a leading stockholder, and in the erection of which he has been a chief promoter. In 1898 he was appointed, by President McKinley, the United States Commissioner to the International Exposition at Paris of 1900, as successor to the late Maj. M. P. Handy, and the success which has followed his discharge of the duties of that position, has demonstrated the fitness of his selection.

PECK, George R., railway attorney, born in Steuben County, N. Y., in 1843; was early taken to Wisconsin, where he assisted in clearing his father's farm; at 16 became a country school-teacher to aid in freeing the same farm from debt; enlisted at 19 in the First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, later becoming a Captain in the Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry, with which he joined in "Sherman's March to the Sea." Returning home at the close of the war, he began the study of law at Janesville, spending six years there as a student, Clerk of the Circuit Court and in practice. From there he went to Kansas and, between 1871 and '74, practiced his profession at Independence, when he was appointed by President Grant United States District Attorney for the Kansas District, but resigned this position, in 1879, to return to general practice. In 1881 he became General Solicitor of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, removing to Chicago in 1893. In 1895 he resigned his position with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad to accept a similar position with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, which (1898) he still holds. Mr. Peck is recognized as one of the most gifted orators in the West, and, in 1897, was chosen to deliver the principal address at the unveiling of the Logan equestrian statue in Lake Front Park, Chicago; has also officiated as orator on a number of other important public occasions, always acquitting himself with distinction.

PECK, John Mason, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 31, 1789; removed to Greene County, N. Y., in 1811, where he united with the Baptist Church, the same year entering on pastoral work, while prosecuting his studies and supporting himself by teaching. In 1814 he became pastor of a church at Amenia, N. Y., and, in 1817, was sent west as a missionary, arriving in St. Louis in the latter part of the same year. During the next nine years he traveled extensively through Missouri and Illinois, as an itinerant preacher and teacher, finally locating at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, where, in 1826, he established the Rock Spring Seminary for the education of teachers and ministers. Out of this grew Shurtleff College, founded at Upper Alton in 1835, in securing the endowment of which Dr. Peck traveled many thousands of miles and collected $20,000, and of which he served as Trustee for many years. Up to 1843 he devoted much time to aiding in the establishment of a theological institution at Covington, Ky., and, for two years following, was Corresponding Secretary and Financial Agent of the American Baptist Publication Society, with headquarters in Philadelphia. Returning to the West, he served as pastor of several important churches in Missouri, Illinois and Kentucky. A man of indomitable will, unflagging industry and thoroughly upright in conduct, for a period of a quarter of a century, in the early history of the State, probably no man exerted a larger influence for good and the advancement of the cause of education, among the pioneer citizens of all classes, than Dr. Peck. Though giving his attention so constantly to preaching and teaching, he found time to write much, not only for the various publications with which he was, from time to time, connected, but also for other periodicals, besides publishing "A Guide for Emigrants" (1831), of which a new edition appeared in 1836, and a "Gazetteer of Illinois" (Jacksonville, 1834, and Boston, 1837), which continue to be valued for the information they contain of the condition of the country at that time. He was an industrious collector of historical records in the form of newspapers and pamphlets, which were unfortunately destroyed by fire a few years before his death. In 1852 he received the degree of D.D. from Harvard University. Died, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, March 15, 1858.

PECK, Philip F. W., pioneer merchant, was born in Providence, R. I., in 1809, the son of a wholesale merchant who had lost his fortune by indorsing for a friend. After some years spent in a mercantile house in New York, he came to Chicago on a prospecting tour, in 1830; the following year brought a stock of goods to the embryo emporium of the Northwest—then a small backwoods hamlet—and, by trade and fortunate investments in real estate, laid the foundation of what afterwards became a large fortune. He died, Oct. 23, 1871, as the result of an accident occurring about the time of the great fire of two weeks previous, from which he was a heavy sufferer pecuniarily. Three of his sons, Walter L., Clarence I. and Ferdinand W. Peck, are among Chicago's most substantial citizens.

PEKIN, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Tazewell County, and an important railway center, located on the Illinois River, 10 miles south of Peoria and 56 miles north of Springfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the chief occupations in the surrounding country, but the city itself is an important grain market with large general shipping interests. It has several distilleries, besides grain elevators, malt-houses, brick and tile works, lumber yards, planing mills, marble works, plow and wagon works, and a factory for corn products. Its banking facilities are adequate, and its religious and educational advantages are excellent. The city has a public library, park, steam-heating plant, three daily and four weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 6,347; (1900), 8,420.

PEKIN, LINCOLN & DECATUR RAILROAD.

(See Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway.)

PELL, Gilbert T., Representative in the Third Illinois General Assembly (1822) from Edwards County, and an opponent of the resolution for a State Convention adopted by the Legislature at that session, designed to open the door for the admission of slavery. Mr. Pell was a son-in-law of Morris Birkbeck, who was one of the leaders in opposition to the Convention scheme, and very naturally sympathized with his father-in-law. He was elected to the Legislature, for a second term, in 1828, but subsequently left the State, dying elsewhere, when his widow removed to Australia.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. As to operations of this corporation in Illinois, see Calumet River; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago; South Chicago & Southern, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways. The whole number of miles owned, leased and operated by the Pennsylvania System, in 1898, was 1,987.21, of which only 61.34 miles were in Illinois. It owns, however, a controlling interest in the stock of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway (which see).

PEORIA, the second largest city of the State and the county-seat of Peoria County, is 160 miles southwest of Chicago, and at the foot of an expansion of the Illinois River known as Peoria Lake. The site of the town occupies an elevated plateau, having a water frontage of four miles and extending back to a bluff, which rises 200 feet above the river level and about 120 feet above the highest point of the main site. It was settled in 1778 or '79, although, as generally believed, the French missionaries had a station there in 1711. There was certainly a settlement there as early as 1725, when Renanlt received a grant of lands at Pimiteoui, facing the lake then bearing the same name as the village. From that date until 1812, the place was continuously occupied as a French village, and is said to have been the most important point for trading in the Mississippi Valley. The original village was situated about a mile and a half above the foot of the lake; but later, the present site was occupied, at first receiving the name of "La Ville de Maillet," from a French Canadian who resided in Peoria, from 1765 to 1801 (the time of his death), and who commanded a company of volunteers in the Revolutionary War. The population of the old town removed to the new site, and the present name was given to the place by American settlers, from the Peoria Indians, who were the occupants of the country when it was first discovered, but who had followed their cognate tribes of the Illinois family to Cahokia and Kaskaskia, about a century before American occupation of this region. In 1812 the town is estimated to have contained about seventy dwellings, with a population of between 200 and 300, made up largely of French traders, hunters and voyageurs, with a considerable admixture of half-breeds and Indians, and a few Americans. Among the latter were Thomas Forsyth, Indian Agent and confidential adviser of Governor Edwards; Michael La Croix, son-in-law of Julian Dubuque, founder of the city of Dubuque; Antoine Le Claire, founder of Davenport, and for whom Le Claire, Iowa, is named; William Arndel, afterwards Recorder of St. Clair County, and Isaac Darnielle, the second lawyer in Illinois.—In November, 1812, about half the town was burned, by order of Capt. Thomas E. Craig, who had been directed, by Governor Edwards, to proceed up the river in boats with materials to build a fort at Peoria. At the same time, the Governor himself was at the head of a force marching against Black Partridge's village, which he destroyed. Edwards had no communication with Craig, who appears to have acted solely on his own responsibility. That the latter's action was utterly unjustifiable, there can now be little doubt. He alleged, by way of excuse, that his boats had been fired upon from the shore, at night, by Indians or others, who were harbored by the citizens. The testimony of the French, however, is to the effect that it was an unprovoked and cowardly assault, instigated by wine which the soldiers had stolen from the cellars of the inhabitants. The bulk of those who remained after the fire were taken by Craig to a point below Alton and put ashore. This occurred in the beginning of winter, and the people, being left in a destitute condition, were subjected to great suffering. A Congressional investigation followed, and the French, having satisfactorily established the fact that they were not hostile, were restored to their possessions.—In 1813 a fort, designed for permanent occupancy, was erected and named Fort Clark, in honor of Col. George Rogers Clark. It had one (if not two) block-houses, with magazines and quarters for officers and men. It was finally evacuated in 1818, and was soon afterwards burned by the Indians. Although a trading-post had been maintained here, at intervals, after the affair of 1812, there was no attempt made to rebuild the town until 1819, when Americans began to arrive.—In 1824 a post of the American Fur Company was established here by John Hamlin, the company having already had, for five years, a station at Wesley City, three miles farther down the river. Hamlin also traded in pork and other products, and was the first to introduce keel-boats on the Illinois River. By transferring his cargo to lighter draft boats, when necessary, he made the trip from Peoria to Chicago entirely by water, going from the Des Plaines to Mud Lake, and thence to the South Branch of the Chicago River, without unloading. In 1834 the town had but seven frame houses and twenty-one log cabins. It was incorporated as a town in 1835 (Rudolphus Rouse being the first President), and, as the City of Peoria, ten years later (Wm. Hale being the first Mayor).—Peoria is an important railway and business center, eleven railroad lines concentrating here. It presents many attractive features, such as handsome residences, fine views of river, bluff and valley scenery, with an elaborate system of parks and drives. An excellent school system is liberally supported, and its public buildings (national, county and city) are fine and costly. Its churches are elegant and well attended, the leading denominations being Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, Protestant and Reformed Episcopal, Lutheran, Evangelical and Roman Catholic. It is the seat of Bradley Polytechnic Institute, a young and flourishing scientific school affiliated with the University of Chicago, and richly endowed through the munificence of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, who devotes her whole estate, of at least a million dollars, to this object. Right Rev. John L. Spaulding, Bishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of Peoria, is erecting a handsome and costly building for the Spaulding Institute, a school for the higher education of young men.—At Bartonville, a suburb of Peoria, on an elevation commanding a magnificent view of the Illinois River valley for many miles, the State has located an asylum for the incurable insane. It is now in process of erection, and is intended to be one of the most complete of its kind in the world. Peoria lies in a corn and coal region, is noted for the number and extent of its distilleries, and, in 1890, ranked eighth among the grain markets of the country. It also has an extensive commerce with Chicago, St. Louis and other important cities; was credited, by the census of 1890, with 554 manufacturing establishments, representing 90 different branches of industry, with a capital of $15,072,567 and an estimated annual product of $55,504,523. Its leading industries are the manufacture of distilled and malt liquors, agricultural implements, glucose and machine-shop products. Its contributions to the internal revenue of the country are second only to those of the New York district. Population (1870), 22,849; (1880), 29,259; (1890), 41,024; (1900), 56,100.

PEORIA COUNTY, originally a part of Fulton County, but cut off in 1825. It took its name from the Peoria Indians, who occupied that region when it was first discovered. As first organized, it included the present counties of Jo Daviess and Cook, with many others in the northern part of the State. At that time there were less than 1,500 inhabitants in the entire region; and John Hamlin, a Justice of the Peace, on his return from Green Bay (whither he had accompanied William S. Hamilton, a son of Alexander Hamilton, with a drove of cattle for the fort there), solemnized, at Chicago, the marriage of Alexander Wolcott, then Indian Agent, with a daughter of John Kinzie. The original Peoria County has been subdivided into thirty counties, among them being some of the largest and richest in the State. The first county officer was Norman Hyde, who was elected Judge of the Probate Court by the Legislature in January, 1825. His commission from Governor Coles was dated on the eighteenth of that month, but he did not qualify until June 4, following, when he took the oath of office before John Dixon, Circuit Clerk, who founded the city that bears his name. Meanwhile, Mr. Hyde had been appointed the first Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, and served in that capacity until entering upon his duties as Probate Judge. The first election of county officers was held, March 7, 1825, at the house of William Eads. Nathan Dillon, Joseph Smith, and William Holland were chosen Commissioners; Samuel Fulton Sheriff, and William Phillips Coroner. The first County Treasurer was Aaron Hawley, and the first general election of officers took place in 1826. The first court house was a log cabin, and the first term of the Circuit Court began Nov. 14, 1825, John York Sawyer sitting on the bench, with John Dixon, Clerk; Samuel Fulton, Sheriff; and John Twiney, the Attorney-General, present. Peoria County is, at present, one of the wealthiest and most populous counties in the State. Its soil is fertile and its manufactures numerous, especially at Peoria, the county-seat and principal city (which see). The area of the county is 615 square miles, and its population (1880), 55,353; (1890), 70,378; (1900), 88,608.

PEORIA LAKE, an expansion of the Illinois River, forming the eastern boundary of Peoria County, which it separates from the counties of Woodford and Tazewell. It is about 20 miles long and $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles broad at the widest part.

PEORIA, ATLANTA & DECATUR RAILROAD. (See Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad.)

PEORIA, DECATUR & EVANSVILLE RAILWAY. The total length of this line, extending from Peoria, Ill., to Evansville, Ind., is 330.87 miles, all owned by the company, of which 273 miles are in Illinois. It extends from Pekin, southeast to Grayville, on the Wabash River—is single track, unballasted, and of standard gauge. Between Pekin and Peoria the company uses the tracks of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway, of which it is one-fourth owner. Between Hervey City and Midland Junction it has trackage privileges over the line owned jointly by the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville and the Terre Haute & Peoria Companies (7.5 miles). Between Midland Junction and Decatur (2.4 miles) the tracks of the Illinois Central are used, the two lines having terminal facilities at Decatur in common. The rails are of fifty-two and sixty-pound steel.—(HISTORY.) The main line of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway is the result of the consolidation of several lines built under separate charters. (1) The Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1867, built in 1869-71, and operated the latter year, was leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway, but sold to representatives of the bond-holders, on account of default on interest, in 1876, and reorganized as the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway. (2) The Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, (projected from Decatur to Mattoon), was incorporated in 1871, completed from Mattoon to Hervey City, in 1872, and, the same year, consolidated with the Chicago & Great Southern; in January, 1874, the Decatur line passed into the hands of a receiver, and, in 1877, having been sold under foreclosure, was reorganized as the Decatur, Mattoon & Southern Railroad. In 1879 it was placed in the hands of trustees, but the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway having acquired a controlling interest during the same year, the two lines were consolidated under the name of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company. (3) The Grayville & Mattoon Railroad, chartered in 1857, was consolidated in 1872 with the Mount Vernon & Grayville Railroad (projected), the new corporation taking the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern (already mentioned). In 1872 the latter corporation was consolidated with the Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, under the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern Railway. Both consolidations, however, were set aside by decree of the United States District Court, in 1876, and the partially graded road and franchises of the Grayville & Mattoon lines sold, under foreclosure, to the contractors for the construction; 20 miles of the line from Olney to Newton, were completed during the month of September of that year, and the entire line, from Grayville to Mattoon, in 1878. In 1880 this line was sold, under decree of foreclosure, to the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company, which had already acquired the Decatur & Mattoon Division—thus placing the entire line, from Peoria to Grayville, in the hands of one corporation. A line under the name of the Evansville & Peoria Railroad, chartered in Indiana in 1880, was consolidated, the same year, with the Illinois corporation under the name of the latter, and completed from Grayville to Evansville in 1882. (4) The Chicago & Ohio River Railroad—chartered, in 1869, as the Danville, Olney & Ohio River Railroad—was constructed, as a narrow-gauge line, from Kansas to West Liberty, in 1878-81; in the latter year was changed to standard gauge and completed, in 1883, from Sidell to Olney (86 miles). The same year it went into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, in February, 1886, and reorganized, in May following, as the Chicago & Ohio River Railroad; was consolidated with the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway, in 1893, and used as the Chicago Division of that line. The property and franchises of the entire line passed into the hands of receivers in 1894, and are still (1898) under their management.

PEORIA, PEKIN & JACKSONVILLE RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEORIA & BUREAU VALLEY RAILROAD, a short line, 46.7 miles in length, operated by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, extending from Peoria to Bureau Junction, Ill. It was incorporated, Feb. 12, 1853, completed the following year, and leased to the Rock Island in perpetuity, April 14, 1854, the annual rental being $125,000. The par value of the capital stock is $1,500,000. Annual dividends of 8 per cent are guaranteed, payable semi-annually. (See Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway.)

PEORIA & EASTERN RAILROAD. Of this line the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company is the lessee. Its total length is 350½ miles, 132 of which lie in Illinois—123 being owned by the Company. That portion within this State extends east from Pekin to the Indiana State line, in addition to which the Company has trackage facilities over the line of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway (9 miles) to Peoria. The gauge is standard. The track is single, laid with sixty and sixty-seven-pound steel rails and ballasted almost wholly with gravel. The capital stock is $10,000,000. In 1895 it had a bonded debt of $13,603,000 and a floating debt of $1,261,130, making a total capitalization of $24,864,130.—(HISTORY.) The original of this corporation was the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington & Pekin Railroad, which was consolidated, in July, 1869, with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville & Danville Railroad—the new corporation taking the name of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western—and was opened to Pekin the same year. In 1874 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1879, and reorganized as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railway Company. The next change occurred in 1881, when it was consolidated with an Ohio corporation (the Ohio, Indiana & Pacific Railroad), again undergoing a slight change of name in its reorganization as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railroad Company. In 1886 it again got into financial straits, was placed in charge of a receiver and sold to a reorganization committee, and, in January, 1887, took the name of the Ohio, Indiana & Western Railway Company. The final reorganization, under its present name, took place in February, 1890, when it was leased to the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which it is operated. (See Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway.)

PEORIA & HANNIBAL RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & OQUAWKA RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & PEKIN UNION RAILWAY. A line connecting the cities of Peoria and Pekin, which are only 8 miles apart. It was chartered in 1880, and acquired, by purchase, the tracks of the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville and the Peoria & Springfield Railroads, between the two cities named in its title, giving it control of two lines, which are used by nearly all the railroads entering both cities from the east side of the Illinois River. The mileage, including both divisions, is 18.14 miles, second tracks and sidings increasing the total to nearly 60 miles. The track is of standard gauge, about two-thirds being laid with steel rails. The total cost of construction was $4,350,987. Its total capitalization (1898) was $4,177,763, including $1,000,000 in stock, and a funded debt of $2,904,000. The capital stock is held in equal amounts (each 2,500 shares) by the Wabash, the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Peoria & Eastern companies, with 1,000 shares by the Lake Erie & Western. Terminal charges and annual rentals are also paid by the Terre Haute & Peoria and the Iowa Central Railways.

PEORIA & SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEOTONE, a village of Will County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 41 miles south-southwest from Chicago; has some manufactures, a bank and a newspaper. The surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 717; (1900), 1,003.

PERCY, a village of Randolph County, at the intersection of the Wabash, Chesapeake & Western and the Mobile & Ohio Railways. Population (1890), 360; (1900), 660.

PERROT, Nicholas, a French explorer, who visited the valley of the Fox River (of Wisconsin) and the country around the great lakes, at various times between 1670 and 1690. He was present, as a guide and interpreter, at the celebrated conference held at Sault Ste. Marie, in 1671, which was attended by fifteen Frenchmen and representatives from seventeen Indian tribes, and at which the Sieur de Lussan took formal possession of Lakes Huron and Superior, with the surrounding region and "all the country southward to the sea," in the name of Louis XIV. of France. Perrot was the first to discover lead in the West, and, for several years, was Commandant in the Green Bay district. As a chronicler he was intelligent, interesting and accurate. His writings were not published until 1864, but have always been highly prized as authority.

PERRY, a town of Pike County; has a bank and a newspaper. Population (1880), 770; (1890), 705; (1900), 642.

PERRY COUNTY, lies in the southwest quarter of the State, with an area of 440 square miles and a population (1900) of 19,830. It was organized as a county in 1827, and named for Com. Oliver H. Perry. The general surface is rolling, although flat prairies occupy a considerable portion, interspersed with "post-oak flats." Limestone is found in the southern, and sandstone in the northern, sections, but the chief mineral wealth of the county is coal, which is abundant, and, at several points, easily mined, some of it being of a superior quality. Salt is manufactured, to some extent, and the chief agricultural output is wheat. Pinckneyville, the county-seat, has a central position and a population of about 1,300. Duquoin is the largest city. Beancoup Creek is the principal stream, and the county is crossed by several lines of railroad.

PERU, a city in La Salle County, at the head of navigation on the Illinois River, which is here spanned by a handsome bridge. It is distant 100 miles southwest from Chicago, and the same distance north-northeast from Springfield. It is connected by street cars with La Salle, one mile distant, which is the terminus of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is situated in a rich coal-mining region, is an important trade center, and has several manufacturing establishments, including zinc smelting works, rolling mills, nickeloïd factory, metal novelty works, gas engine factory, tile works, plow, scale and patent-pump factories, foundries and machine shops, flour and saw mills, clock factory, etc. Two national banks, with a combined capital of $200,000, are located at Peru, and one daily and one weekly paper. Population (1870), 3,650; (1880), 4,682; (1890), 5,550; (1900), 6,863.

PESOTUM, a village in Champaign County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 5 miles south of Telono. Population (1890), 575.

PETERSBURG, a city of Menard County, and the county-seat, on the Sangamon River, at the intersection Chicago & Alton with the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railway; 23 miles northwest of Springfield and 28 miles northeast of Jacksonville. The town was surveyed and platted by Abraham Lincoln in 1837, and is the seat of the "Old Salem" Chautauqua. It has machine shops, two banks, two weekly papers and nine churches. The manufactures include woollen goods, brick and drain-tile, bed-springs, mattresses, and canned goods. Pop. (1890), 2,342, (1900), 2,807.

PETERS, Onslow, lawyer and jurist, was born in Massachusetts, graduated at Brown University, and was admitted to the bar and practiced law in his native State until 1837, when he settled at Peoria, Ill. He served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, was elected to the bench of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit in 1853, and re-elected in 1855. Died, Feb. 28, 1856.

PHILLIPS, David L., journalist and politician, was born where the town of Marion, Williamson County, Ill., now stands, Oct. 28, 1823; came to St. Clair County in childhood, his father settling near Belleville; began teaching at an early age, and, when about 18, joined the Baptist Church, and, after a brief course with the distinguished Dr. Peck, at his Rock Spring Seminary, two years later entered the ministry, serving churches in Washington and other Southern Illinois counties, finally taking charge of a church at Jonesboro. Though originally a Democrat, his advanced views on slavery led to a disagreement with his church, and he withdrew; then accepted a position as paymaster in the construction department of the Illinois Central Railroad, finally being transferred to that of Land Agent for the Southern section, in this capacity visiting different parts of the State from one end of the main line to the other. About 1854 he became associated with the management of "The Jonesboro Gazette," a Democratic paper, which, during his connection with it (some two years), he made an earnest opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. At the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention (which see), held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, he was appointed a member of their State Central Committee, and, as such, joined in the call for the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in May following, where he served as Vice-President for his District, and was nominated for Presidential Elector on the Fremont ticket. Two years later (1858) he was the unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress in the Southern District, being defeated by John A. Logan; was again in the State Convention of 1860, and a delegate to the National Convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln for President the first time; was appointed by Mr. Lincoln United States Marshal for the Southern District in 1861, and re-appointed in 1865, but resigned after Andrew Johnson's defection in 1866. During 1862 Mr. Phillips became part proprietor of "The State Journal" at Springfield, retaining this relation until 1878, at intervals performing editorial service; also took a prominent part in organizing and equipping the One Hundred and Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (sometimes called the "Phillips Regiment"), and, in 1865, was one of the committee of citizens sent to escort the remains of President Lincoln to Springfield. He joined in the Liberal Republican movement at Cincinnati in 1872, but, in 1876, was in line with his former party associates, and served in that year as an unsuccessful candidate for Congress, in the Springfield District, in opposition to William M. Springer, early the following year receiving the appointment of Postmaster for the city of Springfield from President Hayes. Died, at Springfield, June 19, 1880.

PHILLIPS, George S., author, was born at Peterborough, England, in January, 1816; graduated at Cambridge, and came to the United States, engaging in journalism. In 1845 he returned to England, and, for a time, was editor of "The Leeds Times," still later being Principal of the People's College at Huddersfield. Returning to the United States, he came to Cook County, and, about 1866-68, was a writer of sketches over the nom de plume of "January Searle" for "The Chicago Republican"—later was literary editor of "The New York Sun" for several years. His mind becoming impaired, he was placed in an asylum at Trenton, N. J., finally dying at Morristown, N. J., Jan. 14, 1889. Mr. Phillips was the author of several volumes, chiefly sketches of travel and biography.

PHILLIPS, Jesse J., lawyer, soldier and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., May 22, 1837. Shortly after graduating from the Hillsboro Academy, he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. In 1861 he organized a company of volunteers, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was attached to the Ninth Illinois Infantry. Captain Phillips was successively advanced to the rank of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; resigned on account of disability, in August, 1864, but was brevetted Brigadier-General at the close of the war. His military record was exceptionally brilliant. He was wounded three times at Shiloh, and was personally thanked and complimented by Generals Grant and Oglesby for gallantry and efficient service. At the termination of the struggle he returned to Hillsboro and engaged in practice. In 1866, and again in 1868, he was the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but was both times defeated. In 1879 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1885. In 1890 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Fourth District, and, in 1893, was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice John M. Scholfield, his term expiring in 1897, when he was re-elected to succeed himself. Judge Phillips' present term will expire in 1906.

PHILLIPS, Joseph, early jurist, was born in Tennessee, received a classical and legal education, and served as a Captain in the War of 1812; in 1816 was appointed Secretary of Illinois Territory, serving until the admission of Illinois as a State, when he became the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, serving until July, 1822, when he resigned, being succeeded on the bench by John Reynolds, afterwards Governor. In 1822 he was a candidate for Governor in the interest of the advocates of a pro-slavery amendment of the State Constitution, but was defeated by Edward Coles, the leader of the anti-slavery party. (See Coles, Edward, and Slavery and Slave Laws.) He appears from the "Edwards Papers" to have been in Illinois as late as 1832, but is said eventually to have returned to Tennessee. The date of his death is unknown.

PIANKESHAWS, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. Their name, like those of their brethren, underwent many mutations of orthography, the tribe being referred to, variously, as the "Pou-an-ke-kials," the "Pi-an-gie-shaws," the "Pi-an-qui-shaws," and the "Py-an-ke-shaws." They were less numerous than the Weas, their numerical strength ranking lowest among the bands of the Miamis. At the time La Salle planted his colony around Starved Rock, their warriors numbered 150. Subsequent to the dispersion of this colony they (alone of the Miamis) occupied portions of the present territory of Illinois, having villages on the Vermilion and Wabash Rivers. Their earliest inclinations toward the whites were friendly, the French traders having intermarried with women of the tribe soon after the advent of the first explorers. Col. George Rogers Clark experienced little difficulty in securing their allegiance to the new government which he proclaimed. In the sanguinary raids (usually followed by reprisals), which marked Western history during the years immediately succeeding the Revolution, the Piankeshaws took no part; yet the outrages, perpetrated upon peaceable colonists, had so stirred the settlers' blood, that all Indians were included in the general thirst for vengeance, and each was unceremoniously dispatched as soon as seen. The Piankeshaws appealed to Washington for protection, and the President issued a special proclamation in their behalf. After the cession of the last remnant of the Miami territory to the United States, the tribe was removed to a Kansas reservation, and its last remnant finally found a home in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Weas.)

"PIASA BIRD," LEGEND OF THE. When the French explorers first descended the Upper Mississippi River, they found some remarkable figures depicted upon the face of the bluff, just above the site of the present city of Alton, which excited their wonder and continued to attract interest long after the country was occupied by the whites. The account given of the discovery by Marquette, who descended the river from the mouth of the Wisconsin, in June, 1673, is as follows: "As we coasted along" (after passing the mouth of the Illinois) "rocks frightful for their height and length, we saw two monsters painted on one of the rocks, which startled us at first, and upon which the boldest Indian dare not gaze long. They are as large as a calf, with horns on the head like a deer, a frightful look, red eyes, bearded like a tiger, the face somewhat like a man's, the body covered with scales, and the tail so long that it twice makes the turn of the body, passing over the head and down between the legs, ending at last in a fish's tail. Green, red and black are the colors employed. On the whole, these two monsters are so well painted that we could not believe any Indian to have been the designer, as good painters in France would find it hard to do as well. Besides this, they are painted so high upon the rock that it is hard to get conveniently at them to paint them." As the Indians could give no account of the origin of these figures, but had their terror even more excited at the sight of them than Marquette himself, they are supposed to have been the work of some prehistoric race occupying the country long before the arrival of the aborigines whom Marquette and his companions found in Illinois. There was a tradition that the figures were intended to represent a creature, part beast and part bird, which destroyed immense numbers of the inhabitants by swooping down upon them from its abode upon the rocks. At last a chief is said to have offered himself a victim for his people, and when the monster made its appearance, twenty of his warriors, concealed near by, discharged their arrows at it, killing it just before it reached its prey. In this manner the life of the chief was saved and his people were preserved from further depredations; and it was to commemorate this event that the figure of the bird was painted on the face of the cliff on whose summit the chief stood. This story, told in a paper by Mr. John Russell, a pioneer author of Illinois, obtained wide circulation in this country and in Europe, about the close of the first quarter of the present century, as the genuine "Legend of the Piasa Bird." It is said, however, that Mr. Russell, who was a popular writer of fiction, acknowledged that it was drawn largely from his imagination. Many prehistoric relics and human remains are said, by the late William McAdams, the antiquarian of Alton, to have been found in caves in the vicinity, and it seems a well authenticated fact that the Indians, when passing the spot, were accustomed to discharge their arrows—and, later, their firearms—at the figure on the face of the cliff. Traces of this celebrated pictograph were visible as late as 1840 to 1845, but have since been entirely quarried away.

PIATT COUNTY, organized in 1841, consisting of parts of Macon and Dewitt Counties. Its area is 440 square miles; population (1900), 17,706. The first Commissioners were John Hughes, W. Bailey and E. Peck. John Piatt, after whose family the county was named, was the first Sheriff. The North Fork of the Sangamon River flows centrally through the county from northeast to southwest, and several lines of railroad afford transportation for its products. Its resources and the occupation of the people are almost wholly agricultural, the surface being level prairie and the soil fertile. Monticello, the county-seat, has a population of about 1,700. Other leading towns are Cerro Gordo (939) and Bement (1,129).

PICKETT, Thomas Johnson, journalist, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 17, 1821; spent six years (1830-36) in St. Louis, when his family removed to Peoria; learned the printer's trade in the latter city, and, in 1840, began the publication of "The Peoria News," then sold out and established "The Republican" (afterwards "The Transcript"); was a member of the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, serving on the Committee on Resolutions, and being appointed on the State Central Committee, which called the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington, in May following, and was there appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia, which nominated General Fremont for President. Later, he published papers at Pekin and Rock Island, at the latter place being one of the first to name Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency; was elected State Senator in 1860, and, in 1862, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Sixty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, being transferred, as Colonel, to the One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois (100-days' men), and serving at Camp Douglas during the "Conspiracy" excitement. After the war, Colonel Pickett removed to Paducah, Ky., published a paper there called "The Federal Union," was appointed Postmaster, and, later, Clerk of the United States District Court, and was the Republican nominee for Congress, in that District, in 1874. Removing to Nebraska in 1879, he at different times conducted several papers in that State, residing for the most part at Lincoln. Died, at Ashland, Neb., Dec. 24, 1891.

PIERSON, David, pioneer banker, was born at Cazenovia, N. Y., July 9, 1806; at the age of 13 removed west with his parents, arriving at St. Louis, June 3, 1820. The family soon after settled near Collinsville, Madison County, Ill., where the father having died, they removed to the vicinity of Carrollton, Greene County, in 1821. Here they opened a farm, but, in 1827, Mr. Pierson went to the lead mines at Galena, where he remained a year, then returning to Carrollton. In 1834, having sold his farm, he began merchandising, still later being engaged in the pork and grain trade at Alton. In 1854 he added the banking business to his dry-goods trade at Carrollton, also engaged in milling, and, in 1862-63, erected a woolen factory, which was destroyed by an incendiary fire in 1872. Originally an anti-slavery Clay Whig, Mr. Pierson became a Republican on the organization of that party in 1856, served for a time as Collector of Internal Revenue, was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Philadelphia in 1872, and a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor in 1876. Of high integrity and unswerving patriotism, Mr. Pierson was generous in his benefactions, being one of the most liberal contributors to the establishment of the Langston School for the Education of Freedmen at Holly Springs, Miss., soon after the war. He died at Carrollton, May 8, 1891.—Ornan (Pierson), a son of the subject of this sketch, was a member of the Thirty-second General Assembly (1881) from Greene County, and is present cashier of the Greene County National Bank at Carrollton.

PIGGOTT, Isaac N., early politician, was born about 1792; served as an itinerant Methodist preacher in Missouri and Illinois, between 1819 and 1824, but finally located southwest of Jerseyville and obtained a license to run a ferry between Grafton and Alton; in 1828 ran as a candidate for the State Senate against Thomas Carlin (afterwards Governor); removed to St. Louis in 1858, and died there in 1874.

PIKE COUNTY, situated in the western portion of the State, lying between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, having an area of 795 square miles—named in honor of the explorer, Capt. Zebulon Pike. The first American settlers came about 1820, and, in 1821, the county was organized, at first embracing all the country north and west of the Illinois River, including the present county of Cook. Out of this territory were finally organized about one fourth of the counties of the State. Coles' Grove (now Gilead, in Calhoun County) was the first county-seat, but the seat of justice was removed, in 1824, to Atlas, and to Pittsfield in 1833. The surface is undulating, in some portions is hilly, and diversified with prairies and hardwood timber. Live-stock, cereals and hay are the staple products, while coal and Niagara limestone are found in abundance. Population (1890), 31,000; (1900), 31,595.

PILLSBURY, Nathaniel Joy, lawyer and judge, was born in York County, Maine, Oct. 21, 1834; in 1855 removed to Illinois, and, in 1858, began farming in Livingston County. He began the study of law in 1863, and, after admission to the bar, commenced practice at Pontiac. He represented La Salle and Livingston Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1873, was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit. He was re-elected in 1879 and again in 1885. He was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court in 1877, and again in 1879 and '85. He was severely wounded by a shot received from strikers on the line of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, near Chicago, in 1886, resulting in his being permanently disabled physically, in consequence of which he declined a re-election to the bench in 1891.

PINCKNEYVILLE, a city and the county-seat of Perry County, situated at the intersection of the Paducah Division Illinois Central and the Wabash, Chester & Western Railways, 10 miles west-northwest of Duquoin. Coal-mining is carried on in the immediate vicinity, and flour, carriages, plows and dressed lumber are among the manufactured products. Pinckneyville has two banks—one of which is national—two weekly newspapers, seven churches, a graded and a high school. Population (1880), 964; (1890), 1,298; (1900), 2,357.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD, one of the Pennsylvania Company's lines, operating 1,403 miles of road, of which 1,090 miles are owned and the remainder leased—length of line in Illinois, 28 miles. The Company is the outgrowth of a consolidation, in 1890, of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway with the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg, the Cincinnati & Richmond and the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroads. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company controls the entire line through ownership of stock. Capital stock outstanding, in 1898, $47,791,601; funded debt, $48,433,000; floating debt, $2,214,703—total capital $98,500,584.—(HISTORY.) The Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg Railroad, embracing the Illinois division of this line, was made up of various corporations organized under the laws of Illinois and Indiana. One of its component parts was the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway, organized, in 1865, by consolidation of the Galena & Illinois River Railroad (chartered in 1857), the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway of Indiana, the Cincinnati & Chicago Air-Line (organized 1860), and the Cincinnati, Logansport & Chicago Railway. In 1869, the consolidated line was leased to the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company, and operated under the name of the Columbus, Chicago & Indiana Central between Bradford, Ohio, and Chicago, from 1869 until its consolidation, under the present name, in 1890. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILWAY. The total length of this line is nearly 470 miles, but only a little over 16 miles are within Illinois. It was operated by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company as lessee. The entire capitalization in 1898 was $52,549,990; and the earnings in Illinois, $472,238.—(HISTORY.) The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway is the result of the consolidation, August 1, 1856, of the Ohio & Pennsylvania, the Ohio & Indiana and the Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad Companies, under the name of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1859; was sold under foreclosure in 1861; reorganized under its present title, in 1862, and leased to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, for 999 years, from July 1, 1869. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSFIELD, the county-seat of Pike County, situated on the Hannibal & Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, about 40 miles southeast of Quincy, and about the same distance south of west from Jacksonville. Its public buildings include a handsome court house and graded and high school buildings. The city has an electric light plant, city water-works, a flour mill, a National and a State bank, nine churches, and four weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 2,295; (1900), 2,293.

PLAINFIELD, a village of Will County, on the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and an interurban electric line, 8 miles northwest of Joliet; is in a dairying section; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 852; (1900), 920.

PLANO, a city in Kendall County, situated near the Fox River, and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 14 miles west-southwest of Aurora. There are manufactories of agricultural implements and bedsteads. The city has banks, several churches, graded and high schools, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,825; (1900), 1,634; (1903, est.), 2,250.

PLEASANT PLAINS, a village of Sangamon County, on Springfield Division Baltimore & Ohio S. W. Railroad, 16 miles northwest of Springfield; in rich farming region; has coal-shaft, bank, five churches, college and two newspapers. Population (1890), 518; (1900), 575.

PLEASANTS, George Washington, jurist, was born in Harrodsburg, Ky., Nov. 24, 1823; received a classical education at Williams College, Mass., graduating in 1842; studied law in New York City, and was admitted to the bar at Rochester, N. Y., in 1845, establishing himself in practice at Williamstown, Mass., where he remained until 1849. In 1851 he removed to Washington, D. C., and, after residing there two years, came to Illinois, locating at Rock Island, which has since been his home. In 1861 he was elected, as a Republican, to the State Constitutional Convention which met at Springfield in January following, and, in 1867, was chosen Judge for the Sixth (now Tenth) Judicial Circuit, having served by successive re-elections until June, 1897, retiring at the close of his fifth term—a record for length of service seldom paralleled in the judicial history of the State. The last twenty years of this period were spent on the Appellate bench. For several years past Judge Pleasants has been a sufferer from failing eyesight, but has been faithful in attendance on his judicial duties. As a judicial officer and a man, his reputation stands among the highest.

PLUMB, Ralph, soldier and ex-Congressman, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., March 29, 1816. After leaving school he became a merchant's clerk, and was himself a merchant for eighteen years. From New York he removed to Ohio, where he was elected a member of the Legislature in 1855, later coming to Illinois. During the Civil War he served four years in the Union army as Captain and Quartermaster, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at its close. He made his home at Streator, where he was elected Mayor (1881-1883). There he engaged in coal-mining and has been connected with several important enterprises. From 1885 to 1889 he represented the Eighth Illinois District in Congress, after which he retired to private life.

PLYMOUTH, a village of Hancock County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 41 miles northeast of Quincy; is trade center of rich farming district; has two banks, electric lights, water-works, and one paper. Pop. (1900), 854.

POINTE DE SAIBLE, Jean Baptiste, a negro and Indian-trader, reputed to have been the first settler on the present site of the city of Chicago. He is said to have been a native of San Domingo, but is described by his contemporaries as "well educated and handsome," though dissipated. He appears to have been at the present site of Chicago as early as 1794, his house being located on the north side near the junction of the North and South branches of the Chicago River, where he carried on a considerable trade with the Indians. About 1796 he is said to have sold out to a French trader named Le Mai, and joined a countryman of his, named Glamorgan, at Peoria, where he died soon after. Glamorgan, who was the reputed owner of a large Spanish land-grant in the vicinity of St. Louis, is said to have been associated with Point de Saible in trade among the Peorias, before the latter came to Chicago.

POLO, a city in Ogle County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern Railways, 23 miles south of Freeport and 12 miles north of Dixon. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture and stock-raising, and Polo is a shipping point for large quantities of cattle and hogs. Agricultural implements (including harvesters) and buggies are manufactured here. The city has banks, one weekly and one semi-weekly paper, seven churches, a graded public and high school, and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,728; (1900), 1,869.

PONTIAC, an Ottawa chief, born on the Ottawa River, in Canada, about 1720. While yet a young man he became the principal Chief of the allied Ottawas, Ojibways and Pottawatomies. He was always a firm ally of the French, to whose interests he was devotedly attached, defending them at Detroit against an attack of the Northern tribes, and (it is generally believed) leading the Ottawas in the defeat of Braddock. He reluctantly acquiesced in the issue of the French and Indian War, although at first strongly disposed to dispute the progress of Major Rogers, the British officer sent to take possession of the western forts. In 1762 he dispatched emissaries to a large number of tribes, whom he desired to unite in a league for the extermination of the English. His proposals were favorably received, and thus was organized what is commonly spoken of as the "Conspiracy of Pontiac." He himself undertook to lead an assault upon Detroit. The garrison, however, was apprised of his intention, and made preparations accordingly. Pontiac thereupon laid siege to the fort, but was unable to prevent the ingress of provisions, the Canadian settlers furnishing supplies to both besieged and besiegers with absolute impartiality. Finally a boat-load of ammunition and supplies was landed at Detroit from Lake Erie, and the English made an unsuccessful sortie on July 31, 1763. After a desultory warfare, lasting for nearly three months, the Indians withdrew into Indiana, where Pontiac tried in vain to organize another movement. Although Detroit had not been taken, the Indians captured Forts Sandusky, St. Joseph, Miami, Ouiatanon, LeBoeuf and Venango, besides the posts of Mackinaw and Presque Isle. The garrisons at all these points were massacred and innumerable outrages perpetrated elsewhere. Additional British troops were sent west, and the Indians finally brought under control. Pontiac was present at Oswego when a treaty was signed with Sir William Johnson, but remained implacable. His end was tragic. Broken in heart, but still proud in spirit and relentless in purpose, he applied to the former (and last) French Governor of Illinois, the younger St. Ange, who was then at St. Louis, for co-operation and support in another raid against the British. Being refused aid or countenance, according to a story long popularly received, he returned to the vicinity of Cahokia, where, in 1769, he was murdered by a Kaskaskia Indian in consideration of a barrel of liquor. N. Matson, author of several volumes bearing on early history in Illinois, citing Col. Joseph N. Bonrassa, an educated half-breed of Kansas, as authority for his statement, asserts that the Indian killed at Cahokia was an impostor, and that the true Pontiac was assassinated by Kineboo, the Head Chief of the Illinois, in a council held on the Des Plaines River, near the present site of Joliet. So well convinced, it is said, was Pierre Chouteau, the St. Louis Indian trader, of the truth of this last story, that he caused a monument, which he had erected over the grave of the false Pontiac, to be removed. Out of the murder of Pontiac, whether occurring at Cahokia or Joliet, it is generally agreed, resulted the extermination of the Illinois and the tragedy of "Starved Rock." (See Starved Rock.)

PONTIAC, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Livingston County. It stands on the bank of the Vermillion River, and is also a point of intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads. It is 33 miles north-northeast from Bloomington and 93 miles south-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture, stock-raising and coal-mining. Pontiac has four banks and four weekly newspapers (two issuing daily editions), numerous churches and good schools. Various kinds of manufacturing are conducted, among the principal establishments being flouring mills, three shoe factories, straw paper and candy factories and a foundry. The State Reformatory for Juvenile Offenders is located here. Pop. (1890), 2,784; (1900), 4,266.

POOL, Orval, merchant and banker, was born in Union County, Ky., near Shawneetown, Ill., Feb. 17, 1809, but lived in Shawneetown from seven years of age; in boyhood learned the saddler's trade, but, in 1843, engaged in the dry-goods business, J. McKee Peeples and Thomas S. Ridgway becoming his partners in 1846. In 1850 he retired from the dry-goods trade and became an extensive dealer in produce, pork and tobacco. In 1871 he established the Gallatin County National Bank, of which he was the first President. Died, June 30, 1871.

POOLE, William Frederick, bibliographer, librarian and historical writer, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 24, 1821, graduated from Yale College in 1849, and, at the close of his sophomore year, was appointed assistant librarian of his college society, which owned a library of 10,000 volumes. Here he prepared and published the first edition of his now famous "Index to Periodical Literature." A second and enlarged addition was published in 1853, and secured for its author wide fame, in both America and Europe. In 1852 he was made Librarian of the Boston Mercantile Library, and, from 1856 to 1869, had charge of the Boston Athenæum, then one of the largest libraries in the United States, which he relinquished to engage in expert library work. He organized libraries in several New England cities and towns, at the United States Naval Academy, and the Cincinnati Public Library, finally becoming Librarian of the latter institution. In October, 1873, he assumed charge of the Chicago Public Library, then being organized, and, in 1887, became Librarian of the Newberry Library, organizing this institution and remaining at its head until his death, which occurred, March 1, 1894. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the Northwestern University in 1882. Dr. Poole took a prominent part in the organization of library associations, and was one of the Vice-Presidents of the International Conference of Librarians, held in London in 1871. His advice was much sought in relation to library architecture and management. He wrote much on topics connected with his profession and on historical subjects, frequently contributing to "The North American Review." In 1874-75 he edited a literary paper at Chicago, called "The Owl," and was later a constant contributor to "The Dial." He was President of the American Historical Society and member of State Historical Societies and of other kindred associations.

POPE, Nathaniel, first Territorial Secretary of Illinois, Delegate in Congress and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., in 1774; graduated with high honor from Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky., read law with his brother, Senator John Pope, and, in 1804, emigrated to New Orleans, later living, for a time, at Ste. Genevieve, Mo. In 1808 he became a resident of Kaskaskia and, the next year, was appointed the first Territorial Secretary of Illinois. His native judgment was strong and profound and his intellect quick and far-reaching, while both were thoroughly trained and disciplined by study. In 1816 he was elected a Territorial Delegate to Congress, and proved himself, not only devoted to the interests of his constituents, but also a shrewd tactician. He was largely instrumental in securing the passage of the act authorizing the formation of a State government, and it was mainly through his efforts that the northern boundary of Illinois was fixed at lat. 42° 30' north, instead of the southern bend of Lake Michigan. Upon the admission of Illinois into the Union, he was made United States Judge of the District, which then embraced the entire State. This office he filled with dignity, impartiality and acceptability until his death, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lucretia Yeatman, in St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 23, 1850. Pope County was named in his honor.—Gen. John (Pope), son of the preceding, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 16, 1822; graduated at the United States Military Academy, 1842, and appointed brevet Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers; served in Florida (1842-44), on the northeast boundary survey, and in the Mexican War (1846-47), being promoted First Lieutenant for bravery at Monterey and Captain at Buena Vista. In 1849 he conducted an exploring expedition in Minnesota, was in charge of topographical engineering service in New Mexico (1851-53), and of the survey of a route for the Union Pacific Railway (1853-59), meanwhile experimenting on the feasibility of artesian wells on the "Staked Plains" in Northwestern Texas. He was a zealous friend of Abraham Lincoln in the political campaign of 1860, and was court-martialed for criticising the policy of President Buchanan, in a paper read before a literary society in Cincinnati, the proceedings being finally dropped on the recommendation of the (then) Secretary of War, Joseph Holt. In 1861 he was one of the officers detailed by the War Department to conduct Mr. Lincoln to the capital, and, in May following, was made Brigadier-General of Volunteers and assigned to command in Missouri, where he performed valuable service in protecting railroad communications and driving out guerrillas, gaining an important victory over Sterling Price at Blackwater, in December of that year; in 1862 had command of the land forces co-operating with Admiral Foote, in the expedition against New Madrid and Island No. 10, resulting in the capture of that stronghold with 6,500 prisoners, 125 cannon and 7,000 small arms, thereby winning a Major-General's commission. Later, having participated in the operations against Corinth, he was transferred to command of the Army of Virginia, and soon after commissioned Brigadier-General in the regular army. Here, being forced to meet a greatly superior force under General Lee, he was subjected to reverses which led to his falling back on Washington and a request to be relieved of his command. For failure to give him proper support, Gen. Fitzjohn Porter was tried by court-martial, and, having been convicted, was cashiered and declared forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States Government—although this verdict was finally set aside and Porter restored to the army as Colonel, by act of Congress, in August, 1886. General Pope's subsequent service was performed chiefly against the Indians in the Northwest, until 1865, when he took command of the military division of Missouri, and, in June following, of the Department of the Missouri, including all the Northwestern States and Territories, from which he was relieved early in 1866. Later, he held command, under the Reconstruction Acts, in Georgia, Alabama and Florida (1867-68); the Department of the Lakes (1868-70); Department of the Missouri (1870-84); and Department of the Pacific, from 1884 to his retirement, March 16, 1886. General Pope published "Explorations from the Red River to the Rio Grande" and "Campaigns in Virginia" (1863). Died, at Sandusky, Ohio, Sept 23, 1892.

POPE COUNTY, lies on the southern border of the State, and contains an area of about 360 square miles—named in honor of Judge Nathaniel Pope. It was erected in 1816 (two years before the admission of Illinois as a State) from parts of Gallatin and Johnson Counties. The county-seat was first located at Sandsville, but later changed to Golconda. Robert Lacy, Benoni Lee and Thomas Ferguson were the first Commissioners; Hamlet Ferguson was chosen Sheriff; John Scott, Recorder; Thomas C. Browne, Prosecuting-Attorney, and Samuel Omelveney, Treasurer. The highest land in Southern Illinois is in the northeastern part of this county, reaching an elevation of 1,046 feet. The bluffs along the Ohio River are bold in outline, and the ridges are surmounted by a thick growth of timber, notably oak and hickory. Portions of the bottom lands are submerged, at times, during a part of the year and are covered with cypress timber. The remains of Indian mounds and fortifications are found, and some interesting relics have been exhumed. Sandstone is quarried in abundance, and coal is found here and there. Mineral springs (with copperas as the chief ingredient) are numerous. Iron is found in limited quantities, among the rocks toward the south, while spar and kaolin clay are found in the north. The chief agricultural products are potatoes, corn and tobacco. Population (1890), 14,016; (1900), 13,585.

PORT BYRON, a village of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 16 miles above Rock Island; has lime kilns, grain elevator, two banks, academy, public schools, and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 732. The (Illinois) Western Hospital for the Insane is located at Watertown, twelve miles below Port Byron.

PORTER, (Rev.) Jeremiah, pioneer clergyman, was born at Hadley, Mass., in 1804; graduated from Williams College in 1825, and studied theology at both Andover and Princeton seminaries, graduating from the latter in 1831. The same year he made the (then) long and perilous journey to Fort Brady, a military post at the Sault Ste. Marie, where he began his work as a missionary. In 1833 he came to Chicago, where he remained for two years, organizing the First Presbyterian Church of Chicago, with a membership of twenty-six persons. Afterwards he had pastoral charge of churches at Peoria and Farmington. While in Chicago he was married to Miss Eliza Chappell, one of the earliest teachers in Chicago. From 1840 to '58 he was located at Green Bay, Wis., accepting a call from a Chicago Church in the year last named. In 1861 he was commissioned Chaplain in the volunteer service by Governor Yates, and mustered out in 1865. The next five years were divided between labors at Brownsville, Tex., in the service of the Sanitary Commission, and a pastorate at Prairie du Chien. In 1870 he was commissioned Chaplain in the regular army, remaining in the service (with occasional leaves of absence) until 1882, when he was retired from active service on account of advanced age. His closing years were spent at the homes of his children in Detroit and Beloit; died at the latter city, July 25, 1893, at the age of 89 years.

POSEY, (Gen.) Thomas, Continental and Revolutionary soldier, was born in Virginia, July 9, 1750; in 1774 took part in Lord Dunmore's expedition against the Indians, and, later, in various engagements of the Revolutionary War, being part of the time under the immediate command of Washington; was with General Wayne in the assault on Stony Point and present at Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown; also served, after the war, with Wayne as a Brigadier-General in the Northwest Territory. Removing to Kentucky, he served in the State Senate, for a time being presiding officer and acting Lieutenant-Governor; later (1812), was elected United States Senator from Louisiana, and, from 1813 to '16, served as Territorial Governor of Indiana. Died, at the home of his son-in-law, Joseph M. Street, at Shawneetown, Ill., March 18, 1818, where he lies buried. At the time of his death General Posey was serving as Indian Agent.

POST, Joel S., lawyer and soldier of the Mexican War; was born in Ontario (now Wayne) County, N. Y., April 27, 1816; in 1838 removed with his father to Washtenaw County, Mich., remaining there until 1839, when he came to Macon County, Ill. The following year, he commenced the study of law with Judge Charles Emmerson, of Decatur, and was admitted to the bar in 1841. In 1846 he enlisted in the Mexican War, and served as Quartermaster of the Fourth Regiment (Col. E. D. Baker's); in 1856 was elected to the State Senate, and, at the following session, was a leading supporter of the measures which resulted in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington. Capt. Post's later years were spent at Decatur, where he died, June 7, 1886.

POST, Philip Sidney, soldier and Congressman, was born at Florida, Orange County, N. Y., March 19, 1833; at the age of 22 graduated from Union College, studied law at Poughkeepsie Law School, and, removing to Illinois, was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Fifty-ninth Illinois Volunteers. He was a gallant, fearless soldier, and was repeatedly promoted for bravery and meritorious service, until he attained the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. He participated in many important battles and was severely wounded at Pea Ridge and Nashville. In 1865 he was in command in Western Texas. After the close of the war he entered the diplomatic service, being appointed Consul-General to Austria-Hungary in 1874, but resigned in 1879, and returned to his home in Galesburg. From 1882 to 1886 he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, and, during 1886, was Commander of the Department of Illinois, G. A. R. He was elected to Congress from the Tenth District on the Republican ticket in 1886, serving continuously by re-election until his death, which occurred in Washington, Jan. 6, 1895.

POST, Truman Marcellus, D.D., clergyman, was born at Middlebury, Vt., June 3, 1810; graduated at Middlebury College in 1829, was Principal of Castleton Academy for a year, and a tutor at Middlebury two years, meanwhile studying law. After a winter spent in Washington, listening to the orators of the time in Congress and before the Supreme Court, including Clay, Webster, Wirt and their contemporaries, he went west in 1833, first visiting St. Louis, but finally settling at Jacksonville, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar, but soon after accepted the Professorship of Classical Languages in Illinois College, and later that of History; then began the study of theology, was ordained in 1840, and assumed the pastorate of the Congregational Church in Jacksonville. In 1847 he was called to the pastorate of the Third Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, and, in 1851, to the First Congregational Church, of which the former furnished the nucleus. For a year or two after removing to St. Louis, he continued his lectures on history at Illinois College for a short period each year; also held the professorship of Ancient and Modern History in Washington University, in St. Louis; in 1873-75 was Southworth lecturer on Congregationalism in Andover Theological Seminary and, for several years, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Chicago Theological Seminary. His splendid diction and his noble style of oratory caused him to be much sought after as a public lecturer or platform speaker at college commencements, while his purity of life and refinement of character attracted to him all with whom he came in personal contact. He received the degree of D.D. from Middlebury College in 1855; was a frequent contributor to "The Biblical Repository" and other religious publications, and, besides numerous addresses, sermons and pamphlets, he was the author of a volume entitled "The Skeptical Era in Modern History" (New York, 1856). He resigned his pastorate in January, 1882, but continued to be a frequent speaker, either in the pulpit or on the lecture platform, nearly to the period of his death, which occurred in St. Louis, Dec. 31, 1886. For a quarter of a century he was one of the Trustees of Monticello Female Seminary, at Godfrey, Ill., being, for a considerable portion of the time, President of the Board.

POTTAWATOMIES, THE, an Indian tribe, one of the three subdivisions of the Ojibwas (or Ojibbeways), who, in turn, constituted a numerous family of the Algonquins. The other branches were the Ottawa and the Chippewas. The latter, however, retained the family name, and hence some writers have regarded the "Ojibbeways" and the "Chippewas" as essentially identical. This interchanging of names has been a prolific source of error. Inherently, the distinction was analogous to that existing between genus and species, although a confusion of nomenclature has naturally resulted in errors more or less serious. These three tribes early separated, the Pottawatomies going south from Green Bay along the western shore of Lake Michigan. The meaning of the name is, "we are making a fire," and the word is a translation into the Pottawatomie language of the name first given to the tribe by the Miamis. These Indians were tall, fierce and haughty, and the tribe was divided into four branches, or clans, called by names which signify, respectively, the golden carp, the tortoise, the crab and the frog. According to the "Jesuit Relations," the Pottawatomies were first met by the French, on the north of Lake Huron, in 1639-40. More than a quarter of a century later (1666) Father Allouez speaks of them as dwellers on the shores of Lake Michigan. The same Father described them as idolatrous and polygamous, yet as possessing a rude civility and as being kindly disposed toward the French. This friendship continued unbroken until the expulsion of the latter from the Northwest. About 1678 they spread southward from Green Bay to the head of Lake Michigan, a portion of the tribe settling in Illinois as far south as the Kankakee and Illinois Rivers, crowding the Winnebagoes and the Sacs and Foxes on the west, and advancing, on the east, into the country of the Miamis as far as the Wabash and the Maumee. They fought on the side of the French in the French and Indian War, and later took part in the conspiracy of Pontiac to capture and reduce the British posts, and were so influenced by Tecumseh and the Prophet that a considerable number of their warriors fought against General Harrison at Tippecanoe. During the War of 1812 they actively supported the British. They were also prominent at the Chicago massacre. Schoolcraft says of them, "They were foremost at all treaties where lands were to be ceded, clamoring for the lion's share of all presents and annuities, particularly where these last were the price paid for the sale of other lands than their own." The Pottawatomies were parties to the treaties at Chicago in 1832 and 1833, and were among the last of the tribes to remove beyond the Mississippi, their final emigration not taking place until 1838. In 1846 the scattered fragments of this tribe coalesced with those of the Chippewas and Ottawas, and formed the Pottawatomie nation. They ceded all their lands, wherever located, to the United States, for $850,000, agreeing to accept 576,000 acres in Kansas in lieu of $87,000 of this amount. Through the rapacity and trespasses of white settlers, this reservation was soon dismembered, and the lands passed into other hands. In 1867, under an enabling act of Congress, 1,400 of the nation (then estimated at 2,500) became citizens. Their present location is in the southeastern part of Oklahoma.

POWELL, John Wesley, Ph.D., LL.D., geologist and anthropologist, was born at Mount Morris, N. Y., March 24, 1834, the son of a Methodist itinerant preacher, passing his early life at various places in Ohio, Wisconsin and Illinois; studied for a time in Illinois College (Jacksonville), and subsequently in Wheaton College, but, in 1854, began a special course at Oberlin, Ohio, teaching at intervals in public schools. Having a predilection for the natural sciences, he spent much time in making collections, which he placed in various Illinois institutions. Entering the army in 1861 as a private of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, he later became a Captain of the Second Illinois Artillery, being finally promoted Major. He lost his right arm at the battle of Shiloh, but returned to his regiment as soon as sufficiently recovered, and continued in active service to the close of the war. In 1865 he became Professor of Geology and Curator of the Museum in Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, but resigned to accept a similar position in the State Normal University. In 1867 he began his greatest work in connection with science by leading a class of pupils to the mountains of Colorado for the study of geology, which he followed, a year later, by a more thorough survey of the cañon of the Colorado River than had ever before been attempted. This led to provision by Congress, in 1870, for a topographical and geological survey of the Colorado and its tributaries, which was appropriately placed under his direction. Later, he was placed in charge of the Bureau of Ethnology in connection with the Smithsonian Institute, and, again in 1881, was assigned to the directorship of the United States Geological Survey, later becoming Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, in connection with the Smithsonian Institute in Washington City, where (1899) he still remains. In 1886 Major Powell received the degree of Ph.D. from Heidelberg University, and that of LL.D. from Harvard the same year. He is also a member of the leading scientific associations of the country, while his reports and addresses fill numerous volumes issued by the Government.

POWELL, William Henry, soldier and manufacturer, was born in South Wales, May 10, 1825; came to America in 1830, was educated in the common schools of Tennessee, and (1856-61) was manager of a manufacturing company at Iron-ton, Ohio; in 1861, became Captain of a West Virginia cavalry company, and was advanced through the grades of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded while leading a charge at Wytheville, Va., left on the field, captured and confined in Libby Prison six months. After exchange he led a cavalry division in the Army of the Shenandoah; was made Brigadier-General in October, 1864; after the war settled in West Virginia, and was a Republican Presidential Elector in 1868. He is now at the head of a nail mill and foundry in Belleville, and was Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois during 1895-96.

PRAIRIE CITY, a village in McDonough County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 23 miles southwest from Galesburg and 17 miles northeast of Maconb; has a carriage factory, flour mill, elevators, lumber and stock yards, a nursery, a bank, four churches and two weekly papers. Pop (1890), 812; (1900), 818.

PRAIRIE DU PONT, (in English, Bridge Prairie), an early French settlement, one mile south of Cahokia. It was commenced about 1760, located on the banks of a creek, on which was the first mill, operated by water-power, in that section, having been erected by missionaries from St. Sulpice, in 1754. In 1765 the village contained fourteen families. In 1844 it was inundated and nearly destroyed.

PRAIRIE du ROCHER, (in English, Prairie of the Rock), an early French village in what is now Monroe County, which began to spring up near Fort Chartres (see Fort Chartres), and by 1722 had grown to be a considerable settlement. It stood at the foot of the Mississippi bluffs, about four miles northeast of the fort. Like other French villages in Illinois, it had its church and priest, its common field and commons. Many of the houses were picturesque cottages built of limestone. The ancient village is now extinct: yet, near the outlet of a creek which runs through the bluff, may be seen the vestiges of a water mill, said to have been erected by the Jesuits during the days of French occupation.

PRENTICE, William S., Methodist Episcopal clergyman, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., in 1819; licensed as a Methodist preacher in 1849, and filled pastorates at Paris, Danville, Carlinville, Springfield, Jacksonville and other places—the latter part of his life, serving as Presiding Elder; was a delegate to the General Conference of 1860, and regularly re-elected from 1872 to the end of his life. During the latter part of his life his home was in Springfield. Died, June 28, 1887.

PRENTISS, Benjamin Mayberry, soldier, was born at Belleville, Wood County, Va., Nov. 23, 1819; in 1835 accompanied his parents to Missouri, and, in 1841, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he learned a trade, afterwards embarking in the commission business. In 1844-45 he was Lieutenant of a company sent against the Mormons at Nauvoo, later serving as Captain of Volunteers in the Mexican War. In 1860 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress; at the outbreak of the Civil War tendered his services to Governor Yates, and was commissioned Colonel of the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, was almost immediately promoted to Brigadier-General and placed in command at Cairo, so continuing until relieved by General Grant, in September, 1861. At the battle of Shiloh, in April following, he was captured with most of his command, after a most vigorous fight with a superior rebel force, but, in 1862, was exchanged and brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. He was a member of the court-martial that tried Gen. Fitzjohn Porter, and, as commander at Helena, Ark., defeated the Confederate Generals Holmes and Price on July 3, 1863. He resigned his commission, Oct. 28, 1863. In 1869 he was appointed by President Grant Pension Agent at Quincy, serving four years. At present (1898) General Prentiss' residence is at Bethany, Mo., where he served as Postmaster, during the administration of President Benjamin Harrison, and was reappointed by President McKinley. Died Feb. 8, 1901.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS. (See Elections.)

PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL, located at Chicago, was organized in 1883 by a number of wealthy and liberal Presbyterians, "for the purpose of affording medical and surgical aid to sick and disabled persons, and to provide them, while inmates of the hospital, with the ministrations of the gospel, agreeably to the doctrines and forms of the Presbyterian Church." Rush Medical College offered a portion of its ground as a site (see Rush Medical College), and through generous subscriptions, a well-planned building was erected, capable of accommodating about 250 patients. A corridor connects the college and hospital buildings. The medical staff comprises eighteen of Chicago's best known physicians and surgeons.

PRESBYTERIANS, THE. The first Presbyterian society in Illinois was organized by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky, in 1816, at Sharon, White County. Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith, also Presbyterians, had visited the State in 1814, as representatives of the Massachusetts Missionary Society, but had formed no society. The members of the Sharon church were almost all immigrants from the South, and were largely of Scotch-Irish extraction. Two other churches were established in 1819—one at Shoal Creek, Bond County, and the other at Edwardsville. In 1825 there were but three Presbyterian ministers in Illinois—Revs. Stephen Bliss, John Brich and B. F. Spilman. Ten years later there were 80 churches, with a membership of 2,500 and 60 ministers. In 1880 the number of churches had increased to 487; but, in 1890, (as shown by the United States census) there were less. In the latter year there were 405 ministers and 52,945 members. The Synod of Illinois is the highest ecclesiastical court of the denomination in the State, and, under its jurisdiction, the church maintains two seminaries: one (the McCormick) at Chicago, and the other (the Blackburn University) at Carlinville. The organ of the denomination is "The Interior," founded by Cyrus H. McCormick, and published weekly at Chicago, with William C. Gray as editor. The Illinois Synod embraced within its jurisdiction (1895) eleven Presbyteries, to which were attached 483 churches, 464 ministers and a membership of 63,247. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRICKETT, Abraham, pioneer merchant, was born near Lexington, Ky., came to Madison County, Ill., in 1808; was employed for a time in the drug business in St. Louis, then opened a store at Edwardsville, where, in 1813, he received from the first County Court of Madison County, a license to retail merchandise. In 1818, he served as one of the three Delegates from Madison County to the Convention which framed the first State Constitution, and, the same year, was elected a Representative in the First General Assembly; was also Postmaster of the town of Edwardsville for a number of years. In 1825 he removed to Adams County and laid out an addition to the city of Quincy; was also engaged there in trade with the Indians. In 1836, while engaged on a Government contract for the removal of snags and other obstructions to the navigation of Red River, he died at Natchitoches, La. —George W. (Prickett) a son of the preceding, and afterwards a citizen of Chicago, is said to have been the first white child born in Edwardsville.—Isaac (Prickett), a brother of Abraham, came to St. Louis in 1815, and to Edwardsville in 1818, where he was engaged in mercantile business with his brother and, later, on his own account. He held the offices of Postmaster, Public Administrator, Quartermaster-General of State Militia, Inspector of the State Penitentiary, and, from 1838 to '42, was Receiver of Public Moneys at Edwardsville, dying in 1844.

PRICKETT, David, pioneer lawyer, was born in Franklin County, Ga., Sept. 21, 1800; in early childhood was taken by his parents to Kentucky and from there to Edwardsville, Ill. He graduated from Transylvania University, and, in 1821, began the practice of law; was the first Supreme Court Reporter of Illinois, Judge of the Madison County Probate Court, Representative in the General Assembly (1826-28), Aid-de-Camp to General Whiteside in the Black Hawk War, State's Attorney for Springfield Judicial Circuit (1837), Treasurer of the Board of Canal Commissioners (1840), Director of the State Bank of Illinois (1842), Clerk of the House of Representatives for ten sessions and Assistant Clerk of the same at the time of his death, March 1, 1847.

PRINCE, David, physician and surgeon, was born in Brooklyn, Windham County, Conn., June 21, 1816; removed with his parents to Cauandaigua, N. Y., and was educated in the academy there; began the study of medicine in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, finishing at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, where he was associated, for a year and a half, with the celebrated surgeon, Dr. Muzzy. In 1843 he came to Jacksonville, Ill., and, for two years, was Professor of Anatomy in the Medical Department of Illinois College; later, spent five years practicing in St. Louis, and lecturing on surgery in the St. Louis Medical College, when, returning to Jacksonville in 1852, he established himself in practice there, devoting special attention to surgery, in which he had already won a wide reputation. During the latter part of the Civil War he served, for fourteen months, as Brigade Surgeon in the Army of the Potomac, and, on the capture of a portion of his brigade, voluntarily surrendered himself that he might attend the captives of his command in Libby Prison. After the close of the war he was employed for some months, by the Sanitary Commission, in writing a medical history of the war. He visited Europe twice, first in 1881 as a delegate to the International Medical Congress in London, and again as a member of the Copenhagen Congress of 1884—at each visit making careful inspection of the hospitals in London, Paris, and Berlin. About 1867 he established a Sanitarium in Jacksonville for the treatment of surgical cases and chronic diseases, to which he gave the closing years of his life. Thoroughly devoted to his profession, liberal, public-spirited and sagacious in the adoption of new methods, he stood in the front rank of his profession, and his death was mourned by large numbers who had received the benefit of his ministrations without money and without price. He was member of a number of leading professional associations, besides local literary and social organizations. Died, at Jacksonville, Dec. 19, 1889.

PRINCE, Edward, lawyer, was born at West Bloomfield, Ontario County, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1832; attended school at Payson, Ill., and Illinois College, Jacksonville, graduating from the latter in 1852; studied law at Quincy, and after admission to the bar in 1853, began dealing in real estate. In 1861 he offered his services to Governor Yates, was made Captain and Drill-master of cavalry and, a few months later, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventh Illinois Cavalry, taking part, as second in command, in the celebrated "Grierson raid" through Mississippi, in 1863, serving until discharged with the rank of Colonel of his regiment, in 1864. After the war he gave considerable attention to engineering and the construction of a system of water-works for the city of Quincy, where he now resides.

PRINCE, George W., lawyer and Congressman, born in Tazewell County, Ill., March 4, 1854; was educated in the public schools and at Knox College, graduating from the latter in 1878. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1880; was elected City Attorney of Galesburg the following year; served as chairman of the Knox County Republican Central Committee in 1884, and, in 1888, was elected Representative in the General Assembly and re-elected two years later. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Attorney-General of the State of Illinois, but was defeated with the rest of the State ticket; at a special election, held in April, 1895, he was chosen Representative in Congress from the Tenth District to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Col. Philip Sidney Post, which had occurred in January preceding. In common with a majority of his colleagues, Mr. Prince was re-elected in 1896, receiving a plurality of nearly 16,000 votes, and was elected for a third term in November, 1898.

PRINCETON, a city and the county-seat of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 22 miles west-southwest of Mendota, and 104 miles west-southwest of Chicago; has a court house, gas-works, electric lights, graded and high schools, numerous churches, three newspapers and several banks. Coal is mined five miles east, and the manufactures include flour, carriages and farm implements. Pop. (1890), 3,396; (1900), 4,023. Princeton is populated with one of the most intelligent and progressive communities in the State. It was the home of Owen Lovejoy during the greater part of his life in Illinois.

PRINCETON & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railway.)

PRINCEVILLE, a village of Peoria County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and the Rock Island & Peoria Railways, 22 miles northwest of Peoria; is a trade center for a prosperous agricultural region. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 735.

PROPHETSTOWN, a town in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Fulton Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 45 miles northwest of Mendota; has some manufactures, three banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 694; (1900), 1,143.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH. The pioneer Episcopal clergyman in this State was the Rt. Rev. Philander Chase, who was made Bishop of Illinois in 1835, and was the founder of Jubilee College. (See Chase, Rev. Philander.) The State at present is organized under the provincial system, the province comprising the dioceses of Chicago, Quincy and Springfield. At its head (1898) is the Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Bishop of Chicago. Rev. George F. Seymour of Springfield is Bishop of the Springfield Diocese, with C. R. Hale, Coadjutor at Cairo, and Rev. Alexander Burgess, Bishop of the Quincy Diocese, with residence at Peoria. The numerical strength of the church in Illinois is not great, although between 1880 and 1890 its membership was almost doubled. In 1840 there were but eighteen parishes, with thirteen clergymen and a membership of 267. By 1880 the number of parishes had increased to 89, there being 127 ministers and 9,842 communicants. The United States Census of 1890 showed the following figures: Parishes, 197; clergymen, 150, membership, 18,609. Total contributions (1890) for general church and mission work, $373,798. The chief educational institution of the denomination in the West is the Western Theological Seminary at Chicago. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRIOR, Joseph Everett, pioneer and early steamboat captain, was born in Virginia, August 10, 1787—the son of a non-commissioned officer of the Revolution, who emigrated to Kentucky about 1790 and settled near Louisville, which was then a fort with some twenty log cabins. In 1813 the son located where Golconda, Pope County, now stands, and early in life adopted the calling of a boatman, which he pursued some forty years. At this time he held a commission as a "Falls Pilot," and piloted the first steamer that ascended the Ohio River from New Orleans. During his long service no accident happened to any steamer for which he was responsible, although the Mississippi then bristled with snags. He owned and commanded the steamer Telegraph, which was sunk, in 1835, by collision with the Duke of Orleans on the Mississippi, but, owing to his presence of mind and the good discipline of his crew, no lives were lost. The salient features of his character were a boundless benevolence manifested to others, and his dauntless courage, displayed not only in the face of dangers met in his career as a boatman, but in his encounters with robbers who then infested portions of Southern Illinois. He had a reputation as a skillful pilot and popular commander not excelled by any of his contemporaries. He died, at his home in Pope County, Oct. 5, 1851, leaving one daughter, now Mrs. Cornelia P. Bozman, of Cairo, Ill.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, SUPERINTENDENTS OF. (See Superintendents of Public Instruction.)

PUGH, Isaac C., soldier, was born in Christian County, Ky., Nov. 23, 1805; came to Illinois, in 1821, with his father, who first settled in Shelby County, but, in 1829, removed to Macon County, where the subject of this sketch resided until his death, at Decatur, Nov. 14, 1874. General Pugh served in three wars—first in the Black Hawk War of 1832; then, with the rank of Captain and Field Officer in the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) in the war with Mexico, and, during the Civil War, entering upon the latter as Colonel of the Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in September, 1861, and being mustered out with the rank of full Brigadier-General in August, 1864, when his regiment was consolidated with the Fifty-third. He took part with his regiment in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the operations around Vicksburg, being wounded at the latter. In the year of his retirement from the army (1864) he was elected a Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly, and, the following year, was chosen County-Clerk of Macon County, serving four years.

PUGH, Jonathan H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Bath County, Ky., came to Bond County, Ill., finally locating at Springfield in 1823, and being the second lawyer to establish himself in practice in that city. He served in the Third, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh General Assemblies, and was defeated for Congress by Joseph Duncan (afterwards Governor), in 1831. Died, in 1833. Mr. Pugh is described by his contemporaries as a man of brilliant parts, an able lawyer and a great wit.

PULASKI COUNTY, an extreme southern county and one of the smallest in the State, bordering on the Ohio River and having an area of 190 square miles and a population (1900), of 14,554. It was cut off from Alexander County in 1843, and named in honor of a Polish patriot who had aided the Americans during the Revolution. The soil is generally rich, and the surface varied with much low land along the Cache and the Ohio Rivers. Wheat, corn and fruit are the principal crops, while considerable timber is cut upon the bottom lands. Mound City is the county-seat and was conceded a population, by the census of 1890, of 2,550. Only the lowest, barren portion of the carboniferous formation extends under the soil, the coal measures being absent. Traces of iron have been found and sulphur and copperas springs abound.

PULLMAN, a former suburb (now a part of the South Division) of the city of Chicago, 13.8 miles south of the initial station of the Illinois Central Railroad. The Pullman Palace Car Company began the erection of buildings here in 1880, and, on the 1st of January, 1881, the first family settled in the future manufacturing city. Within the next few years, it became the center of the largest manufacturing establishments in the country, including the Pullman Car Works, the Allen Paper Car Wheel Works and extensive steel forging works, employing thousands of mechanics. Large numbers of sleeping and dining cars, besides ordinary passenger coaches and freight cars, were manufactured here every year, not only for use on the railroads of the United States, but for foreign countries as well. The town was named for the late George M. Pullman, the founder of the car-works, and was regarded as a model city, made up of comfortable homes erected by the Palace Car Company for the use of its employés. It was well supplied with school-houses, and churches, and a public library was established there and opened to the public in 1883. The town was annexed to the city of Chicago in 1890.

PULLMAN, George Mortimer, founder of the Pullman Palace Car Company, was born at Brocton, N. Y., March 3, 1831, enjoyed ordinary educational advantages in his boyhood and, at fourteen years of age, obtained employment as a clerk, but a year later joined his brother in the cabinet-making business at Albion. His father, who was a house-builder and house-mover, having died in 1853, young Pullman assumed the responsibility of caring for the family and, having secured a contract for raising a number of buildings along the Erie Canal, made necessary by the enlargement of that thoroughfare, in this way acquired some capital and experience which was most valuable to him in after years. Coming to Chicago in 1859, when the work of raising the grade of the streets in the business portion of the city had been in progress for a year or two, he found a new field for the exercise of his inventive skill, achieving some marvelous transformations in a number of the principal business blocks in that part of the city. As early as 1858, Mr. Pullman had had his attention turned to devising some means for increasing the comforts of night-travel upon railways, and, in 1859, he remodeled two old day-coaches into a species of sleeping-cars, which were used upon the Alton Road. From 1860 to 1863 he spent in Colorado devoting his engineering skill to mining; but returning to Chicago the latter year, entered upon his great work of developing the idea of the sleeping-car into practical reality. The first car was completed and received the name of the "Pioneer." This car constituted a part of the funeral train which took the remains of Abraham Lincoln to Springfield, Ill., after his assassination in April, 1865. The development of the "Pullman palace sleeping-car," the invention of the dining-car, and of vestibule trains, and the building up of the great industrial town which bears his name, and is now a part of the city of Chicago, constituted a work of gradual development which resulted in some of the most remarkable achievements in the history of the nineteenth century, both in a business sense and in promoting the comfort and safety of the traveling public, as well as in bettering the conditions of workingmen. He lived to see the results of his inventive genius and manufacturing skill in use upon the principal railroads of the United States and introduced upon a number of important lines in Europe also. Mr. Pullman was identified with a number of other enterprises more or less closely related to the transportation business, but the Pullman Palace Car Company was the one with which he was most closely connected, and by which he will be longest remembered. He was also associated with some of the leading educational and benevolent enterprises about the city of Chicago, to which he contributed in a liberal manner during his life and in his will. His death occurred suddenly, from heart disease, at his home in Chicago, Oct. 19, 1897.

PURPLE, Norman H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Litchfield County, Conn., read law and was admitted to the bar in Tioga County, Pa., settled at Peoria, Ill., in 1836, and the following year was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for the Ninth Judicial District, which then embraced the greater portion of the State east of Peoria. In 1844 he was a Presidential Elector, and, in 1845, Governor Ford appointed him a Justice of the Supreme Court, vice Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., who had resigned. As required by law, he at the same time served as Circuit Judge, his district embracing all the counties west of Peoria, and his home being at Quincy. After the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 he returned to Peoria and resumed practice. He compiled the Illinois Statutes relating to real property, and, in 1857, made a compilation of the general laws, generally known to the legal profession as the "Purple Statutes." He subsequently undertook to compile and arrange the laws passed from 1857 to '63, and was engaged on this work when overtaken by death, at Chicago, Aug. 9, 1863. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, during the last ten years of his life, prominent at the Chicago bar.

PUTERBAUGH, Sabin D., judge and author, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1834; at 8 years of age removed with his parents to Tazewell County, Ill.; settled in Pekin in 1853, where he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the rebellion he was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Major of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, and took part in numerous engagements in Western Tennessee and Mississippi, including the battles of Shiloh and Corinth. Resigning his commission in 1862, he took up his residence at Peoria, where he resumed practice and began the preparation of his first legal work—"Common Law Pleading and Practice." In 1864 he formed a partnership with Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, which continued until 1867, when Mr. Puterbaugh was elected Circuit Court Judge. He retired from the bench in 1873 to resume private practice and pursue his work as an author. His first work, having already run through three editions, was followed by "Puterbaugh's Chancery Pleading and Practice," the first edition of which appeared in 1874, and "Michigan Chancery Practice," which appeared in 1881. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Died, Sept. 25, 1892. Leslie D. (Puterbaugh), a son of Judge Puterbaugh, is Judge of the Circuit Court of the Peoria Circuit.

PUTNAM COUNTY, the smallest county in the State, both as to area and population, containing only 170 square miles; population (1900), 4,746. It lies near the center of the north half of the State, and was named in honor of Gen. Israel Putnam. The first American to erect a cabin within its limits was Gurdon S. Hubbard, who was in business there, as a fur-trader, as early as 1825, but afterwards became a prominent citizen of Chicago. The county was created by act of the Legislature in 1825, although a local government was not organized until some years later. Since that date, Bureau, Marshall and Stark Counties have been erected therefrom. It is crossed and drained by the Illinois River. The surface is moderately undulating and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief staple, although wheat and oats are extensively cultivated. Coal is mined and exported. Hennepin is the county-seat.

QUINCY, the principal city of Western Illinois, and the county-seat of Adams County. It was founded in 1822—the late Gov. John Wood erecting the first log-cabin there—and was incorporated in 1839. The site is naturally one of the most beautiful in the State, the principal part of the city being built on a limestone bluff having an elevation of 125 to 150 feet, and overlooking the Mississippi for a long distance. Its location is 112 miles west of Springfield and 264 miles southwest of Chicago. Besides being a principal shipping point for the river trade north of St. Louis, it is the converging point of several important railway lines, including the Wabash, four branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City, giving east and west, as well as north and south, connections. At the present time (1904) several important lines, or extensions of railroads already constructed, are in contemplation, which, when completed, will add largely to the commercial importance of the city. The city is regularly laid out, the streets intersecting each other at right angles, and being lighted with gas and electricity. Water is obtained from the Mississippi. There are several electric railway lines, four public parks, a fine railway bridge across the Mississippi, to which a wagon bridge has been added within the past two years; two fine railway depots, and several elegant public buildings, including a handsome county court-house, a Government building for the use of the Post-office and the United States District Court. The Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home is located here, embracing a large group of cottages occupied by veterans of the Civil War, besides hospital and administration buildings for the use of the officers. The city has more than thirty churches, three libraries (one free-public and two college), with excellent schools and other educational advantages. Among the higher institutions of learning are the Chaddock College (Methodist Episcopal) and the St. Francis Solanus College (Roman Catholic). There are two or three national banks, a State bank with a capital of $300,000, beside two private banks, four or five daily papers, with several weekly and one or two monthly publications. Its advantages as a shipping point by river and railroad have made it one of the most important manufacturing centers west of Chicago. The census of 1890 showed a total of 374 manufacturing establishments, having an aggregate capital of $6,187,845, employing 5,058 persons, and turning out an annual product valued at $10,160,492. The cost of material used was $5,597,990, and the wages paid $2,383,571. The number of different industries reported aggregated seventy-six, the more important being foundries, carriage and wagon factories, agricultural implement works, cigar and tobacco factories, flour-mills, breweries, brick-yards, lime works, saddle and harness shops, paper mills, furniture factories, organ works, and artificial-ice factories. Population (1880), 27,268; (1890), 31,494; (1900), 36,252.

RAAB, Henry, ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born in Wetzlar, Rhenish Prussia, June 20, 1837; learned the trade of a currier with his father and came to the United States in 1853, finally locating at Belleville, Ill., where, in 1857, he became a teacher in the public schools; in 1873 was made Superintendent of schools for that city, and, in 1882, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction on the Democratic ticket, declined a renomination in 1886; was nominated a second time in 1890, and re-elected, but defeated by S. M. Inglis in 1894. In the administration of his office, Professor Raab showed a commendable freedom from partisanship. After retiring from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed a position in connection with the public schools of Belleville.

RADISSON, Pierre Esprit, an early French traveler and trader, who is said to have reached the Upper Mississippi on his third voyage to the West in 1658-59. The period of his explorations extended from 1652 to 1684, of which he prepared a narrative which was published by the Prince Society of Boston in 1885, under the title of "Radisson's Voyages." He and his brother-in-law, Medard Chouart, first conceived the idea of planting a settlement at Hudson's Bay. (See Chouart, Medard.)

RAILROAD AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION, a Board of three Commissioners, appointed by the executive (by and with the advice and consent of the Senate), under authority of an act approved, April 13, 1871, for the enforcement of the provisions of the Constitution and laws in relation to railroads and warehouses. The Commission's powers are partly judicial, partly executive. The following is a summary of its powers and duties: To establish a schedule of maximum rates, equitable to shipper and carrier alike; to require yearly reports from railroads and warehouses; to hear and pass upon complaints of extortion and unjust discrimination, and (if necessary) enforce prosecutions therefor; to secure the safe condition of railway road-beds, bridges and trestles; to hear and decide all manner of complaints relative to intersections and to protect grade-crossings; to insure the adoption of a safe interlocking system, to be approved by the Commission; to enforce proper rules for the inspection and registration of grain throughout the State. The principal offices of the Commission are at the State capital, where monthly sessions are held. For the purpose of properly conducting the grain inspection department, monthly meetings are also held at Chicago, where the offices of a Grain Inspector, appointed by the Board, are located. Here all business relating to this department is discussed and necessary special meetings are held. The inspection department has no revenue outside of fees, but the latter are ample for its maintenance. Fees for inspection on arrival ("inspection in") are twenty-five cents per car-load, ten cents per wagon-load, and forty cents per 1,000 bushels from canal-boat or vessels. For inspection from store ("inspected out") the fees are fifty cents per 1,000 bushels to vessels; thirty-five cents per car-load, and ten cents per wagon-load to teams. While there are never wanting some cases of friction between the transportation companies and warehousemen on the one hand, and the Commission on the other, there can be no question that the formation of the latter has been of great value to the receivers, shippers, forwarders and tax-payers of the State generally. Similar regulations in regard to the inspection of grain in warehouses, at East St. Louis and Peoria, are also in force. The first Board, created under the act of 1871, consisted of Gustavus Koerner, Richard P. Morgan and David S. Hammond, holding office until 1873. Other Boards have been as follows: 1873-77—Henry D. Cook (deceased 1873, and succeeded by James Steele), David A. Brown and John M. Pearson; 1877-83—William M. Smith, George M. Bogue and John H. Oberly (retired 1881 and succeeded by William H. Robinson); 1883-85—Wm. N. Brainard, E. C. Lewis and Charles T. Stratton; 1885-89—John I. Rinaker, Benjamin F. Marsh and Wm. T. Johnson (retired in 1887 and succeeded by Jason Rogers); 1889-93—John R. Wheeler, Isaac N. Phillips and W. S. Crim (succeeded, 1891, by John R. Tanner); 1893-97—W. S. Cantrell, Thomas F. Gahan and Charles F. Lape (succeeded, 1895, by George W. Fithian); 1897-99—Cicero J. Lindley, Charles S. Rannels and James E. Bidwell. (See also Grain Inspection.)

SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' HOME, WILMINGTON.

RAILROADS (IN GENERAL). The existing railroad system of Illinois had its inception in the mania for internal improvement which swept over the country in 1836-37, the basis of the plan adopted in Illinois (as in the Eastern States) being that the State should construct, maintain, own and operate an elaborate system. Lines were to be constructed from Cairo to Galena, from Alton to Mount Carmel, from Peoria to Warsaw, from Alton to the Central Railroad, from Belleville to Mount Carmel, from Bloomington to Mackinaw Town, and from Meredosia to Springfield. The experiment proved extremely unfortunate to the financial interests of the State, and laid the foundation of an immense debt under which it staggered for many years. The Northern Cross Railroad, extending from Meredosia to Springfield, was the only one so far completed as to be in operation. It was sold, in 1847, to Nicholas H. Ridgely, of Springfield for $21,100, he being the highest bidder. This line formed a nucleus of the existing Wabash system. The first road to be operated by private parties (outside of a primitive tramway in St. Clair County, designed for the transportation of coal to St. Louis) was the Galena & Chicago Union, chartered in 1836. This was the second line completed in the State, and the first to run from Chicago. The subsequent development of the railway system of Illinois was at first gradual, then steady and finally rapid. A succinct description of the various lines now in operation in the State may be found under appropriate headings. At present Illinois leads all the States of the Union in the extent of railways in operation, the total mileage (1897) of main track being 10,785.43—or 19 miles for each 100 square miles of territory and 25 miles for each 10,000 inhabitants—estimating the population (1898) at four and a quarter millions. Every one of the 102 counties of the State is traversed by at least one railroad except three—Calhoun, Hardin and Pope. The entire capitalization of the 111 companies doing business in the State in 1896, (including capital stock, funded debt and current liabilities), was $2,669,164,142—equal to $67,556 per mile. In 1894, fifteen owned and ten leased lines paid dividends of from four to eight per cent on common, and from four to ten per cent on preferred, stock—the total amount thus paid aggregating $25,321,752. The total earnings and income, in Illinois, of all lines operated in the State, aggregated $77,508,537, while the total expenditure within the State was $71,463,367. Of the 58,263,860 tons of freight carried, 11,611,798 were of agricultural products and 17,179,366 mineral products. The number of passengers (earning revenue) carried during the year, was 83,281,655. The total number of railroad employés (of all classes) was 61,200. The entire amount of taxes paid by railroad companies for the year was $3,846,379. From 1836, when the first special charter was granted for the construction of a railroad in Illinois, until 1869—after which all corporations of this character came under the general incorporation laws of the State in accordance with the Constitution of 1870—293 special charters for the construction of railroads were granted by the Legislature, besides numerous amendments of charters already in existence. (For the history of important individual lines see each road under its corporate name.)

RALSTON, Virgil Young, editor and soldier, was born, July 16, 1828, at Vanceburg, Ky.; was a student in Illinois College one year (1846-47), after which he studied law in Quincy and practiced for a time; also resided some time in California; 1855-57 was one of the editors of "The Quincy Whig," and represented that paper in the Editorial Convention at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) In 1861, he was commissioned a Captain in the Sixteenth Illinois Volunteers, but soon resigned on account of ill-health; later, enlisted in an Iowa regiment, but died in hospital at St. Louis, from wounds and exposure, April 19, 1864.

RAMSAY, Rufus N., State Treasurer, was born on a farm in Clinton County, Ill., May 20, 1838; received a collegiate education at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, and at Indiana State University; studied law with ex-Gov. A. C. French, and was admitted to the bar in 1865, but soon abandoned the law for banking, in which he was engaged both at Lebanon and Carlyle, limiting his business to the latter place about 1890. He served one term (from 1865) as County Clerk, and two terms (1889 and '91) as Representative in the General Assembly, and, in 1892, was nominated as a Democrat and elected State Treasurer. Died in office, at Carlyle, Nov. 11, 1894.

RAMSEY, a village of Fayette County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 12 miles north of Vandalia; the district is agricultural; has one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 598; (1900), 747.

RANDOLPH COUNTY, lies in the southwest section of the State, and borders on the Mississippi River; area 560 square miles; named for Beverly Randolph. It was set off from St. Clair County in 1795, being the second county organized in the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois. From the earliest period of Illinois history, Randolph County has been a pivotal point. In the autumn of 1700 a French and Indian settlement was established at Kaskaskia, which subsequently became the center of French influence in the Mississippi Valley. In 1722 Prairie du Rocher was founded by the French. It was in Randolph County that Fort Chartres was built, in 1720, and it was here that Col. George Rogers Clark's expedition for the seizure of the "Illinois Country" met with success in the capture of Kaskaskia. American immigration began with the close of the Revolutionary War. Among the early settlers were the Cranes (Ichabod and George), Gen. John Edgar, the Dodge family, the Morrisons, and John Rice Jones. Toward the close of the century came Shadrach Bond (afterwards the first Governor of the State) with his uncle of the same name, and the Menards (Pierre and Hippolyte), the first of whom subsequently became Lieutenant-Governor. (See Bond, Shadrach; Menard, Pierre.) In outline, Randolph County is triangular, while its surface is diversified. Timber and building stone are abundant, and coal underlies a considerable area. Chester, the county-seat, a city of 3,000 inhabitants, is a place of considerable trade and the seat of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary. The county is crossed by several railroad lines, and transportation facilities are excellent. Population (1890), 25,049; (1900), 28,001.

RANSOM, (Gen.) Thomas Edward Greenfield, soldier, was born at Norwich, Vt., Nov. 29, 1834; educated at Norwich University, an institution under charge of his father, who was later an officer of the Mexican War and killed at Chapultepec. Having learned civil engineering, he entered on his profession at Peru, Ill., in 1851; in 1855 became a member of the real-estate firm of A. J. Galloway & Co., Chicago, soon after removing to Fayette County, where he acted as agent of the Illinois Central Railroad. Under the first call for volunteers, in April, 1861, he organized a company, which having been incorporated in the Eleventh Illinois, he was elected Major, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, in this capacity having command of his regiment at Fort Donelson, where he was severely wounded and won deserved promotion to a colonelcy, as successor to Gen. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards killed at Shiloh. Here Colonel Ransom again distinguished himself by his bravery, and though again wounded while leading his regiment, remained in command through the day. His service was recognized by promotion as Brigadier-General. He bore a prominent part in the siege of Vicksburg and in the Red River campaign, and, later, commanded the Seventh Army Corps in the operations about Atlanta, but finally fell a victim to disease and his numerous wounds, dying in Chicago, Oct. 29, 1864, having previously received the brevet rank of Major-General. General Ransom was confessedly one of the most brilliant officers contributed by Illinois to the War for the Union, and was pronounced, by both Grant and Sherman, one of the ablest volunteer generals in their commands.

RANTOUL, a city in Champaign County, at the junction of the main line of the Illinois Central Railroad, with its West Lebanon and Leroy branch, 14 miles north-northeast of Champaign and 114 miles south by west of Chicago. It has a national bank, seven churches, opera house, graded school, two weekly papers, machine shops, flouring and flax mills, tile factories, and many handsome residences. Pop. (1900), 1,207.

RASLE, Sebastian, a Jesuit missionary, born in France, in 1658; at his own request was attached to the French missions in Canada in 1689, and, about 1691 or '92, was sent to the Illinois Country, where he labored for two years, traveling much and making a careful study of the Indian dialects. He left many manuscripts descriptive of his journeyings and of the mode of life and character of the aborigines. From Illinois he was transferred to Norridgewock, Maine, where he prepared a dictionary of the Abenaki language in three volumes, which is now preserved in the library of Harvard College. His influence over his Indian parishioners was great, and his use of it, during the French and Indian War, so incensed the English colonists in Massachusetts that the Governor set a price upon his head. On August 12, 1724, he was slain, with seven Indian chiefs who were seeking to aid his escape, during a night attack upon Norridgewock by a force of English soldiers from Fort Richmond, his mutilated body being interred the next day by the Indians. In 1833, the citizens of Norridgewock erected a monument to his memory on the spot where he fell.

RASTER, Herman, journalist, was born in Germany in 1828; entered journalism and came to America in 1851, being employed on German papers in Buffalo and New York City; in 1867 accepted the position of editor-in-chief of "The Chicago Staats Zeitung," which he continued to ill until June, 1890, when he went to Europe for the benefit of his health, dying at Dresden, July 24, 1891. While employed on papers in this country during the Civil War, he acted as the American correspondent of papers at Berlin, Bremen, Vienna, and other cities of Central Europe. He served as delegate to both State and National Conventions of the Republican party, and, in 1869, received from President Grant the appointment of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District, but, during the later years of his life, coöperated with the Democratic party.

RAUCH, John Henry, physician and sanitary expert, born in Lebanon, Pa., Sept. 4, 1828, and graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, in 1849. The following year he removed to Iowa, settling at Burlington. He was an active member of the Iowa State Medical Society, and, in 1851, prepared and published a "Report on the Medical and Economic Botany of Iowa," and, later, made a collection of ichthyologic remains of the Upper Mississippi and Missouri for Professor Agassiz. From 1857 to 1860 he filled the chair of Materia Medica and Medical Botany at Rush Medical College, Chicago, occupying the same position in 1859 in the Chicago College of Pharmacy, of which he was one of the organizers. During the Civil War he served, until 1864, as Assistant Medical Director, first in the Army of the Potomac, and later in Louisiana, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at the close of the struggle. Returning to Chicago, he aided in reorganizing the city's health service, and, in 1867, was appointed a member of the new Board of Health and Sanitary Inspector, serving until 1876. The latter year he was chosen President of the American Public Health Association, and, in 1877, a member of the newly created State Board of Health of Illinois, and elected its first President. Later, he became Secretary, and continued in that office during his connection with the Board. In 1878-79 he devoted much attention to the yellow-fever epidemic, and was instrumental in the formation of the Sanitary Council of the Mississippi, and in securing the adoption of a system of river inspection by the National Board of Health. He was a member of many scientific bodies, and the author of numerous monographs and printed addresses, chiefly in the domain of sanitary science and preventive medicine. Among them may be noticed "Intramural Interments and Their Influence on Health and Epidemics," "Sanitary Problems of Chicago," "Prevention of Asiatic Cholera in North America," and a series of reports as Secretary of the State Board of Health. Died, at Lebanon, Pa., March 24, 1894.

RAUM, (Gen.) Green Berry, soldier and author, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Dec. 3, 1829, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1853, but, three years later, removed with his family to Kansas. His Free-State proclivities rendering him obnoxious to the pro-slavery party there, he returned to Illinois in 1857, settling at Harrisburg, Saline County. Early in the Civil War he was commissioned a Major in the Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, was subsequently promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, and, later, advanced to a Brigadier-Generalship, resigning his commission at the close of the war (May 6, 1865). He was with Rosecrans in the Mississippi campaign of 1862, took a conspicuous part in the battle of Corinth, participated in the siege of Vicksburg and was wounded at Missionary Ridge. He also rendered valuable service during the Atlanta campaign, keeping lines of communication open, re-enforcing Resaca and repulsing an attack by General Hood. He was with Sherman in the "March to the Sea," and with Hancock, in the Shenandoah Valley, when the war closed. In 1866 General Raum became President of the projected Cairo & Vincennes Railroad, an enterprise of which he had been an active promoter. He was elected to Congress in 1866 from the Southern Illinois District (then the Thirteenth), serving one term, and the same year presided over the Republican State Convention, as he did again in 1876 and in 1880—was also a delegate to the National Conventions at Cincinnati and Chicago the last two years just mentioned. From August 2, 1876, to May 31, 1883, General Raum served as Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, in that time having superintended the collection of $800,000,000 of revenue, and the disbursement of $30,000,000. After retiring from the Commissionership, he resumed the practice of law in Washington. In 1889 he was appointed Commissioner of Pensions, remaining to the close of President Harrison's administration, when he removed to Chicago and again engaged in practice. During the various political campaigns of the past thirty years, his services have been in frequent request as a campaign speaker, and he has canvassed a number of States in the interest of the Republican party. Besides his official reports, he is author of "The Existing Conflict Between Republican Government and Southern Oligarchy" (Washington, 1884), and a number of magazine articles.

RAUM, John, pioneer and early legislator, was born in Hummelstown, Pa., July 14, 1793, and died at Golconda, Ill., March 14, 1869. Having received a liberal education in his native State, the subject of this sketch settled at Shawneetown, Ill., in 1823, but removed to Golconda, Pope County, in 1826. He had previously served three years in the War of 1812, as First Lieutenant of the Sixteenth Infantry, and, while a resident of Illinois, served in the Black Hawk War of 1832 as Brigade Major. He was also elected Senator from the District composed of Pope and Johnson Counties in the Eighth General Assembly (1833), as successor to Samuel Alexander, who had resigned. The following year he was appointed Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pope County, and was also elected Clerk of the County Court the same year, holding both offices for many years, and retaining the County Clerkship up to his death, a period of thirty-five years. He was married March 22, 1827, to Juliet C. Field, and was father of Brig.-Gen. Green B. Raum, and Maj. John M. Raum, both of whom served in the volunteer army from Illinois during the Civil War.

RAWLINS, John Aaron, soldier, Secretary of War, was born at East Galena, Feb. 13, 1831, the son of a small farmer, who was also a charcoal-burner. The son, after irregular attendance on the district schools and a year passed at Mount Morris Academy, began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar at Galena in 1854, and at once began practice. In 1857 he was elected City Attorney of Galena, and nominated on the Douglas electoral ticket in 1860. At the outbreak of the Civil War he favored, and publicly advocated, coercive measures, and it is said that it was partly through his influence that General Grant early tendered his services to the Government. He served on the staff of the latter from the time General Grant was given command of a brigade until the close of the war, most of the time being its chief, and rising in rank, step by step, until, in 1863, he became a Brigadier-General, and, in 1865, a Major-General. His long service on the staff of General Grant indicates the estimation in which he was held by his chief. Promptly on the assumption of the Presidency by General Grant, in March, 1869, he was appointed Secretary of War, but consumption had already obtained a hold upon his constitution, and he survived only six months, dying in office, Sept. 6, 1869.

RAY, Charles H., journalist, was born at Norwich, Chenango County, N. Y., March 12, 1821; came west in 1843, studied medicine and began practice at Muscatine, Iowa, afterwards locating in Tazewell County, Ill., also being associated, for a time, with the publication of a temperance paper at Springfield. In 1847 he removed to Galena, soon after becoming editor of "The Galena Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper, with which he remained until 1854. He took strong ground against the Kansas-Nebraska Bill, and, at the session of the Legislature of 1855, served as Secretary of the Senate, also acting as correspondent of "The New York Tribune"; a few months later became associated with Joseph Medill and John C. Vaughan in the purchase and management of "The Chicago Tribune," Dr. Ray assuming the position of editor-in-chief. Dr. Ray was one of the most trenchant and powerful writers ever connected with the Illinois press, and his articles exerted a wide influence during the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which he was an influential factor. He was a member of the Convention of Anti-Nebraska editors held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, and served as Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) At the State Republican Convention held at Bloomington, in May following, he was appointed a member of the State Central Committee for that year; was also Canal Trustee by appointment of Governor Bissell, serving from 1857 to 1861. In November, 1863, he severed his connection with "The Tribune" and engaged in oil speculations in Canada which proved financially disastrous. In 1865 he returned to the paper as an editorial writer, remaining only for a short time. In 1868 he assumed the management of "The Chicago Evening Post," with which he remained identified until his death, Sept. 23, 1870.

RAY, Lyman Beecher, ex-Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Crittenden County, Vt., August 17, 1831; removed to Illinois in 1852, and has since been engaged in mercantile business in this State. After filling several local offices he was elected to represent Grundy County in the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872), and, ten years later, was chosen State Senator, serving from 1883 to 1887, and being one of the recognized party leaders on the floor. In 1888, he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket, his term expiring in 1893. His home is at Morris, Grundy County.

RAY, William H., Congressman, was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1812; grew to manhood in his native State, receiving a limited education; in 1834 removed to Rushville, Ill., engaging in business as a merchant and, later, as a banker; was a member of the first State Board of Equalization (1867-69), and, in 1872, was elected to Congress as a Republican, representing his District from 1873 to 1875. Died, Jan. 25, 1881.

RAYMOND, a village of Montgomery County, on the St. Louis Division of the Wabash Railway, 50 miles southwest of Decatur; has electric lights, some manufactures and a weekly paper. Considerable coal is mined here and grain and fruit grown in the surrounding country. Population (1880), 543; (1890), 841; (1900), 906.

RAYMOND, (Rev.) Miner, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in New York City, August 29, 1811, being descended from a family of Huguenots (known by the name of "Raimonde"), who were expelled from France on account of their religion. In his youth he learned the trade of a shoemaker with his father, at Rensselaerville, N. Y. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of 17, later taking a course in the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., where he afterwards became a teacher. In 1838 he joined the New England Conference and, three years later, began pastoral work at Worcester, subsequently occupying pulpits in Boston and Westfield. In 1848, on the resignation of Dr. Robert Allyn (afterwards President of McKendree College and of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale), Dr. Raymond succeeded to the principalship of the Academy at Wilbraham, remaining there until 1864, when he was elected to the chair of systematic theology in the Garrett Biblical Institute at Evanston, Ill., his connection with the latter institution continuing until 1895, when he resigned. For some three years of this period he served as pastor of the First Methodist Church at Evanston. His death occurred, Nov. 25, 1897.

REAVIS, Logan Uriah, journalist, was born in the Sangamon Bottom, Mason County, Ill., March 26, 1831; in 1855 entered the office of "The Beardstown Gazette," later purchased an interest in the paper and continued its publication under the name of "The Central Illinoian," until 1857, when he sold out and went to Nebraska. Returning, in 1860, he repurchased his old paper and conducted it until 1866, when he sold out for the last time. The remainder of his life was devoted chiefly to advocating the removal of the National Capital to St. Louis, which he did by lectures and the publication of pamphlets and books on the subject; also published a "Life of Horace Greeley," another of General Harney, and two or three other volumes. Died in St. Louis, April 25, 1889.

RECTOR, the name of a prominent and influential family who lived at Kaskaskia in Territorial days. According to Governor Reynolds, who has left the most detailed account of them in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," they consisted of nine brothers and four daughters, all of whom were born in Fauquier County, Va., some of them emigrating to Ohio, while others came to Illinois, arriving at Kaskaskia in 1806. Reynolds describes them as passionate and impulsive, but possessed of a high standard of integrity and a chivalrous and patriotic spirit.—William, the oldest brother, and regarded as the head of the family, became a Deputy Surveyor soon after coming to Illinois, and took part in the Indian campaigns between 1812 and 1814. In 1816 he was appointed Surveyor-General of Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas, and afterwards removed to St. Louis.—Stephen, another of the brothers, was a Lieutenant in Captain Moore's Company of Rangers in the War of 1812, while Charles commanded one of the two regiments organized by Governor Edwards, in 1812, for the expedition against the Indians at the head of Peoria Lake.—Nelson, still another brother, served in the same expedition on the staff of Governor Edwards. Stephen, already mentioned, was a member of the expedition sent to strengthen Prairie du Chien in 1814, and showed great courage in a fight with the Indians at Rock Island. During the same year Nelson Rector and Captain Samuel Whiteside joined Col. Zachary Taylor (afterwards President) in an expedition on the Upper Mississippi, in which they came in conflict with the British and Indians at Rock Island, in which Captain Rector again displayed the courage so characteristic of his family. On the 1st of March, 1814, while in charge of a surveying party on Saline Creek, in Gallatin County, according to Reynolds, Nelson was ambushed by the Indians and, though severely wounded, was carried away by his horse, and recovered.—Elias, another member of the family, was Governor Edwards' first Adjutant-General, serving a few months in 1809, when he gave place to Robert Morrison, but was reappointed in 1810, serving for more than three years.—Thomas, one of the younger members, had a duel with Joshua Barton on "Bloody Island," sometime between 1812 and 1814, in which he killed his antagonist. (See Duels.) A portion of this historic family drifted into Arkansas, where they became prominent, one of their descendants serving as Governor of that State during the Civil War period.

RED BUD, a city in Randolph County, on the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, some 37 miles south-southeast of St. Louis, and 21 miles south of Belleville; has a carriage factory and two flouring mills, electric lights, a hospital, two banks, five churches, a graded school and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,176; (1900), 1,169.

REEVES, Owen T., lawyer and jurist, was born in Ross County, Ohio, Dec. 18, 1829; graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, in 1850, afterwards serving as a tutor in that institution and as Principal of a High School at Chillicothe. In 1854 he came to Bloomington, Ill., and, as a member of the School Board, assisted in reorganizing the school system of that city; also has served continuously, for over 40 years, as one of the Trustees of the Illinois Wesleyan University, being a part of the time President of the Board. In the meantime, he had begun the practice of law, served as City Attorney and member of the Board of Supervisors. July 1, 1862, he enlisted in the Seventieth Illinois Volunteers (a 100-days' emergency regiment), was elected Colonel and mustered out, with his command, in October, 1862. Colonel Reeves was subsequently connected with the construction of the Lafayette, Bloomington & Mississippi Railroad (now a part of the Illinois Central), and was also one of the founders of the Law Department of the Wesleyan University. In 1877 he was elected to the Circuit bench, serving continuously, by repeated re-elections, until 1891—during the latter part of his incumbency being upon the Appellate bench.

REEVES, Walter, Member of Congress and lawyer, was born near Brownsville, Pa., Sept. 25, 1848; removed to Illinois at 8 years of age and was reared on a farm; later became a teacher and lawyer, following his profession at Streator; in 1894 he was nominated by the Republicans of the Eleventh District for Congress, as successor to the Hon. Thomas J. Henderson, and was elected, receiving a majority over three competitors. Mr. Reeves was re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898.

REFORMATORY, ILLINOIS STATE, a prison for the incarceration of male offenders under 21 years of age, who are believed to be susceptible of reformation. It is the successor of the "State Reform School," which was created by act of the Legislature of 1867, but not opened for the admission of inmates until 1871. It is located at Pontiac. The number of inmates, in 1872, was 165, which was increased to 324 in 1890. The results, while moderately successful, were not altogether satisfactory. The appropriations made for construction, maintenance, etc., were not upon a scale adequate to accomplish what was desired, and, in 1891, a radical change was effected. Previous to that date the limit, as to age, was 16 years. The law establishing the present reformatory provides for a system of indeterminate sentences, and a release upon parole, of inmates who, in the opinion of the Board of Managers, may be safely granted conditional liberation. The inmates are divided into two classes. (1) those between the ages of 10 and 16, and (2) those between 16 and 21. The Board of Managers is composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be of the same party, their term of office to be for ten years. The course of treatment is educational (intellectually, morally and industrially), schools being conducted, trades taught, and the inmates constantly impressed with the conviction that, only through genuine and unmistakable evidence of improvement, can they regain their freedom. The reformatory influence of the institution may be best inferred from the results of one year's operation. Of 146 inmates paroled, 15 violated their parole and became fugitives, 6 were returned to the Reformatory, 1 died, and 124 remained in employment and regularly reporting. Among the industries carried on are painting and glazing, masonry and plastering, gardening, knitting, chair-caning, broom-making, carpentering, tailoring and blacksmithing. The grounds of the Reformatory contain a vein of excellent coal, which it is proposed to mine, utilizing the clay, thus obtained, in the manufacture of brick, which can be employed in the construction of additional needed buildings. The average number of inmates is about 800, and the crimes for which they are sentenced range, in gravity, from simple assault, or petit larceny, to the most serious offenses known to the criminal code, with the exception of homicide. The number of inmates, at the beginning of the year 1895, was 812. An institution of a similar character, for the confinement of juvenile female offenders, was established under an act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1893, and located at Geneva, Kane County. (See Home for Juvenile Female Offenders.)

population, as may be seen from figures given below. The earliest Christian services held were conducted by Catholic missionaries, who attested the sincerity of their convictions (in many instances) by the sacrifice of their lives, either through violence or exposure. The aborigines, however, were not easily Christianized; and, shortly after the cession of Illinois by France to Great Britain, the Catholic missions, being generally withdrawn, ceased to exert much influence upon the red men, although the French, who remained in the ceded territory, continued to adhere to their ancient faith. (See Early Missionaries.) One of the first Protestant sects to hold service in Illinois, was the Methodist Episcopal; Rev. Joseph Lillard coming to Illinois in 1793, and Rev. Hosea Riggs settling in the American Bottom in 1796. (For history of Methodism in Illinois, see Methodist Episcopal Church.) The pioneer Protestant preacher, however, was a Baptist—Elder James Smith—who came to New Design in 1787. Revs. David Badgley and Joseph Chance followed him in 1796, and the first denominational association was formed in 1807. (As to inception and growth of this denomination in Illinois, see also Baptists.) In 1814 the Massachusetts Missionary Society sent two missionaries to Illinois—Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith. Two years later (1816), the First Presbyterian Church was organized at Sharon, by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky. (See also Presbyterians.) The Congregationalists began to arrive with the tide of immigration that set in from the Eastern States, early in the '30's. Four churches were organized in 1833, and the subsequent growth of the denomination in the State, if gradual, has been steady. (See Congregationalists.) About the same time came the Disciples of Christ (sometimes called, from their founder, "Campbellites"). They encouraged free discussion, were liberal and warm hearted, and did not require belief in any particular creed as a condition of membership. The sect grew rapidly in numerical strength. (See Disciples of Christ.) The Protestant Episcopalians obtained their first foothold in Illinois, in 1835, when Rev. Philander Chase (afterward consecrated Bishop) immigrated to the State from the East. (See Protestant Episcopal Church.) The Lutherans in Illinois are chiefly of German or Scandinavian birth or descent, as may be inferred from the fact that, out of sixty-four churches in Chicago under care of the Missouri Synod, only four use the English language. They are the only Protestant sect maintaining (whenever possible) a system of parochial schools. (See Lutherans.) There are twenty-six other religious bodies in the State, exclusive of the Jews, who have twelve synagogues and nine rabbis. According to the census statistics of 1890, these twenty-six sects, with their numerical strength, number of buildings, ministers, etc., are as follows: Anti-Mission Baptists, 2,800 members, 78 churches and 63 ministers; Church of God, 1,200 members, 39 churches, 34 ministers; Dunkards, 121,000 members, 155 churches, 83 ministers; Friends ("Quakers") 2,655 members, 25 churches; Free Methodists, 1,805 members, 38 churches, 84 ministers; Free-Will Baptists, 4,694 members, 107 churches, 72 ministers; Evangelical Association, 15,904 members, 143 churches, 152 ministers; Cumberland Presbyterians, 11,804 members, 198 churches, 149 ministers; Methodist Episcopal (South) 3,927 members, 34 churches, 33 ministers; Moravians, 720 members, 3 churches, 3 ministers; New Jerusalem Church (Swedenborgians), 662 members, 14 churches, 8 ministers; Primitive Methodist, 230 members, 2 churches, 2 ministers; Protestant Methodist, 5,000 members, 91 churches, 106 ministers; Reformed Church in United States, 4,100 members, 34 churches, 19 ministers; Reformed Church of America, 2,200 members, 24 churches, 23 ministers; Reformed Episcopalians, 2,150 members, 13 churches, 11 ministers; Reformed Presbyterians, 1,400 members, 7 churches, 6 ministers; Salvation Army, 1,980 members; Second Adventists, 4,500 members, 64 churches, 35 ministers; Seventh Day Baptists, 320 members, 7 churches, 11 ministers; Universalists, 3,160 members, 45 churches, 37 ministers; Unitarians, 1,225 members, 19 churches, 14 ministers; United Evangelical, 30,000 members, 129 churches, 108 ministers; United Brethren, 16,500 members, 275 churches, 260 ministers; United Presbyterians, 11,250 members, 203 churches, 199 ministers; Wesleyan Methodists, 1,100 members, 16 churches, 33 ministers. (See various Churches under their proper names; also Roman Catholic Church.)

REND, William Patrick, soldier, capitalist, and coal-operator, was born in County Leitrim, Ireland, Feb. 10, 1840, brought to Lowell, Mass., in boyhood, and graduated from the high school there at 17; taught for a time near New York City and later in Maryland, where he began a course of classical study. The Civil War coming on, he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, serving most of the time as a non-commissioned officer, and participating in the battles of the second Bull Run, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. After the war he came to Chicago and secured employment in a railway surveyor's office, later acting as foreman of the Northwestern freight depot, and finally embarking in the coal business, which was conducted with such success that he became the owner of some of the most valuable mining properties in the country. Meanwhile he has taken a deep interest in the welfare of miners and other classes of laborers, and has sought to promote arbitration and conciliation between employers and employed, as a means of averting disastrous strikes. He was especially active during the long strike of 1897, in efforts to bring about an understanding between the miners and the operators. For several years he held a commission as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Illinois National Guard until compelled, by the demands of his private business, to tender his resignation.

REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

The following table presents the names, residence, Districts represented, politics (except as to earlier ones), and length of term or terms of service of Illinois Representatives in the lower House of Congress, from the organization of Illinois as a Territory down to the present time; (D), Democrat; W, Whig; R, Republican; G-B, Greenback; P, Populist.

REYNOLDS, John, Justice of Supreme Court and fourth Governor of Illinois, was born of Irish ancestry, in Montgomery County, Pa., Feb. 26, 1789, and brought by his parents to Kaskaskia, Ill., in 1800, spending the first nine years of his life in Illinois on a farm. After receiving a common school education, and a two years' course of study in a college at Knoxville, Tenn., he studied law and began practice. In 1812-13 he served as a scout in the campaigns against the Indians, winning for himself the title, in after life, of "The Old Ranger." Afterwards he removed to Cahokia, where he began the practice of law, and, in 1818, became Associate Justice of the first Supreme Court of the new State. Retiring from the bench in 1825, he served two terms in the Legislature, and was elected Governor in 1830, in 1832 personally commanding the State volunteers called for service in the Black Hawk War. Two weeks before the expiration of his term (1834), he resigned to accept a seat in Congress, to which he had been elected as the successor of Charles Slade, who had died in office, and was again elected in 1838, always as a Democrat. He also served as Representative in the Fifteenth General Assembly, and again in the Eighteenth (1852-54), being chosen Speaker of the latter. In 1858 he was the administration (or Buchanan) Democratic candidate for State Superintendent of Public Instruction, as opposed to the Republican and regular (or Douglas) Democratic candidates. For some years he edited a daily paper called "The Eagle," which was published at Belleville. While Governor Reynolds acquired some reputation as a "classical scholar," from the time spent in a Tennessee College at that early day, this was not sustained by either his colloquial or written style. He was an ardent champion of slavery, and, in the early days of the Rebellion, gained unfavorable notoriety in consequence of a letter written to Jefferson Davis expressing sympathy with the cause of "secession." Nevertheless, in spite of intense prejudice and bitter partisanship on some questions, he possessed many amiable qualities, as shown by his devotion to temperance, and his popularity among persons of opposite political opinions. Although at times crude in style, and not always reliable in his statement of historical facts and events, Governor Reynolds has rendered a valuable service to posterity by his writings relating to the early history of the State, especially those connected with his own times. His best known works are: "Pioneer History of Illinois" (Belleville, 1848); "A Glance at the Crystal Palace, and Sketches of Travel" (1854); and "My Life and Times" (1855). His death occurred at Belleville, May 8, 1865.

REYNOLDS, John Parker, Secretary and President of State Board of Agriculture, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, March 1, 1820, and graduated from the Miami University at the age of 18. In 1840 he graduated from the Cincinnati Law School, and soon afterward began practice. He removed to Illinois in 1854, settling first in Winnebago County, later, successively in Marion County, in Springfield and in Chicago. From 1860 to 1870 he was Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, and, upon the creation of the State Board of Agriculture in 1871, was elected its President, filling that position until 1888, when he resigned. He has also occupied numerous other posts of honor and of trust of a public or semi-public character, having been President of the Illinois State Sanitary Commission during the War of the Rebellion, a Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1867, Chief Grain Inspector from 1878 to 1882, and Secretary of the Interstate Industrial Exposition Company of Chicago, from the date of its organization (1873) until its final dissolution. His most important public service, in recent years, was rendered as Director-in-Chief of the Illinois exhibit in the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

REYNOLDS, Joseph Smith, soldier and legislator, was born at New Lenox, Ill., Dec. 3, 1839; at 17 years of age went to Chicago, was educated in the high school there, within a month after graduation enlisting as a private in the Sixty-fourth Illinois Volunteers. From the ranks he rose to a colonelcy through the gradations of Second-Lieutenant and Captain, and, in July, 1865, was brevetted Brigadier-General. He was a gallant soldier, and was thrice wounded. On his return home after nearly four years' service, he entered the law department of the Chicago University, graduating therefrom and beginning practice in 1866. General Reynolds has been prominent in public life, having served as a member of both branches of the General Assembly, and having been a State Commissioner to the Vienna Exposition of 1873. He is a member of the G. A. R., and, in 1875, was elected Senior Vice-Commander of the order for the United States.

REYNOLDS, William Morton, clergyman, was born in Fayette County, Pa., March 4, 1812; after graduating at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1832, was connected with various institutions in that State, as well as President of Capital University at Columbus, Ohio; then, coming to Illinois, was President of the Illinois State University at Springfield, 1857-60, after which he became Principal of a female seminary in Chicago. Previously a Lutheran, he took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1864, and served several parishes until his death. In his early life he founded, and, for a time, conducted several religious publications at Gettysburg, Pa., besides issuing a number of printed addresses and other published works. Died at Oak Park, near Chicago, Sept. 5, 1876.

RHOADS, (Col.) Franklin Lawrence, soldier and steamboat captain, was born in Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 11, 1824; brought to Pekin, Tazewell County, Ill., in 1836, where he learned the printer's trade, and, on the breaking out of the Mexican War, enlisted, serving to the close. Returning home he engaged in the river trade, and, for fifteen years, commanded steamboats on the Illinois, Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. In April, 1861, he was commissioned Captain of a company of three months' men attached to the Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, soon after being promoted to the colonelcy, as successor to Col. Richard J. Oglesby, who had been promoted Brigadier-General. After serving through the spring campaign of 1862 in Western Kentucky and Tennessee, he was compelled by rapidly declining health to resign, when he located in Shawneetown, retiring in 1874 to his farm near that city. During the latter years of his life he was a confirmed invalid, dying at Shawneetown, Jan. 6, 1879.

RHOADS, Joshua, M.D., A.M., physician and educator, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 14, 1806; studied medicine and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania with the degree of M.D., also receiving the degree of A.M., from Princeton; after several years spent in practice as a physician, and as Principal in some of the public schools of Philadelphia, in 1839 he was elected Principal of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind, and, in 1850, took charge of the State Institution for the Blind at Jacksonville, Ill., then in its infancy. Here he remained until 1874, when he retired. Died, February 1, 1876.

RICE, Edward Y., lawyer and jurist, born in Logan County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1820, was educated in the common schools and at Shurtleff College, after which he read law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to practice, in 1845, at Hillsboro; in 1847 was elected County Recorder of Montgomery County, and, in 1848, to the Sixteenth General Assembly, serving one term. Later he was elected County Judge of Montgomery County, was Master in Chancery from 1853 to 1857, and the latter year was elected Judge of the Eighteenth Circuit, being re-elected in 1861 and again in 1867. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, at the election of the latter year, was chosen Representative in the Forty-second Congress as a Democrat. Died, April 16, 1883.

RICE, John B., theatrical manager, Mayor of Chicago, and Congressman, was born at Easton, Md., in 1809. By profession he was an actor, and, coming to Chicago in 1847, built and opened there the first theater. In 1857 he retired from the stage, and, in 1865, was elected Mayor of Chicago, the city of his adoption, and re-elected in 1867. He was also prominent in the early stages of the Civil War in the measures taken to raise troops in Chicago. In 1872 he was elected to the Forty-third Congress as a Republican, but, before the expiration of his term, died, at Norfolk, Va., on Dec. 6, 1874. At a special election to fill the vacancy, Bernard G. Caulfield was chosen to succeed him.

RICHARDSON, William A., lawyer and politician, born in Fayette County, Ky., Oct. 11, 1811, was educated at Transylvania University, came to the bar at 19, and settled in Schuyler County, Ill., becoming State's Attorney in 1835; was elected to the lower branch of the Legislature in 1836, to the Senate in 1838, and to the House again in 1844, from Adams County—the latter year being also chosen Presidential Elector on the Polk and Dallas ticket, and, at the succeeding session of the General Assembly, serving as Speaker of the House. He entered the Mexican War as Captain, and won a Majority through gallantry at Buena Vista. From 1847 to 1856 (when he resigned to become a candidate for Governor), he was a Democratic Representative in Congress from the Quincy District; re-entered Congress in 1861, and, in 1863, was chosen United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Stephen A. Douglas. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention of 1868, but after that retired to private life, acting, for a short time, as editor of "The Quincy Herald." Died, at Quincy, Dec. 27, 1875.

RICHLAND COUNTY, situated in the southeast quarter of the State, and has an area of 361 square miles. It was organized from Edwards County in 1841. Among the early pioneers may be mentioned the Evans brothers, Thaddeus

Morehouse, Hugh Calhoun and son, Thomas Gardner, James Parker, Cornelius De Long, James Gilmore and Elijah Nelson. In 1820 there were but thirty families in the district. The first frame houses—the Nelson and Morehouse homesteads—were built in 1821, and, some years later, James Laws erected the first brick house. The pioneers traded at Vincennes, but, in 1825, a store was opened at Stringtown by Jacob May; and the same year the first school was opened at Watertown, taught by Isaac Chauncey. The first church was erected by the Baptists in 1822, and services were conducted by William Martin, a Kentuckian. For a long time the mails were carried on horseback by Louis and James Beard, but, in 1824, Mills and Whetsell established a line of four-horse stages. The principal road, known as the "trace road," leading from Louisville to Cahokia, followed a buffalo and Indian trail about where the main street of Olney now is. Olney was selected as the county-seat upon the organization of the county, and a Mr. Lilly built the first house there. The chief branches of industry followed by the inhabitants are agriculture and fruit-growing. Population (1880), 15,545; (1890), 15,019; (1900), 16,391.

RIDGE FARM, a village of Vermillion County, at junction of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 174 miles northeast of St. Louis; has electric light plant, planing mill, elevators, bank and two papers. Pop. (1900), 933; (1904), 1,300.

RIDGELY, a manufacturing and mining suburb of the city of Springfield. An extensive rolling mill is located there, and there are several coal-shafts in the vicinity. Population (1900), 1,169.

RIDGELY, Charles, manufacturer and capitalist, born in Springfield, Ill., Jan. 17, 1836; was educated in private schools and at Illinois College; after leaving college spent some time as a clerk in his father's bank at Springfield, finally becoming a member of the firm and successively Cashier and Vice-President. In 1870 he was Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but later has affiliated with the Republican party. About 1872 he became identified with the Springfield Iron Company, of which he has been President for many years; has also been President of the Consolidated Coal Company of St. Louis and, for some time, was a Director of the Wabash Railroad. Mr. Ridgely is also one of the Trustees of Illinois College.

RIDGELY, Nicholas H., early banker, was born in Baltimore, Md., April 27, 1800; after leaving school was engaged, for a time, in the dry-goods trade, but, in 1829, came to St. Louis to assume a clerkship in the branch of the United States Bank just organized there. In 1835 a branch of the State Bank of Illinois was established at Springfield, and Mr. Ridgely became its cashier, and, when it went into liquidation, was appointed one of the trustees to wind up its affairs. He subsequently became President of the Clark's Exchange Bank in that city, but this having gone into liquidation a few years later, he went into the private banking business as head of the "Ridgely Bank," which, in 1866, became the "Ridgely National Bank," one of the strongest financial institutions in the State outside of Chicago. After the collapse of the internal improvement scheme, Mr. Ridgely became one of the purchasers of the "Northern Cross Railroad" (now that part of the Wabash system extending from the Illinois river to Springfield), when it was sold by the State in 1847, paying therefor $21,100. He was also one of the Springfield bankers to tender a loan to the State at the beginning of the war in 1861. He was one of the builders and principal owner of the Springfield gas-light system. His business career was an eminently successful one, leaving an estate at his death, Jan. 31, 1888, valued at over $2,000,000.

RIDGWAY, a village of Gallatin County, on the Shawneetown Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 12 miles northwest of Shawneetown; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 523; (1900), 839; (1903, est.), 1,000.

RIDGWAY, Thomas S., merchant, banker and politician, was born at Carmi, Ill., August 30, 1826. His father having died when he was but 4 years old and his mother when he was 14, his education was largely acquired through contact with the world, apart from such as he received from his mother and during a year's attendance at a private school. When he was 6 years of age the family removed to Shawneetown, where he ever afterwards made his home. In 1845 he embarked in business as a merchant, and the firm of Peeples & Ridgway soon became one of the most prominent in Southern Illinois. In 1865 the partners closed out their business and organized the first National Bank of Shawneetown, of which, after the death of Mr. Peeples in 1875, Mr. Ridgway was President. He was one of the projectors of the Springfield & Illinois South-eastern Railway, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern system, and, from 1867 to 1874, served as its President. He was an ardent and active Republican, and served as a delegate to every State and National Convention of his party from 1868 to 1896. In 1874 he was elected State Treasurer, the candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction on the same ticket being defeated. In 1876 and 1880 he was an unsuccessful candidate for his party's nomination for Governor. Three times he consented to lead the forlorn hope of the Republicans as a candidate for Congress from an impregnable Democratic stronghold. For several years he was a Director of the McCormick Theological Seminary, at Chicago, and, for nineteen years, was a Trustee of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale, resigning in 1893. Died, at Shawneetown, Nov. 17, 1897.

RIGGS, James M., ex-Congressman, was born in Scott County, Ill., April 17, 1839, where he received a common school education, supplemented by a partial collegiate course. He is a practicing lawyer of Winchester. In 1864 he was elected Sheriff, serving two years. In 1871-72 he represented Scott County in the lower house of the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, and was State's Attorney from 1872 to 1876. In 1882, and again in 1884, he was the successful Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twelfth Illinois District.

RIGGS, Scott, pioneer, was born in North Carolina about 1790; removed to Crawford County, Ill., early in 1815, and represented that county in the First General Assembly (1818-20). In 1825 he removed to Scott County, where he continued to reside until his death, Feb. 24, 1872.

RINAKER, John I., lawyer and Congressman, born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 18, 1830. Left an orphan at an early age, he came to Illinois in 1836, and, for several years, lived on farms in Sangamon and Morgan Counties; was educated at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, graduating from the latter in 1851; in 1852 began reading law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to the bar in 1854. In August, 1862, he recruited the One Hundred and Twenty-second Illinois Volunteers, of which he was commissioned Colonel. Four months later he was wounded in battle, but served with his regiment through the war, and was brevetted Brigadier-General at its close. Returning from the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Carlinville. Since 1858 he has been an active Republican; has twice (1872 and '76) served his party as a Presidential Elector—the latter year for the State-at-large—and, in 1874, accepted a nomination for Congress against William R. Morrison, largely reducing the normal Democratic majority. At the State Republican Convention of 1880 he was a prominent, but unsuccessful, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. In 1894 he made the race as the Republican candidate for Congress in the Sixteenth District and, although his opponent was awarded the certificate of election, on a bare majority of 60 votes on the face of the returns, a re-count, ordered by the Fifty-fourth Congress, showed a majority for General Rinaker, and he was seated near the close of the first session. He was a candidate for re-election in 1896, but defeated in a strongly Democratic District.

RIPLEY, Edward Payson, Railway President, was born in Dorchester (now a part of Boston), Mass., Oct. 30, 1845, being related, on his mother's side, to the distinguished author, Dr. Edward Payson. After receiving his education in the high school of his native place, at the age of 17 he entered upon a commercial life, as clerk in a wholesale dry-goods establishment in Boston. About the time he became of age, he entered into the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad as a clerk in the freight department in the Boston office, but, a few years later, assumed a responsible position in connection with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line, finally becoming General Agent for the business of that road east of Buffalo, though retaining his headquarters at Boston. In 1878 he removed to Chicago to accept the position of General Freight Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System, with which he remained twelve years, serving successively as General Traffic Manager and General Manager, until June 1, 1890, when he resigned to become Third Vice-President of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul line. This relation was continued until Jan. 1, 1896, when Mr. Ripley accepted the Presidency of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, which (1899) he now holds. Mr. Ripley was a prominent factor in securing the location of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and, in April, 1891, was chosen one of the Directors of the Exposition, serving on the Executive Committee and the Committee of Ways and Means and Transportation, being Chairman of the latter.

RIVERSIDE, a suburban town on the Des Plaines River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 11 miles west of Chicago; has handsome parks, several churches, a bank, two local papers and numerous fine residences. Population (1890), 1,000; (1900), 1,551.

RIVERTON, a village in Clear Creek Township, Sangamon County, at the crossing of the Wabash Railroad over the Sangamon River, 6½ miles east-northeast of Springfield. It has four churches, a nursery, and two coal mines. Population (1880), 705; (1890), 1,127; (1900), 1,511; (1903, est.), about 2,000.

RIVES, John Cook, early banker and journalist, was born in Franklin County, Va., May 21, 1795; in 1806 removed to Kentucky, where he grew up under care of an uncle, Samuel Casey. He received a good education and was a man of high character and attractive manners. In his early manhood he came to Illinois, and was connected, for a time, with the Branch State Bank at Edwardsville, but, about 1824, removed to Shawneetown and held a position in the bank there; also studied law and was admitted to practice. Finally, having accepted a clerkship in the Fourth Auditor's Office in Washington, he removed to that city, and, in 1830, became associated with Francis P. Blair, Sr., in the establishment of "The Congressional Globe" (the predecessor of "The Congressional Record"), of which he finally became sole proprietor, so remaining until 1864. Like his partner, Blair, although a native of Virginia and a life-long Democrat, he was intensely loyal, and contributed liberally of his means for the equipment of soldiers from the District of Columbia, and for the support of their families, during the Civil War. His expenditures for these objects have been estimated at some $30,000. Died, in Prince George's County, Md., April 10, 1864.

ROANOKE, a village of Woodford County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, 26 miles northeast of Peoria; is in a coal district; has two banks, a coal mine, and one newspaper. Population (1880), 355; (1890), 831; (1900), 966.

ROBB, Thomas Patten, Sanitary Agent, was born in Bath, Maine, in 1819; came to Cook County, Ill., in 1838, and, after arriving at manhood, established the first exclusive wholesale grocery house in Chicago, remaining in the business until 1850. He then went to California, establishing himself in mercantile business at Sacramento, where he remained seven years, meanwhile being elected Mayor of that city. Returning to Chicago on the breaking out of the war, he was appointed on the staff of Governor Yates with the rank of Major, and, while serving in this capacity, was instrumental in giving General Grant the first duty he performed in the office of the Adjutant-General after his arrival from Galena. Later, he was assigned to duty as Inspector-General of Illinois troops with the rank of Colonel, having general charge of sanitary affairs until the close of the war, when he was appointed Cotton Agent for the State of Georgia, and, still later, President of the Board of Tax Commissioners for that State. Other positions held by him were those of Postmaster and Collector of Customs at Savannah, Ga.; he was also one of the publishers of "The New Era," a Republican paper at Atlanta, and a prominent actor in reconstruction affairs. Resigning the Collectorship, he was appointed by the President United States Commissioner to investigate Mexican outrages on the Rio Grande border; was subsequently identified with Texas railroad interests as the President of the Corpus Christi & Rio Grande Railroad, and one of the projectors of the Chicago, Texas & Mexican Central Railway, being thus engaged until 1872. Later he returned to California, dying near Glenwood, in that State, April 10, 1895, aged 75 years and 10 months.

ROBERTS, William Charles, clergyman and educator, was born in a small village of Wales, England, Sept. 23, 1832; received his primary education in that country, but, removing to America during his minority, graduated from Princeton College in 1855, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1858. After filling various pastorates in Delaware, New Jersey and Ohio, in 1881 he was elected Corresponding Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the next year being offered the Presidency of Rutgers College, which he declined. In 1887 he accepted the presidency of Lake Forest University, which he still retains. From 1859 to 1863 he was a Trustee of Lafayette College, and, in 1866, was elected to a trusteeship of his Alma Mater. He has traveled extensively in the Orient, and was a member of the first and third councils of the Reformed Churches, held at Edinburgh and Belfast. Besides occasional sermons and frequent contributions to English, American, German and Welsh periodicals, Dr. Roberts has published a Welsh translation of the Westminster shorter catechism and a collection of letters on the great preachers of Wales, which appeared in Utica, 1868. He received the degree of D.D., from Union College in 1872, and that of LL.D., from Princeton, in 1887.

ROBINSON, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Crawford County, 25 miles northwest of Vincennes, Ind., and 44 miles south of Paris, Ill.; is on two lines of railroad and in the heart of a fruit and agricultural region. The city has water-works, electric lights, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Population (1890) 1,387; (1900), 1,683; (1904), about 2,000.

ROBINSON, James C., lawyer and former Congressman, was born in Edgar County, Ill., in 1822, read law and was admitted to the bar in 1850. He served as a private during the Mexican War, and, in 1858, was elected to Congress as a Democrat, as he was again in 1860, '62, '70 and '72. In 1864 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. He was a fluent speaker, and attained considerable distinction as an advocate in criminal practice. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 3, 1886.

ROBINSON, John M., United States Senator, born in Kentucky in 1793, was liberally educated and became a lawyer by profession. In early life he settled at Carini, Ill., where he married. He was of fine physique, of engaging manners, and personally popular. Through his association with the State militia he earned the title of "General." In 1830 he was elected to the United States Senate, to fill the unexpired term of John McLean. His immediate predecessor was David Jewett Baker, appointed by Governor Edwards, who served one month but failed of election by the Legislature. In 1834 Mr. Robinson was re-elected for a full term, which expired in 1841. In 1843 he was elected to a seat upon the Illinois Supreme bench, but died at Ottawa, April 27, of the same year, within three months after his elevation.

ROCHELLE, a city of Ogle County and an intersecting point of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways. It is 75 miles west of Chicago, 27 miles south of Rockford, and 23 miles east by north of Dixon. It is in a rich agricultural and stock-raising region, rendering Rochelle an important shipping point. Among its industrial establishments are water-works, electric lights, a flouring mill and silk-underwear factory. The city has three banks, five churches and three newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,789; (1900), 2,073; (1903), 2,500.

ROCHESTER, a village and early settlement in Sangamon County, laid out in 1819; in rich agricultural district, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 7½ miles southeast of Springfield; has a bank, two churches, one school, and a newspaper. Population (1900), 365.

ROCK FALLS, a city in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad; has excellent water-power, a good public school system with a high school, banks and a weekly newspaper. Agricultural implements, barbed wire, furniture, flour and paper are its chief manufactures. Water for the navigable feeder of the Hennepin Canal is taken from Rock River at this point. Pop. (1900), 2,176.

ROCKFORD, a flourishing manufacturing city, the county-seat of Winnebago County; lies on both sides of the Rock River, 92 miles west of Chicago. Four trunk lines of railroad—the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Chicago & Northwestern, the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul—intersect here. Excellent water-power is secured by a dam across the river, and communication between the two divisions of the city is facilitated by three railway and three highway bridges. Water is provided from five artesian wells, a reserve main leading to the river. The city is wealthy, prosperous and progressive. The assessed valuation of property, in 1893, was $6,531,235. Churches are numerous and schools, both public and private, are abundant and well conducted. The census of 1890 showed $7,715,069 capital invested in 246 manufacturing establishments, which employed 5,223 persons and turned out an annual product valued at $8,888,904. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements and furniture, though watches, silver-plated ware, paper, flour and grape sugar are among the other products. Pop. (1880), 13,129; (1890), 23,584; (1900), 31,051.

ROCKFORD COLLEGE, located at Rockford, Ill., incorporated in 1847; in 1898 had a faculty of 21 instructors with 161 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, music and fine arts. It has a library of 6,150 volumes, funds and endowment aggregating $50,880 and property valued at $240,880, of which $150,000 is real estate.

ROCK ISLAND, the principal city and county-seat of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River, 182 miles west by south from Chicago; is the converging point of five lines of railroad, and the western terminus of the Hennepin Canal. The name is derived from an island in the Mississippi River, opposite the city, 3 miles long, which belongs to the United States Government and contains an arsenal and armory. The river channel north of the island is navigable, the southern channel having been dammed by the Government, thereby giving great water power to Rock Island and Moline. A combined railway and highway bridge spans the river from Rock Island to Davenport, Iowa, crossing the island, while a railway bridge connects the cities a mile below. The island was the site of Fort Armstrong during the Black Hawk War, and was also a place for the confinement of Confederate prisoners during the Civil War. Rock Island is in a region of much picturesque scenery and has extensive manufactures of lumber, agricultural implements, iron, carriages and wagons and oilcloth; also five banks and three newspapers, two issuing daily editions. Pop. (1890), 13,634; (1900), 19,493.

ROCK ISLAND COUNTY, in the northwestern section of the State bordering upon the Mississippi River (which constitutes its northwestern boundary for more than 60 miles), and having an area of 440 square miles. In 1816 the Government erected a fort on Rock Island (an island in the Mississippi, 3 miles long and one-half to three-quarters of a mile wide), naming it Fort Armstrong. It has always remained a military post, and is now the seat of an extensive arsenal and work-shops. In the spring of 1828, settlements were made near Port Byron by John and Thomas Kinney, Archibald Allen and George Harlan. Other early settlers, near Rock Island and Rapids City, were J. W. Spencer, J. W. Barriels, Benjamin F. Pike and Conrad Leak; and among the pioneers were Wells and Michael Bartlett, Joel Thompson, the Simms brothers and George Davenport. The country was full of Indians, this being the headquarters of Black Hawk and the initial point of the Black Hawk War. (See Black Hawk, and Black Hawk War.) By 1829 settlers were increased in number and county organization was effected in 1835, Rock Island (then called Stephenson) being made the county-seat. Joseph Conway was the first County Clerk, and Joel Wells, Sr., the first Treasurer. The first court was held at the residence of John W. Barriels, in Farnhamsburg. The county is irregular in shape, and the soil and scenery greatly varied. Coal is abundant, the water-power inexhaustible, and the county's mining and manufacturing interests are very extensive. Several lines of railway cross the county, affording admirable transportation facilities to both eastern and western markets. Rock Island and Moline (which see) are the two principal cities in the county, though there are several other important points. Coal Valley is the center of large mining interests, and Milan is also a manufacturing center. Port Byron is one of the oldest towns in the county, and has considerable lime and lumber interests, while Watertown is the seat of the Western Hospital for the Insane. Population of the county (1880), 38,302; (1890), 41,917; (1900), 55,249.

ROCK ISLAND & PEORIA RAILWAY, a standard-gauge road, laid with steel rails, extending from Rock Island to Peoria, 91 miles. It is lessee of the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, running from Milan to Cable, Ill., giving it a total length of 118 miles—with Peoria Terminal, 121.10 miles.—(HISTORY.) The company is a reorganization (Oct. 9, 1877) of the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Company, whose road was sold under foreclosure, April 4, 1877. The latter Road was the result of the consolidation, in 1869, of two corporations—the Rock Island & Peoria and the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Companies—the new organization taking the latter name. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1872, its sale under foreclosure and reorganization under its present name taking place, as already stated, in 1877. The Cable Branch was organized in 1876, as the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, and opened in December of the same year, sold under foreclosure in 1877, and leased to the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad, July 1, 1885, for 999 years, the rental for the entire period being commuted at $450,000.—(FINANCIAL.) The cost of the entire road and equipment was $2,654,487. The capital stock (1898) is $1,500,000; funded debt, $600,000; other forms of indebtedness increasing the total capital invested to $2,181,066.

ROCK RIVER, a stream which rises in Washington County, Wis., and flows generally in a southerly direction, a part of its course being very sinuous. After crossing the northern boundary of Illinois, it runs southwestward, intersecting the counties of Winnebago, Ogle, Lee, Whiteside and Rock Island, and entering the Mississippi three miles below the city of Rock Island. It is about 375 miles long, but its navigation is partly obstructed by rapids, which, however, furnish abundant water-power. The principal towns on its banks are Rockford, Dixon and Sterling. Its valley is wide, and noted for its beauty and fertility.

ROCKTON, a village in Winnebago County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, on Rock River, 13 miles north of Rockford; has manufactures of paper and agricultural implements, a feed mill, and local paper. Pop. (1890), 892; (1900), 936.

ROE, Edward Reynolds, A.B., M.D., physician, soldier and author, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, June 22, 1813; removed with his father, in 1819, to Cincinnati, and graduated at Louisville Medical Institute in 1842; began practice at Anderson, Ind., but soon removed to Shawneetown, Ill., where he gave much attention to geological research and made some extensive natural history collections. From 1848 to '52 he resided at Jacksonville, lectured extensively on his favorite science, wrote for the press and, for two years (1850-52), edited "The Jacksonville Journal," still later editing the newly established "Constitutionalist" for a few months. During a part of this period he was lecturer on natural science at Shurtleff College; also delivered a lecture before the State Legislature on the geology of Illinois, which was immediately followed by the passage of the act establishing the State Geological Department. A majority of both houses joined in a request for his appointment as State Geologist, but it was rejected on partisan grounds—he, then, being a Whig. Removing to Bloomington in 1852, Dr. Roe became prominent in educational matters, being the first Professor of Natural Science in the State Normal University, and also a Trustee of the Illinois Wesleyan University. Having identified himself with the Democratic party at this time, he became its nominee for State Superintendent of Public Instruction in 1860, but, on the inception of the war in 1861, he promptly espoused the cause of the Union, raised three companies (mostly Normal students) which were attached to the Thirty-third Illinois (Normal) Regiment; was elected Captain and successively promoted to Major and Lieutenant-Colonel. Having been dangerously wounded in the assault at Vicksburg, on May 22, 1863, and compelled to return home, he was elected Circuit Clerk by the combined vote of both parties, was re-elected four years later, became editor of "The Bloomington Pantagraph" and, in 1870, was elected to the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, where he won distinction by a somewhat notable humorous speech in opposition to removing the State Capital to Peoria. In 1871 he was appointed Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving nine years. Dr. Roe was a somewhat prolific author, having produced more than a dozen works which have appeared in book form. One of these, "Virginia Rose; a Tale of Illinois in Early Days," first appeared as a prize serial in "The Alton Courier" in 1852. Others of his more noteworthy productions are: "The Gray and the Blue"; "Brought to Bay"; "From the Beaten Path"; "G. A. R.; or How She Married His Double"; "Dr. Caldwell; or the Trail of the Serpent"; and "Prairie-Land and Other Poems." He died in Chicago, Nov. 6, 1893.

ROGERS, George Clarke, soldier, was born in Grafton County, N. H., Nov. 22, 1838; but was educated in Vermont and Illinois, having removed to the latter State early in life. While teaching he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1860; was the first, in 1861, to raise a company in Lake County for the war, which was mustered into the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers; was chosen Second-Lieutenant and later Captain; was wounded four times at Shiloh, but refused to leave the field, and led his regiment in the final charge; was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and soon after commissioned Colonel for gallantry at Hatchie. At Champion Hills he received three wounds, from one of which he never fully recovered; took a prominent part in the operations at Allatoona and commanded a brigade nearly two years, including the Atlanta campaign, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. Since the war has practiced law in Illinois and in Kansas.

ROGERS, Henry Wade, educator, lawyer and author, was born in Central New York in 1853; entered Hamilton College, but the following year became a student in Michigan University, graduating there in 1874, also receiving the degree of A.M., from the same institution, in 1877. In 1883 he was elected to a professorship in the Ann Arbor Law School, and, in 1885, was made Dean of the Faculty, succeeding Judge Cooley, at the age of 32. Five years later he was tendered, and accepted, the Presidency of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, being the first layman chosen to the position, and succeeding a long line of Bishops and divines. The same year (1890), Wesleyan University conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is a member of the American Bar Association, has served for a number of years on its Committee on Legal Education and Admission to the Bar, and was the first Chairman of the Section on Legal Education. President Rogers was the General Chairman of the Conference on the Future Foreign Policy of the United States, held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in August, 1898. At the Congress held in 1893, as auxiliary to the Columbian Exposition, he was chosen Chairman of the Committee on Law Reform and Jurisprudence, and was for a time associate editor of "The American Law Register," of Philadelphia. He is also the author of a treatise on "Expert Testimony," which has passed through two editions, and has edited a work entitled "Illinois Citations," besides doing much other valuable literary work of a similar character.

ROGERS, John Gorin, jurist, was born at Glasgow, Ky., Dec. 28, 1818, of English and early Virginian ancestry; was educated at Center College, Danville, Ky., and at Transylvania University, graduating from the latter institution in 1841, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. For sixteen years he practiced in his native town, and, in 1857, removed to Chicago, where he soon attained professional prominence. In 1870 he was elected a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court, continuing on the bench, through repeated re-elections, until his death, which occurred suddenly, Jan. 10, 1887, four years before the expiration of the term for which he had been elected.

ROGERS PARK, a village and suburb 9 miles north of Chicago, on Lake Michigan and the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; has a bank and two weekly newspapers; is reached by electric street-car line from Chicago, and is a popular residence suburb. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1893.

ROLL, John E., pioneer, was born in Green Village, N. J., June 4, 1814; came to Illinois in 1830, and settled in Sangamon County. He assisted Abraham Lincoln in the construction of the flat-boat with which the latter descended the Mississippi River to New Orleans, in 1831. Mr. Roll, who was a mechanic and contractor, built a number of houses in Springfield, where he has since continued to reside.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The earliest Christians to establish places of worship in Illinois were priests of the Catholic faith. Early Catholic missionaries were explorers and historians as well as preachers. (See Allouez; Bergier; Early Missionaries; Gravier; Marquette.) The church went hand in hand with the representatives of the French Government, carrying in one hand the cross and in the other the flag of France, simultaneously disseminating the doctrines of Christianity and inculcating loyalty to the House of Bourbon. For nearly a hundred years, the self-sacrificing and devoted Catholic clergy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries ministered to the spiritual wants of the early French settlers and the natives. They were not without factional jealousies, however, and a severe blow was dealt to a branch of them in the order for the banishment of the Jesuits and the confiscation of their property. (See Early Missionaries.) The subsequent occupation of the country by the English, with the contemporaneous emigration of a considerable portion of the French west of the Mississippi, dissipated many congregations. Up to 1830 Illinois was included in the diocese of Missouri; but at that time it was constituted a separate diocese, under the episcopal control of Rt. Rev. Joseph Rosatti. At that date there were few, if any, priests in Illinois. But Bishop Rosatti was a man of earnest purpose and rare administrative ability. New parishes were organized as rapidly as circumstances would permit, and the growth of the church has been steady. By 1840 there were thirty-one parishes and twenty priests. In 1896 there are reported 698 parishes, 764 clergymen and a Catholic population exceeding 850,000. (See also Religious Denominations.)

ROODHOUSE, a city in Greene County, 21 miles south of Jacksonville, and at junction of three divisions of the Chicago & Alton Railroad; is in fertile agricultural and coal-mining region; city contains a flouring mill, grain-elevator, stock-yards, railway shops, water-works, electric light plant, two private banks, fine opera house, good school buildings, one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,360; (1900), 2,351.

ROODHOUSE, John, farmer and founder of the town of Roodhouse, in Greene County, Ill., was born in Yorkshire, England, brought to America in childhood, his father settling in Greene County, Ill., in 1831. In his early manhood he opened a farm in Tazewell County, but finally returned to the paternal home in Greene County, where, on the location of the Jacksonville Division of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, he laid out the town of Roodhouse, at the junction of the Louisiana and Kansas City branch with the main line.

ROOT, George Frederick, musical composer and author, was born at Sheffield, Mass., August 30, 1820. He was a natural musician, and, while employed on his father's farm, learned to play on various instruments. In 1838 he removed to Boston, where he began his life-work. Besides teaching music in the public schools, he was employed to direct the musical service in two churches. From Boston he removed to New York, and, in 1850, went to Paris for purposes of musical study. In 1853 he made his first public essay as a composer in the song, "Hazel Dell," which became popular at once. From this time forward his success as a song-writer was assured. His music, while not of a high artistic character, captivated the popular ear and appealed strongly to the heart. In 1860 he took up his residence in Chicago, where he conducted a musical journal and wrote those "war songs" which created and perpetuated his fame. Among the best known are "Rally Round the Flag"; "Just Before the Battle, Mother"; and "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp." Other popular songs by him are "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower"; "A Hundred Years Ago"; and "The Old Folks are Gone." Besides songs he composed several cantatas and much sacred music, also publishing many books of instruction and numerous collections of vocal and instrumental music. In 1872 the University of Chicago conferred on him the degree of Mus. Doc. Died, near Portland, Maine, August 6, 1895.

ROOTS, Benajah Guernsey, civil engineer, and educator, was born in Onondaga County N. Y., April 20, 1811, and educated in the schools and academies of Central New York; began teaching in 1827, and, after spending a year at sea for the benefit of his health, took a course in law and civil engineering. He was employed as a civil engineer on the Western Railroad of Massachusetts until 1838, when he came to Illinois and obtained employment on the railroad projected from Alton to Shawneetown, under the "internal improvement system" of 1837. When that was suspended in 1839, he settled on a farm near the present site of Tamaroa, Perry County, and soon after opened a boarding school, continuing its management until 1846, when he became Principal of a seminary at Sparta. In 1851 he went into the service of the Illinois Central Railroad, first as resident engineer in charge of surveys and construction, later as land agent and attorney. He was prominent in the introduction of the graded school system in Illinois and in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington and the University of Illinois at Champaign; was a member of the State Board of Education from its organization, and served as delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1868. Died, at his home in Perry County, Ill., May 9, 1888.—Philander Keep (Roots), son of the preceding, born in Tolland County, Conn., June 4, 1838, brought to Illinois the same year and educated in his father's school, and in an academy at Carrollton and the Wesleyan University at Bloomington; at the age of 17 belonged to a corps of engineers employed on a Southern railroad, and, during the war, served as a civil engineer in the construction and repair of military roads. Later, he was Deputy Surveyor-General of Nebraska; in 1871 became Chief Engineer on the Cairo & Fulton (now a part of the Iron Mountain) Railway; then engaged in the banking business in Arkansas, first as cashier of a bank at Fort Smith and afterwards of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, of which his brother, Logan H., was President.—Logan H. (Roots), another son, born near Tamaroa, Perry County, Ill., March 22, 1841, was educated at home and at the State Normal at Bloomington, meanwhile serving as principal of a high school at Duquoin; in 1862 enlisted in the Eighty-first Illinois Volunteers, serving through the war and acting as Chief Commissary for General Sherman on the "March to the Sea," and participating in the great review in Washington, in May, 1865. After the conclusion of the war he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the First Arkansas District, was elected from that State to the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses (1868 and 1870)—being, at the time, the youngest member in that body—and was appointed United States Marshal by President Grant. He finally became President of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, with which he remained nearly twenty years. Died, suddenly, of congestion of the brain, May 30, 1893, leaving an estate valued at nearly one and a half millions, of which he gave a large share to charitable purposes and to the city of Little Rock, for the benefit of its hospitals and the improvement of its parks.

ROSE, James A., Secretary of State, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Oct. 13, 1850. The foundation of his education was secured in the public schools of his native place, and, after a term in the Normal University at Normal, Ill., at the age of 18 he took charge of a country school. Soon he was chosen Principal of the Golconda graded schools, was later made County Superintendent of Schools, and re-elected for a second term. During his second term he was admitted to the bar, and, resigning the office of Superintendent, was elected State's Attorney without opposition, being re-elected for another term. In 1889, by appointment of Governor Fifer, he became one of the Trustees of the Pontiac Reformatory, serving until the next year, when he was transferred to the Board of Commissioners of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester, which position he continued to occupy until 1893. In 1896 he was elected Secretary of State on the Republican ticket, his term extending to January, 1901.

ROSEVILLE, a village in Warren County, on the Rock Island Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 17 miles northwest of Bushnell; has water and electric-light plants, two banks, public library and one newspaper. Region agricultural and coal-mining. Pop. (1900), 1,014.

ROSS, Leonard Fulton, soldier, born in Fulton County, Ill., July 18, 1823; was educated in the common schools and at Illinois College, Jacksonville, studied law and admitted to the bar in 1845; the following year enlisted in the Fourth Illinois Volunteers for the Mexican War, became First Lieutenant and was commended for services at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo; also performed important service as bearer of dispatches for General Taylor. After the war he served six years as Probate Judge. In May, 1861, he enlisted in the war for the Union, and was chosen Colonel of the Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers, serving with it in Missouri and Kentucky; was commissioned Brigadier-General a few weeks after the capture of Fort Donelson, and, after the evacuation of Corinth, was assigned to the command of a division with headquarters at Bolivar, Tenn. He resigned in July, 1863, and, in 1867, was appointed by President Johnson Collector of Internal Revenue for the Ninth District; has been three times a delegate to National Republican Conventions and twice defeated as a candidate for Congress in a Democratic District. Since the war he has devoted his attention largely to stock-raising, having a large stock-farm in Iowa. In his later years was President of a bank at Lewistown, Ill. Died Jan. 17, 1901.

ROSS, (Col.) William, pioneer, was born at Monson, Hampden County, Mass., April 24, 1792; removed with his father's family, in 1805, to Pittsfield, Mass., where he remained until his twentieth year, when he was commissioned an Ensign in the Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, serving through the War of 1812-14, and participating in the battle of Sackett's Harbor. During the latter part of his service he acted as drill-master at various points. Then, returning to Pittsfield, he carried on the business of blacksmithing as an employer, meanwhile filling some local offices. In 1820, a company consisting of himself and four brothers, with their families and a few others, started for the West, intending to settle in Illinois. Reaching the head-waters of the Allegheny overland, they transferred their wagons, teams and other property to flat-boats, descending that stream and the Ohio to Shawneetown, Ill. Here they disembarked and, crossing the State, reached Upper Alton, where they found only one house, that of Maj. Charles W. Hunter. Leaving their families at Upper Alton, the brothers proceeded north, crossing the Illinois River near its mouth, until they reached a point in the western part of the present county of Pike, where the town of Atlas was afterwards located. Here they erected four rough log-cabins, on a beautiful prairie not far from the Mississippi, removing their families thither a few weeks later. They suffered the usual privations incident to life in a new country, not excepting sickness and death of some of their number. At the next session of the Legislature (1820-21) Pike County was established, embracing all that part of the State west and north of the Illinois, and including the present cities of Galena and Chicago. The Ross settlement became the nucleus of the town of Atlas, laid out by Colonel Ross and his associates in 1823, at an early day the rival of Quincy, and becoming the second county-seat of Pike County, so remaining from 1824 to 1833, when the seat of justice was removed to Pittsfield. During this period Colonel Ross was one of the most prominent citizens of the county, holding, simultaneously or successively, the offices of Probate Judge, Circuit and County Clerk, Justice of the Peace, and others of a subordinate character. As Colonel of Militia, in 1832, he was ordered by Governor Reynolds to raise a company for the Black Hawk War, and, in four days, reported at Beardstown with twice the number of men called for. In 1834 he was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, also serving in the Senate during the three following sessions, a part of the time as President pro tem. of the last-named body. While in the General Assembly he was instrumental in securing legislation of great importance relating to Military Tract lands. The year following the establishment of the county-seat at Pittsfield (1834) he became a citizen of that place, which he had the privilege of naming for his early home. He was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, and a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1860, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for President the first time. Beginning life poor he acquired considerable property; was liberal, public-spirited and patriotic, making a handsome donation to the first company organized in Pike County, for the suppression of the Rebellion. Died, at Pittsfield, May 31, 1873.

ROSSVILLE, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, 19 miles north of Danville; has electric-light plant, water-works, tile and brick-works, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 879; (1900), 1,435.

ROUNDS, Sterling Parker, public printer, was born in Berkshire, Vt., June 27, 1828; about 1840 began learning the printer's trade at Kenosha, Wis., and, in 1845, was foreman of the State printing office at Madison, afterward working in offices in Milwaukee, Racine and Buffalo, going to Chicago in 1851. Here he finally established a printer's warehouse, to which he later added an electrotype foundry and the manufacture of presses, also commencing the issue of "Round's Printers' Cabinet," a trade-paper, which was continued during his life. In 1881 he was appointed by President Garfield Public Printer at Washington, serving until 1885, when he removed to Omaha, Neb., and was identified with "The Republican," of that city, until his death, Dec. 17, 1887.

ROUNTREE, Hiram, County Judge, born in Rutherford County, N. C., Dec. 23, 1794; was brought to Kentucky in infancy, where he grew to manhood and served as an Ensign in the War of 1812 under General Shelby. In 1817 he removed to Illinois Territory, first locating in Madison County, where he taught school for two years near Edwardsville, but removed to Fayette County about the time of the removal of the State capital to Vandalia. On the organization of Montgomery County, in 1821, he was appointed to office there and ever afterwards resided at Hillsboro. For a number of years in the early history of the county, he held (at the same time) the offices of Clerk of the County Commissioners Court, Clerk of the Circuit Court, County Recorder, Justice of the Peace, Notary Public, Master in Chancery and Judge of Probate, besides that of Postmaster for the town of Hillsboro. In 1826 he was elected Enrolling and Engrossing Clerk of the Senate and re-elected in 1830; served as Delegate in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and the next year was elected to the State Senate, serving in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth General Assemblies. On retiring from the Senate (1852), he was elected County Judge without opposition, was re-elected to the same office in 1861, and again, in 1865, as the nominee of the Republicans. Judge Rountree was noted for his sound judgment and sterling integrity. Died, at Hillsboro, March 4, 1873.

ROUTT, John L., soldier and Governor, was born at Eddyville, Ky., April 25, 1826, brought to Illinois in infancy and educated in the common schools. Soon after coming of age he was elected and served one term as Sheriff of McLean County; in 1862 enlisted and became Captain of Company E, Ninety-fourth Illinois Volunteers. After the war he engaged in business in Bloomington, and was appointed by President Grant, successively, United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, Second Assistant Postmaster-General and Territorial Governor of Colorado. On the admission of Colorado as a State, he was elected the first Governor under the State Government, and re-elected in 1890—serving, in all, three years. His home is in Denver. He has been extensively and successfully identified with mining enterprises in Colorado.

ROWELL, Jonathan H., ex-Congressman, was born at Haverhill, N. H., Feb. 10, 1833. He is a graduate of Eureka College and of the Law Department of the Chicago University. During the War of the Rebellion he served three years as company officer in the Seventeenth Illinois Infantry. In 1868 he was elected State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1880, was a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. In 1882 he was elected to Congress from the Fourteenth Illinois District and three times re-elected, serving until March, 1891. His home is at Bloomington.

ROWETT, Richard, soldier, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1830, came to the United States in 1851, finally settling on a farm near Carlinville, Ill., and becoming a breeder of thorough-bred horses. In 1861 he entered the service as a Captain in the Seventh Illinois Volunteers and was successively promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth and Allatoona, especially distinguishing himself at the latter and being brevetted Brigadier-General for gallantry. After the war he returned to his stock-farm, but later held the positions of Canal Commissioner, Penitentiary Commissioner, Representative in the Thirtieth General Assembly and Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth (Quincy) District, until its consolidation with the Eighth District by President Cleveland. Died, in Chicago, July 13, 1887.

RUSH MEDICAL COLLEGE, located in Chicago; incorporated by act of March 2, 1837, the charter having been prepared the previous year by Drs. Daniel Brainard and Josiah C. Goodhue. The extreme financial depression of the following year prevented the organization of a faculty until 1843. The institution was named in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, the eminent practitioner, medical author and teacher of Philadelphia in the latter half of the eighteenth century. The first faculty consisted of four professors, and the first term opened on Dec. 4, 1843, with a class of twenty-two students. Three years' study was required for graduation, but only two annual terms of sixteen weeks each need be attended at the college itself. Instruction was given in a few rooms temporarily opened for that purpose. The next year a small building, costing between $3,000 and $4,000, was erected. This was rearranged and enlarged in 1855 at a cost of $15,000. The constant and rapid growth of the college necessitated the erection of a new building in 1867, the cost of which was $70,000. This was destroyed in the fire of 1871, and another, costing $54,000, was erected in 1876 and a free dispensary added. In 1844 the Presbyterian Hospital was located on a portion of the college lot, and the two institutions connected, thus insuring abundant and stable facilities for clinical instruction. Shortly afterwards, Rush College became the medical department of Lake Forest University. The present faculty (1898) consists of 95 professors, adjunct professors, lecturers and instructors of all grades, and over 600 students in attendance. The length of the annual terms is six months, and four years of study are required for graduation, attendance upon at least three college terms being compulsory.

RUSHVILLE, the county-seat of Schuyler County, 50 miles northeast of Quincy and 11 miles northwest of Beardstown; is the southern terminus of the Buda and Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. The town was selected as the county-seat in 1826, the seat of justice being removed from a place called Beardstown, about five miles eastward (not the present Beardstown in Cass County), where it had been located at the time of the organization of Schuyler County, a year previous. At first the new seat of justice was called Rush-ton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but afterwards took its present name. It is a coal-mining, grain and fruit-growing region, and contains several manufactories, including flour-mills, brick and tile works; also has two banks (State and private) and a public library. Four periodicals (one daily) are published here. Population (1880), 1,662; (1890), 2,031; (1900), 2,292.

RUSSELL, John, pioneer teacher and author, was born at Cavendish, Vt., July 31, 1793, and educated in the common schools of his native State and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1818—having obtained means to support himself, during his college course, by teaching and by the publication, before he had reached his 20th year, of a volume entitled "The Authentic History of Vermont State Prison." After graduation he taught for a short time in Georgia; but, early in the following year, joined his father on the way to Missouri. The next five years he spent in teaching in the "Bonhomie Bottom" on the Missouri River. During this period he published, anonymously, in "The St. Charles Missourian," a temperance allegory entitled "The Venomous Worm" (or "The Worm of the Still"), which gained a wide popularity and was early recognized by the compilers of school-readers as a sort of classic. Leaving this locality he taught a year in St. Louis, when he removed to Vandalia (then the capital of Illinois), after which he spent two years teaching in the Seminary at Upper Alton, which afterwards became Shurtleff College. In 1828 he removed to Greene County, locating at a point near the Illinois River to which he gave the name of Bluffdale. Here he was licensed as a Baptist preacher, officiating in this capacity only occasionally, while pursuing his calling as a teacher or writer for the press, to which he was an almost constant contributor during the last twenty-five years of his life. About 1837 or 1838 he was editor of a paper called "The Backwoodsman" at Grafton—then a part of Greene County, but now in Jersey County—to which he afterwards continued to be a contributor some time longer, and, in 1841-42, was editor of "The Advertiser," at Louisville, Ky. He was also, for several years, Principal of the Spring Hill Academy in East Feliciana Parish, La., meanwhile serving for a portion of the time as Superintendent of Public Schools. He was the author of a number of stories and sketches, some of which went through several editions, and, at the time of his death, had in preparation a history of "The Black Hawk War," "Evidences of Christianity" and a "History of Illinois." He was an accomplished linguist, being able to read with fluency Greek, Latin, French, Spanish and Italian, besides having considerable familiarity with several other modern languages. In 1862 he received from the University of Chicago the degree of LL.D. Died, Jan. 2, 1863, and was buried on the old homestead at Bluffdale.

RUSSELL, Martin J., politician and journalist, born in Chicago, Dec. 20, 1845. He was a nephew of Col. James A. Mulligan (see Mulligan, James A.) and served with credit as Adjutant-General on the staff of the latter in the Civil War. In 1870 he became a reporter on "The Chicago Evening Post," and was advanced to the position of city editor. Subsequently he was connected with "The Times," and "The Telegram"; was also a member of the Board of Education of Hyde Park before the annexation of that village to Chicago, and has been one of the South Park Commissioners of the city last named. After the purchase of "The Chicago Times" by Carter H. Harrison he remained for a time on the editorial staff. In 1894 President Cleveland appointed him Collector of the Port of Chicago. At the expiration of his term of office he resumed editorial work as editor-in-chief of "The Chronicle," the organ of the Democratic party in Chicago. Died June 25, 1900.

RUTHERFORD, Friend S., lawyer and soldier, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1820; studied law in Troy and removed to Illinois, settling at Edwardsville, and finally at Alton; was a Republican candidate for Presidential Elector in 1856, and, in 1860, a member of the National Republican Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for the Presidency. In September, 1862, he was commissioned Colonel of the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteers, and participated in the capture of Port Gibson and in the operations about Vicksburg—also leading in the attack on Arkansas Post, and subsequently serving in Louisiana, but died as the result of fatigue and exposure in the service, June 20, 1864, one week before his promotion to the rank of Brigadier-General.—Reuben C. (Rutherford), brother of the preceding, was born at Troy, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1823, but grew up in Vermont and New Hampshire; received a degree in law when quite young, but afterwards fitted himself as a lecturer on physiology and hygiene, upon which he lectured extensively in Michigan, Illinois and other States after coming west in 1849. During 1854-55, in co-operation with Prof. J. B. Turner and others, he canvassed and lectured extensively throughout Illinois in support of the movement which resulted in the donation of public lands, by Congress, for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States. The establishment of the University of Illinois, at Champaign, was the outgrowth of this movement. In 1856 he located at Quincy, where he resided some thirty years; in 1861, served for several months as the first Commissary of Subsistence at Cairo; was later associated with the State Quartermaster's Department, finally entering the secret service of the War Department, in which he remained until 1867, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. In 1886, General Rutherford removed to New York City, where he died, June 24, 1895.—George V. (Rutherford), another brother, was born at Rutland, Vt., 1830; was first admitted to the bar, but afterwards took charge of the construction of telegraph lines in some of the Southern States; at the beginning of the Civil War became Assistant Quartermaster-General of the State of Illinois, at Springfield, under ex-Gov. John Wood, but subsequently entered the Quartermaster's service of the General Government in Washington, retiring after the war with the rank of Brigadier-General. He then returned to Quincy, Ill., where he resided until 1872, when he engaged in manufacturing business at Northampton, Mass., but finally removed to California for the benefit of his failing health. Died, at St. Helena, Cal., August 28, 1872.

RUTLAND, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 25 miles south of La Salle; has a bank, five churches, school, and a newspaper, with coal mines in the vicinity. Pop. (1890), 509; (1900), 893; (1903), 1,093.

RUTLEDGE, (Rev.) William J., clergyman, Army Chaplain, born in Augusta County, Va., June 24, 1820; was converted at the age of 12 years and, at 21, became a member of the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving various churches in the central and western parts of the State—also acting, for a time, as Agent of the Illinois Conference Female College at Jacksonville. From 1861 to 1863 he was Chaplain of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Returning from the war, he served as pastor of churches at Jacksonville, Bloomington, Quincy, Rushville, Springfield, Griggsville and other points; from 1881 to '84 was Chaplain of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet. Mr. Rutledge was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, and served for many years as Chaplain of the order for the Department of Illinois. In connection with the ministry, he has occupied a supernumerary relation since 1885. Died in Jacksonville, April 14, 1900.

RUTZ, Edward, State Treasurer, was born in a village in the Duchy of Baden, Germany, May 5, 1829; came to America in 1848, locating on a farm in St. Clair County, Ill.; went to California in 1857, and, early in 1861, enlisted in the Third United States Artillery at San Francisco, serving with the Army of the Potomac until his discharge in 1864, and taking part in every battle in which his command was engaged. After his return in 1865, he located in St. Clair County, and was elected County Surveyor, served three consecutive terms as County Treasurer, and was elected State Treasurer three times—1872, '76 and '80. About 1892 he removed to California, where he now resides.

RYAN, Edward G., early editor and jurist, born at Newcastle House, County Meath, Ireland, Nov. 13, 1810; was educated for the priesthood, but turned his attention to law, and, in 1830, came to New York and engaged in teaching while prosecuting his legal studies; in 1836 removed to Chicago, where he was admitted to the bar and was, for a time, associated in practice with Hugh T. Dickey. In April, 1840, Mr. Ryan assumed the editorship of a weekly paper in Chicago called "The Illinois Tribune," which he conducted for over a year, and which is remembered chiefly on account of its bitter assaults on Judge John Pearson of Danville, who had aroused the hostility of some members of the Chicago bar by his rulings upon the bench. About 1842 Ryan removed to Milwaukee, Wis., where he was, for a time, a partner of Matthew H. Carpenter (afterwards United States Senator), and was connected with a number of celebrated trials before the courts of that State, including the Barstow-Bashford case, which ended with Bashford becoming the first Republican Governor of Wisconsin. In 1874 he was appointed Chief Justice of Wisconsin, serving until his death, which occurred at Madison, Oct. 19, 1880. He was a strong partisan, and, during the Civil War, was an intense opponent of the war policy of the Government. In spite of infirmities of temper, he appears to have been a man of much learning and recognized legal ability.

RYAN, James, Roman Catholic Bishop, born in Ireland in 1848 and emigrated to America in childhood; was educated for the priesthood in Kentucky, and, after ordination, was made a professor in St. Joseph's Seminary, at Bardstown, Ky. In 1878 he removed to Illinois, attaching himself to the diocese of Peoria, and having charge of parishes at Wataga and Danville. In 1881 he became rector of the Ottawa parish, within the episcopal jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Chicago. In 1888 he was made Bishop of the see of Alton, the prior incumbent (Bishop Baltes) having died in 1886.

SACS AND FOXES, two confederated Indian tribes, who were among the most warlike and powerful of the aborigines of the Illinois Country. The Foxes called themselves the Musk-wah-ha-kee, a name compounded of two words, signifying "those of red earth." The French called them Ou-ta-ga-mies, that being their spelling of the name given them by other tribes, the meaning of which was "Foxes," and which was bestowed upon them because their totem (or armorial device, as it may be called) was a fox. They seem to have been driven westward from the northern shore of Lake Ontario, by way of Niagara and Mackinac, to the region around Green Bay, Wis.—Concerning their allied brethren, the Sacs, less is known. The name is variously spelled in the Indian dialects—Ou-sa-kies, Sauks, etc.—and the term Sacs is unquestionably an abbreviated corruption. Black Hawk belonged to this tribe. The Foxes and Sacs formed a confederation according to aboriginal tradition, on what is now known as the Sac River, near Green Bay, but the date of the alliance cannot be determined. The origin of the Sacs is equally uncertain. Black Hawk claimed that his tribe originally dwelt around Quebec, but, as to the authenticity of this claim, historical authorities differ widely. Subsequent to 1670 the history of the allied tribes is tolerably well defined. Their characteristics, location and habits are described at some length by Father Allouez, who visited them in 1666-67. He says that they were numerous and warlike, but depicts them as "penurious, avaricious, thievish and quarrelsome." That they were cordially detested by their neighbors is certain, and Judge James Hall calls them "the Ishmaelites of the lakes." They were unfriendly to the French, who attached to themselves other tribes, and, through the aid of the latter, had well-nigh exterminated them, when the Sacs and Foxes sued for peace, which was granted on terms most humiliating to the vanquished. By 1718, however, they were virtually in possession of the region around Rock River in Illinois, and, four years later, through the aid of the Mascoutins and Kickapoos, they had expelled the Illinois, driving the last of that ill-fated tribe across the Illinois River. They abstained from taking part in the border wars that marked the close of the Revolutionary War, and therefore did not participate in the treaty of Greenville in 1795. At that date, according to Judge Hall, they claimed the country as far west as Council Bluffs, Iowa, and as far north as Prairie du Chien. They offered to co-operate with the United States Government in the War of 1812, but this offer was declined, and a portion of the tribe, under the leadership of Black Hawk, enlisted on the side of the British. The Black Hawk War proved their political ruin. By the treaty of Rock Island they ceded vast tracts of land, including a large part of the eastern half of Iowa and a large body of land east of the Mississippi. (See Black Hawk War; Indian Treaties.) In 1842 the Government divided the nation into two bands, removing both to reservations in the farther West. One was located on the Osage River and the other on the south side of the Nee-ma-ha River, near the northwest corner of Kansas. From these reservations, there is little doubt, many of them have silently emigrated toward the Rocky Mountains, where the hoe might be laid aside for the rifle, the net and the spear of the hunter. A few years ago a part of these confederated tribes were located in the eastern part of Oklahoma.

SAILOR SPRINGS, a village and health resort in Clay County, 5 miles north of Clay City, has an academy and a local paper. Population (1900), 419; (1903, est.), 550.

SALEM, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Marion County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Illinois Southern Railroads, 71 miles east of St. Louis, and 16 miles northeast of Centralia; in agricultural and coal district. A leading industry is the culture, evaporation and shipment of fruit. The city has flour-mills, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,493; (1900), 1,642.

SALINE COUNTY, a southeastern county, organized in 1847, having an area of 380 square miles. It derives its name from the salt springs which are found in every part of the county. The northern portion is rolling and yields an abundance of coal of a quality suitable for smithing. The bottoms are swampy, but heavily timbered, and saw-mills abound. Oak, hickory, sweet gum, mulberry, locust and sassafras are the prevailing varieties. Fruit and tobacco are extensively cultivated. The climate is mild and humid, and the vegetation varied. The soil of the low lands is rich, and, when drained, makes excellent farming lands. In some localities a good gray sandstone, soft enough to be worked, is quarried, and millstone grit is frequently found. In the southern half of the county are the Eagle Mountains, a line of hills having an altitude of some 450 to 500 feet above the level of the Mississippi at Cairo, and believed by geologists to have been a part of the upheaval that gave birth to the Ozark Mountains in Missouri and Arkansas. The highest land in the county is 864 feet above sea-level. Tradition says that these hills are rich in silver ore, but it has not been found in paying quantities. Springs strongly impregnated with sulphur are found on the slopes. The county-seat was originally located at Raleigh, which was platted in 1848, but it was subsequently removed to Harrisburg, which was laid out in 1859. Population of the county (1880), 15,940; (1890), 19,342; (1900), 21,685.

SALINE RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which flow through portions of Saline County, uniting in Gallatin County. The North Fork rises in Hamilton County and runs nearly south, while the South Fork drains part of Williamson County, and runs east through Saline. The river (which is little more than a creek), thus formed, runs southeast, entering the Ohio ten miles below Shawneetown.

SALT MANUFACTURE. There is evidence going to show that the saline springs, in Gallatin County, were utilized by the aboriginal inhabitants in the making of salt, long before the advent of white settlers. There have been discovered, at various points, what appear to be the remains of evaporating kettles, composed of hardened clay and pounded shells, varying in diameter from three to four feet. In 1812, with a view to encouraging the manufacture of salt from these springs, Congress granted to Illinois the use of 36 square miles, the fee still remaining in the United States. These lands were leased by the State to private parties, but the income derived from them was comparatively small and frequently difficult of collection. The workmen were mostly slaves from Kentucky and Tennessee, who are especially referred to in Article VI., Section 2, of the Constitution of 1818. The salt made brought $5 per 100 pounds, and was shipped in keel-boats to various points on the Ohio, Mississippi, Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, while many purchasers came hundreds of miles on horseback and carried it away on pack animals. In 1827, the State treasury being empty and the General Assembly having decided to erect a penitentiary at Alton, Congress was petitioned to donate these lands to the State in fee, and permission was granted "to sell 30,000 acres of the Ohio Salines in Gallatin County, and apply the proceeds to such purposes as the Legislature might by law direct." The sale was made, one-half of the proceeds set apart for the building of the penitentiary, and one-half to the improvement of roads and rivers in the eastern part of the State. The manufacture of salt was carried on, however—for a time by lessees and subsequently by owners—until 1873, about which time it was abandoned, chiefly because it had ceased to be profitable on account of competition with other districts possessing superior facilities. Some salt was manufactured in Vermilion County about 1824. The manufacture has been successfully carried on in recent years, from the product of artesian wells, at St. John, in Perry County.

SANDOVAL, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the western branch of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, 6 miles north of Centralia. The town has coal mines and some manufactures, with banks and one newspaper. Population (1880), 564; (1890), 834; (1900), 1,258.

SANDSTONE. The quantity of sandstone quarried in Illinois is comparatively insignificant, its value being less than one-fifth of one per cent of the value of the output of the entire country. In 1890 the State ranked twenty-fifth in the list of States producing this mineral, the total value of the stone quarried being but $17,896, representing 141,605 cubic feet, taken from ten quarries, which employed forty-six hands, and had an aggregate capital invested of $49,400.

SANDWICH, a city in De Kalb County, incorporated in 1873, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 58 miles southwest of Chicago. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements, hay-presses, corn-shell-ers, pumps and wind-mills. Sandwich has two private banks, two weekly and one semi-weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,516; (1900), 2,520; (1903), 2,865.

SANGAMON COUNTY, a central county, organized under act of June 30, 1821, from parts of Bond and Madison Counties, and embracing the present counties of Sangamon, Cass, Menard, Mason, Tazewell, Logan, and parts of Morgan, McLean, Woodford, Marshall and Putnam. It was named for the river flowing through it. Though reduced in area somewhat, four years later, it extended to the Illinois River, but was reduced to its present limits by the setting apart of Menard, Logan and Dane (now Christian) Counties, in 1839. Henry Funderburk is believed to have been the first white settler, arriving there in 1817 and locating in what is now Cotton Hill Township, being followed, the next year, by William Drennan, Joseph Dodds, James McCoy, Robert Pulliam and others. John Kelly located on the present site of the city of Springfield in 1818, and was there at the time of the selection of that place as the temporary seat of justice in 1821. Other settlements were made at Auburn, Island Grove, and elsewhere, and population began to flow in rapidly. Remnants of the Pottawatomie and Kickapoo Indians were still there, but soon moved north or west. County organization was effected in 1821, the first Board of County Commissioners being composed of William Drennan, Zachariah Peter and Samuel Lee. John Reynolds (afterwards Governor) held the first term of Circuit Court, with John Taylor, Sheriff; Henry Starr, Prosecuting Attorney, and Charles R. Matheny, Circuit Clerk. A United States Land Office was established at Springfield in 1823, with Pascal P. Enos as Receiver, the first sale of lands taking place the same year. The soil of Sangamon County is exuberantly fertile, with rich underlying deposits of bituminous coal, which is mined in large quantities. The chief towns are Springfield, Auburn, Riverton, Illiopolis and Pleasant Plains. The area of the county is 860 square miles. Population (1880), 52,894; (1890), 61,195; (1900), 71,593.

SANGAMON RIVER, formed by the union of the North and South Forks, of which the former is the longer, or main branch. The North Fork rises in the northern part of Champaign County, whence it runs southwest to the city of Decatur, thence westward through Sangamon County, forming the north boundary of Christian County, and emptying into the Illinois River about 9 miles above Beardstown. The Sangamon is nearly 240 miles long, including the North Fork. The South Fork flows through Christian County, and joins the North Fork about 6 miles east of Springfield. In the early history of the State the Sangamon was regarded as a navigable stream, and its improvement was one of the measures advocated by Abraham Lincoln in 1832, when he was for the first time a candidate (though unsuccessfully) for the Legislature. In the spring of 1832 a small steamer from Cincinnati, called the "Talisman," ascended the river to a point near Springfield. The event was celebrated with great rejoicing by the people, but the vessel encountered so much difficulty in getting out of the river that the experiment was never repeated.

SANGAMON & MORGAN RAILROAD. (See Habash Railroad.)

SANGER, Lorenzo P., railway and canal contractor, was born at Littleton, N. H., March 2, 1809; brought in childhood to Livingston County, N. Y., where his father became a contractor on the Erie Canal, the son also being employed upon the same work. The latter subsequently became a contractor on the Pennsylvania Canal on his own account, being known as "the boy contractor." Then, after a brief experience in mercantile business, and a year spent in the construction of a canal in Indiana, in 1836 he came to Illinois, and soon after became an extensive contractor on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, having charge of rock excavation at Lockport. He was also connected with the Rock River improvement scheme, and interested in a line of stages between Chicago and Galena, which, having been consolidated with the line managed by the firm of Fink & Walker, finally became the Northwestern Stage Company, extending its operations throughout Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri—Mr. Sanger having charge of the Western Division, for a time, with headquarters at St. Louis. In 1851 he became the head of the firm of Sanger, Camp & Co., contractors for the construction of the Western (or Illinois) Division of the Ohio & Mississippi (now the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railway, upon which he was employed for several years. Other works with which he was connected were the North Missouri Railroad and the construction of the State Penitentiary at Joliet, as member of the firm of Sanger & Casey, for a time, also lessees of convict labor. In 1862 Mr. Sanger received from Governor Yates, by request of President Lincoln, a commission as Colonel, and was assigned to staff duty in Kentucky and Tennessee. After the war he became largely interested in stone quarries adjacent to Joliet; also had an extensive contract, from the City of Chicago, for deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Died, at Oakland, Cal., March 23, 1875, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health.—James Young (Sanger), brother of the preceding, was born at Sutton, Vt., March 14, 1814; in boyhood spent some time in a large mercantile establishment at Pittsburg, Pa., later being associated with his father and elder brother in contracts on the Erie Canal and similar works in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. At the age of 22 he came with his father's family to St. Joseph, Mich., where they established a large supply store, and engaged in bridge-building and similar enterprises. At a later period, in connection with his father and his brother, L. P. Sanger, he was prominently connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal—the aqueduct at Ottawa and the locks at Peru being constructed by them. About 1850 the Construction Company, of which he and his brother, L. P. Sanger, were leading members, undertook the construction of the Ohio & Mississippi (now Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railroad, from St. Louis to Vincennes, Ind., and were prominently identified with other railroad enterprises in Southern Illinois, Missouri and California. Died, July 3, 1867, when consummating arrangements for the performance of a large contract on the Union Pacific Railroad.

SANITARY COMMISSION. (See Illinois Sanitary Commission.)

SANITARY DISTRICT OF CHICAGO. (See Chicago Drainage Canal.)

SAUGANASH, the Indian name of a half-breed known as Capt. Billy Caldwell, the son of a British officer and a Pottawatomie woman, born in Canada about 1780; received an education from the Jesuits at Detroit, and was able to speak and write English and French, besides several Indian dialects; was a friend of Tecumseh's and, during the latter part of his life, a devoted friend of the whites. He took up his residence in Chicago about 1820, and, in 1826, was a Justice of the Peace, while nominally a subject of Great Britain and a Chief of the Ottawa and Pottawatomies. In 1828 the Government, in consideration of his services, built for him the first frame house ever erected in Chicago, which he occupied until his departure with his tribe for Council Bluffs in 1836. By a treaty, made Jan. 2, 1830, reservations were granted by the Government to Sauganash, Shabona and other friendly Indians (see Shabona), and 1,240 acres on the North Branch of Chicago River set apart for Caldwell, which he sold before leaving the country. Died, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sept. 28, 1841.

SAVAGE, George S. F., D.D., clergyman, was born at Cromwell, Conn., Jan. 29, 1817; graduated at Yale College in 1844; studied theology at Andover and New Haven, graduating in 1847; was ordained a home missionary the same year and spent twelve years as pastor at St. Charles, Ill., for four years being corresponding editor of "The Prairie Herald" and "The Congregational Herald." For ten years he was in the service of the American Tract Society, and, during the Civil War, was engaged in sanitary and religious work in the army. In 1870 he was appointed Western Secretary of the Congregational Publishing Society, remaining two years, after which he became Financial Secretary of the Chicago Theological Seminary. He has also been a Director of the institution since 1854, a Trustee of Beloit College since 1850, and, for several years, editor and publisher of "The Congregational Review."

SAVANNA, a city in Carroll County, situated on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; is 10 miles west of Mount Carroll and about 20 miles north of Clinton, Iowa. It is an important shipping-point and contains several manufactories of machinery, lumber, flour, etc. It has two State banks, a public library, churches, two graded schools, township high school, and two daily and weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 3,097; (1900), 3,325.

SAYBROOK, a village of McLean County, on the Lake Erie & Western Railroad, 26 miles east of Bloomington; district agricultural; county fairs held here; the town has two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 851; (1900), 879.

SCATES, Walter Bennett, jurist and soldier, was born at South Boston, Halifax County, Va., Jan. 18, 1808; was taken in infancy to Hopkinsville, Ky., where he resided until 1831, having meanwhile learned the printer's trade at Nashville and studied law at Louisville. In 1831 he removed to Frankfort, Franklin County, Ill., where, for a time, he was County Surveyor. In 1836, having been appointed Attorney-General, he removed to Vandalia, then the seat of government, but resigned at the close of the same year to accept the judgeship of the Third Judicial Circuit, and took up his residence at Shawneetown. In 1841 he was one of five new Judges added to the Supreme Court bench, the others being Sidney Breese, Stephen A. Douglas, Thomas Ford and Samuel H. Treat. In that year he removed to Mount Vernon, Jefferson County, and, in January, 1847, resigned his seat upon the bench to resume practice. The same year he was a member of the Constitutional Convention and Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. In June, 1854, he again took a seat upon the Supreme Court bench, being chosen to succeed Lyman Trumbull, but resigned in May, 1857, and resumed practice in Chicago. In 1862 he volunteered in defense of the Union, received a Major's commission and was assigned to duty on the staff of General McClernand; was made, Assistant Adjutant-General and mustered out in January, 1866. In July, 1866, President Johnson appointed him Collector of Customs at Chicago, which position he filled until July 1, 1869, when he was removed by President Grant, during the same period, being ex-officio custodian of United States funds, the office of Assistant Treasurer not having been then created. Died, at Evanston, Oct. 26, 1886.

SCAMMON, Jonathan Young, lawyer and banker, was born at Whitefield, Maine, July 27, 1812; after graduating at Waterville (now Colby) University in 1831, he studied law and was admitted to the bar at Hallowell, in 1835 removing to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. After a year spent as deputy in the office of the Circuit Clerk of Cook County, during which he prepared a revision of the Illinois statutes, he was appointed attorney for the State Bank of Illinois in 1837, and, in 1839, became reporter of the Supreme Court, which office he held until 1845. In the meantime, he was associated with several prominent lawyers, his first legal firm being that of Scammon, McCagg & Fuller, which was continued up to the fire of 1871. A large operator in real estate and identified with many enterprises of a public or benevolent character, his most important financial venture was in connection with the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, which conducted an extensive banking business for many years, and of which he was the President and leading spirit. As a citizen he was progressive, public-spirited and liberal. He was one of the main promoters and organizers of the old Galena & Chicago Union Railway, the first railroad to run west from Lake Michigan; was also prominently identified with the founding of the Chicago public school system, a Trustee of the (old) Chicago University, and one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, of the Chicago Academy of Sciences and the Chicago Astronomical Society — being the first President of the latter body. He erected, at a cost of $30,000, the Fort Dearborn Observatory, in which he caused to be placed the most powerful telescope which had at that time been brought to the West. He also maintained the observatory at his own expense. He was the pioneer of Swedenborgianism in Chicago, and, in politics, a staunch Whig, and, later, an ardent Republican. In 1844 he was one of the founders of "The Chicago American," a paper designed to advance the candidacy of Henry Clay for the Presidency; and, in 1872, when "The Chicago Tribune" espoused the Liberal Republican cause, he started "The Inter-Ocean" as a Republican organ, being, for some time, its sole proprietor and editor-in-chief. He was one of the first to encourage the adoption of the homeopathic system of medicine in Chicago, and was prominently connected with the founding of the Hahnemann Medical College and the Hahnemann Hospital, being a Trustee in both for many years. As a member of the General Assembly he secured the passage of many important measures, among them being legislation looking toward the bettering of the currency and the banking system. He accumulated a large fortune, but lost most of it by the fire of 1871 and the panic of 1873. Died, in Chicago, March 17, 1890.

SCARRITT, Nathan, pioneer, was born in Connecticut, came to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1820, and, in 1821, located in Scarritt's Prairie, Madison County. His sons afterward became influential in business and Methodist church circles. Died, Dec. 12, 1847.

SCENERY, NATURAL. Notwithstanding the uniformity of surface which characterizes a country containing no mountain ranges, but which is made up largely of natural prairies, there are a number of localities in Illinois where scenery of a picturesque, and even bold and rugged character, may be found. One of the most striking of these features is produced by a spur or low range of hills from the Ozark Mountains of Missouri, projected across the southern part of the State from the vicinity of Grand

Tower in Jackson County, through the northern part of Union, and through portions of Williamson, Johnson, Saline, Pope and Hardin Counties. Grand Tower, the initial point in the western part of the State, is an isolated cliff of limestone, standing out in the channel of the Mississippi, and forming an island nearly 100 feet above low-water level. It has been a conspicuous landmark for navigators ever since the discovery of the Mississippi. "Fountain Bluff," a few miles above Grand Tower, is another conspicuous point immediately on the river bank, formed by some isolated hills about three miles long by a mile and a half wide, which have withstood the forces that excavated the valley now occupied by the Mississippi. About half a mile from the lower end of this hill, with a low valley between them, is a smaller eminence known as the "Devil's Bake Oven." The main chain of bluffs, known as the "Back Bone," is about five miles from the river, and rises to a height of nearly 700 feet above low-tide in the Gulf of Mexico, or more than 400 feet above the level of the river at Cairo. "Bald Knob" is a very prominent inland bluff promontory near Alta Pass on the line of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, in the northern part of Union County, with an elevation above tide-water of 985 feet. The highest point in this range of hills is reached in the northeastern part of Pope County—the elevation at that point (as ascertained by Prof. Rolfe of the State University at Champaign) being 1,046 feet.—There is some striking scenery in the neighborhood of Grafton between Alton and the mouth of the Illinois, as well as some distance up the latter stream—though the landscape along the middle section of the Illinois is generally monotonous or only gently undulating, except at Peoria and a few other points, where bluffs rise to a considerable height. On the Upper Illinois, beginning at Peru, the scenery again becomes picturesque, including the celebrated "Starved Rock," the site of La Salle's Fort St. Louis (which see). This rock rises to a perpendicular height of about 125 feet from the surface of the river at the ordinary stage. On the opposite side of the river, about four miles below Ottawa, is "Buffalo Rock," an isolated ridge of rock about two miles long by forty to sixty rods wide, evidently once an island at a period when the Illinois River occupied the whole valley. Additional interest is given to both these localities by their association with early history. Deer Park, on the Vermilion River—some two miles from where it empties into the Illinois, just below "Starved

Rock"—is a peculiar grotto-like formation, caused by a ravine which enters the Vermilion at this point. Ascending this ravine from its mouth, for a quarter of a mile, between almost perpendicular walls, the road terminates abruptly at a dome-like overhanging rock which widens at this point to about 150 feet in diameter at the base, with a height of about 75 feet. A clear spring of water gushes from the base of the cliff, and, at certain seasons of the year, a beautiful water-fall pours from the cliffs into a little lake at the bottom of the chasm. There is much other striking scenery higher up, on both the Illinois and Fox Rivers.—A point which arrested the attention of the earliest explorers in this region was Mount Joliet, near the city of that name. It is first mentioned by St. Cosme in 1698, and has been variously known as Monjolly, Mont Jolie, Mount Juliet, and Mount Joliet. It had an elevation, in early times, of about 30 feet with a level top 1,300 by 225 feet. Prof. O. H. Marshall, in "The American Antiquarian," expresses the opinion that, originally, it was an island in the river, which, at a remote period, swept down the valley of the Des Plaines. Mount Joliet was a favorite rallying point of Illinois Indians, who were accustomed to hold their councils at its base.—The scenery along Rock River is not striking from its boldness, but it attracted the attention of early explorers by the picturesque beauty of its groves, undulating plains and sheets of water. The highest and most abrupt elevations are met with in Jo Daviess County, near the Wisconsin State line. Pilot Knob, a natural mound about three miles south of Galena and two miles from the Mississippi, has been a landmark well known to tourists and river men ever since the Upper Mississippi began to be navigated. Towering above the surrounding bluffs, it reaches an altitude of some 430 feet above the ordinary level of Fever River. A chain of some half dozen of these mounds extends some four or five miles in a northeasterly direction from Pilot Knob, Waddel's and Jackson's Mounds being conspicuous among them. There are also some castellated rocks around the city of Galena which are very striking. Charles Mound, belonging to the system already referred to, is believed to be the highest elevation in the State. It stands near the Wisconsin State line, and, according to Prof. Rolfe, has an altitude of 314 feet above the Illinois Central Railroad at Scales' Mound Station, and, 1,257 feet above the Gulf of Mexico.

SCHAUMBERG, a village in Schaumburg Township, Cook County. Population, 573.

SCHNEIDER, George, journalist and banker, was born at Pirmasens, Bavaria, Dec. 13, 1823. Being sentenced to death for his participation in the attempted rebellion of 1848, he escaped to America in 1849, going from New York to Cleveland, and afterwards to St. Louis. There, in connection with his brother, he established a German daily—"The New Era"—which was intensely anti-slavery and exerted a decided political influence, especially among persons of German birth. In 1851 he removed to Chicago, where he became editor of "The Staats Zeitung," in which he vigorously opposed the Kansas-Nebraska bill on its introduction by Senator Douglas. His attitude and articles gave such offense to the partisan friends of this measure, that "The Zeitung" was threatened with destruction by a mob in 1855. He early took advanced ground in opposition to slavery, and was a member of the convention of Anti-Nebraska editors, held at Decatur in 1856, and of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington the same year, as well as of the National Republican Conventions of 1856 and 1860, participating in the nomination of both John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. In 1861 he was a member of the Chicago Union Defense Committee, and was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Consul-General at Elsinore, Denmark. Returning to America in 1862, he disposed of his interest in "The Staats Zeitung" and was appointed the first Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District. On retiring from this office he engaged in banking, subsequently becoming President of the National Bank of Illinois, with which he was associated for a quarter of a century. In 1877 President Hayes tendered him the ministry to Switzerland, which he declined. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector for the State-at-large, also serving for a number of years as a member of the Republican State Central Committee.

SCHOFIELD, John McAllister, Major-General, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1831; brought to Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., in 1843, and, two years later, removed to Freeport; graduated from the United States Military Academy, in 1853, as classmate of Generals McPherson and Sheridan; was assigned to the artillery service and served two years in Florida, after which he spent five years (1855-60) as an instructor at West Point. At the beginning of the Civil War he was on leave of absence, acting as Professor of Physics in Washington University at St. Louis, but, waiving his leave, he at once returned to duty and was appointed mustering officer; then, by permission of the War Department, entered the First Missouri Volunteers as Major, serving as Chief of Staff to General Lyon in the early battles in Missouri, including Wilson's Creek. His subsequent career included the organization of the Missouri State Militia (1862), command of the Army of the Frontier in Southwest Missouri, command of the Department of the Missouri and Ohio, participation in the Atlanta campaign and co-operation with Sherman in the capture of the rebel Gen. Joseph E. Johnston in North Carolina—his army having been transferred for this purpose, from Tennessee by way of Washington. After the close of the war he went on a special mission to Mexico to investigate the French occupation of that country; was commander of the Department of the Potomac, and served as Secretary of War, by appointment of President Johnson, from June, 1868, to March, 1869. On retiring from the Cabinet he was commissioned a full Major-General and held various Division and Department commands until 1886, when, on the death of General Sherman, he succeeded to the command of the Army, with headquarters at Washington. He was retired under the age limit, Sept. 29, 1895. His present home is in Washington.

SCHOLFIELD, John, jurist, was born in Clark County, Ill., in 1834; acquired the rudiments of an education in the common schools during boyhood, meanwhile gaining some knowledge of the higher branches through toilsome application to text-books without a preceptor. At the age of 20 he entered the law school at Louisville, Ky., graduating two years later, and beginning practice at Marshall, Ill. He defrayed his expenses at the law school from the proceeds of the sale of a small piece of land to which he had fallen heir. In 1856 he was elected State's Attorney, and, in 1860, was chosen to represent his county in the Legislature. After serving one term he returned to his professional career and succeeded in building up a profitable practice. In 1869-70 he represented Clark and Cumberland Counties in the Constitutional Convention, and, in 1870, became Solicitor for the Vandalia Railroad. In 1873 he was elected to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of the State for the Middle Grand Division, caused by the resignation of Judge Anthony Thornton, and re-elected without opposition in 1879 and 1888. Died, in office, Feb. 13, 1893. It has been claimed that President Cleveland would have tendered him the Chief Justiceship of the United States Supreme Court, had he not insistently declined to accept the honor.

SCHOOL-HOUSES, EARLY. The primitive school-houses of Illinois were built of logs, and were extremely rude, as regards both structure and furnishing. Indeed, the earliest pioneers rarely erected a special building to be used as a school-house. An old smoke-house, an abandoned dwelling, an old block-house, or the loft or one end of a settler's cabin not unfrequently answered the purpose, and the church and the court-house were often made to accommodate the school. When a school-house, as such, was to be built, the men of the district gathered at the site selected, bringing their axes and a few other tools, with their ox-teams, and devoted four or five days to constructing a house into which, perhaps, not a nail was driven. Trees were cut from the public lands, and, without hewing, fashioned into a cabin. Sixteen feet square was usually considered the proper dimensions. In the walls were cut two holes, one for a door to admit light and air, and the other for the open fireplace, from which rose a chimney, usually built of sticks and mud, on the outside. Danger of fire was averted by thickly lining the inside of the chimney with clay mortar. Sometimes, but only with great labor, stone was substituted for mortar made from the clay soil. The chimneys were always wide, seldom less than six feet, and sometimes extending across one entire end of the building. The fuel used was wood cut directly from the forest, frequently in its green state, dragged to the spot in the form of logs or entire trees to be cut by the older pupils in lengths suited to the width of the chimney. Occasionally there was no chimney, the fire, in some of the most primitive structures, being built on the earth and the smoke escaping through a hole in the roof. In such houses a long board was set up on the windward side, and shifted from side to side as the wind varied. Stones or logs answered for andirons, clapboards served as shovels, and no one complained of the lack of tongs. Roofs were made of roughly split clapboards, held in place by "weight poles" laid on the boards, and by supports starting from "eaves poles." The space between the logs, which constituted the walls of the building, was filled in with blocks of wood or "chinking," and the crevices, both exterior and interior, daubed over with clay mortar, in which straw was sometimes mixed to increase its adhesiveness. On one side of the structure one or two logs were sometimes cut out to allow the admission of light; and, as glass could not always be procured, rain and snow were excluded and light admitted by the use of greased paper. Over this space a board, attached to the outer wall by leather hinges, was sometimes suspended to keep out the storms. The placing of a glass window in a country school-house at Edwardsville, in 1824, was considered an important event. Ordinarily the floor was of the natural earth, although this was sometimes covered with a layer of clay, firmly packed down. Only the more pretentious school-houses had "puncheon floors"; i. e., floors made of split logs roughly hewn. Few had "ceilings" (so-called), the latter being usually made of clapboards, sometimes of bark, on which was spread earth, to keep out the cold. The seats were also of puncheons (without backs) supported on four legs made of pieces of poles inserted through augur holes. No one had a desk, except the advanced pupils who were learning to write. For their convenience a broader and smoother puncheon was fastened into the wall by wooden pins, in such a way that it would slope downward toward the pupil, the front being supported by a brace extending from the wall. When a pupil was writing he faced the wall. When he had finished this task, he "reversed himself" and faced the teacher and his schoolmates. These adjuncts completed the furnishings, with the exception of a split-bottomed chair for the teacher (who seldom had a desk) and a pail, or "piggin," of water, with a gourd for a drinking cup. Rough and uncouth as these structures were, they were evidences of public spirit and of appreciation of the advantages of education. They were built and maintained by mutual aid and sacrifice, and, in them, some of the great men of the State and Nation obtained that primary training which formed the foundation of their subsequent careers. (See Education.)

SCHUYLER COUNTY, located in the western portion of the State, has an area of 430 square miles, and was named for Gen. Philip Schuyler. The first American settlers arrived in 1823, and, among the earliest pioneers, were Calvin Hobart, William H. Taylor and Orris McCartney. The county was organized from a portion of Pike County, in 1825, the first Commissioners being Thomas Blair, Thomas McKee and Samuel Horney. The Commissioners appointed to locate the county-seat, selected a site in the eastern part of the county about one mile west of the present village of Pleasant View, to which the name of Beardstown was given, and where the earliest court was held, Judge John York Sawyer presiding, with Hart Fellows as Clerk, and Orris McCartney, Sheriff. This location, however, proving unsatisfactory, new Commissioners were appointed, who, in the early part of 1826, selected the present site of the city of Rushville, some five miles west of the point originally chosen. The new seat of justice was first called Rushton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but the name was afterwards changed to Rushville. Ephraim Eggleston was the pioneer of Rushville. The surface of the county is rolling, and the region contains excellent farming land, which is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous creeks. Population (1890), 16,013; (1900), 16,129.

SCHWATKA, Frederick, Arctic explorer, was born at Galena, Ill., Sept. 29, 1849; graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1871, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Third Cavalry, serving on the frontier until 1877, meantime studying law and medicine, being admitted to the bar in 1875, and graduating in medicine in 1876. Having his interest excited by reports of traces of Sir John Franklin's expedition, found by the Esquimaux, he obtained leave of absence in 1878, and, with Wm. H. Gilder as second in command, sailed from New York in the "Eothen," June 19, for King William's Land. The party returned, Sept. 22, 1880, having found and buried the skeletons of many of Franklin's party, besides discovering relics which tended to clear up the mystery of their fate. During this period he made a sledge journey of 3,251 miles. Again, in 1883, he headed an exploring expedition up the Yukon River. After a brief return to army duty he tendered his resignation in 1885, and the next year led a special expedition to Alaska, under the auspices of "The New York Times," later making a voyage of discovery among the Aleutian Islands. In 1889 he conducted an expedition to Northern Mexico, where he found many interesting relics of Aztec civilization and of the cliff and cave-dwellers. He received the Roquette Arctic Medal from the Geographical Society of Paris, and a medal from the Imperial Geographical Society of Russia; also published several volumes relating to his researches, under the titles, "Along Alaska's Great River"; "The Franklin Search Under Lieutenant Schwatka"; "Nimrod of the North"; and "Children of the Cold." Died, at Portland, Ore., Nov. 2, 1892.

SCOTT, James W., journalist, was born in Walworth County, Wis., June 26, 1849, the son of a printer, editor and publisher. While a boy he accompanied his father to Galena, where the latter established a newspaper, and where he learned the printer's trade. After graduating from the Galena high school, he entered Beloit College, but left at the end of his sophomore year. Going to New York, he became interested in floriculture, at the same time contributing short articles to horticultural periodicals. Later he was a compositor in Washington. His first newspaper venture was the publication of a weekly newspaper in Maryland in 1872. Returning to Illinois, conjointly with his father he started "The Industrial Press" at Galena, but, in 1875, removed to Chicago. There he purchased "The Daily National Hotel Reporter," from which he withdrew a few years later. In May, 1881, in conjunction with others, he organized The Chicago Herald Company, in which he ultimately secured a controlling interest. His journalistic and executive capability soon brought additional responsibilities. He was chosen President of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, of the Chicago Press Club, and of the United Press—the latter being an organization for the collection and dissemination of telegraphic news to journals throughout the United States and Canada. He was also conspicuously connected with the preliminary organization of the World's Columbian Exposition, and Chairman of the Press Committee. In 1893 he started an evening paper at Chicago, which he named "The Post." Early in 1895 he purchased "The Chicago Times," intending to consolidate it with "The Herald," but before the final consummation of his plans, he died suddenly, while on a business visit in New York, April 14, 1895.

SCOTT, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., August 1, 1824; his father being of Scotch-Irish descent and his mother a Virginian. His attendance upon district schools was supplemented by private tuition, and his early education was the best that the comparatively new country afforded. He read law at Belleville, was admitted to the bar in 1848, removed to McLean County, which continued to be his home for nearly fifty years. He served as County School Commissioner from 1849 to 1852, and, in the latter year, was elected County Judge. In 1856 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for the State Senate, frequently speaking from the same platform with Abraham Lincoln. In 1862 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of the Eighth Judicial Circuit, to succeed David Davis on the elevation of the latter to the bench of the United States Supreme Court, and was re-elected in 1867. In 1870, a new judicial election being rendered necessary by the adoption of the new Constitution, Judge Scott was chosen Justice of the Supreme Court for a term of nine years; was re-elected in 1879, but declined a renomination in 1888. The latter years of his life were devoted to his private affairs. Died, at Bloomington, Jan. 21, 1898. Shortly before his death Judge Scott published a volume containing a History of the Illinois Supreme Court, including brief sketches of the early occupants of the Supreme Court bench and early lawyers of the State.

SCOTT, Matthew Thompson, agriculturist and real-estate operator, was born at Lexington, Ky., Feb. 24, 1828; graduated at Centre College in 1846, then spent several years looking after his father's landed interests in Ohio, when he came to Illinois and invested largely in lands for himself and others. He laid out the town of Chenoa in 1856; lived in Springfield in 1870-72, when he removed to Bloomington, where he organized the McLean County Coal Company, remaining as its head until his death; was also the founder of "The Bloomington Bulletin," in 1878. Died, at Bloomington, May 21, 1891.

SCOTT, Owen, journalist and ex-Congressman, was born in Jackson Township, Effingham County, Ill., July 6, 1848, reared on a farm, and, after receiving a thorough common-school education, became a teacher, and was, for eight years, Superintendent of Schools for his native county. In January, 1874, he was admitted to the bar, but abandoned practice, ten years later, to engage in newspaper work. His first publication was "The Effingham Democrat," which he left to become proprietor and manager of "The Bloomington Bulletin." He was also publisher of "The Illinois Freemason," a monthly periodical. Before removing to Bloomington he filled the offices of City Attorney and Mayor of Effingham, and also served as Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue. In 1890 he was elected as a Democrat from the Fourteenth Illinois District to the Fifty-second Congress. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Benjamin F. Funk. During the past few years, Mr. Scott has been editor of "The Bloomington Leader."

SCOTT COUNTY, lies in the western part of the State adjoining the Illinois River, and has an area of 248 square miles. The region was originally owned by the Kickapoo Indians, who ceded it to the Government by the treaty of Edwardsville, July 30, 1819. Six months later (in January, 1820) a party of Kentuckians settled near Lynnville (now in Morgan County), their names being Thomas Stevens, James Scott, Alfred Miller, Thomas Allen, John Scott and Adam Miller. Allen erected the first house in the county, John Scott the second and Adam Miller the third. About the same time came Stephen M. Umpstead, whose wife was the first white woman in the county. Other pioneers were Jedediah Webster, Stephen Pierce, Joseph Densmore, Jesse Roberts, and Samuel Bogard. The country was rough and the conveniences of civilization few and remote. Settlers took their corn to Edwardsville to be ground, and went to Alton for their mail. Turbulence early showed itself, and, in 1822, a band of "Regulators" was organized from the best citizens, who meted out a rough and ready sort of justice, until 1830, occasionally shooting a desperado at his cabin door. Scott County was cut off from Morgan and organized in 1839. It contains good farming land, much of it being originally timbered, and it is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous small streams. Winchester is the county-seat. Population of the county (1880), 10,741; (1890), 10,304; (1900), 10,455.

SCRIPPS, John L., journalist, was born near Cape Girardeau, Mo., Feb. 18, 1818; was taken to Rushville, Ill., in childhood, and educated at McKendree College; studied law and came to Chicago in 1847, with the intention of practicing, but, a year or so later, bought a third interest in "The Chicago Tribune," which had been established during the previous year. In 1852 he withdrew from "The Tribune," and, in conjunction with William Bross (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor), established "The Daily Democratic Press," which was consolidated with "The Tribune" in July, 1858, under the name of "The Press and Tribune," Mr. Scripps remaining one of the editors of the new concern. In 1861 he was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving until 1865, when, having sold his interest in "The Tribune," he engaged in the banking business as a member of the firm of Scripps, Preston & Kean. His health, however, soon showed signs of failure, and he died, Sept. 21, 1866, at Minneapolis, Minn., whither he had gone in hopes of restoration. Mr. Scripps was a finished and able writer who did much to elevate the standard of Chicago journalism.

SCROGGS, George, journalist, was born at Wilmington, Clinton County, Ohio, Oct. 7, 1842—the son of Dr. John W. Scroggs, who came to Champaign County, Ill., in 1851, and, in 1858, took charge of "The Central Illinois Gazette." In 1865-67 Dr. Scroggs was active in securing the location of the State University at Champaign, afterwards serving as a member of the first Board of Trustees of that institution. The son, at the age of 15, became an apprentice in his father's printing office, continuing until 1862, when he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being promoted through the positions of Sergeant-Major and Second Lieutenant, and finally serving on the staffs of Gen. Jeff. C. Davis and Gen. James D. Morgan, but declining a commission as Adjutant of the Sixtieth Illinois. He participated in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge and the march with Sherman to the sea, in the latter being severely wounded at Bentonville, N. C. He remained in the service until July, 1865, when he resigned; then entered the University at Champaign, later studied law, meanwhile writing for "The Champaign Gazette and Union," of which he finally became sole proprietor. In 1877 he was appointed an Aid-de-Camp on the staff of Governor Cullom, and, the following year, was elected to the Thirty-first General Assembly, but, before the close of the session (1879), received the appointment of United States Consul to Hamburg, Germany. He was compelled to surrender this position, a year later, on account of ill-health, and, returning home, died, Oct. 15, 1880.

SEATONVILLE, a village in Hall Township, Bureau County. Population (1900), 909.

SECRETARIES OF STATE. The following is a list of the Secretaries of State of Illinois from its admission into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each incumbent: Elias Kent Kane, 1818-22; Samuel D. Lockwood, 1822-23; David Blackwell, 1823-24; Morris Birkbeck, October, 1824 to January, 1825 (failed of confirmation by the Senate); George Forquer, 1825-28; Alexander Pope Field, 1828-40; Stephen A. Douglas, 1840-41 (served three months—resigned to take a seat on the Supreme bench); Lyman Trumbull, 1841-43; Thompson Campbell, 1843-46; Horace S. Cooley, 1846-50; David L. Gregg, 1850-53; Alexander Starne, 1853-57; Ozias M. Hatch, 1857-65; Sharon Tyndale, 1865-69; Edward Rummel, 1869-73; George H. Harlow, 1873-81; Henry D. Dement, 1881-89; Isaac N. Pearson, 1889-93; William H. Hinrichsen, 1893-97; James A. Rose, 1897—. Nathaniel Pope and Joseph Phillips were the only Secretaries of Illinois during the Territorial period, the former serving from 1809 to 1816, and the latter from 1816 to 1818. Under the first Constitution (1818) the office of the Secretary of State was filled by appointment by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but without limitation as to term of office. By the Constitution of 1848, and again by that of 1870, that officer was made elective by the people at the same time as the Governor, for a term of four years.

SECRET TREASONABLE SOCIETIES. Early in the War of the Rebellion there sprang up, at various points in the Northwest, organizations of persons disaffected toward the National Government. They were most numerous in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Missouri. At first they were known by such titles as "Circles of Honor," "Mutual Protective Associations," etc. But they had kindred aims and their members were soon united in one organization, styled "Knights of the Golden Circle." Its secrets having been partially disclosed, this body ceased to exist—or, it would be more correct to say, changed its name—being soon succeeded (1863) by an organization of similar character, called the "American Knights." These societies, as first formed, were rather political than military. The "American Knights" had more forcible aims, but this, in turn, was also exposed, and the order was re-organized under the name of "Sons of Liberty." The last named order started in Indiana, and, owing to its more perfect organization, rapidly spread over the Northwest, acquiring much more strength and influence than its predecessors had done. The ultimate authority of the organization was vested in a Supreme Council, whose officers were a "supreme commander," "secretary of state," and "treasurer." Each State represented formed a division, under a "deputy grand commander." States were divided into military districts, under "major-generals." County lodges were termed "temples." The order was virtually an officered army, and its aims were aggressive. It had its commander-in-chief, its brigades and its regiments. Three degrees were recognized, and the oaths of secrecy taken at each initiation surpassed, in binding force, either the oath of allegiance or an oath taken in a court of justice. The maintenance of slavery, and forcible opposition to a coercive policy by the Government in dealing with secession, were the pivotal doctrines of the order. Its methods and purposes were to discourage enlistments and resist a draft; to aid and protect deserters; to disseminate treasonable literature; to aid the Confederates in destroying Government property. Clement L. Vallandigham, the expatriated traitor, was at its head, and, in 1864, claimed that it had a numerical strength of 400,000, of whom 65,000 were in Illinois. Many overt acts were committed, but the organization, having been exposed and defeated in its objects, disbanded in 1865. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.)

SELBY, Paul, editor, was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, July 20, 1825; removed with his parents, in 1837, to Van Buren County, Iowa, but, at the age of 19, went to Southern Illinois, where he spent four years teaching, chiefly in Madison County. In 1848 he entered the preparatory department of Illinois College at Jacksonville, but left the institution during his junior year to assume the editorship of "The Morgan Journal," at Jacksonville, with which he remained until the fall of 1858, covering the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which "The Journal" took an active part. He was a member of the Anti-Nebraska (afterwards known as Republican) State Convention, which met at Springfield, in October, 1854 (the first ever held in the State), and, on Feb. 22, 1856, attended and presided over a conference of Anti-Nebraska editors of the State at Decatur, called to devise a line of policy for the newly organizing Republican party. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) This body appointed the first Republican State Central Committee and designated the date of the Bloomington Convention of May 29, following, which put in nomination the first Republican State ticket ever named in Illinois, which ticket was elected in the following November. (See Bloomington Convention.) In 1859 he prepared a pamphlet giving a history of the celebrated Canal scrip fraud, which was widely circulated. (See Canal Scrip Fraud.) Going South in the fall of 1859, he was engaged in teaching in the State of Louisiana until the last of June, 1861. Just two weeks before the fall of Fort Sumter he was denounced to his Southern neighbors as an "abolitionist" and falsely charged with having been connected with the "underground railroad," in letters from secession sympathizers in the North, whose personal and political enmity he had incurred while conducting a Republican paper in Illinois, some of whom referred to Jefferson Davis, Senator Slidell, of Louisiana, and other Southern leaders as vouchers for their characters. He at once invited an investigation by the Board of Trustees of the institution, of which he was the Principal, when that body—although composed, for the most part, of Southern men—on the basis of testimonials from prominent citizens of Jacksonville, and other evidence, adopted resolutions declaring the charges prompted by personal hostility, and delivered the letters of his accusers into his hands. Returning North with his family in July, 1861, he spent some nine months in the commissary and transportation branches of the service at Cairo and at Paducah, Ky. In July, 1862, he became associate editor of "The Illinois State Journal" at Springfield, remaining until November, 1865. The next six months were spent as Assistant Deputy Collector in the Custom House at New Orleans, but, returning North in June, 1866, he soon after became identified with the Chicago press, serving, first upon the staff of "The Evening Journal" and, later, on "The Republican." In May, 1868, he assumed the editorship of "The Quincy Whig," ultimately becoming part proprietor of that paper, but, in January, 1874, resumed his old place on "The State Journal," four years later becoming one of its proprietors. In 1880 he was appointed by President Hayes Postmaster of Springfield, was reappointed by Arthur in 1884, but resigned in 1886. Meanwhile he had sold his interest in "The Journal," but the following year organized a new company for its purchase, when he resumed his former position as editor. In 1889 he disposed of his holding in "The Journal," finally removing to Chicago, where he has been employed in literary work. In all he has been engaged in editorial work over thirty-five years, of which eighteen were spent upon "The State Journal." In 1860 Mr. Selby was complimented by his Alma Mater with the honorary degree of A. M. He has been twice married, first to Miss Erra Post, of Springfield, who died in November, 1865, leaving two daughters, and, in 1870, to Mrs. Mary J. Hitchcock, of Quincy, by whom he had two children, both of whom died in infancy.

SEMPLE, James, United States Senator, was born in Green County, Ky., Jan. 5, 1798, of Scotch descent; after learning the tanner's trade, studied law and emigrated to Illinois in 1818, removing to Missouri four years later, where he was admitted to the bar. Returning to Illinois in 1828, he began practice at Edwardsville, but later became a citizen of Alton. During the Black Hawk War he served as Brigadier-General. He was thrice elected to the lower house of the Legislature (1832, '34 and '36), and was Speaker during the last two terms. In 1833 he was elected Attorney-General by the Legislature, but served only until the following year, and, in 1837, was appointed Minister to Granada, South America. In 1843 he was appointed, and afterwards elected, United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Samuel McRoberts, at the expiration of his term (1847) retiring to private life. He laid out the town of Elsau, in Jersey County, just south of which he owned a large estate on the Mississippi bluffs, where he died. Dec. 20, 1866.

SENECA (formerly Crotty), a village of La Salle County, situated on the Illinois River, the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 13 miles east of Ottawa. It has a graded school, several churches, a bank, some manufactures, grain warehouses, coal mines, telephone system and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,190; (1900), 1,036.

SENN, (Dr.) Nicholas, physician and surgeon, was born in the Canton of St. Gaul, Switzerland, Oct. 31, 1844; was brought to America at 8 years of age, his parents settling at Washington, Wis. He received a grammar school education at Fond du Lac, and, in 1864, began the study of medicine, graduating at the Chicago Medical College in 1868. After some eighteen months spent as resident physician in the Cook County Hospital, he began practice at Ashford, Wis., but removed to Milwaukee in 1874, where he became attending physician of the Milwaukee Hospital. In 1877 he visited Europe, graduated the following year from the University of Munich, and, on his return, became Professor of the Principles of Surgery and Surgical Pathology in Rush Medical College in Chicago—also has held the chair of the Practice of Surgery in the same institution. Dr. Senn has achieved great success and won an international reputation in the treatment of difficult cases of abdominal surgery. He is the author of a number of volumes on different branches of surgery which are recognized as standard authorities. A few years ago he purchased the extensive library of the late Dr. William Baum, Professor of Surgery in the University of Gottingen, which he presented to the Newberry Library of Chicago. In 1893, Dr. Senn was appointed Surgeon-General of the Illinois National Guard, and has also been President of the Association of Military Surgeons of the National Guard of the United States, besides being identified with various other medical bodies. Soon after the beginning of the Spanish-American War, he was appointed, by President McKinley, a Surgeon of Volunteers with the rank of Colonel, and rendered most efficient aid in the military branch of the service at Camp Chickamauga and in the Santiago campaign.

SEXTON, (Col.) James A., Commander-in-Chief of Grand Army of the Republic, was born in the city of Chicago, Jan. 5, 1844; in April, 1861, being then only a little over 17, enlisted as a private soldier under the first call for troops issued by President Lincoln; at the close of his term was appointed a Sergeant, with authority to recruit a company which afterwards was attached to the Fifty-first Volunteer Infantry. Later, he was transferred to the Sixty-seventh with the rank of Lieutenant, and, a few months after, to the Seventy-second with a commission as Captain of Company D, which he had recruited. As commander of his regiment, then constituting a part of the Seventeenth Army Corps, he participated in the battles of Columbia, Duck Creek, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, and in the Nashville campaign. Both at Nashville and Franklin he was wounded, and again, at Spanish Fort, by a piece of shell which broke his leg. His regiment took part in seven battles and eleven skirmishes, and, while it went out 967 strong in officers and men, it returned with only 332, all told, although it had been recruited by 234 men. He was known as "The boy Captain," being only 18 years old when he received his first commission, and 21 when, after participating in the Mobile campaign, he was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he engaged in planting in the South, purchasing a plantation in Lowndes County, Ala., but, in 1867, returned to Chicago, where he became a member of the firm of Cribben, Sexton & Co., stove manufacturers, from which he retired in 1898. In 1884 he served as Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket for the Fourth District, and, in 1889, was appointed, by President Harrison, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving over five years. In 1888 he was chosen Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, and, ten years later, to the position of Commander-in-Chief of the order, which he held at the time of his death. He had also been, for a number of years, one of the Trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, and, during most of the time, President of the Board. Towards the close of the year 1898, he was appointed by President McKinley a member of the Commission to investigate the conduct of the Spanish-American War, but, before the Commission had concluded its labors, was taken with "the grip," which developed into pneumonia, from which he died in Washington, Feb. 5, 1899.

SEYMOUR, George Franklin, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, Jan. 5, 1829; graduated from Columbia College in 1850, and from the General Theological Seminary (New York) in 1854. He received both minor and major orders at the hands of Bishop Potter, being made deacon in 1854 and ordained priest in 1855. For several years he was engaged in missionary work. During this period he was prominently identified with the founding of St. Stephen's College. After serving as rector in various parishes, in 1865 he was made Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the New York Seminary, and, ten years later, was chosen Dean of the institution, still retaining his professorship. Racine College conferred upon him the degree of S.T.D., in 1867, and Columbia that of LL.D. in 1878. In 1874 he was elected Bishop of Illinois, but failed of confirmation in the House of Deputies. Upon the erection of the new diocese of Springfield (1877) he accepted and was consecrated Bishop at Trinity Church, N. Y., June 11, 1878. He was a prominent member of the Third Pan-Anglican Council (London, 1885), and has done much to foster the growth and extend the influence of his church in his diocese.

SHABBONA, a village of De Kalb County, on the Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 25 miles west of Aurora. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 587.

SHABONA (or Shabbona), an Ottawa Chief, was born near the Maumee River, in Ohio, about 1775, and served under Tecumseh from 1807 to the battle of the Thames in 1813. In 1810 he accompanied Tecumseh and Capt. Billy Caldwell (see Sauganash) to the homes of the Pottawatomies and other tribes within the present limits of Illinois and Wisconsin, to secure their co-operation in driving the white settlers out of the country. At the battle of the Thames, he was by the side of Tecumseh when he fell, and both he and Caldwell, losing faith in their British allies, soon after submitted to the United States through General Cass at Detroit. Shabona was opposed to Black Hawk in 1832, and did much to thwart the plans of the latter and aid the whites. Having married a daughter of a Pottawatomic chief, who had a village on the Illinois River east of the present city of Ottawa, he lived there for some time, but finally removed 25 miles north to Shabona's Grove in De Kalb County. Here he remained till 1837, when he removed to Western Missonri. Black Hawk's followers having a reservation near by, hostilities began between them, in which a son and nephew of Shabona were killed. He finally returned to his old home in Illinois, but found it occupied by whites, who drove him from the grove that bore his name. Some friends then bought for him twenty acres of land on Mazon Creek, near Morris, where he died, July 27, 1859. He is described as a noble specimen of his race. A life of him has been published by N. Matson (Chicago, 1878).

SHANNON, a village of Carroll County, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 18 miles southwest of Freeport. It is an important trade center, has a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 591; (1900), 678.

SHAW, Aaron, former Congressman, born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1811; was educated at the Montgomery Academy, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Goshen in that State. In 1833 he removed to Lawrence County, Ill. He has held various important public offices. He was a member of the first Internal Improvement Convention of the State; was chosen State's Attorney by the Legislature, in which body he served two terms; served four years as Judge of the Twenty-fifth Judicial Circuit; was elected to the Thirty-fifth Congress in 1856, and to the Forty-eighth in 1882, as a Democrat.

SHAW, James, lawyer, jurist, was born in Ireland, May 3, 1832, brought to this country in infancy and grew up on a farm in Cass County, Ill.; graduated from Illinois College in 1857, and, after admission to the bar, began practice at Mount Carroll. In 1870 he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, being re-elected in 1872, '76 and '78. He was Speaker of the House during the session of 1877, and one of the Republican leaders on the floor during the succeeding session. In 1872 he was chosen a Presidential Elector, and, in 1891, to a seat on the Circuit bench from the Thirteenth Circuit, and, in 1897 was re-elected for the Fifteenth Circuit.

SHAWNEETOWN, a city and the county-seat of Gallatin County, on the Ohio River 120 miles from its mouth and at the terminus of the Shawneetown Divisions of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Louisville & Nashville Railroads; is one of the oldest towns in the State, having been laid out in 1808, and noted for the number of prominent men who resided there at an early day. Coal is extensively mined in that section, and Shawneetown is one of the largest shipping points for lumber, coal and farm products between Cairo and Louisville, navigation being open the year round. Some manufacturing is done here; the city has several mills, a foundry and machine shop, two or three banks, several churches, good schools and two weekly papers. Since the disastrous floods of 1884 and 1898, Shawneetown has reconstructed its levee system on a substantial scale, which is now believed to furnish ample protection against the recurrence of similar disaster. Pop. (1900), 1,698; (1903, est.), 2,200.

SHEAHAN, James W., journalist, was born in Baltimore, Md., spent his early life, after reaching manhood, in Washington City as a Congressional Reporter, and, in 1847, reported the proceedings of the Illinois State Constitutional Convention at Springfield. Through the influence of Senator Douglas he was induced, in 1854, to accept the editorship of "The Young America" newspaper at Chicago, which was soon after changed to "The Chicago Times." Here he remained until the fall of 1860, when, "The Times" having been sold and consolidated with "The Herald," a Buchanan-Breckenridge organ, he established a new paper called "The Morning Post." This he made representative of the views of the "War Democrats" as against "The Times," which was opposed to the war. In May, 1865, he sold the plant of "The Post" and it became "The Chicago Republican" — now "Inter Ocean." A few months later, Mr. Sheahan accepted a position as chief writer on the editorial staff of "The Chicago Tribune," which he retained until his death, June 17, 1883.

SHEFFIELD, a prosperous village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, 44 miles east of Rock Island; has valuable coal mines, a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 993; (1900), 1,265.

SHELBY COUNTY, lies south of the center of the State, and contains an area of 776 square miles. The tide of immigration to this county was at first from Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina, although later it began to set in from the Northern States. The first cabin in the county was built by Simeon Wakefield on what is now the site of Williamsburg, first called Cold Spring. Joseph Daniel was the earliest settler in what is now Shelbyville, pre-empting ten acres, which he soon afterward sold to Joseph Oliver, the pioneer merchant of the county, and father of the first white child born within its limits. Other pioneers were Shimei Wakefield, Levi Casey and Samuel Hall. In lieu of hats the early settlers wore caps made of squirrel or coon skin, with the tails dangling at the backs, and he was regarded as well dressed who boasted a fringed buckskin shirt and trousers, with moccasins. The county was formed in 1827, and Shelbyville made the county-seat. Both county and town are named in honor of Governor Shelby, of Kentucky. County Judge Joseph Oliver held the first court in the cabin of Barnett Bone, and Judge Theophilus W. Smith presided over the first Circuit Court in 1828. Coal is abundant, and limestone and sandstone are also found. The surface is somewhat rolling and well wooded. The Little Wabash and Kaskaskia Rivers flow through the central and southeastern portions. The county lies in the very heart of the great corn belt of the State, and has excellent transportation facilities, being penetrated by four lines of railway. Population (1880), 30,270; (1890), 31,191; (1900), 32,126.

SHELBYVILLE, the county-seat and an incorporated city of Shelby County, on the Kaskaskia River and two lines of railway, 32 miles southeast of Decatur. Agriculture is carried on extensively, and there is considerable coal mining in the immediate vicinity. The city has two flouring mills, a handle factory, a creamery, one National and one State bank, one daily and four weekly papers and one monthly periodical, an Orphans' Home, ten churches, two graded schools, and a public library. Population (1890), 3,162; (1900), 3,546.

SHELDON, a village of Iroquois County, at the intersection of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railways, 9 miles east of Watseka; has two banks and a newspaper. The region is agricultural. Pop. (1890), 910; (1900), 1,103.

SHELDON, Benjamin R., jurist, was born in Massachusetts in 1813, graduated from Williams College in 1831, studied law at the Yale Law School, and was admitted to practice in 1836. Emigrating to Illinois, he located temporarily at Hennepin, Putnam County, but soon removed to Galena, and finally to Rockford. In 1848 he was elected Circuit Judge of the Sixth Circuit, which afterwards being divided, he was assigned to the Fourteenth Circuit, remaining until 1870, when he was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, presiding as Chief Justice in 1877. He was re-elected in 1879, but retired in 1888, being succeeded by the late Justice Bailey. Died, April 13, 1897.

SHEPPARD, Nathan, author and lecturer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1834; graduated at Rochester Theological Seminary in 1859; during the Civil War was special correspondent of "The New York World" and "The Chicago Journal" and "Tribune," and, during the Franco-German War, of "The Cincinnati Gazette;" also served as special American correspondent of "The London Times," and was a contributor to "Frazer's Magazine" and "Temple Bar." In 1873 he became a lecturer on Modern English Literature and Rhetoric in Chicago University and, four years later, accepted a similar position in Allegheny College; also spent four years in Europe, lecturing in the principal towns of Great Britain and Ireland. In 1884 he founded the "Athenaeum" at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., of which he was President until his death, early in 1888. "The Dickens Reader," "Character Readings from George Eliot" and "Essays of George Eliot" were among the volumes issued by him between 1881 and 1887. Died in New York City, Jan. 24, 1888.

SHERMAN, Alson Smith, early Chicago Mayor, was born at Barre, Vt., April 21, 1811, remaining there until 1836, when he came to Chicago and began business as a contractor and builder. Several years later he opened the first stone quarries at Lemont, Ill. Mr. Sherman spent many years in the service of Chicago as a public official. From 1840 to 1842 he was Captain of a company of militia; for two years served as Chief of the Fire Department, and was elected Alderman in 1842, serving again in 1846. In 1844, he was chosen Mayor, his administration being marked by the first extensive public improvements made in Chicago. After his term as Mayor he did much to secure a better water supply for the city. He was especially interested in promoting common school education, being for several years a member of the City School Board. He was Vice-President of the first Board of Trustees of Northwestern University. Retired from active pursuits, Mr. Sherman is now (1899) spending a serene old age at Waukegan, Ill.—Oren (Sherman) brother of the preceding and early Chicago merchant, was born at Barre, Vt., March 5, 1816. After spending several years in a mercantile house in Montpelier, Vt., at the age of twenty he came west, first to New Buffalo, Mich., and, in 1836, to Chicago, opening a dry-goods store there the next spring. With various partners Mr. Sherman continued in a general mercantile business until 1853, at the same time being extensively engaged in the provision trade, one-half the entire transactions in pork in the city passing through his hands. Next he engaged in developing stone quarries at Lemont, Ill.; also became extensively interested in the marble business, continuing in this until a few years after the panic of 1873, when he retired in consequence of a shock of paralysis. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 15, 1898.

SHERMAN, Elijah B., lawyer, was born at Fairfield, Vt., June 18, 1832—his family being distantly related to Roger Sherman, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and the late Gen. W. T. Sherman; gained his education in the common schools and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1860; began teaching, but soon after enlisted as a private in the war for the Union; received a Lieutenant's commission, and served until captured on the eve of the battle at Antietam, when he was paroled and sent to Camp Douglas, Chicago, awaiting exchange. During this period he commenced reading law and, having resigned his commission, graduated from the law department of Chicago University in 1864. In 1876 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Cook County, and re-elected in 1878, and the following year appointed Master in Chancery of the United States District Court, a position which he still occupies. He has repeatedly been called upon to deliver addresses on political, literary and patriotic occasions, one of these being before the alumni of his alma mater, in 1884, when he was complimented with the degree of LL.D.

SHELDS, James, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Ireland in 1810, emigrated to the United States at the age of sixteen and began the practice of law at Kaskaskia in 1832. He was elected to the Legislature in 1836, and State Auditor in 1839. In 1843 he became a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, and, in 1845, was made Commissioner of the General Land Office. In July, 1846, he was commissioned Brigadier-General in the Mexican War gaining the brevet of Major-General at Cerro-Gordo, where he was severely wounded. He was again wounded at Chapultepec, and mustered out in 1848. The same year he was appointed Governor of Oregon Territory. In 1849 the Democrats in the Illinois Legislature elected him Senator, and he resigned his office in Oregon. In 1856 he removed to Minnesota, and, in 1858, was chosen United States Senator from that State, his term expiring in 1859, when he established a residence in California. At the outbreak of the Civil War (1861) he was superintending a mine in Mexico, but at once hastened to Washington to tender his services to the Government. He was commissioned Brigadier-General, and served with distinction until March, 1863, when the effect of numerous wounds caused him to resign. He subsequently removed to Missouri, practicing law at Carrollton and serving in the Legislature of that State in 1874 and 1879. In the latter year he was elected United States Senator to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Boggy, who had died in office—serving only six weeks, but being the only man in the history of the country who filled the office of United States Senator from three different States. Died, at Ottumwa, Iowa, June 1, 1879.

SHIPMAN, a town of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 19 miles north-northeast of Alton and 14 miles southwest of Carlinville. Population (1890), 410; (1900), 396.

SHIPMAN, George E., M.D., physician and philanthropist, born in New York City, March 4, 1820; graduated at the University of New York in 1839, and took a course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons; practiced for a time at Peoria, Ill., but, in 1846, located in Chicago, where he assisted in organizing the first Homeopathic Hospital in that city, and, in 1855, was one of the first Trustees of Hahnemann College. In 1871 he established, in Chicago, the Foundlings' Home at his own expense, giving to it the latter years of his life. Died, Jan. 20, 1893.

SHOREY, Daniel Lewis, lawyer and philanthropist, was born at Jonesborough, Washington County, Maine, Jan. 31, 1824; educated at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and at Dartmouth College, graduating from the latter in 1851; taught two years in Washington City, meanwhile reading law, afterwards taking a course at Dane Law School, Cambridge; was admitted to the bar in Boston in 1854, the next year locating at Davenport, Iowa, where he remained ten years. In 1865 he removed to Chicago, where he prosecuted his profession until 1890, when he retired. Mr. Shorey was prominent in the establishment of the Chicago Public Library, and a member of the first Library Board; was also a prominent member of the Chicago Literary Club, and was a Director in the new University of Chicago and deeply interested in its prosperity. Died, in Chicago, March 4, 1899.

SHORT, (Rev.) William F., clergyman and educator, was born in Ohio in 1829, brought to Morgan County, Ill., in childhood, and lived upon a farm until 20 years of age, when he entered McKendree College, spending his senior year, however, at Wesleyan University, Bloomington, where he graduated in 1854. He had meanwhile accepted a call to the Missouri Conference Seminary at Jackson, Mo.; where he remained three years, when he returned to Illinois, serving churches at Jacksonville and elsewhere, for a part of the time being Presiding Elder of the Jacksonville District. In 1875 he was elected President of Illinois Female College at Jacksonville, continuing in that position until 1893, when he was appointed Superintendent of the Illinois State Institution for the Blind at the same place, but resigned early in 1897. Dr. Short received the degree of D.D., conferred upon him by Ohio Wesleyan University.

SHOUP, George L., United States Senator, was born at Kittanning, Pa., June 15, 1836; came to Illinois in 1852, his father locating on a stock-farm near Galesburg; in 1859 removed to Colorado, where he engaged in mining and mercantile business until 1861, when he enlisted in a company of scouts, being advanced from the rank of First Lieutenant to the Colonelcy of the Third Colorado Cavalry, meanwhile serving as Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1864. Retiring to private life, he again engaged in mercantile and mining business, first in Nevada and then in Idaho; served two terms in the Territorial Legislature of the latter, was appointed Territorial Governor in 1889 and, in 1890, was chosen the first Governor of the State, in October of the same year being elected to the United States Senate, and re-elected in 1895 for a second term, which ends in 1901. Senator Shoup is one of the few Western Senators who remained faithful to the regular Republican organization, during the political campaign of 1896.

SHOWALTER, John W., jurist, was born in Mason County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1844; resided some years in Scott County in that State, and was educated in the local schools, at Maysville and Ohio University, finally graduating at Yale College in 1867; came to Chicago in 1869, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1870. He returned to Kentucky after the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, again came to Chicago and entered the employment of the firm of Moore & Caulfield, with whom he had been before the fire. In 1879 he became a member of the firm of Abbott, Oliver & Showalter (later, Oliver & Showalter), where he remained until his appointment as United States Circuit Judge, in March, 1895. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 12, 1898.

SHUMAN, Andrew, journalist and Lieutenant-Governor, was born at Manor, Lancaster County, Pa., Nov. 8, 1830. His father dying in 1837, he was reared by an uncle. At the age of 15 he became an apprentice in the office of "The Lancaster Union and Sentinel." A year later he accompanied his employer to Auburn, N. Y., working for two years on "The Daily Advertiser" of that city, then known as Governor Seward's "home organ." At the age of 18 he edited, published and distributed—during his leisure hours—a small weekly paper called "The Auburnian." At the conclusion of his apprenticeship he was employed, for a year or two, in editing and publishing "The Cayuga Chief," a temperance journal.

In 1851 he entered Hamilton College, but, before the completion of his junior year, consented, at the solicitation of friends of William H. Seward, to assume editorial control of "The Syracuse Daily Journal." In July, 1856, he came to Chicago, to accept an editorial position on "The Evening Journal" of that city, later becoming editor-in-chief and President of the Journal Company. From 1865 to 1870 (first by executive appointment and afterward by popular election) he was a Commissioner of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet, resigning the office four years before the expiration of his term. In 1876 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket. Owing to declining health, he abandoned active journalistic work in 1888, dying in Chicago, May 5, 1890. His home during the latter years of his life was at Evanston. Governor Shuman was author of a romance entitled "Loves of a Lawyer," besides numerous addresses before literary, commercial and scientific associations.

SHUMWAY, Dorice Dwight, merchant, was born at Williamsburg, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 28, 1813, descended from French Huguenot ancestry; came to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1837, and to Montgomery County, Ill., in 1841; married a daughter of Hiram Rountree, an early resident of Hillsboro, and, in 1843, located in Christian County; was engaged for a time in merchandising at Taylorville, but retired in 1858, thereafter giving his attention to a large landed estate. In 1846 he was chosen Representative in the General Assembly, served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and four years as County Judge of Christian County. Died, May 9, 1870.—Hiram P. (Shumway), eldest son of the preceding, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., June, 1842; spent his boyhood on a farm in Christian County and in his father's store at Taylorville; took an academy course and, in 1864, engaged in mercantile business; was Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly and Senator in the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh, afterwards removing to Springfield, where he engaged in the stone business.

SHURTLEFF COLLEGE, an institution located at Upper Alton, and the third established in Illinois. It was originally incorporated as the "Alton College" in 1831, under a special charter which was not accepted, but re-incorporated in 1835, in an "omnibus bill" with Illinois and McKendree Colleges. (See Early Colleges.) Its primal origin was a school at Rock Spring in St. Clair County, founded about 1824, by Rev. John M. Peck. This became the "Rock Spring Seminary" in 1827, and, about 1831, was united with an academy at Upper Alton. This was the nucleus of "Alton" (afterward "Shurtleff") College. As far as its denominational control is concerned, it has always been dominated by Baptist influence. Dr. Peck's original idea was to found a school for teaching theology and Biblical literature, but this project was at first inhibited by the State. Hubbard Loomis and John Russell were among the first instructors. Later, Dr. Benjamin Shurtleff donated the college $10,000, and the institution was named in his honor. College classes were not organized until 1840, and several years elapsed before a class graduated. Its endowment in 1898 was over $126,000, in addition to $125,000 worth of real and personal property. About 255 students were in attendance. Besides preparatory and collegiate departments, the college also maintains a theological school. It has a faculty of twenty instructors and is co-educational.

SIBLEY, a village of Ford County, on the Chicago Division of the Wabash Railway, 105 miles south-southwest of Chicago; has banks and a weekly newspaper. The district is agricultural. Population (1890), 404; (1900), 444.

SIBLEY, Joseph, lawyer and jurist, was born at Westfield, Mass., in 1818; learned the trade of a whip-maker and afterwards engaged in merchandising. In 1843 he began the study of law at Syracuse, N. Y., and, upon admission to the bar, came west, finally settling at Nauvoo, Hancock County. He maintained a neutral attitude during the Mormon troubles, thus giving offense to a section of the community. In 1847 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Legislature, but was elected in 1850, and re-elected in 1852. In 1853 he removed to Warsaw, and, in 1855, was elected Judge of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1861, '67 and '73, being assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Second District, in 1877. His residence, after 1865, was at Quincy, where he died, June 18, 1897.

SIDELL, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroads; has a bank, electric light plant and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 776.

SIDNEY, a village of Champaign County, on the main line of the Wabash Railway, at the junction of a branch to Champaign, 48 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is in a farming district; has a bank and a newspaper. Population, (1900), 564.

SIM, (Dr.) William, pioneer physician, was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1795, came to America in early manhood, and was the first physician to settle at Golconda, in Pope County, which he represented in the Fourth and Fifth General Assemblies (1824 and '28). He married a Miss Elizabeth Jack of Philadelphia, making the journey from Golconda to Philadelphia for that purpose on horseback. He had a family of five children, one son, Dr. Francis L. Sim, rising to distinction as a physician, and, for a time, being President of a Medical College at Memphis, Tenn. The elder Dr. Sim died at Golconda, in 1868.

SIMS, James, early legislator and Methodist preacher, was a native of South Carolina, but removed to Kentucky in early manhood, thence to St. Clair County, Ill., and, in 1820, to Sangamon County, where he was elected, in 1822, as the first Representative from that county in the Third General Assembly. At the succeeding session of the Legislature, he was one of those who voted against the Convention resolution designed to prepare the way for making Illinois a slave State. Mr. Sims resided for a time in Menard County, but finally removed to Morgan.

SINGER, Horace M., capitalist, was born in Schnectady, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1823; came to Chicago in 1836 and found employment on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as superintendent of repairs upon the Canal until 1853. While thus employed he became one of the proprietors of the stone-quarries at Lemont, managed by the firm of Singer & Talcott until about 1890, when they became the property of the Western Stone Company. Originally a Democrat, he became a Republican during the Civil War, and served as a member of the Twenty-fifth General Assembly (1867) for Cook County, was elected County Commissioner in 1870, and was Chairman of the Republican County Central Committee in 1880. He was also associated with several financial institutions, being a director of the First National Bank and of the Auditorium Company of Chicago, and a member of the Union League and Calumet Clubs. Died, at Pasadena, Cal., Dec. 28, 1896.

SINGLETON, James W., Congressman, born at Paxton, Va., Nov. 23, 1811; was educated at the Winchester (Va.) Academy, and removed to Illinois in 1833, settling first at Mount Sterling, Brown County, and, some twenty years later, near Quincy. By profession he was a lawyer, and was prominent in political and commercial affairs. In his later years he devoted considerable attention to stock-raising. He was elected Brigadier-General of the Illinois militia in 1844, being identified to some extent with the "Mormon War"; was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, served six terms in the Legislature, and was elected, on the Democratic ticket, to Congress in 1878, and again in 1880. In 1882 he ran as an independent Democrat, but was defeated by the regular nominee of his party, James M. Riggs. During the War of the Rebellion he was one of the most conspicuous leaders of the "peace party." He constructed the Quincy & Toledo (now part of the Wabash) and the Quincy, Alton & St. Louis (now part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy) Railways, being President of both companies. His death occurred at Baltimore, Md., April 4, 1892.

SINNET, John S., pioneer, was born at Lexington, Ky., March 10, 1796; at three years of age, taken by his parents to Missouri; enlisted in the War of 1812, but, soon after the war, came to Illinois, and, about 1818, settled in what is now Christian County, locating on land constituting a part of the present city of Taylorville. In 1840 he removed to Tazewell County, dying there, Jan. 13, 1872.

SKINNER, Mark, jurist, was born at Manchester, Vt., Sept. 13, 1813; graduated from Middlebury College in 1833, studied law, and, in 1836, came to Chicago; was admitted to the bar in 1839, became City Attorney in 1840, later Master in Chancery for Cook County, and finally United States District Attorney under President Tyler. As member of the House Finance Committee in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), he aided influentially in securing the adoption of measures for refunding and paying the State debt. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the Court of Common Pleas (now Superior Court) of Cook County, but declined a re-election in 1853. Originally a Democrat, Judge Skinner was an ardent opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill and a liberal supporter of the Government policy during the rebellion. He liberally aided the United States Sanitary Commission and was identified with all the leading charities of the city. Among the great business enterprises with which he was officially associated were the Galena & Chicago Union and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways (in each of which he was a Director), the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, the Gas-Light and Coke Company and others. Died, Sept. 16, 1887. Judge Skinner's only surviving son was killed in the trenches before Petersburg, the last year of the Civil War.

SKINNER, Otis Ainsworth, clergyman and author, was born at Royalton, Vt., July 3, 1807; taught for some time, became a Universalist minister, serving churches in Baltimore, Boston and New York between 1831 and 1857; then came to Elgin, Ill., was elected President of Lombard University at Galesburg, but the following year took charge of a church at Joliet. Died, at Naperville, Sept. 18, 1861. He wrote several volumes on religious topics, and, at different times, edited religious periodicals at Baltimore, Haverhill, Mass., and Boston.

SKINNER, Ozias C., lawyer and jurist, was born at Floyd, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1817; in 1836, removed to Illinois, settling in Peoria County, where he engaged in farming. In 1838 he began the study of law at Greenville, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar of that State in 1840. Eighteen months later he returned to Illinois, and began practice at Carthage, Hancock County, removing to Quincy in 1844. During the "Mormon War" he served as Aid-de-camp to Governor Ford. In 1848 he was elected to the lower house of the Sixteenth General Assembly, and, for a short time, served as Prosecuting Attorney for the district including Adams and Brown Counties. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the (then) Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1855, succeeded Judge S. H. Treat on the Supreme bench, resigning this position in April, 1858, two months before the expiration of his term. He was a large land owner and had extensive agricultural interests. He built, and was the first President of the Carthage & Quincy Railroad, now a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system. He was a prominent member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869, serving as Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. Died in 1877.

SLADE, Charles, early Congressman; his early history, including date and place of birth, are unknown. In 1820 he was elected Representative from Washington County in the Second General Assembly, and, in 1826, was re-elected to the same body for Clinton and Washington. In 1832 he was elected one of the three Congressmen from Illinois, representing the First District. After attending the first session of the Twenty-third Congress, while on his way home, he was attacked with cholera, dying near Vincennes, Ind., July 11, 1831.

SLADE, James P., ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born at Westerlo, Albany County, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1837, and spent his boyhood with his parents on a farm, except while absent at school; in 1856 removed to Belleville, Ill., where he soon became connected with the public schools, serving for a number of years as Principal of the Belleville High School. While connected with the Belleville schools, he was elected County Superintendent, remaining in office some ten years; later had charge of Almira College at Greenville, Bond County, served six years as Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis and, in 1878, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction as the nominee of the Republican party. On retirement from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed his place at the head of Almira College, but, for the past few years, has been Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis.

SLAVERY AGITATION OF 1823-24. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

SLAVERY AND SLAVE LAWS. African slaves were first brought into the Illinois country by a Frenchman named Pierre F. Renault, about 1722. At that time the present State formed a part of Louisiana, and the traffic in slaves was regulated by French royal edicts. When Great Britain acquired the territory, at the close of the French and Indian War, the former subjects of France were guaranteed security for their persons "and effects," and no interference with slavery was attempted. Upon the conquest of Illinois by Virginia (see Clark, George Rogers), the French very generally professed allegiance to that commonwealth, and, in her deed of cession to the United States, Virginia expressly stipulated for the protection of the "rights and liberties" of the French citizens. This was construed as recognizing the right of property in negro slaves. Even the Ordinance of 1787, while prohibiting slavery in the Northwest Territory, preserved to the settlers (reference being especially made to the French and Canadians) "of the Kaskaskias, St. Vincents and neighboring villages, their laws and customs, now (then) in force, relative to the descent and conveyance of property." A conservative construction of this clause was, that while it prohibited the extension of slavery and the importation of slaves, the status of those who were at that time in involuntary servitude, and of their descendants, was left unchanged. There were those, however, who denied the constitutionality of the Ordinance in toto, on the ground that Congress had exceeded its powers in its passage. There was also a party which claimed that all children of slaves, born after 1787, were free from birth. In 1794 a convention was held at Vincennes, pursuant to a call from Governor Harrison, and a memorial to Congress was adopted, praying for the repeal—or, at least a modification—of the sixth clause of the Ordinance of 1787. The first Congressional Committee, to which this petition was referred, reported adversely upon it; but a second committee recommended the suspension of the operation of the clause in question for ten years. But no action was taken by the National Legislature, and, in 1807, a counter petition, extensively signed, was forwarded to that body, and Congress left the matter in statu quo. It is worthy of note that some of the most earnest opponents of the measure were Representatives from Southern Slave States, John Randolph, of Virginia, being one of them. The pro-slavery party in the State then prepared what is popularly known as the "Indenture Law," which was one of the first acts adopted by Governor Edwards and his Council, and was re-enacted by the first Territorial Legislature in 1812. It was entitled, "An Act relating to the Introduction of Negroes and Mulattoes into this Territory," and gave permission to bring slaves above 15 years of age into the State, when they might be registered and kept in servitude within certain limitations. Slaves under that age might also be brought in, registered, and held in bondage until they reached the age of 35, if males, and 30, if females. The issue of registered slaves were to serve their mother's master until the age of 30 or 28, according to sex. The effect of this legislation was rapidly to increase the number of slaves. The Constitution of 1818 prohibited the introduction of slavery thereafter—that is to say, after its adoption. In 1822 the slave-holding party, with their supporters, began to agitate the question of so amending the organic law as to make Illinois a slave State. To effect such a change the calling of a convention was necessary, and, for eighteen months, the struggle between "conventionists" and their opponents was bitter and fierce. The question was submitted to a popular vote on August 2, 1824, the result of the count showing 4,972 votes for such convention and 6,640 against. This decisive result settled the question of slave-holding in Illinois for all future time, though the existence of slavery in the State continued to be recognized by the National Census until 1840. The number, according to the census of 1810, was 168; in 1820 they had increased to 917. Then the number began to diminish, being reduced in 1830 to 747, and, in 1840 (the last census which shows any portion of the population held in bondage), it was 331.

Hooper Warren—who has been mentioned elsewhere as editor of "The Edwardsville Spectator," and a leading factor in securing the defeat of the scheme to make Illinois a slave State in 1822—in an article in the first number of "The Genius of Liberty" (January, 1841), speaking of that contest, says there were, at its beginning, only three papers in the State—"The Intelligencer" at Vandalia, "The Gazette" at Shawneetown, and "The Spectator" at Edwardsville. The first two of these, at the outset, favored the Convention scheme, while "The Spectator" opposed it. The management of the campaign on the part of the pro-slavery party was assigned to Emanuel J. West, Theophilus W. Smith and Oliver L. Kelly, and a paper was established by the name of "The Illinois Republican," with Smith as editor. Among the active opponents of the measure were George Churchill, Thomas Lippincott, Samuel D. Lockwood, Henry Starr (afterwards of Cincinnati), Rev. John M. Peck and Rev. James Lemen, of St. Clair County. Others who contributed to the cause were Daniel P. Cook, Morris Birkbeck, Dr. Hugh Steel and — Burton of Jackson County, Dr. Henry Perrine of Bond; William Leggett of Edwardsville (afterwards editor of "The New York Evening Post"), Benjamin Lundy (then of Missouri), David Blackwell and Rev. John Dew, of St. Clair County. Still others were Nathaniel Pope (Judge of the United States District Court), William B. Archer, William H. Brown and Benjamin Mills (of Vandalia), John Tillson, Dr. Horatio Newhall, George Forquer, Col. Thomas Mather, Thomas Ford, Judge David J. Baker, Charles W. Hunter and Henry H. Snow (of Alton). This testimony is of interest as coming from one who probably had more to do with defeating the scheme, with the exception of Gov. Edward Coles. Outside of the more elaborate Histories of Illinois, the most accurate and detailed accounts of this particular period are to be found in "Sketch of Edward Coles" by the late E. B. Washburne, and "Early Movement in Illinois for the Legalization of Slavery," an address before the Chicago Historical Society (1864), by Hon. William H. Brown, of Chicago. (See also, Coles, Edward; Warren, Hooper; Brown, William H.; Churchill, George; Lippincott, Thomas; and Newspapers, Early, elsewhere in this volume.)

SLOAN, Wesley, legislator and jurist, was born in Dorchester County, Md., Feb. 20., 1806. At the age of 17, having received a fair academic education, he accompanied his parents to Philadelphia, where, for a year, he was employed in a wholesale grocery. His father dying, he returned to Maryland and engaged in teaching, at the same time studying law, and being admitted to the bar in 1831. He came to Illinois in 1838, going first to Chicago, and afterward to Kaskaskia, finally settling at Golconda in 1839, which continued to be his home the remainder of his life. In 1848 he was elected to the Legislature, and re-elected in 1850, '52, and '56, serving three times as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He was one of the members of the first State Board of Education, created by Act of Feb. 18, 1857, and took a prominent part in the founding and organization of the State educational institutions. In 1857 he was elected to the bench of the Nineteenth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1861, but declined a re-election for a third term. Died, Jan. 15, 1887.

SMITH, Abner, jurist, was born at Orange, Franklin County, Mass., August 4, 1843, of an old New England family, whose ancestors came to Massachusetts Colony about 1630; was educated in the public schools and at Middlebury College, Vt., graduating from the latter in 1866. After graduation he spent a year as a teacher in Newton Academy, at Shoreham, Vt., coming to Chicago in 1867, and entering upon the study of law, being admitted to the bar in 1868. The next twenty-five years were spent in the practice of his profession in Chicago, within that time serving as the attorney of several important corporations. In 1893 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected in 1897, his term of service continuing until 1903.

SMITH, (Dr.) Charles Gilman, physician, was born at Exeter, N. H., Jan. 4, 1828, received his early education at Phillips Academy, in his native place, finally graduating from Harvard University in 1847. He soon after commenced the study of medicine in the Harvard Medical School, but completed his course at the University of Pennsylvania in 1851. After two years spent as attending physician of the Alms House in South Boston, Mass., in 1853 he came to Chicago, where he soon acquired an extensive practice. During the Civil War he was one of six physicians employed by the Government for the treatment of prisoners of war in hospital at Camp Douglas. In 1868 he visited Europe for the purpose of observing the management of hospitals in Germany, France and England, on his return being invited to lecture in the Woman's Medical College in Chicago, and also becoming consulting physician in the Women's and Children's Hospital, as well as in the Presbyterian Hospital—a position which he continued to occupy for the remainder of his life, gaining a wide reputation in the treatment of women's and children's diseases. Died, Jan. 10, 1894.

SMITH, David Allen, lawyer, was born near Richmond, Va., June 18, 1809; removed with his father, at an early day, to Pulaski, Tenn.; at 17 went to Courtland, Lawrence County, Ala., where he studied law with Judge Brunlette and began practice. His father, dying about 1831, left him the owner of a number of slaves whom, in 1837, he brought to Carlinville, Ill., and emancipated, giving bond that they should not become a charge to the State. In 1839 he removed to Jacksonville, where he practiced law until his death. Col. John J. Hardin was his partner at the time of his death on the battle-field of Buena Vista. Mr. Smith was a Trustee and generous patron of Illinois College, for a quarter of a century, but never held any political office. As a lawyer he was conscientious and faithful to the interests of his clients; as a citizen, liberal, public-spirited and patriotic. He contributed liberally to the support of the Government during the war for the Union. Died, at Anoka, Minn., July 13, 1865, where he had gone to accompany an invalid son. — Thomas William (Smith), eldest son of the preceding, born at Courtland, Ala., Sept. 27, 1832; died at Clearwater, Minn., Oct. 29, 1865. He graduated at Illinois College in 1852, studied law and served as Captain in the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, until, broken in health, he returned home to die.

SMITH, Dietrich C., ex-Congressman, was born at Ostfriesland, Hanover, April 4, 1840, in boyhood came to the United States, and, since 1849, has been a resident of Pekin, Tazewell County. In 1861 he enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers, was promoted to a Lieutenancy, and, while so serving, was severely wounded at Shiloh. Later, he was attached to the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, and was mustered out of service as Captain of Company C of that regiment. His business is that of banker and manufacturer, besides which he has had considerable experience in the construction and management of railroads. He was a member of the Thirtieth General Assembly, and, in 1880, was elected Representative in Congress from what was then the Thirteenth District, on the Republican ticket, defeating Adlai E. Stevenson, afterwards Vice-President. In 1882, his county (Tazewell) having been attached to the district for many years represented by Wm. M. Springer, he was defeated by the latter as a candidate for re-election.

SMITH, George, one of Chicago's pioneers and early bankers, was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, March 8, 1808. It was his early intention to study medicine, and he entered Aberdeen College with this end in view, but was forced to quit the institution at the end of two years, because of impaired vision. In 1833 he came to America, and, in 1834, settled in Chicago, where he resided until 1861, meanwhile spending one year in Scotland. He invested largely in real estate in Chicago and Wisconsin, at one time owning a considerable portion of the present site of Milwaukee. In 1837 he secured the charter for the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance Company, whose headquarters were at Milwaukee. He was really the owner of the company, although Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, was its Secretary. Under this charter Mr. Smith was able to issue $1,500,000 in certificates, which circulated freely as currency. In 1839 he founded Chicago's first private banking house. About 1843 he was interested in a storage and commission business in Chicago, with a Mr. Webster as partner. He was a Director in the old Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and aided it, while in course of construction, by loans of money; was also a charter member of the Chicago Board of Trade, organized in 1848. In 1854, the State of Wisconsin having prohibited the circulation of the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance certificates above mentioned, Mr. Smith sold out the company to his partner, Mitchell, and bought two Georgia bank charters, which, together, empowered him to issue $3,000,000 in currency. The notes were duly issued in Georgia, and put into circulation in Illinois, over the counter of George Smith & Co.'s Chicago bank. About 1856 Mr. Smith began winding up his affairs in Chicago, meanwhile spending most of his time in Scotland, but, returning in 1860, made extensive investments in railroad and other American securities, which netted him large profits. The amount of capital which he is reputed to have taken with him to his native land has been estimated at $10,000,000, though he retained considerable tracts of valuable lands in Wisconsin and about Chicago. Among those who were associated with him in business, either as employes or otherwise, and who have since been prominently identified with Chicago business affairs, were Hon. Charles B. Farwell, E. I. Tinkham (afterwards a prominent banker of Chicago), E. W. Willard, now of Newport, R. I., and others. Mr. Smith made several visits, during the last forty years, to the United States, but divided his time chiefly between Scotland (where he was the owner of a castle) and London. Died Oct. 7, 1899.

SMITH, George W., soldier, lawyer and State Treasurer, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1837. It was his intention to acquire a collegiate education, but his father's business embarrassments having compelled the abandonment of his studies, at 17 of years age he went to Arkansas and taught school for two years. In 1856 he returned to Albany and began the study of law, graduating from the law school in 1858. In October of that year he removed to Chicago, where he remained continuously in practice, with the exception of the years 1862-65, when he was serving in the Union army, and 1867-68, when he filled the office of State Treasurer. He was mustered into service, August 27, 1862, as a Captain in the Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry—the second Board of Trade regiment. At Stone River, he was seriously wounded and captured. After four days' confinement, he was aided by a negro to escape. He made his way to the Union lines, but was granted leave of absence, being incapacitated for service. On his return to duty he joined his regiment in the Chattanooga campaign, and was officially complimented for his bravery at Gordon's Mills. At Mission Ridge he was again severely wounded, and was once more personally complimented in the official report. At Kenesaw Mountain (June 27, 1864), Capt. Smith commanded the regiment after the killing of Lieutenant-Colonel Chandler, and was promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy for bravery on the field. He led the charge at Franklin, and was brevetted Colonel, and thanked by the commander for his gallant service. In the spring of 1865 he was brevetted Brigadier-General, and, in June following, was mustered out. Returning to Chicago, he resumed the practice of his profession, and gained a prominent position at the bar. In 1866 he was elected State Treasurer, and, after the expiration of his term, in January, 1869, held no public office. General Smith was, for many years, a Trustee of the Chicago Historical Society, and Vice-President of the Board. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 16, 1898.

SMITH, George W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Putnam County, Ohio, August 18, 1846. When he was four years old, his father removed to Wayne County, Ill., settling on a farm. He attended the common schools and graduated from the literary department of McKendree College, at Lebanon, in 1868. In his youth he learned the trade of a blacksmith, but later determined to study law. After reading for a time at Fairfield, Ill., he entered the Law Department of the Bloomington (Ind.) University, graduating there in 1870. The same year he was admitted to the bar in Illinois, and has since practiced at Murphysboro. In 1880 he was a Republican Presidential Elector, and, in 1888, was elected a Republican Representative to Congress from the Twentieth Illinois District, and has been continuously re-elected, now (1899) serving his sixth consecutive term as Representative from the Twenty-second District.

SMITH, Giles Alexander, soldier, and Assistant Postmaster-General, was born in Jefferson County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1829; engaged in dry-goods business in Cincinnati and Bloomington, Ill., in 1861 being proprietor of a hotel in the latter place; became a Captain in the Eighth Missouri Volunteers, was engaged at Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth, and promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel in 1862; led his regiment on the first attack on Vicksburg, and was severely wounded at Arkansas Post; was promoted Brigadier-General in August, 1863, for gallant and meritorious conduct; led a brigade of the Fifteenth Army Corps at Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, as also in the Atlanta campaign, and a division of the Seventeenth Corps in the "March to the Sea." After the surrender of Lee he was transferred to the Twenty-fifth Army Corps, became Major-General in 1865, and resigned in 1866, having declined a commission as Colonel in the regular army; about 1869 was appointed, by President Grant, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, but resigned on account of failing health in 1872. Died, at Bloomington, Nov. 8, 1876. General Smith was one of the founders of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee.

SMITH, Gustavus Adolphus, soldier, was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 26, 1820; at 16 joined two brothers who had located at Springfield, Ohio, where he learned the trade of a carriage-maker. In December, 1837, he arrived at Decatur, Ill., but soon after located at Springfield, where he resided some six years. Then, returning to Decatur, he devoted his attention to carriage manufacture, doing a large business with the South, but losing heavily as the result of the war. An original Whig, he became a Democrat on the dissolution of the Whig party, but early took ground in favor of the Union after the firing on Fort Sumter; was offered and accepted the colonelcy of the Thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the same time assisting Governor

Yates in the selection of Camp Butler as a camp of recruiting and instruction. Having been assigned to duty in Missouri, in the summer of 1861, he proceeded to Jefferson City, joined Fremont at Carthage in that State, and made a forced march to Springfield, afterwards taking part in the campaign in Arkansas and in the battle of Pea Ridge, where he had a horse shot under him and was severely (and, it was supposed, fatally) wounded, not recovering until 1868. Being compelled to return home, he received authority to raise an independent brigade, but was unable to accompany it to the field. In September, 1862, he was commissioned a Brigadier-General by President Lincoln, "for meritorious conduct," but was unable to enter into active service on account of his wound. Later, he was assigned to the command of a convalescent camp at Murfreesboro, Tenn., under Gen. George H. Thomas. In 1864 he took part in securing the second election of President Lincoln, and, in the early part of 1865, was commissioned by Governor Oglesby Colonel of a new regiment (the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois), but, on account of his wounds, was assigned to court-martial duty, remaining in the service until January, 1866, when he was mustered out with the brevet rank of Brigadier-General. During the second year of his service he was presented with a magnificent sword by the rank and file of his regiment (the Thirty-fifth), for brave and gallant conduct at Pea Ridge. After retiring from the army, he engaged in cotton planting in Alabama, but was not successful; in 1868, canvassed Alabama for General Grant for President, but declined a nomination in his own favor for Congress. In 1870 he was appointed, by General Grant, United States Collection and Disbursing Agent for the District of New Mexico, where he continued to reside.

SMITH, John Corson, soldier, ex-Lieutenant-Governor and ex-State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 13, 1832. At the age of 16 he was apprenticed to a carpenter and builder. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and worked at his trade, for a time, but soon removed to Galena, where he finally engaged in business as a contractor. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteers, but, having received authority from Governor Yates, raised a company, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was incorporated in the Ninety-sixth Illinois Infantry. Of this regiment he was soon elected Major. After a short service about Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington and Newport, Ky., the Ninety-sixth was sent to the front, and took part (among other battles) in the second engagement at Fort Donelson and in the bloody fight at Franklin, Tenn. Later, Major Smith was assigned to staff duty under Generals Baird and Steedman, serving through the Tullahoma campaign, and participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. Being promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, he rejoined his regiment, and was given command of a brigade. In the Atlanta campaign he served gallantly, taking a conspicuous part in its long series of bloody engagements, and being severely wounded at Kennesaw Mountain. In February, 1865, he was brevetted Colonel, and, in June, 1865, Brigadier-General. Soon after his return to Galena he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, but was legislated out of office in 1872. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and embarked in business. In 1874-76 he was a member (and Secretary) of the Illinois Board of Commissioners to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. In 1875 he was appointed Chief Grain-Inspector at Chicago, and held the office for several years. In 1872 and '76 he was a delegate to the National Republican Conventions of those years, and, in 1878, was elected State Treasurer, as he was again in 1882. In 1884 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor, serving until 1889. He is a prominent Mason, Knight Templar and Odd Fellow, as well as a distinguished member of the Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and was prominently connected with the erection of the "Masonic Temple Building" in Chicago.

SMITH, John Eugene, soldier, was born in Switzerland, August 3, 1816, the son of an officer who had served under Napoleon, and after the downfall of the latter, emigrated to Philadelphia. The subject of this sketch received an academic education and became a jeweler; in 1861 entered the volunteer service as Colonel of the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry; took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in the battle of Shiloh and siege of Corinth; was promoted a Brigadier-General in November, 1862, and placed in command of a division in the Sixteenth Army Corps; led the Third Division of the Seventeenth Army Corps in the Vicksburg campaign, later being transferred to the Fifteenth, and taking part in the battle of Missionary Ridge and the Atlanta and Carolina campaigns of 1864-65. He received the brevet rank of Major-General of Volunteers in January, 1865, and, on his muster-out from the volunteer service, became Colonel of the Twenty-seventh United States Infantry, being transferred, in 1870, to the Fourteenth. In 1867 his services at Vicksburg and Savannah were further recognized by conferring upon him the brevets of Brigadier and Major-General in the regular army. In May, 1881, he was retired, afterwards residing in Chicago, where he died, Jan. 29, 1897.

SMITH, Joseph, the founder of the Mormon sect, was born at Sharon, Vt., Dec. 23, 1805. In 1815 his parents removed to Palmyra, N. Y., and still later to Manchester. He early showed a dreamy mental cast, and claimed to be able to locate stolen articles by means of a magic stone. In 1820 he claimed to have seen a vision, but his pretensions were ridiculed by his acquaintances. His story of the revelation of the golden plates by the angel Moroni, and of the latter's instructions to him, is well known. With the aid of Martin Harris and Oliver Cowdery he prepared the "Book of Mormon," alleging that he had deciphered it from heaven-sent characters, through the aid of miraculous spectacles. This was published in 1830. In later years Smith claimed to have received supplementary revelations, which so taxed the credulity of his followers that some of them apostatized. He also claimed supernatural power, such as exorcism, etc. He soon gained followers in considerable numbers, whom, in 1832, he led west, a part settling at Kirtland, Ohio, and the remainder in Jackson County, Mo. Driven out of Ohio five years later, the bulk of the sect found the way to their friends in Missouri, whence they were finally expelled after many conflicts with the authorities. Smith, with the other refugees, fled to Hancock County, Ill., founding the city of Nauvoo, which was incorporated in 1840. Here was begun, in the following year, the erection of a great temple, but again he aroused the hostility of the authorities, although soon wielding considerable political power. After various unsuccessful attempts to arrest him in 1844, Smith and a number of his followers were induced to surrender themselves under the promise of protection from violence and a fair trial. Having been taken to Carthage, the county-seat, all were discharged under recognizance to appear at court except Smith and his brother Hyrum, who were held under the new charge of "treason," and were placed in jail. So intense had been the feeling against the Mormons, that Governor Ford called out the militia to preserve the peace; but it is evident that the feeling among the latter was in sympathy with that of the populace. Most of the militia were disbanded after Smith's arrest, one company being left on duty at Carthage, from whom only eight men were detailed to guard the jail. In this condition of affairs a mob of 150 disguised men, alleged to be from Warsaw, appeared before the jail on the evening of June 27, and, forcing the guards—who made only a feeble resistance,—Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both shot down, while a friend, who had remained with them, was wounded. The fate of Smith undoubtedly went far to win for him the reputation of martyr, and give a new impulse to the Mormon faith. (See Mormons; Nauvoo.)

SMITH, Justin Almerin, D.D., clergyman and editor, was born at Ticonderoga, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1819, educated at New Hampton Literary and Theological Institute and Union College, graduating from the latter in 1843; served a year as Principal of the Union Academy at Bennington, Vt., followed by four years of pastoral work, when he assumed the pastorate of the First Baptist church at Rochester, N. Y., where he remained five years. Then (1853) he removed to Chicago to assume the editorship of "The Christian Times" (now "The Standard"), with which he was associated for the remainder of his life. Meanwhile he assisted in organizing three Baptist churches in Chicago, serving two of them as pastor for a considerable period; made an extended tour of Europe in 1869, attending the Vatican Council at Rome; was a Trustee and one of the founders of the old Chicago University, and Trustee and Lecturer of the Baptist Theological Seminary; was also the author of several religious works. Died, at Morgan Park, near Chicago, Feb. 4, 1896.

SMITH, Perry H., lawyer and politician, was born in Augusta, Oneida County, N. Y., March 18, 1828; entered Hamilton College at the age of 14 and graduated, second in his class, at 18; began reading law and was admitted to the bar on coming of age in 1849. Then, removing to Appleton, Wis., when 23 years of age he was elected a Judge, served later in both branches of the Legislature, and, in 1857, became Vice-President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railway, retaining the same position in the reorganized corporation when it became the Chicago & Northwestern. In 1856 Mr. Smith came to Chicago and resided there till his death, on Palm Sunday of 1885. He was prominent in railway circles and in the councils of the Democratic party, being the recognized representative of Mr. Tilden's interests in the Northwest in the campaign of 1876.

SMITH, Robert, Congressman and lawyer, was born at Petersborough, N. H., June 12, 1802; was educated and admitted to the bar in his native town, settled at Alton, Ill., in 1832, and engaged in practice. In 1836 he was elected to the General Assembly from Madison County, and re-elected in 1838. In 1842 he was elected to the Twenty-eighth Congress, and twice re-elected, serving three successive terms. During the Civil War he was commissioned Paymaster, with the rank of Major, and was stationed at St. Louis. He was largely interested in the construction of water power at Minneapolis, Minn., and also in railroad enterprises in Illinois. He was a prominent Mason and a public-spirited citizen. Died, at Alton, Dec. 20, 1867.

SMITH, Samuel Lisle, lawyer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1817, and, belonging to a wealthy family, enjoyed superior educational advantages, taking a course in the Yale Law School at an age too early to admit of his receiving a degree. In 1836 he came to Illinois, to look after some landed interests of his father's in the vicinity of Peru. Returning east within the next two years, he obtained his diploma, and, again coming west, located in Chicago in 1838, and, for a time, occupied an office with the well-known law firm of Butterfield & Collins. In 1839 he was elected City Attorney and, at the great Whig meeting at Springfield, in June, 1840, was one of the principal speakers, establishing a reputation as one of the most brilliant campaign orators in the West. As an admirer of Henry Clay, he was active in the Presidential campaign of 1844, and was also a prominent speaker at the River and Harbor Convention at Chicago, in 1847. With a keen sense of humor, brilliant, witty and a master of repartee and invective, he achieved popularity, both at the bar and on the lecture platform, and had the promise of future success, which was unfortunately marred by his convivial habits. Died of cholera, in Chicago, July 30, 1854. Mr. Smith married the daughter of Dr. Potts, of Philadelphia, an eminent clergyman of the Episcopal Church.

SMITH, Sidney, jurist, was born in Washington County, N. Y., May 12, 1829; studied law and was admitted to the bar at Albion, in that State, in 1851; came to Chicago in 1856 and entered into partnership with Grant Goodrich and William W. Farwell, both of whom were afterwards elected to places on the bench—the first in the Superior, and the latter in the Circuit Court. In 1879 Judge Smith was elected to the Superior Court of Cook County, serving until 1885, when he became the attorney of the Chicago Board of Trade. He was the Republican candidate for Mayor, in opposition to Carter H. Harrison, in 1885, and is believed by many to have been honestly elected, though defeated on the face of the returns. A recount was ordered by the court, but so much delay was incurred and so many obstacles placed in the way of carrying the order into effect, that Judge Smith abandoned the contest in disgust, although making material gains as far as it had gone. During his professional career he was connected, as counsel, with some of the most important trials before the Chicago courts; was also one of the Directors of the Chicago Public Library, on its organization in 1871. Died suddenly, in Chicago, Oct. 6, 1898.

SMITH, Theophilus Washington, Judge and politician, was born in New York City, Sept. 28, 1784, served for a time in the United States navy, was a law student in the office of Aaron Burr, was admitted to the bar in his native State in 1805, and, in 1816, came west, finally locating at Edwardsville, where he soon became a prominent figure in early State history. In 1820 he was an unsuccessful candidate before the Legislature for the office of Attorney-General, being defeated by Samuel D. Lockwood, but was elected to the State Senate in 1822, serving four years. In 1823 he was one of the leaders of the "Conventionist" party, whose aim was to adopt a new Constitution which would legalize slavery in Illinois, during this period being the editor of the leading organ of the pro-slavery party. In 1825 he was elected one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, but resigned, Dec. 26, 1842. He was impeached in 1832 on charges alleging oppressive conduct, corruption, and other high misdemeanors in office, but secured a negative acquittal, a two-thirds vote being necessary to conviction. The vote in the Senate stood twelve for conviction (on a part of the charges) to ten for acquittal, four being excused from voting. During the Black Hawk War he served as Quartermaster-General on the Governor's staff. As a jurist, he was charged by his political opponents with being unable to divest himself of his partisan bias, and even with privately advising counsel, in political causes, of defects in the record, which they (the counsel) had not discovered. He was also a member of the first Board of Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, appointed in 1823. Died, in Chicago, May 6, 1846.

SMITH, William Henry, journalist, Associated Press Manager, was born in Columbia County, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1833; at three years of age was taken by his parents to Ohio, where he enjoyed the best educational advantages that State at the time afforded. After completing his school course he began teaching, and, for a time, served as tutor in a Western college, but soon turned his attention to journalism, at first as assistant editor of a weekly publication at Cincinnati, still later becoming its editor, and, in 1855, city editor of "The Cincinnati Gazette," with which he was connected in a more responsible position at the beginning of the war, incidentally doing work upon "The Literary Review." His connection with a leading paper enabled him to exert a strong influence in support of the Government. This he used most faithfully in assisting to raise troops in the first years of the war, and, in 1863, in bringing forward and securing the election of John Brough as a Union candidate for Governor in opposition to Clement L. Vallandigham, the Democratic candidate. In 1864 he was nominated and elected Secretary of State, being re-elected two years later. After retiring from office he returned to journalism at Cincinnati, as editor of "The Evening Chronicle," from which he retired in 1870 to become Agent of the Western Associated Press, with headquarters, at first at Cleveland, but later at Chicago. His success in this line was demonstrated by the final union of the New York and Western Associated Press organizations under his management, continuing until 1893, when he retired. Mr. Smith was a strong personal friend of President Hayes, by whom he was appointed Collector of the Port of Chicago in 1877. While engaged in official duties he found time to do considerable literary work, having published, several years ago, "The St. Clair Papers," in two volumes, and a life of Charles Hammond, besides contributions to periodicals. After retiring from the management of the Associated Press, he was engaged upon a "History of American Politics" and a "Life of Rutherford B. Hayes," which are said to have been well advanced at the time of his death, which took place at his home, at Lake Forest, Ill., July 27, 1896.

SMITH, William M., merchant, stock-breeder and politician, was born near Frankfort, Ky., May 23, 1827; in 1846 accompanied his father's family to Lexington, McLean County, Ill., where they settled. A few years later he bought forty acres of government land, finally increasing his holdings to 800 acres, and becoming a breeder of fine stock. Still later he added to his agricultural pursuits the business of a merchant. Having early identified himself with the Republican party, he remained a firm adherent of its principles during the Civil War, and, while declining a commission tendered him by Governor Yates, devoted his time and means liberally to the recruiting and organization of regiments for service in the field, and procuring supplies for the sick and wounded. In 1866 he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature, and was re-elected in 1868 and '70, serving, during his last term, as Speaker. In 1877 he was appointed by Governor Cullom a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, of which body he served as President until 1883. He was a man of remarkably genial temperament, liberal impulses, and wide popularity. Died, March 25, 1886.

SMITH, William Sooy, soldier and civil engineer, was born at Tarlton, Pickaway County, Ohio, July 22, 1830; graduated at Ohio University in 1849, and, at the United States Military Academy, in 1853, having among his classmates, at the latter, Generals McPherson, Schofield and Sheridan. Coming to Chicago the following year, he first found employment as an engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad, but later became assistant of Lieutenant-Colonel Graham in engineer service on the lakes; a year later took charge of a select school in Buffalo; in 1857 made the first surveys for the International Bridge at Niagara Falls, then went into the service of extensive locomotive and bridge-works at Trenton, N. J., in their interest making a visit to Cuba, and also superintending the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River. The war intervening, he returned North and was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and assigned to duty as Assistant Adjutant-General at Camp Denison, Ohio, but, in June, 1862, was commissioned Colonel of the Thirteenth Ohio Volunteers, participating in the West Virginia campaigns, and later, at Shiloh and Perryville. In April, 1862, he was promoted Brigadier-General of volunteers, commanding divisions in the Army of the Ohio until the fall of 1862, when he joined Grant and took part in the Vicksburg campaign, as commander of the First Division of the Sixteenth Army Corps. Subsequently he was made Chief of the Cavalry Department, serving on the staffs of Grant and Sherman, until compelled to resign, in 1864, on account of impaired health. During the war General Smith rendered valuable service to the Union cause in great emergencies, by his knowledge of engineering. On retiring to private life he resumed his profession at Chicago, and since has been employed by the Government on some of its most stupendous works on the lakes, and has also planned several of the most important railroad bridges across the Missouri and other streams. He has been much consulted in reference to municipal engineering, and his name is connected with a number of the gigantic edifices in Chicago.

SMITHBORO, a village and railroad junction in Bond County, 3 miles east of Greenville. Population, 393; (1900), 314.

SNAPP, Henry, Congressman, born in Livingston County, N. Y., June 30, 1822, came to Illinois with his father when 11 years old, and, having read law at Joliet, was admitted to the bar in 1847. He practiced in Will County for twenty years before entering public life. In 1868 he was elected to the State Senate and occupied a seat in that body until his election, in 1871, to the Forty-second Congress, by the Republicans of the (then) Sixth Illinois District, as successor to B. C. Cook, who had resigned. Died, at Joliet, Nov. 23, 1895.

SNOW, Herman W., ex-Congressman, was born in La Porte County, Ind., July 3, 1836, but was reared in Kentucky, working upon a farm for five years, while yet in his minority becoming a resident of Illinois. For several years he was a school teacher, meanwhile studying law and being admitted to the bar. Early in the war he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, rising to the rank of Captain. His term of service having expired, he re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois, and was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he resumed teaching at the Chicago High School, and later served in the General Assembly (1873-74) as Representative from Woodford County. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Ninth Illinois District in Congress, but was defeated by his Republican opponent in 1892.

SNOWHOOK, William B., first Collector of Customs at Chicago, was born in Ireland in 1804; at the age of eight years was brought to New York, where he learned the printer's trade, and worked for some time in the same office with Horace Greeley. At 16 he went back to Ireland, remaining two years, but, returning to the United States, began the study of law; was also employed on the Passaic Canal; in 1836, came to Chicago, and was soon after associated with William B. Ogden in a contract on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, which lasted until 1841. As early as 1840 he became prominent as a leader in the Democratic party, and, in 1846, received from President Polk an appointment as first Collector of Customs for Chicago (having previously served as Special Surveyor of the Port, while attached to the District of Detroit); in 1853, was re-appointed to the Collectorship by President Pierce, serving two years. During the "Mormon War" (1844) he organized and equipped, at his own expense, the Montgomery Guards, and was commissioned Colonel, but the disturbances were brought to an end before the order to march. From 1856 he devoted his attention chiefly to his practice, but, in 1862, was one of the Democrats of Chicago who took part in a movement to sustain the Government by stimulating enlistments; was also a member of the Convention which nominated Mr. Greeley for President in 1872. Died, in Chicago, May 5, 1882.

SNYDER, Adam Wilson, pioneer lawyer, and early Congressman, was born at Connellsville, Pa., Oct. 6, 1799. In early life he followed the occupation of wool-curling for a livelihood, attending school in the winter. In 1815, he emigrated to Columbus, Ohio, and afterwards settled in Ridge Prairie, St. Clair County, Ill. Being offered a situation in a wool-curling and fulling mill at Cahokia, he removed thither in 1817. He formed the friendship of Judge Jesse B. Thomas, and, through the latter's encouragement and aid, studied law and gained a solid professional, political, social and financial position. In 1830 he was elected State Senator from St. Clair County, and re-elected for two successive terms. He served through the Black Hawk War as private, Adjutant and Captain. In 1833 he removed to Belleville, and, in 1834, was defeated for Congress by Governor Reynolds, whom he, in turn, defeated in 1836. Two years later Reynolds again defeated him for the same position, and, in 1840, he was elected State Senator. In 1841 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. The election was held in August, 1842, but, in May preceding, he died at his home in Belleville. His place on the ticket was filled by Thomas Ford, who was elected.—William H. (Snyder), son of the preceding, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., July 12, 1825; educated at McKendree College, studied law with Lieutenant-Governor Koerner, and was admitted to practice in 1845; also served for a time as Postmaster of the city of Belleville, and, during the Mexican War, as First-Lieutenant and Adjutant of the Fifth Illinois Volunteers. From 1850 to '54 he represented his county in the Legislature; in 1855 was appointed, by Governor Matteson, State's Attorney, which position he filled for two years. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of Secretary of State in 1856, and, in 1857, was elected a Judge of the Twenty-fourth Circuit, was re-elected for the Third Circuit in '73, '79 and '85. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 24, 1892.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME, a State charitable institution, founded by act of the Legislature in 1885, and located at Quincy, Adams County. The object of its establishment was to provide a comfortable home for such disabled or dependent veterans of the United States land or naval forces as had honorably served during the Civil War. It was opened for the reception of veterans on March 3, 1887, the first cost of site and buildings having been about $350,000. The total number of inmates admitted up to June 30, 1894, was 2,813; the number in attendance during the two previous years 988, and the whole number present on Nov. 10, 1894, 1,088. The value of property at that time was $393,636.08. Considerable appropriations have been made for additions to the buildings at subsequent sessions of the Legislature. The General Government pays to the State $100 per year for each veteran supported at the Home.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME, ILLINOIS, an institution, created by act of 1865, for the maintenance and education of children of deceased soldiers of the Civil War. An eighty-acre tract, one mile north of Normal, was selected as the site, and the first principal building was completed and opened for the admission of beneficiaries on June 1, 1869. Its first cost was $135,000, the site having been donated. Repairs and the construction of new buildings, from time to time, have considerably increased this sum. In 1875 the benefits of the institution were extended, by legislative enactment, to the children of soldiers who had died after the close of the war. The aggregate number of inmates, in 1894, was 572, of whom 323 were males and 249 females.

SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' HOME. Provision was made for the establishment of this institution by the Thirty-ninth General Assembly, in an act, approved, June 13, 1895, appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of a site, the erection of buildings and furnishing the same. It is designed for the reception and care of the mothers, wives, widows and daughters of such honorably discharged soldiers or sailors, in the United States service, as may have died, or may be physically or mentally unable to provide for the families naturally dependent on them, provided that such persons have been residents of the State for at least one year previous to admission, and are without means or ability for self-support.

The affairs of the Home are managed by a board of five trustees, of whom two are men and three women, the former to be members of the Grand Army of the Republic and of different political parties, and the latter members of the Women's Relief Corps of this State. The institution was located at Wilmington, occupying a site of seventeen acres, where it was formally opened in a house of eighteen rooms, March 11, 1896, with twenty-six applications for admittance. The plan contemplates an early enlargement by the erection of additional cottages.

SOREXTO, a village of Bond County, at the intersection of the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 14 miles southeast of Litchfield; has a bank and a newspaper. Its interests are agricultural and mining. Pop. (1890), 538; (1900), 1,000.

SOULARD, James Gaston, pioneer, born of French ancestry in St. Louis, Mo., July 15, 1798; resided there until 1821, when, having married the daughter of a soldier of the Revolution, he received an appointment at Fort Snelling, near the present city of St. Paul, then under command of Col. Snelling, who was his wife's brother-in-law. The Fort was reached after a tedious journey by flat-boat and overland, late in the fall of 1821, his wife accompanying him. Three years later they returned to St. Louis, where, being an engineer, he was engaged for several years in surveying. In 1827 he removed with his family to Galena, for the next six years had charge of a store of the Gratiot Brothers, early business men of that locality. Towards the close of this period he received the appointment of County Recorder, also holding the position of County Surveyor and Postmaster of Galena at the same time. His later years were devoted to farming and horticulture, his death taking place, Sept. 17, 1878. Mr. Soulard was probably the first man to engage in freighting between Galena and Chicago. "The Galena Advertiser" of Sept. 14, 1829, makes mention of a wagon-load of lead sent by him to Chicago, his team taking back a load of salt, the paper remarking: "This is the first wagon that has ever passed from the Mississippi River to Chicago." Great results were predicted from the exchange of commodities between the lake and the lead mine district. — Mrs. Eliza M. Hunt (Soulard), wife of the preceding, was born at Detroit, Dec. 18, 1804, her father being Col. Thomas A. Hunt, who had taken part in the Battle of Bunker Hill and remained in the army until his death, at St. Louis, in 1807. His descendants have maintained their connection with the army ever since, a son being a prominent artillery officer at the Battle of Gettysburg. Mrs. Soular was married at St. Louis, in 1820, and survive her husband some sixteen years, dying at Galena August 11, 1894. She had resided in Galena nearly seventy years, and at the date of her death, in the 90th year of her age, she was that city's oldest resident.

SOUTH ELGIN, a village of Kane County, near the city of Elgin. Population (1900), 515.

SOUTHERN COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, located at Albion, Edwards County, incorporated in 1891; had a faculty of ten teachers with 219 pupils (1897-98)—about equally male and female. Besides classical, scientific, normal, music and fine arts departments, instruction is given in preparatory studies and business education. Its property is valued at $16,500.

SOUTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, located at Anna, Union County, founded by act of the Legislature in 1869. The original site comprised 290 acres and cost a little more than $22,000, of which one-fourth was donated by citizens of the county. The construction of buildings was begun in 1869, but it was not until March, 1875, that the north wing (the first completed) was ready for occupancy. Other portions were completed a year later. The Trustees purchased 160 additional acres in 1883. The first cost (up to September, 1876) was nearly $635,000. In 1881 one wing of the main building was destroyed by fire, and was subsequently rebuilt; the patients being, meanwhile, cared for in temporary wooden barracks. The total value of lands and buildings belonging to the State, June 30, 1894, was estimated at $738,580, and, of property of all sorts, at $833,700. The wooden barracks were later converted into a permanent ward, additions made to the main buildings, a detached building for the accommodation of 300 patients erected, numerous outbuildings put up and general improvements made. A second fire on the night of Jan. 3, 1895, destroyed a large part of the main building, inflicting a loss upon the State of $175,000. Provision was made for rebuilding by the Legislature of that year. The institution has capacity for about 750 patients.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL UNIVERSITY, established in 1869, and located, after competitive bidding, at Carbondale, which offered lands and bonds at first estimated to be of the value of $229,000, but which later depreciated, through shrinkage, to $75,000. Construction was commenced in May, 1870, and the first or main building was completed and appropriately dedicated in July, 1874. Its cost was $265,000, but it was destroyed by fire, Nov. 26, 1883. In February, 1887, a new structure was completed at a cost of $150,000. Two normal courses of instruction are given—classical and scientific—each extending over a period of four years. The conditions of admission require that the pupil shall be 16 years of age, and shall possess the qualifications enabling him to pass examination for a second-grade teacher's certificate. Those unable to do so may enter a preparatory department for six months. Pupils who pledge themselves to teach in the public schools, not less than half the time of their attendance at the University, receive free tuition with a small charge for incidentals, while others pay a tuition fee. The number of students in attendance for the year 1897-98 was 720, coming from forty-seven counties, chiefly in the southern half of the State, with representatives from eight other States. The teaching faculty for the same year consisted, besides the President, of sixteen instructors in the various departments, of whom five were ladies and eleven gentlemen.

SOUTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, located near Chester, on the Mississippi River. Its erection was rendered necessary by the overcrowding of the Northern Penitentiary. (See Northern Penitentiary.) The law providing for its establishment required the Commissioners to select a site convenient of access, adjacent to stone and timber, and having a high elevation, with a never failing supply of water. In 1877, 122 acres were purchased at Chester, and the erection of buildings commenced. The first appropriation was of $200,000, and $300,000 was added in 1879. By March, 1878, 200 convicts were received, and their labor was utilized in the completion of the buildings, which are constructed upon approved modern principles. The prison receives convicts sent from the southern portion of the State, and has accommodation for some 1,200 prisoners. In connection with this penitentiary is an asylum for insane convicts, the erection of which was provided for by the Legislature in 1889.

SOUTH GROVE, a village of De Kalb County. Population (1890), 730.

SPALDING, Jesse, manufacturer. Collector of Customs and Street Railway President, was born at Athens, Bradford County, Pa., April 15, 1833; early commenced lumbering on the Susquehanna, and, at 23, began dealing on his own account. In 1857 he removed to Chicago, and soon after bought the property of the New York Lumber Company at the mouth of the Menominee River in Wisconsin, where, with different partners, and finally practically alone, he has carried on the business of lumber manufacture on a large scale ever since. In 1881 he was appointed, by President Arthur, Collector of the Port of Chicago, and, in 1889, received from President Harrison an appointment as one of the Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railway. Mr. Spalding was a zealous supporter of the Government during the War of the Rebellion and rendered valuable aid in the construction and equipment of Camp Douglas and the barracks at Chicago for the returning soldiers, receiving Auditor's warrants in payment, when no funds in the State treasury were available for the purpose. He was associated with William B. Ogden and others in the project for connecting Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay by a ship canal, which was completed in 1882, and, on the death of Mr. Ogden, succeeded to the Presidency of the Canal Company, serving until 1893, when the canal was turned over to the General Government. He has also been identified with many other public enterprises intimately connected with the development and prosperity of Chicago, and, in July, 1899, became President of the Chicago Union Traction Company, having control of the North and West Chicago Street Railway Systems.

SPALDING, John Lancaster, Catholic Bishop, was born in Lebanon, Ky., June 2, 1840; educated in the United States and in Europe, ordained a priest in the Catholic Church in 1863, and thereupon attached to the cathedral at Louisville, as assistant. In 1869 he organized a congregation of colored people, and built for their use the Church of St. Augustine, having been assigned to that parish as pastor. Soon afterwards he was appointed Secretary to the Bishop and made Chancellor of the Diocese. In 1873 he was transferred from Louisville to New York, where he was attached to the missionary parish of St. Michael's. He had, by this time, achieved no little fame as a pulpit orator and lecturer. When the diocese of Peoria, Ill., was created, in 1877, the choice of the Pope fell upon him for the new see, and he was consecrated Bishop, on May 1 of that year, by Cardinal McCloskey at New York. His administration has been characterized by both energy and success. He has devoted much attention to the subject of emigration, and has brought about the founding of many new settlements in the far West. He was also largely instrumental in bringing about the founding of the Catholic University at Washington. He is a frequent contributor to the reviews, and the author of a number of religious works.

SPANISH INVASION OF ILLINOIS. In the month of June, 1779, soon after the declaration of war between Spain and Great Britain, an expedition was organized in Canada, to attack the Spanish posts along the Mississippi. Simultaneously, a force was to be dispatched from Pensacola against New Orleans, then commanded by a young Spanish Colonel, Don Bernardo de Galvez. Secret instructions had been sent to British Commandants, all through the Western country, to co-operate with both expeditions. De Galvez, having learned of the scheme through intercepted letters, resolved to forestall the attack by becoming the assailant. At the head of a force of 670 men, he set out and captured Baton Rouge, Fort Manchac and Natchez, almost without opposition. The British in Canada, being ignorant of what had been going on in the South, in February following dispatched a force from Mackinac to support the expedition from Pensacola, and, incidentally, to subdue the American rebels while en route. Cahokia and Kaskaskia were contemplated points of attack, as well as the Spanish forts at St. Louis and St. Genevieve. This movement was planned by Capt. Patrick Sinclair, commandant at Mackinac, but Captain Hesse was placed in charge of the expedition, which numbered some 750 men, including a force of Indians led by a chief named Wabasha. The British arrived before St. Louis, early on the morning of May 26, 1780, taking the Spaniards by surprise. Meanwhile Col. George Rogers Clark, having been apprised of the project, arrived at Cahokia from the falls of the Ohio, twenty-four hours in advance of the attack, his presence and readiness to co-operate with the Spanish, no doubt, contributing to the defeat of the expedition. The accounts of what followed are conflicting, the number of killed on the St. Louis shore being variously estimated from seven or eight to sixty-eight—the last being the estimate of Capt. Sinclair in his official report. All agree, however, that the invading party was forced to retreat in great haste. Colonel Montgomery, who had been in command at Cahokia, with a force of 350 and a party of Spanish allies, pursued the retreating invaders as far as the Rock River, destroying many Indian villages on the way. This movement on the part of the British served as a pretext for an attempted reprisal, undertaken by the Spaniards, with the aid of a number of Cahokians, early in 1781. Starting early in January, this latter expedition crossed Illinois, with the design of attacking Fort St. Joseph, at the head of Lake Michigan, which had been captured from the English by Thomas Brady and afterwards retaken. The Spaniards were commanded by Don Eugenio Pourre, and supported by a force of Cahokians and Indians. The fort was easily taken and the British flag replaced by the ensign of Spain. The affair was regarded as of but little moment, at the time, the post being evacuated in a few days, and the Spaniards returning to St. Louis. Yet it led to serious international complications, and the "conquest" was seriously urged by the Spanish ministry as giving that country a right to the territory traversed. This claim was supported by France before the signing of the Treaty of Paris, but was defeated, through the combined efforts of Messrs. Jay, Franklin and Adams, the American Commissioners in charge of the peace negotiations with England.

SPARKS, (Capt.) David R., manufacturer and legislator, was born near Lanesville, Ind., in 1823; in 1836, removed with his parents to Macoupin County, Ill.; in 1847, enlisted for the Mexican War, crossing the plains to Santa Fe, New Mexico. In 1850 he made the overland trip to California, returning the next year by the Isthmus of Panama. In 1855 he engaged in the milling business at Staunton, Macoupin County, but, in 1860, made a third trip across the plains in search of gold, taking a quartz-mill which was erected near where Central City, Colo., now is, and which was the second steam-engine in that region. He returned home in time to vote for Stephen A. Douglas for President, the same year, but became a stalwart Republican, two weeks later, when the advocates of secession began to develop their policy after the election of Lincoln. In 1861 he enlisted, under the call for 500,000 volunteers following the first battle of Bull Run, and was commissioned a Captain in the Third Illinois Cavalry (Col. Eugene A. Carr), serving two and a half years, during which time he took part in several hard-fought battles, and being present at the fall of Vicksburg. At the end of his service he became associated with his former partner in the erection of a large flouring mill at Litchfield, but, in 1869, the firm bought an extensive flouring mill at Alton, of which he became the principal owner in 1881, and which has since been greatly enlarged and improved, until it is now one of the most extensive establishments of its kind in the State. Capt. Sparks was elected to the House of Representatives in 1888, and to the State Senate in 1894, serving in the sessions of 1895 and '97; was also strongly supported as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress in 1896.

SPARKS, William A. J., ex-Congressman, was born near New Albany, Ind., Nov. 19, 1828, at 8 years of age was brought by his parents to Illinois, and shortly afterwards left an orphan. Thrown on his own resources, he found work upon a farm, his attendance at the district schools being limited to the winter months. Later, he passed through McKendree College, supporting himself, meanwhile, by teaching, graduating in 1850. He read law with Judge Sidney Breese, and was admitted to the bar in 1851. His first public office was that of Receiver of the Land Office at Edwardsville, to which he was appointed by President Pierce in 1853, remaining until 1856, when he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. The same year he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1863-64, served in the State Senate for the unexpired term of James M. Rodgers, deceased. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1868, and a Democratic Representative in Congress from 1875 to 1883. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Commissioner of the General Land Office in Washington, retiring, by resignation, in 1887. His home is at Carlyle.

SPEED, Joshua Fry, merchant, and intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln; was educated in the local schools and at St. Joseph's College, Bardstown, Ky., after which he spent some time in a wholesale mercantile establishment in Louisville. About 1835 he came to Springfield, Ill., where he engaged in the mercantile business, later becoming the intimate friend and associate of Abraham Lincoln, to whom he offered the privilege of sharing a room over his store, when Mr. Lincoln removed from New Salem to Springfield, in 1836. Mr. Speed returned to Kentucky in 1842, but the friendship with Mr. Lincoln, which was of a most devoted character, continued until the death of the latter. Having located in Jefferson County, Ky., Mr. Speed was elected to the Legislature in 1848, but was never again willing to accept office, though often solicited to do so. In 1851 he removed to Louisville, where he acquired a handsome fortune in the real-estate business. On the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861, he heartily embraced the cause of the Union, and, during the war, was entrusted with many delicate and important duties in the interest of the Government, by Mr. Lincoln, whom he frequently visited in Washington. His death occurred at Louisville, May 29, 1882.—James (Speed), an older brother of the preceding, was a prominent Unionist of Kentucky, and, after the war, a leading Republican of that State, serving as delegate to the National Republican Conventions of 1872 and 1876. In 1864 he was appointed Attorney-General by Mr. Lincoln and served until 1866, when he resigned on account of disagreement with President Johnson. He died in 1887, at the age of 75 years.

SPOON RIVER, rises in Bureau County, flows southward through Stark County into Peoria, thence southwest through Knox, and to the south and southeast, through Fulton County, entering the Illinois River opposite Havana. It is about 150 miles long.

SPRINGER, (Rev.) Francis, D.D., educator and Army Chaplain, born in Franklin County, Pa., March 19, 1810; was left an orphan at an early age, and educated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg; entered the Lutheran ministry in 1836, and, in 1839, removed to Springfield, Ill., where he preached and taught school; in 1847 became President of Hillsboro College, which, in 1852, was removed to Springfield and became Illinois State University, now known as Concordia Seminary. Later, he served for a time as Superintendent of Schools for the city of Springfield, but, in September, 1861, resigned to accept the Chaplaincy of the Tenth Illinois Cavalry; by successive resignations and appointments, held the positions of Chaplain of the First Arkansas Infantry (1863-64) and Post Chaplain at Fort Smith, Ark., serving in the latter position until April, 1867, when he was commissioned Chaplain of the United States Army. This position he resigned while stationed at Fort Harker, Kan., August 23, 1867. During a considerable part of his incumbency as Chaplain at Fort Smith, he acted as Agent of the Bureau of Refugees and Freedmen, performing important service in caring for non-combatants rendered homeless by the vicissitudes of war. After the war he served, for a time, as Superintendent of Schools for Montgomery County, Ill.; was instrumental in the founding of Carthage (Ill.) College, and was a member of its Board of Control at the time of his death. He was elected Chaplain of the Illinois House of Representatives at the session of the Thirty-fifth General Assembly (1887), and Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Illinois for two consecutive terms (1890-'92). He was also member of the Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R., at Springfield, and served as its Chaplain from January, 1884, to his death, which occurred at Springfield, Oct. 21, 1892.

SPRINGER, William McKendree, ex-Congressman, Justice of United States Court, was born in Sullivan County, Ind., May 30, 1836. In 1848 he removed with his parents to Jacksonville, Ill., was fitted for college in the public high school at Jacksonville, under the tuition of the late Dr. Bateman, entered Illinois College, remaining three years, when he removed to the Indiana State University, graduating there in 1858. The following year he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice in Logan County, but soon after removed to Springfield. He entered public life as Secretary of the Constitutional Convention of 1862. In 1871-72 he represented Sangamon County in the Legislature, and, in 1874, was elected to Congress from the Thirteenth Illinois District as a Democrat. From that time until the close of the Fifty-third Congress (1895), he served in Congress continuously, and was recognized as one of the leaders of his party on the floor, being at the head of many important committees when that party was in the ascendancy, and a candidate for the Democratic caucus nomination for Speaker, in 1893. In 1894 he was the candidate of his party for Congress for the eleventh time, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, James A. Connolly. In 1895 President Cleveland appointed him United States District Judge for Indian Territory.

SPRINGFIELD, the State capital, and the county-seat of Sangamon County, situated five miles south of the Sangamon River and 185 miles southwest of Chicago; is an important railway center. The first settlement on the site of the present city was made by John Kelly in 1819. On April 10, 1821, it was selected, by the first Board of County Commissioners, as the temporary county-seat of Sangamon County, the organization of which had been authorized by act of the Legislature in January previous, and the name Springfield was given to it. In 1823 the selection was made permanent. The latter year the first sale of lands took place, the original site being entered by Pascal P. Enos, Elijah Hies and Thomas Cox. The town was platted about the same time, and the name "Calhoun" was given to a section in the northwest quarter of the present city—this being the "hey-day" of the South Carolina statesman's greatest popularity—but the change was not popularly accepted, and the new name was soon dropped. It was incorporated as a town, April 2, 1832, and as a city, April 6, 1840; and re-incorporated, under the general law in 1882. It was made the State capital by act of the Legislature, passed at the session of 1837, which went into effect, July 4, 1839, and the Legislature first convened there in December of the latter year. The general surface is flat, though there is rolling ground to the west. The city has excellent water-works, a paid fire-department, six banks, electric street railways, gas and electric lighting, commodious hotels, fine churches, numerous handsome residences, beautiful parks, thorough sewerage, and is one of the best paved and handsomest cities in the State. The city proper, in 1890, contained an area of four square miles, but has since been enlarged by the annexation of the following suburbs: North Springfield, April 7, 1891; West Springfield, Jan. 4, 1898; and South Springfield and the village of Laurel, April 5, 1898. These additions give to the present city an area of 5.84 square miles. The population of the original city, according to the census of 1880, was 19,743, and, in 1890, 24,963, while that of the annexed suburbs, at the last census, was 2,109—making a total of 29,072. The latest school census (1898) showed a total population of 33,375—population by census (1900), 34,159. Besides the State House, the city has a handsome United States Government Building for United States Court and post-office purposes, a county courthouse (the former State capitol), a city hall and (State) Executive Mansion. Springfield was the home of Abraham Lincoln. His former residence has been donated to the State, and his tomb and monument are in the beautiful Oak Ridge cemetery, adjoining the city. Springfield is an important coal-mining center, and has many important industries, notably a watch factory, rolling mills, and extensive manufactories of agricultural implements and furniture. It is also the permanent location of the State Fairs, for which extensive buildings have been erected on the Fair Grounds north of the city. There are three daily papers—two morning and one evening—published here, besides various other publications. Pop. (1900), 34,159.

SPRING VALLEY, an incorporated city in Bureau County, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Toluca, Marquette & Northern Railways, 100 miles southwest of Chicago. It lies in a coal-mining region and has important manufacturing interests as well. It has two banks, electric street and interurban railways, and two newspapers. Population (1890), 3,837; (1900), 6,214.

ST. AGATHA'S SCHOOL, an institution for young ladies, at Springfield, under the patronage of the Bishop of the Episcopal Church, incorporated in 1889. It has a faculty of eight teachers giving instruction in the preparatory and higher branches, including music and fine arts. It reported fifty-five pupils in 1894, and real estate valued at $15,000.

ST. ALBAN'S ACADEMY, a boys' and young men's school at Knoxville, Ill., incorporated in 1896 under the auspices of the Episcopal Church; in 1898 had a faculty of seven teachers, with forty-five pupils, and property valued at $61,100, of which $54,000 was real estate. Instruction is given in the classical and scientific branches, besides music and preparatory studies.

ST. ANNE, a village of Kankakee County, at the crossing of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 60 miles south of Chicago. The town has two banks, tile and brick factory, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,000.

ST. CHARLES, a city in Kane County, on both sides of Fox River, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railways; 38 miles west of Chicago and 10 miles south of Elgin. The river furnishes excellent water-power, which is being utilized by a number of important manufacturing enterprises. The city is connected with Chicago and many towns in the Fox River valley by interurban electric trolley lines; is also the seat of the State Home for Boys. Pop. (1890), 1,690; (1900), 2,675.

ST. CLAIR, Arthur, first Governor of the Northwest Territory, was born of titled ancestry at Thurso, Scotland, in 1734; came to America in 1757 as an ensign, having purchased his commission, participated in the capture of Louisburg, Canada, in 1758, and fought under Wolfe at Quebec. In 1764 he settled in Pennsylvania, where he amassed a moderate fortune, and became prominent in public affairs. He served with distinction during the Revolutionary War, rising to the rank of Major-General, and succeeding General Gates in command at Ticonderoga, but, later, was censured by Washington for his hasty evacuation of the post, though finally vindicated by a military court. His Revolutionary record, however, was generally good, and even distinguished. He represented Pennsylvania in the Continental Congress, and presided over that body in 1787. He served as Governor of the Northwest Territory (including the present State of Illinois) from 1789 to 1802. As an executive he was not successful, being unpopular because of his arbitrariness. In November, 1791, he suffered a serious defeat by the Indians in the valley between the Miami and the Wabash. In this campaign he was badly crippled by the gout, and had to be carried on a litter; he was again vindicated by a Congressional investigation. His first visit to the Illinois Country was made in 1790, when he organized St. Clair County, which was named in his honor. In 1802 President Jefferson removed him from the governorship of Ohio Territory, of which he had continued to be the Governor after its separation from Indiana and Illinois. The remainder of his life was spent in comparative penury. Shortly before his decease, he was granted an annuity by the Pennsylvania Legislature and by Congress. Died, at Greensburg, Pa., August 31, 1818.

ST. CLAIR COUNTY, the first county organized within the territory comprised in the present State of Illinois—the whole region west of the Ohio River having been first placed under civil jurisdiction, under the name of "Illinois County," by an act of the Virginia House of Delegates, passed in October, 1778, a few months after the capture of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark. (See Illinois; also Clark, George Rogers.) St. Clair County was finally set off by an order of Gov. Arthur St. Clair, on occasion of his first visit to the "Illinois Country," in April, 1790—more than two years after his assumption of the duties of Governor of the Northwest Territory, which then comprehended the "Illinois Country" as well as the whole region within the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. Governor St. Clair's order, which bears date, April 27, 1790, defines the boundaries of the new county—which took his own name—as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of the Little Michillmackanack River, running thence southerly in a direct line to the mouth of the little river above Fort Massac upon the Ohio River; thence with the said river to its junction with the Mississippi; thence up the Mississippi to the mouth of the Illinois, and so up the Illinois River to the place of beginning, with all the adjacent islands of said rivers, Illinois and Mississippi." The "Little Michillimackanack," the initial point mentioned in this description—also variously spelled "Makina" and "Mackinaw," the latter being the name by which the stream is now known—empties into the Illinois River on the south side a few miles below Pekin, in Tazewell County. The boundaries of St. Clair County, as given by Gov. St. Clair, indicate the imperfect knowledge of the topography of the "Illinois Country" existing in that day, as a line drawn south from the mouth of the Mackinaw River, instead of reaching the Ohio "above Fort Massac," would have followed the longitude of the present city of Springfield, striking the Mississippi about the northwestern corner of Jackson County, twenty-five miles west of the mouth of the Ohio. The object of Governor St. Clair's order was, of course, to include the settled portions of the Illinois Country in the new county; and, if it had had the effect intended, the eastern border of the county would have followed a line some fifty miles farther eastward, along the eastern border of Marion, Jefferson, Franklin, Williamson and Johnson Counties, reaching the Ohio River about the present site of Metropolis City in Massac County, and embracing about one-half of the area of the present State of Illinois. For all practical purposes it embraced all the Illinois Country, as it included that portion in which the white settlements were located. (See St. Clair, Arthur; also Illinois Country.) The early records of St. Clair County are in the French language; its first settlers and its early civilization were French, and the first church to inculcate the doctrine of Christianity was the Roman Catholic. The first proceedings in court under the common law were had in 1796. The first Justices of the Peace were appointed in 1807, and, as there was no penitentiary, the whipping-post and pillory played an important part in the code of penalties, these punishments being impartially meted out as late as the time of Judge (afterwards Governor) Reynolds, to "the lame, the halt and the blind," for such offenses as the larceny of a silk handkerchief. At first three places—Cahokia, Prairie du Rocher and Kaskaskia—were named as county-seats by Governor St. Clair; but Randolph County having been set off in 1895, Cahokia became the county-seat of the older county, so remaining until 1813, when Belleville was selected as the seat of justice. At that time it was a mere cornfield owned by George Blair, although settlements had previously been established in Ridge Prairie and at Badgley. Judge Jesse B. Thomas held his first court in a log-cabin, but a rude court house was erected in 1814, and, the same year, George E. Blair established a hostelry, Joseph Kerr opened a store, and, in 1817, additional improvements were inaugurated by Daniel Murray and others, from Baltimore. John H. Dennis and the Mitchells and Wests (from Virginia) settled soon afterward, becoming farmers and mechanics. Belleville was incorporated in 1819. In 1825 Governor Edwards bought the large landed interests of Etienne Personneau, a large French land-owner, ordered a new survey of the town and infused fresh life into its development. Settlers began to arrive in large numbers, mainly Virginians, who brought with them their slaves, the right to hold which was, for many years, a fruitful and perennial source of strife. Emigrants from Germany began to arrive at an early day, and now a large proportion of the population of Belleville and St. Clair County is made up of that nationality. The county, as at present organized, lies on the western border of the south half of the State, immediately opposite St. Louis, and comprises some 680 square miles. Three-fourths of it are underlaid by a vein of coal, six to eight feet thick, and about one hundred feet below the surface. Considerable wheat is raised. The principal towns are Belleville, East St. Louis, Lebanon and Mascoutah. Population of the county (1880), 61,806; (1890), 66,571; (1900), 86,685.

ST. JOHN, an incorporated village of Perry County, on the Illinois Central Railway, one mile north of Duquoin. Coal is mined and salt manufactured here. Population about 500.

ST. JOSEPH, a village of Champaign County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 10 miles east of Champaign; has inter-urban railroad connection. Pop. (1900), 637.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPITAL, (Chicago), founded in 1869, by the Sisters of Charity. Having been destroyed in the fire of 1871, it was rebuilt in the following year. In 1892 it was reconstructed, enlarged and made thoroughly modern in its appointments. It can accommodate about 250 patients. The Sisters attend to the nursing, and conduct the domestic and financial affairs. The medical staff comprises ten physicians and surgeons, among whom are some of the most eminent in Chicago.

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & CHICAGO RAILROAD.
(See Chicago & Alton Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD, a corporation formerly operating an extensive system of railroads in Illinois. The Terre Haute & Alton Railroad Company (the original corporation) was chartered in January, 1851, work begun in 1852, and the main line from Terre Haute to Alton (172.5 miles) completed, March 1, 1856. The Belleville & Illinoistown branch (from Belleville to East St. Louis) was chartered in 1852, and completed between the points named in the title, in the fall of 1854. This corporation secured authority to construct an extension from Illinoistown (now East St. Louis) to Alton, which was completed in October, 1856, giving the first railroad connection between Alton & St. Louis. Simultaneously with this, these two roads (the Terre Haute & Alton and the Belleville & Illinoistown) were consolidated under a single charter by special act of the Legislature in February, 1854, the consolidated line taking the name of the Terre Haute, Alton & St. Louis Railroad. Subsequently the road became financially embarrassed, was sold under foreclosure and reorganized, in 1862, under the name of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad. June 1, 1867, the main line (from Terre Haute to St. Louis) was leased for ninety-nine years to the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railway Company (an Indiana corporation) guaranteed by certain other lines, but the lease was subsequently broken by the insolvency of the lessee and some of the guarantors. The Indianapolis & St. Louis went into the hands of a receiver in 1882, and was sold under foreclosure, in July of the same year, its interest being absorbed by the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which the main line is now operated. The properties officially reported as remaining in the hands of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad, June 30, 1895, beside the Belleville Branch (14.40 miles), included the following leased and subsidiary lines: Belleville & Southern Illinois—"Cairo Short Line" (56.40 miles); Belleville & Eldorado, (50.20 miles); Belleville & Carondelet (17.30 miles); St. Louis Southern and branches (47.27 miles), and Chicago, St. Louis & Paducah Railway (53.50 miles). All these have been leased, since the close of the fiscal year 1895, to the Illinois Central. (For sketches of these several roads see headings of each.)

ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO & ST. PAUL RAILROAD, (Bluff Line), a line running from Springfield to Granite City, Ill., (opposite St. Louis), 102.1 miles, with a branch from Lock Haven to Grafton, Ill., 8.4 miles—total length of line in Illinois, 110.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge, laid with 56 to 70-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The road was originally incorporated under the name of the St. Louis, Jerseyville & Springfield Railroad, built from Bates to Grafton in 1882, and absorbed by the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company; was surrendered by the receivers of the latter in 1886, and passed under the control of the bond-holders, by whom it was transferred to a corporation known as the St. Louis & Central Illinois Railroad Company. In June, 1887, the St. Louis, Alton & Springfield Railroad Company was organized, with power to build extensions from Newbern to Alton, and from Bates to Springfield, which was done. In October, 1890, a receiver was appointed, followed by a reorganization under the present name (St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul). Default was made on the interest and, in June following, it was again placed in the hands of receivers, by whom it was operated until 1898. The total earnings and income for the fiscal year 1897-98 were $318,815, operating expenses, $373,270; total capitalization, $4,853,526, of which, $1,500,000 was in the form of stock and $1,235,000 in income bonds.

ST. LOUIS, INDIANAPOLIS & EASTERN RAILROAD, a railroad line 90 miles in length, extending from Switz City, Ind., to Effingham, Ill.—56 miles being within the State of Illinois. It is of standard gauge and the track laid chiefly with iron rails.—(HISTORY.) The original corporation was chartered in 1869 as the Springfield, Effingham & Quincy Railway Company. It was built as a narrow-gauge line by the Cincinnati, Effingham & Quincy Construction Company, which went into the hands of a receiver in 1878. The road was completed by the receiver in 1880, and, in 1885, restored to the Construction Company by the discharge of the receiver. For a short time it was operated in connection with the Bloomfield Railroad of Indiana, but was reorganized in 1886 as the Indiana & Illinois Southern Railroad, and the gauge changed to standard in 1887. Having made default in the payment of interest, it was sold under foreclosure in 1890 and purchased in the interest of the bond-holders, by whom it was conveyed to the St. Louis, Indianapolis & Eastern Railroad Company, in whose name the line is operated. Its business is limited, and chiefly local. The total earnings in 1898 were $65,583 and the expenditures $69,112. Its capital stock was $740,900; bonded debt, $978,000, other indebtedness increasing the total capital investment to $1,816,736.

ST. LOUIS, PEORIA & NORTHERN RAILWAY, known as "Peoria Short Line," a corporation organized, Feb. 29, 1896, to take over and unite the properties of the St. Louis & Eastern, the St. Louis & Peoria and the North and South Railways, and to extend the same due north from Springfield to Peoria (60 miles), and thence to Fulton or East Clinton, Ill., on the Upper Mississippi. The line extends from Springfield to Glen Carbon (84.46 miles), with trackage facilities over the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad and the Merchants' Terminal Bridge (18 miles) to St. Louis.—(HISTORY.) This road has been made up of three sections or divisions. (1) The initial section of the line was constructed under the name of the St. Louis & Chicago Railroad of Illinois, incorporated in 1885, and opened from Mount Olive to Alhambra in 1887. It passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1889, and reorganized, in 1890, as the St. Louis & Peoria Railroad. The St. Louis & Eastern, chartered in 1889, built the line from Glen Carbon to Marine, which was opened in 1893; the following year, bought the St. Louis & Peoria line, and, in 1895, constructed the link (8 miles) between Alhambra and Marine. (3) The North & South Railroad Company of Illinois, organized in 1890, as successor to the St. Louis & Chicago Railway Company, proceeded in the construction of the line (50.46 miles) from Mt. Olive to Springfield, which was subsequently leased to the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, then under the management of the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railway. The latter corporation having defaulted, the property passed into the hands of a receiver. By expiration of the lease in December, 1896, the property reverted to the proprietary Company, which took possession, Jan. 1, 1896. The St. Louis & Southeastern then bought the line outright, and it was incorporated as a part of the new organization under the name of the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway, the North & South Railroad going out of existence. In May, 1899, the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern was sold to the reorganized Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, to be operated as a short line between Peoria & St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, ROCK ISLAND & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS SOUTHERN RAILROAD, a line running from Pinckneyville, Ill., via Murphysboro, to Carbondale. The company is also the lessee of the Carbondale & Shawneetown Railroad, extending from Carbondale to Marion, 17.5 miles—total, 50.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid with 56 and 60-pound steel rails. The company was organized in August, 1886, to succeed to the property of the St. Louis Coal Railroad (organized in 1879) and the St. Louis Central Railway; and was leased for 980 years from Dec. 1, 1886, to the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, at an annual rental equal to thirty per cent of the gross earnings, with a minimum guarantee of $32,000, which is sufficient to pay the interest on the first mortgage bonds. During the year 1896 this line passed under lease from the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, into the hands of the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

ST. LOUIS, SPRINGFIELD & VINCENNES RAILROAD COMPANY, a corporation organized in July, 1899, to take over the property of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway in the State of Illinois, known as the Ohio & Mississippi and the Springfield & Illinois Southeastern Railways—the former extending from Vincennes, Ind., to East St. Louis, and the latter from Beardstown to Shawneetown. The property was sold under foreclosure, at Cincinnati, July 10, 1899, and transferred, for purposes of reorganization, into the hands of the new corporation, July 28, 1899. (For history of the several lines see Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway.)

ST. LOUIS, VANDALIA & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD. This line extends from East St. Louis eastward across the State, to the Indiana State line, a distance of 158.3 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company is the lessee. The track is single, of standard gauge, and laid with steel rails. The outstanding capital stock, in 1898, was $3,924,058, the bonded debt, $4,496,000, and the floating debt, $218,480.—(HISTORY.) The St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute Railroad was chartered in 1865, opened in 1870 and leased to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, for itself and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad.

ST. LOUIS & CAIRO RAILROAD, extends from East St. Louis to Cairo, Ill., 151.6 miles, with a branch from Millstadt Junction to High Prairie, 9 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid mainly with steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The original charter was granted to the Cairo & St. Louis Railroad Company, Feb. 16, 1865, and the road opened, March 1, 1875. Subsequently it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, July 14, 1881, and was taken charge of by a new company under its present name, Feb. 1, 1882. On Feb. 1, 1886, it was leased to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company for forty-five years, and now constitutes the Illinois Division of that line, giving it a connection with St. Louis. ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, located in Chicago. It was chartered in 1865, its incorporators, in their initial statement, substantially declaring their object to be the establishment of a free hospital under the control of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which should be open to the afflicted poor, without distinction of race or creed. The hospital was opened on a small scale, but steadily increased until 1879, when re-incorporation was effected under the general law. In 1885 a new building was erected on land donated for that purpose, at a cost exceeding $150,000, exclusive of $20,000 for furnishing. While its primary object has been to afford accommodation, with medical and surgical care, gratuitously, to the needy poor, the institution also provides a considerable number of comfortable, well-furnished private rooms for patients who are able and willing to pay for the same. It contains an amphitheater for surgical operations and clinics, and has a free dispensary for out-patients. During the past few years important additions have been made, the number of beds increased, and provision made for a training school for nurses. The medical staff (1896) consists of thirteen physicians and surgeons and two pathologists.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL, a young ladies' seminary, under the patronage of the Episcopal Church, at Knoxville, Knox County, Ill.; was incorporated in 1858, in 1898 had a faculty of fourteen teachers, giving instruction to 113 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, the sciences, fine arts, music and preparatory studies. The institution has a library of 2,200 volumes, and owns property valued at $130,500, of which $100,000 is real estate.

STAGER, Anson, soldier and Telegraph Superintendent, was born in Ontario County, N. Y., April 20, 1825; at 16 years of age entered the service of Henry O'Reilly, a printer who afterwards became a pioneer in building telegraph lines, and with whom he became associated in various enterprises of this character. Having introduced several improvements in the construction of batteries and the arrangement of wires, he was, in 1852, made General Superintendent of the principal lines in the West, and, on the organization of the Western Union Company, was retained in this position. Early in the Civil War he was entrusted with the management of telegraph lines in Southern Ohio and along the Virginia border, and, in October following, was appointed General Superintendent of Government telegraphs, remaining in this position until September, 1868, his services being recognized in his promotion to a brevet Brigadier-Generalship of Volunteers. In 1869 General Stager returned to Chicago and, in addition to his duties as General Superintendent, engaged in the promotion of a number of enterprises connected with the manufacture of electrical appliances and other branches of the business. One of these was the consolidation of the telephone companies, of which he became President, as also of the Western Edison Electric Light Company, besides being a Director in several other corporations. Died, in Chicago, March 26, 1885.

STANDISH, John Van Ness, a lineal descendant of Capt. Miles Standish, the Pilgrim leader, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 26, 1825. His early years were spent on a farm, but a love of knowledge and books became his ruling passion, and he devoted several years to study, in the "Liberal Institute" at Lebanon, N. H., finally graduating, with the degree of A. B., at Norwich University in the class of 1847. Later, he received the degree of A.M., in due course, from his Alma Mater in 1855; that of Ph.D. from Knox College, in 1883, of LL.D. from St. Lawrence University in 1893, and from Norwich, in 1898. Dr. Standish chose the profession of a teacher, and has spent over fifty years in its pursuit in connection with private and public schools and the College, of which more than forty years were as Professor and President of Lombard University at Galesburg. He has also lectured and conducted Teachers' Institutes all over the State, and, in 1859, was elected President of the State Teachers' Association. He made three visits to the Old World—in 1879, '82-83, and '91-92—and, during his second trip, traveled over 40,000 miles, visiting nearly every country of Europe, including the "Land of the Midnight Sun," besides Northern Africa from the Mediterranean to the Desert of Sahara, Egypt, Palestine, Syria and Asia Minor. A lover of art, he has visited nearly all the principal museums and picture galleries of the world. In politics he is a Republican, and, in opposition to many college men, a firm believer in the doctrine of protection. In religion, he is a Universalist.

STAPP, James T. B., State Auditor, was born in Woodford County, Ky., April 13, 1804; at the age of 12 accompanied his widowed mother to Kaskaskia, Ill., where she settled; before he was 20 years old, was employed as a clerk in the office of the State Auditor, and, upon the resignation of that officer, was appointed his successor, being twice thereafter elected by the Legislature, serving nearly five years. He resigned the auditorship to accept the Presidency of the State Bank at Vandalia, which post he filled for thirteen years; acted as Aid-de-camp on Governor Reynolds' staff in the Black Hawk War, and served as Adjutant of the Third Illinois Volunteers during the war with Mexico. President Taylor appointed Mr. Stapp Receiver of the United States Land Office at Vandalia, which office he held during the Fillmore administration, resigning in 1855. Two years later he removed to Decatur, where he continued to reside until his death in 1876. A handsome Methodist chapel, erected by him in that city, bears his name.

STARK COUNTY, an interior county in the northern half of the State, lying west of the Illinois River; has an area of 290 square miles. It has a rich, alluvial soil, well watered by numerous small streams. The principal industries are agriculture and stock-raising, and the chief towns are Toulon and Wyoming. The county was erected from Putnam and Knox in 1839, and named in honor of General Stark, of Revolutionary fame. The earliest settler was Isaac B. Essex, who built a cabin on Spoon River, in 1828, and gave his name to a township. Of other pioneer families, the Buswells, Smiths, Spencers and Eastmans came from New England; the Thomases, Moores, Holgates, Fullers and Whittakers from Pennsylvania; the Coxes from Ohio; the Perrys and Parkers from Virginia; the McClanahans from Kentucky; the Hendersons from Tennessee; the Lees and Hazens from New Jersey; the Halls from England, and the Turnbells and Olivers from Scotland. The pioneer church was the Congregational at Toulon. Population (1880), 11,207; (1890), 9,982; (1900), 10,186.

STARVED ROCK, a celebrated rock or cliff on the south side of Illinois River, in La Salle County, upon which the French explorer, La Salle, and his lieutenant, Tonty, erected a fort in 1682, which they named Fort St. Louis. It was one mile north of the supposed location of the Indian village of La Vantum, the metropolis, so to speak, of the Illinois Indians about the time of the arrival of the first French explorers. The population of this village, in 1680, according to Father Membre, was some seven or eight thousand. Both La Vantum and Fort St. Louis were repeatedly attacked by the Iroquois. The Illinois were temporarily driven from La Vantum, but the French, for the time being, successfully defended their fortification. In 1702 the fort was abandoned as a military post, but continued to be used as a French trading-post until 1718, when it was burned by Indians. The Illinois were not again molested until 1722, when the Foxes made an unsuccessful attack upon them. The larger portion of the tribe, however, resolved to cast in their fortunes with other tribes on the Mississippi River. Those who remained fell an easy prey to the foes by whom they were surrounded. In 1769 they were attacked from the north by tribes who desired to avenge the murder of Pontiac. Finding themselves hard pressed, they betook themselves to the bluff where Fort St. Louis had formerly stood. Here they were besieged for twelve days, when, destitute of food or water, they made a gallant but hopeless sortie. According to a tradition handed down among the Indians, all were massacred by the besiegers in an attempt to escape by night, except one half-breed, who succeeded in evading his pursuers. This sanguinary catastrophe has given the rock its popular name. Elmer Baldwin, in his History of La Salle County (1877), says: "The bones of the victims lay scattered about the cliff in profusion after the settlement by the whites, and are still found mingled plentifully with the soil." (See La Salle, Robert Cavalier; Tonty; Fort St. Louis.)

STARNE, Alexander, Secretary of State and State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 21, 1813; in the spring of 1836 removed to Illinois, settling at Griggsville, Pike County, where he opened a general store. From 1839 to '42 he served as Commissioner of Pike County, and, in the latter year, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and re-elected in 1844. Having, in the meanwhile, disposed of his store at Griggsville and removed to Pittsfield, he was appointed, by Judge Purple, Clerk of the Circuit Court, and elected to the same office for four years, when it was made elective. In 1852 he was elected Secretary of State, when he removed to Springfield, returning to Griggsville at the expiration of his term in 1857, to assume the Presidency of the old Hannibal and Naples Railroad (now a part of the Wabash system). He represented Pike and Brown Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and the same year was elected State Treasurer. He thereupon again removed to Springfield, where he resided until his death, being, with his sons, extensively engaged in coal mining. In 1870, and again in 1872, he was elected State Senator from Sangamon County. He died at Springfield, March 31, 1886.

STATE BANK OF ILLINOIS. The first legislation, having for its object the establishment of a bank within the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois, was the passage, by the Territorial Legislature of 1816, of an act incorporating the "Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, with branches at Edwardsville and Kaskaskia." In the Second General Assembly of the State (1820) an act was passed, over the Governor's veto and in defiance of the adverse judgment of the Council of Revision, establishing a State Bank at Vandalia with branches at Shawneetown, Edwardsville, and Brownsville in Jackson County. This was, in effect, a rechartering of the banks at Shawneetown and Edwardsville. So far as the former is concerned, it seems to have been well managed; but the official conduct of the officers of the latter, on the basis of charges made by Governor Edwards in 1826, was made the subject of a legislative investigation, which (although it resulted in nothing) seems to have had some basis of fact, in view of the losses finally sustained in winding up its affairs—that of the General Government amounting to $54,000. Grave charges were made in this connection against men who were then, or afterwards became, prominent in State affairs, including one Justice of the Supreme Court and one (still later) a United States Senator. The experiment was disastrous, as, ten years later (1831), it was found necessary for the State to incur a debt of $100,000 to redeem the outstanding circulation. Influenced, however, by the popular demand for an increase in the "circulating medium," the State continued its experiment of becoming a stockholder in banks managed by its citizens, and accordingly we find it, in 1835, legislating in the same direction for the establishing of a central "Bank of Illinois" at Springfield, with branches at other points as might be required, not to exceed six in number. One of these branches was established at Vandalia and another at Chicago, furnishing the first banking institution of the latter city. Two years later, when the State was entering upon its scheme of internal improvement, laws were enacted increasing the capital stock of these banks to $4,000,000 in the aggregate. Following the example of similar institutions elsewhere, they suspended specie payments a few months later, but were protected by "stay laws" and other devices until 1842, when the internal improvement scheme having been finally abandoned, they fell in general collapse. The State ceased to be a stock-holder in 1843, and the banks were put in course of liquidation, though it required several years to complete the work.

STATE CAPITALS. The first State capital of Illinois was Kaskaskia, where the first Territorial Legislature convened, Nov. 25, 1812. At that time there were but five counties in the State—St. Clair and Randolph being the most important, and Kaskaskia being the county-seat of the latter. Illinois was admitted into the Union as a State in 1818, and the first Constitution provided that the seat of government should remain at Kaskaskia until removed by legislative enactment. That instrument, however, made it obligatory upon the Legislature, at its first session, to petition Congress for a grant of not more than four sections of land, on which should be erected a town, which should remain the seat of government for twenty years. The petition was duly presented and granted; and, in accordance with the power granted by the Constitution, a Board of five Commissioners selected the site of the present city of Vandalia, then a point in the wilderness twenty miles north of any settlement. But so great was the faith of speculators in the future of the proposed city, that town lots were soon selling at $100 to $780 each. The Commissioners, in obedience to law, erected a plain two-story frame building—scarcely more than a commodious shanty—to which the State offices were removed in December, 1820. This building was burned, Dec. 9, 1823, and a brick structure erected in its place. Later, when the question of a second removal of the capital began to be agitated, the citizens of Vandalia assumed the risk of erecting a new, brick State House, costing $16,000. Of this amount $6,000 was reimbursed by the Governor from the contingent fund, and the balance ($10,000) was appropriated in 1837, when the seat of government was removed to Springfield, by vote of the Tenth General Assembly on the fourth ballot. The other places receiving the principal vote at the time of the removal to Springfield, were Jacksonville, Vandalia, Peoria, Alton and Illiopolis—Springfield receiving the largest vote at each ballot. The law removing the capital appropriated $50,000 from the State Treasury, provided that a like amount should be raised by private subscription and guaranteed by bond, and that at least two acres of land should be donated as a site. Two State Houses have been erected at Springfield, the first cost of the present one (including furnishing) having been a little in excess of $4,000,000. Abraham Lincoln, who was a member of the Legislature from Sangamon County at the time, was an influential factor in securing the removal of the capital to Springfield.

STATE DEBT. The State debt, which proved so formidable a burden upon the State of Illinois for a generation, and, for a part of that period, seriously checked its prosperity, was the direct outgrowth of the internal improvement scheme entered upon in 1837. (See Internal Improvement Policy.) At the time this enterprise was undertaken the aggregate debt of the State was less than $400,000—accumulated within the preceding six years. Two years later (1838) it had increased to over $6,500,000, while the total valuation of real and personal property, for the purposes of taxation, was less than $60,000,000, and the aggregate receipts of the State treasury, for the same year, amounted to less than $150,000. At the same time, the disbursements, for the support of the State Government alone, had grown to more than twice the receipts. This disparity continued until the declining credit of the State forced upon the managers of public affairs an involuntary economy, when the means could no longer be secured for more lavish expenditures. The first bonds issued at the inception of the internal improvement scheme sold at a premium of 5 per cent, but rapidly declined until they were hawked in the markets of New York and London at a discount, in some cases falling into the hands of brokers who failed before completing their contracts, thus causing a direct loss to the State. If the internal improvement scheme was ill-advised, the time chosen to carry it into effect was most unfortunate, as it came simultaneously with the panic of 1837, rendering the disaster all the more complete. Of the various works undertaken by the State, only the Illinois & Michigan Canal brought a return, all the others resulting in more or less complete loss. The internal improvement scheme was abandoned in 1839-40, but not until State bonds exceeding $13,000,000 had been issued. For two years longer the State struggled with its embarrassments, increased by the failure of the State Bank in February, 1842, and, by that of the Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, a few months later, with the proceeds of more than two and a half millions of the State's bonds in their possession. Thus left without credit, or means even of paying the accruing interest, there were those who regarded the State as hopelessly bankrupt, and advocated repudiation as the only means of escape. Better counsels prevailed, however; the Constitution of 1848 put the State on a basis of strict economy in the matter of salaries and general expenditures, with restrictions upon the Legislature in reference to incurring indebtedness, while the beneficent "two-mill tax" gave assurance to its creditors that its debts would be paid. While the growth of the State, in wealth and population, had previously been checked by the fear of excessive taxation, it now entered upon a new career of prosperity, in spite of its burdens—its increase in population, between 1850 and 1860, amounting to over 100 per cent. The movement of the State debt after 1840—when the internal improvement scheme was abandoned—chiefly by accretions of unpaid interest, has been estimated as follows: 1842, $15,637,950; 1844, $14,633,969; 1846, $16,389,817; 1848, $16,661,795. It reached its maximum in 1853—the first year of Governor Matteson's administration—when it was officially reported at $16,724,177. At this time the work of extinguishment began, and was prosecuted under successive administrations, except during the war, when the vast expense incurred in sending troops to the field caused an increase. During Governor Bissell's administration, the reduction amounted to over $3,000,000; during Oglesby's, to over five and a quarter million, besides two and a quarter million paid on interest. In 1880 the debt had been reduced to $281,059.11, and, before the close of 1882, it had been entirely extinguished, except a balance of $18,500 in bonds, which, having been called in years previously and never presented for payment, are supposed to have been lost. (See Macalister and Stebbins Bonds.)

STATE GUARDIANS FOR GIRLS, a bureau organized for the care of female juvenile delinquents, by act of June 2, 1893. The Board consists of seven members, nominated by the Executive and confirmed by the Senate, and who constitute a body politic and corporate. Not more than two of the members may reside in the same Congressional District and, of the seven members, four must be women. (See also Home for Female Juvenile Offenders.) The term of office is six years.

STATE HOUSE, located at Springfield. Its construction was begun under an act passed by the Legislature in February, 1867, and completed in 1887. It stands in a park of about eight acres, donated to the State by the citizens of Springfield. A provision of the State Constitution of 1870 prohibited the expenditure of any sum in excess of $3,500,000 in the erection and furnishing of the building, without previous approval of such additional expenditure by the people. This amount proving insufficient, the Legislature, at its session of 1885, passed an act making an additional appropriation of $531,712, which having been approved by popular vote at the general election of 1886, the expenditure was made and the capitol completed during the following year, thus raising the total cost of construction and furnishing to a little in excess of $4,000,000. The building is cruciform as to its ground plan, and classic in its style of architecture; its extreme dimensions (including porticoes), from north to south, being 379 feet, and, from east to west, 286 feet. The walls are of dressed Joliet limestone, while the porticoes, which are spacious and lofty, are of sandstone, supported by polished columns of gray granite. The three stories of the building are surmounted by a Mansard roof, with two turrets and a central dome of stately dimensions. Its extreme height, to the top of the iron flag-staff, which rises from a lantern springing from the dome, is 364 feet.

STATE NORMAL UNIVERSITY, an institution for the education of teachers, organized under an act of the General Assembly, passed Feb. 18, 1857. This act placed the work of organization in the hands of a board of fifteen persons, which was styled "The Board of Education of the State of Illinois," and was constituted as follows: C. B. Denio of Jo Daviess County; Simeon Wright of Lee; Daniel Wilkins of McLean; Charles E. Hovey of Peoria; George P. Rex of Pike; Samuel W. Moulton of Shelby; John Gillespie of Jasper; George Bunsen of St. Clair; Wesley Sloan of Pope; Ninian W. Edwards of Sangamon; John R. Eden of Moultrie; Flavel Moseley and William Wells of Cook; Albert R. Shannon of White; and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, ex-officio. The object of the University, as defined in the organizing law, is to qualify teachers for the public schools of the State, and the course of instruction to be given embraces "the art of teaching, and all branches which pertain to a common-school education; in the elements of the natural sciences, including agricultural chemistry, animal and vegetable physiology; in the fundamental laws of the United States and of the State of Illinois in regard to the rights and duties of citizens, and such other studies as the Board of Education may, from time to time, prescribe." Various cities competed for the location of the institution, Bloomington being finally selected, its bid, including 160 acres of land, being estimated as equivalent to $141,725. The corner-stone was laid on September 29, 1857, and the first building was ready for permanent occupancy in September, 1860. Previously, however, it had been sufficiently advanced to permit of its being used, and the first commencement exercises were held on June 29 of the latter year. Three years earlier, the academic department had been organized under the charge of Charles E. Hovey. The first cost, including furniture, etc., was not far from $200,000. Gratuitous instruction is given to two pupils from each county, and to three from each Senatorial District. The departments are: Grammar school, high school, normal department and model school, all of which are overcrowded. The whole number of students in attendance on the institution during the school year, 1897-98, was 1,197, of whom 891 were in the normal department and 306 in the practice school department, including representatives from 86 counties of the State, with a few pupils from other States on the payment of tuition. The teaching faculty (including the President and Librarian) for the same year, was made up of twenty-six members—twelve ladies and fourteen gentlemen. The expenditures for the year 1897-98 aggregated $47,626.92, against $66,528.69 for 1896-97. Nearly $22,000 of the amount expended during the latter year was on account of the construction of a gymnasium building.

STATE PROPERTY. The United States Census of 1890 gave the value of real and personal property belonging to the State as follows: Public lands, $328,000; buildings, $22,164,000; miscellaneous property, $2,650,000—total, $25,142,000. The land may be subdivided thus: Camp-grounds of the Illinois National Guard near Springfield (donated), $40,000; Illinois and Michigan Canal, $168,000; Illinois University lands, in Illinois (donated by the General Government), $41,000, in Minnesota (similarly donated), $79,000. The buildings comprise those connected with the charitable, penal and educational institutions of the State, besides the State Arsenal, two buildings for the use of the Appellate Courts (at Ottawa and Mount Vernon), the State House, the Executive Mansion, and locks and dams erected at Henry and Copperas Creek. Of the miscellaneous property, $120,000 represents the equipment of the Illinois National Guard; $1,959,000 the value of the movable property of public buildings; $550,000 the endowment fund of the University of Illinois; and $21,000 the movable property of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The figures given relative to the value of the public buildings include only the first appropriations for their erection. Considerable sums have since been expended upon some of them in repairs, enlargements and improvements.

STATE TREASURERS. The only Treasurer of Illinois during the Territorial period was John Thomas, who served from 1812 to 1818, and became the first incumbent under the State Government. Under the Constitution of 1818 the Treasurer was elected, biennially, by joint vote of the two Houses of the General Assembly; by the Constitution of 1848, this officer was made elective by the people for the same period, without limitations as to number of terms; under the Constitution of 1870, the manner of election and duration of term are unchanged, but the incumbent is ineligible to re-election, for two years from expiration of the term for which he may have been chosen. The following is a list of the State Treasurers, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each: John Thomas, 1818-19; Robert K. McLaughlin, 1819-23; Abner Field, 1823-27; James Hall, 1827-31; John Dement, 1831-36; Charles Gregory, 1836-37; John D. Whiteside, 1837-41; Milton Carpenter, 1841-48; John Moore, 1848-57; James Miller, 1857-59; William Butler, 1859-63; Alexander Starne, 1863-65; James H. Beveridge, 1865-67; George W. Smith, 1867-69; Erastus N. Bates, 1869-73; Edward Rutz, 1873-75; Thomas S. Ridgway, 1875-77; Edward Rutz, 1877-79; John C. Smith, 1879-81; Edward Rutz, 1881-83; John C. Smith, 1883-85; Jacob Gross, 1885-87; John R. Tanner, 1887-89; Charles Becker, 1889-91; Edward S. Wilson, 1891-93; Rufus N. Ramsay, 1893-95; Henry Wulff, 1895-97; Henry L. Hertz, 1897-99; Floyd K. Whittemore, 1899—.

STAUNTON, a village in the southeast corner of Macoupin County, on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways; is 36 miles northeast of St. Louis, and 14 miles southwest of Litchfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the industries of the surrounding region. Staunton has two banks, eight churches and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 1,358; (1890), 2,209; (1900), 2,786.

STEEL PRODUCTION. In the manufacture of steel, Illinois has long ranked as the second State in the Union in the amount of its output, and, during the period between 1880 and 1890, the increase in production was 241 per cent. In 1880 there were but six steel works in the State; in 1890 these had increased to fourteen; and the production of steel of all kinds (in tons of 2,000 pounds) had risen from 254,569 tons to 868,250. Of the 3,837,039 tons of Bessemer steel ingots, or direct castings, produced in the United States in 1890, 22 per cent were turned out in Illinois, nearly all the steel produced in the State being made by that process. From the tonnage of ingots, as given above, Illinois produced 622,260 pounds of steel rails,—more than 30 per cent of the aggregate for the entire country. This fact is noteworthy, inasmuch as the competition in the manufacture of Bessemer steel rails, since 1880, has been so great that many rail mills have converted their steel into forms other than rails, experience having proved their production to any considerable extent, during the past few years, unprofitable except in works favorably located for obtaining cheap raw material, or operated under the latest and most approved methods of manufacture. Open-hearth steel is no longer made in Illinois, but the manufacture of crucible steel is slightly increasing, the output in 1890 being 445 tons, as against 130 in 1880. For purposes requiring special grades of steel the product of the crucible process will be always in demand, but the high cost of manufacture prevents it, in a majority of instances, from successfully competing in price with the other processes mentioned.

STEPHENSON, Benjamin, pioneer and early politician, came to Illinois from Kentucky in 1809, and was appointed the first Sheriff of Randolph County by Governor Edwards under the Territorial Government; afterwards served as a Colonel of Illinois militia during the War of 1812; represented Illinois Territory as Delegate in Congress, 1814-16, and, on his retirement from Congress, became Register of the Land Office at Edwardsville, finally dying at Edwardsville—Col. James W. (Stephenson), a son of the preceding, was a soldier during the Black Hawk War, afterwards became a prominent politician in the northwestern part of the State, served as Register of the Land Office at Galena and, in 1838, received the Democratic nomination for Governor, but withdrew before the election.

STEPHENSON, (Dr.) Benjamin Franklin, physician and soldier, was born in Wayne County, Ill., Oct. 30, 1822, and accompanied his parents, in 1825, to Sangamon County, where the family settled. His early educational advantages were meager, and he did not study his profession (medicine) until after reaching his majority, graduating from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1850. He began practice at Petersburg, but, in April, 1862, was mustered into the volunteer army as Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry. After a little over two years service he was mustered out in June, 1864, when he took up his residence in Springfield, and, for a year, was engaged in the drug business there. In 1865 he resumed professional practice. He lacked tenacity of purpose, however, was indifferent to money, and always willing to give his own services and orders for medicine to the poor. Hence, his practice was not lucrative. He was one of the leaders in the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic (which see), in connection with which he is most widely known; but his services in its cause failed to receive, during his lifetime, the recognition which they deserved, nor did the organization promptly flourish, as he had hoped. He finally returned with his family to Petersburg. Died, at Rock Creek, Menard, County, Ill., August 30, 1871.

STEPHENSON COUNTY, a northwestern county, with an area of 560 square miles. The soil is rich, productive and well timbered. Fruit-culture and stock-raising are among the chief industries. Not until 1827 did the aborigines quit the locality, and the county was organized, ten years later, and named for Gen. Benjamin Stephenson. A man named Kirker, who had been in the employment of Colonel Gratiot as a lead-miner, near Galena, is said to have built the first cabin within the present limits of what was called Burr Oak Grove, and set himself up as an Indian-trader in 1826, but only remained a short time. He was followed, the next year, by Oliver

W. Kellogg, who took Kirker's place, built a more pretentious dwelling and became the first permanent settler. Later came William Wadams, the Montagues, Baker, Kilpatrick, Preston, the Goddards, and others whose names are linked with the county's early history. The first house in Freeport was built by William Baker. Organization was effected in 1837, the total poll being eighty-four votes. The earliest teacher was Nelson Martin, who is said to have taught a school of some twelve pupils, in a house which stood on the site of the present city of Freeport. Population (1880), 31,963; (1890), 31,338; (1900), 34,933.

STERLING, a flourishing city on the north bank of Rock River, in Whiteside County, 109 miles west of Chicago, 29 miles east of Clinton, Iowa, and 52 miles east-northeast of Rock Island. It has ample railway facilities, furnished by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Sterling & Peoria, and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. It contains fourteen churches, an opera house, high and grade schools, Carnegie library, Government postoffice building, three banks, electric street and interurban car lines, electric and gas lighting, water-works, paved streets and sidewalks, fire department and four newspaper offices, two issuing daily editions. It has fine water-power, and is an important manufacturing center, its works turning out agricultural implements, carriages, paper, barbed-wire, school furniture, burial caskets, pumps, sash, doors, etc. It also has the Sterling Iron Works, besides foundries and machine shops. The river here flows through charming scenery. Pop. (1890), 5,824; (1900), 6,309.

STEVENS, Bradford K., ex-Congressman, was born at Boscawen (afterwards Webster), N. H., Jan. 3, 1813. After attending schools in New Hampshire and at Montreal, he entered Dartmouth College, graduating therefrom in 1835. During the six years following, he devoted himself to teaching, at Hopkinsville, Ky., and New York City. In 1843 he removed to Bureau County, Ill., where he became a merchant and farmer. In 1868 he was chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and, in 1870, was elected to Congress, as an Independent Democrat, for the Fifth District.

STEVENSON, Adlai E., ex-Vice-President of the United States, was born in Christian County, Ky., Oct. 23, 1835. In 1852 he removed with his parents to Bloomington, McLean County, Ill., where the family settled; was educated at the Illinois Wesleyan University and at Centre College, Ky., was admitted to the bar in 1858 and began practice at Metamora, Woodford County, where he was Master in Chancery, 1861-65, and State's Attorney, 1865-69. In 1864 he was candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. In 1869 he returned to Bloomington, where he has since resided. In 1874, and again in 1876, he was an unsuccessful candidate of his party for Congress, but was elected as a Greenback Democrat in 1878, though defeated in 1880 and 1882. In 1877 he was appointed by President Hayes a member of the Board of Visitors to West Point. During the first administration of President Cleveland (1885-89) he was First Assistant Postmaster General; was a member of the National Democratic Conventions of 1884 and 1892, being Chairman of the Illinois delegation the latter year. In 1892 he received his party's nomination for the Vice-Presidency, and was elected to that office, serving until 1897. Since retiring from office he has resumed his residence at Bloomington.

STEWART, Lewis, manufacturer and former Congressman, was born in Wayne County, Pa., Nov. 20, 1824, and received a common school education. At the age of 14 he accompanied his parents to Kendall County, Ill., where he afterwards resided, being engaged in farming and the manufacture of agricultural implements at Plano. He studied law but never practiced. In 1876 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket, being defeated by Shelby M. Cullom. In 1890 the Democrats of the Eighth Illinois District elected him to Congress. In 1892 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Robert A. Childs, by the narrow margin of 27 votes, and, in 1894, was again defeated, this time being pitted against Albert J. Hopkins. Mr. Stewart died at his home at Plano, August 26, 1896.

STEWARTSON, a town of Shelby County, at the intersection of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railway with the Altamont branch of the Wabash, 12 miles southeast of Shelbyville; is in a grain and lumber region; has a bank and a weekly paper. Population, (1900), 677.

STICKNEY, William H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1809, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Cincinnati in 1831, and, in Illinois in 1834, being at that time a resident of Shawneetown; was elected State's Attorney by the Legislature, in 1839, for the circuit embracing some fourteen counties in the southern and southeastern part of the State; for a time also, about 1835-36, officiated as editor of "The Gallatin Democrat," and "The Illinois Advertiser," published at Shawneetown. In 1846

Mr. Stickney was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly from Gallatin County, and, twenty-eight years later—having come to Chicago in 1848—to the same body from Cook County, serving in the somewhat famous Twenty-ninth Assembly. He also held the office of Police Justice for some thirteen years, from 1860 onward. He lived to an advanced age, dying in Chicago, Feb. 14, 1898, being at the time the oldest surviving member of the Chicago bar.

STILES, Isaac Newton, lawyer and soldier, born at Suffield, Conn., July 16, 1833; was admitted to the bar at Lafayette, Ind., in 1855, became Prosecuting Attorney, a member of the Legislature and an effective speaker in the Fremont campaign of 1856; enlisted as a private soldier at the beginning of the war, went to the field as Adjutant, was captured at Malvern Hill, and, after six weeks' confinement in Libby prison, exchanged and returned to duty; was promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel, and brevetted Brigadier-General for meritorious service. After the war he practiced his profession in Chicago, though almost totally blind. Died, Jan. 18, 1895.

STILLMAN, Stephen, first State Senator from Sangamon County, Ill., was a native of Massachusetts who came, with his widowed mother, to Sangamon County in 1820, and settled near Williamsville, where he became the first Postmaster in the first postoffice in the State north of the Sangamon River. In 1822, Mr. Stillman was elected as the first State Senator from Sangamon County, serving four years, and, at his first session, being one of the opponents of the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died, in Peoria, somewhere between 1835 and 1840.

STILLMAN VALLEY, village in Ogle County, on Chicago Great Western and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; site of first battle Black Hawk War; has graded schools, four churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop., 475.

STITES, Samuel, pioneer, was born near Mount Bethel, Somerset County, N. J., Oct. 31, 1776; died, August 16, 1839, on his farm, which subsequently became the site of the city of Trenton, in Clinton County, Ill. He was descended from John Stites, M.D., who was born in England in 1595, emigrated to America, and died at Hempstead, L. I., in 1717, at the age of 122 years. The family removed to New Jersey in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Samuel was a cousin of Benjamin Stites, the first white man to settle within the present limits of Cincinnati, and various members of the family were prominent in the settlement of the upper Ohio Valley as early as 1788. Samuel Stites married, Sept. 14, 1794, Martha Martin, daughter of Ephraim Martin, and grand-daughter of Col. Ephraim Martin, both soldiers of the New Jersey line during the Revolutionary War—with the last named of whom he had (in connection with John Cleves Symmes) been intimately associated in the purchase and settlement of the Miami Valley. In 1800 he removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, in 1803 to Greene County, and, in 1818, in company with his son-in-law, Anthony Wayne Casad, to St. Clair County, Ill., settling near Union Grove. Later, he removed to O'Fallon, and, still later, to Clinton County. He left a large family, several members of which became prominent pioneers in the movements toward Minnesota and Kansas.

STOLBRAND, Carlos John Mueller, soldier, was born in Sweden, May 11, 1821; at the age of 18, enlisted in the Royal Artillery of his native land, serving through the campaign of Schleswig-Holstein (1848); came to the United States soon after, and, in 1861, enlisted in the first battalion of Illinois Light Artillery, finally becoming Chief of Artillery under Gen. John A. Logan. When the latter became commander of the Fifteenth Army Corps, Col. Stolbrand was placed at the head of the artillery brigade; in February, 1865, was made Brigadier-General, and mustered out in January, 1866. After the war he went South, and was Secretary of the South Carolina Constitutional Convention of 1868. The same year he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and a Presidential Elector. He was an inventor and patented various improvements in steam engines and boilers; was also Superintendent of Public Buildings at Charleston, S. C., under President Harrison. Died, at Charleston, Feb. 3, 1894.

STONE, Daniel, early lawyer and legislator, was a native of Vermont and graduate of Middlebury College; became a member of the Springfield (Ill.) bar in 1833, and, in 1836, was elected to the General Assembly—being one of the celebrated "Long Nine" from Sangamon County, and joining Abraham Lincoln in his protest against a series of pro-slavery resolutions which had been adopted by the House. In 1837 he was a Circuit Court Judge and, being assigned to the north-western part of the State, removed to Galena, but was legislated out of office, when he left the State, dying a few years later, in Essex County, N. J.

STONE, Horatio O., pioneer, was born in Ontario (now Monroe) County, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1811; in boyhood learned the trade of shoemaker, and later acted as overseer of laborers on the Lackawanna Canal. In 1831, having located in Wayne County, Mich., he was drafted for the Black Hawk War, serving twenty-two days under Gen. Jacob Brown. In January, 1835, he came to Chicago and, having made a fortunate speculation in real estate in that early day, a few months later entered upon the grocery and provision trade, which he afterwards extended to grain; finally giving his chief attention to real estate, in which he was remarkably successful, leaving a large fortune at his death, which occurred in Chicago, June 20, 1877.

STONE, (Rev.) Luther, Baptist clergyman, was born in the town of Oxford, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 26, 1815, and spent his boyhood on a farm. After acquiring a common school education, he prepared for college at Leicester Academy, and, in 1835, entered Brown University, graduating in the class of 1839. He then spent three years at the Theological Institute at Newton, Mass.; was ordained to the ministry at Oxford, in 1843, but, coming west the next year, entered upon evangelical work in Rock Island, Davenport, Burlington and neighboring towns. Later, he was pastor of the First Baptist Church at Rockford, Ill. In 1847 Mr. Stone came to Chicago and established "The Watchman of the Prairies," which survives to-day under the name of "The Standard," and has become the leading Baptist organ in the West. After six years of editorial work, he took up evangelistic work in Chicago, among the poor and criminal classes. During the Civil War he conducted religious services at Camp Douglas, Soldiers' Rest and the Marine Hospital. He was associated in the conduct and promotion of many educational and charitable institutions. He did much for the First Baptist Church of Chicago, and, during the latter years of his life, was attached to the Immanuel Baptist Church, which he labored to establish. Died, in July, 1890.

STONE, Melville E., journalist, banker, Manager of Associated Press, born at Hudson, Ill., August 18, 1848. Coming to Chicago in 1860, he graduated from the local high school in 1867, and, in 1870, acquired the sole proprietorship of a foundry and machine shop. Finding himself without resources after the great fire of 1871, he embarked in journalism, rising, through the successive grades of reporter, city editor, assistant editor and Washington correspondent, to the position of editor-in-chief of his own journal.

He was connected with various Chicago dailies between 1871 and 1875, and, on Christmas Day of the latter year, issued the first number of "The Chicago Daily News." He gradually disposed of his interest in this journal, entirely severing his connection therewith in 1888. Since that date he has been engaged in banking in the city of Chicago, and is also General Manager of the Associated Press.

STONE, Samuel, philanthropist, was born at Chesterfield, Mass., Dec. 6, 1798; left an orphan at seven years of age, after a short term in Leicester Academy, and several years in a wholesale store in Boston, at the age of 19 removed to Rochester, N. Y., to take charge of interests in the "Holland Purchase," belonging to his father's estate; in 1843-49, was a resident of Detroit and interested in some of the early railroad enterprises centering there, but the latter year removed to Milwaukee, being there associated with Ezra Cornell in telegraph construction. In 1859 he became a citizen of Chicago, where he was one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, and a liberal patron of many enterprises of a public and benevolent character. Died, May 4, 1876.

STONE FORT, a village in the counties of Saline and Williamson. It is situated on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 57 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1900), 479.

STOREY, Wilbur F., journalist and newspaper publisher, was born at Salisbury, Vt., Dec. 19, 1819. He began to learn the printer's trade at 12, and, before he was 19, was part owner of a Democratic paper called "The Herald," published at La Porte, Ind. Later, he either edited or controlled journals published at Mishawaka, Ind., and Jackson and Detroit, Mich. In January, 1861, he became the principal owner of "The Chicago Times," then the leading Democratic organ of Chicago. His paper soon came to be regarded as the organ of the anti-war party throughout the Northwest, and, in June, 1863, was suppressed by a military order issued by General Burnside, which was subsequently revoked by President Lincoln. The net result was an increase in "The Times'" notoriety and circulation. Other charges, of an equally grave nature, relating to its sources of income, its character as a family newspaper, etc., were repeatedly made, but to all these Mr. Storey turned a deaf ear. He lost heavily in the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, appeared as the editor of "The Times," then destitute of political ties. About 1876 his health began to decline. Medical aid failed to afford relief, and, in August, 1884, he was adjudged to be of unsound mind, and his estate was placed in the hands of a conservator. On the 27th of the following October (1884), he died at his home in Chicago.

STORRS, Emery Alexander, lawyer, was born at Hinsdale, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., August 12, 1835; began the study of law with his father, later pursued a legal course at Buffalo, and, in 1853, was admitted to the bar; spent two years (1857-59) in New York City, the latter year removing to Chicago, where he attained great prominence as an advocate at the bar, as well as an orator on other occasions. Politically a Republican, he took an active part in Presidential campaigns, being a delegate-at-large from Illinois to the National Republican Conventions of 1868, '72, and '80, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents in 1872. Erratic in habits and a master of epigram and repartee, many of his speeches are quoted with relish and appreciation by those who were his contemporaries at the Chicago bar. Died suddenly, while in attendance on the Supreme Court at Ottawa, Sept. 12, 1885.

STRAWN, Jacob, agriculturist and stock-dealer, born in Somerset County, Pa., May 30, 1800; removed to Licking County, Ohio, in 1817, and to Illinois, in 1831, settling four miles southwest of Jacksonville. He was one of the first to demonstrate the possibilities of Illinois as a live-stock state. Unpretentious and despising mere show, he illustrated the virtues of industry, frugality and honesty. At his death—which occurred August 23, 1865—he left an estate estimated in value at about $1,000,000, acquired by industry and business enterprise. He was a zealous Unionist during the war, at one time contributing $10,000 to the Christian Commission.

STREATOR, a city (laid out in 1868 and incorporated in 1882) in the southern part of La Salle County, 93 miles southwest of Chicago; situated on the Vermilion River and a central point for five railroads. It is surrounded by a rich agricultural country, and is underlaid by coal seams (two of which are worked) and by shale and various clay products of value, adapted to the manufacture of fire and building-brick, drain-pipe, etc. The city is thoroughly modern, having gas, electric lighting, street railways, water-works, a good fire-department, and a large, improved public park. Churches and schools are numerous, as are also fine public and private buildings. One of the chief industries is the manufacture of glass, including rolled-plate, window-glass, flint and Bohemian ware and glass bottles. Other successful industries are foundries and machine shops, flour mills, and clay working establishments. There are several banks, and three daily and weekly papers are published here. The estimated property valuation, in 1884, was $12,000,000. Streator boasts some handsome public buildings, especially the Government post-office and the Carnegie public library building, both of which have been erected within the past few years. Pop. (1890), 11,414; (1900), 14,079.

STREET, Joseph M., pioneer and early politician, settled at Shawneetown about 1812, coming from Kentucky, though believed to have been a native of Eastern Virginia. In 1827 he was a Brigadier-General of militia, and appears to have been prominent in the affairs of that section of the State. His correspondence with Governor Edwards, about this time, shows him to have been a man of far more than ordinary education, with a good opinion of his merits and capabilities. He was a most persistent applicant for office, making urgent appeals to Governor Edwards, Henry Clay and other politicians in Kentucky, Virginia and Washington, on the ground of his poverty and large family. In 1827 he received the offer of the clerkship of the new county of Peoria, but, on visiting that region, was disgusted with the prospect; returning to Shawneetown, bought a farm in Sangamon County, but, before the close of the year, was appointed Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. •This was during the difficulties with the Winnebago Indians, upon which he made voluminous reports to the Secretary of War. Mr. Street was a son-in-law of Gen. Thomas Posey, a Revolutionary soldier, who was prominent in the early history of Indiana and its last Territorial Governor. (See Posey, (Gen.) Thomas.)

STREETER, Alson J., farmer and politician, was born in Rensselaer County, N. Y., in 1823; at the age of two years accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling at Dixon, Lee County. He attended Knox College for three years, and, in 1849, went to California, where he spent two years in gold mining. Returning to Illinois, he purchased a farm of 240 acres near New Windsor, Mercer County, to which he has since added several thousand acres. In 1872 he was elected to the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly as a Democrat, but, in 1873, allied himself with the Greenback party, whose candidate for Congress he was in 1878, and for Governor in 1880, when he received nearly 3,000 votes more than his party's Presidential nominee, in Illinois.

In 1884 he was elected State Senator by a coalition of Greenbackers and Democrats in the Twenty-fourth Senatorial District, but acted as an independent throughout his entire term.

STRONG, William Emerson, soldier, was born at Granville, N. Y., in 1840; from 13 years of age, spent his early life in Wisconsin, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Racine in 1861. The same year he enlisted under the first call for troops, took part, as Captain of a Wisconsin Company, in the first battle of Bull Run; was afterwards promoted and assigned to duty as Inspector-General in the West, participated in the Vicksburg and Atlanta campaigns, being finally advanced to the rank of Brigadier-General. After some fifteen months spent in the position of Inspector-General of the Freedmen's Bureau (1865-66), he located in Chicago, and became connected with several important business enterprises, besides assisting, as an officer on the staff of Governor Cullom, in the organization of the Illinois National Guard. He was elected on the first Board of Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition, and, while making a tour of Europe in the interest of that enterprise, died, at Florence, Italy, April 10, 1891.

STUART, John Todd, lawyer and Congressman, born near Lexington, Ky., Nov. 10, 1807—the son of Robert Stuart, a Presbyterian minister and Professor of Languages in Transylvania University, and related, on the maternal side, to the Todd family, of whom Mrs. Abraham Lincoln was a member. He graduated at Centre College, Danville, in 1826, and, after studying law, removed to Springfield, Ill., in 1828, and began practice. In 1832 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly, re-elected in 1834, and, in 1836, defeated, as the Whig candidate for Congress, by Wm. L. May, though elected, two years later, over Stephen A. Douglas, and again in 1840. In 1837, Abraham Lincoln, who had been studying law under Mr. Stuart's advice and instruction, became his partner, the relationship continuing until 1841. He served in the State Senate, 1849-53, was the Bell-Everett candidate for Governor in 1860, and was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, for a third time, in 1862, but, in 1864, was defeated by Shelby M. Cullom, his former pupil. During the latter years of his life, Mr. Stuart was head of the law firm of Stuart, Edwards & Brown. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 28, 1885.

STURGES, Solomon, merchant and banker, was born at Fairfield, Conn., April 21, 1796, early manifested a passion for the sea and, in 1810, made a voyage, on a vessel of which his brother was captain, from New York to Georgetown, D. C., intending to continue it to Lisbon. At Georgetown he was induced to accept a position as clerk with a Mr. Williams, where he was associated with two other youths, as fellow-employees, who became eminent bankers and capitalists—W. W. Corcoran, afterwards the well-known banker of Washington, and George W. Peabody, who had a successful banking career in England, and won a name as one of the most liberal and public-spirited of philanthropists. During the War of 1812 young Sturges joined a volunteer infantry company, where he had, for comrades, George W. Peabody and Francis S. Key, the latter author of the popular national song, "The Star Spangled Banner." In 1814 Mr. Sturges accepted a clerkship in the store of his brother-in-law, Ebenezer Buckingham, at Putnam, Muskingum County, Ohio, two years later becoming a partner in the concern, where he developed that business capacity which laid the foundation for his future wealth. Before steamers navigated the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, he piloted flat-boats, loaded with produce and merchandise, to New Orleans, returning overland. During one of his visits to that city, he witnessed the arrival of the "Washington," the first steamer to descend the Mississippi, as, in 1817, he saw the arrival of the "Walk-in-the-Water" at Detroit, the first steamer to arrive from Buffalo—the occasion of his visit to Detroit being to carry funds to General Cass to pay off the United States troops. About 1849 he was associated with the construction of the Wabash & Erie Canal, from the Ohio River to Terre Haute, Ind., advancing money for the prosecution of the work, for which was reimbursed by the State. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and, in partnership with his brothers-in-law, C. P. and Alvah Buckingham, erected the first large grain-elevator in that city, on land leased from the Illinois Central Railroad Company, following it, two years later, by another of equal capacity. For a time, substantially all the grain coming into Chicago, by railroad, passed into these elevators. In 1857 he established the private banking house of Solomon Sturges & Sons, which, shortly after his death, under the management of his son, George Sturges, became the Northwestern National Bank of Chicago. He was intensely patriotic and, on the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, used of his means freely in support of the Government, equipping the Sturges Rifles, an independent company, at a cost of $20,000. He was also a subscriber to the first loan made by the Government, during this period, taking $100,000 in Government bonds. While devoted to his business, he was a hater of shams and corruption, and contributed freely to Christian and benevolent enterprises. Died, at the home of a daughter, at Zanesville, Ohio, Oct. 14, 1864, leaving a large fortune acquired by legitimate trade.

STURTEVANT, Julian Munson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman and educator, was born at Warren, Litchfield County, Conn., July 26, 1805; spent his youth in Summit County, Ohio, meanwhile preparing for college; in 1822, entered Yale College as the classmate of the celebrated Elizur Wright, graduating in 1826. After two years as Principal of an academy at Canaan, Conn., he entered Yale Divinity School, graduating there in 1829; then came west, and, after spending a year in superintending the erection of buildings, in December, 1830, as sole tutor, began instruction to a class of nine pupils in what is now Illinois College, at Jacksonville. Having been joined, the following year, by Dr. Edward Beecher as President, Mr. Sturtevant assumed the chair of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy, which he retained until 1844, when, by the retirement of Dr. Beecher, he succeeded to the offices of President and Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy. Here he labored, incessantly and unselfishly, as a teacher during term time, and, as financial agent during vacations, in the interest of the institution of which he had been one of the chief founders, serving until 1876, when he resigned the Presidency, giving his attention, for the next ten years, to the duties of Professor of Mental Science and Science of Government, which he had discharged from 1870. In 1886 he retired from the institution entirely, having given to its service fifty-six years of his life. In 1863, Dr. Sturtevant visited Europe in the interest of the Union cause, delivering effective addresses at a number of points in England. He was a frequent contributor to the weekly religious and periodical press, and was the author of "Economics, or the Science of Wealth" (1876)—a text-book on political economy, and "Keys of Sect, or the Church of the New Testament" (1879), besides frequently occupying the pulpits of local and distant churches—having been early ordained a Congregational minister. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Missouri and that of LL.D. from Iowa University. Died, in Jacksonville, Feb. 11, 1886.—Julian M. (Sturtevant), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Jacksonville, Ill., Feb. 2, 1834; fitted for college in the preparatory department of Illinois College and graduated from the college (proper) in 1854. After leaving college he served as teacher in the Jacksonville public schools one year, then spent a year as tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of theology at Andover Theological Seminary, graduating there in 1859, meanwhile having discharged the duties of Chaplain of the Connecticut State's prison in 1858. He was ordained a minister of the Congregational Church at Hannibal, Mo., in 1860, remaining as pastor in that city nine years. He has since been engaged in pastoral work in New York City (1869-70), Ottawa, Ill., (1870-73); Denver, Colo., (1873-77); Grinnell, Iowa, (1877-84); Cleveland, Ohio, (1884-90); Galesburg, Ill., (1890-93), and Aurora, (1893-97). Since leaving the Congregational church at Aurora, Dr. Sturtevant has been engaged in pastoral work in Chicago. He was also editor of "The Congregationalist" of Iowa (1881-84), and, at different periods, has served as Trustee of Colorado, Marietta and Knox Colleges; being still an honored member of the Knox College Board. He received the degree of D.D. from Illinois College, in 1879.

SUBLETTE, a station and village on the Illinois Central Railroad, in Lee County, 8 miles northwest of Mendota. Population, (1900), 306.

SUFFRAGE, in general, the right or privilege of voting. The qualifications of electors (or voters), in the choice of public officers in Illinois, are fixed by the State Constitution (Art. VII.), except as to school officers, which are prescribed by law. Under the State Constitution the exercise of the right to vote is limited to persons who were electors at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, or who are native or naturalized male citizens of the United States, of the age of 21 years or over, who have been residents of the State one year, of the county ninety days, and of the district (or precinct) in which they offer to vote, 30 days. Under an act passed in 1891, women, of 21 years of age and upwards, are entitled to vote for school officers, and are also eligible to such offices under the same conditions, as to age and residence, as male citizens. (See Elections; Australian Ballot.)

SULLIVAN, a city and county-seat of Moultrie County, 25 miles southeast of Decatur and 14 miles northwest of Mattoon; is on three lines of railway. It is in an agricultural and stock-raising region; contains two State banks and four weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,305; (1890), 1,468; (1900), 2,399; (1900, est.), 3,100.

SULLIVAN, William K., journalist, was born at Waterford, Ireland, Nov. 10, 1843; educated at the Waterford Model School and in Dublin, came to the United States in 1863, and, after teaching for a time in Kaue County, in 1864 enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Then, after a brief season spent in teaching and on a visit to his native land, he began work as a reporter on New York papers, later being employed on "The Chicago Tribune" and "The Evening Journal," on the latter, at different times, holding the position of city editor, managing editor and correspondent. He was also a Representative from Cook County in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, for three years a member of the Chicago Board of Education, and appointed United States Consul to the Bermudas by President Harrison, resigning in 1892. Died, in Chicago, January 17, 1899.

SULLIVANT, Michael Lucas, agriculturist, was born at Franklinton (a suburb of Columbus, Ohio), August 6, 1807; was educated at Ohio University and Centre College, Ky., and—after being engaged in the improvement of an immense tract of land inherited from his father near his birth-place, devoting much attention, meanwhile, to the raising of improved stock—in 1854 sold his Ohio lands and bought 80,000 acres, chiefly in Champaign and Piatt Counties, Ill., where he began farming on a larger scale than before. The enterprise proved a financial failure, and he was finally compelled to sell a considerable portion of his estate in Champaign County, known as Broad Lands, to John T. Alexander (see Alexander, John T.), retiring to a farm of 40,000 acres at Burr Oaks, Ill. He died, at Henderson, Ky., Jan. 29, 1879.

SUMMERFIELD, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 27 miles east of St. Louis; was the home of Gen. Fred. Hecker. Population (1900), 360.

SUMNER, a city of Lawrence County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 19 miles west of Vincennes, Ind.; has a fine school house, four churches, two banks, two flour mills, telephones, and one weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,037; (1900), 1,268.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION. The office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction was created by act of the Legislature, at a special session held in 1854, its duties previous to that time, from 1845, having been discharged by the Secretary of State as Superintendent, ex-officio. The following is a list of the incumbents from the date of the formal creation of the office down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each: Ninian W. Edwards (by appointment of the Governor), 1851-57; William H. Powell (by election), 1857-59; Newton Bateman, 1859-63; John P. Brooks, 1863-65; Newton Bateman, 1865-75; Samuel W. Eiter, 1875-79; James P. Slade, 1879-83; Henry Raab, 1883-87; Richard Edwards, 1887-91; Henry Raab, 1891-95; Samuel M. Inglis, 1895-98; James H. Freeman, June, 1898, to January, 1899 (by appointment of the Governor, to fill the unexpired term of Prof. Inglis, who died in office, June 1, 1898); Alfred Baylis, 1899—.

Previous to 1870 the tenure of the office was two years, but, by the Constitution adopted that year, it was extended to four years, the elections occurring on the even years between those for Governor and other State officers except State Treasurer.

SUPREME COURT, JUDGES OF THE. The following is a list of Justices of the Supreme Court of Illinois who have held office since the organization of the State Government, with the period of their respective incumbencies: Joseph Phillips, 1818-22 (resigned); Thomas C. Browne, 1818-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); William P. Foster, Oct. 9, 1818, to July 7, 1819 (resigned); John Reynolds, 1818-25; Thomas Reynolds (vice Phillips), 1822-25; William Wilson (vice Foster) 1819-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Samuel D. Lockwood, 1825-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Theophilus W. Smith, 1825-42 (resigned); Thomas Ford, Feb. 15, 1841, to August 1, 1842 (resigned); Sidney Breese, Feb. 15, 1841, to Dec. 19, 1842 (resigned)—also (by re-elections), 1857-78 (died in office); Walter B. Scates, 1841-47 (resigned)—also (vice Trumbull), 1854-57 (resigned); Samuel H. Treat, 1841-55 (resigned); Stephen A. Douglas, 1841-42 (resigned); John D. Caton (vice Ford) August, 1842, to March, 1843—also (vice Robinson and by successive re-elections), May, 1843 to January, 1864 (resigned); James Semple (vice Breese), Jan. 14, 1843, to April 16, 1843 (resigned); Richard M. Young (vice Smith), 1843-47 (resigned); John M. Robinson (vice Ford), Jan. 14, 1843, to April 27, 1843 (died in office); Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., (vice Douglas), 1843-45 (resigned)—also (vice Young), 1847-48; James Shields (vice Semple), 1843-45 (resigned); Norman H. Purple (vice Thomas), 1843-48 (retired under Constitution of 1848); Gustavus Koerner (vice Shields), 1845-48 (retired by Constitution); William A. Denning (vice Scates), 1847-48 (retired by Constitution); Lyman Trumbull, 1848-53 (resigned); Ozias C. Skinner (vice Treat), 1855-58 (resigned); Pinkney H. Walker (vice Skinner), 1858-85 (deceased); Corydon Beckwith (by appointment, vice Caton), Jan. 7, 1864, to June 6, 1864; Charles B. Lawrence (one term), 1864-73; Anthony Thornton, 1870-73 (resigned); John M. Scott (two terms), 1870-88; Benjamin R. Sheldon (two terms), 1870-88; William K. McAllister, 1870-75 (resigned); John Scholfield (vice Thornton), 1873-93 (died); T. Lyle Dickey (vice McAllister), 1875-85 (died); David J. Baker (appointed, vice Breese), July 9, 1878, to June 2, 1879—also, 1888-97; John H. Mulkey, 1879-88; Damon G. Tunnicliffe (appointed, vice Walker), Feb. 15, 1885, to June 1, 1885; Simeon P. Shope, 1885-94; Joseph M. Bailey, 1888-95 (died in office). The Supreme Court, as at present constituted (1899), is as follows: Carroll C. Boggs, elected, 1897; Jesse J. Phillips (vice Scholfield, deceased) elected, 1893, and re-elected, 1897; Jacob W. Wilkin, elected, 1888, and re-elected, 1897; Joseph N. Carter, elected, 1894; Alfred M. Craig, elected, 1873, and re-elected, 1882 and '91; James H. Cartwright (vice Bailey), elected, 1895, and re-elected, 1897; Benjamin D. Magruder (vice Dickey), elected, 1885, '88 and '97. The terms of Justices Boggs, Phillips, Wilkin, Cartwright and Magruder expire in 1906; that of Justice Carter on 1903; and Justice Craig's, in 1900. Under the Constitution of 1818, the Justices of the Supreme Court were chosen by joint ballot of the Legislature, but, under the Constitutions of 1848 and 1870, by popular vote for terms of nine years each. (See Judicial System; also sketches of individual members of the Supreme Court under their proper names.)

SURVEYS, EARLY GOVERNMENT. The first United States law passed on the subject of Government surveys was dated, May 20, 1785. After reserving certain lands to be allotted by way of pensions and to be donated for school purposes, it provided for the division of the remaining public lands among the original thirteen States. This, however, was, in effect, repealed by the Ordinance of 1788. The latter provided for a rectangular system of surveys which, with but little modification, has remained in force ever since. Briefly outlined, the system is as follows: Townships, six miles square, are laid out from principal bases, each township containing thirty-six sections of one square mile, numbered consecutively, the numeration to commence at the upper right hand corner of the township. The first principal meridian (84° 51' west of Greenwich), coincided with the line dividing Indiana and Ohio. The second (1° 37' farther west) had direct relation to surveys in Eastern Illinois. The third (89° 10' 30" west of Greenwich) and the fourth (90° 29' 56" west) governed the remainder of Illinois surveys. The first Public Surveyor was Thomas Hutchins, who was called "the geographer." (See Hutchins, Thomas.)

SWEET, (Gen.) Benjamin J., soldier, was born at Kirkland, Oneida County, N. Y., April 24, 1832; came with his father, in 1848, to Sheboygan, Wis., studied law, was elected to the State Senate in 1859, and, in 1861, enlisted in the Sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, being commissioned Major in 1862. Later, he resigned and, returning home, assisted in the organization of the Twenty-first and Twenty-second regiments, being elected Colonel of the former; and with it taking part in the campaign in Western Kentucky and Tennessee. In 1863 he was assigned to command at Camp Douglas, and was there on the exposure, in November, 1864, of the conspiracy to release the rebel prisoners. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.) The service which he rendered in the defeat of this bold and dangerous conspiracy evinced his courage and sagacity, and was of inestimable value to the country. After the war, General Sweet located at Lombard, near Chicago, was appointed Pension Agent at Chicago, afterwards served as Supervisor of Internal Revenue, and, in 1872, became Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington. Died, in Washington, Jan. 1, 1874. — Miss Ada C. (Sweet), for eight years (1874-82) the efficient Pension Agent at Chicago, is General Sweet's daughter.

SWEETSER, A. C., soldier and Department Commander G. A. R., was born in Oxford County, Maine, in 1839; came to Bloomington, Ill., in 1857; enlisted at the beginning of the Civil War in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers and, later, in the Thirty-ninth; at the battle of Wierbottom Church, Va., in June, 1864, was shot through both legs, necessitating the amputation of one of them. After the war he held several offices of trust, including those of City Collector of Bloomington and Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for the Springfield District; in 1887 was elected Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for Illinois. Died, at Bloomington, March 23, 1896.

SWETT, Leonard, lawyer, was born near Turner, Maine, August 11, 1825; was educated at Waterville College (now Colby University), but left before graduation; read law in Portland, and, while seeking a location in the West, enlisted in an Indiana regiment for the Mexican War, being attacked by climatic fever, was discharged before completing his term of enlistment. He soon after came to Bloomington, Ill., where he became the intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln and David Davis, traveling the circuit with them for a number of years. He early became active in State politics, was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1858, and, in 1860, was a zealous supporter of Mr. Lincoln as a Presidential Elector for the State-at-large. In 1862 he received the Republican nomination for Congress in his District, but was defeated. Removing to Chicago in 1865, he gained increased distinction as a lawyer, especially in the management of criminal cases. In 1872 he was a supporter of Horace Greeley for President, but later returned to the Republican party, and, in the National Republican Convention of 1888, presented the name of Judge Gresham for nomination for the Presidency. Died, June 8, 1889.

SWIGERT, Charles Philip, ex-Auditor of Public Accounts, was born in the Province of Baden, Germany, Nov. 27, 1843, brought by his parents to Chicago, Ill., in childhood, and, in his boyhood, attended the Scammon School in that city. In 1854 his family removed to a farm in Kankakee County, where, between the ages of 12 and 18, he assisted his father in "breaking" between 400 and 500 acres of prairie land. On the breaking out of the war, in 1861, although scarcely 18 years of age, he enlisted as a private in the Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, in April, 1862, was one of twenty heroic volunteers who ran the blockade, on the gunboat Carondelet, at Island No. 10, assisting materially in the reduction of that rebel stronghold, which resulted in the capture of 7,000 prisoners. At the battle of Farmington, Miss., during the siege of Corinth, in May, 1862, he had his right arm torn from its socket by a six-pound cannon-ball, compelling his retirement from the army. Returning home, after many weeks spent in hospital at Jefferson Barracks and Quincy, Ill., he received his final discharge, Dec. 21, 1862, spent a year in school, also took a course in Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College in Chicago, and having learned to write with his left hand, taught for a time in Kankakee County; served as letter-carrier in Chicago, and for a year as Deputy County Clerk of Kankakee County, followed by two terms (1867-69) as a student in the Soldiers' College at Fulton.

III. The latter year he entered upon the duties of Treasurer of Kankakee County, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1880, when he resigned to take the position of State Auditor, to which he was elected a second time in 1884. In all these positions Mr. Swigert has proved himself an upright, capable and high-minded public official. Of late years his residence has been in Chicago.

SWING, (Rev.) David, clergyman and pulpit orator, was born of German ancestry, at Cincinnati, Ohio, August 23, 1836. After 1837 (his father dying about this time), the family resided for a time at Reedsburgh, and, later, on a farm near Williamsburgh, in Clermont County, in the same State. In 1852, having graduated from the Miami (Ohio) University, he commenced the study of theology, but, in 1854, accepted the position of Professor of Languages in his Alma Mater, which he continued to fill for thirteen years. His first pastorate was in connection with the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Chicago, which he assumed in 1866. His church edifice was destroyed in the great Chicago fire, but was later rebuilt. As a preacher he was popular; but, in April, 1874, he was placed on trial, before an ecclesiastical court of his own denomination, on charges of heresy. He was acquitted by the trial court, but, before the appeal taken by the prosecution could be heard, he personally withdrew from affiliation with the denomination. Shortly afterward he became pastor of an independent religious organization known as the "Central Church," preaching, first at McVicker's Theatre and, afterward, at Central Music Hall, Chicago. He was a fluent and popular speaker on all themes, a frequent and valued contributor to numerous magazines, as well as the author of several volumes. Among his best known books are "Motives of Life," "Truths for To-day," and "Club Essays." Died, in Chicago, Oct. 3, 1894.

SYCAMORE, the county-seat of De Kalb County (founded in 1836), 56 miles west of Chicago, at the intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railroads; lies in a region devoted to agriculture, dairying and stock-raising. The city itself contains several factories, the principal products being agricultural implements, flour, insulated wire, brick, tile, varnish, furniture, soap and carriages and wagons. There are also works for canning vegetables and fruit, besides two creameries. The town is lighted by electricity, and has high-pressure water-works. There are eleven churches, three graded public schools and a young ladies' seminary. Population (1880), 3,028; (1890), 2,987; (1900), 3,653.

TAFT, Lorado, sculptor, was born at Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., April 29, 1860; at an early age evinced a predilection for sculpture and began modeling; graduated at the University of Illinois in 1880, then went to Paris and studied sculpture in the famous Ecole des Beaux Arts until 1885. The following year he settled in Chicago, finally becoming associated with the Chicago Art Institute. He has been a lecturer on art in the Chicago University. Mr. Taft furnished the decorations of the Horticultural Building on the World's Fair Grounds, in 1893.

TALCOTT, Mancel, business man, was born in Rome, N. Y., Oct. 12, 1817; attended the common schools until 17 years of age, when he set out for the West, traveling on foot from Detroit to Chicago, and thence to Park Ridge, where he worked at farming until 1850. Then, having followed the occupation of a miner for some time, in California, with some success, he united with Horace M. Singer in establishing the firm of Singer & Talcott, stone-dealers, which lasted during most of his life. He served as a member of the Chicago City Council, on the Board of County Commissioners, as a member of the Police Board, and was one of the founders of the First National Bank, and President, for several years, of the Stock Yards National Bank. Liberal and public-spirited, he contributed freely to works of charity. Died, June 5, 1878.

TALCOTT, (Capt.) William, soldier of the War of 1812 and pioneer, was born in Gilead, Conn., March 6, 1774; emigrated to Rome, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1810, and engaged in farming; served as a Lieutenant in the Oneida County militia during the War of 1812-14, being stationed at Sackett's Harbor under the command of Gen. Winfield Scott. In 1835, in company with his eldest son, Thomas B. Talcott, he made an extended tour through the West, finally selecting a location in Illinois at the junction of Rock River and the Pecatonica, where the town of Rockton now stands—there being only two white families, at that time, within the present limits of Winnebago County. Two years later (1837), he brought his family to this point, with his sons took up a considerable body of Government land and erected two mills, to which customers came from a long distance. In 1838 Captain Talcott took part in the organization of the first Congregational Church in that section of the State. A zealous anti-slavery man, he supported James G.

Birney (the Liberty candidate for President) in 1844, continuing to act with that party until the organization of the Republican party in 1856; was deeply interested in the War for the Union, but died before its conclusion, Sept. 2, 1864.—Maj. Thomas B. (Talcott), oldest son of the preceding, was born at Hebron, Conn., April 17, 1806; was taken to Rome, N. Y., by his father in infancy, and, after reaching maturity, engaged in mercantile business with his brother in Chemung County; in 1835 accompanied his father in a tour through the West, finally locating at Rockton, where he engaged in agriculture. On the organization of Winnebago County, in 1836, he was elected one of the first County Commissioners, and, in 1850, to the State Senate, serving four years. He also held various local offices. Died, Sept. 30, 1894.—Hon. Wait (Talcott), second son of Capt. William Talcott, was born at Hebron, Conn., Oct. 17, 1807, and taken to Rome, N. Y., where he remained until his 19th year, when he engaged in business at Booneville and, still later, in Utica; in 1838, removed to Illinois and joined his father at Rockton, finally becoming a citizen of Rockford, where, in his later years, he was extensively engaged in manufacturing, having become, in 1854, with his brother Sylvester, a partner of the firm of J. H. Manny & Co., in the manufacture of the Manny reaper and mower. He was an original anti-slavery man and, at one time, a Free-Soil candidate for Congress, but became a zealous Republican and ardent friend of Abraham Lincoln, whom he employed as an attorney in the famous suit of McCormick vs. the Manny Reaper Company for infringement of patent. In 1854 he was elected to the State Senate, succeeding his brother, Thomas B., and was the first Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District, appointed by Mr. Lincoln in 1862, and continuing in office some five years. Though too old for active service in the field, during the Civil War, he voluntarily hired a substitute to take his place. Mr. Talcott was one of the original incorporators and Trustees of Beloit College, and a founder of Rockford Female Seminary, remaining a trustee of each for many years. Died, June 7, 1890.—Sylvester (Talcott), third son of William Talcott, born at Rome, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1810; when of age, engaged in mercantile business in Chemung County; in 1837 removed, with other members of the family, to Winnebago County, Ill., where he joined his father in the entry of Government lands and the erection of mills, as already detailed. He became one of the first Justices of the Peace in Winnebago County, also served as Supervisor for a number of years and, although a farmer, became interested, in 1854, with his brother Wait, in the Manny Reaper Company at Rockford. He also followed the example of his brother, just named, in furnishing a substitute for the War of the Rebellion, though too old for service himself. Died, June 19, 1885.—Henry Walter (Talcott), fourth son of William Talcott, was born at Rome, N. Y., Feb. 13, 1814; came with his father to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and was connected with his father and brothers in business. Died, Dec. 9, 1870.—Dwight Lewis (Talcott), oldest son of Henry Walter Talcott, born in Winnebago County; at the age of 17 years enlisted at Belvidere, in January, 1864, as a soldier in the Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; served as provost guard some two months at Fort Pickering, near Memphis, and later took part in many of the important battles of that year in Mississippi and Tennessee. Having been captured at Campbellsville, Tenn., he was taken to Andersonville, Ga., where he suffered all the horrors of that famous prison-pen, until March, 1865, when he was released, arriving at home a helpless skeleton, the day after Abraham Lincoln's assassination. Mr. Talcott subsequently settled in Muscatine County, Iowa.

TALLULA, a prosperous village of Menard County, on the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway, 24 miles northeast of Jacksonville; is in the midst of a grain, coal-mining, and stock-growing region; has a local bank and newspaper. Pop. (1890), 445; (1900), 639.

TAMAROA, a village in Perry County, situated at the junction of the Illinois Central with the Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad, 8 miles north of Duquoin, and 57 miles east-southeast of Belleville. It has a bank, a newspaper office, a large public school, five churches and two flouring mills. Coal is mined here and exported in large quantities. Pop. (1900), 853.

TAMAROA & MOUNT VERNON RAILROAD. (See Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad.)

TANNER, Edward Allen, clergyman and educator, was born of New England ancestry, at Waverly, Ill., Nov. 29, 1837—being the first child who could claim nativity there; was educated in the local schools and at Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1857; spent four years teaching in his native place and at Jacksonville; then accepted the Professorship of Latin in Pacific University at Portland, Oregon, remaining four years, when he returned to his Alma Mater (1865), assuming there the chair of Latin and Rhetoric. In 1881 he was appointed financial agent of the latter institution, and, in 1882, its President. While in Oregon he had been ordained a minister of the Congregational Church, and, for a considerable period during his connection with Illinois College, officiated as Chaplain of the Central Hospital for the Insane at Jacksonville, besides supplying local and other pulpits. He labored earnestly for the benefit of the institution under his charge, and, during his incumbency, added materially to its endowment and resources. Died, at Jacksonville, Feb. 8, 1892.

TANNER, John R., Governor, was born in Warrick County, Ind., April 4, 1844, and brought to Southern Illinois in boyhood, where he grew up on a farm in the vicinity of Carbondale, enjoying only such educational advantages as were afforded by the common school; in 1863, at the age of 19, enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteers, serving until June, 1865, when he was transferred to the Sixty-first, and finally mustered out in September following. All the male members of Governor Tanner's family were soldiers of the late war, his father dying in a rebel prison at Columbus, Miss., one of his brothers suffering the same fate from wounds at Nashville, Tenn., and another brother dying in hospital at Pine Bluff, Ark. Only one of this patriotic family, besides Governor Tanner, still survives—Mr. J. M. Tanner of Clay County, who left the service with the rank of Lieutenant of the Thirtieth Illinois Cavalry. Returning from the war, Mr. Tanner established himself in business as a farmer in Clay County, later engaging successfully in the milling and lumber business as the partner of his brother. The public positions held by him, since the war, include those of Sheriff of Clay County (1870-72), Clerk of the Circuit Court (1872-76), and State Senator (1880-83). During the latter year he received the appointment of United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving until after the accession of President Cleveland in 1885. In 1886, he was the Republican nominee for State Treasurer and was elected by an unusually large majority; in 1891 was appointed, by Governor Fifer, a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, but, in 1892, received the appointment of Assistant United States Treasurer at Chicago, continuing in the latter office until December, 1893. For ten years (1874-84) he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, returning to that body in 1894, when he was chosen Chairman and conducted the campaign which resulted in the unprecedented Republican successes of that year. In 1896 he received the nomination of his party for Governor, and was elected over Gov. John P. Altgeld, his Democratic opponent, by a plurality of over 113,000, and a majority, over all, of nearly 90,000 votes.

TANNER, Tazewell B., jurist, was born in Henry County, Va., and came to Jefferson County, Ill., about 1846 or '47, at first taking a position as teacher and Superintendent of Public Schools. Later, he was connected with "The Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper at Mount Vernon, and, in 1849, went to the gold regions of California, meeting with reasonable success as a miner. Returning in a year or two, he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and, while in the discharge of his duties, prosecuted the study of law, finally, on admission to the bar, entering into partnership with the late Col. Thomas S. Casey. In 1854 he was elected Representative in the Nineteenth General Assembly, and was instrumental in securing the appropriation for the erection of a Supreme Court building at Mount Vernon. In 1862 he served as a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of that year; was elected Circuit Judge in 1873, and, in 1877, was assigned to duty on the Appellate bench, but, at the expiration of his term, declined a re-election and resumed the practice of his profession at Mount Vernon. Died, March 25, 1880.

TAXATION, in its legal sense, the mode of raising revenue. In its general sense its purposes are the support of the State and local governments, the promotion of the public good by fostering education and works of public improvement, the protection of society by the preservation of order and the punishment of crime, and the support of the helpless and destitute. In practice, and as prescribed by the Constitution, the raising of revenue is required to be done "by levying a tax by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her or its property—such value to be ascertained by some person or persons, to be elected or appointed in such manner as the General Assembly shall direct, and not otherwise." (State Constitution, 1870—Art. Revenue, Sec. 1.) The person selected under the law to make this valuation is the Assessor of the county or the township (in counties under township organization), and he is required to make a return to the County Board at its July meeting each year—the latter having authority to hear complaints of taxpayers and adjust inequalities when found to exist. It is made the duty of the Assessor to include in his return, as real-estate, all lands and the buildings or other improvements erected thereon; and, under the head of personal property, all tangible effects, besides moneys, credits, bonds or stocks, shares of stock of companies or corporations, investments, annuities, franchises, royalties, etc. Property used for school, church or cemetery purposes, as well as public buildings and other property belonging to the State and General Government, municipalities, public charities, public libraries, agricultural and scientific societies, are declared exempt. Nominally, all property subject to taxation is required to be assessed at its cash valuation; but, in reality, the valuation, of late years, has been on a basis of twenty-five to thirty-three per cent of its estimated cash value. In the larger cities, however, the valuation is often much lower than this, while very large amounts escape assessment altogether. The Revenue Act, passed at the special session of the Fortieth General Assembly (1898), requires the Assessor to make a return of all property subject to taxation in his district, at its cash valuation, upon which a Board of Review fixes a tax on the basis of twenty per cent of such cash valuation. An abstract of the property assessment of each county goes before the State Board of Equalization, at its annual meeting in August, for the purpose of comparison and equalizing valuations between counties, but the Board has no power to modify the assessments of individual tax-payers. (See State Board of Equalization.) This Board has exclusive power to fix the valuation for purposes of taxation of the capital stock or franchises of companies (except certain specified manufacturing corporations), incorporated under the State laws, together with the "railroad track" and "rolling stock" of railroads, and the capital stock of railroads and telegraph lines, and to fix the distribution of the latter between counties in which they lie.—The Constitution of 1848 empowered the Legislature to impose a capitation tax, of not less than fifty cents nor more than one dollar, upon each free white male citizen entitled to the right of suffrage, between the ages of 21 and 60 years, but the Constitution of 1870 grants no such power, though it authorizes the extension of the "objects and subjects of taxation" in accordance with the principle contained in the first section of the Revenue Article.—Special assessments in cities, for the construction of sewers, pavements, etc., being local and in the form of benefits, cannot be said to come under the head of general taxation. The same is to be said of revenue derived from fines and penalties, which are forms of punishment for specific offenses, and go to the benefit of certain specified funds.

TAYLOR, Abner, ex-Congressman, is a native of Maine, and a resident of Chicago. He has been in active business all his life as contractor, builder and merchant, and, for some time, a member of the wholesale dry-goods firm of J. V. Farwell & Co., of Chicago. He was a member of the Thirty-fourth General Assembly, a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1884, and represented the First Illinois District in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, 1889 to 1893. Mr. Taylor was one of the contractors for the erection of the new State Capitol of Texas.

TAYLOR, Benjamin Franklin, journalist, poet and lecturer, was born at Lowville, N. Y., July 19, 1819; graduated at Madison University in 1839, the next year becoming literary and dramatic critic of "The Chicago Evening Journal." Here, in a few years, he acquired a wide reputation as a journalist and poet, and was much in demand as a lecturer on literary topics. His letters from the field during the Rebellion, as war correspondent of "The Evening Journal," won for him even a greater popularity, and were complimented by translation into more than one European language. After the war, he gave his attention more unreservedly to literature, his principal works appearing after that date. His publications in book form, including both prose and poetry, comprise the following: "Attractions of Language" (1845); "January and June" (1853); "Pictures in Camp and Field" (1871); "The World on Wheels" (1873); "Old Time Pictures and Sheaves of Rhyme" (1874); "Songs of Yesterday" (1877); "Summer Savory Gleaned from Rural Nooks" (1879); "Between the Gates"—pictures of California life—(1881); "Dulce Domum, the Burden of Song" (1884), and "Theophilus Trent, or Old Times in the Oak Openings," a novel (1887). The last was in the hands of the publishers at his death, Feb. 27, 1887. Among his most popular poems are "The Isle of the Long Ago," "The Old Village Choir," and "Rhymes of the River." "The London Times" complimented Mr. Taylor with the title of "The Oliver Goldsmith of America."

TAYLOR, Edmund Dick, early Indian-trader and legislator, was born at Fairfield C. H., Va., Oct. 18, 1802—the son of a commissary in the army of the Revolution, under General Greene, and a cousin of General (later, President) Zachary Taylor; left his native State in his youth and, at an early day, came to Springfield, Ill., where he opened an Indian-trading post and general store; was elected from Sangamon County to the lower branch of the Seventh General Assembly (1830) and re-elected in 1832—the latter year being a competitor of Abraham Lincoln, whom he defeated. In 1834 he was elected to the State Senate and, at the next session of the Legislature, was one of the celebrated “Long Nine” who secured the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. He resigned before the close of his term to accept, from President Jackson, the appointment of Receiver of Public Moneys at Chicago. Here he became one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (1837), serving as one of the Commissioners to secure subscriptions of stock, and was also active in advocating the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The title of “Colonel,” by which he was known during most of his life, was acquired by service, with that rank, on the staff of Gov. John Reynolds, during the Black Hawk War of 1832. After coming to Chicago, Colonel Taylor became one of the Trustees of the Chicago branch of the State Bank, and was later identified with various banking enterprises, as also a somewhat extensive operator in real estate. An active Democrat in the early part of his career in Illinois, Colonel Taylor was one of the members of his party to take ground against the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and advocated the election of General Bissell to the governorship in 1856. In 1860 he was again in line with his party in support of Senator Douglas for the Presidency, and was an opponent of the war policy of the Government still later, as shown by his participation in the celebrated “Peace Convention” at Springfield, of June 17, 1863. In the latter years of his life he became extensively interested in coal lands in La Salle and adjoining counties, and, for a considerable time, served as President of the Northern Illinois Coal & Mining Company, his home, during a part of this period, being at Mendota. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 4, 1891.

TAYLORVILLE, a city and county-seat of Christian County, on the South Fork of the Sangamon River and on the Wabash Railway at its point of intersection with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern. It is about 27 miles southeast of Springfield, and 28 miles southwest of Decatur. It has several banks, flour mills, paper mill, electric light and gas plants, water-works, two coal mines, carriage and wagon shops, a manufactory of farming implements, two daily and weekly papers, nine churches and five graded and township high schools. Much coal is mined in this vicinity. Pop. (1890), 2,839; (1900), 4,248.

TAZEWELL COUNTY, a central county on the Illinois River; was first settled in 1823 and organized in 1827; has an area of 650 square miles—was named for Governor Tazewell of Virginia. It is drained by the Illinois and Mackinaw Rivers and traversed by several lines of railway. The surface is generally level, the soil alluvial and rich, but, requiring drainage, especially on the river bottoms. Gravel, coal and sandstone are found, but, generally speaking, Tazewell is an agricultural county. The cereals are extensively cultivated; wool is also clipped, and there are dairy interests of some importance. Distilling is extensively conducted at Pekin, the county-seat, which is also the seat of other mechanical industries. (See also Pekin.) Population of the county (1880), 29,666; (1890), 29,556; (1900), 33,221.

TEMPLE, John Taylor, M.D., early Chicago physician, born in Virginia in 1804, graduated in medicine at Middlebury College, Vt., in 1830, and, in 1833, arrived in Chicago. At this time he had a contract for carrying the United States mail from Chicago to Fort Howard, near Green Bay, and the following year undertook a similar contract between Chicago and Ottawa. Having sold these out three years later, he devoted his attention to the practice of his profession, though interested, for a time, in contracts for the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Dr. Temple was instrumental in erecting the first house (after Rev. Jesse Walker's missionary station at Wolf Point), for public religious worship in Chicago, and, although himself a Baptist, it was used in common by Protestant denominations. He was a member of the first Board of Trustees of Rush Medical College, though he later became a convert to homeopathy, and finally, removing to St. Louis, assisted in founding the St. Louis School of Homeopathy, dying there, Feb. 24, 1877.

TERRE HAUTE, ALTON & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & ALTON RAILROAD (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & INDIANAPOLIS RAILROAD, a corporation operating no line of its own within the State, but the lessee and operator of the following lines (which see): St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute, 158.3 miles; Terre Haute & Peoria, 145.12 miles; East St. Louis & Carondelet, 12.74 miles—total length of leased lines in Illinois, 316.16 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad was incorporated in Indiana in 1847, as the Terre Haute & Richmond, completed a line between the points named in the title, in 1852, and took its present name in 1866. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company purchased a controlling interest in its stock in 1893.

TERRE HAUTE & PEORIA RAILROAD, (Vandalia Line), a line of road extending from Terre Haute, Ind., to Peoria, Ill., 145.12 miles, with 28.78 miles of trackage, making in all 173.9 miles in operation, all being in Illinois—operated by the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company. The gauge is standard, and the rails are steel. (HISTORY.) It was organized Feb. 7, 1887, successor to the Illinois Midland Railroad. The latter was made up by the consolidation (Nov. 4, 1874) of three lines: (1) The Peoria, Atlanta & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1869 and opened in 1874; (2) the Paris & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1861 and opened in December, 1872; and (3) the Paris & Terre Haute Railroad, chartered in 1873 and opened in 1874—the consolidated lines assuming the name of the Illinois Midland Railroad. In 1886 the Illinois Midland was sold under foreclosure and, in February, 1887, reorganized as the Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad. In 1892 it was leased for ninety-nine years to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company, and is operated as a part of the "Vandalia System." The capital stock (1898) was $3,764,200; funded debt, $2,230,000,—total capital invested, $6,227,481.

TEUTOPOLIS, a village of Effingham County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, 4 miles east of Effingham; was originally settled by a colony of Germans from Cincinnati. Population (1900), 498.

THOMAS, Horace H., lawyer and legislator, was born in Vermont, Dec. 18, 1831, graduated at Middlebury College, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Chicago, where he commenced practice. At the outbreak of the rebellion he enlisted and was commissioned Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army of the Ohio. At the close of the war he took up his residence in Tennessee, serving as Quartermaster upon the staff of Governor Brownlow. In 1867 he returned to Chicago and resumed practice. He was elected a Representative in the Legislature in 1878 and re-elected in 1880, being chosen Speaker of the House during his latter term. In 1888 he was elected State Senator from the Sixth District, serving during the sessions of the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies. In 1897, General Thomas was appointed United States Appraiser in connection with the Custom House in Chicago.

THOMAS, Jesse Burgess, jurist and United States Senator, was born at Hagerstown, Md., claiming direct descent from Lord Baltimore. Taken west in childhood, he grew to manhood and settled at Lawrenceburg, Indiana Territory, in 1803; in 1805 was Speaker of the Territorial Legislature and, later, represented the Territory as Delegate in Congress. On the organization of Illinois Territory (which he had favored), he removed to Kaskaskia, was appointed one of the first Judges for the new Territory, and, in 1818, as Delegate from St. Clair County, presided over the first State Constitutional Convention, and, on the admission of the State, became one of the first United States Senators—Governor Edwards being his colleague. Though an avowed advocate of slavery, he gained no little prominence as the author of the celebrated "Missouri Compromise," adopted in 1820. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1823, serving until 1829. He subsequently removed to Mount Vernon, Ohio, where he died by suicide, May 4, 1853.—Jesse Burgess (Thomas), Jr., nephew of the United States Senator of the same name, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, July 31, 1806, was educated at Transylvania University, and, being admitted to the bar, located at Edwardsville, Ill. He first appeared in connection with public affairs as Secretary of the State Senate in 1830, being re-elected in 1832; in 1834 was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Madison County, but, in February following, was appointed Attorney-General, serving only one year. He afterwards held the position of Circuit Judge (1837-39), his home being then in Springfield; in 1843 he became Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, by appointment of the Governor, as successor to Stephen A. Douglas, and was afterwards elected to the same office by the Legislature, remaining until 1848. During a part of his professional career he was the partner of David Prickett and William L. May, at Springfield, and afterwards a member of the Galena bar, finally removing to Chicago, where he died, Feb. 21, 1850.—Jesse B. (Thomas) third, clergyman and son of the last named; born at Edwardsville, Ill., July 29, 1832; educated at Kenyon College, Ohio, and Rochester (N. Y.) Theological Seminary; practiced law for a time in Chicago, but finally entered the Baptist ministry, serving churches at Waukegan, Ill., Brooklyn, N. Y., and San Francisco (1862-69). He then became pastor of the Michigan Avenue Baptist Church, in Chicago, remaining until 1874, when he returned to Brooklyn. In 1887 he became Professor of Biblical History in the Theological Seminary at Newton, Mass., where he has since resided. He is the author of several volumes, and, in 1866, received the degree of D.D. from the old University of Chicago.

THOMAS, John, pioneer and soldier of the Black Hawk War, was born in Wythe County, Va., Jan. 11, 1800. At the age of 18 he accompanied his parents to St. Clair County, Ill., where the family located in what was then called the Alexander settlement, near the present site of Shiloh. When he was 22 he rented a farm (although he had not enough money to buy a horse) and married. Six years later he bought and stocked a farm, and, from that time forward, rapidly accumulated real property, until he became one of the most extensive owners of farming land in St. Clair County. In early life he was fond of military exercise, holding various offices in local organizations and serving as a Colonel in the Black Hawk War. In 1824 he was one of the leaders of the party opposed to the amendment of the State Constitution to sanction slavery, was a zealous opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and a firm supporter of the Republican party from the date of its formation. He was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1838, '62, '64, '72 and '74; and to the State Senate in 1878, serving four years in the latter body. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 16, 1894, in the 95th year of his age.

THOMAS, John R., ex-Congressman, was born at Mount Vernon, Ill., Oct. 11, 1846. He served in the Union Army during the War of the Rebellion, rising from the ranks to a captaincy. After his return home he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1869. From 1872 to 1876 he was State's Attorney, and, from 1879 to 1889, represented his District in Congress. In 1897, Mr. Thomas was appointed by President McKinley an additional United States District Judge for Indian Territory. His home is now at Vanita, in that Territory.

THOMAS, William, pioneer lawyer and legislator, was born in what is now Allen County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1802; received a rudimentary education, and served as deputy of his father (who was Sheriff), and afterwards of the County Clerk; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1823; in 1826 removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he taught school, served as a private in the Winnebago War (1827), and at the session of 1828-29, reported the proceedings of the General Assembly for "The Vandalia Intelligencer"; was State's Attorney and School Commissioner of Morgan County; served as Quartermaster and Commissary in the Black Hawk War (1831-32), first under Gen. Joseph Duncan and, a year later, under General Whiteside; in 1839 was appointed Circuit Judge, but legislated out of office two years later. It was as a member of the Legislature, however, that he gained the greatest prominence, first as State Senator in 1834-40, and Representative in 1846-48 and 1850-52, when he was especially influential in the legislation which resulted in establishing the institutions for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, and the Hospital for the Insane (the first in the State) at Jacksonville—serving, for a time, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the latter. He was also prominent in connection with many enterprises of a local character, including the establishment of the Illinois Female College, to which, although without children of his own, he was a liberal contributor. During the first year of the war he was a member of the Board of Army Auditors by appointment of Governor Yates. Died, at Jacksonville, August 22, 1889.

THORNTON, Anthony, jurist, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., Nov. 9, 1814—being descended from a Virginia family. After the usual primary instruction in the common schools, he spent two years in a high school at Gallatin, Tenn., when he entered Centre College at Danville, Ky., afterwards continuing his studies at Miami University, Ohio, where he graduated in 1834. Having studied law with an uncle at Paris, Ky., he was licensed to practice in 1836, when he left his native State with a view to settling in Missouri, but, visiting his uncle, Gen. William F. Thornton, at Shelbyville, Ill., was induced to establish himself in practice there. He served as a member of the State Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, and as Representative in the Seventeenth General Assembly (1850-52) for Shelby County. In 1864 he was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress, and, in 1870, to the Illinois Supreme Court, but served only until 1873, when he resigned. In 1879 Judge Thornton removed to Decatur, Ill., but subsequently returned to Shelbyville, where (1898) he now resides.

THORNTON, William Fitzhugh, Commissioner of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, was born in Hanover County, Va., Oct. 4, 1789; in 1806, went to Alexandria, Va., where he conducted a drug business for a time, also acting as associate editor of "The Alexandria Gazette." Subsequently removing to Washington City, he conducted a paper there in the interest of John Quincy Adams for the Presidency. During the War of 1812-14 he served as a Captain of cavalry, and, for a time, as staff-officer of General Winder. On occasion of the visit of Marquis La Fayette to America (1824-25) he accompanied the distinguished Frenchman from Baltimore to Richmond. In 1829 he removed to Kentucky, and, in 1833, to Shelbyville, Ill., where he soon after engaged in mercantile business, to which he added a banking and brokerage business in 1859, with which he was actively associated until his death. In 1836, he was appointed, by Governor Duncan, one of the Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as President of the Board until 1842. In 1840, he made a visit to London, as financial agent of the State, in the interest of the Canal, and succeeded in making a sale of bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 on what were then considered favorable terms. General Thornton was an ardent Whig until the organization of the Republican party, when he became a Democrat. Died, at Shelbyville, Oct. 21, 1873.

TILLSON, John, pioneer, was born at Halifax, Mass., March 13, 1796; came to Illinois in 1819, locating at Hillsboro, Montgomery County, where he became a prominent and enterprising operator in real estate, doing a large business for eastern parties; was one of the founders of Hillsboro Academy and an influential and liberal friend of Illinois College, being a Trustee of the latter from its establishment until his death; was supported in the Legislature of 1827 for State Treasurer, but, defeated by James Hall. Died, at Peoria, May 11, 1853.—Christiana Holmes (Tillson), wife of the preceding, was born at Kingston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1798; married to John Tillson in 1822, and immediately came to Illinois to reside; was a woman of rare culture and refinement, and deeply interested in benevolent enterprises. Died, in New York City, May 29, 1872.—Charles Holmes (Tillson), son of John and Christiana Holmes Tillson, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Sept. 15, 1823; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1844; studied law in St. Louis and at Transylvania University, was admitted to the bar in St. Louis and practiced there some years—also served several terms in the City Council, and was a member of the National Guard of Missouri in the War of the Rebellion. Died, Nov. 25, 1865.—John (Tillson), Jr., another son, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Oct. 12, 1825; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, but did not graduate from the latter; graduated from Transylvania Law School, Ky., in 1847, and was admitted to the bar at Quincy, Ill., the same year; practiced two years at Galena, when he returned to Quincy. In 1861 he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, became its Lieutenant-Colonel, on the promotion of Col. J. D. Morgan to Brigadier-General, was advanced to the colonelcy, and, in July, 1865, was mustered out with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General; for two years later held a commission as Captain in the regular army. During a portion of 1869-70 he was editor of "The Quincy Whig"; in 1873 was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly to succeed Nehemiah Bushnell, who had died in office, and, during the same year, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Quincy District, serving until 1881. Died, August 6, 1892.

TILLSON, Robert, pioneer, was born in Halifax County, Mass., August 12, 1800; came to Illinois in 1822, and was employed, for several years, as a clerk in the land agency of his brother, John Tillson, at Hillsboro. In 1826 he engaged in the mercantile business with Charles Holmes, Jr., in St. Louis, but, in 1828, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he opened the first general store in that city; also served as Postmaster for some ten years. During this period he built the first two-story frame building erected in Quincy, up to that date. Retiring from the mercantile business in 1840 he engaged in real estate, ultimately becoming the proprietor of considerable property of this character; was also a contractor for furnishing cavalry accouterments to the Government during the war. Soon after the war he erected one of the handsomest business blocks existing in the city at that time. Died, in Quincy, Dec. 27, 1892.

TINCHER, John L., banker, was born in Kentucky in 1821; brought by his parents to Vermilion County, Ind., in 1829, and left an orphan at 17; attended school in Coles County, Ill., and was employed as clerk in a store at Danville, 1843-53. He then became a member of the firm of Tinchler & English, merchants, later establishing a bank, which became the First National Bank of Danville. In 1864 Mr. Tinchler was elected Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly and, two years later, to the Senate, being re-elected in 1870. He was also a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, in Springfield, Dec. 17, 1871, while in attendance on the adjourned session of that year.

TIPTON, Thomas F., lawyer and jurist, was born in Franklin County, Ohio, August 29, 1833; has been a resident of McLean County, Ill., from the age of 10 years, his present home being at Bloomington. He was admitted to the bar in 1857, and, from January, 1867, to December, 1868, was State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit. In 1870 he was elected Judge of the same circuit, and under the new Constitution, was chosen Judge of the new Fourteenth Circuit. From 1877 to 1879 he represented the (then) Thirtieth Illinois District in Congress, but, in 1878, was defeated by Adlai E. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee. In 1891 he was re-elected to a seat on the Circuit bench for the Bloomington Circuit, but resumed practice at the expiration of his term in 1897.

TISKILWA, a village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 7 miles southwest of Princeton; has creameries and cheese factories, churches, school, library, water-works, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 965.

TODD, (Col.) John, soldier, was born in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1750; took part in the battle of Point Pleasant, Va., in 1774, as Adjutant-General of General Lewis; settled as a lawyer at Fincastle, Va., and, in 1775, removed to Fayette County, Ky., the next year locating near Lexington. He was one of the first two Delegates from Kentucky County to the Virginia House of Burgesses, and, in 1778, accompanied Col. George Rogers Clark on his expedition against Kaskaskia and Vincennes. In December, 1778, he was appointed by Gov. Patrick Henry, Lieutenant-Commandant of Illinois County, embracing the region northwest of the Ohio River, serving two years; in 1780, was again a member of the Virginia Legislature, where he procured grants of land for public schools and introduced a bill for negro-emancipation. He was killed by Indians, at the battle of Blue Licks, Ky., August 19, 1782.

TODD, (Dr.) John, physician, born near Lexington, Ky., April 27, 1787, was one of the earliest graduates of Transylvania University, also graduating at the Medical University of Philadelphia; was appointed Surgeon-General of Kentucky troops in the War of 1812, and captured at the battle of River Raisin. Returning to Lexington after his release, he practiced there and at Bardstown, removed to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1817, and, in 1827, to Springfield, where he had been appointed Register of the Land Office by President John Quincy Adams, but was removed by Jackson in 1829. Dr. Todd continued to reside at Springfield until his death, which occurred, Jan. 9, 1865. He was a grandson of John Todd, who was appointed Commandant of Illinois County by Gov. Patrick Henry in 1778, and an uncle of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln.—John Blair Smith (Todd), son of the preceding, was born at Lexington, Ky., April 4, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1817; graduated at the United States Military Academy in 1837, serving afterwards in the Florida and Mexican wars and on the frontier; resigned, and was an Indian-trader in Dakota, 1856-61; the latter year, took his seat as a Delegate in Congress from Dakota, then served as Brigadier-General of Volunteers, 1861-62; was again Delegate in Congress in 1863-65, Speaker of the Dakota Legislature in 1867, and Governor of the Territory, 1869-71. Died, at Yankton City, Jan. 5, 1872.

TOLEDO, a village and the county-seat of Cumberland County, on the Illinois Central Railroad; founded in 1854; has five churches, a graded school, two banks, creamery, flour mill, elevator, and two weekly newspapers. There are no manufacturing, the leading industry in the surrounding country being agriculture. Pop. (1890), 676; (1900), 818.

TOLEDO, CINCINNATI & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WARSAW RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILWAY, a line of railroad wholly within the State of Illinois, extending from Effner, at the Indiana State line, west to the Mississippi River at Warsaw. The length of the whole line is 230.7 miles, owned entirely by the company. It is made up of a division from Effner to Peoria (110.9 miles)—which is practically an air-line throughout nearly its entire length—and the Peoria and Warsaw Division (108.8 miles) with branches from La Harpe to Iowa Junction (10.4 miles) and 0.6 of a mile connecting with the Keokuk bridge at Hamilton.—(HISTORY.) The original charter for this line was granted, in 1863, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad; the main line was completed in 1868, and the La Harpe & Iowa Junction branch in 1873. Default was made in 1873, the road sold under foreclosure, in 1880, and reorganized as the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, and the line leased for 49½ years to the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company. The latter defaulted in July, 1884, and, a year later, the Toledo, Peoria & Western was transferred to trustees for the first mortgage bond-holders, was sold under foreclosure in October, 1886, and, in March, 1887, the present company, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway Company, was organized for the purpose of taking over the property. In 1893 the Pennsylvania Railroad Company obtained a controlling interest in the stock, and, in 1894, an agreement, for joint ownership and management, was entered into between that corporation and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. The total capitalization, in 1898, was $9,712,433, of which $4,076,900 was in stock and $4,895,000 in bonds.

TOLEDO, ST. LOUIS & KANSAS CITY RAILROAD. This line crosses the State in a northeast direction from East St. Louis to Humrick, near the Indiana State line, with Toledo as its eastern terminus. The length of the entire line is 450.72 miles, of which 179½ miles are operated in Illinois.—(HISTORY.) The Illinois portion of the line grew out of the union of charters granted to the Tuscola, Charleston & Vincennes and the Charleston, Neoga & St. Louis Railroad Companies, which were consolidated in 1881 with certain Indiana lines under the name of the Toledo, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad. During 1882 a narrow-gauge road was constructed from Ridge Farm, in Vermilion County, to East St. Louis (172 miles). In 1885 this was sold under foreclosure and, in June, 1886, consolidated with the main line under the name of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad. The whole line was changed to standard gauge in 1887-89, and otherwise materially improved, but, in 1893, went into the hands of receivers. Plans of reorganization have been under consideration, but the receivers were still in control in 1898.

TOLEDO, WABASH & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

TOLONO, a city in Champaign County, situated at the intersection of the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads, 9 miles south of Champaign and 37 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is the business center of a prosperous agricultural region. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank, a button factory, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 905; (1890), 902; (1900), 845.

TONICA, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 9 miles south of La Salle; the district is agricultural, but the place has some manufactures and a newspaper. Population (1890), 473; (1900), 497.

TONTY, Chevalier Henry de, explorer and soldier, born at Gaeta, Italy, about 1650. What is now known as the Tontine system of insurance undoubtedly originated with his father. The younger Tonty was adventurous, and, even as a youth, took part in numerous land and naval encounters. In the course of his experience he lost a hand, which was replaced by an iron or copper substitute. He embarked with La Salle in 1678, and aided in the construction of a fort at Niagara. He advanced into the country of the Illinois and established friendly relations with them, only to witness the defeat of his putative savage allies by the Iroquois. After various encounters (chiefly under the direction of La Salle) with the Indians in Illinois, he returned to Green Bay in 1681. The same year—under La Salle's orders—he began the erection of Fort St. Louis, on what is now called "Starved Rock" in La Salle County. In 1682 he descended the Mississippi to its mouth, with La Salle, but was ordered back to Mackinaw for assistance. In 1684 he returned to Illinois and successfully repulsed the Iroquois from Fort St. Louis. In 1686 he again descended the Mississippi in search of La Salle. Disheartened by the death of his commander and the loss of his early comrades, he took up his residence with the Illinois Indians. Among them he was found by Iberville in 1700, as a hunter and fur-trader. He died, in Mobile, in September, 1704. He was La Salle's most efficient coadjutor, and next to his ill-fated leader, did more than any other of the early French explorers to make Illinois known to the civilized world.

TOPOGRAPHY. Illinois is, generally speaking, an elevated table-land. If low water at Cairo be adopted as the maximum depression, and the summits of the two ridges hereinafter mentioned as the highest points of elevation, the altitude of this table land above the sea-level varies from 300 to 850 feet, the mean elevation being about 600 feet. The State has no mountain chains, and its few hills are probably the result of unequal denudation during the drift epoch. In some localities, particularly in the valley of the upper Mississippi, the streams have cut channels from 200 to 300 feet deep through the nearly horizontal strata, and here are found precipitous scarps, but, for the most part, the fundamental rocks are covered by a thick layer of detrital material. In the northwest there is a broken tract of uneven ground; the central portion of the State is almost wholly flat prairie, and, in the alluvial lands in the State, there are many deep valleys, eroded by the action of streams. The surface generally slopes toward the south and southwest, but the uniformity is broken by two ridges, which cross the State, one in either extremity. The northern ridge crosses the Rock River at Grand Detour and the Illinois at Split Rock, with an extreme altitude of 800 to 850 feet above sea-level, though the altitude of Mount Morris, in Ogle County, exceeds 900 feet. That in the south consists of a range of hills in the latitude of Jonesboro, and extending from Shawneetown to Grand Tower. These hills are also about 800 feet above the level of the ocean. The highest point in the State is in Jo Daviess County, just south of the Wisconsin State line (near Scale's Mound) reaching an elevation of 1,257 feet above sea-level, while the highest in the south is in the northeast corner of Pope County—1,046 feet—a spur of the Ozark mountains. The following statistics regarding elevations are taken from a report of Prof. C. W. Rolfe, of the University of Illinois, based on observations made under the auspices of the Illinois Board of World's Fair Commissioners: The lowest gauge of the Ohio river, at its mouth (above sea-level), is 268.58 feet, and the mean level of Lake Michigan at Chicago 581.28 feet. The altitudes of a few prominent points are as follows: Highest point in Jackson County, 695 feet; "Bald Knob" in Union County, 985; highest point in Cook County (Barrington), 818; in La Salle County (Mendota), 747; in Livingston (Strawn), 770; in Will (Monee), 804; in Pike (Arden), 790; in Lake (Lake Zurich), 880; in Bureau, 910; in Boone, 1,010; in Lee (Carnahan), 1,017; in Stephenson (Waddam's Grove), 1,018; in Kane (Briar Hill), 974; in Winnebago, 985. The elevations of important towns are: Peoria, 465; Jacksonville, 602; Springfield, 596; Galesburg, 755; Joliet, 537; Rockford, 728; Bloomington, 821. Outside of the immediate valleys of the streams, and a few isolated groves or copses, little timber is found in the northern and central portions of the State, and such growth as there is, lacks the thriftiness characteristic of the forests in the Ohio valley. These forests cover a belt extending some sixty miles north of Cairo, and, while they generally include few coniferous trees, they abound in various species of oak, black and white walnut, white and yellow poplar, ash, elm, sugar-maple, linden, honey locust, cottonwood, mulberry, sycamore, pecan, persimmon, and (in the immediate valley of the Ohio)

the cypress. From a commercial point of view, Illinois loses nothing through the lack of timber over three-fourths of the State's area. Chicago is an accessible market for the product of the forests of the upper lakes, so that the supply of lumber is ample, while extensive coal-fields supply abundant fuel. The rich soil of the prairies, with its abundance of organic matter (see Geological Formations), more than compensates for the want of pine forests, whose soil is ill adapted to agriculture. About two-thirds of the entire boundary of the State consists of navigable waters. These, with their tributary streams, ensure sufficient drainage.

TORRENS LAND TITLE SYSTEM. A system for the registration of titles to, and incumbrances upon, land, as well as transfers thereof, intended to remove all unnecessary obstructions to the cheap, simple and safe sale, acquisition and transfer of realty. The system has been in successful operation in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and British Columbia for many years, and it is also in force in some States in the American Union. An act providing for its introduction into Illinois was first passed by the Twenty-ninth General Assembly, and approved, June 13, 1895. The final legislation in reference thereto was enacted by the succeeding Legislature, and was approved, May 1, 1897. It is far more elaborate in its consideration of details, and is believed to be, in many respects, much better adapted to accomplish the ends in view, than was the original act of 1895. The law is applicable only to counties of the first and second class, and can be adopted in no county except by a vote of a majority of the qualified voters of the same—the vote "for" or "against" to be taken at either the November or April elections, or at an election for the choice of Judges. Thus far the only county to adopt the system has been Cook, and there it encountered strong opposition on the part of certain parties of influence and wealth. After its adoption, a test case was brought, raising the question of the constitutionality of the act. The issue was taken to the Supreme Court, which tribunal finally upheld the law.—The Torrens system substitutes a certificate of registration and of transfer for the more elaborate deeds and mortgages in use for centuries. Under it there can be no actual transfer of a title until the same is entered upon the public land register, kept in the office of the Registrar, in which case the deed or mortgage becomes a mere power of attorney to authorize the transfer to be made, upon the principle of an ordinary stock transfer, or of the registration of a United States bond, the actual transfer and public notice thereof being simultaneous. A brief synopsis of the provisions of the Illinois statute is given below: Recorders of deeds are made Registrars, and required to give bonds of either $50,000 or $200,000, according to the population of the county. Any person or corporation, having an interest in land, may make application to any court having chancery jurisdiction, to have his title thereto registered. Such application must be in writing, signed and verified by oath, and must conform, in matters of specification and detail, with the requirements of the act. The court may refer the application to one of the standing examiners appointed by the Registrar, who are required to be competent attorneys and to give bond to examine into the title, as well as the truth of the applicant's statements. Immediately upon the filing of the application, notice thereof is given by the clerk, through publication and the issuance of a summons to be served, as in other proceedings in chancery, against all persons mentioned in the petition as having or claiming any interest in the property described. Any person interested, whether named as a defendant or not, may enter an appearance within the time allowed. A failure to enter an appearance is regarded as a confession by default. The court, in passing upon the application, is in no case bound by the examiner's report, but may require other and further proof; and, in its final adjudication, passes upon all questions of title and incumbrance, directing the Registrar to register the title in the party in whom it is to be vested, and making provision as to the manner and order in which incumbrances thereon shall appear upon the certificate to be issued. An appeal may be allowed to the Supreme Court, if prayed at the time of entering the decree, upon like terms as in other cases in chancery; and a writ of error may be sued out from that tribunal within two years after the entry of the order or decree. The period last mentioned may be said to be the statutory period of limitation, after which the decree of the court must be regarded as final, although safeguards are provided for those who may have been defrauded, and for a few other classes of persons. Upon the filing of the order or decree of the court, it becomes the duty of the Registrar to issue a certificate of title, the form of which is prescribed by the act, making such notations at the end as shall show and preserve the priorities of all estates, mortgages, incumbrances and changes to which the owner's title is subject. For the purpose of preserving evidence of the owner's handwriting, a receipt for the certificate, duly witnessed or acknowledged, is required of him, which is preserved in the Registrar's office. In case any registered owner should desire to transfer the whole or any part of his estate, or any interest therein, he is required to execute a conveyance to the transferee, which, together with the certificate of title last issued, must be surrendered to the Registrar. That official thereupon issues a new certificate, stamping the word "cancelled" across the surrendered certificate, as well as upon the corresponding entry in his books of record. When land is first brought within the operation of the act, the receiver of the certificate of title is required to pay to the Registrar one-tenth of one per cent of the value of the land, the aggregate so received to be deposited with and invested by the County Treasurer, and reserved as an indemnity fund for the reimbursement of persons sustaining any loss through any omission, mistake or malfeasance of the Registrar or his subordinates. The advantage claimed for the Torrens system is, chiefly, that titles registered thereunder can be dealt with more safely, quickly and inexpensively than under the old system; it being possible to close the entire transaction within an hour or two, without the need of an abstract of title, while (as the law is administered in Cook County) the cost of transfer is only $3. It is asserted that a title, once registered, can be dealt with almost as quickly and cheaply, and quite as safely, as shares of stock or registered bonds.

TOULON, the county-seat of Stark County, on the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad, 37 miles north-northwest of Peoria, and 11 miles southeast of Galva. Besides the county court-house, the town has five churches and a high school, an academy, steam granite works, two banks, and two weekly papers. Population (1880), 967; (1890), 945; (1900), 1,057.

TOWER HILL, a village of Shelby County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroads, 7 miles east of Pana; has bank, grain elevators, and coal mine. Pop. (1900), 615.

TOWNSHEND, Richard W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Prince George's County, Md., April 30, 1840. Between the ages of 10 and 18 he attended public and private schools at Washington, D. C. In 1858 he came to Illinois, where he began teaching, at the same time reading law with S. S. Marshall, at McLeansboro, where he was admitted to the bar in 1862, and where he began practice. From 1863 to 1868 he was Circuit Clerk of Hamilton County, and, from 1868 to 1872, Prosecuting Attorney for the Twelfth Judicial Circuit. In 1873 he removed to Shawneetown, where he became an officer of the Gallatin National Bank. From 1864 to 1875 he was a member of the Democratic State Central Committee, and a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Baltimore, in 1872. For twelve years (1877 to 1889) he represented his District in Congress; was re-elected in 1888, but died, March 9, 1889, a few days after the beginning of his seventh term.

TRACY, John M., artist, was born in Illinois about 1842; served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil War; studied painting in Paris in 1866-76; established himself as a portrait painter in St. Louis and, later, won a high reputation as a painter of animals, being regarded as an authority on the anatomy of the horse and the dog. Died, at Ocean Springs, Miss., March 20, 1893.

TREASURERS. (See State Treasurers.)

TREAT, Samuel Hubbel, lawyer and jurist, was born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., June 21, 1811, worked on his father's farm and studied law at Richfield, where he was admitted to practice. In 1834 he came to Springfield, Ill., traveling most of the way on foot. Here he formed a partnership with George Forquer, who had held the offices of Secretary of State and Attorney-General. In 1839 he was appointed a Circuit Judge, and, on the reorganization of the Supreme Court in 1841, was elevated to the Supreme bench, being acting Chief Justice at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848. Having been elected to the Supreme bench under the new Constitution, he remained in office until March, 1855, when he resigned to take the position of Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, to which he had been appointed by President Pierce. This position he continued to occupy until his death, which occurred at Springfield, March 27, 1887. Judge Treat's judicial career was one of the longest in the history of the State, covering a period of forty-eight years, of which fourteen were spent upon the Supreme bench, and thirty-two in the position of Judge of the United States District Court.

TREATIES. (See Greenville, Treaty of; Indian Treaties.)

TREE, Lambert, jurist, diplomat and ex-Congressman, was born in Washington, D. C., Nov. 29, 1832, of an ancestry distinguished in the War of the Revolution. He received a superior classical and professional education, and was admitted to the bar, at Washington, in October, 1855. Removing to Chicago soon afterward, his professional career has been chiefly connected with that city. In 1864 he was chosen President of the Law Institute, and served as Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, from 1870 to 1875, when he resigned. The three following years he spent in foreign travel, returning to Chicago in 1878. In that year, and again in 1880, he was the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Fourth Illinois District, but was defeated by his Republican opponent. In 1885 he was the candidate of his party for United States Senator, but was defeated by John A. Logan, by one vote. In 1884 he was a member of the National Democratic Convention which first nominated Grover Cleveland, and, in July, 1885, President Cleveland appointed him Minister to Belgium, conferring the Russian mission upon him in September, 1888. On March 3, 1889, he resigned this post and returned home. In 1890 he was appointed by President Harrison a Commissioner to the International Monetary Conference at Washington. The year before he had attended (although not as a delegate) the International Conference, at Brussels, looking to the suppression of the slave-trade, where he exerted all his influence on the side of humanity. In 1892 Belgium conferred upon him the distinction of "Councillor of Honor" upon its commission to the World's Columbian Exposition. In 1896 Judge Tree was one of the most earnest opponents of the free-silver policy, and, after the Spanish-American War, a zealous advocate of the policy of retaining the territory acquired from Spain.

TREMONT, a town of Tazewell County, on the Peoria Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 9 miles southeast of Pekin; has two banks, two telephone exchanges, and one newspaper. Pop. (1900), 768.

TRENTON, a town of Clinton County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 31 miles east of St. Louis; in agricultural district; has creamery, milk condensery, two coal mines, six churches, a public school and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,384; (1900), 1,706; (1904), about 2,000.

TROY, a village of Madison County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis railroad, 21 miles northeast of St. Louis; has churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,080.

TRUITT, James Madison, lawyer and soldier, a native of Trimble County, Ky., was born Feb. 12, 1842, but lived in Illinois since 1843, his father having settled near Carrollton that year; was educated at Hillsboro and at McKendree College; enlisted in the One Hundred and Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers in 1862, and was promoted from the ranks to Lieutenant. After the war he studied law with Jesse J. Phillips, now of the Supreme Court, and, in 1872, was elected to the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1888, a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Mr. Truitt has been twice a prominent but unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for Attorney-General. His home is at Hillsboro, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession. Died July 26, 1900.

TRUMBULL, Lyman, statesman, was born at Colchester, Conn., Oct. 12, 1813, descended from a historical family, being a grand-nephew of Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, of Connecticut, from whom the name "Brother Jonathan" was derived as an appellation for Americans. Having received an academic education in his native town, at the age of 16 he began teaching a district school near his home, went South four years later, and engaged in teaching at Greenville, Ga. Here he studied law with Judge Hiram Warner, afterwards of the Supreme Court, and was admitted to the bar in 1837. Leaving Georgia the same year, he came to Illinois on horseback, visiting Vandalia, Belleville, Jacksonville, Springfield, Tremont and La Salle, and finally reaching Chicago, then a village of four or five thousand inhabitants. At Jacksonville he obtained a license to practice from Judge Lockwood, and, after visiting Michigan and his native State, he settled at Belleville, which continued to be his home for twenty years. His entrance into public life began with his election as Representative in the General Assembly in 1840. This was followed, in February, 1841, by his appointment by Governor Carlin, Secretary of State, as the successor of Stephen A. Douglas, who, after holding the position only two months, had resigned to accept a seat on the Supreme bench. Here he remained two years, when he was removed by Governor Ford, March 4, 1843, but, five years later (1848), was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, was re-elected in 1852, but resigned in 1853 on account of impaired health. A year later (1854) he was elected to Congress from the Belleville District as an anti-Nebraska Democrat, but, before taking his seat, was promoted to the United States Senate, as the successor of General Shields in the memorable contest of 1855, which resulted in the defeat of Abraham Lincoln. Senator Trumbull's career of eighteen years in the United States Senate (being re-elected in 1861 and 1867) is one of the most memorable in the history of that body, covering, as it does, the whole history of the war for the Union, and the period of reconstruction which followed it. During this period, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Judiciary, he had more to do in shaping legislation on war and reconstruction measures than any other single member of that body. While he disagreed with a large majority of his Republican associates on the question of Andrew Johnson's impeachment, he was always found in sympathy with them on the vital questions affecting the war and restoration of the Union. The Civil Rights Bill and Freedmen's Bureau Bills were shaped by his hand. In 1872 he joined in the "Liberal Republican" movement and afterwards co-operated with the Democratic party, being their candidate for Governor in 1880. From 1863 his home was in Chicago, where, after retiring from the Senate, he continued in the practice of his profession until his death, which occurred in that city, June 25, 1896.

TUG MILLS. These were a sort of primitive machine used in grinding corn in Territorial and early State days. The mechanism consisted of an upright shaft, into the upper end of which were fastened bars, resembling those in the capstan of a ship. Into the outer end of each of these bars was driven a pin. A belt, made of a broad strip of ox-hide, twisted into a sort of rope, was stretched around these pins and wrapped twice around a circular piece of wood called a trundle head, through which passed a perpendicular flat bar of iron, which turned the mill-stone, usually about eighteen inches in diameter. From the upright shaft projected a beam, to which were hitched one or two horses, which furnished the motive power. Oxen were sometimes employed as motive power in lieu of horses. These rudimentary contrivances were capable of grinding about twelve bushels of corn, each, per day.

TULEY, Murray Floyd, lawyer and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., March 4, 1827, of English extraction and descended from the early settlers of Virginia. His father died in 1832, and, eleven years later, his mother, having married Col. Richard J. Hamilton, for many years a prominent lawyer of Chicago, removed with her family to that city. Young Tuley began reading law with his step-father and completed his studies at the Louisville Law Institute in 1847, the same year being admitted to the bar in Chicago. About the same time he enlisted in the Fifth Illinois Volunteers for service in the Mexican War, and was commissioned First Lieutenant. The war having ended, he settled at Santa Fe, N. M., where he practiced law, also served as Attorney-General and in the Territorial Legislature. Returning to Chicago in 1854, he was associated in practice, successively, with Andrew Harvie, Judge Gary and J. N. Barker, and finally as head of the firm of Tuley, Stiles & Lewis. From 1869 to 1873 he was Corporation Counsel, and during this time framed the General Incorporation Act for Cities, under which the City of Chicago was reincorporated. In 1879 he was elevated to the bench of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected every six years thereafter, his last election being in 1897. He is now serving his fourth term, some ten years of his incumbency having been spent in the capacity of Chief Justice.

TUNNICLIFFE, Damon G., lawyer and jurist, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., August 20, 1829; at the age of 20, emigrated to Illinois, settling in Vermont, Fulton County, where, for a time, he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. He subsequently studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1853. In 1854 he established himself at Macomb, McDonough County, where he built up a large and lucrative practice. In 1868 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, from February to June, 1885, by appointment of Governor Oglesby, occupied a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, vice Pinkney H. Walker, deceased, who had been one of his first professional preceptors.

TURCHIN, John Basil (Ivan Vasilevitch Turchinoff), soldier, engineer and author, was born in Russia, Jan. 30, 1822. He graduated from the artillery school at St. Petersburg, in 1841, and was commissioned ensign; participated in the Hungarian campaign of 1849, and, in 1852, was assigned to the staff of the Imperial Guards; served through the Crimean War, rising to the rank of Colonel, and being made senior staff officer of the active corps. In 1856 he came to this country, settling in Chicago, and, for five years, was in the service of the Illinois Central Railway Company as topographical engineer. In 1861 he was commissioned Colonel of the Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, and, after leading his regiment in Missouri, Kentucky and Alabama, was, on July 7, 1862, promoted to a Brigadier-Generalship, being attached to the Army of the Cumberland until 1864, when he resigned. After the war he was, for six years, solicitor of patents at Chicago, but, in 1873, returned to engineering. In 1879 he established a Polish colony at Radom, in Washington County, in this State, and settled as a farmer. He is an occasional contributor to the press, writing usually on military or scientific subjects, and is the author of the "Campaign and Battle of Chickamauga" (Chicago, 1888).

TURNER (now WEST CHICAGO), a town and manufacturing center in Winfield Township, Du Page County, 30 miles west of Chicago, at the junction of two divisions of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. The town has a rolling-mill, manufactories of wagons and pumps, and railroad repair shops. It also has five churches, a graded school, and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 1,877; with suburb, 2,270.

TURNER, (Col.) Henry L., soldier and real-estate operator, was born at Oberlin, Ohio, August 26, 1845, and received a part of his education in the college there. During the Civil War he served as First Lieutenant in the One Hundred and Fiftieth Ohio Volunteers, and later, with the same rank in a colored regiment, taking part in the operations about Richmond, the capture of Fort Fisher, of Wilmington and of Gen. Joe Johnston's army. Coming to Chicago after the close of the war, he became connected with the business office of "The Advance," but later was employed in the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., in Philadelphia. On the failure of that concern, in 1872, he returned to Chicago and bought "The Advance," which he conducted some two years, when he sold out and engaged in the real estate business, with which he has since been identified—being President of the Chicago Real Estate Board in 1888. He has also been President of the Western Publishing Company and a Trustee of Oberlin College. Colonel Turner is an enthusiastic member of the Illinois National Guard and, on the declaration of war between the United States and Spain, in April, 1898, promptly resumed his connection with the First Regiment of the Guard, and finally led it to Santiago de Cuba during the fighting there—his regiment being the only one from Illinois to see actual service in the field during the progress of the war. Colonel Turner won the admiration of his command and the entire nation by the manner in which he discharged his duty. The regiment was mustered out at Chicago, Nov. 17, 1898, when he retired to private life.

TURNER, John Bice, Railway President, was born at Colchester, Delaware County, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1799; after a brief business career in his native State, he became identified with the construction and operation of railroads. Among the works with which he was thus connected, were the Delaware Division of the New York & Erie and the Troy & Schenectady Roads. In 1843 he came to Chicago, having previously purchased a large body of land at Blue Island. In 1847 he joined with W. B. Ogden and others, in resuscitating the Galena & Chicago Union Railway, which had been incorporated in 1836. He became President of the Company in 1850, and assisted in constructing various sections of road in Northern Illinois and Wisconsin, which have since become portions of the Chicago & Northwestern system. He was also one of the original Directors of the North Side Street Railway Company, organized in 1859. Died, Feb. 26, 1871.

TURNER, Jonathan Baldwin, educator and agriculturist, was born in Templeton, Mass., Dec. 7, 1805; grew up on a farm and, before reaching his majority, began teaching in a country school. After spending a short time in an academy at Salem, in 1827 he entered the preparatory department of Yale College, supporting himself, in part, by manual labor and teaching in a gymnasium. In 1829 he matriculated in the classical department at Yale, graduated in 1833, and the same year accepted a position as tutor in Illinois College at Jacksonville, Ill., which had been opened, three years previous, by the late Dr. J. M. Sturtevant. In the next fourteen years he gave instruction in nearly every branch embraced in the college curriculum, though holding, during most of this period, the chair of Rhetoric and English Literature. In 1847 he retired from college duties to give attention to scientific agriculture, in which he had always manifested a deep interest. The cultivation and sale of the Osage orange as a hedge plant now occupied his attention for many years, and its successful introduction in Illinois and other Western States—where the absence of timber rendered some substitute a necessity for fencing purposes—was largely due to his efforts. At the same time he took a deep interest in the cause of practical scientific education for the industrial classes, and, about 1850, began formulating that system of industrial education which, after twelve years of labor and agitation, he had the satisfaction of seeing recognized in the act adopted by Congress, and approved by President Lincoln, in July, 1862, making liberal donations of public lands for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States, out of which grew the University of Illinois at Champaign. While Professor Turner had zealous collaborators in this field, in Illinois and elsewhere, to him, more than to any other single man in the Nation, belongs the credit for this magnificent achievement. (See Education, and University of Illinois.) He was also one of the chief factors in founding and building up the Illinois State Teachers' Association, and the State Agricultural and Horticultural Societies. His address on "The Millennium of Labor," delivered at the first State Agricultural Fair at Springfield, in 1853, is still remembered as marking an era in industrial progress in Illinois. A zealous champion of free thought, in both political and religious affairs, he long bore the reproach which attached to the radical Abolitionist, only to enjoy, in later years, the respect universally accorded to those who had the courage and independence to avow their honest convictions. Prof. Turner was twice an unsuccessful candidate for Congress—once as a Republican and once as an "Independent"—and wrote much on political, religious and educational topics. The evening of an honored and useful life was spent among friends in Jacksonville, which was his home for more than sixty years, his death taking place in that city, Jan. 10, 1899, at the advanced age of 93 years.—Mrs. Mary Turner Carriel, at the present time (1899) one of the Trustees of the University of Illinois, is Prof. Turner's only daughter.

TURNER, Thomas J., lawyer and Congressman, born in Trumbull County, Ohio, April 5, 1815. Leaving home at the age of 18, he spent three years in Indiana and in the mining districts about Galena and in Southern Wisconsin, locating in Stephenson County, in 1836, where he was admitted to the bar in 1840, and elected Probate Judge in 1841. Soon afterwards Governor Ford appointed him Prosecuting Attorney, in which capacity he secured the conviction and punishment of the murderers of Colonel Davenport. In 1846 he was elected to Congress as a Democrat, and, the following year, founded "The Prairie Democrat" (afterward "The Freeport Bulletin"), the first newspaper published in the county. Elected to the Legislature in 1854, he was chosen Speaker of the House, the next year becoming the first Mayor of Freeport. He was a member of the Peace Conference of 1861, and, in May of that year, was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Colonel of the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers, but resigned in 1862. He served as a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1871, was again elected to the Legislature, where he received the Democratic caucus nomination for United States Senator against General Logan. In 1871 he removed to Chicago, and was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the office of State's Attorney. In February, 1874, he went to Hot Springs, Ark., for medical treatment, and died there, April 3 following.

TUSCOLA, a city and the county-seat of Douglas County, located at the intersection of the Illinois Central and two other trunk lines of railway, 22 miles south of Champaign, and 36 miles east of Decatur. Besides a brick court-house it has five churches, a graded school, a national bank, two weekly newspapers and two establishments for the manufacture of carriages and wagons. Population (1880), 1,457; (1890), 1,897; (1900), 2,569.

TUSCOLA, CHARLESTON & VINCENNES RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TUTHILL, Richard Stanley, jurist, was born at Vergennes, Jackson County, Ill., Nov. 10, 1841. After passing through the common schools of his native county, he took a preparatory course in a high school at St. Louis and in Illinois College, Jacksonville, when he entered Middlebury College, Vt., graduating there in 1863. Immediately thereafter he joined the Federal army at Vicksburg, and, after serving for some time in a company of scouts attached to General Logan's command, was commissioned a Lieutenant in the First Michigan Light Artillery, with which he served until the close of the war, meanwhile being twice promoted. During this time he was with General Sherman in the march to Meridian, and in the Atlanta campaign, also took part with General Thomas in the operations against the rebel General Hood in Tennessee, and in the battle of Nashville. Having resigned his commission in May, 1865, he took up the study of law, which he had prosecuted as he had opportunity while in the army, and was admitted to the bar at Nashville in 1866, afterwards serving for a time as Prosecuting Attorney on the Nashville circuit. In 1873 he removed to Chicago, two years later was elected City Attorney and re-elected in 1877; was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880 and, in 1884, was appointed United States District Attorney for the Northern District, serving until 1886. In 1887 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Rogers, was re-elected for a full term in 1891, and again in 1897.

TYNDALE, Sharon, Secretary of State, born in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 19, 1816; at the age of 17 came to Belleville, Ill., and was engaged for a time in mercantile business, later being employed in a surveyor's corps under the internal improvement system of 1837. Having married in 1839, he returned soon after to Philadelphia, where he engaged in mercantile business with his father;

then came to Illinois, a second time, in 1845, spending a year or two in business at Peoria. About 1847 he returned to Belleville and entered upon a course of mathematical study, with a view to fitting himself more thoroughly for the profession of a civil engineer. In 1851 he graduated in engineering at Cambridge, Mass., after which he was employed for a time on the Sunbury & Erie Railroad, and later on certain Illinois railroads. In 1857 he was elected County Surveyor of St. Clair County, and, in 1861, by appointment of President Lincoln, became Postmaster of the city of Belleville. He held this position until 1864, when he received the Republican nomination for Secretary of State and was elected, remaining in office four years. He was an earnest advocate, and virtually author, of the first act for the registration of voters in Illinois, passed at the session of 1865. After retiring from office in 1869, he continued to reside in Springfield, and was employed for a time in the survey of the Gilman, Clinton & Springfield Railway—now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central. At an early hour on the morning of April 29, 1871, while going from his home to the railroad station at Springfield, to take the train for St. Louis, he was assassinated upon the street by shooting, as supposed for the purpose of robbery—his dead body being found a few hours later at the scene of the tragedy. Mr. Tyndale was a brother of Gen. Hector Tyndale of Pennsylvania, who won a high reputation by his services during the war. His second wife, who survived him, was a daughter of Shadrach Penn, an editor of considerable reputation who was the contemporary and rival of George D. Prentice at Louisville, for some years.

"UNDERGROUND RAILROAD," THE. A history of Illinois would be incomplete without reference to the unique system which existed there, as in other Northern States, from forty to seventy years ago, known by the somewhat mysterious title of "The Underground Railroad." The origin of the term has been traced (probably in a spirit of facetiousness) to the expression of a Kentucky planter who, having pursued a fugitive slave across the Ohio River, was so surprised by his sudden disappearance, as soon as he had reached the opposite shore, that he was led to remark, "The nigger must have gone off on an underground road." From "underground road" to "underground railroad," the transition would appear to have been easy, especially in view of the increased facility with which the work was performed when railroads came into use. For readers of the present generation, it may be well to explain what "The Underground Railroad" really was. It may be defined as the figurative appellation for a spontaneous movement in the free States—extending, sometimes, into the slave States themselves—to assist slaves in their efforts to escape from bondage to freedom. The movement dates back to a period close to the Revolutionary War, long before it received a definite name. Assistance given to fugitives from one State by citizens of another, became a cause of complaint almost as soon as the Government was organized. In fact, the first President himself lost a slave who took refuge at Portsmouth, N. H., where the public sentiment was so strong against his return, that the patriotic and philosophic "Father of his Country" chose to let him remain unmolested, rather than "excite a mob or riot, or even uneasy sensations, in the minds of well-disposed citizens." That the matter was already one of concern in the minds of slaveholders, is shown by the fact that a provision was inserted in the Constitution for their conciliation, guaranteeing the return of fugitives from labor, as well as from justice, from one State to another.

In 1793 Congress passed the first Fugitive Slave Law, which was signed by President Washington. This law provided that the owner, his agent or attorney, might follow the slave into any State or Territory, and, upon oath or affidavit before a court or magistrate, be entitled to a warrant for his return. Any person who should hinder the arrest of the fugitive, or who should harbor, aid or assist him, knowing him to be such, was subject to a fine of $500 for each offense.—In 1850, fifty-seven years later, the first act having proved inefficacious, or conditions having changed, a second and more stringent law was enacted. This is the one usually referred to in discussions of the subject. It provided for an increased fine, not to exceed $1,000, and imprisonment not exceeding six months, with liability for civil damages to the party injured. No proof of ownership was required beyond the statement of a claimant, and the accused was not permitted to testify for himself. The fee of the United States Commissioner, before whom the case was tried, was ten dollars if he found for the claimant; if not, five dollars. This seemed to many an indirect form of bribery; clearly, it made it to the Judge's pecuniary advantage to decide in favor of the claimant. The law made it possible and easy for a white man to arrest, and carry into slavery, any free negro who could not immediately prove, by other witnesses, that he was born free, or had purchased his freedom.

Instead of discouraging the disposition, on the part of the opponents of slavery, to aid fugitives in their efforts to reach a region where they would be secure in their freedom, the effect of the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850 (as that of 1793 had been in a smaller degree) was the very opposite of that intended by its authors—unless, indeed, they meant to make matters worse. The provisions of the act seemed, to many people, so unfair, so one-sided, that they rebelled in spirit and refused to be made parties to its enforcement. The law aroused the anti-slavery sentiment of the North, and stimulated the active friends of the fugitives to take greater risks in their behalf. New efforts on the part of the slaveholders were met by a determination to evade, hinder and nullify the law.

And here a strange anomaly is presented. The slaveholder, in attempting to recover his slave, was acting within his constitutional and legal rights. The slave was his property in law. He had purchased or inherited his bondman on the same plane with his horse or his land, and, apart from the right to hold a human being in bondage, regarded his legal rights to the one as good as the other. From a legal standpoint his position was impregnable. The slave was his, representing so much of money value, and whoever was instrumental in the loss of that slave was, both theoretically and technically, a partner in robbery. Therefore he looked on "The Underground Railway" as the work of thieves, and entertained bitter hatred toward all concerned in its operation. On the other hand, men who were, in all other respects, good citizens—often religiously devout and pillars of the church—became bold and flagrant violators of the law in relation to this sort of property. They set at nought a plain provision of the Constitution and the act of Congress for its enforcement. Without hope of personal gain or reward, at the risk of fine and imprisonment, with the certainty of social ostracism and bitter opposition, they harbored the fugitive and helped him forward on every occasion. And why? Because they saw in him a man, with the same inherent right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" that they themselves possessed. To them this was a higher law than any Legislature, State or National, could enact. They denied that there could be truly such a thing as property in man. Believing that the law violated human rights, they justified themselves in rendering it null and void.

For the most part, the "Underground Railroad" operators and promoters were plain, obscure men, without hope of fame or desire for notoriety. Yet there were some whose names are conspicuous in history, such as Wendell Phillips, Thomas Wentworth Higginson and Theodore Parker of Massachusetts; Gerrit Smith and Thurlow Weed of New York; Joshua R. Giddings of Ohio, and Owen Lovejoy of Illinois. These had their followers and sympathizers in all the Northern States, and even in some portions of the South. It is a curious fact, that some of the most active spirits connected with the "Underground Railroad" were natives of the South, or had resided there long enough to become thoroughly acquainted with the "institution." Levi Coffin, who had the reputation of being the "President of the Underground Railroad"—at least so far as the region west of the Ohio was concerned—was an active operator on the line in North Carolina before his removal from that State to Indiana in 1826. Indeed, as a system, it is claimed to have had its origin at Guilford College, in the "Old North State" in 1819, though the evidence of this may not be conclusive.

Owing to the peculiar nature of their business, no official reports were made, no lists of officers, conductors, station agents or operators preserved, and few records kept which are now accessible. Consequently, we are dependent chiefly upon the personal recollection of individual operators for a history of their transactions. Each station on the road was the house of a "friend" and it is significant, in this connection, that in every settlement of Friends, or Quakers, there was sure to be a house of refuge for the slave. For this reason it was, perhaps, that one of the most frequently traveled lines extended from Virginia and Maryland through Eastern Pennsylvania, and then on towards New York or directly to Canada. From the proximity of Ohio to Virginia and Kentucky, and the fact that it offered the shortest route through free soil to Canada, it was traversed by more lines than any other State, although Indiana was pretty thoroughly "grid-ironed" by roads to freedom. In all, however, the routes were irregular, often zigzag, for purposes of security, and the "conductor" was any one who conveyed fugitives from one station to another. The "train" was sometimes a farm-wagon, loaded with produce for market at some town (or depot) on the line, frequently a closed carriage, and it is related that once, in Ohio, a number of carriages conveying a large party, were made to represent a funeral procession. Occasionally the train ran on foot, for convenience of side-tracking into the woods or a cornfield, in case of pursuit by a wild locomotive.

Then, again, there were not wanting lawyers who, in case the operator, conductor or station agent got into trouble, were ready, without fee or reward, to defend either him or his human freight in the courts. These included such names of national repute as Salmon P. Chase, Thaddeus Stevens, Charles Sumner, William H. Seward, Rutherford B. Hayes, Richard H. Dana, and Isaac N. Arnold, while, taking the whole country over, their "name was legion." And there were a few men of wealth, like Thomas Garrett of Delaware, willing to contribute money by thousands to their assistance. Although technically acting in violation of law—or, as claimed by themselves, in obedience to a "higher law"—the time has already come when there is a disposition to look upon the actors as, in a certain sense, heroes, and their deeds as fitly belonging to the field of romance.

The most comprehensive collection of material relating to the history of this movement has been furnished in a recent volume entitled, "The Underground Railroad from Slavery to Freedom," by Prof. Wilbur H. Siebert, of Ohio State University; and, while it is not wholly free from errors, both as to individual names and facts, it will probably remain as the best compilation of history bearing on this subject—especially as the principal actors are fast passing away. One of the interesting features of Prof. Siebert's book is a map purporting to give the principal routes and stations in the States northwest of the Ohio, yet the accuracy of this, as well as the correctness of personal names given, has been questioned by some best informed on the subject. As might be expected from its geographical position between two slave States—Kentucky and Missouri—on the one hand, and the lakes offering a highway to Canada on the other, it is naturally to be assumed that Illinois would be an attractive field, both for the fugitive and his sympathizer.

The period of greatest activity of the system in this State was between 1840 and 1861—the latter being the year when the pro-slavery party in the South, by their attempt forcibly to dissolve the Union, took the business out of the hands of the secret agents of the "Underground Railroad," and—in a certain sense—placed it in the hands of the Union armies. It was in 1841 that Abraham Lincoln—then a conservative opponent of the extension of slavery—on an appeal from a judgment, rendered by the Circuit Court in Tazewell County, in favor of the holder of a note given for the service of the indentured slave-girl "Nance," obtained a decision from the Supreme Court of Illinois upholding the doctrine that the girl was free under the Ordinance of 1787 and the State Constitution, and that the note, given to the person who claimed to be her owner, was void. And it is a somewhat curious coincidence that the same Abraham Lincoln, as President of the United States, in the second year of the War of the Rebellion, issued the Proclamation of Emancipation which finally resulted in striking the shackles from the limbs of every slave in the Union.

In the practical operation of aiding fugitives in Illinois, it was natural that the towns along the border upon the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, should have served as a sort of entrepôts, or initial stations, for the reception of this class of freight—especially if adjacent to some anti-slavery community. This was the case at Chester, from which access was easy to Sparta, where a colony of Covenanters, or Seceders, was located, and whence a route extended, by way of Oakdale, Nashville and Centralia, in the direction of Chicago. Alton offered convenient access to Bond County, where there was a community of anti-slavery people at an early day, or the fugitives could be forwarded northward by way of Jerseyville, Waverly and Jacksonville, about each of which there was a strong anti-slavery sentiment. Quincy, in spite of an intense hostility among the mass of the community to anything savoring of abolitionism, became the theater of great activity on the part of the opponents of the institution, especially after the advent there of Dr. David Nelson and Dr. Richard Eells, both of whom had rendered themselves obnoxious to the people of Missouri by extending aid to fugitives. The former was a practical abolitionist who, having freed his slaves in his native State of Virginia, removed to Missouri and attempted to establish Marion College, a few miles from Palmyra, but was soon driven to Illinois. Locating near Quincy, he founded the "Mission Institute" there, at which he continued to disseminate his anti-slavery views, while educating young men for missionary work. The "Institute" was finally burned by emissaries from Missouri, while three young men who had been connected with it, having been caught in Missouri, were condemned to twelve years' confinement in the penitentiary of that State—partly on the testimony of a negro, although a negro was not then a legal witness in the courts against a white man. Dr. Eells was prosecuted before Stephen A. Douglas (then a Judge of the Circuit Court), and fined for aiding a fugitive to escape, and the judgment against him was finally confirmed by the Supreme Court after his death, in 1852, ten years after the original indictment.

A map in Professor Siebert's book, showing the routes and principal stations of the "Underground Railroad," makes mention of the following places in Illinois, in addition to those already referred to: Carlinville, in Macoupin County; Payson and Mendon, in Adams; Washington, in Tazewell; Metamora, in Woodford; Magnolia, in Putnam; Galesburg, in Knox; Princeton (the home of Owen Lovejoy and the Bryants), in Bureau; and many more. Ottawa appears to have been the meeting point of a number of lines, as well as the home of a strong colony of practical abolitionists. Cairo also became an important transfer station for fugitives arriving by river, after the completion of the Illinois Central Railroad, especially as it offered the speediest way of reaching Chicago, towards which nearly all the lines converged. It was here that the fugitives could be most safely disposed of by placing them upon vessels, which, without stopping at intermediate ports, could soon land them on Canadian soil.

As to methods, these differed according to circumstances, the emergencies of the occasion, or the taste, convenience or resources of the operator. Deacon Levi Morse, of Woodford County, near Metamora, had a route towards Magnolia, Putnam County; and his favorite "car" was a farm wagon in which there was a double bottom. The passengers were snugly placed below, and grain sacks, filled with bran or other light material, were laid over, so that the whole presented the appearance of an ordinary load of grain on its way to market. The same was true as to stations and routes. One, who was an operator, says: "Wherever an abolitionist happened on a fugitive, or the converse, there was a station, for the time, and the route was to the next anti-slavery man to the east or the north. As a general rule, the agent preferred not to know anything beyond the operation of his own immediate section of the road. If he knew nothing about the operations of another, and the other knew nothing of his, they could not be witnesses in court.

We have it on the authority of Judge Harvey B. Hurd, of Chicago, that runaways were usually forwarded from that city to Canada by way of the Lakes, there being several steamers available for that purpose. On one occasion thirteen were put aboard a vessel under the eyes of a United States Marshal and his deputies. The fugitives, secreted in a woodshed, one by one took the places of colored stevedores carrying wood aboard the ship. Possibly the term, "There's a nigger in the woodpile," may have originated in this incident. Thirteen was an "unlucky number" in this instance—for the masters.

Among the notable trials for assisting runaways in violation of the Fugitive Slave Law, in addition to the case of Dr. Eells, already mentioned, were those of Owen Lovejoy of Princeton, and Deacon Cushing of Will County, both of whom were defended by Judge James Collins of Chicago. John Hossack and Dr. Joseph Stout of Ottawa, with some half-dozen of their neighbors and friends, were tried at Ottawa, in 1859, for assisting a fugitive and acquitted on a technicality. A strong array of attorneys, afterwards widely known through the northern part of the State, appeared for the defense, including Isaac N. Arnold, Joseph Knox, B. C. Cook, J. V. Eustace, Edward S. Leland and E. C. Larned. Joseph T. Morse, of Woodford County, was also arrested, taken to Peoria and committed to jail, but acquitted on trial.

Another noteworthy case was that of Dr. Samuel Willard (now of Chicago) and his father, Julius A. Willard, charged with assisting in the escape of a fugitive at Jacksonville, in 1843, when the Doctor was a student in Illinois College. "The National Corporation Reporter," a few years ago, gave an account of this affair, together with a letter from Dr. Willard, in which he states that, after protracted litigation, during which the case was carried to the Supreme Court, it was ended by his pleading guilty before Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, when he was fined one dollar and costs—the latter amounting to twenty dollars. The Doctor frankly adds: "My father, as well as myself, helped many fugitives afterwards." It did not always happen, however, that offenders escaped so easily.

Judge Harvey B. Hurd, already referred to, and an active anti-slavery man in the days of the Fugitive Slave Law, relates the following: Once, when the trial of a fugitive was going on before Justice Kercheval, in a room on the second floor of a two-story frame building on Clark Street in the city of Chicago, the crowd in attendance filled the room, the stairway and the adjoining sidewalk. In some way the prisoner got mixed in with the audience, and passed down over the heads of those on the stairs, where the officers were unable to follow.

In another case, tried before United States Commissioner Geo. W. Meeker, the result was made to hinge upon a point in the indictment to the effect that the fugitive was "copper-colored." The Commissioner, as the story goes, being inclined to favor public sentiment, called for a large copper cent, that he might make comparison. The decision was, that the prisoner was "off color," so to speak, and he was hustled out of the room before the officers could re-arrest him, as they had been instructed to do.

Dr. Samuel Willard, in a review of Professor Siebert's book, published in "The Dial" of Chicago, makes mention of Henry Irving and William Chauncey Carter as among his active allies at Jacksonville, with Rev. Bilious Pond and Deacon Lyman of Farmington (near the present village of Farmingdale in Sangamon County), Luther Ransom of Springfield, Andrew Borders of Randolph County, Joseph Gerrish of Jersey and William T. Allan of Henry, as their coadjutors in other parts of the State. Other active agents or promoters, in the same field, included such names as Dr. Charles V. Dyer, Philo Carpenter, Calvin De Wolf, L. C. P. Freer, Zebina Eastman, James H. Collins, Harvey B. Hurd, J. Young Scammon, Col. J. F. Farnsworth and others of Chicago, whose names have already been mentioned; Rev. Asa Turner, Deacon Ballard, J. K. Van Dorn and Erastus Benton, of Quincy and Adams County; President Rufus Blanchard of Knox College, Galesburg; John Leeper of Bond; the late Prof. J. B. Turner and Elihu Wolcott of Jacksonville; Capt. Parker Morse and his four sons—Joseph T., Levi P., Parker, Jr., and Mark—of Woodford County; Rev. William Sloane of Randolph; William Strawn of La Salle, besides a host who were willing to aid their fellow men in their aspirations to freedom, without advertising their own exploits.

Among the incidents of "Underground Railroad" in Illinois is one which had some importance politically, having for its climax a dramatic scene in Congress, but of which, so far as known, no full account has ever been written. About 1855, Ephraim Lombard, a Mississippi planter, but a New Englander by birth, purchased a large body of prairie land in the northeastern part of Stark County, and, taking up his residence temporarily in the village of Bradford, began its improvement. He had brought with him from Mississippi a negro, gray-haired and bent with age, a slave of probably no great value. "Old Mose," as he was called, soon came to be well known and a favorite in the neighborhood. Lombard boldly stated that he had brought him there as a slave; that, by virtue of the Dred Scott decision (then of recent date), he had a constitutional right to take his slaves wherever he pleased, and that "Old Mose" was just as much his property in Illinois as in Mississippi. It soon became evident to some, that his bringing of the negro to Illinois was an experiment to test the law and the feelings of the Northern people. This being the case, a shrewd play would have been to let him have his way till other slaves should have been brought to stock the new plantation. But this was too slow a process for the abolitionists, to whom the holding of a slave in the free State of Illinois appeared an unbearable outrage. It was feared that he might take the old negro back to Mississippi and fail to bring any others. It was reported, also, that "Old Mose" was ill-treated; that he was given only the coarsest food in a back shed, as if he were a horse or a dog, instead of being permitted to eat at table with the family. The prairie citizen of that time was very particular upon this point of etiquette. The hired man or woman, debarred from the table of his or her employer, would not have remained a day. A quiet consultation with "Old Mose" revealed the fact that he would hail the gift of freedom joyously. Accordingly, one Peter Risedorf, and another equally daring, met him by the light of the stars and, before morning, he was placed in the care of Owen Lovejoy, at Princeton, twenty miles away. From there he was speedily "franked" by the member of Congress to friends in Canada.

There was a great commotion in Bradford over the "stealing" of "Old Mose." Lombard and his friends denounced the act in terms bitter and profane, and threatened vengeance upon the perpetrators. The conductors were known only to a few, and they kept their secret well. Lovejoy's part in the affair, however, soon leaked out. Lombard returned to Mississippi, where he related his experiences to Mr. Singleton, the Representative in Congress from his district. During the next session of Congress, Singleton took occasion, in a speech, to sneer at Lovejoy as a "nigger-stealer," citing the case of "Old Mose." Mr. Lovejoy replied in his usual fervid and dramatic style, making a speech which ensured his election to Congress for life—"Is it desired to call attention to this fact of my assisting fugitive slaves?" he said. "Owen Lovejoy lives at Princeton, Ill., three-quarters of a mile east of the village, and he aids every slave that comes to his door and asks it. Thou invisible Demon of Slavery, dost thou think to cross my humble threshold and forbid me to give bread to the hungry and shelter to the homeless? I bid you defiance, in the name of my God!"

With another incident of an amusing character this article may be closed: Hon. J. Young Scammon, of Chicago, being accused of conniving at the escape of a slave from officers of the law, was asked by the court what he would do if summoned as one of a posse to pursue and capture a fugitive. "I would certainly obey the summons," he replied, "but—I should probably stub my toe and fall down before I reached him."

NOTE.—Those who wish to pursue the subject of the "Underground Railroad" in Illinois further, are referred to the work of Dr. Siebert, already mentioned, and to the various County Histories which have been issued and may be found in the public libraries; also for interesting incidents, to "Reminiscences of Levi Coffin," Johnson's "From Dixie to Canada," Petit's Sketches, "Still, Underground Railroad," and a pamphlet of the same title by James H. Fairchild, ex-President of Oberlin College.

UNDERWOOD, William H., lawyer, legislator and jurist, was born at Schoharie Court House, N. Y., Feb. 21, 1818, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Belleville, Ill., where he began practice in 1840. The following year he was elected State's Attorney, and re-elected in 1843. In 1846 he was chosen a member of the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1848-54, sat as Judge of the Second Circuit. During this period he declined a nomination to Congress, although equivalent to an election. In 1856 he was elected State Senator, and re-elected in 1860. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1870, was again elected to the Senate, retiring to private life in 1872. Died, Sept. 23, 1875.

UNION COUNTY, one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the time of its admission as a State—having been organized, under the Territorial Government, in January, 1818. It is situated in the southern division of the State, bounded on the west by the Mississippi River, and has an area of 400 square miles. The eastern and interior portions are drained by the Cache River and Clear Creek. The western part of the county comprises the broad, rich bottom lands lying along the Mississippi, but is subject to frequent overflow, while the eastern portion is hilly, and most of its area originally heavily timbered. The county is especially rich in minerals. Iron-ore, lead, bituminous coal, chalk, alum and potter's clay are found in considerable abundance. Several lines of railway (the most important being the Illinois Central) either cross or tap the county. The chief occupation is agriculture, although manufacturing is carried on to a limited extent. Fruit is extensively cultivated. Jonesboro is the county-seat, and Cobden and Anna important shipping stations. The latter is the location of the Southern Hospital for the Insane. The population of the county, in 1890, was 21,529. Being next to St. Clair, Randolph and Gallatin, one of the earliest settled counties in the State, many prominent men found their first home, on coming into the State, at Jonesboro, and this region, for a time, exerted a strong influence in public affairs. Pop. (1900), 22,610.

UNION LEAGUE OF AMERICA, a secret political and patriotic order which had its origin early in the late Civil War, for the avowed purpose of sustaining the cause of the Union and counteracting the machinations of the secret organizations designed to promote the success of the Rebellion. The first regular Council of the order was organized at Pekin, Tazewell County, June 25, 1862, consisting of eleven members, as follows: John W. Glasgow, Dr. D. A. Cheever, Hart Montgomery, Maj. Richard N. Cullom (father of Senator Cullom), Alexander Small, Rev. J. W. M. Vernon, George H. Harlow (afterward Secretary of State), Charles Turner, Col. Jonathan Merriam, Henry Pratt and L. F. Garrett. One of the number was a Union refugee from Tennessee, who dictated the first oath from memory, as administered to members of a somewhat similar order which had been organized among the Unionists of his own State. It solemnly pledged the taker, (1) to preserve inviolate the secrets and business of the order; (2) to "support, maintain, protect and defend the civil liberties of the Union of these United States against all enemies, either domestic or foreign, at all times and under all circumstances," even "if necessary, to the sacrifice of life"; (3) to aid in electing only true Union men to offices of trust in the town, county, State and General Government; (4) to assist, protect and defend any member of the order who might be in peril from his connection with the order, and (5) to obey all laws, rules or regulations of any Council to which the taker of the oath might be attached. The oath was taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States, the taker pledging his sacred honor to its fulfillment. A special reason for the organization existed in the activity, about this time, of the "Knights of the Golden Circle," a disloyal organization which had been introduced from the South, and which afterwards took the name, in the North, of "American Knights" and "Sons of Liberty." (See Secret Treasonable Societies.) Three months later, the organization had extended to a number of other counties of the State and, on the 25th of September following, the first State Council met at Bloomington—twelve counties being represented—and a State organization was effected. At this meeting the following general officers were chosen: Grand President—Judge Mark Bangs, of Marshall County (now of Chicago); Grand Vice-President—Prof. Daniel Wilkin, of McLean; Grand Secretary—George H. Harlow, of Tazewell; Grand Treasurer—H. S. Austin, of Peoria, Grand Marshal—J. R. Gorin, of Macon; Grand Herald—A. Gould, of Henry; Grand Sentinel—John E. Rosette, of Sangamon. An Executive Committee was also appointed, consisting of Joseph Medill of "The Chicago Tribune"; Dr. A. J. McFarland, of Morgan County; J. K. Warren, of Macon; Rev. J. C. Rybolt, of La Salle; the President, Judge Bangs; Enoch Emery, of Peoria; and John E. Rosette. Under the direction of this Committee, with Mr. Medill as its Chairman, the constitution and by-laws were thoroughly revised and a new ritual adopted, which materially changed the phraseology and removed some of the crudities of the original obligation, as well as increased the beauty and impressiveness of the initiatory ceremonies. New signs, grips and pass-words were also adopted, which were finally accepted by the various organizations of the order throughout the Union, which, by this time, included many soldiers in the army, as well as civilians. The second Grand (or State) Council was held at Springfield, January 14, 1863, with only seven counties represented. The limited representation was discouraging, but the members took heart from the inspiring words of Governor Yates, addressed to a committee of the order who waited upon him. At a special session of the Executive Committee, held at Peoria, six days later, a vigorous campaign was mapped out, under which agents were sent into nearly every county in the State. In October, 1862, the strength of the order in Illinois was estimated at three to five thousand; a few months later, the number of enrolled members had increased to 50,000—so rapid had been the growth of the order. On March 25, 1863, a Grand Council met in Chicago—404 Councils in Illinois being represented, with a number from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. At this meeting a Committee was appointed to prepare a plan of organization for a National Grand Council, which was carried out at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 20th of May following—the constitution, ritual and signs of the Illinois organization being adopted with slight modifications. The revised obligation—taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States—bound members of the League to “support, protect and defend the Government of the United States and the flag thereof, against all enemies, foreign and domestic,” and to “bear true faith and allegiance to the same”; to “defend the State against invasion or insurrection”; to support only “true and reliable men” for offices of trust and profit; to protect and defend worthy members, and to preserve inviolate the secrets of the order. The address to new members was a model of impressiveness and a powerful appeal to their patriotism. The organization extended rapidly, not only throughout the Northwest, but in the South also, especially in the army. In 1864 the number of Councils in Illinois was estimated at 1,300, with a membership of 175,000; and it is estimated that the total membership, throughout the Union, was 2,000,000. The influence of the silent, but zealous and effective, operations of the organization, was shown, not only in the stimulus given to enlistments and support of the war policy of the Government, but in the raising of supplies for the sick and wounded soldiers in the field. Within a few weeks before the fall of Vicksburg, over $25,000 in cash, besides large quantities of stores, were sent to Col. John Williams (then in charge of the Sanitary Bureau at Springfield), as the direct result of appeals made through circulars sent out by the officers of the “League.” Large contributions of money and supplies also reached the sick and wounded in hospital through the medium of the Sanitary Commission in Chicago. Zealous efforts were made by the opposition to get at the secrets of the order, and, in one case, a complete copy of the ritual was published by one of their organs; but the effect was so far the reverse of what was anticipated, that this line of attack was not continued. During the stormy session of the Legislature in 1863, the League is said to have rendered effective service in protecting Governor Yates from threatened assassination. It continued its silent but effective operations until the complete overthrow of the rebellion, when it ceased to exist as a political organization.

UNITED STATES SENATORS. The following is a list of United States senators from Illinois, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union until 1899, with the date and duration of the term of each: Ninian Edwards, 1818-24; Jesse B. Thomas, Sr., 1818-29; John McLean, 1824-25 and 1829-30; Elias Kent Kane, 1825-35; David Jewett Baker, Nov. 12 to Dec. 11, 1830; John M. Robinson, 1830-41; William L. D. Ewing, 1835-37; Richard M. Young, 1837-43; Samuel McRoberts, 1841-43; Sidney Breese, 1843-49; James Semple, 1843-47; Stephen A. Douglas, 1847-61; James Shields, 1849-55; Lyman Trumbull, 1855-73; Orville H. Browning, 1861-63; William A. Richardson, 1863-65; Richard Yates, 1865-71; John A. Logan, 1871-77 and 1879-86; Richard J. Oglesby, 1873-79; David Davis, 1877-83; Shelby M. Cullom, first elected in 1883, and re-elected in '89 and '95, his third term expiring in 1901; Charles B. Farwell, 1887-91; John McAuley Palmer, 1891-97; William E. Mason, elected in 1897, for the term expiring, March 4, 1903.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The New). One of the leading educational institutions of the country, located at Chicago. It is the outgrowth of an attempt, put forth by the American Educational Society (organized at Washington in 1888), to supply the place which the original institution of the same name had been designed to fill. (See University of Chicago—The Old.) The following year, Mr. John D. Rockefeller of New York tendered a contribution of $600,000 toward the endowment of the enterprise, conditioned upon securing additional pledges to the amount of $400,000 by June 1, 1890. The offer was accepted, and the sum promptly raised. In addition, a site, covering four blocks of land in the city of Chicago, was secured—two and one-half blocks being acquired by purchase for $282,500, and one and one-half (valued at $125,000) donated by Mr. Marshall Field. A charter was secured and an organization effected, Sept. 10, 1890. The Presidency of the institution was tendered to, and accepted by, Dr. William R. Harper. Since that time the University has been the recipient of other generous benefactions by Mr. Rockefeller and others, until the aggregate donations (1898) exceed $10,000,000. Of this amount over one-half has been contributed by Mr. Rockefeller, while he has pledged himself to make additional contributions of $2,000,000, conditioned upon the raising of a like sum, from other donors, by Jan. 1, 1900. The buildings erected on the campus, prior to 1896, include a chemical laboratory costing $182,000; a lecture hall, $150,000; a physical laboratory $150,000; a museum, $100,000; an academy dormitory, $30,000; three dormitories for women, $150,000; two dormitories for men, $100,000, to which several important additions were made during 1896 and 97. The faculty embraces over 150 instructors, selected with reference to their fitness for their respective departments from among the most eminent scholars in America and Europe. Women are admitted as students and graduated upon an equality with men. The work of practical instruction began in October, 1892, with 589 registered students, coming from nearly every Northern State, and including 250 graduates from other institutions, to which accessions were made, during the year, raising the aggregate to over 900. The second year the number exceeded 1,100; the third, it rose to 1,750, and the fourth (1895-96), to some 2,000, including representatives from every State of the Union, besides many from foreign countries. Special features of the institution include the admission of graduates from other institutions to a post-graduate course, and the University Extension Division, which is conducted largely by means of lecture courses, in other cities, or through lecture centers in the vicinity of the University, non-resident students having the privilege of written examinations. The various libraries embrace over 300,000 volumes, of which nearly 60,000 belong to what are called the "Departmental Libraries," besides a large and valuable collection of maps and pamphlets.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The Old), an educational institution at Chicago, under the care of the Baptist denomination, for some years known as the Douglas University. Senator Stephen A. Douglas offered, in 1854, to donate ten acres of land, in what was then near the southern border of the city of Chicago, as a site for an institution of learning, provided buildings costing $100,000, be erected thereon within a stipulated time. The corner-stone of the main building was laid, July 4, 1857, but the financial panic of that year prevented its completion, and Mr. Douglas extended the time, and finally deeded the land to the trustees without reserve. For eighteen years the institution led a precarious existence, struggling under a heavy debt. By 1885, mortgages to the amount of $320,000 having accumulated, the trustees abandoned further effort, and acquiesced in the sale of the property under foreclosure proceedings. The original plan of the institution contemplated preparatory and collegiate departments, together with a college of law and a theological school.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS, the leading educational institution under control of the State, located at Urbana and adjoining the city of Champaign. The Legislature at the session of 1863 accepted a grant of 480,000 acres of land under Act of Congress, approved July 2, 1862, making an appropriation of public lands to States—30,000 acres for each Senator and each Representative in Congress—establishing colleges for teaching agriculture and the mechanic arts, though not to the exclusion of classical and scientific studies. Land-scrip under this grant was issued and placed in the hands of Governor Yates, and a Board of Trustees appointed under the State law was organized in March, 1867, the institution being located the same year. Departments and courses of study were established, and Dr. John M. Gregory, of Michigan, was chosen Regent (President).—The land-scrip issued to Illinois was sold at an early day for what it would bring in open market, except 25,000 acres, which was located in Nebraska and Minnesota. This has recently been sold, realizing a larger sum than was received for all the scrip otherwise disposed of. The entire sum thus secured for permanent endowment aggregates $613,026. The University revenues were further increased by donations from Congress to each institution organized under the Act of 1862, of $15,000 per annum for the maintenance of an Agricultural Experiment Station, and, in 1890, of a similar amount for instruction—the latter to be increased $1,000 annually until it should reach $25,000.—A mechanical building was erected in 1871, and this is claimed to have been the first of its kind in America intended for strictly educational purposes. What was called "the main building" was formally opened in December, 1873. Other buildings embrace a "Science Hall," opened in 1892; a new "Engineering Hall," 1894; a fine Library Building, 1897. Eleven other principal structures and a number of smaller ones have been erected as conditions required. The value of property aggregates nearly $2,500,000, and appropriations from the State, for all purposes, previous to 1904, foot up $5,123,517.90.—Since 1871 the institution has been open to women. The courses of study embrace agriculture, chemistry, polytechnics, military tactics, natural and general sciences, languages and literature, economics, household science, trade and commerce. The Graduate School dates from 1891. In 1896 the Chicago College of Pharmacy was connected with the University; a College of Law and a Library School were opened in 1897, and the same year the Chicago College of Physicians and Surgeons was affiliated as the College of Medicine—a School of Dentistry being added to the latter in 1901. In 1885 the State Laboratory of Natural History was transferred from Normal, Ill., and an Agricultural Experiment Station established in 1888, from which bulletins are sent to farmers throughout the State who may desire them.—The first name of the Institution was "Illinois Industrial University," but, in 1885, this was changed to "University of Illinois." In 1887 the Trustees (of whom there are nine) were made elective by popular vote—three being elected every two years, each holding office six years. Dr. Gregory, having resigned the office of Regent in 1889, was succeeded by Dr. Selim H. Peabody, who had been Professor of Mechanical and Civil Engineering. Dr. Peabody resigned in 1891. The duties of Regent were then discharged by Prof. Thomas J. Burrill until August, 1894, when Dr. Andrew Sloan Draper, former State Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of New York, was installed as President, serving until 1904.—The corps of instruction (1904) includes over 100 Professors, 60 Associate and Assistant Professors and 200 Instructors and Assistants, besides special lecturers, demonstrators and clerks. The number of students has increased rapidly in recent years, as shown by the following totals for successive years from 1890-91 to 1903-04, inclusive: 519; 583; 714; 743; 810; 852; 1,075; 1,582; 1,824; 2,234; 2,505; 2,932; 3,289; 3,589. Of the last number, 2,271 were men and 718 women. During 1903-04 there were in all departments at Urbana, 2,547 students (256 being in the Preparatory Academy); and in the three Professional Departments in Chicago, 1,042, of whom 694 were in the College of Medicine, 185 in the School of Pharmacy, and 163 in the School of Dentistry. The University Library contains 63,700 volumes and 14,500 pamphlets, not including 5,350 volumes and 15,850 pamphlets in the State Laboratory of Natural History.—The University occupies a conspicuous and attractive site, embracing 220 acres adjacent to the line between Urbana and Champaign, and near the residence portion of the two cities. The athletic field of 11 acres, on which stand the gymnasium and armory, is enclosed with an ornamental iron fence. The campus, otherwise, is an open and beautiful park with fine landscape effects.

UNORGANIZED COUNTIES. In addition to the 102 counties into which Illinois is divided, acts were passed by the General Assembly, at different times, providing for the organization of a number of others, a few of which were subsequently organized under different names, but the majority of which were never organized at all—the proposition for such organization being rejected by vote of the people within the proposed boundaries, or allowed to lapse by non-action. These unorganized counties, with the date of the several acts authorizing them, and the territory which they were intended to include, were as follows: Allen County (1841)—comprising portions of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties; Audobon (Audubon) County (1843)—from portions of Montgomery, Fayette and Shelby; Benton County (1843)—from Morgan, Greene and Macoupin; Coffee County (1837)—with substantially the same territory now comprised within the boundaries of Stark County, authorized two years later; Dane County (1839)—name changed to Christian in 1840; Harrison County (1855)—from McLean, Champaign and Vermilion, comprising territory since partially incorporated in Ford County; Holmes County (1857)—from Champaign and Vermilion; Marquette County (1843), changed (1847) to Highland—comprising the northern portion of Adams, (this act was accepted, with Columbus as the county-seat, but organization finally vacated); Michigan County (1837)—from a part of Cook; Milton County (1843)—from the south part of Vermilion; Okaw County (1841)—comprising substantially the same territory as Moultrie, organized under act of 1843; Oregon County (1851)—from parts of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties, and covering substantially the same territory as proposed to be incorporated in Allen County ten years earlier. The last act of this character was passed in 1867, when an attempt was made to organize Lincoln County out of parts of Champaign and Vermilion, but which failed for want of an affirmative vote.

UPPER ALTON, a city of Madison County, situated on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles northeast of Alton—laid out in 1816. It has several churches, and is the seat of Shurtleff College and the Western Military Academy, the former founded about 1831, and controlled by the Baptist denomination. Beds of excellent clay are found in the vicinity and utilized in pottery manufacture. Pop. (1890), 1,803; (1900), 2,373.

UPTON, George Putnam, journalist, was born at Roxbury, Mass., Oct. 25, 1834; graduated from Brown University in 1854, removed to Chicago in 1855, and began newspaper work on "The Native American," the following year taking the place of city editor of "The Evening Journal." In 1862, Mr. Upton became musical critic on "The Chicago Tribune," serving for a time also as its war correspondent in the field, later (about 1881) taking a place on the general editorial staff, which he still retains. He is regarded as an authority on musical and dramatic topics. Mr. Upton is also a stockholder in, and, for several years, has been Vice-President of the "Tribune" Company. Besides numerous contributions to magazines, his works include: "Letters of Peregrine Pickle" (1869); "Memories, a Story of German Love," translated from the German of Max Muller (1879); "Woman in Music" (1880); "Lives of German Composers" (3 vols.—1883-84); besides four volumes of standard operas, oratorios, cantatas, and symphonies (1885-88).

URBANA, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Champaign County, on the "Big Four," the Illinois Central and the Wabash Railways; 130 miles south of Chicago and 31 miles west of Danville; in agricultural and coal-mining region. The mechanical industries include extensive railroad shops, manufacture of brick, suspenders and lawn-mowers. The Cunningham Deaconesses' Home and Orphanage is located here. The city has water-works, gas and electric light plants, electric car-lines (local and interurban), superior schools, nine churches, three banks and three newspapers. Urbana is the seat of the University of Illinois. Pop. (1890), 3,511; (1900), 5,728.

USREY, William J., editor and soldier, was born at Washington (near Natchez), Miss., May 16, 1827; was educated at Natchez, and, before reaching manhood, came to Macon County, Ill., where he engaged in teaching until 1846, when he enlisted as a private in Company C, Fourth Illinois Volunteers, for the Mexican War. In 1855, he joined with a Mr. Wingate in the establishment, at Decatur, of "The Illinois State Chronicle," of which he soon after took sole charge, conducting the paper until 1861, when he enlisted in the Thirty-fifth Illinois Volunteers and was appointed Adjutant. Although born and educated in a slave State, Mr. Usrey was an earnest opponent of slavery, as proved by the attitude of his paper in opposition to the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. He was one of the most zealous endorsers of the proposition for a conference of the Anti-Nebraska editors of the State of Illinois, to agree upon a line of policy in opposition to the further extension of slavery, and, when that body met at Decatur, on Feb. 22, 1856, he served as its Secretary, thus taking a prominent part in the initial steps which resulted in the organization of the Republican party in Illinois. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) After returning from the war he resumed his place as editor of "The Chronicle," but finally retired from newspaper work in 1871. He was twice Postmaster of the city of Decatur, first previous to 1850, and again under the administration of President Grant; served also as a member of the City Council and was a member of the local Post of the G. A. R., and Secretary of the Macon County Association of Mexican War Veterans. Died, at Decatur, Jan. 20, 1894.

UTICA, (also called North Utica), a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 10 miles west of Ottawa, situated on the Illinois River opposite "Starved Rock," also believed to stand on the site of the Kaskaskia village found by the French Explorer, La Salle, when he first visited Illinois. "Utica cement" is produced here; it also has several factories or mills, besides banks and a weekly paper. Population (1880), 767; (1890), 1,094; (1900), 1,150.

VAN ARNAM, John, lawyer and soldier, was born at Plattsburg, N. Y., March 3, 1820. Having lost his father at five years of age, he went to live with a farmer, but ran away in his boyhood; later, began teaching, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in New York City, beginning practice at Marshall, Mich. In 1858 he removed to Chicago, and, as a member of the firm of Walker, Van Arnam & Dexter, became prominent as a criminal lawyer and railroad attorney, being for a time Solicitor of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. In 1862 he assisted in organizing the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was commissioned its Colonel, but was compelled to resign on account of illness. After spending some time in California, he resumed practice in Chicago in 1865. His later years were spent in California, dying at San Diego, in that State, April 6, 1890.

VANDALIA, the principal city and county-seat of Fayette County. It is situated on the Kaskaskia River, 30 miles north of Centralia, 62 miles south by west of Decatur, and 68 miles east-northeast of St. Louis. It is an intersecting point for the Illinois Central and the St. Louis, Vandalia and Terre Haute Railroads. It was the capital of the State from 1820 to 1839, the seat of government being removed to Springfield, the latter year, in accordance with act of the General Assembly passed at the session of 1837. It contains a court house (old State Capitol building), six churches, two banks, three weekly papers, a graded school, flour, saw and paper mills, foundry, stave and heading mill, carriage and wagon and brick works. Pop. (1890), 2,144; (1900), 2,665.

VANDEVEER, Horatio M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Washington County, Ind., March 1, 1816; came with his family to Illinois at an early age, settling on Clear Creek, now in Christian County; taught school and studied law, using books borrowed from the late Hon. John T. Stuart of Springfield; was elected first County Recorder of Christian County and, soon after, appointed Circuit Clerk, filling both offices three years. He also held the office of County Judge from 1848 to 1857; was twice chosen Representative in the General Assembly (1842 and 1850) and once to the State Senate (1862); in 1846, enlisted and was chosen Captain of a company for the Mexican War, but, having been rejected on account of the quota being full, was appointed Assistant-Quartermaster, in this capacity serving on the staff of General Taylor at the battle of Buena Vista. Among other offices held by Mr. Vandever, were those of Postmaster of Taylorville, Master in Chancery, Presidential Elector (1848), Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and Judge of the Circuit Court (1870-79). In 1868 Judge Vandever established the private banking firm of H. M. Vandever & Co., at Taylorville, which, in conjunction with his sons, he continued successfully during the remainder of his life. Died, March 12, 1894.

VAN HORNE, William C., Railway Manager and President, was born in Will County, Ill., February, 1843; began his career as a telegraph operator on the Illinois Central Railroad in 1856, was attached to the Michigan Central and Chicago & Alton Railroads (1858-72), later being General Manager or General Superintendent of various other lines (1872-79). He next served as General Superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, but soon after became General Manager of the Canadian Pacific, which he assisted to construct to the Pacific Coast; was elected Vice-President of the line in 1884, and its President in 1888. His services have been recognized by conferring upon him the order of knighthood by the British Government.

VASSEUR, Noel C., pioneer Indian-trader, was born of French parentage in Canada, Dec. 25, 1799; at the age of 17 made a trip with a trading party to the West, crossing Wisconsin by way of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, the route pursued by Joliet and Marquette in 1673; later, was associated with Gurdon S. Hubbard in the service of the American Fur Company, in 1820 visiting the region now embraced in Iroquois County, where he and Hubbard subsequently established a trading post among the Pottawatomie Indians, believed to have been the site of the present town of Iroquois. The way of reaching their station from Chicago was by the Chicago and Des Plaines Rivers to the Kankakee, and ascending the latter and the Iroquois. Here Vasseur remained in trade until the removal of the Indians west of the Mississippi, in which he served as agent of the Government. While in the Iroquois region he married Watseka, a somewhat famous Pottawatomie woman, for whom the town of Watseka was named, and who had previously been the Indian wife of a fellow-trader. His later years were spent at Bourbonnais Grove, in Kankakee County, where he died, Dec. 12, 1879.

VENICE, a city of Madison County, on the Mississippi River opposite St. Louis and 2 miles north of East St. Louis; is touched by six trunk lines of railroad, and at the eastern approach to the new "Merchants' Bridge," with its round-house, has two ferries to St. Louis, street car line, electric lights, water-works, some manufactures and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 932; (1900), 2,450.

VENICE & CARONDELET RAILROAD. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

VERMILION COUNTY, an eastern county, bordering on the Indiana State line, and drained by the Vermilion and Little Vermilion Rivers, from which it takes its name. It was originally organized in 1826, when it extended north to Lake Michigan. Its present area is 926 square miles. The discovery of salt springs, in 1819, aided in attracting immigration to this region, but the manufacture of salt was abandoned many years ago. Early settlers were Seymour Treat, James Butler, Henry Johnston, Harvey Lidington, Gurdon S. Hubbard and Daniel W. Beckwith. James Butler and Achilles Morgan were the first County Commissioners. Many interesting fossil remains have been found, among them the skeleton of a mastodon (1868). Fire clay is found in large quantities, and two coal seams cross the county. The surface is level and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief agricultural product, although oats, wheat, rye, and potatoes are extensively cultivated. Stock-raising and wool-growing are important industries. There are also several manufactories, chiefly at Danville, which is the county-seat. Coal mining is carried on extensively, especially in the vicinity of Danville. Population (1880), 41,588; (1890), 49,905; (1900), 65,635.

VERMILION RIVER, a tributary of the Illinois; rises in Ford and the northern part of McLean County, and, running northward through Livingston and the southern part of La Salle Counties, enters the Illinois River nearly opposite the city of La Salle; has a length of about 80 miles.

VERMILION RIVER, an affluent of the Wabash, formed by the union of the North, Middle and South Forks, which rise in Illinois, and come together near Danville in this State. It flows southeastward, and enters the Wabash in Vermilion County, Ind. The main stream is about 28 miles long. The South Fork, however, which rises in Champaign County and runs eastward, has a length of nearly 75 miles. The Little Vermilion River enters the Wabash about 7 or 8 miles below the Vermilion, which is sometimes called the Big Vermilion, by way of distinction.

VERMONT, a village in Fulton County, at junction of Galesburg and St. Louis Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 24 miles north of Beardstown; has a carriage manufactory, flour and saw-mills, brick and tile works, electric light plant, besides two banks, four churches, two graded schools, and one weekly newspaper. An artesian well has been sunk here to the depth of 2,600 feet. Pop. (1900), 1,195.

VERSAILLES, a town of Brown County, on the Wabash Railway, 48 miles east of Quincy; is in a timber and agricultural district; has a bank and weekly newspaper. Population (1900), 524.

VIENNA, the county-seat of Johnson County, situated on the Cairo and Vincennes branch of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, 36 miles north-northwest of Cairo. It has a court house, several churches, a graded school, banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 494; (1890), 828; (1900), 1,217.

VIGO, Francois, pioneer and early Indian-trader, was born at Mondovi, Sardinia (Western Italy), in 1747, served as a private soldier, first at Havana and afterwards at New Orleans. When he left the Spanish army he came to St. Louis, then the military headquarters of Spain for Upper Louisiana, where he became a partner of Commandant de Leba, and was extensively engaged in the fur-trade among the Indians on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. On the occupation of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark in 1778, he rendered valuable aid to the Americans, turning out supplies to feed Clark's destitute soldiers, and accepting Virginia Continental money, at par, in payment, incurring liabilities in excess of $20,000. This, followed by the confiscation policy of the British Colonel Hamilton, at Vincennes, where Vigo had considerable property, reduced him to extreme penury. H. W. Beckwith says that, towards the close of his life, he lived on his little homestead near Vincennes, in great poverty but cheerful to the last. He was never recompensed during his life for his sacrifices in behalf of the American cause, though a tardy restitution was attempted, after his death, by the United States Government, for the benefit of his heirs. He died, at a ripe old age, at Vincennes, Ind., March 22, 1835.

VILLA RIDGE, a village of Pulaski County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 10 miles north of Cairo. Population, 500.

VINCENNES, Jean Baptiste Bissot, a Canadian explorer, born at Quebec, January, 1688, of aristocratic and wealthy ancestry. He was closely connected with Louis Joliet — probably his brother-in-law, although some historians say that he was the latter's nephew. He entered the Canadian army as ensign in 1701, and had a long and varied experience as an Indian fighter. About 1725 he took up his residence on what is now the site of the present city of Vincennes, Ind., which is named in his honor. Here he erected an earth fort and established a trading-post. In 1726, under orders, he co-operated with D'Artaguiette (then the French Governor of Illinois) in an expedition against the Chickasaws. The expedition resulted disastrously. Vincennes and D'Artaguiette were captured and burned at the stake, together with Father Senat (a Jesuit priest) and others of the command. (See also D'Artaguiette; French Governors of Illinois.)

VIRDEN, a city of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 21 miles south by west from Springfield, and 31 miles east-southeast of Jacksonville. It has five churches, two banks, two newspapers, telephone service, electric lights, grain elevators, machine shop, and extensive coal mines. Pop. (1900), 2,280; (school census 1903), 3,651.

VIRGINIA, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Cass County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 15 miles north of Jacksonville, and 33 miles west-northwest of Springfield. It lies in the heart of a rich agricultural region. There is a flouring mill here, besides manufactories of wagons and cigars. The city has two National and one State bank, five churches, a high school, and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 1,602; (1900), 1,600.

VOCKE, William, lawyer, was born at Minden, Westphalia (Germany), in 1839, the son of a Government Secretary in the Prussian service. Having lost his father at an early age, he emigrated to America in 1856, and, after a short stay in New York, came to Chicago, where he found employment as a paper-carrier for "The Staats-Zeitung," meanwhile giving his attention to the study of law. Later, he became associated with a real-estate firm; on the commencement of the Civil War, enlisted as a private in a three-months' regiment, and, finally, in the Twenty-fourth Illinois (the first Hecker regiment), in which he rose to the rank of Captain. Returning from the army, he was employed as city editor of "The Staats-Zeitung," but, in 1865, became Clerk of the Chicago Police Court, serving until 1869. Meanwhile he had been admitted to the bar, and, on retirement from office, began practice, but, in 1870, was elected Representative in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, in which he bore a leading part in framing "the burnt record act" made necessary by the fire of 1871. He has since been engaged in the practice of his profession, having been, for a number of years, attorney for the German Consulate at Chicago, also serving, for several years, on the Chicago Board of Education. Mr. Vocke is a man of high literary tastes, as shown by his publication, in 1869, of a volume of poems translated from the German, which has been highly commended, besides a legal work on "The Administration of Justice in the United States, and a Synopsis of the Mode of Procedure in our Federal and State Courts and All Federal and State Laws relating to Subjects of Interest to Aliens," which has been published in the German Language, and is highly valued by German lawyers and business men. Mr. Vocke was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1872 at Philadelphia, which nominated General Grant for the Presidency a second time.

VOLK, Leonard Wells, a distinguished Illinois sculptor, born at Wellstown (afterwards Wells), N. Y., Nov. 7, 1828. Later, his father, who was a marble cutter, removed to Pittsfield, Mass., and, at the age of 16, Leonard began work in his shop. In 1848 he came west and began modeling in clay and drawing at St. Louis, being only self-taught. He married a cousin of Stephen A. Douglas, and the latter, in 1855, aided him in the prosecution of his art studies in Italy. Two years afterward he settled in Chicago, where he modeled the first portrait bust ever made in the city, having for his subject his first patron—the "Little Giant." The next year (1858) he made a life-size marble statue of Douglas. In 1860 he made a portrait bust of Abraham Lincoln, which passed into the possession of the Chicago Historical Society and was destroyed in the great fire of 1871. In 1868-69, and again in 1871-72, he revisited Italy for purposes of study. In 1867 he was elected academician of the Chicago Academy, and was its President for eight years. He was genial, companionable and charitable, and always ready to assist his younger and less fortunate professional brethren. His best known works are the Douglas Monument, in Chicago, several soldiers' monuments in different parts of the country, the statuary for the Henry Keep mausoleum at Watertown, N. Y., life-size statues of Lincoln and Douglas, in the State House at Springfield, and numerous portrait busts of men eminent in political, ecclesiastical and commercial life. Died, at Osceola, Wis., August 18, 1895.

YOSS, Arno, journalist, lawyer and soldier, born in Prussia, April 16, 1821; emigrated to the United States and was admitted to the bar in Chicago, in 1848, the same year becoming editor of "The Staats-Zeitung"; was elected City Attorney in 1852, and again in 1853; in 1861 became Major of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry, but afterwards assisted in organizing the Twelfth Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Colonel, still later serving with his command in Virginia. He was at Harper's Ferry at the time of the capture of that place in September, 1862, but succeeded in cutting his way, with his command, through the rebel lines, escaping into Pennsylvania. Compelled by ill-health to leave the service in 1863, he retired to a farm in Will County, but, in 1869, returned to Chicago, where he served as Master in Chancery and was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly in 1876, but declined a re-election in 1878. Died, in Chicago, March 23, 1888.

WABASH, CHESTER & WESTERN RAILROAD, a railway running from Chester to Mount Vernon, Ill., 63.33 miles, with a branch extending from Chester to Menard, 1.5 miles; total mileage, 64.83. It is of standard gauge, and almost entirely laid with 60-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) It was organized, Feb. 20, 1878, as successor to the Iron Mountain, Chester & Eastern Railroad. During the fiscal year 1893-94 the Company purchased the Tamaroa & Mount Vernon Railroad, extending from Mount Vernon to Tamaroa, 22.5 miles. Capital stock (1898), $1,-250,000; bonded indebtedness, $690,000; total capitalization, $2,028,573.

WABASH COUNTY, situated in the southeast corner of the State; area 220 square miles. The county was carved out from Edwards in 1824, and the first court house built at Centerville, in May, 1826. Later, Mount Carmel was made the county-seat. (See Mount Carmel.) The Wabash River drains the county on the east; other streams are the Bon Pas, Coffee and Crawfish Creeks. The surface is undulating with a fair growth of timber. The chief industries are the raising of live-stock and the cultivation of cereals. The wool-crop is likewise valuable. The county is crossed by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Cairo and Vincennes Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads. Population (1880), 4,945; (1890), 11,866; (1900), 12,583.

WABASH RAILROAD, an extensive railroad system connecting the cities of Detroit and Toledo, on the east, with Kansas City and Council Bluffs, on the west, with branches to Chicago, St. Louis, Quincy and Altamont, Ill., and to Keokuk and Des Moines, Iowa. The total mileage (1898) is 1,874.96 miles, of which 677.4 miles are in Illinois—all of the latter being the property of the company, besides 176.7 miles of yard-tracks, sidings and spurs. The company has trackage privileges over the Toledo, Peoria & Western (6.5 miles) between Elvaston and Keokuk bridge, and over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (21.8 miles) between Camp Point and Quincy.—(HISTORY.) A considerable portion of this road in Illinois is constructed on the line upon which the Northern Cross Railroad was projected, in the "internal improvement" scheme adopted in 1837, and embraces the only section of road completed under that scheme—that between the Illinois River and Springfield. (1) The construction of this section was begun by the State, May 11, 1837, the first rail laid, May 9, 1838, the road completed to Jacksonville, Jan. 1, 1840, and to Springfield, May 13, 1842. It was operated for a time by "mule power," but the income was insufficient to keep the line in repair and it was finally abandoned. In 1847 the line was sold for $21,100 to N. H. Ridgely and Thomas Mather of Springfield, and by them transferred to New York capitalists, who organized the Sangamon & Morgan Railroad Company, reconstructed the road from Springfield to Naples and opened it for business in 1849. (2) In 1853 two corporations were organized in Ohio and Indiana, respectively, under the name of the Toledo & Illinois Railroad and the Lake Erie, Wabash & St. Louis Railroad, which were consolidated as the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroad, June 25, 1856. In 1858 these lines were sold separately under foreclosure, and finally reorganized, under a special charter granted by the Illinois Legislature, under the name of the Great Western Railroad Company. (3) The Quincy & Toledo Railroad, extending from Camp Point to the Illinois River opposite Meredosia, was constructed in 1858-59, and that, with the Illinois & Southern Iowa (from Clayton to Keokuk), was united, July 1, 1865, with the eastern divisions extending to Toledo, the new organization taking the name of the main line, (Toledo, Wabash & Western). (4) The Hannibal & Naples Division (49.6 miles), from Bluffs to Hannibal, Mo., was chartered in 1863, opened for business in 1870 and leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western. The latter defaulted on its interest in 1875, was placed in the hands of a receiver and, in 1877, was turned over to a new company under the name of the Wabash Railway Company. (5) In 1868 the company, as it then existed, promoted and secured the construction, and afterwards acquired the ownership, of a line extending from Decatur to East St. Louis (110.5 miles) under the name of the Decatur & East St. Louis Railroad. (6) The Eel River Railroad, from Butler to Logansport, Ind., was acquired in 1877, and afterwards extended to Detroit under the name of the Detroit, Butler & St. Louis Railroad, completing the connection from Logansport to Detroit.—In November, 1879, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company was organized, took the property and consolidated it with certain lines west of the Mississippi, of which the chief was the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern. A line had been projected from Decatur to Chicago as early as 1870, but, not having been constructed in 1881, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific purchased what was known as the Chicago & Paducah Railroad, uniting with the main line at Bement, and (by way of the Decatur and St. Louis Division) giving a direct line between Chicago and St. Louis. At this time the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific was operating the following additional leased lines: Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur (67.2 miles); Hannibal & Central Missouri (70.2 miles); Lafayette, Muncie & Bloomington (36.7 miles), and the Lafayette Bloomington & Muncie (80 miles). A connection between Chicago on the west and Toledo and Detroit on the east was established over the Grand Trunk road in 1882, but, in 1890, the company constructed a line from Montpelier, Ohio, to Clark, Ind. (149.7 miles), thence by track lease to Chicago (17.5 miles), giving an independent line between Chicago and Detroit by what is known to investors as the Detroit & Chicago Division.

The total mileage of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific system, in 1884, amounted to over 3,600 miles; but, in May of that year, default having been made in the payment of interest, the work of disintegration began. The main line east of the Mississippi and that on the west were separated, the latter taking the name of the "Wabash Western." The Eastern Division was placed in the hands of a receiver, so remaining until May, 1889, when the two divisions, having been bought in by a purchasing committee, were consolidated under the present name. The total earnings and income of the road in Illinois, for the fiscal year 1898, were $4,402,621, and the expenses $4,836,110. The total capital invested (1898) was $139,889,643, including capital stock of $52,000,000 and bonds to the amount of $81,534,000.

WABASH RIVER, rises in northwestern Ohio, passes into Indiana, and runs northwest to Huntington. It then flows nearly due west to Logansport, thence southwest to Covington, finally turning southward to Terre Haute, a few miles below which it strikes the western boundary of Indiana. It forms the boundary between Illinois and Indiana (taking into account its numerous windings) for some 200 miles. Below Vincennes it runs in a south-southwesterly direction, and enters the Ohio at the south-west extremity of Indiana, near latitude 37° 49' north. Its length is estimated at 557 miles.

WAIT, William Smith, pioneer, and original suggestor of the Illinois Central Railroad, was born in Portland, Maine, March 5, 1789, and educated in the public schools of his native place. In his youth he entered a book-publishing house in which his father was a partner, and was for a time associated with the publication of a weekly paper. Later the business was conducted at Boston, and extended over the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States, the subject of this sketch making extensive tours in the interest of the firm. In 1817 he made a tour to the West, reaching St. Louis, and, early in the following year, visited Bond County, Ill., where he made his first entry of land from the Government. Returning to Boston a few months later, he continued in the service of the publishing firm until 1820, when he again came to Illinois, and, in 1821, began farming in Ripley Township, Bond County. Returning East in 1824, he spent the next ten years in the employment of the publishing firm, with occasional visits to Illinois. In 1835 he located permanently near Greenville, Bond County, and engaged extensively in farming and fruit-raising, planting one of the largest apple orchards in the State at that early day. In 1845 he presided as chairman over the National Industrial Convention in New York, and, in 1848, was nominated as the candidate of the National Reform Association for Vice-President on the ticket with Gerrit Smith of New York, but declined. He was also prominent in County and State Agricultural Societies. Mr Wait has been credited with being one of the first (if not the very first) to suggest the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, which he did as early as 1835; was also one of the prime movers in the construction of the Mississippi & Atlantic Railroad—now the "Vandalia Line"—giving much time to the latter enterprise from 1846 for many years, and was one of the original incorporators of the St. Louis & Illinois Bridge Company. Died, July 17, 1865.

WALKER, Cyrus, pioneer, lawyer, born in Rockbridge County, Va., May 14, 1791; was taken while an infant to Adair County, Ky., and came to Macomb, Ill., in 1833, being the second lawyer to locate in McDonough County. He had a wide reputation as a successful advocate, especially in criminal cases, and practiced extensively in the courts of Western Illinois and also in Iowa. Died, Dec. 1, 1875. Mr. Walker was uncle of the late Pinkney H. Walker of the Supreme Court, who studied law with him. He was Whig candidate for Presidential Elector for the State-at-large in 1840.

WALKER, James Barr, clergyman, was born in Philadelphia, July 29, 1805; in his youth served as errand-boy in a country store near Pittsburg and spent four years in a printing office; then became clerk in the office of Mordecai M. Noah, in New York, studied law and graduated from Western Reserve College, Ohio; edited various religious papers, including "The Watchman of the Prairies" (now "The Advance") of Chicago, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Chicago, and for some time was lecturer on "Harmony between Science and Revealed Religion" at Oberlin College and Chicago Theological Seminary. He was author of several volumes, one of which—"The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," published anonymously under the editorship of Prof. Calvin E. Stowe (1855)—ran through several editions and was translated into five different languages, including Hindustanee. Died, at Wheaton, Ill., March 6, 1887.

WALKER, James Monroe, corporation lawyer and Railway President, was born at Claremont, N. H., Feb. 14, 1820. At fifteen he removed with his parents to a farm in Michigan; was educated at Oberlin, Ohio, and at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, graduating from the latter in 1849. He then entered a law office as clerk and student, was admitted to the bar the next year, and soon after elected Prosecuting Attorney of Washtenaw County; was also local attorney for the Michigan Central Railway, for which, after his removal to Chicago in 1853, he became General Solicitor. Two years later the firm of Sedgwick & Walker, which had been organized in Michigan, became attorneys for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and, until his death, Mr. Walker was associated with this company, either as General Solicitor, General Counsel or President, filling the latter position from 1870 to 1875. Mr. Walker organized both the Chicago and Kansas City stock-yards, and was President of these corporations, as also of the Wilmington Coal Company, down to the time of his death, which occurred on Jan. 22, 1881, as a result of heart disease.

WALKER, (Rev.) Jesse, Methodist Episcopal missionary, was born in Rockingham County, Va., June 9, 1766; in 1800 removed to Tennessee, became a traveling preacher in 1802, and, in 1806, came to Illinois under the presiding-elder-ship of Rev. William McKendree (afterwards Bishop), locating first at Turkey Hill, St. Clair County. In 1807 he held a camp meeting near Edwardsville—the first on Illinois soil. Later, he transferred his labors to Northern Illinois; was at Peoria in 1824; at Ottawa in 1825, and devoted much time to missionary work among the Pottawatomies, maintaining a school among them for a time. He visited Chicago in 1826, and there is evidence that he was a prominent resident there for several years, occupying a log house, which he used as a church and living-room, on "Wolf Point" at the junction of the North and South Branches of the Chicago River. While acting as superintendent of the Fox River mission, his residence appears to have been at Plainfield, in the northern part of Will County. Died, Oct. 5, 1835.

WALKER, Pinkney H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Adair County, Ky., June 18, 1815. His boyhood was chiefly passed in farm work and as clerk in a general store; in 1834 he came to Illinois, settling at Rushville, where he worked in a store for four years. In 1838 he removed to Macomb, where he began attendance at an academy and the study of law with his uncle, Cyrus Walker, a leading lawyer of his time. He was admitted to the bar in 1839, practicing at Macomb until 1848, when he returned to Rushville. In 1853 he was elected Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, to fill a vacancy, and re-elected in 1855. This position he resigned in 1858, having been appointed, by Governor Bissell, to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court occasioned by the resignation of Judge Skinner. Two months later he was elected to the same position, and re-elected in 1867 and '76. He presided as Chief Justice from January, 1864, to June, '67, and again from June, 1874, to June, '75. Before the expiration of his last term he died, Feb. 7, 1885.

WALL, George Willard, lawyer, politician and Judge, was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, April 22, 1839; brought to Perry County, Ill., in infancy, and received his preparatory education at McKendree College, finally graduating from the University of Michigan in 1858, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1859, when he began practice at Duquoin, Ill. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, from 1864 to '68, served as State's Attorney for the Third Judicial District; was also a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. In 1872 he was an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Congress, although running ahead of his ticket. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Third Circuit, and re-elected in '79, '85 and '91, much of the time since 1877 being on duty upon the Appellate bench. His home is at Duquoin.

WALLACE, (Rev.) Peter, D.D., clergyman and soldier; was born in Mason County, Ky., April 11, 1813; taken in infancy to Brown County, Ohio, where he grew up on a farm until 15 years of age, when he was apprenticed to a carpenter; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, where he became a contractor and builder, following this occupation for a number of years. He was converted in 1835 at Springfield, Ill., and, some years later, having decided to enter the ministry, was admitted to the Illinois Conference as a deacon by Bishop E. S. Janes in 1855, and placed in charge of the Danville Circuit. Two years later he was ordained by Bishop Scott, and, in the next few years, held pastorates at various places in the central and eastern parts of the State. From 1867 to 1874 he was Presiding Elder of the Mattoon and Quincy Districts, and, for six years, held the position of President of the Board of Trustees of Chaddock College at Quincy, from which he received the degree of D.D. in 1881. In the second year of the Civil War he raised a company in Sangamon County, was chosen its Captain and assigned to the Seventy-third Illinois Volunteers, known as the "preachers' regiment"—all of its officers being ministers. In 1864 he was compelled by ill-health to resign his commission. While pastor of the church at Saybrook, Ill., he was offered the position of Postmaster of that place, which he decided to accept, and was allowed to retire from the active ministry. On retirement from office, in 1884, he removed to Chicago. In 1889 he was appointed by Governor Fifer the first Chaplain of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, but retired some four years afterward, when he returned to Chicago. Dr. Wallace was an eloquent and effective preacher and continued to preach, at intervals, until within a short time of his decease, which occurred in Chicago, Feb. 21, 1897, in his 84th year. A zealous patriot, he frequently spoke very effectively upon the political rostrum. Originally a Whig, he became a Republican on the organization of that party, and took pride in the fact that the first vote he ever cast was for Abraham Lincoln, for Representative in the Legislature, in 1834. He was a Knight Templar, Vice-President of the Tippecanoe Club of Chicago, and, at his death, Chaplain of America Post, No. 708, G. A. R.

WALLACE, William Henry Lamb, lawyer and soldier, was born at Urbana, Ohio, July 8, 1821; brought to Illinois in 1833, his father settling near La Salle and, afterwards, at Mount Morris, Ogle County, where young Wallace attended the Rock River Seminary; was admitted to the bar in 1845; in 1846 enlisted as a private in the First Illinois Volunteers (Col. John J. Hardin's regiment), for the Mexican War, rising to the rank of Adjutant and participating in the battle of Buena Vista (where his commander was killed), and in other engagements. Returning to his profession at Ottawa, he served as District Attorney (1852-56), then became partner of his father-in-law, Col. T. Lyle Dickey, afterwards of the Supreme Court. In April, 1861, he was one of the first to answer the call for troops by enlisting, and became Colonel of the Eleventh Illinois (three-months' men), afterwards re-enlisting for three years. As commander of a brigade he participated in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in February, 1862, receiving promotion as Brigadier-General for gallantry. At Pittsburg Landing (Shiloh), as commander of Gen. C. F. Smith's Division, devolving on him on account of the illness of his superior officer, he showed great courage, but fell mortally wounded, dying at Charleston, Tenn., April 10, 1862. His career promised great brilliancy and his loss was greatly deplored.—Martin R. M. (Wallace), brother of the preceding, was born at Urbana, Ohio, Sept. 29, 1829, came to La Salle County, Ill., with his father's family and was educated in the local schools and at Rock River Seminary; studied law at Ottawa, and was admitted to the bar in 1856, soon after locating in Chicago. In 1861 he assisted in organizing the Fourth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, of which he became Lieutenant-Colonel, and was complimented, in 1865, with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. After the war he served as Assessor of Internal Revenue (1866-69); County Judge (1869-77); Prosecuting Attorney (1884); and, for many years past, has been one of the Justices of the Peace of the city of Chicago.

WALNUT, a town of Bureau County, on the Mendota and Fulton branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 26 miles west of Mendota; is in a farming and stock-raising district; has two banks and two newspapers. Population (1890), 605; (1900), 791.

WAR OF 1812. Upon the declaration of war by Congress, in June, 1812, the Pottawatomies, and most of the other tribes of Indians in the Territory of Illinois, strongly sympathized with the British. The savages had been hostile and restless for some time previous, and blockhouses and family forts had been erected at a number of points, especially in the settlements most exposed to the incursions of the savages. Governor Edwards, becoming apprehensive of an outbreak, constructed Fort Russell, a few miles from Edwardsville. Taking the field in person, he made this his headquarters, and collected a force of 250 mounted volunteers, who were later reinforced by two companies of rangers, under Col. William Russell, numbering about 100 men. An independent company of twenty-one spies, of which John Reynolds—afterwards Governor—was a member, was also formed and led by Capt. Samuel Judy. The Governor organized his little army into two regiments under Colonels Rector and Stephenson, Colonel Russell serving as second to the commander-in-chief, other members of his staff being Secretary Nathaniel Pope and Robert K. McLaughlin. On Oct. 18, 1812, Governor Edwards, with his men, set out for Peoria, where it was expected that their force would meet that of General Hopkins, who had been sent from Kentucky with a force of 2,000 men. En route, two Kickapoo villages were burned, and a number of Indians unnecessarily slain by Edwards' party. Hopkins had orders to disperse the Indians on the Illinois and Wabash Rivers, and destroy their villages. He determined, however, on reaching the headwaters of the Vermilion to proceed no farther. Governor Edwards reached the head of Peoria Lake, but, failing to meet Hopkins, returned to Fort Russell. About the same time Capt. Thomas E. Craig led a party, in two boats, up the Illinois River to Peoria. His boats, as he alleged, having been fired upon in the night by Indians, who were harbored and protected by the French citizens of Peoria, he burned the greater part of the village, and capturing the population, carried them down the river, putting them on shore, in the early part of the winter, just below Alton. Other desultory expeditions marked the campaigns of 1813 and 1814. The Indians meanwhile gaining courage, remote settlements were continually harassed by marauding bands. Later in 1814, an expedition, led by Major (afterwards President) Zachary Taylor, ascended the Mississippi as far as Rock Island, where he found a large force of Indians, supported by British regulars with artillery. Finding himself unable to cope with so formidable a foe, Major Taylor retreated down the river. On the site of the present town of Warsaw he threw up fortifications, which he named Fort Edwards, from which point he was subsequently compelled to retreat. The same year the British, with their Indian allies, descended from Mackinac, captured Prairie du Chien, and burned Forts Madison and Johnston, after which they retired to Cap au Gris. The treaty of Ghent, signed Dec. 24, 1814, closed the war, although no formal treaties were made with the tribes until the year following.

WAR OF THE REBELLION. At the outbreak of the Civil War, the executive chair, in Illinois, was occupied by Gov. Richard Yates. Immediately upon the issuance of President Lincoln's first call for troops (April 15, 1861), the Governor issued his proclamation summoning the Legislature together in special session and, the same day, issued a call for "six regiments of militia," the quota assigned to the State under call of the President. Public excitement was at fever heat, and dormant patriotism in both sexes was aroused as never before. Party lines were broken down and, with comparatively few exceptions, the mass of the people were actuated by a common sentiment of patriotism. On April 19, Governor Yates was instructed, by the Secretary of War, to take possession of Cairo as an important strategic point. At that time, the State militia organizations were few in number and poorly equipped, consisting chiefly of independent companies in the larger cities. The Governor acted with great promptitude, and, on April 21, seven companies, numbering 595 men, commanded by Gen. Richard K. Swift of Chicago, were en route to Cairo. The first volunteer company to tender its services, in response to Governor Yates' proclamation, on April 16, was the Zouave Grays of Springfield. Eleven other companies were tendered the same day, and, by the evening of the 18th, the number had been increased to fifty. Simultaneously with these proceedings, Chicago bankers tendered to the Governor a war loan of $500,000, and those of Springfield, $100,000. The Legislature, at its special session, passed acts increasing the efficiency of the militia law, and provided for the creation of a war fund of $2,000,000. Besides the six regiments already called for, the raising of ten additional volunteer regiments and one battery of light artillery was authorized. The last of the six regiments, apportioned to Illinois under the first presidential call, was dispatched to Cairo early in May. The six regiments were numbered the Seventh to Twelfth, inclusive—the earlier numbers, First to Sixth, being conceded to the six regiments which had served in the war with Mexico. The regiments were commanded, respectively, by Colonels John Cook, Richard J. Oglesby, Eleazer A. Paine, James D. Morgan, William H. L. Wallace, and John McArthur, constituting the "First Brigade of Illinois Volunteers." Benjamin M. Prentiss, having been chosen Brigadier-General on arrival at Cairo, assumed command, relieving General Swift. The quota under the second call, consisting of ten regiments, was mustered into service within sixty days, 200 companies being tendered immediately. Many more volunteered than could be accepted, and large numbers crossed to Missouri and enlisted in regiments forming in that State. During June and July the Secretary of War authorized Governor Yates to recruit twenty-two additional regiments (seventeen infantry and five cavalry), which were promptly raised. On July 22, the day following the defeat of the Union army at Bull Run, President Lincoln called for 500,000 more volunteers. Governor Yates immediately responded with an offer to the War Department of sixteen more regiments (thirteen of infantry and three of cavalry), and a battalion of artillery, adding, that the State claimed it as her right, to do her full share toward the preservation of the Union. Under supplemental authority, received from the Secretary of War in August, 1861, twelve additional regiments of infantry and five of cavalry were raised, and, by December, 1861, the State had 43,000 volunteers in the field and 17,000 in camps of instruction. Other calls were made in July and August, 1862, each for 300,000 men. Illinois' quota, under both calls, was over 52,000 men, no regard being paid to the fact that the State had already furnished 16,000 troops in excess of its quotas under previous calls. Unless this number of volunteers was raised by September 1, a draft would be ordered. The tax was a severe one, inasmuch as it would fall chiefly upon the prosperous citizens, the floating population, the idle and the extremely poor having already followed the army's march, either as soldiers or as camp-followers. But recruiting was actively carried on, and, aided by liberal bounties in many of the counties, in less than a fortnight the 52,000 new troops were secured, the volunteers coming largely from the substantial classes—agricultural, mercantile, artisan and professional. By the end of December, fifty-nine regiments and four batteries had been dispatched to the front, besides a considerable number to fill up regiments already in the field, which had suffered severely from battle, exposure and disease. At this time, Illinois had an aggregate of over 135,000 enlisted men in the field. The issue of President Lincoln's preliminary proclamation of emancipation, in September, 1862, was met by a storm of hostile criticism from his political opponents, who—aided by the absence of so large a proportion of the loyal population of the State in the field—were able to carry the elections of that year. Consequently, when the Twenty-third General Assembly convened in regular session at Springfield, on Jan. 5, 1863, a large majority of that body was not only opposed to both the National and State administrations, but avowedly opposed to the further prosecution of the war under the existing policy. The Legislature reconvened in June, but was prorogued by Governor Yates. Between Oct. 1, 1863, and July 1, 1864, 16,000 veterans re-enlisted and 37,000 new volunteers were enrolled; and, by the date last mentioned, Illinois had furnished to the Union army 244,496 men, being 14,596 in excess of the allotted quotas, constituting fifteen per cent of the entire population. These were comprised in 151 regiments of infantry, 17 of cavalry and two complete regiments of artillery, besides twelve independent batteries. The total losses of Illinois organizations, during the war, has been reported at 34,834, of which 5,874 were killed in battle, 4,020 died from wounds, 22,786 from disease and 2,154 from other causes—being a total of thirteen per cent of the entire force of the State in the service. The part which Illinois played in the contest was conspicuous for patriotism, promptness in response to every call, and the bravery and efficiency of its troops in the field—reflecting honor upon the State and its history. Nor were its loyal citizens—who, while staying at home, furnished moral and material support to the men at the front—less worthy of praise than those who volunteered. By upholding the Government—National and State—and by their zeal and energy in collecting and sending forward immense quantities of supplies—surgical, medical and other—often at no little sacrifice, they contributed much to the success of the Union arms. WAR OF THE REBELLION (HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS). The following is a list of the various military organizations mustered into the service during the Civil War (1861-65), with the terms of service and a summary of the more important events in the history of each, while in the field:

SEVENTH INFANTRY. Illinois having sent six regiments to the Mexican War, by courtesy the numbering of the regiments which took part in the war for the Union began with number Seven. A number of regiments which responded to the first call of the President, claimed the right to be recognized as the first regiment in the field, but the honor was finally accorded to that organized at Springfield by Col. John Cook, and hence his regiment was numbered Seventh. It was mustered into the service, April 25, 1861, and remained at Mound City during the three months' service, the period of its first enlistment. It was subsequently reorganized and mustered for the three years' service, July 25, 1861, and was engaged in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Cherokee, Allatoona Pass, Salkahatchie Swamp, Bentonville and Columbia. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans at Pulaski, Tenn., Dec. 22, 1863; was mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, July 11.

EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in for three months' service, April 26, 1861, Richard J. Oglesby of Decatur, being appointed Colonel. It remained at Cairo during its term of service, when it was mustered out. July 25, 1861, it was reorganized and mustered in for three years' service. It participated in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Port Gibson, Thompson Hill, Raymond, Champion Hill, Vicksburg, Brownsville, and Spanish Fort; re-enlisted as veterans, March 24, 1864; was mustered out at Baton Rouge, May 4, 1866, paid off and discharged, May 13, having served five years.

NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Springfield, April 26, 1861, for the term of three months, under Col. Eleazer A. Paine. It was reorganized at Cairo, in August, for three years, being composed of companies from St. Clair, Madison, Montgomery, Pulaski, Alexander and Mercer Counties; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Jackson (Tenn.), Meed Creek Swamps, Salem, Wyatt, Florence, Montezuma, Athens and Grenada. The regiment was mounted, March 15, 1863, and so continued during the remainder of its service. Mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865.

TENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into the service for three months, on April 29, 1861, at Cairo, and on July 29, 1861, was mustered into the service for three years, with Col. James D. Morgan in command. It was engaged at Sykeston, New Madrid, Corinth, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw, Chattahoochie, Savannah and Bentonville. Re-enlisted as veterans, Jan. 1, 1864, and mustered out of service, July 4, 1865, at Louisville, and received final discharge and pay, July 11, 1865, at Chicago.

ELEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, April 30, 1861, for three months. July 30, the regiment was mustered out, and re-enlisted for three years' service. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Tallahatchie, Vicksburg, Liverpool Heights, Yazoo City, Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards Brigadier-General and killed at Shiloh, was its first Colonel. Mustered out of service, at Baton Rouge, July 14, 1865; paid off and discharged at Springfield.

TWELFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service for three years, August 1, 1861; was engaged at Columbus, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Lay's Ferry, Rome Cross Roads, Dallas, Kenesaw, Nickajack Creek, Bald Knob, Decatur, Ezra Church, Atlanta, Allatoona and Goldsboro. On Jan. 16, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. John McArthur was its first Colonel, succeeded by Augustus L. Chetlain, both being promoted to Brigadier-Generals. Mustered out of service at Louisville, Ky., July 10, 1865, and received final pay and discharge, at Springfield, July 18.

THIRTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments organized under the act known as the "Ten Regiment Bill"; was mustered into service on May 24, 1861, for three years, at Dixon, with John B. Wyman as Colonel; was engaged at Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, Jackson, Missionary Ridge, Rossville and Ringgold Gap. Mustered out at Springfield, June 18, 1864, having served three years and two months.

FOURTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments raised under the "Ten Regiment Bill," which anticipated the requirements of the General Government by organizing, equipping and drilling a regiment in each Congressional District in the State for thirty days, unless sooner required for service by the United States. It was mustered in at Jacksonville for three years, May 25, 1861, under command of John M. Palmer as its first Colonel; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora, Vicksburg, Jackson, Fort Beauregard and Meridian; consolidated with the Fifteenth Infantry, as a veteran battalion (both regiments having enlisted as veterans), on July 1, 1864. In October, 1864, the major part of the battalion was captured by General Hood and sent to Andersonville. The remainder participated in the "March to the Sea," and through the campaign in the Carolinas. In the spring of 1865 the battalion organization was discontinued, both regiments having been filled up by recruits. The regiment was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., Sept. 16, 1865; and arrived at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 22, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge. The aggregate number of men who belonged to this organization was 1,980, and the aggregate mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, 480. During its four years and four months of service, the regiment marched 4,490 miles, traveled by rail, 2,330 miles, and, by river, 4,490 miles—making an aggregate of 11,670 miles.

FIFTEENTH INFANTRY. Raised under the "Ten Regiment Act," in the (then) First Congressional District; was organized at Freeport, and mustered into service, May 24, 1861. It was engaged at Sedalia, Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora Hill, Vicksburg, Fort Beauregard, Champion Hill, Allatoona and Bentonville. In March, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in July, 1864, was consolidated with the Fourteenth Infantry as a Veteran Battalion. At Big Shanty and Ackworth a large portion of the battalion was captured by General Hood. At Raleigh the Veteran Battalion was discontinued and the Fifteenth reorganized. From July 1, to Sept. 1, 1865, the regiment was stationed at Forts Leavenworth and Kearney. Having been mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, it was sent to Springfield for final payment and discharge—having served four years and four months. Miles marched, 4,299; miles by rail, 2,403, miles by steamer, 4,310; men enlisted from date of organization, 1,963; strength at date of muster-out, 640.

SIXTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Quincy under the "Ten-Regiment Act," May 24, 1861. The regiment was engaged at New Madrid, Tiptonville, Corinth, Buzzards' Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw Mountain, Chattahoochie River, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Savannah, Columbia, Fayetteville, Averysboro and Bentonville. In December, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans; was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 8, 1865, after a term of service of four years and three months, and, a week later, arrived at Springfield, where it received its final pay and discharge papers.

SEVENTEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Peoria, Ill., on May 24, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Greenfield (Ark.), Shiloh, Corinth, Hatchie and Vicksburg. In May, 1864, the term of enlistment having expired, the regiment was ordered to Springfield for pay and discharge. Those men and officers who re-enlisted, and those whose term had not expired, were consolidated with the Eighth Infantry, which was mustered out in the spring of 1866.

EIGHTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized under the provisions of the "Ten Regiment Bill," at Anna, and mustered into the service on May 28, 1861, the term of enlistment being for three years. The regiment participated in the capture of Fort McHenry, and was actively engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth. It was mustered out at Little Rock, Dec. 16, 1865, and Dec. 31, thereafter, arrived at Springfield, Ill., for payment and discharge. The aggregate enlistments in the regiment, from its organization to date of discharge (rank and file), numbered 2,043.

NINETEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the United States service for three years, June 17, 1861, at Chicago, embracing four companies which had been accepted under the call for three months' men; participated in the battle of Stone River and in the Tullahoma and Chattanooga campaigns; was also engaged at Davis' Cross Roads, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Resaca. It was mustered out of service on July 9, 1864, at Chicago. Originally consisting of nearly 1,000 men, besides a large number of recruits received during the war, its strength at the final muster-out was less than 350.

TWENTIETH INFANTRY. Organized, May 14, 1861, at Joliet, and June 13, 1861, and mustered into the service for a term of three years. It participated in the following engagements, battles, sieges, etc.: Fredericktown (Mo.), Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Thompson's Plantation, Champion Hills, Big Black River, Vicksburg, Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta. After marching through the Carolinas, the regiment was finally ordered to Louisville, where it was mustered out, July 16, 1865, receiving its final discharge at Chicago, on July 24.

TWENTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized under the "Ten Regiment Bill," from the (then) Seventh Congressional District, at Mattoon, and mustered into service for three years, June 28, 1861. Its first Colonel was U. S. Grant, who was in command until August 7, when he was commissioned Brigadier-General. It was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Corinth, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Chattanooga, in February, 1864. From June, 1864, to December, 1865, it was on duty in Texas. Mustered out at San Antonio, Dec. 16, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 18, 1866.

TWENTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Belleville, and mustered into service, for three years, at Caseyville, Ill., June 25, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Charleston (Mo.), Sikestown, Tiptonville, Farmington, Corinth, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, New Hope Church, and all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, except Rocky Face Ridge. It was mustered out at Springfield, July 7, 1864, the veterans and recruits, whose term of service had not expired, being consolidated with the Forty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

TWENTY-THIRD INFANTRY. The organization of the Twenty-third Infantry Volunteers commenced, at Chicago, under the popular name of the "Irish Brigade," immediately upon the opening of hostilities at Sumter. The formal muster of the regiment, under the command of Col. James A. Mulligan, was made, June 15, 1861, at Chicago, when it was occupying barracks known as Kane's brewery near the river on West Polk Street. It was early ordered to Northern Missouri, and was doing garrison duty at Lexington, when, in September, 1861, it surrendered with the rest of the garrison, to the forces under the rebel General Price, and was paroled. From Oct. 8, 1861, to June 14, 1862, it was detailed to guard prisoners at Camp Douglas. Thereafter it participated in engagements in the Virginias, as follows: at South Fork, Greenland Gap, Philippi, Hedgeville, Leetown, Maryland Heights, Snicker's Gap, Kernstown, Cedar Creek, Winchester, Charlestown, Berryville, Opequan Creek, Fisher's Hill, Harrisonburg, Hatcher's Run and Petersburg. It also took part in the siege of Richmond and the pursuit of Lee, being present at the surrender at Appomattox. In January and February, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Greenland Gap, W. Va. In August, 1864, the ten companies of the Regiment, then numbering 446, were consolidated into five companies and designated, "Battalion, Twenty-third Regiment, Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry." The regiment was thanked by Congress for its part at Lexington, and was authorized to inscribe Lexington upon its colors. (See also Mulligan, James A.)

TWENTY-FOURTH INFANTRY, (known as the First Hecker Regiment). Organized at Chicago, with two companies—to-wit: the Union Cadets and the Lincoln Rifles—from the three months' service, in June, 1861, and mustered in, July 8, 1861. It participated in the battles of Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain and other engagements in the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out of service at Chicago, August 6, 1864. A fraction of the regiment, which had been recruited in the field, and whose term of service had not expired at the date of muster-out, was organized into one company and attached to the Third Brigade, First Division, Fourteenth Army Corps, and mustered out at Camp Butler, August 1, 1865.

TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized from the counties of Kankakee, Iroquois, Ford, Vermilion, Douglas, Coles, Champaign and Edgar, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 4, 1861. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, in the siege of Corinth, the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, the siege of Atlanta, and innumerable skirmishes; was mustered out at Springfield, Sept. 5, 1864. During its three years' service the regiment traveled 4,962 miles, of which 3,252 were on foot, the remainder by steamboat and railroad.

TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, consisting of seven companies, at Springfield, August 31, 1861. On Jan. 1, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. It was authorized by the commanding General to inscribe upon its banners "New Madrid"; "Island No. 10;" "Farmington;" "Siege of Corinth;" "Tuka;" "Corinth—3d and 4th, 1862;" "Resaca;" "Kenesaw;" "Ezra Church;" "Atlanta;" "Jonesboro;" "Griswoldville;" "McAllister;" "Savannah;" "Columbia," and "Bentonville." It was mustered out at Louisville, July 20, 1865, and paid off and discharged, at Springfield, July 28—the regiment having marched, during its four years of service, 6,931 miles, and fought twenty-eight hard battles, besides innumerable skirmishes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. First organized, with only seven companies, at Springfield, August 10, 1861, and organization completed by the addition of three more companies, at Cairo, on September 1. It took part in the battle of Belmont, the siege of Island No. 10, and the battles of Farmington, Nashville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Calhoun, Adairsville, Dallas, Pine Top Mountain and Kenesaw Mountain, as well as in the investment of Atlanta; was relieved from duty, August 25, 1864, while at the front, and mustered out at Springfield, September 20. Its veterans, with the recruits whose term of service had not expired, were consolidated with the Ninth Infantry.

TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Composed of companies from Pike, Fulton, Schuyler, Mason, Scott and Menard Counties; was organized at Springfield, August 15, 1861, and mustered into service for three years. It participated in the battles of Shiloh and Metamora, the siege of Vicksburg and the battles of Jackson, Mississippi, and Fort Beauregard, and in the capture of Spanish Fort, Fort Blakely and Mobile. From June, 1864, to March, 1866, it was stationed in Texas, and was mustered out at Brownsville, in that State, March 15, 1866, having served four years and seven months. It was discharged, at Springfield, May 13, 1866.

TWENTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, August 19, 1861, and was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the sieges of Corinth, Vicksburg and Mobile. Eight companies were detailed for duty at Holly Springs, and were there captured by General Van Dorn, in December, 1862, but were exchanged, six months later. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, from June, 1864, to November, 1865, was on duty in Texas. It was mustered out of service in that State, Nov. 6, 1865, and received final discharge on November 28.

THIRTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, August 28, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, the siege of Corinth, Medan Station, Raymond, Champion Hills, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, Big Shanty, Atlanta, Savannah, Pocotaligo, Orangeburg, Columbia, Cheraw, and Fayetteville; mustered out, July 17, 1865, and received final payment and discharge at Springfield, July 27, 1865.

THIRTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized at Cairo, and there mustered into service on Sept. 18, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the two expeditions against Vicksburg, at Thompson's Hill, Ingram Heights, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hill, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Lovejoy Station and Jonesboro; also participated in the "March to the Sea" and took part in the battles and skirmishes at Columbia, Cheraw, Fayetteville and Bentonville. A majority of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in March, 1864. It was mustered out at Louisville, July 19, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield, July 23.

THIRTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, Dec. 31, 1861. By special authority from the War Department, it originally consisted of ten companies of infantry, one of cavalry, and a battery. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the sieges of Corinth and Vicksburg, and in the battles of La Grange, Grand Junction, Metamora, Harrisonburg, Kenesaw Mountain, Nickajack Creek, Allatoona, Savannah, Columbia, Cheraw and Bentonville. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in June, 1865, was ordered to Fort Leavenworth. Mustered out there, Sept. 16, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield.

THIRTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Springfield in September, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, the assault and siege of Vicksburg, siege of Jackson, Fort Esperanza, and in the expedition against Mobile. The regiment veteranized at Vicksburg, Jan. 1, 1864; was mustered out, at the same point, Nov. 24, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield, Dec. 6 and 7, 1865. The aggregate enrollment of the regiment was between 1,900 and 2,000.

THIRTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Sept. 7, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Murfreesboro, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, and, after participating in the "March to the Sea" and through the Carolinas, took part in the battle of Bentonville. After the surrender of Johnston, the regiment went with Sherman's Army to Washington, D. C., and took part in the grand review, May 24, 1865; left Washington, June 12, and arrived at Louisville, Ky., June 18, where it was mustered out, on July 12; was discharged and paid at Chicago, July 17, 1865.

THIRTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Decatur on July 3, 1861, and its services tendered to the President, being accepted by the Secretary of War as "Col. G. A. Smith's Independent Regiment of Illinois Volunteers," on July 23, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 12. It was engaged at Pea Ridge and in the siege of Corinth, also participated in the battles of Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Dallas and Kenesaw. Its final muster-out took place at Springfield, Sept. 27, 1864, the regiment having marched (exclusive of railroad and steamboat transportation) 3,056 miles.

THIRTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Camp Hammond, near Aurora, Ill., and mustered into service, Sept. 23, 1861, for a term of three years. The regiment, at its organization, numbered 965 officers and enlisted men, and had two companies of Cavalry ("A" and "B"), 186 officers and men. It was engaged at Leetown, Pea Ridge, Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, the siege of Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Adairsville, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. Mustered out, Oct. 8, 1865, and disbanded, at Springfield, Oct. 27, having marched and been transported, during its term of service, more than 10,000 miles.

THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Familiarly known as "Fremont Rifles"; organized in August, 1861, and mustered into service, Sept. 18. The regiment was presented with battle-flags by the Chicago Board of Trade. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Neosho, Prairie Grove and Chalk Bluffs, the siege of Vicksburg, and in the battles of Yazoo City and Morgan's Bend. In October, 1863, it was ordered to the defense of the frontier along the Rio Grande; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; took part in the siege and storming of Fort Blakely and the capture of Mobile; from July, 1865, to May, 1866, was again on duty in Texas; was mustered out at Houston, May 15, 1866, and finally discharged at Springfield, May 31, having traveled some 17,000 miles, of which nearly 3,300 were by marching.

THIRTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, in September, 1861. The regiment was engaged in the battles of Fredericktown, Perryville, Knob Gap, Stone River, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Pine Top, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; from June to December, 1865, was on duty in Louisiana and Texas; was mustered out at Victoria, Texas, Dec. 31, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield.

THIRTY-NINTH INFANTRY. The organization of this Regiment was commenced as soon as the news of the firing on Fort Sumter reached Chicago. General Thomas O. Osborne was one of its contemplated field officers, and labored zealously to get it accepted under the first call for troops, but did not accomplish his object. The regiment had already assumed the name of the "Yates Phalanx" in honor of Governor Yates. It was accepted by the War Department on the day succeeding the first Bull Run disaster (July 22, 1861), and Austin Light of Chicago, was appointed Colonel. Under his direction the organization was completed, and the regiment left Camp Mather, Chicago, on the morning of Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Winchester, Malvern Hill (the second), Morris Island, Fort Wagner, Drury's Bluff, and in numerous engagements before Petersburg and Richmond, including the capture of Fort Gregg, and was present at Lee's surrender at Appomattox. In the meantime the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Hilton Head, S. C., in September, 1863. It was mustered out at Norfolk, Dec. 6, 1865, and received final discharge at Chicago, December 16.

FORTIETH INFANTRY. Enlisted from the counties of Franklin, Hamilton, Wayne, White, Wabash, Marion, Clay and Fayette, and mustered into service for three years at Springfield, August 10, 1861. It was engaged at Shiloh, in the siege of Corinth, at Jackson (Miss.), in the siege of Vicksburg, at Missionary Ridge, New Hope Church, Black Jack Knob, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Ezra Chapel, Griswoldville, siege of Savannah, Columbia (S. C.), and Bentonville. It re-enlisted, as veterans, at Scottsboro, Ala., Jan. 1, 1864, and was mustered out at Louisville, July 24, 1865, receiving final discharge at Springfield.

FORTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized at Decatur during July and August, 1861, and was mustered into service, August 5. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, the siege of Corinth, the second battle of Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg and Jackson, in the Red River campaign, at Guntown, Kenesaw Mountain and Allatoona, and participated in the "March to the Sea." It re-enlisted, as veterans, March 17, 1864, at Vicksburg, and was consolidated with the Fifty-third Infantry, Jan. 4, 1865, forming Companies G and H.

FORTY-SECOND INFANTRY. engaged at Stone River, Woodbury, and in numerous skirmishes in Kentucky and Tennessee. In May, 1863, the regiment was consolidated, its numbers having been greatly reduced. Subsequently it participated in the battles of Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge, the battles around Atlanta and the campaign through the Carolinas, being present at Johnston's surrender. The regiment was mustered out at Washington, D. C., June 5, 1865, and received final discharge at Chicago, June 15. The enlisted men whose term of service had not expired at date of muster-out, were consolidated into four companies and transferred to the Sixtieth Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry.

ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH INFANTRY. Recruited from Marion, Clay, Washington, Clinton and Wayne Counties, and mustered into the service at Salem, Sept. 18, 1862. The regiment aided in the capture of Decatur, Ala.; took part in the Atlanta campaign, being engaged at Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw, Atlanta and Jonesboro; participated in the "March to the Sea" and the campaign in the Carolinas, taking part in the battles of Fort McAllister and Bentonville. It was mustered out at Washington, D. C., June 7, 1865, receiving final discharge at Springfield, June 27, having traveled 3,736 miles, of which 1,836 was on the march.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWELFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Peoria, Sept. 20 and 22, 1862; participated in the campaign in East Tennessee, under Burnside, and in that against Atlanta, under Sherman; was also engaged in the battles of Columbia, Franklin and Nashville, and the capture of Fort Anderson and Wilmington. It was mustered out at Goldsboro, N. C., June 20, 1865, and finally discharged at Chicago, July 7, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEENTH INFANTRY. Left Camp Hancock (near Chicago) for the front, Nov. 6, 1862; was engaged in the Tallahatchie expedition, participated in the battle of Chickasaw Bayou, and was sent North to guard prisoners and recruit. The regiment also took part in the siege and capture of Vicksburg, was mustered out, June 20, 1865, and finally discharged at Chicago, five days later.

ONE HUNDRED AND FOURTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized in July and August, 1862, and mustered in at Springfield, Sept. 18, being recruited from Cass, Menard and Sangamon Counties. The regiment participated in the battle of Jackson (Miss.), the siege and capture of Vicksburg, and in the battles of Guntown and Harrisville, the pursuit of Price through Missouri, the battle of Nashville, and the capture of Mobile. It was mustered out at Vicksburg, August 3, 1865, receiving final payment and discharge at Springfield, August 15, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTEENTH INFANTRY. Ordered to the front from Springfield, Oct. 4, 1862; was engaged at Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Tunnel Hill, Resaca and in all the principal battles of the Atlanta campaign, and in the defense of Nashville and pursuit of Hood; was mustered out of service, June 11, 1865, and received final pay and discharge, June 23, 1865, at Springfield.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTEENTH INFANTRY. Recruited almost wholly from Macon County, numbering 980 officers and men when it started from Decatur for the front on Nov. 8, 1862. It participated in the battles of Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Dallas, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Stone Mountain, Atlanta, Fort McAllister and Bentonville, and was mustered out, June 7, 1865, near Washington, D. C.

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in, Sept. 19, 1862; participated in the Meridian campaign, the Red River expedition (assisting in the capture of Fort de Russey), and in the battles of Pleasant Hill, Yellow Bayou, Tupelo, Franklin, Nashville, Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely. It was mustered out at Springfield, August 5, 1865, having traveled 9,276 miles, 2,307 of which were marched.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into the service at Springfield, Nov. 7, 1862; was engaged at Chickasaw Bluffs, Arkansas Post, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, Jackson (Miss.), Grand Coteau, Jackson (La.), and Amite River. The regiment was mounted, Oct. 11, 1863, and dismounted, May 22, 1865. Oct. 1, 1865, it was mustered out, and finally discharged, Oct. 13. At the date of the muster-in, the regiment numbered 820 men and officers, received 283 recruits, making a total of 1,103; at muster-out it numbered 523. Distance marched, 2,000 miles; total distance traveled, 5,700 miles.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETEENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Quincy, in September, 1862, and was mustered into the United States service, October 10; was engaged in the Red River campaign and in the battles of Shreveport, Yellow Bayou, Tupelo, Nashville, Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely. Its final muster-out took place at Mobile, August 26, 1865, and its discharge at Springfield.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTIETH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service, Oct. 28, 1862, at Springfield; was mustered out, Sept. 7, 1865, and received final payment and discharge, September 10, at Springfield.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIRST INFANTRY. (The organization of this regiment was not completed.)

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Carlinville, in August, 1862, and mustered into the service, Sept. 4, with 960 enlisted men. It participated in the battles of Tupelo and Nashville, and in the capture of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, and was mustered out, July 15, 1865, at Mobile, and finally discharged at Springfield, August 4.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Mattoon, Sept. 6, 1862; participated in the battles of Perryville, Milton, Hoover's Gap, and Farmington; also took part in the entire Atlanta campaign, marching as cavalry and fighting as infantry. Later, it served as mounted infantry in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, taking a prominent part in the capture of Selma. The regiment was discharged at Springfield, July 11, 1865—the recruits, whose terms had not expired, being transferred to the Sixty-first Volunteer Infantry.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service, Sept. 10, 1862, at Springfield; took part in the Vicksburg campaign and in the battles of Port Gibson, Raymond and Champion Hills, the siege of Vicksburg, the Meridian raid, the Yazoo expedition, and the capture of Mobile. On the 16th of August, 1865, eleven days less than three years after the first company went into camp at Springfield, the regiment was mustered out at Chicago. Colonel Howe's history of the battle-flag of the regiment, stated that it had been borne 4,100 miles, in fourteen skirmishes, ten battles and two sieges of forty-seven days and nights, and thirteen days and nights, respectively.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 3, 1862; participated in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta and Jonesboro, and in the "March to the Sea" and the Carolina campaign, being engaged at Averysboro and Bentonville. It was mustered out at Washington, D. C., June 9, 1865, and finally discharged at Chicago.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Alton and mustered in, Sept. 4, 1862, and participated in the siege of Vicksburg. Six companies were engaged in skirmish line, near Humboldt, Tenn., and the regiment took part in the capture of Little Rock and in the fight at Clarendon, Ark. It was mustered out July 12, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Chicago, Sept. 6, 1862; took part in the first campaign against Vicksburg, and in the battle of Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg under Grant, the capture of Jackson (Miss.), the battles of Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, the Meridian raid, and in the fighting at Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta and Jonesboro; also accompanied Sherman in his march through Georgia and the Carolinas, taking part in the battle of Bentonville; was mustered out at Chicago. June 17, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Mustered in, Dec. 18, 1862, but remained in service less than five months, when, its number of officers and men having been reduced from 860 to 161 (largely by desertions), a number of officers were dismissed, and the few remaining officers and men were formed into a detachment, and transferred to another Illinois regiment.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Organized at Pontiac, in August, 1862, and mustered into the service Sept. 8. Prior to May, 1864, the regiment was chiefly engaged in garrison duty. It marched with Sherman in the Atlanta campaign and through Georgia and the Carolinas, and took part in the battles of Resaca, Buzzard's Roost, Lost Mountain, Dallas, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Averysboro and Bentonville. It received final pay and discharge at Chicago, June 10, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, Oct. 25, 1862; was engaged at Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, Vicksburg, Jackson (Miss.), and in the Red River expedition. While on this expedition almost the entire regiment was captured at the battle of Mansfield, and not paroled until near the close of the war. The remaining officers and men were consolidated with the Seventy-seventh Infantry in January, 1865, and participated in the capture of Mobile. Six months later its regimental reorganization, as the One Hundred and Thirtieth, was ordered. It was mustered out at New Orleans, August 15, 1865, and discharged at Springfield, August 31.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized in September, 1862, and mustered into the service, Nov. 13, with 815 men, exclusive of officers. In October, 1863, it was consolidated with the Twenty-ninth Infantry, and ceased to exist as a separate organization. Up to that time the regiment had been in but a few conflicts and in no pitched battle.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago and mustered in for 100 days from June 1, 1864. The regiment remained on duty at Paducah until the expiration of its service, when it moved to Chicago, and was mustered out, Oct. 17, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in for one hundred days, May 31, 1864; was engaged during its term of service in guarding prisoners of war at Rock Island; was mustered out, Sept. 4, 1864, at Camp Butler.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago and mustered in, May 31, 1864, for 100 days; was assigned to garrison duty at Columbus, Ky., and mustered out of service, Oct. 25, 1864, at Chicago.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered in for 100-days' service at Mattoon, June 6, 1864, having a strength of 852 men. It was chiefly engaged, during its term of service, in doing garrison duty and guarding railroads. It was mustered out at Springfield, Sept. 28, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Enlisted about the first of May, 1864, for 100 days, and went into camp at Centralia, Ill., but was not mustered into service until June 1, following. Its principal service was garrison duty, with occasional scouts and raids amongst guerrillas. At the end of its term of service the regiment re-enlisted for fifteen days; was mustered out at Springfield, Oct. 22, 1864, and discharged eight days later.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Quincy, with ex-Gov. John Wood as its Colonel, and mustered in, June 5, 1864, for 100 days. Was on duty at Memphis, Tenn., and mustered out of service at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 4, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Quincy, and mustered in, June 21, 1864, for 100 days; was assigned to garrison duty at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and in Western Missouri. It was mustered out of service at Springfield, Ill., Oct. 14, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service as a 100-day's regiment, at Peoria, June 1, 1864; was engaged in garrison duty at Columbus and Cairo, in making reprisals for guerrilla raids, and in the pursuit of the Confederate General Price in Missouri. The latter service was rendered, at the President's request, after the term of enlistment had expired. It was mustered out at Peoria, Oct. 25, 1864, having been in the service nearly five months.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTIETH INFANTRY. Organized as a 100-days' regiment, at Springfield, June 18, 1864, and mustered into service on that date. The regiment was engaged in guarding railroads between Memphis and Holly Springs, and in garrison duty at Memphis. After the term of enlistment had expired and the regiment had been mustered out, it aided in the pursuit of General Price through Missouri; was finally discharged at Chicago, after serving about five months.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Mustered into service as a 100-days' regiment, at Elgin, June 16, 1864—strength, 842 men; departed for the field, June 27, 1864; was mustered out at Chicago, Oct. 10, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Freeport as a battalion of eight companies, and sent to Camp Butler, where two companies were added and the regiment mustered into service for 100 days, June 18, 1864. It was ordered to Memphis, Tenn., five days later, and assigned to duty at White's Station, eleven miles from that city, where it was employed in guarding the Memphis & Charleston railroad. It was mustered out at Chicago, on Oct. 27, 1864, the men having voluntarily served one month beyond their term of enlistment.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Mattoon, and mustered in, June 11, 1864, for 100 days. It was assigned to garrison duty, and mustered out at Mattoon, Sept. 26, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Alton, in 1864, as a one-year regiment; was mustered into the service, Oct. 21, its strength being 1,159 men. It was mustered out, July 14, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, June 9, 1864; strength, 880 men. It departed for the field, June 12, 1864; was mustered out, Sept. 23, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Sept. 18, 1864, for one year. Was assigned to the duty of guarding drafted men at Brighton, Quincy, Jacksonville and Springfield, and mustered out at Springfield, July 5, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered into service for one year, Feb. 18 and 19, 1865; was engaged chiefly on guard or garrison duty, in scouting and in skirmishing with guerrillas. Mustered out at Nashville, Jan. 22, 1866, and received final discharge at Springfield, Feb. 4.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for the term of one year; was assigned to garrison and guard duty and mustered out, Sept. 5, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn.; arrived at Springfield, Sept. 9, 1865, where it was paid off and discharged.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 11, 1865, and mustered in for one year; was engaged in garrison and guard duty; mustered out, Jan. 27, 1866, at Dalton, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in, Feb. 14, 1865, for one year; was on duty in Tennessee and Georgia, guarding railroads and garrisoning towns. It was mustered out, Jan. 16, 1866, at Atlanta, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIRST INFANTRY. This regiment was organized at Quincy, Ill., and mustered into the United States service, Feb. 23, 1865, and was composed of companies from various parts of the State, recruited, under the call of Dec. 19, 1864. It was engaged in guard duty, with a few guerrilla skirmishes, and was present at the surrender of General Warford's army, at Kingston, Ga.; was mustered out at Columbus, Ga., Jan. 24, 1866, and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge, Feb. 8, 1866.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in, Feb. 18, 1865, for one year; was mustered out of service, to date Sept. 11, at Memphis, Tenn., and arrived at Camp Butler, Sept. 9, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered in, Feb. 27, 1865, for one year; was not engaged in any battles. It was mustered out, Sept. 15, 1865, and moved to Springfield, Ill., and, Sept. 24, received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for one year. Sept. 18, 1865, the regiment was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., and ordered to Springfield for final payment and discharge, where it arrived, Sept. 22; was paid off and discharged at Camp Butler, Sept. 29.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in Feb. 28, 1865, for one year, 904 strong. On Sept. 4, 1865, it was mustered out of service, and moved to Camp Butler, where it received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered in during the months of February and March, 1865, from the northern counties of the State, for the term of one year. The officers of the regiment have left no written record of its history, but its service seems to have been rendered chiefly in Tennessee in the neighborhood of Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga. Judging by the muster-rolls of the Adjutant-General, the regiment would appear to have been greatly depleted by desertions and otherwise, the remnant being finally mustered out, Sept. 20, 1865.

FIRST CAVALRY. Organized — consisting of seven companies, A, B, C, D, E, F and G—at Alton, in 1861, and mustered into the United States service, July 3. After some service in Missouri, the regiment participated in the battle of Lexington, in that State, and was surrendered, with the remainder of the garrison, Sept. 20, 1861. The officers were paroled, and the men sworn not to take up arms again until discharged. No exchange having been effected in November, the non-commissioned officers and privates were ordered to Springfield and discharged. In June, 1862, the regiment was reorganized at Benton Barracks, Mo., being afterwards employed in guarding supply trains and supply depots at various points. Mustered out, at Benton Barracks, July 14, 1862.

SECOND CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, August 12, 1861, with Company M (which joined the regiment some months later), numbering 47 commissioned officers and 1,040 enlisted men. This number was increased by recruits and re-enlistments, during its four and a half year's term of service, to 2,236 enlisted men and 145 commissioned officers. It was engaged at Belmont; a portion of the regiment took part in the battles at Fort Henry, Fort Donelson and Shiloh, another portion at Merriweather's Ferry, Bolivar and Holly Springs, and participated in the investment of Vicksburg. In January, 1864, the major part of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, later, participating in the Red River expedition and the investment of Fort Blakely. It was mustered out at San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 22, 1865, and finally paid and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 3, 1866.

THIRD CAVALRY. Composed of twelve companies, from various localities in the State, the grand total of company officers and enlisted men, under the first organization, being 1,433. It was organized at Springfield, in August, 1861; participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Haines' Bluff, Arkansas Post, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, and the siege of Vicksburg. In July, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. The remainder were mustered out, Sept. 5, 1864. The veterans participated in the repulse of Forrest, at Memphis, and in the battles of Lawrenceburg, Spring Hill, Campbellsville and Franklin. From May to October, 1865, engaged in service against the Indians in the Northwest. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, Oct. 18, 1865.

FOURTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 26, 1861, and participated in the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, and Shiloh; in the siege of Corinth, and in many engagements of less historic note; was mustered out at Springfield in November, 1864. By order of the War Department, of June 18, 1865, the members of the regiment whose terms had not expired, were consolidated with the Twelfth Illinois Cavalry.

FIFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Camp Butler, in November, 1861; took part in the Meridian raid and the expedition against Jackson, Miss., and in numerous minor expeditions, doing effective work at Canton, Grenada, Woodville, and other points. On Jan. 1, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. Its final muster-out took place, Oct. 27, 1865, and it received final payment and discharge, October 30.

SIXTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, Nov. 19, 1861; participated in Sherman's advance upon Grenada; in the Grierson raid through Mississippi and Louisiana, the siege of Port Hudson, the battles of Moscow (Tenn.), West Point (Miss.), Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans, March 30, 1864; was mustered out at Selma, Ala., Nov. 5, 1865, and received discharge, November 20, at Springfield.

SEVENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, and was mustered into service, Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Farmington, Iuka, Corinth (second battle); in Grierson's raid through Mississippi and Louisiana; in the engagement at Plain's Store (La.), and the investment of Port Hudson. In March, 1864, 288 officers and men re-enlisted as veterans. The non-veterans were engaged at Guntown, and the entire regiment took part in the battle of Franklin. After the close of hostilities, it was stationed in Alabama and Mississippi, until the latter part of October, 1865; was mustered out at Nashville, and finally discharged at Springfield, Nov. 17, 1865.

EIGHTH CAVALRY. Organized at St. Charles, Ill., and mustered in, Sept. 18, 1861. The regiment was ordered to Virginia, and participated in the general advance on Manassas in March, 1862; was engaged at Mechanicsville, Gaines' Hill, Malvern Hill, Sugar Loaf Mountain, Middletown, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Sulphur Springs, Warrenton, Rapidan Station, Northern Neck, Gettysburg, Williamsburg, Funkstown, Falling Water, Chester Gap, Sandy Hook, Culpepper, Brandy Station, and in many raids and skirmishes. It was mustered out of service at Benton Barracks, Mo., July 17, 1865, and ordered to Chicago, where it received final payment and discharge.

NINTH CAVALRY Organized at Chicago, in the autumn of 1861, and mustered in, November 30; was engaged at Coldwater, Grenada, Wyatt, Saulsbury, Moscow, Guntown, Pontotoc, Tupelo, Old Town Creek, Hurricane Creek, Lawrenceburg, Campellsville, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, March 16, 1864; was mustered out of service at Selma, Ala., Oct. 31, 1865, and ordered to Springfield, where the men received final payment and discharge.

TENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield in the latter part of September, 1861, and mustered into service, Nov. 25, 1861; was engaged at Prairie Grove, Cotton Plant, Arkansas Post, in the Yazoo Pass expedition, at Richmond (La.), Brownsville, Bayou Metoe, Bayou La Fourche and Little Rock. In February, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, the non-veterans accompanying General Banks in his Red River expedition. On Jan. 27, 1865, the veterans, and recruits were consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, and all reorganized under the name of the Tenth Illinois Veteran Volunteer Cavalry. Mustered out of service at San Antonio, Texas, Nov. 22, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield, Jan. 6, 1866.

ELEVENTH CAVALRY. Robert G. Ingersoll of Peoria, and Basil D. Meeks, of Woodford County, obtained permission to raise a regiment of cavalry, and recruiting commenced in October, 1861. The regiment was recruited from the counties of Peoria, Fulton, Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall, Stark, Knox, Henderson and Warren; was mustered into the service at Peoria, Dec. 20, 1861, and was first under fire at Shiloh. It also took part in the raid in the rear of Corinth, and in the battles of Bolivar, Corinth (second battle), Iuka, Lexington and Jackson (Tenn.); in McPherson's expedition to Canton and Sherman's Meridian raid, in the relief of Yazoo City, and in numerous less important raids and skirmishes. Most of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in December, 1863; the non-veterans being mustered out at Memphis, in the autumn of 1864. The veterans were mustered out at the same place, Sept. 30, 1865, and discharged at Springfield, October 20.

TWELFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, in February, 1862, and remained there guarding rebel prisoners until June 25, when it was mounted and sent to Martinsburg, Va. It was engaged at Fredericksburg, Williamsport, Falling Waters, the Rapidan and Stevensburg. On Nov. 26, 1863, the regiment was relieved from service and ordered home to reorganize as veterans. Subsequently it joined Banks in the Red River expedition and in Davidson's expedition against Mobile. While at Memphis the Twelfth Cavalry was consolidated into an eight-company organization, and the Fourth Cavalry, having previously been consolidated into a battalion of five companies, was consolidated with the Twelfth. The consolidated regiment was mustered out at Houston, Texas, May 29, 1866, and, on June 18, received final pay and discharge at Springfield.

THIRTEENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Chicago, in December, 1861; moved to the front from Benton Barracks, Mo., in February, 1862, and was engaged in the following battles and skirmishes (all in Missouri and Arkansas): Putnam's Ferry, Cotton Plant, Union City (twice), Camp Pillow, Bloomfield (first and second battles), Van Buren, Allen, Eleven Point River, Jackson, White River, Chalk Bluff, Bushy Creek, near Helena, Grand Prairie, White River, Deadman's Lake, Brownsville, Bayou Metoe, Austin, Little Rock, Benton, Batesville, Pine Bluff, Arkadelphia, Okolona, Little Missouri River, Prairie du Anne, Camden, Jenkins' Ferry, Cross Roads, Mount Elba, Douglas Landing and Monticello. The regiment was mustered out, August 31, 1865, and received final pay and discharge at Springfield, Sept. 13, 1865.

FOURTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service at Peoria, in January and February, 1863; participated in the battle of Cumberland Gap, in the defense of Knoxville and the pursuit of Longstreet, in the engagements at Bean Station and Dandridge, in the Macon raid, and in the cavalry battle at Sunshine Church. In the latter General Stoneman surrendered, but the Fourteenth cut its way out. On their retreat the men were betrayed by a guide and the regiment badly cut up and scattered, those escaping being hunted by soldiers with bloodhounds. Later, it was engaged at Waynesboro and in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, and was mustered out at Nashville, July 31, 1865, having marched over 10,000 miles, exclusive of duty done by detachments.

FIFTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed of companies originally independent, attached to infantry regiments and acting as such; participated in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege and capture of Corinth. Regimental organization was effected in the spring of 1863, and thereafter it was engaged chiefly in scouting and post duty. It was mustered out at Springfield, August 25, 1864, the recruits (whose term of service had not expired) being consolidated with the Tenth Cavalry.

SIXTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed principally of Chicago men—Thieleman's and Schambeck's Cavalry Companies, raised at the outset of the war, forming the nucleus of the regiment. The former served as General Sherman's body-guard for some time. Captain Thieleman was made a Major and authorized to raise a battalion, the two companies named thenceforth being known as Thieleman's Battalion. In September, 1862, the War Department authorized the extension of the battalion to a regiment, and, on the 11th of June, 1863, the regimental organization was completed. It took part in the East Tennessee campaign, a portion of the regiment aiding in the defense of Knoxville, a part garrisoning Cumberland Gap, and one battalion being captured by Longstreet. The regiment also participated in the battles of Rocky Face Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Kingston, Cassville, Cartersville, Allatoona, Kenesaw, Lost Mountain, Mines Ridge, Powder Springs, Chattahoochie, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. It arrived in Chicago, August 23, 1865, for final payment and discharge, having marched about 5,000 miles and engaged in thirty-one battles, besides numerous skirmishes.

SEVENTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service in January and February, 1864; aided in the repulse of Price at Jefferson City, Mo., and was engaged at Booneville, Independence, Mine Creek, and Fort Scott, besides doing garrison duty, scouting and raiding. It was mustered out in November and December, 1865, at Leavenworth, Kan. Gov. John L. Beveridge, who had previously been a Captain and Major of the Eighth Cavalry, was the Colonel of this regiment.

FIRST LIGHT ARTILLERY. Consisted of ten batteries. Battery A was organized under the first call for State troops, April 21, 1861, but not mustered into the three years' service until July 16; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the Atlanta campaign; was in reserve at Champion Hills and Nashville, and mustered out July 3, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery B was organized in April, 1861, engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the siege of Corinth and at La Grange, Holly Springs, Memphis, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, Mechanicsburg, Richmond (La.), the Atlanta campaign and the battle of Nashville. The Battery was reorganized by consolidation with Battery A, and mustered out at Chicago, July 2, 1865.

Battery D was organized at Cairo, Sept. 2, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson and at Shiloh, and mustered out, July 28, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery E was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into service, Dec. 19, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Jackson, Vicksburg, Guntown, Pontotoc, Tupelo and Nashville, and mustered out at Louisville, Dec. 24, 1864.

Battery F was recruited at Dixon and mustered in at Springfield, Feb. 25, 1862. It took part in the siege of Corinth and the Yocona expedition, and was consolidated with the other batteries in the regiment, March 7, 1865.

Battery G was organized at Cairo and mustered in Sept. 28, 1861; was engaged in the siege and the second battle of Corinth, and mustered out at Springfield, July 24, 1865.

Battery H was recruited in and about Chicago, during January and February, 1862; participated in the battle of Shiloh, siege of Vicksburg, and in the Atlanta campaign, the "March to the Sea," and through the Carolinas with Sherman.

Battery I was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered in, Feb. 10, 1862; was engaged at Shiloh, in the Tallahatchie raid, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the battles of Chattanooga and Vicksburg. It veteranized, March 17, 1864, and was mustered out, July 26, 1865.

Battery K was organized at Shawneetown and mustered in, Jan. 9, 1862, participated in Burnside's campaign in Tennessee, and in the capture of Knoxville. Part of the men were mustered out at Springfield in June, 1865, and the remainder at Chicago in July.

Battery M was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into the service, August 12, 1862, for three years. It served through the Chickamauga campaign, being engaged at Chickamauga; also was engaged at Missionary Ridge, was besieged at Chattanooga, and took part in all the important battles of the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out at Chicago, July 24, 1864, having traveled 3,102 miles and been under fire 178 days.

SECOND LIGHT ARTILLERY. Consisted of nine batteries. Battery A was organized at Peoria, and mustered into service, May 23, 1861; served in Missouri and Arkansas, doing brilliant work at Pea Ridge. It was mustered out of service at Springfield, July 27, 1865.

Battery D was organized at Cairo, and mustered into service in December, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Vicksburg, Jackson, Meridian and Decatur, and mustered out at Louisville, Nov. 21, 1864.

Battery E was organized at St. Louis, Mo., in August, 1861, and mustered into service, August 20, at that point. It was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege of Corinth and the Yocona expedition—was consolidated with Battery A.

Battery F was organized at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and mustered in, Dec. 11, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, in the siege and second battle of Corinth, and the Meridian campaign; also at Kenesaw, Atlanta and Jonesboro. It was mustered out, July 27, 1865, at Springfield.

Battery H was organized at Springfield, December, 1861, and mustered in, Dec. 31, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson and in the siege of Fort Pillow; veteranized, Jan. 1, 1864, was mounted as cavalry the following summer, and mustered out at Springfield, July 29, 1865.

Battery I was recruited in Will County, and mustered into service at Camp Butler, Dec. 31, 1861. It participated in the siege of Island No. 10, in the advance upon Corinth, and in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Chattanooga. It veteranized, Jan. 1, 1864, marched with Sherman to Atlanta, and thence to Savannah and through the Carolinas, and was mustered out at Springfield.

Battery K was organized at Springfield and mustered in Dec. 31, 1863; was engaged at Fort Pillow, the capture of Clarkston, Mo., and the siege of Vicksburg. It was mustered out, July 14, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery L was organized at Chicago and mustered in, Feb. 28, 1862; participated in the advance on Corinth, the battle of Hatchie and the advance on the Tallahatchie, and was mustered out at Chicago, August 9, 1865.

Battery M was organized at Chicago, and mustered in at Springfield, June, 1862; was engaged at Jonesboro, Blue Spring, Blountsville and Rogersville, being finally consolidated with other batteries of the regiment.

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE BATTERY. Organized through the efforts of the Chicago Board of Trade, which raised $15,000 for its equipment, within forty-eight hours. It was mustered into service, August 1, 1862, was engaged at Lawrenceburg, Murfreesboro, Stone River, Chickamauga, Farmington, Decatur (Ga.), Atlanta, Lovejoy Station, Nashville, Selma and Columbus (Ga.) It was mustered out at Chicago, June 30, 1865, and paid in full, July 3, having marched 5,268 miles and traveled by rail 1,231 miles. The battery was in eleven of the hardest battles fought in the West, and in twenty-six minor battles, being in action forty-two times while on scouts, reconnoissances or outpost duty.

CHICAGO MERCANTILE BATTERY. Recruited and organized under the auspices of the Mercantile Association, an association of prominent and patriotic merchants of the City of Chicago. It was mustered into service, August 29, 1862, at Camp Douglas, participated in the Tallahatchie and Yazoo expeditions, the first attack upon Vicksburg, the battle of Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, the battles of Magnolia Hills, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge and Jackson (Miss.); also took part in Banks' Red River expedition; was mustered out at Chicago, and received final payment, July 10, 1865, having traveled, by river, sea and land, over 11,000 miles.

SPRINGFIELD LIGHT ARTILLERY. Recruited principally from the cities of Springfield, Belleville and Wenona, and mustered into service at Springfield, for the term of three years, August 21, 1862, numbering 199 men and officers. It participated in the capture of Little Rock and in the Red River expedition, and was mustered out at Springfield, 114 strong, June 30, 1865.

COGSWELL'S BATTERY, LIGHT ARTILLERY. Organized at Ottawa, Ill., and mustered in, Nov. 11, 1861, as Company A (Artillery) Fifty-third Illinois Volunteers, Colonel Cushman commanding the regiment. It participated in the advance on Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg, the battle of Missionary Ridge, and the capture of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, near Mobile. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, August 14, 1865, having served three years and nine months, marched over 7,500 miles, and participated in seven sieges and battles.

STURGES RIFLES. An independent company, organized at Chicago, armed, equipped and subsisted for nearly two months, by the patriotic generosity of Mr. Solomon Sturges; was mustered into service, May 6, 1861; in June following, was ordered to West Virginia, serving as body-guard of General McClellan; was engaged at Rich Mountain, in the siege of Yorktown, and in the seven days' battle of the Chickahominy. A portion of the company was at Antietam, the remainder having been detached as foragers, scouts, etc. It was mustered out at Washington, Nov. 25, 1862.

WAR, THE SPANISH-AMERICAN. The oppressions and misrule which had characterized the administration of affairs by the Spanish Government and its agents for generations, in the Island of Cuba, culminated, in April, 1898, in mutual declarations of war between Spain and the United States. The causes leading up to this result were the injurious effects upon American commerce and the interests of American citizens owning property in Cuba, as well as the constant expense imposed upon the Government of the United States in the maintenance of a large navy along the South Atlantic coast to suppress filibustering, superadded to the friction and unrest produced among the people of this country by the long continuance of disorders and abuses so near to our own shores, which aroused the sympathy and indignation of the entire civilized world. For three years a large proportion of the Cuban population had been in open rebellion against the Spanish Government, and, while the latter had imported a large army to the island and subjected the insurgents and their families and sympathizers to the grossest cruelties, not even excepting torture and starvation itself, their policy had failed to bring the insurgents into subjection or to restore order. In this condition of affairs the United States Government had endeavored, through negotiation, to secure a mitigation of the evils complained of, by a modification of the Spanish policy of government in the island; but all suggestions in this direction had either been resented by Spain as unwarrantable interference in her affairs, or promises of reform, when made, had been as invariably broken.

In the meantime an increasing sentiment had been growing up in the United States in favor of conceding belligerent rights to the Cuban insurgents, or the recognition of their independence, which found expression in measures proposed in Congress—all offers of friendly intervention by the United States having been rejected by Spain with evidences of indignation. Compelled, at last, to recognize its inability to subdue the insurrection, the Spanish Government, in November, 1897, made a pretense of tendering autonomy to the Cuban people, with the privilege of amnesty to the insurgents on laying down their arms. The long duration of the war and the outrages perpetrated upon the helpless "reconcentrados," coupled with the increased confidence of the insurgents in the final triumph of their cause, rendered this movement—even if intended to be carried out to the letter—of no avail. The proffer came too late, and was promptly rejected.

In this condition of affairs and with a view to greater security for American interests, the American battleship Maine was ordered to Havana, on Jan. 24, 1898. It arrived in Havana Harbor the following day, and was anchored at a point designated by the Spanish commander. On the night of February 15, following, it was blown up and destroyed by some force, as shown by after investigation, applied from without. Of a crew of 354 men belonging to the vessel at the time, 266 were either killed outright by the explosion, or died from their wounds. Not only the American people, but the entire civilized world, was shocked by the catastrophe. An act of horrible treachery had been perpetrated against an American vessel and its crew on a peaceful mission in the harbor of a professedly friendly nation.

The successive steps leading to actual hostilities were rapid and eventful. One of the earliest and most significant of these was the passage, by a unanimous vote of both houses of Congress, on March 9, of an appropriation placing $50,000,000 in the hands of the President as an emergency fund for purposes of national defense. This was followed, two days later, by an order for the mobilization of the army. The more important events following this step were: An order, under date of April 5, withdrawing American consuls from Spanish stations; the departure, on April 9, of Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee from Havana; April 19, the adoption by Congress of concurrent resolutions declaring Cuba independent and directing the President to use the land and naval forces of the United States to put an end to Spanish authority in the island; April 20, the sending to the Spanish Government, by the President, of an ultimatum in accordance with this act; April 21, the delivery to Minister Woodford, at Madrid, of his passports without waiting for the presentation of the ultimatum, with the departure of the Spanish Minister from Washington; April 23, the issue of a call by the President for 125,000 volunteers; April 24, the final declaration of war by Spain; April 25, the adoption by Congress of a resolution declaring that war had existed from April 21; on the same date an order to Admiral Dewey, in command of the Asiatic Squadron at Hongkong, to sail for Manila with a view to investing that city and blockading Philippine ports.

The chief events subsequent to the declaration of war embraced the following: May 1, the destruction by Admiral Dewey's squadron of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila; May 19, the arrival of the Spanish Admiral Cervera's fleet at Santiago de Cuba; May 25, a second call by the President for 75,000 volunteers; July 3, the attempt of Cervera's fleet to escape, and its destruction off Santiago; July 17, the surrender of Santiago to the forces under General Shafter; July 30, the statement by the President, through the French Ambassador at Washington, of the terms on which the United States would consent to make peace; August 9, acceptance of the peace terms by Spain, followed, three days later, by the signing of the peace protocol; September 9, the appointment by the President of Peace Commissioners on the part of the United States; Sept. 18, the announcement of the Peace Commissioners selected by Spain; October 1, the beginning of the Peace Conference by the representatives of the two powers, at Paris, and the formal signing, on December 10, of the peace treaty, including the recognition by Spain of the freedom of Cuba, with the transfer to the United States of Porto Rico and her other West India islands, together with the surrender of the Philippines for a consideration of $20,000,000.

Seldom, if ever, in the history of nations have such vast and far-reaching results been accomplished within so short a period. The war, which practically began with the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila Harbor—an event which aroused the enthusiasm of the whole American people, and won the respect and admiration of other nations—was practically ended by the surrender of Santiago and the declaration by the President of the conditions of peace just three months later. Succeeding events, up to the formal signing of the peace treaty, were merely the recognition of results previously determined.

HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS.—The part played by Illinois in connection with these events may be briefly summarized in the history of Illinois regiments and other organizations. Under the first call of the President for 125,000 volunteers, eight regiments—seven of infantry and one of cavalry—were assigned to Illinois, to which was subsequently added, on application through Governor Tanner, one battery of light artillery. The infantry regiments were made up of the Illinois National Guard, numbered consecutively from one to seven, and were practically mobilized at their home stations within forty-eight hours from the receipt of the call, and began to arrive at Camp Tanner, near Springfield, the place of rendezvous, on April 26, the day after the issue of the Governor's call. The record of Illinois troops is conspicuous for the promptness of their response and the completeness of their organization—in this respect being unsurpassed by those of any other State. Under the call of May 25 for an additional force of 75,000 men, the quota assigned to Illinois was two regiments, which were promptly furnished, taking the names of the Eighth and Ninth. The first of these belonged to the Illinois National Guard, as the regiments mustered in under the first call had done, while the Ninth was one of a number of "Provisional Regiments" which had tendered their services to the Government. Some twenty-five other regiments of this class, more or less complete, stood ready to perfect their organizations should there be occasion for their services. The aggregate strength of Illinois organizations at date of muster out from the United States service was 12,280—11,789 men and 491 officers.

FIRST REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEERS (originally Illinois National Guard) was organized at Chicago, and mustered into the United States service at Camp Tanner (Springfield), under the command of Col. Henry L. Turner, May 13, 1898; left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga) May 17; assigned to First Brigade, Third Division, of the First Army Corps; started for Tampa, Fla., June 2, but soon after arrival there was transferred to Picnic Island, and assigned to provost duty in place of the First United States Infantry. On June 30 the bulk of the regiment embarked for Cuba, but was detained in the harbor at Key West until July 5, when the vessel sailed for Santiago, arriving in Guantanamo Bay on the evening of the 8th. Disembarking on the 10th, the whole regiment arrived on the firing line on the 11th, spent several days and nights in the trenches before Santiago, and were present at the surrender of that city on the 17th. Two companies had previously been detached for the scarcely less perilous duty of service in the fever hospitals and in caring for their wounded comrades. The next month was spent on guard duty in the captured city, until August 25, when, depleted in numbers and weakened by fever, the bulk of the regiment was transferred by hospital boats to Camp Wikoff, on Montauk Point, L. I. The members of the regiment able to travel left Camp Wikoff, September 8, for Chicago, arriving two days later, where they met an enthusiastic reception and were mustered out, November 17, 1,235 strong (rank and file)—a considerable number of recruits having joined the regiment just before leaving Tampa. The record of the First was conspicuous by the fact that it was the only Illinois regiment to see service in Cuba during the progress of actual hostilities. Before leaving Tampa some eighty members of the regiment were detailed for engineering duty in Porto Rico, sailed for that island on July 12, and were among the first to perform service there. The First suffered severely from yellow fever while in Cuba, but, as a regiment, while in the service, made a brilliant record, which was highly complimented in the official reports of its commanding officers.

SECOND REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (originally Second I. N. G.). This regiment, also from Chicago, began to arrive at Springfield, April 27, 1898—at that time numbering 1,202 men and 47 officers, under command of Col. George M. Moulton; was mustered in between May 4 and May 15; on May 17 started for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where, as a part of the Seventh Army Corps, under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, it assisted in the dedication of Camp Cuba Libre. October 25 it was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at "Camp Lee" until December 8, when two battalions embarked for Havana, landing on the 15th, being followed, a few days later, by the Third Battalion, and stationed at Camp Columbia. From Dec. 17 to Jan. 11, 1899, Colonel Moulton served as Chief of Police for the city of Havana. On March 28 to 30 the regiment left Camp Columbia in detachments for Augusta, Ga., where it arrived April 5, and was mustered out, April 26, 1,051 strong (rank and file), and returned to Chicago. During its stay in Cuba the regiment did not lose a man. A history of this regiment has been written by Rev. H. W. Bolton, its late Chaplain.

THIRD REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies of the Illinois National Guard from the counties of La Salle, Livingston, Kane, Kankakee, McHenry, Ogle, Will, and Winnebago, under command of Col. Fred Bennitt, reported at Springfield, with 1,170 men and 50 officers, on April 27; was mustered in May 7, 1898; transferred from Springfield to Camp Thomas (Chickamauga), May 14; on July 22 left Chickamauga for Porto Rico; on the 28th sailed from Newport News, on the liner St. Louis, arriving at Ponce, Porto Rico, on July 31; soon after disembarking captured Arroyo, and assisted in the capture of Guayama, which was the beginning of General Brooke's advance across the island to San Juan, when intelligence was received of the signing of the peace protocol by Spain. From August 13 to October 1 the Third continued in the performance of guard duty in Porto Rico; on October 22, 986 men and 39 officers took transport for home by way of New York, arriving in Chicago, November 11, the several companies being mustered out at their respective home stations. Its strength at final muster-out was 1,273 men and officers. This regiment had the distinction of being one of the first to see service in Porto Rico, but suffered severely from fever and other diseases during the three months of its stay in the island.

FOURTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies from Champaign, Coles, Douglas, Edgar, Effingham, Fayette, Jackson, Jefferson, Montgomery, Richland, and St. Clair counties; mustered into the service at Springfield, May 20, under command of Col. Casimer Andel; started immediately for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where it was stationed at Camp Cuba Libre as a part of the Seventh Corps under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee; in October was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at Camp Onward until about the first of January, when the regiment took ship for Havana. Here the regiment was stationed at Camp Columbia until April 4, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out at Camp Mackenzie (Augusta), May 2, the companies returning to their respective home stations. During a part of its stay at Jacksonville, and again at Savannah, the regiment was employed on guard duty. While at Jacksonville Colonel Andel was suspended by court-martial, and finally tendered his resignation, his place being supplied by Lieut.-Col. Eben Swift, of the Ninth.

FIFTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was the first regiment to report, and was mustered in at Springfield, May 7, 1898, under command of Col. James S. Culver, being finally composed of twelve companies from Pike, Christian, Sangamon, McLean, Montgomery, Adams, Tazewell, Macon, Morgan, Peoria, and Fulton counties; on May 14 left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga, Ga.), being assigned to the command of General Brooke; August 3 left Chickamauga for Newport News, Va., with the expectation of embarking for Porto Rico—a previous order of July 26 to the same purport having been countermanded; at Newport News embarked on the transport Obdam, but again the order was rescinded, and, after remaining on board thirty-six hours, the regiment was disembarked. The next move was made to Lexington, Ky., where the regiment—having lost hope of reaching “the front”—remained until Sept. 5, when it returned to Springfield for final muster-out. This regiment was composed of some of the best material in the State, and anxious for active service, but after a succession of disappointments, was compelled to return to its home station without meeting the enemy. After its arrival at Springfield the regiment was furloughed for thirty days and finally mustered out, October 16, numbering 1,213 men and 47 officers.

SIXTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, consisting of twelve companies from the counties of Rock Island, Knox, Whiteside, Lee, Carroll, Stephenson, Henry, Warren, Bureau, and Jo Daviess, was mustered in May 11, 1898, under command of Col. D. Jack Foster; on May 17 left Springfield for Camp Alger, Va.; July 5 the regiment moved to Charleston, S. C., where a part embarked for Siboney, Cuba, but the whole regiment was soon after united in General Miles' expedition for the invasion of Porto Rico, landing at Guanico on July 25, and advancing into the interior as far as Adjunta and Utuado. After several weeks' service in the interior, the regiment returned to Ponce, and on September 7 took transport for the return home, arrived at Springfield a week later, and was mustered out November 25, the regiment at that time consisting of 1,239 men and 49 officers.

SEVENTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (known as the “Hibernian Rifles”). Two battalions of this regiment reported at Springfield, April 27, with 33 officers and 765 enlisted men, being afterwards increased to the maximum; was mustered into the United States service, under command of Col. Marcus Kavanagh, May 18, 1898; on May 28 started for Camp Alger, Va.; was afterwards encamped at Thoroughfare Gap and Camp Meade; on September 9 returned to Springfield, was furloughed for thirty days, and mustered out, October 20, numbering 1,260 men and 49 officers. Like the Fifth, the Seventh saw no actual service in the field.

EIGHTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (colored regiment), mustered into the service at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 23, 1898, being composed wholly of Afro-Americans under officers of their own race, with Col. John R. Marshall in command, the muster-roll showing 1,195 men and 76 officers. The six companies, from A to F, were from Chicago, the other five being, respectively, from Bloomington, Springfield, Quincy, Litchfield, Mound City and Metropolis, and Cairo. The regiment having tendered their services to relieve the First Illinois on duty at Santiago de Cuba, it started for Cuba, August 8, by way of New York; immediately on arrival at Santiago, a week later, was assigned to duty, but subsequently transferred to San Luis, where Colone, Marshall was made military governor. The major part of the regiment remained here until ordered home early in March, 1899, arrived at Chicago, March 15, and was mustered out, April 3, 1,226 strong, rank and file, having been in service nine months and six days.

NINTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was organized from the counties of Southern Illinois, and mustered in at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 4-11, 1898, under command of Col. James R. Campbell; arrived at Camp Cuba Libre (Jacksonville, Fla.), August 9; two months later was transferred to Savannah, Ga.; was moved to Havana in December, where it remained until May, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out there, May 20, 1899, at that time consisting of 1,095 men and 46 officers. From Augusta the several companies returned to their respective home stations. The Ninth was the only "Provisional Regiment" from Illinois mustered into the service during the war, the other regiments all belonging to the National Guard.

FIRST ILLINOIS CAVALRY was organized at Chicago immediately after the President's first call, seven companies being recruited from Chicago, two from Bloomington, and one each from Springfield, Elkhart, and Lacon; was mustered in at Springfield, May 21, 1898, under command of Col. Edward C. Young; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 30, remaining there until August 24, when it returned to Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, where it was stationed until October 11, when it was mustered out, at that time consisting of 1,158 men and 50 officers. Although the regiment saw no active service in the field, it established an excellent record for itself in respect to discipline.

FIRST ENGINEERING CORPS, consisting of 80 men detailed from the First Illinois Volunteers, were among the first Illinois soldiers to see service in Porto Rico, accompanying General Miles' expedition in the latter part of July, and being engaged for a time in the construction of bridges in aid of the intended advance across the island. On September 8 they embarked for the return home, arrived at Chicago, September 17, and were mustered out November 20.

BATTERY A (I. N. G.), from Danville, Ill., was mustered in under a special order of the War Department, May 12, 1898, under command of Capt. Oscar P. Yaeger, consisting of 118 men; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 19, and, two months later, joined in General Miles' Porto Rico expedition, landing at Guanico on August 3, and taking part in the affair at Guayama on the 12th. News of peace having been received, the Battery returned to Ponce, where it remained until September 7, when it started on the return home by way of New York, arrived at Danville, September 17, was furloughed for sixty days, and mustered out November 25. The Battery was equipped with modern breech-loading rapid-firing guns, operated by practical artillerymen and prepared for effective service.

NAVAL RESERVES.—One of the earliest steps taken by the Government after it became apparent that hostilities could not be averted, was to begin preparation for strengthening the naval arm of the service. The existence of the "Naval Militia," first organized in 1893, placed Illinois in an exceptionally favorable position for making a prompt response to the call of the Government, as well as furnishing a superior class of men for service—a fact evidenced during the operations in the West Indies. Gen. John McNulta, as head of the local committee, was active in calling the attention of the Navy Department to the value of the service to be rendered by this organization, which resulted in its being enlisted practically as a body, taking the name of "Naval Reserves"—all but eighty-eight of the number passing the physical examination, the places of these being promptly filled by new recruits. The first detachment of over 200 left Chicago May 2, under the command of Lieut.-Com. John M. Hawley, followed soon after by the remainder of the First Battalion, making the whole number from Chicago 400, with 267, constituting the Second Battalion, from other towns of the State. The latter was made up of 147 men from Moline, 58 from Quincy, and 62 from Alton—making a total from the State of 667. This does not include others, not belonging to this organization, who enlisted for service in the navy during the war, which raised the whole number for the State over 1,000. The Reserves enlisted from Illinois occupied a different relation to the Government from that of the "naval militia" of other States, which retained their State organizations, while those from Illinois were regularly mustered into the United States service. The recruits from Illinois were embarked at Key West, Norfolk and New York, and distributed among fifty-two different vessels, including nearly every vessel belonging to the North Atlantic Squadron. They saw service in nearly every department from the position of stokers in the hold to that of gunners in the turrets of the big battleships, the largest number (60) being assigned to the famous battleship Oregon, while the cruiser Yale followed with 47; the Harvard with 35; Cincinnati, 27; Yankton, 19; Franklin, 18; Montgomery and Indiana, each, 17; Hector, 14; Marietta, 11; Wilmington and Lancaster, 10 each, and others down to one each. Illinois sailors thus had the privilege of participating in the brilliant affair of July 3, which resulted in the destruction of Cervera's fleet off Santiago, as also in nearly every other event in the West Indies of less importance, without the loss of a man while in the service, although among the most exposed. They were mustered out at different times, as they could be spared from the service, or the vessels to which they were attached went out of commission, a portion serving out their full term of one year. The Reserves from Chicago retain their organization under the name of "Naval Reserve Veterans," with headquarters in the Masonic Temple Building, Chicago.

WARD, James H., ex-Congressman, was born in Chicago, Nov. 30, 1853, and educated in the Chicago public schools and at the University of Notre Dame, graduating from the latter in 1873. Three years later he graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, and was admitted to the bar. Since then he has continued to practice his profession in his native city. In 1879 he was elected Supervisor of the town of West Chicago, and, in 1884, was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket, and the same year, was the successful candidate of his party for Congress in the Third Illinois District, serving one term.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS, a tribe of the Dakota, or Sioux, stock, which at one time occupied a part of Northern Illinois. The word Winnebago is a corruption of the French Ouinebegoutz, Ouimbegouc, etc., the diphthong "ou" taking the place of the consonant "w," which is wanting in the French alphabet. These were, in turn, French misspellings of an Algonquin term meaning "fetid," which the latter tribe applied to the Winnebagoes because they had come from the western ocean—the salt (or "fetid") water. In their advance towards the East the Winnebagoes early invaded the country of the Illinois, but were finally driven northward by the latter, who surpassed them in numbers rather than in bravery. The invaders settled in Wisconsin, near the Fox River, and here they were first visited by the Jesuit Fathers in the seventeenth century. (See Jesuit Relations.) The Winnebagoes are commonly regarded as a Wisconsin tribe; yet, that they claimed territorial rights in Illinois is shown by the fact that the treaty of Prairie du Chien (August 1, 1829), alludes to a Winnebago village located in what is now Jo Daviess County, near the mouth of the Pecatonica River. While, as a rule, the tribe, if left to itself, was disposed to live in amity with the whites, it was carried away by the eloquence and diplomacy of Tecumseh and the cajoleries of "The Prophet." General Harrison especially alludes to the bravery of the Winnebago warriors at Tippecanoe, which he attributes in part, however, to a superstitious faith in "The Prophet." In June or July, 1827, an unprovoked and brutal outrage by the whites upon an unoffending and practically defenseless party of Winnebagoes, near Prairie du Chien brought on what is known as the "Winnebago War." (See Winnebago War.) The tribe took no part in the Black Hawk War, largely because of the great influence and shrewd tactic of their chief, Naw-caw. By treaties executed in 1832 and 1837 the Winnebagoes ceded to the United States all their lands lying east of the Mississippi. They were finally removed west of that river, and, after many shiftings of location, were placed upon the Omaha Reservation in Eastern Nebraska, where their industry, thrift and peaceable disposition elicited high praise from Government officials.

WARNER, Vespasian, lawyer and Member of Congress, was born in De Witt County, Ill., April 23, 1842, and has lived all his life in his native county—his present residence being Clinton. After a short course in Lombard University, while studying law in the office of Hon. Lawrence Weldon, at Clinton, he enlisted as a private soldier of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, in June, 1861, serving until July, 1866, when he was mustered out with the rank of Captain and brevet Major. He received a gunshot wound at Shiloh, but continued to serve in the Army of the Tennessee until the evacuation of Atlanta, when he was ordered North on account of disability. His last service was in fighting Indians on the plains. After the war he completed his law studies at Harvard University, graduating in 1868, when he entered into a law partnership with Clifton H. Moore of Clinton. He served as Judge-Advocate General of the Illinois National Guard for several years, with the rank of Colonel, under the administrations of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer, and, in 1894, was nominated and elected, as a Republican, to the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Thirteenth District, being re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, Mr. Warner was a member of the Committees on Agriculture and Invalid Pensions, and Chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

WARREN, a village in Jo Daviess County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways, 26 miles west-northwest of Freeport and 27 miles east by north of Galena. The surrounding region is agricultural and stock-raising; there are also lead mines in the vicinity. Tobacco is grown to some extent. Warren has a flouring mill, tin factory, creamery and stone quarries, a State bank, water supply from artesian wells, fire department, gas plant, two weekly newspapers, five churches, a high school, an academy and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,172; (1900), 1,327.

WARREN, Calvin A., lawyer, was born in Essex County, N. Y., June 3, 1807; in his youth, worked for a time, as a typographer, in the office of "The Northern Spectator," at Poultney, Vt., side by side with Horace Greeley, afterwards the founder of "The New York Tribune." Later, he became one of the publishers of "The Palladium" at Ballston, N. Y., but, in 1832, removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, where he began the study of law, completing his course at Transylvania University, Ky., in 1834, and beginning practice at Batavia, Ohio, as the partner of Thomas Morris, then a United States Senator from Ohio, whose daughter he married, thereby becoming the brother-in-law of the late Isaac N. Morris, of Quincy, Ill. In 1836, Mr. Warren came to Quincy, Adams County, Ill., but soon after removed to Warsaw in Hancock County, where he resided until 1839, when he returned to Quincy. Here he continued in practice, either alone or as a partner, at different times, of several of the leading attorneys of that city. Although he held no office except that of Master in Chancery, which he occupied for some sixteen years, the possession of an inexhaustible fund of humor, with strong practical sense and decided ability as a speaker, gave him great popularity at the bar and upon the stump, and made him a recognized leader in the ranks of the Democratic party, of which he was a life-long member. He served as Presidential Elector on the Pierce ticket in 1852, and was the nominee of his party for the same position on one or two other occasions. Died, at Quincy, Feb. 22, 1881.

WARREN, Hooper, pioneer journalist, was born at Walpole, N. H., in 1790; learned the printer's trade on the Rutland (Vt.) "Herald"; in 1814 went to Delaware, whence, three years later, he emigrated to Kentucky, working for a time on a paper at Frankfort. In 1818 he came to St. Louis and worked in the office of the old "Missouri Gazette" (the predecessor of "The Republican"), and also acted as the agent of a lumber company at Cairo, Ill., when the whole population of that place consisted of one family domiciled on a grounded flat-boat. In March, 1819, he established, at Edwardsville, the third paper in Illinois, its predecessors being "The Illinois Intelligencer," at Kaskaskia, and "The Illinois Emigrant," at Shawneetown. The name given to the new paper was "The Spectator," and the contest over the effort to introduce a pro-slavery clause in the State Constitution soon brought it into prominence. Backed by Governor Coles, Congressman Daniel P. Cook, Judge S. D. Lockwood, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Wm. H. Brown (afterwards of Chicago), George Churchill and other opponents of slavery, "The Spectator" made a sturdy fight in opposition to the scheme, which ended in defeat of the measure by the rejection at the polls, in 1824, of the proposition for a Constitutional Convention. Warren left the Edwardsville paper in 1825, and was, for a time, associated with "The National Crisis," an anti-slavery paper at Cincinnati, but soon returned to Illinois and established "The Sangamon Spectator"—the first paper ever published at the present State capital. This he sold out in 1829, and, for the next three years, was connected with "The Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald," at Galena. Abandoning this field in 1832, he removed to Hennepin, where, within the next five years, he held the offices of Clerk of the Circuit and County Commissioners' Courts and ex-officio Recorder of Deeds. In 1836 he began the publication of the third paper in Chicago—"The Commercial Advertiser" (a weekly)—which was continued a little more than a year, when it was abandoned, and he settled on a farm at Henry, Marshall County. His further newspaper ventures were, as the associate of Zebina Eastman, in the publication of "The Genius of Liberty," at Lowell, La Salle County, and "The Western Citizen"—afterwards "The Free West"—in Chicago. (See Eastman, Zebina, and Lundy, Benjamin.) On the discontinuance of "The Free West" in 1856, he again retired to his farm at Henry, where he spent the remainder of his days. While returning home from a visit to Chicago, in August, 1864, he was taken ill at Mendota, dying there on the 22d of the month.

WARREN, John Esaias, diplomatist and real-estate operator, was born in Troy, N. Y., in 1826, graduated at Union College and was connected with the American Legation to Spain during the administration of President Pierce; in 1859-60 was a member of the Minnesota Legislature and, in 1861-62, Mayor of St. Paul; in 1867, came to Chicago, where, while engaged in real-estate business, he became known to the press as the author of a series of articles entitled "Topics of the Time." In 1886 he took up his residence in Brussels, Belgium, where he died, July 6, 1896. Mr. Warren was author of several volumes of travel, of which "An Attache in Spain" and "Para" are most important.

WARREN COUNTY. A western county, created by act of the Legislature, in 1825, but not fully organized until 1830, having at that time about 350 inhabitants; has an area of 540 square miles, and was named for Gen. Joseph Warren. It is drained by the Henderson River and its affluents, and is traversed by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (two divisions), the Iowa Central and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroads. Bituminous coal is mined and limestone is quarried in large quantities. The county's early development was retarded in consequence of having become the "seat of war," during the Black Hawk War. The principal products are grain and live-stock, although manufacturing is carried on to some extent. The county-seat and chief city is Monmouth (which see). Roseville is a shipping point. Population (1880), 22,933. (1890), 21,281; (1900), 23,163.

WARRENSBURG, a town of Macon County, on Peoria Division Ill. Cent. Railway, 9 miles northwest of Decatur; has elevators, canning factory, a bank and newspaper. Pop. (1900), 503.

WARSAW, the largest town in Hancock County, and admirably situated for trade. It stands on a bluff on the Mississippi River, some three miles below Keokuk, and about 40 miles above Quincy. It is the western terminus of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway, and lies 116 miles west-southwest of Peoria. Old Fort Edwards, established by Gen. Zachary Taylor, during the War of 1812, was located within the limits of the present city of Warsaw, opposite the mouth of the Des Moines River. An iron foundry, a large woolen mill, a plow factory and cooperage works are its principal manufacturing establishments. The channel of the Mississippi admits of the passage of the largest steamers up to this point. Warsaw has eight churches, a system of common schools comprising one high and three grammar schools, a National bank and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 3,105; (1890), 2,721; (1900), 2,335.

WASHBURN, a village of Woodford County, on a branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway 25 miles northeast of Peoria; has banks and a weekly paper; the district is agricultural. Population (1890), 598; (1900), 703.

WASHBURN, Elisha Benjamin, Congressman and diplomatist, was born at Livermore, Maine, Sept. 23, 1816; in early life learned the trade of a printer, but graduated from Harvard Law School and was admitted to the bar in 1840. Coming west, he settled at Galena, forming a partnership with Charles S. Hempstead, for the practice of law, in 1841. He was a stalwart Whig, and, as such, was elected to Congress in 1852. He continued to represent his District until 1869, taking a prominent position, as a Republican, on the organization of that party. On account of his long service he was known as the "Father of the House," administering the Speaker's oath three times to Schuyler Colfax and once to James G. Blaine. He was appointed Secretary of State by General Grant in 1869, but surrendered his portfolio to become Envoy to France, in which capacity he achieved great distinction. He was the only official representative of a foreign government who remained in Paris, during the siege of that city by the Germans (1870-71) and the reign of the "Commune." For his conduct he was honored by the Governments of France and Germany alike. On his return to the United States, he made his home in Chicago, where he devoted his latter years chiefly to literary labor, and where he died, Oct. 22, 1887. He was strongly favored as a candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

WASHINGTON, a city in Tazewell County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads. It is 21 miles west of El Paso, and 12 miles east of Peoria. Carriages, plows and farming implements constitute the manufactured output. It is also an important shipping-point for farm products. It has electric light and water-works plants, eight churches, a graded school, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,301; (1900), 1,451.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, an interior county of Southern Illinois, east of St. Louis; is drained by the Kaskaskia River and the Elkhorn, Beaucoup and Muddy Creeks; was organized in 1818, and has an area of 540 square miles. The surface is diversified, well watered and timbered. The soil is of variable fertility. Corn, wheat and oats are the chief agricultural products. Manufacturing is carried on to some extent, among the products being agricultural implements, flour, carriages and wagons. The most important town is Nashville, which is also the county-seat. Population (1890), 19,262; (1900), 19,526. Washington was one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the organization of the State Government, being one of the last three created during the Territorial period—the other two being Franklin and Union.

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 12 miles southwest of Chicago; has a graded school, female seminary, military school, a car factory, several churches and a newspaper. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1890.

WATAGA, a village of Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 8 miles northeast of Galesburg. Population (1900), 545.

WATERLOO, the county-seat and chief town of Monroe County, on the Illinois Division of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, 24 miles east of south from St. Louis. The region is chiefly agricultural, but underlaid with coal. Its industries embrace two flour mills, a plow factory, distillery, creamery, two ice plants, and some minor concerns. The city has municipal water and electric light plants, four churches, a graded school and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,860; (1900), 2,114.

WATERMAN, Arba Nelson, lawyer and jurist, was born at Greensboro, Orleans County, Vt., Feb. 3, 1836. After receiving an academic education and teaching for a time, he read law at Montpelier and, later, passed through the Albany Law School. In 1861 he was admitted to the bar, removed to Joliet, Ill., and opened an office. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the One Hundredth Illinois Volunteers, serving with the Army of the Cumberland for two years, and being mustered out in August, 1864, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. On leaving the army, Colonel Waterman commenced practice in Chicago. In 1873-74 he represented the Eleventh Ward in the City Council. In 1887 he was elected to the bench of the Cook County Circuit Court, and was re-elected in 1891 and, again, in 1897. In 1890 he was assigned as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court.

WATSEKA, the county-seat of Iroquois County, situated on the Iroquois River, at the mouth of Sugar Creek, and at the intersection of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads, 77 miles south of Chicago, 46 miles north of Danville and 14 miles east of Gilman. It has flour-mills, brick and tile works and foundries, besides several churches, banks, a graded school and three weekly newspapers. Artesian well water is obtained by boring to the depth of 100 to 160 feet, and some forty flowing streams from these shafts are in the place. Population (1890), 2,017; (1900), 2,505.

WATTS, Amos, jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., Oct. 25, 1821, but removed to Washington County in boyhood, and was elected County Clerk in 1847, '49 and '53, and State's Attorney for the Second Judicial District in 1856 and '60; then became editor and proprietor of a newspaper, later resuming the practice of law, and, in 1873, was elected Circuit Judge, remaining in office until his death, at Nashville, Ill. Dec. 6, 1888.

WAUKEGAN, the county-seat and principal city of Lake County, situated on the shore of Lake Michigan and on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, about 36 miles north by west from Chicago, and 50 miles south of Milwaukee; is also the northern terminus of the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and connected by electric lines with Chicago and Fox Lake. Lake Michigan is about 80 miles wide opposite this point. Waukegan was first known as "Little Fort," from the remains of an old fort that stood on its site. The principal part of the city is built on a bluff, which rises abruptly to the height of about fifty feet. Between the bluff and the shore is a flat tract about 400 yards wide which is occupied by gardens, dwellings, warehouses and manufactories. The manufactures include steel-wire, refined sugar, scales, agricultural implements, brass and iron products, sash, doors and blinds, leather, beer, etc.; the city has paved streets, gas and electric light plants, three banks, eight or ten churches, graded and high schools and two newspapers. A large trade in grain, lumber, coal and dairy products is carried on. Pop. (1890), 4,915; (1900), 9,426.

WAUKEGAN & SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY. (See Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railway.)

WAVERLY, a city in Morgan County, 18 miles southeast of Jacksonville, on the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroads. It was originally settled by enterprising emigrants from New England, whose descendants constitute a large proportion of the population. It is the center of a rich agricultural region, has a fine graded school, six or seven churches, two banks, two newspapers and tile works. Population (1880), 1,124; (1890), 1,337; (1900), 1,573.

WAYNE, (Gen.) Anthony, soldier, was born in Chester County, Pa., Jan. 1, 1745, of Anglo-Irish descent, graduated as a Surveyor, and first practiced his profession in Nova Scotia. During the years immediately antecedent to the Revolution he was prominent in the colonial councils of his native State, to which he had returned in 1767, where he became a member of the "Committee of Safety." On June 3, 1776, he was commissioned Colonel of the Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania troops in the Continental army, and, during the War of the Revolution, was conspicuous for his courage and ability as a leader. One of his most daring and successful achievements was the capture of Stony Point, in 1779, when—the works having been carried and Wayne having received, what was supposed to be, his death-wound—he entered the fort, supported by his aids. For this service he was awarded a gold medal by Congress. He also took a conspicuous part in the investiture and capture of Yorktown. In October, 1783, he was brevetted Major-General. In 1784 he was elected to the Pennsylvania Legislature. A few years later he settled in Georgia, which State he represented in Congress for seven months, when his seat was declared vacant after contest. In April, 1792, he was confirmed as General-in-Chief of the United States Army, on nomination of President Washington. His connection with Illinois history began shortly after

St. Clair's defeat, when he led a force into Ohio (1783) and erected a stockade at Greenville, which he named Fort Recovery; his object being to subdue the hostile savage tribes. In this he was eminently successful and, on August 3, 1793, after a victorious campaign, negotiated the Treaty of Greenville, as broad in its provisions as it was far-reaching in its influence. He was a daring fighter, and although Washington called him "prudent," his dauntlessness earned for him the sobriquet of "Mad Anthony." In matters of dress he was punctilious, and, on this account, he was sometimes dubbed "Dandy Wayne." He was one of the few white officers whom all the Western Indian tribes at once feared and respected. They named him "Black Snake" and "Tornado." He died at Presque Isle near Erie, Dec. 15, 1796. Thirteen years afterward his remains were removed by one of his sons, and interred in Badnor churchyard, in his native county. The Pennsylvania Historical Society erected a marble monument over his grave, and appropriately dedicated it on July 4 of the same year.

WAYNE COUNTY, in the southeast quarter of the State; has an area of 720 square miles; was organized in 1819, and named for Gen. Anthony Wayne. The county is watered and drained by the Little Wabash and its branches, notably the Skillet Fork. At the first election held in the county, only fifteen votes were cast. Early life was exceedingly primitive, the first settlers pounding corn into meal with a wooden pestle, a hollowed stump being used as a mortar. The first mill erected (of the antique South Carolina pattern) charged 25 cents per bushel for grinding. Prairie and woodland make up the surface, and the soil is fertile. Railroad facilities are furnished by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio (Southwestern) Railroads. Corn, oats, tobacco, wheat, hay and wool are the chief agricultural products. Saw mills are numerous and there are also carriage and wagon factories. Fairfield is the county-seat. Population (1880), 21,291; (1890), 23,806; (1900), 27,626.

WEAS, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. They called themselves "We-wee-hahs," and were spoken of by the French as "Oui-at-a-nons" and "Oui-as." Other corruptions of the name were common among the British and American colonists. In 1718 they had a village at Chicago, but abandoned it through fear of their hostile neighbors, the Chippewas and Pottawatomies. The Weas were, at one time, brave and warlike; but their numbers were reduced by constant warfare and disease, and, in the end, debauchery enervated and demoralized them. They were removed west of the Mississippi and given a reservation in Miami County, Kan. This they ultimately sold, and, under the leadership of Baptiste Peoria, united with their few remaining brethren of the Miamis and with the remnant of the Ill-i-ni under the title of the "confederated tribes," and settled in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Piankeshaws.)

WEBB, Edwin B., early lawyer and politician, was born about 1802, came to the vicinity of Carmi, White County, Ill., about 1828 to 1830, and, still later, studied law at Transylvania University. He held the office of Prosecuting Attorney of White County, and, in 1834, was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1842, and, in the Senate, from 1842 to '46. During his service in the House he was a colleague and political and personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. He opposed the internal improvement scheme of 1837, predicting many of the disasters which were actually realized a few years later. He was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Whig ticket, in 1844 and '48, and, in 1852, received the nomination for Governor as the opponent of Joel A. Matteson, two years later, being an unsuccessful candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court in opposition to Judge W. B. Scates. While practicing law at Carmi, he was also a partner of his brother in the mercantile business. Died, Oct. 14, 1858, in the 56th year of his age.

WEBB, Henry Livingston, soldier and pioneer (an elder brother of James Watson Webb, a noted New York journalist), was born at Claverack, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1795; served as a soldier in the War of 1812, came to Southern Illinois in 1817, and became one of the founders of the town of America near the mouth of the Ohio; was Representative in the Fourth and Eleventh General Assemblies, a Major in the Black Hawk War and Captain of volunteers and, afterwards, Colonel of regulars, in the Mexican War. In 1860 he went to Texas and served, for a time, in a semi-military capacity under the Confederate Government; returned to Illinois in 1869, and died, at Makanda, Oct. 5, 1876.

WEBSTER, Fletcher, lawyer and soldier, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., July 23, 1813; graduated at Harvard in 1833, and studied law with his father (Daniel Webster); in 1837, located at Peru, Ill., where he practiced three years. His father having been appointed Secretary of State in 1841, the son became his private secretary, was also Secretary of Legation to Caleb Cushing (Minister to China) in 1843, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature in 1847, and Surveyor of the Port of Boston, 1850-61; the latter year became Colonel of the Twelfth Massachusetts Volunteers, and was killed in the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862.

WEBSTER, Joseph Dana, civil engineer and soldier, was born at Old Hampton, N. H., August 25, 1811. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1832, and afterwards read law at Newburyport, Mass. His natural inclination was for engineering, and, after serving for a time in the Engineer and War offices, at Washington, was made a United States civil engineer (1835) and, on July 7, 1838, entered the army as Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers. He served through the Mexican War, was made First Lieutenant in 1849, and promoted to a captaincy, in March, 1853. Thirteen months later he resigned, removing to Chicago, where he made his permanent home, and soon after was identified, for a time, with the proprietorship of "The Chicago Tribune." He was President of the commission that perfected the Chicago sewerage system, and designed and executed the raising of the grade of a large portion of the city from two to eight feet, whole blocks of buildings being raised by jack screws, while new foundations were inserted. At the outbreak of the Civil War he tendered his services to the Government and superintended the erection of the fortifications at Cairo, Ill., and Paducah, Ky. On April 7, 1861, he was commissioned Paymaster of Volunteers, with the rank of Major, and, in February, 1862, Colonel of the First Illinois Artillery. For several months he was chief of General Grant's staff, participating in the capture of Forts Donelson and Henry, and in the battle of Shiloh, in the latter as Chief of Artillery. In October, 1862, the War Department detailed him to make a survey of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, and, the following month, he was commissioned Brigadier-General of Volunteers, serving as Military Governor of Memphis and Superintendent of military railroads. He was again chief of staff to General Grant during the Vicksburg campaign, and, from 1864 until the close of the war, occupied the same relation to General Sherman. He was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers, March 13, 1865, but, resigning Nov. 6, following, returned to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. From 1869 to 1872 he was Assessor of Internal Revenue there, and, later, Assistant United States Treasurer, and, in July, 1872, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue. Died, at Chicago, March 12, 1876.

WELCH, William R., lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., Jan. 22, 1828, educated at Transylvania University, Lexington, graduating from the academic department in 1847, and, from the law school, in 1851. In 1864 he removed to Carlinville, Macoupin County, Ill., which place he made his permanent home. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Circuit, and re-elected in 1879 and '85. In 1884 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court for the Second District. Died, Sept. 1, 1888.

WELDON, Lawrence, one of the Judges of the United States Court of Claims, Washington, D. C., was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, in 1829; while a child, removed with his parents to Madison County, and was educated in the common schools, the local academy and at Wittenberg College, Springfield, in the same State; read law with Hon. R. A. Harrison, a prominent member of the Ohio bar, and was admitted to practice in 1854, meanwhile, in 1852-53, having served as a clerk in the office of the Secretary of State at Columbus. In 1854 he removed to Illinois, locating at Clinton, DeWitt County, where he engaged in practice; in 1860 was elected a Representative in the Twenty-second General Assembly, was also chosen a Presidential Elector the same year, and assisted in the first election of Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency. Early in 1861 he resigned his seat in the Legislature to accept the position of United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, tendered him by President Lincoln, but resigned the latter office in 1866 and, the following year, removed to Bloomington, where he continued the practice of his profession until 1883, when he was appointed, by President Arthur, an Associate Justice of the United States Court of Claims at Washington—a position which he still (1899) continues to fill. Judge Weldon is among the remaining few who rode the circuit and practiced law with Mr. Lincoln. From the time of coming to the State in 1854 to 1860, he was one of Mr. Lincoln's most intimate traveling companions in the old Eighth Circuit, which extended from Sangamon County on the west to Vermilion on the east, and of which Judge David Davis, afterwards of the Supreme Court of the United States and United States Senator, was the presiding Justice. The Judge holds in his memory many pleasant reminiscences of that day, especially of the eastern portion of the District, where he was accustomed to meet the late Senator Voorhees, Senator McDonald and other leading lawyers of Indiana, as well as the historic men whom he met at the State capital.

WELLS, Albert W., lawyer and legislator, was born at Woodstock, Conn., May 9, 1839, and enjoyed only such educational and other advantages as belonged to the average New England boy of that period. During his boyhood his family removed to New Jersey, where he attended an academy, later, graduating from Columbia College and Law School in New York City, and began practice with State Senator Robert Allen at Red Bank, N. J. During the Civil War he enlisted in a New Jersey regiment and took part in the battle of Gettysburg, resuming his profession at the close of the war. Coming west in 1870, he settled in Quincy, Ill., where he continued practice. In 1886 he was elected to the House of Representatives from Adams County, as a Democrat, and re-elected two years later. In 1890 he was advanced to the Senate, where, by re-election in 1894, he served continuously until his death in office, March 5, 1897. His abilities and long service—covering the sessions of the Thirty-fifth to the Fortieth General Assemblies—placed him at the head of the Democratic side of the Senate during the latter part of his legislative career.

WELLS, William, soldier and victim of the Fort Dearborn massacre, was born in Kentucky, about 1770. When a boy of 12, he was captured by the Miami Indians, whose chief, Little Turtle, adopted him, giving him his daughter in marriage when he grew to manhood. He was highly esteemed by the tribe as a warrior, and, in 1790, was present at the battle where Gen. Arthur St. Clair was defeated. He then realized that he was fighting against his own race, and informed his father-in-law that he intended to ally himself with the whites. Leaving the Miamis, he made his way to General Wayne, who made him Captain of a company of scouts. After the treaty of Greenville (1795) he settled on a farm near Fort Wayne, where he was joined by his Indian wife. Here he acted as Indian Agent and Justice of the Peace. In 1812 he learned of the contemplated evacuation of Fort Dearborn, and, at the head of thirty Miamis, he set out for the post, his intention being to furnish a body-guard to the non-combatants on their proposed march to Fort Wayne. On August 13, he marched out of the fort with fifteen of his dusky warriors behind him, the remainder bringing up the rear. Before a mile and a half had been traveled, the party fell into an Indian ambushade, and an indiscriminate massacre followed. (See Fort Dearborn.) The Miamis fled, and Captain Wells' body was riddled with bullets, his head cut off and his heart taken out. He was an uncle of Mrs. Heald, wife of the commander of Fort Dearborn.

WELLS, William Harvey, educator, was born in Tolland, Conn., Feb. 27, 1812; lived on a farm until 17 years old, attending school irregularly, but made such progress that he became successively a teacher in the Teachers' Seminary at Andover and Newburyport, and, finally, Principal of the State Normal School at Westfield, Mass. In 1856 he accepted the position of Superintendent of Public Schools for the city of Chicago, serving till 1864, when he resigned. He was an organizer of the Massachusetts State Teachers' Association, one of the first editors of "The Massachusetts Teacher" and prominently connected with various benevolent, educational and learned societies; was also author of several textbooks, and assisted in the revision of "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary." Died, Jan. 21, 1885.

WENONA, city on the eastern border of Marshall County, 20 miles south of La Salle, has zinc works, public and parochial schools, a weekly paper, two banks, and five churches. A good quality of soft coal is mined here. Population (1880), 911; (1890), 1,053; (1900), 1,486.

WENTWORTH, John, early journalist and Congressman, was born at Sandwich, N. H., March 5, 1815, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1836, and came to Chicago the same year, where he became editor of "The Chicago Democrat," which had been established by John Calhoun three years previous. He soon after became proprietor of "The Democrat," of which he continued to be the publisher until it was merged into "The Chicago Tribune," July 24, 1864. He also studied law, and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1841. He served in Congress as a Democrat from 1843 to 1851, and again from 1853 to 1855, but left the Democratic party on the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. He was elected Mayor of Chicago in 1857, and again in 1860, during his incumbency introducing a number of important municipal reforms; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and twice served on the Board of Education. He again represented Illinois in Congress as a Republican from 1865 to 1867—making fourteen years of service in that body. In 1872 he joined in the Greeley movement, but later renewed his allegiance to the Republican party. In 1874 Mr. Wentworth published an elaborate genealogical work in three volumes, entitled "History of the Wentworth Family." A volume of "Congressional Reminiscences" and two by him on "Early Chicago," published in connection with the Fergus Historical Series, contain some valuable information on early local and national history. On account of his extraordinary height he received the sobriquet of "Long John," by which he was familiarly known throughout the State. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 16, 1888.

WEST, Edward M., merchant and banker, was born in Virginia, May 2, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1818; in 1829 became a clerk in the Recorder's office at Edwardsville, also served as deputy postmaster, and, in 1833, took a position in the United States Land Office there. Two years later he engaged in mercantile business, which he prosecuted over thirty years—meanwhile filling the office of County Treasurer, ex-officio Superintendent of Schools, and Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1867, in conjunction with W. R. Prickett, he established a bank at Edwardsville, with which he was connected until his death, Oct. 31, 1887. Mr. West officiated frequently as a "local preacher" of the Methodist Church, in which capacity he showed much ability as a public speaker.

WEST, Mary Allen, educator and philanthropist, was born at Galesburg, Ill., July 31, 1837; graduated at Knox Seminary in 1854 and taught until 1873, when she was elected County Superintendent of Schools, serving nine years. She took an active and influential interest in educational and reformatory movements, was for two years editor of "Our Home Monthly," in Philadelphia, and also a contributor to other journals, besides being editor-in-chief of "The Union Signal," Chicago, the organ of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—in which she held the position of President; was also President, in the latter days of her life, of the Illinois Woman's Press Association of Chicago, that city having become her home in 1885. In 1892, Miss West started on a tour of the world for the benefit of her health, but died at Tokio, Japan, Dec. 1, 1892.

WESTERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, located at Watertown, Rock Island County, in accordance with an act of the General Assembly, approved, May 22, 1895. The Thirty-ninth General Assembly made an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of fire-proof buildings, while Rock Island County donated a tract of 400 acres of land valued at $40,000. The site selected by the Commissioners, is a commanding one overlooking the Mississippi River, eight miles above Rock Island, and five and a half miles from Moline, and the buildings are of the most modern style of construction. Watertown is reached by two lines of railroad—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy—besides the Mississippi River. The erection of buildings was begun in 1896, and they were opened for the reception of patients in 1898. They have a capacity for 800 patients.

WESTERN MILITARY ACADEMY, an institution located at Upper Alton, Madison County, incorporated in 1892; has a faculty of eight members and reports eighty pupils for 1897-98, with property valued at $70,000. The institution gives instruction in literary and scientific branches, besides preparatory and business courses.

WESTERN NORMAL COLLEGE, located at Bushnell, McDonough County; incorporated in 1888. It is co-educational, has a corps of twelve instructors and reported 500 pupils for 1897-98, 300 males and 200 females.

WESTERN SPRINGS, a village of Cook County, and residence suburb of the city of Chicago, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of the initial station. Population (1890), 451; (1900), 662.

WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, located in Chicago and controlled by the Protestant Episcopal Church. It was founded in 1883 through the munificence of Dr. Tolman Wheeler, and was opened for students two years later. It has two buildings, of a superior order of architecture—one including the school and lecture rooms and the other a dormitory. A hospital and gymnasium are attached to the latter, and a school for boys is conducted on the first floor of the main building, which is known as Wheeler Hall. The institution is under the general supervision of Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Illinois.

WESTFIELD, village of Clark County, on Cin., Ham. & Dayton R. R., 10 m. s-e. of Charleston; seat of Westfield College; has a bank, five churches and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 820.

WEST SALEM, a town of Edwards County, on the Peoria-Evanville Div. Ill. Cent. R. R., 12 miles northeast of Albion; has a bank and a weekly paper. Pop. (1890), 476; (1900), 700.

WETHERELL, Emma Abbott, vocalist, was born in Chicago, Dec. 9, 1849; in her childhood attracted attention while singing with her father (a poor musician) in hotels and on the streets in Chicago, Peoria and elsewhere; at 18 years of age, went to New York to study, earning her way by giving concerts en route, and receiving aid and encouragement from Clara Louisa Kellogg; in New York was patronized by Henry Ward Beecher and others, and aided in securing the training of European masters. Compelled to surmount many obstacles from poverty and other causes, her after success in her profession was phenomenal. Died, during a professional tour, at Salt Lake City, Jan. 5, 1891. Miss Abbott married her manager, Eugene Wetherell, who died before her.

WHEATON, a city and the county-seat of Du Page County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 25 miles west of Chicago. Agriculture and stock-raising are the chief industries in the surrounding region. The city owns a new water-works plant (costing $60,000) and has a public library valued at $75,000, the gift of a resident, Mr. John Quincy Adams; has a court house, electric light plant, sewerage and drainage system, seven churches, three graded schools, four weekly newspapers and a State bank. Wheaton is the seat of Wheaton College (which see). Population (1880), 1,160; (1890), 1,622; (1900), 2,345.

WHEATON COLLEGE, an educational institution located at Wheaton, Du Page County, and under Congregational control. It was founded in 1853, as the Illinois Institute, and was chartered under its present name in 1860. Its early existence was one of struggle, but of late years it has been established on a better foundation, in 1898 having $54,000 invested in productive funds, and property aggregating $136,000. The faculty comprises fifteen professors, and, in 1898, there were 321 students in attendance. It is co-educational and instruction is given in business and preparatory studies, as well as the fine arts, music and classical literature.

WHEELER, David Hilton, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born at Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1829; graduated at Rock River Seminary, Mount Morris, in 1851; edited "The Carroll County Republican" and held a professorship in Cornell College, Iowa, (1857-61); was United States Consul at Geneva, Switzerland, (1861-66); Professor of English Literature in Northwestern University (1867-75); edited "The Methodist" in New York, seven years, and was President of Allegheny College (1883-87); received the degree of D.D. from Cornell College in 1867, and that of LL.D. from the Northwestern University in 1881. He is the author of "Brigandage in South Italy"

(two volumes, 1864) and "By-Ways of Literature" (1883), besides some translations.

WHEELER, Hamilton K., ex-Congressman, was born at Ballston, N. Y., August 5, 1848, but emigrated with his parents to Illinois in 1852; remained on a farm until 19 years of age, his educational advantages being limited to three months' attendance upon a district school each year. In 1871, he was admitted to the bar at Kankakee, where he has since continued to practice. In 1884 he was elected to represent the Sixteenth District in the State Senate, where he served on many important committees, being Chairman of that on the Judicial Department. In 1892 he was elected Representative in Congress from the Ninth Illinois District, on the Republican ticket.

WHEELING, a town on the northern border of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Central Railway. Population (1890), 811; (1900), 331.

WHISTLER, (Maj.) John, soldier and builder of the first Fort Dearborn, was born in Ulster, Ireland, about 1756; served under Burgoyne in the Revolution, and was with the force surrendered by that officer at Saratoga, in 1777. After the peace he returned to the United States, settled at Hagerstown, Md., and entered the United States Army, serving at first in the ranks and being severely wounded in the disastrous Indian campaigns of 1791. Later, he was promoted to a captaincy and, in the summer of 1803, sent with his company, to the head of Lake Michigan, where he constructed the first Fort Dearborn within the limits of the present city of Chicago, remaining in command until 1811, when he was succeeded by Captain Heald. He received the brevet rank of Major, in 1815 was appointed military store-keeper at Newport, Ky., and afterwards at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, where he died, Sept. 3, 1829. Lieut. William Whistler, his son, who was with his father, for a time, in old Fort Dearborn—but transferred, in 1809, to Fort Wayne—was of the force included in Hull's surrender at Detroit in 1812. After his exchange he was promoted to a captaincy, to the rank of Major in 1826 and to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy in 1845, dying at Newport, Ky., in 1863. James Abbott McNeil Whistler, the celebrated, but eccentric artist of that name, is a grandson of the first Major Whistler.

WHITE, George E., ex-Congressman, was born in Massachusetts in 1848; after graduating, at the age of 16, he enlisted as a private in the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, serving under General Grant in the campaign against Richmond from the battle of the Wilderness until the surrender of Lee. Having taken a course in a commercial college at Worcester, Mass., in 1867 he came to Chicago, securing employment in a lumber yard, but a year later began business on his own account, which he has successfully conducted. In 1878 he was elected to the State Senate, as a Republican, from one of the Chicago Districts, and re-elected four years later, serving in that body eight years. He declined a nomination for Congress in 1884, but accepted in 1894, and was elected for the Fifth District, as he was again in 1896, but was defeated, in 1898, by Edward T. Noonan, Democrat.

WHITE, Horace, journalist, was born at Colebrook, N. H., August 10, 1834; in 1853 graduated at Beloit College, Wis., whither his father had removed in 1837; engaged in journalism as city editor of "The Chicago Evening Journal," later becoming agent of the Associated Press, and, in 1857, an editorial writer on "The Chicago Tribune," during a part of the war acting as its Washington correspondent. He also served, in 1856, as Assistant Secretary of the Kansas National Committee, and, later, as Secretary of the Republican State Central Committee. In 1864 he purchased an interest in "The Tribune," a year or so later becoming editor-in-chief, but retired in October, 1874. After a protracted European tour, he united with Carl Schurz and E. L. Godkin of "The Nation," in the purchase and reorganization of "The New York Evening Post," of which he is now editor-in-chief.

WHITE, Julius, soldier, was born in Cazenovia, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1816; removed to Illinois in 1836, residing there and in Wisconsin, where he was a member of the Legislature of 1849; in 1861 was made Collector of Customs at Chicago, but resigned to assume the colonelcy of the Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, which he commanded on the Fremont expedition to Southwest Missouri. He afterwards served with General Curtiss in Arkansas, participated in the battle of Pea Ridge and was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General. He was subsequently assigned to the Department of the Shenandoah, but finding his position at Martinsburg, W. Va., untenable, retired to Harper's Ferry, voluntarily serving under Colonel Miles, his inferior in command. When this post was surrendered (Sept. 15, 1862), he was made a prisoner, but released under parole; was tried by a court of inquiry at his own request, and acquitted, the court finding that he had acted with courage and capability.

He resigned in 1864, and, in March, 1865, was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. Died, at Evanston, May 12, 1890.

WHITE COUNTY, situated in the southeastern quarter of the State, and bounded on the east by the Wabash River; was organized in 1816, being the tenth county organized during the Territorial period: area, 500 square miles. The county is crossed by three railroads and drained by the Wabash and Little Wabash Rivers. The surface consists of prairie and woodland, and the soil is, for the most part, highly productive. The principal agricultural products are corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, tobacco, fruit, butter, sorghum and wool. The principal industrial establishments are carriage factories, saw mills and flour mills. Carmi is the county-seat. Other towns are Enfield, Grayville and Norris City. Population (1880), 23,087; (1890), 25,005; (1900), 25,386.

WHITEHALL, a city in Greene County, at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 65 miles north of St. Louis and 24 miles south-southwest of Jacksonville; in rich farming region; has stoneware and sewer-pipe factories, foundry and machine shop, flour mill, elevators, wagon shops, creamery, water system, sanitarium, heating, electric light and power system, nurseries and fruit-supply houses, and two poultry packing houses; also has five churches, a graded school, two banks and three newspapers—one daily. Population (1890), 1,961; (1900), 2,030.

WHITEHOUSE, Henry John, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, August 19, 1803; graduated from Columbia College in 1821, and from the (New York) General Theological Seminary in 1824. After ordination he was rector of various parishes in Pennsylvania and New York until 1851, when he was chosen Assistant Bishop of Illinois, succeeding Bishop Chase in 1852. In 1867, by invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, he delivered the opening sermon before the Pan-Anglican Conference held in England. During this visit he received the degree of D.D. from Oxford University, and that of LL.D. from Cambridge. His rigid views as a churchman and a disciplinarian, were illustrated in his prosecution of Rev. Charles Edward Cheney, which resulted in the formation of the Reformed Episcopal Church. He was a brilliant orator and a trenchant and unyielding controversialist. Died, in Chicago, August 10, 1874.

WHITESIDE COUNTY, in the northwestern portion of the State bordering on the Mississippi River; created by act of the Legislature passed in 1836, and named for Capt. Samuel Whiteside, a noted Indian fighter; area, 700 square miles. The surface is level, diversified by prairies and woodland, and the soil is extremely fertile. The county-seat was first fixed at Lyndon, then at Sterling, and finally at Morrison, its present location. The Rock River crosses the county and furnishes abundant water power for numerous factories, turning out agricultural implements, carriages and wagons, furniture, woolen goods, flour and wrapping paper. There are also distilling and brewing interests, besides saw and planing mills. Corn is the staple agricultural product, although all the leading cereals are extensively grown. The principal towns are Morrison, Sterling, Fulton and Rock Falls. Population (1880), 30,885; (1890), 30,854; (1900), 34,710.

WHITESIDE, William, pioneer and soldier of the Revolution, emigrated from the frontier of North Carolina to Kentucky, and thence, in 1793, to the present limits of Monroe County, Ill., erecting a fort between Cahokia and Kaskaskia, which became widely known as "Whiteside Station." He served as a Justice of the Peace, and was active in organizing the militia during the War of 1812-14, dying at the old Station in 1815.—John (Whiteside), a brother of the preceding, and also a Revolutionary soldier, came to Illinois at the same time, as also did William B. and Samuel, sons of the two brothers, respectively. All of them became famous as Indian fighters. The two latter served as Captains of companies of "Rangers" in the War of 1812, Samuel taking part in the battle of Rock Island in 1814, and contributing greatly to the success of the day. During the Black Hawk War (1832) he attained the rank of Brigadier-General. Whiteside County was named in his honor. He made one of the earliest improvements in Ridge Prairie, a rich section of Madison County, and represented that county in the First General Assembly. William B. served as Sheriff of Madison County for a number of years.—John D. (Whiteside), another member of this historic family, became very prominent, serving in the lower House of the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth General Assemblies, and in the Senate of the Tenth, from Monroe County; was a Presidential Elector in 1836, State Treasurer (1837-41) and a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1847. General Whiteside, as he was known, was the second of James Shields in the famous Shields and Lincoln duel (so-called) in 1842, and, as such, carried the challenge of the former to Mr. Lincoln. (See Duels.)

WHITING, Lorenzo D., legislator, was born in Wayne County, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1819; came to Illinois in 1838, but did not settle there permanently until 1849, when he located in Bureau County. He was a Representative from that county in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1869), and a member of the Senate continuously from 1871 to 1887, serving in the latter through eight General Assemblies. Died at his home near Tiskilwa, Bureau County, Ill., Oct. 10, 1889.

WHITING, Richard H., Congressman, was born at West Hartford, Conn., June 17, 1826, and received a common school education. In 1862 he was commissioned Paymaster in the Volunteer Army of the Union, and resigned in 1866. Having removed to Illinois, he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue for the Fifth Illinois District, in February, 1870, and so continued until the abolition of the office in 1873. On retiring from the Assessorship he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue, and served until March 4, 1875, when he resigned to take his seat as Republican Representative in Congress from the Peoria District, to which he had been elected in November, 1874. After the expiration of his term he held no public office, but was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1884. Died, at the Continental Hotel, in New York City, May 24, 1888.

WHITNEY, James W., pioneer lawyer and early teacher, known by the nickname of "Lord Coke"; came to Illinois in Territorial days (believed to have been about 1800); resided for some time at or near Edwardsville, then became a teacher at Atlas, Pike County, and, still later, the first Circuit and County Clerk of that county. Though nominally a lawyer, he had little if any practice. He acquired the title, by which he was popularly known for a quarter of a century, by his custom of visiting the State Capital, during the sessions of the General Assembly, when he would organize the lobbyists and visitors about the capital—of which there were an unusual number in those days—into what was called the "Third House." Having been regularly chosen to preside under the name of "Speaker of the Lobby," he would deliver a message full of practical hits and jokes, aimed at members of the two houses and others, which would be received with cheers and laughter. The meetings of the "Third House," being held in the evening, were attended by many members and visitors in lieu of other forms of entertainment. Mr. Whitney's home, in his latter years, was at Pittsfield. He resided for a time at Quincy. Died, Dec. 13, 1860, aged over 80 years.

WHITEMORE, Floyd K., State Treasurer, is a native of New York, came at an early age, with his parents, to Sycamore, Ill., where he was educated in the high school there. He purposed becoming a lawyer, but, on the election of the late James H. Beveridge State Treasurer, in 1864, accepted the position of clerk in the office. Later, he was employed as a clerk in the banking house of Jacob Bunn in Springfield, and, on the organization of the State National Bank, was chosen cashier of that Institution, retaining the position some twenty years. After the appointment of Hon. John R. Tanner to the position of Assistant Treasurer of the United States, at Chicago, in 1892, Mr. Whittemore became cashier in that office, and, in 1865, Assistant State Treasurer under the administration of State Treasurer Henry Wulff. In 1898 he was elected State Treasurer, receiving a plurality of 43,450 over his Democratic opponent.

WICKERSHAM, (Col.) Dudley, soldier and merchant, was born in Woodford County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1819; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1843, and served as a member of the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) through the Mexican War. On the return of peace he engaged in the dry-goods trade in Springfield, until 1861, when he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, serving, first as Lieutenant-Colonel and then as Colonel, until May, 1864, when, his regiment having been consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, he resigned. After the war, he held the office of Assessor of Internal Revenue for several years, after which he engaged in the grocery trade. Died, in Springfield, August 8, 1898.

WIDEN, Raphael, pioneer and early legislator, was a native of Sweden, who, having been taken to France at eight years of age, was educated for a Catholic priest. Coming to the United States in 1815, he was at Cahokia, Ill., in 1818, where, during the same year, he married into a French family of that place. He served in the House of Representatives from Randolph County, in the Second and Third General Assemblies (1820-24), and as Senator in the Fourth and Fifth (1824-28). During his last term in the House, he was one of those who voted against the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died of cholera, at Kaskaskia, in 1833.

WIKE, Scott, lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Meadville, Pa., April 6, 1834; at 4 years of age removed with his parents to Quincy, Ill., and, in 1844, to Pike County. Having graduated from Lombard University, Galesburg, in 1857, he began reading law with Judge O. C. Skinner of Quincy. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, but, before commencing practice, spent a year at Harvard Law School, graduating there in 1859. Immediately thereafter he opened an office at Pittsfield, Ill., and has resided there ever since. In politics he has always been a strong Democrat. He served two terms in the Legislature (1863-67) and, in 1874, was chosen Representative from his District in Congress, being re-elected in 1888 and, again, in 1890. In 1893 he was appointed by President Cleveland Third Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, which position he continued to fill until March, 1897, when he resumed the practice of law at Pittsfield. Died Jan. 15, 1901.

WILEY, (Col.) Benjamin Ladd, soldier, was born in Smithfield, Jefferson County, Ohio, March 25, 1821, came to Illinois in 1845 and began life at Vienna, Johnson County, as a teacher. In 1846 he enlisted for the Mexican War, as a member of the Fifth (Colonel Newby's) Regiment Illinois Volunteers, serving chiefly in New Mexico until mustered out in 1848. A year later he removed to Jonesboro, where he spent some time at the carpenter's trade, after which he became clerk in a store, meanwhile assisting to edit "The Jonesboro Gazette" until 1853; then became traveling salesman for a St. Louis firm, but later engaged in the hardware trade at Jonesboro, in which he continued for several years. In 1856 he was the Republican candidate for Congress for the Ninth District, receiving 4,000 votes, while Fremont, the Republican candidate for President, received only 825 in the same district. In 1857 he opened a real estate office in Jonesboro in conjunction with David L. Phillips and Col. J. W. Ashley, with which he was connected until 1860, when he removed to Makanda, Jackson County. In September, 1861, he was mustered in as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifth Illinois Cavalry, later serving in Missouri and Arkansas under Generals Steele and Curtiss, being, a part of the time, in command of the First Brigade of Cavalry, and, in the advance on Vicksburg, having command of the right wing of General Grant's cavalry. Being disabled by rheumatism at the end of the siege, he tendered his resignation, and was immediately appointed Enrolling Officer at Cairo, serving in this capacity until May, 1865, when he was mustered out. In 1869 he was appointed by Governor Palmer one of the Commissioners to locate the Southern Illinois Hospital for the Insane, and served as Secretary of the Board until the institution was opened at Anna, in May, 1871. In 1869 he was defeated as a candidate for County Judge of Jackson County, and, in 1872, for the State Senate, by a small majority in a strongly Democratic District; in 1876 was the Republican candidate for Congress, in the Eighteenth District, against William Hartzell, but was defeated by only twenty votes, while carrying six out of the ten counties comprising the District. In the latter years of his life, Colonel Wiley was engaged quite extensively in fruit-growing at Makanda, Jackson County, where he died, March 22, 1890.

WILKIE, Franc Bangs, journalist, was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., July 2, 1830; took a partial course at Union College, after which he edited papers at Schenectady, N. Y., Elgin, Ill., and Davenport and Dubuque, Iowa; also serving, during a part of the Civil War, as the western war correspondent of "The New York Times." In 1863 he became an editorial writer on "The Chicago Times," remaining with that paper, with the exception of a brief interval, until 1888—a part of the time as its European correspondent. He was the author of a series of sketches over the nom de plume of "Poliuto," and of a volume of reminiscences under the title, "Thirty-five Years of Journalism," published shortly before his death, which took place, April 12, 1892.

WILKIN, Jacob W., Justice of the Supreme Court, was born in Licking County, Ohio, June 7, 1837; removed with his parents to Illinois, at 12 years of age, and was educated at McKendree College; served three years in the War for the Union; studied law with Judge Scholfield and was admitted to the bar in 1866. In 1872, he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, in 1879, elected Judge of the Circuit Court and re-elected in 1885—the latter year being assigned to the Appellate bench for the Fourth District, where he remained until his election to the Supreme bench in 1888, being re-elected to the latter office in 1897. His home is at Danville.

WILKINSON, Ira O., lawyer and Judge, was born in Virginia in 1822, and accompanied his father to Jacksonville (1835), where he was educated. During a short service as Deputy Clerk of Morgan County, he conceived a fondness for the profession of the law, and, after a course of study under Judge William Thomas, was admitted to practice in 1847. Richard Yates (afterwards Governor and Senator) was his first partner. In 1845 he removed to Rock Island, and, six years later, was elected a Circuit Judge, being again chosen to the same position in 1861. At the expiration of his second term he removed to Chicago. Died, at Jacksonville, August 24, 1894.

WILKINSON, John P., early merchant, was born, Dec. 14, 1790, in New Kent County, Va., emigrated first to Kentucky, and, in 1828, settled in Jacksonville, Ill., where he engaged in mercantile business. Mr. Wilkinson was a liberal friend of Illinois College and Jacksonville Female Academy, of each of which he was a Trustee from their origin until his death, which occurred, during a business visit to St. Louis, in December, 1841.

WILL, Conrad, pioneer physician and early legislator, was born in Philadelphia, June 4, 1778; about 1804 removed to Somerset County Pa., and, in 1813, to Kaskaskia, Ill. He was a physician by profession, but having leased the saline lands on the Big Muddy, in the vicinity of what afterwards became the town of Brownsville, he engaged in the manufacture of salt, removing thither in 1815, and becoming one of the founders of Brownsville, afterwards the first county-seat of Jackson County. On the organization of Jackson County, in 1816, he became a member of the first Board of County Commissioners, and, in 1818, served as Delegate from that county in the Convention which framed the first State Constitution. Thereafter he served continuously as a member of the Legislature from 1818 to '34—first as Senator in the First General Assembly, then as Representative in the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth, and again as Senator in the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth—his career being conspicuous for long service. He died in office, June 11, 1834. Dr. Will was short of stature, fleshy, of jovial disposition and fond of playing practical jokes upon his associates, but very popular, as shown by his successive elections to the Legislature. He has been called "The Father of Jackson County." Will County, organized by act of the Legislature two years after his death, was named in his honor.

WILL COUNTY, a northeastern county, embracing 850 square miles, named in honor of Dr. Conrad Will, an early politician and legislator. Early explorations of the territory were made in 1829, when white settlers were few. The bluff west of Joliet is said to have been first occupied by David and Benjamin Maggard. Joseph Smith, the Mormon "apostle," expounded his peculiar doctrines at "the Point" in 1831. Several of the early settlers fled from the country during (or after) a raid by the Sac Indians.

There is a legend, seemingly well supported, to the effect that the first lumber sawed to build the first frame house in Chicago (that of P. F. W. Peck), was sawed at Plainfield. Will County, originally a part of Cook, was separately erected in 1836, Joliet being made the county-seat. Agriculture, quarrying and manufacturing are the chief industries. Joliet, Lockport and Wilmington are the principal towns. Population (1880), 53,422; (1890), 62,007; (1900), 74,764.

WILLARD, Frances Elizabeth, teacher and reformer, was born at Churchville, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1839, graduated from the Northwestern Female College at Evanston, Ill., in 1859, and, in 1862, accepted the Professorship of Natural Sciences in that institution. During 1866-67 she was the Principal of the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary. The next two years she devoted to travel and study abroad, meanwhile contributing to various periodicals. From 1871 to 1874 she was Professor of Aesthetics in the Northwestern University and dean of the Woman's College. She was always an enthusiastic champion of temperance, and, in 1874, abandoned her profession to identify herself with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. For five years she was Corresponding Secretary of the national body, and, from 1879, its President. While Secretary she organized the Home Protective Association, and prepared a petition to the Illinois Legislature, to which nearly 200,000 names were attached, asking for the granting to women of the right to vote on the license question. In 1878 she succeeded her brother, Oliver A. Willard (who had died), as editor of "The Chicago Evening Post," but, a few months later, withdrew, and, in 1882, was elected as a member of the executive committee of the National Prohibition party. In 1886 she became leader of the White Cross Movement for the protection of women, and succeeded in securing favorable legislation, in this direction, in twelve States. In 1883 she founded the World's Christian Temperance Union, and, in 1888, was chosen its President, as also President of the International Council of Women. The latter years of her life were spent chiefly abroad, much of the time as the guest and co-worker of Lady Henry Somerset, of England, during which she devoted much attention to investigating the condition of women in the Orient. Miss Willard was a prolific and highly valued contributor to the magazines, and (besides numerous pamphlets) published several volumes, including "Nineteen Beautiful Years" (a tribute to her sister); "Woman in Temperance"; "How to Win," and "Woman in the Pulpit." Died, in New York, Feb. 18, 1898.

WILLARD, Samuel, A.M., M.D., LL.D., physician and educator, was born in Lunenburg, Vt., Dec. 30, 1821—the lineal descendant of Maj. Simon Willard, one of the founders of Concord, Mass., and prominent in "King Philip's War," and of his son, Rev. Dr. Samuel Willard, of the Old South Church, Boston, and seventh President of Harvard College. The subject of this sketch was taken in his infancy to Boston, and, in 1831, to Carrollton, Ill., where his father pursued the avocation of a druggist. After a preparatory course at Shurtleff College, Upper Alton, in 1836 he entered the freshman class in Illinois College at Jacksonville, but withdrew the following year, re-entering college in 1840 and graduating in the class of 1843, as a classmate of Dr. Newton Bateman, afterwards State Superintendent of Public Instruction and President of Knox College, and Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, now of Elmira, N. Y. The next year he spent as Tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of medicine at Quincy, graduating from the Medical Department of Illinois College in 1848. During a part of the latter year he edited a Free-Soil campaign paper ("The Tribune") at Quincy, and, later, "The Western Temperance Magazine" at the same place. In 1849 he began the practice of his profession at St. Louis, but the next year removed to Collinsville, Ill., remaining until 1857, when he took charge of the Department of Languages in the newly organized State Normal University at Normal. The second year of the Civil War (1862) he enlisted as a private in the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but was soon after commissioned as Surgeon with the rank of Major, participating in the campaigns in Tennessee and in the first attack upon Vicksburg. Being disabled by an attack of paralysis, in February, 1863, he was compelled to resign, when he had sufficiently recovered accepting a position in the office of Provost Marshal General Oakes, at Springfield, where he remained until the close of the war. He then became Grand Secretary of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows for the State of Illinois—a position which he had held from 1856 to 1862—remaining under his second appointment from 1865 to '69. The next year he served as Superintendent of Schools at Springfield, meanwhile assisting in founding the Springfield public library, and serving as its first librarian. In 1870 he accepted the professorship of History in the West Side High School of Chicago, which, with the exception of two years (1884-86), he continued to occupy for more than twenty-five years, retiring in 1898. In the meantime, Dr. Willard has been a laborious literary worker, having been, for a considerable period, editor, or assistant-editor, of "The Illinois Teacher," a contributor to "The Century Magazine" and "The Dial" of Chicago, besides having published a "Digest of the Laws of Odd Fellowship" in sixteen volumes, begun while he was Grand Secretary of the Order in 1864, and continued in 1872 and '82; a "Synopsis of History and Historical Chart," covering the period from B. C. 800 to A. D. 1876—of which he has had a second edition in course of preparation. Of late years he has been engaged upon a "Historical Dictionary of Names and Places," which will include some 12,000 topics, and which promises to be the most important work of his life. Previous to the war he was an avowed Abolitionist and operator on the "Underground Railroad," who made no concealment of his opinions, and, on one or two occasions, was called to answer for them in prosecutions under the "Fugitive Slave Act." (See "Underground Railroad.") His friend and classmate, the late Dr. Bateman, says of him: "Dr. Willard is a sound thinker; a clear and forcible writer; of broad and accurate scholarship; conscientious, genial and kindly, and a most estimable gentleman."

WILLIAMS, Archibald, lawyer and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ky., June 10, 1801; with moderate advantages but natural fondness for study, he chose the profession of law, and was admitted to the bar in Tennessee in 1828, coming to Quincy, Ill., the following year. He was elected to the General Assembly three times—serving in the Senate in 1833-36, and in the House, 1836-40; was United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, by appointment of President Taylor, 1849-53; was twice the candidate of his party (the Whig) for United States Senator, and appointed by President Lincoln, in 1861, United States District Judge for the State of Kansas. His abilities and high character were widely recognized. Died, in Quincy, Sept. 21, 1863—His son, John H., an attorney at Quincy, served as Judge of the Circuit Court 1879-85.—Another son, Abraham Lincoln, was twice elected Attorney-General of Kansas.

WILLIAMS, Erastus Smith, lawyer and jurist, was born at Salem, N. Y., May 22, 1821. In 1842 he removed to Chicago, where, after reading law, he was admitted to the bar in 1844. In 1854 he was appointed Master in Chancery, which office he filled until 1863, when he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County. After re-election in 1870 he became Chief Justice, and, at the same time, heard most of the cases on the equity side of the court. In 1879 he was a candidate for re-election as a Republican, but was defeated with the party ticket. After his retirement from the bench he resumed private practice. Died, Feb. 24, 1884.

WILLIAMS, James R., Congressman, was born in White County, Ill., Dec. 27, 1850, at the age of 25 graduated from the Indiana State University, at Bloomington, and, in 1876, from the Union College of Law, Chicago, since then being an active and successful practitioner at Carmi. In 1880 he was appointed Master in Chancery and served two years. From 1882 to 1886 he was County Judge. In 1892 he was a nominee on the Democratic ticket for Presidential Elector. He was elected to represent the Nineteenth Illinois District in the Fifty-first Congress at a special election held to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of R. W. Townshend, was re-elected in 1890 and 1892, but defeated by Orlando Burrell (Republican) for re-election in the newly organized Twentieth District in 1894. In 1898 he was again a candidate and elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

WILLIAMS, John, pioneer merchant, was born in Bath County, Ky., Sept. 11, 1808; between 14 and 16 years of age was clerk in a store in his native State; then, joining his parents, who had settled on a tract of land in a part of Sangamon (now Menard) County, Ill., he found employment as clerk in the store of Major Elijah Iles, at Springfield, whom he succeeded in business at the age of 22, continuing it without interruption until 1880. In 1856 Mr. Williams was the Republican candidate for Congress in the Springfield District, and, in 1861, was appointed Commissary-General for the State, rendering valuable service in furnishing supplies for State troops, in camps of instruction and while proceeding to the field, in the first years of the war; was also chief officer of the Illinois Sanitary Commission for two years, and, as one of the intimate personal friends of Mr. Lincoln, was chosen to accompany the remains of the martyred President, from Washington to Springfield, for burial. Liberal, enterprising and public-spirited, his name was associated with nearly every public enterprise of importance in Springfield during his business career—being one of the founders, and, for eleven years President, of the First National Bank; a chief promoter in the construction of what is now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Springfield and Peoria line; a Director of the Springfield Iron Company; one of the Commissioners who constructed the Springfield water-works, and an officer of the Lincoln Monument Association, from 1865 to his death, May 29, 1890.

WILLIAMS, Norman, lawyer, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 1, 1833, being related, on both the paternal and maternal sides, to some of the most prominent families of New England. He fitted for college at Union Academy, Meriden, and graduated from the University of Vermont in the class of 1855. After taking a course in the Albany Law School and with a law firm in his native town, he was admitted to practice in both New York and Vermont, removed to Chicago in 1858, and, in 1860, became a member of the firm of King, Kales & Williams, still later forming a partnership with Gen. John L. Thompson, which ended with the death of the latter in 1888. In a professional capacity he assisted in the organization of the Pullman Palace Car Company, and was a member of its Board of Directors; also assisted in organizing the Western Electric Company, and was prominently identified with the Chicago Telephone Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company. In 1881 he served as the United States Commissioner to the Electrical Exposition at Paris. In conjunction with his brother (Edward H. Williams) he assisted in founding the public library at Woodstock, Vt., which, in honor of his father, received the name of "The Norman Williams Public Library." With Col. Huntington W. Jackson and J. McGregor Adams, Mr. Williams was named, in the will of the late John Crerar, as an executor of the Crerar estate and one of the Trustees of the Crerar Public Library, and became its first President; was also a Director of the Chicago Public Library, and trustee of a number of large estates. Mr. Williams was a son-in-law of the late Judge John D. Caton, and his oldest daughter became the wife of Major-General Wesley Merritt, a few months before his death, which occurred at Hampton Beach, N. H., June 19, 1899—his remains being interred in his native town of Woodstock, Vt.

WILLIAMS, Robert Ebenezer, lawyer, born Dec. 3, 1825, at Clarksville, Pa., his grandfathers on both sides being soldiers of the Revolutionary War. In 1830 his parents removed to Washington in the same State, where in boyhood he worked as a mechanic in his father's shop, attending a common school in the winter until he reached the age of 17 years, when he entered Washington College, remaining for more than a year. He then began teaching, and, in 1845 went to Kentucky, where he pursued the business of a teacher for four years. Then he entered Bethany College in West Virginia, at the same time prosecuting his law studies, but left at the close of his junior year, when, having been licensed to practice, he removed to Clinton, Texas. Here he accepted, from a retired lawyer, the loan of a law library, which he afterwards purchased; served for two years as State's Attorney, and, in 1856, came to Bloomington, Ill., where he spent the remainder of his life in the practice of his profession. Much of his time was devoted to practice as a railroad attorney, especially in connection with the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads, in which he acquired prominence and wealth. He was a lifelong Democrat and, in 1868, was the unsuccessful candidate of his party for Attorney-General of the State. The last three years of his life he had been in bad health, dying at Bloomington, Feb. 15, 1899.

WILLIAMS, Samuel, Bank President, was born in Adams County, Ohio, July 11, 1820; came to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and, in 1842, removed to Iroquois County, where he held various local offices, including that of County Judge, to which he was elected in 1861. During his later years he had been President of the Watseka Citizens' Bank. Died, June 16, 1896.

WILLIAMSON, Rollin Samuel, legislator and jurist, was born at Cornwall, Vt., May 23, 1839. At the age of 14 he went to Boston, where he began life as a telegraph messenger boy. In two years he had become a skillful operator, and, as such, was employed in various offices in New England and New York. In 1857 he came to Chicago seeking employment and, through the fortunate correction of an error on the part of the receiver of a message, secured the position of operator and station agent at Palatine, Cook County. Here he read law during his leisure time without a preceptor, and, in 1870, was admitted to the bar. The same year he was elected to the lower House of the General Assembly and, in 1872, to the Senate. In 1880 he was elected to the bench of the Superior Court of Cook County, and, in 1887, was chosen a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court. Died, August 10, 1889.

WILLIAMSON COUNTY, in the southern part of the State, originally set off from Franklin and organized in 1839. The county is well watered, the principal streams being the Big Muddy and the South Fork of the Saline. The surface is undulating and the soil fertile. The region was originally well covered with forests. All the cereals (as well as potatoes) are cultivated, and rich meadows encourage stock-raising. Coal and sandstone underlie the entire county. Area, 440 square miles; population (1880), 19,324; (1890) 22,226; (1900), 27,796.

WILLIAMSVILLE, village of Sangamon County, on Chicago & Alton Railroad, 12 miles north of Springfield; has a bank, elevator, 3 churches, a newspaper and coal-mines. Pop. (1900), 573.

WILLIS, Jonathan Clay, soldier and former Railroad and Warehouse Commissioner, was born in Sumner County, Tenn., June 27, 1826; brought to Gallatin County, Ill., in 1834, and settled at Golconda in 1843; was elected Sheriff of Pope County in 1856, removed to Metropolis in 1859, and engaged in the wharf-boat and commission business. He entered the service as Quartermaster of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers in 1861, but was compelled to resign on account of injuries, in 1863; was elected Representative in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1868), appointed Collector of Internal Revenue in 1869, and Railway and Warehouse Commissioner in 1892, as the successor of John R. Tanner, serving until 1893.

WILMETTE, a village in Cook County, 14 miles north of Chicago, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, a handsome suburb of Chicago on the shore of Lake Michigan; principal streets paved and shaded with fine forest trees; has public library and good schools. Pop. (1900), 2,300.

WILMINGTON, a city of Will County, on the Kankakee River and the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 53 miles from Chicago and 15 south-southwest of Joliet; has considerable manufactures, two National banks, a graded school, churches and one newspaper. Wilmington is the location of the Illinois Soldiers' Widows' Home. Population (1890), 1,576; (1900), 1,420.

WILSON, Charles Lush, journalist, was born in Fairfield County, Conn., Oct. 10, 1818, educated in the common schools and at an academy in his native State, and, in 1835, removed to Chicago, entering the employment of his older brothers, who were connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal at Joliet. His brother, Richard L., having assumed charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" (the successor of "The Chicago American"), in 1844, Charles L. took a position in the office, ultimately securing a partnership, which continued until the death of his brother in 1856, when he succeeded to the ownership of the paper. Mr. Wilson was an ardent friend and supporter of Abraham Lincoln for the United States Senate in 1858, but, in 1860, favored the nomination of Mr. Seward for the Presidency, though earnestly supporting Mr. Lincoln after his nomination. In 1861 he was appointed Secretary of the American Legation at London, serving with the late Minister Charles Francis Adams, until 1864, when he resigned and resumed his connection with "The Journal." In 1875 his health began to fail, and three years later, having gone to San Antonio, Tex., in the hope of receiving benefit from a change of climate, he died in that city, March 9, 1878.—

Richard Lush (Wilson), an older brother of the preceding, the first editor and publisher of "The Chicago Evening Journal," the oldest paper of consecutive publication in Chicago, was a native of New York. Coming to Chicago with his brother John L., in 1834, they soon after established themselves in business on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, then in course of construction. In 1844 he took charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" for a publishing committee which had purchased the material of "The Chicago American," but soon after became principal proprietor. In April, 1847, while firing a salute in honor of the victory of Buena Vista, he lost an arm and was otherwise injured by the explosion of the cannon. Early in 1849, he was appointed, by President Taylor, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, but, having failed of confirmation, was compelled to retire in favor of a successor appointed by Millard Fillmore, eleven months later. Mr. Wilson published a little volume in 1842 entitled "A Trip to Santa Fe," and, a few years later, a story of travel under the title, "Short Ravelings from a Long Yarn." Died, December, 1856.—John Lush (Wilson), another brother, also a native of New York, came to Illinois in 1834, was afterwards associated with his brothers in business, being for a time business manager of "The Chicago Journal;" also served one term as Sheriff of Cook County. Died, in Chicago, April 13, 1888.

WILSON, Isaac Grant, jurist, was born at Middlebury, N. Y., April 26, 1817, graduated from Brown University in 1838, and the same year came to Chicago, whither his father's family had preceded him in 1835. After reading law for two years, he entered the senior class at Cambridge (Mass.) Law School, graduating in 1841. In August of that year he opened an office at Elgin, and, for ten years "rode the circuit." In 1851 he was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit to fill a vacancy, and re-elected for a full term in 1855, and again in '61. In November of the latter year he was commissioned the first Colonel of the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but resigned, a few weeks later, and resumed his place upon the bench. From 1867 to 1879 he devoted himself to private practice, which was largely in the Federal Courts. In 1879 he resumed his seat upon the bench (this time for the Twelfth Circuit), and was at once designated as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court at Chicago, of which tribunal he became Chief Justice in 1881. In 1885 he was re-elected Circuit Judge, but died, about the close of his term, at Geneva, June 8, 1891.

WILSON, James Grant, soldier and author, was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, April 28, 1832, and, when only a year old, was brought by his father, William Wilson, to America. The family settled at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where James Grant was educated at College Hill and under private teachers. After finishing his studies he became his father's partner in business, but, in 1855, went abroad, and, shortly after his return, removed to Chicago, where he founded the first literary paper established in the Northwest. At the outbreak of the Civil War, he disposed of his journal to enlist in the Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Major and afterwards promoted to the colonelcy. In August, 1863, while at New Orleans, by advice of General Grant, he accepted a commission as Colonel of the Fourth Regiment United States Colored Cavalry, and was assigned, as Aid-de-camp, to the staff of the Commander of the Department of the Gulf, filling this post until April, 1865. When General Banks was relieved, Colonel Wilson was brevetted Brigadier-General and placed in command at Port Hudson, resigning in July, 1865, since which time his home has been in New York. He is best known as an author, having published numerous addresses, and being a frequent contributor to American and European magazines. Among larger works which he has written or edited are "Biographical Sketches of Illinois Officers"; "Love in Letters"; "Life of General U. S. Grant"; "Life and Letters of Fitz Greene Halleck"; "Poets and Poetry of Scotland"; "Bryant and His Friends", and "Appleton's Cyclopedic of American Biography."

WILSON, James Harrison, soldier and military engineer, was born near Shawneetown, Ill., Sept. 2, 1837. His grandfather, Alexander Wilson, was one of the pioneers of Illinois, and his father (Harrison Wilson) was an ensign during the War of 1812 and a Captain in the Black Hawk War. His brother (Bluford Wilson) served as Assistant Adjutant-General of Volunteers during the Civil War, and as Solicitor of the United States Treasury during the "whisky ring" prosecutions. James H. was educated in the common schools, at McKendree College, and the United States Military Academy at West Point, graduating from the latter in 1860, and being assigned to the Topographical Engineer Corps. In September, 1861, he was promoted to a First Lieutenantcy, then served as Chief Topographical Engineer of the Port Royal expedition until March, 1862; was afterwards attached to the Department of the South, being present at the bombardment of Fort Pulaski; was Aid-de-camp to McClellan, and participated in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam; was made Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers in November, 1862; was Chief Topographical Engineer and Inspector-General of the Army of the Tennessee until October, 1863, being actively engaged in the operations around Vicksburg; was made Captain of Engineers in May, 1863, and Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Oct. 31, following. He also conducted operations preliminary to the battle of Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, and for the relief of Knoxville. Later, he was placed in command of the Third Division of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac, serving from May to August, 1864, under General Sheridan. Subsequently he was transferred to the Department of the Mississippi, where he so distinguished himself that, on April 20, 1865, he was made Major-General of Volunteers. In twenty-eight days he captured five fortified cities, twenty-three stands of colors, 289 guns and 6,820 prisoners—among the latter being Jefferson Davis. He was mustered out of the volunteer service in January, 1866, and, on July 28, following, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Thirty-fifth United States Infantry, being also brevetted Major-General in the regular army. On Dec. 31, 1870, he returned to civil life, and was afterwards largely engaged in railroad and engineering operations, especially in West Virginia. Promptly after the declaration of war with Spain (1898) General Wilson was appointed, by the President, Major-General of Volunteers, serving until its close. He is the author of "China: Travels and Investigations in the Middle Kingdom"; "Life of Andrew J. Alexander"; and the "Life of Gen. U. S. Grant," in conjunction with Charles A.

Dana. His home, in recent years, has been in New York.

WILSON, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in New Hampshire in 1802, graduated at Bowdoin College in 1824—the classmate of Franklin Pierce and Nathaniel Hawthorne; studied law in New Hampshire and came to Illinois in 1835, locating at Joliet; removed to Chicago in 1841, where he was the partner of Norman B. Judd, serving, at different periods, as attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railways; was Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Cook County, 1853-59, when he became Presiding Judge of the Superior Court of Chicago, serving until 1868. Died, Dec. 7, 1883.

WILSON, John P., lawyer, was born in Whiteside County, Ill., July 3, 1844; educated in the common schools and at Knox College, Galesburg, graduating from the latter in 1865; two years later was admitted to the bar in Chicago, and speedily attained prominence in his profession. During the World's Fair period he was retained as counsel by the Committee on Grounds and Buildings, and was prominently connected, as counsel for the city, with the Lake Front litigation.

WILSON, Robert L., early legislator, was born in Washington County, Pa., Sept. 11, 1805, taken to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1810, graduated at Franklin College in 1831, studied law and, in 1833, removed to Athens (now in Menard County), Ill.; was elected Representative in 1836, and was one of the members from Sangamon County, known as the "Long Nine," who assisted in securing the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. Mr. Wilson removed to Sterling, Whiteside County, in 1840, was elected five times Circuit Clerk and served eight years as Probate Judge. Immediately after the fall of Fort Sumter, he enlisted as private in a battalion in Washington City under command of Cassius M. Clay, for guard duty until the arrival of the Seventh New York Regiment. He subsequently assisted in raising troops in Illinois, was appointed Paymaster by Lincoln, serving at Washington, St. Louis, and, after the fall of Vicksburg, at Springfield—being mustered out in November, 1865. Died, in Whiteside County, 1880.

WILSON, Robert S., lawyer and jurist, was born at Montrose, Susquehanna County, Pa., Nov. 6, 1812; learned the printer's art, then studied law and was admitted to the bar in Allegheny County, about 1833; in 1836 removed to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he served as Probate Judge and State Senator; in 1850 came to Chicago, was elected Judge of the Recorder's Court in 1853, and re-elected in 1858, serving ten years, and proving "a terror to evil-doers." Died, at Lawrence, Mich., Dec. 23, 1882.

WILSON, William, early jurist, was born in Loudoun County, Va., April 27, 1794; studied law with Hon. John Cook, a distinguished lawyer, and minister to France in the early part of the century; in 1817 removed to Kentucky, soon after came to Illinois, two years later locating in White County, near Carmi, which continued to be his home during the remainder of his life. In 1819 he was appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court as successor to William P. Foster, who is described by Governor Ford as "a great rascal and no lawyer," and who held office only about nine months. Judge Wilson was re-elected to the Supreme bench, as Chief-Justice, in 1825, being then only a little over 30 years old, and held office until the reorganization of the Supreme Court under the Constitution of 1848—a period of over twenty-nine years, and, with the exception of Judge Browne's, the longest term of service in the history of the court. He died at his home in White County, April 29, 1857. A Whig in early life, he allied himself with the Democratic party on the dissolution of the former. Hon. James C. Conkling, of Springfield, says of him, "as a writer, his style was clear and distinct; as a lawyer, his judgment was sound and discriminating."

WINCHESTER, a city and county-seat of Scott County, founded in 1839, situated on Big Sandy Creek and on the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 29 miles south of Beardstown and 84 miles north by west of St. Louis. While the surrounding region is agricultural and largely devoted to wheat growing, there is some coal mining. Winchester is an important shipping-point, having three grain elevators, two flouring mills, and a coal mine employing fifty miners. There are four Protestant and one Catholic church, a court house, a high school, a graded school building, two banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,626; (1890), 1,542; (1900), 1,711.

WINDSOR, a city of Shelby County at the crossing of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways, 11 miles north-east of Shelbyville. Population (1880), 768; (1890), 888; (1900), 866.

WINES, Frederick Howard, clergyman and sociologist, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., April 9, 1838, graduated at Washington (Pa.) College in 1857, and, after serving as tutor there for a short time, entered Princeton Theological Seminary, but was compelled temporarily to discontinue his studies on account of a weakness of the eyes. The Presbytery of St. Louis licensed him to preach in 1860, and, in 1862, he was commissioned Hospital Chaplain in the Union army. During 1862-64 he was stationed at Springfield, Mo., participating in the battle of Springfield on Jan. 8, 1863, and being personally mentioned for bravery on the field in the official report. Re-entering the seminary at Princeton in 1864, he graduated in 1865, and at once accepted a call to the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Ill., which he filled for four years. In 1869 he was appointed Secretary of the newly created Board of Commissioners of Public Charities of Illinois, in which capacity he continued until 1893, when he resigned. For the next four years he was chiefly engaged in literary work, in lecturing before universities on topics connected with social science, in aiding in the organization of charitable work, and in the conduct of a thorough investigation into the relations between liquor legislation and crime. At an early period he took a prominent part in organizing the various Boards of Public Charities of the United States into an organization known as the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, and, at the Louisville meeting (1883), was elected its President. At the International Penitentiary Congress at Stockholm (1878) he was the official delegate from Illinois. On his return, as a result of his observations while abroad, he submitted to the Legislature a report strongly advocating the construction of the Kankakee Hospital for the Insane, then about to be built, upon the "detached ward" or "village" plan, a departure from then existing methods, which marks an era in the treatment of insane in the United States. Mr. Wines conducted the investigation into the condition and number of the defective, dependent and delinquent classes throughout the country, his report constituting a separate volume under the "Tenth Census," and rendered a similar service in connection with the eleventh census (1890). In 1887 he was elected Secretary of the National Prison Association, succeeding to the post formerly held by his father, Enoch Cobb Wines, D.D., LL.D. After the inauguration of Governor Tanner in 1897, he resumed his former position of Secretary of the Board of Public Charities, remaining until 1899, when he again tendered his resignation, having received the appointment to the position of Assistant Director of the Twelfth Census, which he now holds. He is the author of "Crime and Reformation" (1895); of a voluminous series of reports; also of numerous pamphlets and brochures, among which may be mentioned "The County Jail System; An Argument for its Abolition" (1878); "The Kankakee Hospital" (1882); "Provision for the Insane in the United States" (1885); "Conditional Liberation, or the Paroling of Prisoners" (1886), and "American Prisons in the Tenth Census" (1888).

WINES, Walter B., lawyer (brother of Frederick H. Wines), was born in Boston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1848, received his primary education at Williston Academy, East Hampton, Mass., after which he entered Middlebury College, Vt., taking a classical course and graduating there. He afterwards became a student in the law department of Columbia College, N. Y., graduating in 1871, being admitted to the bar the same year and commencing practice in New York City. In 1879 he came to Springfield, Ill., and was, for a time, identified with the bar of that city. Later, he removed to Chicago, where he has been engaged in literary and journalistic work.

WINNEBAGO COUNTY, situated in the "northern tier," bordering on the Wisconsin State line; was organized, under an act passed in 1836, from La Salle and Jo Daviess Counties, and has an area of 552 square miles. The county is drained by the Rock and Pecatonica Rivers. The surface is rolling prairie and the soil fertile. The geology is simple, the quaternary deposits being underlaid by the Galena blue and buff limestone, adapted for building purposes. All the cereals are raised in abundance, the chief product being corn. The Winnebago Indians (who gave name to the county) formerly lived on the west side of the Rock River, and the Pottawatomies on the east, but both tribes removed westward in 1835. (As to manufacturing interests, see Rockford.) Population (1880), 30,505; (1890), 39,938; (1900), 47,845.

WINNEBAGO WAR. The name given to an Indian disturbance which had its origin in 1827, during the administration of Gov. Ninian Edwards. The Indians had been quiet since the conclusion of the War of 1812, but a few isolated outrages were sufficient to start terrified "runners" in all directions. In the northern portion of the State, from Galena to Chicago (then Fort Dearborn) the alarm was intense. The meagre militia force of the State was summoned and volunteers were called for. Meanwhile, 600 United States Regular Infantry, under command of Gen. Henry Atkinson, put in an appearance. Besides the infantry, Atkinson had at his disposal some 130 mounted sharpshooters. The origin of the disturbance was as follows: The Winnebagoes attacked a band of Chippewas, who were (by treaty) under Government protection, several of the latter being killed. For participation in this offense, four Winnebago Indians were summarily apprehended, surrendered to the Chippewas and shot. Meanwhile, some dispute had arisen as to the title of the lands, claimed by the Winnebagoes in the vicinity of Galena, which had been occupied by white miners. Repeated acts of hostility and of reprisal, along the Upper Mississippi, intensified mutual distrust. A gathering of the Indians around two keel-boats, laden with supplies for Fort Snelling, which had anchored near Prairie du Chien and opposite a Winnebago camp, was regarded by the whites as a hostile act. Liquor was freely distributed, and there is historical evidence that a half-dozen drunken squaws were carried off and shamefully maltreated. Several hundred warriors assembled to avenge the deception which had been practiced upon them. They laid in ambush for the boats on their return trip. The first passed too rapidly to be successfully assailed, but the second grounded and was savagely, yet unsuccessfully, attacked. The presence of General Atkinson's forces prevented an actual outbreak, and, on his demand, the great Winnebago Chief, Red Bird, with six other leading men of the tribe, surrendered themselves as hostages to save their nation from extermination. A majority of these were, after trial, acquitted. Red Bird, however, unable to endure confinement, literally pined to death in prison, dying on Feb. 16, 1838. He is described as having been a savage of superior intelligence and noble character. A treaty of peace was concluded with the Winnebagoes in a council held at Prairie du Chien, a few months later, but the affair seems to have produced as much alarm among the Indians as it did among the whites. (For Winnebago Indians see page 576.)

WINNETKA, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 16½ miles north of Chicago. It stands eighty feet above the level of Lake Michigan, has good schools (being the seat of the Winnetka Institute), several churches, and is a popular residence town. Population (1880), 584; (1890), 1,079; (1900), 1,833.

WINSTON, Frederick Hampton, lawyer, was born in Liberty County, Ga., Nov. 20, 1830, was brought to Woodford County, Ky., in 1835, left an orphan at 12, and attended the common schools until 18, when, returning to Georgia, he engaged in cotton manufacture. He finally began the study of law with United States Senator W. C. Dawson, and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1852; spent some time in the office of W. M. Evarts in New York, was admitted to the bar and came to Chicago in 1853, where he formed a partnership with Norman B. Judd, afterwards being associated with Judge Henry W. Blodgett; served as general solicitor of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railways—remaining with the latter twenty years. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Minister to Persia, but resigned the following year, and traveled extensively in Russia, Scandinavia and other foreign countries. Mr. Winston was a delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1868, '76 and '84; first President of the Stock Yards at Jersey City, for twelve years President of the Lincoln Park Commission, and a Director of the Lincoln National Bank.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL LINES. The Wisconsin Central Company was organized, June 17, 1887, and subsequently acquired the Minnesota, St. Croix & Wisconsin, the Wisconsin & Minnesota, the Chippewa Falls & Western, the St. Paul & St. Croix Falls, the Wisconsin Central, the Penokee, and the Packwaukee & Montebello Railroads, and assumed the leases of the Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago and the Wisconsin & Minnesota Roads. On July 1, 1888, the company began to operate the entire Wisconsin Central system, with the exception of the Wisconsin Central Railroad and the leased Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago, which remained in charge of the Wisconsin Central Railroad mortgage trustees until Nov. 1, 1889, when these, too, passed under the control of the Wisconsin Central Company. The Wisconsin Central Railroad Company is a re-organization (Oct. 1, 1879) of a company formed Jan. 1, 1871. The Wisconsin Central and the Wisconsin Central Railroad Companies, though differing in name, are a financial unit; the former holding most of the first mortgage bonds of the latter, and substantially all its notes, stocks and income bonds, but, for legal reasons (such as the protection of land titles), it is necessary that separate corporations be maintained. On April 1, 1890, the Wisconsin Central Company executed a lease to the Northern Pacific Railroad, but this was set aside by the courts, on Sept. 27, 1893, for non-payment of rent, and was finally canceled. On the same day receivers were appointed to insure the protection of all interests. The total mileage is 415.46 miles, of which the Company owns 258.90—only .10 of a mile in Illinois. A line, 58.10 miles in length, with 8.44 miles of side-track (total, 66.54 miles), lying wholly within the State of Illinois, is operated by the Chicago & Wisconsin and furnishes the allied line an entrance into Chicago.

WITHROW, Thomas F., lawyer, was born in Virginia in March, 1833, removed with his parents to Ohio in childhood, attended the Western Reserve College, and, after the death of his father, taught school and worked as a printer, later, editing a paper at Mount Vernon. In 1855 he removed to Janesville, Wis., where he again engaged in journalistic work, studied law, was admitted to the bar in Iowa in 1857, settled at Des Moines and served as private secretary of Governors Lowe and Kirkwood. In 1860 he became Supreme Court Reporter; served as Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee in 1863 and, in 1866, became associated with the Rock Island Railroad in the capacity of local attorney, was made chief law officer of the Company in 1873, and removed to Chicago, and, in 1890, was promoted to the position of General Counsel. Died, in Chicago, Feb. 3, 1893.

WOLCOTT, (Dr.) Alexander, early Indian Agent, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Feb. 14, 1790; graduated from Yale College in 1809, and, after a course in medicine, was commissioned, in 1812, Surgeon's Mate in the United States Army. In 1820 he was appointed Indian Agent at Fort Dearborn (now Chicago), as successor to Charles Jonett—the first Agent—who had been appointed a United States Judge in Arkansas. The same year he accompanied General Lewis Cass and Henry Schoolcraft on their tour among the Indians of the Northwest; was married in 1823 to Ellen Marion Kinzie, a daughter of Col. John Kinzie, the first permanent settler of Chicago; in 1825 was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Peoria County, which then included Cook County; was a Judge of Election in 1830, and one of the purchasers of a block of ground in the heart of the present city of Chicago, at the first sale of lots, held Sept. 27, 1830, but died before the close of the year. Dr. Wolcott appears to have been a high-minded and honorable man, as well as far in advance of the mass of pioneers in point of education and intelligence.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE. (See Suffrage.)

WOOD, Benson, lawyer and Congressman, was born in Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1839; received a common school and academic education; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, and, for two years, taught school in Lee County. He then enlisted as a soldier in an Illinois regiment, attaining the rank of Captain of Infantry; after the war, graduated from the Law Department of the old Chicago University, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession. He was elected a member of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872) and was a delegate to the Republican National Conventions of 1876 and 1888; also served as Mayor of the city of Effingham, where he now resides. In 1894 he was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress by the Republicans of the Nineteenth District, which has uniformly returned a Democrat, and, in office, proved himself a most industrious and efficient member. Mr. Wood was defeated as a candidate for re-election in 1896.

WOOD, John, pioneer, Lieutenant-Governor and Governor, was born at Moravia, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1798—his father being a Revolutionary soldier who had served as Surgeon and Captain in the army. At the age of 21 years young Wood removed to Illinois, settling in what is now Adams County, and building the first log-cabin on the site of the present city of Quincy. He was a member of the upper house of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth General Assemblies, and was elected Lieutenant-Governor in 1859 on the same ticket with Governor Bissell, and served out the unexpired term of the latter, who died in office. (See Bissell, William H.) He was succeeded by Richard Yates in 1861. In February of that year he was appointed one of the five Commissioners from Illinois to the "Peace Conference" at Washington, to consider methods for averting civil war. The following May he was appointed Quartermaster-General for the State by Governor Yates, and assisted most efficiently in fitting out the troops for the field. In June, 1864, he was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers (100-days' men) and mustered out of service the following September. Died, at Quincy, June 11, 1880. He was liberal, patriotic and public-spirited. His fellow-citizens of Quincy erected a monument to his memory, which was appropriately dedicated, July 4, 1883.

WOODFORD COUNTY, situated a little north of the center of the State, bounded on the west by the Illinois River; organized in 1841; area, 540 square miles. The surface is generally level, except along the Illinois River, the soil fertile and well watered. The county lies in the northern section of the great coal field of the State. Eureka is the county-seat. Other thriving cities and towns are Metamora, Minonk, El Paso and Roanoke. Corn, oats, wheat, potatoes and barley are the principal crops. The chief mechanical industries are flour manufacture, carriage and wagon-making, and saddlery and harness work. Population (1890), 21,429; (1900), 21,822.

WOODHULL, a village of Henry County, on Keithsburg branch Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of Galva; has a bank, electric lights, water works, brick and tile works, six churches and weekly paper. Pop. (1900), 774.

WOODMAN, Charles W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Aalborg, Denmark, March 11, 1844; received his early education in the schools of his native country, but took to the sea in 1860, following the life of a sailor until 1863, when, coming to Philadelphia, he enlisted in the Gulf Squadron of the United States. After the war, he came to Chicago, and, after reading law for some time in the office of James L. High, graduated from the Law Department of the Chicago University in 1871. Some years later he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for some of the lower courts, and, in 1881, was nominated by the Judges of Cook County as one of the Justices of the Peace for the city of Chicago. In 1894 he became the Republican candidate for Congress from the Fourth District and was elected, but failed to secure a renomination in 1896. Died, in Elgin Asylum for the Insane, March 18, 1898.

WOODS, Robert Mann, was born at Greenville, Pa., April 17, 1840; came with his parents to Illinois in 1842, the family settling at Barry, Pike County, but subsequently residing at Pittsfield, Canton and Galesburg. He was educated at Knox College in the latter place, which was his home from 1849 to '58; later, taught school in Iowa and Missouri until 1861, when he went to Springfield and began the study of law with Milton Hay and Shelby M. Cullom. His law studies having been interrupted by the Civil War, after spending some time in the mustering and disbursing office, he was promoted by Governor Yates to a place in the executive office, from which he went to the field as Adjutant of the Sixty-fourth Illinois Infantry, known as the "Yates Sharp-Shooters." After participating, with the Army of the Tennessee, in the Atlanta campaign, he took part in the "March to the Sea," and the campaign in the Carolinas, including the siege of Savannah and the forcing of the Salkahatchie, where he distinguished himself, as also in the taking of Columbia, Fayetteville, Cheraw, Raleigh and Bentonville. At the latter place he had a horse shot under him and won the brevet rank of Major for gallantry in the field, having previously been commissioned Captain of Company A of his regiment. He also served on the staffs of Gens. Giles A. Smith, Benjamin F. Potts, and William W. Belknap, and was the last mustering officer in General Sherman's army. In 1867 Major Woods removed to Chicago, where he was in business for a number of years, serving as chief clerk of Custom House construction from 1872 to 1877. In 1879 he purchased "The Daily Republican" at Joliet, which he conducted successfully for fifteen years. While connected with "The Republican," he served as Secretary of the Illinois Republican Press Association and in various other positions.

Major Woods was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, whose birth-place was in Illinois. (See Grand Army of the Republic; also Stephenson, Dr. B. F.) When Dr. Stephenson (who had been Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry), conceived the idea of founding such an order, he called to his assistance Major Woods, who was then engaged in writing the histories of Illinois regiments for the Adjutant-General's Report. The Major wrote the Constitution and By-laws of the Order, the charter blanks for all the reports, etc. The first official order bears his name as the first Adjutant-General of the Order, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF ILLINOIS
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., APRIL 1, 1866.

GENERAL ORDERS !
No. 1.

} The following named officers are hereby appointed and assigned to duty at these headquarters. They will be obeyed and respected accordingly:

Colonel Jules C. Webber, A.D.C. and Chief of Staff.

Colonel John M. Snyder, Quartermaster-General.

Major Robert M. Woods, Adjutant-General.

Captain John A. Lightfoot, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Captain John S. Phelps, Aid-de-Camp.

By order of B. F. Stephenson, Department Commander.

ROBERT M. WOODS,
Adjutant-General.

Major Woods afterwards organized the various Departments in the West, and it has been conceded that he furnished the money necessary to carry on the work during the first six months of the existence of the Order. He has never accepted a nomination or run for any political office, but is now engaged in financial business in Joliet and Chicago, with his residence in the former place.

WOODSON, David Meade, lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., May 18, 1806; was educated in private schools and at Transylvania University, and read law with his father. He served a term in the Kentucky Legislature in 1832, and, in 1834, removed to Illinois, settling at Carrollton, Greene County. In 1839 he was elected State's Attorney and, in 1840, a member of the lower house of the Legislature, being elected a second time in 1868. In 1843 he was the Whig candidate for Congress in the Fifth District, but was defeated by Stephen A. Douglas. He was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1869-70. In 1848 he was elected a Judge of the First Judicial Circuit, remaining in office until 1867. Died, in 1877.

WOODSTOCK, the county-seat of McHenry County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, about 51 miles northwest of Chicago and 32 miles east of Rockford. It contains a court house, eight churches, four banks, three newspaper offices, foundry and machine shops, planing mills, canning works, pickle, cheese and butter factories. The Oliver Typewriter Factory is located here; the town is also the seat of the Todd Seminary for boys. Population (1890), 1,683; (1900), 2,502.

WORCESTER, Linus E., State Senator, was born in Windsor, Vt., Dec. 5, 1811, was educated in the common schools of his native State and at Chester Academy, came to Illinois in 1836, and, after teaching three years, entered a dry-goods store at Whitehall as clerk, later becoming a partner. He was also engaged in various other branches of business at different times, including the drug, hardware, grocery, agricultural implement and lumber business. In 1843 he was appointed Postmaster at Whitehall, serving twelve years; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, served as County Judge for six years from 1853, and as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Jacksonville, from 1859, by successive reappointments, for twelve years. In 1856 he was elected, as a Democrat, to the State Senate, to succeed John M. Palmer, resigned; was re-elected in 1860, and, at the session of 1865, was one of the five Democratic members of that body who voted for the ratification of the Emancipation Amendment of the National Constitution. He was elected County Judge a second time, in 1863, and re-elected in 1867, served as delegate to the Democratic National Convention of 1876, and, for more than thirty years, was one of the Directors of the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, serving from the organization of the corporation until his death, which occurred Oct. 19, 1891.

WORDEN, a village of Madison County, on the Wabash and the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railways, 32 miles northeast of St. Louis. Population (1890), 522; (1900), 544

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION. An exhibition of the scientific, liberal and mechanical arts of all nations, held at Chicago, between May 1 and Oct. 31, 1893. The project had its inception in November, 1885, in a resolution adopted by the directorate of the Chicago Inter-State Exposition Company. On July 6, 1888, the first well defined action was taken, the Iroquois Club, of Chicago, inviting the co-operation of six other leading clubs of that city in "securing the location of an international celebration at Chicago of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus." In July, 1889, a decisive step was taken in the appointment by Mayor Cregier, under resolution of the City Council, of a committee of 100 (afterwards increased to 256) citizens, who were charged with the duty of promoting the selection of Chicago as the site for the Exposition. New York, Washington and St. Louis were competing points, but the choice of Congress fell upon Chicago, and the act establishing the World's Fair at that city was signed by President Harrison on April 25, 1890. Under the requirements of the law, the President appointed eight Commissioners-at-large, with two Commissioners and two alternates from each State and Territory and the District of Columbia. Col. George R. Davis, of Chicago, was elected Director-General by the body thus constituted. Ex-Senator Thomas M. Palmer, of Michigan, was chosen President of the Commission and John T. Dickinson, of Texas, Secretary. This Commission delegated much of its power to a Board of Reference and Control, who were instructed to act with a similar number appointed by the World's Columbian Exposition. The latter organization was an incorporation, with a directorate of forty-five members, elected annually by the stockholders. Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, was the first President of the corporation, and was succeeded by W. T. Baker and Harlow N. Higinbotham.

In addition to these bodies, certain powers were vested in a Board of Lady Managers, composed of two members; with alternates, from each State and Territory, besides nine from the city of Chicago. Mrs. Potter Palmer was chosen President of the latter. This Board was particularly charged with supervision of women's participation in the Exposition, and of the exhibits of women's work.

The supreme executive power was vested in the Joint Board of Control. The site selected was Jackson Park, in the South Division of Chicago, with a strip connecting Jackson and Washington Parks, known as the "Midway Plaisance," which was surrendered to "concessionaires" who purchased the privilege of giving exhibitions, or conducting restaurants or selling-booths thereon. The total area of the site was 633 acres, and that of the buildings—not reckoning those erected by States other than Illinois, and by foreign governments—was about 200 acres. When to this is added the acreage of the foreign and State buildings, the total space under roof approximated 250 acres. These figures do not include the buildings erected by private exhibitors, caterers and vendors, which would add a small percentage to the grand total. Forty-seven foreign Governments made appropriations for the erection of their own buildings and other expenses connected with official representation, and there were exhibitors from eighty-six nations. The United States Government erected its own building, and appropriated $500,000 to defray the expenses of a national exhibit, besides $2,500,000 toward the general cost of the Exposition. The appropriations by foreign Governments aggregated about $6,500,000, and those by the States and Territories, $6,120,000—that of Illinois being $800,000. The entire outlay of the World's Columbian Exposition Company, up to March 31, 1894, including the cost of preliminary organization, construction, operating and post-Exposition expenses, was $27,151,800. This is, of course, exclusive of foreign and State expenditures, which would swell the aggregate cost to nearly $45,000,000. Citizens of Chicago subscribed $5,608,206 toward the capital stock of the Exposition Company, and the municipality, $5,000,000, which was raised by the sale of bonds. (See Thirty-sixth General Assembly.)

The site, while admirably adapted to the purpose, was, when chosen, a marshy flat, crossed by low sand ridges, upon which stood occasional clumps of stunted scrub oaks. Before the gates of the great fair were opened to the public, the entire area had been transformed into a dream of beauty. Marshes had been drained, filled in and sodded; driveways and broad walks constructed; artificial ponds and lagoons dug and embanked, and all the highest skill of the landscape gardener's art had been called into play to produce varied and striking effects. But the task had been a Herculean one. There were seventeen principal (or, as they may be called, departmental) buildings, all of beautiful and ornate design, and all of vast size. They were known as the Manufacturers' and Liberal Arts, the Machinery, Electrical, Transportation, Woman's, Horticultural, Mines and Mining, Anthropological, Administration, Art Galleries, Agricultural, Art Institute, Fisheries, Live Stock, Dairy and Forestry buildings, and the Music Hall and Casino. Several of these had large annexes. The Manufacturers' Building was the largest. It was rectangular (1687x787 feet), having a ground area of 31 acres and a floor and gallery area of 44 acres. Its central chamber was 1280x380 feet, with a nave 107 feet wide, both hall and nave being surrounded by a gallery 50 feet wide. It was four times as large as the Roman Coliseum and three times as large as St. Peter's at Rome; 17,000,000 feet of lumber, 13,000,000 pounds of steel, and 2,000,000 pounds of iron had been used in its construction, involving a cost of $1,800,000.

It was originally intended to open the Exposition, formally, on Oct. 21, 1892, the quadri-centennial of Columbus' discovery of land on the Western Hemisphere, but the magnitude of the undertaking rendered this impracticable. Consequently, while dedicatory ceremonies were held on that day, preceded by a monster procession and followed by elaborate pyrotechnic displays at night, May 1, 1893, was fixed as the opening day—the machinery and fountains being put in operation, at the touch of an electric button by President Cleveland, at the close of a short address. The total number of admissions from that date to Oct. 31, was 27,530,460—the largest for any single day being on Oct. 9 (Chicago Day) amounting to 761,944. The total receipts from all sources (including National and State appropriations, subscriptions, etc.), amounted to $28,151,168.75, of which $10,626,330.76 was from the sale of tickets, and $3,699,581.43 from concessions. The aggregate attendance fell short of that at the Paris Exposition of 1889 by about 500,000, while the receipts from the sale of tickets and concessions exceeded the latter by nearly $5,800,000. Subscribers to the Exposition stock received a return of ten per cent on the same.

The Illinois building was the first of the State buildings to be completed. It was also the largest and most costly, but was severely criticised from an architectural standpoint. The exhibits showed the internal resources of the State, as well as the development of its governmental system, and its progress in civilization from the days of the first pioneers. The entire Illinois exhibit in the State building was under charge of the State Board of Agriculture, who devoted one-tenth of the appropriation, and a like proportion of floor space, to the exhibition of the work of Illinois women as scientists, authors, artists, decorators, etc. Among special features of the Illinois exhibit were: State trophies and relics, kept in a fire-proof memorial hall; the display of grains and minerals, and an immense topographical map (prepared at a cost of $15,000), drafted on a scale of two miles to the inch, showing the character and resources of the State, and correcting many serious cartographical errors previously undiscovered.

WORTHEN, Amos Henry, scientist and State Geologist, was born at Bradford, Vt., Oct. 31, 1813, emigrated to Kentucky in 1834, and, in 1836, removed to Illinois, locating at Warsaw. Teaching, surveying and mercantile business were his pursuits until 1842, when he returned to the East, spending two years in Boston, but returning to Warsaw in 1844. His natural predilections were toward the natural sciences, and, after coming west, he devoted most of his leisure time to the collection and study of specimens of mineralogy, geology and conchology. On the organization of the geological survey of Illinois in 1851, he was appointed assistant to Dr. J. G. Norwood, then State Geologist, and, in 1858, succeeded to the office, having meanwhile spent three years as Assistant Geologist in the first Iowa survey. As State Geologist he published seven volumes of reports, and was engaged upon the eighth when overtaken by death, May 6, 1888. These reports, which are as comprehensive as they are voluminous, have been reviewed and warmly commended by the leading scientific periodicals of this country and Europe. In 1877 field work was discontinued, and the State Historical Library and Natural History Museum were established, Professor Worthen being placed in charge as curator. He was the author of various valuable scientific papers and member of numerous scientific societies in this country and in Europe.

WORTHINGTON, Nicholas Ellsworth, ex-Congressman, was born in Brooke County, W. Va., March 30, 1836, and completed his education at Allegheny College, Pa., studied Law at Morgantown, Va., and was admitted to the bar in 1860. He is a resident of Peoria, and, by profession, a lawyer; was County Superintendent of Schools of Peoria County from 1868 to 1872, and a member of the State Board of Education from 1869 to 1872. In 1882 he was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, from the Tenth Congressional District, and re-elected in 1884. In 1886 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Philip Sidney Post. He was elected Circuit Judge of the Tenth Judicial District in 1891, and re-elected in 1897. In 1894 he served upon a commission appointed by President Cleveland, to investigate the labor strikes of that year at Chicago.

WRIGHT, John Stephen, manufacturer, was born at Sheffield, Mass., July 16, 1815; came to Chicago in 1832, with his father, who opened a store in that city; in 1837, at his own expense, built the first school building in Chicago; in 1840 established "The Prairie Farmer," which he conducted for many years in the interest of popular education and progressive agriculture. In 1852 he engaged in the manufacture of Atkins' self-raking reaper and mower, was one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union and the Illinois Central Railways, and wrote a volume entitled, "Chicago: Past, Present and Future," published in 1870. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 26, 1874.

WULFF, Henry, ex-State Treasurer, was born in Meldorf, Germany, August 24, 1854; came to Chicago in 1863, and began his political career as a Trustee of the town of Jefferson. In 1866 he was elected County Clerk of Cook County, and re-elected in 1890; in 1894 became the Republican nominee for State Treasurer, receiving, at the November election of that year, the unprecedented plurality of 133,427 votes over his Democratic opponent.

WYANET, a town of Bureau County, at the intersection of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 7 miles southwest of Princeton. Population (1890), 670; (1900), 902.

WYLIE, (Rev.) Samuel, domestic missionary, born in Ireland and came to America in boyhood; was educated at the University of Pennsylvania and the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and ordained in 1818. Soon after this he came west as a domestic missionary and, in 1820, became pastor of a church at Sparta, Ill., where he remained until his death, March 20, 1872, after a pastorate of 52 years. During his pastorate the church sent out a dozen colonies to form new church organizations elsewhere. He is described as able, eloquent and scholarly.

WYMAN, (Col.) John B., soldier, was born in Massachusetts, July 12, 1817, and educated in the schools of that State until 14 years of age, when he became a clerk in a clothing store in his native town of Shrewsbury, later being associated with mercantile establishments in Cincinnati, and again in his native State. From 1846 to 1850 he was employed successively as a clerk in the car and machine shops at Springfield, Mass., then as Superintendent of Construction, and, later, as conductor on the New York & New Haven Railroad, finally, in 1850, becoming Superintendent of the Connecticut River Railroad. In 1852 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, assisting in the survey and construction of the line under Col. R. B. Mason, the Chief Engineer, and finally becoming Assistant Superintendent of the Northern Division. He was one of the original proprietors of the town of Amboy, in Lee County, and its first Mayor, also serving a second term. Having a fondness for military affairs, he was usually connected with some military organization—while in Cincinnati being attached to a company, of which Prof. O. M. Mitchell, the celebrated astronomer (afterwards Major-General Mitchell), was Captain. After coming to Illinois he became Captain of the Chicago Light Guards. Having left the employ of the Railroad in 1858, he was in private business at Amboy at the beginning of the Civil War in 1861. As Assistant-Adjutant General, by appointment of Governor Yates, he rendered valuable service in the early weeks of the war in securing arms from Jefferson Barracks and in the organization of the three-months' regiments. Then, having organized the Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry—the first organized in the State for the three years' service—he was commissioned its Colonel, and, in July following, entered upon the duty of guarding the railroad lines in Southwest Missouri and Arkansas. The following year his regiment was attached to General Sherman's command in the first campaign against Vicksburg. On the second day of the Battle of Chickasaw Bayou, he fell mortally wounded, dying on the field, Dec. 28, 1862. Colonel Wyman was one of the most accomplished and promising of the volunteer soldiers sent to the field from Illinois, of whom so many were former employes of the Illinois Central Railroad.

WYOMING, a town of Stark County, 31 miles north-northwest from Peoria, at the junction of the Peoria branch Rock Island & Pacific and the Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has two high schools, churches, two banks, flour mills, water-works, machine shop, and two weekly newspapers. Coal is mined here. Pop. (1890), 1,116; (1900), 1,277.

XENIA, a village of Clay County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 87 miles east of St. Louis. Population (1900), 800.

YATES CITY, a village of Knox County, at the junction of the Peoria Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with the Rushville branch, 23 miles southeast of Galesburg. The town has banks, a coal mine, telephone exchange, school, churches and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 687; (1900), 650.

YATES, Henry, pioneer, was born in Caroline County, Va., Oct. 29, 1786—being a grand-nephew of Chief Justice John Marshall; removed to Fayette County, Ky., where he located and laid out the town of Warsaw, which afterwards became the county-seat of Gallatin County. In 1831 he removed to Sangamon County, Ill., and, in 1832, settled at the site of the present town of Berlin, which he laid out the following year, also laying out the town of New Berlin, a few years later, on the line of the Wabash Railway. He was father of Gov. Richard Yates. Died, Sept. 13, 1865.—Henry (Yates), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Berlin, Ill., March 7, 1835; engaged in merchandising at New Berlin; in 1862, raised a company of volunteers for the One Hundred and Sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry, was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and brevetted Colonel and Brigadier-General. He was accidentally shot in 1863, and suffered sun-stroke at Little Rock, from which he never fully recovered. Died, August 3, 1871.

YATES, Richard, former Governor and United States Senator, was born at Warsaw, Ky., Jan. 18, 1815, of English descent. In 1831 he accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling first at Springfield and later at Berlin, Sangamon County. He soon after entered Illinois College, from which he graduated in 1835, and subsequently read law with Col. John J. Hardin, at Jacksonville, which thereafter became his home. In 1842 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Morgan County, and was re-elected in 1844, and again in 1848. In 1850 he was a candidate for Congress from the Seventh District and elected over Maj. Thomas L. Harris, the previous incumbent, being the only Whig Representative in the Thirty-second Congress from Illinois. Two years later he was re-elected over John Calhoun, but was defeated, in 1854, by his old opponent, Harris. He was one of the most vigorous opponents of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill in the Thirty-third Congress, and an early participant in the movement for the organization of the Republican party to resist the further extension of slavery, being a prominent speaker, on the same platform with Lincoln, before the first Republican State Convention held at Bloomington, in May, 1856, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents of that body. In 1860 he was elected to the executive chair on the ticket headed by Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency, and, by his energetic support of the National administration in its measures for the suppression of the Rebellion, won the sobriquet of "the Illinois War-Governor." In 1865 he was elected United States Senator, serving until 1871. He died suddenly, at St. Louis, Nov. 27, 1873, while returning from Arkansas, whither he had gone, as a United States Commissioner, by appointment of President Grant, to inspect a land-subsidy railroad. He was a man of rare ability, earnestness of purpose and extraordinary personal magnetism, as well as of a lofty order of patriotism. His faults were those of a nature generous, impulsive and warm-hearted.

YORKVILLE, the county-seat of Kendall County, on Fox River and Streator Division of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles southwest of Aurora; on interurban electric line; has water-power, electric lights, a bank, churches and weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890) 375; (1900), 413.

YOUNG, Brigham, Mormon leader, was born at Whittingham, Vt., June 1, 1801, joined the Mormons in 1831 and, the next year, became associated with Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, and, in 1835, an "apostle." He accompanied a considerable body of that sect to Independence, Mo., but was driven out with them in 1837, settling for a short time at Quincy, Ill., but later removing to Nauvoo, of which he was one of the founders. On the assassination of Smith, in 1844, he became the successor of the latter, as head of the Mormon Church, and, the following year, headed the exodus from Illinois, which finally resulted in the Mormon settlement in Utah. His subsequent career there, where he was appointed Governor by President Fillmore, and, for a time, successfully defied national authority, is a matter of national rather than State history. He remained at the head of the Mormon Church until his death at Salt Lake City, August 29, 1877.

YOUNG, Richard Montgomery, United States Senator, was born in Kentucky in 1796, studied law and removed to Jonesboro, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar in 1817; served in the Second

General Assembly (1820-22) as Representative from Union County; was a Circuit Judge, 1825-27; Presidential Elector in 1828; Circuit Judge again, 1829-37; elected United States Senator in 1837 as successor to W. L. D. Ewing, serving until 1843, when he was commissioned Justice of the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1847 to become Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington. During the session of 1850-51, he served as Clerk of the National House of Representatives. Died, in an insane asylum, in Washington, in 1853.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, first permanently organized at Chicago, in 1858, although desultory movements of a kindred character had previously been started at Peoria, Quincy, Chicago and Springfield, some as early as 1854. From 1858 to 1872, various associations were formed at different points throughout the State, which were entirely independent of each other. The first effort looking to union and mutual aid, was made in 1872, when Robert Weidensall, on behalf of the International Committee, called a convention, to meet at Bloomington, November 6-9. State conventions have been held annually since 1872. In that of 1875, steps were taken looking to the appointment of a State Secretary, and, in 1876, Charles M. Morton assumed the office. Much evangelistic work was done, and new associations formed, the total number reported at the Champaign Convention, in 1877, being sixty-two. After one year's work Mr. Morton resigned the secretaryship, the office remaining vacant for three years. The question of the appointment of a successor was discussed at the Decatur Convention in 1879, and, in April, 1880, I. B. Brown was made State Secretary, and has occupied the position to the present time (1899). At the date of his appointment the official figures showed sixteen associations in Illinois, with a total membership of 2,443, and property valued at $126,500, including building funds, the associations at Chicago and Aurora owning buildings. Thirteen officers were employed, none of them being in Chicago. Since 1880 the work has steadily grown, so that five Assistant State Secretaries are now employed. In 1886, a plan for arranging the State work under departmental administration was devised, but not put in operation until 1890. The present six departments of supervision are: General Supervision, in charge of the State Secretary and his Assistants; railroad and city work; counties and towns; work among students; corresponding membership department, and office work. The two last named are under one executive head, but each of the others in charge of an Assistant Secretary, who is responsible for its development. The entire work is under the supervision of a State Executive Committee of twenty-seven members, one-third of whom are elected annually. Willis H. Herrick of Chicago has been its chairman for several years. This body is appointed by a State convention composed of delegates from the local Associations. Of these there were, in October, 1898, 116, with a membership of 15,888. The value of the property owned was $2,500,000. Twenty-two occupy their own buildings, of which five are for railroad men and one for students. Weekly gatherings for young men numbered 248, and there are now representatives or correspondents in 665 communities where no organization has been effected. Scientific physical culture is made a feature by 40 associations, and educational work has been largely developed. The enrollment in evening classes, during 1898-99, was 978. The building of the Chicago branch (erected in 1893) is the finest of its class in the world. Recently a successful association has been formed among coal miners, and another among the first grade boys of the Illinois State Reformatory, while an extensive work has been conducted at the camps of the Illinois National Guard.

ZANE, Charles S., lawyer and jurist, was born in Cumberland County, N. J., March 2, 1831, of English and New England stock. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Sangamon County, Ill., for a time working on a farm and at brick-making. From 1852 to '55 he attended McKendree College, but did not graduate, and, on leaving college, engaged in teaching, at the same time reading law. In 1857 he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice at Springfield. The following year he was elected City Attorney. He had for partners, at different times, William H. Herndon (once a partner of Abraham Lincoln) and Senator Shelby M. Cullom. In 1873 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court for the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and was re-elected in 1879. In 1883 President Arthur appointed him Chief Justice of Utah, where he has since resided, though superseded by the appointment of a successor by President Cleveland. At the first State election in Utah, held in November, 1895, he was chosen one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the new Commonwealth, but was defeated for re-election, by his Democratic opponent, in 1898.

SUPPLEMENT.

The following matter, received too late for insertion in the body of this work, is added in the form of a supplement.

COGHLAN, (Capt.) Joseph Bullock, naval officer, was born in Kentucky, and, at the age of 15 years, came to Illinois, living on a farm for a time near Carlyle, in Clinton County. In 1860 he was appointed by his uncle, Hon. Philip B. Fouke—then a Representative in Congress from the Belleville District—to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, graduating in 1863, and being promoted through the successive grades of Ensign, Master, Lieutenant, Lieutenant-Commander, and Commander, and serving upon various vessels until Nov. 18, 1893, when he was commissioned Captain and, in 1897, assigned to the command of the battleship Raleigh, on the Asiatic Station. He was thus connected with Admiral Dewey's squadron at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, and took a conspicuous and brilliant part in the affair in Manila Bay, on May 1, 1898, which resulted in the destruction of the Spanish fleet. Captain Coghlan's connection with subsequent events in the Philippines was in the highest degree creditable to himself and the country. His vessel (the Raleigh) was the first of Admiral Dewey's squadron to return home, coming by way of the Suez Canal, in the summer of 1899, he and his crew receiving an immense ovation on their arrival in New York harbor.

CRANE, (Rev.) James Lyons, clergyman, army chaplain, was born at Mt. Eaton, Wayne County, Ohio, August 30, 1823, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Cincinnati in 1841, and, coming to Edgar County, Illinois, in 1842, attended a seminary at Paris some three years. He joined the Illinois Conference in 1846, and was assigned to the Danville circuit, afterwards presiding over charges at Grandview, Hillsboro, Alton, Jacksonville, and Springfield—at the last two points being stationed two or more times, besides serving as Presiding Elder of the Paris, Danville, and Springfield Districts. The importance of the stations which he filled during his itinerant career served as evidence of his recognized ability and popularity as a preacher.

In July, 1861, he was appointed Chaplain of the Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at that time commanded by Ulysses S. Grant as Colonel, and, although he remained with the regiment only a few months, the friendship then established between him and the future commander of the armies of the Union lasted through their lives. This was shown by his appointment by President Grant, in 1869, to the position of Postmaster of the city of Springfield, which came to him as a personal compliment, being re-appointed four years afterwards and continuing in office eight years. After retiring from the Springfield postoffice, he occupied charges at Island Grove and Shelbyville, his death occurring at the latter place, July 29, 1879, as the result of an attack of paralysis some two weeks previous. Mr. Crane was married in 1847 to Miss Elizabeth Mayo, daughter of Col. J. Mayo—a prominent citizen of Edgar County, at an early day—his wife surviving him some twenty years. Rev. Charles A. Crane and Rev. Frank Crane, pastors of prominent Methodist churches in Boston and Chicago, are sons of the subject of this sketch.

DAWES, Charles Gates, Comptroller of the Treasury, was born at Marietta, Ohio, August 27, 1865; graduated from Marietta College in 1884, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1886; worked at civil engineering during his vacations, finally becoming Chief Engineer of the Toledo & Ohio Railroad. Between 1887 and 1894 he was engaged in the practice of law at Lincoln, Neb., but afterwards became interested in the gas business in various cities, including Evanston, Ill., which became his home. In 1896 he took a leading part in securing instructions by the Republican State Convention at Springfield in favor of the nomination of Mr. McKinley for the Presidency, and during the succeeding campaign served as a member of the National Republican Committee for the State of Illinois. Soon after the accession of President McKinley, he was appointed Comptroller of the Treasury, a position which he now holds. Mr. Dawes is the son of R. B. Dawes, a former Congressman from Ohio, and the great-grandson of Manasseh Cutler, who was an influential factor in the early history of the Northwest Territory, and has been credited with exerting a strong influence in shaping and securing the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787.

DISTIN, (Col.) William L., former Department Commander of Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 9, 1843, his father being of English descent, while his maternal grandfather was a Colonel of the Polish Lancers in the army of the first Napoleon, who, after the exile of his leader, came to America, settling in Indiana. The father of the subject of this sketch settled at Keokuk, Iowa, where the son grew to manhood and in February, 1863, enlisted as a private in the Seventeenth Iowa Infantry, having been twice rejected previously on account of physical ailment. Soon after enlistment he was detailed for provost-marshal duty, but later took part with his regiment in the campaign in Alabama. He served for a time in the Fifteenth Army Corps, under Gen. John A. Logan, was subsequently detailed for duty on the Staff of General Raum, and participated in the battles of Resaca and Tilton, Ga. Having been captured in the latter, he was imprisoned successively at Jacksonville (Ga.), Montgomery, Savannah, and finally at Andersonville. From the latter he succeeded in effecting his escape, but was recaptured and returned to that famous prison-pen. Having escaped a second time by assuming the name of a dead man and bribing the guard, he was again captured and imprisoned at various points in Mississippi until exchanged about the time of the assassination of President Lincoln. He was then so weakened by his long confinement and scanty fare that he had to be carried on board the steamer on a stretcher. At this time he narrowly escaped being on board the steamer Sultana, which was blown up below Cairo, with 2,100 soldiers on board, a large proportion of whom lost their lives. After being mustered out at Davenport, Iowa, June 28, 1865, he was employed for a time on the Des Moines Valley Railroad, and as a messenger and route agent of the United States Express Company. In 1872 he established himself in business in Quincy, Ill., in which he proved very successful. Here he became prominent in local Grand Army circles, and, in 1890, was unanimously elected Commander of the Department of Illinois. Previous to this he had been an officer of the Illinois National Guard, and served as Aid-de-Camp, with the rank of Colonel, on the staff of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer. In 1897 Colonel Distin was appointed by President McKinley Surveyor-General for the Territory of Alaska, a position which (1899) he still holds.

DUMMER, Henry E., lawyer, was born at Hallowell, Maine, April 9, 1808, was educated in Bowdoin College, graduating there in the class of 1827, after which he took a course in law at Cambridge Law School, and was soon after admitted to the bar. Then, having spent some two years in his native State, in 1832 he removed to Illinois, settling first in Springfield, where he remained six years, being for a part of the time a partner of John T. Stuart, who afterwards became the first partner in law of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Dummer had a brother, Richard William Dummer, who had preceded him to Illinois, living for a time in Jacksonville. In 1838 he removed to Beardstown, Cass County, which continued to be his home for more than a quarter of a century. During his residence there he served as Alderman, City Attorney and Judge of Probate for Cass County; also represented Cass County in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and, in 1860, was elected State Senator in the Twenty-second General Assembly, serving four years. Mr. Dummer was an earnest Republican, and served that party as a delegate for the State-at-large to the Convention of 1864, at Baltimore, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency a second time. In 1864 he removed to Jacksonville, and for the next year was the law partner of David A. Smith, until the death of the latter in 1865. In the summer of 1878 Mr. Dummer went to Mackinac, Mich., in search of health, but died there August 12 of that year.

ECKELS, James H., ex-Comptroller of the Currency, was born of Scotch-Irish parentage at Princeton, Ill., Nov. 22, 1858, was educated in the common schools and the high school of his native town, graduated from the Law School at Albany, N. Y., in 1881, and the following year began practice at Ottawa, Ill. Here he continued in active practice until 1893, when he was appointed by President Cleveland Comptroller of the Currency, serving until May 1, 1898, when he resigned to accept the presidency of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago. Mr. Eckels manifested such distinguished ability in the discharge of his duties as Comptroller that he received the notable compliment of being retained in office by a Republican administration more than a year after the retirement of President Cleveland, while his selection for a place at the head of one of the leading banking institutions of Chicago was a no less marked recognition of his abilities as a financier. He was a Delegate from the Eleventh District to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in 1892, and represented the same district in the Gold Democratic Convention at Indianapolis in 1896, and assisted in framing the platform there adopted—which indicated his views on the financial questions involved in the campaign of that year.

FIELD, Daniel, early merchant, was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, Nov. 30, 1790, and settled at Golconda, Ill., in 1818, dying there in 1855. He was a man of great enterprise, engaged in merchandising, and became a large landholder, farmer and stock-grower, and an extensive shipper of stock and produce to lower Mississippi markets. He married Elizabeth Dailey of Charleston, Ind., and raised a large family of children, one of whom, Philip D., became Sheriff, while another, John, was County Judge of Pope County. His daughter, Maria, married Gen. Green B. Raum, who became prominent as a soldier during the Civil War and, later, as a member of Congress and Commissioner of Internal Revenue and Pension Commissioner in Washington.

FIELD, Green B., member of a pioneer family, was born within the present limits of the State of Indiana in 1787, served as a Lieutenant in the War of 1812, was married in Bourbon County, Kentucky, to Miss Mary E. Cogswell, the daughter of Dr. Joseph Cogswell, a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and, in 1817, removed to Pope County, Illinois, where he laid off the town of Golconda, which became the county-seat. He served as a Representative from Pope County in the First General Assembly (1818-20), and was the father of Juliet C. Field, who became the wife of John Raum; of Edna Field, the wife of Dr. Tarlton Dunn, and of Green B. Field, who was a Lieutenant in Third Regiment Illinois Volunteers during the Mexican War. Mr. Field was the grandfather of Gen. Green B. Raum, mentioned in the preceding paragraph. He died of yellow fever in Louisiana in 1823.

GALE, Stephen Francis, first Chicago bookseller and a railway promoter, was born at Exeter, N. H., March 8, 1812; at 15 years of age became clerk in a leading book-store in Boston; came to Chicago in 1835, and soon afterwards opened the first book and stationery establishment in that city, which, in after years, gained an extensive trade. In 1842 the firm of S. F.

Gale & Co. was organized, but Mr. Gale, having become head of the Chicago Fire Department, retired from business in 1845. As early as 1846 he was associated with Wm. B. Ogden and John B. Turner in the steps then being taken to revive the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and, in conjunction with these gentlemen, became responsible for the means to purchase the charter and assets of the road from the Eastern bondholders. Later, he engaged in the construction of the branch road from Turner Junction to Aurora, became President of the line and extended it to Mendota to connect with the Illinois Central at that Point. These roads afterwards became a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line. A number of years ago Mr. Gale returned to his old home in New Hampshire, where he has since resided.

HAY, John, early settler, came to the region of Kaskaskia between 1790 and 1800, and became a prominent citizen of St. Clair County. He was selected as a member of the First Legislative Council of Indiana Territory for St. Clair County in 1805. In 1809 he was appointed Clerk of the Common Pleas Court of St. Clair County, and was continued in office after the organization of the State Government, serving until his death at Belleville in 1845.

HAYS, John, pioneer settler of Northwest Territory, was a native of New York, who came to Cahokia, in the "Illinois Country," in 1793, and lived there the remainder of his life. His early life had been spent in the fur-trade about Mackinac, in the Lake of the Woods region and about the sources of the Mississippi. During the War of 1812 he was able to furnish Governor Edwards valuable information in reference to the Indians in the Northwest. He filled the office of Postmaster at Cahokia for a number of years, and was Sheriff of St. Clair County from 1798 to 1818.

MOULTON, (Col.) George M., soldier and building contractor, was born at Readsburg, Vt., March 15, 1851, came early in life to Chicago, and was educated in the schools of that city. By profession he is a contractor and builder, the firm of which he is a member having been connected with the construction of a number of large buildings, including some extensive grain elevators. Colonel Moulton became a member of the Second Regiment Illinois National Guard in June, 1884, being elected to the office of Major, which he retained until January, 1893, when he was appointed Inspector of Rifle Practice on the staff of General Wheeler. A year later he was commissioned Colonel of the regiment, a position which he occupied at the time of the call by the President for troops to serve in the Spanish-American War in April, 1898. He promptly answered the call, and was sworn into the United States service at the head of his regiment early in May. The regiment was almost immediately ordered to Jacksonville, Fla., remaining there and at Savannah, Ga., until early in December, when it was transferred to Havana, Cuba. Here he was soon after appointed Chief of Police for the city of Havana, remaining in office until the middle of January, 1899, when he returned to his regiment, then stationed at Camp Columbia, near the city of Havana. In the latter part of March he returned with his regiment to Augusta, Ga., where it was mustered out, April 26, 1899, one year from the date of its arrival at Springfield. After leaving the service Colonel Monlton resumed his business as a contractor.

SHERMAN, Lawrence V., legislator and Speaker of the Forty-first General Assembly, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Nov. 6, 1858; at 3 years of age came to Illinois, his parents settling at Industry, McDonough County. When he had reached the age of 10 years he went to Jasper County, where he grew to manhood, received his education in the common schools and in the law department of McKendree College, graduating from the latter, and, in 1881, located at Macomb, McDonough County. Here he began his career by driving a team upon the street in order to accumulate means enabling him to devote his entire attention to his chosen profession of law. He soon took an active interest in politics, was elected County Judge in 1886, and, at the expiration of his term, formed a partnership with George D. Tunncliffe and D. G. Tunncliffe, ex-Justice of the Supreme Court. In 1894 he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative in the General Assembly, but withdrew to prevent a split in the party; was nominated and elected in 1896, and re-elected in 1898, and, at the succeeding session of the Forty-first General Assembly, was nominated by the Republican caucus and elected Speaker, as he was again of the Forty-second in 1901.

VINYARD, Philip, early legislator, was born in Pennsylvania in 1800, came to Illinois at an early day, and settled in Pope County, which he represented in the lower branch of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth General Assemblies. He married Miss Matilda McCoy, the daughter of a prominent Illinois pioneer, and served as Sheriff of Pope County for a number of years. Died, at Golconda, in 1862.

SUPPLEMENT NO. II.

BLACK HAWK WAR, THE. The episode known in history under the name of "The Black Hawk War," was the most formidable conflict between the whites and Indians, as well as the most far-reaching in its results, that ever occurred upon the soil of Illinois. It takes its name from the Indian Chief, of the Sac tribe, Black Hawk (Indian name, Makatai Meshekiakiak, meaning "Black Sparrow Hawk"), who was the leader of the hostile Indian band and a principal factor in the struggle. Black Hawk had been an ally of the British during the War of 1812-15, served with Tecumseh when the latter fell at the battle of the Thames in 1813, and, after the war, continued to maintain friendly relations with his "British father." The outbreak in Illinois had its origin in the construction put upon the treaty negotiated by Gen. William Henry Harrison with the Sac and Fox Indians on behalf of the United States Government, November 3, 1804, under which the Indians transferred to the Government nearly 15,000,000 acres of land comprising the region lying between the Wisconsin River on the north, Fox River of Illinois on the east and southeast, and the Mississippi on the west, for which the Government agreed to pay to the confederated tribes less than $2,500 in goods and the insignificant sum of $1,000 per annum in perpetuity. While the validity of the treaty was denied on the part of the Indians on the ground that it had originally been entered into by their chiefs under duress, while held as prisoners under a charge of murder at Jefferson Barracks, during which they had been kept in a state of constant intoxication, it had been repeatedly reaffirmed by parts or all of the tribe, especially in 1815, in 1816, in 1822 and in 1823, and finally recognized by Black Hawk himself in 1831. The part of the treaty of 1804 which was the immediate cause of the disagreement was that which stipulated that, so long as the lands ceded under it remained the property of the United States (that is, should not be transferred to private owners), "the Indians belonging to the said tribes shall enjoy the privilege of living or hunting upon them." Although these lands had not been put upon the market, or even surveyed, as "squatters" multiplied in this region little respect was paid to the treaty rights of the Indians, particularly with reference to those localities where, by reason of fertility of the soil or some other natural advantage, the Indians had established something like permanent homes and introduced a sort of crude cultivation. This was especially the case with reference to the Sac village of "Saukenuk" on the north bank of Rock River near its mouth, where the Indians, when not absent on the chase, had lived for over a century, had cultivated fields of corn and vegetables and had buried their dead. In the early part of the last century, it is estimated that some five hundred families had been accustomed to congregate here, making it the largest Indian village in the West. As early as 1823 the encroachments of squatters on the rights claimed by the Indians under the treaty of 1804 began; their fields were taken possession of by the intruders, their lodges burned and their women and children whipped and driven away during the absence of the men on their annual hunts. The dangers resulting from these conflicts led Governor Edwards, as early as 1828, to demand of the General Government the expulsion of the Indians from Illinois, which resulted in an order from President Jackson in 1829 for their removal west of the Mississippi. On application of Col. George Davenport, a trader of much influence with the Indians, the time was extended to April 1, 1830. During the preceding year Colonel Davenport and the firm of Davenport and Farnham bought from the United States Government most of the lands on Rock River occupied by Black Hawk's band, with the intention, as has been claimed, of permitting the Indians to remain. This was not so understood by Black Hawk, who was greatly incensed, although Davenport offered to take other lands from the Government in exchange or cancel the sale—an arrangement to which President Jackson would not consent. On their return in the spring of 1830, the Indians found whites in possession of their village. Prevented from cultivating their fields, and their annual hunt proving unsuccessful, the following winter proved for them one of great hardship. Black Hawk, having made a visit to his "British father" (the British Agent) at Malden, Canada, claimed to have received words of sympathy and encouragement, which induced him to determine to regain possession of their fields. In this he was encouraged by Neapope, his second in command, and by assurance of support from White Cloud, a half Sac and half Winnebago—known also as "The Prophet"—whose village (Prophet's Town) was some forty miles from the mouth of Rock River, and through whom Black Hawk claimed to have received promises of aid in guns, ammunition and provisions from the British. The reappearance of Black Hawk's band in the vicinity of his old haunts, in the spring of 1831, produced a wild panic among the frontier settlers. Messages were hurried to Governor Reynolds, who had succeeded Governor Edwards in December previous, appealing for protection against the savages. The Governor issued a call for 700 volunteers "to remove the band of Sac Indians" at Rock Island beyond the Mississippi. Although Gen. E. P. Gaines of the regular army, commanding the military district, thought the regulars sufficiently strong to cope with the situation, the Governor's proclamation was responded to by more than twice the number called for. The volunteers assembled early in June, 1831, at Beardstown, the place of rendezvous named in the call, and having been organized into two regiments under command of Col. James D. Henry and Col. Daniel Lieb, with a spy battalion under Gen. Joseph Duncan, marched across the country and, after effecting a junction with General Gaines' regulars, appeared before Black Hawk's village on the 25th of June. In the meantime General Gaines, having learned that the Pottawatomies, Winnebagos and Kickapoos had promised to join the Sacs in their uprising, asked the assistance of the battalion of mounted men previously offered by Governor Reynolds. The combined armies amounted to 2,500 men, while the fighting force of the Indians was 300. Finding himself overwhelmingly outnumbered, Black Hawk withdrew under cover of night to the west side of the Mississippi. After burning the village, General Gaines notified Black Hawk of his intention to pursue and attack his band, which had the effect to bring the fugitive chief to the General's headquarters, where, on June 30, a new treaty was entered into by which he bound himself and his people to remain west of the Mississippi unless permitted to return by the United States. This ended the campaign, and the volunteers returned to their homes, although the affair had produced an intense excitement along the whole frontier, and involved a heavy expense.

The next winter was spent by Black Hawk and his band on the site of old Fort Madison, in the present State of Iowa. Dissatisfied and humiliated by his repulse of the previous year, in disregard of his pledge to General Gaines, on April 6, 1832, at the head of 500 warriors and their families, he again crossed the Mississippi at Yellow Banks about the site of the present city of Quawwka, fifty miles below Rock Island, with the intention, as claimed, if not permitted to stop at his old village, to proceed to the Prophet's Town and raise a crop with the Winnebagoes. Here he was met by The Prophet with renewed assurances of aid from the Winnebagoes, which was still further strengthened by promises from the British Agent received through a visit by Neapope to Malden the previous autumn. An incident of this invasion was the effective warning given to the white settlers by Shabona, a friendly Ottawa chief, which probably had the effect to prevent a widespread massacre. Besides the towns of Galena and Chicago, the settlements in Illinois north of Fort Clark (Peoria) were limited to some thirty families on Bureau Creek with a few cabins at Hennepin, Peru, LaSalle, Ottawa, Indian Creek, Dixon, Kellogg's Grove, Apple Creek, and a few other points. Gen. Henry Atkinson, commanding the regulars at Fort Armstrong (Rock Island), having learned of the arrival of Black Hawk a week after he crossed the Mississippi, at once took steps to notify Governor Reynolds of the situation with a requisition for an adequate force of militia to cooperate with the regulars. Under date of April 16, 1832, the Governor issued his call for "a strong detachment of militia," to meet by April 22, Beardstown again being named as a place of rendezvous. The call resulted in the assembling of a force which was organized into four regiments under command of Cols. John DeWitt, Jacob Fry, John Thomas and Samuel M. Thompson, together with a spy battalion under Maj. James D. Henry, an odd battalion under Maj. Thomas James and a foot battalion under Maj. Thomas Long. To these were subsequently added two independent battalions of mounted men, under command of Majors Isaiah Stillman and David Bailey, which were finally consolidated as the Fifth Regiment under command of Col. James Johnson. The organization of the first four regiments at Beardstown was completed by April 27, and the force under command of Brigadier-General Whiteside (but accompanied by Governor Reynolds, who was allowed pay as Major General by the General Government) began its march to Fort Armstrong, arriving there May 7 and being mustered into the United States service. Among others accompanying the expedition who were then, or afterwards became, noted citizens of the State, were Vital Jarrot, Adjutant-General; Cyrus Edwards, Ordnance Officer; Murray McConnel, Staff Officer, and Abraham Lincoln, Captain of a company of volunteers from Sangamon County in the Fourth Regiment. Col. Zachary Taylor, then commander of a regiment of regulars, arrived at Fort Armstrong about the same time with reinforcements from Fort Leavenworth and Fort Crawford. The total force of militia amounted to 1,935 men, and of regulars about 1,000. An interesting story is told concerning a speech delivered to the volunteers by Colonel Taylor about this time. After reminding them of their duty to obey an order promptly, the future hero of the Mexican War added: "The safety of all depends upon the obedience and courage of all. You are citizen soldiers; some of you may fill high offices, or even be Presidents some day—but not if you refuse to do your duty. Forward, march!" A curious commentary upon this speech is furnished in the fact that, while Taylor himself afterwards became President, at least one of his hearers—a volunteer who probably then had no aspiration to that distinction (Abraham Lincoln)—reached the same position during the most dramatic period in the nation's history.

Two days after the arrival at Fort Armstrong, the advance up Rock River began, the main force of the volunteers proceeding by land under General Whiteside, while General Atkinson, with 400 regular and 300 volunteer foot soldiers, proceeded by boat, carrying with him the artillery, provisions and bulk of the baggage. Whiteside, advancing by the east bank of the river, was the first to arrive at the Prophet's Town, which, finding deserted, he pushed on to Dixon's Ferry (now Dixon), where he arrived May 12. Here he found the independent battalions of Stillman and Bailey with ammunition and supplies of which Whiteside stood in need. The mounted battalions under command of Major Stillman, having been sent forward by Whiteside as a scouting party, left Dixon on the 13th and, on the afternoon of the next day, went into camp in a strong position near the mouth of Sycamore Creek. As soon discovered, Black Hawk was in camp at the same time, as he afterwards claimed, with about forty of his braves, on Sycamore Creek, three miles distant, while the greater part of his band were encamped with the more war-like faction of the Pottawatomies some seven miles farther north on the Kishwaukee River. As claimed by Black Hawk in his autobiography, having been disappointed in his expectation of forming an alliance with the Winnebagoes and the Pottawatomies, he had at this juncture determined to return to the west side of the Mississippi. Hearing of the arrival of Stillman's command in the vicinity, and taking it for granted that this was the whole of Atkinson's command, he sent out three of his young men with a white flag, to arrange a parley and convey to Atkinson his offer to meet the latter in council. These were captured by some of Stillman's band regardless of their flag of truce, while a party of five other braves who followed to observe the treatment received by the flagbearers, were attacked and two of their number killed, the other three escaping to their camp. Black Hawk learning the fate of his truce party was aroused to the fiercest indignation. Tearing the flag to pieces with which he had intended to go into council with the whites, and appealing to his followers to avenge the murder of their comrades, he prepared for the attack. The rangers numbered 275 men, while Black Hawk's band has been estimated at less than forty. As the rangers caught sight of the Indians, they rushed forward in pell-mell fashion. Retiring behind a fringe of bushes, the Indians awaited the attack. As the rangers approached, Black Hawk and his party rose up with a war whoop, at the same time opening fire on their assailants. The further history of the affair was as much of a disgrace to Stillman's command as had been their desecration of the flag of truce. Thrown into panic by their reception by Black Hawk's little band, the rangers turned and, without firing a shot, began the retreat, dashing through their own camp and abandoning everything, which fell into the hands of the Indians. An attempt was made by one or two officers and a few of their men to check the retreat, but without success, the bulk of the fugitives continuing their mad rush for safety through the night until they reached Dixon, twenty-five miles distant, while many never stopped until they reached their homes, forty or fifty miles distant. The casualties to the rangers amounted to eleven killed and two wounded, while the Indian loss consisted of two spies and one of the flag-bearers, treacherously killed near Stillman's camp. 'His ill-starred affair, which has passed into history as "Stillman's defeat," produced a general panic along the frontier by inducing an exaggerated estimate of the strength of the Indian force, while it led Black Hawk to form a poor opinion of the courage of the white troops at the same time that it led to an exalted estimate of the prowess of his own little band—thus becoming an important factor in prolonging the war and in the bloody massacres which followed. Whiteside, with his force of 1,400 men, advanced to the scene of the defeat the next day and buried the dead, while on the 19th, Atkinson, with his force of regulars, proceeded up Rock River, leaving the remnant of Stillman's force to guard the wounded and supplies at Dixon. No sooner had he left than the demoralized fugitives of a few days before deserted their post for their homes, compelling Atkinson to return for the protection of his base of supplies, while Whiteside was ordered to follow the trail of Black Hawk who had started up the Kishwaukee for the swamps about Lake Koshkonong, nearly west of Milwaukee within the present State of Wisconsin.

At this point the really active stage of the campaign began. Black Hawk, leaving the women and children of his band in the fastnesses of the swamps, divided his followers into two bands, retaining about 200 under his own command, while the notorious half-breed, Mike Girty, led a band of one hundred renegade Pottawatomies. Returning to the vicinity of Rock Island, he gathered some recruits from the Pottawatomies and Winnebagoes, and the work of rapine and massacre among the frontier settlers began. One of the most notable of these was the Indian Creek Massacre in LaSalle County, about twelve miles north of Ottawa, on May 21, when sixteen persons were killed at the Home of William Davis, and two young girls—Sylvia and Rachel Hall, aged, respectively, 17 and 15 years—were carried away captives. The girls were subsequently released, having been ransomed for $2,000 in horses and trinkets through a Winnebago Chief and surrendered to sub-agent Henry Gratiot. Great as was the emergency at this juncture, the volunteers began to manifest evidence of dissatisfaction and, claiming that they had served out their term of enlistment, refused to follow the Indians into the swamps of Wisconsin. As the result of a council of war, the volunteers were ordered to Ottawa, where they were mustered out on May 28, by Lieut. Robt. Anderson, afterwards General Anderson of Fort Sumter fame. Meanwhile Governor Reynolds had issued his call (with that of 1831 the third,) for 2,000 men to serve during the war. Gen. Winfield Scott was also ordered from the East with 1,000 regulars although, owing to cholera breaking out among the troops, they did not arrive in time to take part in the campaign. The rank and file of volunteers responding under the new call was 3,148, with recruits and regulars then in Illinois making an army of 4,000. Pending the arrival of the troops under the new call, and to meet an immediate emergency, 300 men were enlisted from the disbanded rangers for a period of twenty days, and organized into a regiment under command of Col. Jacob Fry, with James D. Henry as Lieutenant Colonel and John Thomas as Major. Among those who enlisted as privates in this regiment were Brig.-Gen. Whiteside and Capt. Abraham Lincoln. A regiment of five companies, numbering 195 men, from Putnam County under command of Col. John Strawn, and another of eight companies from Vermilion County under Col. Isaac R. Moore, were organized and assigned to guard duty for a period of twenty days.

The new volunteers were rendezvoused at Fort Wilbourn, nearly opposite Peru, June 15, and organized into three brigades, each consisting of three regiments and a spy battalion. The First Brigade (915 strong) was placed under command of Brig.-Gen. Alexander Posey, the Second under Gen. Milton K. Alexander, and the third under Gen. James D. Henry. Others who served as officers in some of these several organizations, and afterwards became prominent in State history, were Lieut.-Col. Gurdon S. Hubbard of the Vermilion County regiment; John A. McClernand, on the staff of General Posey; Maj. John Dement; then State Treasurer; Stinson H. Anderson, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor; Lieut.-Gov. Zadoc Casey; Maj., William McHenry; Sidney Breese (afterwards Judge of the State Supreme Court and United States Senator); W. L. D. Ewing (as Major of a spy battalion, afterwards United States Senator and State Auditor); Alexander W. Jenkins (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor); James W. Semple (afterwards United States Senator); and William Weatherford (afterwards a Colonel in the Mexican War), and many more. Of the Illinois troops, Posey's brigade was assigned to the duty of dispersing the Indians between Galena and Rock River, Alexander's sent to intercept Black Hawk up the Rock River, while Henry's remained with Gen. Atkinson at Dixon. During the next two weeks engagements of a more or less serious character were had on the Pecatonica on the southern border of the present State of Wisconsin; at Apple River Fort fourteen miles east of Galena, which was successfully defended against a force under Black Hawk himself, and at Kellogg's Grove the next day (June 25), when the same band ambushed Maj. Dement's spy battalion, and came near inflicting a defeat, which was prevented by Dement's coolness and the timely arrival of reinforcements. In the latter engagement the whites lost five killed besides 47 horses which had been tethered outside their lines, the loss of the Indians being sixteen killed. Skirmishes also occurred with varying results, at Plum River Fort, Burr Oak Grove, Sinsiniwa and Blue Mounds—the last two within the present State of Wisconsin.

Believing the bulk of the Indians to be camped in the vicinity of Lake Koshkonong, General Atkinson left Dixon June 27 with a combined force of regulars and volunteers numbering 2,600 men—the volunteers being under the command of General Henry. They reached the outlet of the Lake July 2, but found no Indians, being joined two days later by General Alexander's brigade, and on the 6th by Gen. Posey's. From here the commands of Generals Henry and Alexander were sent for supplies to Fort Winnebago, at the Portage of the Wisconsin; Colonel Ewing, with the Second Regiment of Posey's brigade descending Rock River to Dixon, Posey with the remainder, going to Fort Hamilton for the protection of settlers in the lead-mining region, while Atkinson, advancing with the regulars up Lake Koshkonong, began the erection of temporary fortifications on Bark River near the site of the present village of Fort Atkinson. At Fort Winnebago Alexander and Henry obtained evidence of the actual location of Black Hawk's camp through Pierre Poquette, a half-breed scout and trader in the employ of the American Fur Company, whom they employed with a number of Winnebagoes to act as guides. From this point Alexander's command returned to General Atkinson's headquarters, carrying with them twelve day's provisions for the main army, while General Henry's (600 strong), with Major Dodge's battalion numbering 150, with an equal quantity of supplies for themselves, started under the guidance of Poquette and his Winnebago aids to find Black Hawk's camp. Arriving on the 18th at the Winnebago village on Rock River where Black Hawk and his band had been located, their camp was found deserted, the Winnebagos insisting that they had gone to Cranberry (now Horicon) Lake, a half-day's march up the river. Messengers were immediately dispatched to Atkinson's headquarters, thirty-five miles distant, to apprise him of this fact. When they had proceeded about half the distance, they struck a broad, fresh trail, which proved to be that of Black Hawk's band headed westward toward the Mississippi. The guide having deserted them in order to warn his tribesmen that further dissembling to deceive the whites as to the whereabouts of the Sacs was useless, the messengers were compelled to follow him to General Henry's camp. The discovery produced the wildest enthusiasm among the volunteers, and from this time events followed in rapid succession. Leaving as far as possible all incumbrances behind, the pursuit of the fugitives was begun without delay, the troops wading through swamps sometimes in water to their armpits. Soon evidence of the character of the flight the Indians were making, in the shape of exhausted horses, blankets, and camp equipage cast aside along the trail, began to appear, and straggling bands of Winnebagos, who had now begun to desert Black Hawk, gave information that the Indians were only a few miles in advance. On the evening of the 20th of July Henry's forces encamped at "The Four Lakes," the present site of the city of Madison, Wis., Black Hawk's force lying in ambush the same night seven or eight miles distant. During the next afternoon the rear-guard of the Indians under Neapope was overtaken and skirmishing continued until the bluffs of the Wisconsin were reached. Black Hawk's avowed object was to protect the passage of the main body of his people across the stream. The loss of the Indians in these skirmishes has been estimated at 40 to 68, while Black Hawk claimed that it was only six killed, the loss of the whites being one killed and eight wounded. During the night Black Hawk succeeded in placing a considerable number of the women and children and old men on a raft and in canoes obtained from the Winnebagos, and sent them down the river, believing that, as non-combatants, they would be permitted by the regulars to pass Fort Crawford, at the mouth of the Wisconsin, undisturbed. In this he was mistaken. A force sent from the fort under Colonel Ritner to intercept them, fired mercilessly upon the helpless fugitives, killing fifteen of their number, while about fifty were drowned and thirty-two women and children made prisoners. The remainder, escaping into the woods, with few exceptions died from starvation and exposure, or were massacred by their enemies, the Menominees, acting under white officers. During the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights, a loud, shrill voice of some one speaking in an unknown tongue was heard in the direction where Black Hawk's band was supposed to be. This caused something of a panic in Henry's camp, as it was supposed to come from some one giving orders for an attack. It was afterwards learned that the speaker was Neapope speaking in the Winnebago language in the hope that he might be heard by Poquette and the Winnebago guides. He was describing the helpless condition of his people, claiming that the war had been forced upon them, that their women and children were starving, and that, if permitted peacefully to recross the Mississippi, they would give no further trouble. Unfortunately Poquette and the other guides had left for Fort Winnebago, so that no one was there to translate Neapope's appeal and it failed of its object.

General Henry's force having discovered that the Indians had escaped—Black Hawk heading with the bulk of his warriors towards the Mississippi—spent the next day and night on the field, but on the following day (July 23) started to meet General Atkinson, who had, in the meantime, been notified of the pursuit. The head of their columns met at Blue Mounds, the same evening, a complete junction between the regulars and the volunteers being effected at Helena, a deserted village on the Wisconsin. Here by using the logs of the deserted cabins for rafts, the army crossed the river on the 27th and the 28th and the pursuit of Black Hawk's fugitive band was renewed. Evidence of their famishing condition was found in the trees stripped of bark for food, the carcasses of dead ponies, with here and there the dead body of an Indian.

On August 1, Black Hawk's depleted and famishing band reached the Mississippi two miles below the mouth of the Bad Ax, an insignificant stream, and immediately began trying to cross the river; but having only two or three canoes, the work was slow. About the middle of the afternoon the steam transport, "Warrior," appeared on the scene, having on board a score of regulars and volunteers, returning from a visit to the village of the Sioux Chief, Wabasha, to notify him that his old enemies, the Sacs, were headed in that direction. Black Hawk raised the white flag in token of surrender, but the officer in command claiming that he feared treachery or an ambush, demanded that Black Hawk should come on board. This he was unable to do, as he had no canoe. After waiting a few minutes a murderous fire of canister and musketry was opened from the steamer on the few Indians on shore, who made such feeble resistance as they were able. The result was the killing of one white man and twenty-three Indians. After this exploit the "Warrior" proceeded to Prairie du Chien, twelve or fifteen miles distant, for fuel. During the night a few more of the Indians crossed the river, but Black Hawk, seeing the hopelessness of further resistance, accompanied by the Prophet, and taking with him a party of ten warriors and thirty-five squaws and children, fled in the direction of "the dells" of the Wisconsin. On the morning of the 2d General Atkinson arrived within four or five miles of the Sac position. Disposing his forces with the regulars and Colonel Dodge's rangers in the center, the brigades of Posey and Alexander on the right and Henry's on the left, he began the pursuit, but was drawn by the Indian decoys up the river from the place where the main body of the Indians were trying to cross the stream. This had the effect of leaving General Henry in the rear practically without orders, but it became the means of making his command the prime factors in the climax which followed. Some of the spies attached to Henry's command having accidentally discovered the trail of the main body of the fugitives, he began the pursuit without waiting for orders and soon found himself engaged with some 300 savages, a force nearly equal to his own. It was here that the only thing like a regular battle occurred. The savages fought with the fury of despair, while Henry's force was no doubt nerved to greater deeds of courage by the insult which they conceived had been put upon them by General Atkinson. Atkinson, hearing the battle in progress and discovering that he was being led off on a false scent, soon joined Henry's force with his main army, and the steamer "Warrior," arriving from Prairie du Chien, opened a fire of canister upon the pent-up Indians. The battle soon degenerated into a massacre. In the course of the three hours through which it lasted, it is estimated that 150 Indians were killed by fire from the troops, an equal number of both sexes and all ages drowned while attempting to cross the river or by being driven into it, while about 50 (chiefly women and children) were made prisoners. The loss of the whites was 20 killed and 13 wounded. When the "battle" was nearing its close it is said that Black Hawk, having repented the abandonment of his people, returned within sight of the battle-ground, but seeing the slaughter in progress which he was powerless to avert, he turned and, with a howl of rage and horror, fled into the forest. About 300 Indians (mostly non-combatants) succeeded in crossing the river in a condition of exhaustion from hunger and fatigue, but these were set upon by the Sioux under Chief Wabasha, through the suggestion and agency of General Atkinson, and nearly one-half their number exterminated. Of the remainder many died from wounds and exhaustion, while still others perished while attempting to reach Keokuk's band who had refused to join in Black Hawk's desperate venture. Of one thousand who crossed to the east side of the river with Black Hawk in April, it is estimated that not more than 150 survived the tragic events of the next four months.

General Scott, having arrived at Prairie du Chien early in August, assumed command and, on August 15, mustered out the volunteers at Dixon, Ill. After witnessing the bloody climax at the Bad Axe of his ill-starred invasion, Black Hawk fled to the dells of the Wisconsin, where he and the Prophet surrendered themselves to the Winnebagoes, by whom they were delivered to the Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. Having been taken to Fort Armstrong on September 21, he there signed a treaty of peace. Later he was taken to Jefferson Barracks (near St. Louis) in the custody of Jefferson Davis, then a Lieutenant in the regular army, where he was held a captive during the following winter. The connection of Davis with the Black Hawk War, mentioned by many historians, seems to have been confined to this act. In April, 1833, with the Prophet and Neapope, he was taken to Washington and then to Fortress Monroe, where they were detained as prisoners of war until June 4, when they were released. Black Hawk, after being taken to many principal cities in order to impress him with the strength of the American nation, was brought to Fort Armstrong, and there committed to the guardianship of his rival, Keokuk, but survived this humiliation only a few years, dying on a small reservation set apart for him in Davis County, Iowa, October 3, 1838.

Such is the story of the Black Hawk War, the most notable struggle with the aborigines in Illinois history. At its beginning both the State and national authorities were grossly misled by an exaggerated estimate of the strength of Black Hawk's force as to numbers and his plans for recovering the site of his old village, while

Black Hawk had conceived a low estimate of the numbers and courage of his white enemies, especially after the Stillman defeat. The cost of the war to the State and nation in money has been estimated at $2,000,000, and in sacrifice of life on both sides at not less than 1,200. The loss of life by the troops in irregular skirmishes, and in massacres of settlers by the Indians, aggregated about 250, while an equal number of regulars perished from a visitation of cholera at the various stations within the district affected by the war, especially at Detroit, Chicago, Fort Armstrong and Galena. Yet it is the judgment of later historians that nearly all this sacrifice of life and treasure might have been avoided, but for a series of blunders due to the blind or unscrupulous policy of officials or interloping squatters upon lands which the Indians had occupied under the treaty of 1804. A conspicuous blunder—to call it by no harsher name—was the violation by Stillman's command of the rules of civilized warfare in the attack made upon Black Hawk's messengers, sent under flag of truce to request a conference to settle terms under which he might return to the west side of the Mississippi—an act which resulted in a humiliating and disgraceful defeat for its authors and proved the first step in actual war. Another misfortune was the failure to understand Neapope's appeal for peace and permission for his people to pass beyond the Mississippi the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights; and the third and most inexcusable blunder of all, was the refusal of the officer in command of the "Warrior" to respect Black Hawk's flag of truce and request for a conference just before the bloody massacre which has gone into history under the name of the "battle of the Bad Axe." Either of these events, properly availed of, would have prevented much of the butchery of that bloody episode which has left a stain upon the page of history, although this statement implies no disposition to detract from the patriotism and courage of some of the leading actors upon whom the responsibility was placed of protecting the frontier settler from outrage and massacre. One of the features of the war was the bitter jealousy engendered by the unwise policy pursued by General Atkinson towards some of the volunteers—especially the treatment of General James D. Henry, who, although subjected to repeated slights and insults, is regarded by Governor Ford and others as the real hero of the war. Too brave a soldier to shirk any responsibility and too modest to exploit his own deeds, he felt deeply the studied purpose of his superior to ignore him in the conduct of the campaign—a purpose which, as in the affair at the Bad Axe, was defeated by accident or by General Henry's soldierly sagacity and attention to duty, although he gave out to the public no utterance of complaint. Broken in health by the hardships and exposures of the campaign, he went South soon after the war and died of consumption, unknown and almost alone, in the city of New Orleans, less two years later.

Aside from contemporaneous newspaper accounts, monographs, and manuscripts on file in public libraries relating to this epoch in State history, the most comprehensive records of the Black Hawk War are to be found in the "Life of Black Hawk," dictated by himself (1834); Wakefield's "History of the War between the United States and the Sac and Fox Nations" (1834); Drake's "Life of Black Hawk" (1854); Ford's "History of Illinois" (1854); Reynolds' "Pioneer History of Illinois; and "My Own Times"; Davidson & Stuve's and Moses' Histories of Illinois; Blanchard's "The Northwest and Chicago"; Armstrong's "The Sauks and the Black Hawk War," and Reuben G. Thwaite's "Story of the Black Hawk War" (1892.)

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, a village in the southern part of Cook County, twenty-eight miles south of the central part of Chicago, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Michigan Central Railroads; is located in an agricultural region, but has some manufactures as well as good schools—also has one newspaper. Population (1900), 5,100.

GRANITE, a city of Madison County, located five miles north of St. Louis on the lines of the Burlington; the Chicago & Alton; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis; Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis (Illinois), and the Wabash Railways. It is adjacent to the Merchants' Terminal Bridge across the Mississippi and has considerable manufacturing and grain-storage business; has two newspapers. Population (1900), 3,122.

HARLEM, a village of Proviso Township, Cook County, and suburb of Chicago, on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, nine miles west of the terminal station at Chicago. Harlem originally embraced the village of Oak Park, now a part of the city of Chicago, but, in 1884, was set off and incorporated as a village. Considerable manufacturing is done here. Population (1900), 4,085.

HARVEY, a city of Cook County, and an important manufacturing suburb of the city of Chicago, three miles southwest of the southern city limits. It is on the line of the Illinois Central and the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railways, and has extensive manufactures of harvesting, street and steam railway machinery, gasoline stoves, enameled ware, etc.; also has one newspaper and ample school facilities. Population (1900), 5,395.

IOWA CENTRAL RAILWAY, a railway line having its principal termini at Peoria, Ill., and Manly Junction, nine miles north of Mason City, Iowa, with several lateral branches making connections with Centerville, Newton, State Center, Story City, Algona and Northwood in the latter State. The total length of line owned, leased and operated by the Company, officially reported in 1899, was 508.98 miles, of which 89.76 miles—including 3.5 miles trackage facilities on the Peoria & Pekin Union between Iowa Junction and Peoria—were in Illinois. The Illinois division extends from Keithsburg—where it enters the State at the crossing of the Mississippi—to Peoria.—(HISTORY.) The Iowa Central Railway Company was originally chartered as the Central Railroad Company of Iowa and the road completed in October, 1871. In 1873 it passed into the hands of a receiver and, on June 4, 1879, was reorganized under the name of the Central Iowa Railway Company. In May, 1883, this company purchased the Peoria & Farmington Railroad, which was incorporated into the main line, but defaulted and passed into the hands of a receiver December 1, 1886; the line was sold under foreclosure in 1887 and 1888, to the Iowa Central Railway Company, which had effected a new organization on the basis of $11,000,000 common stock, $6,000,000 preferred stock and $1,379,625 temporary debt certificates convertible into preferred stock, and $7,500,000 first mortgage bonds. The transaction was completed, the receiver discharged and the road turned over to the new company, May 15, 1889.—(FINANCIAL.) The total capitalization of the road in 1899 was $21,337,558, of which $14,159,180 was in stock, $6,650,095 in bonds and $528,283 in other forms of indebtedness. The total earnings and income of the line in Illinois for the same year were $532,568, and the expenditures $566,333.

SPARTA, a city of Randolph County, situated on the Centralia & Chester and the Mobile & Ohio Railroads, twenty miles northwest of Chester and fifty miles southeast of St. Louis. It has a number of manufacturing establishments, including plow factories, a woolen mill, a cannery and creameries; also has natural gas. The first settler was James McClurken, from South Carolina, who settled here in 1818. He was joined by James Armour a few years later, who bought land of McClurken, and together they laid out a village, which first received the name of Columbus. About the same time Robert G. Shannon, who had been conducting a mercantile business in the vicinity, located in the town and became the first Postmaster. In 1839 the name of the town was changed to Sparta. Mr. McClurken, its earliest settler, appears to have been a man of considerable enterprise, as he is credited with having built the first cotton gin in this vicinity, besides still later, erecting saw and flour mills and a woolen mill. Sparta was incorporated as a village in 1837 and in 1859 as a city. A colony of members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church (Covenanters or "Seceders") established at Eden, a beautiful site about a mile from Sparta, about 1822, cut an important figure in the history of the latter place, as it became the means of attracting here an industrious and thriving population. At a later period it became one of the most important stations of the "Underground Railroad" (so called) in Illinois (which see). The population of Sparta (1890) was 1,979; (1900), 2,041.

TOLUCA, a city of Marshall County situated on the line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad, 18 miles southwest of Streator. It is in the center of a rich agricultural district; has the usual church and educational facilities of cities of its rank, and two newspapers. Population (1900), 2,629.

WEST HAMMOND, a village situated in the northeast corner of Thornton Township, Cook County, adjacent to Hammond, Ind., from which it is separated by the Indiana State line. It is on the Michigan Central Railroad, one mile south of the Chicago City limits, and has convenient access to several other lines, including the Chicago & Erie; New York, Chicago & St. Louis, and Western Indiana Railroads. Like its Indiana neighbor, it is a manufacturing center of much importance, was incorporated as a village in 1892, and has grown rapidly within the last few years, having a population, according to the census of 1900, of 2,935.

LATTER PART OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

In the latter days of the month of July, in the year of 1673, two birch-bark canoes passed up the slow-flowing Illinois River along the east and south-by-east boundary of that portion of the earth's surface which geographically constitutes, at the present time, the political division, known as Fulton County, State of Illinois, United States of America. These canoes contained, between them, seven Frenchmen. Aside from the personal effects and equipment of the several individual voyageurs, the cargo in the canoes consisted of some bags of corn meal, some dried beef, seven blankets and a quantity of beads, crosses and other articles of a religious character, and possibly some bright trinkets for Indian trading purposes. The names of five of the men with this little expedition are buried in oblivion—being mere assistants their names are nowhere recorded—but the other two, Louis Joliet and Jacques Marquette, have their names written among the immortals. Louis XIV., the grand Monarch, was on the throne of France and it was to advance his temporal glory that the expedition was initiated. Carrying the gospel to the benighted Indians, whose habitat was the Mississippi Valley, was a secondary matter.

It was the ambition of King Louis and the Government of France to find a new and shorter passage to China, Japan and the Indies by way of the Pacific Ocean, then known as the South Sea. While Spain had been planting settlements in Florida and on the west coast of the Gulf of Mexico, and the English were doing likewise along the shores of the Atlantic, France established colonies along the St. Lawrence and around the Great Lakes, and French fur traders and missionaries had established stations or trading posts at many points in the far Northwest. The remotest western outpost in 1673 was Portage on the Fox River in what is now the State of Wisconsin. France was rejoicing in the splendor of the prosperous reign of the Grand Monarch. Colbert was her Minister of Marine and Frontenac was Governor of the French possessions in the New World. Territorial and commercial aggrandizement was the theme of the King and his Ministers, and the dream and hope of the people of France. The missionaries who had visited tribes of Indians, as they wandered to and fro up and down the valley of the Mississippi and its numerous tributaries, carried home with them to France marvelous stories of the vast country in the valley to the South, which for richness and fertility is unsurpassed. It was thought that by following the Mississippi to its outlet it would be found that it emptied into what was then known as the South Sea, but now known as the Pacific Ocean. It was decided by the Government of France, on the suggestion of the resident officials of the New France, to send out an exploring party with the two-fold purpose of discovering the new and shorter passage to the Orient, and to explore and attach the territory of the lower Mississippi Valley to the dominion of France and people it with French occupants.

The local French Government selected as the leader of this expedition Louis Joliet, son of an artisan, educated for the priesthood but turned merchant and adventurer. Joliet was not a mere novice as an explorer of a new country. He had just returned from an exploring expedition in the Superior Lake country in search of copper mines, when he was commissioned to explore the lower Mississippi. As with all such expeditions, there was attached to the expedition to "discover the South Sea by the Mascoutins' country and the great river Mississippi," a missionary whose purpose was to carry the gospel to the heathen in every land. This missionary was Jacques Marquette and he was one of the brothers of the Jesuit Order. Joliet was only twenty-eight years of age. Marquette was thirty-six; was highly educated, of course, in the languages, history and philosophy, and was also skilled in mathematics and was able to determine by use of instruments the latitude with reasonable accuracy. From contact with the Indians in serving them in a religious way, he was able to converse to a limited degree, at least, with the members of the various Indian tribes who inhabited the territory which was to be the objective point of the exploring party. On the 13th day of May, 1673, these seven men started on the memorable journey which was to become a great historical event. Starting from St. Ignace on the Straits of Mackinack, they skirted the foot of Lake Michigan and entered Green Bay, then known as Fetid Bay. Thence they proceeded southward to the mouth of the Fox River (Wisconsin). With them from this point they took two Indians as guides. The party slowly advanced up the Fox River until Portage was reached on the 7th day of June. Crossing from this point to the Wisconsin River, carrying canoes, provisions, etc., the exploring party proceeded down that river to the Mississippi. After assisting in getting the party afloat on the Wisconsin River, the two Indians who acted as guides returned to their tribal village at the mouth of Fox River. Therefore, only Frenchmen made up the personnel of the expedition. Within ten days, after leaving Portage, that is to say on the 17th day of June, the wonderful river, of which such marvelous tales had been told them by the Indians, lay spread out in all its magnificence before them. In honor of the Virgin of the Immaculate Conception, Marquette's spiritual guide and mentor, as conceived by him, the river was named, or rather attempted to be re-named, "The River Conception." But the Indian name, Mississippi, "The Father of Waters," was never to be replaced by another. Journeying down the Mississippi, the party first stopped and made the acquaintance of a tribe of Indians, which was one of the branches of the Illini confederacy and who had a village on the Iowa side near the mouth of the Des Moines River. Marquette had often heard of the Illini Indians and they had also heard of the Frenchmen and reckoned them as friends. Much information was elicited from these Indians by Marquette and Joliet relating to the country to the south. Passing down the great river, the party passed the mouth of the Illinois, the Missouri and the Ohio, and reached a point below the last named. Determining that the River Conception (Mississippi) did not flow into the South Sea (Pacific Ocean), but into the Gulf of Mexico, and having had a slight altercation with some Indians who had evidently been on friendly terms with the natural enemies of the French—namely: the Spaniards, who had established settlements in Florida and had made explorations across the Mississippi River, for they were supplied with weapons of steel and iron of European manufacture—the little party decided to retrace their steps to St. Ignace. But when the explorers arrived at the mouth of the Illinois River, they were informed by friendly Indians that a much shorter way to reach the starting point was by way of this slow-flowing river. They ascended it. It was on the 17th day of July, one month after the party first reached the Mississippi River, that the journey up the Illinois River began.

Just what the day that the east-by-south shores of Fulton County dawned upon the vision of those seven Frenchmen, the reader will have to determine by the use of his mathematics and imagination as best he may. These were undoubtedly the first white men whose eyes rested upon a Fulton County landscape. Imagination might depict these voyageurs tying up at the mouth of Spoon River, and eating their frugal meal on this county's hospitable shores; but it must remain pure speculation, as to whether the white man's footprints were made on Old Fulton domain in July, 1673, or at a much later day. Nothing authentic can be determined on this point. The first landing place of the party definitely fixed was at an Indian village near the present city of Peoria. The party remained with the Indians at this village for three days, and it is recorded that Father Marquette busied himself with the spiritual welfare of the members of the tribe, and so great was the effect of his teaching and preaching that, after a sojourn of only three or four days, when he and the party came to depart, an Indian babe with life slowly ebbing away was brought to him to be baptized. From this Indian village the party proceeded up the Illinois and next stopping place recorded was near the present village of Utica in La Salle County, on the upper Illinois. Here was the principal village of the Illini Indian confederacy and the seat of Government, so to speak, of this Indian confederacy made up of the various branches of the Illini Indians. It was called, in the Indian language, Cascasshia or Kaskaskia.

The Illini Indians, which comprised the Illinois confederacy, was composed of five principal tribes, namely; The Mitchigamis, Kaskaskias, The Peorias, The Kahokias and Tamarois.

The Mitchigamis originally belonged west of the Mississippi River, and were really a part of the Illini by adoption. However, their name has impressed itself upon the Great Lake and the State of Michigan. The Kaskaskias inhabited that part of Illinois north of Lake Peoria and south of the southern end of Lake Michigan. But after the year 1700, owing to on-slaughts made on them by more powerful eastern Indian tribes, led by Father Marest, the Recollect missionary, they emigrated to southern Illinois, and settled near the junction of the Kaskaskia and Mississippi Rivers. This accounts for the Indian settlement on the Illinois River near the present village of Utica, La Salle County, being called Kaskaskia, and afterwards the city of old Kaskaskia being located farther down the State at the junction of the Kaskaskia and Mississippi Rivers. The Peorias inhabited the region around Lake Peoria, and this included Fulton County in their hunting domain. The Kahokias were in the region of the Great American Bottom extending from Alton to Chester. The Tamarois inhabited Eastern Illinois. Favorite hunting and fishing locations for Indians existed in many parts of Fulton County, and especially was this true along either shore of Spoon River. This river abounded in food fish, and was adapted to the crude methods of catching them prevailing among the Indians. Also, the adjoining territory was the rendezvous of all sorts of native game. Mute evidences of Indian villages are yet discernible, and there is scarcely a "timber quarter" in the county from the surface of which some collection of Indian relics has not a spear or arrow head or a stone axe. Some of the most perfect specimens of this character in existence are from Fulton County, and it is said that no single county in the United States, certainly not in the State of Illinois, has been so prolific a producer of Indian spear and arrow heads and stone axes. Joliet and Marquette and their party remained in the Indian village of Kaskaskia for a short time, and were then escorted by one of the principal chiefs and some of the young men of the tribe to Lake Michigan, and thence they proceeded to Green Bay, arriving there in September, whence they had set out at the beginning of June. It will thus be seen that it required a little over three months to make the journey.

It may be of interest to know what became of these two important individuals. Joliet returned to Quebec, but unfortunately for future history he met with an accident on the St. Lawrence, and lost his journal of the journey and explorations, together with his instruments and all his papers. Therefore, history must rely upon a narrative of the journey furnished by Marquette written two or three years afterward, largely from memory. Joliet never returned to the Illinois country. His report of his explorations excited wonderful interest among the French of the new world, and in France itself. It is said that jealousy and influence exerted by La Salle and other influential personages deprived Joliet of a second intended journey to the Illinois Country. Joliet died in Canada in 1700. When departing on the homeward journey, Marquette promised the Indians at Kaskaskia that he would return to them and instruct them spiritually. In October of the next year, 1674, true to his promise, he set out for the Illinois Country, and proceeded to a point some distance from the present city of Chicago where there was a portage, and was compelled to remain at this point owing to ill health until the following March. Resuming his journey in March he reached Kaskaskia the 8th of April, 1675, and proceeded at once to establish a mission. His health became much worse. He remained only a short time, and then started to return to St. Ignace, where at his old mission, he desired to end his career. But unfortunately his strength was not sufficient to permit him reaching his desired goal. Before the voyage was completed he died May 18, 1675, at the mouth of a stream which is on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan. But his remains are buried at his beloved mission at St. Ignace. It is to this man we owe the greater part of the information that we have about the first visit of a white man to this section of the world; and it might be well, in passing, to call attention to the fact that he also was the first to explain the phenomena of lake tides.

The next visit of the white man to the vicinity of Fulton County was in 1680. The party was led by Robert Cavalier Sieur De La Salle; with him were Henry De Tonti, an Italian soldier with one arm, who acted as his Lieutenant and historian; thirty mechanics and marines; also, three Recollect Monks, namely: Father Gabriel Ribourdi, Father Zenobius Membre and Father Louis Hennepin. The glowing accounts as reported by Joliet and Marquette had excited La Salle's cupidity and desire for adventure. Like Joliet, he had been educated as a Jesuit priest, but feeling that he had mistaken his calling he came to the New World in 1666. In 1679 he visited the Northwest and explored the Great Lakes, finally reaching the head of Lake Michigan, and erecting a fort at the mouth of the St. Joseph River. From there he made a portage to the Illinois River, which he descended early in 1680 to Lake Peoria, at which place he arrived January 3d. At this place he built a fort called Creve-Couer. He did not at this time go farther south, but he dispatched Father Hennepin, with two companions by the way of the mouth of the Illinois, to explore the upper Mississippi. It will thus be seen that these three men were the next to view the soil of Fulton County, as they proceeded down the river, starting from Fort Creve-Couer February 29, 1680, a little less than seven years after Joliet and Marquette passed up. It seems that according to the journal kept by Father Hennepin, from which he prepared a history of the journey and explorations, that there had been a great thaw on the 15th day of January and this might account for the possibility of these men passing down the Illinois River in canoes in the month of February or 1st of March. The two men with Father Hennepin were Michael Accault and Anthony Anguel. Fort Creve-Couer was left in command of Tonti by La Salle, and he was instructed to build a fort further up the river at Kaskaskia, the Indian village. In the absence of Tonti at Kaskaskia the men left at Creve-Couer deserted the fort and took everything with them that they could carry away. History does not record whither these deserters went, but it is quite probable that they went up the river as the shortest way to Canada, rather than down the river. When La Salle returned in the fall he learned of the desertion of his men, and found that Tonti had remaining with him only three Frenchmen, aside from the two monks, Membre and Ribourdi. La Salle again returned to Canada and organized an expedition and this time he descended the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, accompanied by Tonti, and reached the Gulf of Mexico April 9, 1682. Therefore, the third view of the soil of Fulton County by white men was made by La Salle and Tonti and their party. From this time on at infrequent intervals French missionaries and Frenchmen, fired by zeal for glory of God or the desire for adventure, passed up and down the Illinois River, thus making the acquaintance of the eastern shore of Fulton County. With slight interruptions there was always a settlement of white men, at or near the present location of the city of Peoria, from the time Fort Creve-Couer was built by La Salle in 1680, more than 200 years ago. It is possible, and quite probable, that occasional excursions in pursuit of game or otherwise, were made by Frenchmen from Fort Creve-Couer to the land within the confines of Fulton County, and certainly some of the missionaries from the fort visited the Indian settlements in the county. The business of trapping was conducted along the Illinois River and its tributaries. And there were fur-trading stations at Wesley City, in the present Tazewell County, and elsewhere along the Illinois River in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Spoon River was used as a location for traps by men connected with the furtrading stations, and in all probability many of the minor streams flowing across the bosom of Fulton

K. F. ANN ABERNATHY

County and emptying into the Illinois River, were used likewise. Certain it is, that the Indians from whom pelts were obtained, made large captures of animals along Spoon River in Fulton County; and undoubtedly the dealers visited various sections of the county to barter for these pelts. Therefore, that which is now Fulton County was not entirely unknown to white man as far back as the latter part of the seventeenth century.

(By W. S. STRODE, M. D.)

The diversified natural features of Fulton County, embracing a number of rich prairies, much level timber land, beautiful hills and valleys, rivers and lakes with many tributaries, and a rich and varied soil, make it capable of producing all the natural history features found elsewhere in the State. There is a wealth of trees and plants, animals, birds, fishes, land and water shells, all of economic and scientific interest. The surface soil is rich and fertile and will produce almost everything from lichens to great trees. Beneath the surface there are vast deposits of coal, many kinds of clays, shales, stone, gravel, mineral waters, etc.

In many sections of the State there is no outcropping of rock, or any surface indication of mineral richness. Not so with Fulton County. With the Illinois River bordering it on the one side and the classic Spoon River meandering through the central part, there are shown many outcroppings of coal, rock, shales and clays. The bluffs of the Illinois range from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty feet in height, while those of Spoon River are from one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet. The valley of the Illinois is from four to five miles wide. It is one of the slowest running streams in the world. Scientists believe that, at one time in the misty past, it was one of the outlets of the Great Lakes, and that it carried a volume of water greater than the Mississippi at the present time. The valley of Spoon River rarely exceeds one mile in width. The surface soil of the county is black or clay loam, rich in vegetable decay, in which there is more or less of the animal. The underlying strata consist of disintegrated shales, sandstone and limestone. The river bottoms are of drift or alluvial sediment, composed largely of sand and siliceous deposits. This deposit is still going on. The river terraces, thirty to fifty feet higher, mark the former river level. Many towns and residences are built on these terraces. The city of Havana, in Mason County, is built on a river terrace. The upper bluffs, when composed of sand, gravel and clay, also include deposits formed by the sifting action of waves. This is called the loess, and is often forty to fifty feet in thickness. It sometimes extends back from the river bluffs four or five miles. There are some good examples of it around Lewistown. The usual formation, as found in the first seventy-five to one hundred feet, will be about as follows:

|---|---------------|
| Black Soil or Clay Loam..... | 2 feet |
| Yellow Clay | 10 to 12 feet |
| Blue Clay | 2 to 30 feet |
| Gravel and Sand..... | 3 to 6 feet |
| Black soil, containing sticks and wood. | 2 to 10 feet |

Sometimes this black, mucky soil extends down a hundred feet, and in other localities not more than twenty feet, and it always contains woods, often in a good state of preservation. Just below, both land and river shells are found. Scientists estimate that a vast period of time, probably covering many millions of years, was consumed in the Mesozoic formation, and the accumulation of deposits of sand and gravel over such portions of the earth as were yet under the waters of the ocean. The Post-pleiocene period, the one in which we are now living, covers the latest formation of the drifts. It was at this time, or about at the close of the carboniferous age, that there was a great wearing down of the Paleozoic rocks, and the taking place of a number of submergences and elevations of the land above and below the ocean level. Great valleys were scooped out, and they were then partly filled in with deposits of clay, gravel and sand, and a soil was formed. The succeeding elevations and submergences of the land were followed by the deposits of boulder clay, marshy soil, locustrine deposits of loess, etc. It was at this time that the huge extinct mammals were in existence and, soon after that, the earth emerged from the waters and remained as we find it at the present time.

The boring of an artesian well at Canton, some years ago, furnishes an illustration of the various geological strata, as found in the county:

|------------------------------------|------------|
| Drift, Clay, etc..... | 92 feet |
| Coal Measures, Shales, etc..... | 208 feet |
| Lower Carboniferous Limestone..... | 299 feet |
| Kinkerhook Shales | 171 feet |
| Limestone (Devonian) | 64 feet |
| Limestone (Upper Silurian)..... | 150 feet |
| Shales (Cincinnati Group)..... | 150 feet |
| Trenton Limestone | 280 feet |
| St. Peter's Sandstone | 273 feet |
| Calcareous Limestone | 100 feet |
| Potsdam Sandstone | 545 feet |
| Total..... | 2,332 feet |

Several other borings have been made in the county in search of oil, gas, and artesian water. Traces of oil and a little gas have been found, but not enough to be of economical value. A flow of water at Vermont and at Canton was obtained, but the wells were abandoned after a time. The Depler Mineral well, near Lewistown, was sunk in the hope of finding oil or gas. None was found, though the boring was continued to a depth of about twenty-five hundred feet. At ten hundred and fifty feet a wonderful flow of water was struck of which an analysis showed it to be of much medicinal value. The flow is said to be fifteen hundred gallons a minute, and it has not abated in the least in a year's time.

Of all the mineral resources of Illinois, coal stands at the head. It has been estimated that the State contains nearly one-fifth of all the coal of the country. Fulton County is probably the leader in the State in the amount of coal that can be mined. The geographical area of the coal fields in the State is, in round numbers, about thirty-five thousand square miles. The late John Wolf, of Canton, estimated that seams Nos. 4 and 6 alone, in seven townships, contained not less than 2,268,000 tons of coal. Sixteen coal seams are found in the State, of which seven are in this county. The rest are up in the air. Coal vein No. 1 (which is the lowest) is usually from two to three feet in thickness. It is of fine quality and a favorite with workers in iron and steel. It is not much mined, but more so at Seaville than elsewhere in the county. At a very low stage of water it may be seen in the bed of the river at Bernadotte, and it is mined to some extent at the foot of the bluffs at Duncan Mills, ten miles below. At Seaville it is a half-block coal, while at Avon it develops into a fine cannel coal.

COAL MEASURE No. 2 is a persistent vein of good quality, ranging from two to three feet in thickness, though elsewhere in the State it is found attaining a thickness of four to five feet. It is found and mined all about Lewistown, and everywhere in the bluffs of Spoon River and the little streams that flow into that stream. It is also in the Otter Creek hills west of Vermont. It lies forty to eighty feet above coal bed No 1. This vein, as well as No. 1, is sometimes divided by a seam of clay or shale.

COAL No. 3.—This is a coal of good quality but very erratic, in many places where it should be, not being found at all, or its place filled by bituminous shale. It is usually about three feet in thickness and its horizon is forty or more feet above No. 2.

COAL No. 4.—This seam is from four and one-half to five feet in thickness, and is worked at Astoria, Breeds, Canton, St. David, Fairview and at the Pickering bank in Farmers Township.

No. 5 is worked near Cuba and on Big Creek north of Lewistown, where the lower two feet of the seam is extremely hard, and is a fine steam coal.

No. 6.—This seam is irregular in its horizon, but it is an excellent coal. It ranges from four feet to five feet in thickness, and is mined near Canton, north of Farmington, near Norris, and also north of Fairview. Possibly one of the seams worked near Cuba may belong to this vein. It contains many slips, or horsebacks, which are the bane of the miner.

No. 7 is mostly of a soft shale variety in this county and often divided by a foot or two of clay and shale.

FIRE CLAY.—A fine seam of fire clay, ranging from two to three feet in thickness, can be found outcropping on Spoon River and nearly all the little streams that flow into it throughout its entire course in the county. Much of this clay has been shipped from near Bernadotte for use in the Macomb pottery works.

IRON ORE.—There is more or less iron ore throughout the county, mainly of the carbonate variety. At Seaville there is a seam containing much limonite above the limestone roof of Coal Seam No. 1. These ores may, in time, be considered of sufficient importance to be smelted, especially as the coal is nearby to do it with.

SAND AND LIMESTONE.—There are some good veins of sandstone in the county, and in some quarries along Spoon River it attains a thickness of from four to eight feet. The limestone that is found in connection with No. 7 coal is of the purest carbonate, and is destined to become of much economic value where the ledge is of sufficient thickness as it is in the vicinity of Farmington. The St. Louis limestone outcrops in the bed of Spoon River from Seaville to Bernadotte, and was formerly much burned for lime. It is the same as the Alton limestone, so extensively used for lime.

BRICK CLAY.—There is an inexhaustible supply of the finest brick clay to be found throughout the county.

In addition to the foregoing various other minerals are found in small quantities. Boulders of pure copper are occasionally found in the shales. These are merely adventitious, or brought down from the north by means of glaziers or drift action.

Boulders of pure granite are often met with, and occasionally specimens containing much zinc are found. On Sister Creek, in Liverpool Township, there is a six-incl. vein of almost pure silica, while not far away on the Redding Wilcoxon farm, there is a deposit of Gipsite. This is in diamond shaped cubes. In the north end of Thompson's Lake there is to be found not a little red Jasper.

ANIMAL AND BIRD LIFE—ANIMALS WHICH HAVE BECOME EXTINCT—DESTRUCTION OF THE WILD TURKEY—LIST OF PRINCIPAL MAMMALS STILL IN EXISTENCE—FUR-BEARING ANIMALS—BIRDS THAT HAVE DISAPPEARED OR ARE DECREASING IN NUMBERS—SOME SPECIES THAT ARE HOLDING THEIR OWN—CLASSIFIED LIST OF BIRDS STILL IN EXISTENCE.

(BY W. S. STRODE, M. D.)

Some of the animals formerly found in Fulton County and in the State are now extinct. These include the buffalo, elk, black bear, panther, lynx, catamount, badger, beaver, otter, and the prairie and timber wolf. The latter may doubtfully, occasionally visit us, but makes his stay short. The deer disappeared in the early 'seventies and no amount of protection will ever bring them back. The turkey, America's noblest game bird, disappeared about ten years later. The writer reflects with regret that he did his part to destroy this majestic bird. Between 1861 and 1883 no less than three hundred of these magnificent feathered creatures fell victims to his gun. The last otter found in the county that we have personal knowledge of was shot on Island No. 1, in Spoon River, four miles above Bernadotte, in 1860. Others may have existed later on the Illinois. The following list will include about all the animals now found in the county:

Opossum.—Formerly very common, now becoming scarce—the only marsupial found on the American continent. It should be in Australia, where the rest of its kind are. One species only is found in North America; but many in South America, from the size of a rat up.

Muskrat or Musquash.—The largest of the mouse family, still numerous along our rivers and lakes; considered by many in the north as a delicate article of food.

Meadow or Short-Tailed Mouse.—Fur species; destructive to meadows.

Harvest Mouse.—A very dainty and delicate little animal, often building its oval nest in the reeds above the ground.

Red Mouse.

Deer or White-Footed Mouse.—Another handsome and retiring little animal; keeps to the woods.

Jumping or Kangaroo Mouse.—Rare.

Brown or Norway Rat.—Introduced into America in 1775; very destructive and a great nuisance.

Gray or Common Rabbit.—Common everywhere in the county.

Pouched Gopher.—Common; of no good use.

Woodchuck or Ground Hog.—Common; does but little harm.

Gray Gopher or Prairie Gray Squirrel.

Chipmunk or Ground Squirrel.—A gay, saucy little fellow; does but little harm.

Gray Squirrel.—A beautiful animal; farther south it is often black. The writer once secured a black one in the big timber below the Elrod Bridge on Spoon River; not nearly so common as the following, and with which it does not like to associate.

Fox or Red Squirrel.—The largest and most common species, where protected increasing in numbers.

Common Shrew.—Rather common in suitable localities, but so retiring that it is not often seen.

Common Mole.—Plentiful and destructive to vegetation.

Red Bat.—Not common.

Hoary Bat.—The largest species.

Little Brown Bat.—The most common.

Red or Virginia Deer.—Formerly common; none in the county now, unless an escape.

Common Raccoon.—The only plantigrade; common.

Common Skunk or Polecat.—Belongs to the weasel family; still plentiful.

Common Mink.—The finest fur-bearing animal.

Common Weasel or Ermine.—Often snow-white in the winter.

Gray Fox.—Varies in color in the far north to silver or black.

Red Fox.—Not so common as the preceding.

Wolf.—The gray and the black are one species; color varying as to locality. In Florida they are reddish, in Texas black, while farther north gray predominates.

Coyote or Prairie Wolf.—Probably not now found in the county; formerly not uncommon.

The number of species of animals, as compared with the birds, is small; but their economical value is of no little importance. Many thousands of dollars' worth of furs are secured by trappers every winter within the county, and put on the market. These are derived mainly from the raccoon, mink, skunk or muskrat, with a few of the fox.

The mole is seldom trapped for its fur in this country. In the old world it is trapped extensively.

BIRDS.—It is not claimed that the following list of birds includes all that may have visited the county at some time. Only those observed by the writer have been included. Some have become extinct. The wild turkey, the passenger pigeon and parrot are seen no more. The swans and cranes may be gone forever. Pelicans are becoming very rare. The trumpet-like notes of the pileated woodpecker are rarely heard in the big woods. The prairie hen and the pheasant are on the verge of extinction. It has been many years since the writer has seen a swallow-tailed kite. The osprey, the two eagles, the Arctic owls, the hawk-owl and the pigeon hawk visit us in greatly diminished numbers. All the ducks, geese, coots, mudhens, gallinules, rails, snipe and bob-whites are gradually decreasing. The black birds, swallows, robins, thrushes, larks, swifts, woodpeckers, grosbeaks, wrens, chickadees, cuckoos, kingfishers, hummers, kinglets and many of the warblers are holding their own or increasing in numbers. The big owls are having a strenuous time of it, and we will wake up some morning to hear their hoots and weird calls for the last time. The beautiful and useful little sparrowhawk holds his own, while his big cousin, the redtail, will soon be a memory. The big blue heron formerly nested in colonies in the giant sycamores; now it is a rare occurrence to find a nest in the more secluded timber tracts yet remaining on the Illinois.

The prothonotary warbler, the gem of the desolate swamp regions, is increasing in numbers and his green moss nest can be found in almost every cavity over the water around the lakes. The floating nests among the lily pods and rushes of the coots and dabchicks are becoming scarcer each season.

The whippoorwill and his relative, the nighthawk, are still seen, but they are few in number. The former no longer visits our back yard in the gloaming to utter his weird complaint and pat his foot as formerly.

Following will be found a classified list of the bird species:

DIVERS.—Pied-billed grebe, common, nests here; American eared grebe, not common; loon, occasionally seen or heard.

LONG-WINGED SWIMMERS.—Kittiwake gull, seen in water; American herring gull, common; ring-billed gull, throughout all North America; Bonaparte's gull; Caspian tern; Forster's tern, common; common tern; black tern; double-crested cormorant; American white pelican, becoming scarce.

SWIMMERS.—American merganser; red-breasted merganser; hooded merganser.

RIVER DUCKS.—Mallard, common; black mallard, not common; gadwall, cosmopolitan; widgeon, occasional; baldpate, green-winged teal, and blue-winged teal, common; cinnamon teal, casual; shoveler, pintail, wood duck, redhead and canvasback, common; American scaup duck, lesser scaup duck, American golden eye, Barrow's golden eye, occasional; bufflehead, old squaw, American scoter, white-winged scoter, surf scoter, ruddy duck, occasional.

GEESE.—Lesser snow goose, greater snow goose, American white-fronted goose, casual; Canada goose, common; brant, whistling swan, rare; trumpeter swan, casual.

WADERS.—American bittern, least bittern and great blue heron, common; American egret and little blue heron, casual; green heron, common; black-crowned night heron.

CRANES.—Whooping crane, sandhill crane, rarely seen.

RAILS, COOTS, ETC.—King rail, Virginia rail, occasional; yellow rail, Florida gallinule and American coot, common.

SHORE BIRDS.—Wilson's phalarope; American woodcock; Wilson's snipe; stilt sandpiper; knot; purple sandpiper; pectoral sandpiper; Baird's sandpiper; least sandpiper; sanderling; godwit; greater yellow-legs; spotted sandpiper; Hudsonian curlew; killdeer; Wilson's plover; turnstone.

The least sandpiper, killdeer, yellow-legs, Wilson's snipe, and woodcock may be seen in considerable numbers every year, while the others are somewhat rare visitors.

GAME BIRDS.—Bobwhite, common, but becoming more scarce each year; ruffed grouse, scarce; prairie hen, formerly common, but now rare; wild turkey, formerly common, now probably extinct in the county. (The writer killed the last one he ever saw on Christmas Day, 1883.)

PIGEONS.—Passenger pigeons, formerly common, now practically extinct; mourning dove, common, but becoming scarce since made a game bird.

BIRDS OF PREY.—The following comprises a list of the principal birds of prey:

Turkey-buzzard (or vulture), common, nests in hollow trees and stumps; swallow-tailed kite, occasionally seen; Mississippi kite, a rare straggler; marsh hawk, common; sharp-shinned hawk, occasional; Cooper's hawk, common; American goshawk, rare; red-tailed hawk, common, nests; red-shouldered hawk, rare; broad-winged hawk, not common; American rough-legged hawk, common in winter; golden eagle and bald eagle—both these birds are occasionally seen in the county, the golden the more common; duck hawk, seen in the fall; pigeon hawk, seen occasionally; American sparrow hawk, common, nesting in woodpecker holes; American osprey, comes up our rivers occasionally.

OWLS.—American barn owl or monkey-face, casual; American long-eared owl, common; short-eared owl, rare; barred owl, common; great gray owl, or snowy owl, a wanderer from the north in the winter season; saw-whet owl (the writer has the only one ever reported in the county, found on Big Creek); screech owl, common, gray and red varieties, but same species; great horned owl, common; snowy owl and American hawk owl, occasional visitors; Carolina parakeet, formerly found on the river bottoms, now extinct; yellow-billed and black-billed cuckoo, both species common; belted kingfisher, common, builds nests in banks of streams of bones, fish-scales, etc.

WOODPECKERS.—(A red-headed family)—Hairy woodpecker, common; downy woodpecker, common; yellow-bellied sapsucker, not plentiful; pileated woodpecker, rare; red-headed woodpecker, common; red-bellied woodpecker, common; flicker, common. All these species are somewhat common except the pileated or log-cock and the yellow-bellied.

NIGHT BIRDS.—Whippoorwill, night hawk, chimney swift, common.

RUBY-THROATED HUMMING BIRD.—Our only species, common.

SONGLESS PERCHING BIRDS.—Kingbird, crested flycatcher, Phoebe and wood pence, common; Traill's flycatcher, somewhat scarce.

SONG BIRDS.—Horned lark, blue jay, American crow, common; bobolink, rare, sometimes nests here; cowbird, common; yellow-headed blackbird, rare; red-winged blackbird, meadow lark, orchard oriole, Baltimore oriole, purple grackle, bronzed grackle, all these several species are common; evening grosbeak, rare; purple finch, common in winter; redpoll, casual visitor in winter; American goldfinch, common; snowflake, winter visitor; Smith's longspur, vesper sparrow, grasshopper sparrow and lark sparrow, rare; white-crowned sparrow, the most beautiful of its species; white-throated sparrow, seen occasionally; tree sparrow, common in winter; chipping sparrow, common; slate-colored junco, common in winter; song sparrow, common; swamp sparrow, fox sparrow, migrant; towhee, cardinal, rose-breasted cardinal, indigo bunting, dickcissel, lark bunting, scarlet tanager, purple martin, cliff swallow, tree swallow and bank swallow, common; rough-winged swallow, rare; cedar waxwing, common; northern shrike, common in winter; white-rumped shrike, common in summer; red-eyed vireo, not common; warbling vireo, white-eyed vireo, common; black and white warbler, prothonotary warbler, common; Nashville warbler; orange-crowned warbler; parula warbler; Cape May warbler; yellow warbler, common; black-throated blue warbler; magnolia warbler; cerulean warbler; chestnut-sided warbler; black-poll warbler; blackburnian warbler; black-throated green warbler; prairie warbler; water thrush; Kentucky warbler; mourning warbler; Maryland yellow-throat, common; pine warbler; Kirtland's warbler; yellow-breasted chat, common; American redstart; mocking bird, rare, have seen but two in three years; catbird, brown thrasher, house wren, short-billed marsh wren, common; brown creeper; white-breasted nuthatch, tufted titmouse, chickadee, common; golden-crowned and ruby-crowned kinglets (next to the humming bird these two are the smallest species of birds); blue-gray gnatcatcher; wood thrush and Wilson's thrush, common; olive-backed thrush; American robin and bluebird, common.

FISHES, REPTILES AND SHELL-BEARING ANIMALS—FISHING INDUSTRY AND COMMERCIAL VALUE OF ITS PRODUCTS—CLASSIFIED LIST OF REPTILES AND RELATED SPECIES—MUSSEL-SHELL SPECIES FOUND IN FULTON COUNTY WATERS—THEIR VALUES FOR MANUFACTURING PURPOSES—LIST OF LAND AND WATER SHELLS.

(By W. S. STRODE, M. D.)

As the lowest order of vertebrates, fishes are of great economic value. More than ten thousand species are known, many of them very beautiful, and some very active, swift and graceful, while others are slow, sluggish and unattractive. Some of these are an important and wholesome article of food and the catching of them furnishes employment for a vast army of men. They are thus of great interest to the sportsman, the naturalist and to a still larger class, as a means of livelihood. The Illinois River, bordering the county on the southeast furnishes employment for hundreds of men engaged in its fisheries, and with its lakes is the greatest fish-producing stream in the world.

DARTERS.—These are fish of small size; thirty or more kinds being closely related to the perches. Some are very beautiful and the rainbow darters are the most brilliantly colored of all fresh water fishes. They are plentiful in Spoon River, Big Creek and other small streams of the county and of much scientific interest, but of little economic value. The largest one of the family is but six inches long.

Space will permit of only the mere mention of names of the many kinds of fishes found in the waters of the county. These include the Wall-Eyed Pike, Gray Pike, Striped Lake Bass, Short Striped Bass, Black Bass, Small-Mouthed Black Bass, Crappies, Goggle Eyes, Black Sun Fish, Big-Mouthed Sun Fish, Punkin Seed, Grunter or Drum Fish, Stickleback, River Silver Side, one or two Killifish, Top Minnows and Mud Minnows, Pike or Pickerel, one or two varieties of Lake Trout, Moon Eye, one or two Shads, Yellow Perch, Ringed Perch, Chub Sucker, Striped Sucker, Red Horse, Quillback, Buffalo Carp, Buffalo, Black Horse, Channel Cat, Horned Pout, Brown Cat Fish, Great Yellow Cat Fish, Mud Cats, one or two Stone Cats, Long Nosed Gar, Short Nosed Gar, Great Gar, Duck or Spoon-Billed Cat, Shovel-Nosed Sturgeon, Small Black Lamprey, and Common River Eel.

JONATHAN J. BABBITT

The Minnows, Dace, Shiners and other similar varieties will be passed over, as, although numerous and of many kinds, they are of little economic value except as bait or food for other fishes.

This is perhaps not a complete list of the fishes found in the waters of the county, as introductions of new varieties are being made by the Fish Commission, and the opening of the Drainage Canal lets the lake fish down into the Illinois. The German Carp is one of these introductions.

REPTILES.—The Copperhead and the Black Snake and the Yellow Rattlers are the only venomous reptiles found in the county or the State. In common with all the other species of reptiles they are fast disappearing and, in many regions are already extinct. However, in a few restricted localities they are yet found in numbers too numerous for safety or comfort. On the old Nate farm, three miles west of Lewistown, many Copperheads are killed every season. Three years ago two persons were bitten by them and thirty-five of the pests were killed in one summer. The old Millison farm, just south of Bernadotte, is also badly infested with them. Big Creek and Sister Creek Hills are still the home of many rattlesnakes.

Black Snakes, Water Snakes, Adders, Milk Snakes are not uncommon in certain localities. The true Water-Moccasin is not found in the county. It is the Water Copperhead, and is rarely seen North of the Ohio River. The Hoop-Snake is a myth and the so-called Joint-Snake is a Lizard.

The writer has collected statistics of fifty cases of bites by venomous reptiles in the county with two deaths resulting. One case was that of a young lady bitten severely just above the ankle by a huge Yellow Rattler. The fangs penetrated a blood vessel, and probably a half spoonful or more of venom was injected into the wound. This being carried to the heart, paralyzed that organ and death followed in a few moments. Another instance was that of a ten-year-old lad, also bitten by a rattler. He was made to swallow nearly a quart of whisky and death resulted in a few hours, possibly from acute alcoholism. The author was once deeply bitten in the hand by a forty-inch Copperhead. The venom was at once sucked out, and the wound cauterized with a burning match. There was something doing in a doctor's internal and external economy for an hour or two, but with the exception of a feeling of lassitude and weakness, lasting about two days, no bad results followed.

The following is a list of batrachia (or frog-like animals), Reptiles, etc., compiled by Dr. Strode:

TURTLES.—Painted or Mud Turtle; Map Turtle; Le Sueur's Map Turtle; Yellow-bellied Terrapin; Elegant Terrapin; Common Snapping Turtle; Soft-Shelled Turtle.

LIZARDS.—Glass or Joint Snake; Six-Lined Lizard; Blue Tails; Ground Lizard.

SNAKES.—Blowing Viper; Hog-Nosed Snake; Holbrook's Water Snake; Kirtland's Snake; Red-Bellied Snake; Common Garter Snake; Black Snake or Blue Racer; Pine or Bull Snake; Pilot Snake; Summer Green Snake; Ring-Necked Snake (now quite rare); King Snake; Milk or House Snake; Red-Bellied Horn Snake; Ground Snake; Bauder Yellow or Northern Rattlesnake; Massaugua or Prairie Rattlesnake; Copperhead.

FROGS AND TOADS.—Common or Leopard Frog; Green Frog; Bull Frog; Common Tree Frogs; American Toad.

SALAMANDERS AND MUD PUPPIES.—Four-toed Salamander; Large-Spotted Salamander; Jefferson Salamander; Mud Puppy or Water Dog.

LAND AND WATER SHELLS.—The following is a systematic catalogue of the land and water shells as found in Fulton County and compiled by Dr. Strode:

The Unionidæ, or Pearly Fresh Water Mussels, are the most important of shell-bearing species of the county or State. Our rivers and lakes are densely occupied by them and they are destined, at no distant day, to become of some commercial importance as well as of scientific interest. Factories for the manufacturing of pearl buttons and ornaments have been established on the Mississippi River for a number of years, and there is one or more on the Illinois. More will follow, as the Illinois River and its tributaries, especially Spoon River, are very rich in these pearly mussels. In many localities on the greater river the supply has been nearly exhausted, and as it takes about four years for a new crop to be produced, new fields will have to be sought where the shells are more plentiful. In addition to the economic use to which the shells are put, there are occasionally found in some of the species valuable pearls. All our fresh-water shells are harmless. They are the scavengers of our water-courses, and do much good in purifying the streams. They furnish much of the food of many fishes and waterfowl, and should not be wantonly destroyed.

Some of the mussels are very clannish in their habits, associating only with their kind and remaining in certain localities or beds during their lifetime. Others are great travelers and wander far and near in search of food and their kind, plowing little furrows in the sand or mud as they go. The different species vary greatly in size, as well as in configuration or architecture of shell. Some are so small, as the donaciformis, that scores of them could be put into a pint measure, while the heras, the giant of the family, attains a weight of two or three pounds and a length of shell from eight to ten inches. As an article of food they do not appeal to the tastes of an epicurean, but in a case of emergency they would keep off starvation. Some of the peasants from the old world do not disdain them as an article of food.

About twelve hundred species of mussels are found in the world. Of these six hundred are found in North America and about one hundred in Illinois and, up to date, over sixty of these are accredited to Fulton County. In time, with a more thorough research of the waters of the Illinois and Spoon River, the full hundred or more will be found in the County. The finest specimens in the world are to be found in the Spoon. This is owing to the purity and the abundance of lime in the water. From the ancient bridge at Bernadotte down the river for a mile, nearly all the species are found and of a size and beauty that are wonderful.

A half mile above Liverpool on the Mason County side of the Illinois the bed of the stream is almost paved with them for a long distance. From the mouth of Spoon River down the Illinois, for a mile or two, there are simply tons of them, while at the sand-bar five miles below Havana, they are so plentiful that one sweep of the dredge net will bring up fifteen or twenty kinds.

Some years ago the writer sent a consignment of Spoon River shells to a naturalist in France. In due course of time an acknowledgment was received, in which much surprise was expressed at their great size as compared with the depauperate species which are found in Europe, and the writer added that his native city of Bonn was but a small walled town and he feared he would not be able to get them into it.

In the following catalogue of the shells found in Fulton County, I have consulted the lists here named: The Illinois State Laboratory of Natural History; the late John Wolf, of Canton; Charles A. Hart, of Urbana; J. H. Ferris, of Joliet; Frank C. Baker, of Chicago Academy of Science; Mason, of Algonquin; Professor Kelly, of Iowa, and my own Cabinet.

NATURAL HISTORY.

(Concluded.)

FLORA OF FULTON COUNTY—TOTAL OF INDIGENOUS PRODUCTS OF THE SOIL IN ILLINOIS—RESTRICTIVE INFLUENCE OF AGRICULTURE AND STOCK-FEEDING.—PROMINENT LOCAL BOTANISTS—LISTS OF NATIVE TREES, FRUIT-BEARING SHRUBS, GRASSES AND OTHER NATIVE PRODUCTS—SOURCES FROM WHICH THE LISTS HAVE BEEN COMPILED.

(By W. S. STRODE, M. D.)

The botany of Fulton County will be found to contain nearly all the species existing in the middle and northern parts of the State. A catalogue of the flora of Cook County and vicinity, issued in 1891, gave the number of native species as 1,033 and of introduced species as 177—Total, 1,210. Fulton County, with its varied topography, should have nearly as many.

The following list is not claimed to be complete, and there may be some errors in the way of identification. It is possible that some plants found in the earlier days may now be extinct, or very rare. Agriculture and pasturage (stock-raising) have greatly restricted and, in many localities, probably destroyed, species that were once common. However, having once existed here, it is more than possible that they are yet to be found in some locality. By means of the railroads and other agencies many new species have been introduced.

I have freely consulted the lists of the late John Wolf, of Canton, who spent his lifetime in scientific research, and who probably knew more of the flora of the county than any other individual, living or dead.

William Jones, of Lewistown, the best living botanist of the county, has also given me some valued assistance. I have adhered to the nomenclature of Britton and Brown in their "Flora of the Northern States and Canada," published in 1896. As in the other departments of natural history in this work, I have adhered, as far as possible, to the common names of all species, and the arrangement is from the lower to the higher species, or from the simple to the more complex.

HORSETAIL FAMILY.—Smooth scouring rush.

CLUB MOSS FAMILY.—Rock selaginella; creeping selaginella.

FERNS.—Clayton's fern; sensitive fern; ostrich fern; oak fern; lady fern; maiden hair fern; brake; common polypody; narrow-leaved spleenwort; broad beach fern; brittle fern; Christmas fern; male fern; beech fern; silvery spleenwort.

GRASS FAMILY.—Brachyletrum erectum; timothy; rough rush grass; sheathed rush grass; northern dropseed; sand dropseed; wood reed grass; herd's grass, or redtop; white bent grass; rough hair grass; blue joint grass; long-leaved reed grass; velvet grass; tufted hair grass; marsh false oat; common wild oat grass; shedonnardus paniculatus; mesquite grass; hairy mesquite grass; crab grass, or wire grass; tall redtop grass; sand grass; capillary eragrostis; tufted eragrostis; Frank's eragrostis; purple eragrostis; hairlike eragrostis; creeping eragrostis; blunt-scaled Eatonia; Pennsylvania Eatonia; koleria cristata; tall melic grass; American korycarpus; broad-leaved spike grass; dog's tail grass; gama grass; beard grass; spiral-awed grass; brown beard grass; Virginia beard grass; Indian grass; slender paspalum; crab grass paspalum; finger grass; small crab grass; cockspur grass; beaked panicum; Scribner's panicum; forked panicum; starved panicum; millet (introduced); tumble weed; diffuse panicum; wood panicum; foxtail grass; Hungarian grass (introduced); bur grass; wild rice; white grass; rice cut grass; catch-fly grass; reed canary grass; few-flowered aristida; purple aristida; sea-beach aristida; porcupine grass; black-fruited mountain rice; drop-seed grass; meadow muhlenbergia; rock muhlenbergia; marsh muhlenbergia; wood muhlenbergia; slender muhlenbergia; annual meadow grass; wire grass (introduced); Kentucky blue grass; false redtop; sylvan spear grass; grove meadow grass; Wolf's spear grass; slender fescue grass; nodding fescue grass; fringed brome grass, or chess or cheat; rye grass; couch grass; meadow barley; Virginia wild rye; nodding wild rye; smooth wild rye; bottle-brush grass.

TAPE GRASS FAMILY.—Water weed, or ditch moss; tape grass, or eel grass; wild celery; frog's bit.

SEDGE FAMILY.—Low cyperus; cyperus infexus; cyperus Schweinitzii; yellow nut grass; red-rooted cyperus; Michaux's cyperus; Engleman's cyperus; straw-colored cyperus; globose cyperus; slender cyperus; dulichium arundinaceum; Engleman's spike rush; creeping spike rush; needle spike rush; Wolf's spike rush; matted spike rush; marsh fimbriatylis; slender fimbriatylis; three-square rush; great bulrush; reddish bulrush; white-beaked rush; Gray's sedge; hop sedge; hop-like sedge; button sedge; sallow sedge; Schweinetz's sedge; porcupine sedge; squarrose sedge; hairy-fruited sedge; river-bank sedge; Short's sedge; woolly sedge; brown sedge; tussock sedge; Hayden's sedge; mud sedge; downy green sedge; hirsute sedge; Davis sedge; long-beaked sedge; gray sedge; meadow sedge; few-fruited sedge; Hitchcock's sedge; Wood's sedge; Mead's sedge; loose-flowered sedge; slender wood sedge; white bear sedge; livid sedge; Richardson's sedge; Pennsylvania sedge; pubescent sedge; bristle-stalked sedge; soft fox sedge; awl-fruited sedge; lesser panicled sedge; fox-tailed sedge; fox sedge; stellate sedge; bur-reed sedge; oval-headed sedge; Muhlenberg's sedge; little prickly sedge; dry-spiked sedge; Muskingum sedge; blunt broom sedge; pointed broom sedge; straw sedge.

CAT TAIL FAMILY.—Broad-leaved cat tail; broad-fruited bur-reed; pond weed; common floating pond weed; Illinois pond weed; small pond weed; fennel-leaved pond weed; Zannechia pond weed; nalis flexilis pond weed; spotted pond weed; Nuttall's pond weed; spatulated-leaved pond weed; eel grass pond weed.

WATER PLANTAIN FAMILY.—Water plantain; upright bur-head; creeping bur-head; lophotocarpus calycinus; broad-leaved arrowhead; arum-leaved arrowhead; sessile-fruited arrowhead; grass-leaved sagittaria.

ARUM FAMILY.—Jack-in-the-pulpit; green dragon; green arrow arum; skunk cabbage; sweet flag.

DUCKWEED FAMILY.—Greater duckweed; ivy-leaved duckweed; lesser duckweed; Columbia wolfia.

YELLOW-EYED GRASS FAMILY.—Slender yellow-eyed grass.

SPIDERWORT FAMILY.—Virginia day flower; spiderwort; zigzag spiderwort.

PICKEREL / WEED FAMILY.—Pickerel weed; water star grass.

RUSH FAMILY.—Common rush, or bog rush; Torrey's rush; short-fruited rush; stout rush; sharp-fruited rush; common wood rush.

BUNCH FLOWER FAMILY.—Bunch flower; American white hellebore; large-flowered bellwort; perfoliate bellwort.

LILY FAMILY.—Yellow day lily, an escape; wild leek; chives; wild onion; red lily; Turk's-cap lily; wild yellow lily; tiger lily, an escape; wild hyacinth; star grass.

SMILAX FAMILY.—Smilax flower; carrion flower; greenbrier; hispid greenbrier.

BLOODWORT FAMILY.—Colic root.

AMARYLLIS FAMILY.—Star grass.

YAM FAMILY.—Wild yam root.

IRIS FAMILY.—Larger blue flag; blackberry lily; pointed blue-eyed grass.

ORCHID FAMILY.—Showy lady's slipper; small white lady's slipper; large yellow lady's slipper; small yellow lady's slipper; showy orchis; tubercled orchis; adder's mouth; coral root; large tway blade; fen orchis; Adam and Eve, or puttyroot; grass pink.

LIZARD'S TAIL FAMILY.—Lizard's tail.

WALNUT FAMILY.—Black walnut; butternut; pecan; shagbark; big shagbark; mocker nut; pignut hickory; small-fruited hickory.

WILLOW FAMILY.—Silver-leaf poplar; cottonwood; American aspen; black willow; shining willow; weeping willow, sometimes escapes; prairie willow; glaucous willow; silky willow; hoary willow; osier willow, an escape; heart-leaved willow; slender willow; peach-leaved willow; bog willow; sandbar willow.

BIRCH FAMILY.—American hornbeam; hop hornbeam; hazelnut; paper, or canoe, birch; river birch; smooth alder.

BEECH FAMILY.—Red oak; swamp oak; scarlet oak; black oak; shingle oak; white oak; post oak; mossy cup, or burr oak; swamp white oak; chestnut oak; yellow chestnut oak; water oak.

EDWARD STEWART BARBER

ELM FAMILY.—White, or water elm; slippery or red elm; winged elm; wahoo; hackberry.

MULBERRY FAMILY.—Red mulberry; white mulberry, an escape; osage orange, an escape; hop; hemp.

NETTLE FAMILY.—Stinging nettle; false nettle; clearweed; Pennsylvania pellitory.

SAGOALWOOD FAMILY.—Bastard toad-flax.

BIRTHWORT FAMILY.—Wild ginger; Virginia snakeroot.

BUCKWHEAT FAMILY.—Sheep sorrel; swamp dock; great water dock; curled, or yellow, dock; broad-leaved dock; buckwheat; slender pink persicaria; Pennsylvania persicaria; lady's thumb; water pepper, or smart weed; water persicaria; prince's feather, an escape; Virginia knotweed; knot grass; shore knot weed; bushy knot weed; slender knot weed; black bind weed; climbing false buckwheat; arrow-leaved tear-thumb.

GOOSEFOOT FAMILY.—Lamb's quarters; maple-leaved goosefoot; feather geranium, or Jerusalem oak; Mexican tea; wormseed; strawberry blite; spreading orache; upright, or city goose-foot.

AMARANTH FAMILY.—Rough pigweed; slender pigweed; tumbleweed; western water hemp; spiny amaranth; Florida froelichia.

POKEWEED FAMILY.—Poke or pigeonberry.

FOUR-O'CLOCK FAMILY.—Heart-leaved umbrellawort.

CARPET WEED FAMILY.—Carpet weed.

PURSLANE FAMILY.—Spring beauty; purslane; garden portulaccho, an escape.

PINK FAMILY.—Corn cockle; bladder campion; sleepy catchfly; bouncing bet; starry campion; western white campion; Sweet William, an escape; cow herb; common chickweed; long-leaved stitchwort; larger mouse-ear chickweed; blunt-leaved moehringia, or sandwort.

WATER LILY FAMILY.—Water shield, or water target; large yellow pond lily; white water lily, or water nymph.

HORNWORT FAMILY.—Hornwort.

CUSTARD APPLE FAMILY.—North American pawpaw.

CROWFOOT FAMILY.—Golden seal; marsh marigold; rue anemone; false rue anemone; red baneberry; white baneberry; black snakeroot; wild columbine; Carolina larkspur; dwarf larkspur; wood anemone; tall anemone; Carolina anemone; roundlobed liver-leaf; Virginia virgin's bower; leather flower; Sim's clematis; mouse tail; false bugbane; yellow water crowfoot; water plantain spearwort; hooked crowfoot; early meadow rue; purplish meadow rue; meadow rue; wild columbine; pheasant's eye (escapes from gardens).

BARBERRY FAMILY.—Blue cohosh; twin leaf; May apple.

MOONSEED FAMILY.—Cupseed; Canada moonseed.

LAUREL FAMILY.—Sassafras; spice bush.

POPPY FAMILY.—Garden poppy (escapes); bloodroot; Dutchman's breeches; climbing fumitory; golden corydalis; squirrel corn.

MUSTARD FAMILY.—Wild peppergrass; hedge mustard; black mustard; yellow rocket, or cress; horseradish (an escape); small bitter cress; shepherd's purse; marsb cress; lake cress; spring cress; Carolina whitlow grass; tansy mustard; toothed rock cress; sickle pod; hairy rock cress; smooth rock cress; pepper root; worm seed; mustard; sweet alyssum (escapes from gardens); lyre-leaved rock cress.

CAPER FAMILY.—Spider flower; clammy weed.

ORPINE FAMILY.—Virginia stonecrop; live forever (introduced).

SAXIFRAGE FAMILY.—Pennsylvania, or swamp saxifrage; alum root; Carolina grass-of-Parnassus; mitrewort, or bishop's cap; wild hydrangea; mock orange (from gardens).

GOOSEBERRY FAMILY.—Wild gooseberry, or dogberry; eastern wild gooseberry (introduced); wild black currant; red currant.

WITCH HAZEL FAMILY.—Witch hazel.

PLANE TREE FAMILY.—Buttonwood, or sycamore.

ROSE FAMILY.—Ninebark; American meadow sweet; goat's beard; Indian physic; American ipecac; black raspberry; high bush blackberry; dewberry; scarlet strawberry; five-finger (cinquefoil); rough cinquefoil; tall cinquefoil; yellow avens; white avens; queen-of-the-prairie; meadow sweet; agrimony; small-fruited agrimony; prairie rose; meadow rose; swamp rose; western crab apple; apple (introduced); black choke cherry; June berry; red haw; red-fruited thorn; Canadian burnut.

PLUM FAMILY.—Wild yellow, or red plum; blackthorn; peach (escaped from cultivation).

SENNA FAMILY.—Redbud; sensitive pea; honey locust; Kentucky coffee tree.

PEA FAMILY.—Wild indigo; large-bracted wild indigo; rattle-box; alfalfa (introduced);

white sweet clover (adventive); yellow sweet clover (adventive); stone clover; red clover (naturalized); buffalo clover; running buffalo clover; many-flowered psoralea; sainfoin psoralea; prairie white clover; goat's rue; black locust (adventive); milk vetch; pointed-leaved tick trefoil; naked-flowered tick trefoil; hairy tick trefoil; sessile-leaved tick trefoil; few-flowered tick trefoil; Dillon's tick trefoil; hairy small-leaved tick trefoil; smooth small-leaved tick trefoil; Illinois tick trefoil; bush clover; round-headed bush clover; wild pea-vine; marsh vetchling; wild or hog peanut; groundnut, or wild bean; trailing wild bean; small wild bean.

GERANIUM FAMILY.—Spotted crane's bill; Carolina crane's bill.

WOOD SORREL FAMILY.—Violet wood sorrel.

FLAX FAMILY.—Wild or slender yellow flax; grooved yellow flax.

RUE FAMILY.—Prickly ash, or toothache tree; three-leaved hop tree.

MILKWORT FAMILY.—Whorled milkwort; purple milkwort; pink milkwort; loose-spiked milkwort; racemer milkwort; Seneca snakeroot.

SPURGE FAMILY.—Glandular croton; horn-beam; three-seeded mercury; castor-oil plant (escaped from gardens); milk purslane; hairy spreading spurge; large or upright spotted spurge; blooming spurge; various-leaved spurge; blunt-leaved spurge; sun spurge, or wartweed; cypress spurge (an escape).

WATER STARWORT FAMILY.—Vernal water starwort, or water fennel; autumnal or northern water starwort.

FALSE MERMAID FAMILY.—False mermaid.

SUMAC FAMILY.—Staghorn sumac; dwarf sumac; poison oak.

HOLLY FAMILY.—Black alder.

STAFF TREE FAMILY.—Burnish bush, or wahoo; shrubby, or climbing bittersweet.

BLADDERNUT FAMILY.—American bladder nut.

MAPLE FAMILY.—Silver, soft or white maple; sugar, or rock maple; box elder.

BUCKEYE FAMILY.—Ohio, or fetid buckeye.

JEWELWEED FAMILY.—Spotted touch-me-not.

BUCKTHORN FAMILY.—Lance-leaved buckthorn; alder-leaved buckthorn; New Jersey tea.

GRAPE FAMILY.—Fox grape; summer grape; blue, or winter grape; Virginia creeper.

LINDEN FAMILY.—bass wood.

MALLOW FAMILY.—Dwarf or running mallow, or cheeses; common mallow; high mallow; glade mallow; prickly sida; bladder ketmia; halberd-leaved rose mallow.

ST. JOHN'S WORT FAMILY.—Giant St. John's wort; shrubby St. John's wort; common St. John's wort (naturalized); spotted or corymbd St. John's wort; dwarf or small-flowered St. John's wort; Canadian St. John's wort; orange grass; marsh St. John's wort.

WATERWORT FAMILY.—Waterwort, or mud purslane.

ROCK ROSE FAMILY.—Hoary frostweed; thyme-leaved pinweed; narrow-leaved pinweed; oblong-fruited pinweed.

VIOLET FAMILY.—Early blue violet; prairie violet; bird's foot violet, also var bicolor; American dog violet; pansy, or heart's-ease; green violet; arrow-leaved violet; downy yellow violet.

LOASA FAMILY.—Few-seeded mentzelia.

LOOSESTRIFE FAMILY.—Rotala; Koehne's ammannia; wing-angled loosestrife; clammy cupbea; swamp loosestrife.

MEADOW BEAUTY FAMILY.—Meadow beauty, or deer grass.

EVENING PRIMROSE.—Many-fruited ludwigia; seed-box, or rattle-box; linear-leaved willow herb; downy willow herb; purple-leaved willow herb; common evening primrose; common sun-drops; biennial gama.

WATER MILFOIL FAMILY.—Battle brush, or mare's tail; mermaid weed; whorled water milfoil; various-leaved water milfoil; pinnate water milfoil.

GINSENG FAMILY.—American spikenan; wild sarsaparilla; ginseng.

CARROT FAMILY.—Wild carrot; cow bane, or hemlock; wild parsnip; polytania; cow parsnip; hairy-jointed meadow parsnip; purple meadow parsnip; rattlesnake master; black-snake root; fennel (an escape); eastern eulophus; chevril (adventitious); woolly sweet cicely; bulb-bearing water hemlock; poison hemlock; hemlock water parsnip; caraway (adventive); water hemlock, or musquash root; honeywort; water parsnip; heart-leaved alerandus; harbinger of spring; smother sweet cicely.

DOGWOOD FAMILY.—Flowering dogwood; kinnikinnick; rough-leaved cornel; red-osier cornel; panicled cornel; alternate-leaved cornel.

INDIAN PIPE FAMILY.—Indian pipe.

HUCKLEBERRY FAMILY.—Low bush blueberry.
PRIMROSE FAMILY.—Androsace; water pimperel; tufted loosestrife; shooting star; chaff-weed.

EBONY FAMILY.—Persimmon.

OLIVE FAMILY.—White ash; green ash; red ash; water ash; blue ash.

GENTIAN FAMILY.—Bitter bloom, or rose pink; fringed gentian; downy gentian; closed gentian; American Columbo.

BUCKBEAN FAMILY.—Buckbean.

DOGBANE FAMILY.—Amsonia; spreading dogbane; Indian hemp.

MILKWEED FAMILY.—Butterfly weed, or pleurisy root; purple milkweed; swamp milkweed; Sullivan's milkweed; blunt-leaved milkweed; Mead's milkweed; sand vine; poke, or tall milkweed; whorled milkweed; common milkweed, or silkweed; thin-leaved milkweed; green milkweed; Florida milkweed.

MORNING GLORY FAMILY.—Wild potato vine; small-flowered white morning glory; morning glory (an escape); hedge or great bindweed; small bindweed; field dodder; pretty dodder; hazel dodder; buttonbush dodder; compact dodder; glomerate dodder.

PHLOX FAMILY.—Smooth phlox; downy phlox; wild blue phlox; cleft phlox; Greek valerian.

WATER LEAF FAMILY.—Virginia water leaf; appendaged water leaf; broad-leaved water leaf; nyctelea.

BORAGE FAMILY.—Stickseed; Virginia cowslip; spring scorpion grass; hoary puccoon; hairy puccoon; narrow-leaved puccoon; shaggy false Cromwell; soft-hairy false Cromwell; hound's tongue.

VERVAIN FAMILY.—White or nettle-leaved vervain; blue vervain; narrow-leaved vervain; hoary or mullein-leaved vervain; large-bracted vervain; fog-fruit.

MINT FAMILY.—Wood sage; false pennyroyal; mad-dog skullcap; downy skullcap; heart-leaved skullcap; small skullcap; marsh skullcap; veined skullcap; white hoarhound; catnip giant hyssop; figwort giant hyssop; catmint or catnip; ground ivy; self heal; false dragon-head; mother wort; light-green hedge nettle; smooth hedge nettle; wild bergamot; horse-mint; downy blephilia; hairy blephilia; Bradbury's monarda; American pennyroyal; rough pennyroyal; garden mint; wild basil; narrow-leaved mountain mint; Virginia mountain mint; bugle-weed; hoarhound; peppermint; spearmint.

POTATO FAMILY.—Prairie ground cherry; Philadelphia ground cherry; clammy ground cherry; black or garden nightshade; horse nettle; blue bindweed or bittersweet (naturalized); stramonium or jimson weed; purple thorn apple (naturalized); wild tobacco (cultivated by Indians); petunias (some have escaped from gardens).

FIGWORT FAMILY.—Great mullein; moth mullein; butter-and-eggs; wild toad flax; snakehead; hairy beard-tongue; foxglove beard-tongue; Blue-eyed Mary or innocence; sharp-winged monkey flower; conohea; clammy hedge hyssop; round-fruited hedge hyssop; long-stalked false pimpernel; Houghton's wulfernium; water speedwell; American brookline; marsh speedwell; Thyme-leaved speedwell; corn speedwell; Culver's root; mullein foxglove; fern-leaved foxglove; downy false foxglove; smooth false foxglove; rough purple gerardia; auricled gerardia; Indian paint brush; swamp lousewort; wood betony.

BLADDERWORT FAMILY.—Greater bladderwort; flat-leaved bladderwort.

BROOM RAPE FAMILY.—One-flowered broom rape or cancer root.

TRUMPET CREEPER FAMILY.—Trumpet creeper.

UNICORN PLANT FAMILY.—Unicorn plant, or elephant's trunk (an escape).

ACANTHUS FAMILY.—Hairy ruellia; smooth ruellia; dense-flowered water willow.

LOPSEED FAMILY.—Lopseed.

PLANTAIN FAMILY.—Common plantain; heart-leaved or water plantain; dwarf plantain; slender plantain; southern plantain.

MADDER FAMILY.—Button bush; rough button weed; wild liquorice; sweet-scented bedstraw; small bedstraw; shining bedstraw; cleaver's hairy bedstraw; partridge berry.

HONEYSUCKLE FAMILY.—American elder; arrow wood; nanny berry; black haw; yellow honeysuckle; fever-wort or horse gentian.

VALERIAN FAMILY.—Beaked corn salad or lamb's lettuce.

GOURD FAMILY.—Wild balsam apple or cucumber; star cucumber.

BELLFLOWER FAMILY.—Harebell; marsh bellflower; tall bellflower; Venus' looking glass; cardinal flower; great lobelia; pale-spiked lobelia; spiked lobelia; Indian tobacco; brook lobelia.

CHICKORY FAMILY.—Virginia goat's beard; dwarf dandelion; dandelion or blow-ball (Europe); hawkweed pieris; corn sow thistle; annual sow thistle or hare's lettuce; false lettuce; western lettuce; rough hawkweed; hairy hawkweed; rattlesnake root; corymbed rattlesnake root.

RAGWEED FAMILY.—Bitter weed; ragweed or Roman wormwood (wild tansy).

THISTLE FAMILY.—New York iron weed; western iron weed; late-flowering thoroughwort; tall thoroughwort; upland or bastard boneset; Joe Pye reed; white snake root; mist flower; blazing star; false boneset; prairie false boneset; cylindric blazing star; broad-leaved gum plant; prairie or hairy button snake root; hairy golden aster; broad-leaved golden rod; showy or noble golden rod; rough-leaved golden rod; elm-leaved golden rod; swamp golden rod; cut-leaved golden rod; Missouri golden rod; Canada golden rod; gray or field golden rod; western rough golden rod; stiff or hard-leaved golden rod; Ohio golden rod; Riddell's golden rod; slender fragrant golden rod; blue-stemmed or wreath golden rod; wrinkled-leaved or tall hairy golden rod; late golden rod; bushy or fragrant golden rod; astor-like boltonia; many-rayed aster; Short's aster; arrow-leaved aster; wavy-leaved aster; New England aster; aromatic aster; amethyst aster; red-stalk aster; crooked-stem aster; smooth aster; western silk aster; prairie aster; bushy aster; willow aster; Tradescant's aster; starved aster; sky-blue aster; daisy fleabane; common fleabane, or horse weed; low or purple horseweed; inland marsh fleabane; elacampane; cup plant or Indian cup; entire-leaved rosin-weed; compass plant; prairie burdock; American fever-few; ox eye; thin-leaved cone-flower; sweet cone-flower; Black-eyed Susan; green-headed cone-flower; showy cone-flower; purple cone-flower; pale purple cone-flower; common sunflower; giant sunflower; woodland sunflower; wild or thin-leaved sunflower; actinomeris; stiff tickseed; lance-leaved tickseed; swamp beggar ticks; tall tickseed sunflower; western tickseed sunflower; sneezeweed; dog fennel; white tansy; mayweed or dillweed; white weed or ox-eye daisy; feverfew (an escape); yellow tansy; wormwood; western or cud-weed mugwort; great Indian plantain; tuberosus Indian plantain; golden ragwort; burdock or clot burr; horse weed or butter weed; common burdock (naturalized from Europe); pasture thistle; swamp thistle; Canada thistle; common or burr thistle.

CHAPTER VI.

A PERIOD OF TRANSITION.

DIFFERENT RACES THAT HAVE OCCUPIED FULTON COUNTY—CONQUEST OF THE ILLINOIS COUNTRY BY COL. GEORGE ROGERS CLARK—IT BECOMES A PART OF VIRGINIA AND ILLINOIS COUNTY IS CREATED—FRENCH LANGUAGE STILL DOMINANT—NORTHWEST TERRITORY ORGANIZED BY ACT OF 1787—SUBSEQUENT PROGRESS TO STATEHOOD—PIONEER CONDITIONS DESCRIBED—WAR OF 1812—CAPT. CRAIG'S EXPEDITION AGAINST PEORIA—HALF OF THE TOWN BURNED AND MANY INHABITANTS CARRIED AWAY AS PRISONERS—FORT CLARK ERECTED IN 1813—A MILITIAMAN'S DESCRIPTION OF THE REGION ABOUT PEORIA—NO WHITE MAN THERE FROM 1815 TO 1818—AMERICAN FUR COMPANY TRADING STATION AT WESLEY CITY—IMMIGRATION BEGINS IN 1819—A LIST OF FIRST COMERS.

Since pre-historic days, the soil of Fulton County has had as its nominal owners, occupants and claimants two races of men and three nationalities, aside from what might be called distinctively American. The first occupants of the soil were the Peoria sub-tribe of the Illini Indians. Just how long the Illini had occupied the soil before the encroachment of the white man is a matter of conjecture, which is referred to biologists for determination. At best it is mere guess-work based upon science, a trifle, and legends and folklore, largely. Suffice it to say, that the Illini were here when the French adventurer and monk rowed up the Illinois River in 1673, and the red men remained until driven across the Mississippi as late as 1832. Just how they were deprived of the lands which they had so long enjoyed, is one of the chapters of the development of this country that is not read with a great deal of pride by our people.

MR. and MRS. JASPER BARTHOLOW

Spain, by reason of the discovery of the Western Hemisphere, was the first nation to dispute the Indian title. Next, England by virtue of Cabot's discovery of the continent of America in 1498, six years later, established its claim. By the inland explorations of De Leon, De Soto, Melendez and others, Spain strengthened its claim as owner of the soil of the entire American Continent. By reason of explorations of Verrazani, Cartier and others, the Government of France named the northwestern country "New France" and, as early as 1603, made a grant of territory to De Chastes which included all the northern part of what is now the State of Illinois. Fulton County territory was included in the grant. Likewise England, in 1606 and in 1609 gave patents to the beneficiaries of the Virginia and other grants, which would have covered this territory, but, as has been heretofore stated, the first actual explorations of the country were made by the French in 1673, and, as this was the superior claim, it may be said the title passed from the Indians to the French, inasmuch as the French had not only made actual explorations of the region and established settlements therein, but had also made a treaty with the Indians themselves for the country in 1671. But in 1763, by the Treaty of Paris, France ceded to England all her rights to this territory, and it remained so until 1778, during the American Revolution. With a commission from the then Governor of Virginia, Patrick Henry, the afterwards famed explorer, General George Rogers Clark, exploited this western country and captured Kaskaskia and the whole Northwest, and proclaimed dominion over it for Virginia. This dominion was by the treaty of Paris, which ended the war of the Revolution, recognized, and Illinois was part of Virginia until after the formation of the United States of America and the cession of the Northwest to the General Government in 1784.

In 1778, after the taking over of the western country by General Clark, the Legislature of Virginia formed the entire Northwest, north of the Ohio River, east of the Mississippi and south of the Great Lakes, into a county of Virginia, and named that county "Illinois." This is the first recognition of the name "Illinois" as designating a fixed political division of territory.

After the cession of the Northwest to the United States by Virginia, the Northwest Territory was formed in 1787, which was afterwards subdivided into the State of Ohio and Indiana Territory in 1800, the latter being again subdivided in 1809 by the creation of the State of Indiana and the Territory of Illinois, which included the present States of Illinois and Wisconsin and a small area on the eastern border of Minnesota. This territory was raised to the second class in 1812 and admitted as a State in 1818 with its present area and boundaries. (For further detailed history, see "Illinois," "Northern Boundary Question" and "Northwest Territory" in "Historical Encyclopedia" part of this work.)

Notwithstanding the passing of the sovereignty of this territory from the French to the British, by the Treaty of Paris, in 1763, the inhabitants remained distinctively French. Even in 1778, when the entire Illinois Country was taken possession of in the name of Virginia by General Clark, the language spoken was French in all of the settlements along the Illinois River.

Of course, of all these settlements only those in the vicinity of what is now Peoria are important to this history. That the reader may understand just the surroundings and conditions of the country during the time preceding the actual settlement of Fulton County, the following excerpt is taken from "Pioneers of Illinois," the author of which, N. Matson, was himself an early settler, and claims to have received much of his information direct from the early French settlers of Illinois:

"According to the statement of Antoine Des Champs, Thomas Forsyth, and others, who had long been residents of Peoria previous to its destruction in 1812, we infer that the town contained a large population. It formed a connecting link between the settlements on the Mississippi and Canada, and being situated in the midst of an Indian country caused it to be a fine place for the fur trade. The town was built along the beach of the lake, and to each house was attached an outlet for a garden, which extended back on the prairie. The houses were all constructed of wood, one story high, with porches on two sides, and located in a garden surrounded with fruit and flowers. Some of the dwellings were built of hewed timbers set upright, and the space between the posts filled in with stones and mortar, while others were built of hewed logs notched together after the style of a pioneer's cabin. The floors were laid with puncheons, and the chimney built with sticks and mud.

"When Colonel Clark took possession of Illinois in 1778 he sent three soldiers, accompanied by two Frenchmen, in a canoe to Peoria to notify the people that they were no longer under British rule, but citizens of the United States. Among these soldiers was a man named Nicholas Smith, a resident of Bourbon County, Kentucky, and whose son, Joseph Smith, was among the first American settlers of Peoria. Through this channel we have an account of Peoria as it appeared a century ago, and it agrees well with other traditional accounts.

"Mr. Smith said Peoria, at the time of his visit, was a large town, built along the beach of the lake, with narrow, unpaved streets, and houses constructed of wood. Back of the town were gardens, stockyards, barns, etc., and among these was a wine-press, with a large cellar or underground vault for storing wine. There was a church with a large wooden cross raised above the roof, and with gilt lettering over the door. There was an unoccupied fort on the bank of the lake, and close by it a windmill for grinding grain. The town contained six stores, or places of trade, all of which were well filled with goods for the Indian market. The inhabitants consisted of French, half-breeds and Indians, not one of whom could understand or speak English.

"Among the inhabitants of Peoria were merchants or traders who made annual trips to Canada in canoes, carrying thither pelts and furs and loaded back with goods for the Indian market. They were blacksmiths, wagonmakers, carpenters, shoemakers, etc., and most of the implements used in farming were of home manufacture. Although isolated from the civilized world, and surrounded by savages, their standard of morality was high; theft, robbery or murder were seldom heard of. They were a gay happy people, having many social parties, wine suppers, balls and public festivals. They lived in harmony with the Indians, who were their neighbors and friends, adopting in part their customs, and in trade with them accumulated most of their wealth.

"The dress of both men and women was very plain, made of coarse material, and the style of their wardrobe was partly European and partly Indian. The men seldom wore a hat, cap or coat, their heads being covered with a cotton handkerchief, folded on the crown like a night-cap or an Arabian turban. Instead of a coat they wore a loose blanket garment called capote, with a cap of the same material hanging down at the back of the neck, which could be drawn over the head as a protection from rain or cold. The women wore loose dresses, made mostly of coarse material, their heads covered with a hood or blanket, and their long hair hanging down their back like an Indian squaw. But these women were noted for sprightliness in conversation, with grace and elegance of manners, and notwithstanding the plainness of their dress, many of them were not lacking in personal charm."

With the beginning of the War of 1812, and even months before, when war seemed inevitable between the United States and Great Britain, the Indians in the Illinois country, incited to the deeds by British agents and traders, committed so many depredations that the people in the scattered white settlements were in a state of terror. An appeal to the general Government was made. It was decided by the Territorial and Federal authorities that a concerted movement be made against the hostile Indians. One of the expeditions sent out was that of Captain Thomas E. Craig against the Indians in the vicinity of Peoria. He was in command of a company of Territorial troops, and came up the Illinois in two large boats. He was provided with tools and appliances to construct a fort at Peoria. After reaching Peoria he found no hostile Indians, but his command found good wine in the cellars of the French inhabitants of La Ville De Maillet, as the settlement at Peoria was then called, and proceeded to imbibe rather freely. Without any apparent justification, Captain Craig burned about one-half of the seventy dwellings that constituted the village and carried off as prisoners of war many of the inhabitants. Craig's explanation of his extraordinary conduct was that, during one night his boats had been fired upon, and that the inhabitants were sympathizers with the cause of England. His actions were promptly repudiated by the authorities and the inhabitants who had been taken down the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers to Savage Ferry at the mouth of the Missouri, were liberated. In passing down the Illinois River, so declares Captain Craig in his report to his superior officer, these prisoners of war always desired to be landed on the "Indian side" of the river to prepare their meals. The Indian side was the upper or northern shore, and it is highly probable that one of these landing places was at that point where Otter Creek empties into the Illinois, and likewise the point where the first white settlement, though only transitory in character, was made on Fulton County soil.

There being no abatement in the hostile attitude of the Indians in the northern part of the Illinois Territory, the next year (1813) it was decided to proceed to Peoria and erect a fort, as this point seemed to be the chief rendezvous of the turbulent Red Skins. An expedition was planned by which a company of troops from the regular army was sent up the Illinois River in boats, and a force of Illinois and Missouri militia, who were mounted, was sent across the country. The regular troops reached the village three days before the mounted militiamen.

John Reynolds, who was afterwards Governor of Illinois, was a Sergeant in one of the Illinois militia companies. In his book entitled the "Pioneer History of Illinois," Governor Reynolds says of the overland journey of this mounted force:

"The whole force amounted to not more than eight hundred men. The army marched up the Mississippi bottom to a point above Quincy, thence across the country and struck the Illinois River forty odd miles below Peoria. The army reached Peoria on a calm, pleasant evening, and the beauty of the situation was admired by the whole army. The lake, and the scenery around, made a pleasing impression of its grandeur and beauty even on the stern, rugged soldiers of the army."

From this it will be observed that the point first touched on the Illinois River by these militiamen was about the southern extremity of Fulton County. This troop of horse of eight hundred men then marched across the entire length of the county. This was before there was a white settler within the county, so far as authentic history relates. It is extremely doubtful if Dr. Davidson, the mysterious hermit of historical and legendary fame, was in his habitat in the Isabel Township country at this time. There may have been some trappers temporarily residing along Spoon River and some of its tributaries, but as this march was in September, it is scarcely possible that any of the fur-hunters were away from the trading stations so early in the season.

There is a letter extant which splendidly pictures the country over which this mounted militia marched. It was written by John S. Bricksley, Esq., a resident in his later life of Potosi, Mo. He was a member of one of the Missouri militia companies making up this command. In this letter he says:

"As the army approached Peoria from the northwest and got a first view of its situation from the high-land prairies, two or three miles from the lake, looking easterly and southerly, beheld the smooth prairie gradually descending to the town, the lake stretching miles far to the northeast, the gunboats lying quietly at anchor upon the water, the towering forests across the water, and the lovely prairies bounded only by the horizon, there was an involuntary halt; the men all gazed in silence for a moment, and then of a sudden, as if moved by one impulse, expressed universal admiration of the beauty and grandeur of the prospect spread out before them. At this time there was no road to Peoria except the Indian trail; not a forest tree amiss, not a house within one hundred miles (except the town before described), no plough had ever broken the turf that covered the rich soil beneath. The lake was covered with wild geese, ducks and other water fowls; game such as deer, bear, elk and turkeys everywhere in the thick woods and adjacent prairies. Bees and honey were found in almost every hollow tree, and, notwithstanding express orders to the contrary, the men would and did, on the march, frequently stop and cut down the trees and get large quantities of the most delicious honey. While employed in building the fort, many of the men were well supplied with venison, fowls, honey and sometimes with fish caught in the lake."

In this letter Mr. Bricksley further says of the erection of the fort at Peoria:

"For want of suitable timber and materials within several miles of the place, on the west side of the lake, on account of the country back from the river being prairie, it became necessary to obtain all timber from a fine forest on the east side of the Illinois River at the lower end of the lake and raft it over. The men commenced felling the trees, the most of which were white oak, and for the palisades cut them about eighteen feet long and each log not less than fifteen or eighteen inches in diameter, the timbers for the block-houses at the corners of the enclosure were much longer; the area inclosed for the fort contained, according to my recollection, two or three acres. While a portion of the men were cutting, others were employed in hauling and rafting the logs over to the opposite side of the lake, and from there to the site for the building; having no carriages of any description, all the materials were drawn by men on trucks, by means of large ropes, a distance of from one to two miles. Thus was Fort Clark erected where Peoria now stands, in less than two months, by the Missouri and Illinois volunteers of mounted riflemen, in September and October in the year 1813, at a distance of more than one hundred miles from any white settlement, and with no other means than above described."

After the sacking of the village by Captain Craig, some of the French and half-breeds inhabitants of La Ville De Maillet returned in due course of time, but none were there at the time of the erection of Fort Clark. After the close of the War with England the troops were withdrawn from Fort Clark, and it was at least partially destroyed by the Indians. From 1815 to 1818 no white men seem to have abided at Peoria, at least more than temporarily. The American Fur Company, however, maintained a trading station called Opa, at what is now Wesley City, Tazewell County. In the latter year and the opening of 1819, the real settlers of this part of Illinois began to arrive.

Early in 1819, three Virginians, Abner Eads, Seth and Josiah Fulton; three Kentuckians, S. Daugherty, J. Davis and T. Russell; and J. Hersey, a native of New York, who were temporarily located at Shoal Creek in what is now Clinton County, decided to locate in the vicinity of Naples on the Illinois River. Not finding the location to their tastes, Eads and Hersey mounted the two horses belonging to the party after they were ferried across to the west side, and proceeded for Fort Clark. The other members of the party were to come up the river in a boat. None of this party located on Fulton County soil, though Eads and Hersey traversed its entire length north and south. But during the period when Fulton County embraced Peoria County, four of these pioneers, as will be subsequently disclosed, figured in a way in Fulton County affairs. These were the first strictly American settlers of Peoria County. As a French settlement and as a fortification, the vicinity of Fort Clark has been known for two centuries, but when these seven men located there, no other white men were there, nor had there been a permanent settlement for several years. At Wesley City, across on the east side of the river, was a trading station of the American Fur Company in immediate charge of Louis Beeson, and he had only been left in charge a short time before by the agents of the company as they passed down the river to St. Louis gathering up pelts.

LAND SYSTEM—THE MILITARY TRACT.

SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT LAND SURVEYS—ITS ADOPTION IN 1785—DESCRIPTION—BOUNTY LANDS SET APART FOR SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF 1812—LOCATION AND AREA OF THE MILITARY TRACT—ITS SURVEY IN 1815-16—COMING OF NEW SETTLERS—LAND SPECULATIONS, FORGERIES AND CONSEQUENT LITIGATION OVER TITLES—DESCRIPTION OF LANDS AND STREAMS IN FULTON COUNTY—EARLY NAVIGATION—QUOTATION FROM "BECK'S GAZETTEER"—DESIRABLE LOCATION FOR SETTLEMENTS IN THE EARLY 'TWENTIES.

On May 20, 1785, Congress adopted what is known as the rectangular system of government land surveys, and it is by this system that lands are measured, located, divided and described in the several counties of this State. By this system the distances and bearings are measured from two fixed lines, which are at right angles with one another. The lines running north and south are called "Principal Meridians", and those running east and west are denominated "Base Lines." Each Principal Meridian has its base line, and these two form the basis for surveyors' measurements and divisions of all the lands within a prescribed territory, arbitrarily limited and controlled by such principal meridian and base line. These lines are fixed with great accuracy by astronomical calculation. What is known as the Fourth Principal Meridian runs along the west side of Fulton County, and has, as a starting point, the juncture with the controlling base line twelve miles south of the south line of Fulton County. The juncture point is on the Illinois River just a short distance above Beardstown. Each congressional township is six miles square. There are, therefore, two congressional townships between the southern border of Fulton County and the base line. The method of designating the locality is to count north and south from the base line, and east or west from the principal meridian. Therefore, beginning from the base line, the first township within the southern and western border of Fulton County is township 3 North of the Base Line and Range 1 East of the Fourth Principal Meridian; and the north-western township is No. 8 north of the Base Line, and Range 1 East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. Each congressional township is divided into 36 sections of land each containing 640 acres. Fractional townships are divided as near as possible in the same manner so far as their territory extends. Political township lines, as fixed by the county, do not always conform to the congressional township lines. County Surveyors have established lines somewhat varying from those established by the Federal Government in its original survey of 1815-16; but the basis of all calculation of distance and the fixing of all lines is the original Government survey.

THE MILITARY TRACT.—On May 6, 1812, Congress passed an act providing for bounty lands for the soldiers engaging in war with Great Britain which had commenced early in the same year. This act provided for certain reservations in the Territories of Michigan, Louisiana (now within the State of Arkansas) and Illinois, to be given to the soldiers and sailors who volunteered in the service of their country. The lands in Illinois Territory embraced in this act are known locally as the Military Tract. They extend from the conjunction of the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers to fifteen townships north of the established base line by the Fourth Principal Meridian. This base line extends from a point on the west side of the Illinois River, a little north of the present site of the city of Beardstown, west to a point on the Mississippi about seven miles north of Quincy. This tract of land is about 169 miles in length, north and south, and extends east and west from the Illinois to the Mississippi River. It extends seventy-nine miles south of the base line to the junction of the Illinois with the Mississippi and ninety miles north. The northern boundary is identical with the northern boundary of Mercer County, and, running east, takes in the two southern tiers of townships in Henry County and the southern tier of townships in Bureau County. The distance between the Illinois and Mississippi at the northern boundary is about ninety miles. The Military Tract comprises the present counties of Calhoun, Pike, Adams, Brown, Schuyler, Hancock, McDonough, Fulton, Peoria, Stark, Knox, Warren, Henderson and Mercer, and nine townships in Henry County, part of Bureau, and those parts of Marshall and Putnam lying on the west side of the Illinois River. It comprises 207 entire congressional townships of six miles square, and sixty-one fractional townships, containing an area of 5,360,000 acres. A little less than two-thirds of this area—to wit: 3,500,000 acres—were appropriated for military bounties. The remaining portion of this territory consisted of fractional sections bordering on rivers, fractional one-quarter sections bordering on township lines, lands that were returned by the surveyors as unfit for cultivation, and, in addition thereto, reservations consisting of the overplus of lands after satisfying the military bounties, which were subject to entry and purchase as other Government lands.

This tract was surveyed in 1815 and 1816 under the personal direction of Major S. H. Long, of the Topographical Engineering Corps, and was opened to settlement. Immediately after the surveys were completed the issuing of the land warrants to the soldiers by the United States Government began. By this time the people of the more densely settled portions of the country in the East and South were more or less familiar with the wonderful country bordering on the Mississippi and lying between the Great Lakes to the north and the Ohio to the south, called the Territory of Illinois, and likewise with that fertile portion of the Territory set apart as bounties for the soldiers just leaving the service of the country at the conclusion of a victorious war. Reports to Congress from the Territorial Governors and other officials, both civil and military, together with private correspondence and publicity given them in various journals and publications, excited much interest in the future development of this region. Many of the early settlers of the Military Tract came from farther down the State where earlier settlements had been made. The influx of the determined men seeking new homes in this land of great promise, and who became the pioneers of the Military Tract, never abated until every acre within that circumscribed territory passed to private ownership and had been made to "blossom as the rose" in response to the touch of those worthy "developers of the country."

SPECULATIONS—LAND FRAUDS.—Speculators in the East and elsewhere purchased from many of the soldiers, for a mere trifle, their original land warrants. Other soldiers took actual titles and permitted their land afterward to be sold for taxes. Many outright forgeries of land warrants, assignments and fraudulent conveyances were executed and recorded. As a consequence land titles were a fruitful source of litigation extending over a period of many years.

The importance of the Military Tract as an inviting place for settlement was early recognized. In fact, it commanded so much attention from those in position to know the territory personally, that one Nicholas Biddle Van Zant, connected, at the time the surveys were being made by Major Long, with the General Land Office at Washington, compiled and published a book for the information and guidance of those contemplating becoming settlers of this region. The book is entitled, "A Full Description of the Soil, Water, Timber and Prairie of Each Lot and Quarter Section of the Military Tract Lands Between the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers." The data for the book, as the author states, was derived from notes made from personal observation on occasion of two trips to the Territory, from verbal conversations of those residing therein and the voluminous report and original field notes of Major Long, under whose direction the surveys of the Military Tract were made. This book was of great value to the early settler seeking a location in this region. The information contained in it is just what its title purports it to be, and an examination of its contents discloses that the compilation was done with marvelous accuracy as to the lands embraced in Fulton County, at least. A succinct and remarkably accurate description of every quarter section and fractional lot of land in the Military Tract is given. These descriptions state the character and quality of the soil, whether it is timber, prairie or swamp land, fit or unfit for cultivation, describes the topography and any special feature peculiar to the particular parcel. Fulton County is reached in the book at township 3 north, range 1 east (now Astoria Township), and the meridian line is then followed up. As illustrations of the character and reliability of the information contained in the compilation, a few instances will be cited:

At township 5 north, range 1 east (now Farmers Township) the first reference is made to Spoon River. The author says that this river passes through the northeast corner of the township, and that it is a beautiful stream, navigable for craft of considerable burden. When it is considered that this was before the days of steam navigation and that Spoon River was subsequently actually used for navigation, this opinion of Van Zant is amply verified.

In township 6 north, range 1 east (now Harris Township) the author says that on a branch emptying into Spoon River near where Sections 22, 23, 26 and 27 corner is a fine quarry of grit stone. A glance at a map of the county will disclose that this branch is Barker's Creek, and that the quarry of grit stone is where the Leaman quarries flourished in after years.

In township 7 north, range 1 east (now Lee Township) the author says that that part of Spoon River passing through Sections 11, 12, 13 and 14 contains great quantities of stone coal on its banks. This is around the vicinity of Babylon. Also, that "Spoon River will not admit of navigation by crafts of much size farther up the river than Section 14. Above that point it is full of rapids and falls." Furthermore, that "it appears to be a very fine river for fish, and its banks are lined with huge rocks of superior quality for grindstones." All of which is quite true.

Aside from Spoon River the other streams in the county mentioned by name by Van Zant are Otter Creek and Copperas Creek.

In 1823 Lewis C. Beck published a "Gazetteer," in which he says that "the situations most favorable for settlement in Pike County (which included Fulton at that time) are on Otter Creek, Crooked Creek, Spoon River and in the vicinity of Fort Clark and Fort Edwards" (the former being on the present site of the city of Peoria, and the latter on the site of Warsaw.) This "Gazetteer" also says of Otter Creek that "it is navigable for a short distance and there are several advantageous situations for settlement on it. There is a mill-seat about ten miles from its mouth."

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

DAVIDSON—MRS. OSSIAN M. As has been observed, for more than a full century before the establishment of the Military Tract reserve, of which Fulton County is a part, the soil of this county was not unfamiliar to the white man. It was not, however, until after the setting apart by the National Government of the military bounty lands in Illinois by the act of Congress and the issuing of patents for the same to the soldiers of the War of 1812, that the trend of western emigration was directed to Fulton County. Diligent search fails to reveal, with definite certainty, the date of the first patent issued by the Government of the United States for lands located within the present boundaries of Fulton County, or of the lands so conveyed, but the first conveyance, chronologically speaking, so far as the records disclose, was dated May 6, 1817, which was very soon after the surveys of the Military Tract were completed.

FIRST PERMANENT SETTLEMENT.—On June 16, 1818, the United States, by letters patent, conveyed to one Benjamin Brown, a "late private in Foster's company of the Sixth Regiment of Infantry, of the late army of the United States, the southeast quarter of Section 10, in Township 4 North, and Range 3 East, of the Fourth Principal Meridian, in the Territory of Illinois, in that tract appropriated for military bounties by act of Congress, passed May 6, 1812." On August 8th of the same year, "late Private Benjamin Brown" sold this land to one Henry Thomas, of Plattsburg, N. Y., who, a few days later—to-wit, on August 16th—disposed of same to one Samuel Wiggins, of the city of New York. The consideration for conveyance of the land to Wiggins was $65. Wiggins shortly afterwards came West and took up a residence at St. Louis in the Territory of Missouri, where he was engaged in merchandising and other mercantile pursuits. Some of his descendants still reside in St. Louis, being of the family which established the now celebrated "Wiggins Ferry." On March 28, 1820, Wiggins conveyed this land to John Eveland, of Madison County, State of Illinois, for the sum of $150. John Eveland was a Kentuckian by birth, but for some years prior to purchasing this quarter-section of land, had been a resident of Madison County, where a brother and other relatives were living. Shortly after purchasing the land Eveland, with his wife, Betty, and his large family of children, came in from Madison County to settle on it and carve out a home of his own. The advent of the family of John Eveland, consisting of himself, Betty, his wife, several sons (among them John, Henry, Mace, William and Amos) and several daughters, making a dozen or more persons all told, marked the beginning of the first permanent settlement by white men of what was, three years thereafter, organized as Fulton County. At this time Pike County embraced what is now Fulton County and all that part of Illinois lying north of the Illinois River.

FIRST SAW MILL.—Prior to the coming of the Evelands, however, a firm by the name of Craig & Savage, with headquarters variously stated as being at St. Louis and other points on the lower Mississippi River, built a saw mill on Otter Creek a short distance from where it empties into the Illinois River, and at a point near what was afterwards known as West Point, one of the "deserted villages" of the county. The motive power was the turbulent waters of Otter Creek. This was in 1818, two years before the coming of the Eveland family. Operations had scarcely begun when a sudden rise of the waters of Otter Creek swept this first business enterprise in the Military Tract down the Illinois River and to oblivion. The Craig of this firm of Craig & Savage is reputed to be none other than the Captain Thomas E. Craig, who, during the War of 1812, so ruthlessly destroyed the French village at Peoria (La Ville De Maillet), and that the Savage of the firm was the owner of Savage's Ferry, plying across the Mississippi near the mouth of the Missouri River, where Captain Craig took the innocent prisoners, and where they were afterwards liberated by orders from the Territorial Governor. But this cannot be authenticated, and what casts a measure of doubt as to its verity is the fact that Captain Craig was a resident of Shawneetown, over on the Ohio River, in Gallatin County. It is quite possible, however—and might be said to be even probable—that he and Savage, whom he had met six years prior thereto, afterwards entered into a partnership arrangement to engage in the business of running a saw mill in the valuable timber lands of the vicinity of Otter Creek. Market was accessible by way of the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, and there were none to dispute the right to freely take of the timber.

THE STORY OF DR. DAVIDSON.—When the Evelands arrived in Fulton County in the spring of 1820, they found two white men residing therein. One was a peculiar individual by the name of Dr. Davidson (or Davison), who was living alone in a cabin on the south bank of Spoon River in what is now Isabel Township, and almost directly opposite the land on which the Evelands settled. The other was a man by the name of Statler, who resided in a cabin boat on Spoon River, and was likely a trapper from some one of the various trading posts on the Illinois River. Statler soon departed, never more to appear again in history; but Dr. Davidson remained a few years until the influx of settlers made his mysterious hermit life impossible. A most singular individual, desiring absolute divorcement from all contact with his fellowmen, he has been the enigma of local history, the subject of legends and the hero of romances. Even his correct name is unknown. At the urgent solicitation of the supporters of Ossian M. Ross for the office of Sheriff, he participated in the first election after its organization held in Fulton County, on April 14, 1823, and the Judge of the Probate Court, Hugh R. Coulter, records the receipt of the returns of that election, but the names of those participating nowhere appear. The original poll-books were in the possession of Harvey Lee Ross, late of Oakland, Cal. As this is the only occasion when Dr. Davidson is reported to have taken part in public affairs, his full name can not be authentically given, though the county records state that one William T. Davidson was selected as one of the first panel of Grand Jurors of the county, and this has been taken as evidence that his name was Dr. William T. Davidson. The fact that there were only thirty voters at the first election held and that therefore eligible jurors were not abundant, lends substantiation to the claim. The likelihood of there being another Davidson in the county at this time, October, 1823, is extremely doubtful.

To the "Fulton Democrat," published at Lewistown, Mrs. Ossian M. Ross, during her lifetime, related that:

"At the time of the birth of Abner E. Barnes, Mrs. Barnes being very sick, they sent for Dr. Davison, he being the only physician within hundreds of miles. He sent back word that he would not go for the whole 'Military Tract.' Then Mrs. Ross and Mrs. Eveland were sent for him, and by hard persuading they induced him to make the visit, which they thought saved the life of Mrs. Barnes. Mrs. Ross says he lived in a very small cabin, but all within was neat, and from the appearance of things, such as fine bed-clothing, his own clothing having been the best and fashionably made, and himself an educated man, he had once seen the bright side of life; but from what they could gather from the few remarks he had dropped, he has been disappointed by the lady he had expected to make his partner for life, which so depressed him and made him lose all confidence in the human family, that he resolved to push westward so far that he would have no more associations with civilized man. Mrs. Ross also says that, from the clearing of his garden, the advancement of his bushes and shrubbery he had set out, his flowers, etc., all convinced her that he had been living there for years, which undoubtedly makes Dr. Davison the first settler of Fulton County. In 1823, when Ossian M. Ross ran against Abner Eads for Sheriff, the excitement was high, as it was a selection either from Lewistown or Peoria; and as there were less than thirty voters, every vote told perceptibly in the result. In this excitement Dr. Davison was persuaded to go to Lewistown and deposit his first and only vote. He at that day took dinner with Mr. Ross and remarked at the table how strange it was to eat a meal of victuals with his fellowmen, which was something he had not done for many years. He purchased the walnut boards which were sawed in the short-lived saw mill on Otter Creek, in 1818, for his own coffin. He was very much annoyed by the encroachment of civilization, and about the year 1824 he quietly gathered his few effects, with the material for his coffin, and paddled his canoe up the Illinois River, since which time his old neighbors have not heard from him." ("Chapman's History of Fulton County," p. 194.)

Chapman's History, on page 195, adds:

"The late Dr. Reuben R. McDowell thought Dr. Davison to be an uncle of his wife's (of which there is no doubt) and made extended inquiries into the history of his life; but as the Doctor has left no record of his research, we can only obtain such information on this point as a few of the old settlers obtained from him. He came from Pennsylvania to this far western country, hoping, like the red men around him, never to be disturbed by the encroachment of the whites or civilization. It is told by some that, through the disappointment he met with by the young lady whom he loved, he lost confidence in the human family and desired to have no more intercourse with any one. Another tradition is left to us as a reason for his adopting the life of a hermit, which is this: He joined the regular army and was sent into the Southern States. Being insulted while an officer of rank he challenged the officer who offended him to fight a duel. The affair of honor was fought and the Doctor killed his opponent. Through remorse, as much as the fear of the law, he sought the wilderness of the banks of Spoon River. We are also told that, instead of having purchased lumber for his coffin, he made one by digging it out of a log. Hon. L. W. Ross, of Lewistown, and Henry Andrews, of Canton, remember seeing Davison, and say he was a fine-looking man. He left in 1824 and went to Starved Rock, on the Illinois River, near Peru, where he died. He kept a journal, which was sent back to two sisters he had in Pennsylvania. This is all, after a careful research, that we are able to learn of Dr. W. T. Davison."

In his "Early Pioneers and Events" Harvey Lee Ross, son of Ossian M. Ross, who came as a lad of four years with his father to Fulton County in 1824, and who knew Dr. Davidson personally, says:

"Dr. Davison, who had settled on the south side of Spoon River a little west of the Eveland place, lived alone and was called 'the hermit.' I could never learn where he came from nor when he settled in Fulton County. He had a good, comfortable cabin and a bearing peach orchard, which showed he had lived there for several years. He was doubtless the first settler in this part of Illinois."

COMING OF THE EVELANDS.—John Eveland was a typical Kentuckian, tall, angular, well built and muscular—the ideal pioneer because of his physical strength and endurance. He was uneducated, and, like his wife Betty, could neither read nor write, but signed his name with a mark. He had the proverbial pioneer's hospitality, and while he did not accomplish as much as others in the organization and development of the county, John Eveland played no unimportant part in its affairs. He was a member of the first Grand Jury selected for the county, and was named by the County Commissioners as the first Treasurer of the county, but failed to qualify and permitted that honor to pass to another. Likely his inability to write and keep books had something to do with his failure to qualify. When Ossian M. Ross and family arrived in the spring of 1821, Mr. Eveland had some twenty acres of this land in cultivation and was engaged in raising stock. Of the Evelands Harvey Lee Ross says: "They came into this country from Calhoun County, making the trip up the Illinois and Spoon Rivers, partly by land and partly by water. Before leaving Calhoun County they constructed a large pirogue (a large canoe). It was hewed out of a large cottonwood tree. The length of the boat was forty feet, and it was about four feet wide. It was run by sail and also by oars. On this craft they shipped their hogs and part of their goods. These were the first hogs that were ever brought to Fulton County and were all of a red color."

December 6, 1821, Mr. Eveland sold a portion of this quarter to his son Amos. The instrument making this conveyance from Eveland to his son was acknowledged before John Shaw, a Justice of the Peace of Pike County. This was before Fulton County was created, and at this time no official capable of taking an acknowledgment to deeds and other papers resided in what are now the limits of this county. Shaw was one of the principals in the notorious Shaw-Hansen legislative contest, in the infamous Third General Assembly of this State.

In 1824 Mr. Eveland bought of Ossian M. Ross and David Gallatine the southwest quarter of Section 5, in Township 6 north, Range 4 east, which is in Buckheart Township, and there died within a few years thereafter. Many of his descendants are still citizens of Fulton County.

Shortly after the arrival of the Eveland family in Fulton County two brothers, Roswell B. and Reuben Fenner, became dwellers for a short time in the Eveland household. They were unmarried and soon erected a cabin near the present site of the Duncan mills and moved into it. Reuben afterwards married. Harvey Lee Ross says they came after the Ossian M. Ross family located in the county. From whence they came—except that they had temporarily resided farther down the State—history does not record. Roswell B. was a member of the first Grand Jury and Reuben of the first Petit Jury of the county, and their names recur again and again in the early county records. The Fenners distinguished themselves in other ways than in participating in public affairs. They were the first persons incarcerated in the public jail of Fulton County and were charged with no less a crime than murdering the newly wedded wife of Reuben. They broke jail and made good their escape, never more to be heard from.

ARRIVAL OF THE ROSS FAMILY.—During the summer or fall of 1820 Ossian M. Ross, with three companions, visited Fulton County. Mr. Ross, with his family, consisting of his wife, two sons—Lewis M. and Harvey Lee—and daughter Harriet, was residing at that time near Alton. The next spring, in April, 1821, they came to Fulton County. The editor of Chapman's "History of Fulton County" (1879) had the opportunity and did gather original data from the members then living of Mr. Ross's family and therefore the following account, incomplete in many important particulars as it is, is probably quite accurate in detail of the advent of this important family to Fulton County:

"John Eveland had scarcely got snugly settled in his new home on the banks of Spoon River ere Ossian M. Ross and family came in to be his neighbors and to wield a greater influence in molding and forming the history of the county, perhaps, than any other family that ever resided in it. Ossian M. Ross was born in New York State, August 16, 1790, and was united in marriage with Miss Mary Winans in Waterloo, N. Y., July 7, 1811. Mrs. Ross was born April 1, 1792, in Morris County, N. J. Mr. Ross was a soldier in the War of 1812 and came to this section to secure the land given him by the Government for services rendered as a soldier. In 1820 Mr. Ross, with his family, came to Alton, Ill., and in the spring of the following year (1821), with his family and a few men employed by him to make improvements, sailed up the Illinois River to Otter Creek in a keelboat. It was his intention to locate upon the southeast quarter of Section 29, Isabel Township. He, with three companions, came up from Alton the year previous (1820), explored this country and selected this place because there was a good mill-seat there. It was his intention to erect a water mill on this stream at that point, but after traveling up Otter Creek for some distance in their cumbersome keelboat, they came to a large tree fallen across the stream, which made a barrier that could not be passed over or around. These sturdy pioneers, however, were not easily turned from their course. They made preparations to saw the log into pieces and remove it. This scheme was frustrated, however, and the whole course of Mr. Ross's plans changed. A heavy rain fell during the night and in the morning the log they intended sawing was six to eight inches under water and therefore out of reach of workmen. He ran his boat stern foremost back down Otter Creek to the Illinois and up that stream to Spoon River. He entered this stream and started up its swift, swollen waters for Mr. Eveland's, intending to go on to where he owned three quarter-sections of land. They experienced the greatest difficulty in ascending this turbulent stream, made so by recent heavy rains. It consumed several days of constant hard labor to reach Eveland's. At places men were put upon the bank and with ropes dragged the boat along. This was slow motive power and known as cordelling. Then they would get hold of the overhanging limbs of trees and pull the boat in that way.

"They finally reached Eveland's, in whose cabin the party was welcomed. There they remained until his teams and stock arrived. These were brought across the country. Mr. Ross with his teams then started ahead to cut down trees and clear a road. On arriving at the end of the journey Mr. Ross jubilantly exclaimed to his family, 'We are now on our lands.' His daughter, Mrs. Steel, of Canton, who was then a little girl, quickly spoke up, 'Why, Pa, have we come all this distance just for this?' Nothing but a vast wilderness was spread out before them and the little girl expected to find something wonderfully fine, else they would not have endured all the hardships that had befallen them on their long journey. There have been many hearts made sad by the disappointment received on their arrival into this county during its first settlement, when, after traveling for weeks through an almost unbroken country the husband and father would stop his jaded team under the boughs of a large tree many miles from the nearest white inhabitant and say, 'Our journey's end is reached. This is our home; alight.' Surely, as it did to little Miss Ross, it must have seemed to the wife and little ones that they had come a long way to make their home in the wilderness among the wild beasts.

"In twenty-four hours after arrival Mr. Ross had a shelter made for his family. It consisted of poles set in the ground, tent fashion, and other poles laid across these and covered with bark. Harvey L. Ross, his son, says he distinctly remembers helping carry bark to cover this shanty. Mr. Ross immediately set about building a log cabin, which was located where Major Newton Walker's residence now stands. He was so well pleased with the location of his land that he determined to lay off a town, which he did, and secured for it the county-seat for the county of Fulton when it was organized."—Chapman's "History of Fulton County," page 196.

Harvey Lee Ross, who came to Fulton County as a lad of four with his father's family, has described the advent to this county of the Ross family thus:

"But in going into the early history of the county I will be compelled to allude, very often, to some of my relatives who were prominent as early settlers. So I will commence with my father, Ossian M. Ross, who, with my mother, my brother Lewis, my sister Harriet and myself, moved from Seneca County, N. Y., and settled on the quarter-section of land just north of the present city of Lewistown in April, 1821.

"My father was an officer in the War of 1812 and drew a half-section of land; he settled upon one of the quarters and on the other quarter he laid out the present city of Lewistown. The family left New York in the fall of 1819 and went to Pittsburg, Pa., where he bought a small keelboat, on which he loaded his household goods and other properties and went down the Ohio River to its junction with the Mississippi River, where Cairo now stands. Here the boat was frozen up in the ice and we remained prisoners there until the next spring. Then we went up the Mississippi River to where the city of Alton now stands. There we left the boat and went back into the country about ten miles near the town of Edwardsville, where my father rented a farm. He bought some horses, cows and other stock and during the summer of 1821 (1820) raised a good crop. After the crops had been secured we went back to Alton, where the keelboat had been left in charge of the ferryman, and loaded upon the boat all our household goods and family and started up the river to our future home.

"Our hired men drove the wagon and stock across the country. Before we started into the wilderness of Fulton County my father went to St. Louis and laid in a supply of flour and salt, guns and ammunition. He also bought a surveyor's compass and chain. He went to the Surveyor General's office in St. Louis and got a sectional map of the Military Tract, which embraced all the land lying between the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers, and extended as far north as to include Bureau and Henry Counties. He also got from the Surveyor's Office a copy of the field notes of the survey of the Military Tract that was made about three years before. These field notes were of very great importance to him and to many other early settlers in the county, as they enabled them to locate their lands by means of well-established townships and section corners, all clearly described in these field notes. Without them it would have been impossible for the people to have accurately located their land.

"The little keelboat that we came up the river in was propelled by a sail, when the wind was fair, and at other times by oars and poles. We were two weeks coming from Alton to the mouth of Spoon River at Havana, and the team and stock that were driven across the country arrived a few days later. We ran the boat up Spoon River to where John Eveland was living. He had settled there a year before.

"My father, on examining his map, found that his land was about six miles north of Mr. Eveland's place. He took some of his men, and with his compass, chain and field notes, he had no trouble in locating his land. The family stayed in the boat until the team and stock arrived, and then we all moved onto our land. Father selected the quarter-section north of Lewistown for our home, and built a log house on the east side of a little creek that ran through the land and near to a fine, large spring of water. The location was some sixty rods northeast of Major Walker's present residence. We lived there four years, and then built another log house where Major Walker now lives. We stayed there until the fall of 1828, and then moved to Havana. Three years after my father sold the farm to Mahlon Wilians, my mother's brother, for $1,000.

"The only white inhabitants in that part of the country at that time was John Eveland, who lived on the north side of Spoon River about a mile above where Waterford now stands, and Dr. W. T. Davison, who lived on the south side of the river a little higher up."

The Ross family is closely identified with the development of the county, as will be revealed as events are recorded. Therefore, it is meet that a statement of the achievements of its several distinguished members should be given in this volume. The highest encomiums that can be paid to them are to be found in the unblemished records of Fulton County's history.

With the Ross family, consisting at that time of Mr. and Mrs. Ross, two sons and one daughter, came four other persons, Jacob Niman, a blacksmith, and his wife; a carpenter named Enos, and a shoemaker named Zweltin. History doth not record what became of the carpenter and the shoemaker, but Niman, the blacksmith, opened a shop, the first in the county, in Lewistown, and there died about 1825. His good wife made her home with the Ross family until they removed to Havana. She was a capable tailoress and was the professional midwife of the settlement. She likewise died at Lewistown.

OTHER EARLY COMERS.—In the same year (1821) that Ossian M. Ross became a permanent settler in Fulton County, but a few months later, David W. Barnes, a married man, with his wife, two brothers (Theodore and Charles Sergeant), and William Blanchard located in the vicinity of the mouth of Spoon River, but remained there only a short time until Barnes and the Sergeants joined the Ross settlement at Lewistown, and shortly thereafter removed to the vicinity of Canton and became the first settlers of that township. Blanchard returned to Ft. Clark (Peoria), from whence they all came, and was there married to one Betsey Donohue, this marriage being the first celebrated in the then newly formed county of Peoria in 1825. Blanchard subsequently moved to Woodford County, and there died. The Sergeants, Barnes and Blanchard were all soldiers of the War of 1812, and were possessed of land warrants under the act establishing the Military Tract. The Sergeants were from New Hampshire and were discharged from service at the close of the War of 1812 at Detroit, Mich. Here they fell in with Barnes and Blanchard. These four men determined to seek the lands to which the Government had given them title. They walked from Detroit to Ft. Wayne, in Indiana Territory, thence came down the Wabash River in a row-boat to Vincennes, and from that point walked across the Territory of Illinois to St. Louis, in the Territory of Missouri. At St. Louis they joined a keel-boat crew under Captain Jude Warner. This boat was loaded with provisions, salt and a seine, and its destination was Ft. Clark (Peoria), where the seine was to be used in Peoria Lake, and the salt to preserve and prepare the fish thus caught for market. This boat reached Ft. Clark on June 10, 1819. After reaching Ft. Clark they crossed the river and erected a habitation on a clearing which had been made by the early French settlers, and proceeded to farm in the limited manner that the circumstances necessitated. Investigation as to the location of the lands conveyed to them by the Government patents which they held, revealed that these lands were located on what is now known as Big Creek, in Buckheart Township, and were not very promising from a pioneer standpoint. These lands are now very valuable as coal lands, and the Big Creek Coal Company mines are partly located upon them. Therefore, instead of locating on these lands, they settled elsewhere, as indicated.

When the Sergeants, Barnes and Blanchard reached Ft. Clark, in June, 1819, they found there the first strictly American settlement at that point. The settlement consisted of seven persons, some of whom were destined to participate in the organization and development of Fulton County. It has been heretofore mentioned that Abner Eads and John Hersey had traversed Fulton County on horseback early in 1819, en route from a point on the lower Illinois near Naples to Ft. Clark, to join their companions who went up the river in a boat. Of these seven persons, Abner Eads became the first Sheriff of Fulton County; Seth Fulton and Josiah Fulton and S. Daugherty were members of the first petit jury, which was returned for the October Term of the Circuit Court in 1823. Daugherty has the additional distinction of having been fined $10 in the County Court for selling whisky to the Indians at Peoria—this being the first fine for the illicit dispensation of intoxicating liquors in the county of Fulton. He was a wild and reckless fellow and did not long remain in this section of the country. Of the other three, Hersey, the "New York Dutchman," left the country shortly, and J. Davis and T. Russell seem never to have engrafted their personality on the history of the county. Mr. Eads during the summer returned down the river and brought Mrs. Eads and three children back with him to the Ft. Clark settlement.

The Ft. Clark settlement, after the arrival of Captain Warner's passengers, consisted of fourteen persons, all told, and of them Seth Fulton has said:

"We were about as happy a little circle as has ever lived in Peoria. We were isolated, completely shut out from the rest of mankind, it is true. We heard but little from the outside (inside?) world, and the outside world heard but little from us. But little was known at that time about the Ft. Clark country. There were no roads, nor steamboats, nor mail routes, nor communications of any kind, so that in point of fact we were as much a community by ourselves as if our cabins had been built on an island in the middle of the sea. Our postoffice was St. Louis, and we never got our mail; those of us who got any doing so only when we went there for supplies—and, then, our letters cost us twenty-five cents, and we couldn't muster that much money every day.

"Mrs. Eads was duly installed as housekeeper, and the rest of the company, except Hersey, who didn't remain long, boarded with her. It was a pretty hard winter on us, but we managed to get through. Bread-stuff gave out and we had to fall back on hominy-blocks and hominy. It was a coarse kind of food we got this way, but it was a good deal better than none, and served to keep hunger away. Hominy-blocks went out of use long ago, and there are thousands of people in Peoria County that never saw one; but they were a blessing to hundreds of the pioneers of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, and, in fact, to the first settlers of the entire country, and were the means of keeping many of the pioneers and their little ones from starving to death."

With the opening of the season in 1822, immigration to what is now embraced in Fulton County, began in earnest, and it would be impossible to follow the incoming of these pioneers from that time forward by name.

Harvey Lee Ross rather sarcastically says: "In 1822, a great many people began to move into Fulton County, but most of them came from Sangamon County. They had come from Eastern and Southern States with the intention of settling in the Military Tract, but the country was full of Indians—indeed, they could be counted by the thousands. The Sangamon River was about the dividing line between the white settlers and the Indians; so these men were afraid to venture over. But after Mr. Eveland and my father and a few other families had lived among the Indians a year or two, and none of them had been butchered or scalped, the people began to come to the country in great droves.”

Suffice it to say, that each played his part—be it little or much—in the development of the country.

FULTON COUNTY CENSUS.—Under the Constitution of 1818, providing for a census of the white inhabitants of the State every fifth year (Section 31, Article II, Constitution 1818), a census of the various counties of the State was taken every ten years, midway between the decennial censuses by the Federal Government. In 1825 Hugh C. Coulter was appointed by the County Commissioners to take the census of Fulton County, which was created by act of the Legislature in 1823, but he seems never to have made a return. If he did neither the Fulton County records nor the State records disclose the fact. The first record of the population in Fulton County is furnished by the Federal census of 1830, showing the population at that time to be 1,841. The State census of 1835 showed a population of 5,917, a rapid increase (more than 300 per cent.) within five years. In 1840 the population was 13,142 and in 1845, 17,155.

CHAPTER IX.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

POLITICAL CHANGES THROUGH WHICH THE ILLINOIS COUNTRY PASSED—ILLINOIS COUNTRY THE FIRST POLITICAL ORGANIZATION—FAILURE AS A GOVERNMENTAL SYSTEM—ST. CLAIR COUNTY ORGANIZED IN 1790—SUBSEQUENT CHANGES—FULTON COUNTY TERRITORY BECOMES A PART OF ST. CLAIR COUNTY IN 1800—IT SUCCESSIVELY PASSES UNDER THE JURISDICTION OF MADISON AND PIKE

COUNTIES—FULTON COUNTY FORMALLY ORGANIZED IN 1823, AND UNTIL THE ORGANIZATION OF PEORIA COUNTY IN 1825, EXERCISED JURISDICTION OVER THE NORTHERN PART OF THE STATE, INCLUDING COOK COUNTY—FIRST OFFICERS AND OTHER ITEMS OF POLITICAL HISTORY—LOCATION OF THE SEAT OF JUSTICE AT LEWISTOWN.

What was known as the “Illinois Country” in the early history of the Middle West is so vaguely defined that it is difficult to say that Fulton County was really embraced within the popular conception of that term. It is probable that the Illinois Country extended no farther north than the Illinois River. Fulton County was embraced, however, in the Middle Indian Department as defined by act of the Continental Congress, July 13, 1775, and of this Department Benjamin Franklin and James Wilson, of Pennsylvania, and Patrick Henry, of Virginia, were appointed Commissioners. After the conquest of the western territory by General George Rogers Clark during the Revolutionary War, the territory from which Fulton County was formed became a part of the Colony of Virginia, which colony General Clark represented in his western expedition. The Legislature of Virginia created out of the territory conquered by Clark, the County of Illinois, embracing besides the present State of Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin and the portion of Minnesota lying east of the Mississippi River.

The act creating the new county declared: “That all the citizens of this commonwealth who are already settled, or shall hereafter settle, on the western side of the Ohio River, shall be included in a distinct county, which shall be called Illinois County”—implying that all this region was regarded as part of the commonwealth of Virginia, and more distinctly applied to “citizens” than to territory. Colonel Todd organized the local government with a seat of government at Kaskaskia under the jurisdiction of Virginia. The people of Illinois County were permitted to elect Judges for their primitive courts to be held at Cabokia, Kaskaskia and Prairie du Rocher, but the Illinois County government was never effectually established, and soon ceased to exist, save in name. For several years there was a sharp controversy between a number of the States—especially Virginia, New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut—on the question of jurisdiction over this territory, the first claiming such jurisdiction by right of conquest, the second by virtue of Indian treaties, and the others by right of their charters as colonies from the British crown, extending their jurisdiction indefinitely westward from the Atlantic coast. Finally, after extended negotiations and the adoption of several resolutions on the subject by Congress, in 1784, the portion of the region northwest of the Ohio River and south of the forty-first parallel of latitude, was ceded by Virginia to the General Government, and similar cessions were made by Massachusetts and Connecticut in 1785 and 1786, respectively, of the territory north of that claimed by Virginia. After the acceptance by Congress of the deed of cession by Virginia, on March 1, 1784, a committee was appointed, of which Thomas Jefferson was Chairman, to prepare a plan of government for the western territory, but beyond the adoption by Congress of a resolution on April 23d of that year, authorizing the organization of this region into States by the people, in the meantime, empowering Congress to exercise authority over the same for local government by such means as "might from time to time be taken," nothing was accomplished. By the failure of Congress to act on this line the new territory was left practically without a governmental system until three years later, when the far-reaching Ordinance of 1787 was adopted, organizing the "Territory of the United States Northwest of the River Ohio," and under it, on February 1, 1788, General Arthur St. Clair was appointed Territorial Governor, and Marietta, in the present State of Ohio, became the first Territorial capital.

Geo. J. Baylor

On March 1, 1790, Governor Arthur St. Clair visited the Illinois Country, and under date of April 27th, following, issued an order organizing the county of St. Clair, embracing the region south of the Illinois River to the Ohio, and from the Mississippi on the west to a line on the east, extending from the mouth of the Little Mackinaw (in what is now Tazewell County) to Fort Massac on the Ohio, the county being divided into three districts, with Cahokia, Kaskaskia and Prairie du Rocher as the seats of justice. As, under this organization St. Clair County extended no farther north than the Illinois River, the territory now embraced in Fulton County did not come within its limits. The eastern part of Illinois then constituted a part of Knox County of the Northwest Territory. In 1795, by proclamation of Governor St. Clair, Randolph County was organized from the southern part of St. Clair County, the northern, eastern and western boundaries remaining unchanged. By act of Congress, passed in 1800, Indiana Territory was organized with Post Vincennes as the capital and embracing the portion of the Northwest Territory west of the present State of Ohio, the Illinois Country thus becoming a part of the new Territory, and by order of Territorial Governor William Henry Harrison, the region embraced in the present State of Illinois was divided into two counties, Randolph and St. Clair, the northern boundary of the latter being extended to the Canada line, and including the region within the present State of Wisconsin and part of Michigan. This arrangement brought the territory now embraced in Fulton County within the limits of St. Clair County, which was continued until 1809, when by act of Congress, passed February 3d of that year, the Territory of Illinois was created out of the western part of Indiana Territory, its northern limit extending to the British possessions. Ninian Edwards, of Kentucky, became Governor of the new Territory, but the county organization remained unchanged until September 14, 1812, when, by order of Governor Edwards, Madison County was created from the northern part of St. Clair County, its area extending from the northern boundary of St. Clair to the British possessions.

Under this arrangement Fulton County became a part of the new county, and was a part of Madison County when John Eveland, the first settler to make it his permanent home, arrived in the county in 1820. The seat of government of Madison County was at this time Edwardsville, named for Governor Edwards, and has so continued ever since. In 1821 the County of Pike was organized and included all the territory north of the middle of the Illinois River and north of the middle of the South Fork, which is now known as the Kankakee River. The county seat of this territory was Cole's Grove, now in Calhoun County, but was subsequently moved to Atlas. Ossian M. Ross, of Fulton County, acted as one of the Commissioners to fix the seat of justice for Pike County by act of the Legislature December 20, 1822. Mr. Ross was also one of the three members of the first County Commissioners' Court of Pike County.

Fulton County was organized by act of the Legislature January 28, 1823. It originally embraced that triangular part of Schuyler County lying between the Fourth Principal Meridian and the Illinois River and south of the line between Towns 2 and 3 North, also four in the southern tier of Knox County (Nine North), and Trivoli and Elmwood Townships, Peoria County. The legal description said: "From the intersection of the Fourth Principal Meridian with the Illinois River, thence up the middle of said river till intersected by the range line between Ranges Five and Six East; thence north with said range line to the line between Townships Nine and Ten North; thence west with said town line to the Fourth Principal Meridian; thence south to the beginning." The county was named in honor of the inventor of the steamboat, Robert Fulton. Who is responsible for the suggestion of the name is nowhere disclosed.

The unorganized territory to the north and east of the Fourth Principal Meridian was temporarily attached to Fulton County for purposes of government. It was in this manner that Chicago, Peoria and all the north part of the State became subject to the county government of Fulton County. A part of the territory embraced in the present counties of Schuyler, Peoria and Knox was actually included in Fulton County territory, as above stated, but the rest of the territory was attached for governmental purposes only. The act creating the county appointed John Totten, H. R. Coulter and Stephen Chase as Commissioners to meet at the residence of David W. Barnes on April 1, 1823, to locate a seat of justice for the county, "taking into consideration the convenience and accommodation of the people, the health and eligibility of the place and the future population of said county." An election was called to take place the second Monday in April, 1823, at the house of Ossian M. Ross for the election of one Sheriff, one Coroner and three County Commissioners. The act likewise provided that "it shall be the duty of the Circuit Clerk of said county to give fifteen days' notice of the time and place of said election, and, in case there shall be no Clerk in said county, it shall be the duty of the Recorder to give said notice." The act creating Fulton County combined it with Pike County as a senatorial district, and with Pike and Greene for the choice of Representatives. It was made a part of the first judicial district of the State. At this time the Circuit Clerks were appointed by the Circuit Court, and Hugh R. Coulter was named for this office by Judge John Reynolds. On February 13, 1823, the Legislature likewise named Mr. Coulter as the Probate Judge of the county, and on the 18th of the same month he was named as Notary Public by the Legislature. He was likewise named as a Justice of the Peace.

It was the duty of the Governor to name a County Recorder under the Constitution of 1818, and Governor Coles, on February 13, 1823, sent to the State Senate the name of John G. Lofton, of Greene County, to be Recorder of Fulton County. It must be remembered that the records of Fulton County had yet to be made, as the county was unorganized. Legal papers and instruments concerning lands in the county up to this time had been filed at the county-seat of Madison County, and subsequently at the county seat of Pike County. Governor Coles was not in very good favor with the General Assembly owing to his position on the slavery question, which was being agitated at that time. The Senate promptly turned down the nomination of Mr. Lofton as Recorder for Fulton County and passed a resolution demanding the names of the persons who had been recommended to the Governor for that office. The Governor evidently considered this an invasion of his rights, and, instead of gratifying the hostile Senate, he responded by sending in the name of Paschal P. Enos for the place on February 18th. This nomination of the Governor was likewise promptly turned down. Senator Stillman, of Sangamon County, a supporter of Coles' administration, on behalf of himself and others, presented a protest against the act of the Senate in demanding the names of persons recommended to the Governor for the office of Recorder of Fulton County, and the haughty and imperious Senate immediately disciplined Senator Stillman and his co-protestors, Senators Kinkade, of Wayne County, and Caldwell, of Greene and Pike (of the last of which Fulton at that time was a part), by appointing a committee of three to see if these Senators had not committed a breach of privilege in the protest. After due deliberation and consideration the committee reported that the language of the Stillman-Kinkade-Caldwell protest had been so modified by the protestants as not to offend the dignity of the Senate. Even this report, together with the revised protest, did not soothe the injured feelings of the grave and reverend Senators, but a more comprehensive revision was required by them in order to make the protest sufficiently meek and lowly in its language to pacify the imperious law-makers. Fulton County was, therefore, without a Recorder for the time being. Hugh R. Coulter, the general utility man, acted in that capacity, however, until the convening of the Legislature in 1824, when John G. Lofton, the original nominee of Governor Coles, was again named by him, and the Senate, having changed somewhat in personnel and become mollified in spirit, permitted the name to stand, and he was therefore confirmed.

The cause of this change of heart on the part of the Senate was, no doubt, the election held in the August previous, at which a proposition to call a convention for the revision of the State Constitution with the avowed purpose of establishing slavery in the State of Illinois, had been voted on and decided adversely to the majority controlling the General Assembly of 1822-23, which was decidedly pro-slavery. A full account of the question involved is given elsewhere. It may be of interest, however, to say that the Representative from Pike (which included Fulton County), was Nicholas Hansen. He was first seated in a contest for the seat made by John Shaw, but was afterward ousted by the Legislature one day later because he did not vote with the majority on the slavery question, and his vote was needed in the pro-slavery cause. This act is one of the darkest pages of the legislative history of the State, and is fully treated in the "Encyclopedia" part of this work. Hansen was returned to the Legislature at the election following, and his seat was again contested by Shaw, and Hansen was again seated. In this contest Ossian M. Ross and Hugh R. Coulter, of Lewistown, were witnesses before the Legislature. In this same Legislature (1824-25) Thomas Carlin, who represented Fulton, Greene, Morgan and Pike Counties in the Senate, had his seat contested and the result was that it was declared vacant. At a special election afterward held Carlin was re-elected to the Senate and was afterward elected Governor of the State. At this session Peter Wood was named for Public Administrator for Fulton County on January 12, 1825, and on the same day Hugh R. Coulter was re-elected Judge of the Probate Court. On January 11, 1825, the names of Jacob Ellis, Jeremiah Smith, Reuben Fenner and Peter Wood were recommended by the House of Representatives as Justices of the Peace of Fulton County and confirmed by the Senate.

At this same session the boundaries of Fulton County were reduced to the present limits by the creation of Schuyler, Peoria and Knox Counties. To Schuyler was given the triangular tract formed by the fractional three townships lying south of the line between Towns Two and Three North. To Peoria was given the two townships lying east of the line between Four and Five East and Seven and Eight North, and to Knox was given the four townships lying north of the line between Towns Eight and Nine. The question as to whether Peoria should have or Fulton County should retain the two townships ranging Five East and Seven and Eight North was compromised by giving to each county one, and thus making the "jog" in the northeast corner of the county—Peoria getting what is now Trivoli Township and Fulton retaining what is now Orion. The Legislature in 1845 more specifically defined the boundary line between Fulton and Peoria Counties, the "Gore" on the east side of Orion Township being made a part of Fulton.

The first election in Fulton County territory was held at the house of Ossian M. Ross in Lewistown, August 5, 1822. This was nearly six months prior to the creation of Fulton County, and the polling place was simply one of the polling places for Pike County. The Judges of the election were Abner Eads, of Fort Clark (Peoria), Stephen Chase and Reuben Fenner. John Totten, after whom Totten's Prairie was named, was clerk. In this election Edward Coles received nineteen votes for Governor. John Phillips received seven and Thomas C. Brown six. The second election held in Fulton County territory, and the first election to be held in the newly organized county, was held by virtue of the act creating the county on the second Monday in April, to-wit, April 14, 1823. The boundaries of Fulton County, including the attached portions at that time, were very extended, as heretofore noted. This election was also held at the house of Ossian M. Ross. The Judges of that election were George Brown, Amos Eveland and Hazel Putman, and the clerks were Thomas Lee Ross, a brother of Ossian M. Ross, and John Totten. This was purely a local election for the selection of county officers for the newly created county. The election was called by Hugh R. Coulter, Circuit Clerk, in accordance with the act of the General Assembly. The candidates at this election were as follows: Abner Eads, of Fort Clark (Peoria), and Ossian M. Ross, of Lewistown, for Sheriff; while William Clark, for Coroner, and David W. Barnes, Thomas R. Covill and Joseph Moffatt, for County Commissioners, had no opposition. The contest, therefore, was confined to the office of Sheriff. Of this election Harvey Lee Ross says: "The voters from the northern part of the county, all northern Illinois, came down the Illinois River in canoes, then up Spoon River to Waterford, and then walked seven miles to my father's house, where the election was held. It was then the only voting precinct in all that majestic portion of Illinois, now containing fifty counties, many hundreds of cities and towns, and peopled by millions. It was a big battle like some of the later county seat fights in Fulton County. Eads and Ross had marshaled their forces from Rushville on the south to Fort Clark and Chicago on the north. The North Fultonites had brought whisky with them. In those days men could travel and hold elections without carrying much food, for they could live on game, but they could not get on without plenty of whisky. When the election was over it was found that thirty-five votes had been cast and that Eads had beaten Ross by a majority of four (one?) votes, but as it was afterward shown that, as Eads came down the river with his sixteen voters, he stopped at Town Site (now Pekin), in Sangamon County, and brought with him two bachelors (fraudulent voters), and by this means won the election."

Judge McCulloch, referring to this election in his "History of Peoria County," says: "Ross contested the election on the ground that some of those who voted for Eads were not residents of the county; that they lived on the east side of the river and, consequently, were not entitled to vote in Fulton County; and, on the further ground, that Eads could not write and was therefore incompetent to discharge the duties of the office. To obviate this difficulty, it is said, Eads took lessons in penmanship from Jesse Wood (Peter Wood?), who was a preacher and also a teacher, and in about four weeks advanced far enough to write his name. But this charge must be a slander, for it has just been seen that before that time he had been appointed and commissioned by the Governor as one of the Justices of the Peace of Pike County. Judge Reynolds, a brother (?) of John Reynolds, afterward Governor of the State, was Presiding Judge and ordered depositions to be taken as evidence in the case, and the log cabin office of John Hamlin, Justice of the Peace of Fort Clark, was selected as the place where they should be taken. His associate, H. R. Coulter, sat with him. Great excitement prevailed. The contest was not sustained and Eads was declared elected Sheriff and served his term."

Following the election of April 14, 1823, the County Commissioners' Court met at the office of H. R. Coulter in Lewistown on the third day of June, 1823. Mr. Coulter had been acting as Notary Public, Justice of Peace, Deputy Recorder, Probate Judge and Circuit Clerk, all these positions being appointive. Upon the meeting of the County Commissioners' Court he was selected as Clerk of that body. The local officers of Fulton County at this time were:

Sheriff—Abner Eads.

Clerk of Circuit Court—Hugh R. Coulter.

Probate Judge—Hugh R. Coulter.

Recorder—Office unfilled, Hugh R. Coulter acting.

Coroner—William Clark.

County Commissioners—David W. Barnes, Joseph Moffatt and Thomas R. Covill.

Upon the organization of the County Commissioners' Court a full complement of officers was appointed, as follows:

Clerk of County Commissioners' Court—Hugh R. Coulter.

County Treasurer—John Eveland (Mr. Eveland failed to qualify and Thomas L. Ross was afterward appointed).

Assessor—Thomas L. Ross.

Surveyor—John N. Ross.

J. C. Beaud Sr.

Road Commissioners—William Eads, District No. 1; Stephen Chase, District No. 2, and Amos Eveland, District No. 3.

Ossian M. Ross was named as the elisor of the Commissioners' Court to attend on the court in the absence of Sheriff Eads.

A division of the territory under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners' Court into road precincts was made. District No. 1 embraced the territory north from Ft. Clark (Peoria); District No. 2 from Ft. Clark to Spoon River, and District No. 3 from Spoon River south to the base line, which was the southern limit of the court's jurisdiction.

Thus, on June 3, 1823, the machinery of government of Fulton County was set in motion. Nothing remained unfinished on this first day of the court's session excepting to act upon the report of the three Commissioners who were appointed by the legislative act creating the county to locate the seat of justice. This was left until the following day, June 4th. Upon the convening of the court on that day the following report was submitted by the locating Commissioners:

"A Return of the Commissioners who Located the Seat of Justice for Fulton County, Illinois:

"Know all men by these presents that we, the undersigned Commissioners, having been appointed agreeably to an act of the Legislature, approved January 28, 1823, an act forming a new county out of the attached part of the County of Pike, to be called Fulton, now know ye that, whereas, we, John Totten, Stephen Chase and Hugh R. Coulter, were appointed by said act Commissioners to locate the permanent seat of justice for said county, met at the house of David W. Barnes, in said county, on the 11th day of February, 1823, and being duly sworn before Ossian M. Ross, Esq., a Justice of the Peace, we then proceeded to make inquiries and to hear proposals from inhabitants of said county; and after some time spent therein, we adjourned till the 14th inst., at the house of O. M. Ross, in said county. On the 14th we met, and, after taking into consideration the duties of our office, we agreed to, and do hereby permanently locate the seat of justice of said Fulton County on lot No. 214, in the town of Lewistown, being on the southwest quarter of Section 22, Township 5 North and Range 3 East; said town of Lewistown having been platted and surveyed by Stephen Dewey, Esq., and on the lands belonging to Ossian M. Ross, Esq., in said town aforesaid; and as a donation to said county the said Ross has this day made to the County of Fulton a good warranty deed in fee simple for the following town lots for public buildings, etc., to-wit: Lot No. 16 for burying yard, and lots Nos. 213, 214 and 215 for Court House and jail, and lots Nos. 147, 148, 149, 180, 181 and 182 for a public square, or at the disposal of the County Commissioners for public or county purposes. In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals, this 14th day of February, 1823.

"JOHN TOTTON,
"HUGH R. COULTER,
"STEPHEN CHASE."

Accompanying this return of the Commissioners was the deed to the premises described therein, by which Mr. Ross conveyed same to Fulton County. Lot 16, conveyed "for burying yard," is where the Christian Church is located, the church building being erected upon the south side of Lot 15 and the north side of Lot 16—the north side of Lot 15 being used now as a street. The present Court House grounds occupy all of Lots 213, 214 and 215, and practically all of 180, 181 and 182.

With a "seat of justice" firmly established and a full complement of officers, the Commissioners' Court was now ready for the business of legislating for the people of the county. Having a fixed seat of government it was seemly that a suitable place for meeting for the transaction of public business and also a safe place to incarcerate malefactors should be provided. Therefore, an order was entered "that a Court House be built, with a jail under the same roof, said building to be built of brick, 26x34 feet, two stories high and well finished; or a log building 24x30 feet, one and a half stories high, with a separate building for a jail 12x15 feet, built of hewed timber one foot square and well finished off, and secure in every part." The court provided for a meeting to be held July 3d, the next month, to let the construction work.

CHAPTER X.

PIONEER LIFE.

WHENCE THE EARLY SETTLERS OF FULTON COUNTY CAME—HABITS AND CHARACTER OF THE PIONEER AS DESCRIBED BY GOV. REYNOLDS—MODES OF LIVING—THE HUNTING SHIRT AND COON SKIN CAP—WOMEN'S DRESS AND OCCUPATION—EARLY HOMES—THE LOG CABIN AND ITS CONSTRUCTION—DOMESTIC FURNISHINGS—THE FOOD PROBLEM—WILD FRUITS AND HONEY—EDUCATION AND EARLY SCHOOLS—RELIGIOUS LIFE—SERVICES IN THE PIONEER CABIN AND SCHOOL HOUSE—DOMESTIC HARDSHIPS AND PLEASURES—GAMES AND OTHER AMUSEMENTS—SOCIAL LIFE OF THE YOUNG—DEATHS AND FUNERALS—EARLY MAIL SERVICE.

It is essential to the proper understanding of the growth and development of a new country that the habits and character of the first settlers be studied. The manner of men settling a new country has much to do with its future. To Fulton County came inhabitants from Virginia, the Carolinas, Kentucky and from Tennessee of the South. From the very nature of the topography of Fulton County, they sought streams and timber lands for settlements as most resembling those of their native States. From some of the New England States, from New York and from farther west in Ohio, came other settlers, but, generally speaking, at a little later period. These settlers either sought the villages for merchandising or the most appropriate farming lands. Many of the early settlers did not have Fulton County as the objective point when the journey west began. Many of them had stopped en route at other points in the State where earlier settlements had been made. Coming as they did from every section of the country, the pioneers of Fulton County, like the Illinois pioneers generally, partook of the motley customs and manners of the respective parts of the country from whence they came. As a natural result a sort of composite effect of manner and characteristics developed.

HABITS AND CHARACTER OF THE PIONEER.—The portrayal of the habits and character of the pioneer is best left to those whose knowledge is personal and intimate, and none are more abundantly qualified to speak than Governor John Reynolds. In his "History of My Own Times" Governor Reynolds says:

"They were rough in personal appearance and unrefined, yet kind, social and generous. They were hunters and stock growers, and confined to their agricultural operations—chiefly to corn and a small amount of wheat. They were brave, prompt and decided in war, yet liberal and magnanimous to a subdued foe. They showed great energy and a just spirit of enterprise in removing from 500 to 1,500 miles into a wilderness country and pioneering out the way for the future prosperity of their descendants. They were hospitable, generous and ready to share with their neighbors, or newly arrived strangers, their last loaf. They were guided by Providence, preserved amidst dangers, sickness and savage assaults; and thus became the pioneers of civilization, the founders of a free government and the extension of pure Christianity. They turned the wilderness into a fruitful field and prepared the country to sustain a more dense population, and to increase in wealth and prosperity.

"Their habits and manners were plain, simple and unostentatious. Their dwellings were log cabins of the rudest and most simple structure. Their furniture and utensils and dress were the most simple and economical possible, for such only could be obtained.

"For clothing, dressed deer skins were extensively used for hunting shirts, pants, leggins and moccasins, and the red skin of the prairie wolf, or fox, was a substitute for the hat or cap. Strips of buffalo hide were used for ropes and traces, and the dressed skins of the buffalo, bear and elk furnished the principal covering of their beds at night. Wooden vessels, either dug out or cooped, and called 'nogginns,' were in common use for bowls, out of which each member of the family ate mush and milk for supper. A gourd formed the drinking cup.

"Every hunter (and all men were hunters) carried his knife in his girdle, while not infrequently the rest of the family had but one or two between them. If a family chanced to have a few pewter dishes and spoons, knives and forks, tin-cups and platters, it was in advance of the neighbors.

"Corn was beaten for bread in the mortar, ground on a grater or in a hand-mill."

Mrs. J. C. Beam

Of a little later period another, equally well qualified as Governor Reynolds by personal knowledge of the people and times, says:

"All were common in dress, some rude in manner, few boisterous, mostly quiet in speech and slow in movement, very little refinement as now gauged, no learning from books outside of the Bible, hymn, song, music and school books. Intercourse between intimates and close relatives, frank, laconic, abrupt, good natured; with acquaintances only, and strangers, inquisitive, genial, tolerant and leading to more intimacy. These characteristics I recall of men mostly. Women conformed in milder degree to each phase of speech, manner and action.

"Necessarily labor was fairly well performed, but little love for it was displayed except by the women, whose greatest and constant toil was feeding the hungry—cooking, housekeeping, nursing the children and sick—where, as ever from first history, they were always present, active, patient, successful and pleasing. Woman's highest office, next after holy motherhood and its cares, is nursing the sick and comforting the afflicted."

MODES OF LIVING—DRESS.—Relative to the raiment worn by the early settler, Governor Reynolds says:

"The working and voyaging dress of the French masses," says Reynolds, "was simple and primitive. The French were like the lilies of the valley—they neither spun nor wove any of their clothing, but purchased it from the merchants. The white blanket coat, known as the capote, was the universal and eternal coat for the winter with the masses. A cape was made of it that could be raised over the head in cold weather.

"In the house and in good weather it hung behind, a cape to the blanket coat. The reason that I know these coats so well is that I have worn many in my youth, and a working man never wore a better garment. Dressed deer skins and blue cloth were worn commonly in the winter for pantaloons. The blue handkerchief and the deer skin moccasins covered the head and feet generally of the French Creoles. In 1800 scarcely a man thought himself clothed unless he had a belt tied around his blanket coat, and on one side was hung the dressed skin of a pole-cat, filled with tobacco, pipe, flint and steel. On the other side was fastened, under the belt, the butcher knife. A Creole, in this dress, felt like Tam O'Shanter filled with usquebaugh—he could face the devil. Checked calico shirts were then common, but in winter flannel was frequently worn. In the summer the laboring men and the voyagers of ten took their shirts off in hard work and hot weather, and turned out the naked back to the air and sun.

"Among the Americans," he adds, "home-made wool hats were the common wear. Fur hats were not common and scarcely a boot was seen. The covering of the feet in winter was chiefly moccasins made of deer skins and shoe packs of tanned leather. Some wore shoes, but not common in very early times. In the summer the greater portion of the young people, male and female, and many of the old, went barefoot. The substantial and universal outside wear was the blue linsey hunting shirt. This is an excellent garment, and I have never felt so happy and healthy since I laid it off. It is made of wide sleeves, open before, with ample size so as to envelop the body almost twice around. Sometimes it had a large cape, which answered well to protect the shoulders from the rain. A belt is mostly used to keep the garment close around the person, and, nevertheless, there is nothing tight about it to hamper the body. It is often fringed, and at times the fringe is composed of red and other gay colors. The belt, frequently, is sewed to the hunting shirt. The vest was mostly made of striped linsey. The colors were made often with alum, copperas and madder, boiled with the bark of trees, in such a manner and proportions as the old ladies prescribed. The pantaloons of the masses were generally made of deer skin and linsey. Course, blue cloth was sometimes made into pantaloons.

"Linsey, neat and fine, manufactured at home, composed generally the outside garments of the females as well as the males. The ladies had linsey colored and woven to suit their fancy. A bonnet, composed of calico or some gay goods, was worn on the head when they were in the open air. Jewelry on the pioneer ladies was uncommon; a gold ring was an ornament not often seen."

The description of the dress as given by Reynolds is really of an earlier period than pertains to the earliest permanent settlement of Fulton County. By 1820 the primitive dress as described by him had given way largely to a more modern costume, though it was a common costume and not unusual many years later. The immigration from the East had produced its effect upon the wearing apparel of the pioneer. Governor Thomas Ford, in his "History of Illinois," says that, by 1830, "the blue linsey hunting shirt, with red or white fringe, had given place to the cloth coat (jeans). The raccoon cap, with the tail of the animal dangling down behind, had been thrown aside for hats of wool or fur. Boots and shoes had supplanted the deer-skin moccasins, and the leather breeches, strapped tight around the ankle, had disappeared before unmentionables of a more modern material. The female sex had made still greater progress in dress. The old sort of cotton or woolen frocks, spun, woven and made with their own fair hands and striped and cross-barred with blue dye and turkey red, had given place to gowns of silk and calico. The feet, before in a state of nudity, now charmed in shoes of calf-skin or slippers of kid, and the head, formerly unbounneted but covered with a cotton handkerchief, now displayed the charms of the female face under many forms of bonnets of straw, silk and leghorn. The young ladies, instead of walking a mile or two to church on Sunday, carrying their shoes and stockings in their hands until within a hundred yards of the place of worship, as formerly, now came forth arrayed complete in all the pride of dress, mounted on fine horses and attended by their male admirers."

WOMEN'S DRESS AND OCCUPATIONS.—A more minute description of the style and construction of the raiment which adorned the fair sex at about this period (or a trifle later) is given thus by another writer:

"First to the frock itself: It was composed of wool, flax, cotton, or a combination of two or more of these materials, plain or plaid, relieved with all the colors of the rainbow, in part or whole, as fancy or taste dictated. For vegetable productions of prairie and forest bark had well supplied all these colors to these embryo chemists seeking color, tint and shade. And these were fast colors, too, not fading when the garments were cleansed by frequent washings.

"Their construction was usually much simpler than their ornamentation by color and stripe. A common garment for all women of working age, while working in the cabin home during the summer and mild weather, was a common, plainly-made skirt of 'rainy-day' length, with sleeves attached, made of wool, flax or cotton, put on by slipping it down over the head, fastening to its place by tying a drawstring of cord or tape fairly tight at the throat under the chin. A collar of same or kindred stuff, with plain, scalloped or stitched edge, might be added around the neck, and a like drawstring inserted all around the skirt at a point desirable to establish the waist, and tied there like the drawstring around the neck. A few buttons, when obtainable, placed below the chin down the opening in front, would complete the garment and, when properly donned, would present a fully dressed female equipped for work in her home. This was the workaday dress, or 'frock slip,' it was usually called. Other and better dresses—frocks—all women of that time usually had."

The mothers, wives and daughters of those times had plenty to keep them busy. Aside from the general housework, with scarcely anything in the way of household or cooking utensils or conveniences for them to do with, they had largely to prepare the cloth and make the garments for all the members of the family, male and female. About the only part of the wearing apparel used by the family not made by the "women folks" was the foot covering.

The common working boy or man during the summer and mild weather, in field, prairie or forest, wore no more than three articles of dress at one time. A hat of plaited rye, oats or wheat straw; shirt and pants of cotton, flax or tow-linen cloth, and all made in the simplest, plainest manner. Indeed, so uniform in style was it as to claim the title of fashion. Comfort and utility absolutely controlled material, make and fit of all male garments, whether for summer or winter, hot or cold weather, home wear or wear abroad.

Traveling or local cobblers were utilized to supply boots and shoes for males and females of all ages. Almost the sole thought controlling change of apparel for male wearers was to suit the weather and work engaged in. Attending meetings of church or other interests had little influence as to dress. Only greater cleanliness of apparel was desired when going away from home among strangers.

DWELLINGS.—Necessarily the first homes of the early settlers were of a very primitive character. Very naturally the first buildings erected in the county were of logs. Man utilizes for his immediate wants those things which are the nearest at hand to supply those wants. With an axe the Fulton County pioneer could construct his cabin home from the surrounding timber with which the country abounded, just as the pioneer with a spade made the sod-house in the short grass country of Kansas and Nebraska in later years. Each used the means present and available to the ends sought. Until after the establishment of sawmills, which was very shortly after the first settlers arrived, the axe and drawing knife dressed the flooring, as well as the walls, of the rude cabin. The log cabin as a residence lived long after sawmills were plentiful, and long after the general use of pine lumber and brick, as building material had become general. In fact, to this day in the timber sections of the county, an occasional log cabin is erected for a residence. Those constructed in later years were much superior to the first rude structures made by the first settlers. The life of the log cabin as a residence was prolonged by reason of its cheapness and utility. Properly constructed with evenly hewn edges, carefully jointed, and with lime and sand used as mortar, a house that was constructed with logs represented strength and warmth with a minimum outlay. But those that were constructed by the first settlers were not of this careful construction. The first settler went into the timber adjacent to the location fixed upon for the cabin home, cut logs of uniform size and length for sides and ends, notched them about eight inches from the end of each log on one side and "saddled" them on the opposite, and with these builded up the four walls to the height of about eight or nine feet. The gables were made by gradually building it up with succeeding shorter logs, the logs running lengthwise being used in place of rafters for the roof. The roof was constructed of clapboards, sometimes as much as four feet in length, and showing two feet to the weather. Each course of clapboards was weighted down with small poles, reaching from end to end or gable to gable. These weight poles were either fastened with wooden pins or timbers called "runs" or "knees," were laid up and down the roof between them to keep them in place. At one end of the building an opening, four to six feet in width, was made for the fireplace, and a chimney was built on the outside. This chimney was built either of sandstone, quarried in the vicinity, or—more generally with the earlier cabins—it was constructed by building up a pen of split timbers, the proper length and width and about an inch in thickness, so that they would lie compact. The interstices were filled with mud or clay mortar, and the inside cased with the same material. It was then permitted to gradually dry and finally was baked hard by the heat from the fire. If the mud or clay was of the proper constituency, the chimney was a fair success and served its purpose fairly well. The fireplace was cased with the same material, with a floor made out of flat stones or well pounded clay mortar. The walls of the building were first "cbinked" with split timbers fitting the open spaces as neatly as possible, and then the mud or clay mortar was used to fill up the crevices. This had to be renewed quite often, as it was not of such a character as to withstand the elements. Where lime and sand mortar were used the construction was more enduring. The doors were sometimes nothing more than home-tanned skins of native animals, but more generally were made of split and hand-dressed boards swung on wooden hinges. The window—there was rarely more than one room or more than one window—was a bare opening, or it was covered with greased paper for light when glass was not available. Many of the early cabin homes of Fulton County were constructed without the use of a single piece of hardware. The floors were many times bare except for skins thrown down hair side up. Generally, when not of "mother earth," they were constructed of what was called puncheons—logs split in two and dressed on the flat side with an axe or drawing knife. The furniture of the cabin was likewise largely of this rude construction. A writer has described the interior of a cabin thus:

"Upon one side was the huge fireplace, large enough to contain a back-log as big as the strongest man could carry and holding enough wood to supply an ordinary stove a week; on either side were poles and kettles, and over all a mantle on which was placed the tallow-dip. In one corner stood the larger bed for the old folks; under this the trundle-bed for the children; in another corner stood the old-fashioned large spinning wheel, with a smaller one by its side; in another the pine table, around which the family gathered to partake of their plain food; over the door hung the ever trustful rifle and powder-horn; while around the room were scattered a few splint-bottomed chairs and three-legged stools; in one corner was a rude cupboard holding the table ware, which consisted of a few cups and saucers and blue-edged plates, standing singly on their edges against the back to make the display of table furniture more conspicuous."

THE FOOD PROBLEM.—The early settler very wisely attempted to reach the new country in the early spring, so that he could put out a crop to supply himself and family with the vegetable portion of his foodstuffs for the ensuing winter season. This explains why history, on the advent of a newcomer, always begins, "In the spring of —, Mr. So and So located," etc. Otherwise the pioneer would have taken a more pleasant season of the year for changing his habitation. The native game animals supplied in a measure the need for meat, but bread and potatoes were a pressing necessity for a proper balancing of the daily diet. After the corn—which was the chief bread-producing grain of the first settlers—was grown and garnered, the reducing of it to meal was no small task without mills to grind it. Hand mills some had, and others had to rely upon improvised graters, constructed out of half-circle strips of tin, perforated in such a way as to leave rough edges, or resort to an equally primitive device in the way of a wooden mortar and pestle—mortar being a rude receptacle scooped or burned in one end of a block off the butt end of a tree, or in the tree stump itself. This receptacle held about a peck of corn. It was not long until mills of various kinds were erected, but they were of a very meager capacity, and going to mill was a long and tedious task, not only on account of the distance necessary to be traveled to reach the mills but the slowness and uncertainty of their working capacities.

Before the final departure of the Indians from this locality, at times game was rather scarce and the early settlers actually suffered for want of meat food. The return of the chief game animals (deer) followed the exodus of the red men. The deer was the mainstay of the pioneer, and the smaller game animals, like the squirrel and rabbit and the feathered flock, consisting of wild turkey, quail and prairie chicken, etc., did not suffice. With the settling up of the country the game again became scarce; but in the meantime a new game animal, indigenous to the new countries, had been produced. This was the wild hog. When settlers became dissatisfied with the country and departed for other locations, they sometimes left whole droves of hogs they had raised, mostly on mast, in the woods. Hogs from droves belonging to the settlers themselves sometimes wandered away and became wild. Hogs, like all other domestic animals, were allowed to run "at large" in the woods during the summer months, where they subsisted on acorns and nuts and other vegetation, and in the round-up in the fall they would be fat and ready for slaughter. Hogs from these droves would sometimes mingle with the wild hogs and, failing to return, would wander away and become a part of the wild drove. They were the common prey of any hunter who needed meat. These wild hogs became so numerous and so vicious as to become a positive menace to life and property. While they remained largely in the dense timber along the Illinois River, occasional droves would make incursions into the inland country, and destruction to growing crops would mark their pathway. "Chapman's History of Fulton County" tells of the effort made to rid the county of what was at one time a useful animal, but afterward a dangerous pest. "In 1838 or 1839," it says, "in Banner Township, a meeting was called of citizens of the township to take steps to get rid of wild hogs. At this meeting, which was held in the spring, the people of the township were notified to turn out en masse on a certain day and engage in the work of catching, trimming and branding wild hogs, which were to be turned loose, and the next winter were to be hunted and killed by the people of the township, the meat to be divided, pro rata, among the citizens of the township. This plan was fully carried into effect, two or three days being spent in the exciting work in the spring. In the early part of the ensuing winter the settlers again turned out, supplied at convenient points in the bottom with large kettles and barrels for scalding, and while the hunters were engaged in killing, others with horses dragged the carcasses to the scalding platforms, where they were dressed, and when all that could be were killed and dressed, a division was made, every farmer getting more meat than enough for his winter's supply. Like energetic measures were resorted to in other townships, so that in two or three years the breed of wild hogs became extinct."—Chapman's "History of Fulton County," page 223.

For fruit the early settler had to depend upon the wild berries, wild grapes, wild plums and wild crab apples. The great drawback to most of the wild fruit, so far as an edible was concerned, was the scarcity and expensiveness of sugar for sweetening. Maple sugar and sorghum syrup furnished a seasonable, if not satisfactory, substitute.

Another article of diet, and one of much commercial value as well, was wild honey. Bee-hunting was the regular occupation of not a few settlers, and the occasional occupation of nearly all the rest. As indicated by Mr. John W. Proctor, quoted elsewhere, bees-wax was one of the early commodities, along with pelts and tallow, that was taken to the markets and exchanged for merchandise for the country pioneer merchant's stock of goods. Mr. Proctor remarks upon the wonderfully unerring accuracy with which a skilled bee-hunter would follow a wild bee to its lair, even through the densest forests. Being familiar with the habits of the bee from careful study and knowing that the little winged, tireless worker flew home in straight lines, on a "bee line," as it is called, ever avoiding the loss of time or pleasure a more circuitous route might entail or give it, the bee-hunter was enabled to locate a "bee tree" with little apparent difficulty. Making a reprisal of the honey was not unattended with difficulty. In felling the tree not only a loss of much of the prize might ensue in consequence of the bursting of the hollow tree, but the bees manfully defended their home and substance.

The preparation of the food for consumption at the frugal and simple family board is a story so often told and so generally applicable to all parts of the world that it has no place in a local historical work.

EDUCATION AND SCHOOLS.—Until after 1840 there were no free schools, generally speaking, in Illinois. In Chicago, Alton, Springfield and Jacksonville, and perhaps one or two other cities, free schools had been established, but none in Fulton County. At just what date the first free school was opened in this county and where it was located would be an important fact for this history, but diligent search fails to disclose it. The early schools of the county were quasi-public in character, inasmuch as the school building was a public one and built, not by taxation, but by the freely proffered labor of the early settlers. The open woods supplied the materials. A complete description of an early schoolhouse is to be found under the title "Schoolhouses, Early," on page 470 in the "Encyclopedia" portion of this work. The first schoolhouse erected in Fulton County was in Lewistown in 1823 or 1824. It was fourteen by sixteen feet in size and was located just west of the public square, about where the present road runs north and south past the west side of the court house grounds. Its two windows were covered with oiled paper in lieu of glass. Hugh C. Coulter was the teacher. School was in session from 8 in the morning until at least 5 in the afternoon, and the rough, rude and uncomfortable seats were anything but restful for the pupils. The average tuition was from $1.50 to $2.00 for each pupil for three months. Harvey Lee Ross, who attended this first school, thus describes the school day:

"In opening the school in the morning the first class was required to read a chapter in the New Testament, and if the chapter was a short one, they would read two chapters, each scholar reading one verse. The teacher would usually consume about half an hour each forenoon in making and repairing pens and setting copies for those that were learning to write. At that time there was no such thing in that part of the country as gold or steel pens, and all the pens used for writing were made from quills plucked from the wings of a turkey or a goose. The first steel pens introduced was about the year 1831. I remember that, in 1831, my father went to St. Louis and laid in a stock of goods, and among his purchases were a half dozen cards of steel pens. They came fastened on cards, a dozen on a card. That was as many as any merchant thought it prudent to buy at one time. The use of them was strongly disapproved of by the teachers. They would tell the scholars that they would never become good writers if they learned to write with a steel pen. The price they sold at when they first came in use was twelve and a half cents a pen. The steel pens as first used were much coarser and heavier than the pens now used, and a very great improvement has been made in them since they first came in use.

"It was the custom in those times when a teacher took a school to make a statement to his scholars of the rules and regulations by which the school was to be governed; and if any of the scholars disobeyed those orders and regulations, they were to be punished, whether male or female, and it made no difference how old or how young, or how large or how small, they would all come under the same rule; and their rules, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, were unalterable. They had two modes of punishment. One was to be whipped and the other to stand upon a bench to be gazed at by the whole school until the teacher ordered them to come down."

The second school building in Fulton County was located on about the present site of the First Methodist Church in the city of Canton. The first teacher in this school was John C. Owens, and a description of the building, which did not differ materially from the early schoolhouses everywhere, is given in detail in "Swan's History of Canton," page 13.

RELIGIOUS LIFE AND TEACHING.—The spiritual side of life was in nowise neglected by these early settlers. Lack of accommodations in the way of places for worship in no way deterred those religiously inclined—and the vast majority were so inclined. If nothing else offered itself as a more convenient place, the rude cabin homes sufficed for a house of worship. The schoolhouses were constantly used for religious purposes. In the summer time campmeetings were held in different parts of the county. At first no regular services were held anywhere. Whenever a minister of the gospel arrived in a settlement, services were held. If the appointment had not been previously made, word was disseminated from neighbor to neighbor of the time and place when and where the preaching would take place. The religion was of a severe, sincere and earnest character. The preacher did not mince matters, but drew the line of demarkation between the sheep and the goats very plain, and those on the wrong side were consigned to the very hottest and most terrible torments that a limited, but eloquent, vocabulary found words to depict. Many of the early preachers, like Peter Cartwright, were well educated, but a vast majority of them were limited in the knowledge of all books save the Holy Writ. This book they generally knew almost "by heart," and they gave a literal interpretation of its language. After the establishment of church organizations and the employment of ministers regularly, many able and eminent men held pulpits in Fulton County, even in a very early day. The remoter settlements, however, had for many years to be supplied with the traveling preacher or circuitrider, and he was generally a man of more earnestness than education. A. M. Swan, evidently fully of the opinion that "old times were the best," writing nearly forty years ago, thus pictures and compares the early religious meeting with the more modern church worship:

"The pioneer preachers were no carpet knights, but men who preached from a stern sense of religious duty. They were not deterred from filling their appointments by wind or weather, but swam rivers, faced northers, and passed through the perils of the wilderness, to carry the glad tidings of the gospel to the frontiersmen. Peter Cartwright, Father Somers, Woolecroft, John M. Ellis, John G. Bergen, Jesse Williams, Ozias Hale, John Clark, and their colaborers, were some of them,—perhaps not eloquent, but all devoted, true, worthy men—men who preached a pure religion; for there was a religion in the olden time, a religion, plain, unostentatious and simple, but earnest, pure and undefiled. Plain men and plain women met together, not for display, not for frivolous discourse, but for the worship of the one Living God, whose handiwork they recognized in the forests and prairies, and whose watchful care they felt around them every day, in preserving them from the savage and from the innumerable dangers to which their pioneer life was subject. They met, not in turreted church, with stained-glass windows, to seat themselves on cushioned seats, and listen to hired musicians, who torture elegant organs by singing the words of religion to the music of the opera and ball-room. They met in the settler's cabin, coming on foot, on horseback or in rude ox-carts to the place of worship. They came, not dressed in velvets, not loaded with panniers and false hair; but plain women in moccasins, or cowhide brogans, wearing modest three-cornered handkerchiefs over plain linsey or homespun checked cotton gowns; their hair, as God caused it to grow, unadorned, combed out smooth and glossy, and hidden from view by the primitive Methodist bonnet, or the modest sun-bonnet, as our mothers wore it. The men came, not kid-gloved bewhiskered dandies, in tights and boots that were a size too small for their feet, and walking with a gait as ungraceful as disgusting; but clad in linsey-woolsey hunting-shirt, with home-braided straw hat or coon-skin cap, with their plain white home-made cotton shirt, whose wide collar was turned down over the "wamus" or hunting-shirt. They came with a firm, free step, in their moccasins or brogans; a long, graceful step that told of strength and activity.

"They met in some log schoolhouse, or in the one room of some pioneer log-cabin. Outside the door were seats for the men—logs laid lengthwise and boards or puncheons stretching across them. The yard fence was also used for seats, and no one complained at the length of the exercise either, even if compelled for two hours to perch upon the sharp edge of an oak rail during the service.

"The people have assembled. The women occupy the inside of the cabin; the men are scattered around without, awaiting the coming of the man of God. The set time has come—has been passed an hour—and the minister has not appeared. There is no impatience, however, no murmuring. They know that the good man has a long and weary ride this morning. He preached yesterday at Ross's Ferry, perhaps, or Fort Clark, and the streams are high and the roads bad. He will come—no fear of disappointment—and what is an hour or two? Presently there is a movement among the young men who have strayed to some little distance from the cabin; they begin to move up toward the door, and select their seats. Old men rise up from the fence-corners, where they have been squatting in groups, talking over the latest Indian news, and look down the road where the minister is expected to appear. Yes, there he comes, the primitive man of God; clad in sheep's-gray pants, and round-breasted blue or brown jeans coat, with its stiff, straight collar, over which appears his white shirt-collar, guiltless of starch or gloss; and all surmounted by the white fur, low-crowned hat, with its wide brim.

"And now all is still. The hum of voices, which had been incessant before, is hushed. The old men meet the preacher, and in low tones ask after his health; if he had much trouble in crossing the creek, and how he found the roads. He answers their questions with few words and passes in, shaking hands with some of the older mothers in Israel, as he hangs his hat on a projecting pin, and takes out from his capacious coat-tail pockets his well-worn Bible and hymn-book. Taking his stand in the open doorway, he gravely reads, or rather recites, that old hymn—

"'Come, let us anew our journey pursue.'

It is sung by every man and woman present, sung with voices clear and loud. No operative quavers, no voluntary, no preterition. The voices are all blending in a harmony born of devotion and which goes up a pure offering of praise to the throne of the Most High. It is a music that comes from hearts all attuned to praise, and finds its way through the open gates of heaven wooed, and heaven won.

"As the last notes die away, the good man folds his hands and prays. The prayer is simple, plain, and as of one who approaches the vestibule of Omnipotence in its solemnity; and as unfaltering in its trust as the pleading of a child with the father who, it knows, will stoop to listen. It bears up the burdens of the people; it lays before the throne the wants of every stricken soul. It must be heard if the heavens be not of brass. The prayer is closed, and again the voice of song is heard. This time it is that grand old hymn—

"Oh, when shall I see Jesus,
And dwell with him above?

"The good minister selects a chapter, as the last verse of this hymn is sung, and now he reads it; reads, not with the actor's thrilling ras and guttural tones, but in plain, earnest and solemn voice—he reads a chapter wonderfully appropriate to the condition of his congregation.

"The sermon is not an elegant production of finished oratory. It may be disconnected; it may be ungrammatical and lacking whitened polish; but it is plain, simple, direct. It came from the heart, it will reach the heart, and it is listened to with an attention never given to the polished oratory that delights in ornate chancels as its birth-place, and silk and broadcloth listeners.

"The sermon ends; the doxology and benediction have been spoken; all gather around the good minister, eager to press his hand, attentive to listen, willing to treasure up the words of exhortation, of reproof or of warning, which fall from his lips.

"This was the pioneer worship—a pure and godly worship; a worship more pure, more likely to find favor in the sight of God than the religion that displays itself in turreted and cushioned edifices born of pride, but labeled for the worship of God, that have succeeded the old log schoolhouses of fifty years ago."

HARDSHIPS AND PLEASURES.—These early pioneers had their pleasures as well as their hardships. The hunt, the chase, the horse race, the foot race, the jovial raillery at elections, school meetings, muster days, barn and cabin raisings, pitching horse-shoes and the like, afforded divertisement to the men exclusively. On the other hand, the women had quite as exclusively the quilting-bee and the carpet-rag sewing. At the gatherings of both sexes there was much freedom of a frank, harmless and open sort. A large share of the social entertainment of the young people consisted of "going to church" perhaps eight or ten miles distant, and playing forfeits and singing marching and forfeit songs at neighborhood gatherings in the winter evenings. These marching and forfeit songs have been handed down to the present generation, and there are few but know such ones as start out like this:

"We are marching down toward old Quebec,
Where the drums are loudly beating,
The A-mer-i-cans have gained the day
And the British are retreating," etc.

or

"I won't have any of your weavelly wheat,
I won't have any of your barley.
I won't have any of your weavelly wheat
To make a cake for Charley."

etc.

or

"There is a happy miller
Grinding in the mill;
As the wheel turns round
He is gaining what he will.
One hand in the hopper,
And the other in the bag;
When the wheel turns round

He cries out, 'Grab.'"

etc.

or

"The needle's eye, it doth supply
The thread that runs so true;
How many a lass I have let pass,
Because I wanted Yon."

There are dozens of these forfeit and marching songs.

It was around the family fireside in the presence of the entire family and assembled guests that these games were played. All the social gatherings were entered into with great zest. It was not unusual to go ten or even twenty miles to a ball. These gatherings, as a rule, were decorous, orderly and genteel. The dress worn was often pretentious, immigrants having brought with them from their old homes in the East or South the very best they had in the way of personal adornment, and these they wore at all such gatherings. At the balls the gentlemen sat on one side of the hall or room and the ladies on the other. Before the introduction of the cotillion, quadrille and round dances, the figures danced were "French fours," the Virginia reel, "Twin sister," "Cast off," "Money-musk," "Cheat the Lady," etc. In neighborhood gatherings, no formal invitation was required. All friends were desired and expected to be present.

Another source of amusement and cultivation, as well, that came to the young a little later was the singing school; likewise the writing school. A singing master or a writing master would get permission to use the neighborhood schoolhouse for the purpose of teaching his classes. This was always the winter season when the young people had leisure time, and, of course, at night time. The day school was thus in nowise interfered with but rather supplemented with the instruction given.

The debating society was another endless source of amusement and profit for a winter's evening. This was held at the country schoolhouse and was a beginning of the development of many able and eloquent speakers and logicians.

It was usual at all meetings at the country schoolhouse for the gentlemen to occupy the boys' side and the ladies the girls' side of the room. An unmarried gentleman, accompanying an unmarried lady to a meeting, was graciously allowed the privilege of occupying a seat alongside her on the girls' side. The young Lotharios, while very earnest, were sometimes rather rude in manner and speech to the young ladies whose favors they sought or contemplated seeking. After adjournment of an evening gathering at the country school house, be it of a religious nature or otherwise, the prevailing custom was for the young men to form a line just inside and outside the door and as the hapless young lady would pass along, or rather run the gauntlet, the young fellow seeking her company would catch her arm and ask to see her home. Generally the answer of the lady could not be heard above the shouts of laughter and derision of the other young men forming the line as spectators of the fun, or likewise on the lookout for company. Therefore it would only be known whether the young man "got the mitten" or not when the journey home was started. If the couple were seen going toward the young lady's home together, it would be known that "all was well"; if not, that his rude but really sincere attentions were not reciprocated.

A Fulton County pioneer thus describes the courtship of the young gallants and damsels of those days:

"It was fun to see those long lines of boys reaching from either side of the church door, extending sometimes to the middle of the street; and then see the girls come out and run the 'gauntlet'. First one boy and then another would sidle up to a girl, his arm bent like a V, and he would punch her in the ribs, signifying, 'Can I see you home?' Dreadful mistakes would sometimes occur in the darkness and hustle, such as mistaking a married lady for the girl desired. If the girl saucily jerked away from the boy, the whole platoon of fellows would yell, 'You've got the mitten!' and guy the poor devil till he wanted to jump into the creek. But if she grabbed his arm, he was a hero.

"In those days if you were lucky and got to go home with a girl from church, and wished to sit up with her awhile, it was the correct thing, as we reached the door, to ask that privilege, and she always said 'Yes.' You were then invited in and would find a nice fire burning, if the weather was cold, and two chairs set beside it for your use. Well, the other exercises were about the same, possibly, as now.

But he it known that you were elected for all night, for if you went home before morning, and the boys found it out, they would say, 'The old man run you out!' Well, after you had talked your store of knowledge and imaginings to an end, the young lady would show you to your bed, and then step out of doors until you could disrobe and get in—for the family all slept in the same room. Pretty soon the girl would come back into the house and slip into her own bed, usually with two or more smaller children. Usually a sheet hung up was the only partition between you and your beloved. This is one of the hardships endured by the pioneer youngsters, but it didn't seem to undermine anybody's health."

DEATHS AND FUNERALS—The habits of the pioneers were not conducive to lingering illness. The invalid either got well quickly or died. Physicians were not to be had for the first three or four years after the settlers began to arrive. The nearest regular practicing physician was at Springfield. Dr. Davidson, "The Hermit," refused to attend the sick. Medical attention was supplied by the old ladies of the settlement with suggestions as might be offered or permitted by the very wise of the men. There was an Indian doctor in the vicinity of Lewistown who was occasionally called upon to treat the sick. In case of death the stricken family had all the aid and assistance of kindly neighbors and sometimes the spiritual advice of one of the pioneer nomadic ministers, if he chanced to be in the particular settlement at the time. Many times the funeral sermon was preached long after the burial had taken place, and when it met the convenience of the minister. The casket was a rude box made from the lumber which was sawed from the timber near at hand by the settlement carpenter, and the interment took place generally on private ground, as public cemeteries were few. The first public cemetery was that at Lewistown, which is now the site of the East Primary school of that city. The second was in Canton, and was two blocks out on West Chestnut Street. Both these locations were soon abandoned as burial places. In riding over Fulton County at the present time many little spots containing the dead of the pioneer days may be seen, and on many a farm in the county is the neglected grave of a pioneer or his little child. The location of many of these graves is lost in ob-security and crops are grown thereon without the least knowledge of the husbandman that he is thus using a primitive cemetery. It was not from lack of respect for the dead that these graves were abandoned, but from the necessities of the times.

MAIL SERVICE.—The first settlers of Fulton County received very little mail. There were many reasons for this. One was that it cost twenty-five cents to get a letter out of a post-office if the postage was not paid at the mailing point, and money was scarce and hard to get; and another was that the most accessible postoffice at the time the first settler arrived was St. Louis. Mail addressed to St. Louis intended for a Fulton County citizen lay there until some one went down the river in a boat for supplies for the settlement. This sort of mail service did not tend to encourage the letter writing habit, hence the correspondence was limited largely to a few business letters. News of friends was conveyed by word of mouth, and the new-comer to the county was a source of great pleasure, owing to his knowledge of folks and things at the old home.

The topography of Fulton County has been treated elsewhere from a scientific standpoint by Dr. W. S. Strode. This word picture of its general appearance, when the first settlers arrived, is left by Harvey Lee Ross:

PRIMITIVE CONDITIONS.—“The face of the country has undergone a wonderful change in appearance, aside from the great improvements that have been made. The beautiful groves of timber then standing unmarred by the woodman's ax have been cleared away, and the handsome prairies, that were then covered with high grass and beautiful flowers, have been broken up, so it is hard to tell which was timber and which prairie land. There is one thing that has altered the looks of the country very much since it was first settled, and that is the extensive growth of young timber and brush, unknown in pioneer times. Before the county was settled by white people, prairie fires were permitted to sweep through the country every year, and they destroyed what are now called barrens and underbrush. The smooth prairies came square up to the distinct groves of large timber. In those days a man traveling through Table Grove, and many of the other groves in the county, could see a deer 500 or 600 yards away in the prairie; but twenty-five or thirty years later a deer could not be seen a distance of fifty yards because of the growth of the brush and young timber. There was no such land in the county as that now called ‘barrens.’ The groves were very beautiful before any of the timber had been cut, and before there was any undergrowth. Table Grove was one of the great landmarks of the country. It could be seen from the bluffs of the Illinois River on the east, and from Macomb on the west, and from the north for twenty-five or thirty miles. Travelers across the unbroken and almost pathless prairie were guided in their course by Table Grove and other conspicuous groves.

“Many of the streams of water, such as Big Creek, Sugar, Otter, Copperas, Cedar and Buckheart Creek, would run grist and lumber mills about two-thirds of the year. These streams and their valleys, covered by a thick growth of timber and full of wild game, were beautiful beyond words.

“The prairies were generally named after the men that first settled upon them. The prairie where Canton stands was called ‘Barnes’ Prairie’ for David W. Barnes, who was the first settler there. The prairie west of Cuba was called 'Totten's Prairie,' in honor of William Totten, who was the first settler. The prairie in Pleasant Township was named 'Rowland's Prairie,' for William and Riley Rowland, the first settlers. The prairie on the Illinois bottom, south of Spoon River, was called 'Gardiner's Prairie.' Gardiner's Prairie extended south from Spoon River about three miles, and from the bluffs to a fringe of timber within half a mile of the Illinois River, also three miles. The land was very rich, but part of it was too wet for cultivation. The prairie that joined Thompson's Lake, north of Spoon River, was about two miles square, and, with the lake, was named for Nathan Thompson. He and his son-in-law, Stephen Meeker, were the first settlers in that prairie. The prairie two miles east of Lewistown was about three miles long and from one to two miles wide, and it was called 'Smith's Prairie,' after Jeremiah Smith, who first settled there on a place that was afterward owned by Colonel Reuben Simms. It was one of the most beautiful prairies mortal eyes ever beheld. It was covered with what was called blue-stemmed grass, a most excellent grass for hay. It grew from three to four feet high, and afforded hay enough for all the people of Lewistown and the settlers for many miles in all directions. All the people had to do was to cut the hay and haul it home. At that time hay was cut with a scythe and raked together with a wooden hand-rake and pitchfork. Smith's Prairie was celebrated for the numerous plum and crab apple orchards that grew around its borders. The large red and yellow plums grew there in such abundance that people would come from long distances and haul them away by the wagonloads, and would preserve them with honey or maple sugar, which were the only sweetening we had in pioneer times. This fruit made a good substitute for domestic fruit. Fulton County was blessed above other sections of the State in its great abundance of sugar tree groves, which enabled people to make their own sugar."

DAY OF THE INDIANS.—Indians were plentiful. Their villages, consisting sometimes of not more than half a dozen families, would be found along the streams in nearly every part of the country. The women, or "squaws," as they were called, cultivated a little piece of ground, planting it with very early, but very inferior, varieties of corn and beans. These little patches of cultivated ground would generally be fenced in by driven posts with hickory bark or deer skin strips running from post to post, to keep out the ponies which were turned loose to graze. The Indian men devoted most of their time to hunting. The skins of the animals captured were sold to the traders—first to the American Fur Trading Company, which had stations along the Illinois River, and later to local traders at Lewistown, Havana and other places. The Phelps were the earliest local Indian traders. Many of the earlier white settlers carried on the business of trapping as a livelihood, and all of them had more or less skins for sale or exchange for merchandise.

ROUTES OF THE EARLY SETTLERS.—The almost invariable route to Fulton County, as traversed by the very early settler, was by way of the Illinois River. If they came from the east or the south, they came down the Ohio, up the Mississippi and Illinois. If they came from down the State towards St. Louis, as the majority of them did, they likewise used the river as a means of transportation. If, however, they came from the Sangamon Country, they came overland, crossing the Illinois River at Ft. Clark (Peoria), or at Ross's ferry at Havana. Later, however, the emigrants used the overland method of reaching the country very generally. In this way they were enabled to bring their supply of live stock with them to better advantage. The wagons used by these overland emigrants were very strong and roughly built. They were surmounted by the old Pennsylvania-fashioned beds, and were generally covered by heavy tow-linen cloth, manufactured by hand from home-grown flax. These wagons were drawn by horses or oxen and sometimes by both. Often two or three teams were required to draw the heavy loads over the unimproved roads. Of course, traveled roads and bridges were unknown at this time, and Indian trails or wagon-tracks, made by an earlier "mover," were the only guides to the fords or streams and passages over sloughs and through swamps. Often impassable sloughs and swamps compelled long detours from a direct route to the objective point. Swollen, ferryless and bridgeless streams compelled a wait of many days frequently, before the waters receded within their banks and reached a formidable condition.

FIRST SETTLEMENTS ON TIMBER LANDS.—In making a choice for a home the first settlers invariably selected timber lands. There were many reasons for this. Prairie lands were at this time an unknown quantity to these men. The eastern and southern farms, from whence they came, consisted of timber lands, upland and valley alike. Fires swept each year over the prairie, endangering life and property. Many of the prairies were low and almost marshy, and were covered with prairie grass, which grew to the height of six to ten feet and made the process of preparing the land for cultivation a very difficult problem with the crude and limited implements possessed by the first settler. A few years later, however, regular breaking plows, especially constructed for plowing this prairie land, were introduced. The necessary fencing of these prairies entailed another item of great expense. Likewise, the inaccessibility to timber for building purposes and for fuel was almost an insurmountable difficulty. On the other hand, timber locations provided ample water from running streams and springs; building material and fuel were close at hand and the woods and valleys provided shelter for such stock as was not otherwise protected from the storms of winter. Likewise the groves of trees protected the cabin home, to some extent, from the wintry blasts and summer suns.

CROP GROWING THE FIRST OCCUPATION.—Very naturally the chief occupation of the first settlers of Fulton County was that of agriculture—the raising of grain and its related occupation of stock-growing. The preparation of timber land for cultivation was a hard task. The timber had to be cut and hauled off or burned, leaving the stumps standing to plow around or to be grubbed up. The underbrush had to be cut and grubbed. Fortunately most of the “quarters” had patches of ground on them which were free from timber. The transformation of the prairie lands from a field of high grass to a state of cultivation was no small task. The first plowing usually killed the grass and other native vegetation, but the mass of tough roots decayed slowly, and required a year or two to disintegrate.

FARM IMPLEMENTS—CROPS.—The farm implements used were of very crude construction as compared to those of modern make. The breaking plow, which, by the way, was with most farmers the sole farm implement aside from an improvised single-shovel plow for cultivating the crop, consisted of a bar of iron about twenty-four inches long, with a broad share of iron or steel welded to it. The mold board was of wood, curved or carved in a rounding shape so as to roll the soil over, top-side down. In sod the corn was planted by making a hole in the sod with a stroke of an axe carried in one hand. From the other hand the grains of corn were dropped into the opening thus made, and a shuffle and pressure of the foot covered it over. A spade or a hoe was used later in planting the corn. The single-shovel plow and the hoe were the main implements for cultivating corn. Small grain, principally wheat, oats and rye, was sown broadcast and harrowed in with a brushy tree-top. The sickle and the cradle reaped the small grains, and the threshing was done with a flail or was piled upon a barn floor or a smoothed ground surface and trodden out with horses and oxen. By the latter process the grain was laid in courses on the smooth surface with the heads of the grain exposed. Riding one horse and leading another the treading process consisted in passing over the piled grain first from the butt end toward the head until thoroughly tramped and then reversing the process. After the threshing process was finished, the straw was removed and grain and chaff placed on a cloth, usually a bed sheet, and tossed in the wind to separate the grain from the chaff. The granaries used for storing the threshed grain was usually a rail pen surfaced inside with straw.

The development of the rich grain-producing lands of the Mississippi Valley soon made necessary the substitution of some more rapid and satisfactory process for cultivating the soil, reaping the harvest and preparing the product for use and market. The volume of farm produce increased to such an extent that the crude methods described no longer were capable of caring for it. With this necessity came the improved farm machinery, and likewise the improved condition surrounding farm life, until, today, it is almost ideal.

MR. AND MRS. MOSES BORDNER

Cotton was grown to some extent by the early settlers in Fulton County, and Jacob Ellis established a gin south of Independence, in Putman Township. The climate, however, was not adapted to the successful raising of cotton, and the production of cotton yarn, without machinery of any kind, was a tedious and laborious task. As soon as stocks of merchandise were brought into the country, cotton yarn—or chain, as it was called—was placed on sale and its local production ceased. The use of cotton yarn was limited, anyway, to the woof or filling of the cloth manufactured by the industrious housewife.

Flax was generally grown in the county in an early day. After the flax matured it was laid in water to rot, then was broken, shuttled and hackled, and prepared for the spinning wheel. The wheel used was a small one, whereas the one used for the making of woolen yarn was large. Out of this linen yarn made of flax, materials were made for various clothing and household necessities, and in combination with wool, or wool and cotton, linsey-woolsey cloth was manufactured. The growing of flax has long since been abandoned in Fulton County.

Apple and peach orchards were planted immediately after the settlement of the county. Dr. Davidson, Fulton County's earliest settler, had a peach bearing orchard as early as 1821. Among the varieties of apples grown in the early orchards were the Pippin, Romanite, Russets, Sheepnoses, Bellflowers and Newton, a variety of the Pippin. Grapes were very generally grown at an early day in Fulton County, and, along in the closing days of the war, huge wine-cellars were filled with thousands of gallons of choice wine. There are several small, but up-to-date nurseries in the county, confining their business to the local demand.

STOCK RAISING.—Fulton County was, from its earliest history, always regarded as a hog-raising locality. The first hogs introduced into the county were brought by John Eveland, in 1820, and were sandy in color. In after years fine hog-raising became a great industry in the county. A. C. Moore, in 1855, came to Canton Township from Butler County, Ohio. Previous to coming to Canton he had been engaged for a number of years in breeding hogs. He brought with him from Ohio his choicest stock, and immediately established himself as a breeder of Poland China hogs. The advent of Mr. Moore was the beginning of fine hog-raising in Fulton County, and, in fact, in Central Illinois. The success attending Mr. Moore's efforts produced a desire on the part of others to engage in the same business, until now the farmer of Fulton County is not content unless his hogs are of the choicest selection. Mr. Moore's arrival in Fulton County did more to improve the breed of hogs in Central Illinois than any other single factor.

The raising of cattle and feeding the same for the general market did not develop in Fulton County until a much later period than the raising of hogs. The reason of this was very natural, for the dealers did not buy the farmers' dressed beef as they did the dressed pork. It was not until after the large packing-houses in Chicago and elsewhere were established and transportation facilities improved, that any concerted effort was made on the part of the farmers to breed, raise and feed cattle for market. With the establishment of these large packing-houses for the handling of beef cattle, came the development of the business of breeding cattle in Fulton County. It has now reached a point of great perfection, and there are a number of very fine herds in the county. The cattle-breeding business has not reached that volume, however, which the natural advantages of the county seem to justify. There have been one or two attempts to establish creameries and cheese-making factories in the county, but these efforts have not been crowned with success; and, today, Fulton County is very low on the list of dairy productions of the State. One of the causes of this is that it is too remote from any large central market. In recent years, however, the farmers are devoting more attention to the production of milk-producing animals, and are supplying themselves with outfits that aid in the making of butter, but the sale is confined largely to local demands. There are no regular dairy farms at this time in Fulton County outside of those belonging to the milk dealers that limit their business to supplying the local demands of adjacent cities.

The breeding of horses has likewise been confined almost wholly to the farmers. There are no well equipped stock-breeding farms that make a specialty of breeding fine horses at this time. The few attempts that have been made to establish such farms have proved inglorious failures. The farmers themselves, however, have undertaken and have succeeded in building up a profitable business of raising horses for the general market. The classes of horses produced are largely confined to heavy draft and road horses for carriage purposes. Thirty-five or forty years ago the Highies (George and Morrell), of Canton, and others were producing fast horses that commanded attention all over the United States. "Governor Sprague," "Little Fred" and other Fulton County horses are more than traditions in all the principal racing centers. These racing horses were confined to trotters and pacers. The breeding of running horses was never a Fulton County industry. In later years, however, the breeding of fast horses has not brought fame to any of Fulton County's breeders, though there are still maintained limited stables for the breeding of racing and fast driving animals.

CHANGES RESULTING FROM THE CIVIL WAR.—The lot of the Fulton County farmer, up to the commencement of the Civil War, was not altogether a prosperous and inviting one. As with all new countries, the settlers were generally poor, and it is said that, at the outbreak of the war in 1861, if the farm lands in Fulton County had been sold at public vendue, the sum realized therefrom would not have paid the incumbrances upon them. This was not a very encouraging result for nearly forty years of industrious application to the development of the county; but it was the ordinary history of all new countries and had been repeated before that time farther east, has been repeated since that time farther west, and is yet being repeated in many sections of the South and West today. Before 1862, owing to inadequate means of transportation and consequent low price of produce, the farmers of Fulton County had very hard times. About 1862 the effects of the Civil War began to be felt, and prices for farm produce began to increase. The building of railroad lines into the county and the inauguration of better water transportation facilities were also of great material benefit, and farmers began to make money. The Civil War improved the knowledge and intellectual condition of the farmers wonderfully. By this time mail facilities had greatly increased and, owing to the desire for news of the affairs of the nation, for the first time the Fulton County farmers generally began to take newspapers and have continued to do so, until now there is scarcely a farmer who is not a regular subscriber to one or more weeklies, and the majority of them to a daily newspaper. From a material standpoint the Civil War was a great boon to the Fulton County farmer. It not only contributed to increase the value of his produce and lands, but also was a direct incentive to the desire for knowledge of public affairs and events, which desire has never slackened, until, today, the farmers, as a class, are the best informed of the county's citizens. The general introduction of telephones to the farm-houses and the rural mail delivery, within the past ten years, have put the farmer in touch with the world on an equality with the residents of the larger cities.

As heretofore stated the three Commissioners, David W. Barnes, Thomas R. Covill and Joseph Moffatt, chosen at the election of April 14, 1823, met on the third day of June following and organized themselves as a County Commissioners' Court for the transaction of official business for Fulton County. Hugh R. Coulter was selected as Clerk of the court and O. M. Ross acted as elisor in the absence of Sheriff Eads. The business of the county was transacted by the Commissioners' Court until the organization of the county into townships in 1850, except for a short period between the election of November 6, 1849, and the April election next following. During this short time the county affairs were managed by a County Court. The three Commissioners were elected at the same time until 1838, when the law changed the term of office to three years, one being elected each year. By law the Commissioners' Court had other functions aside from the transaction of the business of the county. October 11, 1849, was the last time this court met. It adjourned in "due course." (Elsewhere will be found a list of the various Commissioners serving the county.)

Under the Constitution of 1848 the Legislature created what was known as the County Court, with a County Judge and two Associate Justices. This court succeeded the Commissioners' Court, but did not transact the business of the county very long. The first Judge of this court—and, in fact, the only Judge under that plan—was Erasmus D. Rice. The Associate Justices, or what was known as Probate Justices, were Parley C. Stearns, of Canton, and Jesse Benson, of Isabel.

At the same election, in which the officers of the County Court were elected, the question of township organization was submitted to the people, and was carried by a vote of 2,258 for to 93 against. This same question was submitted again in 1852, and the township organization plan of county government was sustained by a majority of 1,630.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.—Shortly after the adoption of the State Constitution of 1848 the adoption of township organization in Fulton County was agitated, and at the December term of the County Court in 1849, Hugh LeMasters, Henry Walker and John Bloomfield were appointed as Commissioners to formulate a division of the various townships of the county. This committee reported on February 5, 1850, as follows:

"We, the undersigned Commissioners, appointed by the County Court of Fulton County at the December term thereof, A. D. 1849, to divide said county into towns in conformity to an act of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, providing for township organization, approved February 12, A. D. 1849, having performed the duties assigned us by said act, now submit the following report:

"Commencing at the southwest corner of said county by making Township Three North, Range One East a town by the name of Astoria.

"Township Three North and Two East by the name of Lafayette.

"Fractional Township Three North, Range Three East, by the name of Kerton.

"Township Four North, Range One East, by the name of Vermont.

"Township Four North, Range Two East, by the name of Pleasant.

"All of Townships Four North, of Three East and Three and Four North, of Four East, that lie west and south of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Isabel.

"All of Townships Four North, Three and Four East, that lie north and east of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Waterford.

"All of Township Five North, One East, that lies west and south of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Farmers.

"All of Township Five North, Two East, and that part of Five North, One East, lying east of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Bernadotte.

"Township Five North, Three East, by the name of Lewistown.

"All of fractional Township Five North, Four and Five East, by the name of Liverpool.

"All of Townships Six North, Ranges One and Two East, that lie west of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Harris.

"All of Townships Six North, Ranges One and Two East, that lie east of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Cass.

"Township Six North, Range Three East, by the name of Center.

"Township Six North, Range Four East, by the name of Buckheart.

"All of fractional Township Six North, Range Five East, and all that portion of territory east of said township to the Peoria line, by the name of Utica.

"All of Townships Seven North, Ranges One and Two East that lie west of the center of Spoon River, with the exception of Sections 5, 6 and 7 in Township Seven North, Range Two East, by the name of Lee.

"All of Townships Seven North, Ranges One and Two East that lie east of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Deerfield.

"All of Township Seven North, Range Three East, by the name of Joshua.

"All of Township Seven North, Range Four East, by the name of Canton.

"All of Township Seven North, Range Five East, by the name of Orion.

"All of Township Eight North, Range One East, by the name of Union.

"All of that part of Township Eight North and Sections 5, 6 and 7 in Seven North, Range Two East, that lies west of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Ellisville.

"All of Township Eight North, Two East, that lies east of the center of Spoon River, by the name of Hickory.

"All of Township Eight North, Range Three East, by the name of Fairview.

"All of Township Eight North, Range Four East, by the name of Farmington.

"All of which is respectfully submitted by us this 5th day of February, A. D. 1850.

"JOHN BLOOMFIELD,

"Commissioners."

Under date of April 15, 1850, the State Auditor notified the then County Clerk, Leonard F. Ross, that the township names of Center, Lafayette, Hickory and Utica must be changed, as there were then existing political divisions in the State under those names. In November, at a meeting of the Board of Supervisors, acting upon this notice from the State Auditor, the name of Utica was changed to Monterey, Center to Putman, Lafayette to Woodland and Hickory to Young Hickory. The name Monterey did not meet the approval of the citizens of that township, so thirty-six of them joined in a very neatly hand-made pamphlet containing their signatures and petition, requesting that the name of Monterey be changed to that of Banner. The request was complied with, but the records show that the motion made was that the name be changed to, "Banna," clearly a clerical error.

The first meeting of the Board of Supervisors after township organization was June 10, 1850, pursuant to the legal notice convening the board. Only twenty members were present and they were as follows: George Bamford, Harris; Jesse Smith, Bernadotte; George Anderson, Kerton; N. Walker, Lewistown; Jacob Maus, Liverpool; Joseph H. Piersol, Lee; Levi H. Bradbury, Union; Nathan Veatch, Lafayette (now Woodland); John S. Jenkins, Waterford; A. G. Downing, Buckheart; H. S. Hyatt, Center (now Putman); J. Farris, Isabel; C. Jones, Joshua; George S. Curtis, Ellisville; Ira Johnson, Canton; J. H. Martin, Deerfield; Jacob Hand, Farmington.

The townships not represented at the first meeting of the board were Vermont, Farmers, Astoria, Cass, Fairview and Banner. The Supervisors elected from these townships, and who took part in subsequent proceedings of the board, were Thomas Hamer, Vermont; J. H. Kinnie, Farmers; Robert McClellan, Astoria; A. K. Montgomery, Cass; T. M. Morse, Fairview, and David Markley, Banner.

H. F. Hyatt, of Center (now Putman), was elected Chairman pro tem. By virtue of his office County Clerk Leonard F. Ross was ex officio Clerk of the board.

At this meeting of the board there was some question as to who should have the custody and control of the tax rolls of the county. The law was not, apparently, clear to the board. County Assessor Paul, who held that office by virtue of being County Treasurer, appeared before the board and asked that some disposition be made of the matter. A resolution was passed directing Mr. Paul to turn the rolls over to the various Assessors elected in the respective townships, and further resolving to hold Mr. Paul blameless for acting upon the order of the board. Thus was the machinery of the County Board under township organization started and the process of township organization completed. The number of townships, twenty-six, has not been changed to the present time.

COUNTY OFFICERS.

COUNTY PROPERTY.

COURT HOUSE HISTORY.—Fulton County is the owner at the present time of lots 213, 214, 215, 180, 181 and 182 in the city of Lewistown. These premises are occupied by the County Court House building and grounds. The county is also the owner of lots 277 and 278 in the city of Lewistown and on these premises is located the County Jail.

The first Court House was a log structure built by Ossian M. Ross for the sum of $500. The official description contained in the records of the contract, as recorded in the official proceedings of the County Commissioners' Court, is as follows:

"The size of the Court House, 26x30 feet, one and a half stories high, and built of hewn logs; a shingle roof, the shingles three feet long and well nailed on; the upper floor of puncheons to be hewed on both sides; three windows below and two above, with twelve lights of glass in each window; window shutters on each window; a brick chimney with two fire places, one below and one above; one pair of stairs to go up on the inside of said building to accommodate the upper room. The above building to be raised and the roof on so that court can be held in said house at the next term of the Circuit Court, which will be on the second Monday of October next; and to be completed by the first day of January next. One-half of the money to be paid to the contractors when the house is raised and covered, and the balance when the house is completed."

This contract was let by the County Commissioners at their July meeting, 1823. The building served the purposes of a Court House for near seven years. At the March session of the County Commissioners' Court, in 1830, it was decided that either the old Court House must be repaired or a new one erected. John McNeil was finally given a contract to erect the county's second Court House, a picture of which is given elsewhere in this work. It was a frame structure and cost the county $649 and the material in the old Court House, which was given to the contractor as a part of his compensation. Seven years was the duration of this second Court House. At the County Commissioners' Court at its March session in 1837 the following resolution was passed:

"The court being satisfied that the public interest demands, and the respectability and prosperity of the people require, the erection of a good, substantial Court House, suitable to accommodate the present and future population of the county, and the sum of $2,000 having been subscribed by the citizens of Fulton County toward defraying the expense of such a building, it is therefore ordered that a Court House be built on lots Nos. 181 and 214 in the town of Lewistown, and that said Court House be built of bricks, upon a suitable foundation of stone, and to be 40x53 feet on the ground with a projection of the roof of twelve feet, supported by four pillars of suitable material. It is further ordered that Newton Walker, John McNeil, Erasmus D. Rice, Myron Phelps and John P. Boice be appointed a committee to make a draft of the building and an estimate of the probable expense of such a building, and that they be requested to report the same to the court tomorrow morning at ten o'clock."

This committee reported the estimated cost of the structure to be $7,517. The construction of the building was delegated to Newton Walker, under whose direction the structure was erected at a cost of about $9,800. A picture of this building is given elsewhere in this work.

The building was destroyed by fire December 13, 1895, reference to which is made elsewhere. The present Court House, a picture of which appears elsewhere, was erected by the citizens of Lewistown at a cost of $40,200 and presented to the county in 1897. The county expended in equipping the building with heating plant, interior decorations, plumbing and furnishings, an additional sum of $30,000.

COUNTY JAILS.—The first county jail in the county is officially described by the records of the County Commissioners' Court as follows:

"All of hewn logs or timber, one foot square, floors and sides; one window with good iron grates; the roof to be the same as that of the Court House; a good jail door and everything else to make it a strong, substantial jail."

This building was erected by contract by Osian M. Ross for the sum of $276. It did service as a jail for about ten years. It was located upon a part of what is now the Court House square. In June, 1833, a new jail was constructed of logs at a cost of $674. Samuel Cozard was the contractor. In April, 1845, this structure was burned by one James Knott, a prisoner confined therein. Knott was the sole occupant of the jail and after liberating himself he set fire to the structure and fled to the tall timber. When it was ascertained that the jail was on fire the inhabitants of the county seat became greatly excited for fear Knott would be incinerated and were greatly surprised after breaking into the jail to find that Knott had fled the realm. He was afterward captured and told the story of his escape.

The Commissioners' Court, before deciding to erect another jail, submitted the question to the people at the August election in 1846. It was proposed to build a structure of masonry, together with a jailer's residence. The voters of the county overwhelmingly defeated the proposition, and the order directing the building of the structure was vacated by the Commissioners' Court. Fulton County was without a jail until 1850, when one was ordered by the Board of Supervisors, notwithstanding a remonstrance containing 537 names was presented requesting that the question be again submitted to the voters of the county. The majority of the members of the board considered the law mandatory that a suitable place for the detention of prisoners be supplied. This was the report submitted by a committee of three supervisors, N. Walker, of Lewistown; Jonas Rawalt, of Orion, and L. H. Bradbury, of Union. The result, after a heated contest on the board, was that a jail twenty-four feet square, at a cost of $4,214.22, was ordered erected on lot 218, in the city of Lewistown, which was purchased for that purpose. In 1867 lot 277 was purchased and added to the jail premises, and the building which is now used for a jail was constructed for the sum of $28,300. With few alterations this structure remains the same as when first erected. A complete steel interior has been provided, replacing the old cell rooms, thus making it more safe for the protection of life and the detention of prisoners.

POOR FARM.—The first Poor Farm owned by the county was the northwest quarter of Section 25 and the east half of the northwest quarter of Section 36 in Township Six North and Range Two East, that is to say, in Cass Township. On this was established the Poor House, a very incommodious structure, completed in 1848. Within three years the County Farm was abandoned as an extravagant method of caring for the poor of the county, and was sold to L. F. Ross for the sum of $1,425, the original cost of the farm. This was in 1851. In 1852 it was resolved by the Board of Supervisors to again purchase a farm and resume caring for the county poor directly, instead of letting the same to the lowest bidder. In 1854 the present farm of eighty acres was purchased. It is located about two miles southeast of Canton. The original building erected thereon has been added to and altered until it is now a very serviceable structure for the uses and purposes for which it is designed.

The County Poor Farm, on which the County Poor House is located, is the north half of the northwest quarter of Section 1 in Township Six North, of Range Four East, that is to say, on Section 1 in the Township of Buckheart.

COURTS—BENCH AND BAR.

FULTON COUNTY COURTS—JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF WHICH THE COUNTY HAS FORMED A PART—FIRST JUDGES AND JURY PANELS—LIST OF JUDGES WHO HAVE PRESIDED OVER FULTON CIRCUIT COURTS—PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS AND MODES OF APPOINTMENT OR ELECTION—FIRST LAWYERS AND JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—CANTON CITY COURT—DECEASED AND PRESENT MEMBERS OF FULTON COUNTY BAR.

When Fulton County was organized it became a part of the First Judicial District of the State, and its Circuit Court was presided over by Judge John Reynolds, afterward Governor of the State. Judge Reynolds was one of the Supreme Court Judges who, under the Constitution of 1818, did nisi prius work in the Circuit Courts of the First District. He presided at the first session of the Fulton County Court, which, according to the records, met on April 26, 1824, a year after the county was organized. Grand and Petit Jurors had been selected for the October term of 1823 by the County Commissioners' Court, but, for some reason not disclosed, no court was held until April of the next year. The first Grand Jurors selected for the term of the Circuit Court, which was to be holden in October, 1823, were the following citizens: A. C. Ransom, Joseph Ogee, Elijah Wentworth, Elijah Putman, Benjamin Seaville, Stephen Chase, John Totten, George Brown, John Eveland, Roswell B. Fenner, Thomas L. Ross, William T. Davidson, Hazel Putman, Amos Eveland, George Matthews, John Wolcott, Norman Seaville, Theodore Sergeant, David Gallatine, William Higgins, Isaac Swan, Peter Wood, Charles Gardner and James Eveland. The Petit Jurors selected for the same term were the following named citizens: Joseph Moffatt, Samuel Daugherty, John Griffin, William Eads, Aquila Moffatt, James Fulton, Seth Fulton, William Clark, David D. Harkness, James P. Harkness, Peter White, M. G. Fitch, Thomas Covill, D. W. Barnes, William Smith, John Pixley, Charles Sergeant, Reuben Eveland, A. W. Williams, Reuben Fenner, Ossian M. Ross, John L. Bogardus, Edward Carney and Isaac Eveland. Many of these jurors were from Ft. Clark, now Peoria.

The Grand Jury which was finally empaneled at the session of the first Circuit Court of Fulton County April 26, 1825, consisted of the following citizens: Ossian M. Ross, foreman; John Wolcott, David Gallatine, Jeremiah Smith, Elijah Putman, Urban Ryalds, Hazel Putman, Reuben Fenner, William Clark, Stephen Chase, James Johnson, Roswell Tyrell, Thomas Eveland, Lyman Tracy, Theodore Sergeant, Roswell B. Fenner, Joseph Ogee and Robert Brumb. The term was presided over by Judge John Reynolds.

Hugh R. Coulter had been appointed clerk of the Circuit Court, this office not being elective but appointive.

The first case on the docket was entitled

"Elias P. Avery vs. John Totten, appeal from Justice's court." Avery resided at Ft. Clark; Totten on Totten's Prairie, now in Cass Township. The entry shows, "suit dismissed, each party paying his own costs." This entry was made on April 27, 1824, the second day of the term. The next term of the Circuit Court held in Fulton County was November 10, 1825, more than a year later. It was presided over by Judge John Y. Sawyer, who had recently been appointed Judge of the newly created Fifth Circuit. Judge Sawyer was soon legislated out of office and Judge Reynolds resumed the duties of presiding in the circuit. In 1829 a redistricting was had and Fulton County was placed in the Fifth Judicial Circuit. The Judges performing duty in that circuit were Richard M. Young, John H. Ralston and Peter Lott, successively. Another change in the law placed Judges Stephen A. Douglas, Jesse B. Thomas and Norman H. Purple in the district. Under the Constitution of 1848 Fulton County was again placed in the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and its courts were presided over by William A. Minshall, Pinkey H. Walker, John S. Bailey and Chauncey L. Higbee, successively. Under the Constitution of 1870 Fulton County was placed in the Eleventh Judicial District, presided over by Chauncey L. Higbee until, under the law of 1877, it was placed in the Sixth Judicial District with three Judges presiding. Under this apportionment the following were the Judges for the district—three for each district until the reapportionment in 1897: Chauncey L. Higbee, John Sibley, S. P. Shope, John H. Williams, William Marsh, Charles J. Scofield, John C. Bagby, Oscar P. Bonney and Jefferson Orr. In the reapportionment of 1897 Fulton County was placed in the Ninth Judicial Circuit. The following is a list of the names of the Judges who have presided in this circuit since the reapportionment of 1897, viz.: John J. Glenn, John A. Gray, George W. Thompson and Robert J. Grier. The last three are the Presiding Judges of the Circuit Court at the present time.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.—Until 1829 the Attorney-General of the State, or an assistant from his office, represented the people of the State of Illinois in all prosecutions. At the first term of the Fulton County Circuit Court the Attorney-General, James Turney, was present in person. The following term John Twing was appointed pro tem. to represent the Attorney-General's office. Turney was succeeded by John Forquer. Forquer was succeeded by Ninian W. Edwards, but Edwards was never called to appear as Prosecutor in Fulton County, as the law creating the office of District Attorney to represent the people in criminal cases was enacted shortly after he assumed the duties of office. The District Attorney was the prosecuting attorney for all the Circuit Courts in the judicial circuit or district. The District Attorneys for the various successive judicial districts of which Fulton County was a part were as follows: Thomas Ford, William A. Richardson, Henry L. Bryant, William Elliott, Robert S. Blackwell, Calvin A. Warren, Harmon G. Reynolds, William C. Goudy, A. M. Craig, John S. Bailey, L. H. Waters, Thomas E. Morgan and L. W. James.

Under the Constitution of 1870 each county has elected its own Prosecuting Attorney. The first incumbent under this provision for Fulton County was Daniel Abbott, who was succeeded by P. W. Gallagher, W. M. Vandeventer, Kinsey Thomas, P. W. Gallagher again, B. M. Chipfield, B. H. Taylor and W. S. Jewell (present incumbent), successively.

The business before the Circuit Court of Fulton County was very light for many years after the organization of the county, and the court did not convene with any great degree of regularity. It was many years before important matters were brought to the attention of the court for adjustment. Petty criminal cases and appeals from the Justices' and County Commissioners' Courts and adjustments of estates took up what little attention was given the people's business by the court. It was not until the contests over land titles began that the sessions of the Fulton County Circuit Court became really important and interesting from a professional standpoint, at least.

Hugh R. Coulter holds the distinction of being Fulton County's first lawyer, though he did not follow the profession as an avocation to any great extent. He was admitted to practice law in Illinois by Judge John Y. Sawyer upon the occasion of the holding of the second term of Fulton County Circuit Court, over which Judge Sawyer presided. Among the first lawyers appearing in Fulton County Courts may be mentioned Alfred W. Caverly, of Greene County; Nicholas Hansen and John Shaw, of Pike County; Jonathan H. Pugh, of Sangamon County, and John L. Bogardus, of Peoria County. Aside from Hugh R. Coulter, W. C. Osborn, William Elliott and E. T. Warren were the very early members of the Fulton County Bar.

Ossian M. Ross and Hugh R. Coulter were both acting Justices of the Peace for Pike County before Fulton County was organized, and later were appointed for Fulton County. Among the other very early Justices of Fulton County were John Hamlin, Seth Fulton, Amherst C. Ransom and William Eads, all residing at Fort Clark; John Kinsey, residing at Chicago, and Jacob Ellis, Jeremiah Smith, George Smith, George Matthews, Reuben Fenner and Peter Wood, residing in what is now the confines of Fulton County. These Justices were appointed by the State General Assembly in 1825 or earlier.

The Constables were appointed by the County Commissioners' Court. The first persons appointed Constables were Aquila Moffatt and John Griffin, of Fort Clark, and George Matthews, John Totten and Horace Enos from present Fulton County territory, their appointments being made in 1823.

CANTON CITY COURT.—The City Court of the city of Canton was established in 1889. The Judges of this court have been R. B. Stevenson, William H. Hemenover and P. W. Gallagher, successively. The Clerks of this court have been D. W. Maple, T. L. Frazier, A. T. Atwater, Harry E. Moran and W. B. Gleason.

DECEASED ATTORNEYS.—Below is given a fairly representative list of the names of the various attorneys who, at some time in their professional career, were members of the Fulton County Bar, but who are now deceased. Some of these men spent their entire professional lives in Fulton County, while others remained but a few years at most. No attempt at classification has been made, the names being given in alphabetical order. Some of these names call attention to illustrious citizens of the State and Nation; others suggest merely the passing of an ordinary individual. Where the life of the individual has left its impress upon Fulton County history, its record has been exemplified in its proper place; therefore, it suffices to merely give the names, as follows: H. S. Austin, Jacob Abbott, John P. Boice, Floyd Brown, Thomas H. Bruner, Granville Barrere, Thomas A. Boyd, Henry L. Bryant, John S. Clendennin, Lewis Corbin, Stephen E. Carlin, John W. David, Asa Lee Davison, Caleb J. Dilworth, Henry B. Evans, Robert Farwell, William C. Goudy, Samuel A. Ghee, Frank B. Gregory, W. H. H. Haskell, George S. Hill, M. F. Hufford, James Johnson, S. Corning Judd, William Kellogg, Myron Kimball, A. G. Kirkpatrick, Thomas J. Little, Sidney V. McClung, C. J. Main, Joseph L. Murphy, Samuel B. Oberlander, George Phelps, Stephen H. Pitkins, John W. Ross, Leonard F. Ross, Lewis W. Ross, John Sharp, Henry B. Stillman, George W. Stipp, R. B. Stevenson, Washington J. Taylor, S. S. Tipton, John A. Thompson, Henry Walker, Cash Whitney, John S. Winter, H. M. Weed, Ira O. Wilkinson, A. C. Woolfolk and Frank L. Winegar.

PRESENT MEMBERS OF THE BAR.—Within the past year Hardin W. Masters, one of the most prominent members of the Fulton County Bar for many years, accompanied by his son, Thomas D. Masters, who was also his partner, removed to Springfield, Ill.; M. W. O'Hern, of Astoria, and his brother, P. T., of Lewistown, removed to Kansas City, and W. A. Babcock, of Lewistown, to Oklahoma during the last year. The following is a list of the present members of the Fulton County Bar, with place of residence:

Farmington—A. A. Luckey.

Canton—Daniel Abbott, O. J. Boyer, Warden Barrere, B. M. Chiperfield, C. E. Chiperfield, Frederick M. Grant, Jesse Heylin, Gilbert L. Miller, Frederic A. Perkins, Floyd F. Putman, Fred H. Snyder, A. E. Taff and B. H. Taylor. Judge John A. Gray, one of the Circuit Judges for the Ninth Judicial District, and Judge P. W. Gallagher, of the City Court of Canton, reside in Canton.

Lewistown—H. H. Atherton, Hohart S. Boyd, John D. Breckeuridge, A. M. Barnett, Frank Comstock, C. M. Dowd, W. S. Edwards, Lucian Gray, W. S. Jewell, L. W. James, E. W. Keefer, M. P. Rice, M. T. Robison, Harry M. Waggoner and W. C. Worley.

Vermont—John D. O'Hern and W. C. Karr.

Astoria—U. G. Butcher.

Cuba—J. C. Thomas.

POLITICAL.

FIRST ELECTION IN FULTON COUNTY—THE OSSIAN M. ROSS HOUSE THE POLLING PLACE FOR THE MOST NORTHERLY PRECINCT IN PIKE COUNTY—METHODS OF VOTING THEN BY VIVA VOCE—THE PRO-SLAVERY STRUGGLE OF 1822-24—APPORTIONMENTS FOR REPRESENTATION IN CONGRESS, AND LIST OF MEMBERS WHO HAVE REPRESENTED FULTON COUNTY—LEGISLATIVE APPORTIONMENTS—LIST OF SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES WHO HAVE REPRESENTED THE FULTON DISTRICT.

The first election ever held in Fulton County after its organization was the one called for April 14, 1823, by act of the Legislature which created the county. This election was held at the home of Ossiau M. Ross, at Lewistown, and was for the election of local officers only, who held office from the date of their election and qualification until August, 1824, the date of the next general election. Reference to this election is made in the chapter treating of the organization of the county. At the general election held the preceding August, that is to say, August 5, 1822, the most northerly voting precinct of Pike County, of which Fulton was a part at that time, was located at the home of Ossian M. Ross. At this election Abner Eads, Stephen Chase and Reuben Fenner were judges, and John Totten was clerk. Edward Coles received nineteen votes for Governor at this precinct, Joseph Phillips seven and Thomas C. Brown six. At the election held on April 14, 1823, the judges were George Brown, Amos Eveland and Hazel Putman, and the clerks were Thomas Lee Ross and John Totten. Harvey Lee Ross says in his book, "Early Pioneers and Events," written in 1898, that the original poll books of these two elections were in his possession at the time.

Under the Constitution of 1818, elections were held on the first Monday in August of the even years; therefore, the first general election held after the organization of Fulton County was on August 2, 1824—the manner of voting then being by viva voce. Unfortunately the abstracts of the election returns from the organization of the county down to 1836 are not obtainable from the county records. There are no abstracts of the election returns obtainable from the County Clerk's office from the organization of the county until 1836, and of some elections even later. Reliance for the returns from 1836 to 1878 has been had on Chapman's History. The returns subsequent to that date are to be found in the County Clerk's office, except for the years 1886 and 1896, which seem to be missing from the files and had to be obtained from private sources.

THE PRO-SLAVERY CONTEST OF 1822-24.—In the election of August 2, 1824, one of the most momentous questions ever presented to the people of Illinois for decision was then submitted. It was the question practically of whether Illinois should be a free or a slave State. Those favoring making it a slave State secured from the Legislature an act submitting to the people at this election the question of calling a convention for the purpose of amending the Constitution. On this question there were sixty-five votes cast in Fulton County. This was nearly double the vote cast at the election the year previous, and be it said to the credit of Fulton County, that only five of the sixty-five votes were in favor of calling the convention. Only one other county in the State cast fewer pro-slavery votes, and that was Edgar, which gave the pro-slavery cause but three votes. When it is considered that the majority against the convention was only 1,872 in the State, it will be seen that Fulton County did its part well. Ossian M. Ross played an important part in sustaining the anti-slavery cause in Fulton and adjoining counties. He especially was active among the voters of Fulton and Pike Counties.

There have been a few contests of the election of particular candidates filed, but in each instance the returns as made by the returning board have been sustained. There was a contest for the office of Sheriff after the first election held in the county, as detailed elsewhere.

POLITICAL REPRESENTATION.

IN CONGRESS.—At the time of the formation of Fulton County in 1823 the entire State of Illinois constituted one Congressional District, Daniel P. Cook representing the State in Congress from 1819 to 1827. He was succeeded by Joseph Duncan, who represented the State in Congress until 1833. The State was divided into three Congressional Districts by the apportionment of 1831, when Fulton County became a part of the Third Congressional District, the first election under this apportionment being held in 1832. The district then consisted of Greene, Morgan, Sangamon, Tazewell, Macon, McLean, LaSalle, Cook, Putnam, Peoria, Henry, Knox, Jo Daviess, Mercer, Warren, Hancock, McDonough, Fulton, Schuyler, Adams, Pike and Calhoun.

The list of members who represented Fulton County under this apportionment, with politics and place of residence, was as follows:

1833-35—Joseph Duncan¹ (Dem.), Jacksonville; William L. May (Dem.), Springfield.

1835-39—William L. May (Dem.), Springfield.

1839-43—John T. Stuart (Whig), Springfield.

By the apportionment of 1843 Fulton County was placed in the Fifth Congressional District, the counties composing this district being Greene, Jersey, Calhoun, Pike, Adams, Marquette (afterward Highland and now part of Adams), Brown, Schuyler, Fulton, Peoria and Macoupin.

Under this apportionment Fulton County was represented in Congress as follows:

1843-46—Stephen A. Douglas (Dem.), Quincy.

1846-47—William A. Richardson (Dem.), Rushville.

1847-53—William A. Richardson (Dem.), Rushville.

The apportionment of 1852 placed Fulton County in the Fourth Congressional District, the counties composing this district being Fulton, Peoria, Knox, Henry, Stark, Warren, Mercer, Marshall, Woodford, Mason and Tazewell.

The Representatives under this apportionment were:

1853-57—James Knox (Whig and Rep.), Knoxville.

1857-63—William Kellogg (Rep.), Canton.

By the apportionment of 1861 Fulton County was placed in the Ninth Congressional District, the counties composing this district being Fulton, Mason, Menard, Cass, McDonough, Schuyler, Brown and Pike. Under this apportionment ¹Elected Governor and resigned.

Fulton County was represented in Congress as follows:

1863-69—Lewis W. Ross (Dem.), Lewistown.

1869-73—T. W. McNeeley (Dem.), Petersburg.

In 1872 Fulton County became a part of the Ninth District, the counties composing this district being Stark, Peoria, Knox and Fulton. Fulton County was represented in Congress under this apportionment as follows:

1873-75—Granville Barrere (Rep.), Canton.

1875-77—Richard Whiting (Rep.), Peoria.

1877-81—Thomas A. Boyd (Rep.), Lewistown.

1881-83—John H. Lewis (Rep.), Knoxville.

The apportionment of 1882 placed Fulton County in the Tenth District. The counties composing this district were Peoria, Knox, Stark and Fulton, and under this apportionment Fulton County was represented in Congress as follows:

1883-87—N. E. Worthington (Dem.), Peoria.

1887-95—Philip S. Post (Rep.), Galesburg.

By the apportionment of 1893 Fulton County was placed in the Fourteenth District, the counties composing the district being Putnam, Marshall, Peoria, Fulton, Tazewell and Mason. The Representative in Congress from this district under this apportionment was:

1895-1903—Joseph V. Graff (Rep.), Peoria.

By the apportionment of 1901 Fulton County was placed in the Fifteenth District. The counties composing this district are Adams, Fulton, Henry, Knox and Schuyler. Under this apportionment Fulton County has been represented in Congress continuously since 1903 by George W. Prince (Rep.), Galesburg.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.—At the time of the organization of Fulton County out of a part of the territory then included in Pike County, Pike County, in conjunction with Greene, was represented in the Senate by George Caldwell, and Pike County was represented in the House of Representatives by Nicholas Hansen, whose seat had been contested by John Shaw. Hansen was first seated, but a day later was ousted by political intrigue and Shaw seated in his place. Reference is made to this matter in another part of this work.

Previous to the adoption of the Constitution of 1870 senatorial and representative districts were not identical, as they are now; that is to say, a county might belong to one senatorial district and to a different representative district. For instance, during the period of the Fourth General Assembly (1824-26), the senatorial district consisted of Greene, Morgan, Fulton and Pike Counties, and the representative district of Fulton and Pike. As the State grew in population the representation was changed by legislative act and representation increased and the areas represented diminished accordingly. After the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 Fulton and McDonough Counties were placed in the same Senatorial District, while Fulton became a Representative District with two members. This apportionment was made in 1854 and so remained until in 1861, when Mason, Fulton and Knox were placed in the Senatorial District together, Fulton remaining a separate representative district with two members. This condition remained unchanged until the adoption of the Constitution of 1870, when, under a special provision of that Constitution, an apportionment was made by the Governor and Secretary of State for the choice of members of the first General Assembly, thereafter to be elected. Under this apportionment Mason, Fulton and Knox Counties remained as a separate senatorial district, while Fulton remained a representative district, with three Representatives. Under the act of March 1, 1872, which put in force the principle of "minority representation," senatorial and representative districts became identical, each district being entitled to one Senator and three Representatives.

Beginning with the Fourth General Assembly (1824-26), Fulton County has been represented in the Senate and House of Representatives as follows ("G. A." standing for General Assembly):

Fourth G. A. (1824-26)—Senator, Thomas Carlin, Greene County; Representatives, Nicholas Hansen and Levi Roberts, Pike County.

Fifth G. A. (1826-28)—Senator, Thomas Carlin, Greene County; Representative, Henry J. Ross, Pike County.

Sixth G. A. (1828-30)—Senator, Henry J. Ross, Pike County; Representative, John Turney, Pike County.

Seventh G. A. (1830-32)—Senator, Henry J. Ross, Pike County; Representative, Joel Wright, Fulton County.

Eighth G. A. (1832-34)—Senator, William McCreary, Schuyler County; Representative, Samuel Hackelton, Fulton County.

Ninth G. A. (1834-36)—Senator, George W.

T. Maxwell, Schuyler County; Representative, Samuel Hackelton, Fulton County.

Tenth G. A. (1836-38)—Senator, Samuel Hackelton, Fulton County; Representatives, Asel F. Ball, Fulton County; Jonas Rawalt, Fulton County.

Eleventh G. A. (1838-40)—Senator, Samuel Hackelton, Fulton County; resigned and was succeeded by David Markley; Representatives, Jonas Rawalt and Newton Walker, Fulton County.

Twelfth G. A. (1840-42)—Senator, David Markley, Fulton County; Representatives, Lewis W. Ross and Oliver Shepley, Fulton County.

Thirteenth G. A. (1842-44)—Senator, David Markley, Fulton County; Representatives, Samuel Hackelton, Harry L. Miller, Joseph L. Sharp and Horace Turner, Fulton County.

Fourteenth G. A. (1844-46)—Senator, David Markley, Fulton County; Representatives, Harry L. Miller, Lewis W. Ross and Joseph L. Sharp, Fulton County.

Fifteenth G. A. (1846-48)—Senator, David Markley, Fulton County; Representatives, Wil-Henry S. Austin, Evan Baily, Thomas J. Little and Reuben R. McDowell, Fulton County.

Sixteenth G. A. (1848-50)—Senator, David Markley, Fulton County; Representatives, William Kellogg, Edward Sayre, Fulton County. (The election was held under an apportionment made by the Constitutional Convention of 1847 and on the issue of writs by the Governor to the Sheriffs of the respective counties based upon the acceptance of the Constitution by the people).

Seventeenth G. A. (1850-52)—Senator, Peter Sweat, Peoria County; Representatives, Thomas J. Little and Isaac Lindley.

Eighteenth G. A. (1852-54)—Senator, Peter Sweat, Peoria County (resigned and succeeded by Washington Cockle, of Peoria County); Representatives, W. K. Johnson and L. H. Bradbury.

Under the apportionment of 1854 Fulton was placed in the senatorial district with McDonough County. Fulton County still remained a distinct representative district with two Representatives. Under this apportionment Fulton was represented as follows:

Nineteenth G. A. (1854-56)—Senator, James M. Campbell, McDonough County; Representatives, William M. Cline and Amos C. Babcock.

Twentieth G. A. (1856-58)—Senator, William C. Goudy, Fulton County; Representatives, Joseph Dyckes and James H. Stipp.

Twenty-first G. A. (1858-60)—Senator, William C. Goudy, Fulton County; Representatives, John G. Graham and Samuel P. Cummings.

Twenty-second G. A. (1860-62)—Senator, William Berry, McDonough County; Representatives, John G. Graham and Samuel P. Cummings.

Under the apportionment of 1861 Mason, Fulton and Knox constituted a senatorial district, while Fulton remained a distinctive representative district with two Representatives. Under this apportionment Fulton County was represented in the General Assembly as follows:

Twenty-third G. A. (1862-64)—Senator, Albert C. Mason, Knox County; Representatives, John G. Graham and Simeon P. Shope.

Twenty-fourth G. A. (1864-66)—Senator, Albert C. Mason, Knox County; Representatives, Lawrence W. James and Timothy M. Morse.

Twenty-fifth G. A. (1866-68)—Senator, Thomas A. Boyd, Fulton County; Representatives, Caleb B. Cox and George W. Fox.

Twenty-sixth G. A. (1868-70)—Senator, Thomas A. Boyd, Fulton County; Representatives, Timothy M. Morse and John W. Ross.

Under the apportionment of 1870 Mason, Fulton and Knox remained as the Fifteenth Senatorial District and Fulton remained as a distinct representative district, but her representation was increased to three in the Lower House. Under this apportionment Fulton County was represented in the General Assembly as follows:

Twenty-seventh G. A. (1870-72)—Senator, Thomas A. Boyd, Fulton County; Representatives, John W. Ross, S. P. Cummings and Timothy M. Morse.

By an act of the Legislature, approved March 1, 1872, the first apportionment under the Constitution of 1870 went into effect, dividing the State into fifty-one districts, each being entitled to one Senator and three Representatives, and under this apportionment Fulton County was united with Schuyler in the formation of the Twenty-fifth District. Under this apportionment Fulton County was represented as follows:

Twenty-eighth G. A. (1872-74)—Senator, S. P. Cummings, Fulton County; Representatives, Stephen Y. Thornton and John A. Gray, Fulton County, and John M. Darnell, Schuyler County.

Twenty-ninth G. A. (1874-76)—Senator, Robert Brown, Schuyler County; Representatives, James De Witt, Schuyler County, and S. P. Cummings and S. Y. Thornton, Fulton County.

Thirtieth G. A. (1876-78)—Senator, Robert Brown, Schuyler County; Representatives, John A. Leeper and Charles F. Robison, Fulton County, and William T. McCreary, Schuyler County.

Thirty-first G. A. (1878-80)—Senator, Meridith Walker, Fulton County; Representatives, Charles F. Robison, Fulton County, and Hosea Davis and William T. McCreary, Schuyler County.

Thirty-second G. A. (1880-82)—Senator, Meridith Walker, Fulton County; Representatives, Joseph L. McCune and Inman Blackaby, Fulton County, and William C. Reno, Schuyler County.

Under the apportionment of 1882 Knox and Fulton constituted a senatorial district and under it Fulton County was represented in the General Assembly as follows:

Thirty-third G. A. (1882-84)—Senator, August W. Berggren, Knox County; Representatives, William H. Emerson, Fulton County, and A. S. Cnrtis and F. A. Willoughby, Knox County.

Thirty-fourth G. A. (1884-86)—Senator, August W. Berggren, Knox County; Representatives, Orrin P. Cooley, Knox County, and William J. Orendorff and Samuel P. Marshall, Fulton County.

Thirty-fifth G. A. (1886-88)—Senator, August W. Berggren, Knox County; Representatives, Orrin P. Cooley, Knox County, and Thomas Hamer and Samuel P. Marshall, Fulton County.

Thirty-sixth G. A. (1888-90)—Senator, Thomas Hamer, Fulton County; Representatives, Orrin P. Cooley, George W. Prince and James W. Hunter, Knox County.

Thirty-seventh G. A. (1890-92)—Senator, Thomas Hamer, Fulton County; Representatives, John W. Hunter and George W. Prince, Knox County, and Oscar J. Boyer, Fulton County.

Thirty-eighth G. A. (1892-94)—Senator, Thomas Hamer, Fulton County; Representatives, Stephen E. Carlin, Fulton County, and J. L. Hastings and Frank Murdoch, Knox County.

Under the apportionment of 1893 Fulton and Tazewell constituted a Senatorial District. Under this apportionment Fulton County was represented in the General Assembly as follows:

Thirty-ninth G. A. (1894-96)—Senator, Thomas Hamer, Fulton County; Representatives, Lute C. Breeden and John W. Johnson, Fulton County, and Jonathan Merriam, Tazewell County.

Fortieth G. A. (1896-98)—Senator, W. Scott Edwards, Fulton County; Representatives, Jonathan Merriam, Tazewell County, and John W. Johnson and Simon B. Beer, Fulton County.

Forty-first G. A. (1898-1900)—Senator, W. Scott Edwards, Fulton County; Representatives, John W. Johnson and Ubbo J. Albertsen and Jesse Black, Jr., Tazewell County.

Forty-second G. A. (1900-02)—Senator, U. J. Albertsen, Tazewell County; Representatives, John W. Johnson, J. N. Onion and John Hughes, Fulton County.

Under the apportionment of 1901 Knox and Fulton comprise a Senatorial District, and under this apportionment Fulton County has been represented in the General Assembly as follows:

Forty-third G. A. (1902-04)—Senator, Leon A. Townsend, Knox County; Representatives, Wilfred Arnold, Knox, and B. M. Chipfield and John Hughes, Fulton County.

Forty-fourth G. A. (1904-06)—Senator, Leon A. Townsend, Knox County; Representatives, Wilfred Arnold and Michael J. Daugherty, Knox County, and William H. Emerson, Fulton County.

Forty-fifth G. A. (1906-08)—Senator, C. F. Hurburgh, Knox County; representatives, B. M. Chipfield, Fulton County, and M. J. Dougherty and Edward J. King, Knox County.

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS.—In the Constitutional Convention of 1818 Madison County, of which Fulton was then a part, was represented by Benjamin Stephenson, Joseph Borough and Abraham Prickett, none of whom resided in the territory out of which Fulton County was formed.

In the Constitutional Convention of 1847 Fulton County was represented by David Markley, Hezekiah M. Wead, Isaac Lindley and George Kreider; also jointly with Peoria County, by Onslow Peters, of Peoria.

In the Constitutional Convention of 1862 Fulton County was represented by Lewis W. Ross and John G. Graham. This Constitution was, on submission to the people, rejected.

In the Constitutional Convention of 1870 Fulton County was represented by Lewis W. Ross and Samuel P. Cummings.

TOWNSHIP HISTORY.

FIRST SUBDIVISIONS OF FULTON COUNTY—LIST OF ORIGINAL PRECINCTS—TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION—LIST OF TOWNSHIPS AND AREA—CHANGES IN NAMES—FIRST SETTLERS—POPULATION OF EACH ACCORDING TO CENSUS OF 1900.

Prior to township organization the county was divided into voting precincts and justices' districts. The names of the districts or precincts at the time of township organization were as follows: Astoria, Vermont, Farmers, Marietta, St. Augustine, Otter Creek, Howards, Bernadotte, Spoon River, Wiley, Ellisville, Boyd, West Point, Point Isabel, Waterford, Lewistown, Centerville, Mill Creek, Fairview, Liverpool, Buckheart, Canton, Farmington, Utica, Copperas Creek and Independence. Some of these were organized under special charter as incorporated townships. Canton and Lewistown were so organized.

As has been stated Hugh LeMaster, Henry Walker and John Bloomfield were the Commissioners appointed by the County Court at the December term, 1849, for the purpose of dividing the county into townships.

On these Commissioners devolved the duty of fixing the boundaries and assigning proper names to the townships. As will readily be seen the majority of the townships retained the name of the voting precinct which had theretofore been located within the boundary of the newly formed township. The history of each individual township is so closely allied with the history of the county, and has been treated in the general history of the county to such an extent, that it will be only practical here to give such data as will not be a repetition of what has heretofore been gone over.

Each individual township has its own peculiar and individual history, which would require quite an extensive volume of itself to give in detail. (For further details of townships see Chapter XII, "Governmental—Public Buildings"). Following will be found a history of individual townships:

ASTORIA.—The township of Astoria comprises a full congressional township, legally described as Three North, Range One East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. Its name, Astoria, was derived from the town of that name located in the township. The voting precinct was also known by the same name. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 2,834, of which number 1,684 resided in the town of Astoria. The township was settled about 1830, Parker McNeil being reputed the first settler. Among other early settlers were David McNeil, Sr., and David McNeil, Jr., William Carter, Abraham Brown, William Tate, Robert McClellan, Thomas Garvin, Robert McLaren, Peter McLaren, John Williams and James Carter. The only organized municipality in the township is the town of Astoria.

VERMONT.—The township of Vermont comprises the full congressional township legally described as Four North, Range One East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. Its name, Vermont, was derived from the village of Vermont, which is located on parts of Sections 29, 30, 31 and 32 of the township. It was also the name of the voting precinct. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 2,149, of which number 1,195 resided in the village of Vermont. The first settler in Vermont was Moses Davis in 1832. In 1833 James and Joseph Crail settled in the township. Among the earliest settlers were Joab Mershon, in 1838; James Dilworth and Ezra Dilworth, in 1837; Henry Nelson, in 1836; E. Kirkbride, in 1839. Other early settlers were Isaac Cadwallader, John Evans, Stephen Lindsey, Josiah Zoll, Thomas Holmes and William Marshall. The only organized municipalities in the township are the village of Vermont and a part of the village of Table Grove.

FARMERS.—The township of Farmers comprises that part of the congressional township legally described as Five North, Range One East of the Fourth Principal Meridian, lying west of the center of Spoon River. The name, Farmers, was derived from the election precinct of that name. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,425, of which 376 are accredited to the village of Table Grove. The first settler in the township was John Barker, who located in the township in 1829, and after whom Barker's Grove, Barker's Creek and Barker's Cemetery were named. Mr. Barker was one of the early settlers of the county, having located in Fort Clark, now Peoria, in 1819. He removed to Fulton County in 1827, residing in Cass Township for two years prior to moving into Farmers. The only organized municipality in the township is Table Grove, located on part of Section 32.

HARRIS.—The township of Harris comprises all those parts of congressional townships described as Six North, Ranges One and Two East of the Fourth Principal Meridian, lying west of the center of Spoon River. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,283. The township derived its name from John Harris, who settled in the township in 1827. There are no incorporated cities or villages in the township.

LEE.—Lee Township comprises all the portions of those congressional townships legally described as Seven North, Ranges One and Two East of the Fourth Principal Meridian, lying west of Spoon River, except Sections 5, 6 and 7 in Range Two East. In this township are located no incorporated villages. The township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 948. The name Lee was given the township at the suggestion of Hugh LeMasters, one of the Commissioners to divide the county into townships. The first settler in the township was Stephen Rigdon, who located there in May, 1834.

UNION.—Union Township comprises all of the full congressional township legally described as Eight North, Range One East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,569, of which number 809 resided in the village of Avon. The township was settled in 1829 by Robert Grant and Isaac Hullick. The only incorporated village in the township is Avon, located on Section 19.

ELLISVILLE.—The township of Ellisville comprises that part of Township Eight North and Sections 5, 6 and 7 in Seven North, Range Two East of the Fourth Principal Meridian that lies west of Spoon River. The name Ellisville was derived from the village of Ellisville, which was founded by Levi D. Ellis in 1836. The voting precinct was also known by the same name. Levi D. Ellis moved into the township in 1828 and was its first settler. The population, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 539, 219 of whom resided in the village of Ellisville. Ellisville is the only organized village in the township.

YOUNG HICKORY.—The township of Young Hickory comprises that part of Township Eight North, Two East of the Fourth Principal Meridian that lies east of the center of Spoon River. It was given the name of Hickory Township by the Commissioners organizing the county into townships, but was afterward changed by the Board of Supervisors to Young Hickory, as the name Hickory had previously been appropriated by a like political division in the State. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,161, of whom 528 resided in the village of London Mills. London Mills is the only organized village in the township.

DEERFIELD.—The township of Deerfield comprises all of Township Seven North, Ranges One and Two East of the Fourth Principal Meridian that lie east of the center of Spoon River. The township was settled by Robert Reeves in 1824. The name Deerfield was given the township by the Commissioners appointed to organize the county into townships. The population of the township, according to the census of 1900, was 835. There are no villages within the township.

CASS.—The township of Cass comprises all of those portions of Townships Six North and Ranges One and Two East of the Fourth Principal Meridian lying east of the center of Spoon River. The name was given it by the Commissioners dividing the county into townships in honor of General Lewis Cass at the suggestion, it is said, of Henry Waughtel. The first conveyance of Fulton County land, so far as the records show, was Section 30 of this township in 1818, conveying among other lands

Section 30 from Aaron T. Crane to Edmond Dana. In this township was also located Fulton County's first Poor Farm. (See "County Property," Chapter XII.) The population of the township, according to the census of 1900, was 1,593, 420 of whom resided in the village of Smithfield. The county was settled in 1823 by Willinam Totten, after whom the locality known as Totten's Prairie took its name. Smithfield is the only organized village in the township.

BERNADOTTE.—The township of Bernadotte comprises all of those portions of Township Five North and Two East and of Five North and One East, lying east of the center of Spoon River. The name of the township was given it in honor of the unincorporated village of that name, which was also the name of the voting precinct in the township. The population of the township, according to the census of 1900, was 1,112. The township was settled in 1826 by William Walters. The unincorporated village of Bernadotte is located upon Section 19.

PLEASANT.—The township of Pleasant comprises the full congressional township, legally described as Four North, Range Two East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The name of the township was given it by the Commissioners who organized the county into townships. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,753, of whom 749 resided in the village of Ipava. The township was settled in 1828 by William Roland. James Roland and Riley Roland came the next year. The only organized village within the township is Ipava.

WOODLAND.—The township of Woodland comprises the full congressional township legally described as Three North, Range Two East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The Commissioners who organized the county into townships gave this township the name of Lafayette. As that name had already been appropriated by a like political division in another county in the State, the Board of Supervisors changed the name to Woodland at their November session, 1850. Nathan Veatch was the Supervisor representing the township at the time and is probably responsible for the name. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,566. Summum, an unincorporated town, is located on Sections 3 and 4.

KERTON.—The township of Kerton comprises the fractional Township Three North, Range Three East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The name Kerton was assigned to this township by the Commissioners dividing the county into townships, and was probably suggested by the name of one of its early citizens, John Kerton. Reuben and Roswell Fenner settled in the township in 1823, and were among the earliest settlers in the county. The population, according to the last Federal census, was 538.

ISABEL.—The township of Isabel comprises those parts of Townships Four North and Three and Four East of the Fourth Principal Meridian that lie west and south of the center of Spoon River. Isabel derived its name from one of the election precincts, Point Isabel, which in turn derived its name from a shipping point on the Illinois River at the mouth of Spoon River, known as Point Isabel. Isabel Township was the home of the first inhabitant of the county, Dr. William T. Davidson, allusion to whom is made elsewhere.

The population of the township, according to the census of 1900, was 780. It has no incorporated villages or towns.

WATERFORD.—The township of Waterford consists of those portions of Townships Four North and of Ranges Three and Four East of the Fourth Principal Meridian that lie north and east of the center of Spoon River. It was in this township that John Eveland, Fulton County's first actual settler, located in 1820. The population of the township at the last Federal census in 1900 was 484. Waterford was the name of an election precinct prior to township organization; also the name given a town platted in the township in 1825.

LEWISTOWN.—The township of Lewistown comprises a full congressional township, legally described as Five North and Three East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. Lewistown was the name of an election precinct prior to township organization; and also an incorporated township. The township was settled in 1821 by Ossian M. Ross, who founded the city of Lewistown in 1822. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 3,515, of whom 2,504 resided in the city of Lewistown. Lewistown, the county seat of Fulton County, is located in this township, and is the only incorporated city in the township.

PUTMAN.—The township of Putman comprises the full congressional township legally described as Six North and Three East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The township was settled in 1823 by Reading Putman, and the township derived its name from this early settler. Upon the organization of the township, the Commissioners dividing the county into townships, assigned it the name of Center, the township being the center township in the county. This name not being available the Supervisors changed it to Putman in honor of its first settler. H. S. Hyatt was the representative on the Board of Supervisors when the township was renamed Putman. The population of the township, according to the census of 1900, was 2,131, 1,569 of whom resided in the city of Cuba, which is the only incorporated village in the township.

JOSHUA.—The township of Joshua comprises a full congressional township legally described as Seven North and Three East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. It was settled in 1824 by Joshua Moore and derived its name of Joshua from this early settler. The population of the township, according to the census of 1900, was 976. There are no incorporated villages in the township.

FAIRVIEW.—The township of Fairview comprises the full congressional township legally described as Eight North and Three East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The township was settled in 1829 by Mathias Swegle. The township derived its name from the election precinct of that name and from the village of Fairview located on Section 33. The population at the last Federal census in 1900 was 1,257, of whom 501 resided in the village of Fairview.

FARMINGTON.—The township of Farmington comprises a full congressional township legally described as Eight North, Range Four East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The township was settled by Jonah Marchant in 1827, but Seth Littler had settled in the township the year previous, but had changed his residence. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 3,171, of whom

1,729 resided in the city of Farmington, which is the only organized municipality in the township.

CANTON.—The township of Canton comprises a full congressional township, legally described as Seven North and Four East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The name Canton was derived from the election precinct of that name, in which the city of Canton was located. The township was settled by David W. Barnes, Theodore Sargeant and Charles Sargeant in 1822. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 8,780, of whom 6,564 resided in the city of Canton.

BUCKHEART.—The township of Buckheart comprises a full congressional township legally described as Six North and Four East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The township was named from the election precinct of Buckheart by the Commissioners who divided the county into townships. The township was settled in 1824 by Seth Hilton and Hazel Putman. The population, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 2,329, 355 of whom resided in the village of Bryant and 481 in the village of St. David.

LIVERPOOL.—The township of Liverpool comprises all of the fractional parts of Townships Five North of Range Four and Five East of the Fourth Principal Meridian. The name Liverpool was given the township by the Commissioners, who took the name from the election precinct of Liverpool. The township was settled in 1826 by Charles Depress, Joseph Allen, John Farris and Frances Smith. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,206.

BANNER.—The township of Banner comprises all of the fractional Township Six North, Range Five East of the Fourth Principal Meridian, and all that part of the territory east of said township to the Peoria County line. The township was given the name of Utica by the Commissioners who divided the county into townships. This name having already been appropriated the Board of Supervisors changed the name to Monterey. A vehement protest was filed with the board, asking that the name be changed to Banner, which was complied with. The township was settled in 1822 by Joseph Anderson. The population, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,002.

Mrs. A. C. Brock

ORION.—The township of Orion comprises the congressional township described as Seven North and Five East of the Fourth Principal Meridian; also the "gore" lying east of Sections 24, 25 and 36 to the Peoria County line. The township was settled in 1828 by John Wolf, John Orendorff and William Ulmer. The name Orion was assigned to the township by the Commissioners who were appointed to organize the county in townships. The population of the township, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 1,268.

(For population of county by townships from 1850 to 1900, see table at the end of Chapter XXII on "Education and Libraries.")

CHAPTER XVI.

MUNICIPAL HISTORY.

CITIES AND VILLAGES OF FULTON COUNTY—CONDITIONS UNDER THE CONSTITUTION OF 1848—LIST OF INCORPORATED MUNICIPALITIES—LOCATION, DATES OF INCORPORATION AND POPULATION—VILLAGES WHICH HAVE BEEN PLATTED BUT NEVER INCORPORATED—SOME PAPER TOWNS AND DESERTED VILLAGES.

The history of the individual cities and villages of Fulton County would be in a large measure the history of the county itself. Therefore, no attempt will be made to give a detailed and consecutive history of the individual municipalities, other than such concise statement of facts as may pertain exclusively to each. The physical development of the county, as heretofore presented, must necessarily be the industrial development of the cities and villages within the county, and it would be merely a repetition of the same story to give detailed accounts of these municipalities in another form in this connection.

Many efforts have been made since the settlement of the county began to establish towns and villages within its domain which have proven more or less failures. Some promising locations, with elaborate town sites platted, with the fond hope that they were the beginning of magnificent cities, have either not reached the stage of an incorporated village or city, or else have disappeared altogether. In submitting a history of the cities and villages of Fulton County they will be presented in three classes: First, the incorporated cities and villages; second, the unorganized cities and villages; and third, the deserted cities and villages of the county.

There are fifteen incorporated municipalities in Fulton County. Three of these, Canton, Lewistown and Farmington, rise to the dignity of "cities." Though they have not done so, the villages of Cuba, Vermont and St. David could doubtless qualify as cities, each having 1,000 population or more. Astoria remains a "town," as it still retains its special charter granted before the enactment of the general law of 1872 relating to the incorporation of towns and cities. Before the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 some of the towns of the county, notably Canton and Lewistown, were organized under the then existing law relating to townships. After the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 they organized as "towns," and after the adoption of the Constitution of 1870 all of them but Astoria reorganized as cities or villages, according to the then population—it requiring a population of not less than 1,000 to become a "city."

INCORPORATED CITIES AND VILLAGES.

Following the congressional townships and beginning with Astoria Township the following are the incorporated municipalities of the county with their location, date of founding and incorporation:

ASTORIA was platted as Vienna on the northeast quarter of Section 23, Astoria Township, on June 9, 1837, for Zachariah Gilbert and Benjamin Clark, the owners. The plat of the town site consisted of seventeen blocks of ten lots each, and twelve fractional blocks of five lots each; also a public square. It was organized as a town by special charter January 24, 1839, but the name had to be changed for the reason that there was already an incorporated town of the name of Vienna elsewhere in the State. Astoria is one of nine municipalities in the State of Illinois which retain their original special charter granted prior to 1872, and it is known as the "town of Astoria." The name is derived, it is said, from that of the Pacific station of John Jacob Astor, the famous fur trader, whose company bought pelts along the Illinois River at an early day. The population of Astoria, according to the census of 1900, was 1,684.

VERMONT was platted on the southwest quarter of Section 29, Vermont Township, May 5, 1836, by James Crail, the original plat containing sixty-four lots. The name Vermont was given to the town by Mr. Crail in honor of his native State. The place was incorporated first on February 13, 1857, but reincorporated under the general law as a village September 23, 1879. The population in 1900 was 1,195.

TABLE GROVE was platted as Laurel Hill, on the southwest quarter of Section 32, Farmers Township, May 22, 1837, by Thomas H. Spicer. The town plat showed thirty-five blocks containing twelve lots each, excepting that from four blocks two lots each were taken for a public square. The official name of the village was fixed when it was organized May 17, 1881.

Prior to that time the locality had long been known as Table Grove by the pioneer settlers. The population by the census of 1900 was 376.

AVON was platted on the southeast quarter and the southwest quarter of Section 19, in Union Township, March 23, 1854, by Reverius Woods, Orlando H. Woods and Daniel N. Wright. The original plat consisted of twelve lots and some fractional lots along the railroad right of way. Avon was the name of a post-office established there before the town was laid out, and the town was incorporated by special act of the Legislature on March 8, 1867, and was reincorporated under the general law of 1872 October 6, 1873. The population, according to the census of 1900, was 809.

ELLISVILLE was platted on the northwest quarter of Section 5 and the southwest quarter of Section 32, Ellisville Township, May 17, 1836, by Levi D. Ellis, who gave the village its name. The plat consisted of 120 lots. It was organized as a village November 18, 1872. The population at the date of the census of 1900 was 219.

LONDON MILLS.—The town of London, now London Mills, was platted on the north side of the northwest quarter of Section 3, Young Hickory Township, September 16, 1851, by James Eggers. The plat contained fifty-two lots. The town was organized as a village under the general law, November 27, 1883, the name being taken from the "London" flouring mills located there on the banks of Spoon River. The population in 1900 was 528.

SMITHFIELD was platted on the northeast quarter of Section 29, Cass Township, May 29, 1868, by J. N. Smith. The derivation of the name is oblivious, though it may be presumed to have been named for its founder. It was incorporated as a village under the general law March 1, 1889. The population by the census of 1900 was 420.

IPAVA was platted as Pleasantville on the east half of the southwest quarter of Section 6, Pleasant Township, September 19, 1846, by John Easley. The plat consisted of eighteen lots. The town was first incorporated January 26, 1853, under a special charter, and was reorganized under the general law July 17, 1872, just sixteen days after the general law went into effect. The population according to the census of 1900 was 743.

LEWISTOWN was platted on the southwest quarter of Section 22, Lewistown Township, in April, 1822, by Ossian M. Ross, and the plat was recorded July 22, 1822, in Pike County, of which Fulton was at that time a part. The name was given the place by its founder in honor of his eldest son, Lewis W., who subsequently was a member of Congress and one of the foremost citizens of the county. Lewistown was organized by special charter February 16, 1857, and was reorganized under the general law April, 1892. The railroad station is known as Lewistown. The population at the Federal census of 1900 was 2,504.

CUBA was platted as Centerville on the northwest quarter of Section 20, November 18, 1836, by Daniel W. Vittum, Joel Solomon, Samuel Brooks and W. B. Cogswell. The plat consisted of thirty-one blocks of six lots each, and seven fractional blocks of three lots each. This village is located near the center of the county, hence the name. The village was incorporated January 26, 1853, by special charter and reorganized under the general law of 1872 on March 4, 1895. The population, according to the census of 1900, was 1,198.

FAIRVIEW was platted on the southeast quarter of Section 23, Fairview Township, August 16, 1837, by Benjamin Foster. The original plat consisted of eighty-four lots. Fairview was incorporated under a special charter February 24, 1859, was reorganized July 2, 1900, and the charter issued by the Secretary of State April 29, 1902. The population, according to the Federal census of 1900, was 501.

WATERWORKS, CANTON

CITY HALL AND FIRE DEPARTMENT, CANTON

VAN WINKLE LAKE, CANTON

FARMINGTON was platted on the southwest quarter of Section 1, Farmington Township, by Joseph Cone, Hiram Palmer and George W. Little October 9, 1835. The original plat consisted of six blocks of ten lots each, and six fractional blocks of five lots each. Farmington was incorporated by special charter February 18, 1857, and was reorganized as a city under the general law of 1872, March 14, 1875. The name is derived from the character of the topography of the surrounding country. The population in 1900 was 1,729.

CANTON.—The city of Canton was platted on the southeast quarter of Section 27, Canton Township, December 10, 1825, by Isaac Swan. The original plat consisted of fifty-three lots. Canton was organized under a special charter February 8, 1849. There had previously been a township organization. The charter was amended, incorporating the town as a city, February 12, 1853, and reincorporated under the general law of 1872 as a city April 4, 1892. The name Canton was given it by its founder, Isaac Swan. The city of Pekin had recently been laid out, and that celestial name is said to have suggested the one given to Canton. The population at the Federal census of 1900 was 6,564.

ST. DAVID was platted on the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 21, Buckheart Township, April 17, 1884, by Edward J. Williams, Caleb Johnson, J. E. Williams, William Thomas and Milton Shryock. The name was suggested in honor of David Williams, whose coal industry first made the town possible. The original plat contained twenty-seven lots. It was organized as a village under the general law of 1872, July 25, 1885, and under the census of 1900 had a population of 481.

BRYANT.—The village of Bryant was platted on the southeast quarter of Section 30, Buckheart Township, April 13, 1863, by William Hummel. The original plat consisted of seventeen lots. It was organized under the general law of 1872, August 10, 1874. The population according to the census of 1900 was 355.

UNORGANIZED VILLAGES.

Below is given a list of the unorganized villages of Fulton County which have been duly platted and still retain a distinctive existence, but in many instances only nominal.

MARIETTA was platted May 6, 1837, by Lorenzo Bevans and Benjamin Hoyt. The original town site consisted of sixty-three blocks and was located on the east half of Section 16 in Harris Township. On April 5, 1869, twenty-two of the original blocks were vacated. The name was suggested by the city of Marietta, Ohio.

BABYLON was platted March 11, 1837, by Philip Aylsworth, Franklin Offield and John Whittier. The original town site consisted of 829 lots and was located on the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter and the east half of the southeast quarter, and part of the northeast quarter of Section 14 in Lee Township.

BERNADOTTE was platted as Fulton November 27, 1835, by Charles Coleman. The original town site consisted of sixteen blocks of four lots each, located on the west half of the northeast quarter of Section 19 in Bernadotte Township. The name was given in honor of Napoleon's General, afterward King of Sweden.

SUMMUM was platted by James M. Onion as Oberlin on November 6, 1857. The original town site consisted of twenty-seven lots, which were located on the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 4, in Woodland Township. It is said to have derived its name from Peter Summy.

UNION was platted April 4, 1856, by Benjamin Bechelhymer. The original town site consisted of forty-one lots and was located on the northwest quarter of Section 4, Kerton Township.

OTTO was platted by Hiram Wentworth February 18, 1844. The original town site was located on the west half of the northeast quarter of Section 30, in Isabel Township.

DUNCAN CITY, commonly known as Duncan Mills, was platted May 17, 1867, by Thomas P. Duncan. It was located on the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 8, Isabel Township.

MANNING.—The town of Manning was platted by Edward Mann in January, 1898, and consisted of six blocks of forty-five lots each. It was located on the northwest quarter of Section 12, Waterford Township.

WATERFORD was platted March 21, 1825, by James Johnson and John Johnson. The original town site consisted of ninety-seven lots and was located on the southeast quarter of Section 11, Waterford Township.

NORRIS is located on the southeast quarter of Section 34, in Canton Township. No plat is shown for the old part of the village. Williams' and Vittum's additions were platted in April, 1888.

BRERETON was platted October 16, 1901, by the Monmouth Coal Company and consisted of forty-one lots, located on the southwest quarter of Section 11, Canton Township.

DUNFERMLINE was platted September 19, 1890, by Glen W. Traer. The original town site consisted of six blocks of 100 lots each, located on the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 22, Buckheart Township.

MIDDLE GROVE.—What is now known as Middle Grove was platted as Claire, October 16, 1888, by S. E. Dikeman. The original town site consisted of four blocks of fifty lots each, and is located on the southwest quarter of Section 6, Farmington Township.

UTICA.—The town of Utica (Banner Post-office) was platted December 19, 1832, by Ware Long. The original town site contained forty-eight lots and is located on the northwest quarter of Section 11, Banner Township. The name Utica was abandoned on account of the existence of another town of that name in LaSalle County.

BREED'S STATION was platted August 19, 1868, by William Smith. The original town site consisted of thirty-two lots and is located on the west half of the southeast quarter of Section 27, Orion Township.

LIVERPOOL was platted August 13, 1836, by Robert E. Little, William Elliott, Jr., Joseph Sharp, Theodore Tarleton, Erasmus D. Rice and Roger Velts. The original town site consisted of sixty-five blocks containing fourteen lots each, except fractional blocks adjoining the river. The site was located on fractional Section 25, Liverpool Township, on the banks of the Illinois River. Parts of the town site have been vacated in later years.

MONTEREY was platted May 21, 1850, by Jacob Weaver, Philemon Markley and David Farr, and was located on the southwest quarter of Section 4, Banner Township.

Aside from the town sites above mentioned, consisting of incorporated and unincorporated villages, and, in some instances, merely post-offices, there are a number of country stores and postoffices in the county that are designated by a distinctive name, but have never been platted or made any pretence of being a village. Among these may be mentioned Seville Station, on Section 24, Harris Township; Leaman Station, on Section 22, Harris Township; Checkrow, on Section 27, Lee Township; Manly, on Section 18, Lee Township; Virgil, on Section 5, Lee Township; Troy, a deserted village on Section 12, Union Township; Mayton, on Section 28, Young Hickory Township; Blyton, on Section 28, Deerfield Township; Leesburg, on Section 8, Woodland Township; Marbletown, on Section 17, Kerton Township; Sepo, on Section 12, Waterford Township; Maples Mills, on Section 11, Liverpool Township; Rawalts, on Section 30, Orion Township; Flatt, on Section 29, Joshua Township, and Bybee Station, on Section 17, Joshua Township.

PAPER TOWNS AND DESERTED VILLAGES.—The enactment of the State Internal Improvement System of Illinois in the middle 'thirties developed an intense desire on the part of many of the owners of Fulton County soil to establish town sites. At least a dozen town sites were platted following the enactment of the Internal Improvement System by the State Legislature in 1837. Every man, it seemed, who fancied his farm lay along the line of possible improvement, immediately sought to found a city and thus become immortal. Like the Internal Improvement System itself, these cities failed to materialize into anything of value or of lasting character. Of these vanished paper towns established in Fulton County the younger generation know little or nothing.

A certain James W. Willis, in 1837, platted the town of Delavan on his farm in Banner Township, Section 4, lying southwest of what is now or was Monterey. He made ample provisions in Delavan for a railroad depot, for a public square, a center square and a market square. The elaborate details in which all the necessary public accommodations for a magnificent city were supplied in great detail. A city founded on the broad scope of the Delavan plat would have been a thing of beauty and a municipal wonder. Not a vestige remains to indicate the contemplated city on the line of railroad that the founder supposed was going to pass that way—but which did not.

Another town, that of Bloomfield, was platted on Section 8 in Pleasant Township, about a mile southeast of Ipava. Ephraim Roberts was the founder of this town and it was sometimes called Byron. So far as the records show it is still a town, but the visitor would find it only a cornfield.

Few people in Fulton County are aware that the county is blessed with two Smithfields. The first and oldest was established by Joseph C. Smith, in 1836, on the northeast quarter of Section 11 in Union Township. The town site contained a public square and 120 lots. So far as recorded, Mr. Smith found no sale for the lots. Notwithstanding this Union Township Smithfield faded away, the name is still serviceable, as a Fulton County village of that name is located in Cass Township and was founded in 1858 by J. N. Smith. The Union Township Smithfield had a very lively rival, which was established a few days following the platting of Smithfield. That is to say, Smithfield was platted on April 25, 1836, and Troy was platted on April 29, 1836. While Smithfield was located on the northeast of Section 11, Troy was located on the southeast of Section 12, in Union Township, less than one mile away. Whether it was a case of the survival of the fittest or not, Troy lived and had a being for many years, while Smithfield vanished like a mist. Troy became a city of considerable importance, having a mill and a very profitable and productive distillery. Troy is still on the map; Smithfield, Union Township, is not.

When the Everlys came here from the East and settled in Deerfield Township, David Everly, Jr., established a town with the very suggestively religious name of Westminster. No cathedral spires pointed upward, however. It was located on the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 16. Three lots were sold, but now it is a part of the Utsinger farm.

West Point is still marked on the map. It is on the south side of the mouth of Otter Creek, where it empties into the Illinois River. West Point was established by Joel Onion in 1844. It never advanced further than being a landing and shipping point on the river. Near it, however, was the site of the first industry in Fulton County or the Military Tract, established in 1818, known in local history as the Craig & Savage sawmill.

Nearly every one who has traveled from Canton to Cuba or from Canton to Lewistown on the old stage road, knows of Fulton Center, or, as originally known, Independence. This spot is supposed to be the geographical center of Fulton County. It was established on Section 14 in Putman Township in 1848 by William H. Nichols, Hugh Lemaster, Hiram Sanders, David Haacke and Henry L. Bryant. Three of these men are more than well known in Fulton County history. Henry L. Bryant was for many years Probate Judge of Fulton County, and also established the town of Bryant. Hugh Lemaster was an old-time county official, having been Sheriff for eight years from 1832 to 1840, and was also for four years the County Surveyor. He also held other important positions of trust. Captain David Haacke was a noted Fulton County pioneer. He was an Indian fighter and the bravest of the brave. The town site of Independence was annulled and vacated in 1860, except as to the public square.

Patriotism and love of country doubtless accounted for the town of Columbia, which Thomas D. Lord established in Farmington Township in 1837. This gem of North Fulton "died abornin'." Not a vestige remains to mark the spot. To the south one mile, however, lies the village of Norris. There was, a few years ago, a brick and tile factory near the old site and the Burlington Railroad runs conveniently near.

Around the mouth of Copperas Creek, where it empties into the Illinois River on Section 24, two towns have been platted. One was Mills' Point, platted by John D. Mills in 1842, situated on the Illinois River south of Copperas Creek, and the other was the town of Commerce, near by, platted in 1843 by Lyman B. Suydam. At one time there were a number of warehouses at Copperas Creek Landing, as it was called, and it was an Illinois River landing of considerable importance and to a large extent was responsible for the decay of Liverpool as the important river landing in Fulton County, and, incidentally, after the establishment of the dike leading to the landing it was largely responsible for the bankruptcy of the Canton and Liverpool plank road. Copperas Creek Landing diverted too much of the business from North Fulton to make the plank road a success from a financial standpoint, and Liverpool was materially injured thereby.

No more beautiful and picturesque spot in all the broad land could have been selected than the one selected by W. H. Van Eps, a pioneer of Fulton County, for the establishment of Vanopolis. If the reader will take down the map of Fulton County and look at the point of Spoon River projecting south from where Seville Station is located in Harris Township, he will observe what comes the nearest to being a peninsula of any spot in Fulton County. It was here that in 1840 the town of Vanopolis was platted. It was supposed to be on the road from Peoria and Canton to Quincy, and it was thought that a line of railroad would pass that way within a few short months; but alas, this fond hope vanished and with it the town site. In after years the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad ran, not from Peoria to Quincy, but from Peoria to Keokuk, very near the deserted Vanopolis. The town site was afterward vacated. The nearest approach to a town there came being at Vanopolis was the nearby Fuller's Mill, one of the famous Spoon River flour mills.

Another town that is lost to sight and, perhaps, is not even to memory dear, is Milton, which was located on the southwest quarter of Section 8 in Lewistown Township. It was laid out in 1837 by Jonathan M. Cozad. There were seventy-three lots laid out surrounding a grist mill, which stood on the banks of Big Creek. This grist mill was one of the early mills of the county, and the site is now on the farm owned by John Loveland and along the highway leading from Lewistown northwest to Smithfield and up that way.

Probably the most pretentious town on paper of all these deserted villages of Fulton County was Tuscumbia, over in Bernadotte Township. It was even more elaborately designed than Delavan or Vanopolis. The site is about one mile east of Bernadotte on the southeast quarter of Section 17. It was platted by Wade Hampton Davis in 1837. By looking on the map of Fulton County it will be seen that Spoon River makes a bend at the village of Bernadotte and runs for four or five miles almost due east. The plat of Tuscumbia was a thing of beauty. It had streets with such high-sounding names as "Bowery," "Merchant," "Broadway," "Washington," "Madison," "Jefferson," and bid fair to become a great city. The plat says "This town is delightfully situated at the head of navigation of Spoon River with high banks on each side, which are six feet above high water mark." For a while the lots sold rapidly, as the conveyances indicate. Davis obtained the land from Edward Coles, who was former Governor of Illinois, but who had returned to his old home in Philadelphia in 1833, where he died in 1868. Among lot owners were Joseph Sharpe, Theodore Tarleton, Thomas J. Little, Charles Clark, Lewis W. Ross, William Gustine, Anderson Beadles, E. D. Rice, William Elliott, Jr., pioneers of Fulton County, and many others in neighboring counties. William Gustine and William Elliott, Jr., finally became the owners of the land and the lots, and in 1855 the plat was vacated, and the land subsequently became well known as the Wes Hicks farm, and is now owned by R. Comstock.

Waterford was the second town platted in the county. It was laid out March 21, 1825, by James and John Johnson. It was located on the north bank of Spoon River on the southeast quarter of Section 11, Waterford Township. It contained ninety-seven lots, and while it is still marked on the maps of the county, it is not and never did become even a village. It was located on a ford crossing Spoon River on the road from Lewistown southeast toward Havana. Near this town site on Section 10 John Eveland, Fulton County's first actual settler, settled in 1820.

On May 6, 1835, August Mathingly laid out the town of St. Augustine in Union Township on the east half of Section 5. It contained sixty lots and thrived for a time, but when the railroad line missed the town, the town moved over in Knox County and a new St. Augustine was built.

One of the additions of the city of Astoria was once a town of and in itself. It was called Washington and contained only forty-eight lots. It was platted May 15, 1834, by Thomas T. Garvin and Stephen Merrill. Three years later the town of Vienna was platted on Section 23, just west of the town site of Washington. Washington as a distinct entity was soon abandoned and was afterward absorbed by Vienna, which was the original name of Astoria, and under which name Astoria was originally incorporated.

There may be other places where attempts were made to found cities in Fulton County, but failed to reach the point where the surveyor was called in to measure off the ground. There have been innumerable cross-roads post-offices established, but it was never hoped for them that they would comprise more than a country grocery and a blacksmith and repair shop, with an occasional sorghum molasses mill or a cider press as a sort of side industry in the fall of the year. But of these, those not abandoned before, faded from sight very generally with the installation of the rural free mail delivery.

Perhaps there are yet a few old settlers of Fulton County who can recall some of these "Deserted Villages" of Fulton County and could give much local history concerning them, but the present generation will be surprised to learn that Fulton County soil has been checker-boarded with so many town lots.

CHAPTER XVII.

MANUFACTURES.

FIRST MANUFACTURING ENTERPRISES—SAW AND GRIST-MILLS—HARDSHIPS OF EARLY SETTLERS IN OBTAINING MILLING ACCOMMODATIONS—NEAREST MILLING POINT ON THE SANGAMON NEAR SPRINGFIELD—FAVORITE MILLING STREAMS—DISTILLERIES AND BREWERIES—SOME EXTINCT INDUSTRIES—BRICK AND TILE MANUFACTURING—WOOLEN MILLS—CIGAR-MAKING—TANNERIES—AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENT MANUFACTURING A GROWING INDUSTRY—THE PARLIN AND ORENDORFF FACTORY AT CANTON—ITS IMMENSE OUTPUT.

The first manufacturing enterprise established on Fulton County soil was the Craig & Savage saw-mill, which was located in 1818 near the mouth of Otter Creek. This has been referred to earlier in this volume (see Chapter VII., page 644). The next manufacturing institution was a horse grist-mill established by John Eveland in 1822 or 1823. Saw mills were soon established at various points in the county. Otter Creek, Big Creek and Copperas Creek were favorite locations, as were other places wherever there was water-power attainable and big timber of the proper variety, with accessibility to market. Lumber had to be floated down the streams to the Illinois River, and thence either loaded on a flat-boat or rafted, according to its character. At first, chiefly walnut lumber was sent out of the county. Oak lumber was supplied only to the local trade. It was later that the oak lumber from local mills became a product of commerce to any extent.

MILLING ENTERPRISES.—The reducing of the early settler's corn and wheat to meal and flour was one of the most troublesome of the many hardships entailed upon the pioneers, until the establishment of local mills. The corn had either to be reduced to meal by hand, as described in the history of "Early Settlements" or loaded on a boat and taken down the river to some point where there was a mill. The nearest milling point for wheat-flour for the early settlers was on the Sangamon River, north of Springfield, and the early settlers went there in boats, with their wheat to have it ground. The horse-mills, like those established by John Eveland and others, were of a very crude and unsatisfactory character, and would not supply wheat-flour. They ground corn-meal solely, and very slowly, so that many patrons could not be supplied from one mill. It was not until the introduction of water-propelled mills that the early settlers could be supplied with flour made out of wheat they grew. The first water-mill was established by Jacob Ellis, on Put Creek, in Putman Township, near Independence, about 1827. It was a very limited affair. Afterwards Mr. Ellis established a larger mill on Big Creek. Subsequently there were many mills located on Big Creek, Copperas Creek and Otter Creek. It was not until about 1830 that any one was enterprising enough to undertake the building of a mill on the more pretentious Spoon River. This first Spoon River mill was built by Alexander Freeman, who came to Fulton County in 1829, and settled at Hackelton Bridge, which was just North of where the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad now crosses the river and near the junction of Lewistown, Bernadotte, Pleasant and Isabel Townships. This mill was 34 x 46 feet in size, and ground wheat and corn, and a saw-mill was also run in connection with it. The mill ran only a short time until it was swept away by the floods. This was the first of the many splendid mills which were afterwards built upon Spoon River in the county. From the time of the erection of this mill by Mr. Freeman, no grist-mills were built upon the smaller streams of the county, but the great milling industry that extended from Duncan's Mills, on the south, to London Mills, on the north, gradually developed and, in the zenith of the glory of these enterprises, no county in Illinois produced a greater quantity of flour than Fulton. The product of the old water-mills along Spoon River was known, the world over, as late as the 'seventies; but with the introduction of steam-mills and railroad facilities for transportation to the markets, the glory of these industrial institutions which were, in their day, the greatest industry in the county, began to wane and, today, there is but a mere vestige of these mills left. There is but one dam at this date across Spoon River, and that is at Bernadotte, and it is disintegrating from lack of attention and care. The old mill at that place is silent and involved in litigation, and it is probable that, ere long, it will meet the fate of its competitors of ancient days at Duncan's, at Seville, at Babylon and at London Mills. Almost as late as 1880 there were two mills in operation at Duncan Mills south of Lewistown, and a little steamer was plying between that point and Havana, carrying the output of those mills to that point to be loaded on larger vessels for market. Today, there is not an exclusive water-mill in Fulton County—the one at Bernadotte being equipped for both water and steam—and, while it has not been dismantled, it is not in operation. In the years following the war, nearly every village and hamlet in Fulton County supported a flouring mill, and immense mills were operated in Astoria and Lewistown. The mill at Astoria manufactured almost exclusively for the Liverpool market; yet today there is scarcely a mill operated in Fulton County, for the purpose of manufacturing flour out of wheat, and those being operated confine their business solely to local trade. The opening up of the vast wheat fields in the Northwest, and the centralization of much of the flour manufacturing business in that region put the Fulton County mills out of business. There is probably as much wheat raised in Fulton County now as formerly, but it is not supplied to the local market but is shipped out of the county.

PORK PACKING.—Prior to 1830 there was little of what might be termed pork-packing done in Fulton County. Theretofore the farmers would dress their own hogs and bring the hams in to the local merchant and exchange them for goods; but this exchange was largely limited to hams, the merchants rarely taking any other part of the animal. The difficulty in getting pork to market was the great drawback. The winter months in which pork could be safely handled by the pioneer merchants was a time when it was inconvenient to reach the market. The establishment of a regular packet line of steamboats between the Mississippi River and Peoria made it possible for the merchants to become pork-packers, and this industry developed to considerable proportion in the county. Nearly every merchant became also a pork-packer, and many firms carried on the business of pork-packing independently. The introduction of modern methods, requiring immense amounts of water and unlimited transportation facilities, made it impossible for local packers to compete with the large packing houses, which were centralized, first, at Cincinnati, Ohio, and afterwards, in greater proportion, at Chicago, until now there is no pork-packing done in Fulton County for the general market.

DISTILLERIES.—At an early date Fulton County was the seat of many distilleries. Its output of spirits exceeded that of all other counties in the Military Tract combined. It was not until after the war that her prestige in this field was taken over by Peoria. The first distillery in the county was operated as early as 1833, on Duck Creek by R. Dixon, Ensley Fouts and George Smith. It made distilled spirits only from corn which had first to be ground at some neighboring pioneer grist-mill. The business of distilling spirits grew to be quite an industry in the county and, even after the war, large distilleries were still operated at Canton and at Utica. The importation of Texas cattle to Illinois, to be fed from the offal of distilleries, was first made in 1872 by McCall and Babcock, who conducted a distillery near the "gas-house bridge" over Big Creek, on West Locust Street, just without the city limits of Canton. This was the last distillery to be operated in Fulton County. It passed into the control of the "Whisky Trust" in the 'eighties, and mysteriously burned up a few years thereafter. A firm by the name of Sammis, Warner & Co., conducted a large distillery as late as 1872 at Utica. It was charged that highwines were removed from bond without the special government tax having been paid. The members of the firm alleged that employes removed the whisky without the knowledge or consent of the firm, but the property was confiscated by the Government through the action of Colonel A. C. Matthews, now of Pittsfield, Pike County, as an officer of the Internal Revenue Department. A portion of the property was sold, but some of the lots were retained by the United States Government for more than thirty years, and were finally sold in 1905 by the revenue officers of the Government. Nothing now remains to indicate that the distillation of spirits was a prosperous and important industry, at one time, in Fulton County.

Breweries for the brewing of lager-beer were operated in Fulton County, intermittently, to about 1890. The last one was operated by J. E. A. Johnson, at the corner of South Avenue A and West Maple Street, in the city of Canton—not, however, under the shadow of the Public High School, for the reason that it was located diagonally across the street to the southwest, and the shadow of the High School building was cast in the opposite direction. Operations were suspended about 1890 and the brewery has been dismantled and, today, there is manufactured within the confines of Fulton County nothing more intoxicating than apple-cider and grape-juice.

COOPERING BUSINESS.—Another of the early industries of Fulton County that has totally disappeared is that of coopering. At one time it was quite an industry, as most of the general utility vessels used by the house-wife were of home manufacture, as well as the barrels containing the local output of the distilleries, breweries, sugar camps, etc. The last cooper-shop was conducted on North Main Street at the corner of Spruce, in the city of Canton, by Joseph Thompson, as late as 1880. There is not a cooper following his avocation in the county today.

HATTERS.—When the pioneers discarded the general use of the 'coon-skin cap as a head covering, local hat-making industries were established. Thomas L. Ross, the first Treasurer of Fulton County, was also its first hatter.

This was in 1824, and he carried on the business for a number of years at Lewistown, finally moving to the lead mines at Galena. He was a brother of Ossian M. Ross. The next hat factory was, probably, that of Henry Clark, established in Canton in 1832—though it is said that hats were manufactured, on a small scale, by others before that time. The making of hats in the county ceased about 1840. At best, it was only a limited business.

BRICK AND TILE MANUFACTURING.—Much of the clay soil of Fulton County is peculiarly well adapted to the making of building brick and, from a very early period in the history of the county, brick for building purposes has been manufactured. The first bricks were largely composed of sand and clay; but latterly a superior quality of shale has been utilized to the almost entire exclusion of clay and sand. This shale not only makes a superior quality of building brick, but an excellent quality of vitrified paving brick. There are four large brick manufacturing plants located in Canton alone, that use this shale exclusively; and the aggregate output of these plants is about eight million brick annually. The demand, of course, is not confined to local consumption, but Canton paving brick is used in the construction of many buildings and on many paved streets in neighboring cities. Manufacturing brick for local use is carried on in nearly every city and village in the county.

The necessity for draining the lowlands in the county stimulated another industry which, for a time, flourished rather extensively in the county. When clay tile superseded the open and blind ditches as a means of draining farm lands, tile factories, with more or less capacity, were established in many parts of the country where there were suitable clay-beds. As the farms of the county were gradually tiled out, the local demand for drain-tile ceased to such an extent that very few of these tile factories are now operated, and very little clay tile is produced. The shale used in the manufacture of paving brick is said to be very suitable for the manufacture of vitrified sewer-pipe, but as yet no one has undertaken to launch such an enterprise in the county.

CUT STONE.—As shown in his book giving a description of the various lots and quarter-sections of the Military Tract, elsewhere quoted, Van Zant early called attention to the superior quality of grit-stone to be found in Fulton County. This stone was utilized by pioneers to some extent in the building of houses. The pillars of the old Court House, built at Lewistown by Major Walker, in 1838, were made of fine sandstone, quarried in the vicinity of the county-seat. In many parts of the county small quarries have been operated from a very early date, but not until about 1870 was any concerted effort made to quarry stone for the general market, or to manufacture cut-stone of any kind. About that time the quarries at Leaman were established and, in 1872, the Marietta Stone and Coal Company was incorporated, with a capital stock of $200,000, with John W. Ingersoll as President and A. B. Leaman as Secretary. This business was conducted until about 1880. Building stone, whetstones and grindstones were made. The stone-piers for one of the railroad bridges crossing the Illinois at Peoria, were constructed of stone from this quarry. The chief stockholder in the company was a Mr. Leaman, who resided in Ohio and, at his death, the business gradually decreased until the entire works were dismantled. Other attempts to quarry stone in that locality have been made and, at this time, small quantities are quarried and dressed for building purposes and shipped to various points on the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, but the output is very limited.

WOOLEN MILLS.—At one time Fulton County was a producer of considerable quantities of woolen goods and woolen yarn, but, today, the only mill remaining in operation is that of the Ipava Woolen Mills, located at Ipava, and owned and operated by Charles F. Foote. This mill confines its output largely to woolen cloths for serviceable skirts for women's wear and woolen blankets. It was not long after the first settlers arrived when carding mills were established at various points in the county, and there the wool was taken to be carded instead of the work being done by the housewife by hand. Following the carding mills came those making the woolen yarn and, in natural sequence, followed the woolen mills for the manufacture of cloth. Very early in the history of Lewistown, a woolen mill was established by a Mr. Power. Afterward Messrs. Worley and Proctor established a mill of considerable importance and magnitude there. This business was afterwards discontinued, owing to financial embarrassment, but not until it had been successfully conducted for many years. The most important industry in Canton for many years was the woolen mill of John G. Piper at the corner of Main and Spruce Streets. In its early days it was a more important industry measured by its magnitude than was the implement factory of William Parlin, who started in the business of manufacturing plows about the same period. These woolen mills burned in 1885.

CIGAR INDUSTRY.—In 1855 there was established at Canton a cigar factory by E. H. Curtis. Mr. Curtis and his brother, J. J. Curtis, constituted the full complement of workmen in the shop. This was the beginning of an industry which has added great individual wealth to Fulton County. Probably no industry has added so much to the individual wealth of the county as the manufacture of cigars in Canton. Growing from the little shop of E. H. Curtis, the cigar industry in Canton had reached, in 1892, the enormous output of twenty million cigars from its fourteen or fifteen shops, only five or six of which previously had been regarded as of any considerable importance from the standpoint of production. For many years Canton was the chief cigar-making center of the Middle West, and it has been by men who learned the trade of cigar-making in Canton, that many of the prosperous factories all through the Mississippi Valley, and even west of the Rocky Mountains, have been established. Other small cigar factories have been established in nearly all the Fulton County towns and villages, and prosperous "buckeyes," as the small factories are called, are now flourishing in Cuba, Lewistown and other places. Canton, however, maintains its prestige as the cigar-making center, not only in Fulton County, but in Central Illinois. Notwithstanding the fierce competition of Eastern made goods, there are at present being operated in Canton many factories, and the output last year was about fifteen million cigars, with about 300 people engaged in the business. Furtive attempts have been made to operate factories for the manufacture of other forms of tobacco products, but aside from a limited quantity of smoking tobacco made out of cigar clippings, the manufacture is confined to cigars.

TANNERIES.—Among the earliest manufacturing institutions established in Fulton County were the tanneries. These institutions were a necessity, owing to the fact that pelts from various wild animals slain by the frontiersmen, were among the principal productions of the country. As elsewhere noted, that pioneer merchant, William Proctor, was first a tanner with a tanyard on what is now colloquially known as Spudaway Creek adjacent to Lewistown. Tanneries were conducted in all the principal towns of the county, and in some of the unimportant ones. The Proctor tannery, at Lewistown, employed a number of men when in operation, and the several tanneries in Canton were operated long after the use of the pelts from wild animals was abandoned, and it constituted quite an industry in its day.

In a small way, several people in Canton were engaged in the boot and shoe-manufacturing business, and the shoes and boots were completely home-made, as the manufacturers were also tanners and tanned the leather that went into the boots and shoes manufactured. The tanning industry has long since disappeared, and there has not been a tannery operated in Fulton County for more than thirty-five years. This industry, like so many other small industries that thrived in the early days, was driven out by the centralization of the industries near the source of supply of raw material—in this case, the great packing-houses.

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.—The most important manufacturing industry in the county is the agricultural implement factory of the Parlin & Orendorff Company at Canton. The line of implements manufactured by this company includes over 1,400 different sizes and styles, and is the most complete line of implements made by any single factory in existence. The implements manufactured consist almost wholly of those required to prepare the ground and plant the grain. No harvesting implements are manufactured. The highest type of implements made in the world are produced by it. This factory was the originator of the corn-stalk cutter, the disc harrow made with concave discs, the lister and many other implements.

The first implements made were breaking-plows with wooden mold-board and iron shares, but these were soon superseded by the diamond plow which consisted of a piece of metal cut diamond shape and curved and having the lower edge sharpened. This plow was superseded in 1848 by plows having a divided share and mold similar to those manufactured at the present day, but, of course, not such a finished implement as that now in use. These plows were originally made from German steel. This character of plows was gradually improved and, with the improved method of hardening, grinding and polishing, the present high grade steel-plow was evolved. At first the output was limited to the breaking-plow; but, in 1856, was begun the manufacture of the walking cultivators and shovel-plows, and gradually other lines were added. The first riding cultivators were made in 1865. The magnitude of this factory can best be comprehended by comparison. As before stated, it manufactures 1,400 different sizes and styles of implements. It would require 2,600 horses to pull a single specimen of each of these instruments, if they were placed in line, which line would be seven miles in length; and it would require $42,000 to purchase one each of these implements. The output of the factory for one year, if placed in line with team attached ready for operation, would reach 1,800 miles. The plant covers nineteen acres of ground and the capacity is two complete implements per minute. The company has fifty branch and distributing houses located in important implement centers in the United States and many foreign countries. The company owns in Kansas City, Mo., Omaha, Neb., and Dallas, Texas, magnificent buildings for use in these distributing centers.

This business was established in 1842 by William Parlin, who came from New England by way of Copperas Creek Landing. Mr. Parlin was a mechanic and saw the advantages of establishing a plow-factory in the growing prairie section in this part of Illinois. He first established himself in a building at the north-west corner of Main and Walnut Streets, directly north of the present High School building, and just East of the present Presbyterian Church. This building was destroyed by fire in 1847. Mr. Parlin then established his shop at the southeast corner of East Elm and Second Avenue, which was the beginning of the factory building on the present site. This building was destroyed by fire in 1849, after which a brick building was erected. This old building, after being in use nearly sixty years, was torn down in March, 1902, to make room for the modern structure which is now located on that corner. As the business grew, extensions of the original shop were erected both to the south and the east. Until the old buildings were destroyed in 1902, the divers extensions, both south and east, could readily be discriminated, the ages of the respective walls being a graphic index to the growth of the factory. This growth was small until 1875, when a three-story building was erected on East Elm Street, just east of the original shop. The growth since that time has been rapid. It was not many years until the entire block bounded by Elm Street, Second Avenue, Pine Street and Third Avenue, was covered with buildings. In 1896 the block on the east, known as College Square, and adjoining the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad right-of-way, was purchased and covered with an immense foundry and its necessary adjuncts. The next year the block south of College Square was purchased and twenty or more residences removed to make room for more buildings. The city authorities vacated, at this time, that part of East Pine Street between Third and Fourth Avenues; also Third Avenue from Elm Street south of Pine Street. Afterwards the block south of the main factory building was purchased, and Pine Street from Second to Third Avenue was vacated by the city. Thus, almost four entire blocks are covered by buildings, aside from the lumber-sheds which cover two blocks further south, extending to the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad from South Third Avenue, east to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad property. About six blocks and an area equal to about nineteen acres are thus under roof.

The first implements were made entirely by hand at a blacksmith forge. Later, horse-power was used and, in 1849, the first steam engine was installed. In early days it was impossible to purchase any of the small parts to assemble an implement, but every nut and bolt was made by hand from the raw material, as well as every other piece of the implement. This factory was the pioneer in the introduction of labor-saving machinery. The factory is most complete and up-to-date from the point of sanitation and economical production of its output. The first plows were "made to order" and the market was limited to the territory within driving distance of Canton. The farmer came to town, gave an order for a plow and called for it after it was manufactured. When Mr. Parlin realized the success that his hand-made plows had attained, he employed enough workmen to make a few extra implements during the dull selling season, in order to meet the increased demand during the active selling season. This method was pursued until William J. Orendorff, in 1852, entered into partnership with Mr. Parlin, under the firm name of William Parlin & Co., which, in 1860, was changed to Parlin & Orendorff. Mr. Orendorff was the sales manager and in charge of the office work, while Mr. Parlin conducted the mechanical departments. When Mr. Orendorff became the salesman for the firm, he introduced the method of starting out from Canton with several wagon-loads of plows, selling them to farmers along the road, sending back the empty wagons, one at a time as the goods were sold. Afterwards the implements were placed with dealers. It was not long after Mr. Orendorff entered the business until it extended west of the Mississippi; and, as early as 1868, a branch nouse was established in Kansas City. In 1880 the Parlin & Orendorff Company was incorporated with the following officers: William Parlin, President; William J. Orendorff, Vice President; W. H. Parlin, Secretary; A. L. Orendorff, Treasurer. William Parlin, the founder of the business, died in 1901, and William J. Orendorff died in 1897, as the result of an accident with a runaway team. They both lived, however, to see the plant which they had established become the largest of its kind in the world. The sons of the founders assumed full control of the management after the death of their respective parents. The present officers are W. H. Parlin, President and General Manager; U. G. Orendorff, Secretary and Treasurer; L. H. Gillett, Assistant Treasurer.

ILLINOIS & MICHIGAN CANAL.—The opening of the Illinois & Michigan Canal in 1848 diverted some of the mercantile business of Fulton County from St. Louis to Chicago, and especially did this pertain to the shipments of grain and other products out of the county. Even prior to that time the Chicago market was so much superior to that of St. Louis for wheat, that the farmers of the county frequently transported it overland in wagons. With the introduction of steamboats on the Illinois River, in the early 'thirties, communication with St. Louis and points below on the south, and La Salle on the north, were had by regular packet lines. The opening of the canal gave water ingress to Chicago and its lake port.

MERCANTILE BUSINESS.—Until near the commencement of the Civil War, business of all kinds was largely done on the credit basis. The merchant would exchange his goods for whatever the farmer had for sale. The medium for cash transactions was the Spanish (or Mexican) silver dollar, half-dollar, quarter and twelve-and-a-half-cent piece (called a "bit"), and a six-and-a-quarter-cent piece, known as a "picayune". These came from New Orleans and other Lower Mississippi points, where the surplus produce was ultimately loaded for various seaports. There was also a French five-franc piece, which passed for ninety-five cents, and was about as large as a silver dollar. These were obtained at St. Louis. There was other gold and silver coin brought in by the new settlers, including among the former the English "sovereign" ($4.85) and the Spanish or South American "doubloon" (about $15.60). The use of this money was largely confined to the payment of taxes, postage and to transactions covering the sale or purchase of land from the Government, and sometimes between individuals. The first merchants of the county were Judge Stephen Phelps and Myron Phelps, respectively, father and son. They located in Lewistown in 1825; but previous to that time, while living in Sangamon County, they had visited Lewistown buying pelts from the Indians either personally or through Judge Phelps' son-in-law, William Proctor. The firm was known as "Stephen Phelps & Son," and their first stock of goods was purchased at St. Louis, and they used John Eveland's cottonwood piroque to bring the stock from St. Louis to Lewistown, making the landing near what is now the old town-site of Waterford. The Phelpses traded largely with the Indians, as the white settlers were mighty few. Judge Phelps had the entire confidence of the Indians, and they preferred trading with him to the trading posts at Wesley City and other points along the Illinois River belonging to the American Fur Company. Consequently the Indians, for many miles around, would make two or three journeys a year to Lewistown, to exchange their pelts for supplies. Some of the white settlers were not altogether in harmony with the manner in which Judge Phelps treated the Indians, as it encouraged them to remain in the vicinity and, consequently, made game and fur-bearing animals rather scarce for the settlers. On one occasion, it is told by an old settler who came to the county in 1825, that it was decided to drive the Indians from their locations in Fulton County; and in order to show their resentment on account of Judge Phelps' kindly relations with the red men, and thus discourage this friendliness, they decided to capture some of these Indians, take them to Lewistown and publicly flog them in the presence of Judge Phelps. This was done and, according to the old settler's story, it had the desired effect on the Indians, if not on Judge Phelps. The Phelps had a keel-boat built for their own trade, and they would load it either at Waterford or in Thompson's Lake. The market was St. Louis, and the cargo generally consisted of venison, porkhams, bees-wax, tallow, sacks of pecans and hickory-nuts, ginseng, feathers and dry pelts of all kinds. It took about four days to run the boat to St. Louis, and about twenty or twenty-five days to make the return trip. The motive power consisted of poles or oars in the hands of the boatmen, with occasional use of sails, when the winds were favorable, and, on the downward trip, of course, the river current. Judge Phelps was a very large man physically, and was strictly honorable in all his dealings with the whites as well as the Indians. He died about 1840, and his son and partner, Myron, succeeded to the firm's business. With a change of name and ownership, brought about by the mutations of time, this original and historic merchandising establishment still continues in existence in Lewistown, under the firm name of Charles Proctor & Son.

Until the opening of the Phelps store and other stores, the supplies of the settlers were purchased either at St. Louis or Edwardsville, and were brought into the country under a co-operative plan by which the pelts, bees-wax and other supplies were loaded into a boat and were taken by some of the settlers selected for that purpose to the market place, and there exchanged for salt, powder, lead and merchandise of such character as was needed.

LATER MERCANTILE ESTABLISHMENTS.—The next mercantile establishment in Fulton County was also established in Lewistown by Patrick Hart, an Irishman, and Edward Plude, a Frenchman, but they soon disposed of their stock to Ossian M. Ross.

In 1827 John Coleman came to Fulton County from New Jersey. He made the journey overland in wagons and brought a stock of goods with him. He had manufactured axes back in New Jersey, and among his stock was a goodly supply of axes of his own manufacture. Mr. Coleman held title to land lying just north of the townsite of Canton as laid out by Isaac Swan. On this land he settled and disposed of his axes and his stock of goods to good advantage to the settlers and Indians. Mr. Coleman did not long pursue the business of merchandising, his operations being confined largely to the sale of his original stock.

Up to 1830 the entire white population of Fulton County was less than two thousand. Therefore, the demand for mercantile houses was not very great. Between 1830 and 1835 the emigration to the county was very rapid and immediately stores were opened at many points in the county, particularly at Lewistown and Canton. Warehouses belonging to these merchants were established at the Illinois River landings especially at Liverpool and Copperas Creek Landing. These warehouses were used to store the outgoing produce taken from the farmers and trappers in exchange for merchandise, and to receive the incoming merchandise brought back from the markets of St. Louis and other points down the Mississippi River as far as New Orleans. By this time postoffices had been established in the county, so that its citizens did not have to rely upon the periodical trips to St. Louis to receive their mail.

Banking institutions, as they are known at the present time, were nowhere to be found in Fulton County until just before the War of the Rebellion. The merchants acted to a limited extent as the county's bankers, but, as everything was done on a credit basis, there was not much use for a bank as a depository for safe-keeping.

One of the earliest merchants that came to Fulton County was William Proctor, the son-in-law of Judge Phelps. He came to Lewistown and established himself in business in 1828. There he erected the first tannery in Fulton County and carried on that business for several years, afterward engaging in a mercantile business. He was a man of scrupulous honesty and built up a large business. His retiring from the business of selling goods has been one of the most singular instances that have ever occurred in the history of merchandising in Fulton County. Without any apparent reason, he failed to open the doors of his store for business one morning. He didn't offer to sell his goods at auction or in any other way. The store contained a full and complete stock; but from that morning until his death, the store remained just the same and the mystery surrounding the unheralded suspension of business, is as deep to-day as it was on that morning. Occasionally, Mr. Proctor would transact such business as he might have with some one at the desk in the store room, but no goods were sold or in any way disturbed. For thirty years this stock of goods remained on the shelves to mold and gather dust, and it was only after his death that they were disposed of. The stock comprised dry goods, notions, boots and shoes, hats and caps, harness, hardware, leather, and hundreds of other articles of commerce. Styles had greatly changed in the thirty years preceding his death, in 1879. Some of the articles of wearing apparel had a very incongruous look in comparison with the prevailing styles at the time the store was opened. Mr. Proctor did not retire from active business merely because he did not continue that of selling merchandise, but looked after his outside interests with scrupulous care and exacting honesty and uprightness.

A REMINISCENCE OF EARLY MERCANTILE ENTERPRISES.—At the request of the editor, John W. Proctor, the son of William Proctor, and who is today the oldest living resident of Fulton County—having resided here since June 1828, a period of nearly eighty years—has submitted for use in this volume a little personal reminiscence of the merchants and the mercantile methods of the pioneer days. No one now living in Fulton County is so well qualified to discuss this subject as he is. He says:

"By far the greater number of the first emigrants to Fulton County came from the Southern and Middle States. Some, however, came from New England. Among the latter was my father, the late William Proctor. So much was said in the papers about the great West, and especially Missouri, that my father and a certain Captain Hathaway, a retired Sea Captain, decided to move to Missouri. Early in September, 1818, they sailed out of Boston, Mass., on their way to Missouri. They were three weeks sailing to Philadelphia. There they purchased horses and wagon and headed for Pittsburg. Thence by cabin-boat they passed down the Ohio River. Arriving at Shawneetown, Ill., they exchanged the boat for a team and started across Southern Illinois for St. Louis. At Belleville, Ill., they learned Missouri was likely to be a slave State, so they located in St. Clair County, Ill. Two years after, the Winnebago Indians ceded to the Government what was known as the Sangamon Country. This country extended from the Illinois to the Wabash River east, and between a line east and west from south line of Tazewell, County south to, and including, Cass County. Illinois was a Territory yet, but Southern Illinois had quite a population composed of people who had come largely from the Northern States. Cahokia was the capital. (At this time Kaskaskia was the capital of the Territory, and Cahokia the county seat of St. Clair County.—Editor). My father's location was ten miles north of where Springfield is now located.

"In 1828 my father removed to Lewistown in Fulton County. My maternal grandfather, Judge Stephen Phelps, had an Indian trading-post at Lewistown with the Sacs and Fox Indians. There were but few white people in the county at the time. But the Indians felt they were being crowded back and away from their favorite hunting grounds. They were greatly attached to the Spoon River country, both on account of the game and fish that could be found here, also because of the numbers of the fur family, including otter, mink, coon and muskrat. With sale of deer skins and fur they were able to supply themselves with ammunition, guns and blankets. Twice a year they came to Lewistown in large numbers to trade. My grandmother Phelps, in her very large log kitchen, with loft above, gave lodging and food at such times to the Indian women and children. I remember that she often tried to get me to play with the little Indians, but we did not fraternize very well. They were there as a tribe for their last trading trip in the spring of 1832. The following summer occurred the Black Hawk War, and at its close the Indians moved west of the Mississippi River. For a few years some would return to the beautiful valley of the Spoon, and remain until late in the fall. They were welcome to the homes of the settlers, and I never heard of the slightest treachery on their part.

"There was commercial demand for but few articles that we had for sale. There was a root found on the creek bottoms, or near to them, called ginseng. It had a commercial value of twenty-five cents per pound when dry, and was used as a drug, and in combination with other drugs was valued as a remedy for some diseases. Another article of export was bees-wax. There were then quite generally, groves of different kinds of trees. Many of these had cavities made by loss of limbs, where the wild bees located. There were men who were very expert bee-hunters. One of them, with proper bait, would expose it near a grove (either honey or other bait) to attract the bees, and they would trace them to their homes, thus getting sometimes one hundred or more pounds of honey. Bees-wax was worth, in trade, about twenty-five cents per pound. Large quantities were shipped to St. Louis, our commercial center. Deer became quite plenty after the Indians left and before many emigrants came, and deer skins were shipped in large numbers, also furs.

"Not until about 1836 did the merchants begin to buy dressed hogs and pack pork for shipment. The mast, as acorns and other nuts were called, furnished excellent food for hogs and, if the farmer finished fattening with six weeks of good corn, they had good pork. About the same time the farmers who had been offered only twenty-five cents per bushel for winter wheat, began to be offered 31¼ cents and 37½ cents, according to quality. Merchants became the middle men between producer and consumer, thus collecting debts due themselves and paying the surplus in cash. Settlements with the merchants were made annually, and the merchants expected to settle with their creditors annually. For many years, however, the money brought by newcomers was the main dependence for the exchange. By far the greater part of business of all kinds was done on credit. Twelve per cent. interest was paid without protest by both merchant and consumer. The medium for cash transactions was Spanish silver dollars, halves, quarters, bits (12½ cents) and picayunes, (6¼) cents. There was also the French five-franc piece, in large part for silver, it passing for ninety-five cents. Then, for gold, we had occasionally our American Eagle and half-eagle, but foreign gold, especially, the English sovereign, passing for $4.85, furnished the larger part.

"There was a time, however, when times were so close that a very large proportion of business was conducted by barter and exchange. At that time I remember to have seen a pretty fair cow sell at contable's sale for $5.00. There were no banks and no money lenders, but by way of compensation our wants were simple. Danger from robbery there was none. We had no locks on our doors—almost no counterfeit money. There were no rich men, no poor men. If a man, because of sickness, could not plant or gather his crop, his neighbors saw to it that it was done. The neighbors cared for the sick ones and, when there was destitution, always provided for the wants of such. The very dependence each felt upon the other, drew them together. There were no poor houses and not much use for jails. With all our deprivations we were very happy. The selfishness begotten of prosperity makes us long for those dear early days.

"I enclose names of some of the prominent business men of Canton and Lewistown. Please understand that these were men who were in business in the 'thirties and somewhat earlier.

"Canton—Joel Wright, Job Shinn, Thompson Maple, John G. Graham, James H. Stipp, D. W. Vittum, H. F. & J. W. Ingersoll, John G. Piper, John Shinn, I. S. Piper.

"Lewistown—Myron Phelps, William Proctor, Nathan Beadles, William B. Kelley, Henry B. Evans.

"I give only the names of the prominent merchants of the early days. There were many others doing a limited business scattered about over the county; but wherever they were located and whatever their prominence in the business world, I can say they were, as a rule, men who commanded the confidence of all."

The importance of good roads to the proper development of a new country is better evidenced in the policy of the Government of Great Britain than that of any other country. Great Britain is the great colonizer and developer of new countries, and the first step toward this end, taken by that Government, is the making of good roads. While the people of this country may realize the importance of good roads, our system of divided responsibilities for their construction militates against speedy accomplishment. When John Eveland, in 1820, landed in Waterford Township, there were, of course, no established roads within the limits of the present county of Fulton. The only substitute therefor were the rather well-defined Indian trails. For more than three years he lived under these conditions, as did Ossian M. Ross and other settlers who came before the organization of Fulton County in 1823. Settlers coming into the county overland had to cross the Illinois River at Ft. Clark (Peoria) or at Beardstown, at which places ferries were maintained. John Eveland's cottonwood piroque, that brought the first settler into the country; that carried the settler's first Fulton County wheat up the Sangamon River to be ground into the first wheat-flour of local production; that brought into the county the first hogs, and that transported to the county the first stock of goods for the first merchant, likewise was used as the first ferry boat to carry the early immigrants across the Illinois at the mouth of Spoon River. It was nearly a hundred miles (by river) from Peoria to Beardstown, and Ossian M. Ross quickly saw the financial advantage of a ferry at Havana, which was about midway between those two places. One of the first acts of the first Board of County Commissioners, at its first meeting, was the granting to Ossian M. Ross of a license to conduct a ferry across the Illinois River near the mouth of Spoon River. The landing on the Mason (then Sangamon) County side afterwards became the town-site of Havana. There were certain established days on which the ferry would run and the immigrant who arrived beforehand simply pitched his tent and waited for the ferry to begin business. In 1828 the ferry business became so financially productive that Mr. Ross removed from Lewistown to Havana, and conducted it personally until he died in 1837. The records of this first Fulton County ferry are in possession of the family of Harvey Lee Ross, now of Los Angeles, Cal., and from these can be traced the date of the arrival of many of the early pioneers in Fulton County and the counties to the north and west.

ESTABLISHING FIRST HIGHWAYS.—Another of the first acts of this first Board of County Commissioners at its first meeting, was the appointment of three Road Superintendents or Overseers. The county was divided into three districts, No. 1 being all that part of the county lying northwest of Ft. Clark—that is, from a line west from Peoria to the Mississippi, and north to the State line. William Eads, of Ft. Clark (Peoria), a brother of Abner Eads, the newly elected first Sheriff of the county, was appointed to look after the roads in this district. Stephen Chase, of Lewistown, was appointed to the overseership of District No. 2, which was not nearly so extensive as No. 1, yet covered a considerable expanse of territory. It extended from Ft. Clark south to Spoon River. The territory south of Spoon River was District No. 3, and Amos Eveland, who lived on the south bank of that river, was named as Overseer of District No. 3.

Thus was begun the work of developing the highways of the county. The expanse of territory to be covered prevented any concentration of effort, and the same trouble has worked to the disadvantage of the highways in Fulton County, even unto the present day. The work has been scattered over too much surface and has, therefore, been temporary and imperfect in character. The roads in Fulton County have been vastly improved within the past few years, but are yet far from ideal. Literally hundreds of steel bridges have been built all over the county within the last twenty years, so that no longer are streams forded on main highways. In the county there are not far from 2,500 miles of country highways. It is a little remarkable that only one additional means of crossing the Illinois River from Fulton County soil has been added since the establishment of the Ross Ferry at Havana (which was long ago superseded by a bridge), and that is the ferry at the Copperas Creek dam. This is the only licensed ferry in the county. Other ferries are run in the county, but they cross Spoon River and are maintained at county expense. The first bridge across Spoon River was built at Bernadotte in 1844. It is a wooden structure, set upon immense sandstone piers quarried from nearby deposits. It is in a wonderfully well preserved condition and promises to last throughout the next century. Seven steel structures have been built across Spoon River, viz: at London Mills, Ellisville, Babylon, Babylon Bend, Seville, Elrod and Duncan's Mills.

AN ERA OF TOLL ROADS.—Fulton County was not on the line of the Great Western Mail Route; so it was not provided with a State road under the lavishly generous provisions of the elaborate Internal Improvement System, established by act of the General Assembly in 1837. This county was taken care of, however, by two provisions of that act. One of these provisions provided for the improvement of the navigation of the Illinois River west of the Third Principal Meridian, and the other for the building of a railroad from Peoria to Warsaw, via Canton, Macomb and Carthage. Needless to say, these provisions were never carried out. Toll roads were not, however, unknown to Fulton County. In 1850 one was built by private enterprise from Canton to Liverpool, a distance of about thirteen miles. The road ran south from Canton, between Sections 34 and 35, to the center line between Sections 10 and 11 in Liverpool Township, and then veered off south and east to the village of Liverpool. About one and three-quarter miles of the southeast end of this road consisted of a dike across the Illinois River bottom, and this dike is still known as the Liverpool dike. The road-bed for this thirteen miles of road was thrown up to about sixteen feet in width and, in the center of this, was placed a plank-road consisting of oak-planks, two by six inches, laid crosswise on sawed oak stringers. The cost of this road averaged about $3,000 per mile. It was built by the Canton and Liverpool Plank Road Company, an Illinois corporation, and the funds were provided for by the sale of stock and individual contributions from Canton merchants and business men. At this time Liverpool was, with the exception possibly of Havana, the most important Illinois River landing between Beardstown and Peoria. The territory tributary to it extended farther north than Canton and farther south than Lewistown, and west beyond the western limits of Fulton County. Unfortunately for the plank-road enterprise much of the traffic to and from Liverpool could not conveniently pass over the road, as it was not in line with a considerable portion of the traffic. Another thing that militated against the financial success of this enterprise was that Copperas Creek Landing, three miles nearer Canton, divided the patronage of the Canton territory with Liverpool. All merchandise received, and all produce shipped, was by way of the river at this time, as there were no railroads. Lewistown and Canton merchants owned warehouses at Liverpool, and Canton merchants owned warehouses at Copperas Creek Landing. About the time of the building of the plank-road a dike, two miles in length, was thrown up across the Illinois River bottom road, leading to Copperas Creek Landing. As there were no toll-gates along this road to Copperas Creek, that landing was favored to the exclusion of Liverpool wherever possible. There were three toll-gates on the Liverpool plank-road, one about a mile and a half south of Canton, one at Maple's Mills, and one near Liverpool. The promoters of this toll-road thought that it would develop into a dividend producing enterprise. In this, however, they were mistaken. In six years the road was so hopelessly in debt that the material used in constructing the road was sold under the hammer to partially satisfy creditors, and the road, as a semi-private way was abandoned. It has since been used as a public highway.

STAGE LINES.—The earliest stage line across the county started at Springfield and came through the county from Havana, where it crossed the river going North to Knoxville, and extending then beyond that point. Another stage line was established running from Peoria and later from Elmwood, going southwest through the county by way of Canton, Independence, Lewistown, Hackelton's Mill on Spoon River, and on to Rushville and Quincy. The routes of both these lines were changed occasionally between unimportant points, but they constituted the main stage lines. Other shorter lines were conducted between various points in the county. The introduction of the railroads soon put an end to regular stage-coach lines, though there are still maintained in the county several star routes for carrying mail.

RAILROADS.

As elsewhere stated, nothing came of that provision of the State Internal Improvement System inaugurated by the act of the Tenth General Assembly, so far as supplying the needs of Fulton County with a steam railroad was concerned. The contemplated line from Peoria to Warsaw, via Canton, Macomb and Carthage, to the aid of which the act establishing the State Internal Improvement System appropriated $100,000, never materialized farther than that some of the grading was done between Peoria and Canton. Joel Wright, of Canton, was one of the three (afterward increased to five) commissioners who were appointed to have charge of the vast improvements, as outlined by that act. For reasons fully given in another part of this work, this internal improvement scheme failed utterly. A portion of the Peoria & Warsaw grade between Canton and Farmington, which was built under this act, was, nearly twenty years afterward, utilized by the Jacksonville & Savanna Railroad Company for a portion of its road-bed. The road-bed was turned over by this company to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and that company has since been using it. A stone culvert, near the pumping station north of Canton, still remains as a memory of the State Internal Improvement System of 1837.

FIRST RAILROAD.—The first railroad to cross Fulton County soil was known as the Northern Cross Railroad, and extended from Quincy to Galesburg. This was completed in 1855. The same year the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad was completed from Peoria to Galesburg. Both of these roads had received the financial aid of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, and they ultimately passed into the control of that company and so remain to this day. With the establishment of these two railroads, Fulton County's railroad connection with the outside world was obtained by traveling overland to the nearest point on one of these lines. For instance, the stage-line, carrying mail for Canton and Lewistown, headed out of Elmwood in Peoria County.

OTHER RAILROAD ENTERPRISES.—Previous to the completion of the Northern Cross Railroad, several efforts had been made to promote railroad construction in Fulton County. The Chicago & Rock Island Railroad had reached Peoria in 1854. Myron Phelps, the pioneer merchant of Lewistown, conceived the idea of having that railroad company extend its lines through Fulton County to Hannibal, Mo., and as a result of Mr. Phelps's efforts, the Peoria & Hannibal Railroad Company was organized with Mr. Phelps as President. Aside from private subscriptions and township bonds, Fulton County issued bonds to the amount of $200,000 to aid the project. One-half of these bonds were issued in 1858 and the other half in 1859. This road was to run from Peoria to Hannibal, Mo., by way of Utica, and was expected to pass near what is now St. David, and on to Lewistown, thus missing Canton to the south several miles. A part of the old grade for this line can yet be seen in the vicinity of Utica. Mr. Phelps resigned the presidency after a few years, and Judge Henry L. Bryant succeeded him as President and General Manager. As a sort of a checkmate for the Peoria & Hannibal Railroad, the Jacksonville & Savanna Railroad was incorporated in 1855, with James H. Stipp, of Canton, as President and General Manager. To this road the county issued $100,000 of eight per cent. bonds in 1857. The road was to be run from Jacksonville, in Morgan County, to Savanna, in Carroll County, passing through Liverpool, Canton, Farmington and crossing the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Yates City. Much of the grading between Canton and Liverpool was done upon this route. A portion of the old Peoria & Warsaw grade between Canton and Farmington was shaped up, and new work done.

COMPETING ENTERPRISES.—It will be observed that the Peoria & Hannibal project was a distinctly Lewistown enterprise, while the proposed Jacksonville & Savanna line was quite as distinctly a Canton affair. Neither was meeting with any marked degree of success, as eastern capital was loth to take hold of them. The promoters of the two companies finally made a deal with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, by which that company took over parts of the two enterprises, which resulted in the construction of a line from Yates City to Lewistown in 1862. In extending its line from Yates City under this plan, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy used the Jacksonville & Savanna line until it intersected the Peoria & Hannibal line south of Canton, and then used that line into Lewistown. Concerning this deal James H. Stipp, the President and General Manager of the Jacksonville & Savanna Railroad Company, in a communication to the Fulton Democrat, under date of February 6, 1906, says:

"I bought the iron for the roads from Yates City to Canton with the proceeds of the county bonds. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy folks said it was too short a branch (about sixteen miles) to pay, and said if we could add fifteen miles to make the branch line thirty miles long, they would advise the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy chief officers to help us out. I saw Judge H. L. Bryant at once, and the matter was fixed up and the line extended to Lewistown. I then ordered a canal-boat load of iron to be shipped from Chicago to Liverpool, via the canal and Illinois River. The iron was hauled by teams from Liverpool along the line from Lewistown to Canton. This was done just before the meeting of the County Board in September, many citizens believing it would encourage the Supervisors to provide for the interest on the bonds we had sold, for repudiation of these bonds was feared. I knew all the Supervisors as honest men and did not fear repudiation. The balance of my iron purchased was delivered to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy at Chicago."

The fact that this line was to extend no farther than Lewistown greatly enraged the people in the south part of the county, who had voted to be taxed to the extent of providing their portion of the total sum of $300,000 in bonds to promote the two railroad lines, on the theory that the Peoria & Hannibal would extend through the south part of the county. Under the direction of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, this line from Yates City was completed to Canton May 2, 1862, and to Lewistown the next month. Lewistown remained the terminal of this line for seven years, when it was extended south and west to Rushville.

In 1870 a road known as the Rockford, Rock Island & St. Louis line was constructed through the townships of Astoria, Vermont and Farmers. This road received no county aid, but did receive township aid in the way of bonds. In 1876 this line also passed to the control of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company and has so remained.

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN.—The Toledo, Peoria & Western, as it is now called, was put into operation in 1868 and is a consolidation of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad and the Mississippi & Wabash Railroad. To the latter company had been voted $75,000 in bonds by Fulton County in 1853, but, owing to a technicality, these bonds were never issued. For years the Toledo, Peoria & Western was under the control of Jay Gould and was part of the Wabash System, but it is supposed now to be operated by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company jointly.

FULTON COUNTY RAILWAY.—The Fulton County Narrow Gauge Railroad was a narrow-gauge line built from Fairview to Havana. It was constructed wholly by Lewistown capital and was contributed as Lewistown's most fetching argument in the famous county-seat removal contest between that place and Canton in 1878. The cost of the line was about $85,000. The line soon passed into the control of S. H. Mallory, a railroad capitalist of Chariton, Iowa, and his associates. This line was completed October 28, 1880, and was later extended from Fairview to Galesburg as the Fulton County Narrow-Gauge Extension Railroad Company, which was also a Mallory corporation. The line was operated as a narrow-gauge railroad until the summer of 1906. It then passed to the control of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company and was changed at once into a broad gauge, and is now known as the Fulton County Railway.

JACKSONVILLE SOUTHEASTERN.—In 1892 the Jacksonville Southeastern Railroad Company started the construction of a line of road from Jacksonville north. Through Fulton County south from Canton, the projected line to be followed was much the same as that of the defunct Jacksonville & Savanna line. A grade was constructed from Canton to the Illinois River opposite Havana, and all the bridging was completed. The piers of a new bridge across the Illinois River were built to carry the line into Havana. The financial depression of 1893 put a stop to the work and nothing has since been done with it. The grade still remains partially intact, but all the bridges have fallen into decay.

STREET AND INTERURBAN LINES.—In 1892 a franchise for the operation of a street car line was granted by the city of Canton. About one-half a block of track was laid on Maple Street, west from the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad depot, but nothing farther was done in the matter, excepting that, after several months, the track was removed by the city authorities as a nuisance.

The agitation for an interurban line of railway to connect the different cities of Fulton County began in 1902. W. S. McGinnis, of Canton, representing one James A. Lawrence, of Chicago, organized a local company and secured a franchise for the Fulton County Electric Railroad Company from the city of Canton. The line as projected was to have the city of Canton as its central point and to run north toward Farmington, with a branch to Fairview, and south to Lewistown. The agitation resulted in the ultimate formation of the Illinois Electric Railway Company, which succeeded to the rights of the Fulton County Electric Railroad Company, and obtained a new franchise from the city of Canton, also a franchise from the village of St. David and one from the city of Lewistown. A track has been laid from Spruce Street on North Main Street, in the city of Canton, to the village of St. David, a distance of about six miles. The intention is to extend the line both north and south. If the plans of the promoters of this line materialize, Canton will be the central point for a system of interurban lines radiating from that city. The present officers of the Illinois Central Electric Railroad Company are: R. F. Henkle, President; L. W. Morton, First Vice-President; M. W. Rafferty, Second Vice-President; W. D. Plattenburg, Secretary; E. A. Heald, Treasurer. These five men, with William Hanlon, constitute the six men who financed and built the road.

Another interurban line is projected by what is known as the McKinley Syndicate, to run from Peoria to Canton.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

FIRST BANK IN FULTON COUNTY A BRANCH OF THE JACKSONVILLE STATE BANK—CURRENCY CONDITIONS PREVIOUS TO 1860—BANKS WHICH HAVE FAILED—LIST OF BANKING INSTITUTIONS OF THE PRESENT DAY—DATES OF ORGANIZATION AND NAMES OF PRINCIPAL FOUNDERS—PRESENT OFFICERS—NUMBER OF NATIONAL, STATE AND PRIVATE BANKS—CAPITALIZATION AND FINANCIAL CONDITION—BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

The first strictly financial or banking institution in Fulton County was known as the Fulton Bank, and was located in the village of Vermont. It was established in 1859 and was a branch of the Jacksonville State Bank. Harvey Lee Ross was the agent and had supervision and control of it, and, although it was in the days of "wildcat currency," be it said to the bank's credit, that no one lost a single dollar by being a patron of it. Up to about 1860 there was no reliable cash market for the products from the farm except wheat. Coin was alone a legal tender, and there was not enough of it in circulation to do one-tenth the necessary business. The few coins obtainable were nearly all of foreign mintage, and many of them so worn that dealers put varying value upon them. United States coins rarely got into circulation. "Red dog," "wildcat," "stump-tail" and "shin-plasters" were the colloquial names given to the paper money that circulated as currency. The bills of different banks had many different values, and these values fluctuated from day to day. Every merchant took a weekly periodical called the "Bank Note Reporter," and this was consulted and the percentage of each bill computed. The currency in general use, passing as medium of exchange, was, therefore, a bewildering and maddening nightmare. These conditions obviously caused the barter to be the common method of exchange, and it was not until after the war that the banking business of Fulton County really gained a foothold. The first bank organized in the county under the National Banking Act was the First National Bank of Canton. The first bank organized under the State law was the Farmers' State Bank of Lewistown. There are now twenty-four banking institutions in the county, comprised of three National, five State and sixteen private banks, with a total investment of capital and surplus of $1,000,000, in round numbers, and deposits aggregating very nearly $5,000,000. In the history of the banking business in the county there have been five failures, all private banks. They were as follows: C. D. Hoblitt, Canton, November 13, 1884, liabilities $98,400; Orlando J. Beam, Avon, December 5, 1884, liabilities $81,552; J. Mershon & Co., Vermont, June 16, 1892, liabilities $171,504; Turner, Phelps & Co., Lewistown, January 6, 1894, liabilities $243,187.49, and Jackson Mason (Bank of Farmington), Farmington, December 24, 1895, liabilities $16,580.

Following is a list of banking institutions now doing business in Fulton County:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, CANTON.—The First National Bank of Canton was organized March 23, 1864, with the following Board of Directors: James H. McCall (President), Jacob H. Bass, Amos C. Babcock, John W. Ingersoll, George Barrere, William Hulit, Daniel W. Vittum. The present Board of Directors and officers are: William O. Dean (President), L. B. Farnsworth (Vice-President), Benjamin E. Negly, E. F. Swearingen, Joseph Sklarek, Leslie W. Morton and W. D. Plattenburg (Cashier). The capital stock is $100,000, and the capital and surplus (1907) aggregate $175,000.

CANTON NATIONAL BANK.—The Canton National Bank, on the basis of the private banking institution of C. T. Heald & Co., was established in February, 1882, its first President being Charles C. Dewey, with C. T. Heald as first Cashier, who was succeeded by E. A. Heald. In January, 1887, it was chartered as a National Bank, its first President under the new organization being David Beeson, who served from 1887 to 1892, when he was succeeded by B. F. Eyerly, the present incumbent. E. A. Heald, the first Cashier, has held that office since 1890 to the present time, while S. Y. Thornton, the present Vice-President, has been one of the directors ever since the organization of the institution as a National Bank. E. A. Heald is Assistant Cashier. The present Board of Directors (1907), with terms of office, is as follows: B. F. Eyerly (President), S. Y. Thornton and G. M. Armstrong (1892-1907); David Beeson (Vice-President), James N. Divilbiss and F. A. Morton (1887-1892); and E. A. Heald, Cashier (1890-1907). The capital stock is $100,000 and the surplus and undivided profits $60,000. The institution carries on a savings deposit department, allowing the depositors 3 per cent. interest, and maintains a system of safety deposit lock boxes for rent.

BANKING HOUSE OF STEENBURG & Co.—The oldest banking institution that has had a continuous existence in Fulton County, as well as one of the oldest in Central Illinois, was organized at Farmington, Fulton County, January 27, 1868, by George Stetson and Lewis Caldwell, under the name of Stetson & Caldwell, and is now conducted by the firm of Alfred C. Steenburg & Co., under the name of the "Banking House of Alfred C. Steenburg & Co." Mr. Caldwell retired from the original institution on March 1, 1871, being succeeded by George H. Littlewood, and two years later A. W. Richards was added to the firm, which, for five years thereafter, was known as Stetson, Littlewood & Richards. On March 1, 1878, Mr. Stetson, having removed to Iowa, retired from the business, which was conducted under the name of Richards & Littlewood until March 1, 1883, when Alfred C. Steenburg became the third member of the firm, and for nearly six years it was known as Richards, Littlewood & Co. Mr. Richards, having then removed to California, sold his interest to the other partners, the firm name becoming Littlewood and Steenburg. Mr. Littlewood died in 1903, when Mr. Steenburg, the remaining member of the firm, associated with himself his wife, Mrs. Alice W. Steenburg; his real estate partner, Mr. Samuel Jack, and two of his employes, Messrs. L. J. March and Clyde Steenburg, since which time there has been no change in the firm, but a constant and substantial increase in business, giving evidence of the confidence of the business community and the general public in the solvency and stability of the institution. Of the present members of the firm, Alfred C. Steenburg, the present head of the concern, has been connected with the bank since 1875, L. J. March since 1888 and Clyde Steenburg since 1893. The institution has always been conducted as a private bank, the managers believing they can better subserve the interests of their customers in an agricultural community when unhampered by the restrictions imposed by State and National banking laws.

BANK OF IPAVA.—"The Bank of Ipava" had its inception in 1875, when it began business under the ownership of Messrs. Ayres & Scheitlein. The former member of the firm, Henry P. Ayres, had previously been with the Mechanics' National Bank of Peoria, and when he had been with the concern at Ipava six months, the Ipava bank having been bought by J. L. McCune & Co., he accepted an invitation in the fall of 1875 to resume his connection with the bank at Peoria. Mr. McCune died in 1893, and in November, 1902, Mr. Quillin bought the interest of the McCune estate in the Bank of Ipava, which has been under his ownership and control up to the present time. Mrs. H. S. Hermick has been bookkeeper and Assistant Cashier since 1900, and the bank is doing a satisfactory and constantly increasing business. The concern does a private banking business.

TOMPKINS BANK.—The Tompkins Bank of Avon, Ill., was in operation in 1884, when S. Tompkins & Son opened up a set of bank books and commenced a regular exchange banking business. This was continued under the management of the original firm until the death, in 1898, of Stephen Tompkins, the head of the concern, when the bank was reorganized under the original title of the Tompkins Bank, by A. B. and F. W. Tompkins and W. H. Clayburg, under the firm name of A. B. Tompkins & Co. This concern does a general banking and exchange business.

BANK OF FAIRVIEW.—The Bank of Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., was established on July 1, 1885, by Messrs. T. H. Travers, L. W. Davis, P. B. Voorhees and John W. Gaddis, doing business under the firm name of the Fairview Banking Company, but is not capitalized. The first officers were T. H. Travers, President; L. W. Davis, Vice-President; John W. Gaddis, Cashier, and this organization has continued unchanged to the present time, after the completion of twenty-two years of business.

THE PEOPLE'S BANK OF VERMONT was established in 1885, and R. Dilworth is the present President. No other facts have been furnished by the officers of the institution in reference to its history, capitalization, change of organization or growth of business.

PEOPLE'S STATE BANK, ASTORIA, ILL.—Under date of September 24, 1889, a permit was issued by the Auditor of Public Accounts of the State of Illinois, on the petition of H. C. Mooney, W. H. Emen, S. P. Cummings, Julius Driesen, J. C. Sparks and John H. Lutz, for the organization of a bank to be known as the People's State Bank of Astoria, and a charter to this effect was granted February 24, 1890. The bank was opened for business on the morning of February 27th, following, with a capital stock of $50,000. The first Board of Directors consisted of W. H. Emen, S. P. Cummings, William Bader, H. C. Mooney, Julius Driesen, Cyrns Bucher, James Morningstar, John H. Lutz and W. B. Jones, and the first officers were W. H. Emen, President; William Bader, First Vice-President; H. C. Mooney, Second Vice-President, and J. W. Green, Cashier. On March 6, 1900, the capital stock was reduced to $30,000, and on June 1, 1907, it was increased to $40,000. The present officers are W. H. Emen, President; H. C. Mooney, First Vice-President; John H. Lutz, Second Vice-President; J. W. Green, Cashier; George C. Green, Assistant Cashier; J. H. Gruber, bookkeeper. The following is a condensed statement of the condition of the bank, as reported to the State Auditor May 31, 1907:

STATE BANK OF CUBA.—The Bank of Cuba, Ill., was organized as a private banking concern April 1, 1889, by Homer W. McCoy, under the firm name of Homer W. McCoy & Co., with a capital of $6,500. In October, 1891, Mr. McCoy sold a half interest to Henry Shiery, the firm being then known as McCoy & Shiery. In January, 1895, Mr. McCoy sold his remaining half interest to Oscar H. Parks, the firm then becoming Shiery, Park & Co. In March, 1897, Mr. Parks sold his interest to Mr. Shiery, when the concern became known as H. Shiery & Co.

On July 1, 1902, the Bank of Cuba was organized as a State Bank under the firm name of the State Bank of Cuba, Henry Shiery and W. H. Rhodes being the principal stockholders. It started on its new career with a capital stock of $25,000 and a surplus of $5,000, the latter having since been increased to $10,000. The first Board of Officers (which remains unchanged) is as follows: President, G. T. Baylor; Vice-President, G. E. Snively; Cashier, Henry Shiery; Assistant Cashier, F. H. Cole. The last report to the State Auditor was issued May 20, 1907.

FARMERS' BANK, TABLE GROVE.—The Farmers' Bank of Table Grove, Fulton County, Ill., was organized December 2, 1889, by T. J. Kinney and Robert Dilworth, owners of the People's Bank at Vermont, Ill., and was conducted from the date of its organization to May 1, 1901, under the joint ownership. At the latter date the joint partnership was dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Dilworth then taking control of the Vermont Bank and Mr. Kinney of the Table Grove Bank. The first officers of the Farmers' Bank were: Robert Dilworth, President; T. J. Kinney, Cashier, and E. H. Kinney, Assistant Cashier. On January 1, 1903, Mr. Kinney associated with himself in the banking business his son, E. H. Kinney, and the firm name was then changed to T. J. & E. H. Kinney, Mr. T. J. Kinney being the President and E. H. Kinney, Cashier. In 1904 Mr. G. B. Miller was employed as Assistant Cashier, and is still occupying that position. The business of the bank has had a steady growth, and its volume of business today is larger than ever before. The institution has a reputation for honesty and fair dealing, and with a board of courteous officers, is steadily gaining ground and growing stronger every day.

BANK OF SMITHFIELD.—The Bank of Smithfield, at Smithfield, Ill., was established during the year 1893 by C. L. and W. N. Reynolds, their firm name being Reynolds Bros., and their individual responsibility $75,000. The business was continued by this firm until January 18, 1902, when John W. Howard and A. W. Voorhees were admitted to partnership, the firm then being known as Reynolds, Howard & Voorhees. The institution, however, retained its original name as "The Bank of Smithfield." The capital stock at that time was $10,000, and the individual responsibility of the stockholders $150,000. The present officers are: W. N. Reynolds, President; C. L. Reynolds, Vice-President; A. W. Voorhees, Cashier; J. W. Howard Assistant Cashier. The bank has always been a private institution and has paid regular dividends.

THE FARMERS' STATE BANK OF LEWISTOWN was organized by the citizens of Lewistown, Astoria, Cuba and Summum February 6, 1894, and commenced business on March 16th following, its capital stock being $25,000. Its principal stockholders were John Prickett, W. C. Worley, W. M. Fike, Moses Bordner, Lucien Gray, H. W. Masters, T. B. Harben, T. W. Potts, T. H. Barnes, T. A. Young, S. E. Rucker, O. C. Hanna and K. Thomas, of Lewistown; J. Driesen, H. Mooney, J. H. Lutz, Mrs. P. W. Chaddock, B. C. Toler, Mrs. John Skinner and John Skinner, of Astoria; P. H. Snively, of Cuba; and W. M. Barnes and R. G. Zimmerman, of Summum. The first Board of Directors were John Prickett, Moses Bordner, T. H. Barnes, P. H. Snively, John Skinner, J. H. Lutz, H. C. Mooney; and the first officers, John Prickett, President; John Skinner, Vice-President; W. M. Fike, Cashier, and W. T. Rucker, Assistant Cashier. The present officers are: John Skinner, President; W. C. Worley, Vice-President; W. T. Rucker, Cashier, and Susie L. Campbell, Assistant Cashier. The following is the last statement of the condition of the bank made to the Auditor of Public Accounts:

FULTON COUNTY PRESS.

NEWSPAPER HISTORY—FIRST PAPER IN MILITARY TRACT STARTED IN FULTON COUNTY—THREE PAPERS WHICH HAVE HAD LONGEST CONTINUOUS EXISTENCE—PRESENT EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS—LIST OF WEEKLY AND DAILY PAPERS OF THE PRESENT DAY, WITH NAMES OF EDITORS AND POLITICAL RELATIONS—HISTORY OF SOME EARLY PUBLICATIONS.

The pioneer newspaper of the Military Tract was launched in Fulton County in 1837. During the seventy years following scores of newspapers have been established in the county, the vast majority of them, of course, having but an ephemeral existence. Three of the newspapers of the county, the "Canton Weekly Register" and the "Fulton County Ledger," of Canton, and the "Fulton Democrat," of Lewistown, have been regularly issued for more than half a century. The present editor and proprietor of the "Fulton County Ledger," Stephen Y. Thornton, has owned and edited that newspaper since 1857. William T. Davidson has been the owner and editor of the "Fulton Democrat" since 1858. The next longest in the list of Fulton County papers in continuous publication is the "Canton Weekly Register," which Clarence E. Snively has owned and edited since 1878.

At the present time there are regularly issued in Fulton County sixteen weekly and three daily newspapers, as follows, with location, names of editors and proprietors, politics, etc.:

WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS.

"Astoria Argus," Astoria; A. W. Price, editor and publisher; Democratic in politics.

"Astoria Search Light," Astoria; A. E. Scott, editor and publisher; Republican.

"Vermont Union," Vermont; Clarence Mercer, editor and publisher; non-partisan.

"Table Grove Herald," Table Grove; F. M. Bonham, editor and publisher; non-partisan.

"Avon Sentinel," Avon; W. E. Stevens, editor and publisher; Republican.

"London Times," London Mills; W. W. Vose, editor and publisher; Prohibition.

"Ipava Independent," Ipava; H. W. Jones, editor and publisher; Republican.

"Fulton Democrat," Lewistown; William T. Davidson, editor and publisher; Independent Democratic.

"Lewistown News," Lewistown; W. D. Meek, editor and publisher; Democratic.

"Lewistown Republican-Record," Lewistown; W. J. Duvall, editor and publisher; Republican.

"Cuba Journal," Cuba; Thomas & Nelson, publishers; J. W. Nelson, editor; Democratic.

"Fairview Bee," Fairview; E. E. Whitehead, editor and publisher; non-partisan.

"Farmington Home Visitor," Farmington; A. W. Brown, editor and publisher; Republican.

"Farmington Bugle," Farmington; S. P. Wood, editor and publisher; Republican.

"Canton Weekly Register," Canton; C. E. Snively, editor and publisher; A. J. Slater, managing editor; Republican.

"Fulton County Ledger," Canton; S. Y. Thornton, editor and publisher; Democratic.

DAILY NEWSPAPERS.

"Lewistown Evening Record," Lewistown; W. J. Duvall, editor and publisher; issued every secular evening; Republican.

"Canton Daily Register," Canton; C. E. Snively, editor and publisher; A. J. Slater, managing editor; every secular evening; Republican.

"Canton Daily Herald," Canton; The Canton Herald Company, publishers; George P. Ziegler, editor; Ross F. Walker, business manager; issued every secular evening except Saturday, and Sunday morning; independent.

The first newspaper established in Fulton County was the "Canton Herald," a weekly, published at Canton by Ptolemy Stone and edited by the Rev. Gideon B. Perry, a Baptist minister, and the president of the then existing Canton College. This was in 1837. The name of the paper was changed to the "Fultonian" in 1838 and in 1840 to the "Western Telegraph," and later to the "Fulton Telegraph." Mr. Stone was identified with the enterprise from its inception. At intervals there was a suspension for a short time of the issuance of a newspaper, but Mr. Stone maintained a job-printing establishment all the time. The publication of a newspaper which could by any theory of reasoning be said to be the successor of this early "Canton Herald" ceased in the early 'forties.

The second newspaper established in Fulton County was the "Fulton Democrat," a weekly, established in Lewistown in 1839 by William McDowell, a brother of Dr. R. R. McDowell, one of the country's early pioneers and prominent citizens. The paper suspended in about one year. It is a coincidence worthy of mention that at the present time there are published in the county newspapers bearing the same names as those of two pioneers mentioned, neither of them, however, having any connection whatever with the earlier publications. Among other early newspapers of the county were:

"The People's Advocate," established at Lewistown in 1841 by George W. Smith. It suspended within a few months.

"The Fulton Banner," established at Lewistown in 1842 by Michael C. Billmore. It was sold by Billmore to A. R. Sparks and suspended publication in 1844.

"The Fulton Gazette," established in Lewistown in 1845 by James M. Davidson and Charles McDowell. It suspended in 1846.

"The Fulton Republican," established at Lewistown in 1846 by Hugh LeMasters. It suspended in 1854.

"The Illinois Public Ledger," established at Lewistown in 1849 by S. S. Brooks and Joseph Dyckes. Charles E. Griffith took over the controlling interest in 1851 and in 1854 the paper was moved to Canton where, in 1857, after being owned by several partnership combinations, it passed to the sole control of S. Y. Thornton, who has since that time continuously owned and edited it, the name being changed to the "Fulton County Ledger."

"The Canton Register" was established in January, 1849, and has been continuously published since that date excepting for a few months in 1850 and for two months in 1862. J. Sellon established the paper and it had many successive proprietors until 1878, when it passed to the control of Clarence E. Snively, its present proprietor. The afternoon daily edition was started in 1890.

"The Fulton Democrat" was established at Lewistown in 1855 by James M. Davidson. In 1858 it passed to the control of its present proprietor, William T. Davidson, brother of the paper's founder. Since that time the paper has been edited as well as owned by Mr. Davidson.

EDUCATION—LIBRARIES.

EARLY SCHOOLS IN FULTON COUNTY—LOCAL SCHOOL HISTORY BY TOWNSHIPS—FIRST SCHOOL AT LEWISTOWN—EARLY TEACHERS—PRESENT CONDITIONS OF PRINCIPAL TOWNS AND CITIES—HIGHER EDUCATION—ATTEMPT TO FOUND A COLLEGE AT CANTON—PUBLIC LIBRARIES AT CANTON, LEWISTOWN AND FARMINGTON—STATISTICS OF SCHOOLS FOR 1907—NUMBER OF PUPILS, TEACHERS, SCHOOLS, ETC.—SALARIES, EXPENDITURES AND VALUE OF SCHOOL PROPERTY—POPULATION BY TOWNSHIPS, 1850-1900.

Generally speaking, the earliest schools of Fulton County were established along the lower courses of Spoon River and its branches, where many of the pioneer settlements were made. Lewistown is the oldest town in the county and probably the earliest schools taught were those in the old log courthouse, built at that place in 1823. Later the Masons erected a building on the present site of the Presbyterian Church, which was used especially for educational purposes.

Several of the pioneer schools of the county were established in Buckheart Township near the present village of Bryant, one of them being built in 1825 or 1826.

About the time that the first schools were appearing in Buckheart the young town of Canton was being founded by Isaac Swan, who saw to it that one of the first buildings erected in 1825 was a schoolhouse. In his history he says: "It was situated on the west side of Wood Street, between Union and Illinois Streets. John C. Owens was the first school teacher. This house merits a description. It was of logs, unhewn and by no means straight. The roof was low and covered with clapboards, kept in place by weight poles. The house logs were very small, of willow and cottonwood timber principally. Several holes were cut through the logs to let the dark out, but admitted a very scanty supply of light. The floor for the first year was of the very best variety of prairie soil, trampled hard by the feet of the young ideas who were there taught to shoot. The seats were logs split in two parts and supported on pins driven into holes bored for the purpose. The one writing desk was a wide puncheon, with its upper surface planed and supported on slanting pins driven into one of the logs. The door, of unshaved clapboards, swung upon wooden hinges. One side of the room was occupied by an enormous old-fashioned fire-place. There was no ceiling save the clapboard roof, although one or two joists held a wide puncheon, whereon, at overcrowded meetings—for the schoolhouse also did duty as a place of worship—the more adventurous of the boys would climb and sit out the service, with their bare legs swinging over the heads of the worshippers below. Here Owens assembled a few of the children in the winter of 1825-26—Joe and Jim Anderson, Henry Andrews, Ed Thurman, Harriet, Elmira and Williston Jones, the Owens children, the Peyton, Hughland and Fraker children and a few others." The meteoric career of higher education in Canton, with its final fall through the ravages of a tornado belong to a later date, as does the gradual development of the public system of education. (See History of Canton College in a later section of this chapter.)

Bernadotte, Cass and Putman Townships, adjoining those already mentioned on the west and southwest, were the next in order of time to develop educationally, and these six comprised a goodly portion of the central sections of the county which have since shown in all respects the most substantial growth. The first schoolhouse in Bernadotte Township was built in 1828, and John Clayburg was the pioneer teacher. In the following year the good people of Cass provided educational facilities through D. S. Baughman and Putman Township came into the field about the same time by giving William Putman, a brother of Reading Putman (its first settler), a chance to teach a dozen boys and girls in a small log cabin on Section 11.

Pleasant Township, south of Bernadotte, was also among the pioneers, for its settlers built a schoolhouse as early as 1830, where Samuel Clayburg, a relative of John Clayburg, before mentioned, was the first teacher.

In 1832 Farmington Township, in the extreme northeast, and Astoria, in the southwest, entered the educational lists. This was about two years before the town of Farmington was laid out, and the pioneer school of the township was built in the center of what afterward became the village and city. It was taught by Isaac Cutter.

Early in the 'thirties the McNeil brothers (David and John) settled in Astoria Township and commenced to teach a few children soon after, although the first regular teacher is said to have been Martin Fast. The first school in the town of Astoria was taught by John Fast of the same family.

The year 1833 was a red-letter year for both Farmers and Orion Townships. In that year a small log cabin was erected in Farmers Township, with split-log benches and puncheon floor, and here Miss Eleanor Rutledge opened its first school. She afterward married John Barker, the township's first settler. About 1835 the Baptists erected a building which was used for both educational and religious purposes. The first schoolhouse in Orion Township was opened to scholars by S. N. Breed, who afterward taught in Canton. Patsey Brown taught prior to 1833 in a private house on Section 18.

One of the oldest institutions of the county was Salem school, founded in the northern part of Section 8, Liverpool Township in the early 'thirties. J. N. Hasson came to Woodland Township in 1835 and taught its first school in the following winter, during which he also managed to kill sixteen deer in the course of his three-mile tramp to meet his scholars, which goes to show that, although there might have been difficulties in the way of teaching, fresh venison came easy.

The first school in Young Hickory Township was taught on Section 36 by a Mr. Barnes in 1835, and in the following year a house was erected for educational purposes in the public square of the town of Vermont, which was the pioneer school of the township. James Spicer was the teacher.

John Parkerson taught the first school in Union Township in 1836, opening it in old St. Augustine, now a town of the past, the name having been transferred to a town site across the line in Warren County. In 1840 Charles Davis taught the first Avon school, its first house for educational purposes being built soon afterward.

The village of Fairview, in the township of that name, became quite an educational center in the pioneer times of the late 'thirties. In the summer of 1838, before the town had been fairly surveyed, Simon S. Wyckoff was employed by the villagers to teach school in an old log cabin set aside for that purpose. In July the Fairview Academy was opened by S. S. Cornwell, and in the following year a special building was erected for it near the noted Dutch Reformed Church. This building was occupied as a public school until 1863. Matthias Swegle was the first settler of the township, locating at the head of Swegle Creek in 1829. He proved to be one of the most generous and public-spirited men of that region. He was very fleshy—weighing 340 pounds—but showed his absolute common sense by completing his neglected education in the new country with the small boys and girls who attended its first schools. Subsequently one of the best known district schools of the township was named after him.

Elizabeth Moon was the first school teacher in Lee Township, taking charge of her handful of pupils in 1839. During the same year a schoolhouse was built on the east half of Section 16, in the town of Marietta, which had been founded two years before. Schools were first opened in Deerfield and Ellisville Townships in 1840, and a schoolhouse was built on Section 30, Kerton Township, in 1845, two years before West Point was located.

In the above an attempt has been made to indicate the first efforts to instruct the pioneer children of Fulton County. Some of the schools were private, conducted on the subscription plan, and others were crude district establishments. At the present time all the districts are well provided with educational facilities and the succeeding pages which are devoted to this topic chiefly set forth the development of the public school systems at the main centers of population.

MODERN SCHOOLS.

CANTON SCHOOL SYSTEM.—Prior to 1845, with the exception of Canton College and the old log schoolhouse of 1825, no building was erected at Canton expressly for school purposes, so that, prior to that year, the educational history of Canton was confined to the founding and conduct of private schools. For fifteen years succeeding 1845 three public schoolhouses were utilized—the East schoolhouse, on East Elm Street; Little White, afterward known as South Primary, on South Main Street, and the old brick school on the corner of West Ash Street and Avenue A. From 1845 to 1854, however, the educational system of Canton was but loosely organized, but in the latter year, through Directors Rev. Edwards Marsh, Elder S. G. Miner and Dr. James Melrose, was inaugurated a system of graded schools. The next noticeable feature introduced into the schools of Canton embraced music and drawing, which were incorporated in 1889. Typewriting and bookkeeping were introduced in 1892, stenography in 1904 and manual training in 1907.

As to the erection of the seven buildings through which the public school system of Canton is now conducted, the Shepley School, west of Canton, is one of the oldest and the smallest in attendance. The old South Primary is the pioneer of the public school buildings and has been moved to East Walnut Street, where it is now used as a store. On June 15, 1860, the corner-stone of the old high school building at the corner of South Main and East Walnut Streets was laid. It contained five rooms and was designed by W. H. Haskell. In 1869 the Maple building, corner of East Elm Street and North Fourth Avenue, and the Wright building, corner East Spruce Street and North First Avenue, were erected, each containing four rooms. Then followed, in 1888, the Hulit School, corner of West Chestnut Street and North Avenue C, and in 1890 the Kellogg building, corner of South Third Avenue and East Oak Street, the ground for the latter having been donated by William Pitt Kellogg, now of Washington, D. C. Four years later an addition to the Kellogg building was erected and in 1895 the McCall School, corner of East Locust Street and North Eighth Avenue, was constructed. Bonds were issued for the erection of the present high school building in December, 1902, and in the following spring work was commenced on the new structure. The corner-stone was laid under the auspices of the Alumni Association of the High School on May 21, 1903, and the building was occupied in the following April. The present enrollment of the high school is 359 and the value of the property about $74,000. In its architecture and interior arrangement the building is counted one of the finest in the State. On the first floor the building contains eight large recitation rooms, a Board of Education room and the Superintendent's office. On the second floor are an assembly room, or study hall, with a seating capacity of nearly 400; twelve rooms used for recitation work, a library and teachers' rest room and the Principal's office. The laboratory, with an equipment costing $1,000, is in the basement of the south wing and a manual training department sufficient to accommodate fifty pupils, is in the basement of the north wing. On the third floor is a large room used for the choruses and gymnasium. There is a perfect system of heating and ventilating, the fan system being used.

Since the employment of a regular manual training instructor, in 1907, this feature of the public school system of Canton, as in other progressive cities, has become very prominent, its salient advantages being thus described in the last annual report of Superintendent G. W. L. Meeker:

"Manual training adds an interesting feature to the school work. The interest which it brings secures better results, with increased concentration on the studies of the school. The training of the hand and the mental faculties together increases both physical and mental powers, and enables them to supplement each other. In connection with this branch a system of mechanical drawing is taken and each model is drawn and executed accurately to the proper and uniform scale."

The latest figures submitted by the City Superintendent of Schools furnish the following information: The total enrollment of pupils is 1,983—the highest in the educational history of the city. The valuation of public school property, including grounds, furniture, apparatus, etc., is about $200,000. The total receipts amount to $44,258.24 and the expenditures for the support of the public system to $39,602.62. The bonded indebtedness is $56,000, although it is expected that this latter item will soon be entirely eliminated.

The present officers of the Canton Board of Education are as follows: W. P. Reichert, President; W. F. Gilroy, Vice-President; George W. Powell, Secretary; W. D. Plattenburg, Treasurer. The other members are Dr. J. G. Whiting and H. F. Suydam.

The teaching staff of the high school is as follows: C. E. Lawyer, Principal; E. H. Dewey, Drawing; Emma C. Caron, Music; Margaret R. Maynard, Latin; Emma Spencer, Reading; Helen F. Walker, Geometry and Algebra; Lida H. Leaman, English Grammar; Ruth A. David, History; Emily J. Shafer, German and English; Edith Drake, United States History; Kate Elliott, English and Elocution; DeForest Stull, Science; L. B. King, English and Literature; Mabel Maginnis, Stenography and Typewriting; T. C. Fleming, Bookkeeping and Penmanship; Mary E. O'Donnell, Arithmetic; Charles White, Manual Training. Besides the high school there are six graded schools in Canton, the principals of which are as follows: Orville A. Tearney, McCall School; John Moore, Kellogg School; R. F. Overton, Maple School; Mayme Snyder, Wright School; Flora Trites, Hulit School; Emma Wysong, Shepley School.

FARMINGTON SCHOOLS.—The public educational system of Farmington originated in the little log schoolhouse about twenty feet square which was erected in the early 'fifties on what is now the west side of Main Street, a block south of Fort Street. C. C. Butler and other old residents attended it, and, if necessary, would have fought for the privilege of being trained there in the three great primary branches—reading, writing and arithmetic. They hold with some justice that in these fundamentals of education the masters of these little log-house schools turned out better trained scholars than their later-day brothers of the profession. This pioneer of the public school system at Farmington was a district school and the town was afterward divided into two districts. No. 1 was provided with a little brick building occupying the present site of the Presbyterian Church and No. 2 had a frame structure near the present site of DeCapp's Hotel.

At this time, and for years before, were such noted private schools as Hill's Academy on North Main Street and the Institute conducted in the basement of the Congregational Church by Prof. Churchill, later of Knox College. In 1866 a substantial brick building three stories in height, with basement, was erected on the present site of the high school and was designed to accommodate not only the advanced pupils, but those who were passing through the lower grades. The old high school was destroyed by fire December 9, 1890, and the present fine building was erected in the following year and dedicated March 7, 1892. Its cost was $25,000. The present enrollment in the high school and the twelve grammar grades, all taught under one roof, is about 500. The attendance is increasing so rapidly that $15,000 in bonds has been voted for the erection of a new building to accommodate a portion of the grammar classes, its location being on Fort Street, west side. A. P. Rolto is President of the Board of Education, N. S. Moore, Secretary, A. J. Beatty, Superintendent, and Miss Florence Grady, Principal of the high school.

LEWISTOWN SCHOOLS.—The children of the Lewistown pioneers secured their first educational privileges in the old log courthouse, erected in 1823, and Hugh R. Colter, who was everything official in those days, also taught the first school. There were many private schools of early days, and the Lewistown College became quite well known, but the present public school system of education may be said to have commenced with the erection of the three-story high school building in 1866, but still occupied. W. H. Haskell was the designer of this edifice. Nearly 100 pupils are now enrolled in the high school proper, and in the four upper grades, which are also accommodated in the same building, are about 160 scholars. The Baldwin School, erected in 1895, accommodates nearly 190 pupils of the grades from the first to the fourth inclusive, and the so-called East Primary School, held in the "Little White Church," numbers about forty scholars of the first and second grades. M. H. Beeman is the present City Superintendent of Schools.

HIGHER EDUCATION.—The first available records of public schools of Fulton County begin with the year 1837, but these are not the records of the first public schools of the county. The early schools have heretofore been adverted to. Probably the earliest educational institution in the county of a higher order than the common school was Canton College, which proved a failure. In 1838, and even later, there was a private academy maintained in Bernadotte. Private academies were also supported at times at Farmington and elsewhere in the county. Ineffectual attempts were made on three or more occasions to establish permanently a college at Lewistown. The college building at present stands in East Lewistown and is used for residential purposes. Aside from a small business college conducted in the city of Canton by J. G. Harmison, there are no private schools or academies within the limits of Fulton County.

CANTON COLLEGE.—The educational history of Canton virtually commences with the settlement and the founding of its various private institutions, many of them most worthy and some of them quite noteworthy, have already been described. Canton College really marks the beginning of the public school system, as it was entirely undenominational and generally supported by the educated men and women of the town. It was founded chiefly by pioneers from New England and New York, who broached the subject of an institution for higher education soon after the town was recovering from the effects of the tornado of 1835. Steps for the founding of such an institution were finally taken by the donation of ground by Rev. Romulus Barnes and Nathan Jones, which was called College Square, the funds to carry on the work being raised by the sale of lots in the Barnes & Jones addition to Canton, Mr. Barnes donating his interest in the same for this purpose. There is some disagreement as to the exact construction of the college building, some insisting that it was a three-story brick structure throughout the others claiming that the third story was of boards, painted to resemble bricks. Whatever the facts of the case may be, the building was completed in the fall of 1836. The institution was chartered by act of the Legislature December 6, 1836; forms of diplomas were printed and all arrangements were made to place a complete establishment of higher learning on a firm basis. Canton College finally opened for the reception of pupils in the summer of 1837 and although Rev. Romulus Barnes was faithfully on hand to receive and instruct them, the attendance was very disappointing. Succeeding him as professor was Wright Dewey, brother of George W. Dewey, while Rev. Gideon B. Perry, M. D., LL. D., was its first regular President and served in this capacity until October, 1841. Dr. Perry's duties seem to have been purely nominal, the active principal of the college being Ralph Perry, but not related to the Doctor. The last teacher who occupied Canton College was Austin J. Barker. One Saturday afternoon in July, 1843, two whirlwinds came up and meeting before the college building, joined to form a small tornado, which carried away the upper story of the structure completely. As Illinois College at Jacksonville and Knox College at Galesburg had already been established, times seemed unpropitious for continuing the enterprise in view of this severe blow to its prospects, and in consequence the building was never reconstructed. Afterward the College Square passed into possession of Joel Wright, Thomas Maple, James H. Stipp and finally William Babcock. Thompson Maple erected a large residence on the site, which was used for many years as the family dwelling of William Babcock. The land was finally absorbed by the Parlin & Orendorff Company and is now underlying one of its new shops.

LIBRARIES.—Public libraries are maintained at Lewistown, Canton and Farmington, those at Lewistown and Farmington being Carnegie libraries. The latter place has the distinction of making the first attempt in Fulton County to institute a public library. As early as 1839 a notice under the then existing State law was filed with the County Commissioners' Court announcing that a library corporation to be known as the "Farmington Circulating Library" had been formed, with Jesse Collins as chairman and George W. Little, Harry Porter, Jeremiah Porter, S. M. Mace and I. R. Caldwell as trustees. The institution was not perpetuated, but went the way of all good things.

PARLIN LIBRARY, CANTON.—Although not directly connected with the public school system of Canton, there are several agencies which should be mentioned as having an elevating and educational effect on the community at large. Placed foremost of these is the Parlin Library, founded by William Parlin in the fall of 1892, and its indirect connection with the public school system is thus noted by City Superintendent Meeker: "We appreciate the Parlin Public Library in the great assistance it is to our schools. By the generosity of this institution we are supplied with supplementary reading for each grade between the first and the high school. With the kindly co-operation of the librarian lists of books of suitable character are placed in the possession of the pupils through the teachers, and no pains are spared to find references to topics which pupils desire to read in the books of the library. Thus the pupils are encouraged to acquire the habit of using the library and to spend their spare moments with great minds, instead of loitering upon the streets looking for amusements."

In September, 1892, the late William Parlin left $8,000 for the establishment and support of a public library, provided the city should raise an additional $5,000 within three years. The founder had repeatedly been solicited to give of his means and influence to establishing a fine public park, but his New England instincts induced him to found an institution which should have for its object the education of the community of which he had so long been an honored and influential factor. The property was therefore placed in the hands of three trustees, who selected a beautiful site on East Chestnut Street opposite the Parlin home, and, as the public promptly fulfilled its part of the contract, an artistic building was there erected in 1893. Up to date about $25,000 has been expended upon the library, of which the Parlin family have contributed fully two-thirds. The widow of the founder is especially enthusiastic and steadfast in its support. The rooms on the first floor are devoted to the library proper and two tastefully furnished reading rooms, while the upper floor is given over to club-rooms for the meeting of several flourishing societies supported by the women of Canton. The walls are tastefully decorated with works of art, which add a striking feature to the educational influence of the institution. The library has increased from 2,500 to 8,000 volumes. Mrs. J. W. Resor is the Librarian of the Parlin Library and Miss M. L. Hicks Assistant.

The Women's Club, which meets at the Parlin Library building, was organized as a Chautauqua Club, but in 1904 it was reorganized and its aims were made to conform to the well known object of similar clubs throughout the country, thus becoming a study club and a reformatory organization. Its membership has increased from about ten to sixty-five. Mrs. Luzetta R. Sanders was its first President, while its present officers are: Miss Addie Dewey, President, and Mrs. J. E. Bradley, Secretary.

The Illinois History Club was organized in 1903, primarily for the study of history, as its name implies. At each meeting some standard poem is taken up for discussion and the history feature has been extended so as to include world topics of current interest. For instance, topics relating to Japan and Russia contributed a portion of the program during the period of the Russo-Japanese War. A unique feature adopted by this club is to mark the progress of its foreign history study by additions to a collection of national flags which now forms a decorative feature of its assembly room in the Parlin Library building.

FARMINGTON'S PUBLIC LIBRARY.—The Carnegie Library at Farmington was founded upon the public library established by the ladies of that place in 1899. Its benefactor donated $5,600 for the beautiful building now occupied, and through the efforts of Alfred C. Steenburg, the banker, an additional $1,000 was raised from the citizens. The building was opened to the public in 1906 and houses a well selected library of over 2,000 books, with a wide range of standard periodical literature. Mrs. Alfred C. Steenburg is President of the Board; Mrs. C. M. Routson, Secretary; Mrs. Emerson Clark, Treasurer, and Miss Nellie McDonald, Librarian.

Canton city schools are under direction of a Board of Education appointed under special charter, the other schools of the county being under control of Boards of Directors under general law.

GENERAL SCHOOL STATISTICS.

The following table of statistics connected with the Fulton County school system for the year 1906-07, is compiled from a report furnished by M. M. Cook, Superintendent of County Schools:

In the early 'twenties religious and educational organizations commenced to spring up, almost simultaneously, in Fulton County. Often the same building was used for church and school, or a few persons would gather together for religious services in the rude cabin of some devout pioneer, and the Gospel would be expounded by a traveling missionary or a local exhorter. Probably the Methodists of Lewistown were the first sect in the county to effect a regular organization, commencing worship soon after the completion of the first log courthouse in 1823. There they held their meetings under the leadership of Rev. Jacob Ellis and others. The first church in the town, however, was built by the Presbyterians, under the lead of William Proctor, the details of which, with the history of the organization of the regular religious bodies of that pioneer town, will be found in other pages.

In 1824 Rev. Jesse Walker, that tireless Methodist missionary, organized a society at what afterward became the town of Canton, and a full history of the churches of the city is given elsewhere.

Joshua Moore located in Joshua Township in 1824 as its first settler, and some of the first religious meetings of the county were held in his house by the Methodists, who listened to such noted exhorters as Peter Cartwright, Father Fraker, John Owens and Smith L. Robinson, the one-eyed preacher. Class meetings, love feasts and merry makings, all had a part at Brother Moore's hospital home.

The first church in Buckheart Township was organized by the regular Baptists in 1825. The Methodists did not formally organize until 1846, when they formed a society in the schoolhouse at the northeast corner of Section 32.

There is a dispute between the Methodists and Christians as to who preached the first sermon in Cass Township. The Antioch, or New Light Christians, were among the first to organize in this region, but the pioneer church building was erected by the Methodists on the farm of Jesse Tate, near Smithfield, in 1849.

There was preaching by traveling missionaries of these two sects as early as 1825, and the Pleasant Valley congregation of Christians was organized at the home of John Laswell by Dr. John Scott, July 21, 1838.

As early as 1827 the Methodists organized in Bernadotte Township. Rev. Asa D. West, of that denomination, the first permanent settler in Farmington Township, preached its pioneer sermon in Jonah Marchant's cabin during the winter of 1827-28. The Congregational Church was the first to be organized in the town of Farmington, as will be seen in later pages of this narrative.

Not long afterward Ozias Hale, the first settler of Orion Township, and an earnest Baptist, preached the first sermon within its limits at John Wolf's house on Section 18. At this time he was in charge of the Duck Creek Baptist Church, which subsequently became the First Baptist Church of Canton.

Rev. Mr. Betson, one of the first to locate in Union Township in 1829, settling on Section 12, preached the first sermon there. Melinda Babbitt was the first to be baptized (in 1832). The first church at Avon was organized by the Methodists in 1849 by Rev. Uri J. Giddings.

The Salem Baptist Church, the first regular religious organization of Liverpool Township, was organized August 10, 1830, at the house of Jeremiah Farris on the northwest quarter of Section 10. In 1834 a church was built on the land of John Farris, just over the line in Buckheart Township, but in 1857 another edifice was erected on Section 8, Liverpool Township, on the property of Captain Elijah Willcoxen.

In the early '30s Peter Cartwright and other Methodist missionaries came to the old town of Washington, and afterward to Astoria, holding services in the schoolhouse and in the cabins of the settlers. Henry Summers was one of the earliest local preachers in that section of the county. In 1835 Elder John Rigdon, a Christian minister, preached the first sermon in Lee Township at the home of his brother, Stephen Rigdon. The First Baptist Church was organized there in 1849. The Baptists organized a church in Farmers Township in June, 1835, and afterward erected a log house, which was used for both church and school for many years. At Table Grove the Christians founded a church in 1857. The early settlers of Vermont Township assembled for worship in the town schoolhouse, built on the public square in 1836, and the Protestant Methodists organized a church and erected a separate edifice in 1843. About the same time Deacon Abraham F. Brown was preaching the first sermon at the funeral of Mrs. John Kerton, wife of the pioneer settler, who gave his name to Kerton Township. In 1837 the Fairview Dutch Reformed Church was founded, being the first in the township, and, as it was the pioneer of that sect west of the Alleghany Mountains, further details of its establishment and growth are to be found elsewhere.

Deerfield Township was among the first in the county to form religious organizations, E. Wiley donating land for both school and church purposes in 1839. In 1879 the Methodists and Lutherans built the Wiley Union Church.

The first church erected in Marietta, Harris Township, was by the Methodists in 1841, but it is said that Rev. James Haney preached a sermon to an audience of four persons in 1834 at the log cabin of Isaac Sennett. Elder J. Logan had the honor of delivering the first sermon to perhaps a little larger congregation in the cabin of J. France, Pleasant Township, but the pioneer church was organized by A. M. Smith in 1842 on Section 14.

In 1853 a German Baptist (or Dunkard) Church was founded at Sumnum, Woodland Township, services being conducted by John Fitz. The first religious building was erected in 1867.

In Young Hickory Township the Christians (New Lights) had an early organization, which finally disbanded, and in 1836 the Mount Pleasant Methodist Episcopal Church of Midway was founded with twelve members. A building was erected in 1851 which was sold (after a split in the church) in 1864, and a new edifice erected in 1869. In 1864 the seceding Methodists founded a congregation under the name of Christian Union, two years later styling themselves Episcopal Methodists. They erected a house of worship in 1868 and their organization became known as the Midway Episcopal Methodist Church.

The above paragraphs by no means present a complete history of the early efforts of religious men and women to plant the seeds of the gospel in Fulton County; they do, however, indicate some of the most important works in the establishment of religion in this section of the State, outside of the larger centers of population. This latter phase of the subject is developed more in detail in pages which follow.

As has already been shown, the pioneers of Fulton County lost no time in providing religious advantages for themselves and children, and their descendants to the present generation have continued the good work, establishing throughout the county churches of every denomination, many of them flourishing and all of them creditable; so that now there is scarcely a section in any township for which ample religious provision has not been made by thoughtful and earnest Christians, but in the necessarily limited space devoted to any one topic it is manifestly impossible to mention all the churches in detail, and attention must be confined chiefly to the large centers of population, such as Canton, Lewistown and Farmington, and the early church organizations of the county.

CHURCHES OF CANTON.—The Methodists claim to be the first denomination to establish a church organization in Canton, the Rev. Jesse Walker, a famous missionary, whose labors covered the country between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, being the first regularly to preach to the pioneers of this section. This was in 1824, when Mr. Walker effected the first church organization. It is said, however, that one Jesse Williams, another Methodist, delivered several sermons to the good people of Canton prior to 1824, and it is known that he afterward located near Canton and conducted services in various houses until 1832. Canton was regularly supplied by traveling ministers also from 1824 to 1832. Rev. Peter R. Baring was the first regular pastor of the Canton circuit, and during the administration of Rev. H. Summers the Methodists built their first church. For this purpose a small building, afterward occupied as a residence by Mr. Babcock, was reconstructed on the corner of the block diagonally from the present magnificent structure of the Methodist Episcopal Church, on the northwest corner of Avenue A and West Chestnut Street. The list of the pastors of the First Methodist Church from the date of its founding in 1824 to the present time is as follows: Jesse Walker, William See, B. L. Robinson, H. Tarkington, Asa D. West, James Bankston, David B. Carter, Peter Baring, H. Summers, O. F. Curtis, Wilson Pitner, Austin F. Rogers, Newton G. Benjamin, Rufus L. Limerly, William Clark, Richard Henry, S. R. Beggs, John Morey, William Justice, Joseph Kelly, J. F. Devore, J. McDowell, M. L. Haney, Isaac Pool, John Luccock, B. C. Swartz, R. C. Rowley, Caleb Foster, Joseph O. Gilbert, A. Magee, L. P. Grouch, C. Springer, J. S. Cummings, J. C. Evans, J. H. Rhea, E. Wasmuth, A. Bower, M. P. Armstrong, H. I. Brown, Peter Warner, Peter A. Cool, Eli McClish, Samuel VanPelt, James W. Haney, E. S. Wilson, Alexander Smith, Thomas Doney, A. R. Morgan and Robert A. Brown.

The corner-stone of the present beautiful edifice occupied by the First Methodist Church of Canton was laid in 1895 and the building was completed at a cost of about $40,000. The edifice is of white stone and forms an attractive architectural feature of the city. The present membership of the society embraces 611 full members and forty-eight probationers.

The first Presbyterian Church of the county was organized at Lewistown September 13, 1828, but on November 11th of the same year Rev. Solomon Hardy preached at Canton. For several years thereafter meetings were held alternately at Canton and Lewistown, but in 1833, under Rev. Romulus Barnes, a church was erected at Canton. Rev. Robert Stewart, who followed him, occupied the local pulpit from 1834 until the fall of 1838, or the division into Presbyterians and Congregationalists. Since then the society has constantly increased and now numbers 400 members. Of the pastors who have occupied the pulpit of this organization mention should also be made of Rev. A. R. Mathes, now of Knoxville, Ill., who held the pulpit consecutively for twenty-three years prior to 1903. The present pastor, Rev. Alfred O. Elliott, who succeeded him, is a graduate of the McCormick Theological Seminary, of Chicago, and this is his first charge. The edifice now occupied on West Walnut near Main Street was completed in 1905 at a cost of $20,000 and took the place of the former church on East Pine Street, between Third and Fourth Avenues.

The Congregational Church of Canton was formed in September, 1838, as the result of a division of the old Presbyterian organization, the Rev. Robert Stewart, of Canton, being in sympathy with the so-called New Church. The document which marked the division and the founding of the society in Canton was issued at the date mentioned and is as follows:

"WHEREAS, Our church has become large and infected with some of the prevailing heresies and disorders of the times, which are maintained and practiced in our midst; and,

"WHEREAS, Errors are taught and received which are at variance with the Bible and our Confession of Faith, and persons are received to membership from other denominations with all their prejudices alive against our doctrines and order, and without being required to renounce them; and,

"WHEREAS, These disorders are becoming every day more glaring and barefaced, and our church as a body has virtually rejected its own system of doctrines and orders; therefore

"Resolved, That we, the undersigned, elders and members of this church, will continue to revere and maintain the doctrines and order of our church in this place as the Presbyterian Church."

On May 22, 1841, Rev. L. Spencer began his labors with the church, which was organized as the New School Presbyterian Church of Canton. A building was erected in 1842 and was replaced in 1858 by the structure now occupied on the corner of Second Avenue and Liberty Place. Within the past two years the building has been reconstructed and increased in size so that it is commodious and comfortable in every way. Since its organization in 1841 the pastors of the church have been as follows: Rev. L. Spencer, 1841-44; Rev. D. Chapman, 1844-46; Rev. Williston Jones, 1846-48; Rev. George Hubbard, 1849-50; Rev. Edward Marsh, 1850-65; Rev. Henry Mills, 1865-66; Rev. Henry Bates, 1867-72; Rev. Henry Mills (recalled), 1872-81; Rev. W. E. Smith, 1882-83; Rev. H. K. Painter, 1883-89; Rev. William Burgess, 1890-91; Rev. T. J. Collier, 1891-94; Rev. Edwin Hobbs, 1895-1904; Rev. H. D. French, 1904 (present pastor).

The First Baptist Church of Canton is the pioneer of the old Illinois River Baptist Association, being organized June 14, 1833, at the house of William Spencer, three miles east of the present city. In September, 1834, Rev. Nathan West was ordained as its first minister. The meetings of the church were held in private houses until July, 1837, when the society assumed the name of the Canton Church

(its original name being the United Baptist Church of Duck Creek). It then (1837) numbered thirty-seven members. In November, 1838, Dr. Gideon B. Perry became its first regular pastor and continued in that relation for three years. During the first two years the members met at the Methodist Church, in private houses and at the Canton College, the first house of worship being dedicated on the fourth Sunday of October, 1839. At that time it was the finest house of worship in the Military Tract. This building was outgrown in a few years and in February, 1853, a large brick structure was erected on the present site, corner of East Elm Street and Third Avenue. In 1902 and 1903 the church was rebuilt and furnished with a large organ, costing some $14,000. This building now accommodates the large and growing membership of the church, which is at present 625. The rebuilt structure was dedicated February 22, 1903, and a remarkable feature of the exercises was the preaching of the sermon by Dr. Henry G. Weston, who had performed the same service at the time the first church was dedicated, February 19, 1853. An additional fact of interest was that of those who attended this fiftieth anniversary twenty-six had been present at the dedicatory services in 1853.

The pastors of the First Baptist Church have been as follows: Rev. G. B. Perry, 1837-40; Rev. Isaac Newell, 1840-44; Rev. Alba Gross, 1844-46; Rev. Erastus Miner, 1847-48; Rev. Simon G. Miner, 1848-60 (with the exception of one year); Rev. A. B. Bolton, 1861-64; Rev. W. R. Webb, 1865-70; Dr. D. H. Cooley, 1871-78; Dr. Charles Whiting, 1879 until his death, April 26, 1893; Dr. Fred Chatworthy, 1893-96; Dr. J. W. Stewart, 1897-1901; Rev. Joseph H. Sowerby, 1901 to date.

Catholic worship was established in Canton about 1862. The members of the church worshiped in private houses until the first small edifice of St. Mary's Catholic Church was built on the corner of South Fifth Avenue and Anderson Place. The grounds for this purpose were dedicated by the faithful Anderson family. This church building was moved away and a new one erected about 1880 on the site of the frame building mentioned. The second edifice was struck by lightning and burned, and the new church building now occupied by the society was completed in 1905. It is of red brick, with stone trimmings, is located on the northwest corner of East Chestnut Street and Second Avenue and is valued at about $20,000, the entire property being placed at $30,000. The church comprises a membership of ninety-five families and its pastor is Rev. J. G. Libert.

In addition to the above religious organizations may be mentioned the Christian Church, corner of White Court and East Walnut Street, established in 1879, and whose present pastor is Rev. J. G. Waggoner; the United Brethren Church on East Locust Street, near First Avenue, established in 1869, of which the Rev. W. T. Kessinger is pastor; the German Baptist Brethren Church, on South Second Avenue; the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Church, on South Fifth Avenue; St. Peter's Episcopal, on North First Avenue; South Park Methodist Protestant, corner Hickory Street and First Avenue; the Nazarene Church, on North First Avenue; Swedenborgian, at the corner of East Chestnut and Third Avenue; the Christian Science Society have a strong organization, and the Latter-Day Saints hold regular services.

CHURCHES OF FARMINGTON.—The early history of the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches of Fulton County is especially associated with Lewistown and Canton, the circuit preachers holding services alternately at these places. In 1838 occurred the division between the "Old" (Presbyterian) and the "New" (Congregational) Churches, and about a decade afterward local societies were firmly established at Farmington, although the Presbyterians of Farmington claim a separate organization since the year 1836, when the Canton and Lewistown members formed societies of their own. The present church has a membership of over 200 and its pastor is Rev. W. H. Kendall.

In December, 1849, the Congregational Church of Farmington was founded by the appointment of a committee consisting of George W. Little, Richmond Bristol and Amos B. Thomas, who were to report on Rules of Church Action and Articles of Faith. This they did, and both rules and articles were subscribed to by the following, who therefore constitute the charter members of the society: Seth B. Bristol, George W. Little, Richard Bristol, Lucius Parrish, Luther Birge, Asa D. Reed, Phineas Chapman, Joseph Cone, Amos B. Thomas, Henry Cone, Spencer Cone, Horatio N. Field, William Field, Nancy Birge, Julia A. Cone, E. Clarinda

Reed, Elizabeth Cone, Louisa L. Little, E. L. Parrish, Maria A. Bristol, Fanny Bristol, Eunice Chapman, Rebecca Bristol, Margaret A. Hart and Emily S. Hatch. On the first Sabbath of January, 1850, Rev. William E. Holyoke, a licentiate of the New York and Brooklyn Congregational Association, preached the first sermon to the society, was ordained to the ministry in 1851 and continued to serve the church for several years thereafter. In October, 1855, he was followed by Rev. John W. Williams, who was succeeded through the intervening years by Revs. L. Taylor, John B. Fairbank, J. P. Bartlett, Charles Hollinger, Mr. Drew, John Henderson and Rev. O. D. Moon. The latter, who is the present incumbent, has occupied the pulpit for about three years. The church membership is 134 and, with various improvements and additions, the present edifice is the original structure erected soon after the organization of the church in 1849.

The Baptist Church of Farmington was organized August 5, 1857, and J. C. Baker, James Harper, John S. Stetson and Hosea Woodruff served as the first Board of Trustees. The society rented quarters in the old opera house and the Wesleyan Church up to 1872, when the latter structure was bought by the Baptists and torn down, the material being used in the construction of the building which is still occupied by that denomination. The successive pastors have been as follows: Rev. Mr. Casler, Rev. A. R. Newton (nine years), Revs. Allison, Evans, Carr, Hunt, Newton, Hutchinson, Donnellson, Douglas, B. H. Cox (five years), and E. K. Reynolds. The society numbers about 100 members.

Although the famous Methodist missionary, Rev. Jesse Walker, included Farmington in his circuit as early as 1833, the society here was not established as a station until the fall of 1866, when Rev. C. Springer became its settled pastor. Within the succeeding fifteen years Revs. W. I. Black, I. B. Craig, S. Harshbarger, D. Pershing, B. C. Kaufman, B. Applebee, Joseph Hart and J. T. Wood served the church, and from 1881 to date the pastors have been as follows: James Ferguson, 1881-82; R. E. Buckley, 1883-85; James Ferguson (recalled), 1886; David Tasker, 1887; W. J. Minium, 1888-89; V. C. Randolph, 1890-91; J. B. Diller, 1892-95; G. W. Kling, 1896-97; B. F. Eckley, 1898-1906, and L. F. Cullom, from the latter year to date. The church has now 175 full members. The original building, erected in 1865, was torn down and the present very handsome church erected in 1903. Much of the material of the old church was utilized, notwithstanding which the cost of the present edifice was about $9,500. In 1905 the church was cleared of debt and is now perhaps the most flourishing religious body in Farmington.

The above are the leading churches of Farmington, although the Catholics, Free Methodists, Episcopalians and Seventh-Day Adventists have earnest and growing congregations.

HISTORIC FAIRVIEW CHURCH.—The Dutch Reformed Church of Fairview is the Western father of that denomination in the United States, the present organization being the oldest in the country west of the Alleghany Mountains. It was founded August 19, 1837, a few months after the laying out of the town. Upon that date a meeting was held at the house of Daniel Groenendyke, of which Peter Pumyea was president and John S. Wyckoff secretary, and its result was the application to the synod of the Reformed Church for a preacher. Lots had already been set apart for religious purposes and as Rev. A. D. Wilson, of New Brunswick, N. J., was sent as a missionary of the church in October of that year, the adherents to the Dutch Reformed Church were able to secure their choice of locations. On the 16th of October, 1837, they organized a society of eight members, with John S. Wyckoff and Clarkson Van Nostrand as Elders and Aaron D. Addis as Deacon. Rev. Wilson and Peter Pumyea were selected to return East and solicit donations for the support of this pioneer church. It appeared that Mr. Pumyea collected about $450, mostly in small amounts, and through his efforts, supplemented by those of Mr. Wilson, Cornelius Wyckoff, Sr., John G. Voorhees, Richard Davis and others, sufficient funds were raised to fairly place the church on its feet. For nearly a year the little band of earnest religionists assembled for prayer and praise, sometimes in the houses of the members and later in a rude log cabin, formerly a blacksmith shop, and at this time not only used for church purposes, but as a schoolhouse and for all public meetings. In the summer of 1838 Rev. Wilson, who had organized the church, left his flourishing charge at North Branch, N.

J., and with noble self-sacrifices, started for this little congregation planted in the western wilderness. He arrived at Fairview in July and immediately entered into his long, faithful and beneficent service here. In the fall of that year (1838) the old academy building was begun. It was a two-story structure, with a belfry, and took the place of the log shanty, the upper room of the new building being designed for religious services. Here the church continued to hold its religious services while its house of worship was slowly and laboriously being constructed. In the fall of 1838 the foundation of the church was begun and on November 26th the corner-stone was laid. At length the framework of the building was ready to be raised. This required the assistance of all the men in the village and surrounding country, together with aid from Ellisville and Farmington. For three years the people struggled on in the erection of this building before it was ready for dedication, and aid was required from the East to finally complete it. On October 3, 1841, these faithful labors came to an end, for upon that date the completed building was turned over to the congregation by its contractor, Cornelius Wyckoff, Sr. On the 11th of April, 1856, Rev. A. D. Wilson, whose fine personality and successful pastorate went so far to found the church, resigned his charge. During his services no parsonage was furnished, and he not only provided his own home, but received what salary the congregation were able or disposed to pay. Rev. William Anderson served three years thereafter, and during this period the church purchased five acres and built thereon a large and beautiful parsonage—the largest dwelling in the village. Besides the parsonage and church, a commodious and pleasant lecture hall was erected on the site of the old academy.

The Dutch Reformed Church of Fairview is naturally one of the historic institutions of the county. Although its communicants now number over 250, those who love the church and its memories are loath to reconstruct their old house of worship. Modern pews have been substituted for the less comfortable ones of the old times, but the building as a whole stands as it did sixty-six years ago, when it was pronounced complete by Cornelius Wyckoff. The present pastor of the church is Rev. Jacob Vander Muellen.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, LEWISTOWN

LEWISTOWN CHURCHES.—The religious history of Lewistown has its opening chapter in the organization of seven Presbyterians of the county into a church by Rev. John M. Ellis, these charter members, who came together for this purpose September 13, 1828, being: Nathan Jones, William Proctor, Samuel Mallory, Robert Grant, Jane Grant, Matilda Jones and Elizabeth Jacobs. The three first named were appointed elders and appear to have been the most prominent members of the early society, Mr. Proctor building a house of worship for the Lewistown branch about 1833 and Nathan Jones taking charge of the erection of a church for the Canton people. The membership of both churches increased in a creditable ratio, meetings being held alternately in Lewistown and Canton. At a meeting held in the former place August 6, 1831, it was, "after some deliberation, thought desirable and expedient that Rev. Messrs. Barnes and Farnum labor the current year in this county," and provision was made for their support in money and produce. Up to January, 1836, Lewistown and Canton were each included in the boundaries of the Fulton County Presbyterian Church, but on the 10th of that month the session granted the request of the following persons for letters of dismissal in order to form a church at Lewistown: William Proctor, Benjamin A. Miles, James Gilson, Christopher B. Miles, Thalia N. Rice, Juliet E. Warren, Eugenia E. Madison, Rhoda Osborne, Isabel T. Miles, Laura Proctor, Erasmus D. Rice, Asaph Rice, Abigail Rice and Jane Rice. At the next session William Elliott, Jr.; Julia Phelps and Adelia Rice were added to the membership. In 1838, as stated elsewhere, occurred the division into "Old" and "New School" organizations, and nearly all of the early members of the body in Canton joined the ranks of Congregationalism, led by their old pastor, Rev. Robert Stewart. The Lewistown people stood solidly by the Old Church and continued to so grow in strength and influence that in 1855-56 they erected what was then considered a very metropolitan house of worship. Ossian M. Ross deeded the ground opposite the courthouse which formed its site. The church had a nucleus for the building fund in a donation bequeathed from the estate of William B. Kelley, who had died in 1851. E. J. Brown was general overseer of the carpenter work, Samuel Evans constructed the stone foundation and John Tompkins did the brick work. Everything was done by hand—even the windows, door-casings and seats—and, according to Mr. Proctor, it was the best work ever done on a public building in the county. The church was first occupied for worship August 10, 1856, and the dedicatory sermon was preached by Rev. William Fleming, of Farmington (afterward pastor of the church) on Saturday afternoon, October 25, 1856. Rev. Mr. Templeton was the first pastor of the new church, and in a few years was followed by Rev. J. F. Magill, who served about twenty years. After being occupied for more than fifty years, the church building having naturally become somewhat dilapidated, it was thoroughly reconstructed in 1907. As the Presbyterian Church is the oldest organized religious body in Lewistown, it is still the strongest, numbering, as it does, some 300 members, under the pastorate of Rev. T. D. Atcheson.

In 1838 Rev. N. G. Berryman first appeared in Lewistown as the pioneer circuit rider of the Methodist Church, his religious field also embracing Centerville (now Cuba), Bernadotte and the Clark settlement, five miles east of Lewistown. He and his wife first moved into a log house located just west of the present jail, but the new pastor soon bought several acres west of Simms' Addition, where he built a handsome cottage for the family residence. On Mr. Berryman's arrival the society worshiped in a log house which stood on what afterward became Dr. Talbott's grounds, the original twenty-five members of his society being as follows: John McNeil, wife and parents; John Tompkins and wife; Isham G. Davidson and wife; Dr. Roger Veits and wife; John Smith, wife and daughter Nancy; Rev. Barrett and wife; Mrs. John P. Boice; Stephen Dewey and wife; S. H. Pitkin and wife, and Mesdames James Green, William McComb and Triphena Shepardson.

In the spring of 1839 the new courthouse was finished and the Methodists bought the frame building which had served the county after the disappearance of the little log courthouse of 1823. The church people moved the frame structure near the present site of the Methodist Church, a little west of the 1888 edifice. This building, 24x36 feet, was used for just ten years, when it was moved away, and in 1849, under Rev. N. P. Heath's pastorate, a brick structure was erected. In the summer of 1887 this, in turn, was razed to make room for the fine church which is still an ornament to the city, and which was dedicated January 8, 1888. Rev. Peter Akers, who afterward died in Jacksonville, preached the dedicatory sermon. Thus it was that this elegant house of worship commemorated the fiftieth year of the founding of the church. The new edifice, of attractive Gothic style, 40x60 feet in dimensions, cost about $10,000. The pastors from 1838 to the present time have been as follows: Revs. N. G. Berryman, Norris Hobart, George Rutledge, Freeborn Haney, Zadok Hall, William J. Rutledge, Absalom Shinn, N. P. Heath, R. C. Rowley, Milton Haney, J. F. Chaffey, William McGronigle, R. C. Rowley (recalled), Mr. Head, H. Ritchie, John P. Brooks, Milton Haney (recalled), William Peterson, Amos McCool, T. R. Boggess, George R. Palmer, E. N. Bentley, George R. Palmer (recalled), W. H. D. Young, George M. Morey, R. N. Morse, William Watson, P. A. Cool, C. W. Ayling, E. P. Hall, William Woolley, G. W. Arnold, W. R. Wiley (five years), Richard Crews, Robert A. Brown, Robert Seaman, Mr. Douglas, John Rogers, T. A. Beall and W. S. Welch.

Although the Episcopalians have no settled pastor in Lewistown, they have a beautiful little church, and their organization goes back to July 19, 1859. Under the name of St. James Church they then organized a society and erected a building in 1869. S. C. Judd was the first Senior Warden, Dr. G. D. McManus, Junior Warden and James M. Davidson, William H. Graham, T. A. Boyd, Henry A. Long, Dewitt C. Bryant and Isaiah C. Worley, Vestrymen.

The Christian Church of Lewistown was organized in 1875, when the society erected the building now occupied. Rev. Walter Kline is the present pastor and the church has a membership of about 150.

FULTON COUNTY SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.—Probably from the inspiration of the great Sunday-school movement in London during 1856, John G. Piper, of Canton, with a few other great-souled men interested in this line of religious work, originated the Fulton County Sunday-school Association. In the fall of that year several workers met in Lewistown or Canton and planned a more formal gathering, dignified by the name of a convention, for the succeeding year. It was a small gathering which then met at the Lewistown Presbyterian Church, but the movement progressed, and in 1858 a constitution and plan of work were adopted. The county was divided into townships and a Vice-President for each was chosen. Through these officials an effort was made to reach the individual schools and, by securing statistical reports from them, find the needs of the schools. Thus the schools in existence were strengthened and new ones organized in destitute districts. In 1861 the first year book of information was printed, which indicated fifty Sunday-schools in the county. Thus the association worked until 1865, when Stephen Paxton, a gifted missionary of the American Sunday-School Union, visited this field. His inspiring labors led the Fulton County Association to develop its work during 1865-79 along three simple and effective lines—efforts to reach every home in the county; to organize a Sunday-school within reach of every child therein, and to make the school "evergreen," i. e., open all winter. In 1863 the association employed an American Sunday-school missionary, P. B. Camden, whose labors of a few months resulted in the organization of twenty-three new schools (seven of them still living), five of which developed into churches. In 1867 Rev. W. W. Farris, formerly of Vermont village, was employed in the same work, and, besides organizing twenty new schools, held institutes in the various townships. The latter innovation was the beginning of the township conventions. Within the following four years, from 1867 to 1871, the fifty schools in fourteen townships increased to 148 schools in twenty-six townships. From 1871 to 1880 there was a substantial growth in both the individual schools and the township organizations. Regular quarterly or yearly township conventions were held and the uniform International Sunday-School Lessons, adopted by the International Convention held in Indianapolis in 1872, were introduced to all the schools of Fulton County during the period mentioned. The period from 1880 to 1892 has been denominated the Period of Education, and the development of Sunday-school work was along four lines—teacher training, or normal work; temperance work; primary work, and the work in the homes through the Home Department and Cradle Roll. This distinct epoch of splendid progress originated in the earnest work and personal inspiration of Miss Lucy J. Rider, of Chicago, in 1880, sent by the State Association to the county. For five years she continued the good work of instructing teachers and was followed by Dr. H. M. Hamill, of Jacksonville, pronounced a "marvelous teacher of teachers." In 1890 special work was prepared to assist the primary teachers, and since 1897 a special worker has attended each convention to present primary methods. In the latter year Miss Jennie Kelley, of Buckheart Township, was elected County Primary Superintendent, organizing the work on its present basis. The first normal class in the county held its graduating exercises during the Astoria convention, Dr. Hamill delivering the address.

In 1872 thirty-seven Sunday-schools were giving special attention to temperance, but it was not until 1882 that the subject was deemed of enough importance for a place on the program. Only gradually has been developed the effective temperance department of the association. Since 1896, when W. B. Jacobs, the General Secretary of the State Association, met with the workers of the Fulton County Association, the Home Department, with its infant auxiliary, the Cradle Roll, has become a notable feature of the Sunday-school work. In 1902 the work having outgrown the resources of the Executive Committee, Miss Lulu M. Davidson, of Lewistown, was employed as a field worker, and her earnest and efficient labors resulted in the stimulation of interest and the entrance upon a more prosperous career. After two years of efficient service in this capacity Miss Davidson was succeeded by Miss E. L. Spear, of Chicago.

The following table presents a list of places where conventions have been held on different years since the organization of the association in 1857, covering a period of fifty years, with the principal officers (Presidents and Secretaries) for the same period:

The total membership of the association is now 11,968, of which 10,323 are scholars and 1,645 officers and teachers. In the twenty-six townships of the county are 141 schools, with a regular membership in the different departments as follows: Temperance, 2,712; Cradle Roll, 1,663; Home, 1,455; Training classes, 120 (students).

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Canton was organized February 17, 1890, and its rooms were opened to the public on July 1st of that year. It is the only organization of its kind in the county. Its first officers were: President, Donat Miller; Vice-President, T. C. Fleming; Secretary, C. M. Stein; Treasurer, E. F. Swearingen; General Secretary, N. W. Woodford. Mr. Miller was succeeded as President by T. C. Fleming, who served from 1891 to 1892, and who was followed by H. F. Suydam, who served continuously from 1893 to 1905. Mr. Suydam then resigned and W. E. Lynch was elected to succeed him. The other officers of the association are as follows: Vice-President, L. H. Gillet; General Secretary, Luther Stromquist; Secretary, O. P. Ague; Treasurer, W. F. Moore. The association is divided into various departments, which embrace a membership of about 240. Its free reading room is open daily and gymnasium and bath privileges are accorded to members. Especial attention is given to the boys' department, games and other amusements being freely furnished for the wholesome recreation of the juveniles. Religious services are also held in the rooms every Sunday at 3 p. m., and altogether the association is doing successful and beneficial work.

CHAPTER XXIV.

MILITARY HISTORY.

THE BLACK HAWK WAR—THE STILLMAN DEFEAT—THE LEADER IN THIS CONTEST A FORMER CITIZEN OF FULTON—MORMON WAR—LIST OF MEN FROM FULTON WHO PARTICIPATED IN THAT STRUGGLE—GOVERNOR FORD'S UNSUCCESSFUL ATTEMPT TO PRESERVE THE PEACE—WAR OF THE REBELLION AND LIST OF REGIMENTS IN WHICH FULTON COUNTY CITIZENS ENLISTED—ROSTER OF SOLDIERS AND REGIMENTAL HISTORY—SOLDIERS' MONUMENTS—SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR—FIFTH ILLINOIS NATIONAL GUARD AND ITS FAILURE TO REACH THE FIELD OF STRUGGLE—FULTON COUNTY MEMBERS OF THE REGIMENT.

The history of the Black Hawk War is fully treated in the earlier portions of this work, but it is in keeping to call attention to the fact that General Isaiah Stillman organized three companies of troops in Fulton County to join the Fifth Regiment under command of Colonel James Johnson. General Stillman had two companies, one under command of David W. Barnes and the other under command of Asel F. Ball, and he was Major of the battalion, being afterward brevetted a Brigadier General.

The disastrous defeat and retreat at Stillman Valley, known in history as "Stillman's Defeat," reflects either honor or contumely upon Major Stillman's military ability according to whether you accept the opinions of his friends or of his enemies. Shortly after this defeat Major Stillman removed to Peoria County and died at Kingston, in that county, April 16, 1861. While a resident of Fulton County he conducted a mercantile business at Canton and Copperas Creek Landing.

MORMON WAR.—Referring the reader to another part of this general work for the causes that led up to and the situation presenting itself at the time, attention will be directed only to the particular part which Fulton County played in the Mormon War. Suffice to say, at the time of the clash between the Mormon civil authorities and anti-Mormon civil authorities of Hancock County, Governor Ford came to Fulton County for a man to pour oil upon the troubled waters. The Mormons were supposed to have supported the political party to which Governor Ford belonged and, therefore, in casting about for his representative he selected Major James R. Parker, of Canton, who belonged to the party supposed to be anti-Mormon. In his history of the State Governor Ford says that he selected Major Parker, of Fulton County, for this special reason, but that the Whig newspapers misconceived his motive, which was to place an anti-Mormon in charge of the affair so as to ameliorate and hold in check, to some extent, the anti-Mormon sentiment. Ford admits that, so far as this end was concerned, he utterly failed. Governor Ford instructed Major Parker to enlist ten men and proceed to Nauvoo, where the Mormons then resided, and attempt to effect a reconciliation between the contending factions. Lewis Bidemon, who afterward married the widow of the Mormon prophet, Joseph Smith, had resided in Canton and was doubtless the suggester of the name of Major Parker to the Governor as the proper man to undertake the delicate commission. The ten men selected by Major Parker to accompany him to the scene of trouble were: Isaac C. Johnson, Philip Grimm, Jr.; Benjamin Perry, Jacob Fox, John Thorp, William Bell, G. W. Thompson, Joseph Long, Abel H. White and Harrison P. Fellows. Upon arriving at Nauvoo Parker issued proclamation after proclamation, demanding peace in the name of the Governor of the State of Illinois. The anti-Mormon sympathizers, who were having the Mormons arrested by wholesale on all sorts of charges, and who were likewise being arrested by Mormons on all sorts of charges, assumed that Major Parker, like the Governor, was more in sympathy with the contention of the Mormons than with themselves. In speaking of the matter in his "History of Illinois," Governor Ford says:

"In looking around over the State for this purpose (i. e., the selection of a peace commissioner) the choice fell upon Major Parker, of Fulton County. Major Parker was a Whig and was selected partly from that reason, believing that a Whig now, as had been the case before with General Hardin and Major Warren, would have more influence in restraining the anti-Mormons than a Democrat. But Major Parker's character was unknown out of his own county. Everywhere else it was taken for granted that he was a Democrat and had been sent over to intrigue with the Mormons. The Whig newspapers immediately let loose floods of abuse upon him, both in this State and Missouri, which completely paralyzed his power to render any effectual service. The constable's posse refused to give place to him and the Constable openly declared that he cared but little for the arrests, by which it was apparent that they intended, from the first, to use the process of the law only as a cover to their design of expelling the Mormons."

HUGH R. COLTER

First Teacher, County Clerk, Circuit Clerk and Probate Judge

Finding that the anti-Mormons refused to be conciliated by Major Parker and his ten aids, Governor Ford sent reinforcements from Adams County under the command of Major Clifford. Major Clifford immediately assumed command of affairs and directed the mustering in of a mounted militia from Fulton County. The three militia companies then existing in Fulton County manifested some interest in the order, but the upshot of it all was that, so far as Fulton County militiamen were concerned, the suppression of the conflict between the anti-Mormon constables and the pro-Mormon constables of Hancock County was over. Soon after, however, Joseph Smith, the head of the Mormons, and his brother, Hyrum, were killed in the Hancock jail. As stated, the widow of Joseph Smith was afterwards married by a citizen of Canton and one of Smith's sons, Joseph Smith, Jr., afterward at the head of one division of the church, now known as the Latter-Day Saints, was for many years a resident of Canton, and his followers still maintain an organization in Canton. This branch of the church differs from the Utah branch in many particulars, especially in opposition to polygamy.

MEXICAN WAR.—(See pages 759-750.)

WAR OF THE REBELLION.—Upon the call to arms in 1861 meetings were held at various points in Fulton County. One was held at Canton April 20th in the old Congregational Church building. It was presided over by Ira Johnson. The meeting was addressed by Congressman William Kellogg, W. H. Haskell, James H. Stipp and others. John W. Ingersoll, W. H. Haskell, William Babcock, G. W. Fast and Tracy Stroud, a committee appointed for that purpose, reported resolutions of a patriotic character, calling upon the people to take a stand for the preservation of the Union. A like meeting was held April 23d at the courthouse in Lewistown with George Humphrey in the chair. Similar resolutions to those adopted at Canton were reported at this meeting by a committee consisting of H. B. Evans, R. B. Stevenson, M. Eichelberger, S. P. Shope, L. W. James, James Hassen and Robert Campbell, and the meeting was addressed by Leonard F. Ross, R. R. McDowell, M. S. Kimball, L. W. Ross, S. C. Judd and others. A. K. Montgomery presided at a meeting held in Farmington about the same time. At all these meetings enlistments were encouraged and many men offered their services. Companies were formed at Canton, Lewistown, Vermont and Fairview. As a result of these meetings there were enlistments from Fulton County in some of the earliest regiments organized in the State, especially in the Eighth, which was organized under the first call issued by President Lincoln immediately after the fall of Fort Sumter, and later in the Sixteenth, Seventeenth and other regiments.

Societies for the aid of soldiers' widows and families were organized at different points in the county, that did much to ameliorate conditions that beset the soldiers' life. The story of the endurance and hardships sustained by the families of the soldiers of Fulton County is but a repetition of what prevailed over all our great country at that time, and need not be repeated here.

Fulton County contributed its full quota of volunteers to the support of the Government during this great struggle. Regiments in which Fulton County citizens enlisted during the war included the following: Eighth, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Thirty-sixth, Thirty-seventh, Thirty-ninth, Forty-second, Forty-seventh, Fiftieth, Fifty-first, Fifty-third, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-seventh, Fifty-eighth, Fifty-ninth, Sixtieth, Sixty-first, Sixty-seventh, Seventy-first, Seventy-second, Eighty-third, Eighty-fourth, Eighty-fifth, Eighty-ninth, Ninety-sixth, One Hundred and Third, One Hundred and Thirteenth, One Hundred and Twenty-third, One Hundred and Thirty-second, One Hundred and Thirty-seventh, One Hundred and Thirty-eighth, One Hundred and Forty-eighth, One Hundred and Fifty-first, One Hundred and Fifty-third and One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. The One Hundred and Third was made up entirely, and the Seventeenth mostly, of citizens of Fulton County. Fulton County also contributed to the Second, Third, Seventh, Eleventh, Twelfth and Fifteenth Cavalry.

A short history of each regiment, with the roster of the Fulton County men in each, is given below:

SEVENTEENTH INFANTRY.

The Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers was mustered into the United States service at Peoria, Ill., on the 24th day of May, 1861. Left for Alton, Ill., late in July, proceeded to St. Charles, thence to Warrenton, Mo., where it remained about two weeks. The regiment left Warrenton for St. Louis and embarked on transports for Bird's Point, Mo.; thence to Sulphur Springs Landing; debarking, went to Pilot Knob, Mo., in pursuit of Gen. Jeff Thompson, and joined Prentice's command at Jackson, Mo., thence to Kentucky and aided in the construction of Fort Holt. Was then ordered to Cape Girardeau and was again sent in pursuit of Jeff Thompson; participated in the engagement near Greenfield; returned to Cape Girardeau and performed provost duty until February, 1862. Was then ordered to Fort Henry; participated in that engagement and Fort Donelson, losing several men killed, wounded and taken prisoners. Soon after went to Pittsburg Landing and was assigned to the Army of West Tennessee; engaged in the battle of the 6th and 7th of April, suffering great loss in killed and wounded; was in the advance to Corinth; after the evacuation of Corinth, marched to Jackson, Tenn.; remained until July, when it was ordered to Bolivar, where it remained until November, 1862, participating during the time in the expedition to Iuka to reinforce General Rosecrans, where it was engaged in the battle of the Hatchie; marched to Lagrange, Tenn., the middle of November, reporting to Gen. John A. Logan, and was assigned to duty as provost guard. Early in December marched to Holly Springs via Abbeville and Oxford. At the battle of Holly Springs was assigned to Gen. McPherson's command, then proceeded to Moscow, Collierville and Memphis, and was assigned to duty at the navy yard, remaining until June 16, then embarking for Vicksburg, re-embarking for Lake Providence, La., where it remained until the investment of Vicksburg began. Went to Millikin's Bend May 1, commenced the march across the Delta to Pekin's Landing, advanced with McPherson's command to the final investment of Vicksburg. After the surrender of that city remained there, making frequent incursions into the enemy's country until May, 1864, the term of service expiring on the 24th of May of that year.

The regiment was ordered to Springfield, Ill., to be mustered out, when those who had not re-enlisted as veterans received their final discharge. A sufficient number not having enlisted to entitle them to retain their regimental organization, were consolidated with the Eighth Illinois Infantry, and were finally mustered out with that regiment in the spring of 1866.

TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY

Was organized at Camp Butler, August, 1861. It proceeded August 28, to Thebes; September 9, to Bird's Point, Mo.; October 2, to Fort Holt, Ky.; January 31, 1862, moved to Paducah, Ky.; February 5, moved up Tennessee River; February 6, took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Heiman; February 13, a detachment of forty-eight men and twelve officers met the enemy (500 strong) at Little Bethel Church and immediately attacked and routed them. Arrived at Pittsburg Landing March 17. It was assigned to a position in the Peach Orchard. April 6 they repulsed the attacks of the enemy, holding its position from 8 a. m. to 3 p. m. On the morning of the 7th it held a position on the right of the line, and was hotly engaged until the battle closed and the victory was won. During these two long, trying, bloody days this regiment behaved nobly and its lines were never broken nor was it driven back by the enemy, though often most heavily pressed. The regiment sustained the fearful loss of 239 men killed and wounded; was engaged in the siege of Corinth during the month of May, 1862; marched to Memphis, arriving July 21, 1862; marched September 6, reaching Bolivar the 14th; October 5, engaged in battle of Matamora, losing ninety-seven men, killed, wounded and missing; returned to Bolivar October 7; December 30, was assigned to duty of guarding railroad from Holly Springs to Waterford, Miss.; was engaged in the siege of Vicksburg from June 11 to July 4, 1863. On the 12th of July, 1863, near Jackson, Miss., the Twenty-eighth, Forty-first and Fifty-third Illinois and Third Iowa Infantry, not exceeding 800 men, were ordered to charge across a level, open cornfield, some 600 yards, and carry a strong line of the enemy's works, mounting twelve guns and manned by at least 2,000 men. The brigade swept gallantly forward under a destructive fire of grape, canister and minnie bullets. The enemy appearing upon both flanks as it reached the ditch, it was compelled to fall back, with a loss of more than half of the rank and file killed and pounded; out of the 128 men of this regiment engaged seventy-three were killed and wounded and sixteen taken prisoners. The regiment remained at Natchez during the latter part of 1863, doing provost guard duty. The regiment re-enlisted January 4, 1864. May 18, proceeded to Illinois for veteran furlough; returning, arrived at Natchez July 8; was engaged in several expeditions; October 10, was consolidated into four companies; was engaged in the siege of Spanish Fort, losing fourteen killed and wounded, including two captains; was reviewed by Chief Justice Chase June 3, 1865.

FORTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY

Was organized at Peoria August 16, 1861. It proceeded to Benton Barracks September 23; May 9, 1862, was engaged at Farmington, Miss.; was engaged May 28 near Corinth, and at that city October 3 and 4, where they lost their brave colonel, W. A. Thrush, while leading a charge. The regiment lost in this engagement thirty killed and over 100 wounded. May 14, 1863, was engaged at Jackson, Miss.; took part in the charge of the enemy's works at Vicksburg May 22, losing twelve killed and a large number wounded; was at the battle of Pleasant Hill, La., April 9, 1864. Returned to Vicksburg May 22 with Gen. Smith's command after a campaign of nearly three months, in which they suffered almost unheard-of fatigue and privations, many men dying from hardships. The Forty-seventh met and defeated Gen. Marmaduke near Lake Chicot, in which they lost eleven killed and a number wounded. It was mustered out January, 1866, at Selma, Ala.

FIFTIETH INFANTRY

Was organized in the month of August, 1861, by Col. Moses M. Bane. The Fiftieth was engaged at Shiloh April 6 and 7; engaged in the siege of Corinth, May, 1862. June 4 it pursued the enemy as far as Booneville, Miss., returning to Corinth June 10. The regiment was engaged in a number of battles and skirmishes during its service. About three-fourths of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans and were mustered January 16, 1864, when they left for Illinois for veteran furlough. The Fiftieth was one of the best drilled regiments in the service. In the prize drill July 3, 1865, with the Sixty-third Illinois, Seventh Iowa and Fiftieth Illinois competing, the latter won the prize banner. They were mustered out of service July 13, 1865.

FIFTY-FIRST INFANTRY

Was organized December 24, 1861, and on February 14, 1862, was ordered to Cairo, Ill., Col Cummings commanding. April 7 the regiment moved against Island No. 10; on the 8th pursued the enemy, compelling the surrender of Gen. Mackall. On the 11th embarked and moved down the Mississippi to Osceola, Ark., and disembarked on the 22d. The Fifty-first participated in the battles of Farmington, siege of Corinth, Nashville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Rocky Face Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain and many others. They were in the thickest of the fight at Chickamauga, sustaining heavy loss, nearly one-half of the number engaged being killed or wounded. They also sustained a severe loss at Kenesaw Mountain. The regiment was heavily engaged in the battle of Nashville, December 1, where they lost 150 men in killed, wounded and missing. The Fifty-first was mustered out at Camp Irwin, Tex., September 25, 1865, and arrived at Camp Butler October 15, 1865, where they received final pay and discharge.

FIFTY-FIFTH INFANTRY

Was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into service October 31, 1861. November 9, left Camp Douglas. Remained at Camp Benton until January 12, 1862, when it was ordered to Paducah, Ky. On the morning of March 15 marched out with expedition from a point some fourteen miles above Pittsburg Landing for the surprise and overthrow of Corinth.

The opening of the battle Sunday morning found the regiment in position with an effective force of 873 men. Col. Stewart was wounded and nine of the line officers, three of whom died of wounds; 102 enlisted men were killed and mortally wounded, and 161 wounded and taken prisoners. The regiment was with the army in advance on Corinth, and at Russell's house, May 17, lost, in skirmish, eight men—two killed and six wounded. Entered Corinth May 30; thence, with Gen. Sherman, westward along Memphis and Charleston Railroad. The regiment re-embarked with army and was present and under fire at battle of Arkansas Post, January 10 and 11, 1863, losing three men wounded. Was at Vicksburg in 1863, participating in the fight. Participated in the siege of Jackson, Miss. On October 30, 1863, marched from East Point, on Tennessee River, for Chattanooga. During night of 2d, with rest of brigade, manned a fleet of pontoon boats in North Chickamauga Creek, and in the midst of rain and intense darkness, with muffled oars, descended and crossed the Tennessee River and captured the enemy's picket line. November 25, marched with Sherman to the relief of Knoxville, East Tennessee. June 27, 1864, participated in assault upon Kenesaw Mountain, Ga. July 22 the regiment was again engaged, with an effective force of 239 men, and came out of the engagement with 180 men. Was in the siege of Atlanta; in battle of Jonesboro. In a short campaign of a little over two months the regiment lost half its number. March with army via Richmond to Washington; participated in the Grand Review at Washington. During its term of service the regiment marched 3,374 miles.

SEVENTY-SECOND INFANTRY.

This regiment was organized at Chicago as the First Regiment of the Chicago Board of Trade. Its first bills were put out for one company, calling itself the "Hancock Guards," on July 23, 1862, and exactly one month afterwards the entire regiment was complete and mustered into service for three years. The very day of their muster they started for Cairo, arriving on the 24th. Their strength at that time was thirty-seven officers and 930 men.

The Seventy-second participated in many engagements during their three years' service in the field. At the battle of Franklin, Tenn., they fought with commendable bravery, being in the hottest of the fight from 4 in the afternoon till midnight, during all which time the battle raged with terrific fury. In this fight the Seventy-second lost nine officers and 152 men, who were either killed or severely wounded.

ONE-HUNDRED-AND-THIRD INFANTRY

Was organized in August, 1862, and mustered in October 2.

The One-Hundred-and-Third was exclusively a Fulton County regiment, having been raised entirely in this county. The regiment received orders October 30 to move to Cairo and thence to Columbus, Jackson and Bolivar, where it was assigned, November 2, to the First Brigade, Fourth Division, Thirteenth Army Corps. The regiment was engaged in sundry marches and reconnoissances from Jackson and Bolivar during November and December, 1862. On the 9th of November it engaged the enemy near Coldwater, Miss., driving him, killing fifteen and capturing seventy prisoners. On the 28th of November went on a campaign to Tallahatchie River, where they met a strong force of the enemy and drove them from their position. On the 30th of December went into winter quarters at Jackson.

The One-Hundred-and-Third took part in the battle of Resaca, Ga., where they sustained quite a heavy loss, and among the brave men who fell there was the gallant Col. Willard A. Dickerman, who gave up his life May 28, 1864.

The regiment was mustered out June 21, 1865, at Louisville, Ky., and proceeded to Chicago, where, June 24, 1865, it received final payment and discharge.

ELEVENTH CAVALRY.

This regiment was recruited in the fall and winter of 1861 and reported at Camp Mather, Peoria. The regiment left for the field February 22, 1862, and participated in the battle of Shiloh. After the evacuation of Corinth the regiment was assigned by detachments to service between that place and Memphis; was engaged at Lexington December 18, 1862, when forty-six of their number, with the Colonel, fell into the hands of the enemy. The regiment remained in West Tennessee till September, 1863, doing good work among the guerrillas. After this they operated in the country between the Big Black and Pearl Rivers, and on the Yazoo, rendering that country untenable for the Johnnies. The regiment veteranized in December, 1864. They participated in Sherman's grand march through Mississippi. During the summer of 1864 they were in many skirmishes and raids. November and December were with Gen. Osborne in the raid against the Mississippi Central Railroad; reached Vicksburg on December 5; moved to Memphis in January, 1865; joined in Grierson's raid; was engaged at Egypt Station; after this raided in Arkansas and Louisiana, and did guard duty on the Memphis & Charleston Railroad. It was mustered out at Memphis, Tenn., September 30, and arrived at Peoria October 12, 1865.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENTS.—In commemoration of the soldier dead four monuments have been erected on Fulton County soil.

At Fairview, in the village park, there is a marble shaft about fifteen feet high on a base of Joliet limestone. On the pedestal supporting the shaft are inscribed the names of all soldiers of the Civil War enlisting from that community who died in the service or prior to 1868, the date of the erection of the monument. The cost of the monument was $1,000, contributed by popular subscription.

At Lewistown there is in course of erection a monument, begun in 1894, consisting of two cylindrical columns of sandstone twenty-two feet in height, standing about ten feet apart. It is intended to connect the columns by an arch to be surmounted by a bust of Lincoln. The sandstone columns were originally a part of the Fulton County courthouse, erected nearly half a century ago, in which Abraham Lincoln made one of his most noteworthy speeches in the memorable campaign of 1858. The work of construction has been conducted by the Thomas Leyton Post, G. A. R.

At Canton, in Greenwood Cemetery, there is a granite monument about twenty feet in height, erected at a cost of $2,000 by Mrs. Carrie Babcock and dedicated in April, 1889, to the soldiers and sailors of the Union.

At Farmington, in the City Cemetery, there is a soldiers' monument of light gray New England granite, about thirty feet high, surmounted by the figure of a volunteer soldier standing at rest. This monument was erected by popular subscription at a cost of $2,000 and dedicated May 30, 1892, "By the Citizens of Farmington to Her Departed Heroes."

MEXICAN WAR.—To the Mexican War Fulton County contributed Company K, of the Fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which was under the command of the famous Colonel Edward D. Baker, afterward killed at Ball's Bluff during the Civil War. The late Lewis W. Ross, afterwards Congressman for many years from the Fulton County district, was captain of this company, while his brother, Leonard F. Ross, afterward a Brigadier General in the War of the Rebellion, was a First Lieutenant. Other illustrious names were on the muster roll. Below is given the company's roster:

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.—Company M, Fifth Regiment, Illinois National Guard, was organized at Canton in 1882, with G. K. Barrere Captain, that gentleman now being a resident of Los Angeles, Cal. It did good service in East St. Louis, Chicago and other cities which, during the following decade, were so unfortunate as to require assistance in the quelling of riots. On April 25, 1898, this regiment was called to Camp Tanner at Springfield, and there on May 5th it was mustered into the service of the United States for the Spanish-American War. The roster of this company was as follows:

Commissioned Officers—Captain, Bernard H. Taylor; First Lieutenant, Frank D. Tanquary; Second Lieutenant, Andrew M. Motsinger; First Sergeant, Herbert C. Martinis; Sergeants, Frank L. Emby, Frank S. Myers, John A. Fillingham, Roscoe A. Hall; Quartermaster, Charles H. Elliott.

Non-Commissioned Officers — Corporals: George D. Porter, Tyler B. Shaw, Ernest C. Ronk, Thomas T. Smith, Preston A. Gibson, Henry R. Heald, Fred Preston, Charles Danielson, William G. Thornharrow, Henry Sparger, William Gregg, John Rafferty. Musician—Walter Phillips. Artificer—Douglas Rogers. Wagoner—John Duffield.

Privates—Bernard Anderson, Lawrence E. Barrett, William H. Betts, Thomas A. Brown, Norris C. Boyer, George M. Budd, George Barron, Marion Barratt, Jacob Busgard, George Budden, William Burtis, David Bohanan, Norman P. Briley, Edgar Bredwell, Lewis A. Cadwallader, Jacob Claar, George Carpenter, William Carpenter, John W. Creek, Clifford E. Grimm, Fred D. Grewell, David J. Furrey, Lewis C. Garrison, Andrew Graham, Edgar E. Harvey, Ernest A. Hays, Thurman Harshman, Gilbert I. Hufford, Orville Huff, Frank J. Hays, William W. Hummell, LaForrest L. Harris, George Haywood, Merrill J. Heald, Thomas R. Harrison, Arthur E. Isham, Orrie J. Kelly, Winfield S. Kennedy, Stanley Lisenby, Jay A. Logan, M. Stanley Littleton, Josiah R. Lingenfelter, Arthur W. Murphy, Ernest L. Martinis, Charles W. Moore, Charles R. Murphy, James Mitchell, James F. Maloon, Charles G. McClellan, Peter E. Myers, Harry McGraw, James C. Minett, Oscar S. Moore, William R. Norman, Frank Pope, John Pittman, Allie C. Post (died of pneumonia May 31, 1898), Charles C. Palmer, Wesley Priest, Charles Peterson, William E. Rollo, Henry Roberts, George S. Sandford, Adolphus J. Slater, William H. Shaw, John Steele, W. F. Steel, Hiram A. Smith, Thrush Smith, Clarence E. Snively, Jr.; Richard G. Shields, John S. Swanson, Clyde D. Smith, Benjamin A. Tozer, George H. Todd, Frank Wright, Leonard Williams, Harry S. Weaver, Wallace Wright, Jesse A. Walker, Frank Walker, William Wallace, Harvey Wilbert.

The Fifth Regiment, of which Company M was a part, under the command of Colonel James S. Culver, was the first regiment in the State to be equipped and leave Camp Tanner on its way toward the field of war, and was the first volunteer regiment in the country to reach Chickamunga Park, Ga. After many provoking delays they were ready to embark from Newport News for Cuba, when the Third Kentucky Regiment was substituted, and they were afterward ordered to Porto Rico under General Fred Grant, but were recalled at the last moment. They had been much disappointed at not seeing Cuban service, and this last blow placed many of the soldiers on the sick list, several in Company M being sent to the hospital. The command was discharged from the United States service at Lexington, Ky., in August, 1898, and upon reaching Fulton County at once reorganized as a company of the Illinois National Guard, retaining its old letter—M. Three of its numbers had died during the year—Allie C. Post, of pneumonia, and Hiram T. Smith and James Mitchell, of typhoid fever.

IN 1866—DISASTROUS EFFECT OF THE CHICAGO FIRE—CANTON EXHIBITIONS ABANDONED IN 1893—AVON DISTRICT FAIR—COUNTY FAIR REVIVED AT LEWISTOWN IN 1905—POULTRY SHOWS—WEALTH OF FULTON COUNTY COAL FIELDS—HISTORY OF THEIR DEVELOPMENT AND VARIETIES OF COAL PRODUCED—STATISTICS OF THE COAL PRODUCT OF 1906—FULTON COUNTY STANDS SEVENTH IN THE LIST OF COUNTIES OF THE STATE—TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES.

The first agricultural exhibition commonly known as a fair, was held in Canton in the fall of 1852, on the Hannan farm in the vicinity of where the Burlington Railroad pump house is now located. It was not confined to exhibition of agricultural products and live stock, but a horse race on a straight track was one of the features. This exhibition was almost exclusively a Canton enterprise, but at the conclusion of the fair the Fulton County Agricultural Society was organized. The next fair was held in 1853, it is said, at Bernadotte, and the years following at Cuba, Lewistown and Vermont, finally coming back to Canton in 1856. The meeting of that year was held in what is now Wright's addition near the present site of the Toledo, Peoria & Western station. The fair was afterward held at Lewistown, and probably at other points in the county with indifferent success until 1866, when it was permanently located at Canton. A joint stock company was formed and the twenty-five acres (the old fair ground), now known as Fisher & Marshall's addition to the city of Canton, were purchased. Citizens of Canton and adjacent territory contributed several thousand dollars toward the equipment of the grounds, which were leased to the Fulton County Agricultural Society for a term of ninety-nine years. From 1866 to 1871 the Canton Fair had a State-wide reputation. They were the largest fairs held in the State, even larger than the State Fair. Special trains were run on all the railroads, bringing the people to and from the fair each day. Special trains hauling exhibits were run from as far south as St. Louis and as far north as Chicago. Colonel A. C. Babcock was at the zenith of his political glory at this time and he was a moving spirit in promoting the fair. At this time Canton was headquarters for fine and fast horses and racing was a prominent feature of the fairs. In 1871 it unfortunately happened that the Chicago fire took place just as the fair was well under way. The crowds at Canton attending the fair mounted the special trains and were taken to Chicago and the interest, locally as well as elsewhere, was diverted from the Fulton County Fair to the great conflagration going on in the city by the lake. Thousands of dollars were lost, as no interest in the fair could be maintained, and the attendance was very small. It was just about this time that new life had been injected into the State Fair, and the interest in county fairs was on the wane. From 1871 to the time when the last fair was held, more than twenty years later, the interest in the fairs gradually decreased. An occasional season would prove very profitable, but one disastrous season after another finally led to the ultimate abandonment of the fair in 1893, and the final closing up of the business of the society and the sale of the grounds by the holding company.

AVON FAIR.—In 1871 the Avon District Agricultural Society was organized and purchased grounds at Avon for the purpose of holding stock sales. A fair was held the next year (1872) and the stock sale feature was abandoned a year or two afterward and the meeting became simply an agricultural fair and racing meet. The name of the organization was afterward changed to the Avon District Agricultural Board, and fairs were held each successive year until the year 1906, when it was abandoned, temporarily at least, owing to lack of patronage.

NEW FULTON COUNTY FAIR.—In 1905 a stock company was formed by the citizens of Lewistown for the purpose of holding a county fair and race meeting, with permanent location at Lewistown. The first meeting was held in 1905. This association has held three very successful fairs and meets, the one for 1907 being a record breaker in attendance. The fair association at Lewistown is the only association in existence holding what is commonly called a county fair in Fulton County at the present time, though there has been held for several years past at Hawthorne Grove, in Farmers Township, a stock and agricultural exhibit, with many of the features of a county fair, with the racing feature omitted.

THE POULTRY SHOW.—The poultry breeders of Fulton County are formed into an organization and have for the past eight years held annually at Cauton a poultry show. The exhibits are of course confined to poultry only.

COAL FIELDS.—Aside from its agricultural resources the chief wealth of Fulton County is embraced in its vast beds of bituminous coal which underlie nearly all the entire surface of the county. A. H. Worthen, who compiled the valuable volumes known as the State Geological Survey, estimates that the coal beds in some of the townships equal 9,000,000 tons to the square mile. Elsewhere in its proper place will be found the data relating to the various strata of coal. Mr. Worthen visited Fulton County in person and remained here several months engaged in the compilation of geological information pertaining to the county. Aside from the bituminous coal, cannel coal has been found in considerable quantities in Union Township near Avon.

Mr. Worthen says that in 1859 he found ten retorts in use near Avon for the distillation of oil from the cannel coal mined there, producing from 300 to 500 gallons of oil per day. The coal seam was only fourteen to twenty inches thick, and the cost of mining was about $2 per ton, and the yield in oil was about thirty gallons to the ton. The discovery of oil in Pennsylvania put an end to the distillation of oil in Fulton County and likewise to the mining of cannel coal. Outcroppings of cannel coal are found in Young Hickory Township.

Illinois belongs to what is known as the Central Coal Fields, sometimes called the Eastern Interior Coal Fields, included within Illinois, Indiana and Western Kentucky, and covering an area of about 47,000 square miles. The coal fields of Illinois were the most important in this group, and of the counties in Illinois Fulton stands at the present time the seventh in amount of production, and it is only within the last few years that effort of any magnitude has been made to develop the coal fields of this county. Prior to 1885 the mines were worked in a very crude manner. The mine foremen or managers were not as well educated as they are today, nor as well posted in the management of coal property. Since 1885 the coal mining business has developed to the point where the producing of coal is almost an exact science. The State has enacted laws for the protection of the miners from their own lack of knowledge and from the lack of care on the part of the mine owners and their fellow workmen, and at the same time for the protection of mining property as well. There are about 3,000 men engaged in operation of the mines of the county at the present time, while four classes of mines are being operated—the strip, drift, slope and shaft—the two latter plans being the chief ones used in the county. In fact, all mines of any magnitude but one—the Big Creek (a slope mine), at St. David—are shaft mines.

The total output of bituminous coal in Fulton County for the year 1906 reached nearly 2,000,000 tons, the exact figures not being available for the fiscal year at this time. The quality of the Fulton County coal is not of the highest grade, but it is especially suitable for steam purposes.

Coal was first discovered in Illinois by La Salle's party in 1679. In his "Early Pioneers and Events" Harvey Lee Ross says: "There is one other thing that will appear very remarkable. When the first settlers came to Fulton County there was no one that appeared to have the remotest idea that there was such a thing as bituminous coal all about them in the earth, or that it had any use. The people who lived there were the Indians, and they never used it, and the people would as soon have thought of looking for gold or silver as looking for coal. It was about two years after the first settlement was made that coal was discovered. The first coal found in the county was discovered by old Mr. Gardiner, to whom I have referred as having settled about ten miles south of Lewistown at Gardiner's Prairie in 1823. He was out one day to look for stone to build a fireplace in his log house, which he had just erected, and in digging for stone he found the coal bank, which was situated in the foot of the bluffs east of what is known as Isabel Church. Mr. Gardiner took a load of the coal to Lewistown and the people were delighted to learn that stone coal had been found in the county. The next coal bank that was discovered was on Big Creek, about where the narrow-gauge railroad crosses it, three miles south of Lewistown. But the Gardiner bank supplied all the people south of Spoon River and Havana with all the coal they wanted free of charge. All they had to do was to go and dig and then haul it home. I remember when I lived in Havana going with Mr. Eastman Call to the Gardiner bank to dig coal. Mr. Call had just opened a blacksmith shop at Havana, which was before he opened a shop at Lewistown. It took but a short time to fill our wagon with coal. So I could have to tell that I dug coal out of the first coal bank that was ever opened in Fulton County."

While Mr. Ross is doubtless correct about the first use made of the vast deposits of coal underlying most of the surface of Fulton County, his statement that coal was first discovered on the occasion mentioned is not borne out by the facts. The original notes of Major Long's survey of the Military Tract, made in 1815, indicated that there was a hountiful supply of stone coal in Fulton County; and Nicholas Bid-die Van Zant's book on the Military Tract lands heretofore referred to, when it reaches a description of the lands in Township 7 North and 1 East of the fourth Principal Meridian—which is now Lee Township—says that "that part of Spoon River that passes through Sections 11, 12, 13 and 14 contains great quantities of stone coal on its banks." Hence, it was known, even before the settlement of the county, that there were great quantities of stone coal in and around the vicinity of Babylon.

The earliest mines operated in Fulton County for the production of coal for the general market were at Canton and St. David. This was shortly after the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad was built in 1862. In 1867 a huge lump of coal from the David Williams mine at St. David was on exhibition at the Paris Exposition. Mines are now operated at a number of places along the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, beginning north of Farmington and extending south as far as St. David. Mines are also operated at Astoria. At one time Bryant was a mining town of considerable importance, but work there has been abandoned. Along the Fulton County Railroad mines are operated at several points, principally in Joshua, Deerfield and Ellisville Townships. Along the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, aside from the mines at Canton and Cuba, coal is mined and shipped from Breeds and Marietta.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE.—Immediately after the building of railroads into Fulton County came the telegraph lines. Prior to that time telegraphic communication directly from Fulton County with the outside world was unknown. Upon the general introduction of the telephone for commercial purposes, Canton was one of the first towns in Central Illinois to maintain a toll station, and shortly thereafter a full telephone system was established, but its capacity was limited to a few commercial 'phones. The telephone business, until about fifteen years ago, was confined to the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. About that time independent lines began to be instituted and the telephone business rapidly developed until now every village in the county, no matter how unimportant, is in telephonic communication with the outside world, and the majority of the farm residences are connected by telephone. The development along the line of telephonic communication, within the last ten or fifteen years, has been marvelous. (For a more detailed history of coal measures, see Chapter II. of this work.)

CHAPTER XXVI.

SOCIAL AND BENEVOLENT ORGANIZATIONS.

NUMEROUS FRATERNAL ORDERS IN FULTON COUNTY —LIST OF PRINCIPAL ORGANIZATIONS—ODD FELLOWS THE FIRST FRATERNAL ORGANIZATION AT CANTON—MASONIC AND OTHER ORDERS—MODERN WOODMEN AND KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS—CHARTER MEMBERS AND PRESENT OFFICERS—SOCIAL ORDERS OF FARMINGTON AND LEWISTOWN—GRAND ARMY POSTS AND WOMEN'S RELIEF CORPS—LIST OF DECEASED AND SURVIVING MEMBERS OF THE FORMER —BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATIONS—ALTRUISTIC CLUB AND PROJECTED GRAHAM HOSPITAL—TRADE-UNION ORGANIZATIONS.

It would be utterly impossible to give the history of the formation and organization of the numerous societies established for benevolent and fraternal purposes in Fulton County. Every village and hamlet and many of the country cross-roads settlements have established orders within the past one or two decades. There is literally no end to the number, as this is the age of secret orders. It is the purpose here to simply mention those that have had their origin early in the history of the county, or were the first and among the first of the particular order mentioned to be organized in the county. Therefore some very interesting historical matter pertaining to the various lodges of the county must necessarily be omitted. A considerable volume of interesting historical and statistical data could be compiled upon the subject of Fulton County fraternal orders. A very meager and limited statement covering some of the orders in Canton, Lewistown and Farmington, where the early fraternal orders of the county were established, will have to suffice for the purpose of this work.

CANTON FRATERNAL ORGANIZATIONS.—The Independent Order of Odd Fellows organized their first lodge in Canton on May 1, 1846, and Olive Branch Lodge, No. 15, as it was then called, is still in existence. Its present officers are as follows: I. J. Fuller, Noble Grand; Gilbert Hall, Vice Grand; Jacob C. Brinkerhoff, Financial Secretary; Charles Schnurr, Recording Secretary; W. J. Snyder, Treasurer. The encampment of the order in Canton is known as Star Encampment, No. 17. The lodge numbers 425 members.

The Masonic Order dates its existence in Canton from about 1847, when the Morning Star Lodge, No. 30, was organized. Charles W. Rockhold was Master of this lodge during the years 1848, 1850, 1853 and 1861-62, and accomplished much in the establishment of the fraternity in this community. He died in Peoria September 4, 1900, and was buried at his home in Canton. The old Morning Star Lodge was disbanded and the present organization, No. 934, was instituted October 5, 1875, by Grand Master Monroe C. Crawford, with the following as its charter members: C. N. Henkle, W. A. Childs, A. B. Leaman, J. W. Bays, H. M. Kline, J. S. Sigmon, W. H. Craig, W. H. Davis, S. Whitehead, J. Whitehead, J. C. Piper, W. H. Smith, O. D. Evans, J. O. Thorn, W. M. Swisher, W. Preston, D. J. Wagoner, J. W. Peck, J. C. Kendall, W. D. Johnson, C. Killa, J. P. Shryock, M. Fast, A. Downing, Al Downing, J. R. Whitemore, L. Schradzki, J. Ballen, P. W. Slaughter, S. P. Slocum, E. H. Curtis, G. W. Fast, J. J. Curtis, L. K. Young, W. Vandevender, C. D. Hoblitt, M. Augustine, H. C. Bolton, J. Chaffee, W. O. Dean, S. Y. Thornton, J. Warders, M. B. Messler, J. S. Messler, D. Williams, W. T. Davis, W. B. Johnson, I. W. Ross, D. Abbott, B. F. Ruble, A. Bell, N. E. Rumstead, H. Hurst, W. H. Hipsley and twenty others. The lodge now numbers 240 members, with the following officers: James A. Coleman, W. M.; George W. Negley, S. W.; J. H. Moran, J. W., and S. E. Kilts, Secretary.

Canton Chapter, No. 68, R. A. M., was instituted by Gil W. Barnard, Grand Secretary, October 7, 1864, and the gentleman named still holds that office. The first Excellent High Priest of the Chapter was Sylvester Stevens and the first Secretary Edmund H. Curtis. The present High Priest is H. L. Reiplinger, of Dunfermline, and C. E. Savill is Secretary.

Canton Council, No. 23, R. S. M., was organized October 4, 1866, with C. N. Henkle as T. I. M., and L. B. Messler as Recorder. It now numbers 110 members, and its officers are: C. E. Savill, T. I. M.; George W. Brant, I. D. M.; J. H. Moran, P. C. W., and H. B. Heald, Recorder.

Evening Star Chapter, No. 46, was organized October 2, 1878, with Mrs. Louisa McCall as its Worthy Matron and John M. Bell, Worthy Patron. The present Matron is Mrs. Emma Grimm and the Worthy Patron George B. Roller.

Bohemond Lodge, No. 54, Knights of Pythias, was instituted at Canton, November 11, 1874, Calanthea Lodge, No. 47, Peoria, having charge. There were eleven charter members, three are at the present time living, viz.: M. B. Messler, D. W. Lewis and E. D. Savill. The first officers were: D. W. Walker, Past Commander; D. B. McConnell, Chancellor Commander; Martin Augustine, Vice Chancellor; W. D. Johnson, Prelate; L. M. Sanford, Master at Arms; M. B. Messler, Keeper of Records and Seal; M. B. Messler, Master of Exchequer; A. B. Smith, Master of Finance; Edward B. Savill, Inner Guard; Louis Schradzki, Outer Guard. At the present time Bohemond Lodge has a membership of 380, has twenty-five Past Chancellors and one Past Grand Chancellor, James Graves Whiting, while F. R. Reamy is at the present time Deputy Grand Chancellor for the District of Fulton. The present Chancellor Commander, B. M. Chipfield, is a member of the Illinois Legislature and a leading lawyer. The officers of Bohemond Lodge for the present term are as follows: Past Chancellor, B. M. Chipfield; Chancellor Commander, B. M. Chipfield (serving second term); Vice Chancellor, Walter Sebree; Prelate, Charles Timmerman; Master of Arms, Clinton Bailly; Master of Work, George E. Hicks; Master of Exchequer, H. E. Harter; Master of Finance, Charles P. Gaylord; Keeper of Records and Seal, F. C. Powell; Inner Guard, A. C. Larson; Outer Guard, Henry Call; Representative to the Grand Lodge, R. A. Savill; Dr. E. A. Peck, Physician; A. T. Betzer, John Dooley and H. H. Clingenpeel, Managers. In July, 1888, E. A. Eggleston was elected Clerk and served in that capacity until 1906, when John F. Sheahan was chosen and still serves. The present officers are: U. G. Hunnicutt, V. C.; Joseph Dooley, W. A.; J. F. Sheahan, Clerk; W. F. Gilroy, Banker; Henry Call, Escort; J. D. Allaman, Watchman; J. J. Mitchell, Sentry; George Keeling, John Dooley and C. A. Thomas, Managers. The camp is flourishing and growing.

W. R. Emerson

The Pythian Sisters have formed quite a strong lodge within the past few years and in a way form an auxiliary of the Knights of Pythias.

Canton Camp, No. 295, Modern Woodmen of America, was organized February 7, 1887, by Deputy J. A. Westfall, of Galesburg, Ill., with the following charter members: A. J. Slater, Everett Carter, A. T. Betzer, H. H. Clingenpeel, E. E. Griffiths, John H. Snyder, George H. Miller, J. D. Knapp, Dr. F. M. Harrison, John Dooley, Ed J. Joiner, J. O. McComb, W. T. Mathews, Sr.; W. H. Boyer, J. B. Allen, Jr.; J. R. Points, Dr. Edgar Peck, H. V. Leaman and E. A. Eggleston. All of the above are living with the exception of J. O. McComb. The first officers of the camp were: A. J. Slater, V. C.; J. O. McComb, W. A.; J. B. Allen, Jr., Clerk; Ed J. Joiner, Banker; C. H. Boyer, Escort; H. V. Leaman, Watchman; J. D. Knapp, Sentry;

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC has had several posts in Canton named after "Fighting Joe" Hooker. The original organization, known as Post No. 113, was organized September 21, 1866, with the following charter members: Charles Wills, G. W. Wright, A. B. Smith, Henry Augustine, B. F. Lermond, P. W. Slaughter, James C. Dunlap, John Montgomery and S. B. Corey. All of those named are deceased except Henry Augustine, who lives at Normal, McLean County, and S. B. Corey, a resident of Elmwood, Peoria County. Several old volunteers of Canton, who were members of the post, assert that it died of "too much politics." On October 24, 1879, the post was reorganized as Joe Hooker Post, No. 69, whose first commander was John Bryan. It was incorporated in December, 1888, but the post subsequently dropped its incorporation and elected trustees. At the present time it has a membership of about 150, with the following officers: Commander, Charles P. Fingel; Senior Vice Commander, A. F. Small; Junior Vice Commander, William M. Sebree; Adjutant, D. L. Ambrose; Quartermaster, C. T. Coleman; Chaplain, C. W. Sanders; Surgeon, J. W. Ellsworth; Officer of the Day, W. F. Montgomery; Officer of the Guard, A. D. Troxell.

The Woman's Relief Corps, No. 9, connected with the Joe Hooker Post, was organized October 24, 1885, and its acting President is Mrs. Fred C. Reihm.

The Sons of Veterans, Camp No. 8, Joe Hooker Post, was organized May 7, 1907.

The local organization of the Improved Order of Red Men is known as Minnetonka Tribe, No. 86, and was organized June 11, 1888. The present officers of the tribe are: Sachem, Theodore D. Morgan; Senior Sagamore, John Melgren; Junior Sagamore, Eugene Whiting; Prophet, W. J. Cox; Keeper of Records, Charles Hull; Keeper of Wampum, F. S. Myers.

The Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, No. 626, of Canton, was organized November 14, 1901, with thirty-nine charter members and the following officers: Exalted Ruler, R. A. Savill; Esteemed Leading Knight, Jesse Heylin; Esteemed Loyal Knight, J. H. Fitzgerald; Esteemed Lecturing Knight, John M. Fox; Secretary, C. W. Snyder; Treasurer, L. C. Webster; Esquire, W. H. Middlekauf; Tyler, F. C. Powell; Chaplain, B. H. Taylor; Inner Guard, Dan Macknet; Organist, Bevan Lawson. The present membership is 200, and the officers are as follows: Exalted Ruler, Frederick A. Perkins; Esteemed Leading Knight, Floyd F. Putman; Esteemed Loyal Knight, T. W. Sissons; Secretary, C. W. Snyder; Treasurer, C. E. Hicks; Esquire, W. S. Geigley; Tyler, C. E. Savill; Chaplain, John Gallagher; Inner Guard, W. F. Plattenburg.

Black Eagle Aerie, No. 580, Fraternal Order of Eagles, was organized December 27, 1903, with E. P. Thompson as President. The present membership is 300, with the following officers: G. H. Todd, President; Joseph Waugh, Secretary; S. M. Calkins, Treasurer.

Besides the above societies of a secret, fraternal and protective nature, Canton has the following organizations: American Patriots, Court of Honor, No. 73; Degree of Honor; Fraternal Tribune, No. 40; Fraternal Reserve Life Association; Independent Order of Mutual Aid; Knights of the Globe, No. 156; Rebekah Degree, I. O. O. F.; Royal Neighbors; Stars of Equity, and Yeomen of America, besides various industrial unions.

Ethiopia Lodge, No. 29 (colored), K. of P., was organized in 1903 and has a membership of about twenty-five.

Farmington Societies.—The Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and United Mine Workers of America, all have strong organizations in Farmington.

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows' Lodge was organized as early as November, 1848, and now has 115 members, with officers as follows: Noble Grand, Ray Pancake; Vice Grand, O. J. Kelly; Recording Secretary, A. T. Short; Financial Secretary, Edward L. Parks; Treasurer, C. M. Berdine; Grand Representative, A. D. Scudder.

Masonic Lodge, No. 192, has some 100 members, and is both an old and a flourishing organization. The Masons and Odd Fellows occupy separate buildings, in which each have a half interest.

Silver Bow Lodge, No. 598, K. of P., was organized October 17, 1900, and has nearly 180 members, officered as follows: Chancellor Commander, Frank Hayslip; Vice Chancellor, Urshell Johnson; Keeper of Records and Seal, Walter L. Merchant; Master of Finance, David McKinley; Prelate, Joseph Fennell; Master at Arms, William Fennell; Master of Work, Horace Harrop; Inner Guard, George Myer; Outer Guard, Evan Perry.

Rathbone Sisters, Temple No. 119, an auxiliary of the K. of P., was organized October 21, 1903, and now numbers about 100 members.

Farmington Camp, No. 1985, Modern Woodmen of America, was organized May 17, 1893, with officers as follows: Consul, Michael Macmorrow; Clerk, Dr. A. H. Fash; Banker, Frank E. Crane. The present membership is 115, with the following officers: Consul, Dr. A. H. Fash; Clerk, Neil Berdine; Banker, Thomas Masmorrow; W. A., Albert Scudder.

The Royal Neighbors Lodge, an auxiliary of the Modern Woodmen of America, was organized January 19, 1907.

George Hunter Post, No. 145, G. A. R., occupies a large hall, which is also sub-rented to several other fraternities. The post was founded July 3, 1882, and numbers about twenty-five. George Hunter Woman's Relief Corps No. 262, auxiliary to the post, was organized December 23, 1894, and has some 100 members.

The Yeomen of America effected an organization in Farmington on July 10, 1907, and have some forty members, with James P. Lightfoot President; Robert Adams, P. V. P.; Mrs. Orpha A. Lightfoot, Vice President; H. T. McCall, Chaplain; Dr. A. H. Fash, Secretary and Treasurer, and Charles Rogers, Chancellor.

The Farmington Union of the United Mine Workers of America numbers fully 500. It was organized March 25, 1898, and its present officers are: Hiram Idle, President; Robert Taggart, Recording Secretary; Samuel Pascall, Financial Secretary; Edward Hicks, Treasurer.

The Federation of Labor effected a local organization known as No. 8311 April 24, 1900.

LEWISTOWN SOCIAL ORDERS.—When Ossian M. Ross laid out the town of Lewistown in 1822 he donated several lots for courthouse, jail and church. Upon this tract was erected a building for the meeting of the Masons, who organized Lodge No. 104. This pioneer organization evidently went out of existence, as the present lodge was chartered October 6, 1851, with Eli H. Bearce as Worthy Master, Hugh Lamaster, Senior Warden, and James J. Hale, Junior Warden. The lodge first occupied its present site when it rented rooms in the building erected by Colonel Lewis W. Ross, in 1868, on the southwest corner of the square. At that time and for some years afterward it was one of the largest lodges in the State. The present membership is eighty-five and its officers are: Grier Hanson, Worthy Master; Robert D. Quigley, Senior Warden; Frank D. Potts, Junior Warden; Edward Fackler, Treasurer; Conrad W. Belts, Secretary, and Thomas Chipfield, Chaplain. Mr. Belts has held the office of Secretary continuously for eighteen years. The Past Masters now living are: P. J. Standard, A. J. Belts and J. D. Breckenridge.

The Independent Order of Odd Fellows' Lodge, No. 51, in Lewistown, was organized in March, 1849, with General L. F. Ross Noble

Grand, and its present officers are: L. W. Potts, Noble Grand; P. E. Hofflund, Vice Grand; J. W. Duvall, Secretary, and D. R. Houghton, Treasurer. It has sixty members.

GRAND ARMY POST.—Thomas Layton Post, No. 121, Department of Illinois, G. A. R., was organized in Lewistown January 20, 1882, with the following charter members, of whom those marked with a * are deceased: *Thomas Deems, *A. R. McDonald, *G. A. Buffum, George Heap, John McCumber, L. W. Potts, *L. S. Rasmussen, H. A. Yarnell, W. C. Staton, H. C. Hasson, *W. W. Hull, *I. C. Barclay and Alexander Maranville. The first Commander was L. S. Rasmussen, after which came in succession the following, of whom those marked with a * are deceased: *Captain Thomas A. Boyd, George W. Reese, *William M. Dobson, A. J. Strites, *George H. Metzel, L. W. Potts, *W. T. Scott, Rev. A. K. Tullis, *General Lewis F. Ross, M. K. Dobson, *John W. Dodds, *S. H. Burtis, O. M. McCumber, Edward F. Evans and Dr. W. S. Strode. Of the 162 names now on the roster of the post only about fifteen are left in good standing, the following (September, 1907) being alive: Eli Maranville, John Lathburg, Harrison Smith, John A. Gray, John Livingston, Dr. D. D. Talbott, T. F. Gibbons, H. B. Hill, Benjamin Prichard, George Bandle, E. H. Dudley, E. W. Belts, T. L. Frazier, J. M. Stewart, J. G. Ackerson, William Fitzgerald, William Pollard, George W. Jones, T. G. Goodman, G. W. Reese, James Mosslander, D. C. Pancake, Lemuel Purdy, J. F. Allison, Charles Duncan, Richard Burge, J. C. Gould, O. M. McCumber, C. H. Harper, D. K. Holton, A. Behymer, W. H. Hitchcock, Charles Demott, Eugene Groat, Warren Davis, Amos Backus, M. V. B. Ryan, William Lackey, James K. Yocum, I. M. Barnes, E. F. Evans, George M. Hackett, George Huber, M. K. Dobson, John C. Gould, Allen Noah, L. B. Phillips, A. K. Tullis, W. C. Burgett, W. H. Dunblazier, John Virgil, W. S. Strode, William Jones, J. N. Grafton, S. R. Wells, H. W. Peters, W. B. Winchell, William Heikes, G. W. Brush, J. W. Breckenridge, William Hunter, Henry Walker, Frank Garthwait, M. B. Nott, J. S. Williams, S. H. Gustine, W. T. Whaley, S. R. Quigley, A. F. Krebaum, Henry C. Barnes, Thomas Cheney, A. A. Gallant, W. B. Golden, William E. Howlett.

The present officers of the post are: Past Commander, Dr. W. S. Strode; Senior Vice Commander, Aaron Behymer; Junior Vice Commander, Eugene Groat; Surgeon, A. A. Gallant; Chaplain, O. M. McCumber; Officer of the Day, M. K. Dobson; Outer Guard, Charles Demott; Quartermaster, William Jones; Adjutant, A. J. Stutes; S. M., William Newberry.

Kennett Lodge, No. 146, K. of P., of Lewistown, was organized January 14, 1886, by the election of the following officers: George K. Linton, Past Chancellor; J. M. Wallace, Chancellor Commander; P. C. Ross, Vice Chancellor; Edward C. Miles, Prelate, and D. W. C. Ufford, Keeper of Records and Seal. It was instituted by Canton Lodge, No. 54, with twenty-one members, and now numbers over 160. Its present officers are: C. C. Prickett, Chancellor Commander; J. C. Fleming, Vice Chancellor; H. O. Burtis, Prelate, and G. M. Blakeslee, Keeper of Records and Seal, and Grand Representative.

The Modern Woodmen of American, organized in the summer of 1886, and have now a lodge of 160 members, officered as follows: F. L. Lambert, Consul; G. W. Weldy, Adjutant; P. E. Hofflund, Banker, and J. W. Duvall, Clerk.

The Court of Honor, which was organized in 1897, has a membership of ninety and officers as follows: M. T. Robison, Chancellor; Miss Ida Crabtree, Vice Chancellor; L. C. Breeden, Past Chancellor, and J. W. Duvall, Recorder and Treasurer.

BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATIONS.—The Altruistic Club of Canton was founded in 1898 as an art organization, then became an Archery Club, and in 1903 was established on its present charitable basis, its special object being to eliminate the sufferings of the sick who are unable to obtain necessary medical and surgical aid. Applications for assistance must be presented by the attending physicians. The club furnishes nurses and surgical rooms, pays for medicines and provides for all necessary relief except medical and surgical attendance, which is donated by the profession. The club is doing a good work and has been of especial service during the progress of typhoid and other epidemics. Its officers are: President, Mrs. L. E. Grimm; Vice President, Mrs. C. M. Black; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. H. W. Knauss; Recording Secretary, Mrs. W. J. Hentze; Treasurer, Miss Nellie Donn.

THE GRAHAM HOSPITAL.—Notwithstanding the density and magnitude of its population, Fulton County is unable to boast a public hospital. A Hospital Association has been existing in Canton for some years and for a time a public hospital was maintained in leased premises. The venture was not a success. Recently, however, the Misses Alice and Caroline Graham, daughters of the late Hon. John G. Graham, have undertaken to erect a hospital building to cost $25,000, which is to be located on West Walnut Street in the city of Canton. The contract has been let and work is to begin at once. The control and management of the institution, which will be known as Graham Hospital, is left to a Board of Trustees, to be appointed, one each from the Masonic, Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias organizations, and one each from the Methodist, Christian, Baptist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches, and one of the Misses Graham.

The late Joseph L. Murphy bequeathed the sum of $40,000 for the establishment and maintenance of a hospital in Canton to be under the management of the Canton Physicians' Club. This will, however, is being contested, and it will be likely many years before a determination is reached.

TRADES-UNIONS.—The first organization in the line of trades-unionism in Fulton County was the establishment of a Knights of Labor Association in Canton at the time that body was in its zenith. Following this, however, nothing was done in the way of organizing trades-unions in the county until in 1893, when a Federation of Labor and various locals were established in Canton, and locals in the other towns and villages in the county. The oldest and strongest organization of labor is that of the United Mine Workers of America. All the mines in the county are operated by men belonging to this organization. Locals of various other trades are well organized, but the numbers are necessarily limited, owing to the fact that there are not many engaged in any special line of trade in any single locality in the county. Strikes have been few, the most important being the cigarmakers' strike in Canton in 1895. Formerly there were many differences between the coal mine operators and miners, but there have been none of consequence for more than ten years.

The Eighth Sub-District of the United Mine Workers of America comprises seventeen counties in Central Illinois, with a membership of 5,000 (2,500 in Fulton County) and with headquarters in Canton. It was organized in 1898 by Samuel Pascoe, of Farmington, member of the State Executive Board, and the first President of the sub-district. Succeeding Mr. Pascoe as President were: A. Alexander Snedden, who served three months in 1899, resigned and was followed by the former Vice President, T. H. Picten, the latter being an incumbent for three years; F. M. Guthrie, 1902-05, and William Spenny, of Farmington, from the latter year to date. The Secretary and Treasurer of the sub-district, who has been in office for nine years, is Sidney J. Young. The location of the unions in Fulton County, with their members, is given by Secretary Young as follows: Astoria, No. 329; Breeds, No. 517; Bryant, No. 373; Brerton, No. 1193; Cuba, No. 368; Canton, No. 892; Dunfermline, No. 106; Ellisville, No. 1053; Farmington, Nos. 946 and 1213; Fairview, No. 275; Norris, No. 792, and St. David, No. 860.

CHAPTER XXVII.

CRIMINAL RECORD.

LIST OF NOTABLE CRIMES PERPETRATED IN FULTON COUNTY—PERSONS WHO HAVE BEEN PROSECUTED FOR MURDER IN THE HISTORY OF THE COUNTY.

The first murder in Fulton County, according to Harvey Lee Ross, who is recognized as authority, was committed by Reuben and Roswell Fenner. The victim was the wife of Reuben Fenner. The Fenners were among the first settlers of Fulton County and participated in the affairs of the county quite largely, and their names are frequently found upon the early records of the county's legislative and judicial minutes. Mr. Ross says that Mrs. Fenner was so cruelly treated by her husband and his brother, that she died from the injuries; that when the people of the county learned of her death and assembled for the funeral, they found that the body had been placed in a rough box for a coffin and made ready for burial. Her body was removed by the people there gathered and their suspicions of the cause of the death of Mrs. Fenner were verified, as they found the body badly bruised as a result of harsh treatment. The Fenners were arrested and confined in Lewistown's first jail. After remaining in jail for about two months awaiting the convening of court, they escaped. It was supposed that friends of the Fenners had come up from Calhoun County, where the Fenners had formerly resided, and with a crowbar had pried out one of the logs of the jail walls. The Fenners were never afterward heard from.

The criminal record of Fulton County would be a long one, even if it were confined solely to felonies—too long for any detailed recital in a work of this character. Therefore, the details here given will be confined to a summary of only the indictments for capital offenses as they appear of record on the criminal calendar:

James Ogden.—Indicted in 1840 for the murder, in Union Township, of George Morris by kicking him. The accused was found guilty and sentenced to the penitentiary for one year.

Nehemiah Northup.—Indicted in 1848 for the murder of Norman Beamas by shooting with a gun at Liverpool. Northup gave bond, which he forfeited, and was never apprehended again.

Jackson Louderback, Daniel Louderback and John Curless.—Indicted March 6, 1849, for the murder of Abraham Littlejohn, of Woodland Township, by cutting with a knife. Jackson Louderback fled and was never apprehended. Daniel Louderback was tried and acquitted and the case against John Curless was nolle prosequied.

Nancy Wilcoxon.—Indicted March 17, 1852, for murder by killing William Weston with a knife. Found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to six years in penitentiary. She was the first woman indicted for murder in Fulton County.

William Tait.—Indicted for murder in November, 1857, for killing Hamilton Brown at Astoria. It was supposed that Brown died from the result of the impact of a stone supposed to have been thrown by Tait. Tait was tried and acquitted.

Simon R. O. Hardy and John O. Hardy.—Indicted April 27, 1859, for the murder of Daniel Richardson in Liverpool Township by stabbing with a knife. Trial by jury and verdict of acquittal.

Ira Cobb.—Indicted for murder September 29, 1864, for killing one Baker, of Woodland Township, by shooting him with a pistol. Tried on change of venue in Peoria County and sentenced to ten years in State's prison. New trial granted. Later pleaded guilty of manslaughter and sent to the State's prison for one year.

Catherine Lewis (alias Catherine Todd) and Robert Todd.—Indicted April 20, 1865, for murder by poisoning; tried by jury, which returned verdict of not guilty.

William A. Jones.—Indicted for murder April 21, 1866, for killing Wesley Pitman at Bryant by hitting him on the head with a rock. Found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to State's prison for two years.

John Yarnell.—Indicted April 23, 1867, for killing James P. Goodwin, City Marshal of Lewistown, by shooting. Change of venue taken to McDonough County; prisoner was sentenced to penitentiary for fourteen years.

Oscar Craig.—Indicted August 25, 1870, for murder for killing Thomas Brown at Otto by shooting. Change of venue to Tazewell County. Verdict of acquittal.

Lemuel Purdy, Pitts L. Purdy and Samuel Nicholson.—Indicted April 29, 1871, for murder of a Scandinavian at Lewistown in a free-for-all fight. Nicholson was found not guilty by the Fulton County Grand Jury. Pitts L. Purdy took a change of venue to Schuyler County and was acquitted. Lemuel Purdy was tried in Macon County on change of venue and was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to five years in State's prison.

Jonathan B. Berry.—Indicted August, 1876, for murder of John J. Lalicker, in Pleasant Township, by shooting with a pistol. Found guilty and sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SOME NOTABLE EVENTS IN FULTON COUNTY HISTORY—COUNTY-SEAT CONTESTS—BURNING OF THE COUNTY COURT HOUSE—A SENSATIONAL TRIAL FOR ARSON—A REMINISCENCE OF CIVIL WAR PERIOD—THREATENED RESISTANCE TO AN ANTICIPATED DRAFT—STATEMENT OF THE PROVOST MARCHAL—LAND RECORDS—SMALLPOX AND CHOLERA VISITATIONS—SOME LOCAL STORMS—FIRST WHITE CHILDREN BORN IN THE COUNTY.

COUNTY-SEAT CONTESTS.—Since the establishment of the seat of county government at Lewistown in 1823 several attempts have been made to change the location to Canton and to Cuba. Prior to the Constitution of 1870 application for a change of location of the seat of county government had to be made directly to the Legislature. The first attempt to remove the county-seat from Lewistown was in 1838, when an effort was made to induce the Legislature to move the county-seat to Centerville, as Cuba was then called. A petition asking for the removal and a counter petition against removal were submitted to the Legislature. The Legislature refused to take any action in the matter. Joel Solomon and Lorenzo Bivins led the fight for removal and Newton Walker and Hugh LeMasters looked after the interests of Lewistown. In 1844 another attempt was made to induce the Legislature to remove the county-seat, but it again failed. Afterward an attempt was made to divide the county east and west between townships five and six north. This also failed. In the Constitution of 1848 was inscribed a clause providing that counties could not be divided where either portion would be less than four hundred square miles in area, and this prevented any division of Fulton County. For more than thirty years the question never again reached the battle line, but in 1878 an attempt was made to remove the county-seat to Canton.

Under the Constitution of 1870 it required a three-fifths vote, as Canton was a trifle farther from the geographical center of the county than Lewistown. The election following was one of the fiercest battles of ballots conceivable. The election was held a week after the regular November election of that year. Charges and counter charges of corruption were made by each side, but nothing was done to investigate alleged corruption. There were cast 4,785 ballots for and 4,349 ballots against the removal. Ten years later, 1888, an attempt was made to remove the county-seat to Cuba. The citizens of Cuba made an heroic fight, but it was a forlorn hope from its very inception. Therefore, for more than eighty years Lewistown has remained the shire-town of Fulton County.

BURNING OF THE COURT HOUSE.—On the night of December 13, 1894,* or rather in the early morning of the 14th, the Fulton County Court House, erected in 1836 under the supervision of Major Newton Walker, was discovered on fire. Circuit Court was pending at the time and had adjourned on the evening of the 13th at the usual hour for the day. The building was practically destroyed. Fortunately but few valuable books and papers were in the building at the time, the books of record and files of the County Clerk and Circuit Clerk and ex-officio Recorder being in a separate building used by those officials.

Some of the circumstances attending the fire suggested that it was the work of incendiaries, but nothing developed in the matter for several months and the incident was apparently forgotten. However, during the summer following a detective agency in Chicago was employed by some citizens of Canton and vicinity to make an investigation. An operator was sent into the county with the result that Frank (alias Chase) Henry, O. Baughman and Ellis Brown were induced to pay a visit to Chicago, and while there confessions were obtained from each of them reciting the alleged details of the burning of the court house. This was to the effect that while Brown held a ladder leading to the attic of the court house Henry climbed up and started the fire in the attic, and that Henry and Brown received as compensation for the work a sum of money alleged to have been collected by general subscription and paid over to them by Baughman. These three were indicted for arson. At the trial of the case against Henry, Baughman and Brown Judge Jefferson Orr presided. The alleged confessions were not admitted in evidence by the Judge on the ground that they were obtained under duress and through fear. The prosecution had no other evidence on which to base a conviction. The jury were instructed by the court to acquit the defendants. Following this trial C. E. Snively, of Canton; Joseph E. Farley (the latter proprietor of the detective agency) and Ed Clark, one of the operators, both of Chicago, and Ben Buckley, a Galesburg detective, were indicted for imprisonment to compel confessions. The allegation was that Mr. Snively and Mr. Buckley had conspired with Farley to get Baughman, Brown and Henry to Chicago and that while there Farley obtained the confessions by the usual "sweat-box" methods. Farley and

*The date here given corrects error on page 764, which erroneously refers to the burning of the Fulton Court House as having occurred in 1895 instead of 1894.

Clark were tried on this charge in McDonough County on change of venue. Clark was acquitted and Farley was found guilty and fined $1,000 by the jury. The verdict, however, was set aside by Judge Charles J. Scofield, who presided, on the ground that there was no proof to sustain the verdict, and the case was never reheard and the cases against the other defendants were dismissed.

This is the story as appears from the records, devoid of all comment. Those who are interested in learning the contention of either side to the controversy can readily obtain the facts from the newspaper files of the county. The matter was a very bitter and sanguinary battle, lasting several months, and it would serve no useful purpose here to attempt to analyze the situation as presented at the time. That must be left to some future historian, who can present the matter without being subjected to the accusation of biased judgment.

REMINISCENCES OF CIVIL WAR PERIOD.—During the Civil War (1860-64) a small company of cavalymen was detailed by the War Department for service in Fulton County. The detail was made at the request of Capt. William Phelps, who was at the time Acting Provost Marshal. Considerable opposition to the manner in which the war was being conducted, if not to the war itself, was being manifested in many portions of the county. Resistance to the "draft" and encouragement to deserters were the chief indictments against the anti-war following in the county. The causes that led up to the detailing of the cavalry company, composed of Germans, and hence colloquially spoken of as the "Dutch cavalry," is best set forth by the Acting Provost Marshal himself in a communication to the county press at the time in response to criticism of his conduct as an officer. This communication is as follows:

"In view of the troubles existing at this time in the southern portion of Fulton County and to allay any unnecessary apprehension therefrom, and also for the purpose of correcting evils and misunderstandings naturally growing out of vague rumors and unfounded reports, many of which are afloat in the community in relation to the late military proceedings enacted in south Fulton, I deem it due to the public that a fair and candid statement of the matter should be made, in order that all may understand the basis upon which troops were called into the county, their action since their arrival and when their mission will have been fulfilled.

"It is a fact well known to the public that there has been, for several weeks past, a determined armed resistance, accompanied with violent threats, against the execution of the enrolled law in some of the townships in this county. The first noticeable demonstration of this spirit was manifested in Pleasant Township and was of so violent a character as to compel Luke Elliott, the clerk duly appointed by William McComb, the enrolling officer of this county, to abandon the work. After some delay and much parleying the enrollment was completed without further serious opposition by another appointee. This spirit of resistance was caught up by the citizens of Isabel Township and culminated in a more formidable and determined resistance than had been exhibited in Pleasant, and finally terminated in intimidating one and taking the enrolling books of another of the officers by armed force and with threats that no man should enroll the township except at the peril of his life.

"In addition to this there was manifested a bitter hostility to the arrest and return of deserters from the army—so much so that deserters to the number of fifteen to twenty-five, encouraged by this spirit, had for some time past been encamped in the open field and at other places of rendezvous, with the avowed purpose of resisting any attempt which might be made by the authorities to arrest them. Not only this, a large number of the citizens of Isabel were in the habit of drilling and performing other military duty, with no other avowed purpose than to prepare to resist the enrollment. This being the condition of things, it was manifest to the Provost Marshal that he and his little force were not able to enforce the law and bring the offenders to justice.

"The Provost Marshal of the district, being informed of the condition of affairs in the county, visited it, and by his direction a small force of cavalry (sixty-one in number), with one six-pounder, was ordered into the county for the purpose, and no other, of enforcing the enrollment of Isabel Township and for the arrest of deserters and other individuals against whom legal process had been issued. This force arrived and encamped at Duncan's Mills, five miles south of Lewistown, on the 13th inst. About 12 o'clock that same night, this force being divided into three squads of ten men each—leaving the remainder to guard the gun and take charge of prisoners, should any be arrested—started with their respective officers for three different points in the same neighborhood, viz: Charles Brown's, John Lane's and John Graham's. The first visit made by either of the squads was at Charles Brown's. The officer, taking two men with him, went to the house and, after knocking at the door and making his business known, entered the house and arrested John and Benjamin F. Brown, who were in bed, no opposition of any kind being made. These two prisoners were put in charge of two soldiers and sent to camp, while the officer with the remainder of his men joined those who were at John Lane's. Here eight of the company were detailed to surround the house and barn of Mr. Lane. The officer then knocked at the door, made his business known and demanded admittance, which being refused, five minutes were given in which to comply, at the expiration of which no compliance being made, the door was forced in and three soldiers entered the house. There were nine men in the house, all armed. Two double-barreled shotguns, one rifle, three revolvers, one double-barreled pistol, all loaded, and one bowie knife were also found in the house. Upon a demand to deliver up their weapons, and surrender all complied except Aaron Bechelhimer and John Alexander, including James Lane, who first drew a revolver and afterwards surrendered. Bechelhimer and Alexander were in a back room and as the soldiers approached Bechelhimer, offering resistance, was caught by a soldier and thrown out of a window, when he was instantly arrested by another soldier. Alexander, in the meantime, who had been ordered several times to surrender, attempted to draw a revolver and was standing with one hand upon the collar of his coat and the other in the act of drawing his weapon, when he was shot in the left breast by a soldier and the revolver taken from him. Of the number in the house Platt and James Lane were arrested, the latter of whom escaped; also Aaron Bechelhimer and Marshall Athey, two deserters, and John Lane, who was afterwards released by the Provost Marshal.

The third squad, composed of ten men, had gone to John Graham's on a like errand (to arrest deserters), and also to arrest Graham, against whom charges had been preferred before the proper tribunal. Here, as at the other places, the officer in command knocked at the door and made known his business. Graham replied that no deserters were in the house, and that he was alone. Search was made at his barn for deserters, but without success. Demand was again made for entrance in his house and refused, when the door was forced open. No men were found in the lower story. Edward Trumbull, who was one of the squad, opened a door leading to a narrow stairway and with a candle in his hand attempted to go upstairs, when he was fired upon by John Graham, the ball inflicting a slight wound in Trumbull's breast, and passing down, lodged in his thigh, causing a severe flesh wound. At the same time a shot was fired from the porch which barely missed Van Meter. Graham still refusing to surrender, a guard was placed around his house and a messenger sent to the Captain of the company at Duncan's to bring up the artillery. At this, and when Graham discovered what he was contending against (for, as he said, up to this time he supposed it to be Phelps and his posse), he finally surrendered, and, with Joseph Brown, was taken prisoner.

"These are the facts, as related by the officers of the several squads, upon which I rely with the utmost confidence. The prisoners, nine in number, were brought by the cavalry to Lewistown, where they remained until the afternoon train, when seven (two being released by the Marshal) were sent to the Provost Marshal of the district, to be by him delivered over to the United States District Marshal of this State, to be tried by the civil authorities upon the charges preferred against them.

"From present indications it is hoped and believed that the law will be enforced, the enrollment made and deserters arrested without any resistance, and when this fact is clearly demonstrated the military force now in the county will be withdrawn, and not until then.

"I have been thus particular in collecting and detailing the facts connected with this transaction, which have been gathered from eye-witnesses, and other facts, some of which have come under my own observation and that of numerous other citizens of the county, for the purpose of guarding the people against false reports, and that they may understand the true condition of affairs in Fulton County. The excitement which followed the arrest by the military and the demonstration of six or seven hundred armed citizens exhibited in the environs of Lewistown within eight hours thereafter, needs no comment from me, but of itself is sufficient apology for an armed force being quartered in our midst.

WILLIAM PHELPS.

"Provost Marsh Fulton County.

"Lewistown, August 17, 1863."

LAND RECORDS.—The first land records of Fulton County real-estate were kept at Edwardsville, the capital of Madison County, of which Fulton County was then a part. Afterward instruments were filed in Pike County. A transcript of these records from Madison and Pike Counties is contained in Volumes A, B and C of the land records of the county, and were transcribed from the records of Madison and Pike Counties in 1845 by Fitch I. Porter. As shown in these three volumes, 2,155 instruments were recorded. Transfer No. 1, in Volume A, shows a conveyance of Fulton County property and purports to convey thirty-four and one-fourth sections of land, or 6,080 acres, but the instrument filed shows only three quarter-sections of Fulton County lands were conveyed, and these are as follows: Northeast quarter of Section 30, in Range 6 North of 2 East and southeast of Section 33, in Range 7 North of 4 East, and northeast quarter of Section 9, in Range 4 North of 2 East. This conveyance was from Aaron T. Crane, of Washington, D. C., to Edmond Dana. John Quincy Adams, as Secretary of State, certified to the official position of the officer taking the acknowledgment.

The first volume of records after the organization of Fulton County is known as Volume No. 1, and the first transfer of lands recorded therein is No. 2,156, and was from Ashbel Porter, of the State of New York, to Sherlock Willard. It conveyed the southeast quarter of Section 8, in Range 10 North of 7 East, which is now Elmwood Township, Peoria County. This instrument was dated February 4, 1822, and was filed by the grantee December 18, 1824, and was delivered to Stephen Dewey. The second and third entries likewise show transfer of Peoria County lands. The fourth, or instrument No. 2,159, was the first instrument transferring Fulton County lands filed after the organization of the county. This instrument conveyed the northwest quarter of Section 2, in Range 7 North of 2 East, in Fulton County, and lands also in Peoria and McDonough Counties. The next instrument filed was a conveyance of 120 acres in Buckheart Township, a part of the southwest quarter of Section 5, in Range 6 North and 4 East, from Ossiam M. Ross to John Eveland, and the next conveyance bearing the same date was from David Gallatine, conveying 140 acres of the same quarter-section to Eveland. The twenty-first instrument, filed after the organization of Fulton County, was under date of March 24, 1825, and was the town plat of the town of Waterford, one of the "paper towns" of the county. J. N. Ross was the Surveyor who made the plat. The total number of instruments filed for record up to this date number near 170,000.

PLAGUES.—The people of Fulton County have been singularly free from scourges. Smallpox has frequently visited various parts of the county in more or less malignant form, but has been suppressed as quickly as it was practical to do so. The most virulent visitation of smallpox to the county was in 1881 at Cuba, where two or three persons died and many persons were dreadfully ill from the disease. The most calamitous scourge which ever visited the county was the cholera in 1849. This disease first broke out in New Orleans in 1848 and gradually worked its way up the river to St. Louis, and on up to Fulton County by way of the Illinois River. It first broke out in Liverpool in July, 1849. The first victim was Robert Summers, who is said to have visited on an Illinois River steamboat a man suffering from cholera. In two days he was taken with the cholera and died. It is asserted that in making a coffin to inter the body the carpenter made it too short and thus the burial was delayed two days and the remains left exposed during that time. Mrs. Summers, the wife, took the disease and died, as did three of Summers' children, wiping out the entire family. Immediately after the death of the Summers children the Summers residence was burned to the ground in the hope of staying the ravages of the disease. The contagion lasted but about one week and was limited to a sparsely settled district of Liverpool Township, yet within that time there were thirteen deaths. Several persons had the disease, but recovered. Two years later the disease again appeared in the county, but this time further south. On this occasion the disease was contracted at Sharp's Landing, on the Illinois River, south of Astoria. The disease raged in Vermont and Astoria Townships, and reached as far north as Farmers Township. There were probably one hundred cases all told. Esquire J. Langston, of Vermont, was the first to die. This was in June, 1851, but it was not known that he had died of cholera. The coffin containing the remains was opened at the church where the funeral was held, and thus the disease got a good start. In all probably forty or fifty persons died of the disease before it ran its course or was suppressed. The act of heroism by some, cowardice in others and the pall of sadness and gloom prevalent in scourge-stricken communities were present in all the awful sadness of such times.

LOCAL STORMS.—Fulton County has been visited since its settlement by two tornadoes, one in 1835 and one in 1876. The first is known as the Canton storm, and occurred the night of the 18th of June, 1835. This storm seems to have first struck the earth about midway between Fairview and Canton, passing southeast. The village of Canton was in the pathway of the storm and of all the buildings in the village of Canton at that time but two remained uninjured. The storm practically demolished the entire town. There were about five hundred residents in Canton at the time. The founder of the town, Isaac Swan, was killed, being crushed beneath the fallen timbers of his own home; also his infant son was killed. There were other persons killed, three or four in the village of Canton and one or two in the country.

In 1876 a cyclone, probably one hundred yards in width, passed northeasterly through Vermont Township. It blew down several houses and killed one man in the village of Vermont. These two tornadoes were local and seem to have gathered and spent their force wholly within the limits of the county. There have been many violent wind storms which destroyed much property and growing crops, notably one of June 10, 1902. But these were all "straight" wind storms, blowing at a terrific gale.

The climatic conditions, which were general in their nature, are treated generally in this work under proper topical headings, and have no place here, but it is well to note that the deep snow of 1830-31, beginning December 29, 1830, and continuing until February 2, 1831, was one of the hardships to be endured by the early pioneers of the county. The snow averaged above three feet in depth for nearly two months. As this was only a few years after the first settlement of the county, conditions to endure such a siege were not favorable and intense suffering resulted. The temperature that prevailed was very low, reaching as low as 23 degrees below zero on February 7th of that year.

FIRST WHITE CHILDREN BORN ON FULTON COUNTY SOIL.—The first child born to white parents on Fulton County soil was Abner C. Barnes, who died in Bushnell, Ill., about fifteen years ago. He was the son of D. W. Barnes, one of the earliest settlers of the county. The first white female child born in the county was Lucinda C. Ross, daughter of Ossiam M. Ross. She afterward married William Kellogg, who for years was Congressman from the Fulton district.

BIOGRAPHICAL

[The following items of personal and family history having been arranged in encyclopedic (or alphabetical) order as to names of the individual subjects, no special index to this part of the work will be found necessary.]

ABBOTT, Daniel.—One of two elementals make the successful lawyer—great talent or great industry. Emerging from the former condition are the minority, who lend brilliancy and color and emphasis to a profession resting upon the dry rocks of fact, while to the latter and predominating class is given the task of upholding the solid pillars of jurisprudence, and of maintaining, when guided by the ideals which animated the framers of the old Roman Cincia law, those inviolable tenets which secure the greatest justice and the greatest liberty to the society of mankind. No other occupation, save agriculture and banking, strikes so deeply into the roots of the commonwealth. But neither of these presents the latitude for moral digression, for intricate and questionable interpretation, vouchsafed the learned disciple of legal science. It is for this reason that the man of principle, of steady application and unswervable purpose, leads in the matter of really superior compensation, and like considerations prevail in estimating the value of the career of Daniel Abbott, identified with professional affairs in Canton since March, 1866. Mr. Abbott is one of the legal bulwarks of the town and county, his age, important services, fine personal appearance and well stored mind contributing to a whole of great practical importance to the community.

Mr. Abbott, who is the present City Magistrate of Canton, represents a pioneer family of Fulton County, established here in 1837 by his father, John W. Abbott. The latter was born in Pittsburg, Pa., December 12, 1812, a son of Richard Abbott, of English ancestry, and also born in the Quaker State. Late in life the grandfather moved to Scott County, Indiana, whence his son, John Wesley, came to Fulton County, married the same year Christina Babbitt, daughter of Daniel Babbitt, of Indiana, and settled in Farmington, where Daniel Abbott was born May 21, 1838. Not long afterward John Wesley returned to Indiana, and upon again locating in Fulton County, in 1847, settled on a farm in Farmington Township, and in 1865 moved to a farm in Joshua Township, where his death occurred in 1877. His wife, who was born in 1818, survived him until 1901.

On the paternal farm in Farmington Township Daniel Abbott gained that abounding health and clear mentality that accompany hard muscles, good digestion and sound sleep. At the same time he developed tendencies and ambitions which would mitigate against the best results in farming. This inclination to a more strenuous life was strengthened during his student days in the public schools at Farmington and at Lombard University, Galesburg, Ill., which he attended two years. Beginning with 1859 he read law for two and a half years, and in January, 1866, was admitted to practice at the bar of Illinois. Locating in Canton the following March he began the professional career which has added strength and standing to the town, and has set an example of hope and encouragement to those struggling toward the same worthy ends. In 1869 he formed a partnership with C. L. Henkle in real estate, loans, etc., which continued until 1885, and later with his father-in-law, Andrew J. Shepley, and to this business he has given the same faithful and conscientious attention which has characterized his discharge of professional obligations.

Since old enough to form political opinions Mr. Abbott has helped to maintain the principles of the Democratic party. It was on this ticket that he was elected State's Attorney in 1872, re-elected to the same office in 1876, and was Mayor of Canton during two terms, 1875 and 1876. He also has represented the Fourth Ward in the City Council, and at one time was Supervisor of Canton Township. Many other offices of local importance have profited by his good judgment and understanding of municipal needs. In April, 1904, he succeeded to his present office of City Magistrate.

As a lawyer Mr. Abbott has a thorough knowledge of the technicalities of law and their application, as undertaken by the general rather than special practitioner. Clear and logical in presenting a case to a jury, he is keen in locating the weak points in the armor of his antagonist, and sixty-seven years have not robbed him of a commanding presence, eloquence of word and gesture, and fine grasp of the amenities and obligations of his position. His efforts have brought wealth and high social standing in their train, and he includes among his friends representative men in many walks of life throughout the county. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons and Independent Order of Elks.

On November 12, 1863, Mr. Abbott married Amelia W. Weller, who was born in Ogle County, Ill., a daughter of Daniel and Mary Weller.

Mrs. Abbott, who died in March, 1881, left four children: Charles D., Frances M., John C. and Grace. On February 15, 1883, Mr. Abbott married Alice A. Shepley, daughter of Andrew J. Shepley, the latter a son of one of the very early pioneers of the county and the business partner of Mr. Abbott. Mr. and Mrs. Abbott are the parents of the following children: Frances M., wife of J. S. Conklin; J. C., Grace, Lyle S. and Leslie V.

ABERNATHY, Judge Addison D.—That agriculture can be made one of the most agreeable and satisfying occupations of human life, that industry and good judgment and perseverance transform one's dreams into realities, and that honesty and fair-mindedness are among the most useful of human assets, are facts emphasized in the life of Addison Abernathy, whose career has been identified with Fulton County for the past seventy-three years, and who, as farmer and local Judge, has exerted an influence second to none of the upbuilders of Farmers Township.

At a very early stage in American history the Abernathy family was established in Virginia, where were born James, John and Polly Abernathy, the father and grandparents of Addison, and whence the family removed to Ross County, Ohio, while James still was a small boy. After reaching maturity, the latter married Hannah Throckmorton, and continued his occupation as a farmer in Ross County, where Addison, the third oldest, and one of the four survivors of his parents' nine children, was born August 25, 1829. The other surviving children are three sisters—Ann Maria, Nancy Emeline and Susan. The family later lived for a time in Montgomery County, Ind., but in 1834 made the memorable trip to Fulton County, coming overland with wagons and four-horse teams, that they might easily cross the Bernadotte hill, of which they had heard much, but the size of which had been greatly exaggerated. Settling on Section 33, Farmer Township, they found a small area fenced in, a small log cabin built, and a little patch of hemp sown. Flax soon succeeded the hemp, and from this the mother made the clothes for her family, and later wheat, corn and oats yielded their share of profit. From this small and insignificant beginning there developed a large country interest, for James Abernathy was ambitious and resourceful, fitting his abilities in the needs of a new community with gratifying results. In time he owned and operated 800 acres of land, and was largely engaged in raising and feeding cattle and hogs, for which, in earlier times, he had also the wide ranges of government land not yet appropriated by settlers, or which was owned, but not used, by Eastern capitalists. The absolute necessities brought from the soil were followed by the refinements and luxuries of farming, and when Addison was still a small lad, frequent trips were made to Sangamon County for peaches and apples, the seeds of which were planted and the shoots subsequently transplanted to develop an orchard. In setting out these embryo trees, the elder Abernathy thought them much too far apart, but he lived to see their branches intermingled over the orchard pathways. The three sons were each given a tree to plant, and the one selected by Addison survived longest the extremes of weather, and, like its owner, remained a witness to the startling changes which followed in the footsteps of the departing Indians.

James Abernathy, the father, was a generous, whole-souled man, cautious in his business dealings, and a thorough optimist. He never was heard to complain about the weather, taking storm and sunshine for granted, and bowing to the inevitable decree of nature. He was born October 6, 1798, and died January 20, 1882; his wife, born August 17, 1797, died June 8, 1873. Of their children, John and William died on the old farm in early life, the latter in 1854; Elizabeth became the wife of G. W. Powell, both now deceased; Ann M. is the wife of D. W. Wilson, of Table Grove; Mary E. is the widow of William M. Hodges, of New Salem Township, McDonough County; Nancy E. is on the old home place; Matilda became the wife of William Beckwith, and died in Eldorado Township, McDonough County; and Susan is the wife of D. B. Gregory, of Bardolph, Ill. James Abernathy was a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, and held many offices of importance in the township. In religion he was identified with the Christian Church, and unless sickness prevented, was always to be found in his pew on the Sabbath day.

Addison Abernathy has lived on his present farm ever since the family moved to Fulton County. He now has 365 acres of land—a comparatively small farm for him, as he has provided homes for all his children, as they attained maturity, out of his original farm. He has seen the district rise from primitive conditions to wonderful prosperity; has seen homes established and their owners pass beyond the ken of those who knew them; has witnessed the departure of the old-time implements and the installment of those which obliterate the grinding drudgery of an earlier day. True to the traditions of his family, he is a Democrat politically, and besides holding several township offices of importance, has served many years as Justice of the Peace. During that time he maintained the dignity and true merit of law, dispensing decisions impartially and wisely, and meeting with surprisingly little criticism. But one decision rendered by him was ever reversed by a higher court.

On November 14, 1904, Mr. Abernathy was called upon to sustain an irreparable loss through the death of his wife, whom he married August 9, 1851, and who formerly was Kitty Ann Harris, born August 27, 1831, the daughter of Isaac and Jane (Swearingen) Harris, the former of whom was the first settler in Vermont, Fulton County, and built the first three houses in the village. The Swearingen's were of Revolutionary stock, and for years pursued their various occupations in the vicinity of Wheeling, W. Va. There the paternal grandparents at one time were on horseback, when attacked by Indians, and the grandmother was mortally wounded, while the grandfather rode as rapidly as possible towards the fort, thus saving his life. When picked up by men sent to search for her, the grandmother's scalp had been removed, but she still was conscious and able to utter a few words.

Mrs. Abernathy is recalled as a high-minded, Christian woman, a veritable boon in sickness, and the soul of hospitality when the country afforded few social advantages. Of her five sons and one daughter, James J. is a farmer of Jefferson County, Neb.; John Benton, at the age of seventeen, left home thirty-four years ago ostensibly to make a mark in the world. In fact, he stated on leaving he would not return until he accomplished his purpose. He was an unusually bright boy, an excellent scholar and musician, and his father hopes sometime to see his familiar face, which to him would be recognizable, no matter what lines may have been imprinted by the passing years. William Harris Abernathy is living on the old homestead, and through his marriage with Hattie Robss, has three children, Harriet Ross, James C. and Dorothy. Ezra Nelson Abernathy lives on Section 33, Farmers Township, and through his marriage to Sadie Sailes, has sons and daughters, namely: Frederick (who died in childhood), James L., Arthur R., Bessie May, Ezra L., Martha Emeline, Harris S., Anna Sailes, John A., Theodore R., and William S. Hanna Jane Abernathy died at the age of eighteen, and George, the youngest of the family, living in Bloomington, Ill., married Della Sylvester and has a son, Addison Wayne.

During his long and active life Mr. Abernathy has lived close to high ideals, and his citizenship has imparted strength and substantiality to all undertakings in which his ability and worth have been enlisted. Having abundant means at his disposal, he has distributed them with great wisdom and generosity, and has supported in a practical manner schools, churches, mills and other upbuilding enterprises. He has splendidly stood the tests which the frontier imposed upon those who invaded its remoteness and the new century finds him in accord with its aims, purposes and inexhaustible opportunities.

ADAMS, Charles B.—Since his admission to the bar of Illinois in 1900, Charles B. Adams has lent dignity and stability to professional affairs in Canton, and thus has maintained and even added to a reputation for ability and resourcefulness established during his residence in the State of Missouri. Mr. Adams is a native of Illinois, born in Jasper County, April 29, 1857, a son of T. R. B. and Mary E. Adams, who were natives of New York and Indiana respectively.

Like many other men who seek a broader field of activity than that presented on the farm, Mr. Adams inaugurated his independent career as a country school teacher, for two years having charge of schools in Barton County, Mo., to which State he removed as a boy and where the greater part of his education was acquired. Faithfulness in his work and economy in his expenditures enabled him to carry forward the long cherished project of studying law, and he entered the office of Tucker & Buler, at Lamar, Barton County, and was admitted to the bar of Missouri May 3, 1883. After continuing practice in Lamar for fifteen years, or until coming to Canton in October, 1899, during the following June he entered upon a general practice in his present location, which has been materially extended with the lapse of time.

December 25, 1882, Mr. Adams was united in marriage to Anna Stevenson, who was born near Glasgow, Scotland, and educated in the public schools of Fulton County. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Adams three are living: Salome M., Harold G. and Bernice C. Politically Mr. Adams subscribes to the principles of the Democratic party. He is a broad-minded and progressive practitioner, a careful observer of the courtesies and amenities of his profession and at all times seeking its most intelligent and praiseworthy compensations.

ADDIS, J. S., who was successfully engaged in the marble and monument business in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Banner Township, this county, October 11, 1848. He is a son of Aaron D. and Jane E. (Suidan) Addis, natives of New Jersey. Aaron D. Addis and his wife came with a moving wagon to Illinois in 1837. They first located at Fairview, whence they moved to Buckheart Township and afterward to Banner Township. The father died January 23, 1873, and the mother February 6, 1891.

J. S. Addis received his early education in the district schools in the neighborhood of his home, and has spent the greater portion of his life in Fulton County. He engaged in farming until he disposed of most of his interests several years ago, though he still owns some farm land and city property. He established himself in the monument business in Canton in 1895, and conducted that profitable enterprise until 1905, when he sold it and is now living retired in one of the handsomest homes in Canton.

On February 27, 1873, Mr. Addis was married to Emma C. Weller, who was born in New Jersey, June 13, 1852. Five children are the offspring of this union, namely: Luella May, Lottie, Jeane, Blanche M. and Marie. In religion Mr. Addis professes the faith of the Methodist Church. Politically he is a Democrat. He has served as Town Collector and as School Trustee, and for six years was President of the Board of Education of Canton. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., the Star Encampment, the Daughters of Rebekah, the Court of Honor and the Bankers' Life Association.

ADDIS, Simon P.—Of the men who have wielded the implements of destruction as well as of construction; who have achieved worthy ends as promoters of the fundamental occupation of agriculture, and who have lent dignity and integrity to political offices of local importance, none are more firmly established in the history of the region of their occupation than Simon P. Addis. Mr. Addis has worked out his own destiny with little aid from others, and is the owner of a farm of 127 acres in Section 5, Banner Township, besides two other farms in the same township. He has a large and well furnished house, barns and outbuildings which serve the purpose of housing stock and produce, and fences which insure him against invasions from outlying districts. He is a thorough and practical husbandman, an authority upon scientific farming and a successful breeder of high-grade stock.

Born on a farm in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, February 18, 1843, Mr. Addis is a son of Aaron and Jane (Suydam) Addis, who were the parents also of nine other children. His youth was uneventfully passed in farming and attending the public schools, and like many of the men of solid worth in the country, his first actual broadening experience was as a soldier in the Civil War. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under command of Colonel Dickerman, and was mustered into the service at Peoria, Ill. Attached to the Fifteenth Army Corps, under General John A. Logan, the regiment became part of the Army of the Tennessee, and participated in all of the battles of that department. However, young Addis was detailed for provost duty, and was therefore absent from his regiment much of the time. At the present time he retains all of his orders received from his superiors, and which add greatly to his extensive fund of information bearing upon the rebellion. Discharged at Chicago, July 5, 1865, he was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., after participating in the Grand Review in Washington.

The marriage of Mr. Addis and Georgiana Sheaff occurred in Fulton County, in August, 1865, Mrs. Addis being a native of Westmoreland County, Pa., and daughter of George and Margaret Sheaff. To Mr. and Mrs. Addis have been born nine children, the survivors of whom are as follows: Della, wife of Leroy C. Ballard; Webster, Grace, Russell and Grover. As a staunch and uncompromising Democrat, Mr. Addis has been active in the councils of his party for many years, and among other offices has held that of School Director fourteen years, Highway Commissioner fifteen years and Supervisor and Assessor and Collector several years. During its existence he was Master of Banner Grange No. 1643, P. of H., representing the grange in the State organization. Fraternally he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Mr. Addis is appreciated for his many stable and reliable traits of character, for his unceasing devotion to the best interests of the community, and for the example offered of ability, perseverance and ultimate success.

ALBRIGHT, J. B., M. D.—Osteopathy, which rests upon the theory that most diseases are traceable to deformation of some part of the skeleton, long since has passed the experimental stage, and become a widely recognized and sane factor in the lessening of human suffering. A capable and enthusiastic promoter of this method of cure is found in Dr. J. B. Albright, whose comparatively brief professional career has resulted in truly remarkable results. The Doctor has been a resident of Cuba since 1903, and during three years has built up a remunerative and encouraging practice. His office is unexcelled in equipment, containing the most practical apparatus thus far discovered, as well as the latest books and periodicals bearing upon the subject which is enlisting his best energy and thought. His patients include members of the best families in the town and county, and even remote parts of the State. Dr. Albright spent his earlier life in Adair County, Mo., where he was born March 26, 1875, a son of John N. and Nancy M. (Brown) Albright, natives of Germany and Ohio, respectively.

John N. Albright came to America in early life, bringing with him a common school education and a knowledge of the miller's trade. He lived first in Indiana, and later in Adair County, Mo., where, in 1861, he enlisted for three years in the Second Missouri Cavalry, and during the Civil War participated in many of the important battles. Honorably discharged at the end of three years and three months, he returned to his former home in Adair County, and in 1866 married Nancy M. Brown, whose mother, Abigail A. (Custer) Brown, was a niece of General Custer, of Indian war fame. Mr. Albright erected a large flouring mill in Adair County, which he operated successfully for many years, and he also derived a substantial income from stock-raising, in which he engaged on the splendid farm which he still owns, and upon which he is passing his declining years in comparative retirement. He has been one of the leading citizens of his county for more than a quarter of a century, has contributed largely to its material and moral growth, and besides fostering agriculture, milling and general business, has twice been elected County Judge. Wealth, honor and many friends have grown out of his allegiance to duty as he has seen it, more substantial rewards than which seem impossible of attainment. Four daughters and two sons have been born into his family, have received the best advantages he was able to give them, and now are filling useful positions in the world. Abigail is the wife of H. F. Amich, of Adair County, Mo.; Charles

JOHN F. FILLINGHAM AND FAMILY

F. is a railroad engineer in Missouri; Mary F. is the wife of J. E. Novinger, of Missouri; Emma is the wife of L. A. Moorehouse, of the vicinity of Stahl, Mo.; J. B.; and Ola, wife of J. H. Mathews, a farmer of near Connellsville, Mo.

One of the earliest occupations of Dr. Albright was working in his father's mill in Adair County. However, no responsibility was allowed to interfere with his acquiring a practical education, and in 1894 he graduated with honors from the high school at Carrollton, thereafter taking a years' course in the State Normal School at Kirksville. In the latter part of 1896 he entered the American School of Osteopathy, at Kirksville, Mo., and after graduating in 1900, located at Havana, Ill., where he practiced his profession for three years, and from where he removed to Cuba in 1903. May 14, 1903, he was united in marriage to Mabel Mowery, daughter of Jacob Mowery, one of the honored pioneers of Fulton County, and of this union there is one son, Jacob M. For three years the Doctor was a member of Company H, Missouri National Guard. Fraternally he is a Mason and Odd Fellow, and in politics is a Republican. He is an agreeable and painstaking gentleman, and a student whose tendency is towards the best possible acquirement in his chosen calling.

ALLERTON, Samuel Waters.—(See page 15.)

ALPAUGH, Jay.—The entire life of Jay Alpaugh has been spent on the farm in Fairview Township, Fulton County, where he was born February 15, 1880, and to the management of which he succeeded, in 1903, upon the retirement from active life of his father, Sylvester Alpaugh, extended mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. Mr. Alpaugh was educated in the public schools of Fairview Township, and at present operates the home farm of 120 acres, with forty-seven acres adjoining on the south. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and derives a substantial income from land, the entire improvement of which is due to the efforts of his father and himself.

Mr. Alpaugh is a quiet, unostentatious man, devoted to his farm and home, and having few interests outside of his immediate environment. December 21, 1904, he was united in marriage to Blanche Turner, a native of Fairview Township, where she was born May 12, 1881.

AMMERMAN, James Voorhees, a prominent live-stock dealer and farmer of Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Somerset County, N. J., April 20, 1854. His parents were also natives of the same State—his father, Andrew Ammerman, being born July 19, 1827, and his mother, Martha Voorhees, January 12, 1829. The father located in Fulton County in 1858, and commenced his life-long occupation of farming. Having resided in the county for nearly half a century, he is now one of the oldest of the pioneers in that section.

The childhood of the subject of this sketch was spent at home with his parents, and there he received his education chiefly in the district schools. He attended the Canton public schools for some years, but enjoyed few advantages in that line after he was fourteen years of age. He has been a great reader, however, and in that way got most of his education. Farming became the serious business of his life, as it had been that of his father before him; but in addition to the general operation of this industry, he has for many years been engaged in stock feeding, including both cattle and hogs. His favorite breeds are Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs.

James V. Ammerman was married, in Lee Township, Fulton County, February 19, 1880, to Cora Wilson, born in Monroe County, Mich., October 8, 1859, and they have one daughter, Nellie D., who was born November 29, 1884. In his political views, Mr. Ammerman is a Republican, but has never taken an active interest in mere politics. The only public office he ever held was that of School Director, in which he was actively occupied for nearly thirty years.

ANDERSON, Andrew M., proprietor of the blacksmith and repairing establishment and agricultural implement depot at Ipava, Ill., is one of the energetic and successful business men of this section of Fulton County. He has earned his present standing by hard, unceasing and intelligent labor, but at the same time is fully alive to the unusual opportunities which America presents to those of foreign birth, and his gratitude is warmly appreciated by his many friends and the patrons of his growing business. Mr. Anderson is still a young man, having been born at Aamot Modum, Norway, on the 25th of March, 1873. He received his schooling in his native land, and there entered upon the blacksmith's trade.

In 1890 Mr. Anderson emigrated to America, being drawn to the great Northwest, which was already thickly populated by his countrymen, who there found implanted their own native industries—agriculture and lumbering. The youth of seventeen, endowed with ambition, common sense and rugged health, first settled at Belgrade, Minn. In order "to get his bearings" and determine upon his future course, he visited his brother Carl and a married sister, Stina, wife of Jacob Thomas, after which he was employed on a farm for a year. He then entered the great Red River Valley on the western border of Minnesota, to engage in his trade of blacksmithing, where he was soon after given the foremanship of a large repairing shop. He was thus employed for about five years, going into the pineries of Wisconsin and Minnesota during the winter months. For a time thereafter Mr. Anderson traveled through the country further south, searching for a favorable location. He finally decided in favor of Mason County, Ill., and remained there for about two years.

In 1899 Mr. Anderson located for business at Ipava, renting a blacksmith shop and adding to the work of the trade that of general repairing. In 1903 his venture had so prospered that he bought property of Noah Hall, whose business he later purchased, and now carries a complete line of agricultural implements, also dealing in surreys and buggies, hardware and wire fence (Page's—a specialty), and paints and oils. His business, in its many branches, increased to such proportions that for its accommodation he bought the building formerly occupied by Oliver Wood & Son, and at present has one of the most complete establishments for supplying the farmer with anything in the line of vehicles or implements, or for repairing them, to be found in Fulton County.

On June 2, 1896, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Rhodah Robinson, a native of Walker Grove, Mason County, Ill., and one child, Edwin, was born to them on September 21, 1897. Mrs. Anderson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and her husband of the Lutheran. Fraternally Mr. Anderson is a K. P., a Mason and a M. W. A. He is popular, proprietor of a growing business, the owner of a comfortable home, and enjoys the reputation of a good husband, father and citizen—certainly a position in life of which anyone (especially a young man of foreign birth who has been a resident of America but sixteen years) might feel justly proud. In politics Mr. Anderson is a Republican, but, before everything else, an American.

APPERSON, Francis Marion, member of the firm of Apperson & Johnson, proprietors of a first class livery in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Springfield, Mo., on the 18th of November, 1857. His father and grandfather also bore his name, his mother before marriage being known as Nancy Mayfield. Mr. Apperson's grandfather was a native of Ireland, but emigrated to Missouri at an early day, and his father was born in that State. The family moved from Missouri to Banner Township, Fulton County, when the subject of this sketch was but three years of age, and there the boy was reared and received what education he enjoys. For some years he was a resident of Utica, but came to Canton from Banner Township in the year 1888. Since that year Mr. Apperson has been an industrious and respected member of this community, having followed various occupations, among them that of a policeman for five years. In March, 1897, he established a livery business alone, and after conducting it for ten years received James Johnson into partnership.

On January 6, 1886, Mr. Apperson married Miss Clara Romine, the ceremony taking place at Lewistown, his wife's former home. They have one child, Eva Bell, born August 18, 1887, and now a student at the Canton High School. Both Mrs. Apperson and her daughter are members of the Baptist Church.

ARINGDALE, Francis.—For almost half a century Francis Aringdale has been helping to make history in Fulton County, and so well has he directed his energies that in 1897, at the age of fifty-seven, he was able to retire from active life on a comfortable competence. He has led a simple, active and methodical life, and his busy hands have manipulated the constructive implements of the agriculturist, and the destructive weapons of the soldier. Illinois first knew him in 1849, when, as a boy of nine years, he came to Fulton County with his people from Licking County, Ohio, where he was born November 4, 1840, and where also was born his father, John Aringdale. His mother, Mahala (Hooper) Aringdale, was a native of Virginia. The family in 1849 located on 100 acres of land near Canton, Ill., but the father later sold his farm and moved to Missouri where he experienced indifferent success for two years. Returning to Canton, he lived there a short time, when he bought a farm in Warren County, Ill., and later still owned a farm in Ellisville Township, his present home.

While living on his father's farm, May 24, 1866, Francis Aringdale married Lucy Wilson, who was born in New Jersey, March 24, 1844. Of this union there are four children: M. Sherman, Josephine, Frank and John W. In 1890 he purchased his present farm of 208 acres on Section 6, Ellisville Township, where he engaged extensively in general farming and stock-raising, and where he has added greatly to the improvements made by former owners. The modern, well furnished home and capacious barns are due to his success and forethought, and the place generally bears the impress of the large and liberal personality of the owner. When induced to shift the burden of responsibility onto younger shoulders, Mr. Aringdale was fortunate in having capable and ambitious sons, who had readily responded to his training and shared his progressive and wide-awake tendencies.

Mr. Aringdale is a Republican in politics, and in religion a Methodist Episcopalian. In August, 1862, he left the farm to enlist in Company B, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and after serving during the rest of the campaign was discharged at Louisville, Ky., in September, 1865. His recollections of the war are among the most interesting of his life, and from his intelligent and accurate narration, we of a more peaceful time may glean a large fund of information. He is a companionable and well posted man, observing the world from wide range, and retaining his faith in the goodness of mankind, and in the existence of opportunity for all who earnestly seek it.

ARMSTRONG, G. M.—An example of that that thrift and well applied energy which enables a man to retire from active life at a comparatively early age is found in the career of G. M. Armstrong, a resident of Fulton County since 1846 and who, previous to renouncing business cares in 1896, was identified with carriage making and cigar manufacturing. Mr. Armstrong's extreme youth was spent in Rockbridge County, Va., where he was born in 1840. While still a young man he went through the experience of removal from his southern home to the less settled region of Coles County, Ill., where his parents, William and Mary W. (Mackey) Armstrong, also born in Virginia, purchased land and engaged in farming. The father was not permitted to long profit by his change of surroundings, for death claimed him in a short time, and his family was left to depend largely upon the resources of its members.

G. M. Armstrong was six years old when he came with his mother from Coles to Fulton County, and located in Canton. He attended the public schools and in 1862, at the age of twenty-two, became a soldier in the One Hundred and Third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in time being advanced to the rank of Sergeant. He participated in many of the important battles of the war, and at the termination of hostilities received his honorable discharge, returning to his former home in Canton. Soon after he began to learn the trade of carriage making with the firm of Marion & Keltz, thereafter following the same until 1869, in which year he engaged in the cigar manufacturing business in partnership with W. O. Dean. The firm prospered in its affairs, and in 1878 built the cigar factory now owned by Sabel & Rafferty. As trade increased the capacity of this factory proved inadequate, and in 1891 a larger factory was built on the corner of Elm Street and First Avenue, having three stories and ample facilities for producing high-grade smokers' products.

The marriage of Mr. Armstrong and Lucy S. Bass occurred in Fulton County in 1878, and in 1888 the husband built the commodious and comfortable home on West Chestnut Street in which they since have lived. He has ever been active politically, although he has led a comparatively quiet and home-centered life. Mr. Armstrong was elected Alderman of his ward and served for two terms, being also Mayor of the city of Canton for one term. He was a member of the School Board twelve years and a member of the Library Board for eight years. He is affiliated with the Grand Army of the Republic, and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. After fifty-nine years in the same community he finds himself firmly entrenched in the good will and regard of his fellowmen—a man of unquestioned personal honor and fine consideration for all with whom he is thrown in contact.

ARNETT, Cleanthus J., who is commonly regarded as one of the leading farmers of his vicinity, is located on Section 24, Lewistown

Township, Fulton County, Ill. The family with which he is connected is numbered among the pioneers who laid the foundations for the county's present prosperity. Mr. Arnett was born in Lewistown, Ill., February 14, 1857, a son of James H. and Elizabeth (Yurnel) Arnett, the former a native of Kentucky, and the latter born in Lewistown, Ill. Ten children were the offspring of their union, nine of whom are yet alive. The names of the entire family are as follows: Willie D., who is a resident of Britt, Iowa; Cleanthus J., to whom this record pertains; Rufus J., who is engaged in farming in Lewistown Township; Cyrus R., a resident of Lewistown, Ill.; Ida M., wife of Henry P. Bordner, of Lewistown; Murray N., a resident of Britt, Iowa; Mary, who is the wife of Greenbury Eveland, and resides in Nebraska City, Neb.; Alva, who is a railway employe; Dollie, who is with her parents; and Lizzie L., who died in infancy. The parents of Mr. Arnett settled in Fulton County at an early stage in its history. The place where the the present owner of this fine farm makes his home was then a dense mass of heavy timber growth, which it fell to the lot of the sturdy and persevering father to clear and make fit for human habitation. Nearly all of Fulton County was then a wild, barren waste. Amid such surroundings, Cleanthus J. Arnett was ushered into being, and his early boyhood was passed.

The subject of this sketch received his mental training in the primitive schools of that period, and made himself useful in working the home farm, and on this place, he has spent his subsequent life. He is the owner of eighty acres of choice land, comfortably and attractively improved, and kept under thorough culture. He is an enterprising and progressive farmer and the best of results attend his labors. Mr. Arnett is a member of a company which owns a remarkably fine lot of Belgian hares, which they have imported for speculative purposes.

On March 26, 1883, Mr. Arnett was united in marriage with Mary Harrison, a native of Fulton County, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Barton L. Harrison. Her father died in 1904, but her mother, who was a native of Kentucky, still resides in Liverpool Township. Mr. and Mrs. Arnett became the parents of six children, four of whom are living, two having died in infancy. Those surviving are: Edna E., Deani S., Ben H., born May 4, 1891, and Barton H., born February 19, 1897.

In politics Mr. Arnett upholds the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally he is affiliated with the M. W. A., and religiously adheres to the faith of the Nazarene Church. He is highly esteemed throughout the community.

ARNETT, RUFUS J., a prominent member of one of the leading pioneer families of Fulton County, Ill., who is successfully engaged in farming in Section 25, Lewistown Township, was born in that township November 22, 1861, the son of James H. and Elizabeth Arnett, natives of Fulton County. James H. Arnett and his wife were the parents of the following children: W. D., C. J., R. J., C. R., Ida M., M. E., M. W., Alva, Dollie and Lizzie. The father of this family was a man of sterling character and exercised a strong influence in the society of his day. He was one of the group of sturdy and persevering pioneers, who confronted the hardships and privations of the wilderness in Fulton County, and by almost herculean effort, beyond the realization of those of this generation, paved the way for the civilization and prosperity which their posterity beholds. The annals of the pioneer element of the Arnett family are elsewhere spread upon the pages of this volume.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the paternal farm and received his rudimentary training in the district schools of his neighborhood. In the intervals of his early schooling he made himself useful to his father in farming operations, and recalls with interest his experience when all the wheat was harvested with the cradle. His father was among the first to introduce the old McCormick reaper. Rufus J. Arnett well remembers the hard work required to clear and burn the thick brush in order to make the land ready for the plow. He now has a fine farm of 120 acres, in a high state of cultivation, and with substantial, comfortable and attractive improvements. He devotes considerable attention to raising grain and stock and is a thorough, painstaking and successful farmer.

On November 25, 1886, Mr. Arnett was united in marriage with Temperance Bordner, a daughter of Moses Bordner, an honored pioneer settler, a sketch of whose interesting career appears elsewhere in this volume. Four children resulted from this union, namely: Sylvia L., Esther E. and Madeline, who are with their parents, and Helen D. The mother of this family is a daughter of Moses Bordner's first wife.

In politics Mr. Arnett is a supporter of the Prohibition party, and implicitly believes in the suppression of the liquor traffic. Fraternally he is affiliated with M. W. A. He is a member of the Nazarene Church and is earnestly interested in church work and in the cause of education. He has been Superintendent of the Sunday school of his church and has served as President of the Liverpool Township Sunday School Association for the past two years.

ARUNDALE, John C., a well known and enterprising farmer on Section 1, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Cuba, Ill., December 5, 1876, a son of Thompson and Henrietta (Wright) Arundale, natives of Fulton County. The grandparents on the paternal side were of English birth. On coming to the United States they proceeded to Illinois and settled in Fulton County, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Thompson Arundale, the father of John C., was twice married.

By his first wife, whose maiden name was Henrietta Wright, of Cuba, Fulton County, he had a daughter, Teresa, who became the wife of Rev. H. H. McFall, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Biggsville, Ill., and one son, John C., to whom this biographical sketch relates. Their mother departed this life when the latter was but four months old. Thompson Arundale married as his second wife Emma M. Brown, a native of Cuba, Ill., and a daughter of Francis R. and Nancy (Laws) Brown, natives respectively of Kentucky and Virginia. This union resulted in one child, who died in infancy. Thompson Arundale died on March 11, 1880, and his widow was united in marriage with Eugene Churchill, who is engaged in farming in Buckheart Township, Fulton County.

After John C. Arundale was left an orphan he made his home with his step-grandfather, Francis R. Brown, until he reached the age of sixteen years, and later with his stepfather, Eugene Churchill. He was reared on a farm, receiving his early mental training in the district schools and the public schools of Bryant, Ill., subsequently becoming a pupil in the Gem City Business College at Quincy, Ill., from which he was graduated with the class of 1898. From this institution he received a certificate attesting his qualifications as a teacher. On returning home, however, he found himself disinclined to enter upon the work of teaching, and took charge of the farm on which he was reared. His farming operations have met with success, and he is regarded as a thorough, careful and progressive farmer. He raises stock of all kinds and of superior grades.

On January 1, 1901, Mr. Arundale was united in marriage with Bertha E. Barnett, a native of Fulton County and a daughter of Oliver Barnett, a well known and highly respected citizen, who carries on farming in Buckheart Township, Fulton County. Two children have resulted from this union, namely: Clarence L., born December 10, 1902, and Bernice, born September 24, 1904.

In politics Mr. Arundale is a supporter of the Republican party. He has been the efficient incumbent in the office of School Director for some time, and takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. of Canton, Fulton County. He and his estimable wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ASH, Lon M.—The public outing place, picturesquely named Owl's Nest Park, is owned and managed by Lon M. Ash, one of the well known and highly honored men of Canton, Ill. This park was purchased by Mr. Ash two years ago from the Divilbiss estate, and consists of sixty-eight acres of wooded land, admirably suited to the various purposes of rest and recreation for which it is intended. The owner, who has a keen appreciation of fine natural effects and inviting vistas, adheres steadily to a policy of improvement, with the result that the park conforms to every demand for neatness and beauty consistent with the character of its soil, flora and trees. The leafing of its beautiful trees in the spring and the songs of the early and courageous birds give promise of opportunities for communion with nature and healthful enjoyment which continues unabated until the winds of fall whistle through the skeleton branches and the ground is covered with its protecting carpet of leaves.

Mr. Ash gained his first impressions of life on a farm in Joshua Township, Fulton County, where he was born in 1862, a son of S. W. and M. J. (Gardner) Ash, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Fulton County. The senior Mr. Ash was an early arrival in Fulton County, and his competence was acquired in general farming and stock-raising. His son received a common school education and upon leaving the home which had sheltered him through the vicissitudes of youth engaged in farming on his own responsibility for ten years in Joshua Township. He moved into Canton about seven years ago, purchased his present delightful home, and also bought and remodeled the store on the corner of Chestnut and North Main streets. In 1901 he was united in marriage to Dolly Churchill, daughter of Leonard H. Churchill, and two children have been born of this union: Lon C. and Russell. Mr. Ash is social in temperament and is identified with the Masonic fraternity.

ATCHISON, Elias Benton.—Mr. Atchison is a son of a pioneer of the 'thirties, and as he was himself born in Union Township, Fulton County, he can claim a residence in it of more than half a century. He received his education in its district schools, was raised on the family estate, on which his father located in 1861, and has ever remained faithful to his native locality. It is such "stayers" as Elias B. Atchison who have assured Fulton County its substantial growth, and made it a section of almost ideal country homes.

The subject of this sketch was born on February 25, 1854, the son of Jacob B. and Hannah (Fickett) Atchison, both being natives of the Empire State. The father, who was a farmer and a carpenter, was born October 27, 1823, and the mother May 11, 1835. When he was twelve years of age Jacob B. Atchison came to Fulton County with his parents, who settled in Union Township, and there he remained until his death, on October 1, 1900. Elias B. Atchison has resided all his life in Union Township, either engaged in general farming or the raising of live stock. He is a Republican, a member of the United Brethren Church and a moral, well-to-do and valued citizen. He was married in Warren County, March 7, 1875, to Sarah Percy, of New Jersey, who was born January 29, 1854. They have one child, Bertha E.

ATHEY, George W.—Among the well known farmers of Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., whose industry, energy and good management have placed them in comfortable circumstances and gained for them a reputable standing among their townsmen, is George W. Athey, who is successfully pursuing his vocation in Section 26, of that township. He was born in Isabel Township, Fulton County, May 28, 1865, the son of Richard and Nancy (Wichell) Athey, natives of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Athey became the parents of seven children, as follows: Henry, a resident of Denver, Colo.; Almira, deceased; Etta, who is the widow of John Yocum; John, deceased; George W., to whom this record pertains; Eliza, who married James Houston; and Charles. The father and mother of this family are living on a farm in Lewistown Township.

The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm and has followed farming all his life. He received his early mental instruction in the district schools of his neighborhood, and as soon as he reached mature years, began work for himself. He is the owner of eighty acres of land, which constitute one of the most productive farms in the township, of equal extent. He moved to this place in 1901, and his labors have been attended with gratifying success. He devotes his attention to general farming.

On November 23, 1892, Mr. Athey was united in marriage with Miss Bertha M. Hommon, born April 12, 1873, a daughter of George and Catherine (Bradley) Hommon, natives of Pennsylvania. Her father died October 15, 1894, her mother having passed away March 21, 1889. They were the parents of the following children, besides Bertha M.: David and Samuel, deceased; Maryetta and Maggetta, twins, deceased; Edward, who was a member of the Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, and served in the Philippines; and Charles, who makes his home with his sister, Mrs. Athey. Edward returned home from the Philippines in April, 1902, and left again the following June, since which time he has not been heard from.

Three children resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Athey, namely: Fern A., born September 18, 1893; Ralph A., born October 5, 1895, and died March 1, 1900; and Ruth M., born April 10, 1907.

In politics Mr. Athey is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and has rendered creditable public service in the offices of Town Clerk and Tax Collector. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Court of Honor, and Mutual Protective League. Mrs. Athey belongs to the Court of Honor, Mutual Protective League and the Pythian Sisters, of Lewistown, Fulton County. Both Mr. and Mrs. Athey are members of the Presbyterian Church, and are highly esteemed throughout the community.

ATKINSON, Thomas F.—The monotony which often ensues from the continuous following of a certain line of work has never been a feature of the career of Thomas F. Atkinson. Gifted with mechanical ingenuity beyond the average, this well known contractor of Cuba has, at different times, followed the occupation of a miner, wagon-maker, carpenter and builder, brick mason and plasterer. In the capacity either of contractor or tender he has been connected with the erection of a large number of the brick and frame buildings in his adopted town, also having charge of the plastering of most of those erected by him. After being employed for three years in a tobacco factory he came to Cuba in 1869, and continuously during every winter since then—a period of thirty-eight years—has worked in the coal mines near the town. He learned the wagon-maker's trade about thirty years ago, and thereafter followed the carpenter business until taking up the trade of brick mason and plasterer. There doubtless are few men who have worked in the coal mines for such a number of years, or who have done so much in trade lines in a given length of time and in the same community.

Mr. Atkinson spent the first years of his life in Sheridan, Lucas County, Iowa, where he was born in 1858. His parents were Lewis and Angelina (MacNew) Atkinson, natives of Indiana and Missouri respectively. He was educated in the common schools and his wage-earning career began at the age of twelve years, when he began work in the coal mines near Cuba. His father, who previously had worked at Farmington, also found employment in the mines. In 1879 Mr. Atkinson married Alice Winship, who was born near Colchester, Ill., and to whom have been born six children: William, aged twenty-seven years; Clara A., aged twenty-four, wife of Cyrus Bishop; James Lewis, aged eighteen; Ethel Judith, aged sixteen; Georgia H., died aged seven years, and Vanessa, aged nine years. Mr. Atkinson is somewhat of a politician, and is sufficiently liberal in his tendencies to vote for the man on his merits, rather than for his party. For the past five years he has been one of the town fathers, ably assisting the Board by his enlightened ideas of municipal affairs. He is fraternally prominent, being a member of the Knights of Pythias. As aids to his business he is a member of the Brick Masons' and Plasterers' Union. Mr. Atkinson has always adhered to the principle that work worth doing at all was worth doing well, and in consequence he has a reputation as a careful, skillful and reliable workman. He is esteemed also for his integrity and moral worth, and for his consideration and fairness as an employer of labor.

ATWOOD, Myron C., a well-known resident of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., and Superintendent of the Fulton County Narrow Gauge Railway, was born in Kane County, Ill., August 24, 1863, a son of Comfort B. and Cynthia

(Bennett) Atwood, whose union resulted in two children: Julia and the subject of this sketch. Julia now resides with her parents at Montgomery, Ill. Comfort B. Atwood was a farmer by occupation, and thus the boyhood days of Myron C. were spent upon the farm. Here he assisted his father in the work and availed himself of the advantages of the district schools. In the year 1881 he secured employment in the office of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy Railway Company at Aurora, where he learned telegraphy, and worked as operator in that office until 1883. He was then sent to Earlville, Ill., where he held the position of operator and station agent until 1887, when he was promoted to be commercial agent of the company at Aurora. After serving in this capacity for six years he was appointed Superintendent of the Fulton County Narrow Gauge Railway, and became a resident of Lewistown.

During the twenty-four years which Mr. Atwood has devoted to railroading he has, by close application to his work, become a very efficient railroad man. His experience often furnished a severe test of his temper, as he early came in contact with all sorts of men and women, and it requires a great deal of patience and self-restraint to get on smoothly with idiosyncracies of the traveling public. That the subject of this sketch possesses the traits of character essential to the proper discharge of such duties is manifest from the positions of responsibility which he has creditably filled in this long period of railroad service. Since Mr. Atwood assumed charge of the line under his supervision the roadbed and bridges have been placed in fine condition. He thoroughly understands the railroad business, having made it a life study, and has left nothing undone to put the tracks and rolling stock in prime order. This the company and its patrons fully appreciate, and the utmost confidence is felt in his ability and fidelity.

On June 1, 1886, Mr. Atwood was married to Mabel Wiley, of Earlville, Ill., a daughter of Samuel C. Wiley, a native of Maine. Three children have resulted from this union, namely: Paul W., born February 24, 1887, who is a student in the University of Illinois; Harold, born August 12, 1889, and Ruth, born March 11, 1898.

In deportment Mr. Atwood is unassuming, affable and courteous. In his general views he is broad and liberal, and is always ready to help in promoting any measure intended for the public welfare. In his integrity and high moral character his fellow citizens repose implicit confidence. Politically the subject of this sketch is a Democrat and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. He and his wife attend divine worship in the Universalist Church of Lewistown.

BABBITT, James I., whose residence in Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., covers a period of more than three-score and ten years, and who is the sole surviving native citizen among those who lived in the township at the time of his birth, was born there May 20, 1836. Stephen Babbitt, his father, was a native of Pennsylvania, born in Washington County, that State, February 16, 1806, and his mother, Malinda (Harrod) Babbitt, was born April 29, 1811, in Bourbon County, Ky. Stephen Babbitt followed farming during his whole life. He was one of the earliest pioneer settlers of Fulton County, where he located in 1830, and purchased the land on which his son, James I., still makes his home. He died November 5, 1864, his wife dying August 13, 1889. They were the parents of the following named children: Elizabeth, Job, Nancy, William, James I., Israel, Sarah, Malinda, Isaac H., Hugh and Stephen (twins), Jephtha and Hulda (twins), and Sanford M.

James I. Babbitt received a common school education such as farmers' sons usually obtained in the primitive subscription schools of that period, meanwhile helping his father on the farm until he reached the stage of manhood. Since then he has devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits. During the War for the Union he rendered creditable service in Company G, Fiftieth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry (the "Blind Half Regiment"), in which he enlisted September 24, 1861, and served until February 16, 1863, when he was mustered out. His marriage took place at Monmouth, Warren County, Ill., October 27, 1859, with Harriet Adeline Davis, a daughter of Noah and Nancy Davis, natives of Virginia and Kentucky. Mrs. Babbitt was born in Union Township, Fulton County, on January 3, 1839. Six children were the offspring of this union, viz: G. Marion, J. Grant, William Sherman, Guy H., Morton J. and Nannie Myrtle. A sketch of the life of William Sherman Babbitt may be found elsewhere in these pages. The five boys, who were the oldest members of this family, were all born on Sunday.

In politics the Republican party has always received the steadfast support of Mr. Babbitt, and he has been active and influential in the local councils of that organization. He served as Road Commissioner of the township twelve years, and for fourteen years acted in the capacity of School Director. His religious connection is with the Christian Church. Fraternally he is prominently identified with the Grand Army of the Republic. His life is coincident with the growth of Fulton County almost from its beginning, and his recollection includes a thousand details in the wonderful transformation attending this progress from crude conditions to the prosperity and refinement of the present day. He is conscious of having done his full share in promoting the welfare of his township and county, and the many who know him freely attest his upright character, diligence and well doing and serviceable public spirit.

BABBITT, Jonathan J. (deceased).—The subject of this sketch was a veteran of the Civil War, a well known farmer and stock-raiser and a citizen honored for the conscientious discharge of his duties in whatever walk of life he pursued. His death, therefore, on the 21st of December, 1905, was sincerely and generally mourned. Jonathan J. Babbitt was born in Union Township, Fulton County, November 21, 1837, the son of James Babbitt, born in Washington County, Pa., in 1813, and Mary (Randall) Babbitt, a native of New York, born in 1820. The father was an extensive land owner, and a pioneer and prosperous farmer of the township. The subject of this sketch spent his earlier years on the home farm, assisting in its management during his later life and obtaining a fair education in the district schools. He was engaged in agricultural work until the last year of the Civil War, when, under President Lincoln's last call for troops in that contest, he enlisted on March 21, 1865, in Company H, Twenty-third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged July 24th following. The voting period of Mr. Babbitt's life was almost contemporary with the birth of the Republican party, of which he was ever a firm and intelligent member, his society associations being naturally with the Grand Army of the Republic.

Jonathan J. Babbitt was married in Knox County, Ill., to Rebecca Martz, a native of Virginia, born in that State on the 4th of September, 1843. Eight children were born of their union, namely: Minnie D., Lula, Flora, who died September 25, 1887; Emma, Lydia, Fanny, James and John. The surviving widow, who is now numbered among the honored mothers of the county, was a little over twenty years of age at the time of her marriage, December 30, 1863. Her husband's death occurred within a few days of their forty-second anniversary. The deceased was a member of the Christian Church and truly a Christian in the highest sense of the word.

BABBITT, Stephen J., a prominent citizen of Fulton County, veteran of the Civil War and one of the large land owners and raisers of live stock in that county, is a native of Union Township, in which he was born August 17, 1844, and where he has always resided. He is the son of Stephen and Malinda (Harrod) Babbitt, his father having been a farmer of Washington County, Pa., born January 3, 1806, and his mother a native of Burton County, Ky., born April 29, 1811. Stephen Babbitt migrated to Illinois in 1830, locating at once in Union Township, Fulton County, where he bought a farm and where he lived for many years as one of the fathers of that section of the county.

The district schools of Union Township and the family farm of that township supplied Stephen J. Babbitt with his education and the practical training for his after life of agricultural pursuits and successes. He was one of the strong and plucky youths which the farms of the West sent forth to the battlefields of the Civil War, and who proved the main reliance of Grant and Sherman and Thomas in the fierce campaigns of the Southwest. On account of his youth he did not enlist until January 5, 1864, when he joined Company I, Seventy-second Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, known popularly as the First Board of Trade Regiment. He was afterward transferred to Company G, Thirty-third Regiment, and was honorably discharged on the 24th of November, 1865. During his services of nearly two years the young man participated in the engagements at Columbia, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville—all in Tennessee—and the siege and capture of Spanish Fort and Mobile, besides numerous skirmishes and nerve-wearing marches. As a member of the Grand Army of the Republic Mr. Babbitt takes a soldier's pride in recounting the achievements of his regiments and the brave officers and men with whom he was associated, a member of which body he himself was enrolled. Politically he has always stood unflinchingly by the Republican guns. For many years Mr. Babbitt has been a recognized leader in local politics. He has served as School Director for twelve years and was Assessor three years and has recently been elected a member of the County Board. Whatever office he has filled he has discharged its duties faithfully, fairly, fearlessly and ably.

On the 27th of October, 1870, Mr. Babbitt was married to Leona A. Thomas, at Galesburg. His wife was born in Union Township, Fulton County, October 27, 1851. The three children born of their union are Lewis H., Neva L. and Edith L.

BABBITT, Wilford, the proprietor of the Sunnyside Farm and a farmer and citizen of substantial standing, still in the prime of a useful life, is a native of Union Township, Fulton County, where his position of honor has been earned by years of labor and intelligently directed industry. The subject of this sketch was born February 22, 1856, the son of James and Mary (Randall) Babbitt, the father born in Washington County, Pa., in the year 1815, and the mother, in the State of New York, in 1820. The elder Babbitt, who was a farmer, came to Union Township at an early day, and became one of the land owners of that section of the county.

Wilford Babbitt, who spent his childhood with his parents on the family homestead in Union Township, where he has always resided, was educated in its district schools, and mastered his lifelong vocation by years of unremitting labor and experience. The enviable result is seen in his success as a general farmer and stock-raiser, Sunnyside Farm being considered one of the model estates of the county. As his own affairs were so fortunately and intelligently managed, his fellow citizens have, at various times, called upon him to give attention to public affairs, with the result that five years' service have been given as Road Commissioner and seven years as School Director, in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. Babbitt was married, in Union Township, on November 14, 1880, to Hattie Heston, who was born in Warren County, Ill., in April, 1860, and their marriage has resulted in three children: Viola, Nina B., and Mildred Irene. Mr. Babbitt is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Christian Church.

BABBITT, William Sherman, a well-known and prosperous farmer and stock-raiser of Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township, August 28, 1864, a son of James I. and Harriet Adeline (Davis) Babbitt, both natives of Union Township, where the father was born May 20, 1836, and the mother January 3, 1839. A sketch of the life of the former appears on another page of this work. He is still living on the homestead purchased by his father, Stephen Babbitt, in 1830, and is the oldest citizen, still surviving, who was born in that township. Six children resulted from the union of James I. and Harriet A. (Davis) Babbitt, to-wit: G. Marion, J. Grant, William Sherman, Guy H., Morton J. and Nannie Myrtle.

William Sherman Babbitt received a good common school education in the district schools of Union Township, and spent his youthful years at home with his parents. On reaching maturity he engaged in farming and stock-raising on Sections 6 and 7, Union Township, where he has since continued with successful results. His farm consists of 110 acres, and, in addition to general farming operations, he feeds and ships a considerable amount of stock. He is an intelligent, systematic and progressive farmer, and has made an excellent record as a worthy representative of the best agricultural element of Fulton County.

On September 16, 1891, at Galesburg, Knox County, Ill., Mr. Babbitt was united in marriage with Lavina Belle Babbitt. Mrs. Babbitt was born in Knox County May 27, 1865, a daughter of Isaac and Nancy (Cox) Babbitt, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and Illinois.

In politics Mr. Babbitt is an unswerving supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Religiously he is a member of the Christian Church and takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs, and creditably fulfills his obligations as a member of the community.

BABCOCK, Amos C.—(See page 30.)

BADER, Benjamin F., of the firm of Bader & Company, successful grain dealers of Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Preble County, Ohio, November 20, 1838. He is a son of Jeremiah and Sarah (Thompson) Bader, natives of Germany and the State of Pennsylvania respectively. Jeremiah came alone to the United States when he was about eighteen years old, taking passage thus hurriedly in order to avoid the required service in the German army. He located in Pennsylvania, where he was shortly afterward married, and subsequently moved to Ohio. In 1846 he journeyed to Schuyler County,

JAMES FOUTCH

Ill., and located near the village of Bader, named in honor of his son, William, who was largely instrumental in locating the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company near that place. Jeremiah Bader entered 240 acres of Government land in the vicinity of the town, on which he was engaged in farming until 1855, when he moved to Astoria, Ill., and there died in October, 1856, at the age of fifty-seven years. He was born in 1799 and came to this country in 1817. His widow passed away on the old home farm, September 1, 1886. Twelve children were the result of their union, as follows: Pierson, who died in infancy; Elizabeth, deceased, who married Philip Murry, also deceased; Mary, who died in Astoria, Ill., and was the wife of Lemuel J. Hopkins, who died in Brown-ing, Ill.; William, a resident of Oklahoma City, Okla.; Sarah, widow of Elias Gibbs and a resident of Fresno, Cal.; Rosanna, widow of John J. Bleeker, of Pasadena, Cal., who resides with her son, Dr. J. J. Bleeker; Margaret, who first married Courtland Doane, deceased, by whom she had one child, Laura, who became the wife of Eli Dixon, a banker, of Littleton, Ill.; John L., of Le Roy, Kan.; Benjamin F., Addie L., whose first husband was Martin Cook, deceased, and who is now the wife of George W. Hughes, of Astoria, Ill., and Henry O., who spent many years on the old home farm, but sold his interest and is now operating a grain elevator in Littleton, Schuyler County.

Benjamin F. Bader was about nine years old when his father brought him to Schuyler County, Ill., and was reared on the paternal farm, receiving his early education in the district schools of the vicinity. He remained at home until he was eighteen years old and then spent a year in Ohio. On returning home he went to work on the farm of his brother, William, by whom he was employed by the month for some years, after which he farmed jointly with the latter until he was about twenty-six years old. He then purchased and operated a threshing outfit, and has since worn out two or three such equipments. In 1900 Mr. Bader established himself in the grain trade in Vermont, and bought the Sutherland elevator. The firm of Bader & Company has elevators at Rushville, Littleton, Astoria and Vermont, Ill., and they also deal in hard and soft coal at Vermont and Astoria. They operate two steam hay-balers and turn out two carloads of hay per day through their four elevators. Each has a capacity of 15,000 bushels of grain per day, and the firm handles about 400,000 bushels per year. Mr. Bader's sons are associated with him in this enterprise, and constitute the "company."

On December 15, 1864, Mr. Bader was united in marriage with Azuba Ann Farr, a daughter of Cooper and Ada (Linn) Farr. Her father originally journeyed from Pennsylvania to Columbus, Ohio, whence he moved to Fulton County, Ill., clearing a fine farm in Astoria Township, of which he was one of the pioneer settlers. Her parents are both deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Bader became the parents of eight children, three of whom died in infancy and one, Lora Ada, died at the age of four years. Those surviving are as follows: Vira B., wife of W. S. Long, of Rushville, Ill., connected with the firm of Bader & Company; Fred G., who manages the Astoria elevator; William F., who conducts the Vermont elevator, and Ernest G., of Vermont, Ill., who operates the hay department of Bader & Company, attending to the buying in bulk.

In politics Mr. Bader is independent, voting for the men and measures which he thinks most conducive to the interests of all the people. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. He ranks as one of the most enterprising and substantial merchants, and one of the best representative citizens of Fulton County. His worthy and estimable wife is a member of the Christian Church.

BAILEY, John (deceased).—Canton counts among her role of departed benefactors none who left behind more numerous and substantial evidences of association with its affairs than John Bailey. As a builder, politician, musician, fraternalist and public-spirited citizen he came and went among the people of his town from the time of his arrival in 1844 until the close of his life, November 10, 1903, and there remains in his wake an impression of practical usefulness, of genuine dependable character, due in part to his English ancestry, but more directly traceable to his untiring zeal and ready recognition of opportunity.

The first nine years of Mr. Bailey's life were spent in Leicestershire, England, where he was born August 17, 1821. His father, William Bailey, then brought the family to America in a sailing vessel, locating in Orange County, N. J., where he plied his trade of carpenter and joiner for the balance of his active life. His death occurred at an advanced age. Young John lost his mother at an early age, and he was set to work in his father's shop, where he became an expert in the use of carpenter's tools. When not working at his trade he attended the public schools of New York and New Jersey, and when he arrived in Canton in 1844 he was equipped with the essentials of success in his chosen occupation. From an humble beginning he advanced until he became the town's chief builder and contractor, and, with the exception of three buildings on the west side of the square, the solid stretch of structures was erected by him.

On December 29, 1844, Mr. Bailey was united in marriage to Elizabeth Wells King, who was born in Cleveland, Ohio, a daughter of William and Mary (Brown) King, the former of whom was born in Massachusetts. To Mr. and Mrs. Bailey were born six children, three of whom are deceased, namely: William, who died at the age of eight years; Eliza Ann, wife of A. D. Troxell, and Clarissa L. Those living are: Mary, wife of Lewis Thompson, of Canton, who has two children, Fred B. and Clara E.; Lizzie J., wife of Thomas T. Lyons, of Alameda, Cal., who has two children, Theron and Marie, and John G. Bailey, who married Emma Weinold, lives in Canton and has a daughter, Emma.

Mr. Bailey was a natural and enthusiastic musician, and in his younger days did much to promote an appreciation of good music in Canton. He was one of the organizers of the Canton Silver Cornet Band, the original of the present P. and O. Fifth Regiment Band, and it was as a trombone player in the latter organization that he cheered the hearts of the charging soldiers in the Civil War. He also had a sweet and sympathetic singing voice, and was wont to contribute to the success of many local entertainments in this capacity. After the war he engaged in the grocery business in Canton for about three years, but, failing to realize anticipated satisfaction, returned to his former occupation of contracting and building. In all parts of the city and surrounding country are buildings due to his skill and ingenuity, more especially the better class of public and private structures, and many of them, after the changes of more than half a century, are still in a perfect state of preservation. Mr. Bailey was in the contracting business for twenty-three years, and retired from active life at about sixty years of age. He lived in the same house for forty years, and among its surroundings of comfort and good cheer his last days were spent.

Eminently social in his tendencies, Mr. Bailey was a member of many organizations, and was among the oldest of the Canton lodge of Independent Order of Odd Fellows. From his earliest youth he was a zealous supporter of Republican principles, and did much to further the local interests of his party. At one time he was President of the City Board of Health, was an Alderman several terms and Chief of the Canton Fire Department two years. He was a man of liberal and practical ideas, a promoter of education, good government, religion and high living, and a devout and helpful member of the Baptist Church. To know him was to have one's confidence in human nature strengthened, and one's faith in the homely, straightforward virtues which tend to public confidence fortified.

BAILY, Evan B.—An instance of the call of the country rising above the din of the city and the more rapid compensations of one of the learned professions is found in the return to nature of Dr. Evan B. Baily, owner of a 240-acre tract on Section 13, Bernadotte Township. Dr. Baily comes of farming stock, and his first years were spent among agricultural surroundings in Eldorado Township, McDonough County, Ill., where he was born March 9, 1865. On the paternal side he is of German ancestry, a son of Thomas and grandson of Evan Baily, the latter of whom came from Ohio to Vermont Township, Fulton County, at a very early day, where his son Thomas was born, reared and finally married Nancy Battenburg. After his marriage Thomas Baily removed to McDonough County, Ill., where his wife died in 1892, and whence he removed to Table Grove, Fulton County, his present home.

The educational advantages of Dr. Baily consisted of the district schools and the high school at Macomb, and after graduating from the latter he returned to the home farm, where he remained until attaining his majority. In 1889 he entered the office of R. W. Baily, a dental practitioner of Macomb, and the following year took a course at the Chicago College of Dental Surgery, graduating therefrom in the class of 1890. In the meantime the elder Dr. Baily had opened an office in Omaha, Neb., and with him Dr. Evan B. practiced during his vacation, in the fall locating in Vermont, Ill., where he practiced dentistry for five years. He next located in Fairfield, Wayne County, Ill., where he maintained and added to his former success, but in 1903, selling out his business, removed with his family to Chicago. Two years later (1905) he came to his present farm, and now is engaged in stock-raising, having on hand a large number of cattle, horses, hogs and sheep.

September 17, 1891, Mr. Baily married Lizzie A. Branson, who was born at Ipava, Fulton County, November 22, 1868, a daughter of William T. Branson, one of the honored pioneers of Fulton County, of whom mention may be found elsewhere in this work. Dr. and Mrs. Baily have two children, of whom Anna Maurine was born in Vermont Township, July 25, 1892, and Evan B. in Fairfield, Wayne County, September 2, 1900. Dr. Baily is a Republican in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Royal Neighbors. With his wife he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Ipava. The Doctor has made a success of both dentistry and farming, and in either occupation would be sure of an excellent livelihood. He is a man of broad outlook, progressive mind and large capacity for painstaking industry.

BAKER, Joseph, one of the oldest, worthiest and most highly honored residents of Fulton County, Ill., and for forty-five years located on Section 33, Buckheart Township, this county, was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, September 15, 1813. He is a son of Jacob Baker, a native of Germany, who, together with a sister, came to the United States in boyhood, after the death of his parents, in company with a friend named Schmidt.

Joseph Baker went with his father to Clark County, Ind., in 1821, and there the father died. They had nine children, of whom Joseph is the sole survivor. Of the others Katie married Alexander Montgomery and left a family, most of whom are dead. Mary was the wife of Caleb

MRS. JAMES FOUTCH

Phillips, who moved to Kansas, where both spent the remainder of their lives. Susan was drowned in the Ohio River. Hannah was the wife of George DeWitt, and died in Washington County, Ind. Henry, the eldest of the sons, died in Clark County, Ind., leaving two daughters and three sons. Frederick died in Missouri, leaving a son and a daughter named Annie. Charles died in Hamilton County, Ohio, leaving three or four children. John died near the Winnebago Swamp, in Illinois.

Joseph Baker arrived in Fulton County October 12, 1835. His first work consisted in making shingles—sawing the logs and splitting them in the old-fashioned way—and for this work he received thirteen dollars per month. When he arrived in Fulton County his supply of cash was two dollars and fifty cents. He located in Canton and there followed the carpenter's trade until 1842. About 1835 the village had been swept away by a storm, devastating the entire vicinity and creating a demand for carpenters, and during the year 1837 he built twenty-six houses in Canton.

In 1843 Mr. Baker abandoned carpentry, leased a tract of land near Canton and began clearing it, his lease extending five years. There he toiled until 1848. At that period he bought and operated the first horse-power threshing machine that had been operated in Fulton County, and for eight years he followed this occupation. In 1857 he purchased eighty acres of heavily timbered land, which he cleared and cultivated, and about 1859 he bought another tract of eighty acres of wild land, about three acres of which had been cleared. On this he again began to cut the large and small oaks and grub the stumps from the ground. As he now looks over the scene he often wonders how the pioneer settlers endured the tasks before them. Not a stump can now be found where then hardly a bare spot could be seen. That such a transformation could be accomplished during the span of a human lifetime seems to him almost incredible. Wild turkeys could then be shot from the woodpile near the door, and deer could be killed from the doorstep of the log cabin. But few of the Indians lingered after the Black Hawk War, and they soon abandoned this part of the country.

Mr. Baker has not only been a witness of the prodigious changes which have taken place in the county since 1835, but has been an active factor in producing them. He has not only cleared much of the land in the township of its native timber, but is the builder of many of the best houses in the city of Canton, as well as the structures on his farms. He has always taken a prominent part in all public enterprises, and church and school have ever found in him a strong friend and advocate.

In October, 1861, Mr. Baker was united in marriage with Nancy Bauman, a daughter of Eli Bauman, who located in Fulton County in 1842, subsequently sold his interests there and moved to Iowa, where he died at the age of ninety-seven years. In 1861 Mr. and Mrs. Baker moved to their home on Section 33, Buckheart Township, which has since been his residence. Mrs. Baker passed to her final rest in 1872.

Politically Mr. Baker was originally a Whig and cast his first presidential vote for General Harrison. He has been a staunch adherent of the Republican party since its organization. He has filled various township offices with ability and fidelity, and did the work in making the second assessment in Buckheart Township for six dollars. For seventy years he has lived among the people of that township and no man is more honored by the whole community than "Uncle Joe Baker," as he is familiarly known to all.

BALLARD, Thomas W., a well known and enterprising farmer on Section 26, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, was born where he now lives, March 1, 1858, a son of Linville and Lavina (Bauman) Ballard, natives of Kentucky, where the former was born, near Winchester, Clark County, in January, 1819. He married Lavina Bauman, a daughter of Peter Bauman, in 1853. The paternal grandparents were John and Nancy (Bybee) Ballard, natives of Virginia.

Linville Ballard located in Liverpool, Ill., December 11, 1852, where he conducted what was called a tavern, and there, also, was married to Lavina Bauman. In 1853, he made his first purchase of land—a sixty-acre tract—in Section 26, Buckheart Township. The old home was one of the primitive log cabins, and the land was partially improved. To the original purchase Mr. Ballard added from time to time, until, at the time of his death, after disposing of some of his landed possessions, he was still the owner of 400 acres in Buckheart Township. He was a wide-awake and thrifty farmer, and was always ready for a trade. He was an extensive breeder of hogs and cattle, and often had, at one time, 400 head of hogs on the farm, and from fifty to sixty head of cattle. He was a shrewd and successful stock-dealer in this line, being among the best in his day and locality. He was always ready to defend his friends, even to the extent of using force, and was trusted and respected by all. In politics he was a strong Democrat, but never aspired to public office. To Linville Ballard and his wife were born seven children, as follows: Amdra, wife of George W. Elliott, of Canton, Ill.; Mary, deceased wife of Lewis D. Ashton, of California; Thomas W.; Josie, deceased wife of Willard Fisher, of Canton, Ill.; Leroy C., a farmer in Banner Township, Fulton County; Florence, a resident of Canton, Ill., who married Elmer Weller, deceased; and Harry, who died in infancy.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the paternal farm, and received his mental training in the district schools in his vicinity. He remained under the parental roof until he reached the age of twenty-one years, when he rented a portion of the homestead property for one year. He then rented the old Bauman farm, near Lewistown, and in 1881, purchased the farm which has since been his home. He has a fine residence, and is one of the leading farmers of his locality.

In 1879, Mr. Ballard was united in marriage with Nettie T. Goodrich, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Goodrich. She was born in New Hampshire, and accompanied her parents to Fulton County. One child resulted from this union, who died in infancy, the mother also passing away. On March 31, 1898, Mr. Ballard was wedded to Eva Cox, a native of Canton, Ill., and a daughter of William and Mary (Batty) Cox, of English birth. William Cox came to the United States with his father, Thomas Cox, at the age of twelve years, proceeding direct to Canton. Mary Batty, on arriving in this country, located in New Jersey, where in course of time, her marriage took place, after which she accompanied her husband to Fulton County. William Cox was born in 1831, and arrived in Canton in 1843. Mr. Cox being now deceased, his widow, at the age of sixty-three years, makes her home in Canton; They became the parents of fifteen children, six of whom died in infancy. Those surviving are: Mark C., of North Dakota; William, of Canton, Ill.; Eva (Mrs. Ballard); Thomas B., of North Dakota; George, of Monmouth, Ill.; Clara, of Canton, Ill.; Charles, of North Dakota; Mary A. and Joshua. In politics Mr. Ballard is a Democrat, and Mrs. Ballard is a member of the Christian Church.

BARBER, Edward Stuart (deceased), who was for many years successfully engaged in the livery, hotel and stock business, in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Warren County, eighteen miles from Newton, N. J., June 24, 1831, and received his early education partly in the place of his birth and partly in the town of his adoption. Samuel Barber, his father, was one of seven brothers who came to America from England, settling in Warren County, N. J., where he lived until his death.

The subject of this sketch came to Canton, Ill., in 1849, with a family named Rose. A year or two later he went to Peoria, Ill., where he lived about six years. Returning to Canton, he took charge of a livery stable on White Court. A few years afterward (in 1860 or 1861), he formed a partnership with the late Morrell Higbie and, under the firm name of Barber & Higbie, conducted a hotel and operated a livery barn in Canton, dealing also in stock on an extensive scale. The public house under the management of this firm was the old Mississippi Hotel, occupying the site of the present Churchill House, and the livery barn is the same which was under Mr. Barber's management up to the time of his death, the firm having been dissolved in 1881. Through his industry, sobriety, sagacity and diligent application to business, Mr. Barber acquired a handsome competence. He was the owner of considerable real estate in Canton, and possessed a large amount of farming property.

On October 3, 1871, Mr. Barber was united in marriage with Margaret Craig, a daughter of the late Madison Craig, who survives her husband. Of two brothers who survived Edward S. Barber, George, who was a resident of Madison, Wis., died recently, and Eli, of Newton, is still living.

In politics Mr. Barber was a Democrat, and served as Alderman two terms. His decease occurred May 12, 1899. He was one of the most energetic and thoroughly reliable of men, and a public-spirited, popular and useful citizen.

BARLOW, John William.—One of the largest landowners in Fulton County and among the most prosperous raisers of blooded live stock, John W. Barlow is an imposing figure in the agricultural life of this section of the State. His parents, Samuel and Margaret (Kenton) Barlow, were both natives of Nicholas County, Ky., where he also was born on July 2, 1845. While prospecting for a good agricultural country in which to locate, the father came to Fulton County, in 1855, and, after remaining here a short time, went to the adjoining county of Warren, but soon afterwards returned to Fulton County, where he bought a farm which he improved and cultivated for the balance of his life.

John W. Barlow was ten years of age when his father located permanently in Fulton County, and he has been a continuous resident of Union Township since 1871, for a period of over thirty-five years. He has added to his holdings with persistency and judgment until he is now the proprietor of 1,640 acres of fine stock land, devoting his attention to the breeding of Shorthorn and Angus cattle and to Poland-China hogs. Mr. Barlow is a man of unusual executive power, or he never would have been able to manage his large live-stock interests and, at the same time, accomplish much valuable work in connection with the township system of education. For twelve years he has served as School Director, and his duties have been performed with ability and dispatch. In his political affiliations he is a Democrat.

Mr. Barlow was married, in Union Township, May 10, 1871, to Dora Quincy Hovell, a native of Union Township, born May 1, 1850, and they have had two children: Turner and Jennie. Mr. Barlow is a faithful member of the Christian Church.

BARNETT, Oliver.—Among the farmers of recognized moral and material worth whose labors have largely helped to develop the interests of Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., is Oliver Barnett, who was born in Huntingdon County, Pa., on the summit of Broad Top Mountain, December 29, 1844. He is a son of Joseph and Hannah (Cook) Barnett, his mother being a descendant of the Cooks that came to America with William Penn in 1692. The Cook homestead, containing 500 acres, is now known as Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, the site of the Centennial Exposition of 1876. The Cooks were of the old Quaker stock, Great-grandfather Anthony Cook being a descendant of Anthony Cook of the Penn colony and a soldier of the Revolutionary War. The old homestead in Fairmount Park was deeded to him and the family located on Broad Top Mountain about the close of the eighteenth century.

On the paternal side Great-grandfather Philip Barnett when a boy was abducted on the banks of the River Rhine, taken aboard a vessel and sold for his passage. A little girl who was with him was sold to the same man. On becoming of age these two were married, and a few years later made their home on Broad Top Mountain. Philip Barnett died in 1844 at the remarkable age of 101 years, and his wife passed away in 1843, having also reached the century mark. Their remains lie side by side on the summit of the mountain. Philip Barnett also served in the Revolutionary War, as did his son Philip, grandfather of Oliver, and the brothers, John, Jonathan, Joseph, David and Jacob. All were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, having joined it on the organization of that denomination in America, and with this sect all the successive generations of the family have been identified. In politics they have been Democrats down to the present generation, and from the time of William Penn they have been prominent men in their several localities.

Joseph Barnett, with this family, settled in Fulton County in 1866, locating in Section 30, Buckheart Township, where Oliver received his first schooling. In 1868 the latter went to Kansas, returning in the spring of 1869. In the spring of 1870 Joseph Barnett moved to Osage County, Kan., and in 1880 he retired from the farm and located in Topeka, that State, where his wife and one son (William) died, the former in 1885 and the latter in 1884. Both are buried in the cemetery at Topeka. In 1888 Joseph Barnett was again married, wedding Mrs. Mary E. Bush, of Denver, Colo., and moving to Santa Barbara County, Cal., where the father died in 1900, at the age of eighty years. His widow, who has passed eighty years, is now a resident of Denver.

Oliver Barnett is one of a family of four children, the others being William, deceased; Melinda, a resident of Springfield, Mo., and Clara, wife of William Dugan, who represents the New York Life Insurance Company in that city. Since his return from Kansas in 1887 Mr. Barnett has made his home on the old home farm in Buckheart Township. He has been identified with the best interests of the township since 1866. He has given his children a thorough mental training and fitted them for useful and honorable lives. He is a thorough, systematic and successful farmer, and is truly typical of the most worthy and substantial agricultural element in Fulton County.

On April 16, 1874, Mr. Barnett was united in marriage with Mary E. Ashton, eldest daughter of Edward and Rebecca (Connor) Ashton, pioneer settlers of Fulton County, to which they moved from Ohio in 1840. The Connor family were originally from Delaware, and were relatives of the well-known Peterson family, of Philadelphia. Seven children resulted from this union, two of whom died in infancy. The others are: Clara M., who is under the paternal roof; Edwin L., an electrician in Lynn, Mass.; Bertha E., wife of J. C. Arundale, a farmer of Lewistown Township, Fulton County; Corel, an electrician, and Clyde, the youngest, who died August 6, 1904. The mother of this family died in Topeka, Kan., October 12, 1887, and her remains repose in the cemetery at Bryant in Fulton County. On April 17, 1894, Mr. Barnett married again, wedding Mary S. Dunlap, of Buda, Ill.

In politics Mr. Barnett is a Democrat and has creditably filled several township offices. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., of Lewistown, and the M. W. A., of Bryant, having been Clerk of the Camp for fifteen years. The family are all members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mr. Barnett having taken a deep interest in its work since he was twenty years of age.

BARTHOLOMEW, Samuel.—Milling, engineering, carriage and wagon manufacturing, and the profession of arms, have constituted the experience and usefulness of Samuel Bartholomew, for almost half a century an integral part of the community of Table Grove, and since October, 1883, the owner and occupant of his present farm adjoining that place. Mr. Bartholomew was born December 3, 1838, in Columbus, Adams County, Ill., where his parents, Samuel and Susan (Hibbitts) Bartholomew, and his grandparents, Samuel Bartholomew, Sr., and wife, had settled in 1831. The grandfather Bartholomew was born in Covington, Ky., whence at an early age, he removed to the wilds of Indiana, where he married a Scotch lady, and engaged in milling and farming for several years. He also built and operated a mill in Columbus for a number of years, then sold out and built a mill four miles east of Quincy, on South Mill Creek, where his death occurred in 1856.

The second Samuel, father of the subject of this sketch, was identified with his father's milling business at Columbus and was also connected with the mill on Mill Creek, which he subsequently sold to a Mr. Phelps. He sustained a severe loss through the death of his wife in 1846, when five sons were left to his care, a daughter having died in infancy. Of these sons, Samuel, his namesake, is the fourth in order of birth. Henry Clay, the first born, is a resident of Litchfield, Ill.; James was a soldier in the Civil War; Arthnr is deceased; and John is a locomotive engineer on the Wabash Railroad—also served during the Rebellion. In 1848 Mr. Bartholomew married Mary Fetheringill, and of this union there were two daughters: Katie, wife of John Baker, and Helen, wife of George Baker, all of Adams County, Ill. In 1850 Mr. Bartholomew, with his brothers, John and Levi, and his brother-in-law, Tom Fetheringill, started across the plains with an ox-team, and on the way Mr. Bartholomew and his brother-in-law sickened and died. The sons, John and Levi, returned to Adams County in 1851, and the following year the four boys returned to Indiana and made their home with their maternal grandfather, Hibbits, locating again in Adams County in 1854.

The present Samuel Bartholomew learned the milling business under his uncle, the latter serving as miller and the former working his way up to engineer. Upon the death of the uncle in 1858, the lad, then twenty years old, came to Fulton County and began building and contracting in Table Grove, being thus employed up to the breaking out of the Civil War. In 1861 he enlisted in the Second Illinois Light Artillery, and during his two years of service participated in many battles, among them Forts Henry and Donelson. His military career was shortened by one month owing to illness resulting from exposure during the trail after Morgan in Kentucky, being honorably discharged at Columbus, Ky., and permitted to return home. After several months spent in recuperating, he started a carriage and wagon manufactory in Table Grove, which he operated continuously for twenty years. Disposing of his business in 1883, he engaged as engineer in a flouring mill in Girard, Kans., for a few months, but in October, 1883, returned to Table Grove and bought twenty-six acres of land to which he since has added 160 acres, making in all a tract of 186 acres. His property has many fine improvements, and nets its owner a comfortable income from general farming and stock-raising.

In 1862 Mr. Bartholomew was united in marriage to Mary Fordyce, of which union there have been born six children: Laura, who died at the age of fourteen; Alvah, an employe of the Government; Omar, a resident of Kamps-ville, Calhoun County, Ill.; Katie, who died at the age of twenty-two; Henry and Helen, twins, the latter the wife of Thomas Points, of Fulton County; and Ada, wife of Thomas Cowart, a brick manufacturer, of Table Grove. In political affiliations Mr. Bartholomew is a Republican, but he never has aspired to office of any kind. With his wife he is a faithful member of the Universalist Church, and donated the six lots comprising the church property upon which the present church edifice was erected in 1868. Whatever his occupation, or wherever his residence, Mr. Bartholomew has commanded the respect and good will of his associates, and it is his legacy of integrity, combined with useful labor and sound judgment that has been a valuable contribution to the upbuilding of Fulton County.

BARTLETT, H. M., who is successfully engaged in the grain business in Fulton County, Ill., was born in Knox County, Ill., in 1863, a son of William and Mary (Yocum) Bartlett, natives of Indiana. William Bartlett moved from Indiana to Knox County, Ill., where he was afterwards engaged in agricultural pursuits. In early youth the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the schools of Knox County. He was reared on the farm, and when he grew to maturity, applied himself to farming on his own account. In this occupation, together with raising stock, he continued until 1900, when he went to Smithfield, Ill., where he was engaged for three years in the grain and stock business. In 1893 he formed a partnership with Mr. Waughtel, and bought the business and elevator of Beam & Hilton, which they have since conducted, buying all kinds of grain, and buying and selling hogs and cattle. The elevator is situated on the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, and has a capacity of 5,000 bushels. Mr. Bartlett was a successful and energetic farmer, and he is a diligent and prosperous merchant.

In 1887, Mr. Bartlett was united in marriage with Ida J. Henderson, who was born in Fulton County. Seven children have resulted from this union, as follows: Eunice Roy, Nora, Daisy, Julia, Bryan, Cassidy, and an infant unnamed. Fraternally Mr. Bartlett is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America.

BARTON, John S., M. D., who is engaged in the successful practice of his profession in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Jacobs Port, or East Plainfield, Coshocton County, Ohio, on March 17, 1848, a son of Samuel B. and Rebecca (Smith) Barton, natives of New York and Ohio, respectively. He is one of a family of six children, four of whom are still living. Samuel B. Barton, the father, was a cabinet maker and a farmer by occupation.

In early manhood the subject of this sketch received his instruction in the public schools, and on reaching mature years taught school for a while. In 1872 he began practicing medicine at Vera, Fayette County, Ill., having studied with Dr. P. P. Coumitt, of Crawford County. He practiced also for a time at St. David, Fulton County. In 1878 he graduated in medicine and surgery from the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1892 he located in Cuba, where he has since been successfully engaged in practice.

On October 30, 1872, Dr. Barton was united in marriage with Maria A. Buckmaster, who was born in Fayette County, Ill., and their union resulted in nine children, of whom five are living, namely: Samuel B., of Jacksonville, Ill.; Crete; John, of Jacksonville; Macie and William. Politically Dr. Barton is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally is affiliated with the M. W. of A. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

BATH, J. H., who is favorably known in business connection as the proprietor of a well equipped and profitable cigar factory in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., and is noted throughout the county as an instrumental musician of exceptional skill, was born in South Wales, in 1858, a son of Jacob and Catherine (Phillips) Bath, also natives of that country. Jacob Bath, who was a coal miner by occupation, came to the United States in 1869 and settled in Canton, Ill., where he went to work in the mines, continuing in this employment until his death, which occurred in 1894. His widow is still living.

J. H. Bath accompanied his parents to Fulton County, and in boyhood worked three years in the mines at Canton, and still later in the Cuba mines. Subsequently, he spent four years on a farm. In 1893 he engaged in the cigar business at Washington, Iowa, and later, at Columbus Junction, in the same State, where he spent three years conducting a wholesale and retail cigar manufactory. In 1899 he returned to Cuba, Ill., where he established himself in the same line. He operates a wholesale and retail concern, and manufactures some brands of excellent quality. In 1904 he built a neat residence in the northern portion of the town. Mr. Bath is also the owner of other property in Cuba, and is interested in real-estate transactions, having laid out two sub-divisions of town land, called "Bath's First and Second Additions." While in Iowa he devoted considerable attention to instrumental music, and was a member of the Washington Military Band, and the Columbus Junction Band. In 1893, he joined the noted "Fifth Regiment Band," of Canton, and has been the organizer of whatever bands have been known in the town of Cuba.

In 1878 Mr. Bath was married, in Cuba, Ill., to Rachael Westmann, a native of that town, and a daughter of Perry and Margaret Westmann, who moved from Ohio to Fulton County, where her father engaged in farming. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bath: Ethel (Mrs. Buck) and Ruth.

Mr. Bath has served two years as a member of the Town Board of Cuba, and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., belonging to the K. T. Encampment. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F.; K. of P.; and T. P. A. He is looked upon as one of the enterprising, progressive and popular men of his locality.

BATTIN, George W.—The life of George W. Battin is an illustration of the possible control over early limitations and of the wise utilization of ordinary opportunities. His career has been identified with Fulton County for half a century, lacking only twenty years in McDonough. The substantial fortune which enables him to live in comfortable retirement in Table Grove was acquired through blacksmithing and farming, and his broadening experiences have included meritorious service in the Civil War. Born in Freeport, Harrison County, Ohio, December 11, 1835, Mr. Battin is fifth in order of birth of the eleven children of Thomas and Mary (Steel) Battin, natives of Ohio and born in Tuscarawas and Harrison Counties respectively. In very moderate circumstances the mother of this large family reared her children to noble ways of living, little dreaming, when rocking the cradle of her little ones, that five of them would go forth to battle for the defense of their country. Nathan, her oldest son, died in California; John, a resident of Westchester, Ohio, served during the Civil War in the Fifty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry and was a prisoner in the hands of the rebel forces for eleven months; Samuel and George were twins and the former enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Ohio and died at Nashville, Tenn., during his term of service; Basle, a resident of Woodbury County, Iowa, served in the Thirty-second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry; Martin, who lives in Martinsville, Ohio, was a teamster in an Ohio regiment during the war; Thomas died in childhood; Nancy, the widow of Adam Quillin, lives in Carrollton, Mo.; Harriet, wife of Andrew Hogue, lives in Westchester, Ohio; Mary died in infancy, and Rachel died at the age of about ten years.

About eight years old when his father died, George W. Battin thereafter was thrown among strangers, and for six years lived with Jefferson Quillin, who allowed him thirty-two days of schooling a year. At the age of eighteen he was adrift again and dependent upon whatever he could find to do, and when he arrived at nineteen years he had an opportunity to learn the blacksmith trade. Even then the prospects were not glowing, for he received but two dollars a month and board, and had to clothe himself during the first year, his allowance being raised one dollar per month for the second year. At the expiration of the second year he rented and took charge of an old blacksmith shop in Freeport, Ohio, and succeeded so well that on September 25, 1856, he was united in marriage to Sarah Ann Chicken, who was born in Freeport, June 10, 1837, a daughter of Daniel D. Chicken, who came to Fulton County in 1857 and eventually died in Ipava. The fall of his marriage Mr. Battin sold his Freeport shop and came to Ipava, Ill., where he found the man under whom he had served his apprenticeship, with whom he at once established a partnership which continued until his enlistment in the army, in which he served three years. After the war he built a shop on the corner of the square now occupied by Craither Brothers' store, and in 1877 rented a farm in Eldorado Township, upon which he lived five years. For the following twenty-five years he lived on a farm in New Salem Township, McDonough County, and on January 1, 1905, moved to Table Grove, where he has a comfortable home and beautiful surroundings.

The home of Mr. Battin in Ipava was made desolate by the death of his wife, February 27, 1861. There were three children of this union, of whom Ella is the deceased wife of Vernon Cadwallader, of California, and two died in infancy. Grief stricken at the loss which he was called upon to sustain, Mr. Battin sought forgetfulness in travel, and was present at the first Territorial election held in Colorado in 1861. The following year he returned to Ipava, and August 7, 1862, enlisted at Vermont in Company B, Eighty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years. He remained with his regiment until it reached the Kennesaw Mountains, when, owing to sickness, he was sent to the hospital at Chattanooga, and finally allowed to go home on a thirty-day furlough. At the end of that time he reported for duty at Nashville, was examined and transferred to the Veteran Relief Corps. After the last battle at Nashville he was sent to guard the prison at Indianapolis, and remained there until the close of the war. At the second election of Lincoln in 1864 the soldiers unfit for duty were allowed to return home to vote, being obliged to go to the Howard schoolhouse on Otter Creek to cast their ballot. Tronble was expected, as threats had been made that no soldier would be allowed to vote at that poll. However, a party was gotten up, including Dr. Ball, armed to the teeth, and upon arriving at the schoolhouse they found about twenty-five people assembled, carrying shotguns and looking fierce determination. Mr. Battin, in his full soldier uniform and with his ticket in his hand, walked fearlessly up to the judges and in a clear voice said: "Here is one for Old Abe." In the meantime the purpose of the opposition must have oozed away, for as he walked back to the carriage not a word was said.

September 6, 1866, Mr. Battin married Nancy P. Willis, daughter of George Willis, a Fulton County pioneer of 1850. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Battin: William, born July 17, 1867, and now a farmer near Bardolph, McDonough County, Ill.; Sally, born in Table Grove, now the wife of Henry A. Griffin, a hardware merchant of Table Grove; Lydia, wife of Alfred Chadderdon, a farmer of New Salem Township, McDonough County; Anna Daisy, wife of Grant Dougherty, of New Salem Township, and Axie, the deceased wife of Arthur Chadderdon, also deceased. September 11, 1905, Mr. Battin lost his second wife, who, like himself, had been a faithful member of the Universalist Church since 1868, at the time of its organization. Mr. Battin has been very active in this church, and for years has been a member of its Board of Trustees. He has been identified with the Masonic fraternity since 1864, and is a charter member of the Grand Army of the Republic at Table Grove. Since its organization in 1856 he has been a staunch supporter of the Republican party. Too much cannot be said of the honest and noble intentions with which Mr. Battin has invested all of his life interests, or of the faithfulness with which he has discharged all obligations imposed upon him. The consciousness that he has treated all men fairly and won their lasting regard is one of the chief compensations of his serene and comfortable retirement.
