BAYLOR, George T., a well known banker of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Phillipsburg, N. J., March 3, 1838, a son of Michael and Anna (Lelda) Baylor, both natives of New Jersey. Michael Baylor settled in Canton in 1846, where he carried on farming. In boyhood the subject of this sketch received his training in the common schools in Canton. When he reached mature years he began farming south of Canton. On August 25, 1861, he enlisted in Company K, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and served until December 5, 1862, when he was wounded at Coffeeville, Miss., being shot in the hip and thigh. This wound affected the sciatic nerve, and, as a consequence, he is lame. Three months later he was brought home, and on March 26, 1863, received an honorable discharge. After his recovery in 1866, he engaged in the mercantile business at Canton. This he followed there and in St. David, Ill., for nine years, when on March 24, 1874, his brother having failed in business at Cuba, he took the business off his hands and later conducted a store in connection with a Mr. Riley, in which he has continued successfully ever since. On July, 1902, Mr. Baylor was elected President of the Cuba State Bank, which previous to this had been a private institution. He bought his present residence in Cuba of Judge Gray, and owns besides 500 acres of land in the edge of town.

On October 9, 1873, Mr. Baylor was united in marriage with Mary J. Shryock, who was born in Fulton County. One child, Curtis E., has been born of this union. In politics Mr. Baylor is a supporter of the Republican party. In St. David he served as Township Collector, but declined nominations for other local offices which were tendered to him. Religiously Mr. Baylor is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, and is also a member of the G. A. R. He is a man of substantial business qualities and exceptional character, and is one of the most successful and prominent citizens of his locality.

BEADLES, Nathan, a successful dealer in dry goods, gents' furnishings, boots and shoes, etc., in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, June 21, 1865, a son of William L. and Hannah E. (Barnes) Beadles, natives respectively of Kentucky and Virginia. They were the parents of nine children, of whom those beside the subject of this sketch were: Mary, who became the wife of William Six and settled in Kirksville, Mo., where she died; John L., who died in Lewistown, Ill., leaving a family of thirteen children; Oscar L., who died in Butler County, Kan.; James M., who died in Kirksville, Mo.; Nancy P., deceased wife of Adam Kessler, of Nevada, Mo.; William E., who also died in Nevada, Mo.; Eva L., who died at the age of seven years, and Susan, wife of James Bruner, of Durango, Colo.

William L. Beadles came to Fulton County when but a lad in 1828. Shortly afterward he learned the carpenter's trade and on reaching manhood became a contractor and builder. Many buildings now standing are evidences of his handiwork. He also carried on farming, and in this way did his share in reclaiming the wilderness and developing the county. He made his home in Fulton County until 1874, and then moved with his family to Butler County, Kan., where, as in Illinois, he was a leader in improvements, being the first to introduce fine horses and cattle. There, as in Illinois, the sterling traits of his character won for him the cordial esteem of all with whom he came in contact. He departed this life in 1898.

Nathan Beadles spent his early life on the home farm, attending the public schools in the winter season. In 1878 he took a trip to Colorado and followed cattle herding for two summers. He also visited the Flint Hills and went into New Mexico. In 1885 he returned to his native county, where he entered school, completing his course in 1889, after which he again visited the West. On returning the same year he bought a farm in Waterford Township. From time to time he added to this purchase until he became the owner of 640 acres of land. In 1899 he came to Lewistown and engaged in the transfer business. This business he sold in 1901 and purchased a half interest in his present establishment from John Voorhees, in 1904 buying the interest of his partner and becoming proprietor of the entire stock. His trade is extensive and the honorable and courteous manner in which he conducts the business has gained the good will and confidence of his patrons.

On September 19, 1889, Mr. Beadles was united in marriage with Mary N. Brooks, daughter of William and Margaret (Russell) Brooks, honored pioneers of Fulton County, where the birth of Mrs. Beadles took place, March 14, 1868. The following named children have resulted from this union: Jefferson R., born September 6, 1890; Nathan, who died in infancy; Ralph B., Avery M., Eva B., Amelia, who died December 17, 1906; Mary and Francis.

In politics Mr. Beadles belongs to the Democratic party and in 1906 labored hard to secure local option in his county. He is not blind to the good deeds accomplished by other party officials, and believes our President Theodore Roosevelt, is one of the greatest men our Nation has ever produced. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. and the K. of P.

He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

BEAM, J. C., Sr.—Canton, Ill., has its share of men who have stepped aside from the path of labor to let pass the younger generation with their clear-cut hopes and unrealized ambitions, and to whom life still is a vast and unexplored country. This turning aside may mean much or little to him whose business tasks are finished; but if he has come from a small beginning, and if he has some friends and an optimistic outlook, there always will be those who would exchange with him success, as represented by a mere aggregation of wealth. To the former class belongs J. C. Beam, whose career as a contractor in Fulton County spanned the period between 1857 and 1898, and who has been a resident of Canton since 1865.

On both sides of his family Mr. Beam is descended from early settlers of Pennsylvania, in which State he was born on a farm in Franklin County on February 3, 1836. His parents, Abraham and Margaretta (Bowmaster) Beam, were natives of the Quaker State, the latter born in Franklin County, and by occupation were farmers, leading quiet and industrious lives. Abraham Beam came to Fulton County, Ill., in 1855, landing at Fairview, that county, where his death occurred during the same year. He had been preceded to Fairview by his son, J. C., who, in 1857, began his contracting business, at the age of twenty-one years. The young man had no material resources, but he had a good constitution, a fair education, and a firm determination to succeed. At the close of the Civil War he found a more satisfying field of operation in Canton, Ill., profiting largely by that spirit of reconstruction which invaded the whole country, so long paralyzed by the destructive forces of war. A thorough understanding of his business drew a large and dependable trade, and for thirty-three years he has been connected with the best in his line in the city.

In early life Mr. Beam espoused the cause of Democracy and with few exceptions has supported this party with his vote. Fraternally he has been connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for fifty years, having joined Lodge 78, of Ellisville, Ill., in 1857, but for thirty years past has been a member of Olive Branch Lodge, No. 15. In 1861 Mr. Beam married Mary E. Bricker, born in Franklin County, Pa., the daughter of a neighbor of the Beam family. Mr. and Mrs. Beam are the parents of four children, of whom William F. is manager of the Fullerton Lumber Company, Sioux City, Iowa; Laura I., who is the wife of W. S. Huls, of Albuquerque, N. M.; George W., a member of the firm of the Beam-Dean Company, cigar manufacturers, of Canton; and Jerome C., who is with the Southern Railroad Company at Atlanta, Ga. From 1891 to 1897, Mr. Beam was a member of the Canton City Council; has also been a Director in the Canton Home Loan Association for twenty years, and for the past six years President of the Association. Integrity and fair-dealing have been pillars in his business life, and these same qualities have drawn to him the enduring esteem of a community in which he has lived forty-one years.

BEAM, Joseph, a prosperous cattle dealer and a well known and much respected citizen of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the State of Ohio in 1853, a son of Samuel and Margaret (Thompson) Beam, also natives of that State. Martin Beam was a physician, who moved from Ohio to Illinois in 1861, and was engaged in the practice of his profession in Fulton County until his death.

In boyhood Joseph Beam received his mental training in the public schools, and on reaching mature years, started out in life for himself. He has been engaged in the stock business in Cuba and its vicinity for twenty years, and for twelve years has been in partnership with a Mr. Hilton, buying, selling and feeding all kinds of cattle, and breeding Norman horses. They have a farm of 100 acres just south of the town of Cuba, where they feed cattle. In 1887, Mr. Beam engaged in the grain business in Cuba, and built an elevator in 1897. He was the first person to introduce the "dump" elevator in that section. He has been very successful in all his undertakings.

In 1878, Mr. Beam was united in marriage with Naomi Watkins, who was born in the State of Illinois, and their union resulted in three children, namely: Roll, Bertha and Myrtle. Roll was for some time engaged in the hardware line, and in 1903, started in the general mercantile business in Cuba. He is now serving as City Clerk. Mr. Beam is a public-spirited citizen and has served as Alderman in Cuba. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and K. of P.

BEARCE, Homer.—The subject of this sketch was the son of Eli and Sarah (Austin) Bearce, who came to Fulton County, Ill., at a very early day, the father being engaged both as a farmer and a miner. The parents were both natives of Pennsylvania, in which State Eli Bearce was born February 14, 1797, and his wife, July 17, 1795. Homer Bearce was a native of Lee Township. As one of his friends states, "he was not a man who moved frequently;" consequently it may be said that he virtually spent his life in that township, engaged in farming and the raising of stock. He was born September 19, 1830, and at his death left a fine farm of 200 acres. The deceased was a Republican, a Mason and a Universalist; but although highly respected for his moral worth and the liberality of his views, was unobtrusive and disinclined to intrude himself into public notice.

Mr. Bearce was united in marriage at Lewistown, Ill., on the 4th of July, 1852, to Margaret Livingston, a native of Licking County, Ohio, who was born December 29, 1829. They became the parents of eight children: Jessie, Nancy, Lucinda, Eli, Sarah, David, William and Isaac.

BEARCE, Reuben M., who is one of the most prominent among the enterprising and successful farmers of Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., where he is located in Section 2, was born in that township December 18, 1854. He is a son of Orson and Jane (McNeil) Bearce, natives of Fulton County. Orson Bearce is one of the worthy pioneers of Fulton County and still lives on his farm in Section 10, Lewistown Township. A sketch of his life will be found elsewhere in this volume.

Reuben M. Bearce has always followed farming. He was born on the old home place and was instructed intellectually in the district schools, remaining under the paternal roof until 1882. In that year he bought forty-eight acres of land in Section 2, and now owns 286 acres in Putman and Lewistown Townships. Mr. Bearce has one of the finest homesteads in Fulton County and is recognized as one of its leading farmers and stock-raisers. He devotes considerable attention to the stock-raising feature in his agricultural operations, and his horses, cattle and hogs are all of superior grades. Beginning as a boy he has done his full share toward reclaiming the wild lands of his section, and has later participated in all those enterprises conceived and carried out for the promotion of the social, industrial, moral and educational interests of the county in which he has spent his entire life. He and his wife are liberal in their donations to all good works.

On September 7, 1882, Mr. Bearce was united in marriage with Luella M. Blackaby, a daughter of John Blackaby, of Lewistown, Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Bearce are the parents of three children, namely: Bert, born November 27, 1884; Edison, September 4, 1886, and Adrian, October 6, 1898. The birth of the mother of this family took place March 11, 1868, in Fulton County. In politics Mr. Bearce is a believer in the principles and policies of the Republican party, and takes an earnest and intelligent interest in public affairs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. He is a man of irreproachable character, and maintains an excellent standing in the community, enjoying the respect and esteem of a wide circle of acquaintances.

BEATY, Alonzo G. (deceased).—Alonzo G. Beaty was a resident of Lee Township, Fulton County, from infancy, and when he died at the comparatively early age of forty-eight years, the community lost one of the most charitable and honored of its citizens. He had not accumulated a large estate, but left what was more desirable—a name beyond reproach and to be remembered, as an inspiration, by his surviving children and widow. The deceased, however, had provided for his loved ones a comfortable home and a fine farm of eighty acres, consisting of as fertile land (thoroughly improved) as could be found in the county.

Mr. Beaty was a native of Ohio, born September 22, 1848, a son of Robert Beaty, a native of Virginia, and Fanny (Alford) Beaty, a native of Connecticut. In 1849 his parents settled in Lee Township, where they remained until the date of their death. Here Alonzo was educated in the district schools, and reared under parental care on the family homestead. He derived his education both from books and the practical discipline of the farm, so that he was well fitted to take a useful part in the community in which he had resided for the greater part of his life. In such local offices as School Director and Road Commissioner, his practical value as a man of affairs was heartily recognized, while in works of charity and religion, it was as well understood that no appeal, if worthy of consideration, would ever be made to him in vain. His denominational affiliations were with the Baptist Church.

On April 25, 1878, Mr. Beaty was married, in the city of Lewistown, to Susan E. Hendee, who was born in that place, January 20, 1851. They became the parents of three sons: Earl H., born August 5, 1881; Chester A., born May 15, 1883; and Joseph W., born May 28, 1887. Mr. Beaty died December 31, 1896. The widow, who is a highly esteemed woman, lives in comfortable circumstances on the home farm, and enjoys the society of a large circle of friends.

BEATTY, Isaac L., M. D., a prominent physician of Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., whose skill in the healing art has won for him a high standing with the medical fraternity of the county and an enviable reputation among its people in general, was born in Fulton County, May 22, 1856, a son of Isaac and Esther (Connor) Beatty, natives of the State of Ohio. Isaac Beatty settled with his family in the southern portion of Fulton County about the year 1850 and purchased a farm. There he pursued his wonted occupation of farming and reared nine children, of whom eight are still living, namely: A. J., Robert L., Peter, Hiram, Daniel C., Mrs. Sarah J. Stevens, Mrs. Sybilla Salisbury and Isaac L.

The subject of this sketch grew up on his father's farm and in early youth was a pupil in the schools at Eureka, Abingdon and Carthage, Ill., and afterward pursued a course at the University of Michigan, where his literary training was completed. His professional education was obtained in the Michigan University and the E. M. I. Medical Institute at Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he was graduated in April, 1881, with the degree of M. D. For seven years before completing his medical course he was engaged in teaching. After graduation he began the practice of his profession, opening an office in Fairview, Ill., which he has maintained ever since, meanwhile acquiring a large and lucrative patronage.

On October 1, 1885, Dr. Beatty was united in marriage with Mary L. Christopher, who was born in Fulton County, Ill. Mrs. Beatty is a daughter of Daniel G. and Charlotte Christopher, natives of Virginia. Dr. Beatty and his wife are the parents of one son, Dwight Curtis. In politics Dr. Beatty is a Democrat and served as Supervisor of Kerton Township, Fulton County, for four years, assuming the duties of that position when he was twenty-one years old. He was also Supervisor of Fairview Township five or six years, and officiated five years as President of the Town Board of Fairview, and held the office of Coroner of Fulton County eight years. Dr. Beatty is the oldest physician in length of practice in Fairview and is considered a very able man in his profession. He enjoys the respect and confidence of all classes of people, both in the town and in the country surrounding, where he has numerous calls for his services. Fraternally Dr. Beatty is identified with the A. F. & A. M., the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A.

BEDWELL, Benjamin F.—Both McDonough and Fulton County have profited by the business relations of Benjamin F. Bedwell, who, while an honored resident of Table Grove since March, 1905, with the assistance of his son, operated a 200-acre farm in New Salem Township, McDonough County. Mr. Bedwell, to whose credit also is a meritorious military service and many important political services, was born in Ohio, across the river from Wheeling W. Va., January 16, 1844, a son of James and Sarah (Musgrove) Bedwell, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Ohio. In 1848, when the son, Benjamin, was four years old, the family moved overland from Ohio to Fulton County, Ill., in a "prairie schooner," settling in Pleasant Township, where the mother died in 1850. She had reared four children, of whom Hamilton is a retired farmer of Aztel, Marshall County, Kans.; Elias, who operates a farm in New Salem Township, McDonough County; Elizabeth, the deceased wife of Amos Bennett, of the State of Washington; and Jessie, a resident of Lewistown, Fulton County. For his second wife Mr. Bedwell married Mary Rodgers, of which union there were two children: John, a farmer of Iowa, and Laura, deceased. Mr. Bedwell was active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a man of strong character and strict integrity.

When the Civil War began to devastate the land, Benjamin Bedwell was seventeen years old, and in order to enlist he went to Quincy, Ill., where he failed to become a member of the Eighty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, as that regiment already was filled. Returning to his home, March 24, 1864, he enlisted in Company H, Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years, and joined his regiment at Natchez, Miss. Thereafter he participated in many long marches and battles of the regiment, and at New Orleans, in March, 1865, was placed on board a vessel to proceed, by way of the Gulf, to Fort Monroe. This journey was not accomplished, however, as a heavy storm came up which tossed the vessel around like a shuttle-cock, and necessitated the throwing over board of sixty army mules. The vessel finally returned to New Orleans, and the regiment was sent to the Fort by railroad, proceeding thence to Fort Blakely, where it took part in the eight days' siege, going thence to Mobile, which had, in the meantime, been evacuated, and where the regiment remained until July 1. It went then to Brazill Island, Texas, marched along the Rio Grande to Brownsville, where the regiment was mustered out on March 15, 1866, and finally discharged at Springfield two months later.

Returning to his home Mr. Bedwell resumed farming, and on March 12, 1868, married Belle Cattron, daughter of James Cattron, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this book. Eleven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bedwell: James M., born January 29, 1869, a farmer in Pleasant Township; William J., born June 24, 1871, a harness dealer in Table Grove; Frank C., born January 31, 1874, a farmer in McDonough County; Eva G., born September 2, 1878, wife of William Fleming, of McDonough County; Sarah A., born December 9, 1880, died January 6, 1881; Martha Belle, born December 2, 1881, died November 1, 1884; Emma C., born March 3, 1884, died October 30, 1886; Flora A., born August 26, 1886, wife of Lawrence Leckbee, of McDonough County; Charles B., born March 29, 1889; Harry R., born June 17, 1891; and Orrin H., born January 24, 1895, died December 5, 1905.

In 1892 Mr. Bedwell moved to McDonough County and followed farming there until locating in Table Grove, Fulton County, in 1905. In McDonough County he held a number of local offices, and was a vigorous supporter of the Democratic party. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He still operates his 200 acres in McDonough County, devoting his attention chiefly to stock-raising and feeding, and in this is aided by his son, Frank, an up-to-date and promising young agriculturist.

BEEBE, Martin.—Through persistent aspiration and unceasing labor Martin Beebe has won his way to the most stable and satisfying compensation of country life. In the shadow of his seventy-eighth year he finds himself the fortunate possessor of what is known as the Duck Island farm of 1,590 acres, lying in Sections 33, 34 and 35, Banner Township, and one of the largest individual properties in Fulton County. From the life of this honored pioneer reaches out many tendrils of help and encouragement. Born among the most modest of surroundings on a farm in Chemung County, N. Y., April 6, 1819, he is the son of Hezekiah and Sarah (Boyer) Beebe, who, in 1837, moved in a wagon from New York to La Grange County, Ind., and in the wilderness wrought a fair measure of success.

In 1839 Mr. Beebe, then twenty years old, came to Fulton County and for two years worked in the harvest field and at general farm labor by the month. He then learned the cooper's trade, which he followed fifteen years, and in the meantime, in 1849, he invested his earnings in a small farm near Utica, Banner Township. From small beginnings he arose to financial success, and in 1860 purchased of John N. Willard, of St. Louis, the Duck Island farm already mentioned. Nine hundred acres of this property is under a high state of cultivation, producing from forty to fifty bushels of wheat and from seventy to one hundred bushels of corn per acre. Mr. Beebe has specialized for many years in corn and hogs, but has also raised high-grade cattle and horses in large numbers. The home on Section 33 bears eloquent testimony to the taste and refinement of its owner and those practical traits of character and thrift which avoid the superfluous and ornate.

In 1847 occurred the first marriage of Mr. Beebe, his bride being Diana Sayles, who, at the time of her death in January, 1862, left five children: Henry Clay, Clara A., Marcus T., Josephine and Orrin. The second marriage, solemnized November 24, 1870, with Emma Elam, resulted in the following named children: John, Amos, Hector, Frederick, Carroll, Sheldon and Mary Belle. Mr. Beebe was a Whig before the formation of the Republican party, and for a time was identified with the Greenback party. He never has been active politically or socially, but has led a quiet, unostentatious life, content to wander over his vast estate and supervise its many and extensive interests. He has done much to elevate the local standard of agriculture and to strengthen the popular regard for thoroughness, thrift and integrity.

BEER, H. Foster, a well-known and successful farmer of Young Hickory Township, Fulton County, Ill., whose progenitors were among the earliest settlers of Fulton County, was born in that township in 1871, a son of G. W. and Eliza (Weaver) Beer, also natives of Fulton County. Thomas Beer, father of G. W., was a Pennsylvanian by birth. Moving with his family by wagon to Joshua Township, Fulton County, in 1835, he there purchased a tract of land which he cleared and improved and on which he carried on farming successfully during the remainder of his active life. G. W. Beer, who followed the same occupation, remained at home until he reached years of maturity, when he purchased of Isaac Weaver a farm in Young Hickory and Deerfield Townships. This he improved, cultivating it until 1894, when he established his residence in the town of Fairview, Fulton County. He and his worthy wife became the parents of six children, namely: Hattie, Ida, Flora, Ella, H. Foster and Lola.

H. F. Beer was also reared to farm life. He received his mental training in the public schools of his vicinity and stayed on the paternal farm until 1894. He then spent about two years in the town of Fairview and in 1897 returned to the homestead property, where he has since carried on general farming, devoting considerable attention to the raising of stock. The farm consists of 160 acres of land and is situated in Section 35, Young Hickory and Deerfield Townships.

On July 15, 1896, Mr. Beer was united in marriage at North Henderson, Ill., with Bertha Patton, who was born in Joshua Township, where, in girlhood, she enjoyed the advantages of a public schooling. She is a daughter of Joseph and Phoebe (Rodormer) Patton, natives of Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Beer have become the parents of three children, namely: Harris, born March 6, 1898; Winifred, born March 7, 1900, and Beatrice, born November 24, 1902.

On political issues the subject of this sketch acts in co-operation with the Prohibition party. As a farmer he is energetic, careful and thorough, and as a citizen he takes an intelligent and active interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the community, of which he is regarded as a useful member.

BEESON, David, President of the Canton National Bank, at Canton, Ill., was born in Highland County, Ohio, October 12, 1838, a son of Edward S. and Juliana (Ridgeway) Beeson, natives of Virginia. His grandfather, Jesse Beeson, was born in Uniontown, Pa., in 1768, and died in 1842. His great-grandfather, Henry Beeson, was born in Martinsburg, W. Va., and died in 1817. His father, Edward S. Beeson, who was born in 1795, and died in 1852, followed the milling business in Virginia until 1830, when he moved to Indiana, continuing in the same business there for five years. He then went to Ohio, where he was engaged in general merchandising, and served as Sheriff of Highland County. In 1850 he came to Canton and went into the milling business, after which he moved to Farmington, Ill., where his death took place. Edward S. Beeson's wife was born in Frederick County, Va., August 31, 1802, and died in Canton, Ill., August 2, 1863.

Soon after his father's death, the subject of this sketch became a clerk for Sulley & Tracey, produce merchants, and was afterwards connected with H. C. Adams in merchandising for two years, the establishment then being closed out. Mr. Beeson then engaged with Hulit & Atwater, with whom he remained nine years. Subsequently he was employed as a clerk for a Mr. Mills in the dry goods line, and also for a Mr. Huisely. He was then engaged in the private bank of C. T. Heald, and when the First National Bank of Canton was organized, he went into the new institution as book-keeper, being engaged in that capacity for sixteen years. During that period he also acted as Assistant Cashier and Teller, and was one of the Directors. In 1881, Mr. Beeson embarked in the clothing business under the firm name of "Dave & Dick," he being the senior member, and Richard Divilbiss, the junior member. At the end of three years, he withdrew from the firm on account of his health. Shortly afterwards, in company with others, he established a private banking institution known as C. T. Heald & Co., which, in 1887, was organized as the Canton National Bank, of which Mr. Beeson was elected President. The subject of this sketch is noted for his sound judgment and keen business sagacity, and is regarded as a safe and conservative financier. Mr. Beeson was never married.

BEHYMER, Francis M., who is successfully engaged in general farming and stock-raising in Section 12, Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Pleasant Township, Fulton County, January 1, 1850, a son of Arar and Rildah (Rutledge) Behymer, natives of Ohio. Arar Behymer journeyed from Ohio to Illinois, and located in Fulton County, when the country was a wilderness. There was no dwelling in Havana except a solitary log cabin and Ipava had but a single human habitation. No bridges spanned the rivers, and now and then the traveler was compelled to climb a tree in order to escape from the wolves. Arar Behymer was employed in cutting timber and clearing land, rafting on the Illinois River, and did anything to make money. He bought the first piece of land in Isabel Township, Fulton County, and afterwards purchased a tract of eighty acres in Kerton Township, where he spent the remainder of his life. At the time of his death, in 1895, he was making his home with his son Francis, the only member of the family now living. His wife passed away in 1852.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the paternal farm, and received his early mental training in the district school held in the rude log schoolhouse, with the old slab-bench and a board attached to the wall for a desk. Mr. Behymer made his home on the old farm until November, 1904, when he bought 160 acres of land in Section 12, Bernadotte Township, known as the "Old Moorehouse farm," which was well improved. He did his part towards clearing and beautifying the homestead, where may be found a good grade of horses, cattle and hogs.

On May 10, 1866, Mr. Behymer was united in marriage with Mary Ruble, a native of Croton, Lee County, Iowa, where she was born March 10, 1851, a daughter of Theodore and Catherine (Collins) Ruble, natives of Memphis, Tenn. Mr. and Mrs. Ruble had ten children, all of whom grew to maturity, and eight of whom are still living. Those besides Mrs. Behymer were: John, who died in California; Jane, who became the wife of Frank Whetstone, of Lee County, Iowa; Margaret, a resident of Table Grove, Ill., widow of James McNeil, who was killed by a railroad train; Miranda, married and living in Kirkville, Iowa; Thomas, of Bonaparte, Iowa; Albert, of Bentonsport, Iowa; Doshie, wife of John Davis, of Croton, Iowa; Louisa, widow of Frank Smith, who resides near Croton, Iowa; and Alice, deceased. The father of this family died in 1903 and was buried in the vicinity of Croton, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Behymer have had seven children, namely: William, born August 20, 1867, died in February, 1892; Calvin, born February 22, 1869, deceased September 14, 1871; Lennie, born in Kerton Township, June 9, 1882, wife of Harvey Wright, a resident of Canton, Ill.; Lewis, born December 22, 1885, who is with his parents; Bella, born September 24, 1889, wife of Roy Huff, of Canton, Ill.; Carrie, wife of Willard Gustin, of the same place; and Eddie, born February 24, 1894. Mr. and Mrs. Behymer have reared their children carefully, giving them a thorough mental training and fitting each for a useful life. The parents are members of the Christian Church. In politics Mr. Behymer is a supporter of the Democratic party.

BELL, William A.—Since its establishment in Fulton County in 1864, the occupations of blacksmithing and farming have received decided impetus through the labor and good judgment of the members of the Bell family. John R. Bell, the elder bearing the name, was born in Kentucky in 1832, and in early life journeyed to Greencastle, Ind., where he learned and pursued the blacksmithing trade. He married Emma Gordon, born in Indiana in 1836, and his son, William A., now a prominent farmer of Ellisville Township, Fulton County, was born in Greencastle, September 2, 1862. Two years after this event, the parents removed to Farmington, Fulton County, where the father plied the blacksmith trade in both town and county until moving to his present farm of eighty acres near Farmington, in 1890.

Until his twenty-first year William A. Bell lived on the home place near Farmington, then rented the farm for a year, and later moved to Union Township, where he conducted a rented farm for a time. He then bought 160 acres of land in Knox County, Ill., but disposing of the same at the end of three years, moved temporarily to Kansas. Not realizing his expectations in the latter State, he returned the same year to Knox County, and purchased eighty-five acres of land, to which he later added 125 acres. A few years later he sold this property and bought 125 acres in Section 31, Ellisville Township, where he has since been engaged in general farming and stock-raising with increasing success. To the improvements already on the land he has added greatly from year to year, has built and rebuilt, and surrounded himself with those conveniences which brighten the lives and mitigate the hard labor of these who would succeed in the science of agriculture.

December 2, 1895, Mr. Bell married Etta Humphrey, who was born in Knox County, Ill., March 11, 1869, and who is the devoted mother of five children: Lillian, Emory, Guy, Ora and Mamie. While not an office-seeker, Mr. Bell is a staunch upholder of the Republican party, and the earnest friend of education, good roads and social and other privileges. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias, and in religious faith is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church. His character and work receive the approbation of the intelligent and thoughtful portion of the community, and he is deemed a young man of enterprise, ability and integrity.

BELLES, James M. (deceased), for many years a leading business man and generous and charitable gentleman of Lewistown, Ill., was a native of Hancock County, Ind., born November 24, 1831. He was a son of Joseph and Catherine Belles, natives of Ohio, who settled on Section 25, Pleasant Township, and devoted their lives to farming and the rearing of their family. A brief record of the varied careers of their children follows:

Peter Belles enlisted for service in the Civil War, went into camp at Springfield, Ill., and there died.

Walter J. Belles, born in Hancock County, Ind., January 25, 1832, came with his parents to Fulton County in his early manhood, was for many years a successful teacher, and had an especially wide reputation as an orthographer, it being even claimed that he was able to spell any word in the English language. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in the famous One Hundred and Third Illinois Infantry, and upon his return was for many years a merchant of Duncan, a town of Fulton County, south of Lewistown. His death occurred April 21, 1901, and in his earthly departure the community lost a kind, practically helpful and generous Christian.

Elizabeth became the wife of Arthur Smith, both of whom are deceased. William Belles is a resident of Joplin, Mo., and Amos, of Jacksonville, Ill. Joseph Belles married Millicent Gibson, and by his death June 24, 1880, she was left a widow without children.

The early life of James M. Belles was spent upon the farm and in obtaining an elementary education in the public schools. On January 30, 1859, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Coakley, of Ipava, a native of Indiana, whose parents were among the pioneers of Fulton County. After their marriage Mr. Belles began farming in Pleasant Township, and was thus engaged until 1880. For five years he resided in Ipava, moving to Kansas in 1885, where he remained until 1889. He then returned to Ipava, and in the fall of 1892, in partnership with his brother Watter, engaged in the ice business, continuing in that line until the death of the latter in 1901. This heavy blow was also the occasion, and perhaps the cause, for his retirement from active life, his death occurring August 14, 1903. The deceased was long an active member of the Methodist Church, and a moral, enterprising, public-spirited citizen. In politics he was stanchly Republican, and in his private and domestic life kind, generous and supremely thoughtful.

Mr. and Mrs. James M. Belles were the parents of the following children: Jeremiah, born November 28, 1859, and now living at Kalispell, Mont.; three who died in infancy; Chalice, now Mrs. Jasper Robertson, of Ipava, born March 31, 1865; Margaret Perline, born September 26, 1870, married Frank M. Hayes, and died February 9, 1895, the mother of Glenn and Merton, the latter now deceased; Hattie, born November 21, 1872, wife of George Cadwallader, living at Kalispell, Mont., and the mother of two children—Gordon and Floyd; Perry, born May 27, 1877, a resident of Monmouth, Ill.; and Nellie, born August 12, 1882, who is living with the devoted mother in the old homestead at Lewistown. Mrs. James Belles was born January 16, 1841, and is a striking type of the pioneer women of Fulton County.

BELTS, Claude, former Principal of the High School in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Cuba, N. Y., in 1874, a son of J. M. and L. S. Belts, natives of New York. His father, who conducted a furniture factory at Ligonier, Ind., died January 1, 1895. The subject of this sketch, after graduating from the High School, became a student in DePauw University, Indiana, in 1893, and pursued a course in the University of Indiana from 1895 to 1898. From 1898 to 1900, inclusive, he was Principal of the Butler (Ind.) High School, and 1901 to 1904 at Churubusco, Ind. In 1904 he took a post-graduate course in the University of Michigan, and in 1905 became Principal of the Lewistown High School, which position he occupied for one year. In religion Mr. Belts adheres to the faith of the Methodist Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. and the Knights of Pythias.

BELUE, J. F., a successful furniture dealer of Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., who combines that line of trade with the business of undertaker, was born in Fairview in 1848. In early youth he attended the public schools of the neighborhood, in which he received a good training in the elementary branches of study. When he reached the age of fifteen years, he secured employment in the furniture store of Joseph Cook, in Fairview, for whom he continued to work for about sixteen years. In 1889 he entered into partnership with Mr. Cook, and this relation lasted until August, 1894. At that period he purchased the interest of his partner, and since then has conducted the concern on his own responsibility. His furniture department is thoroughly stocked with all varieties of household goods, and his undertaking equipment is complete in extent and superior in quality. Mr. Belue is a licensed embalmer, and is otherwise admirably fitted for the care of the remains of the dead, and for the performance of the undertaker's functions in funeral ceremonies. In 1892, the firm of Cook & Belue, built the store now occupied by the latter, which is twenty-eight by ninety-four feet in dimensions. The size of the warehouse connected with it is twenty-seven by fifty-six feet.

In 1886, Mr. Belue was united in marriage with Lulu Wilson, who was born in Fulton County, and in girlhood enjoyed the advantages of its public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Belue have become the parents of two children, namely: Mary Ethel and Theresa. Mr. Belue has served as a member of the Board of Township Trustees. In fraternal circles he is identified with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. He officiated as Noble Grand of the I. O. O. F. during the period when that order experienced the most remarkable progress that has marked its history in that section of the country. Mr. Belue is a straightforward and reliable business man, and is regarded as a well disposed and serviceable member of the community.

BENSON, Robert L.—Of the follower of any of the important trades no better recommendation is required than the credit of long employment under a reliable management. For eighteen years Robert L. Benson has been Chief Engineer of the Canton Water Works, and is regarded as having as practical a knowledge of complicated machinery as any engineer in the town. The works are a credit to the community, and the absolute cleanliness maintained, in addition to the shining condition of everything polishable around the ponderous and noisy engines, bespeaks the pride, method and vigilant eye of the Chief Engineer.

Mr. Benson, who is of southern ancestry and the son of William C. Benson, of Virginia, was born in Knox County, Ill., August 7, 1847, his family belonging to the pioneer group of Knox County. In his father's harvest fields the youth gained strength of muscle and great lung capacity, while acquiring a fair education in the public schools. In 1867 he married Ada Couterman, a native of Pekin, Ill., and his family has been increased to four, the younger members being Lloyd and Anna B. Mr. Benson, while still quite young, decided that farming wasn't exactly to his liking, so he came to Canton in 1874, learned the trade of engineer and in 1888 stepped into his present responsible position. Mr. Benson is a modest and unassuming man, kind and affectionate in his family, and considerate of his subordinates connected with the Water Works System.

BERKEY, James W., whose whole life has been spent in Fulton County, Ill., where, beginning as a hired farm hand, he has progressed, through his innate qualities of industry, perseverance, economy and integrity, to the ownership of a highly productive farm and the position of a substantial, influential and useful member of the community, was born in Deerfield Township, Fulton County, October 1, 1860. He is now a highly respected and prosperous resident of Fairview Township, in that county. Mr. Berkey is a son of Josiah and Catherine (Dailey) Berkey, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania respectively, the father being born in the former State November 23, 1834. Josiah Berkey moved from Ohio to Illinois at an early period, locating in Deerfield Township, where he purchased a small farm. This he cleared and improved, and on it was engaged in general farming until the time of his death, which occurred on September 13, 1864. He was a man of diligent habits and scrupulous honesty, and was favorably regarded by all who knew him. He and his worthy wife were the parents of four children, namely: Charles F., James W., Eliza A. and Catherine A.

James W. Berkey, the subject of this sketch, was reared to farm life in boyhood and during the winter season attended the district schools of the neighborhood. On approaching his maturity he hired out as a farm hand and was thus employed for some time. He then commenced farming on his own responsibility, having bought from Joseph Keithley eighty acres of land in Section 23, Fairview Township, Fulton County. To his first purchase he added, five years later, sixty acres adjoining, which constituted a part of the Zook estate. On this land he has since conducted general farming with successful results. He is also the owner of 120 acres in the State of Minnesota.

On October 20, 1887, Mr. Berkey was united in marriage in Fairview Township with Mattie Foutz, who was born in that township July 11, 1863. She is a daughter of William H. H. and Barbara A. (Dorns) Foutz, natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Berkey became the parents of two children, namely: Archie and William. The political opinions of Mr. Berkey are in accordance with the policies of the Republican party, and in religious faith he is an adherent of the Methodist Church. He is well known throughout his section of Fulton County and within his wide circle of acquaintance enjoys the reputation of an intelligent, upright, public-spirited and well disposed citizen.

BINGHAM, George Edward.—The Chief Executive of Table Grove is one of the most influential young Republican politicians and most promising prospective lawyers in Fulton County. His place in the business world is as a member of the firm of Seward & Bingham, house, sign and carriage painters, a trade which he learned in 1894 and in which he since has advanced to control of a large enterprise. Mr.

Bingham has accomplished his present measure of success through practical and business-like methods. One of the lessons of his short career is, that what a man desires he usually becomes. Since earliest youth his purpose has been far from the humble surroundings among which he was born on a farm in Salem Township, McDonough County, Ill., July 22, 1874, and near where he received the rudiments of an education which self-application, under especially trying circumstances, has since extended into liberal and professional fields. His parents, Joseph and Eliza A. (Costlo) Bingham, are natives respectively of Connecticut and Eldorado Township, McDonough County, Ill., and since 1883 have made their home in Table Grove. At the age of twenty years George Edward learned the trade of house and sign painting, and while following the same utilized his evenings and other leisure in perfecting his education and otherwise fitting himself for the position he expected to fill in life. For the past two years, in spite of strenuous duties and many-sided responsibilities, he has devoted himself to the study of law, and on May 22, 1907, graduated from the law department of the University of Indianapolis, immediately thereafter being admitted to practice in State and Federal Courts, on May 29, following.

A predilection for political life manifested itself soon after Mr. Bingham's arrival in Table Grove, and his service to the Republican party was recognized in 1896 by his election to the office of Township Clerk by a good majority in a Democratic stronghold. He next was nominated for and elected Town Treasurer, succeeding himself in the same office at the next election. In 1903 he was elected Mayor of Table Grove, and in 1905 was re-elected without opposition. His administration has met with the approval of the community irrespective of party preference, and under no control have the resources and advantages of the community been more rapidly and substantially advanced. Especially are the municipal finances in a flourishing condition, due largely to the knowledge of law which enables Mr. Bingham to personally draw up the ordinances and otherwise save the expense usually incurred for legal services. One of the chief advantages resulting from his wide-awake policy consists in the electric lighting plant, which is now on a paying basis and has reduced the cost of street lighting to a minimum.

Between the beginning and the ending of one brief year Mr. Bingham experienced the greatest happiness and the greatest sorrow of his life. United in marriage January 29, 1903, to Frana Van Fossen, an educated and refined lady with many strong and beautiful traits of character, he was called upon to mourn her death in November of the same year. Mr. Bingham adds a sociable nature to his many other qualifications for political and general leadership, and is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

John Gleason Graham

BLACK, Theodore, an enterprising and successful farmer in Section 4, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township November 23, 1857. He is a son of Isaac and Elizabeth (Byers) Black, natives respectively of Ross County, Ohio, and Bedford County, Va. The father was born January 30, 1813, and the mother October 14, 1819, their marriage occurring at Washington, Fayette County, Ohio, in October, 1839. Isaac Black, Sr., the grandfather, was a native of Berks County, Pa., and on reaching mature years went to Virginia, where he was wedded to Grace Woodford, whose birthplace was Philadelphia. About the year 1811 they moved to Ross County, Ohio.

Isaac Black, Jr., located in Fulton County in 1842 and settled just west of Cuba, where he made his home until 1857. He had purchased a farm of 140 acres in Section 4, Liverpool Township, where he died September 17, 1892, at the age of seventy-nine years, seven months and seventeen days. His wife passed away February 14, 1889. From their union twelve children resulted besides Theodore, as follows: Henry, deceased, born July 27, 1840; Marion, a farmer near Smithfield, Ill., born November 30, 1841; William, a farmer in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, born February 3, 1844; James, a resident of Canton, Ill., born November 27, 1845; Hannah, born February 21, 1849, wife of John Courtney, of Bates County, Mo.; Martha A., born April 30, 1851, wife of John Everman, a resident of Bates County, Mo.; Mary L., born September 10, 1853, who married William Ford and moved to Indiana, where both died; Sarah E., born September 3, 1855, deceased wife of Joseph Willcoxon, a farmer in Liverpool Township; Celesta A., deceased, born December 23, 1859; Travis, who died in infancy, and Edith M., born July 31, 1865, wife of William McCann, a farmer in Liverpool Township.

Theodore Black was reared on the paternal farm, received his mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood, and is still engaged in farming on the spot where he grew to maturity. The property consists of 140 acres, under a high state of cultivation, and as he is a careful, systematic and diligent farmer, his labors are attended by the best results.

On June 15, 1882, Mr. Black was united in marriage with Harriett Pollitt, a daughter of James T. and Arilda (Beckstead) Pollitt, who was born December 17, 1860. (A sketch of her parents' life will be found on another page of this history.) Two children resulted from this union, namely: Sylvia, born December 24, 1883, wife of George R. Willcoxon (a sketch of whose life appears in this work), and Bruce, born September 4, 1887, who is with his parents.

In politics Mr. Black is a supporter of the Democratic party and has discharged the duties of several offices of trust creditably to himself and acceptably to his constituents. Fraternally he is affiliated with Bryant Camp, No. 436, M. W. A. He is an upright man in all the relations of life, and maintains an excellent standing, individually and as a citizen. He and his worthy wife are held in high esteem throughout the community.

BLACKABY, Robert, who is a successful and substantial farmer in Section 2, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born on the spot where he now makes his home, October 17, 1868. He is a son of Robert and Caroline (Saunders) Blackaby, the former a native of Virginia. When a boy Robert Blackaby, Sr., went from that State to Ohio and in 1840 journeyed to Illinois, locating in Fulton County. There he was joined in wedlock with Caroline Saunders, a daughter of Ira Saunders. The first work of Robert Blackaby after locating in his new home was to drive a wholesale clothing wagon, at which he continued for eight years. At the end of that period he applied himself to farming, having bought a tract of wild land in Section 2, Lewistown Township. To the arduous task of clearing this tract of its native growth of timber he devoted his time and strength in toilsome exertion until he developed it into one of the finest farms in the township.

Robert Blackaby, Sr., and his wife became the parents of a family of children, six of whom are now living, namely: Rose, who is the wife of Charles Miner, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Clara, who married Edward Davis and is living in Iowa; Mary C., who became the wife of David Sheets, who is engaged in farming in Lewistown Township; John, who married Zelma Davis and is a resident of Blackwell, Okla.; Henry, who was united in matrimony with Maggie Reed, of Iowa, and is also living in Oklahoma, and Robert, who carries on farming on the old homestead. The mother of this family departed this life in 1872. The father survived her until September 7, 1898, when he, too, passed away.

Robert Blackaby imbibed his education from the district schools in the vicinity of the paternal home, applied himself to farming on his own account in early manhood, and is now the owner of 175 acres of fine land, under a high state of cultivation. In addition to general farming he devotes careful attention to stock-raising, keeping Norman and brood horses and breeding Black cattle. All his horses, cattle and hogs are of the best grades, and his thorough and methodical manner of operation has assured him a marked degree of success.

On January 14, 1891, Mr. Blackaby was united in marriage with Althea Wheelbarger, a daughter of George W. Wheelbarger, of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Blackaby are the parents of three children, namely: Murriel, born June 27, 1893; Lloyd, May 2, 1895, and Hazel, May 27, 1897. In politics Mr. Blackaby is a supporter of the Democratic party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the M. W. A. He is a progressive and public-spirited citizen, takes an earnest interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the township and county, and is regarded as one of the most useful members of the community.

BLACKSTONE, (Dr.) George R.—The finding of a groove in life in which one's heart and mind are emphatically enlisted assures success to nine out of ten of the toilers of earth. The farm is the largest and most beneficent camping ground for the survey of life's possibilities, for here the farmer of the future is too busy to dream other than with his eyes wide open and his senses alert, and while health is being engendered by muscular action, regular hours and wholesome diet. It was among these fortunate if not congenial surroundings that Dr. George R. Blackstone determined upon his humanitarian career.

The Doctor is a native son of Illinois and was born in New Salem Township, McDonough County, December 14, 1874. His father, Stephen Blackstone, was one of the leading and most successful farmers of McDonough County, in which he settled at an early day. At the age of sixteen Dr. Blackstone left the home farm and entered Hedding College, Abingdon, Ill., where he took the four years' course. He then became a student in the medical department of the Northwestern University, Chicago, Ill., graduating at the end of four years in the class of 1900. During the vacation of his third year at the university he served as interne in the West Side Dispensary of that city, and in the fall of 1900 located in Table Grove, Ill., where he succeeded to the practice, office equipment and residence of Dr. C. L. Perdue, one of the old-time and prominent practitioners of the county.

During his occupancy of the office the younger man has added greatly to its equipment and has installed his constantly increasing and well selected medical library, one of the best in the State. Six years have brought about a constant rise in his fortunes, and he has won the confidence of the community by his skill as a diagnostician and his successful treatment of complicated and apparently hopeless disorders. He is a student who recognizes no end to the road of science and who forges ahead patiently and conscientiously. He is a member of the County and State Medical Societies and the American Medical Association and a subscriber to many of the best professional periodicals in this country and Europe.

On June 12, 1900, Dr. Blackstone was united in marriage to Olive E. Smith, a native of Abingdon, Ill., and daughter of J. B. Smith, a prominent pioneer of that town. Mrs. Blackstone is a graduate of the musical department of Hedding College and a most accomplished musician. She is the mother of a son, Howard S., born October 1, 1901.

BLAIN, Albert E.—The qualities of adaptability, persistence, common sense and good judgment have prevailed in the energetic life of Albert E. Blain, winning for him an enviable rank among the business, political and social elements of the city of Canton. Mr. Blain is a product of the agricultural regions of Fulton County, his birth having occurred on one of its well tilled farms in that county, December 22, 1863. His family is an early one in the county, having been established here during the youth of his father, James K. Blain, who was born in New Jersey, and by occupation was a farmer and machinist. His mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Ayersman. The elder Blain was a soldier of the Union during the Civil War, and previous to settling on his present farm in Deerfield Township, plied his trade of machinist in Canton for forty years.

Mr. Blain's parents moved to Canton when the son was three years of age. In his youth Albert E. learned the machinist trade of his father, and also was instructed in the various duties which go to make up the life of a progressive farmer. His educational opportunities were obtained, first in the Canton public schools, and later in the Canton High School, and after graduating from the latter, he returned to the farm for a brief period. For eighteen years he worked in the Parlin & Orendorff shops, but in 1898 resigning this position, was appointed Chief of Police of the city of Canton. In 1904 he engaged in the hotel and restaurant business in which he has been since successfully occupied. He has also been prominently connected with Republican politics for many years, and possesses in large measure the tact, far-sightedness and aggressiveness which have won for him prominence in local party undertakings. His record as Chief of Police of Canton stands clearly defined as the effort of an honest, resourceful and public-spirited official in the effort to rid the city of undesirable characters and establish respect for law and order. The four years of his service in this capacity resulted in many changes of a permanent nature in governmental affairs, and materially toned up the moral and general reputation of the city.

In 1902 he received substantial support as a candidate on the primary ballot for Sheriff of Fulton County, and was the choice of the party for that office in the election of 1906. The social connections of Mr. Blain have been one of the typical phases of his career. He appreciates the companionship of genial people, and the benefit of ennobling surroundings, and is a popular member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias, Red Men, and Eagles. On July 1, 1890, he married Miss Effie Jump, a native daughter of Macon County, Ill., and of this union there is one son, James G. Mr. Blain has hosts of friends in Fulton County, in which class are many political opponents when not agitated by the doubts and fears which visit the hearts of office-seekers. As host at present in a well kept, orderly, up-to-date and tactfully managed hostelry and restaurant, he is meeting with the success which justly rewards an enterprising business career and consideration for the interests of his patrons.

BLAKSLEE, George W., who is recognized as one of the most prominent and substantial farmers in Fulton County, Ill., where he has spent more than three-score years, was born in the State of Ohio, on May 16, 1840, a son of William and Harriet (Carpenter) Blakslee, natives of Connecticut and Vermont, respectively. William Blakslee was a farmer by occupation, a man of irreproachable character, untiring perseverance and sound judgment, and reaped the merited reward of these qualities in all his undertakings. He left New England at an early period and went to Ohio. After spending some years in that State, he traveled to Illinois in 1845, making the journey by wagon, and settling in the vicinity of Middle Grove, Fulton County. In 1864 he purchased 257 acres of land in Section 5, Fairview Township, Fulton County. On this property he located, making some necessary improvements, and was there successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits during the remainder of his active career. William Blakslee departed this life in 1880.

The boyhood of George W. Blakslee was passed on the paternal farm, and in early youth he attended the district schools of his neighborhood, and made himself useful in connection with his father's farming operations. On reaching his maturity, he continued in the occupation of tilling the soil in the same locality, and is now living on the identical ground which his father bought in 1864. To the original tract of 257 acres he has added 100 acres, and has made many improvements on the property. He has carried on general farming on an extensive scale, and devoted considerable attention to the raising of stock, shipping two or three carloads of cattle and hogs each year. He is a careful and systematic farmer, availing himself of the best methods and appliances, and his labors are productive of satisfactory results. During the Civil War Mr. Blakslee served in defence of the Union, enlisting August 13, 1862, in Company D, One hundred and third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged June 22, 1865.

On February 22, 1866, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage, in Fairview Township, to Amanda Williamson, who was born in that township June 18, 1843, and there in girlhood, received her mental training in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Blakslee are the parents of seven children, namely: James, Lewis, Nellie, Myrtle, William, Charles, and Hattie. Mr. Blakslee is a Republican in politics and a highly respectable member of the community.

BLISS, R., one of the oldest and most successful merchants of Avon, Fulton County, Ill., where he has been engaged in business for more than half a century, is a native of the State of Vermont, where he was born in 1827. His immediate ancestors were also of Eastern nativity, both his parents having been born in New England. Mr. Bliss was reared on a farm, and in early youth enjoyed the advantages of the public schools in the neighborhood of his home. He became a resident of Fulton County in 1855, buying a farm of 140 acres in Union Township, where he was engaged in farming for three years. In 1858 he abandoned agricultural pursuits and established his home in the village of Avon, opening a store in which he handled all kinds of merchandise. Since 1881 he has made a specialty of the clothing trade. In 1878, he built the store building which he now occupies, a two-story structure, seventy-two by forty-four feet in dimensions. He is one of the most prominent merchants in Fulton County.

In 1851, Mr. Bliss was joined in matrimony with Maria Stoddard, who was born in Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Bliss became the parents of the following named children: William, Charles, Edgar, Minnie (Mrs. Watson), Ella (Mrs. E. J. Finnessey), and Elizabeth.

BLOOMFIELD, R. Lot.—Prominent among the native sons of half century residence of Woodland Township is R. Lot Bloomfield, who was born in Section 22, February 15, 1857, and who, since 1882, has owned and occupied a tract of 160 acres in Section 21. In 1836, twenty years before the birth of Mr. Bloomfield, his father, John Bloomfield, and the latter's first wife, Mary (Farwell) Bloomfield, came from Butler County, Ohio, by way of the river to Schuyler County, Ill., and after six months' residence at Sharp's Landing, moved to Fulton County, and took up land in the southwest corner of Section 22, Woodland Township. Here Mr. Bloomfield succeeded eventually to the ownership of 280 acres of land, and here his death occurred in 1876. He was immediately connected with the early advancement of the State and county, and was one of the Commissioners who laid out and named the townships therein. A prominent Democrat and ardent supporter of Jeffersonian principles, he still was averse to office holding, contenting himself with aiding the cause of men who were qualified morally and intellectually to mould political affairs of the community.

Besides his oldest daughter, Emeline, who was born in Ohio, and accompanied her parents to Illinois, Mr. Bloomfield was the parent of six other children by his first marriage, five of whom attained maturity. Emeline became the wife of Jesse Mead, and died in Los Angeles, Cal.; Ira J., a prominent attorney in California, attained the rank of Brigadier General during the Civil War; Henry F. married Nancy Shield, and died in Nashville, Tenn., as a soldier in the Eighty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; Levia, married and lives in Colorado; and Mary is the widow of B. S. Hughes, and lives in Mason County, Ill. Mrs. Bloomfield died October 29, 1852, and Mr. Bloomfield afterwards married Mrs. Margaret Littlejohn, widow of John Littlejohn, of which union there were three sons: Abram W., who married Susan Kennedy; R. Job; and Peter C., who married Etta Myers, and is a farmer in McDonough County, Ill. The second Mrs. Bloomfield died in March, 1885.

R. Lot Bloomfield spent his youth much as do other farmer lads, and received about the same amount of schooling as did his associates in Woodland Township. Upon the death of his father he assumed the management of the home farm, and the following year, February 15, 1877, he married Rose Ann Ely, a native of Woodland Township, and daughter of Martin Ely, one of the early pioneers of Fulton County, who is still living. The young people settled on Section 15, Woodland Township, purchased from Jacob Horn, and here Mr. Bloomfield made many fine improvements, setting out fruit and shade trees, and engaging in general farming until removing to his present farm in Section 21 in 1882. The property at the time was in a run-down condition, and its improvements were crude, the only residence being of logs, and other things in proportion. There were acres of heavy timber, which since has been cleared, and in 1883 the owner erected a modern two-story frame house, the following year putting up a large barn. Graded stock, grain and general produce yield him a comfortable income, and his surroundings are such as contribute to his most sensible and practical needs.

Mr. and Mrs. Bloomfield are the parents of the following named children: Gertrude, born February 23, 1878, wife of F. A. Cooper, a merchant of Astoria; Arthur, born October 6, 1879, married Rhoda Robinson, daughter of Martin L. Robinson, a farmer of Morgan County, Ill.; Orlena, born September 22, 1881, wife of James W. Stephens, a farmer of Woodland Township; Mildred, born February 14, 1884, wife of Frank R. Shaw, a farmer on the old home place; Lenora, born March 1, 1886; Otis, born February 16, 1896. The children all have been given common school education, and all have been trained to independence and usefulness. Mr. Bloomfield is highly respected in the community, and is one of the township's substantial and reliable native sons.

BOLANDER, Stephen (deceased), for many years a worthy farmer in Section 25, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., who was also an evangelist of the Baptist faith, was born in Clermont Count, Ohio, February 4, 1820, the son of Henry and Catherine (Shinkle) Bolander, natives, respectively, of Pennsylvania and Ohio. At an early period Henry Bolander moved from Pennsylvania to Clermont County, Ohio, where he was engaged in blacksmithing and farming. There he wedded Catherine Shinkle and their union resulted in twelve children.

In youth the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the district schools in the vicinity of his father's farm. On reaching mature years he applied himself to farming on his own account. At an early period he became imbued with a deep religious spirit and identified himself with evangelistic work in the Baptist Church. While still a young man he devoted himself to preaching in connection with that denomination and followed the work of the ministry during the remainder of his life, preaching the gospel as he understood it with every opportunity.

On April 24, 1845, Mr. Bolander was united in marriage with Lydia Buffin, a daughter of Hiram Buffin and wife. This union resulted in five children, namely: Harry E., born February 12, 1846, a farmer in Pleasant Township, Fulton County; Walter E., born December 2, 1847 (deceased); Sarah, born April 24, 1850, wife of Americus Judd, of Sangamon County, Ill.; Caroline E., born July 16, 1852 (deceased wife of Marilius Johnson, a farmer of Waterford Township, Fulton County, and Lydia, born November 16, 1854, wife of John W. Downs, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this volume. The mother of this family died November 23, 1854. In April, 1855, Mr. Bolander was married to Mary E. Coleman, and their union resulted in six children, all born in Section 25, Lewistown Township, namely: Jeremiah, who died in 1857; Martha A., born May 18, 1858; Mary E., born January 28, 1861, deceased wife of John Boo, a farmer of Waterford Township, Fulton County, a record of whose life may be found in another part of this work; Barbara, born January 11, 1864, wife of Ellis Mitchell, a farmer of Lewistown Township; Elva L., born April 11, 1870, deceased wife of Frank Richardson, a resident of Fulton County, and Emeline, born September 11, 1873, wife of Russell Payne, a farmer in Bernadotte Township. The mother of this family died in 1893 and the father passed away December 18, 1895. He was an earnest and diligent Christian worker and great good attended his labors in the cause of his Master.

BOO, John P., a thriving and worthy farmer on Section 1, Waterford Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the city of Lewistown, Ill., March 26, 1862, a son of Joseph and Minerva (Cozad) Boo, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Fulton County. Joseph Boo was the only one of his family who emigrated to the United States. On coming to this country he landed in New Orleans, whence, after remaining about a year, he proceeded to Illinois and settled in Fulton County. His father had strenuously objected to his leaving the fatherland, but Joseph was determined to better his condition and when his father's death removed the last obstacle to his trying his fortunes in America, he crossed the sea. On arriving in Fulton County he went to work by the month for L. W. Ross, one of the early settlers. Afterward he rented a piece of land from that gentleman and was married to Minerva Cozad. Subsequently he purchased from Charles McCumber forty acres just north of Lewistown, where he lived for two years. This he then sold and went into the employ of J. C. Wilcoxon. He then bought eighty acres of land on Section 1, Waterford Township, and shortly afterwards another eighty-acre tract, and on this land carried on farming successfully until he moved to Lewistown. When he arrived in New Orleans he had but $1.00 in his pocket, his mother having paid his passage to the United States. This he repaid to her out of his earnings in this country. After his first removal to Lewistown he bought 120 acres of land in Lewistown Township where he carried on farming until 1895. In that year he made his final move to Lewistown, where he died February 11, 1903. His wife passed away in 1868 and was buried in Oak Hill Cemetery. His last purchase of land was the farm on which John P. Boo now lives. In religion Joseph Boo was a devout Catholic and one of the leading members of that church in Lewistown. He was the father of two children—John P. and Ida, who makes her home in Lewistown.

The subject of this sketch received his mental training in the public schools. When he was ten years old he moved with his father on the latter's farm and has always followed farming, also at the present time carries on general stock-raising. His farm of 120 acres is under a high state of cultivation and he has a good grade of all kinds of stock.

On October 7, 1884, Mr. Boo was united in marriage with Mary E. Bolander, a daughter of Stephen Bolander, who was numbered among the worthy pioneers of Fulton County. Four children resulted from this union, namely: Joseph S., born July 20, 1885; Mary M., born September 5, 1887; John O., born November 5, 1889, and Gerald D., born April 30, 1891. The estimable mother of this family died January 11, 1900, while on a visit to Rocky Ford, Colo., where she had gone for the recuperation of her health. Her remains were brought home and laid to rest in the Oak Hill family cemetery. In politics Mr. Boo is a Democrat, is a man of high character, who discharges faithfully the duties of citizenship and is respected throughout the community. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Court of Honor.

BORDNER, George, who is one of the energetic and successful farmers of Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., where he operates a fine farm in Section 36, was born in Section 35, of the same township, July 9, 1859. He is a member of one of the time-honored families of Fulton County, being a son of Moses and Maria (Bearce) Bordner, of whom the former was very prominent among the pioneer settlers. A review of his meritorious career may be found in another part of this volume.

The subject of this sketch received his education in the district schools of his neighborhood and assisted in the management of the homestead farm until he applied himself to farming on his own responsibility. He is the owner of 100 acres of excellent land, which is under a high state of cultivation. During the past two years Mr. Bordner has turned his attention to the breeding of Hereford cattle, Percheron horses and Poland China hogs, keeping a superior grade of all kinds of stock. He is a painstaking and closely attentive farmer, and the results abundantly justify his efforts. He has spent his entire life in Fulton County and many are the notable changes that have come under his observation since his boyhood was ushered in amid what are now his familiar surroundings.

On December 31, 1885, Mr. Bordner was united in marriage with Minnie Belle Hummel, a daughter of John and Rebecca (Arnett) Hummel, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio respectively. Her father is deceased but her mother still resides in Liverpool Township. The children resulting from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Bordner are: Cora M., born September 28, 1886; Mecia M., born October 5, 1888; Scott, born May 22, 1892; Nellie D., born November 21, 1895; Kate, born April 6, 1898, and Louise, born January 7, 1904. Mr. Bordner has rendered good service to his township as School Director and takes an earnest interest in all movements which tend toward the advancement of the public welfare. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F.

BORDNER, Henry S., a well-known and prosperous hardware dealer, located on the south side of the Square in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Lewistown Township, November 26, 1876. He is a son of Moses Bordner, deceased, a review of whose life appears elsewhere in this work. For a long period the Bordner family has been one of the most prominent in Fulton County.

Henry S. Bordner spent his early life upon the farm and attended the district school of his neighborhood, supplementing these advantages with a commercial course in the Gem City Business College, at Quincy, Ill. In early manhood he was thrown from a buggy in which he was riding and broke his leg, necessitating amputation and incapacitating him for further labor on the farm. In September, 1904, he purchased the hardware stock of C. R. Sims, and by close application to business is building up a large and profitable trade. He is a man of strict integrity and as a citizen is progressive and public spirited, taking an active interest in all measures tending to promote the welfare of the community. On political issues Mr. Bordner is arrayed on the side of the Democratic party. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias.

On June 20, 1905, Mr. Bordner married Miss F. L. Burgett, a native of Fulton County and a daughter of Charles L. Burgett, now a resident of Canton, Ill. May 25, 1906, a daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Bordner, whom they have named Margaret Estelle.

BORDNER, Homer.—Among the farmers who have passed their lives in Fulton County, Ill., and have reached the middle period of ordinary human endurance and whose persevering and diligent labors have placed them in comfortable circumstances, is the well known resident on Section 23, Lewistown Township, whose career furnishes the details of this personal narrative. Mr. Bordner was born in Lewistown Township, December 7, 1855, and has always made his home amid his present surroundings. He is a son of Jonathan and Lucinda (Bearce) Bordner, natives of Fulton County. The former died September 19, 1873, at the age of fifty-seven years and the latter passed away in June, 1897. A sketch of the life of Moses Bordner, and also a review of the lives of others of the name in Fulton County, may be found in this volume.

Jonathan and Lucinda (Bearce) Bordner were the parents of ten children, all of whom are still living, namely: Alford, who is engaged in farming in Taylor County, Iowa; Christina, wife of Martin Weirauch, a resident of South Bend, Kans.; Sarah, who is the wife of J. E. Fitz-Henry, who carries on farming in Lewistown Township; John F., who lives in Kansas; Homer, to whom this record pertains; Emma, who married John Weirauch, a farmer in Lewistown Township; Mary L., who became the wife of Robert Miller, and is living in Minnesota; Hattie, who makes her home in Lewistown, and Evaline, who is the wife of Martin A. Breckenridge, a farmer in Lewistown Township.

The subject of this sketch has witnessed many changes in Fulton County and the Bordner family have done their full share in promoting its development. Mr. Bordner is the owner of an excellent farm of 100 acres of very productive land, which he keeps in a high state of cultivation. He has a very attractive home, with spacious and substantial barns and convenient outbuildings. Much of his attention is devoted to stock-raising and he breeds the best grades of horses, cattle and hogs. He is considered one of the most thorough and enterprising farmers in his township.

On September 13, 1883, Mr. Bordner was united in marriage with Mary E. Blackaby, who was born in Fulton County, February 12, 1865, a daughter of John and Sarah J. (Brown) Blackaby. Her mother died January 9, 1896, while her father is still a resident of Lewistown. Mr. and Mrs. Bordner became the parents of six children, namely: Laura, who was born October 3, 1884; Alma A., born February 20, 1889; John H., who was born November 10, 1891, and died January 1, 1892; Dayton, born January 17, 1895; Homer A., born July 6, 1897; Arria L., born March 24, 1890, and Mary M., born January 5, 1903. The mother of this family is gifted with a very rare faculty of retentive memory, and is frequently called upon for details in connection with past events and for facts concerning occurrences of remote years.

Fraternally Mr. Bordner is affiliated with the M. W. A. and Mrs. Bordner is a member of the Royal Neighbors. Both are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

BORDNER, Marvin H., a well-known and enterprising young farmer who pursues his vocation in Section 26, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., and whose diligent, painstaking and constant devotion to his work bids fair to make him exceptionally successful, was born September 23, 1875. He is located on a part of the old paternal homestead which was his birthplace. He is a son of Moses and Margaret Elvira (Ewers) Bordner. (A sketch of the life of Marvin H. Bordner's father, a leading citizen of the days of Fulton County, forms an interesting chapter of this volume.)

The subject of this sketch received his mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood and since early manhood has been engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own responsibility. He is a member of a time-honored family of Fulton County and one which has been conspicuously identified with all the important enterprises and toilsome exertions which have developed that region into its present abounding prosperity. He is the owner of 160 acres of the best land to be found in Lewistown Township, which is under a high state of cultivation, and his operations are productive of encouraging results.

On May 6, 1896, Mr. Bordner was united in marriage with Iva B. Chapman, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., December 20, 1876, a daughter of William H. and Clarinda (Connor) Chapman, natives of Ohio and Illinois. This union has resulted in one child, Moses, born November 17, 1896. In politics Mr. Bordner is a supporter of the policies of the Democratic party. For some years he has been a member of the School Board, in connection with which he has rendered most creditable service. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P. and M. W. A. He takes an earnest and intelligent interest in public affairs, and is regarded as one of the most serviceable members of the community.

BORDNER, Moses (deceased), late President of the Farmers' State Bank of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Dauphin County, Pa., July 22, 1822, a son of Peter and Christina (Larsh) Bordner, natives of Bucks County, Pa. Peter Bordner was born July 4, 1784, and in 1846 came to Fulton County, where he died at the age of ninety-nine years. His wife was born in 1792 and lived to be 105 years old.

Leaving Pennsylvania in 1846, the Bordner family went to Licking County, Ohio, whence, after a brief sojourn there, they proceeded, in the fall of that year, overland to Fulton County, Ill., and located in Lewistown Township. Here they purchased a tract of densely timbered land comprising 200 acres. This Moses Bordner at once applied himself to clearing, and on it made his home until 1902. At that period he left the attractive scenes which his intelligence, perseverance and energy had created and established his residence in Lewistown. From time to time he had made additions to his original purchase until he had become the owner of more than 800 acres of land. Mr. Bordner's prolonged exertions in developing lands from their primitive wilderness into a state of cultivation would form the basis of a most interesting narrative. Many happy years were passed in his early home, but his experience was not unmixed with trials, for the difficulties and hardships of the pioneer settler were many and severe, although he sturdily overcame them all.

In 1847 Mr. Bordner was married to Maria Bearce, a member of one of the pioneer families of Fulton County. She died in 1864, leaving five children, namely: Lewis, of Sheridan County, Mo.; Charles, of Stonewall County, Tex.; Mary, the wife of John Harrison, a farmer of Fulton County, Ill.; George, a farmer in Lewistown Township, Fulton County, and Temperance, wife of Jacob Arnett, a farmer in the same township.

In 1866 Mr. Bordner was united in marriage with Margaret Elvira Ewers, who bore him nine children, one of whom died in infancy. Another, Clifford, died in 1895. The mother still survives, with the following named children: Madeline, wife of Perry Shields, a farmer; Louisa, who married A. J. Willcoxon, a farmer in Liverpool Township, Fulton County; Elizabeth, wife of John W. Boyd, of Lewistown, Ill.; Charlotte, who married W. H. Quigley, a farmer; Marvin H., a farmer in Lewistown Township, who married Iva Chapman; Henry S., a sketch of whom appears in this work, and Jennie, who was married September 19, 1905, to Erle C. Gillam, a grocer of Lewistown, Ill. The mother of this family is a daughter of Jonathan and Sarah A. (Duckworth) Ewers. Her father was a native of Virginia and her mother of Ohio.

On political issues Mr. Bordner was arrayed on the side of the Democratic party, although he steadfastly refused to become a candidate for office. In his dealings with his fellowmen he was always fair and honorable, and he wronged no one intentionally. Socially he won and retained the cordial esteem of all. As a financier he was clear-headed, conservative and sagacious, and his counsel in matters of business was often sought.

The subject of the foregoing memoir passed from this life March 27, 1905, and his death was widely and sincerely lamented.

BOWEN, John H.—In John H. Bowen is found a sample of that material which has brought Fulton County into the limelight as a prosperous agricultural center. Endowed with average ability and backed by shrewd business judgment and determination, this young farmer has worked his way to the ownership of a farm of 160 acres on Section 36, Farmer Township, which he purchased in March, 1904, and which he is devoting to general farming and stockraising. Although his occupancy is of comparatively recent date, there are indications of his progressive methods on every hand and of a struggle to attain to the best thus far achieved in agricultural science. Mr. Bowen has a special leaning toward high-grade stock, and is proud of his noble Norman horses and blooded cattle.

The third generation of his family to till the soil of Fulton County, Mr. Bowen was born in Johnson County, Iowa, December 10, 1869, a son of Evan and Eliza (Fry) Bowen and grandson of David Bowen. David Bowen emigrated from the picturesque, shut-in country of Wales, settling in Licking County, Ohio, where his son Evan was born and from where he eventually journeyed overland to Fulton County, making his home for a year on the old Peter Borden farm. He then purchased a farm south of where Orenson Pearce lives, and lived thereon until his death in 1855. In 1859 Evan Bowen moved from Illinois to Johnson County, Iowa, where he married and where, in 1861, he enlisted for the Civil War in an Illinois regiment. He served during the greater part of the war, participating in its greatest battles and finally being honorably discharged after meritorious work as a private. Coming to the old homestead of his father in Fulton County after the war, he assumed the responsibilities of its management as the oldest son in the family, remaining until 1867, when the second oldest son attained his majority. He then returned to Johnson County, Iowa, and engaged in farming until selling his property in 1876, when he returned to Fulton County and bought the old Bowen homestead, which still is occupied by his wife. Mr. Bowen died on this farm May 31, 1903, leaving behind him a host of friends and a reputation second to none for integrity and general worth. He was one of nature's noblemen, a lover of right for right's sake, a loyal friend and an exemplary husband and father. All who passed his way were better for having known him. Genial, fond of a joke at his own or another's expense, the friend and admirer of a good horse, and, above all, a believer in the sanctity of the home and the co-operation of all its members, he left little to be desired as men are rated in these times of selfishness and uncertainty. Of his two children David is a dentist in Sargent, Neb., and John H. is a farmer of Farmer Township, Fulton County.

At the age of twenty-three years John H. Bowen married, on February 1, 1893, Laura E. Smith, a native of Lewistown Township, a daughter of Snowden Smith and granddaughter of William W. Smith, mention of whom may be found in another part of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Bowen have a daughter, Zula, born in Lewistown Township, March 10, 1894. For nine years after his marriage Mr. Bowen operated the Jacob Prickett farm north of Lewistown, and in 1901 managed a farm in Buckheart Township, returning to Lewistown in 1903. The following year he bought his present home, upon which he hopes to realize his wholesome and meritorious ambitions. Mr. Bowen has the respect and good will of all who know him, and the impression is current that he will become one of the foremost and most substantial agriculturists of the community.

BOWLES, James H., Jr., who maintains a high standing among the substantial farmers of Astoria Township, Fulton County, Ill., where he is the owner of a fine farm in Section 15 and who, although having exceeded the Psalmist's limit of three-score and ten years, is still in the undiminished enjoyment of sound physical and mental faculties, was born in Hancock, Washington County, Md., July 19, 1835, a son of James H. and Martha (Swope) Bowles, natives of Maryland. His mother's parents came to the United States from Germany at an early period. His father had been previously married to a Miss Johnson, who bore him one child. The elder Bowles had two brothers, one of whom, William, was a soldier in the War of 1812. After the conclusion of that conflict he made his way westward to the frontier, where he spent the rest of his life among the Indians, acting as an interpreter. The other brother also journeyed to the then Far West and settled in Kentucky. James H. Bowles, Sr., remained in Maryland and carried on farming in Washington County in that State until his death. His union with Martha Swope resulted in eight children, of whom only James H., Jr., and three of his sisters survive. The names of the children were as follows: Ellen, widow of Brook Taney, a nephew of former Chief Justice Taney, of Maryland; Mary, wife of Joseph Thrasher, of Kansas City, Mo.; Susan, whose home is in California; Samuel, who died in Hancock, Md., leaving three sons; James H., William, who died without issue, and two others.

James H. Bowles was reared on a farm in his native State, where in youth he enjoyed the advantages of the district schools. When about twenty years of age he took leave of the scenes of his childhood and proceeded by direct journey to Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., whence, after sojourning a short time, he made a trip westward. On his return he located near the village of Vermont, rented land and applied himself to farming. The first piece of land purchased by him was situated northwest of Vermont Township, in Eldorado Township, McDonough County, Ill., where he succeeded in developing a fine farm. There he followed his wonted occupation until 1893, when he sold the property and bought 180 acres in Section 15, Astoria Township, Fulton County. On his present farm he made many fine improvements and established a record as one of the most thorough, systematic and successful farmers in that locality.

On May 2, 1867, Mr. Bowles was united in marriage with Amanda Elgin, a native of Illinois, whose birthplace was in Astoria. Four sons were the offspring of this union, as follows: Charles H. and William A., lawyers, and members of the firm of Bowles & Bowles with offices in the Ashland Block, Chicago; Samuel, who supervises the management of the old home farm, and James Earl, who is also engaged in the practice of law. The mother of this family died November 23, 1903. She was a most faithful and devoted helpmate of her husband and was most tender, considerate and solicitous in the care of her children, all of whom she was graciously permitted to see grow up to useful and reputable manhood. For many years she was a consistent and earnest member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, to which her husband also belongs. Her life was hallowed by good deeds, and she is held in cherished and lasting remembrance.

Mr. Bowles still retains a lively and discriminating interest in public affairs, and the welfare of the community is with him an object of especial desire. Politically he is a supporter of the Democratic party. The cause of church and school advancement has always found in him an unflinching friend, as also have all institutions of charity.

BOYD, Hobart S., a well-known attorney-at-law and formerly City Attorney of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born and reared in Lewistown, his birth having occurred October 17, 1876. He is a son of the late Hon. Thomas A. Boyd, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Boyd was a pupil in the Lewistown High School, from which he was graduated with the class of 1893. In that year he began the study of law in the office of Judge Edwards, continuing thus until the fall of 1895, when he became a student in the Illinois State University at Champaign, graduating with the class of 1900. In November of that year he established himself in the practice of his profession in his native place and where he has spent his life.

In politics Mr. Boyd is a Republican. In 1903 he was elected on the Citizens' ticket City Attorney of Lewistown, and on the expiration of his term in 1905 was elected a Justice of the Peace. He is also Master in Chancery of the Circuit Court of Fulton County, having been appointed in May, 1905, for two years by Judge Gray.

The subject of this sketch acquitted himself with notable credit in the office of City Attorney, and has demonstrated his capacity as a faithful and competent magistrate and official in chancery proceedings. The beginning of his professional life gives promise of a successful and useful career. Mr. Boyd is a member of the Kenneth Lodge, No. 146, K. of P., of which he is a Past Chancellor.

BOYD, Hon. Thomas A. (deceased), formerly one of the leading lawyers of Fulton County, Ill., a sound jurist and a civic character of high repute beyond his State, was born in Adams County, Pa., June 25, 1830. His boyhood was spent in mingled work and study and he graduated from Marshall College, Mercersburg, Pa., in 1848. He then studied law at Chambersburg, Pa., and was admitted to the bar at Bedford, Pa., where he was engaged in the practice of his profession. In 1856 he came west and located in Galesburg, Ill., whence in 1858 he came to Lewistown and became a member of the law firm of Goudy, Judd & Boyd. Mr. Goudy afterward retired and the firm became Judd, Boyd & James.

On May 13, 1861, Mr. Boyd enlisted in the Seventeenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he became First Lieutenant and was promoted to be Captain, May 20, 1861, as such being mustered into service May 25, 1861. On account of ill health he resigned his commission April 24, 1862. The life of Thomas Boyd fills a large and conspicuous space in the history of Fulton County. For many years he was one of the foremost men on the forum, at the bar, on the bench, and as State and National Representative. By strict integrity and a keen sense of professional honor he won and retained the confidence of the people, and his intellectual force commanded attention in addressing court or jury. His imposing presence and earnest utterances always inspired respect.

On September 17, 1862, Mr. Boyd was united in marriage with Laura James, a native of Washington, D. C. This union resulted in eight children, two of whom died in infancy. Those surviving are as follows: John W., who is in the clothing and dry goods business in Lewistown; Thomas A., of Beaver City, Neb.; Mary C., wife of E. C. Miles, of Lewistown; Lawrence J., Assistant Postmaster of Lewistown; Margaret L. and Hobart S.

In politics Mr. Boyd was a strong and leading Republican. He was elected to the Illinois State Senate in 1866 and re-elected in 1868 and again re-elected in 1870, serving until 1872, during three sessions of the General Assembly. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1876, and the November following was elected a Representative in Congress from the Ninth Congressional District, and re-elected in 1878. As a member of the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses he gave evidence of his broad and forceful mentality which made him a recognized leader. In 1882 he was elected County Judge of Fulton County and re-elected in 1886. In the discharge of all the important trusts committed to him by the people, Judge Boyd manifested the same eminent ability and unswerving integrity and his name is indelibly impressed on the development of his section of the State.

BOYER, Jonas (deceased), formerly a prominent and substantial citizen of Ipava, Fulton County, Ill., who died December 28, 1901, was born in York, Pa., November 24, 1823, the son of Daniel Boyer, who was of Quaker ancestry. Henry Boyer, the first of the family who came to America, was a Hollander, who became a member of the colony of William Penn, and settled in Philadelphia about the time of the founding of that city.

Jonas Boyer enjoyed more than ordinary educational advantages for those days, as his father sent him to school at Harrisburg. In youth and early manhood he assisted his father in the work of the farm, and subsequently engaged in agricultural pursuits in his own behalf. During the Civil War his property was taken and destroyed by a detachment of General Lee's army and soon afterward, in the fall of 1864, the family removed to Lewistown, Ill., then the terminal of the railroad. For about a year they lived in the vicinity of Summum, Fulton County, and subsequently moved to a point just south of Ipava, in the same county, where Mr. Boyer purchased a homestead, on which he lived until 1885. He then moved to Ipava, where he resided until his death. He was a zealous and devout Christian. Sober, industrious and upright, loving the right and detesting the wrong, he lived a most useful and beneficent life and was respected and honored by all. The companion of his joys and sorrows still survives to reap the results of his toil and their conscientious care in rearing a family of children, who have developed into worthy and dutiful men and women.

On November 16, 1848, Mr. Boyer was united in marriage with Susan Roth, and their union resulted in the following children, namely: Samuel A. and I. R., of Kansas City, Mo.; William H., of Lewistown, Ill., a sketch of whose life appears in this work; Charles J., of Chicago; Rebecca (Mrs. Manhartz), who died April 20, 1905; Mrs. B. E. Fisk, of Kansas City, Mo., and Katherine, who is with her mother. Besides these the first and second children, Samuel Fitz and Emanuel R., are both deceased, the latter having gained a national reputation as a teacher. At the time of his death he was the assistant of Superintendent Andrews, of the Hyde Park (Ill.) High School. While a student at Harvard University he devoted his especial attention to biology, on which he prepared a brochure and manual, the latter being now in use in the Chicago schools.

BOYER, Oscar J.—The career of Oscar J. Boyer is strongly entrenched in the history of the jurisprudence of Fulton County. The city of Canton, which witnessed the beginning of his professional career in the fall of 1882, offered a promising field for the young man of twenty-one, and the citizens who have watched his uprising have never had cause to regret the faith they placed in his energy, enthusiasm and ability. He has grown into its opportunities, has fashioned his resources to its needs, and has reflected dignity, sincerity and genuine worth upon a profession for which he is singularly and even admirably equipped.

Mr. Boyer is a native of Fulton County and was born on a farm in Cass Township, near Smithfield, July 4, 1861. He entertains a justifiable pride of ancestry, more especially of his paternal great-grandfather, William Boyer, who was born in turbulent France, grew to manhood among the events which led to the great Revolution, and when that historic event was at its height escaped by strategy to the United States. Here he found an asylum scarcely less peaceful than the home that he had abandoned, for the country was in the throes of its struggle for Independence, the Colonists ranged on the side of a grim and relentless disavowal of English rule. Espousing the cause of the down-trodden Colonists, he carried a musket during the latter engagements of the Revolution, and eventually settled on a farm near Wilmington, Del., where his son, John, the next in line of succession, was born. The latter betook the family name and energy to the wilds of the vicinity of Zanesville, Ohio, where he married Emma Shaw, of Newark, that State, and thence removed to Fulton County about 1842, his death occurring there in 1860. There were five children in his family: Caleb, father of Oscar J.; John, deceased; Robert, who settled in Warren County, Ill.; Rachel, who became the wife of Henry Byers, of Lewistown Township, and Sarah, wife of James Frederick, of Lee Township.

Caleb Boyer was born on a farm near Zanesville, Ohio, September 3, 1824, and during his active life was both a farmer and preacher in the United Brethren Church. He was a man of great piety and largeness of heart, and was greatly beloved in the various localities in which he lived. He married Sarah Baughman, of Ashland, Ohio, daughter of Jacob and Barbara (Good) Baughman, natives of Newmarket, Va., and early settlers of the Buckeye State. The Baughmans settled in Illinois about 1840, purchasing a farm on Totten's Prairie, Cass Township, Fulton County. Mr. Boyer came at an early day to Fulton County and for years was a useful member of the community of Cass Township. He had four children: Oscar J., John W., Norris C. and Zenia Morey.

Oscar J. Boyer lived on the home farm until his sixteenth year, and in the meantime acquired a practical common school education and a thorough knowledge of agriculture. He did not fit into the latter groove, however, and developed tastes and inclination which had their setting in a more developed community. After a course at the Gem City Business College in Quincy, Ill., he began to read law with Barrere & Grant and at the same time engaged in school teaching several terms. Notwithstanding his extreme youth he passed a creditable examination at the age of twenty-one and was admitted to practice at the bar of the Supreme Court in November, 1881. Upon locating in Canton he practiced alone until 1888, when he became junior member of the firm of Gallagher & Boyer. Unusual ability, great natural resource and firm belief in the best tenets of his profession soon made him a factor to be reckoned with, and in the course of his professional life many of the most important cases in this part of the State have received his support.

In political affiliation Mr. Boyer is a Republican and it has been his destiny to play an important role in the local deliberations of his party. He was a member of the Board of Supervisors from Canton Township from 1884 until 1888, and of Buckheart Township from 1892 until 1894, serving as Chairman of the Board during the latter year. He was a member of the Lower House of the Thirty-seventh General Assembly of Illinois, and while thus representing the people acquitted himself with power and dignity. He is an enthusiastic fraternalist and is identified with the Masons, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. At one time in his career he was greatly interested in the breeding of fine horses, making a specialty of Hambletonians and Manbrino Patchens. He is a pronounced admirer of the noble animal, is invariably kind and thoughtful of his welfare, and perhaps is as excellent a judge of his fine points as any man within the borders of the county.

On August 24, 1883, Mr. Boyer was united in marriage to Minerva A. Snider, who was born in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, January 7, 1866, a daughter of John H. and Jemima (Bowman) Snider. Mr. and Mrs. Boyer are the parents of a daughter, Bessie B. Mr. Boyer is esteemed for his many excellent qualities of heart and mind, for his thorough knowledge of the theory and practice of law, and for a public spiritedness which has ever prompted a sane and practical interest in those measures which tend to greater happiness, stability and good government.

BOYER, William H., a prominent citizen of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., who is successfully engaged in the real-estate and loan business, was born in York, Pa., February 7, 1859, a son of Jonas and Susan (Roth) Boyer, of whom biographical mention is made elsewhere in this work. William H. Boyer came with his parents to Ipava, Fulton County, Ill., in 1864, and was reared on a farm, receiving his education in the public schools of Ipava and Astoria, and in the Illinois State University. After completing his studies he began teaching and continued successfully in this line for five years. He spent two years (1885-1886) in the West and on returning to his home engaged in farming and stock-raising. He moved to Lewistown in 1894, where he has since resided. Mr. Boyer is one of the most progressive and public-spirited men of Fulton County. In the promotion of measures for the general welfare he may be always found among the leaders. For many years he has been a director of the Lewistown Improvement Association. His undertakings during the long period of his residence in Fulton County have been attended by uniform success, and he is now one of the most extensive landowners within its limits. Besides other property, he has more than 1,000 acres of land.

On November 12, 1895, Mr. Boyer was united in marriage with Gay Wakefield, a daughter of Dr. L. L. and Dorothy (Gest) Wakefield, both of whom are deceased. A memoir of Dr. Wakefield may be found in another part of this volume. Grouped in the delightful home of Mr. and Mrs. Boyer as the offspring of their union are four winsome children, namely: Ruth Lillian, Miriam W., W. Wakefield and Gaylord W. Mrs. Boyer is possessed of many accomplishments and is an artist of no mean ability, as is attested by the many pictures from her hand which adorn the walls of the family residence.

In politics Mr. Boyer is an ardent and influential Republican. In 1890 he served as census enumerator and in 1894 was nominated by the Republican convention as its candidate for County Clerk. After a spirited campaign he defeated his opponent by the largest majority received by any candidate on the ticket. His administration of the affairs of this office was able, faithful and highly efficient. In fraternal circles Mr. Boyer is identified with the A. F. and A. M., being a member of the K. T. Commandery. He is also affiliated with the K. of P., M. W. A., B. P. O. E. and C. of H.

BOYLE, Richard P., well and favorably known to the traveling public as proprietor of the New Churchill House in Canton, Ill., and one of the most popular hotel keepers in this section of the State, was born in Vandalia, Fayette County, Ill., March 10, 1865, a son of Thomas and Kathryn (Daly) Boyle, natives of Ireland. Thomas Boyle, whose occupation was that of a railroad man, located in Vandalia, and for twenty years was yardmaster. He and his wife were the parents of six children, of whom five are living. In early youth Richard P. Boyle attended the public schools of Fayette County, receiving a good practical education. His first work, after fitting himself for the active duties of life, was in the railway service as an employee of the Illinois Central Railroad Company. Some time after severing this connection he determined to try his fortunes in the West, and in 1889 went to Nebraska, where he spent the following twelve years. In 1900 he made a change of location, going to the Indian Territory and engaging in the hotel business at Okmulgee, the capital of the Creek Nation. Returning to Illinois four years later, he established his home in the city of Canton, continuing in the hotel business, in 1904 assuming the proprietorship of the Churchill House, situated at Nos. 14-22 South Main Street. For this position Mr. Boyle is admirably well fitted, being a man of keen judgment, thorough business qualifications, genial temperament and cordial manners. He possesses the happy faculty, so essential in his sphere of effort, of mingling freely and sociably with all classes without detriment to that personal dignity that commands respect from his guests. Under his management the Churchill House has enjoyed a period of signal prosperity, and its patrons are unanimous in recognizing the fact that the present proprietor is the right man in the right place. The entertainment furnished by this well conducted hostelry is widely conceded to be equal to the best obtainable in any similar hotel in the State. An efficient aid to Mr. Boyle in this enterprise is his amiable wife, formerly Helen Gallagher, of Lewistown, Ill., to whom he was wedded at St. Louis, Mo., October 6, 1895.

In fraternal circles Mr. Boyle is identified with the Eagles, Knights of Columbus and B. P. O. E., Lodge No. 626. Politically he is a supporter of the Republican party, and although not active in partisan contests, he takes an intelligent interest in public affairs and bears the reputation of being a useful member of the community.

BOYNTON, Vincent Clarence.—The career of Vincent Clarence Boynton is an expression of practical and diversified activity, and in its range has invaded the realms of education, agriculture, politics and society, all of which have profited by the breadth and conscientious which are distinctive features of his work and character. Mr. Boynton started upon his independent life with the advantages of good birth and careful home training. Born in Piatt, Fulton County, Illinois, September 30, 1856, he is a son of Egbert G. and Barbara Ann (Baughman) Boynton, the former of whom was born in Troy, N. Y., July 29, 1851, and the latter near Ashland, Ohio, May 24, 1833.

Egbert G. Boynton was a son of E. L. and Elizabeth (Fancher) Boynton, and in 1836, when scarcely five years old, accompanied his parents all the way from Troy to Copperas Creek Landing by water. E. L. Boynton settled on Section 36, Joshua Township, Fulton County, and lived there for upwards of forty years. He was a man of strong personality, well adapted to the hardships of pioneering, and held many important local offices. His son, Egbert G., developed with the frontier, and through his early industry helped to solve its hard and uncompromising problems of living. The Indians had not yet deserted the hunting ground of their dusky sires, and the smoke of their wigwam was a familiar feature of the landscape. Big and little game made the possibility of starvation extremely remote, no matter what the limitations or misfortunes of the settler. General produce, however, was slow in developing, owing to the timbered condition of the land. Young Egbert assisted with clearing the farm and helped to convert the prairies into fields of wheat and corn. Naturally he sought a wife from among those who were inured to the hardships of pioneer life.

Barbara Ann Baughman came to Fulton County in a wagon from Ashland, Ohio, in 1836, her parents, John and Anna Barbara (Fast) Baughman, settling first on Totten Prairie, Cass Township. Thence they removed to Fiatt, where Mrs. Boynton grew to womanhood, performing her share of the spinning and weaving which were among the duties of the women of that time. Like her husband, work rather than education was the keynote of her youth, yet she developed that hard, practical common sense, without which the pioneer men and women made little headway in the wilderness. Mr. Boynton was a lifelong Republican, but always was averse to office holding. With his wife he was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1880 he removed to a farm in Lee Township, where his long and useful life closed November 7, 1894.

The education of Vincent Clarence Boynton was acquired in the district schools, at the Cuba High School, which he attended three years, and Hedding College, Abingdon, this State, which he attended two terms. His youth was a busy one, and when not in the school room he assisted with the duties around the home farm. During the eighteen years of his life as an educator he was Principal of the Ellisville schools for five years, and he became one of the best known and most successful teachers in the county. Until the spring of 1880 Mr. Boynton lived on Section 36, Joshua Township, and then moved to Lee Township, the following spring locating on land previously purchased in the same township. Since 1895 he has given his entire attention to farming, and now owns 140 acres of land, all under a high state of cultivation.

At Cuba, Ill., December 25, 1878, Mr. Boynton was united in marriage to Sarah Nancy Cruisen, who was born in Bushnell, January 19, 1858, a daughter of Abram and Sarah (Wheeler) Cruisen. Mrs. Boynton removed to Cuba with her parents when a child, was educated in the schools of that town, and not only learned the milliner's trade but engaged in educational work for several terms. She is a devoted member of the Christian Church and represents one of the very early families recruited from the State of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Boynton are the parents of a son, Lloyd Boynton, born October 6, 1879. Mr. Boynton has been active in Republican politics for many years, and has held the office of School Director for eighteen years. He was Commissioner of Highways from 1881 to 1888, Tax Collector during 1896, and Census Enumerator in 1900. At Ellisville in 1882 he joined the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, since that time has held every office in the lodge and represented the same as a Delegate to the Grand Lodge two years. Mr. Boynton is a man of deep and practical scholarship, wide sympathies and large capacity for usefulness. His general worth is impressed upon the history of this county in no uncertain manner, and few of its native sons have worked more persistently and faithfully upon the foundations of its material and intellectual growth.

BRANSON, William T.—The successful management of 880 acres of land in a community where competition is rife and high standards prevail presupposes the possession of a thorough knowledge of agricultural science, as well as of shrewd business ability. When these requisites are met in the head of a farming interest, and to them is added the progressive and inquiring tendencies of the younger and physically sturdier members of his family, a harmony should result as gratifying generally as it is financially. Such a combination of interests is found on the farm of William R. Branson, who, with the exception of a ten years' absence, has spent his entire life on the farm he now occupies in Section 7, Pleasant Township, Fulton County.

Calvin Branson, father of William T., purchased the farm now owned by his son in 1848. The lad had average advantages while assisting to till the soil, and he was reared to habits of thrift and industry. His life has been surrounded by good influences and he himself, in turn, has helped to create a moral and helpful environment. Much of his success is due to the co-operation of a wife of noble impulses and high character. At the early age of twenty, October 13, 1864, he was married to Rachel E. Knock, who was born in a farm in Farmers' Township, three miles northwest of Ipava, this county, December 24, 1842, a daughter of Daniel and Phoebe (Easley) Knock, natives of Harrison County, Ohio. The parents were both of the Quaker faith, and were Fulton County pioneers of 1833, settling in Farmer Township, where the father died at the age of seventy-four. The mother spent her last years with her son-in-law, W. T. Branson, and died at his home at the age of eighty-eight years. Of their large family of children eight are still living: John F. Knock died at the age of thirty years; William A. lives in Rocky Ford, Colo.; Sarah A. died in infancy; Mary J. is the deceased wife of Joseph Price, of Arkansas; Daniel E. is married and lives in Peoria, this State; Wallace R. is a retired farmer of Beloit, Kans.; Elizabeth became the wife of John Russell, and both are deceased; Ruth E. is the wife of William E. Branson; Robert Bruce married Evelyn Hussy and lives on a farm near Havana, Kans.; Jasper N. married and is deceased; Edith E. is the widow of Dilworth Russell, of Wynoka, Okla.; J. Fernandis is in business in Beardstown, Ill., and Josephine H. is the wife of John A. Hoops, of Ipava.

Mr. Branson continued to live on the old place from 1864 to 1869, and that year established an agricultural implement business in Lexington, McLean County, this State, continuing to manage the same for ten years, or until returning to Fulton County in 1879. Ever since he has occupied the old homestead, which has responded with increasing bountifulness to his untiring efforts, its broad expanse producing the most excellent of general produce and the finest breed of stock. Six hundred acres of the farm is in one body, and the 280 additional acres are in Bernadotte Township. For twenty years Mr. Branson was one of the largest breeders of Percheron horses in the county, and in 1884 alone he imported twelve of these herculean helpers of man. One shipment from his farm to Montana consisted of thirty-two head, all perfect specimens and of fine pedigree. No one is better informed as to the good points of a horse, nor is anyone more kindly disposed toward the dumb creation in general than is this large-hearted and successful landsman. His sons reflect his sagacity and appreciation of farming as a business, and happily are so constituted as to take from their time-honored occupation much of the drudgery that used to characterize it. They are alert to every improvement which science devises for the guidance and help of farmers, and are destined to maintain for many years the family reputation for thoroughness of labor and strength and integrity of character. Mr. and Mrs. Branson are the parents of six children, of whom Lulu J. died at the age of eight years; Mary C. is deceased; Lizzie A. is the wife of Dr. E. B. Bailey, a farmer of Bernadotte Township; Lewis C., born September 10, 1874, married Alice Walters, and has two children, Mary and Mabel, all living on the old Nathan Lindsay homestead; Leonard D., born June 16, 1878, married Lizzie Brillhart, who was born in this county January 6, 1875, and has two children—Lena B., born September 14, 1899, and Clio, born November 16, 1901; and W. Walter, born June 11, 1883, married Hattie Mendenhall and engaged in general farming in Pleasant Township.

Mr. and Mrs. Branson are popular in both the country and in the town of Ipava, from which they live four miles distant. Both are active workers in the Free Methodist Church, to which they are also generous contributors. Mr. Branson having joined the same in very early life, induced thereto by his mother, who was devoutly religious. Formerly a Republican in politics, he has of late years been identified with the Prohibition party.

BRECKENRIDGE, John D., a prominent lawyer and present County Judge of Fulton County, Ill., was born in Waterford Township, Fulton County, April 12, 1859, the son of John W. and Adaline (Previr) Breckenridge, acquired his education in the common schools of his native township, meanwhile working on a farm with his father in Waterford Township until he reached fifteen years of age, when he divided his time between farm work and learning the carpenter's trade with an uncle. Continuing thus employed until twenty-one years of age, he then engaged in the mercantile business in a small way, keeping a small country store at Sepo, Ill. (1880-81), and being similarly employed at Bybee (1882-84), during these respective periods serving as Postmaster at both places. In 1884 he accepted a position as clerk in a retail grocery store at Lewistown, where he remained four years, when he became traveling salesman for the wholesale grocery firm of Jobst, Bethard & Co., Peoria, Ill., continuing in this employment from 1888 to December 1, 1892, when he entered upon his duties as Circuit Clerk of Fulton County, to which he was chosen at the election of that year.

While occupying the position of Circuit Clerk, without any previous academic or collegiate training, Mr. Breckenridge turned his attention to the study of law, studying at home and taking a three years' course with the Sprague Correspondence School of Law of Detroit, Mich., and being admitted to the bar of the Illinois State Courts on June 14, 1895, and to the Federal Court at Peoria in April, 1897. On retiring from the office of Circuit Clerk on December 1, 1896, he began the practice of law, also engaging in the real-estate and insurance business, which he continued until December 1, 1906. At the latter date he entered upon the duties of County Judge of Fulton County, to which he had been elected in November previous, and which he still retains. Mr. Breckenridge's parents being in moderate circumstances, and being unable to give him any educational advantages beyond those afforded by the public schools, it is but just to him to say that his legal education was acquired by his own unaided efforts, by the burning of the midnight oil much of the time during his three years of study prior to admission to the bar, and his success has been demonstrated by the position which he now holds by the suffrage of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Breckenridge was married March 20, 1879, at Lewistown, Ill., to Ella A. Bradley, and they have had the following named children born to them: John L., Robert Ross, Mary, George William, Frances, Grace, Elizabeth, Paul, Mildred and Jessie. He is a Democrat in politics, and besides the official positions already mentioned, has held the office of Police Magistrate for the city of Lewistown since May 1, 1897, his present term expiring May 1, 1909. His fraternal relations are with Lewistown Lodge, No. 104, A. F. & A. M.; Havana Chapter, R. A. M., and Damascus Commandery, No. 42, K. T., of the same place; and the K. of P. of Lewistown. In his religious belief he is identified with the Disciples of Christ.

BREDWELL, Yelventon, a venerable and greatly respected citizen of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., whose last business experience in active life was that of a prosperous grocer of that place, was born in Clermont County, Ohio, November 26, 1819. His father, Joseph Bredwell, was a native of that State, and his mother, Elizabeth (Thomas) Bredwell, was born in New Jersey. John Bredwell and his wife came to Illinois in 1836, locating first on a farm near Utica, Fulton County. The father died in 1845 and the mother in 1838. Until 1844, when he came to Canton, Mr. Bredwell was employed in a distillery. Afterward for a number of years he had charge of the engine and boilers in Slausson's distillery and flouring mill, and later was employed in the same capacity in Piper's woolen mill before and after the Civil War. Still later he was in the employ of Hall & Dorrance, and when that firm dissolved partnership he continued with George C. Hall until the latter went out of business. Mr. Bredwell then worked in Piper's woolen mill, next in Brearly's flouring mill and last with Powell & Atwater. He finally established himself in the grocery business, in which he continued several years under the firm name of Y. Bredwell & Son, and in 1891 retired from active life.

On the 4th of July, 1843, Mr. Bredwell was united in marriage with Temperance Daniels, who was born and schooled in Ohio. His second marriage, to Anna Ross, March 4, 1845, resulted in one child, Yelventon, and by his third wife, Martha W. Wormsley, to whom he was married March 12, 1848, he had four children: Delmar, Charles, Oscar and Edgar. In politics Mr. Bredwell is a Democrat, while in the decline of a long life he enjoys the serene consciousness of knowing that he has wronged no man, and has fulfilled all the requirements of duty faithfully and steadfastly.

BRINKERHOFF, S. J.—With the exception of a year spent in Kansas City, Mo., and six months in Salt Lake City, S. J. Brinkerhoff has lived in Avon since 1876. His earlier life was spent in Bergen County, N. J., where he was born on a farm in 1845, and near where he received the rudiments of his education in a little country schoolhouse. A leaning toward mechanics resulted in an apprenticeship to a carpenter, and thereafter he followed this useful trade until coming to Illinois. He worked at his trade after arriving in Avon, and for fourteen years was associated with Mr. Snyder in the general building and contracting business, and during his life as a builder put up many of the most important buildings in the town and surrounding county.

December 1, 1890, Mr. Brinkerhoff established a furniture business in Avon, and a year and a half later bought out and combined with his own the only other concern of the kind in town, which he conducted for some fifteen years.

The business activity of the family has by no means been confined to the head of the house, for Mrs. Brinkerhoff for several years has been connected with the millinery business, and has the reputation of furnishing the ladies of the town with artistic and well-made headgear. Mrs. Brinkerhoff formerly was Sarah M. Yeomans, of Bergen County, N. J., where she was born October 19, 1867. She is the devoted mother of four daughters, of whom Rena is now Mrs. Sullivan; Bertha is the wife of Mr. Sunberg; Jennie is in business with her mother; and Lela is partial manager of the home.

Mr. Brinkerhoff has served on the Town School Board. With his family he is a member and regular attendant at the Congregational Church, is well informed on questions of the day, takes a lively interest in the well-being of the community, and in all respects an honorable and creditable representative of the men to whose enterprise and ability and character is due the present prosperity of the community.

BROCK, Alonzo F.—That mankind accomplishes most in congenial occupations and among congenial surroundings is confirmed anew by the farmers of Fulton County. Greater prosperity, as indicated by large properties, high-grade schools, churches and social organizations, it would be difficult to find in any agricultural community. A uniform standard of excellence and a concerted effort to maintain this standard largely is responsible for this desirable condition. Bernadotte Township claims her share of prosperity promoters, and of these none is better known than Alonzo F. Brock, owner of 480 acres of land in Bernadotte and Pleasant Townships, and of 160 acres in the State of Nebraska.

Born in Belmont County, Ohio, January 13, 1851, Mr. Brock is a son of George W. Brock, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. Alonzo was still very young when he arrived in Illinois, and for a time he attended the public schools while making his home with his sister, Mrs. Cadwallader. He then began to work out on the farms of neighbors, and for fourteen years helped to till the fertile acres of others already successful. He accumulated experience, wisdom and money and February 20, 1879, was united in marriage to Melinda David, who was born in Ipava, February 28, 1858, a daughter of Daniel and Winifred (Baker) David, the former a native of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Brock at once settled on eighty acres of land previously purchased by the husband and in 1881 sold this farm and bought 120 acres on Section 31, Bernadotte Township. To this they later added 120 acres more, and now they own 230 acres on Section 30 and 210 acres on Section 31, the same township. In Pleasant Township a purchase has been made of forty acres on Section 7 and twenty acres are owned on Section 12, Vermont Township. Mr. Brock is engaged in general farming and stock-raising and that he has a thorough knowledge of his business is apparent from the steady increase of his landed possessions. A large amount of his property is under tillage and grain, corn and general produce contribute to a diversified and profitable industry. A gradual advancement in general improvements is noted on every hand, each year having added something to the facilities for better work along all farming lines.

In the spring of 1906 Mr. and Mrs. Brock having turned the management of their land over to their sons, removed from the old homestead to a place just south of Ipava, on Section 7, Pleasant Township. Here, after twenty-seven years of wedded life and a half-century or more of association with Fulton County, they may be regarded as one of the couples who have achieved an enviable success. Of their eight children Daniel D. was born January 10, 1882; William W., September 12, 1883; Lauren, January 3, 1885; Laura Mabel, November 24, 1888; Lela D., June 6, 1893; Miner W., February 27, 1895, and Glenn A., July 14, 1901. One child died in infancy. The Brock family are among the liberal minded and highly moral element of the community. Dr. Brock is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his wife subscribes to the faith of the Society of Friends. They have reared their children to honorable and useful man and womanhood. Mr. Brock never has sought official recognition, but his vote invariably indorses the principles of the Republican party.

BROCK, Benjamin F., who is one of the most extensive and prosperous farmers in Fulton County, is not of that type who has had fortune and property thrust upon him by inheritance and, perhaps, increased it by careful management. His large competency, his valuable properties in Farmer and Bernadotte Townships and his high and substantial standing as a citizen, have been acquired by individual force of character, by industry, perseverance and intelligent effort, founded upon the strictest honor. Starting as a simple renter of land about forty years ago, he is now the owner and active operator of 680 acres of as fine land on the whole as can be found in Fulton County. Notwithstanding this noteworthy success, Mr. Brock has the modesty and the fairness, prompted by gratitude and affection, to attribute much of his good fortune to the inspiring love and unselfish assistance of his deceased wife.

The subject of this sketch is a native of the Buckeye State, born in Belmont County September 4, 1846, a son of George Washington and Eliza (Haynes) Brock. The father was of English and the mother of German descent. The father of Benjamin F. Brock, with his family, migrated from Belmont County, Ohio, to Fulton County in 1853, remaining there until the fall of 1858. His wife died in 1854 and four years later he removed with his family to Franklin County, Kan., married again in Illinois about 1856 and died in Kansas in 1859. The step-mother remained in Kansas, and was married a second time.

Benjamin F. Brock has had three brothers and three sisters, four of whom, including himself, are yet living: Jessie is a resident of Bushnell, Ill.; Alonzo A. is a farmer of Bernadotte Township; Mary Jane, the widow of Thomas Cadwallader, is living in Chandler, Okla. After the death of his father Benjamin F. remained in Kansas until 1863, when he returned to Ipava, Fulton County, and went to work by the month. On November 30, 1865, he was married to Susan C. Cadwallader, a daughter of Isaac A. and Sarah (Ackerson) Cadwallader. His wife was a native of Vermont Township, and after their marriage the husband rented a farm in that township for the special cultivation of grain. This land he cultivated successfully until 1877, when he purchased the Seitchfield farm of 150 acres in Farmer Township. At that time the property was in rather poor condition, but in 1878 he located upon it and commenced the careful cultivation of the land and the introduction of general improvements. This was the beginning of his independence and prosperity as a farmer and a citizen, for to that original 150 acres he has added other tracts of land and applied his industry, common sense and scientific knowledge of agriculture to the tilling of the soil and the erection of suitable buildings for the care of crops, stock and utensils until at the present time his 680 acres in Farmer and Bernadotte Townships represent well developed, valuable properties.

This large tract has all been cleared with the exception of about thirty acres of timber land. Until the death of his wife, April 17, 1900, Mr. Brock made the original farm, which he thoroughly improved, the family homestead.

Mrs. Benjamin F. Brock was at the time of her death a member of the Presbyterian Church and in every relation of life a Christian lady. For eighteen years prior to her death she was a great sufferer, but bore her affliction with a patience and fortitude which came of a faith in the hereafter. She was a most lovable character, a good and faithful wife and mother, kind, even to the point of being indulgent, but never unjust or weak. She was an inspiration and a guidance alike to her children and her husband.

To Mr. and Mrs. Brock were born three children, namely: Benjamin Franklin, Jr., born December 29, 1866, married Annie Martin December 27, 1888, and is the father of four children, Benjamin, Clinton, Mary and Threll; Meredith C., who was born April 23, 1870 and who married Essie Shield, of Canton, has no children, and Parmelia May, born June 9, 1875, married Walter P. Fink, a resident of Canton, Ill., December 26, 1895, and is the mother of three children, Madeline, Lyle B. and Dorothy May.

The elder son, Benjamin F., Jr., is a farmer of Bernadotte Township, and Meredith C. is on the home farm, where in conjunction with his father he is extensively engaged in feeding stock both summer and winter.

A resume of the life of Benjamin F. Brock indicates that, with the exception of a few years spent in Kansas during his boyhood and youth, he has been a resident of Fulton County since 1853, and that since 1865, the year of his marriage, his home has been in Farmer and Vermont Townships. For forty-one years he has taken an active part in the development of that portion of the county, and there is no event in his life during that long period which has not increased the esteem and honor which attach to useful and honorable actions. In politics he has been a consistent Republican. He is a Mason in high standing, being at present Master of the Ipava Lodge. Mr. Brock is also popular as well as successful, and has been called upon to fill various township offices of trust and responsibility.

BROCK, Jesse F.—By dint of natural ability and perseverance Jesse F. Brock has won an enviable place among the agriculturists and stock-raisers of Fulton County. This enthusiastic young landsman is a great admirer of the Central West, and although he has traveled to other well favored sections of the country, maintains unshaken loyalty to the prairies where he was born in Vermont Township, Fulton County, December 29, 1866. The son of B. F. Brock, for years a well-known resident of this part of the State, he was educated in the district schools, and in his youth shared the usual diversions and tasks of the well born country lad. In order to overcome a serious throat trouble which threatened him in 1886, at the age of twenty, Mr. Brock went to Colorado and for two years reveled in the splendid climate and amid the interesting scenery of the Golden State. Returning home during the winter of 1888 in perfect health and splendid spirits, he helped his father about the place until his marriage, December 27, 1888, to Annie E. Martin, and thereafter started housekeeping on his present farm in Farmer Township, which he rented for six years. In 1895 he moved to the Donaldson farm of 340 acres near the village of Bernadotte, and in 1904 invested his earnings in 160 acres of the old Harmon Martin farm, which had been patented to the latter by the Government in pioneer times. This farm furnishes evidences of long and careful cultivation, and is one of the most desirable tracts of land in the township. The present owner is especially interested in high-grade stock and his equipment includes Polled Angus cattle—which he prefers to Herefords or Short-horns—Chester White and Poland China hogs and Percheron horses. He has demonstrated the desirability of blue grass for feeding purposes and has evolved several practical and progressive theories regarding agriculture in general.

In accordance with the attitude of his family ever since the organization of the party, Mr. Brock is a Republican in political principles, and while never seeking office has been elected a member of the School Board of District No. 130, better known as the Martin district. It is largely owing to his untiring efforts in the cause that the best of educators and appliances are provided the youth of the community. Mr. and Mrs. Brock are the parents of four children: Benjamin M., born May 13, 1890; Charles C., born April 14, 1897; Mary S., born December 14, 1898, and John Threll, born April 14, 1902. Mr. Brock is appreciated for his many manly and noble traits of character, for his excellent achievements as a farmer, and for his genial and hearty participation in all interests which have for their purpose the well-being of the community.

BROKAW, John V.—Of these supreme agencies which mould the tendencies and beckon most persistently to the mind of youth, none exceed in potency the example of those who already have fought their battles and reached merited success. And who shall say that the great lesson in the life of a good and capable man, next to the intelligent application of the forces within him for the benefit of mankind in general, is not the encouragement disseminated by his rise from obscurity to prominence. These reflections are brought forcibly to mind in the career of John V. Brokaw, whose devotion to the science of farming for a quarter of a century won him a competence and a business reputation resulting in his connection, as a stockholder, with the two banks whose judicious and successful management have gone so far to sustain the monetary reputation of the city of Canton.

On both sides of his family Mr. Brokaw is descended from men prominent in the early days of the Republic, and of decided pioneering tendencies. The paternal branch of the Brokaw family had its representatives among those French Huguenots who were fortunate enough to escape from intolerant France and seek an asylum on this side of the Atlantic, presumably in New Jersey, and the maternal branch of Ten Eycke had its good name sustained and its honor advanced by the admirable service of Colonel Ten Eycke as an officer in the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War. The sword cane carried by this able soldier, dated 1773, is one of the prized possessions of his great-nephew, John V. Brokaw. Charles S. Brokaw, the father of John V., was born in Somerset County, N. J., as was also his wife, Jane L. Ten Eycke. The parents married in Somerset County and in 1846 came west to Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., near which city they purchased land and settled on the farm now owned by their son. Here they prospered as general farmers and stock-raisers, and about 1890 retired to the town of Fairview, where the father died in 1898 and the mother in 1895. Seven children were born to them, of whom four sons are still living.

The fifth oldest in his father's family, John V. Brokaw, was born on the old homestead in Joshua Township, Fulton County, December 18, 1857, and received his preliminary education at what was known as the Brokaw district school. He afterward attended Hedding College at Abingdon, Ill., and later Knox College, Galesburg, being a student at the latter institution during the Presidency of Dr. Newton Bateman, one of the foremost educators of the Central West, and one of whose tasks was the editorship of the Historical Encyclopedia part of this work. At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Brokaw began his independent career as a school teacher in Fulton County, and he well recalls this early experience in an old-fashioned frame structure in Deerfield Township, with the benches along the sides of the room and the sun, or rain, or snow—according to the mood of the elements—coming in through the roof. He remained a year in the old schoolhouse and in the spring engaged in general farming and stock-raising, which he continued uninterruptedly for twenty-five years, making a specialty of Polled-Durham cattle. He was regarded as one of the most progressive and studious of farmers, a man whose intelligence and insight brought into his way the most enlightening and superior compensations of his calling, and who established a precedent worthy of all emulation, of dignified, paying, and refined country existence. In May, 1905, he retired from active life, locating in Canton, and since has occupied the old Dr. Howard homestead.

At the Churchill Hotel, Canton, March 4, 1880, Mr. Brokaw married Elizabeth E. Lawson, who was born in Joshua Township, December 10, 1858, a daughter of James and Jane (Morrow) Lawson, natives of Pennsylvania and Sharpsburg, Md., respectively. Mrs. Brokaw is of Scotch-Irish descent, and her parents were early settlers of Joshua Township, Fulton County, subsequently locating in Deerfield Township, where both are living at the present time. Mr. Brokaw is a Democrat in political affiliation, but his political activity begins and ends with the casting of his vote. He is prominent fraternally and identified with the Masonic Order, Eastern Star and Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. With his wife he is a member of the Reformed Church at Fairview, the first church of that denomination built west of the Alleghany Mountains.

A few months previous to locating in Canton Mr. Brokaw celebrated his twenty-fifth wedding anniversary, and at that time received numerous evidences of the good will and esteem which have grown out of the efforts of himself and wife to ennoble the home life and business standing of Joshua Township. Both are socially inclined, and the gathering together of friends has ever constituted an important expression of their naturally hospitable and kindly hearts. Mr. Brokaw is a relative and is one of the heirs of the late Abraham Brokaw, of Bloomington, Ill., who left an estate estimated at a valuation of about $2,000,000. He has hosts of friends throughout the county and his business standing is exceeded by that of no other agriculturist in his township. Public-spirited and progressive, he joins in any enterprise calculated to advance the prosperity or happiness of the men, women and children who come within the range of his environment.

BROKAW, Simon S., a worthy representative of the pioneer farmers of Fulton County, Ill., who is still spared to lend the kindly influence of his presence to the locality, which he has done his full share to develop from a wilderness into its present flourishing condition, was born in Somerset County, N. J., on April 2, 1836. He is a son of Isaac I. and Aletta (Skank) Brokaw, natives of New Jersey. His father was a Major in the State Militia, and at one time (1839) had charge of all the troops in the State of New Jersey. Isaac I. Brokaw traveled with his family by wagon from that State to Illinois in 1839, and settled in Joshua Township, south of the village of Fairview. There he bought a tract of 200 acres of land, on which he built a log cabin, cleared and broke up the virgin soil and made such improvements as were necessary to enable him to obtain a livelihood. On this place he successfully followed farming and stock-raising during the remainder of his life, his death occurring June 14, 1878, his wife having eight years previously passed away.

Simon S. Brokaw was about four years old when he accompanied his parents on the long and arduous journey from the East to their new home. He was reared on the paternal farm and in boyhood received such mental instruction in the primitive school of his vicinity as circumstances permitted. At the age of twenty-four years Mr. Brokaw began farming for himself on what was known as the Kline farm, situated in the same neighborhood, on which he remained three years. Afterward for two years he cultivated a farm of 320 acres belonging to Garrette Voorhees. He then bought from Morris Standard a farm of 177 acres lying in Sections 16, 18 and 21, Joshua Township, on which he still lives. All the improvements on this property were made by him and he was successfully engaged in farming there until the burden of advancing years made it advisable for him to abandon hard labor. Besides his property in Joshua Township he is also interested in other farm lands at various points. On the home farm he cares for about 300 full-bloded Brahma chickens, having raised this breed of fowls for twenty-five years. Since that time his son, John B., has taken his father's place in the general operation of the farm.

On June 25, 1858, Mr. Brokaw was united in marriage with Louisa Beam, who was born in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Brokaw became the parents of the following children, namely: Mary (Mrs. Arions Voorhees), John P., May, Maggie (Mrs. A. H. Wamsleigh), of Chicago; Minnie (Mrs. George B. Wykoff), whose home is in Valparaiso, Ind., and Blanche (Mrs. Montgomery Axford), of Chicago. Isaac, the oldest son, was killed by sun stroke at the age of twenty-one years.

Mr. Brokaw is a man of the highest character, and his long, virtuous and useful career has made him many friends throughout his section of Fulton County, by whom he is regarded with feelings of sincere respect and good will. In politics he is a Democrat and has held all the township offices. He has been an Odd Fellow since 1857 and in 1862, at Fairview, he was made a Mason, being a member of Fairview Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and Canton Chapter, R. A. M.

BROWN, Alexander, a retired citizen of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., whose first experience in that town dates back nearly fifty years, and who has passed the greater portion of his active life as a commercial traveler, was born in the State of New York in 1833. His mother's maiden name was Sarah McDougal, both parents being natives of New York State. There, in boyhood, the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the public schools, and in early manhood made his way westward to Illinois, where, in 1857, he located in Farmington, Fulton County, and was employed as a foreman on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad under Contractor Wheeler. He supervised the work of putting in the "big fill" southwest of Farmington, where the Iowa Central Railway runs under the Burlington line. After completing his labors in that vicinity, he went to Pekin, Ill., and was engaged as foreman for Ross & Dawson, contractors on what was at that time known as the Illinois River Railroad. On finishing his task there he went to Elmwood, Knox County, Ill., and opened a merchant tailor shop, in which he continued until 1859, when he returned to Farmington, taking charge of the tailoring department of Yates & Stetson. After remaining in this connection until 1863, he located in Kirkwood, Ill., where he engaged in the merchant tailoring trade under the firm style of Brown & White. Selling out his interests in this concern four years later, he went to Altona, Ill., where he spent two years. In 1869 he settled in Chicago, and there made his home for twenty-nine years, engaged as a traveling salesman for the paint manufacturing firm of George W. Pitkin & Company, and serving in the same capacity with H. W. Johns, a Chicago dealer in the same line, and for the Kellogg Oil, Paint and Varnish Company, of Buffalo, N. Y. He has retired from active pursuits, and is spending his declining years in leisurely retirement at his own comfortable residence on Vernon Street, Farmington. The career of Mr. Brown has demonstrated his possession of superior business qualifications, and these, in conjunction with a diligent application to the work in hand, have made him successful in his various undertakings, and enabled him to amass a competency.

In 1895 Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Jane Harvey, who was born in Illinois, and they have one son. In political matters, Mr. Brown has ceased to feel an active interest, although he keeps in touch with passing events, and is well informed in regard to public affairs. His religious belief is in harmony with the doctrines of the Presbyterian Church, and his fraternal connection is with the A. F. & A. M. Wherever he has lived, and in all the business connections of his prolonged career, he has been regarded with high respect.

BROWN, Charles J., one of the most intelligent, progressive and successful farmers of Isabel Township, Fulton County, Ill., and a scion of one of the oldest and most highly esteemed families in the county, was born on the farm where he now lives January 19, 1865, a son of Stephen G. and Elizabeth (Shields) Brown, the former born in Hamilton County, Ohio, near Cincinnati, February 5, 1838, and the latter in Woodland Township, Fulton County, Ill., May 6, 1844. The paternal grandparents, Charles D. and Jane (Van Gordon) Brown, were born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and the State of New Jersey, respectively. They settled in Fulton County about the year 1838, locating on Section 20, Isabel Township, and there Charles D. Brown spent the remainder of his life, engaged in farming.

Stephen G. Brown was brought to Fulton County when he was one year old and grew to manhood on his father's farm, receiving his early education in the district schools. He applied himself to farming until the outbreak of the Civil War, when in January, 1862, he enlisted in Company G, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry. Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll's regiment, with which he fought for three years. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Vicksburg and Antietam, and was present at the surrender of General Lee at Appomattox Court House. After serving two years he returned home on a furlough, during which his marriage occurred. After that event he rejoined his command and at the end of four years' service was honorably discharged. In 1865 he returned to the old home and settled on the farm which still belongs to the family, being the property now owned and occupied by Charles J. Brown, whose mother makes her home with him. In January, 1872, Stephen G. Brown, with his family, made an overland trip to Saunders County, Neb., remaining there two years, engaged in farming. It was an unfortunate venture, as the grasshoppers destroyed the crops, and the family returned to the old home in 1874. There Stephen G. Brown remained until his death, July 15, 1904. He was a man of considerable reserve, but candid, sincere and thoroughly reliable. In the advancement of all public measures for the welfare of his township and county he did his full share.

On April 10, 1864, Stephen G. Brown was married to Elizabeth Shields and their union resulted in ten children, as follows: Charles J.; Joseph M., born April 28, 1866, a resident of Lewistown; Eva, born March 11, 1868, wife of August Seill, proprietor of a meat market at Havana; Edith, wife of John W. Wright, of Nevada; Laura, born September 16, 1874, wife of Albert Moslander, a farmer in Kerton Township, Fulton County; Stephen G., a farmer of Isabel Township, born January 19, 1876, who married Minnie Bainter and has two children—

Wm Hanlon

Stanley and Elizabeth; Florence, born October 27, 1879, who lives in Lewistown, Ill., and Bertie O. and Myrtle, twins, born March 28, 1880, of whom the former, who is a farmer in Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, married Carrie Farrie. The mother of this family has been for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics the father was a radical Republican and cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. Fraternally he was a valued member of the G. A. R. and his patriotic service in the ranks of his country's defenders is a most precious heritage for his posterity.

The subject of this sketch was reared to farm life and received his early mental training in the district schools, after which he pursued a course in the Gem City Business College at Quincy, Ill., graduating from that institution with the class of 1889. In 1891 he went to Omaha, Neb., and was bookkeeper for the King Implement Company of that city and Lincoln until 1893, when he returned to the old home and applied himself to farming. He has since had charge of the homestead farm of 224 acres, which has long been the home of the family. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising and is a systematic, enterprising and successful farmer.

On April 19, 1905, Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Alzina Bainter, a daughter of Harvey and Atlantis Bainter, honored pioneers of Isabel Township, Fulton County.

In politics Mr. Brown is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the W. W. Berry Camp, Sons of Veterans.

BROWN, Curtis D. (deceased).—To a contemplative and analytical mind, it is an interesting, pleasant and instructive task to trace through its various stages the career of a man who, by energy, persistence, self-reliance and steadfast adherence to what he believes to be right, has risen from an humble station to the highest position in the community of which he is a member. Such a career was that of the much respected resident of Farmington, Fulton County, whose name appears at the head of this personal record.

Curtis D. Brown was a native of New York, where he was born in 1834, a son of Alexander and Sarah (McDougal) Brown, both natives of the same State. Alexander Brown was a soldier in the War of 1812, in which he served as a volunteer from Washington County, N. Y. In the ranks with him was Mrs. Brown's grandfather, Jacob Miller, both of whom survived that conflict. Mr. Brown's father was at one time employed as a "driver" of one of the cars, or stages, on the first railroad built in the United States, which connected the cities of Albany and Schenectady, N. Y. On this line, which now constitutes a part of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad System, was brought into use the first locomotive engine ever joined to cars in this country.

The subject of this sketch received his early training in the public schools of New York State, and a few years afterward made his way westward, locating in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., in 1856. There he secured employment with Sanford & Barrows, marble and granite dealers, with whom he continued until 1868, as their traveling representative. Mr. Brown then entered the employ of the firm operating the Piper Woolen Mills, with which he remained until 1871. In that year he went to Altoona, Ill., where he was successfully engaged in farming for about two years. Returning to Fulton County, he applied himself to farming in Farmington Township, three miles southwest of the town of Farmington, on a farm then called the "Loomis Place," and since known as the Mrs. C. D. Brown farm, located in Section 16, Farmington Township, and containing 124.67 acres of land. There Mr. Brown remained until 1871, when he purchased what is known as the "Bristol House" in Farmington, built by a Mr. Palmer about the year 1864. It was then considered one of the most finely finished houses in Farmington, being forty by forty feet in dimensions, finished in oak, and containing eight rooms, with twelve-foot ceilings. The house is built of brick, with a large veranda half encircling it, eighty feet in extent. It is located on Fort Street, the main thoroughfare of the town.

In 1871 Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Orena Loomis, who was born in New York and received her early mental training in the public schools of Illinois. This union resulted in the birth of a son, Charles M. Mr. Brown served several years as Alderman in Farmington, and held the office of Assessor of Farmington Township six years, by election, having acted as Deputy Assessor one year. He was the first Mayor of Farmington, and was re-elected, holding the position four years. In fraternal circles he was identified with the I. O. O. F. and his wife is a member of the Rebekahs. Mr. Brown's career was terminated by his death August 20, 1906.

BROWN, Jacob (deceased), formerly an extensive farmer of Isabel Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Ohio, February 24, 1826, a son of George and Nancy Brown, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of Germany. In 1845 Jacob Brown came by water from Ohio to Fulton County, Ill., and on his arrival began working on a farm at four dollars per month. By his industry and faithful attention to his task he made himself so serviceable to his employer that his wages were gradually increased to $15 per month. During this period he had saved his earnings until he had accumulated $250. This amount he applied as a first payment on eighty acres of land, the contract price for which was $750. In the course of time he made other purchases of land until he was the owner of 1,000 acres in Isabel Township, all acquired through hard work, thrift and economy.

On August 23, 1853, Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Priscilla Cornell, a native of Meigs County, Ohio. Ten children resulted from this union, namely: Mary, wife of George Dobson, a farmer in Kerton Township, Fulton County; Nancy, wife of Samuel Howe, a farmer in Isabel Township; George N., of Denver, Colo.; William R., of Spokane, Wash.; Robert E., of Loveland, Colo.; Harvey R., a farmer in Isabel Township; Calvin J., who operates the homestead farm in Isabel Township; Milton, who died at the age of thirteen years, and Frederick, a farmer in Isabel Township. The father of this worthy family died July 4, 1894. The mother, a dutiful and exemplary woman, still survives.

BROWN, Millard F., one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Breeds, Fulton County, Ill., as well as one of the most successful merchants in that town, was born in Tazewell County, that State, February 21, 1848. He is a son of Samuel and Mary (Allen) Brown, natives of the State of New York, the father moving thence to Tazewell County, Ill., at an early period, and there engaging in farming. In 1861 he settled in Orion Township, Fulton County, where he continued in the same occupation during the remainder of his life.

Millard F. Brown was reared on his father's farm, and in boyhood received the usual mental instruction in the district schools of Tazewell County. On reaching years of maturity he carried on farming until 1875, when he moved to the town of Breeds, and in the following years embarked in mercantile pursuits. He established himself in his present location in 1882, and his business transactions have been attended by unvarying success. In addition to his mercantile interests, he is the owner of two fine farms in Fulton County, one being situated in Orion Township and the other in Buckheart Township.

On January 1, 1879, Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Lavina Reed, who was born in England and is a daughter of Robert and Caroline (Jones) Reed, natives of that country. Mr. and Mrs. Brown became the parents of three children: Flora A., Charles and Shelby. In politics Mr. Brown is a prominent Republican and has always been an influential factor in the local councils of his party. He served creditably as Constable, Notary Public and Justice of the Peace for a number of years. He was appointed Postmaster of Breeds by President Benjamin Harrison, and with the exception of two terms has been the efficient and popular incumbent of that office ever since. In fraternal circles Mr. Brown is identified with the A. F. & A. M., the I. O. O. F. and the G. A. R. In personal business and official relations he has always been recognized as the soul of integrity, and is held in high esteem by his fellow-townsmen and all who enjoy his acquaintance.

BROWN, Thomas A., a well known and prosperous grain dealer of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Isabel Township, Fulton County, June 19, 1854, a son of Jacob Brown, a sketch of whose life will be found elsewhere in this volume. His early life was spent on the farm and in attending the common schools of the district in which he lived. After he reached mature years he remained at home, actively engaged in farming and stock-raising. While occupied with the management of his father's extensive land interests he bought and shipped more than $100,000 worth of stock.

Mr. Brown followed farming and stock-raising until 1895, when he left the farm, moved to Lewistown and bought a half interest in a grocery store in connection with C. C. Campbell, which partnership lasted two years. For two years afterwards he was engaged in buying and shipping grain, and then returned to the grocery trade in company with J. S. Stack. In this he continued two years, in 1901 selling his interest to T. H. Barnes. He then erected a grain elevator with a capacity of 20,000 bushels, which he has operated very successfully. Like many others, he has encountered reverses, but by diligent application, perseverance and rigid integrity, has overcome all obstacles and enjoys the implicit confidence of all.

On September 5, 1880, Mr. Brown was united in marriage with Mary Waltz, who came with her parents from Germany. This union resulted in four children, namely: Alice, born December 6, 1881, who became the wife of Ezra O. Smith, a resident of Galesburg, Ill.; Minnie, born May 5, 1883, who is engaged in teaching; Cora and Carlton. The mother of this family died March 10, 1895. On September 30, 1896, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Weirauch, a native of Lewistown, Ill., and a daughter of Martin Weirauch, who is of German origin. In politics Mr. Brown is a Republican and has filled various offices of trust with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. He is regarded as a man of excellent business ability and fine traits of character.

BRYAN, George W.—The historic Old Dominion has contributed many native sons to the upbuilding of Fulton County, and their names appear among those who have maintained its best agricultural and business standards, as well as its best ideals of character and citizenship. In this connection mention is due George W. Bryan, the owner of 130 acres of valuable land in Sections 19 and 30, Harris Township. Mr. Bryan spent his earliest years on a farm in Augusta County, Va., where he was born July 12, 1836, the youngest child of Ahaz and Priscilla (Lutz) Bryan, natives of Virginia, and farmers by occupation.

Deprived by death of the authority and training of his father at the age of two years, George W. Bryan was reared by his widowed mother, who continued to live in Virginia until 1856, when she came to her present home in Harris Township, Fulton County. Mr. Bryan had scant educational opportunities in his youth, but this omission has been corrected during the leisure of his more successful years, and today he is a well-informed and intelligent observer of current events, and a farmer who utilizes the greatest advances of his calling. He came to Fulton County in 1854, and for a couple of years worked on a farm near Industry, removing thence to Harris Township, where he operated a rented farm for six years. He then located in McDonough County, and five years later returned to Harris Township, where he purchased his present farm, upon which was erected his present home in 1887, and his present barn in 1890. He is one of the substantial and thrifty agriculturists of his township, and his property is well improved and valuable.

The marriage of Mr. Bryan and Mary C. Wetzel, of Virginia, occurred in Harris Township, February 1, 1862, Mrs. Bryan having been born August 15, 1842. Of this union there are nine children: William, James, Myrtle, George W., Iva, Newton, Andrew, Leonard and Lina. Mr. Bryan has evinced a commendable interest in Republican politics since early manhood, and for several years served as School Director or Trustee of Harris Township. He is a consistent member of the United Brethren Church, and contributes liberally to its charities and general support. The perseverance and good judgment of years have brought him fair financial reward, and, what is better still, the confidence and esteem of the best class of Fulton County agriculturists.

BRYANT, William M.—Foremost among the qualities which have made the life of William M. Bryant of practical use to his fellow men are courage and faithfulness, evidenced in many ways, but noticeable particularly in his long military service during and after the Civil War. In the town of Bernadotte, of which he is now a retired citizen, indebtedness is felt for his excellent management of the postoffice department from 1903 until the establishment of the rural delivery, September 14, 1905.

Mr. Bryant is of New England ancestry, and was born in Lodi, Seneca County, N. Y., in August, 1838, a son of Aaron H. and Rebecca (Stout) Bryant, also natives of that State. When William M. was fourteen years old, in 1852, he accompanied the family to Fairview, Ill., and the following year moved to Ellisville, in 1855 locating in Canton, where the parents built the home which was to shelter them for the rest of their lives. Of their seven children six are living. The scant resources of the parents threw upon their children early responsibility, and William M., with the rest, received scant school opportunities. He was studiously inclined, however, and a keen observer, with the result that his entire life has been an effort at self-improvement. A natural mechanic, he abandoned mere manual labor to learn the brickmason's and carpenter's trades, at which he became expert, as well as skilled in all branches of mechanical effort.

With the breaking out of the Civil War Mr. Bryant left his work bench to enlist in Company F, Sixty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three months, and at the expiration of his term returned to his home for a short time. Veteranizing in Company D, One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, he participated in the battles transpiring during the period of his enlistment, and upon being honorably discharged, again visited his family in Canton. In January, 1865, he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Fifty-first Volunteer Infantry for a year, and upon the organization of the regiment at Quincy, Ill., was ordered to Camp Butler, Springfield, then on to Nashville, Tenn., thence marching through rain and snow to Murfreesboro, Tenn. After Sherman's March to the Sea the regiment went to Resaca and Kingston, then to Columbus, Ga., where it was engaged in garrison duty during the winter of 1865-6. Upon the mustering out of the regiment at Columbus, Ga., and their return to Springfield, Ill., Mr. Bryant remained behind owing to illness, but finally, in March, 1866, was given a sick furlough and returned to his home in Canton.

After six months of rest in Canton Mr. Bryant purchased a fine team of horses and engaged in carrying passengers between Canton and the surrounding towns previous to the advent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He then rented a farm near Fairview, Ill., and in 1873 rented a tract of land in Eldorado Township, McDonough County, which continued to be his home until locating in Ipava in 1893. In 1902 he took up his residence in Bernadotte, Fulton County, and the following year was appointed Postmaster of the town, his first official position. Mr. Bryant cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, and ever since has been a staunch, if not active, advocate of Republicanism. He was one of the charter members of the local G. A. R. Post at Vermont, Ill., and later was transferred to the post at Ipava. He has taken a keen interest in Grand Army affairs and is a familiar figure at the annual reunions.

In 1865 while home on a furlough, Mr. Bryant married Mary A. Roach, a native of Davenport, Iowa, and of this union were born nine children, eight of whom are living: Addie, wife of Amos Scowdon, a farmer of Industry Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Charles, engaged in the real-estate and loan business in Leon, Kans.; William, also of Leon, and engaged in the livery and feed business; Rebecca, wife of James Mendenhall, a farmer of Pleasant Township, Fulton County; Victoria, widow of Warner Crone, of Ipava, Ill.; Jennie, wife of Henry Linsley, a farmer of Lewistown Township; Elsie, of Canton, Ill.; James, an electrician of Ipava, and Frances, living with her sister, Mrs. Scowdon. Mrs. Bryant died in Ipava, September 2, 1899. She was a noble Christian woman and a daughter of Rev. John Roach. John Bryant, the fifth oldest of the children, died at the age of fifteen years.

BUCHER, Cyrus, Sr.—Among the most prominent of the leading citizens of Fulton County, Ill., and one who is generally recognized as one of the worthiest and most successful, is the well-known head of the Bucher family, which is numerously represented in the south part of the county. The home of Cyrus Bucher, Sr., is located in Section 19, Woodland Township, and during his twenty-five years' residence there, besides building up a reputation as the possessor of all the distinguishing qualities of the highest type of manhood, he has, through diligent and judicious exercise of his personal abilities, accumulated a plenitude of the world's treasures and become one of the largest owners of land and commercial interests in his section of the State. Mr. Bucher was born in Lebanon County, Pa., July 28, 1845, a son of Ezra and Elizabeth (Reist) Bucher, both natives of the same State and county as their son, Cyrus. His grandfather, John Bucher, and his great-grandfather, Benedict Bucher, were of Swiss nativity. The latter's father, Dr. Ben Bucher, born in Switzerland in 1717, came to America about the year 1740 and settled in what is now Lancaster County, Pa. Ezra Bucher, the father, was born May 2, 1818, and died August 5, 1883. He was married to Elizabeth Reist in the county where both were born. She died July 6, 1871. They were the parents of five children, one of whom died in infancy. Those who grew to maturity were: John, who reared a family and lives on the old home farm in Pennsylvania; Christian, who occupies the farm in Lebanon County, Pa., where the subject of this sketch formerly resided; Cyrus; and Lydia, who died in that county. The Bucher ancestors were severally devoted to agriculture and the professions, among them being clergymen, physicians and teachers, and all of them notable for their studious habits. Even those who were engaged in tilling the soil manifested a marked literary tendency.

Cyrus Bucher, Sr., passed his childhood on the parental farm, and in early youth attended the district schools. Being of an aspiring nature, he utilized every opportunity to acquire knowledge during the school terms, and helped his father at farming in the summer seasons. When he reached the age of seventeen years, he applied himself to teaching, and for six consecutive winters taught school in the vicinity of his home. In 1878, having entertained for some time a strong desire to see the West, he made a trip through Kansas, and on his return stopped for a short time in Fulton County, Ill., and was much impressed with the natural productiveness of the farming land there, having had to resort to burnt lime for enriching the soil at home in order to cultivate it successfully. For the next four years his mind continued to be occupied with the attractions of Illinois as an agricultural region, and in 1882, he persuaded his wife to abandon the scenes of her childhood and accompany him to Fulton County, where they rented a house in the vicinity of Astoria. At the outset Mr. Bucher worked by the day, but in the fall of 1882 he bought a farm of 150 acres, which at that time was in a deteriorated condition. They settled down to hard work, and in the spring of 1883 commenced building a small dwelling on Section 19, and otherwise improving the property, subsequently erecting his present convenient and comfortable residence. His career since then has been a continuous and almost phenomenal success. To his first purchase of land he has added at intervals, until he now owns over 1,000 acres. Mr. Bucher is not actively engaged in operating his farms, but exercises a general supervision over them. They are severally occupied and worked by his sons and sons-in-law, and all are in a high state of improvement and cultivation. The following lines were written by Mr. Bucher in the winter of 1904-05 in connection with a photograph taken of the family residence and surrounding grounds:

"OUR HOME, January 15, 1904, as the hoarfrost decorated it; as the artist hastened to get it before the sun changed it—the place from whence our life's best efforts were directed; where God's blessings were asked for and received;—From its windows we watched our children leave and return, day by day, from school and church; saw their plays and amusements; saw love's leave-taking, and welcome home with their happy, noisy broods. At the door the welcome hand given to friend and stranger. Public reign protected us in life and liberty, and brings our daily mail. The horse at the stile takes us on our journey; the wire talks for us; the wind pumps our water; the field gives our bread; the orchard its fruit and the cattle their increase. The home-coming of children rejoice our hearts; daily God-given help upholds us, and the sun of time gradually changes scenes present to landscapes more sublime. Our home: God-given. In our decline how loath to leave, and how anxious to return! Blessed foretaste!"

Hundreds of men have periodically found employment on the farms of Mr. Bucher, especially in connection with his extensive fruit orchards, in which all ordinary varieties of fruit are grown. In 1906, fruit was gathered from 7,500 peach trees, 2,500 apple trees and 500 pear trees. The yield of peaches was 10,000 bushels, and that from a young apple orchard 1,000 bushels.

In addition to his landed possessions, Mr. Bucher is prominently identified with important financial and commercial enterprises in his locality. He holds stock in the People's State Bank of Astoria, and is the largest stockholder in the electric light plant, of the same place. These connections give ample assurance that besides being a thorough, enterprising and progressive farmer, Mr. Bucher is sound, discreet and sagacious in business affairs. Although his fortune has crowned his efforts to a bountiful degree, success has not inflated him with undue self-consciousness, nor perverted the kindness of his innate disposition. He is ever ready to help those who are willing to help themselves, and no deserving person in need is ever turned away from his presence empty-handed. Eminently unselfish by nature, his paramount object in life has been the welfare of his fellowman. In all branches of church and educational work he has always taken an earnest and active interest.

Mr. Bucher has been twice married. His first wife was Barbara Dohner, who bore him two children, of whom but one, Mary, is still living. She is the wife of Martin Wickert, who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Summum, Fulton County. Her mother, who was a devout member of the German Baptist Brethren Church, died in 1870. From the union of Mr. Bucher with his second wife, Leah Gible, also of noble Swiss descent, thirteen children were born, of whom two died in infancy. Those who grew to maturity are as follows: Samuel G. Bucher, manager of the telephone exchange in Astoria; Lydia, wife of Isaac H. Bucher, who lives on one of the farms; Ida, wife of Samuel J. C. Singer, who also occupies one of the farms; Sarah, wife of Jesse J. Bubb, a resident of the same vicinity; Leah, deceased wife of George H. Stambaugh; Annie, wife of Joseph Blickenstaff, who lives near Cerro Gordo, Ill.; Fannie, second wife of George Stambaugh; and Cyrus, also a farmer; Harvey, Lizzie and Ezra, who are with their parents. Mr. Bucher is the father of eleven living children, and has thirty-one grandchildren, thus being a faithful disciple of the Roosevelt anti-race suicide doctrine. Besides the ten surviving children of the second marriage and one of the first, is an adopted son, Edward W. Keefer, whom Mr. and Mrs. Bucher reared as one of their family, educated and started in life. Mr. Keefer, who is a prominent citizen and lawyer of Lewistown, Ill., was thus adopted when a child of three years. Both Mr. Bucher and Mr. Keefer take much pride and comfort in the friendship that has been constantly maintained between them. A portrayal of Mr. Keefer's life appears elsewhere in this volume.

In 1868 Mr. Bucher united with the German Baptist Brethren Church in his native place, and in 1883 was elected to the ministry in that denomination. In 1904 he was ordained an Elder of the congregation of the Woodland Church in his locality, and he is commonly known as "Elder" Bucher. Nearly all the members of the family are members of this church.

The signal success of Mr. Bucher's agricultural and business career is only equaled by his usefulness as a member of the community, in which he is held in high esteem by all classes of people. Finally, Mr. Bucher attributes his success and usefulness to society—not to his untiring efforts alone—but to a faithful, industrious helpmeet, and a family of industrious and obedient children.

BUCKLEY, James B.—Steady application to the development of an idea has brought about the success of James B. Buckley, manager and proprietor of a plumbing, steam and gas fitting establishment in Canton. Mr. Buckley is of Irish ancestry and, from forefathers who tilled the soil under discouraging conditions, inherits an obliging nature and keen sense of humor, which lubricates his working wheels and brings him in touch with the pleasures, as well as profits, of existence. From his parents, Thomas and Rose (Coffee) Buckley, he derives that energy and courage which enables men and women to uproot themselves from settled conditions and stake their all upon the turn of the wheel of fortune in strange lands. The parents came from Ireland and settled in Covington, Ky., where James S. was born, May 14, 1869, and where he received his preliminary education in the public schools.

At the age of nine, in 1878, Mr. Buckley accompanied his parents to Peoria, Ill., where he completed his education in the high school, and thereafter applied himself to learning the plumbing trade with the firm of Kinsey & Mahler. Having become a master workman, he found continuous employment and in time came to Canton, where he established his present business in 1895. In the meantime he has undertaken some of the most important contracts for plumbing and steam and gas fitting in the town, and his expert workmanship, fair estimates, promptness and general reliability insure a continuance of his present gratifying patronage. Mr. Buckley has made a special study of sanitation and never fails to estimate its importance as an adjunct to his calling.

The wife of Mr. Buckley formerly was Nellie Flannagan, a native of Gilman, Ill., and the mother of seven children: Peter, Paul, Bernadotte, Enos, Mathew and Robert. Mr. Buckley is liberal in his political tendencies and casts his vote to the character and ability of the candidate. Socially he is connected with the Order of the Eagles, the Red Men, Foresters and Knights of Columbus. With his family he is a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

BUMP, Barnett J., a well-known and enterprising farmer and stock-raiser who successfully pursues his vocation in Section 3, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Greene County, N. Y., January 28, 1852, the son of Cornelius F. and Maria (Foot) Bump, the former also a native of Greene County, where he was born September 29, 1829. The mother died when her son Barnett was but four days old. The Bump family was of English ancestry.

Cornelius F. Bump settled in Illinois in 1848, locating in Fulton County, of which he was always a farmer and a most respected citizen. In politics he is a supporter of the Democratic party. Mr. Bump's second wife was Mary L. Powell, by whom he had two children, who are living, namely: Heman C., a farmer near Canton, Ill., and Zylpha, who resides on the homestead farm, in the vicinity of that city. The mother of these children died in 1860. The third wife of Cornelius F. Bump was Elizabeth Powell, a sister of the second wife, and this union resulted in five children, as follows: Rosa E., wife of Douglas Saunders, a farmer living near Canton, Ill.; M. Lilly, wife of Martin Saunders, who is engaged in farming in Putman Township, Fulton County; Cornelius, who is on the old home farm; Zylpha, who is also on the old home farm; and Milton Oliver, a farmer in Putman Township, Fulton County, Ill. The mother of this family now makes her home at the old homestead with Cornelius and Zylpha.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the parental farm and received his education in the district school of his neighborhood. He remained at home until about 1876, and then cultivated a rented farm for two years. The farm on which he now lives was purchased by him in 1889, and he occupied it the same year. He now owns 160 acres, on which he conducts general farming and stock-raising, making a specialty of Poland China hogs. His farming operations have always been very successful, and he is regarded as one of the most thorough and substantial representatives of the agricultural element in the county.

On February 28, 1883, Mr. Bump was united in marriage with Sarah Byers, a daughter of Henry and Rachel Ann (Boyer) Byers, natives of Ohio. The former was born in Ross County and the latter in Licking County. When quite young she accompanied her parents to Fulton County, Ill., where her marriage took place. The time of her parents' arrival was about 1840. Mr. and Mrs. Byers had six children, as follows: John J. and Nancy J., deceased; Sarah; Henrietta, wife of Arthur Stell, a farmer near Civer, Ill.; William I., who is on the old home farm in Putman Township, Fulton County; and Martha, wife of Douglas Saunders, a farmer of the same township. The mother of this family died April 6, 1898, and the father passed away February 22, 1899. He was born January 8, 1827, settled in Fulton County in 1848, married Rachel Boyer in 1853, and was one of the well-to-do founders of the county. Mrs. Bump's paternal grandfather was James D. Byers, a native of Ohio, whose parents were from Ireland. On her mother's side her grandparents were John and Nancy (Shaw) Boyer, the latter being related to the Shaws, who are represented in this volume.

Mr. and Mrs. Bump have had five children, namely: Cornelius H., born October 3, 1883, died at the age of four months; Jessie C., born June 10, 1886, who is with her parents; Isaac B., born January 1, 1890, who is also under the parental roof; Clarence E., born March 3, 1893; and Bertha M., born May 9, 1897.

In politics Mr. Bump is a supporter of the Democratic party, and has creditably served his township as School Director. He takes a lively interest in public affairs, and is a warm advocate of claims of the school system on popular favor. He has borne an active part in promoting the progress and welfare of Fulton County, and is highly respected for his worthy qualities of head and heart.

BURGARD, Joseph A., of Vermont, Ill., is a young man of energy and resource, a product of Fulton County, where he was born on a farm in Astoria Township, February 19, 1865. Of his parents, Jacob and Jane (Clotfilter) Burgard, mention is made elsewhere in this work. Mr. Burgard's youth was full of hardship and responsibility, for his father, having died when he was eight years old, he was thenceforward thrown among strangers and forced to shift for himself. While boys of his age were attending school he was working hard on the farms of Fulton County, and at the age of eighteen years he temporarily abandoned farming and was apprenticed to a blacksmith by the name of Lees, of Leesburg. For seven years he followed the blacksmithing trade, and in the meantime saved money by denying himself many of the comforts of life. Up to his twenty-fifth year he had received practically little education. He then entered Eureka College, and worked his way through three years of college work. In 1899 he came to Vermont and engaged in the carpenter business, and in the fall ran a threshing machine. He also bought a saw-mill, but sold the same after having operated it successfully for a number of years.

November 6, 1900, Mr. Burgard was married to Anna E. Wood, a native of Ipava, and a daughter of Oliver Wood, an early settler of Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Burgard have two children: Sarah E., born February 17, 1901, and Joseph Russell, born March 12, 1907. Mr. Burgard is prominent socially and is a member of the Masonic Order and Modern Woodmen of America. Politically he is a Republican and in his religious associations is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Burgard is esteemed for his enterprise and public-spiritedness, and a large measure of success is predicted for him.

BURGETT, Charles L., a well known resident of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., who represents the Parlin & Orendorff Plow Works of Canton, Ill., was born in Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, July 3, 1858, a son of Daniel A. Burgett, a sketch of whose life is contained in this volume.

In boyhood the subject of this sketch attended the district schools in the vicinity of his home and afterwards graduated from the Lewistown High School. Subsequently for a number of years he assisted his father in the latter's mill. Since leaving school, in fact, his attention has been mainly devoted to milling. After his father sold his interest in the mill in 1896 Mr. Burgett continued his connection with it until it was destroyed by fire.

Mr. Burgett was united in marriage with Cordia Simms, a native of Fulton County, and this union has resulted in two children, namely: Frankie L., born August 17, 1885, and Blanche E., born in 1891. Both are with their parents.

BURGETT, Daniel A., President of the Lewistown National Bank, was born in Sharon, Vt., May 19, 1817, being a son of John and Esther (Boynnton) Burgett, also natives of the Green Mountain State. Daniel A. Burgett was the fifth in succession of birth in a family of seven children. Of these William died in Texas; Hiram was a resident of Keithsburg, Ill., where he died in 1904; Caroline became the wife of Pliny Smith, and remained in her native State, where both died; Louise was the wife of Thomas Willmarth, and died and was buried in Hartland, Vt.; Elvira was the wife of Lyman Mosher, and died in Hyde Park, Vt., while Mr. Mosher came to Knox County, Ill., where he, too, passed away; and Lavina became the wife of Josiah Washburn, both dying in Enfield, N. H.

In early life Daniel A. Burgett learned the wagon maker's trade, which he followed for a time when a young man. After the death of his father he left his native State for the West and in 1854 came to Ellisville, Fulton County, Ill., where he remained a year, and then purchased a mill in Bernadotte, Ill. This he operated until 1860, then made a trip to Pike's Peak and, after a year there, returned to Bernadotte, where he remained nine years. Removing to Lewistown, he and his brother Hiram bought a mill. Two or three times he sold his mill interest, but on each occasion he was persuaded to rebuy it, as it was quite profitable. In 1896 he sold out finally and was elected President of the Lewistown National Bank. In this, as in other connections, he has had a successful experience, and enjoys the confidence not only of the citizens of Lewistown but of the people of Fulton County.

On October 8, 1840, Mr. Burgett was married to Adeline Myron, who was born in Randolph, Mass., April 5, 1822, a daughter of Thomas and Abigail (Cole) Myron. Her father was a native of Belfast, Ireland, and her mother of Middleboro, Mass. They were the parents of two children, Adeline and Thomas Myron, of Waltham, Mass. Mr. and Mrs. Burgett have had ten children, namely: Ellen, who died in infancy; William C., born July, 1843, who is a farmer in Isabel Township, Fulton County; Thomas, who was drowned in Thompson's Lake in 1885; Francis, who died in infancy; John M., born in 1850, who is an attorney residing in Chicago; Abbie M., born in 1852, who married Oliver Rice, a farmer in Lewistown Township; Florence A., born in 1855, who is the wife of George Hipp, a resident of Wellington, Kan.; Charles L., a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere in this work; Elmer E., who died in infancy; and Francis C., born in 1865, who is the wife of T. C. Robinson. In politics Mr. Burgett has been a lifelong Republican, and has filled several offices of public trust, among them being those of Alderman and Mayor of Lewistown.

BURRAGE, (Mrs.) Mary S.—Of the women of Avon, this county, whose fate it was to participate in the hardships and deprivation incident to early settlement of Illinois, mention is due Mrs. Mary S. Burrage, who, for a number of years, has made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Louise R. Lockwood. Mrs. Burrage was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, May 7, 1834, and is a daughter of Lewis S. and Martha (Saunders) Picard, the former of whom was born in Ohio in 1788, and the latter in the same State, December 25, 1818. Mr. Picard was a merchant tailor by occupation, but his death occurred when his daughter was so young that she has no recollection of either his personality or appearance.

Mrs. Burrage was reared under the watchful eye of a practical mother, and was trained in the household tasks essentially the province of women. Her education in the public schools was made an important item in her discipline, but her mother unfortunately died ere she arrived at womanhood, and she thus was left an orphan of limited means. On June 28, 1855, she was married to Dwight C. Burrage, and of the union there were three children, of whom Louise, wife of Lewis R. Lockwood, and William E. survive, Minnie B. having died November 23, 1900. Mrs. Burrage is a devout Christian woman, and for many years has been a member of the Universalist Church. She retains the qualities of mind and heart which made her charming as a girl, and which in mature life have drawn to her the lasting esteem of many friends.

BYBEE, John Henderson (deceased), was born on a farm near Canton, Ill., on December 7, 1847, and died in that city May 5, 1904. His family had been settled in Fulton County for more than seventy years, its founder in this section of the State being his grandfather, Thomas T. Bybee. The latter was a native of Clark County, Ky., born in September, 1798, and came to Fulton County the winter of the "deep snow" of 1830-31. He was twice married, the children by his first union being David (born in 1819) and James (in 1821). The grandfather first bought a quarter-section of land and, by means of farming, stock-raising and speculating in lands, finally amassed a property which at his death, April 8, 1872, was valued at $3,000,000.

David Bybee, the father of John H., was first married to a Miss Spencer, and after her death, to Margery Ann Ballard, who became the mother of the subject of this sketch. The son assisted his father on the farm and continued in agricultural pursuits after the latter's death, and at his death in 1904 left a considerable property himself. He married Miss Emma V. Bennett in 1880 and their son, Thomas J., is now engaged in the photograph business. The comfortable family home is situated on South Main Street, Canton.

BYERLY, E. J.—Among the younger representatives of the farming element in Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., few have made more progress in material prosperity since reaching years of maturity than the gentleman whose name furnishes the caption of this personal record, and during such a comparatively brief period few have rendered themselves so useful in connection with the public affairs of his township. Mr. Byerly was born in Virginia on January 6, 1874, a son of Jacob and Belle (Thoma) Byerly, also natives of Virginia, where the father was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and where they spent their lives.

At the age of seven years Mr. Byerly went to live with his uncle in Iowa, and there received his education in the district schools. He located in Fulton County, Ill., in 1892, purchasing a farm, on which he made the necessary improvements and where he has since carried on general farming with uniformly good results. His marriage took place in Union Township, Fulton County, on March 3, 1897, when he was wedded to Orpha D. Richardson, who was born in that township, September 11, 1876. Two children have resulted from this union: Alvah and Claudis.

On political issues Mr. Byerly is identified with the Republican party, and is now acting in the capacity of School Director of District No. 210, Union Township. He is a diligent, thorough and progressive farmer, an exemplary husband and father and his civic obligations are invariably discharged as becomes an intelligent and public-spirited member of the community.

CAMPBELL, John W., a prominent resident of Fulton County, Ill., and substantial farmer on Section 16, Liverpool Township, was born in that county January 20, 1842, a son of John and Jemima (Swearingen) Campbell, natives of Adams County, Ohio, who came to Fulton County in 1841, locating in Waterford Township. They subsequently moved to East St. Louis, where John Campbell died in 1843. The widow then returned to Fulton County and afterwards made her home in Putman Township. She and her husband were the parents of three children, namely: John W.; Mary J., wife of Peter Presler, both deceased, leaving four children—Elbridge, Mary Olive, Josephine and Martina; and Elizabeth, deceased wife of Elias Warfield, of Canton, Ill., by whom she had the following children: Frank (deceased), Martin, Zachariah, Stewart, Charles, Andrew, Annie and Emma.

The mother of John W. Campbell married a second time, wedding Peter Conner, and of their union were born the following named children: Minerva, Lewis, Martin and Jemima, all deceased; Angelina, wife of Thomas Goodman, a resident of Lewistown, Ill.; Oliver, a farmer in Putman Township, and Clarinda, deceased wife of William H. Chapman, of Lewistown. The mother of this family died in 1899, her husband having passed away in 1884.

The subject of this sketch received his early training in the district schools of his neighborhood and remained at home until he was about sixteen years of age, when he went forth to begin the battle of life for himself. He first went to work for Jones Morgan at $10 per month. Since then he has made his own way in the world, and by hard work and frugal habits has acquired a competency. His first purchase of land, amounting to eighty acres, was made in 1892 on Section 15, Liverpool Township. This he sold in 1895 and bought eighty acres on Sections 9 and 15 of the same township. Mr. Campbell has endured the hardships of life in a country in process of development and his comfortable home is the reward of many years of toil and privation. He has witnessed wonderful changes in his long-extended residence in Fulton County, and has always been closely identified with its best interests.

On July 10, 1860, Mr. Campbell was united in marriage with Sarah Jenkins, born in Fulton County, Ill., July 1, 1840, a daughter of Rev. Thomas and Elmira (Stull) Jenkins. Her father was born in Maury County, Tenn., January 4, 1807, and died in Waterford Township, Fulton County, May 28, 1876. In 1830 he removed from Tennessee to Southern Illinois and was married in 1831. In 1832 he volunteered for service in the Black Hawk War, and in 1834 settled in Fulton County, locating in Waterford Township, where he died. In politics he was an earnest and outspoken Republican and filled various offices of trust with ability and fidelity. For thirty-five years prior to 1866 he was a preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In that year he was ordained a minister of the United Brethren denomination, within the folds of which he died.

The union of John W. Campbell and Sarah Jenkins resulted in seven children, as follows: Leonard, a farmer in Putman Township, Fulton County, who married Annie Lyons; David, a merchant at Maples Mills, Fulton County, born November 16, 1862, who married Lulu Ballard; Dolly M., born February 4, 1867, wife of Zebadiah Clark, of Liverpool Township; Annie C., wife of Lawson Bishop, a farmer in Lewistown Township; Flora D., born September 8, 1873, wife of Jacob Pritchard, a farmer in Canton Township; Mary Z., born November 13, 1875, deceased August 5, 1878, and one child who died in infancy. The mother of this family died in Liverpool Township, August 5, 1878. From early life she had been a zealous member of the United Brethren Church.

On March 21, 1880, Mr. Campbell was wedded to Mary Clark, born in Liverpool Township, April 11, 1840, a daughter of Zebadiah Clark, who arrived in Fulton County from Miami County, Ohio, in 1831, locating in Liverpool Township. His wife came from Morgan County, Ind., in 1832, and they were married in 1839. Both died on the old pioneer farm, the father in 1889 and the mother in 1895. Their remains repose in Mount Pleasant Cemetery. Mrs. Campbell was born, educated, grew to womanhood and was married in Liverpool Township, where for nine terms she was a teacher in the district schools.

In politics Mr. Campbell is an ardent supporter of the Republican party and religiously has been for many years a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is one of the public-spirited, useful and highly respected citizens of the county.

CARR, Edward Randolph.—The stable occupation of farming has enlisted the early as well as later interest of Edward Randolph Carr, whose entire life has been spent in Fulton County, where he was born April 28, 1855. On the paternal side he is of Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry, and his forefathers settled in the Quaker State at a very early period of its history. His father, James Carr, was born in Washington County, Pa., October 17, 1808, and married Mary Naomi Reavis. The father was a native of Pennsylvania and the mother was born near Beardstown, Ill., her people coming from South Carolina. The Carr family has been identified with agriculture for generations, and early was established in Fulton County by James Carr, who came to Ohio as an infant and to Illinois in 1829, settling first in Menard County. He came to Fulton County about 1851, and arose from comparatively little to a position of influence and prosperity.

Educated principally in the public schools of Avon, Fulton County, Edward R. Carr became a landowner in his own right in 1881, and since has developed one of the valuable and productive properties in Lee Township. For many years he has been active in the local councils of the Republican party, and from 1884 to 1905 helped to maintain a high standard of education as a member of the School Board. On April 6, 1886, he was elected Collector of Lee Township. In religion he is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On November 20, 1879, Mr. Carr was united in marriage to Mabel C. Chatterton, who was born in Lee Township, this county, April 16, 1859, and six children comprise their family, viz.: Charles C., born November 25, 1880; Lawrence F., November 23, 1881; Lee A., April 6, 1886; Mabel N., July 6, 1889; Nina N., February 23, 1891; and Anna C., September 6, 1894. Mr. Carr is held in high esteem by his fellow agriculturists, and through the application of industry and good judgment has amassed a competence.

CARTER, James I., an energetic and progressive farmer of Fulton County, Ill., was born in the State of Tennessee in 1872, a son of Enoch H. and Polly (Sally) Carter, natives of the State of Virginia. At the close of the Civil War Enoch H. Carter, who served in the army during that conflict, moved to Tennessee, where he established his home, and remained during the rest of his life. He was engaged in farming and also operated a saw mill, and in these occupations obtained a comfortable livelihood. He was a man of very industrious and thrifty habits. To him and his faithful helpmeet were born fourteen children, twelve of whom are still living.

The subject of this sketch attended the public schools of his native State in boyhood and on reaching the age of twenty-one years determined to try his fortunes in Illinois. He located in Fulton County in 1893, making his home at Bryant, and from that time has been engaged in farming. In 1900 he moved to the W. H. McCreary farm, which he has since cultivated, devoting much of his attention to raising cattle and hogs.

In January, 1898, Mr. Carter was united in marriage with Susan B. Trites, who was born in Fulton County a short distance west of Canton, and they are the parents of three children: Mildred Louise, Ethel Sadie and James Harold.

In fraternal circles Mr. Carter is identified with the M. W. A. and the C. of H. He has met with deserved success in his farming operations and is considered one of the most promising representatives of the younger element of agriculturists in Fulton County.

CARTER, Orlie E., a rising young druggist of Ipava, Ill., was born in that place May 5, 1880, the son of W. J. Carter, whose biography appears elsewhere in this publication. He passed with credit through the public schools, graduating in 1887, and during the last two years of his course was engaged as a clerk in the drug store of C. S. Randolph, devoting his early mornings and his evenings to business and his days to study. When he thus finished his course in 1897 he was offered a permanent situation by Mr. Randolph, which he accepted and which he has held continuously ever since, although his duties have steadily grown in importance and responsibility.

Since entering the employ of Mr. Randolph, Mr. Carter has pursued a thorough correspondence course in pharmacy, which, with his long and practical work and his courteous manner, has brought him the reputation of being one of the most popular and reliable druggists in Ipava. He is considered to have mastered his business and profession, and has the full confidence of both his employer and the public.

On August 3, 1902, Mr. Carter was united in marriage with Grace E. Glore, a daughter of C. C. Glore, and herself a native of Ipava. Two children have been born to them: Reitta, born June 20, 1903, and died June 12, 1905; Lucille, born May 10, 1905. Mr. Carter is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a Republican in politics, and there is every evidence that he has a promising future before him, as his past has been honorable and especially progressive.

CARTER, Rutherford G.—Of the notable pioneer residents of Fulton County, Ill., still surviving, or among those who have passed beyond the bounds of temporal existence, the lives of few have been so bounteously lengthened by a gracious Providence as to afford them a retrospective view of nearly four-score years of their own participation in the development of the county. Such is, however, a distinguishing feature in the experience of the venerable gentleman whose name introduces this biographical record, whose life in the vicinity of the spot where he still makes his home spans a period of almost four-fifths of a century.

Rutherford G. Carter was born in Monroe County, Ky., October 11, 1827, and accompanied his parents to Fulton County, Ill., in 1829. He is a son of William B. and Julia (Chapman) Carter, of whom the father was a native of Virginia and the latter of Kentucky, where her birth took place in Adair County. They were married in the latter State, and thence journeyed overland to Schuyler County, Ill., where they spent the first two years after their arrival. In 1834 they settled in Section 26, Astoria Township, Fulton County, where William B. Carter entered 120 acres of heavily timbered Government land. This he sold in 1835, and bought sixty acres in Section 14, northeast of the village of Astoria. All of that now highly productive farm region was then covered with dense timber, and abounded in game, such as wild hogs, turkeys and deer. At the time of William B. Carter's death, in 1882, at the age of eighty-four years, the portion of the county where he lived had been well improved. His wife died in 1839. Both were strong in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics the father was originally a Whig, and allied himself with the Republican party on its organization. To him and his wife were born five sons and two daughters, of whom the latter died in infancy. The former were named as follows: Pascal C., who died in Lawrence, Kan., at the age of eighty-four years; William B., whose death occurred June 16, 1906, at the same age; Simeon L., eighty-two years old, who resides at Friendville, Neb.; Rutherford G.; and John L., a railroad employe in Kansas, living at Lawrence.

Rutherford G. Carter, or "Reb," as he is commonly known, was two years old when his life in Fulton County began. He was reared on his father's farm, and in youth enjoyed the advantages of the primitive schools of that early day. Being strongly inclined to habits of study, however, he mainly educated himself. He remained on the farm until he was twenty years of age, working by the month, and about the year 1847 commenced farming on his own responsibility. The first purchase of land made by him was 100 acres in Section 14, Astoria Township, of which he became the owner in 1855. This farm has ever since been his home. He has always been noted for his good judgment in regard to stock, and for many years was successfully engaged in raising and shipping cattle. The road from Lewistown to Rushville was blazed out in the early days of his experience in Fulton County, and the prodigious changes wrought in succeeding years are marvels which he is wont to look back upon in his reminiscent moods with absorbing interest. His eldest brother was one of those who offered their services to the Government during the Indian War of 1831-32. In 1846 Mr. Carter joined an independent company of troops under Captain Dunlap, of Rushville, Ill., for service in the Mexican War. The Government accepted the company, which was mustered in in October of that year. It performed military duty on the Rio Grande and at Monte Vista, and for three days was under fire at the battle of Monterey. The company served two years, during eight months of which it was on the bodyguard of General Taylor. Mr. Carter was mustered out in November, 1848, and returned to his home in Fulton County, where he remained until 1852. In that year, on March 29, together with four others, he rigged up an ox-team and started for California. He crossed the Mississippi River at Fort Madison, and the Missouri River, to Omaha, at Council Bluffs. On the journey north of Salt Lake City the Indians were numerous in every direction. After 120 days of travel his party reached Plumas County, Cal., and Mr. Carter then went to what was called "Poor Man's Creek," where he obtained work by the day, digging gold. After spending two months in the mines, he took charge of a pack train of forty mules, and, making his headquarters at Marysville, Cal., operated in different directions. In that region he remained until 1854, when he returned by way of the Isthmus of Panama to New York. From observations made on the isthmus, Mr. Carter comprehends the difficulties now encountered by the Government in building the

Lucile E. Leland

Panama Canal, and fully realizes the importance of that great enterprise.

On November 22, 1855, Mr. Carter was married to Sarah A. Hudnall, who was born in Adair County, Ky., and accompanied her parents to Fulton County in 1848. Mr. Carter had built a small cabin on the farm which he had purchased in Section 14, Astoria Township, and in this they made their home. Six children blessed their union, as follows: Gertrude V., who became the wife of John Plumer; James S., who is engaged in farming in Astoria Township; Elizabeth, who married Ellis Bloomfield, and resides in Lebanon, Ore.; Frank, who operates the home farm; Henry H., who carries on farming in Section 2, Astoria Township; and Ella, wife of Henry Farr, whose home is also in that township. The mother of this family died May 7, 1899. She was a most worthy woman and a consistent and earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In politics Mr. Carter is a Democrat. He has always been a public-spirited citizen, and has been active in advancing the interests of church and school, helping to build the church and school edifices in his locality. He has lived a long and busy life, and his declining years are attended by the warm regard and cordial wishes of a large circle of friends.

CARTER, Thomas E., who is successfully engaged in farming on Section 4, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Arcadia, Sullivan County, Tenn., January 31, 1877, a son of Enoch H. and Mary (Lilly) Carter, natives of Virginia, the former born in Scott County of that State and the latter in Washington County. They were the parents of twelve children (ten of whom located in Illinois), the entire list being as follows: Maggie, wife of D. D. Renfrow, proprietor of a grocery and meat market in Cuba, Ill.; Hattie, deceased wife of William Hoard; James I., a farmer in Canton Township, Fulton County; Richard G., a farmer, located just east of Cuba, Ill.; Thomas E.; Angeline, wife of Nimrod Jenkins, a farmer in Buckheart Township; Lewis, of Oregon, Ill.; Catherine, wife of Marshall Drake, who is on the farm with Thomas E.; Abram Garfield, a farmer near Danville, Ill.; Rebecca, wife of James Campbell, of Indian Springs, Sullivan County, Tenn., and George, who died in Tennessee March 17, 1891. The mother of this family died about the year 1885. The father married as his second wife Josephine Fitch, who bore him two children—Ellen and one other, who are at the old home in Tennessee, where he is still living, aged seventy years. On the outbreak of the Civil War he was a resident of Virginia, but although loyal to the Union, was forced into the Confederate army. Three times he escaped and finally contrived to reach Bowling Green, Ky., traveling all night in a stream of water in order to evade the bloodhounds which were pursuing him. On his arrival in Bowling Green, in 1861, he enlisted in Company C, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and took part in all the engagements of that regiment until 1865. At the expiration of his period of enlistment he was honorably discharged and, as well he may, takes a just pride in his four years of service in the cause of his country.

The subject of this sketch was reared to farm life, meanwhile receiving his early mental training in the common schools of his native State. At the age of seventeen years he heeded the advice of Horace Greeley, "Go West, young man," and bade adieu to the hills of Tennessee, arriving in Bryant, Fulton County, Ill., in 1893. He devoted some years to farming, carpentering and mining, working by the month, and in 1898 went to Iowa, Minnesota and Dakota, where he spent about a year. Returning to Fulton County in 1899, he was employed in the mines at St. David. In the spring of 1905 he bought a half interest in the stock farm and implements of Joseph Moran and is now operating 280 acres of land and raises and feeds many cattle. In politics Mr. Carter is a Republican and takes a lively interest in public affairs. He is accounted as one of the most enterprising and progressive among the younger farmers of his township.

CARTER, William J.—Fulton County has profited by the stable citizenship and faithful industry of the Carter family since the beginning of the 'forties. Practically all bearing the name have been interested in agriculture, but their services have been extended also to politics, education, religion and society. William J. Carter, a resident of Ipava and for many years known as an extensive stock-dealer, represents the third generation of his family in the county. He was born at Astoria, Ill., February 16, 1853, a son of William Bell and Melvina (Kierns) Carter and grandson of William Carter, all natives of Ohio. Astoria continued the family home for many years, and there the grandfather, William Carter, died at an advanced age, leaving a large family to succeed to his small competence and maintain his reputation for honesty and kindliness.

William Carter, Jr., father of William J., was in his teens when he came to Astoria, having been born June 13, 1822. In early life he learned the blacksmith trade, which he followed several years, but subsequently bought property north of Astoria, where he engaged in farming until 1879. He then sold his farm and moved to Wayne County, Iowa, but in 1880, disposing of his Iowa property, purchased a farm in Pleasant Township, Fulton County, where his wife died in 1882. She was born August 23, 1825. There were ten children in the family, four of whom are living. Of these the oldest is Lucy Ann, wife of Benton Sharp, of Astoria, with whom her father spent the latter years of his life, dying June 16, 1906, at the age of eighty-four years and three days. He had led a life of great activity and held numerous offices within the gift of his fellow Democrats.

To a thorough agricultural training William

J. Carter, subject of this sketch, added a common school education and the advantage of strength and co-operation which comes of an early marriage as aids to business success. His marriage occurred September 23, 1875, to Ida Isabelle Lovell, who was born in Astoria Township, Fulton County, July 15, 1858, a daughter of Henry and Delana (Robinson) Lovell, pioneers of Fulton County. Until 1879 the young people lived on the old homestead in Astoria Township, moving thence to Iowa, where they remained a year. Their next home was on a farm near Bushnell, and on March 1, 1880, Mr. Carter came to Ipava, in 1881 taking charge of his father's farm in Pleasant Township. From 1883 until 1885 he operated a restaurant in Ipava, and thereafter engaged in the livery business for a couple of years. He then turned his attention to stock-buying and since has followed that occupation, being one of the most extensive dealers in this part of the county.

The Carter home was saddened February 23, 1898, by the death of the devoted wife and mother, a woman of gentle character and great patience, and who reared her children to the noblest in man and womanhood. She was a devout member of the Presbyterian Church and had a large circle of friends both in and out of the church. Of her children the oldest (Delana M.) was born August 6, 1876, married Benjamin J. Stephens May 7, 1899, is a resident of Canton, Ill., and has three children: Paul, born September 26, 1901; William Carter, born August 7, 1904, and Howard Gregory, born June 15, 1906. The other children of William J. Carter and wife were: Lillian B., born March 19, 1878, formerly a teacher and now in charge of the home; Orlie E., born May 5, 1880, married Grace E. Glore, August 3, 1902, and is engaged in the drug business in Ipava; Elmer F., born April 16, 1882, a graduate of the Ipava High School and now a resident of Portland, Ore.; Grover B., born November 27, 1887, is a graduate of the Ipava High School; Martha L., born January 15, 1890, also a graduate of the High School; Jennie M., born January 18, 1892; William H. F., born October 9, 1893; H. Devere, born November 12, 1896, and one son and one daughter who died in infancy. Miss Lillian Carter, a young woman of broad culture and noble tendencies, chose education as her life work, and proved her special gifts in that direction by several years of practical experience in the schools of Ipava. Upon the death of her mother she renounced her cherished purpose and since has devoted herself to the care of her loved ones at home. She is an exceptionally bright scholar, and upon her graduation from the Ipava High School in 1894 won the gold medal for her masterly essay on the subject, "Success in Life the Result of Labor."

CARVER, H. C., formerly a prosperous farmer in Orion Township, Fulton County, Ill., and now living in comfortable retirement in Canton, Ill., was born in Buckheart Township, Ill., February 12, 1845, a son of Gideon and Catherine (Bau-man) Carver, natives of Kentucky and Ohio respectively. Gideon Carver settled in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, in 1834 and bought a farm of 240 acres. From this he cleared the timber and on it he and his worthy wife established the family home. There the parents spent the remainder of their lives. This farm is now in possession of their children.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the homestead and received his early training in the district schools of Buckheart Township. There he remained, engaged in agricultural pursuits for a number of years. He always raised a considerable amount of stock and bred Norman horses. In 1884 he bought a farm of 215 acres in Section 26, Orion Township, where he carried on farming until 1895. He then bought three and half acres in Canton, on which he built a fine home, where he now resides. His son Elmer is now operating the home place in Orion Township.

On November 7, 1867, Mr. Carver was joined in the bonds of matrimony with C. I. Laws, who was born in Fulton County. Their union was the source of three children: Ida M. (Mrs. Seabee), Willard Henry and Elmer G.

In political affairs Mr. Carver gives his support to the Republican party and has served the public as Road Commissioner and School Director. Religiously he is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Carver spent many years in faithful and unremitting exertion and now, while still in full bodily vigor, is enjoying in honored leisure the reward of his extended toil.

CARVER, Jasper P., who is successfully engaged in farming on Section 28, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, was born in that township, July 24, 1857, a son of Gideon and Catherine (Bauman) Carver, of whom the former was born in Madison County, near Lexington, Ky., while the latter was a native of Ohio. Pleasant M. Carver, the grandfather, who was a Kentuckian, moved from that State to Fulton County, Ill., about the year 1822 and located in Buckheart Township, near its northeast border, where he was engaged in farming during the remainder of his life, and where he died about 1885, his wife having passed away in 1865. Gideon Carver was a blacksmith by occupation and was among the first who followed that trade in Canton, where he worked at blacksmithing for several years. He was born in 1816 and was united in marriage with Catherine Bauman, in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, September 26, 1839, and about the same time bought eighty acres of heavily timbered land on Section 28 of that township. His first home there was a one-room log cabin made of logs cut on the land and hewed, with pegs driven in the walls for the support of beds. The cabin had a rude stick chimney, under which the old Dutch oven was placed on the coals to do the cooking. The furniture was hand-made. Many were the pleasures enjoyed and hardships endured while clearing the farm. It was the birthplace of all the children of Gideon Carver and his wife, as follows: John, born August 19, 1841, who died in infancy; James, born April 11, 1843, who also died at the age of eighteen months; Henry C., born February 12, 1845, now a retired farmer, living in Canton, Ill.; Elizabeth, born June 13, 1848, deceased in 1880; Sarah J., born March 2, 1850, wife of Samuel J. Murphy, of Canton, Ill., and Margery E., born November 9, 1853, who is the wife of Frederick L. Fisher, a farmer of Canton Township.

In politics Gideon Carver was a Republican and was an ardent advocate of the principles of his party. He was very public-spirited and took an active part in the affairs of the township and county. He was a hard worker and a man of strict integrity, his word being as good as his bond. His domestic feelings were strong and he loved his home with an intense attachment. He was ever ready to aid the deserving poor, to visit the sick and try to alleviate their distress and to do his utmost in making life pleasant for his friends and neighbors. He had added, at intervals, to his original purchase of land and at the time of his retirement was the owner of 240 acres on Section 28, Buckheart Township. In 1893 he made his home in Canton, and there spent the remainder of his days in comfort. Starting in life with no adventitious aids, with nothing to depend on but his innate probity and steadfast resolution, he made his career a success, gave his children a thorough education and passed to his final rest, followed by the unfeigned regrets of the entire community. He died April 17, 1896, aged seventy-nine years. His worthy widow is still living in Canton, where she is a valued member of the church to which her lamented husband belonged.

The subject of this sketch, born on the old home farm, was reared to an agricultural life, receiving his early mental instruction in the district schools of his neighborhood. Amid these surroundings, with the exception of two years spent in Canton, he has made his home throughout his life. He has taken an active part in the development of his township and has faithfully discharged his duties as a citizen. He keeps on the farm a good grade of horses, cattle and hogs and the place is under a high state of cultivation.

On October 5, 1893, Mr. Carver was united in marriage with Grace T. Dearmond, a daughter of Joseph and Cynthia E. (Johnson) Dearmond. Their union resulted in four children, namely: Clarence D., born November 23, 1894; Verna, born April 25, 1889; Vada, born June 10, 1901, and Jessie, born February 7, 1905. In politics Mr. Carver is an unwavering Republican, and has steadfastly upheld the principles of Abraham Lincoln. He has held the office of School Director for nine consecutive years and devotes careful attention to the maintenance of the school system in accordance with a high standard of efficiency. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P. of St. David.

Mr. Carver has inherited in a marked degree the genial and hospitable traits of his lamented father, and his cheery social disposition makes his home most pleasant and attractive to a large circle of friends.

CASH, Elijah.—Since assuming the management of a farm of 320 acres on Sections 12 and 14, Vermont Township, in 1901, Elijah Cash has secured excellent financial results and has evidenced a broad knowledge of agricultural science. Many years of practical experience contribute to his agricultural equipment, and his entire life has been spent in the free and independent atmosphere of the country. Born in Pike County, Ohio, January 18, 1852, he was reared on the farm of his parents, Charles and Charlotte (James) Cash, both of whom came to Pike County as children with their parents, the former from Virginia and the latter from North Carolina. When Elijah was five years old, in 1857, he was taken by his parents to Clay County, Ill., a journey which still lingers in his memory, where the mother died in 1876, and the father in 1879. Charles Cash was a hard worker and good manager, in politics a Republican and in religion a member of the Christian Church. Of the twelve children in his family three are living: Elizabeth, widow of John W. Creek, the latter having been a soldier in the Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Samuel and Henry Cash, residents of Clay County, Ill., also soldiers for three years during the Civil War in the same regiment as Mr. Creek.

Until his eighteenth year the services of Elijah Cash were given to the home farm, but he then began to work for outsiders by the month and in 1882 came to McDonough County, where he was in the employ of H. S. Leighty for seven years. In 1894 he purchased the interest of a Mr. Miles in the Gilliland farm, south of Vermont, Fulton County, and in 1901 took charge of the farm he is now managing on the co-operative plan. He is an extensive feeder and shipper of live stock, averaging from 150 to 250 hogs and 100 head of cattle a year. He makes a specialty of the Jersey hog and of Shorthorn cattle besides raising general produce.

July 15, 1875, Mr. Cash married Sarah A. Jewison, daughter of Thomas and Mary A. (Robinson) Jewison, natives of Yorkshire, England. Mr. and Mrs. Jewison were married in Yorkshire, England, April 1, 1852, and the following day set sail for America, coming direct to Albion, Edwards County, Ill. They removed to Clay County in 1854, and there followed farming on a large scale until the death of Mr. Jewison, in November, 1872. Mrs. Jewison resides at present in Rinard, Wayne County, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Cash are the parents of the following named children: Elmer Arvin, born in September, 1876, a farmer of Eldorado Township, McDonough County, who married Sophia Emigg; Hattie May, born July 29, 1878, wife of Charles Mercer, of Vermont Township, Fulton County; Walter Thomas, born March 20, 1881, married Norine Frazer, of Scotland Township; Charles F., born July 12, 1882; George Franklin, born September 5, 1885, married Hila Lindsey, and lives in Scotland Township, McDonough County. Mr. Cash is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Masons and Modern Woodmen of America. He is an industrious and level-headed landsman, honorable in all of his dealings, and particularly adapted to tenant farming.

CASPER, Wilbur.—Among the worthy farmers of Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., whose industry, perseverance and frugality have brought them into comfortable circumstances, is Wilbur Casper, a son of John C. and Laura (Hoag) Casper, natives of Illinois, the mother's birthplace being in the vicinity of Monmouth, Warren County. John C. Casper was a blacksmith by trade, and followed that occupation in Smithfield, Fulton County, for a number of years. In boyhood the subject of this sketch studied the customary lessons of the district schools of his neighborhood, and since attaining his majority has been continuously engaged in farming. He is the owner of 243 acres of excellent land, which he keeps under thorough culture. His farming operations are careful, diligent and systematic, and have been rewarded by favorable results. All the improvements on his property have been made by himself.

The marriage of Mr. Casper occurred in 1876, when he was wedded to Mary Alice White, who was born in Cass Township, Fulton County, a daughter of Thomas and Esther (Norris) White. Her father was a native of Illinois, and her mother's birthplace was Pennsylvania. They settled in Fulton County at an early period, where the father carried on farming. Mr. and Mrs. Casper became the parents of four children, namely: Lola E., Olive, Cordie and Dawson. In fraternal circles Mr. Casper is identified with the M. W. A. Religiously he adheres to the faith of the Methodist Protestant Church. He takes an earnest and unselfish interest in public affairs, and fulfills the obligations of a good citizen.

CATTRON, H. A.—Representing the fourth generation of his family to till the soil of Hickory Township, Fulton County, H. A. Cattron was born on a farm in Joshua Township, Fulton County, Ill., September 21, 1874, a son of Israel V. Cattron, grandson of Hezekiah Cattron and great-grandson of Valentine Cattron, who established the family in Fulton County in April, 1837. Valentine Cattron was born in Virginia, moved at an early day with his people to Sullivan County, East Tennessee, and in 1820 arrived in Washington County, Ind., whence he emigrated to Illinois. Of later members of the family records may be found elsewhere in this work.

H. A. Cattron passed his youth on his father's farm in Joshua Township, meanwhile receiving his preliminary education in the country schools of his township. In 1898 he married Ida Zimmerman, who was born in Deerfield Township, Fulton County, June 9, 1877, and forthwith started housekeeping on the farm of Mrs. Swingle in Young Hickory Township, where he is now engaged in general farming and stock-raising, cultivating 160 acres of land. He is an energetic and capable young agriculturist, abreast of the times and constantly seeking light upon his chosen calling. He is active in politics and has served the township five years as a member of the Board of Education.

CATTRON, Israel V.—Of the three sons of that fine old pioneer, Hezekiah Cattron, Israel V., the youngest, is one of the most prominent and prosperous agriculturists of Young Hickory Township, where have dwelt those bearing his name ever since 1837. Mr. Cattron is maintaining the family reputation for thoroughness of labor and uniformity of success on his farm on Section 35, where he is engaged in stock-raising on a large scale and annually produces many head of Shorthorn cattle and Poland China hogs. He owns in all 400 acres, cultivating all but 160 acres which are managed by a tenant. In improvements he has kept pace with the changes that have been evolved by agricultural science during the past quarter of a century. He has a comfortable and well furnished home, well constructed barns and out-buildings, modern fences and plenty of shade trees, shrubbery, flowers and other aids to refined and progressive rural existence.

Mr. Cattron was born in the township which now is his home September 15, 1846, a son of Hezekiah and Rachel (Alcott) Cattron and grandson of Valentine and Frances (Bohannon) Cattron, the latter natives of Virginia and North Carolina respectively. Until his twenty-fifth year Mr. Cattron lived on his father's farm in Young Hickory Township, when he began operating a farm on his own account in Joshua Township, which he continued fifteen years. In 1884 he moved to his present farm in Young Hickory Township, where he first bought 160 acres, adding thereto until he owned 400 acres. Mr. Cattron's marriage to Jennie Butler, of Pennsylvania, occurred February 20, 1874, and of this union there have been four children: Henry, Mary, Adella and Edna. Mrs. Cattron died in 1890 and on April 15, 1897, Mr. Cattron married, as his second wife, Elizabeth Shepherd, of Lewistown, Ill., and is now living in retirement in the village of Fairview. Mr. Cattron is independent in politics, casting his vote for the man he thinks best qualified to promote the public welfare. He is a high-minded, agreeable gentleman, using his wealth to the best possible advantage and contributing, in character and attainment, to the stability and prosperity of the community.

wealth and diversity of experience beside which that of those active in the beginning of the twentieth century pales into insignificance. If the men of the frontier suffered, they also lived, and their existence was turned to far higher purpose than the mere getting and parading of wealth and its luxuries. In those days a code of honor prevailed which made it possible for a man to borrow money without putting up gilded collateral, and instances were rare in which the debt was not repaid as agreed upon. These, and other advantages of a non-commercial era, are recalled by James B. Cattron, whose earthly pilgrimage has led by eighty-seven mile posts, and who yet retains his faculties and ready access to the great storehouse of his brain.

Mr. Cattron, who is the father of Mrs. Benjamin F. Bedwell, of Table Grove, was born in Washington County, Ind., January 17, 1819, a son of Valentine and Frances (Bohannon) Cattron, natives of Virginia and Tennessee, respectively. Subsequently the family lived in Fountain County, Ind., where the mother died, and later the rest of the family moved to LaPorte County, where the father died at an advanced age. James B. Cattron came on horseback to Fulton County in 1841, and instead of proceeding to Oregon, as he had originally intended, settled near Fairview, where, a few weeks later, in December, 1841, he was united in marriage to Nancy Smith. The following year he removed to Bernadotte Township and built a rude saw-mill on Spoon River, in the meantime occupying a small log house fourteen feet square, without windows, a comfort being used at night in place of a door. The church at that time was five miles distant, and worshippers attended regularly, as that was the sole diversion of the settlers. They were driven to church in carts drawn by sturdy oxen. The operation of his farm and saw-mill kept Mr. Cattron busy from morn until night, but he enjoyed his work, and was on especially good terms with his neighbors. Referring to the confidence between man and man at that time, he recalls having borrowed $400 from Colonel Bronson, without a vestige of security, a fact which would be almost impossible at the present time. In 1850 Mr. Cattron purchased 160 acres of land on what was known as the Ipava Prairie, and to this he added until he owned 580 acres in Pleasant Township. He next bought 1,280 acres of land in Texas, but after he had lived in his Southern home ten years, was obliged to return North owing to the failing health of his wife. Giving 800 acres of his Texas land to his son, he resumed farming in Fulton County, and in all has been thus associated with Fulton County sixty-five years, with the exception of the ten years spent in Texas.

The first wife of Mr. Cattron was born March 14, 1818, died at the old home in Pleasant Township May 11, 1881. On September 22, 1882, he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Smith, who died in 1901. Of the first marriage there were nine children, of whom Frances, Savannah and Wesley died in infancy, and Belle, wife of Benjamin F. Beawell; Mary, wife of Thomas O. Bohannon, of Bernadotte Township; and Rachel, wife of R. K. Bohannon, are living. Mr. Cattron has been a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since early boyhood, and for forty years was a class-leader in the local church. In politics he is a Republican, and one of his ruling passions is a deep and unalterable admiration of Abraham Lincoln. His life has been a broad and useful one, and his serene old age is crowned with the love and respect of all who know him.

CATTRON, John M., for many years one of the most extensive and prosperous farmers and stock-raisers in Fulton County, Ill., and now a resident of Fairview, that county, was born in Fulton County, April 4, 1844. His father, Hezekiah Cattron, also a farmer and stock-dealer and one of the most prominent among the pioneer settlers of the county, was a native of Virginia, his mother, Rachael (Alcott) Cattron, having been born in Ohio. Hezekiah Cattron made an experimental journey to Western Illinois about the year 1832, sojourning for a brief period in Fulton County. He traveled the entire distance on horseback, his object being to secure government land for his future home. In 1837 he moved his effects by wagon to Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, and after staying a short time there went to Young Hickory Township, where, together with his father, he entered a tract of land. His father, however, returned to their former home. A portion of the land (160 acres) was entered in his own name and an equal amount in the name of his sister. On this he settled, making all the improvements, and there lived until his death, which occurred on January 29, 1903. His first dwelling was a log cabin. Ultimately he became the owner of 1,300 acres of land in Fulton County and ranked as one of the most prosperous and wealthy farmers in that region. He was equally prominent as a citizen, filling the office of Supervisor and Collector and discharging the duties of Justice of the Peace for twenty years. His character was above reproach and he commanded the respect and enjoyed the confidence of all classes. To Hezekiah and Rachael (Alcott) Cattron were born four children, namely: Mary Eliza, Josiah A., J. M. and I. N.

In boyhood John M. Cattron first attended the country schools in the vicinity of his home, and after pursuing a course of one year and three months' study at Abingdon, Ill., applied himself to teaching, continuing in this employment eleven years. In 1867 he went to Kansas, where he was engaged in teaching for eighteen months. In the meantime, having bought a quarter-section of land, he returned to Fulton County and taught there for a year. Then going back to Kansas, he taught there two years, when he again came to Fulton County, and after pursuing his calling as a teacher until 1879, he began farming in Hickory Township, moving subsequently to his father's farm of 170 acres in Section 6, Joshua Township, on which he assisted in making nearly all the improvements. Besides general farming he was engaged, in conjunction with his father and two brothers, in stock-breeding on an extensive scale, raising and feeding annually from thirty to fifty head of mules, 500 sheep, 200 head of cattle and from 400 to 500 head of hogs. In addition to this they bought a great deal of stock for marketing, the proceeds of the business going to the benefit of the father until his death in 1903. In 1904 the subject of this sketch retired from active business pursuits and established his residence in Fairview, retaining about 251 acres of land. Mr. Catron has a vivid recollection of his first visit to Kansas, when during the daytime the grasshoppers were so numerous in the air as to hide the sun, inducing the belief that they were clouds. The next morning they were on the ground, but in such numbers that it was impossible to put the tip of his finger to the surface without touching a grasshopper.

Mr. Catron has been twice married. On April 15, 1879, at Fairview, Ill., he was united in matrimony with Alice Abbadusky, a native of Fulton County, who died in 1888. The offspring of this union was one son, Hezekiah, who lives at home. The second marriage of Mr. Catron took place at Galesburg, Ill., February 24, 1892, when he was wedded to Mary J. Magee, who was born in Henderson County, Ill., and their union has resulted in one daughter, Hazel B.

Mr. Catron is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically is a Republican. He has lived an upright and useful life and has borne no inconsiderable part in the development of Fulton County. His success is well merited and he is richly entitled to the exemption from care which attends his later years.

CHADDOCK, (Mrs.) Louisa Amanda (Farwell), daughter of John Farwell (whose biography appears on another page of this volume), was born in Woodland Township, Fulton County, Ill., April 17, 1855, and was educated in the public schools. On December 18, 1872, she was united in marriage to James Chaddock, a native of Vermont, Ill., who was born April 16, 1848. Mr. Chaddock represents one of the fine pioneer families of Fulton County and is a son of James Chaddock, who was born in Ohio in 1799. The elder Chaddock came to Vermont while there was little to attract the young man of purpose and ambition, before public thoroughfares existed and while still the wigwam was a familiar feature of the landscape. The timbered regions of the far stretching prairies constituted a hunter's paradise, and no fear of starvation confronted the man who could handle a gun and prepare a frontier feast. At first his habitation was of rude logs, as rudely fashioned together, and on many occasions his barnyard was visited by slender deer in quest of food. He later built a frame structure, surrounded himself and family with ever increasing advantages, and finally became owner of 240 acres of land. Into all his transactions he carried the integrity and consideration of those of the Quaker faith, in which he was born and which remained his creed forever after. He was a Republican in politics. He was thrice married, his first wife being Lida Mercer, born in Ohio in 1801, and of the union there were four children: John, deceased; Robert and Sarah, twins, living in Kansas; Martha, deceased wife of Joseph Barrett, also deceased, and Rebecca, deceased wife of E. Mathews, of Vermont Township. The second Mrs. Chaddock formerly was Dora Bean, born in Ohio in 1815, and of the union there were seven children: James, Jr., Joseph, a resident of Kansas; Rachel, wife of Louis Howell, and who died in Iowa in 1875; Mary, who died in Evanston; Henry, a resident of Canada, and George and Lida, who died in infancy. The third marriage of Mr. Chaddock was with Ellen Wilkinson, of Vermont, Ill., born in 1818. There were no children of this union.

James Chaddock, Jr., husband of Louise Amanda Farwell, is one of the prominent retired farmers of Astoria. He is a man of liberal ideas and large usefulness of life, having set a high standard of political service as Justice of the Peace and Road Commissioner of Vermont Township, and otherwise contributed to the maintenance of staple and practical conditions. Like his father, he is a Republican, and though not a professed Quaker, he shares the high moral standards and benevolent tendencies of the older man.

CHAMBERS, W. J.—An evidence of thrift and economy exists in the cozy and comfortable home owned by W. J. Chambers, in the town of Avon, in the midst of four acres of fertile land which has within its borders sufficient gardening and general interests to beguile the comparative leisure of this erstwhile extensive general farmer and stock-raiser. Mr. Chambers adds to the long list of men who have come to Illinois from Pennsylvania, in which State he was born on a farm in Union County, October 19, 1847. His parents, Robert and Mathilda (Smith) Chambers, also were natives of Pennsylvania, and followed the occupation of farming for their entire active lives. Thoroughly trained in the science of farming, and having a practical common school education, Mr. Chambers came to Fulton County, Ill., in 1868, and in 1871 returned to Pennsylvania, where he married Elizabeth A. Boganreif. The following two years were spent in Kansas, and in 1873 he again engaged in farming in Union Township, Fulton County, on rented land. Thrifty and saving, he was able to purchase eighty acres of land in Union Township in 1887, and still later added forty acres more, all on Section 8. Here he made many fine additions to the improvements of a former owner, and continued to occupy the property until his removal to Avon in 1902. He still owns his farm, however, and derives a comfortable income from its rental. While a resident of Union Township Mr. Chambers filled many offices of trust and responsibility, among them that of Highway Commissioner and member of the School Board. For many years he has been a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and has contributed to this, and other local enterprises, with unstinted generosity. His only son, Geier Chambers, is engaged in railroading. Mr. Chambers is held in high esteem by all who are privileged to know him, and his identification with the county has added to its stability of both character and material possessions.

CHAPIN, George H., for many years a prominent and prosperous farmer of Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., but now living in retirement, was born in the State of Michigan, just before its admission into the Union, December 13, 1836. He is a son of John and Elizabeth (Hardy) Chapin, natives of Vermont and Pennsylvania, respectively. In 1838 John Chapin moved with his family to this county and settled in Lewistown Township, where the father was engaged in farming. He died in 1841, the mother surviving him until 1882. They were the parents of eight children, of whom George H. is the only survivor.

George H. Chapin was educated in the district schools of Fulton County, where he has always made his home. On reaching mature years he applied himself to farming, in which occupation he has been successful. He has been an energetic, diligent and careful farmer, and in all the hardships, privations and difficulties incident to the life of the early settlers manifested that patience, resolution and perseverance that enabled him to contribute his full share toward the development of Fulton County, of which, for fifty years, he has been a representative citizen.

On February 28, 1860, Mr. Chapin was united in marriage with Rachel Fleming, who has born in Morgan County, Ohio, December 4, 1836. There her parents died and she, together with her brother John and two sisters, Caroline and Elizabeth, moved to Fulton County about the year 1858. Mr. and Mrs. Chapin had three children: One who died in infancy; John F., a farmer in Liverpool Township, this county, and Mary, wife of Sherman McLouth, with whom Mr. Chapin is spending his declining years in comfortable retirement. Mrs. Chapin, who was a most worthy and estimable woman, died January 27, 1879. She was a devout Christian and a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. On political issues Mr. Chapin has always been a supporter of the Republican party but has never entertained any ambition for public office.

CHAPIN, L. R., M. D.—Of the men devoted to the science of healing in Canton, Fulton County, none bring to bear upon their calling larger gifts of scholarship and resource than Dr. L. R. Chapin. Far from selecting his life work in the untried enthusiasm of extreme youth, the choice of this genial practitioner was that of a mature mind, trained to thoughtfulness by years of practical experience as an educator and to full realization of the possibility and responsibility which confronted him.

Dr. Chapin is a native of La Salle County, Ill., and was born May 11, 1863. His parents, Oscar and Alice V. (Dibble) Chapin, were born in Washington County, N. Y., and the former came to Illinois in 1846 at the age of seventeen, locating on the farm in La Salle County, where the balance of his active life was spent. His death occurred in Canton February 8, 1905, his wife having pre-deceased him in Ottawa, Ill., in 1896. Dr. Chapin was educated primarily in the common schools of La Salle County and the Normal and Scientific schools of Morris and Geneseo, Ill., thereafter graduating from the Northwestern Normal and Scientific School of Geneseo in 1886. For the following seven years he engaged in educational work as Principal or Superintendent of Public Schools in different parts of the State. Thereafter he took up the study of medicine at the Northwestern University Medical School of Chicago, from which he was duly graduated in the class of 1897. The same year he began a general and surgical practice in Canton, and in the meantime has served three years as County Physician. His skill in diagnosis and his successful treatment of complicated and long standing cases have created a gratifying demand for his services and laid the foundation of what promises to be a career of exceptional breadth and usefulness.

In political affiliation the Doctor is a Republican. Fraternally he is associated with the Masons and Modern Woodmen of America. In August, 1888, he married Nora B. Blackiston, who was born in Geneseo, Ill., daughter of William Prestley and Cecelia C. Blackiston, also natives of Geneseo. To Dr. and Mrs. Chapin have been born three children: Cecelia C., Alice B. and Cora Odella. To a thorough professional equipment Dr. Chapin adds a kindly and sympathetic manner, a genuine liking for his calling and a ready adaptation to its multitudinous and exacting demands.

CHAPMAN, William H.—At present a retired citizen of Lewistown, William H. Chapman has been one of the industrious men of Fulton County, linking his name with all that is admirable in farming and wise and progressive in individual life. Mr. Chapman is a native of the vicinity of Nevin, Highland County, Ohio, where he was born October 20, 1856. His father, Isaac Chapman, also was born in Highland County, and his grandfather, Caleb Chapman, was a native of Virginia. Isaac Chapman spent his youth in Highland County, and there married Frances Strode, daughter of an Ohio pioneer. His death occurred about 1858, while yet young in years, and he left but one son—the subject of this sketch—two daughters having died in infancy. His widow, Mrs. Frances Chapman, married John W. Lyons, in 1869, and with him and her son, William H., moved to Fulton County, Ill., locating on land in Putman Township. In 1890 the Lyons retired from the farm, locating in Cuba, Fulton County, which still is their home. Mr. and Mrs. Lyons are the parents of the following children: Luther, deceased; Samuel, killed during a storm; Lewis, a barber of Kewanee, Ill.; Frank, City Marshal of Cuba, Ill.; Cyrus, a carpenter and builder of Cuba; Ava, wife of L. R. Campbell, a farmer of Putman Township; and Oliver, a barber of Cuba.

William H. Chapman was thirteen years old when he came to Fulton County, and from the age of fourteen until twenty-one he found employment on farms in that county. He then rented a farm in Putman Township, and on June 20, 1878, was united in marriage to Clarinda H. Conner, daughter of Peter Conner, a native of Ohio, and a pioneer of both Indiana and Illinois, arriving in the latter State in 1837. Mr. Conner settled in Putman Township, where both he and his wife passed away. In 1884 Mr. Chapman bought the old Chapman homestead in Putman Township, and here was born his daughter Iva, now the wife of Marvin H. Bordner, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this work. In 1900 this farm was sold and the old Conner homestead purchased, the family remaining thereon until disposing of the same in 1905. Mr. Chapman then moved into Lewis-town, where he owns a pleasant and comfortable home, and is surrounded by many of his old-time friends and acquaintances. Mr. Chapman has been a staunch supporter of local Republican politics and for fifteen years served as a member of the Board of Education.

CHATTERTON, Oliver B.—Although the well directed labor of Oliver B. Chatterton belongs to the past rather than present of Lee Township, this county, innumerable evidences abound of his sojourn within its boundaries, and particularly of his diligence in developing the farm now owned and occupied by his son, Franklin O. Chatterton, on Section 1 of the township named. All of the buildings on this farm were erected by Mr. Chatterton and it was improved from the rough prairie, being devoted so profitably to grain and general produce that he was able to add to his land ownership several farms, and at one time possessed 470 acres. When prosperity became a settled condition with him he invested heavily in grain and hogs, awaiting a favorable market for their disposition. He had a keen and practical business mind and probably understood as well how to get the most out of his land and general opportunities as any resident of the township, although after forty years of age he lived in practical retirement.

Mr. Chatterton was a native of New York State and was born November 18, 1822. While yet in his teens he came to Fulton County with his parents, Cornelius and Lucy (Ball) Chatterton, both of whom were born in New York State and were farmers by occupation, and embarked at an early age upon his wage-earning career. Oliver B. Chatterton was married in 1858 to Miss Lucy Sackett, a native of New York, who was living in Union Township at the time of her marriage, and by this union there was one daughter, Mabel, now Mrs. E. R. Carr. The first wife died in 1863, and at Fairview, November 28, 1865, he was united in marriage to Caroline Schleich, a native of Germany and daughter of Jacob and Mary (Webber) Schleich, who emigrated to America in the summer of 1849. The Schleich family settled first in Connecticut and at the expiration of six years came to Fulton County and purchased land in Fairview Township, where the father died at an advanced age. He was an earnest, hard working man, a staunch Republican and promoter of education and kindred civilizing agencies. By this second union there was one son, Franklin O., who married Anna Effland, of Deerfield, Fulton County, Ill., and became the father of four children, Ruth, Ray, Ralph and Rose. Mrs. Chatterton had immediate connections who were prominent in the early history of Illinois, and one of her brothers, Casper Schleich, stumped the country during the campaign of Abraham Lincoln, and was afterward killed while serving his country in the Civil War.

Mr. Chatterton himself was a quiet, unostentatious man, devoting himself chiefly to his immediate home interests, although he was prominent politically, and for many years was a member of the Central Republican Committee. He also served as Supervisor of Lee Township. Realizing the loss entailed by his early disadvantages, he gave his children every opportunity in his power and instilled into their minds an appreciation of the dignity of labor and the worth of honest, upright characters. He died October 19, 1885. The deceased was a member of the Universalist Church of Avon, and devoted to the temperance cause.

Mrs. Chatterton still occupies the old homestead, one-half of the farm being willed by the father to his son, Franklin O., with whom Mrs. Chatterton lives, and the other half to the daughter, Mrs. Carr. The son mentioned has added to his possessions until he now owns 500 acres of land in Lee Township and promises to develop the same substantial traits possessed by his honored father.

CHIPERFIELD, Burnett M.—By an unwritten custom the lawyer has ever been accorded first place in securing the greatest liberty and the greatest justice to the society of mankind.

R. F. Henry

The idea prevailing when the Roman Cincia law was framed, that he was the best informed as to the rights of man and the limitations of government—both of them prescribed by law—exists today to an appreciable extent. No man in our form of civilization is given such privilege to guide the affairs of State, to either glory or dishonor, as is vouchsafed by thinking minds to the lawyer. The fact that, financially speaking, there are no compensations in law commensurate with the labor given, lends a prophecy of splendid and disinterested achievement to men sufficiently gifted to become successful lawyers, and sufficiently honest to maintain the ethics of the profession. One familiar with the jurisprudence of Illinois, and more especially with the last decade of its history, will unhesitatingly place within this sphere of largest usefulness the name of B. M. Chipfield, general practitioner of Canton, Ill., member of the Legislature, ex-City and ex-State's Attorney, prominent fraternalist, and supporter of those enlightening agencies which make for the permanent well-being of the community.

The example of devout and high-minded parents was shed upon the youth of Mr. Chipfield, and he was reared in an atmosphere calculated to focus in sincerity his myriad longings and craving outlet and expression. Born at Dover, Bureau County, Ill., June 17, 1870, he was destined for the experiences and friendships of a migratory youth, as his father was a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, debarred by the rules of the church from more than three years' residence in a given community. The son was educated in the public schools of Sandwich, Sterling, Marseilles, Seneca, Rock Falls, Kankakee, Chillicothe and Chicago, and in Hamlin University, a Methodist Episcopal school of Minnesota. His subsequent career bears testimony to the fact, that what a man wills he generally becomes. Long before he had completed his studies his mental prospective included an invasion of those splendid opportunities for which the law so admirably equips its purposeful and determined votaries, and he began the study of elementary law, acquiring at the same time a knowledge of finance through a brief connection with the Commercial National Bank of Chicago. His school days over, he sought relief from close confinement in a surveying trip through the Northwest, and afterward became the faculty of a school at Green Prairie, Minn., still later becoming Assistant Principal of a school at Cuba, Ill., for a year.

Economizing time was an early, as it is a later, trait of Mr. Chipfield, and it resulted in his exclusion of unnecessary training from his youth, of his admission to the bar of Illinois at the age of twenty-one, and the establishment of his professional career in Canton. His resourcefulness and initiative were fortunately centered in the hopeful, hospitable Central West, plastic in its environment, still young and eager to hear or tell something worth while. He ever since has been engaged in the general practice of law, being now a member of the firm of Chipfield & Chipfield, composed of himself and Judge C. E. Chipfield. During the period of its existence the firm has been connected, on one side or another, with the majority of complications calling for adjustment in this part of the State, many of them requiring profound and expert legal experience. One of these was the case of the Bar Car Manufacturing Company and its men, the latter of whom demanded a nine instead of a ten-hour day. The differences were settled by the Board of Arbitration, Chipfield & Chipfield appearing for the men, and Attorneys Reeves & Bays, of Streator, appearing for the company. The men won the fight, and also were paid for the extra hour they had agreed to work pending settlement of the case. Mr. Chipfield was the attorney for the Sanitary District of Chicago in the case of Congressman Graff and Judge Curran, for $55,000 damages on account of alleged overflow by the drainage canal of 1,700 acres of farm and timber land, which case was on trial for eleven weeks, the jury eventually awarding damages to the extent of $750.

Mr. Chipfield has never left any doubt as to his political preferences. He is emphatically and uncompromisingly Republican, and as law and politics ever were akin, he has gravitated irresistibly toward this unparalleled combination of opportunities. His first public office was that of City Attorney, to which he was elected in 1894, and which he held two years. More than average zeal and effectiveness characterized the discharge of the duties of this office. Even his great capacity for work was severely taxed at times, but throughout the affairs of the commonwealth were given preference over all personal duties, and an assistant was employed at his own expense. One of the results of his administration was a complete revision of the city ordinances—a laborious and tedious task—and a thorough systematizing of the city legal department. He was the instigator of the system of suspending fines for good behavior, and of suspending sentence with the understanding that the favored one seek, in other fields, an opportunity to begin life anew. In disposing of 500 criminal cases the city won out in all but two or three, and there was over $150,000 worth of litigation in which the town was involved.

At the expiration of his term as City Attorney Mr. Chipfield was elected the first Republican State's Attorney of Fulton County. His brilliant endowments and unusual resources never have been more telling than when enlisted on the side of law and order. Stripped of the quality of fear, indomitable, relentless, a veritable Nemesis of judgment, showing no quarter and permitting no perversion of the law, it became a common occurrence for petitioners at the bar to plead guilty and thus save the State the cost of the trial, which, before a less austere prosecutor, would have exhausted every device of evasion known to criminal tactics. It is known that many causes never penetrated the doors of the grand jury room, or reached as far as the Circuit Court. He maintained a sleepless vigilance upon the trail of the wrongdoer, creating an atmosphere distinctly prejudicial to his plans of gain.

Mr. Chipfield's star of success has been a constantly ascending one, every fiber of his being responding to his developing faculties, ambitions and opportunities. He had become one of the brightest legal lights in the legal firmament of Illinois, and as a trial lawyer had a reputation oftentimes not acquired by the deserving in a score of years. His election to the Forty-third General Assembly came as a fitting tribute to what he already had accomplished, and afforded scope for legislative reforms of which he long had dreamed. Had there been any doubt of his public spiritedness, his desire to labor disinterestedly for the good of the people, or any suspicion of undue personal ambition, it was dispelled by the fulfillment of the pledges made previous to his election, representing both Knox and Fulton Counties. Under his own signature Mr. Chipfield speaks of the five reasons why he went to the Legislature:

"To favor such legislation as is desired by the United Mine Workers of this State.

"To advocate the passage of a bill prohibiting any employer from requiring his men to sign a contract permitting him to retain 10 per cent. of their wages without interest.

"To require manufacturers to furnish sanitary shops for employes, and to take all necessary and proper precautions to prevent the escape of wood, emery and other dust and dirt into such places of employment, to the detriment of the health of those there employed.

"To advocate the passage of a bill to deduct from the assessed value of farm lands and other real estate, where mortgaged, the value of the mortgage, and to compel the holder of the mortgage to pay the tax on his mortgage, and the owner of the farm or other real estate to pay the tax only on the remaining values."

By even the wisest and most hopeful supporters of Mr. Chipfield, as well as his political enemies, it was declared that so varied and large a task was impossible of accomplishment. The force, determination and influence of this young attorney was not yet fully appreciated. His convict bill passed the House by a unanimous vote, and was so much desired and so far-reaching in its results that notice thereof was taken in all parts of the country. The United Mine Workers were able to tender him their hearty congratulations for the introduction and passage of the bill regulating the firing of shots in the mines—thus minimizing the danger from explosions; for increasing the death limit from $5,000 to $10,000, and making amendments to the mining laws. He also caused the passage of a bill in both House and Senate, making it unlawful for employers to compel men to remain in their employ by withholding part of their wages; and he advocated and voted for more sanitary shops and better inspection, for the child labor law and free employment bureau. With Representative Lurton, of Morgan County, he presented a bill for the purpose of deducting from real estate for assessment, the amount of the mortgage thereon, which bill was defeated, Chairman Burgett, of the Committee on Revenues, admitting that it was right, but that such deduction would seriously affect the revenues of the State and were impracticable at that time. During the session Mr. Chipfield was Chairman of the Committee on Penal and Reformatory Institutions, a member of the Committee on Corporations, on Fish and Game, on Judiciary and Judicial Apportionments, Military Affairs, Mines and Mining, Railroads, Rules, and also was a member of the Republican Steering Committee. In addition he advocated other measures for the improvement of the condition of the toiler, and voted against the increase of salaries of members of the Legislature and State officers.

The rare gift of eloquence, a splendid voice, a personal magnetism, the faculty of making people see through his eyes, and share his aims and enthusiasms, make Mr. Chipfield one of the most effective public speakers in Fulton County and the State of Illinois. In his recent canvass for the Attorney-Generalship of the State he presented his claims in vigorous fashion in more than seventy counties, winning the support of a generous following, and there is scarcely a county in the State, or a State in the Middle West, in which he has not spoken. Many of his addresses are notable in the annals of the locality where they occurred, as was that upon the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, in Quincy, Ill., a few years ago. Many members of the audience were battle-scarred veterans, and the orator charmed their ear, heart and mind, leaving them with renewed appreciation of the lofty grandeur of the man who had worked his way from the lowest to the highest American citizenship. He again was heard to great advantage in an opening address before the Illinois Press Association. A careful student of the facts and philosophies of existence, a close observer of the social and economic conditions, the repository of much of the general knowledge which has come down through the ages, he is at home before any audience, and invariably contributes to its interest and enlightenment.

For years Mr. Chipfield has been a member of the Board of Trustees of the Western Illinois State Normal School at Macomb. He is an appreciator of the moral and social advantages to be derived from fraternal organizations, and is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America, Eagles and Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. During the memorial services of the latter organization at the National Hotel, Peoria, he delivered an address which won him high encomiums from the general public, and from the brotherhood whose ennobling principles he had subscribed to for so long a time. He was a possible candidate for Head Consul of the Order of Woodmen in 1903, and the Cook County Woodmen, reviewing his career with intelligent interest, paid high tribute to his qualities of mind and heart.

In 1895 Mr. Chipfield established a home of his own, marrying Clara L. Ross, of Canton, and to this union a son and a daughter have been born. In the feverish arena of political preferment, with its accompaniments of antagonism, jealousy, hate and bitterness; in the effort, professionally, to maintain order and method in a strenuous and overwrought age, it may be said of Mr. Chipfield that he has kept faith with the people and with himself, and has shown a singleness of purpose and clarity of ideals beyond the average thus richly endowed. His tendency is toward a simplicity of legal interpretation, and toward the establishment of those conditions which deepen the channels of human brotherhood. His gifts for usefulness are stable and many-sided, and should carry their possessor far.

CHURCHILL, Eugene, a prominent, substantial and worthy farmer in Section 33, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born October 14, 1840, in Cattaraugus County, N. Y., forty miles from Buffalo in that State. He is a son of Silas and Esther (Palmer) Churchill, natives of Vermont and New York respectively. The family is of Puritan stock. An uncle of Silas Churchill was, together with his father, a prisoner in the hands of the British during the Revolutionary War. Silas Churchill and his wife were the parents of the following named children: Dorliska, born December 14, 1819, who married Charles Sherwood (deceased) and died, leaving two children: Arvilla, born June 14, 1822, who was the wife of John Hull; Emilinus, born June 14, 1824, who was an Indian trader and was murdered for his money, his body being thrown into the Wisconsin River; Pimbrook, born April 22, 1826, now a resident of Webster, Mass.; Homer, born June 29, 1828, who served three years in a New York regiment during the Civil War; Elroy, now of Rochester, N. Y., born September 24, 1839, was a member of the First New York Dragoons in the Civil War, was wounded six times and still carries three rebel bullets in his body; Delos and DeForest, twins, born October 14, 1832, the former of Michigan and the latter of New York; Cecelia, born May 16, 1835, a widow, of Buffalo, N. Y., who first married a Mr. Braden and afterward a Mr. Cox; Octavia Goldthwaite, deceased, born August 3, 1837, formerly of Jamestown, N. Y., whose daughter, Nellie, is a teacher in a medical college near Webster, Mass., and Eugene.

Silas Churchill, the father, was a self-made man, an inveterate reader and strong and facile writer. He was a resident of Buffalo, N. Y., when but three frame houses were to be seen in that city. He lived there at the outbreak of the War of 1812, but having his ankle bone removed could not enter the military service. He was for some time editor of the Angelica. In politics he was an old-line Whig and an active worker in the "Tippecanoe-and-Tyler-too" campaign. He died in Yorkshire, N. Y., about 1886. His widow married again but died about 1844.

Eugene Churchill received his education in the public schools of his native State and then worked with his brother, who was a house carpenter by trade, for two years. On February 11, 1864, he enlisted in Company C, Ninth Regiment, New York Volunteer Cavalry, which was in Sheridan's command. His first engagement was in the battle of the Wilderness, where the Ninth was under fire for eight days. After the first fight, being sick and a raw recruit, he was taken to the hospital in Washington. He rejoined his regiment at Winchester and after participating in all its subsequent engagements, was mustered out at Alexandria, Va., and being discharged at Buffalo, N. Y., returned home. In 1866 he went from New York to Independence, Ia., and about 1868 located in Fulton County, Ill., first purchasing 170 acres and moving to his present farm in 1869.

On Thanksgiving day, 1888, Mr. Churchill was joined in marriage to Emily Arendale (nee Brown), widow of Thomas Arendale and a daughter of Francis R. and Nancy (Laws) Brown, the mother a native of Culpeper, Va., and the father of Kentucky. Mr and Mrs. Brown were married in 1844 and had the following named children: Martin W., of Winfield, Kan., born November 28, 1845; Rhoda A., born January 14, 1847, wife of L. D. Boyer, a farmer in Banner Township, Fulton County; George W., born June 21, 1849, a retired farmer, living in Canton, Ill., and John (deceased), a twin of George W., born June 29, 1849.

Martha E. Brown, the wife of Eugene Churchill, was born July 7, 1855. Their union resulted in two children: Dorliska E., born November 10, 1889, and Theresa Marie, born January 1, 1895. Mrs. Churchill, who in maidenhood was Emma Brown, was married April 16, 1878, at Cuba, Ill., to Thomas A. Arendale. By this union was born October 14, 1879, one child, Myrtle, who died May 7, 1880. Mr. Arendale had been married before and left two children by his previous marriage: Theresa M. and John C. Theresa married Rev. H. H. McFall, resides at Biggsville, Ill., and has two sons, and John C. lives on the old Brown homestead farm, having married Bertha E. Barnett and has two children, a son and a daughter. John C. Arundale, Mrs. Churchill's step-son, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this work, made his home with the Churchill family after the death of his mother until his marriage. Mrs. Churchill's father was born July 7, 1821, and died August 25, 1892. The mother, Nancy L. Brown, was born October 28, 1822, and died June 17, 1890.

Mr. Churchill's farm consists of 170 acres, and by constant, systematic and intelligent care he has made it one of the most beautiful homes in the county. For many years he has been a breeder of Hereford cattle and roadster horses, as well as of fine Poland-China hogs. Numbers of fine animals have been turned from his stock and in numerous instances he has taken first-class prizes where fifty exhibitors were competing. He is a public-spirited citizen and takes an active interest in the affairs of the township and county. In him church and school have ever found a ready advocate and helper, and his time and means are freely given to the maintenance of the public welfare.

In politics Mr. Churchill is an unswerving Republican and adheres with steadfast constancy to the principles enunciated by Abraham Lincoln. Fraternally he is affiliated with the G. A. R. and the Mutual Aid. His wife, daughters and himself are all members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CLARK, John.—Although the memory of the roar of cannon, of the glitter of bayonets and the pestilential surroundings of Southern prisons has been drowned somewhat in the later peace of agricultural pursuits, the three years' service of John Clark in the Civil War remains the paramount and most absorbing experience in the life of this honored soldier and farmer of Bernadotte Township. Mr. Clark is of early American ancestry, and his birth occurred in Belmont County, Ohio, May 29, 1837. His parents, George W. and Rachel (Knock) Clark, were natives of Maryland, and were born March 19, 1812, and October 24, 1812, respectively. The marriage of this couple occurred November 20, 1834, and they soon after settled in Belmont County, Ohio, coming to Fulton County, this State, in 1840. Mr. Clark bought a farm two miles southwest of Bernadotte, and in 1842 purchased another tract of land in Vermont Township, from which he eventually retired to Astoria, where his death occurred at an advanced age. His wife died October 1, 1844. Of their children, Minerva was born November 9, 1835, and died August 31, 1850; John Clark, born as above stated; Ann E., born in 1839, and became the wife of David Sterling, of Pittsburg, Kans.; Thomas Willis and Wesley (twins), born May 6, 1841; Sarah E., born September 20, 1843, died October 1, 1844. For his second wife George W. Clark married Elizabeth Traner, and of their union there were the following children: Sarah E., born July 11, 1845, the wife of Joshua Bucey, of Astoria; Rachel, born March 20, 1847, wife of Jacob Deering, of Astoria; Zachariah T., born December 1, 1848; William, born August 19, 1850, and died September 1, 1850; Abraham, born November 13, 1851, deceased;

Henry is a farmer of Pleasant Township; and James, who is a farmer of Missouri.

John Clark was three years old when he came to Fulton County with his parents. The nearest neighbor of the family was half a mile distant, and the next nearest lived three miles away. The early subscription schools afforded opportunity to acquire the rudiments of education, and he remained at home until his marriage to Louise A. Trone, October 7, 1858. Mrs. Clark was born in York County, Pa., March 10, 1839, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Dupez) Trone, Fulton County pioneers of 1853, the former of whom died in Woodland Township in 1857, and the latter in 1889. The children of John Clark and his wife are as follows: Mary E., born July 13, 1859, wife of W. H. West, of Iowa; Sarah E. and Minerva J. (twins), born September 10, 1861, died the day of their birth; Joseph W., born December 19, 1865, a resident of Frederick, Ill.; Louise A., born December 28, 1867, wife of Robert Quillen, of Indiana; Elressa May, born May 29, 1870, wife of Frank Rodgers, general merchant of Table Grove, Ill.; Rebecca C., born November 9, 1872, living at home; John H., born August 31, 1876; Simeon R., born November 22, 1879; Sylvester R., born May 23, 1882.

After his marriage Mr. Clark settled on eighty acres of land in Woodland Township, where his home was a log cabin, and his opportunity the hitherto uncultivated soil. Timber and brush had held undisputed sway over this land for unknown years, and in clearing it his task extended from sunrise to sunset. However, when the Civil War broke out he had succeeded in bringing a sort of rude order into his surroundings, and a large part of his land was under cultivation. August 9, 1862, he enlisted at Quincy, Ill., in Company F, Eighty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and from there was sent to Louisville, Ky., where the regiment assisted to drive the Confederate General Bragg to Wildcat, N. C. The regiment next participated in the battles of Stone River and Chickamauga, and on September 20, 1863, Mr. Clark was captured by the rebels, sent to Richmond, Va., and thrown into Libby Prison, afterward being taken to Danville, where his prison menu included mule meat, being otherwise subjected to inhuman treatment. On April 14, 1864, he was transferred to Andersonville Prison, and thus he made the rounds of the most noted rebel prisons of the Civil War period. The inhuman treatment of the Union prisoners was further illustrated when, at the time of an expected bombardment of the city of Charleston by the Union forces, Mr. Clark and a number of his comrades were taken to that city and placed within the range of the Union guns for the purpose of warding off the attack. The scheme proved a failure, however, for when the bombardment began it was welcomed by the cheers of the Union prisoners, and the guns were turned upon the city, which was shelled to a finish. Afterward the prisoners were lined up and associated with yellow fever victims, that they might become inoculated and die, but this effort to get them out of the way also failed. A doctor finally was sent in to parole the sick, and for every ten sick one well man was paroled. Mr. Clark bought his release for five dollars, and then returned to Charleston, and took boat for neutral waters. He finally reached home January 1, 1865, and after a rest of thirty days rejoined his regiment at Nashville, at the end of its service. The Eighty-fourth was a gallant body of men, and its ranks contained many heroes. Of its original 1,000 members, but 333 returned to their homes.

After the war Mr. Clark continued to live in Woodland Township until 1869, in which year he made a trip to Kansas, with the expectation of possible settlement there. In 1870 he settled in Bernadotte Township, purchasing 160 acres of land, eighty of which he subsequently disposed of. At the present time he has a comfortable home and a well equipped farm, the residence and buildings being of his own construction. The hard work of the farm has of necessity been left to others, as ever since the war the returned soldier has carried around with him a resultant weakness, a perpetual reminder of the grim and terrible tragedy of the war period. With his wife he has been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for many years, and in politics is a staunch Republican. Mr. Clark is one of the most prominent members of the local Grand Army of the Republic, and it is useless to add that his are among the most interesting of the reminiscences of wartime which enliven the annual campfires. He is a man of sterling general worth, and his life has been tuned to industry, self-sacrifice and loyalty to his country and its interests.

CLAUSON, Rutsor Y.—Upon the farm upon which he now lives in Joshua Township Rutsor Y. Clauson was born August 19, 1875, and here he has spent his entire life. The property bears many evidences of the industry and good management of his father, Isaac A. Clauson, who, as a young man, journeyed from New Jersey in the early days and underwent the trials and discomforts of Illinois pioneering. While yet his competence was a matter of speculation solely he married Caroline Young, a native of Joshua Township, and with the aid of his young wife struggled to a position of financial and general importance in the community.

Trained to agriculture from early youth, Rutsor Y. Clauson attended the public schools and in time assumed the management of the farm of his father, to which he has added as opportunity offered and now has 280 acres in Deerfield and Joshua Townships. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and is an intelligent and progressive exponent of the best thus far achieved in his time honored calling. In politics he is a Democrat and in religion allied with the Dutch Reformed Church. Mr. Clauson renounced bachelorhood November 28, 1900, marrying Jennie Patton, a native daughter of Fairview Township, and born July 11, 1880. In character and purpose Mr. Clauson sustains the reputation achieved by his father.

CLAYBERG, S. S.—For a period of thirty-three years the health and sanitation of Avon have been safeguarded by the zeal and skill of Dr. S. S. Clayberg, who was born and reared and has spent his entire life within the boundaries of Fulton County. Dr. Clayberg's youth was spent in Cuba, where his birth occurred January 5, 1838, the year after the arrival of his parents, George and Elizabeth (Baughman) Clayberg. The father was born on a farm in Pennsylvania and when he had arrived at a self-supporting age determined to cast his fortune with Ohio, which then had a widely scattered population. Energetic and economical, he saved more at farming than he spent, and in time married Elizabeth Baughman, who was born in the Buckeye State. Still possessed of the spirit of unrest, he gathered together his household belongings in the summer of 1837, and with a wagon and team drove across country to Cuba, Fulton County, near which town he purchased land and engaged in farming and stock-raising on an increasingly large scale. This farm he developed from raw prairie into a fine and paying property, and it still is a valued possession of the family. Six children played around his fireside and added incentive and aim to his labor, and of these all but one is living.

Notwithstanding the limited resources of his father, Dr. Clayberg secured excellent educational advantages, studying in the public schools of Cuba, at the Michigan State University, Ann Arbor, which he attended two years, and the Rush Medical College, Chicago, from which institution he graduated with the degree of M. D. Engaging in practice with Dr. Hull, of Cuba, in 1873, he came to Avon and stepped into the practice of Dr. Saunders, and about five years ago established a partnership with E. E. Davis. The Doctor is a member of the Military Tract Medical Association and is a frequent contributor to well known medical works throughout the country.

On May 20, 1864, Dr. Clayberg was united in marriage to Sarah Belle Bowen, a native of Fairview, who died in 1870, leaving three children, of whom Sue Blanche is the life of F. W. Thompkins; William Harry is employed in one of the banks of Avon, and Louisiana is deceased. On June 22, 1875, Dr. Clayberg married N. Abigail Mings, of Fulton County, and the mother of a son, Jiles M. Dr. Clayberg is an ardent fraternalist and is connected with the Masons and Independent Order of Odd Fellows (Avon Lodge). The Doctor was made a Mason in 1865 and is a member of Harmony Lodge (Avon), No. 350, A. F. & A. M.; Canton Chapter, No. 68, R. A. M., and Galesburg Commandery,

No. 68. Professionally he is esteemed by his fellow practitioners of whatever school, and the passing years have found him ever ready to add to his store of knowledge and in touch with the best thus far known of the science of healing.

COBLEIGH, Francis Albion.—Belonging to that class of workers whose practical education, quick perceptions and great capacity for painstaking industry have advanced them to positions of business prominence formerly occupied by men many years their seniors, Francis Albion Cobleigh, while representing the vigorous and resourceful present of the Central West, gives promise of participating in its more enlightened future, more especially of Canton, this county, where he is engaged in a well established real-estate, loan and insurance business.

Mr. Cobleigh was born April 19, 1867, in Pekin, Tazewell County, Ill., and comes of a family of cherished traditions and commendable pride in the character and ambitions of those bearing its name. At least four generations have pursued their avocations in the State of New Hampshire. There lived the paternal grandfather, who came presumably from England, and there was born in Chesterfield, Cheshire County, Erastus Cobleigh, the next in line of descent, who married Hannah Day, also of Chesterfield. Royal Erastus Cobleigh, the paternal grandfather, was born in Chesterfield and married Mercy Gay, of Concord, Vt., and their son, Gordis R., the father of Francis Albion, was born in Lisbon, Grafton County, N. H. The mother of Mr. Cobleigh was formerly Mary V. Smith, daughter of William H. and Elizabeth Smith, the former a native of Jefferson County, Va., and the latter of Estell County, Ky. Mrs. Cobleigh's grandfather, Henry Smith, emigrated from Prussia, Germany, to Virginia, and there married Mary Frye, a native of the Old Dominion.

Primarily Mr. Cobleigh was educated in the public schools of Pekin and Peoria, Ill., and eventually entered Knox College, at Galesburg, that State. His parents moved to Peoria in 1880 and to Canton in 1889. He inaugurated his independent career as a clerk in a dry goods house, and later was bookkeeper for a railroad construction company. He then followed farming for one year and still later became the proprietor of a cigar manufactory. In 1893 he established a real estate, loan and insurance business, and since has engineered some of the most important real-estate transactions in this section. He is shrewd and far-sighted, has a thorough knowledge of city and town land values and is well posted as to the resources and advantages at the disposal of people contemplating settlement or change of location in Canton and vicinity.

On January 9, 1896, Mr. Cobleigh married Elizabeth Irene Plattenburg, a native of Canton and formerly a student in the public schools.

Mr. Cobleigh is a staunch Republican, but thus far has taken no active interest in the local undertakings of his party. In religion he is a Universalist. A sincere appreciator of friends and the higher diversions of society, he is deservedly popular in various local organizations, among them the Olive Branch Lodge, No. 15, I. O. O. F.; Lodge No. 54, K. of P.; Lodge No. 623, B. P. O. E.; Order of the Eastern Star and I. O. R. M. He is a Mason of long standing and identified with the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Shrine and Consistory. The business and social success of Mr. Cobleigh has been materially aided by that spirit of kindness which makes the whole world kin, which appreciates merit in others, and which recognizes the value of tact and consideration in dealing with all the problems of life.

CODY, Patrick, a successful wholesale and retail liquor merchant of Canton, Ill., was born in Cass County, Ill., in 1857, a son of Walter Cody, a native of Ireland. The latter was a farmer by occupation, who came to the United States about the middle of the last century, coming to Illinois and settling in Cass County, and there he followed farming until the time of his death. In early youth Patrick Cody received his education in the common schools of Cass County, and after finishing his studies was employed for some time as a bartender in that locality. In 1893 he came to Fulton County, locating in Canton and working in a saloon between two and three years. Then he bought out the concern of J. Taylor, and has since conducted a wholesale and retail liquor business. For a while he acted in the capacity of Treasurer of the Bartenders' Association of Canton. In his line of business he commands a remunerative trade. In fraternal circles Mr. Cody is identified with the Order of Eagles.

COLEMAN, Amasa Landon (deceased), whose life was conspicuously identified with the agricultural development of Fulton County, Ill., during the early history of that region, and who was among the most prominent of the pioneer toilers who left the impress of their strong character upon the growth of the new settlement, was born in Hackettstown, N. J., October 2, 1821, a son of John and Elizabeth (Pool) Coleman. The former was a native of New Jersey and the latter born in France, coming with her parents to America during the French Revolution. John Coleman, who traveled overland from New Jersey to Illinois in 1819, conveying in eight wagons his household furnishings, a stock of merchandise and a large family, to Canton, Fulton County, was second to none of the primitive settlers in the influence which he wielded during the formative processes which laid the foundation for a prosperity then hidden from mortal ken. His sturdy and self-reliant character was manifest in the bringing with him in his venturesome, tedious and difficult journey to a far-away semi-wilderness, twelve of his family of fourteen children, the other two remaining amid the scenes of comfort and refinement surrounding their Eastern home. A portrayal of the life of this indomitable representative of the pioneer element in Western Illinois appears in an adjoining section of this volume.

In early youth Amasa L. Coleman, who was two years old when his parents brought him to the West, attended the subscription school in the vicinity of his home in Fulton County and afterward completed his education in the Canton College. He was an apt student and keen observer, and possessed superior qualifications. His first experience in work after finishing his scholastic training was as manager of his father's estate in behalf of his mother. This estate was very large, including many hundred acres of land near Canton. At one time the Coleman family owned large tracts of land adjoining the town of Canton, John Coleman, the head of the family, having purchased at an early period seven quarter-sections in one body. After the estate was distributed among the heirs Amasa L. Coleman devoted his attention to agricultural pursuits for the remainder of his life. He was a man of stalwart form, fine physical proportions and rugged physique. Possessed of sterling traits of character, his career was, in an eminent degree, useful to those about him, and serviceable to the interests of the community. Although slow to form friendships, having once formed them he was true and steadfast in friendly attachment. His was a busy life, but he occasionally found time for recreation, and made several visits to the Eastern States. He was kind to the needy and contributed freely to charitable institutions. His religious inclinations favored the Presbyterian Church, but he was a liberal supporter of all denominations. Politically he was a Democrat, entertaining, however, no desire for public office. As a man and as a citizen he enjoyed the respect and confidence of all classes of people, and his death, which occurred February 6, 1890, was deeply lamented. He left a valuable estate for his children.

The marriage of Amasa L. Coleman took place in what is now Banner Township, Fulton County, on February 3, 1850, when he was wedded to Mary Fidler, a daughter of George and Mary (Storms) Fidler, who was born on a farm in the vicinity of Sandusky, Ohio. Her father was a native of Maryland and her mother of Virginia, where the family were slaveholders. Mr. and Mrs. Fidler were married in Virginia, whence they moved to Ohio, and thence to Fulton County, Ill., where they settled about the year 1826.

Three children resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Coleman, namely: George F., who resides with his sister, Mrs. Roberts, in Canton, Ill.; Elizabeth, widow of A. L. Roberts, of that place, and Josephine, wife of John Pensinger, also of Canton. The mother of this family died July 18, 1878. She was a woman of strong common sense and sound business judgment, and distinguished by noble traits of character. In graces of mind, purity of heart and devotion to duty, she was a typical representation of that most admirable body of pioneer wives who so loyally sustained their resolute and dauntless husbands amid the privations and perils of the early Western settlements.

COLEMAN, Charles T.—Thirty-nine years of association with the insurance business in Canton has established for Charles T. Coleman a reputation for ability, resource and unflagging industry. He is one of the captains of success who have piloted their own craft to harbor. In his many varieties of experience he has served his country as a soldier and the rising generation as an educator, and out of all his struggles has evolved the belief that hard work rarely injures anyone and honesty always pays.

Mr. Coleman was born November 4, 1840, in Victory, Cayuga County, N. Y., a son of Charles and Delana (Cosgrove) Coleman, natives of Vermont. Charles Coleman, Sr., who was born June 5, 1810, moved while very young with his parents to Pennsylvania and at the age of nine years went to live in the State of New York. In 1870 he joined his son and namesake in Canton and died there February 15, 1899, at the age of almost eighty-nine years. His wife, who was born October 25, 1815, died in Canton March 8, 1901. Charles T. Coleman was educated in the public schools and at the Red Creek Academy, in New York, thereafter engaging in educational work for three years, and in June, 1861, graduating from Eastman's Commercial College, in Rochester, N. Y. His life passed without particular incident until the breaking out of the Civil War, when, on August 16, 1861, at the age of twenty-one he enlisted in Company B, Seventy-fifth New York Volunteer Infantry, under the first call for troops after the first battle of Bull Run. He participated in nearly all of the important engagements up to June 14, 1863, when at Port Hudson, La., he lost his right arm and in consequence received his honorable discharge from the service September 2d, following.

Coming to Canton in April, 1865, Mr. Charles T. Coleman during the following year became identified with the insurance business with C. T. Heald, remaining in that capacity for fourteen years, in 1880 purchasing the business outright from the former owner. In the meantime he has taken a keen interest in many phases of community life, is socially prominent and is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party. Closely identified with Grand Army affairs, he has been Quartermaster of Post No. 69 for several years, Commander of the same two terms and has also served as its Chaplain and Senior Vice-Commander of the Department of Illinois. The marriage ceremony of Mr. Coleman and Adeline Murphy was solemnized January 22, 1865, and of this union there were two children: Lyman M. and Minnie L. Mrs. Coleman, whose death a host of friends was called upon to mourn March 6, 1900, was a daughter of John Murphy, who came to this country from Ireland with his parents when nine years old. Her mother was formerly Rebecca Clay. On March 12, 1907, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage as his second wife with Mrs. Ida M. Blakemore, of Canton, Ill.

Mr. Coleman is one of the best known insurance men in this part of the State and few have a more comprehensive knowledge of the business. Through tact, fair representation and business integrity he has won the confidence of the community, a valuable asset indeed, and one which assures a continuation of his present prosperity.

COLEMAN, James E., M. D.—The most enlightened tenets of medical and surgical science find expression in the career of Dr. James E. Coleman, a general practitioner of Canton, this county, since the summer of 1884, a leading and progressive factor in many of the foremost medical associations in the country and a potent influence in securing to the children of Canton the best possible educational opportunities. Dr. Coleman's professional ambitions unfolded on the farm near Canton, where he was born February 28, 1863. He is of English-French and German descent, a son of Ezra P. Coleman, who was born at Hackettstown, Warren County, N. J., in 1818, and grandson of John Coleman, born on Schooley's Mountain, also in New Jersey. John Coleman married a daughter of France. Sarah (Beard) Coleman, mother of James E., was born in Virginia and was of German parentage.

The success of Dr. Coleman cannot be attributed to exceptional educational or professional advantages. He attended the district school in the country and graduated from the high school in Canton, thereafter entering Rush Medical College, Chicago, from which he was duly graduated in February, 1884. In 1887 he was united in marriage to Nettie Porter, a native of Canton and a graduate of the high school. Of this union there is a son, Everett P. Coleman. Dr. Coleman is a member of the Fulton County Medical Society, the Illinois State Medical Society, the Mississippi Valley Medical Society and the American Medical Society, and he has long been connected with the Military Tract Medical Society, of which he has served as President. His interest in education is second only to his interest in the art of healing. For several years he has been a member of the Board of Education and was for a time President of that body, and his insistence upon discarding old-time methods has been largely responsible for its present high standard of instruction.

Dr. Coleman is social in his tendencies, and out of his busy life finds time for the relaxations and diversions which rest the mind and invigorate the body. He is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Masons, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Elks. Professionally he belongs to the emancipated class whose mind is open to light, and who sanction the beliefs of the past only so far as they are in harmony with the greater progress and enlightenment of the present. He takes time to investigate the new order of things, and has the breadth of mind to judge wisely yet conservatively. One might say that a great capacity for painstaking constitutes one of his chief mental assets, as well as a genuine liking for the enormous amount of work entailed by his supreme allegiance to a fascinating and inexhaustible science.

COLEMAN, John (deceased), whose acuteness, foresight, tact and tenacity of purpose made him one of the most successful among the pioneer merchants, millers, tavern-keepers and farmers of Fulton County, Ill., was a native of New Jersey, where he was born in 1772. In early youth John Coleman attended the public schools convenient to his home, and, on reaching manhood, applied himself to merchandising, in which pursuit he was successful. After conducting a store for some years in his native State, and rearing a large family there, he became possessed of a strong desire to try his fortune in what was then known as the "Far West." Therefore, in the fall of 1819, he made his way westward, traveling overland to Illinois, at that period the frontier. The journey was accomplished with five wagons, in which were conveyed groceries, dry goods, etc., purchased in New York City. Besides his assortment of merchandise, he brought a considerable equipment of household furnishings, and a family consisting of his wife and twelve children, two children being left in New Jersey. He settled in the town of Canton, Fulton County, first occupying a log house which stood on the site of the present N. B. Childs Block, on Wood Street. There he displayed and sold his goods, not arranging them on shelves for sale over a counter, but picking them out as needed from bales and other receptacles stowed under the beds of the dwelling. With the exception of a few neighbors, his customers were Indians, of whom it was not an infrequent occurrence to have as many as 200 on certain occasions waiting to be served. Before settling in Canton, Mr. Coleman had bought seven quarter-sections of land in one body, and on a portion of this he put up a building, about the year 1829, for which he obtained a tavern license. The place was named the "Travelers' Rest," and no house in the Military Tract was better known to men traveling in that region. On his farm he kept a grocery and had some other merchandise for sale until the memorable storm of 1835 demolished the storeroom, and a large number of cloaks and Mackinaw blankets in his stock were scattered broadcast over the prairie. One of Mr. Coleman's various enterprises was a "band mill," established by him just north of Fairview (Fulton County) bridge, which was noted in that locality for making haste—and meal—slowly. It was said that its running was so slow that the clogs were in the habit of chewing the bands "in two" while the mill was grinding a grist. Mr. Coleman was essentially a trading man, and possessed a rare faculty for profitable bargaining. As a result of his sagacity and sound judgment he acquired what in those times was considered a fortune, and left a considerable estate to his children, each member of his numerous family being the recipient of a substantial inheritance.

Mr. Coleman was united in marriage in early manhood with Elizabeth Pool, who was a native of France. The offspring of their union was, as before stated, fourteen children. The father of this family was possessed not only of a strong mind, but, in physical capacity, was a man of extraordinary power. He died in May, 1835, at the age of sixty-three years, leaving to his posterity a record as one of the most remarkable characters among the pioneer settlers of Fulton County.

COLEMAN, N. J., who has been industriously engaged in farming in Canton Township, Fulton County, Ill., since he reached the age of maturity, and is well and favorably known to all its residents, was born in that township in 1863, a son of William and Esther J. (Lawrence) Coleman, natives, respectively, of Fulton County and the State of New Jersey. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, spending his youth on his father's farm, and attending the district schools of the vicinity in boyhood. When twenty-one years old he began farming on his own responsibility in Section 10, Canton Township, where he then had sixty acres of land, and where he subsequently bought twenty acres more. On this place he has made all the present improvements. Besides carrying on a general line of farming, he devotes considerable attention to the raising of stock.

In 1884 Mr. Coleman was united in marriage with Rosetta Tyler, born in Peoria County, Ill., and a daughter of James Tyler, a farmer of Fulton County, and a native of the State of Maryland. Two children resulted from this union, namely: Earl and Lena. Fraternally Mr. Coleman is identified with the M. W. A. and the I. O. O. F. He is a thorough and careful farmer, and a man of upright character. Mr. Coleman is a brother of S. L. Coleman, a sketch of whom appears on another page of this work.

COLEMAN, S. L., an energetic, prosperous and progressive farmer of Canton Township, Fulton County, Ill., and a member of one of the favorably known pioneer families of that region, was born in that township in 1858, a son of William and Esther J. (Lawrence) Coleman, the former a native of Fulton County, and the latter of the State of New Jersey. William Coleman's father was a New Yorker by birth. The grandfather Coleman left his native State for the West at a very early period, and coming to Illinois settled in the township where his son and grandson have followed him in agricultural pursuits. He made the journey to his destination partly by water, and the remainder of the way by wagon. After locating in Fulton County he broke up a tract of prairie land with oxen and making on it the necessary improvements, there applied himself to the cultivation of the soil. He possessed the sturdy qualities characteristic of the pioneer settler, and bore his full share in developing that part of the country from its primitive state to a productive and populous center of activity, and thus his industrious and persevering career was finally terminated by death. His son, William Coleman, was born in Canton Township in 1827, and there he followed farming throughout his active life. His first purchase of land consisted of 160 acres lying three miles north of Canton, Ill., which he improved in a thorough manner. He was engaged in farming and stock-raising on this property until 1896, when he retired from his labors. He is still the owner of 520 acres in Canton Township. His life has always been marked by the same sterling qualities manifest in his father's course, and he is greatly respected by all who know him. By his union with Esther J. Lawrence he became the father of seven children.

S. L. Coleman, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared on the paternal farm, and in early youth enjoyed the advantages of the public schools in the vicinity of his home. His whole life has been devoted to farming, and in this pursuit he has met with deserved success. He has inherited the industry, tenacity of purpose and frugality of his worthy progenitors, which are apparent in the successful results attending his farming operations. In 1894 he bought eighty acres of land of Thomas Page, and eighty acres more belonging to Frank Alward. On this 160-acre tract he makes his home, and is busy in tilling the soil. Much of his time is devoted to raising cattle, sheep and hogs. He is a farmer of up-to-date methods, and is very thorough in his work. In 1887 Mr. Coleman was united in marriage with Nellie Herbert, who was born in Fulton County. They are the parents of one son, Guy.

COLLIER, Frank T., proprietor of a clothing and gents' furnishing store at Ipava and a leading citizen, was born in that village July 7, 1867, a son of William T. Collier, whose sketch will be found elsewhere in this work. Frank spent his early life on a farm and in attending the public schools. In 1882 he accompanied his father to Arkansas, assisting him, as in Fulton County, in his agricultural operations, and in 1889, when the elder Collier established a clothing store at Stuttgart, Ark., Frank was placed in active charge of it. Until 1890 he successfully conducted the business, when it was sold and the young man resumed farming.

Mr. Collier continued in his old-time avocation until 1894, and on December 26th of that year was united in marriage with Ethel C. Chaney, a daughter of Col. R. C. Chaney, a Confederate Colonel and for many years a prominent citizen and member of the Louisiana State Legislature and a State Senator, Sheriff and County Judge in Arkansas. Mrs. Collier died August 15, 1895, and in 1899 the husband returned to Ipava. At first he embarked in the hay-baling and pressing business, continuing thus engaged until 1902, when, in partnership with his uncle, he established a clothing and gents' furnishing store. Shortly afterward Mr. Collier purchased his uncle's interest and has since conducted the business alone and developed it to a most substantial and prosperous state.

On April 2, 1905, Frank T. Collier was married to Nellie LeHow, of Vermont Township, Ill., and a daughter of the late John LeHow. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P. and M. W. A., is a member of the City Council of Ipava and a leading Democrat in that locality. His courtesy, geniality and ability to "furnish the goods" have made him one of the most prominent business men of his section, and his enterprise and public spirit stamp him as a progressive citizen with a bright and a broad future before him.

COLLIER, William T. (deceased).—While many worthy civilian efforts have characterized the usefulness of William T. Collier, it is, perhaps, as a soldier of the Union that those nearest and dearest to him like best to remember him. Certain it is that the traits of courage and faithfulness with which Mr. Collier was so richly endowed, found no more certain avenue of expression than in the great Rebellion, where freedom for slaves and unity of government were purchased at the frightful sacrifice of 650,000 lives. As were the great majority who came to the rescue of their country in its dire necessity, Mr. Collier was following the dull routine of the farm, and his life up to that time had known little deviation from the strict fulfillment of home duty, interspersed by irregular attendance at the district schools. His family had pioneered Fulton County many years previous, and it was in his boyhood that his father settled in Bernadotte Township, following the removal of the family from Uniontown, Fayette County, Pa., where the lad was born in 1844.

Under the first call for troops after the battle of Bull Run in July, 1861, Mr. Collier enlisted in Company F, Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into service October 31, 1861. The company was originally a part of the Douglas Brigade, recruited principally from the young farmer population of Fulton, McDonough, Grundy, La Salle, De Kalb, Kane and Winnebago Counties. The company participated in thirty-one battles, including Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Antietam, the second Bull Run, Yorktown, Fredericksburg and Murrefreesboro, and was 128 days under continuous fire. It traveled 11,965 miles, of which 3,240 miles were actually marched on foot. At the expiration of his three years' enlistment Mr.

Collier returned to Ipava, and when the call for troops was issued December 19, 1864, for 100,000 men he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, organized at Quincy, Ill., and was mustered into service February 23, 1865. The regiment proceeded at once to Nashville, Tenn., thence to Dalton, Ga., and was stationed at Kingston, that State, when General Warfield surrendered 12,000 Confederate soldiers to Colonel French B. Woodall, of the One Hundred and Fifty-first. The regiment, after garrison and guerilla duty, was ordered to Columbus, Ga., where it was mustered out January 24, 1866, and at Springfield, Ill., was paid in full and discharged from duty February 8, 1866. Throughout the four years of his service Mr. Collier gave to his country the best that was in him, patiently enduring the long march, inadequate quarters and insufficient food, and tendering innumerable kindly services to less fortunate comrades-at-arms.

During August, 1866, Mr. Collier was united in marriage to Caroline Ball, a native of Ohio, and soon after settled on a farm which he occupied until 1869. From then until 1871 he lived in Kansas, but not realizing his expectations in that State, returned to Ipava, and in 1876 located in Lewistown, Ill., where he held the office of City Marshal until, resigning the position, he returned to Ipava in 1878. He then opened a meat market and in connection with its management served as Deputy Sheriff of Fulton County under Major D. J. Waggoner until 1882. He then returned to the West, locating in Arkansas, where he engaged extensively in general farming and stock-raising until his health failed in 1900. In order to regain his health Mr. Collier went to Hot Springs, Ark., but finding no relief visited his son in Scott County, Ill., where his death occurred September 15, 1900. Mr. Collier is survived by his wife, who lives with her son, Frank T., in Ipava, and who, notwithstanding many mile-posts of existence, enjoys excellent health and retains undiminished interest in the affairs of the younger generation. Besides Frank T., her oldest born, there is Daniel B., of Gillett, Ark.; Edwin D., a carpenter and builder of Winchester, Ill.; William D., a farmer of Arkansas; Harry H., a locomotive fireman on the Cotton Belt Railroad, and Fred E., a merchant of Gillett, Ark.

COLTER, Hugh R., the first County Clerk of Fulton County, came to Lewistown about the time of the organization of the county in 1823, also serving by appointment as Clerk of the first Circuit Court. Mr. Colter has the reputation of being the second lawyer in Fulton County, his admission to the bar taking place in 1825, while, according to "The Bench and Bar of Illinois," E. T. Warren, an attorney from Maine, located at Lewistown in 1824, remaining there about four years. After retiring from office Mr. Colter engaged in teaching for a time, but later removed to Grant County, Wis., where he served as County Judge and where he died in 1876.

COMSTOCK, Frank I., a well-known attorney-at-law of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., who is also successfully engaged in the real-estate business, was born in Vans Valley, Ohio, December 16, 1871. He is a son of Leander and Catherine (Sigler) Comstock, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Illinois. Leander Comstock, who was a farmer by occupation, located at Lewistown in 1892 and lived a retired life, dying in 1899.

Frank I. Comstock spent his boyhood on his father's farm and enjoyed the advantages of the district schools. At the age of seventeen years he entered the Central Normal College of Ohio, from which he graduated with the class of 1891. On coming to Illinois in 1892 he was engaged in teaching for five years, and during this period also applied himself to the study of law, being admitted to the bar in 1898. Of twenty-three applicants when he passed the examination but three were admitted, a fact which attests to the thoroughness of his preparation. In the year last mentioned he established himself in the practice of law in Lewistown, and since then has acquired a lucrative practice. In addition to this he deals in real estate and makes mortgage loans. He bears an excellent reputation as an able lawyer, an upright man and a useful citizen.

On December 24, 1898, Mr. Comstock was united in marriage with Rachael Manley, a daughter of Jacob Manley, who was in his lifetime one of the leading citizens of McDonough County. Politically Mr. Comstock gives his support to the Republican party.

CONE, Merritt H., County Treasurer of Fulton County, Ill., and one of the most successful stockman in this section of the State, comes of a pioneer family which is very prominent in connection with the history of Farmington. He was born in Farmington Township himself, on the 29th of August, 1861, the son of Henry and Mary (Eggleston) Cone. In 1833 Henry Cone came to Fulton County with his father, Joseph, the grandfather of the County Treasurer. The Eastern home of the family had been in Harwinton, Conn., not far from Farmington, that State, and when its members located in the new, unformed and partially unnamed Western country, and learned that another township was to be organized which embraced their homestead, they induced the Government authorities to call it Farmington, in honor of the village near the birthplace of Joseph Cone. Naturally, both father and son took great pride in the progress of the town of Farmington, to which they donated $2,000 for the construction of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad to that place, as well as a beautiful little park, which is a feature of the locality.

Joseph Cone, the grandfather, was one of the most uncompromising Abolitionists in Illinois. He was a vigorous supporter of all public enterprises, a firm believer in Congregationalism, and in all his opinions and actions a positive, honest man. He was instrumental in organizing the Congregational Church at Farmington, and both religious and educational movements always found in him a warm and helpful friend. As an individual he was charitable, and ever ready to assist those in trouble who were honestly exerting themselves to the best of their abilities. Henry Cone, the father, inherited and absorbed from Joseph his anti-slavery proclivities, and joined the Republican party upon its organization in 1856. He actively participated in local politics, and soon became a leader in his township. Not only did he loyally support the party until his death, but to the extent of his strength and means firmly upheld all movements which seemed for the good of the community in which he had been strongly influential for so many years.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cone were the parents of six children, viz.: Sophia, widow of William Field, residing in Los Angeles, Cal.; Jennie, wife of Silas Hays, of the same city; Nellie, living at Grinnell, Ia.; Luther, who is on the old farm near Farmington; Margaret Alsbury, a resident of Chicago; and Merritt H., the youngest of the family.

Merritt H. Cone received that training which has produced so many stalwart men—the combined discipline of the farm and the common school. After graduating from the public schools at Farmington, in 1878, he entered Lake Forest University, and advanced to the Sophomore year with the class of 1883. But feeling that his career lay in the activities of practical life, he left college and devoted himself, with characteristic energy and ability, to agricultural pursuits, gradually concentrating all his efforts into the raising and selling of livestock. For twenty years he engaged in these lines and finally became recognized as an authority and a marked example of the profitable nature of the business, when properly managed. In later years he was a member of the widely known firm of Steenburg & Cone, stock dealers, feeders and shippers. He had reached this position in the business field, when called to his important public duties in connection with the County Treasurership, which required even a higher order of ability, based, however, upon the same qualities of coolness, sound judgment and ceaseless vigilance which had brought him success in his private affairs.

Although a stalwart Republican and a descendant of old Whig stock, with political inclinations implanted in his very blood, Mr. Cone did not become active in politics until 1899. In that year he became a Central Committeeman from Farmington Township. In 1900 he was elected Supervisor by a good majority, and by his careful and energetic administration of that office both satisfied his constituents and broadened his experience and abilities, so that he was admirably adapted to assume higher public service. Although the Fulton County Board of Supervisors was Democratic, his good judgment, business prudence, practical methods and unprejudiced care in guarding the public interests promptly won him the hearty recognition of his co-workers, irrespective of party. In this capacity he proved not only that he possessed abilities of high administrative order which were capable of indefinite expansion, but that they were accompanied by absolute trustworthiness—an ideal combination for the character of the public servant. This combination is more than ever necessary when the public official is to be entrusted with the keeping of the people's funds. In Mr. Cone's case the logical outcome was his nomination to the County Treasurership by the Republican party, and his decisive election to the position. The supporters he had gained on the strength of his record as Supervisor, added to the numerous friends he had made in the course of his business travels throughout the county, made his majority noteworthy in the annals of sectional politics; and he was paid the greatest compliment possible by receiving in his own township the largest majority ever given to any candidate for political office. Since his triumphant election in 1902 Mr. Cone has centered all his energies and abilities in the conduct of the office to which he was so decisively called, and in a broader field is repeating his previous record of an unpartisan, business-like record of public administration. As he is still in the youth of middle age, there are doubtless even broader opportunities awaiting him. Although he has met with marked success in both his private and public relations, he is genial and unassuming in his manner, but prompt and direct in his dealings, and these elements of popularity and business-like conduct constitute the prime qualities of his strength.

Merritt H. Cone was united in marriage with Mary Jack, a daughter of Matthew Jack, one of the honored pioneers of Farmington Township. They are the parents of four children—Harry, Mara, Roy and Reta. Mrs. Cone is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

COOK, Charles A., a successful building contractor of Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that town in October, 1861. His father, Charles L. Cook, and his mother, Ann (Richardson) Cook, first made their home in Fairview in 1851. The former came to this country from Germany early in life, and the latter was a native of the State of New Jersey. Charles L. Cook conducted a cabinet maker's and wagon maker's shop for some time after his arrival, and subsequently devoted his attention to contracting and carpenter work. He was an honest, well disposed and industrious man, and did full justice to his patrons. His decease occurred in 1904.

After finishing his schooling in Fairview Charles A. Cook learned the trade of a carpenter and has always continued in that occupation in the place of his birth. He does a general contracting business and attends to all kinds of building. In this line he has been quite successful, and his services are in constant demand. He has constructed some of the best stores and residences in Fairview and its vicinity. His work bears the evidence of exceptional skill, care and a diligent application to details, which have given him an excellent reputation and a profitable patronage. Besides his duties as a contractor Mr. Cook keeps a stock of builders' hardware, and also sells and installs hot air furnaces. In 1899 he erected the attractive and commodious residence which has since been his home.

Mr. Cook was married in Canton, Ill., in 1882, to Elizabeth Hand, who was born in the vicinity of Canton. This union resulted in one child, Minnie J., who is with her parents. Fraternally Mr. Cook is identified with the A. F. & A. M. He is a frank, straightforward man, and enjoys the confidence and respect of his neighbors and of all who have dealings with him.

COOK, Milton M.—A man of high intellectual attainments and of practical ability, Milton M. Cook, the present Superintendent of Schools of Fulton County and President of the Lewistown City Improvement Association, is a native of Fairview, Fulton County, born on the 9th of November, 1855, the son of Joseph and Mary Ann (Robinson) Cook. The subject of this sketch was educated in the public school of his native place and at Hedding College, Abingdon, Ill., and before being elected to the head of the county school system was a successful teacher, for fifteen years of that period serving as Principal of the Fairview school. His popularity as a Republican and as a man, and the value placed upon his services as an educator, are demonstrated by his prominent official record.

Mr. Cook has been nominated five times for the office of County Superintendent of Schools—once on the first ballot with two opponents, and four times by acclamation—and four times has been elected by handsome majorities, and now, as an incumbent of the position in his fourth term, is acknowledged to be one of the leading educators of the State. He is also a Director of the Illinois State Teachers' Association, a member of the Executive Committee of the Illinois Association of County Superintendents, and of the Central Illinois Teachers' Association, and Vice-President of the Military Tract Educational Association. Mr. Cook is a leader not only in the field of his profession, but his familiarity with the conditions and needs of Lewistown, with his natural initiative force, has brought him into prominence as an enterprising and pushing man of affairs, and as President of the City Improvement Association he has been one of the strongest factors in this section of the county identified with the general advancement of the public interests. His influence is also pronounced in connection with the secret and benevolent orders, as he has been a presiding officer in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America, Knights of Pythias and Court of Honor.

On December 1, 1884, Mr. Cook was united in marriage to Miss Flora Spence, the ceremony being performed at the home of the bride's parents at Lewistown. Mrs. Cook is a lady of rare intelligence and grace of character, and their marital happiness has been clouded only by the death of their children.

COONS, J. H.—One of the most profitable mines in Fulton County is that operated by a company of which James C. Tate is President and principal owner, J. C. Slodin is Secretary and Treasurer, both of Galesburg, Ill., and J. H. Coons, manager. The company has a four and a half-foot vein on an eighty-acre tract of leased land along the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, employ from ten to twenty men and mine about 100 tons of coal per day.

J. H. Coons, who has held his present position for the past four years, is a practical coal miner of thirty years' experience. He was born in Fulton County, Ill., in 1859, a son of Jonathan and Mary (Howard) Coons, natives of Ohio, and the latter a gold miner for many years of his life, subsequently turning his attention to farming. The elder Coons came to Fulton County in the beginning of the 'fifties and about 1856 made his way to the Pacific slope, where he became extensively interested in gold mining. Two years later he returned to his family in Fulton County, but in 1859 again crossed the continent, this time to remain on the Pacific coast fourteen years. He was fairly successful, and lived to an advanced age. His son, J. H., began to work at coal mining when seventeen years old, and now is one of the best informed coal miners in the State. He is a man of family, having married, in 1884, Eliza Bell Toomer, a native of Ohio, and daughter of Richard Toomer, a farmer of both Ohio and Fulton County. To Mr. and Mrs. Coons have been born five children: Mrs. May Morley, Lester, Mrs. Bessie Bailey, Gladys, living at home; and Virgil Doyle (the baby).

COOPER, Andrew J., a retired farmer who was also engaged in the livery and feed business in Liverpool, Ill., and a prominent citizen of Fulton County, was born in Cuba, that county, June 23, 1845, a son of Spencer and Mary (Swanigen) Cooper, natives of Kentucky and Ohio, respectively. Spencer Cooper moved, at an early period, from his home in Maysville, Ky., to Ohio, where he was married. About the year 1832 he removed to Illinois and settled in Cuba, Fulton County. He bought land in that vicinity and carried on farming there until 1852. In that year he sold his farm and moved into the village of Liverpool, where he spent the remainder of his days, dying about the year 1880. His wife died in 1851 and was buried in Cuba Cemetery. They were the parents of the following named children, besides Andrew J.: Jemima, widow of Jonathan Politt, a resident of Canton, Ill.; Drusilla, widow of Jacob Huffman, a resident of Hannibal, Mo.; Eliza, widow of Levi Hill, who was a soldier in the Fifty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was killed in the Battle of Vicksburg; George, who died at the age of thirty-five years; Elizabeth, deceased wife of John Peak; and Mary, wife of Hezekiah Schimfaleh, of Canton, Fulton County.

The subject of this sketch was reared to farm life, and received his early mental training in the district schools in the vicinity of his father's farm. In his youth he went to work for a farmer at $7 per month and continued thus until the outbreak of the Civil War. In the fall of 1861 he enlisted in Company I, Fifty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, later was assigned to the Fifty-fifth Regiment and sent to Blue Springs, Tenn. He served in the Fifty-fifth Regiment until 1865 and was then transported from Texas to Springfield, Ill., and there mustered out. He then returned to Fulton County and applied himself to farming. In 1867 he rented a farm in Section 13, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, where he carried on farming for sixteen years. In 1884 he sold out his stock, went to Harper County, Kans., and there bought eighty acres of land, on which he remained until 1888. In that year he returned to Fulton County and purchased the old Willard Dickerman property, in the village of Liverpool, overlooking the Illinois River, and making an attractive home. Colonel Willard Dickerman was one of the pioneer settlers of Fulton County and commanding officer of the famous One Hundred and Third Illinois Regiment.

On May 2, 1867, Mr. Cooper was united in marriage with Nancy A. Sleeth, a daughter of George and Jane Sleeth. This union resulted in three children, namely: Levi, born September 10, 1869, who is at home; Nellie, born August 14, 1872, who is the wife of Henry Foster, of Liverpool, Ill., and has three children—Roscoe, Milburn and Andrew; and Earl, born October 8, 1879, who resides in Bloomington, Ill., and is a barber by trade. Mr. Cooper has been a resident of Fulton County for sixty years, and is one of the most favorably known men within its borders. He has always been closely identified with its best interests, and has been a leader in all enterprises tending to promote the public welfare. Fraternally Mr. Cooper is affiliated with Morning Star Lodge, No. 734, A. F. & A. M., of Canton.

COOPER, Thomas, who is successfully engaged in the livery business in Canton, Ill., under the firm style of Cooper & McMahon, was born in England March 7, 1849, a son of Thomas and Emma (Oglesby) Cooper, natives of that country. The father died in England and his widow subsequently became the wife of George Jackson, coming to the United States shortly after that event. Thomas Cooper, who was in his sixth year when the family crossed the Atlantic, received his education in the public schools of Canton, Ill., where they had established their home not long after arriving in America, and where the mother departed this life. Mr. Cooper was engaged in various occupations until September, 1880, when he entered into his present partnership. The firm with which he is identified is one of the best known and most prosperous in Fulton County, and their place is well equipped for this line of business.

In July, 1884, Mr. Cooper was united in marriage with Maggie A. Turner, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., and one child, Horace T., has been born to them. Mr. Cooper is a man of good practical judgment and has an excellent record in his sphere of effort. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M.

COYNER, C. E., who is successfully engaged in the grain and lumber trade at Middle Grove, Fulton County, Ill., is a worthy representative of the younger business element of Fulton County. To a very considerable extent, it is this element in any community, especially outside of the large cities, which infuses spirit and zest into the activities of the place. It is this element whose entrance upon the arena of active life dates not farther back than the final quarter of the last centennial period, which monopolizes most of the vigor, zeal and pushing energy which keeps the nerves of the commercial world ramifying through all the lesser towns of the country, strung to the full tension of strenuous endeavor. A pronounced type of the class of tireless workers thus described, as applied to Fulton County, is the subject of this sketch.

C. E. Coyner is a native of Astoria, Ill., where he was born in 1872. His father, John B. Coyner, is of English nativity, while his mother, Ellen (Hettrich) Coyner, first saw the light in Astoria. John B. Coyner located in New Philadelphia, Fulton County, at an early period, and for several years was engaged in the occupation of a carpenter. He subsequently entered into the lumber trade at Astoria, Ill., in which he has since continued. He is a man of good business qualifications, devoting close attention to his affairs, and has met with merited success.

The subject of this personal record obtained his early mental instruction in the public schools in the vicinity of his home, and some time after finishing his studies at Farmington, Ill., embarked in the grain and lumber trade at Havana, Ill., where he remained for eight years, his labors being attended by successful results. In 1893 he sold out his interests in Havana and engaged in the same line of business in Middle Grove. His brother was already in that business there, having entered it in 1899. He built a grain elevator, constructed lumber sheds and an office, and equipped his plant with a gasoline engine. Mr. Coyner deals in all kinds of grain and all varieties of lumber and builders' supplies. He is an exceptionally enterprising young man and thoroughly competent in business transactions. The honesty of his dealings is fully recognized by his fellow townsmen, and, although his advent in Middle Grove is of recent date, the patronage which he has enjoyed presages a successful future.

In March, 1892, Mr. Coyner was united in marriage with Mary Brock, who was born in Aledo, Mercer County, Ill., and their union has been blessed with one daughter, Olga. Mr. Coyner is regarded on all sides as one of the rising business men of his section of the county.

CRISSEY, Clarence S., a well-known resident of the village of Avon, Fulton County, Ill., who, in connection with his father, is extensively and successfully engaged in the lumber trade in that locality, was born in Avon on December 30, 1867. He is a son of Oliver and Margaret (McGowan) Crissey, natives of Connecticut, who were the parents of four children, as follows: Herbert G.; Clarence S.; Edith C.; and Harold R. (A sketch of the life of Oliver Crissey may be found in this volume.) In boyhood, Clarence S. Crissey attended the public schools in the vicinity of his home, and on reaching years of maturity entered into partnership with his father in their present enterprise, under the firm name of Oliver Crissey & Son. These gentlemen built the sheds, warehouse and office occupied for their business uses, and have long enjoyed a large and profitable patronage. They deal in all varieties of building material, including lime, cement, sash, doors and blinds, and also handle salt.

On January 20, 1898, Clarence S. Crissey was united in marriage with Minnie Predmore, who was born in Warren County, Ill., and is a daughter of R. B. and Addie (Crandall) Predmore, natives of Illinois. In politics Mr. Crissey is a supporter of the Republican party, and in religion is affiliated with the Universalist Church. He is a man of excellent character and diligent habits, and is regarded as one of the most active, reliable and worthy merchants in the community which has always been his home.

CRISSEY, N. O., proprietor of the large and flourishing creamery in Avon, Fulton County, Ill., was born near Greenbush, Warren County, Ill., December 30, 1859, a son of Henry and Mary A. (Osborne) Crissey, natives of Connecticut and Maine, respectively. When Henry Crissey left his New England home for the West he made his way to Illinois, where, in 1845, he located in Greenbush, Warren County. There he was engaged in farming for some years, after which he took up his residence in Union Township, Fulton County, and there continued in the same pursuit up to the time of his death, which occurred November 30, 1894. His wife now resides at Avon, Ill. They were the parents of two children: N. O. Crissey, the subject of this sketch, and his sister Alice. The father, Henry Crissey, was a man of untiring industry and blameless life. In political matters his views coincided with the principles of the Republican party and his religious convictions were in accordance with the creed of the Universalist Church.

N. O. Crissey received his early training in the public school in his native town, and, on reaching his maturity, devoted his attention to teaching. Before establishing himself in business he taught school in Fulton County for about eight years, and in this work gave entire satisfaction. Mr. Crissey started in the creamery line on a farm in Union Township in 1886, and eight years later built a creamery in Avon. Since then his patronage has been constantly increasing and he has now the largest business of its kind in his section of the country. He manufactures butter and ships cream, purchasing and gathering up the latter as far east as Fairview, in Fulton County. He operates a branch skimming plant at Ellisville, Ill., and thence takes the cream to Avon. His place is supplied with steam power and equipped with improved machinery for this kind of work, and its capacity is equal to the handling of 10,000 pounds per day. In 1902 Mr. Crissey built a spacious and commodious residence in Avon, connected with which is a dairy.

On June 17, 1890, Mr. Crissey was married to Anna L. Yeomans, who was born in Fulton County, March 20, 1867, and there, in girlhood, enjoyed the advantages of the public school, still later taking a course at Lombard University, Galesburg. Three children have blessed their union, as follows: Sumner Ellis, born March 4, 1893; Catherine, born December 5, 1897, and Anna Louise, born June 13, 1900. In politics Mr. Crissey is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. He is a man of superior intelligence and excellent traits of character and is regarded as one of the most enterprising and reliable members of the community.

CRISSEY, Oliver, for more than half a century an honored resident of the village of Avon, Fulton County, Ill., and during that period closely identified with the business interests of that place, was born in New Canaan, Conn., August 31, 1834, a son of Abram and Ellis (Betts) Crissey, who were also natives of Connecticut, the latter having been born in Norwalk, that State. Abram Crissey left the East in 1847, and journeyed westward to Illinois, where he located on a farm west of the town of Greenbush. He traveled by water to Chicago, and thence to Warren County by wagon. In Connecticut his occupation was that of a boot and shoe manufacturer, and before his removal to the West he was engaged in the same line of business in New York. On locating in Warren County, Ill., he purchased 100 acres of improved farming land, and during the remainder of his active career devoted himself to agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Greenbush. To him and his worthy helpmate were born nine children, eight of them named as follows: Henry, who died in infancy; Abigail E.; Harriet; Henry; Catherine; Egbert; Oliver; and Giles. Abram Crissey was a man of superior judgment and much force of character. He was a Republican in politics, and in religion a Universalist. He departed this life on April 2, 1889, his wife having passed away in 1867. Oliver Crissey received his early education in the public schools of Connecticut. He was thirteen years of age when he accompanied his parents from the home of his childhood to Warren County, Ill., and a year later left the parental roof and went to work for himself. When he was seventeen years old he attended school at Galesburg, Ill., and later learned the trade of a harness maker at Greenbush. This he followed two or three years, and then (in 1856) located in Avon. In May of the following year he began to deal in grain, having entered into partnership with W. T. Vandevere and H. V. D. Voorhees, which continued for three years. The firm commenced business on the east side of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and then moved to Mr. Crissey's present business location. Mr. Voorhees was associated with Mr. Crissey as a partner until 1865. In that year the former sold out his interest in the firm to Giles Crissey, who in turn sold out to Oliver Crissey and in 1873 moved to Colorado. Mr. Crissey has since been engaged in the lumber business with his sons. He is now the head of the lumber firm of Oliver Crissey & Sons, which enjoys an extensive patronage. He was identified with the grain trade for about twenty years, and in 1863 built the first elevator on the "Burlington" line, between Quincy and Galesburg. About that time he helped to organize and incorporate the village of Avon, and since then he has been prominent in all public movements pertaining to the welfare of that place.

On March 6, 1861, Oliver Crissey was united in marriage with Margaret McGowan, who was born in Dundee, Scotland, and is a daughter of Lechlair and Christine McGowan, natives of that country. Mr. and Mrs. Crissey are the parents of the following family, namely: Herbert G., Clarence S., Edith C., and Harold R. A sketch of Clarence S. Crissey appears in these pages, and may properly be read in this connection. Herbert G. Crissey was a member of the Nebraska Legislature at the time of the big fight between Rosewater, editor of the "Omaha Bee," and Thompson, of Lincoln, for the United States Senatorship. Mr. Crissey was a member for one term, and now lives at Palisade, Neb.

In politics Oliver Crissey is a Republican. He rendered efficient public service as Town Collector in 1860 and 1861, and held the office of Supervisor from Union Township for one term during the memorable contest over the location of the court house. Fraternally Mr. Crissey is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., of which order he has been a member since 1865, having officiated as Master of his lodge for a number of years. He is a man of the highest standing, and is greatly respected by all who know him.

CROSTHWAIT, Eli Cartwright, for seventy-five years a resident of Fulton County, Ill., and during the last twenty-eight years one of the most prominent and highly esteemed farmers of Liverpool Township, was born on the farm owned by the famous Peter Cartwright, in Sangamon County, Ill., June 13, 1830. He is a son of Harvey and Mary (Axley) Crosthwait, natives of Virginia, the former born in Loudoun County, Va., February 18, 1795, and the latter in Harrison County (now West Virginia), in 1794. The paternal grandfather was John Crosthwait, a native of Virginia, and the great-grandfather, Abraham Crosthwait, was born in Orange County, that State, August 27, 1766. His son John, on November 6, 1789, married Elizabeth John, born May 20, 1773, a daughter of Benjamin and Lydia John, natives of Loudoun County, Va. John Crosthwait and wife settled in Fulton County about the year 1835, where both died about 1840, and were buried near Canton. To them were born nine children: Mary, who became the wife of Robert Axley and spent her life in Virginia, where she died; Isaac, who moved to Kentucky about the year 1800, and there died; Harvey, the father of Eli; Hannah (Mrs. Davis), who lived and died in New Orleans; Samuel, who settled in Christian County, Ill., near Taylorville, and was frozen to death during a heavy snow storm; Ann, who married a Mr. Harper and moved to Texas, where both died; William, who died near Vicksburg, Miss.; Joseph, who came with Eli's father to Fulton County in 1829, and settled in Buckheart Township, selling out his land about 1856 and moving to Atlantic, Iowa, where he died, leaving a family; and Newton, who moved to Columbia, Tenn., where he died.

Harvey Crosthwait came to Illinois in 1829, leaving his family at the house of Peter Cartwright until he, with his brother Joseph, could locate a claim in Buckheart Township, near Civer, on the west line of the township. In the fall of 1830 he moved his family to their new home, just before the winter of the "big snow," which is still vividly remembered by the pioneers of that region. The snow continued falling three or four days until it reached a depth of three feet on a level. Remaining on Buckheart Township until 1832 Harvey Crosthwait then moved to Joshua Township, where he established a permanent home. There his wife died August 3, 1850, her funeral being preached by the Rev. Peter Cartwright.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Crosthwait were the parents of the following named children: Elizabeth, who died aged fourteen years; Charlotte, now deceased, who was the wife of George Putman, also deceased; Thompson R., who married Eustace Emeline Putman, and moved to Iowa, where he died; Enoch G., who married Margaret Craig and died in Iowa; John R., who married Nancy Craig, both dying in Iowa; Mary A., married W. W. Smith, of Lewistown, Ill., is now deceased; Harvey W., deceased husband of Julia A. Brown, who still resides in the western part of Iowa; James A., who died in infancy; Eli C.; Robert N., married Sarah Miller, both deceased; and Cynthia M., deceased, who was the wife of Emanuel Kingery, of Ohio. Six months after the death of his first wife Harvey Crosthwait married Mrs. Maria Shinn, who was a Virginian by birth, born in 1802 and died in Clinton, Ill., in 1895. There were no children by this second marriage.

The subject of this sketch was brought to Fulton County when he was but six months old and was reared upon his father's farm. He received his early training in a primitive log school house, with the customary fireplace in the end of the cabin. He remained on the paternal farm until he was twenty-one years of age, and for twenty-nine years has lived on Section 15, Liverpool Township, where he has a comfortable and attractive home, acquired by long and unremitting toil.

On April 10, 1851, Mr. Crosthwait was united in marriage with Hannah R. Bales, who was born in Vermillion County, Ind., April 9, 1832, and came to Fulton County with her parents at an early period. Five children were the result of this union, namely: Cynthia Eudora, born in Fulton County April 28, 1852, wife of Lewis E. Bordwine, of Dillon, Mont.; John H., born in the same county August 20, 1853, who was married August 31, 1890, to Ella Reiner, and is a farmer in Liverpool Township; Marion Eli, born in Franklin County, Ark., May 9, 1860, who married Mary E. Denney and lived on the old farm home; Mary F., born in Fulton County August 3, 1868, and died November 4, 1871; and Florence Minnie, born in 1875 and died in 1878. The mother of this family died February 1, 1899, at Lewistown, Ill., where the family had located during the previous year. Mr. Crosthwait then returned to the old farm, where he is now living in retirement with his son, Marion Eli.

In politics Mr. Crosthwait has been an unwavering Republican since the organization of that party, and has filled various local offices with ability and fidelity. His first presidential vote was cast for John C. Fremont and he has voted for every Republican candidate for President since. For fifty years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The more than seventy-five years of his residence in Fulton County have been rife with marvelous changes and made memorable by a prodigious development. In all this great transformation Eli C. Crosthwait has borne a conspicuous and creditable part, and it is the crowning glory of his declining years that he has proved faithful to his duty in every sphere in which his lot has been cast.

CULTON, Benjamin A., a prominent and prosperous farmer of Fulton County, Ill., was born in the city of Canton in 1847, a son of John J. and Rose (Appleby) Culton, the former being a native of Indiana, and the latter of Pennsylvania. The paternal grandparents were Alexander and Phoebe Ward Culton, of whom the former was born in Kentucky. John J. Culton was a farmer by occupation.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the paternal farm and in early youth obtained the customary mental training in the common schools of Mason and Stark Counties in Illinois. He early applied himself to farming in his own behalf and has continued in this occupation ever since with the best of results.

Mr. Culton was united in marriage with Alice Schenck, who was born in the State of New Jersey and received her early intellectual training in the public schools of Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Culton are the parents of three children, namely: William, Samuel and Chauncey. In his religious association Mr. Culton is a consistent member of the Methodist Church. He is a man of excellent traits of character and enjoys the respect of the entire community.

CULVER, John T., a member of a family which was prominently identified with the development of Fulton County, Ill., in its earlier stages, having settled there in the first half of the last century, was born in Union Township, in that county, on August 24, 1867, a son of Joshua and Emily (Fisher) Culver, of whom the former was a native of New York State, where his birth occurred September 11, 1824, and the latter was born in Fulton County on September 16, 1833. During his active life Joshua Culver was successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1842 he accompanied his father, John Culver, from Ohio to Illinois and located in Ellisville Township, Fulton County, making the journey by boat to Shawneetown, Ill., and traveling thence to Copperas Creek on foot, and finally locating in Ellisville Township, Fulton County. John and Joshua Culver purchased a quarter-section of land in the vicinity of Ellisville, where they made their home until the death of the former in 1872. Joshua Culver bought a farm of 160 acres in Section 7, Ellisville Township, which he cultivated until 1889, when he established his residence in the village of London Mills, Fulton County. He carried on general farming and raised considerable stock. During the Civil War he served in defense of the Union, being a member of the Thirty-second Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he participated in Sherman's March to the Sea. In politics Joshua Culver has always acted with the Republican party. Before his retirement from active life he rendered efficient service to the township in the office of School Director.

John T. Culver is the sole offspring of the union of his father with Emily Fisher. In early youth he received his mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood and was a pupil for one term in the Avon High School. He remained at home until his father's removal to London Mills, and then commenced farming on his own responsibility. He owns an improved farm of 117½ acres in Section 8, Ellisville Township, purchased from Henry Mitchell. On the homestead property he and his father broke up all the land and made all the improvements, beginning with the original log cabin and pole stable. In 1899 Mr. Culver built a barn, forty by forty-eight feet in dimensions, which was blown down in a windstorm in 1902. He built a new one the same year, measuring thirty-two by forty feet.

On October 30, 1889, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage in Ellisville Township with May Cook, who was born in Fulton County on December 25, 1868, and there in girlhood enjoyed the advantages of the public schools. Mrs. Culver is a daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Reed) Cook, and her father, a farmer by occupation, settled in that vicinity in 1866. Mr. and Mrs. Culver have become the parents of two children, namely: Ernest and Ralph. In political matters Mr. Culver is a supporter of the Republican party. For four years he served as Township Assessor with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. In fraternal circles he is identified with the I. O. O. F. He is looked upon as an intelligent, progressive and public-spirited member of the community.

CULVER, Solon.—The claim of Solon Culver upon the good will and consideration of his fellow townsmen of Ipava is based upon many years of effective work as an agriculturist, upon a meritorious record as a soldier during the Civil War and upon his activity in promoting education and kindred accompaniments of advanced civilization. Mr. Culver retired from active life in 1904, at the age of sixty-three years, a fact which speaks well for his industry and business sagacity. He has been a resident of Illinois since his third year, coming to Canton in 1844 with his parents, L. C. and Susan (Pierce) Culver, from Hillsdale County, Mich., where he was born May 24, 1841. The family in 1854 settled on a farm in Bernadotte Township, where the father died December 20, 1883, the mother passing away August 30, 1890. Three are living besides the subject of this sketch: Ella, wife of Robert Hanson, of Keokuk, Iowa, and Albert, who are both younger than Solon.

Until the breaking out of the Civil War the life of Solon Culver was passed uneventfully on the home farm in Bernadotte Township. On October 8, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Fiftieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Captain Selah W. King, for three years. The Fiftieth put up a gallant fight in all of the principal battles between its mustering in and enlistment and its mounting on January 1, 1864, and Mr. Culver followed its changing fortunes until his discharge at Rome, Ga., October 7, 1864. It was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 13, 1865, the following day reached Springfield, Ill., and was paid in full for its services in behalf of the Union cause. Mr. Culver bore bravely the many long marches and the many privations incident to warfare, and since his return home has been an honored and active member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

In 1865 Mr. Culver married Clara Quigley, who died in 1867, leaving a son, Edward, who is now living with his father. On December 30, 1868, he married as his second wife Mary P. Griffith, who is the mother of two children: Emma Fay, who is the wife of Van Smith, and Grace, who was born May 6, 1872, and is the wife of Dr. Charles Adkinson, of Havana, Ill. To both of his daughters Mr. Culver has given excellent educational advantages, and Mrs. Adkinson is a graduate of the Keokuk (Iowa) Dental College and the St. Louis Dental School. Her husband is also a dentist. Mrs. Adkinson is State Secretary of the Woman's Relief Corps of Illinois, and an accepted authority on dental surgery. Mrs. Solon Culver was a daughter of Thomas H. and Emma J. (Quigley) Griffith. Her father was born in Pennsylvania and her mother in New York, and they located at Bernadotte, in Fulton County, Ill., about 1837, and there engaged in farming. Mr. Griffith died April 30, 1854 and on April 15, 1860, his widow married J. Paul, who now resides with his wife in Ipava. There were three children by the first marriage, two of whom are now living, viz.: Mrs. Culver and Melvin Griffith, of Denver, Colo. There were four children by the second marriage, viz.: Charles, who resides near Lewis town; Sidney, now residing in Bernadotte Township; Clara, who married James Stephens and resides at McPherson, Kan., and Lewis, of Peoria, Ill.

Since the war Mr. Culver has improved a farm of 120 acres in Bernadotte Township and continued to make that locality his home until coming to Ipava in 1904. For a year he lived at Eldorado Springs, in the hope of benefiting his wife, who was out of health, and upon his return purchased a comfortable home in Ipava, where he is in close touch with his farm and at the same time can enjoy the companionship of many of his friends who formerly were farmers but who also own city homes. Mr. Culver is a staunch Republican and has served many terms on the Board of Education. His wife is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Both are highly esteemed in the town and county and are among its most substantial and progressive element.

CUNNINGHAM, Edward F., who is successfully engaged in the poultry trade in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the State of Pennsylvania in 1863, a son of Nelson and Elizabeth (Buchanan) Cunningham, natives of Pennsylvania. Nelson Cunningham located with his family in Knox County, Ill., when his son, Edward, was one year old, and there the father carried on farming for about thirty years, and the son, as he grew older, attended the common schools. In 1894 the family moved to Canton and father and son went into the poultry business, in which they have made a decisive success. Mr. Cunningham's operations are conducted in his three-story building, which is 70 by 55 feet in dimensions. He employs sixteen men, has five wagons in the country collecting poultry, of which he handles three tons per day. The concern makes local consignments and ships by carload to the East, also supplying the retail trade in Canton.

In 1888 Mr. Cunningham was joined in wedlock with Fanny Knable, who was born in Yates City, Ill., and their union has resulted in three children: Florence, Edith and Joe. Fraternally Mr. Cunningham is connected with the M. W. A. He is one of the energetic business men of Canton, and his close application to the details of the work has made his enterprise notably successful.

CUNNINGHAM, Samuel A. (deceased).—The life of Samuel A. Cunningham embraced a wide range of experiences, and covered a period of fifty-three years in the city of Canton. He was one of those whose labor lent dignity and stability to unsettled and undeveloped conditions, and whose faith in the future was readily communicated to his associates among the early settlers. Mr. Cunningham was born in Franklin County, Pa., in 1821, and was reared to the stern duty of helping to make a small farm provide for a large family. His educational chances were confined to a few months each winter in the district school, but his powers of observation were well developed and he learned more from men and things than from books.

At the age of nineteen years, in 1840, Mr. Cunningham broke the bonds which held him to the familiar surroundings of his youth, and coming to Illinois found a promising field of effort in Canton. He served an apprenticeship to a blacksmith and wagon maker, which occupations, combined with farming, employed his energies up to the time of his death in 1893. In 1850 he established a home of his own, marrying Elizabeth Boyd, who was born and reared in Washington County, Md., and educated in Clear Spring, a town in the same county. Of this union there were three children: Charles C., T. J. and Mrs. C. F. Nagel. Mr. Cunningham was a Republican in politics, but his peace of mind was never invaded by official aspirations. He was a hard worker, a shrewd and well informed business man, and was identified with many phases of city and country life. His judgment was of value because tempered by experience and held in leash by a natural tendency toward conservatism. To know him was to receive the inspiration of an honest and upright man, and the encouragement of one who has surmounted many obstacles.

CURLESS, John W.—The growth of intelligence and sound optimism has advanced agriculture to a combination of art and science, the profound possibilities of which can be but imperfectly mastered by any one man during his comparatively brief span of years. Man whose faith is pinned to the soil, and whose delight and reward it is to use its stored fertility for the most enlightened needs of civilization, has brought it to a stage of usefulness unequalled in any other walk of life. To such must come the greatest material satisfactions also, as witnessed in all prosperous farming communities, of which Fulton County is one of the best examples. Since the earliest history of this part of the State certain families have been connected with its continuous advancement, lending color and enthusiasm and splendid purpose to its unfolding prosperity. Of these none are better or more favorably known than that of which John W. Curless represents the present working generation. Mr. Curless was born in Section 35, Woodland Township, Fulton County, September 22, 1865, and is a son of Moses L. and Armentha (McDaniel) Curless, the former of whom was born in Coshocton County, Ohio.

Moses L. Curless was one of those who helped to push the frontier toward the Pacific, and he came to Fulton County while still there were evidences of Indian occupation, taking up unbroken land in Young Hickory Township. Later, with hope buoyed up by modest success, he came to Woodland Township and to a small farm added surrounding land until he owned 260 acres. In the midst of his striving he gave heed to the need of his country, and, enlisting at the outbreak of the Civil War in Company G, Eighty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, he was promoted for bravery to the rank of lieutenant. The long marches and exposure, however, finally undermined his health, and in the latter part of 1862 he was discharged for disability and returned to his home in Woodland Township. Increasingly successful as an agriculturist, he was equally useful as a general citizen, setting an encouraging example of public spiritedness and clean, upright living. Although not an office seeker or holder, he gave staunch support to local Republican politics, and encouraged education, charities and social advantages. No one ever was turned from his home empty-handed, and the number of people whom he lifted above discouragement and want probably never will be known. It was while upon an errand of mercy to a sick friend that he met his tragic death, March 7, 1885. A shot fired through the window lodged in his back and, passing through his lungs, caused his untimely death at the end of three days. No man who has come and gone upon the highway of the township and mingled in its affairs for a term of years has been more profoundly missed than was this honorable, high-minded and generous early settler. Of his ten children seven grew to maturity and six are living: Frank, a farmer in Woodland Township; Edward, who, with his mother, occupies the old homestead where all of the children were born and where the father originally settled; Thaddeus L., a farmer of Woodland Township; William, also a resident of this township; Gertrude, wife of William Dutton, of this township, and John W.

Until his twenty-second year John W. Curless remained with his parents, in the meantime availing himself of such educational and general advantages as the township offered. Early in life he evinced industry and business sagacity and acquired the habit of doing well whatever tasks confronted him. From the first he believed in his work and hoped much from it, and, expecting success, drew it within the radius of his environment. He married December 1, 1886, when barely of age, Hattie Farwell, also a native of Woodland Township and daughter of John Farwell, one of the foremost pioneers of Fulton County.

In the fall of 1887 Mr. Curless settled in Section 26, Woodland Township, upon 160 acres of land, and he now owns 550 acres in the home place, besides 460 acres in Schuyler County and 590 acres in Woodland, making in all 1,600 acres of land. He is the largest feeder and shipper of high-grade stock in the southern part of Fulton County, and at the present time has on hand 100 head of heavy cattle, averaging 1,600 pounds each, besides 200 head of average weight cattle and from 400 to 500 head of hogs. He has excellent facilities for handling his enormous stock and produce interests, and in his management supports the most improved methods known to scientific agriculturists of the present time. Aside from any intrinsic value, his home surroundings evidence a more than ordinarily exacting nature, tastes which are content only with the best that a country life has to offer, and large requirements in the way of mind improvement and diversion. To bear upon his work Mr. Curless brings not only a thorough knowledge of what already has been discovered and tested, but an earnest desire to improve upon the kind and extent of his own operations. He is a student as well as teacher in ever-widening avenues, and as such is a source of encouragement and help to those of his co-workers who are less extensively interested.

Mr. Curless is a Republican in politics, but want of inclination and the pressure of his large business interests have kept him without the circle of office holders. Fraternally he is connected with the Bluff City Camp, No. 5594, M. W. of A. Mr. and Mrs. Curless are the parents of seven children: Rosa, Granville R., Bonnie B., John F., James B., Jennie and Benjamin R. Mr. Curless is a genial, approachable gentleman, wearing modestly his intelligently won success and contributing wisely of his means to charitable and public-spirited causes.

DAILY, Garrett R., a well-known resident of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., who is Secretary of the Homestead Loan Association, was born in Somerville, N. J., on July 14, 1854, the son of James and Julia (Carney) Daily, natives of County Meath, Ireland. James Daily came to America in 1848, locating in Somerville, N. J. In 1856 he removed to the West, settling in Canton, Ill., and continued farming in that vicinity until his retirement from active business life. He died March 11, 1905, at the age of eighty-six years. The mother is still living in Canton.

In boyhood Mr. Daily attended the Canton schools, having come to that place with his parents in 1866. On August 28, 1880, he was married to Sarah Stewart, who was born in St. Joseph, Mo., where she received her early education. Three children—Julia, Alice and Charles G.—are the offspring of this union.

In politics Mr. Daily is a Republican. He has served as Deputy Internal Revenue Collector for the Eighth District of Illinois, but with that exception has never held office. Fraternally he is affiliated with the B. P. O. E., M. W. A. and K. of P. Mr. Daily is the efficient Secretary of the Homestead Loan Association and is engaged generally in the real-estate, loan and insurance business.

DAILEY, James Marvin.—James M. Dailey is among the best known residents of Lee Township, Fulton County, where he was born July 7, 1852, a son of Michael Dailey, a farmer of the Keystone State, and Jane (Ketchum) Dailey. The father came to Fulton County at an early day and settled near Babylon, where he remained for some time before finally locating in Deerfield Township.

The subject of this sketch was educated in the district schools of his native township and was trained on the family homestead to the occupation of farming. After following that calling until 1892 he engaged in the grocery business at Babylon, but, selling his establishment in 1897, returned to the old-time avocation. Two years later he began to carry the mail from Ellisville to Bushnell, McDonough County, but in 1905 retired from active work and is now residing in the latter place. He is the owner of a pretty place of ten acres at Bushnell, and retains the proprietorship of his eighty-acre farm in Lee Township. In politics Mr. Dailey is a Democrat, and has served the public as School Director for a period of three years. On March 7, 1878, James M. Dailey was married, in Lee Township, to Mina Markley, of Deerfield Township, who was born March 20, 1861. Mr. Dailey is not a member of any church, but is a moral and useful member of his home community.

DAILY, Peter, a well known building contractor and capitalist of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., who rose from a humble origin to affluence and influential position, and whose name has been conspicuously associated with the development of the material interests of Fulton County, was born in County Meath, Ireland, June 6, 1830, a son of Garrett and Frances (Flood) Daly, natives of that country. Garrett Daily, who was a small farmer in the Emerald Isle, emigrated with his family to the United in 1850, and after arriving in New York City located in Somerset County, N. J., where he died three years later. In 1856 the mother and her children came to Fulton County, Ill., and Peter, who had worked on a farm while living in New Jersey, continued for a short time in the same occupation in his new home. At a later period he learned the trade of a bricklayer and plasterer, and subsequently commenced building houses on his own responsibility. Soon he undertook more important contracts, and in course of time erected several stores and public buildings. Among the more pretentious structures which are the result of his skill and enterprise is the Canton Opera House, the first of its kind in the city. He built an elegant residence for his own occupancy, surrounded by spacious and ornate grounds, and put up a number of dwellings which he rented out.

In 1854 Mr. Daily was married in New Jersey to Ann McGinnis, who died in 1868, leaving two children—Garrett and Joseph. In 1872 he took as his second wife Johanna McMahon, who was born in Fulton County. Five children resulted from this union, as follows: Elizabeth, Agnes, Fred, Annie and Lillian.

DANNER, John.—When William Penn, an English Quaker and founder of Pennsylvania, received the grant comprising that State from the crown in 1681, he brought with him across the seas to inhabit his tract numerous seekers after religious freedom, conferring upon them certain sections of land, many of which are still retained by descendants of the original owners. A fellow voyager of the distinguished colonist was the great-great-great-grandfather of John Danner, the latter one of the early pioneers of Woodland Township and at present a retired resident of Summum, Fulton County. The immigrating Danner was presented with land on the west side of the Susquehanna River, in York County, and to this day the soil is tilled by inheritors of his name and fortunes. Within sound of the rushing Susquehanna John Danner was born April 9, 1839, a son of Jesse and grandson of Michael Danner. Jesse Danner married Sarah Lieb, also of York County, and in 1850 outfitted for the long overland journey to Fulton County, Ill., arriving in which he settled two miles east of Astoria, Woodland Township. His first home was a rude log cabin, and his first experiences were of the never-to-be-forgotten and never-to-be-repeated pioneer kind. Into the wilderness he brought the religious zeal of his forefathers and he and John Fitz established the first Dunkard Church in Woodland Township. Mr. Danner's first 160 acres of land soon proved inadequate, and he kept adding to his possessions until he owned 640 acres. He was a staunch Democrat, but, while possessing great business and executive ability, never would accept official honors. He was a generally useful man, however, and besides stimulating an interest in agriculture and good government, gave generously of his means to private and public causes, being ever ready to help those in need, providing they were not in a position to help themselves. The death of this fine old Dunkard occurred November 22, 1892, and he is survived by a large gathering of descendants. He was twice married and his first wife died in 1846, leaving besides John, her oldest son, four other children: Martha, wife of Peter Burgard, of the State of Washington; Jacob, who died at the age of twenty-one; Barbara, who died at the home of her paternal grandfather, and Henry, a farmer of Woodland Township. In 1848 Mr. Danner married Elizabeth Huff, also a native of Pennsylvania, and of the union there were four children: Elizabeth, wife of Jonas Baker, of Summum; Jesse A., a farmer of Woodland Township; Sarah, wife of George Hoke, of Schuyler County, this State, and Samuel, a resident of Rushville, Ill. At the age of eighty-four Mrs. Danner is a bright and interesting woman, keenly in sympathy with the younger life around her and full of reminiscences of the early history of Illinois. She now resides east of Summum with her son, Jesse H.

John Danner was about eleven years old when the family came to Woodland Township, and he here continued the education begun in the early subscription schools of Pennsylvania. He remained on the home place until his twenty-first year, when he turned his attention to rail-making as more profitable and agreeable than general farming. Rail making in those days was a formidable business, for the rude and unpolished implement served many purposes unthought of at the present time. Mr. Danner split many thousands of rails, and to this day recalls the pleasure he experienced as his ax swung through the air and he felt his blood flow and muscles harden with the splendid exercise. His hours were non-union and extended from sunrise to sunset, yet he never thought of complaining, for work was in the air and around it centered the purpose of the pioneer.

On August 4, 1859, John Danner married Mathilda Trone, also born in York County, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Joseph Trone, who came to Fulton County in 1855. The young people settled on eighty acres of land in Woodland Township, cleared several acres, then sold and rented 160 acres until 1880. Mr. Danner then purchased 240 acres in Woodland Township, made many fine improvements thereon and continued to make that his home until 1891. He then sold his farm and bought 160 acres of the present site of Summum and vicinity, and eventually platted the town, which then was called Oberland. The years have witnessed the disposal of all of his farm save that part upon which has been erected his present beautiful residence.

To Mr. Danner and his wife have been born eight children, two of whom (Elizabeth and William) are deceased, those living being: Jesse, a farmer and merchant near Summum; Joseph, a farmer at Herndon, Iowa; George, in charge of a general mercantile store at Minburn, Iowa; Charles, a farmer of Pleasant Township; Minnie, wife of Edward Spangler, of Summum, and Nellie, living at home. In his political affiliations Mr. Danner is a Democrat, but like his father before him he always has avoided office holding. Although not a member of any religious sect, he contributes to the support of local churches and charities, and even in retirement exerts an influence upon many phases of the town's growth. A man of strict and uncompromising honor, he has always enjoyed the confidence, as he has the affection and good will, of all who are privileged to know him.

DAVID, Captain Isaac.—A gallant soldier of the Union during the Civil War, an Illinois pioneer of 1833, and Postmaster from July 1, 1889, to October 1, 1893, Captain Isaac David is a native of Freeport, Harrison County, Ohio, where he was born January 24, 1822. Captain David is a man of good education, largely self-acquired, and is well posted upon current events. While comparatively young he was united in marriage, May 18, 1843, to Mary A. Green, a native of the vicinity of Freeport, and born November 7, 1819. Of this union there have been born three children: Ruth; John W., who died in Bowmansdale, Pa., April 7, 1888, and Hattie, who was married to C. M. Hennick, September 1, 1880. Mrs. David died December 29, 1895.

February 18, 1865, Captain David was mustered into the United States service at Quincy, Ill., and was mustered out of the service at Columbus, Ga., February 1, 1866. He was a member of Company D, Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and also served in the One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry, a 100-day regiment.

DAVID, Henry (deceased).—Out of the dim past of Fulton County rises the noble, Quaker-lit features of Henry David, a man who could turn his hand to many tasks, whose nature and inclinations accorded well with the needs of the frontier, and who left in his wake a reputation for gentleness, usefulness and patient endurance second to none of those who invaded the wilds of Illinois in 1832. The earliest setting of this well directed life was a farm in Delaware, where Mr. David was born September 25, 1791. He was a son of Daniel and grandson of Daniel David, the latter of whom came from mountainous Wales with his brother and settled in Delaware during the early part of the eighteen century.

At the age of fifteen, after the death of his father, Henry David left home and followed the carpenter's trade in Harrison County, Ohio, and there, December 18, 1814, was united in marriage to Ruth Easley. Subsequently he learned and followed for several years the tailor's trade, but because the work often extended far into the night he gave that up and followed any honorable occupation which presented itself. On many occasions he crossed the mountains to Baltimore as a drover, and for several terms taught in the early subscription schools, notwithstanding the fact that he was almost entirely self-educated. About 1829 he engaged in the mercantile business as then understood, conveying his goods by wagon throughout the country and spending the night with the settlers or camping under the stars. It was a happy-go-lucky existence, and in 1832 he journeyed with his products to Illinois, and in Fulton County found much to encourage permanent settlement. Hither he brought his family in 1833, taking boat at Wheeling, W. Va., and landing at the mouth of the Illinois River the first of May. Sleeping in an old deserted cabin on the river bank the first night, he then moved into a log house prepared for his coming by one Daniel Knock, a brother-in-law, who also had arrived in 1832. During the fall of '33 Mr. David settled on land in Farmers Township and in 1834 returned to Ohio, as the land was not then in the market and could not be regarded as a permanent possession. The following year this difficulty was obviated by the land being thrown open to settlers and he returned and located on the farm now owned by A. F. Brock, in Bernadotte Township. This farm had never felt the upheaval of a plow nor had aught save primeval growths come out of its soil. The first owner not only cleared it of timber and undergrowth, tilled and planted, but conducted a general store for a number of years and also ran a mill at Browning. After selling the mill he devoted himself exclusively to farming, and here his death occurred March 3, 1852, fifty-four years ago, at the age of sixty-one years. His wife, who survived him until April 3, 1875, was the devoted mother of eleven children: Daniel David, born August 11, 1816, died September 1, 1816; John, born September 10, 1817, died at the old home in Bernadotte Township in 1850; William, born December 6, 1819, died in Ipava May 26, 1900; Isaac, born January 24, 1822, Captain of Company D, One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry and long a resident of Ipava, died in the spring of 1906; Rachel, born March 4, 1824, widow of James McCune, of Ipava; Daniel, born April 20, 1826, died December 18, 1879, leaving a widow, residing in Ipava; Easley, born June 23, 1828, died April 3, 1873, near Ipava; Edith A., born May 30, 1831, died August 28, 1866; Henry F., born July 26, 1833, died March 3, 1858; Reese R., born April 25, 1836, died February 6, 1849, and Mary, born December 30, 1839, now living with her sister in Ipava.

Mr. David was a promoter of schools and all upbuilding interests, but he lived at too early a time for local politics to figure conspicuously among the duties of the settlers. His quiet, unostentatious nature carried him along prescribed paths, and it was his habit to accept rather than argue upon the issues which interested the world. His wife also was a Quaker, and both lived honest, clean and kindly lives, helping always and hindering never the progress of their fellowmen.

DAVID, Lewis.—That men of broad and varied experience are best fitted for the profession of farming is doubted by no one familiar with the intellectual and general demands placed upon present day exponents of scientific agriculture. Especially is a knowledge of general business an important item in the equipment of those who conduct the basic industry of the world, and it is this advantage which contributes most materially to the success of Lewis David, whose home and diversified interests are to be found on a farm of 298 acres on Section 13, Vermont Township.

On both sides of his family Mr. David represents the pioneering element of Fulton County, for hither came his parents, Easley and Annie (Barber) David, with their parents during childhood, locating in an undeveloped country around which their hope built a promising future. Outgrowing their childhood, the young people who had shared the same diversions and attended the same school were married and started housekeeping with few material advantages, and in time seven children gathered around their hearthstone, the partakers of an increasing bounty and of an influence which diverted their various abilities into wise and useful channels. Charles David, the oldest son, now occupies the old homestead; Josephine is the wife of Samuel K. La Rue, mentioned on another page of this work; Leona is a well-known educator of Canton, this State; Elizabeth is the deceased wife of W. W. McDermott, of Kansas; Ruth also is a teacher in the public schools of Canton, and James is a civil engineer in the employ of the Anaconda Mining Company, of Alaska. The father of this family was a Whig in early life and later a Republican, and in religion he was a Methodist Episcopalian. His death occurred April 3, 1873, and that of his wife in March, 1895.

Lewis David remained on the home farm until entering the Wesleyan University at Bloomington, Ill., after graduating from which he settled in Ipava, this county, and engaged in the real estate, loan and collection business. In 1887 he disposed of his business and became manager and stockholder of the Emerson &

Mrs S. R. Hinkle.

Skinner Coal Company, of Dunfermline, remaining in that position until the company sold out to the White Breast Fuel Company in 1890. He then became interested in the flouring mills at Astoria, and in 1892 sold his stock in the mills and became Cashier of the Vermont State Bank at Vermont, Fulton County. When that bank was firmly established he spent the winter in Tivoli, Ill., in the mercantile business, and in 1893 returned to Ipava, where, in December, 1894, he was appointed Deputy County Clerk, an office which he held until 1898. In 1901 his wife's father presented her with their present farm on Section 13, Vermont Township, and in the meantime Mr. David has added to the improvements of the former owner, converting his property into one of the valuable and productive farms of the township. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and in the latter on a much larger scale than the former.

On December 20, 1885, Mr. David was united in marriage to Mrs. Katie L. (Emerson) Merrill, daughter of Hon. William H. Emerson, of Astoria, and they have three children: Emerson E., born January 27, 1895; Anna E., September 9, 1897, and Wilson B., May 22, 1901. Mr. David professes Republican attachment, and always has felt a keen interest in the local undertakings of his party. He is one of the prominent and substantial men of this section, exerting a wide influence in general affairs and contributing to the welfare of the community a noble character and large capacity for usefulness.

DAVIDSON, William Taylor, was born in Petersburg, Menard County, Ill., February 8, 1837, and came with his parents to Lewistown the following year (1838). His father, Isham Gilman Davidson, was a native of South Carolina, born in 1802, and was brought to Illinois by his parents in 1807. He came of strenuous, daredevil Revolutionary stock in South Carolina. William's mother was Sarah Ann Springer, who was born in Kentucky June 2, 1810, and was also brought by her parents to Illinois in 1811, both families desiring to get away from negro slavery. The homes of the Davidsons and Springers were in Madison County, some fifteen miles east of St. Louis. During the second war with England both families lived in forts much of the time until 1815, the men cultivating their farms with their rifles near at hand midst many a scene of horrid Indiana massacre. These two were married in Madison County in 1826 and lived there on a farm until 1835, when they moved to the village of Petersburg, Ill., where Mr. Davidson established a flouring mill and dry goods store. The mill was burned and the panic of 1837 swept all his other property away. Then he secured a contract to carry the mail from Springfield to Lewistown on the old Concord coaches with two to four horses each. This brought Mr. Davidson and family to Lewistown as the terminus of the mail route.

The lad William entered the log-house "pay school" at the age of four. He could only go to school fitfully two or three months in a year, missing some of the years entirely, and "graduated" at the age of twelve, just as he had gotten to fractions and the first complicated pages of Kirkham's Grammar. But he could read fairly well, could spell "pony" and all such words, and write in a scandalously awkward fashion. At the age of twelve he had to go to work to keep the "wolf of want" from the log cabin door. From the age of twelve to seventeen he drove his father's team, hauling produce to the Illinois River, either to Havana or Liverpool, with merchandise for his return trips; or hauling building stone and sand to town from adjacent quarries or banks, or hauling coal from nearby mines and wood from the great forests. Little lads of his age in these days can hardly comprehend the bitter cold, the frightful storms, the hardships and dangers this slight boy encountered in these five years.

A withered arm and frail physique led him at the age of seventeen (April 3, 1853) to become an apprentice to the printer's trade in Hugh Lamaster's "Fulton Republican" office in Lewistown. The Democratic "Fulton Ledger" moved from Lewistown to Canton in the fall of 1853. The next week Hugh Lamaster with joy suspended "The Republican" (a Whig organ), as it had never paid expenses. For the following twenty months William was finishing his trade in Peoria and later in Macomb. In July, 1855, his older brother, James M. Davidson, commenced in Lewistown the publication of "The Fulton Democrat." William was called from more promising fields to assist in establishing "The Democrat." He set in type the first editorial (the "Salutatory") for "The Democrat," a ponderous article of three and a half columns. In July, 1855, he became half owner of "The Democrat" and helped to fill its columns week after week with strenuous editorials for its idol, Senator Stephen A. Douglas, in the famous Douglas-Lincoln campaign of that year. At the close of that election, November 12, 1858, James M. Davidson retired from "The Democrat" and William T. Davidson then became its sole owner and editor, as he is at this writing, December, 1906.

January 24, 1860, Mr. Davidson was united in marriage with Miss Lucinda M. Miner, of Columbus, Ohio. To them were born seven children: Harold Lee, Mabel (deceased), Bertha B., Frances M., Lulu M., Nellie (deceased) and Maude G. Mrs. Davidson died December 25, 1893. Mr. Davidson was again married April 3, 1895, to Miss Margaret Gilman George, who died November 22, 1897, leaving her little son, William Gilman.

For almost fifty years, in health or sickness, at home or in distant places, Mr. Davidson has contributed editorials or correspondence for every issue of the paper, and excepting a few months spent in Peoria and other cities in 1856-57, and fourteen months spent in Texas in 1894-95, he has been wholly occupied in publishing and editing "The Democrat."

Mr. Davidson never sought office, small or great; has always had employment more congenial and honorable, he felt, than any office within his reach. But he held the office of County Superintendent of Schools in 1863-65 and also was Alderman of Lewistown for one year—the longest and most uncomfortable year of his life.

The "Fulton Democrat" was an intensely Democratic paper from its birth until 1882. To that time it had never "bolted" the ticket—good or bad—had never dreamed of lowering the Democratic flag. About the latter date local political conditions inside the Democratic party became so offensive that "The Democrat" could no longer honorably support some of its nominees. In 1884 the situation became so bad, in the judgment of Editor Davidson, that he refused to support any part of the Democratic ticket, but took the paper over into the Prohibition party—his one terrible life blunder. This mistake in due time was rectified by making "The Democrat" an "Independent Democratic paper," free to support or reject nominees or platforms of the party, and that has been its frank attitude to date.

Very significant and appropriate has been the motto at the editorial head of "The Democrat" from its birth: "I'll take the responsibility.—Jackson." It has been as free and unhampered as a northwest blizzard. It has never counted the cost in dollars or in personal comfort when there were public wrongs to fight or scamps of any party abroad to be exposed. No man in so humble an environment ever led a more reckless and strenuous long life to its sunset with a whole hide and never a libel suit in the half-century, although not judgment proof for a day. Mr. Davidson has made deeply-regretted mistakes enough in his long and stormy editorial career, just as every mortal does. It has been his lot all these years logically to have many bitter enemies among the classes "The Democrat" has antagonized as public enemies. Meantime his bitterest foes have confessed, at last, that "The Democrat" ever has been animated by the dominant wish to make the old world and all the people a little better and more comfortable. In this quest the editor has not been deeply concerned about the rights of stalwart men, but he has ever gone into the last red ditch of radicalism in defense of women, children and dumb animals. Perhaps he would prefer as his epitaph this truth: "In fifty years of Fulton County Journalism He Was Ever the Defender of Women and Children."

His vigorous editorial style and his interest in questions which make for humanity are illustrated in the following article from the editorial page of "The Fulton County Democrat," published January 6, 1904, following the Iroquois Theater fire in Chicago of December 30, 1903:

"In Chariots of Fire.—There is another side to the Chicago horror which the great papers have missed. Is it well to dwell upon life's horrors and sorrows? Is it well to miss the silver lining of every cloud that darkens earth?

"Let us calmly and reverently consider what happened at the Iroquois Theater December 30.

"That finest theater in America on that afternoon was filled with 2,000 of the happiest people—mostly ladies and children—in all the city. How clean and beautiful that marble temple! How sweet and artistic, and surprising the play! How delicious the music! How perfectly beautiful the audience in holiday attire and radiant with holiday happiness! The great and splendid marble temple was aglow with joy and vocal with the softly spoken salutations of the holy holidays. In an interlude, amidst the soft buzz of 2,000 voices, a tiny ribbon of flame darts up amidst the stage settings. There is a sudden cry of fear. In a moment 2,000 big and little people are wild to escape from a hell of fire that sweeps the great stage. Billows of flame, Death's red banners, sweep the balconies, and little children sit there—dead! Beneath the balconies and at every exit are piles of dead! In the nearby alley are piles of dead! In five minutes—maybe in two minutes from that tiny ribbon of flame—588 women and children are dead! Passersby on the street did not know there had been an accident in that splendid theater—and 588 people dead in its marble aisles or cushioned seats!

"How quickly it was over. One breath of that flame, and children were dead! One moment of suffocation, and others were dead! Those who were crushed or mangled in the whirlpool of death—it was all over in a few moments!

"If God is love—if the Bible is truth—if our holy religion is not a fraud—those 588 dead children and their mothers or guardians had a moment—as good as an age—for prayer. Like old Elijah, they went in chariots of fire to the imperial palaces of their King. For each it was a moment of untold agony, and then—Heaven! In the self-same hour they had gazed with wonder and joy on an earthly temple of beauty and art, and then upon the undreamed-of glories of Jerusalem the Golden beyond the stars.

"If God is love, if His Bible and our holy religion is truth, this is truth. We do not belittle the horror of December 30th. But here is the silver lining to that blackest cloud of horror and sorrow that ever came so near our homes. Is it not well to see the other side? Is it well to break our hearts for those innocents that in chariots of fire and midst the crash of heavenly choirs have gone home to be with the Lord Jesus forever? In this faith sings the immortal Shelley—

"Onward their flight they are winging,
On to the haven of rest,
Comfort to weary hearts bringing,
Peace from the land so blest."

Josephine W. Hoopes

A. Hoopes

"We do not know why such innocents must thus die in flames, in shipwreck, of croup, or consumption, or other diseases in which they die scores of deaths and live to die again. It is an awful mystery. We shall know after while. But in His time and way God will make it right with His beloved.

"Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in the better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there, sometime, we'll understand.

"God knows the way; He holds the key,
He guides us with unerring hand;
Sometime with tearless eyes we'll see;
Yes, there, up there, we'll understand.
"Then trust in God through all thy days;
Fear not, for He doth hold thy hand;
Though dark thy way, still sing and praise;
Sometime, sometime, we'll understand."

DAVIS, Eli G., M. D., who is successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in West Columbia, Mason County, W. Va., February 15, 1853, and is a son of Eugene B. and Susan E. Davis, natives of the State of Ohio. The family left West Virginia in 1865 and moved to Bushnell, McDonough County, Ill.

The boyhood of Dr. Davis was spent in assisting his father in the cultivation of the home farm, and he received his preliminary education in the common schools of his neighborhood. In 1873 he entered Abingdon (Ill.) College, where he pursued a two years' course of study; then studied medicine with Dr. J. R. Kelly, and in 1880 became a student in the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville. For five years he applied himself diligently and faithfully to his professional studies and after his graduation, in August, 1881, located at Bryant, Ill., where he remained until 1897, during which period he acquired an extensive practice. In the year last mentioned he moved to Lewistown, where he has been equally successful. He still continues to be a close student and keeps in constant touch with the latest developments in medical science. A large and lucrative patronage has rewarded his conscientious devotion to his profession, and he enjoys to a large degree the confidence and esteem of his numerous patients and the general public.

On April 11, 1878, Dr. Davis was united in marriage with Lou M. Bailey, a native of Virginia, and their union resulted in two children, namely: Grant E., who is in the United States Mail Service, and James B., a druggist of La Harpe, Ill. In 1899 the mother of these sons succumbed to death, and on July 5, 1900, Dr. Davis was married to Mary E. Haines, of Lewistown. Politically the Doctor is identified with the Republican party, and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., M. W. A., of which he is Medical Examiner, and other orders of a secret and benevolent nature.

DAVIS, Ernest E., M. D.—The kind of energy, resource and large-mindedness required of the young man who would succeed in any of the learned professions in these days of strenuous effort and severe competition, seem to be an integral part of the equipment of Dr. Ernest E. Davis, a medical and surgical practitioner of Avon for the past five years, and the recipient of a patronage as financially remunerative as it is intellectually satisfying and encouraging. Dr. Davis is an enthusiastic and careful thinker, and notwithstanding his well-known caution and respect for tradition, is not afraid of untrod paths or independent, individual effort. He inherits his predilection for medicine from his father, Dr. Hosea Davis, a native of Massachusetts, where he was born June 21, 1817, and where he lived for a number of years. After graduating at Dartmouth College, N. H., he went to Maryland, where he was engaged in teaching about two years. Then, after taking a course of lectures in Chicago, he began the practice of medicine in Indiana, later returning to Chicago, where he took a course in Rush Medical College, from which he graduated in 1853. He then located at Littleton, Schuyler County, Ill., which continued to be his home for the remainder of his life, and where he died in 1888, aged seventy-one years. Dr. Davis married Sarah A. Stevens, who also was a native of Massachusetts, born September 21, 1833.

On June 21, 1906, Dr. Davis was married to Miss Frances Ross, who was born in Avon, Ill., the daughter of Joseph and Emma (Woods) Ross, both natives of Fulton County. Her father, Joseph Ross, was a son of the late General Leonard F. Ross, who was a prominent factor in the Civil War, and a son of Ossian M. Ross, a prominent pioneer of Fulton County. General Leonard F. Ross was a Republican in politics and during the latter years of his life extensively engaged in farming and stock-raising. The mother of Mrs. Davis died when the latter was about fifteen years of age and her father is now living in retirement at Denver, Colo.

The early life of Dr. Ernest E. Davis was spent in Littleton, Ill., where he was born October 29, 1875. He was educated in the public schools of that place, in Rushville High School and the Northern Indiana Normal School, receiving his professional training at the Northwestern University Medical School, Chicago, from which he graduated in the class of 1900. After an initial practice in Chicago for six months he settled in Avon, Ill., which has responded generously and with fitting discernment to his professional skill and good fellowship. Dr. Davis has claims to many interests outside of his life work, is a staunch supporter of local Republican politics, a popular member of the Knights of Pythias, and an active worker in the Universalist Church. He has the elements of pronounced success, and should reap the most splendid compensations of his fascinating and ever widening profession.

DAVIS, Oliver P., one of the most enterprising and worthy representatives of the agricultural element in Fulton County, who is engaged in the pursuit of his vocation in Section 24, Lewistown Township, was born in that township December 25, 1865. He is a son of Alfred W. and Jeannette (Clary) Davis, natives of Kentucky. Alfred W. Davis settled in Fulton County about the year 1847, and here united his fortunes with Jeannette Clary, on December 25, 1850. From their union resulted three daughters and six sons, as follows: William H., born September 22, 1851, who was married to Mary Rowland November 17, 1881, and made his home in Walnut, Ia., in 1887; Mary V., born November 12, 1853, who was wedded January 4, 1872, to John Blackaby and is a resident of Blackwell, Okla.; Eliza J., who was born September 12, 1855, and on December 18, 1879, became the wife of Andrew Jones; Emma G., born November 8, 1858, who was wedded to Isaac Middleton and died March 12, 1898; Edgar J., born February 6, 1861, who married Clara Blackaby February 12, 1885, and moved to Marathon, Ia., the same year; George C., born July 23, 1863, a farmer in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, who was wedded to Lizzie Berry November 4, 1886; Oliver P., of whom this record treats; John T., a resident of Chicago, born April 6, 1868, and Jasper W., born March 31, 1870, who was wedded June 17, 1895, to Saverne Moorelock, a resident of Aurora, Ill.

The father of this family departed his life May 7, 1875, and his widow survived him until February 17, 1897. Alfred W. Davis was a son Solomon and Eliza (Hendrickson) Davis, natives of Kentucky, of whom the former was born June 28, 1802, married March 7, 1826, and died February 13, 1871. His wife was born March 15, 1804, and passed away May 23, 1875. Her parents, Richard and Margaret (Worth) Clary, were united in marriage May 14, 1819. The former was born May 29, 1781, and died January 3, 1872. The latter was born April 17, 1794, and died October 2, 1855. Their children were as follows: John C., who was born April 15, 1811, and died in 1855; Betsy, who was born May 22, 1813, and died March 2, 1888; Joshua, who was born October 11, 1818, and died in 1887; Nancy, who was born May 4, 1822, and died March 19, 1852; Nelson P., who was born April 5, 1824, and died March 8, 1900; Emily A., born May 18, 1826, who is the widow of John Hanna, of Lewistown Township; Ruth M., who was born October 18, 1828, and died January 22, 1894, and Margaret, born August 1, 1834, who is the wife of Orville France, a resident of Iowa.

Oliver P. Davis was educated in the district schools of Lewistown Township and his occupation since early manhood has been that of a farmer in the section where he was born. He is the owner of eighty acres of fine land, under a high state of cultivation, and in addition to general farming devotes careful attention to the raising of superior breeds of stock, grading up. He has a number of fine Percheron horses and keeps two full-blooded Durham cows. He is an energetic and painstaking farmer and his operations are attended with success.

On November 10, 1892, Mr. Davis was united in marriage with Sarah A. Wetzel, a daughter of George H. and Cynthia (Clark) Wetzel, natives of Illinois and Ohio respectively. Mrs. Wetzel was, however, reared in Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Wetzel became the parents of four children, namely: Elmer G., who was born February 26, 1868, and was married to Emily Sutliff, April 27, 1898; Toler B., who was born January 1, 1870, and is a resident of Lewistown Township; Sarah A. (Mrs. Davis), and Permelia C., born April 11, 1873, who lives at Lewistown, Fulton County.

The grandfather of Mrs. Davis, Christopher Wetzel, was born July 13, 1793, and died October 4, 1894. He was a native of Virginia and settled in Fulton County about the year 1840. On February 17, 1835, he wedded Sarah Cook, who was born in Virginia and died January 29, 1889. From their union resulted nine children, one of whom died in infancy. B. C. Lutz.

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver P. Davis are the parents of four children, namely: Herschel L., born January 20, 1894; Frances, September 8, 1895; Karl A., June 1, 1897, and Margaret E., October 30, 1900. DEAKIN, George, a well known and thrifty farmer, who successfully pursues his vocation in Putman Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the State of Ohio in 1851, a son of Justice and Margaret (Slater) Deakin, both natives of Ohio. Justice Deakin came to Fulton County in 1855 and was employed on the farm of A. C. Moore. At a subsequent period he purchased eighty acres of land in Cass Township, where he carried on farming during the remainder of his life.

The subject of this sketch is one of a family of six children, four of whom are living. In boyhood he attended the district school in the vicinity of his home in Fulton County and made himself useful about the farm. In 1884 he bought a farm in Section 18, Putman Township, Fulton County, on which he has made all the improvements. In 1904 he built a spacious barn, 36 by 40 feet in dimensions. He is the owner of 152 acres of land, on which he is engaged in general farming and stock-raising.

In 1836 Mr. Deakin was united in marriage with Emma Murphy, a daughter of Milton and Clementine Murphy, and they became the parents of two children, Ernest and Ethel. Fraternally Mr. Deakin is affiliated with the K. of P. and the M. W. A. A diligent and painstaking farmer and worthy citizen, well merited success has attended his labors.

DENNEY, John J., an enterprising, prosperous and influential farmer in Sections 6 and 26, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township May 28, 1861, a son of Solomon T. and Mary C. (Jennings) Denney. The former was a native of Ohio and the latter was born in Fulton County, Ill. The father died in October, 1884, and the mother is still a resident of Liverpool Township. Solomon T. Denney settled in Fulton County in 1854 and was married in 1856. He and his wife had five children besides John J., as follows: Robert, a resident of Canton, Ill.; William, a farmer in Farmington Township; Joseph, who is on the old home farm; Rebecca, wife of William Boswell, of Dunfermline, Fulton County; Elizabeth, wife of Marion Crosthwaite, a farmer in Liverpool Township. The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm in the township where he was born and which has always been his home. There he received his educational training in the district schools. Mr. Denney is the owner of 120 acres of the finest land in Fulton County, which is under a high state of cultivation and upon which he has a fine grade of horses, cattle and hogs. In him the church and school find a vigorous champion, having been a School Trustee for sixteen years.

Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., the M. W. A. of Canton, Ill., and the Order of Eagles. In every relation of life he is faithful to the obligations of duty and is regarded as one of the most exemplary and useful members of the community.

DEWEY, Edwin Page.—At the age of ninety, men who have retained their faculties and profited by their experiences look across life and not into it, and they see mostly the fair shore of their childhood from which they have constantly receded, rather than the bridge which connects it and of which they have been one of the builders. But it is in proportion as they have builded wisely and been in accord with the changing tide of affairs that their satisfaction is great or otherwise, and it thus became a pleasure to know and talk to one who had lived so long and gathered so much of interest as has Edwin Page Dewey. Mr. Dewey was one of the retired colony of Canton, and his life had gone parallel with the development of Fulton County ever since his arrival here with his parents in 1832. He then was fifteen years old, having been born February 4, 1817, in Hanover, N. H. His father, Oliver Dewey, married in early life Jemima Wright, and when he arrived in this county had little besides his determination and hope to accompany his first years of hardship and deprivation.

Mr. Dewey had but limited educational chances, but to some extent he made up for this by the application of later years. He never was disturbed by great ambitions, but sought the quiet paths of the lover of nature and the tiller of the soil, content to await the arrival of his harvests and the sale of his products in the town of Canton. At the age of twenty-five, September 1, 1842, he married Anna Maria Shinn, and to him were born six children: Roswell W., Sarah P., Charles Arthur and Eliza Maria, still living, and Stephen and Henrietta, the former of whom died at the age of seven months and the latter of eleven years. Three years after his marriage in 1845 Mr. Dewey purchased and moved upon an eighty-acre farm in Section 11, Canton Township, upon which he lived and prospered until his retirement to Canton in 1856. He had been retired from active life for more than forty years, and the years had dealt gently with him, giving him the companionship of many friends and the solace which comes of dealing fairly with one's fellowmen, when he was called away by death August 23, 1898.

DIKEMAN, Ambrose, who, although still classed with the younger element of the community in which he lives, is one of the most prominent characters in the agricultural, mercantile and political circles of his section of Fulton County, is a resident of Farmington, where he established himself in business in 1894. He was born in Fairview Township, Fulton County, on May 11, 1871, a son of Stephen C. and Susan (Lindsey) Dikeman, natives of New York and Massachusetts respectively. Stephen E. Dikeman, who followed farming throughout his active life, settled in Fulton County in 1844, locating in Fairview Township, where he purchased forty acres of land. This tract he improved, living at first in a log house and afterward building a comfortable dwelling. He was always successful in farming and ultimately became the owner of 600 acres of land in that locality. In 1880 he withdrew from his long-continued labors and made his home in Farmington, remaining in comfortable retirement there until his death, which occurred in 1898. He and his wife were the parents of seven children, of whom the following are still living: Cyrus M., Flora (Mrs. Green), George and Lindsey.

Ambrose Dikeman attended the public schools of Fairview Township during his boyhood and subsequently pursued a commercial course in the Canton Business College. His youth was passed on his father's farm, where he remained until he was about twenty-three years of age. He then engaged in the hardware and stove business in Farmington, opening a store in the Crane Building, on the south side of Fort Street. This concern he has conducted successfully ever since, his brother Lindsey assisting him in the capacity of clerk. Together with his brother he has extensive farming interests, owning an entire section of land in Fulton and Knox Counties, which is now rented.

In 1902 Mr. Dikeman was united in marriage at Farmington with Mary McCoy, who was born in Knox County, Ill., and is a daughter of Dennis and Jane (Threw) McCoy, natives of Ireland. One child, Clifford, has resulted from this union.

In politics Mr. Dikeman is a Republican and wields a strong influence in the local councils of his party, having been prominent in connection with various public trusts. He has served as Alderman, was Supervisor two years and for an equal period filled the office of Mayor of Farmington. Fraternally he is identified with the A. F. & A. M., M. W. A. and Eastern Star. His capacity and enterprise are recognized by all and his progressiveness and public spirit have made him an important factor in the mercantile and municipal activities of Farmington.

Lindsey Dikeman, the brother and business assistant of Ambrose, was born in Fairview Township, July 4, 1876. Since the Dikeman hardware enterprise was established his diligent and faithful efforts have contributed largely to its success. He is a man of strict uprightness and good business ability. In 1900 he was wedded to Effie Miller, who was born in Canton, Fulton County, and they are the parents of two children—Flo and Leta.

DIKEMAN, Henry M., one of the oldest citizens of Fulton County, Ill., both in longevity and length of residence, and formerly one of that county's most energetic and successful farmers, who is now passing his declining years in the retirement of private life, was born in Oswego County, N. Y., February 19, 1828. He is a son of Gilson and Parmel (Tuttle) Dikeman, also natives of the Empire State. The father settled in Fulton County in 1844, making the journey by wagon and consuming a month and two days in reaching his destination. He located in Fairview Township, where he purchased a tract of eighty acres of farming land which he broke up and improved, his dwelling being a log cabin built by himself. He hauled his grain to Peoria, Copperas Creek and different points, where he also marketed his stock and other products of the farm. There he spent the remainder of a busy life, successfully engaged in his wonted occupation. He and his wife were the parents of ten children, of whom but one, Henry M., survives.

In boyhood Henry M. Dikeman attended the public schools of New York and Illinois while obtaining his education, walking daily two miles to a log schoolhouse in Fairview Township. Until he was twenty-one years old he assisted his father on the home place, at which period he commenced farming for himself without a dollar of capital. He was very successful in his labors and in 1866 bought the homestead property, on which he made some improvements. He also purchased 100 acres of land adjoining it, and at one time was the owner of 500 acres of land. He followed general farming and raised cattle and hogs, shipping his product to Chicago and Peoria. He still has 200 acres which he rents, having bought a lot in Farmington in 1894 and built a house, which has since been his home. His property also includes several other pieces of town property.

On the 28th of November, 1855, in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., Mr. Dikeman was united in marriage with Jeannette Harding, a daughter of John and Caroline (Armstrong) Harding, who was born in New York State. Her family moved from the East to Fulton County about the year 1852. Three children blessed this union, namely: Dexter, William and Clara (Mrs. Hart). In religious belief the family are Methodists.

Politically Mr. Dikeman is a Republican, has served his township as Road Commissioner and held the office of School Director for eleven years. In his long-extended career in Fulton County Mr. Dikeman has discharged his duties as an individual and as a citizen with unvarying fidelity. He has been identified with all movements tending to promote the best interests of his locality, and has made an irreproachable record as a man of strict probity and pure motives. By his old neighbors and his fellow townsmen in Farmington he is regarded with the utmost respect and esteem.

DITMARS, Eugene, who has been successfully engaged in farming in Fairview Township, Fulton County, Ill., for nearly thirty years, was born in Somerset County, N. J., November 20, 1856. He is a son of James S. and Maria L.

B. S. Anderson

(Van Cleef) Ditmars, both of whom were natives of New Jersey. James S. Ditmars was also engaged in agricultural pursuits, but followed this occupation during his entire life in the State where he was born. He was a man of diligent and frugal habits and blameless character, and his labors were rewarded by a good measure of success. To him and his worthy spouse were born four children, as follows: Eugene, of this review; Garadina, Mary Jane and James.

In early youth Eugene attended the district schools in the neighborhood of the parental home, in which he received the mental discipline for which his intervals of leisure afforded opportunity. Until he reached the age of manhood he remained on the homestead with his parents, helping his father in carrying on the work of the farm of 160 acres. When he was about twenty-one years old he determined to start out on his own responsibility and, journeying to Illinois, located in Fulton County. Since 1877 he has been engaged in farming in Fairview Township, that county, and has been rewarded by the results which inevitably follow industry, energy and careful management. In addition to general farming he devotes much of his attention to the raising of stock, breeding Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs.

On January 29, 1877, at Farmington, Fulton County, Mr. Ditmars was joined in matrimony with Emma Grimes, a daughter of Thomas and Mary Grimes. Mrs. Ditmars is a native of Fairview Township, where she was born May 1, 1859, and where in girlhood she enjoyed the advantages of the public schools. From this union have resulted six children, as follows: Charles, Roy, Harry, Lena, Mayme and Eugenia. In the matter of politics Mr. Ditmars is in hearty accord with the principles of the Republican party. As to religious doctrines he is an adherent to the faith of Universalism. He takes a good citizen's interest in all measures affecting the welfare of his township and county and bears an excellent reputation wherever known.

DIVILBISS, C. H.—The grotesque appearing farmer with whom the comic artist has made us familiar has gone out of style in Illinois, if, indeed, he ever existed, and in his place has come a man who appears well, thinks well, is informed on current events and has that sincere desire to elevate himself to the top notch of his calling which cannot fail to secure him some measure of success. He is robust and intelligent and commands respect and attention wherever he goes. To this class belongs C. H. Divilbiss, a representative of the second generation of his family in Fulton County and the owner of 120 acres of valuable land in Sections 23 and 24, Joshua Township. Mr. Divilbiss purchased his present farm in 1892 and since has engaged in general farming and stock-raising and also made a special study of horticulture, raising small fruits extensively and finding a ready market for the same in Canton. He operated his farm along practical and paying lines, leaving no stone unturned to increase his earnings and savings and minimize his expenditures. He has a substantial home, well constructed barns and outbuildings, and surrounds himself and family with many evidences of his forethought and taste.

J. A. Divilbiss, father of C. H., came to Fulton County at a time when settlement within its borders called for courage and patience, and when its future at best was a matter of speculation and faith. He was a Pennsylvania by birth and settled on a farm in Canton Township, where he succeeded in general farming for many years, and whence he eventually removed to his present home in Kansas City, Mo. Soon after coming here he married Maria Gardner, who was born in New York State and who came to Fulton County with her parents at the age of two years. Six children were born of this union, of whom C. H., the fourth, was born in 1856. He was educated in the public schools and in 1878 married Emma Havermale, a native of Fulton County. The year following, during the spring of 1878, he rented a farm in Canton Township, and continued to live thereon until moving to his present home in 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Divilbiss are the parents of three daughters: Maud, wife of L. F. Randolph; Pearl, now Mrs. J. F. Randolph, and Hazel. Mr. Divilbiss takes a moderate interest in politics, and has served as Collector and Highway Commissioner of Joshua Township. Fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. He is an energetic and painstaking man, fulfilling his obligations with conscientious exactness, and in his work exemplifying the belief that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well.

DONNELLY, Levi McVeigh.—In the passing away of Levi McVeigh Donnelly, January 11, 1905, Lewistown and Fulton County sustained a commercial and social loss of more than average import. Mr. Donnelly left behind him not only a legacy of material wealth, but of useful lessons, and he who would may read that early limitations develop, rather than break, the strong and resourceful. Born August 27, 1841, in Licking County, Ohio, Mr. Donnelly was a son of James and Evelyn (Jenkins) Donnelly, the latter a daughter of Levi and Mary Jenkins, of Ohio.

Left motherless at the age of three weeks, Mr. Donnelly found a home with his uncle, John McVeigh, with whom, at the age of thirteen, he came to Fulton County, settling on a farm where now is the station of Civer, six miles west of Canton. In the meantime his father, having remarried, removed to Kansas, where he died at an advanced age. Mr. Donnelly remained with his uncle and aunt for the rest of their lives, their deaths occurring February 10, 1862, and August 4, 1864, respectively. In 1856 the family had moved to Lee Township, and in 1858 bought a farm three miles from Marietta, where Mr. Donnelly grew to maturity, and finally succeeded to the entire management of the farm, thus supporting by his labor the relatives who had befriended him in his youth. In Lee Township Mr. Donnelly married Ann Maria Morey, daughter of Zenas J. and Ann Morey, natives of New York and Ohio, respectively. At the present time Mrs. Morey lives with Mrs. Donnelly, her daughter, and is eighty-four years old.

From 1868 until 1883 Mr. Donnelly lived in Marietta, and for a few years conducted a general merchandise store. He became active in Democratic politics, served eleven years as Town Constable, and, beginning with 1870, was for a number of years Justice of the Peace. In 1883 he removed to the R. F. Leaman estate, in Lewistown, and established the general store which, since his death, has been conducted by his daughters, Mrs. Crabtree and Mrs. Carper, under the firm name of L. M. Donnelly & Company. The estate still owns the farm of 160 acres one and a half miles west of Cuba, Lee Township, upon which Mr. Donnelly spent so many years of his life.

For twenty years Mr. Donnelly was a delegate to every Democratic Convention held in Fulton County. In 1890 he was elected Sheriff of the county, serving one term. His political career was a clean and upright one, and was destitute of the personal aggrandizement which mars so many lives devoted to public service. Fraternally he was connected with the Good Faith Lodge, No. 752, I. O. O. F., of Cuba, Ill., and the Knights of Pythias. In religion he was a member of the Christian Church. To himself and wife were born six daughters and one son, of whom one daughter died in infancy. Of the daughters now living, Ida Allathea is the wife of Mack Crabtree, of Lewistown; Tillie B. is the wife of J. M. Jackson, of Canton; Carrie May is the wife of Leroy Beers, of Ipava; Nora Maria is the wife of William Babcock, of Lewistown; and Nellie Luella is the wife of Frank Carper, of Lewistown. During his active life Mr. Donnelly drew to him many warm and devoted friends, and the confidence of the communities in which he lived and worthily labored. He had a genial and optimistic nature, and as far as general qualities were concerned, was well adapted to the occupation to which he devoted so many years of his life.

DORRANCE, George C. (deceased), formerly a well-known and prosperous business man of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Waterloo, N. Y., September 30, 1816. He was a son of John H. and Deborah (Sloan) Dorrance, natives of New York, where the former was born in the town of Lyons.

George C. Dorrance was educated in the public schools of his native State and after reaching mature years engaged in mercantile pursuits. In the fall of 1846 he journeyed to Illinois and located in Canton, where he entered the milling business in partnership with a Mr.

Hall. After being associated with the latter one year he purchased his interest and conducted the concern alone for fourteen years with successful results. He was then engaged in the grocery business with equal success for about six years. This he relinquished at the end of that period and applied himself to farming to some extent until the time of his death, which occurred May 30, 1895.

On December 7, 1848, Mr. Dorrance was united in marriage with Mary J. Colton, who was born in Indiana. Two children resulted from their union, namely: Matie L. and Charles C. The former was married to Clinton B. Smith, of Canton, July 5, 1898, and they have one child, Erminia Virginia. Charles C. wedded Nellie Zwisler, of Canton, in January, 1895.

In political action Mr. Dorrance was identified with the Republican party. He was one of the oldest Odd Fellows in the county, joining the Canton lodge in 1847. At the first public reception given at Mr. Vaughn's only nine members of the fraternity were in attendance. By the early business element of Canton Mr. Dorrance was recognized as an intelligent, upright and enterprising merchant. In private life he was exemplary and as a citizen was always faithful to the obligations of public duty.

DORSEY, Lewis (deceased), the father of Mrs. Theodore Robinson (see sketch of "Robinson, Theodore"), was born in Maryland, June 18, 1799, and when a young man moved from his native State to Virginia, where, in 1837, he was united in marriage to Abrilla Lindsey. Miss Lindsey was born in Maryland in 1813 and at the age of seventeen moved with her parents to Virginia, where all but one of their children were born. In 1851 Mr. Dorsey came overland to Fulton County, Ill., settling for a year in Farmers Township, and at the end of that time purchased a wild, unbroken tract of land in Bernadotte Township. Erecting a house from timber that had been brought from a nearby mill, he had the distinction of occupying the first house built by a white man in that part of the county. He was a successful farmer and stock-raiser and continued to occupy his original farm until his death in 1881, at the age of eighty-one years. His wife remained on the farm until 1884, when she moved to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Theodore Robinson, where her death occurred June 10, 1896. She was the devoted mother of the following children: Rebecca A., widow of John F. Zink, a soldier during the Civil War in Company F, One Hundred and Third Illinois Volunteer Infantry; Catherine, widow of James Miner, and a resident of Lewistown; Nicholas, also a soldier in the Civil War, and at present a farmer of York County, Neb.; Sarah E., widow of David Miller, of Canton, Ill.; Abrilla, wife of Joseph Mayall, of Canton, Ill.; Lemuel, of Pekin, Ill.; Lewis, deceased, and Mary Elizabeth, wife of Theodore Robinson.

Mr. Dorsey was a large-hearted and public-spirited man, and while not a member of any church, contributed generously to churches, schools and general township interests. In politics he was a Democrat.

DOSS, Wilbur C., D. V. S., who is engaged in the practice of veterinary surgery on South Main Street, Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Greene County, Ill., November 20, 1866. He is a son of Dr. C. H. Doss, of Pittsfield, Ill., who was born in Hopkinsville, Ky. His father married Margaret A. Thruher, a native of Illinois, and to them were born ten children, namely: Dr. Judson Doss, of Milton, Ill.; C. M., a dentist; Dr. E. P. (deceased); Wilber C.; C. H., a dentist of Ipava, Ill.; Pearl, wife of O. A. Foreman, who is in the postal service at St. Louis, Mo.; Daisy, wife of Henry Grimes, a dentist; Neva, wife of Dr. L. A. Colby, of East St. Louis, Ill., and Louisa, wife of David Garber, a cigar manufacturer of Springfield, this State. The father of this family is still a prominent physician in Pittsfield, Ill., and the mother died about the year 1895.

Wilbur C. Doss attended the public schools of Pittsfield, Ill., and pursued a course of study in the Jacksonville Business College, graduating with the class of 1888. He then entered the Ontario Veterinary College, at Toronto, Canada, where, after a course of three years, he graduated in 1894. He began the practice of his profession at Olney, Ill., where he remained one year. In 1895 he established himself in practice at Lewistown and has since given his undivided attention to the treatment of all kinds of animal diseases. In this specialty he has been quite successful, and his ability and skill are generally recognized in the vicinity of his home. In 1899 Governor Tanner appointed him Assistant State Veterinary Surgeon, a position which he still holds. By painstaking and diligent attention to his work Dr. Doss has built up a large practice and his services are in constant demand throughout this section of the State.

On September 12, 1889, Dr. Doss was married to Minnie J. Stone. Their union has resulted in three children, namely: Judson E., Mary K. and Mildred A. Dr. and Mrs. Doss are members of the Christian Church. Politically the Doctor is a Republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the M. W. A. and the C. of H.

DOWD, C. M., a rising young lawyer and now serving as City Attorney of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Liverpool Township, Fulton County, October 19, 1867. He is a son of Charles L. and Mary A. (Pollitt) Dowd, the former a native of New York State and the latter of Illinois. The father came to Fulton County in 1856 and died when Chauncey was three years old, his union with Mary Pollitt resulting in two children, one of whom did not survive infancy. The widow became the wife of W. H. Brinegar, by whom she had four children, namely: Mary J., wife of Charles Berry, a farmer in Fulton County; Cora B., who died in 1891; Peter H., of Peoria, Ill., and George E., of Canton, in the same State. Mr. Dowd's mother died in 1892.

At the age of eight years C. M. Dowd, having no home, was compelled to do farm work by the month for his board, and followed that occupation until 1904, after which for four seasons he engaged in tile ditching. Being deprived of early school advantages, he began to read and study works of useful knowledge at night, and many times, when worn out by his day's toil, was found burning the midnight oil over his books. He continued his nightly studies, doing farm work by the day or month, and during the threshing season working with the machines. In the winter season he might be found digging coal in the mines. He built a cabin in which he lived alone, and, deciding to study law, bought a copy of Blackstone and a few other works. For years he studied at night and worked in the daytime, and then his cabin, with its contents, was destroyed by fire. Nothing daunted by this severe blow, he secured a boarding place and kept right on reading law, and in 1900 his strenuous endeavors were crowned with success by his admission to the bar. During his years of intense and patient study he could obtain but few text books, but those which he secured, including Blackstone, were read and re-read until they were graven on his memory. For a part of this period he was with Judge Winter and in the office of Attorney Jewell, and in 1904 opened an office for the practice of his profession, in which a bright future is manifestly in store for him.

In politics Mr. Dowd is a Republican, and takes a lively interest in such affairs. In 1905 he was nominated on the People's ticket for the office of City Attorney of Lewistown, and after one of the most stubbornly-contested campaigns ever known in Fulton County was elected by a large majority over one of the strongest men on the Citizen's ticket. His administration of the duties of this office is faithful, efficient and satisfactory to all. In fraternal circles Mr. Dowd is identified with the I. O. O. F. and M. P. L.

DOWNS, John W.—Among the substantial farmers of Fulton County, Ill., who have made an especially creditable record in husbandry and in citizenship, is the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this biographical record and whose attractive residence and productive farm are located in Section 18, Liverpool Township. Mr. Downs was born in Fleming County, Ky., November 20, 1851, and his parents, Edwin C. and Nancy E. (Clary) Downs, were also natives of that State. His mother was a daughter of Garrard and Jane (Walker) Clary, of Maryland, who moved to Fleming County, Ky., and there Edwin C. Downs died about the year 1853. He and his wife were the parents of two children, John W., and a daughter, Mary J., who was born in 1854 and died in 1860. The mother died December 30, 1895. John Downs, the paternal grandfather, was born July 22, 1777, and was the son of Henry and Sarah Downs, his death occurring December 14, 1838. He married Molly Seybolt, who was the daughter of Jasper and Nancy Seybolt, and was born September 29, 1782, and died September 23, 1850. There were ten children in their family, all of whom are deceased.

John W. Downs remained on the farm and attended the district schools until 1869, when he located in Fulton County and made his home with his uncle, George W. Clary, until 1873. In that year he began farming on rented land and continued thus until 1882, when he purchased 120 acres in Vermont Township, Fulton County, where he engaged in agricultural occupations until 1888. In that year he sold this farm and bought 200 acres on Section 18, Liverpool Township, where he has since lived. He is a methodical, progressive and successful farmer and a citizen in whom every worthy public enterprise has always found ready and earnest support.

On November 12, 1873, Mr. Downs was united in marriage with Martha A. Boardwine, a native of Fulton County, where she was born November 2, 1853, and a daughter of Nathaniel and Elizabeth (Simms) Boardwine, natives of Virginia. Two children were the result of this union, namely: Mary E., born in Lewistown Township, Fulton County, June 25, 1875, who married George G. Knapp, a resident of Chicago, and William A., born in Lewistown Township, March 30, 1876. The mother of these children died February 5, 1896. The second wife of Mr. Downs was Mrs. Lydia A. Johnson, a daughter of Stephen and Lydia (Biffin) Bolander. Mr. Bolander was born in Clermont County, Ohio, February 4, 1820, and was the fifth child of his parents. He was a Baptist preacher and for many years labored in that field, being one of the early settlers of Lewistown Township. His father, Henry Bolander, was a native of Pennsylvania, whence he moved to Clermont County, Ohio, at an early period. By her first husband, Homer Johnson, Mrs. Downs had four children, as follows: Elizabeth, born July 1, 1876, deceased October 15, 1895; James H., born September 26, 1877, deceased August 18, 1879; Bertha A., born November 28, 1881, wife of N. D. Miller, a sketch of whose life appears in this work, and Homer B., born July 3, 1886, who married Artha Fleming, February 25, 1905.

In politics Mr. Downs is a Democrat, but is not a politician, and has never been an aspirant for public office, preferring the quiet and wholesome routine of an agricultural career. He has, however, taken an earnest interest in local, State and National affairs, has kept thoroughly informed as to current events, and has faithfully discharged all the duties pertaining to an enlightened citizenship. For many years he has been a member of the Presbyterian Church, his worthy wife being connected with the Baptist denomination.

DOWNS, William Adrian, a worthy and successful farmer in Section 18, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Lewistown Township, this County, March 30, 1876. He is a son of John W. and Martha A. (Boardwine) Downs. A review of the life of the father may be found on another page of this volume.

John W. Downs was reared on the paternal farm and received his education in the district schools and the public schools of Lewistown, Ill., remaining with his parents until the time of his marriage. He afterward purchased the old home farm of 136 acres in Section 18, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, owned until 1900 by Nathaniel Boardwine. There he has since been engaged in general farming and stock-raising with good results. He keeps a superior grade of horses, cattle and hogs, and has begun breeding the "black" cattle, believing that stock best for feeding and shipping. He also raises Norman horses and Poland-China hogs.

On January 23, 1901, Mr. Downs was united in marriage with Samantha McComber, who was born in Liverpool Township, Fulton County, July 3, 1873, and is a daughter of Charles and Mary E. (Weaver) McComber. Her father was a native of New York State, where he was born in 1813, while her mother was born in Virginia in 1834. The latter's father, Alfred Weaver, settled in Fulton County at an early period. Mr. McComber died in 1900, his wife having passed away in 1891. They had five children, namely: Arzina, wife of George E. Snell, a resident of Canton, Ill.; Phoebe, wife of Charles Woods, of Lewistown, Ill.; Thomas, a farmer in Liverpool Township; Florence, wife of Sylvester Horn, who is engaged in farming near Canton, Ill., and Samantha (Mrs. Downs). Mr. and Mrs. Downs are the parents of two children: Mary, born October 31, 1900, and John Charles, July 6, 1905. In politics Mr. Downs is a supporter of the Republican party. He is a member of the Mutual Protective League. He is an intelligent, enterprising and progressive farmer and a useful citizen.

DOYLE, John F.—Of the citizens of Irish parentage who have found Canton, Fulton County, a pleasant as well as profitable place in which to live, mention is due John F. Doyle, who was born at Altona, Knox County, this State, in 1859, and whose father, Edward Doyle, was an early settler of Illinois. The elder Doyle was born in Ireland and there learned the miller's trade, which he followed for many years in Knox County and which he subsequently taught his son, John F. The latter, however, failed to find the occupation a congenial one, and when in a position to shape his own ambitions engaged for a time in the horse breeding business.

Mr. Doyle came to Canton in 1890 and for the first two years ran a billiard hall, at the expiration of that time engaging in a wholesale and retail liquor business with a Mr. Anderson. Two years later he succeeded to the interest of his partner and since has enlarged his operations and has become the distributing agent for the Valentine Blatz Brewing Company, of Milwaukee, shipping the company's goods to all parts of the surrounding territory in carload lots. He is an energetic and progressive business man and thoroughly dependable in all his transactions. In 1880 he married Mary Ann Rogers, a native of Peoria County, Ill., and of the union there are five children: Winnie, Emma, Mayme, Dean and Hazel. Mr. Doyle is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Eagles.

DRAKE, Alonzo M.—In Alonzo M. Drake Canton had a citizen who contributed to its upbuilding a conservative and reliable jewelry business, which he conducted about fourteen years and which netted him a sufficient income for his modest and practical tastes. Although twelve years have passed since he joined the great majority, February 2, 1893, his methodical and upright life is recalled as a useful lesson by the many friends and associates who survive him and who, like himself, recognize the value of principle as a valuable financial asset.

Mr. Drake was a native son of Canton, this county, and was born July 24, 1851. He came of New England ancestry and his father, Joseph Drake, was born in Sussex County, N. J., while his mother, Sarah J. (Vittum) Drake, was a native of New Hampshire. Mr. Drake was educated in the public schools of Prairie City and Canton and learned the jewelry business with S. P. Tobie, of Prairie City, and J. M. Fox, of Canton. On November 24, 1875, he was united in marriage to Ive M. Allen, a native of West Canaan, Madison County, Ohio, and daughter of John B. and Sarah (Dunlap) Allen, also natives of the Buckeye State. Mr. Allen was one of the prominent business men of Canton and for thirty years was connected with the lumber industry.

Miss Edith Allen Drake, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Drake, was born in Canton April 21, 1882, and is a graduate of the Canton High School, class of 1898, and of Smith College, Northampton, Mass., class of 1903. Miss Drake sustains the family dignity and pride as a successful educator, and at present is a teacher in the Canton High School. She is a young woman of scholarly tastes and wide information and as a teacher appeals to her pupils by her winning personality, no less than by her practical and advanced methods of instruction.

DRAKE, Stephen A., a prominent citizen of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., and President of the Canton Coal Company, was born in Canton May 18, 1864, a son of George W. and Mary E. (Amsley) Drake, the former born in New Jersey in 1840 and the latter a native of Pennsylv-vania. George W. Drake came to Illinois with his father at an early date and was engaged in the grocery business with the latter, who died in 1867.

In his youth the subject of this sketch attended school in Canton, and since reaching years of maturity he has been identified with the coal industry. The Canton Coal Company, of which he is President, was organized in 1888, with William Parlin, W. H. Parlin and S. A. Drake as its first Board of Directors. This board continued in office until 1894, since which period the mine has been operated by S. A. Drake and W. D. Myers. Mr. Drake is also a Director in the Homestead and Loan Association of Canton.

On May 17, 1880, Mr. Drake married Aureline Snyder, who was born and schooled in Canton. One child, Madeline, resulted from this union. Mrs. Drake is a daughter of David W. Snyder, of Canton. Politically Mr. Drake is a Democrat and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. and A. M., belonging to the K. T. Commandery and the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the K. of P., of the B. P. O. E. and the Order of Eagles.

DUNN, John T.—One of the oldest farmers in Fulton County, Ill., of whom this volume furnishes a record, is the most venerable and cordially esteemed gentleman whose name appears at the head of this narrative, and who is now living in honest retirement in Farmington. It can be also truthfully said of him that, during his active career, he was a typical representative of the best and highest class in the agricultural element of the population of Illinois. Intelligent, practical, systematic, diligent, persevering and provident in his farming operations, he was absolutely just in his dealings with all who had transactions with him, and his career as a farmer reflected credit upon that vocation.

John T. Dunn is a Virginian by birth, having been born in the Old Dominion in 1816. His father, David Dunn, and his grandfather, William Dunn, were also natives of Virginia, while his mother, Rebecca (Merchant) Dunn, was born in Pennsylvania. The grandfather, William Dunn, who was descended from an English family, was a very pious and devout man, and a leading member of the Quaker denomination, called the Society of Friends. David Dunn journeyed from Virginia to Illinois in 1837, locating in Fulton County, where he purchased 160 acres of land in Section 18, Farmington Township, which he cleared, and on which he made the necessary improvements. Subsequently he bought a home in Canton, Fulton County, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was partially crippled, and this infirmity prevented him from doing any farm work, although he was otherwise in the enjoyment of sound health.

The subject of this sketch received his early education in the district schools of Virginia, and in 1837 went from that State to Ohio, where he remained until 1842. In that year he located in Fulton County, took charge of his father's farm, and continued thus until the latter's death. Mr. Dunn then bought the interests of the other heirs, and owned and operated the farm until 1870, when he sold it and went to live with his daughter, Mrs. E. N. Ross, where he has since made his home. While engaged in farming he made a specialty of raising thoroughbred Poland-China hogs, in which he had great success. He also bred Shorthorn cattle, of which he shipped many carloads to market. He was considered a very successful farmer. On his last birthday, Mr. Dunn was ninety years old, and in view of this advanced age, he is still a very vigorous man.

In 1838 Mr. Dunn was united in marriage with Elizabeth Bevins, who was born in Pennsylvania, and received her early education in the district schools of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Dunn had nine children born to them, namely: William, David, Sarah, James, Amanda, Henry, Charles and Christiantha. All of the sons are engaged in business, each being successful in his particular line. All of them are industrious, upright and honorable men, and useful citizens, and, like their father in the days of his activity, ever ready to push along on the highway of advancement.

Mr. Dunn has served faithfully and creditably in the offices of Road Commissioner and School Director. In religious belief he adheres to the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He has been a witness of the development of Fulton County almost from the beginning, and has done his full share to promote it. Calmly resting now in the evening of life, he is thrice fortunate in being able to look back upon an honorable and useful career, and, conscious of the affectionate regard of relatives and friends, to gaze forward in serene expectation to the reward of the future.

DUTTON, Daniel.—The career of an honorable, dutiful and upright man, a gallant soldier, a thorough and diligent farmer and an intelligent, patriotic and useful citizen, is illustrated in the enviable record of Henry Dutton, whose home has long been Section 35, Woodland Township, Fulton County, Ill., and whose birth occurred in Brown County, Ohio, on November 3, 1837. Mr. Dutton is a son of Moses and Rebecca (Curless) Dutton, natives of Ohio. Moses Dutton moved from that State to Illinois about the year 1845 and settled in Woodland Township, locating near the present home of Daniel Dutton in Section 35, and there carried on farming until the time of his death in 1874. His wife survived him two years, passing away in 1876. Moses and Rebecca (Curless) Dutton were the parents of ten children, as follows: Elmira, deceased wife of Clark Mote, who lives in Knox County, Mo.; Asa, who is engaged in farming in Woodland Township; Daniel; Jane, wife of John Thompson, a farmer of Woodland Township; John and Albert, who also carry on farming there; Henry and William, who died in Knox County, Mo.; Mary, who is the wife of James Radcliff, a Woodland Township farmer, and Randolph, deceased.

Moses Dutton, the father, was a very public-spirited man, and was always ready to aid in promoting any movements calculated to advance the best interests of the community in which he lived. He was an earnest advocate of the cause of education, and took great pride in the schools of the township and county. In politics he was a Republican and exercised a strong influence in the local councils of his party. Personally he enjoyed the sincere respect and hearty good will of all who came in contact with him in the ordinary walks of life. He and his worthy wife were active members of the United Brethren Church.

Daniel Dutton was a lad of about eight years of age when he accompanied his parents from Brown County, Ohio, to Fulton County. He has a vivid recollection of the journey and of the party who made it. He well remembers the five wagons which were in use on that occasion, conveying three families, viz: those of William Curless, Bridge Kennedy and Moses Dutton. Daniel was reared on his father's farm and utilized the advantages of the district schools in early youth. He remained at home until August, 1862, when he enlisted for three years, or during the Civil War, in Company H, Eighty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, sharing the fortunes of that regiment in all its arduous marches, sharp skirmishes and hard-fought engagements. He took part in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Stone River, Missionary Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain and Peach Tree Creek. During his entire term of service he was always ready for roll call. He followed Sherman in the March to the Sea and participated in the Grand Review at Washington, D. C., at the close of the war, being mustered out in that city and sent to Springfield, Ill., where he was honorably discharged. Returning home he again turned his attention to the cultivation of the soil, in which occupation he has continued successfully ever since. His first location when he commenced farming was on the Illinois River bottoms, where he had a tract of 160 acres. This he sold about the year 1881 and purchased 180 acres in Section 35, Woodland Township, where from that time he has made his home. He has been one of the busiest among the agriculturists of the township for more than forty years and has grown old with Fulton County. He has not only been a close and keen observer of the great changes which have taken place in the county, but has been a leading spirit in the wondrous development of its resources. His time and means have always been freely devoted to enterprises in behalf of the public welfare, and churches, schools and charitable institutions have found in him a generous supporter, while many a worthy person has received opportune assistance at his hands in the hour of need.

Mr. Dutton was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary Markey (nee Reed), a daughter of John Reed, one of the earliest settlers of Fulton County. He and his family are all deceased. Mrs. Dutton died February 27, 1902. She was suddenly taken sick and, as her husband was also confined to his bed, he knew nothing of her death until a week thereafter. The deceased was a woman of exceptionally amiable traits of character, a faithful helpmate and a tender and considerate mother, manifesting the utmost solicitude for the happiness and comfort of her family. Five children blessed her union with Mr. Dutton, namely: Ettie, wife of Stewart Rose, a farmer in Woodland Township; Daniel S., who is engaged in farming on the home place; Rebecca; William, who carries on farming, and Randolph, deceased.

In politics Mr. Dutton is a prominent and unwavering Republican. Religiously he has belonged for twenty years to the United Brethren Church (of which his departed wife was also a devoted member), and officiates as one of its trustees. Fraternally he is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic. In all relations of life Mr. Dutton has been actuated by a high sense of duty, and his long extended career has been beyond reproach.

DUVALL, Edward W.—When Edward W. Duvall started upon his wage earning career in Lewistown in 1882, his available assets consisted of a team of horses and a five-dollar bill. He had, however, many far more dependable resources, and among them were grit and determination, and a capacity for untiring industry. These have elevated him to a place among the men of wealth of the town and surrounding country, to prominence as a farmer, real-estate broker, ice merchant and politician, and to public-spirited participation in all that tends to the permanent upbuilding of the community.

Mr. Duvall was born April 17, 1860, in Fulton County, Ill., to which had come his paternal grandfather, John Duvall, and his father, Samuel Duvall, in 1839. John Duvall was born in Maryland, and there married Margaret Beatty, by whom he had five children, all of whom are deceased. For a time he lived in Chester County, where his son Samuel was born in 1816, and in 1830 he located in the wilds of Ohio, where he followed farming until coming to Lewistown in 1839. The last years of his life were spent at the home of his son Samuel and wife, Louise (Campbell) Duvall. Samuel Duvall was reared on farms in his native State, and about 1850 purchased a saw-mill in Lewistown, with which his name was connected for fourteen years. He later turned his attention to farming until 1880, when he retired from active life, and died at the home of his son, Edward W., in April, 1903. By his first wife, formerly Martha Mann, he had three children, and by his second marriage, to Louise Campbell, he had six children, of whom Edward W. is the third oldest.

Edward W. Duvall has learned more from observation and experience than he has from books, although he was an earnest student in the country schools, and graduated from the high school at Lewistown. In 1882, when twenty-one years old, he began to contract for the grading of the Fulton County Narrow-Gauge Railroad, with his own team of horses, and in this way was fairly successful until his return to farming on the old homestead. In 1885 he again located in Lewistown and engaged in the ice business for about five years, after which he took up the real-estate business, purchasing a tract of 147 acres half a mile south of the court house. In 1892 he resumed the ice business, and in 1894 was appointed Postmaster of Lewistown, under Grover Cleveland, holding the same until 1894. In the meantime, in connection with his other responsibilities, he had become proprietor of the Wagoner Hotel, which he operated from 1900 until 1904. In 1896 he platted what is known as the Duvall Addition to Lewistown, a departure which has proved a great success, sixty of the eighty lots having already been disposed of, and the land almost doubled in value.

In politics Mr. Duvall is a Democrat, and in addition to serving as Postmaster of the town, he has been a member of the Board of Aldermen several terms. He is fraternally well known and is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Court of Honor. December 25, 1885, Mr. Duvall was united in marriage to Janet B. Donaldson, daughter of James and Jessie (Ahaw) Donaldson, who were born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and came to the United States in 1850, first settling in New York City. In 1873 the Donaldsons came to Lewistown, Ill., where Mr. Donaldson engaged in farming, and also followed his trade of cleaner and dyer. Mr. and Mrs. Duvall had three children, of whom Jessie is a graduate of the high school, and a teacher by occupation, and Ethel and Frank are both at home. Since the death of his wife, March 7, 1904, Mr. Duvall has cared for his children most tenderly, taking the place of both mother and father. He is a firm believer in education, and few children in the town can boast of better or more practical life equipment. Mr. Duvall stands high in the public esteem, and belief in his integrity and good judgment have been variously manifest. For the past eight years he has been Chairman of the Building and Loan Association, and it is through his recommendation that loans are advanced by the association.

DUVALL, William J., editor and manager of the "Lewistown Evening Record," was born in Lewistown, Ill., September 23, 1875, a son of John and Catherine (O'Donnell) Duvall, the former a native of Lewistown, Ill., and the latter of the city of New York. Her family was of Irish origin. George Duvall, grandfather of William J., was among the pioneer settlers of Fulton County. He was a carpenter by trade and helped to build the Lewistown Episcopal Church, and many of the first buildings of the town. His widow is still living, and resides in Canton, Ill., at the age of seventy-five years.

The subject of this sketch was the only child of his parents. He learned the printer's trade in the office of the old "Lewistown Union," and still pursues that occupation. He was reared in Lewistown, where he received his mental training. During his school days he worked at printing at odd intervals. He was connected with the "Lewistown News" when it was started, and afterward with the "Lewistown Weekly Record." He subsequently purchased the "Record," which was consolidated with the "News." The plant was also merged with the W. G. Newton job office, and in 1903 Mr. Duvall bought Mr. Newton's interest in the concern and started the "Daily Evening Record." He has built up a fine circulation. The "Record" is strongly Republican in politics, and is a newsy, entertaining and reliable sheet. Mr. Duvall has a competent office staff, and a complete equipment in every department. His enterprise supplies a long-felt want, and is the outgrowth of the contest over the county seat.

On October 10, 1900, Mr. Duvall was united in marriage with Christine Coursen, who was born in Lewistown, April 1, 1877, a daughter of John and Catherine (Burley) Coursen. Her father was a cabinet maker by trade. During the Civil War he was a soldier in the Eighth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and located in Duncan City, Fulton County, just after the war. He died March 4, 1905.

In politics Mr. Duvall is one of the most influential Republicans of Fulton County, and, as a man and a citizen, is deservedly popular and held in high esteem. Fraternally he is affiliated with the M. W. A.

EASLEY, Daniel L.—The wonderful prosperity which, on the whole, has attended the United States for the past forty years, and its high standing before the nations of the world, is mainly due to the fact that this comparatively long period of peace has enabled agriculture and all other branches of industry to develop the natural wealth of the country. Following the terrible conflict of the Civil War the Nation has been united, each section contributing to the prosperity of every other section. The younger generations therefore recognize a large debt to the old soldiers who stood in the breach, preserved the Union and, through the horrors of war, made the supremacy of the United States possible in the fields of agriculture, manufactures and commerce. Of this class is the unassuming but honored citizen and retired farmer, Daniel L. Easley, of Ipava, Ill.

Mr. Easley was born in Harrison County, Ohio, September 27, 1831, son of John and Nancy (Kinsey) Easley, his father being a native of Halifax County, Va., and his mother of his own native county in the Buckeye State. The grandfather, Daniel Easley, was a member of one of the substantial families of the Old Dominion, and on leaving Virginia to migrate with his family to Ohio sold his farm to the father of Robert E. Lee. At that time John Easley, the father of Daniel L., was a boy of twelve years, the family which then settled in Harrison County, Ohio, being among the first to locate in that section of the State. There Daniel Easley died, and John, who had been reared to agricultural pursuits, came to Fulton County in May, 1832. From the date of his coming really begins the history of Ipava and the founding, especially, of its industries.

When John Easley located in Fulton County he entered 160 acres of land where the village of Ipava now stands, laying out the site east of the present location of the Woolen Mills. He donated to the village the ground for the public school, the two parks and for the Presbyterian Church—the last especially a beautiful building. He and his cousin, William David, built a mill for the manufacture of flax-seed oil, which was afterward converted into carding mill and finally developed into the Ipava Woolen Mills. John Easley was also instrumental in founding the first flour mill at Ipava, and more, perhaps, than any other one man may be said to have firmly established the place on a permanent business basis. This locality remained his home from 1832 until his death, January 25, 1873. The deceased was a Quaker—kind, generous and helpful—and by whomsoever known was warmly honored. His good wife survived him until March 22, 1878, and of their eleven children the following seven yet survive: Rhoda, widow of Reese Cadwallader, of Cherokee County, Kans.; Sarah, wife of F. C. Robinson; Daniel L.; Phoebe Fitz-Henry, a widow residing near Lewistown; Elizabeth, of Bellevue, Neb.; Louisa, wife of James D. Graham, living at Grand Island, Neb., and John R., a resident of Armond, Fla.—the last named being a soldier in the War of the Rebellion, serving for three years in Company H, Twenty-eighth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

Daniel L. Easley spent his early life upon a farm and in obtaining an education at the common schools. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in Company B, Eighty-fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving from August, 1862, until the conclusion of hostilities. He was with Thomas and Sherman and, with his regiment, participated in all the weary marches and all of the fierce engagements (except Stone River) of the Kentucky and Tennessee campaigns and the March to the Sea.

At the expiration of his term of service he was honorably discharged at Springfield, Ill., and returned to Ipava, resuming his labors upon the farm in June, 1865. In August, 1873, he removed to Kansas, but in 1886 relocated in Ipava, which has since been his home.

On March 15, 1855, Daniel L. Easley was united in marriage to Mary J. Thompson, also a native of Harrison County, Ohio, who came to Ipava with her parents in 1850. Providence vouchsafed to this good couple the celebration of their golden wedding, upon which occasion they were the recipients of many gifts, accompanied by what was of far greater value—warm expressions of good will and affection from neighbors, friends and relatives, a few of whom had also been spared to honor them for the full half century. Mr. and Mrs. Easley are both members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Easley's fraternity is confined to the G. A. R., of which he is an esteemed member. He is a stalwart Republican, but has never been active in politics. More than all else he may be described as a good man and a faithful, useful citizen—and of such is composed the very best element in any community.

Barrak Thompson, a native of Harrison County, Ohio, and Elizabeth Mendenhall, his wife, also a native of that State, left the county named when Mrs. Easley, their daughter, was three years old and, moving to Morgan County, located on a farm there. On April 1, 1850, the family came to Fulton County, Ill., and located at Vermont, in the fall settling on a farm four miles from that place. They later moved to Bernadotte Township, where the father died November 24, 1873, at the age of sixty-five years, two months and twenty-five days, the mother passing away December 1, 1852, aged thirty-eight years, four months and two days. Mrs. Easley was one of a family of eleven children, five of her brothers being all who are living. Her father was a Republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church, but was of old Quaker stock and belief. Her brother Isaac was Deputy Sheriff of Fulton County for twenty years and School Director for twelve years.

EDWARDS, B. M., who is among the most prominent and popular citizens of Fulton County, Ill., where he is now conducting a flourishing mercantile establishment, was born in Scioto County, Ohio, on March 8, 1865. His parents, Allan and Catherine (McCann) Edwards, were also natives of Ohio, the latter born in Adams County, that State. Allan Edwards and his wife became residents of Fulton County in 1865. In 1870 they moved to Cass County, Mo., and in 1875 returned to Fulton County and sojourned for a time in Ellisville. The father soon afterward located in Deerfield Township, whence, in 1882, he moved to Ellisville Township, having purchased 111 acres of farming land in the latter locality. This he improved and carried on farming there until the time of his death, August 12, 1904. The mother died July 3, 1897.

B. M. Edwards, in boyhood, made diligent use of the opportunities afforded by the public schools of his vicinity, and obtained a good mental training in the elementary branches. He was reared to a farmer's life and in early manhood applied himself to farming, continuing in that occupation until 1886. In that year he undertook threshing, together with carpenter work, and followed this joint pursuit for ten years. He then became a clerk in the store of his brother, S. S. Edwards, and after remaining in that connection four months, bought the latter out. His brother had previously purchased the business from E. L. Parks. Mr. Edwards conducts a general store, including ladies' and gents' furnishings, and also carries a $2,000 line of shoes, besides groceries, crockery and provisions, the value of his entire stock being estimated at $5,000. The building in which his store is located is a two-story structure, 22x70 feet in dimensions, erected by the order of Odd Fellows in 1892. It contains an opera house auditorium, with a seating capacity for 200 people. Mr. Edwards enjoys a large and constantly increasing patronage.

On June 30, 1877, Mr. Edwards was united in marriage with Alice Van Winkle, who was born in Iowa. This union resulted in three children, namely: Manfred C., born in 1880; Ella Belle, born in 1882, who is the wife of J. F. Beerie; and Allan V., born in 1895.

For twelve years Mr. Edwards served as Mayor and member of the Town Board, and six years on the School Board. In religious belief he is an adherent of the Christian Church. He enjoys the respect and confidence of all who know him, and in intelligence, uprightness of character and public spirit, he is looked upon as one of the representative men of his section of the county.

EDWARDS, Winfield Scott, County Judge of Fulton County, Ill.

EGGERT, John L., who is the leading saloon keeper in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., is proprietor of two establishments, one on East Elm Street and the other on White Court. He is a native of Quincy, Ill., where he was born November 7, 1866, the son of Frank H. and Molly Eggert. He was educated in the public schools of his native city, and, coming to Canton in 1890, established himself in his present line of business. Mr. Eggert opened his place on East Elm Street in 1901 and that on White Court in 1905, both establishments being well furnished and liberally patronized. He is a Republican, a member of the Black Eagles (Aerie No. 580), and is sociable and popular. At Canton, on February 1, 1898, Mr. Eggert was united in marriage with Miss Ophelia Proctor, who is a native of Stark County, Ill., and by this union has become the father of three children, viz.: Ophelia P., John L., Jr., and Josephine L.

EHRESMAN, G. Frederick.—Energy and patience have been leading factors in the success of Frederick Ehresman, since 1902 the occupant of a farm of 280 acres in Section 13, Deerfield Township. Mr. Ehresman represents a family established in Fulton County during the last year of the Civil War by his parents, Jacob and Eva (Martin) Ehresman, natives of Germany, and born in 1827 and 1830 respectively. The father took up land in Deerfield Township, cleared and improved the same and lived there until his death, which occurred in 1902.

G. F. Ehresman was born on the Deerfield Township farm January 10, 1867, and attained maturity in an atmosphere of industry and thrift. His education has been that of the public schools, aided by subsequent observation and study, and October 21, 1891, he married Della Basel, born in Deerfield Township April 19, 1872. Of this union there are two daughters, Avise and Omie. In 1902 Mr. Ehresman left the home place and located on the farm he now operates, where he is keeping up and adding to the improvements and conducting general farming and stock-raising. He subscribes to the principles of the Jeffersonian Democracy, and has served as Road Commissioner for the past six years. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Ehresman inherits the strong and stable traits of his German ancestors, and pursues a busy and useful life.

EMANS, J. A.—It has been the privilege of J. A. Emans to realize many of his worthy ambitions, and through the exercise of good judgment and business sagacity wrest from his opportunities financial and general success. A native of the Buckeye State, born in January, 1849, he is a son of William Henry Emans, who, at an early day, settled there on Government land in Ohio, married Thelitha Meeker, of that State, and developed a fine farm. In 1852 he moved from Ohio to Peoria County, Ill., purchased eighty acres of land and to it later added 110 acres. He was engaged in general farming and stock-raising for many years, accumulating quite a competence, and upon the death of his wife in 1886, went to live with his son, J. A., for the balance of his life.

Varying the routine of the paternal farm by attendance at the district schools, J. A. Emans grew to rugged manhood, cherishing wholesome ambitions and sane, practical ideals. At the age of twenty-four his father gave him eighty acres of land, which he tilled until 1882, in that year removing to Eden, Peoria County, Ill., where he erected the first elevator and shipped the first car of grain from that point. Successful beyond his expectations, he came to Fulton County in 1884, erected an elevator at Farmington for Cramer & Trivoli, which he operated for six years. In the meantime, in October, 1886, he opened what is known as the Maplewood Coal Mine, at Farmington, worked the same about six months, then sold out and bought 130 acres of land in Farmington Township and opened what was known as the Emans Mine. This venture terminated unsuccessfully with a washout, and in 1888 another mine was sunk and until 1900 operated with the help of about fifty men. During that year the incorporation of a company was effected, in which Mr. Emans owned a controlling interest until about a year ago. He then bought seventy additional acres of land and since then has given attention on his farm to stock-raising, making a specialty of cattle, Poland-China hogs and blooded road horses. He has a modern and well furnished home, ample accommodations for his stock, and excellent general improvements. He regards farming as a science, to be studied and improved indefinitely, and takes great interest in his chosen occupation.

In Peoria, Ill., in 1873 Mr. Emans was united in marriage to Theresa Borst, who was born in New York and died in Illinois in 1888, leaving two children: R. R. Emans, of Farmington, and Charles H., the partner of his father in the stock-raising business. In 1891 Mr. Emans married Belle Grinnell, a native of Utica, N. Y., and daughter of A. S. Grinnell, who came to Avon, Ill., in 1866, was Superintendent of Schools of Lewistown for six years, held the same position in Avon seven years, in Bushnell for two years and in Farmington three years. The mother of Mrs. Emans, whose maiden name was Julia Smith, was a native of New York. A son has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Emans, named Clarence. Mr. Emans is a Republican in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Emans is a broad-minded and progressive man, well posted on current events, and entertaining sensible opinions on questions of public interest.

EMERSON, E. Paul, M. D.—The fearless, questioning attitude of the twentieth century nowhere is more strikingly apparent than among the exponents of medical science. The tendency of the latter-day scientific physician to avoid, beyond all things, hasty jumping at conclusions or too ready dependence upon formulæ, is rapidly destroying ancient delusions, thereby placing the health of the nation in the hands of reasoners and independent thinkers. The heights to which a man endowed with reason and courage may climb are practically limitless, and such men deserve, and in this age of the world usually receive, the hearty co-operation and support of the intelligence and worth of communities. To this class of rational thinkers belongs Dr. E. Paul Emerson, whose opportunities along professional lines have been exceptional and whose use of the same has made him an important factor in connection with professional circles in Astoria and Fulton County since 1899.

Dr. Emerson was born in Astoria January 25, 1873, a son of Hon. William H. Emerson, mention of whom may be found in an adjoining section of this work. After graduating from the high school of Astoria Dr. Emerson took a course at Brown's Business College, and then entered the Barnes Medical College at St. Louis, Mo., from which he was graduated in 1898. The same year he opened an office in Meredosia, Ill., remaining there until coming to Astoria in 1899. In 1900 he took a course in the School of Clinical Medicine in New York, and after receiving his diploma studied at the Post-Graduate Medical School, Chicago, at the Mothers and Babies' Hospital, thereafter remaining at the latter institution for two weeks as an interne, which constitutes the term. He also spent six months as an interne with the Post-Graduate Hospital. In 1905 he returned to Astoria, where he continues to study and to profit by every known resource at the disposal of the student practitioner. He has a well equipped library, laboratory and office.

December 5, 1898, Dr. Emerson was united in marriage to Jennie A. Shelby, daughter of William and Lucinda (Hill) Shelby, natives of Edwards County, Ill., their present home. Mrs. Emerson was born in Edwards County, Ill., being the fifth in a family of seven children. Rose, the oldest of the Shelby children, is the wife of Frederick Luther, of Edwards County; Lizzie is the widow of Isaac Steele, and lives in St. Louis; Edwin makes his home in Denver, Colo.; Elmer W. lives in the State of Washington, and Grace is the wife of Elmer Bunting, of Edwards County, Ill. Dr. and Mrs. Emerson are the parents of a daughter, Colla L., born June 25, 1901. Politically Dr. Emerson is a Republican without political aspirations. He is a man of genial and confidence inspiring personality, a philosopher in his attitude toward the world and a rationalist in his sane and practical purpose.

EMERSON, Hon. William H.—In his evolution from cabin boy on an Ohio River pilot boat to the presidency of the People's Bank of Astoria and member of the Illinois Legislature, Hon. William H. Emerson supplies an inspiring example of the compelling power of high ideals and the worth of homely, sterling virtues. The eldest of the five sons and one daughter of Joseph Crane and Mary A. (Collard) Emerson, Mr. Emerson was born among the humblest of surroundings in New Richmond, Clermont County, Ohio, and on both sides of his family is descended from the pioneers of American civilization. While New York, as New Amsterdam, was still under Dutch rule members of the Collard family pursued their avocations within its quaint boundaries, and in Water Street, New York, was born Isaac Brainard Collard, an uncle of Mr. Emerson and son of a ship blacksmith. From his father Isaac Brainard learned the blacksmith trade, and when Robert Fulton, of steamboat fame, returned from Paris to America in 1806 and built and launched the Clermont, which made a successful trip on the Hudson from New York to Albany on August 11, 1807, it was the strong right arm of Isaac Collard that fashioned the hunk bottoms of this pioneer steam craft. The life of the waterways appealed no less strongly to the successors of that progenitor of the Emerson family who landed on bleak New England shores in 1637, and who subsequently lived in and near Boston. In this richly interesting part of New England was born John Emerson, grandfather of William H., in 1773, and here also was born Joseph Crane Emerson, father of the latter, in 1808.

Joseph Crane Emerson invaded the wilderness of Ohio while that region still was a Territory, settling on Government land near the city of Cincinnati. As settlers began to arrive and the region yielded of its stored fertility, the market of New Orleans beckoned invitingly, and he engaged in freighting down the Ohio River between Cincinnati and the Southern port with a flat-bottomed boat. He became an expert pilot and developed that absorbing interest in his occupation which characterizes all true toilers of the deep. At an advanced age his death occurred at Point Coupee, La., and his wife died in Cincinnati. Of his children Emma (deceased) was the wife of Vinton A. Mathews, of Madison, Ind., and Samuel W., Joseph C. and John are business men of Cincinnati.

The youth of William H. Emerson was almost destitute of educational advantages and the influences of his environment prevailing, he began at an early age to follow the river as cabin boy and later as a cook. At the age of sixteen he went to Cincinnati, where in 1852 he joined the Pennsylvania Volunteers, under Captain Lemis, and with them proceeded to Mexico, and from there to California. He remained four years in the latter State, much of the time engaged in gold mining, and in 1856 returned to New Richmond, Ohio, where, August 27, 1856, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Paul Wilson. Mrs. Emerson, who was born in New Richmond, December 14, 1834, five miles from the birthplace of General Grant, is a daughter of Andrew D. and Amelia D. (Downing) Wilson, natives of Connecticut and Pennsylvania, respectively, and in religious faith members of the Society of Friends.

In 1864 Mr. Emerson left Ohio and located at Ashton, Lee County, Ill., and in 1870 came to Astoria and established the coal-mining firm of Emerson & Skinner. His industry, application and thorough knowledge of a great State's resources produced gratifying results, and in 1889 he opened up the mines at Dunfermline, Fulton County, which since have proved exceedingly productive. In connection with mining Mr. Emerson has conducted a general merchandise store, and has had moneyed interests in many of the upbuilding enterprises of both town and country. In 1899 he was elected President of the People's State Bank, which has become one of the leading and influential monetary institutions of Fulton County. From time to time

Mr. Emerson has given substantial support to politics, and among other offices was elected to the General Assembly in 1883 and again in 1906. A profound student of men and events, he has warmly supported the wisest measures before the House, and evinces practical insight into the needs of the district which he represents.

Of the seven children of Mr. and Mrs. Emerson, William W. was born November 15, 1858; Katie E. was born May 12, 1861, and on December 20, 1885, married Lewis David, of Ipava; Taylor W. was born June 5, 1864; Collard Downing was born at Ashton, Ill., October 16, 1867, died July 8, 1870; Colla E., born March 18, 1871, is the wife of H. B. Kosta, a druggist in Astoria; E. Paul was born January 25, 1873, and is a physician in Astoria, and Lizzie was born March 7, 1877. For many years Mr. Emerson has been an active Mason, and is a member of the Star Chapter, Master Masons and Commandery. The industry, purpose and ideals of Mr. Emerson have tended to the most substantial in commercial, industrial and business life, as well as to the most elevating in ethical, educational and civic growth. He belongs to the constructive class of men, and to the non-visionary conservatives who hold fast to old truths until the excellence of new truths has been demonstrated.

ESHELMAN, J. W.—That congenial work means successful work finds emphatic expression in J. W. Eshelman, than whom no more prosperous dairyman contributes to the health and well-being of the people of Canton. When Mr. Eshelman purchased his present farm of 200 acres on Sections 2 and 3, Cass Township, about fifteen years ago, its prestige existed solely in the mind of the owner, who, in turn, had little to back his expectations save a large and continuous hope. Indefatigable industry, economy and common sense enabled him to accomplish in good order all that he had planned, and today he feels a just pride in his surroundings, in their neatness and order, in the comfortable and well furnished house, the large barns with extensive stables, and the many facilities for caring for a dairy of twenty-five cows. His equipment includes many extremely modern and practical inventions, among them a gasoline engine. One is impressed with the system maintained and the attention to details which distinguishes the model from the shiftless farmer. For the past ten years this farm has been devoted exclusively to dairying, and among his customers in Canton are many who have been his patrons from the start.

Mr. Eshelman's father, John Eshelman, came to Farmington Township about sixty years ago and engaged in farming and stock-raising for the rest of his life. He was born in Franklin County, Pa., and married Margaret Minnich, of the same State and county. There were seven children in the family, all of whom received such educations as the country school afforded. J. W., one of the oldest of the children, remained at home in Farmington Township until his marriage in 1879 to Susan C. Schafer, of Deerfield Township, and thereupon located on his present farm in Cass Township. Mr. and Mrs. Eshelman have five children: Boyd, Artie, Mrs. Stevenson, Irvin and Ivy. Mr. Eshelman takes no particular interest in politics, although he favors the Republican party. Since early manhood he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and contributes generously toward the maintenance of the local organization. His courtesy, reliability and his excellent milk products have won for him an enviable patronage among the people of Canton, and his neighborliness and public spirit make him a popular acquisition to his township.

ESSEX, Clarence Ray.—Since his establishment in London Mills, in the fall of 1905, Dr. Clarence Ray Essex has won the confidence and support of a large following, and has demonstrated the possession of exhaustive professional knowledge and firm, reliable traits of character. He comes of a family of which much might reasonably be expected, and his early environment was such as to develop the best traits of his nature. Born in Galesburg, Knox County, Ill., November 20, 1881, he is a son of Rev. Hiram and Sadie (Waters) Essex, natives of Galesburg, born April 2, 1856, and January 12, 1848, respectively. Rev. Hiram Essex settled in Fulton County, Ill., in 1902, and after fifteen years of preaching in the United Brethren Church, moved to Knox County, where he continued his clerical calling for many years. About three years ago he returned to Fulton County, rented land in Young Hickory Township, and is devoting his declining years to general farming and stock-raising.

To study medicine was an early determination in the life of Dr. Essex, and he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at St. Louis, graduating therefrom in the class of 1905. Settling in London Mills, he met with encouragement from the start, and now has a practice which nets him a comfortable income and gives promise of a constantly enlarging sphere of usefulness. He is a Republican in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In religion he is a member of the United Brethren Church. His marriage to Ella Ogle, who was born in Baylis, Ill., March 4, 1880, occurred in Baylis, May 17, 1905. The Doctor has a pleasing and confidence inspiring personality, and besides professional skill and enthusiasm has a keen sense of the ethics and humane possibilities of his calling.

EWAN, Robert T., M.D.—Representing the young and enthusiastic professional element recruited from the pioneer farming class of Fulton County, Robert T. Ewan in two years has built up a medical and surgical practice in Smithfield as gratifying personally as it is promising financially. Born on a farm near Lewistown, this county, January 24, 1877, he was reared to manhood among average circumstances, and after completing his education in the country and high school of Cuba, entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the University of Illinois at Chicago, from which he was graduated in the class of 1904. Locating in Smithfield, he soon won friends by his genial and kindly manner, his advocacy of the best tenets of his profession and his desire to be of use and credit to the community which tendered him its appreciation and support. In 1905 Dr. Ewan took post-graduate work in Chicago, and has in every way shown his determination to keep abreast with the most modern methods of medical and surgical practice.

EWAN, William I., an enterprising and prosperous farmer, who is engaged in the pursuit of his vocation in Section 25, Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Port Republic, Va., on March 12, 1849. He is a son of Robert and Carrie (Lewis) Ewan, natives also of the Old Dominion. Robert Ewan located in Lewistown Township, Fulton County, in 1859. In politics he was a Democrat and served as Assessor of Lewistown Township for several terms.

In boyhood William I. Ewan received his education in the district schools of Fulton County and spent his youth in assisting his father on the home farm. In early manhood he applied himself to farming on his own account, and in 1882 bought of William Wilson 100 acres of land. He subsequently purchased more, all in Section 25, Cass Township, and now owns 240 acres, on which he carries on farming successfully. Nearly all the improvements on this farm have been made by him. He has built three new barns—one thirty-six by forty feet in dimensions, and other forty by fifty feet and another forty by forty-four feet.

On March 12, 1873, Mr. Ewan was united in marriage with Rena Murchison, who was born in South Carolina and is a daughter of Rev. Collin and Elizabeth (Andrews) Murchison. Six children were the offspring of this union, namely: Collin M., Robert T., a physician; Clayton, who is engaged in the study of law, and Leroy, engaged in farming, and Carrie and Ruth, who are with their parents. In politics Mr. Ewan advocates the principles of the Democratic party, and has creditably served two terms as Township Supervisor, his last term expiring in the spring of 1905. He is a member of the Methodist Protestant Church.

EYERLY, Benjamin F., a well-known and prosperous dry goods merchant of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Washington County, Md., on April 26, 1842. He is a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Garlinger) Eyerly, natives of the State of Pennsylvania, the father spending most of his life in Maryland, where he died in 1859, his widow passing away in 1862.

Benjamin F. Eyerly received his education in the common schools, and his residence in Canton began in 1864. The business concern of which he is the head was first established in 1868 under the firm name of Thornton, Eyerly & Company, I. S. Piper being the silent partner. The store was located on the south side of the square and the partnership continued until 1871. From that period until 1882 the firm was Thornton & Eyerly, B. F. Eyerly then conducting the business until 1900, when the style was changed to B. F. Eyerly & Son. The concern was moved to its present location in 1885. In addition to his mercantile responsibilities Mr. Eyerly has been President of the Canton Bank since 1893.

On October 6, 1875, Mr. Eyerly was married to Sarepta Jones, who was born in Canton, where in girlhood she received her early education. One child resulted from this union, Van B. Eyerly, who is in partnership with his father. Mrs. Eyerly is a daughter of David C. Jones, a native of New York State, and her mother was a daughter of Rev. Robert Stewart, of Canton. Politically Mr. Eyerly is a member of the Democratic party.

EYERLY, William H., who for nearly thirty years has been engaged in the cigar manufacturing trade, is the senior member of the firm of W. H. Eyerly & Brothers, his partners being C. Frank and George M. The factory has come into special prominence in this section of the country within the past decade as the originator of the brands E. (Tall Sycamore) and E. B. (five and ten-cent cigars), which have become among the most popular of any similar grades on the market.

Mr. Eyerly was born in Hagerstown, Md., on the 18th of September, 1855, his parents being Josiah E. and Mary Virginia (Michaels) Eyerly. In the following year the family located in Canton, Ill., where the father was long engaged as a plasterer, but for many years past has been connected with the cigar factory of which his sons are proprietors. W. H. Eyerly was educated in the public and high schools of Canton and became a principal in his present line of industry in 1879, when he established a cigar factory in partnership with Charles Ferguson, under the firm style of Eyerly & Ferguson. He next formed a connection with Arthur Dewey as Dewey & Eyerly, and a few years afterward N. C. Smith was received into the business. In 1897 was formed the present co-partnership of W. H. Eyerly & Brothers, one of the most prosperous firms engaged in the manufacture of cigars in Central Illinois. When Mr. Eyerly first entered the field in 1879 his factory was in the Smith Block, on the east side of the square, his location being successively moved to the northwest and the northeast corners before he erected the large brick building now occupied on South Main Street. The Eyerly Brothers' Block, erected in 1893, is one of the most substantial business structures in Canton.

In May, 1892, Mr. Eyerly was united in marriage with Miss Mary Elizabeth Cooney and they have one child—Editn M.

FARR, John.—Among the worthy pioneer residents of Astoria Township, Fulton County, Ill., who, by reason of long careers of industry, careful management, patient endurance and upright dealing, have richly earned the respite from toil which they are now enjoying in circumstances of ease and comfort, John Farr is one of the best known and most respected. Now that the period of his life in Fulton County approaches three-score and ten years, he is fortunate indeed in being able to look back over the past with the happy consciousness that he has faithfully discharged his duties in public and private relations, and has done his full share in building up the most important interests and promoting the highest welfare of the locality with which he has been so long identified. Mr. Farr was born near his present farm in Section 10, Astoria Township, July 23, 1841. He is a son of Cooper and Ada (Farr) Farr, natives of Ohio. The detail of his family antecedents may be found in a record of the life of William Farr, which appears elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Farr was reared on his father's farm and attended the district schools of the township in early youth and remained on the paternal premises until he drew near the age of maturity. With the exception of nine years during which he was a resident of the village of Astoria and one year spent in Vermont, Fulton County, he has always clung to that spot in the immediate neighborhood of his birthplace, where he first established his family altar. The ground on which his comfortable and pleasing residence is located was cleared by his own hands from its virgin growth of brush. The farm of 120 acres, now rented out, is otherwise conveniently and attractively improved and kept under a high state of cultivation. Mr. Farr has always taken much pride in maintaining a good stock of horses on the place. He has never been fully contented to live elsewhere, and now that he is entering upon the decline of life he feels more than ever that the home farm is his natural abode, although he has finally withdrawn from the active labors pertaining to its operation.

On October 2, 1862, Mr. Farr was united in marriage with his first wife, Peninah Caine, who was born in Ohio. She came with her parents to Illinois about the year 1840, locating near Table Grove, Fulton County. The young couple began housekeeping in the present family home, adjoining the farm where Mr. Farr was born and passed his youthful years. They became the parents of four children, namely: Arthur, who died in infancy; Bertha, who is the wife of Albert Tate; Cooper, a resident of Kewanee, Ill., and who married Anna Bucey, and Earl D., who married Lena Radford and also lives in Kewanee. Bertha's husband, Albert Tate, was born in Macomb, Ill., a son of Richard Tate, now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Tate now reside in Los Angeles, Cal., where the former is an editor and manager of a job printing office. Earl D. Farr, whose home is in Kewanee, holds a position of responsibility in the Kewanee Tube Works, which furnishes employment to 5,000 men. The mother of this interesting family died April 9, 1893. She was an earnest and faithful member of the Christian Church. A devoted wife, she was most affectionate and considerate in the care and guidance of her children, all of whom were provided with a good common school education and fitted for any position which they might be called upon to fill. They were taught by her to mold their lives in such a way as to honor their parents and become useful members of society. Mr. Farr's second wife was formerly Miss Katie Endres, an estimable woman, whom he married June 6, 1895. She was born in Schuyler County, Ill., where her parents settled on coming to the United States from Germany. Her father is now a resident of Astoria, Ill., her mother being deceased.

In politics Mr. Farr has always acted with the Democratic party. He has taken an active interest in local affairs and has filled various township offices with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. He is liberal in donations to all charitable enterprises and public institutions, and is a constant promoter of church and school work. He has amassed a snug competence for his declining years and, exempt from the cares and vexations of strenuous endeavor, is quietly enjoying the comforts and pleasures which follow a well-spent life.

FARR, William.—For one of its oldest families and most interesting agricultural landmarks, Astoria Township is indebted to the courage and far-sightedness of Cooper Farr, who came to Fulton County from his native State of Ohio in 1837, bringing with him his wife, formerly Ada Lynn, also of the Buckeye State, and his three oldest daughters, Eliza J., Elizabeth and Susan. Entering 160 acres of land in Section 3, Mr. Farr erected a dwelling of rough logs—the only style of home then occupied by the early settlers—and proceeded to divest his holdings of the heavy timber which almost entirely covered it. A stout heart and cheerful disposition transformed hardships into shining stepping-stones to better things, and his hope and optimism, unflinchingly shed upon those around him, made of the small, cramped dwelling a place in which to grow up temperamentally as well as materially. The children who survive the pioneer days recall with unmingled joy the atmosphere of happiness in which they grew to maturity, sharing with generous spirit the good drawn from the prairies, attending the round log schoolhouse where knowledge was dispensed during the winter season, and welcoming with open arms and assurance of loving care the appearance of each tiny stranger in the family. Near the present commodious home occupied by William Farr, present owner of his father's original home, stands this same log house in which were born seven of the brothers and sisters. Although his death occurred in 1885, more than twenty years ago, Cooper Farr realized many of his pioneer anticipations, and witnessed the conversion of the wilderness into an abiding place for happy, prosperous and progressive people. Eight years after his own death his wife and helpmate joined the invisible choir, having during her life won the love of all by her fine and noble personality. Of the children, Eliza Jane, who was born in Ohio, has been twice married, first to Joseph Lindsay and second to John A. Webster, and now is a widow living in Vermont, Ill.; Elizabeth married John W. Hopkins and both are deceased; Susan is the deceased wife of John Spry, of Iowa; Malinda died in infancy; Mary E. became the wife of Jesse Nelson and lives in Vermont, Ill.; William owns and occupies the old place; John is engaged in farming near the old home; Samuel died at about forty-eight years of age; Amanda is the deceased wife of William Guthrie, of Vermont, Ill.; Azuba is the wife of Benjamin F. Bader, and Edith died in infancy.

William Farr was born on the paternal homestead in Astoria Township, August 11, 1839, two years after his parents' arrival from Ohio. He worked hard from morn until sunset, and made the best of his limited educational chances. At the age of twenty-one he uprooted himself from the old surroundings, rented a farm in McDonough County for a couple of years, and in 1870 returned to the old place, which he rented about seven years. He then purchased the farm outright, moved the historic old dwelling back to make room for one of modern construction, and in 1863 married Mary Cox, daughter of Jesse Cox, deceased. Of this union there have been born four children: Amanda, wife of Nelson Freeman, a prominent farmer of Vermont Township; Jesse, a farmer in Astoria Township, who married Mary P. Eddie; Henry, a farmer in Astoria Township, who married Ella Carter, a daughter of R. G. Carter, and Edward, a farmer of Astoria Township, who married Jessie Bryan.

To his original farm of 160 acres Mr. Farr has added until he owns 280 acres of fine, highly cultivated land. He is engaged principally in stock-raising, but in harvest time a large part of his land is covered with yellow grain. Of late years he has shifted the responsibility of management onto the shoulders of his stalwart and capable sons and takes life easy, as should a man who has employed his powers according to his best wisdom and judgment. A Democrat in politics, he never has sought official honors, but has satisfactorily discharged various local offices, among them that of School Director and Road Commissioner. In his sixty-seventh year he finds himself the possessor of moderate wealth, of a fine family, the devotion of a noble wife and the confidence and affection of a large circle of friends.

From the farm Mr. Farr's father removed to Vermont in 1870, where he lived retired for a few years, when he returned to live with his son Samuel, with whom he made his home until his death.

Cooper Farr, besides the 160 acres of land he had on which William Farr lives, also owned 220 acres, both tracts in Astoria Township. He had bought town property in Vermont, but on returning to the country to live he divided his property with his children. Eliza Jane took the town property in Vermont. John Farr lives on 120 of the original 220 acres and Samuel lives on the 100 acres.

FARWELL, John.— That Fulton County ranks high among the agricultural regions of the Central West is largely due to the exertions of such strong and forceful personalities as John Farwell, a pioneer of 1837, who, in the isolation and loneliness of his little cabin, drew the horoscope of his surroundings and planned and built and labored unceasingly to make his dream come true. Mr. Farwell had more than the average of discernment and more than average determination. Few of the pioneers have amassed so much from small beginnings as did this shrewd and conscientious farmer and real estate dealer, who paid taxes on 2,000 acres of land and whose available assets were rated at from $200,000 to $225,000. The legitimate accumulation of almost a quarter of a million dollars argues the possession of worth-while business qualities, and no other conclusion can be drawn regarding this prince of agrarian promoters than that he embodied the best of brain and heart produced by the experiences of the frontier.

The Farwell family has stood for thrift, energy, integrity and liberality almost from the dawn of American history. It has been represented in the commercial, industrial, political and military life of the land, and its members have buckled on their accoutrements in practically all of its wars. A certain Samuel Farwell came from England and settled in Marblehead, Mass., and reared a family of several daughters and three sons—Absalom, Richard and John—the last of whom settled in Packersfield, N. H., in 1772. He owned a corner lot in the south part of the town. Packersfield in 1814 received the name of Nelson and in 1870 was christened Harrisville. John Farwell married Sarah Pickett, who died March 3, 1807, in her sixty-sixth year, his decease occurring November 21, 1820, in his eighty-first year. They had seven children.

On the old homestead in New Hampshire, which now boasts a mansion costing $150,000, John Farwell was born June 15, 1807, the son of Samuel and Eunice (Stoddard) Farwell, the former born September 27, 1769, and the latter born August 22, 1773, the daughter of Richard and Rachel (Hill) Stoddard, of Packersfield, N. H. Samuel Stoddard died March 12, 1839, and his wife September 7, 1854. Of his imme-diated family the subject of this sketch seems to have been most resourceful, although he had a brother who was prominent in ecclesiastical and civil affairs, who served in the New Hampshire Legislature during 1861-62, and who was a Sunday school teacher for a quarter of a century. In 1828, at the age of twenty-one years, Mr. Farwell fared forth to Massachusetts, and in 1830, hearing the call of the wilds, journeyed to Coshocton County, Ohio, seven years later coming by way of the canal and Illinois River to Sharp's Landing, Schuyler County. The following autumn he located in Bernadotte Township, but not liking his location moved two years later to Woodland Township, where he entered 160 acres of land in Section 25. In a clearing he erected a cabin twelve by fourteen feet and bravely faced the hardships which were the inevitable accompaniment of his mission. He was all alone and he lived thus for two years. Around him were wild deer and other game, but for the most part that deep, all pervading silence of the prairie, to which we of a later day are absolute strangers. He proved a powerful master of circumstances, forcing the latent fertility of the soil into channels of infinite use to man, and marketing his products with the skill and forethought of the born merchant. Animated by that primal instinct of man for a home and children, he married, in 1841, Calista Ann Curless, who was born December 25, 1815, and who died June 24, 1848. He then married Mrs. Susan Severus, who died soon after, and October 24, 1849, he took to wife Julia Blandin, a native of Ohio, born November 24, 1831. Of this last union were born the following named children: Louise, wife of James Chaddick; Alice, a resident of Woodland Township and widow of George Welker; Granville, a farmer in Oklahoma, and Hattie, wife of John Curles.

As time developed his ambitions Mr. Farwell kept adding to his land holdings, and he also invested on a large scale and sold to marked advantage both country and town properties. It is estimated that he gave each of his children at least $20,000, in addition to large tracts of land. He gave much to humanitarian projects, and helped many less fortunate than himself to a right understanding and use of their powers and opportunities. He was a disciple of peace, and at a time when local conditions and laws were unstable, invariably encouraged the settlement of difficulties out of court. In politics he was a Republican, but he had no official aspirations, and though he held at different periods most of the township offices, he did so under protest. Mr. Farwell was a direct product of the place in which his destiny was developed. He had the courage, independence, integrity, charity and general helpfulness which the wilderness demanded of those who linked their fate with it, and of no man can it be more truly said than of him that he knew how to recognize and use the opportunities afforded by his environment.

FARWELL, William A.—The extremes of poverty and affluence have met and harmonized their respective uses in the career of William A. Farwell, the result being an intelligent, broad-minded, shrewd and forceful husbandman, the owner of 1,340 acres of land, a generous contributor to worthy causes, and a forceful supporter of the character, purpose and prosperity of Fulton County. In his youth Mr. Farwell had the good fortune to watch his father, John Farwell, grow rich through legitimate means, and in his maturity he has largely profited by the industry of the older man, whose mission it was to stand upon the threshold of history in this part of the State, and accompany its growing fortunes until his death in September, 1900. His wife, and mother of the subject of this sketch, passed away when the latter was three weeks old.

During all his life William A. Farwell has known the early hours and ceaseless toil of the successful farmer, and only recently has he laid aside the cares of management and profited by the boon of leisure. Born on the farm upon which his father settled in 1837, and which his son still owns, his early advantages were in no way exceptional, or even different from those of the other farmer lads of his neighborhood. It is his privilege to recall intimate association with the hardening experiences of the frontier, with long walks over almost impassable roads to a primitive institution of learning; to labor in the harvest field, beginning with the rising and ending with the setting of the sun; and to endure responsibilities which bore heavily upon both his physical strength and his good nature. The settling of the paternal estate fortunately was satisfactory to all concerned, not a dissenting voice being heard nor a criticism ventured. With this encouraging nucleus Mr. Farwell set to work to invest and improve, and so wise and far-sighted have been his operations that, today, he is one of the largest tax-payers in the southern portion of Fulton County, owning 1,000 acres of land in Woodland Township, adjoining Schuyler County, and 340 acres in Hickory, Schuyler County. At the present time he has eight tenants on his land, the greater part of which is under cultivation.

On August 21, 1885, Mr. Farwell was united in marriage to Annie E. Engle, who was born near Astoria, Fulton County, October 21, 1886, a daughter of Andrew and Susan (Mitchell) Engle, the former of whom is now deceased, while the mother still resides in Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Farwell are the parents of eight children: Maggie Colista, born April 13, 1886, the wife of Dow Workman, a farmer in Woodland Township; John W., born November 7, 1887, died December 14, 1887; Susan J., born November 8, 1888, wife of Hugh Curless, of Woodland Township; Minnie Josephine, born March 30, 1890; William Darius, born June 12, 1892; Flossie J., born January 1, 1896; Oliver A., born March 9, 1898; John H., born March 7, 1900; and Robert R., born December 16, 1902. Mr. Farwell subscribes to the principles of the Republican party, and for many years has been a member of the local Board of Education. He is not a member of any church, but takes a wholesome interest in religious and other institutions, and is one of the most generous men when called upon to further any worthy cause. His clean and upright life commands respect and good will, and, as the legitimate owner and custodian of a large estate, he inspires admiration for his sagacious and thrifty management and control.

FASH, A. H.—Among the various branches of professional knowledge on which civilized humanity is more or less dependent for the maintenance of healthful conditions and for exemption from physical distress is the science of dental surgery. Careless habits of living and indulgence in articles of food and drink which are detrimental to organs of the body and in those which are injurious to the teeth, have become so general that in all communities good dentists are indispensable factors. But, as in medicine and surgery, the science of dentistry is constantly developing new phases of usefulness, and in order to insure success, the dentist of today must keep fully abreast of the latest achievements in his profession. He must add skill to thorough research and combine close application to his task with the ability gained through experience. Such a practitioner of this art is the subject of the present writing, Dr. A. H. Fash.

Dr. Fash is a native of Illinois, born in July, 1852, at Peoria, Ill., where in boyhood he received his first mental training in the public schools. Both his parents, James L. Fash and Levantia (Arnold) Fash, were natives of the State of New York. The former located in Peoria, Ill., in 1830, where he engaged in the butchering business and where he owned and operated one of the first concerns of that kind in the city. After retiring from the butchering business he held the office of Meat Inspector there for three years, being the first official of that character in Peoria. Sometime after his service in this capacity came to an end, he retired from city business and assumed the care of a farm which he had purchased in the vicinity of Peoria.

Dr. Fash pursued a course of study in dentistry in his native city of Peoria and has been engaged in the practice of his profession in Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., since 1880. He first opened an office in the Spencer Cone Building and, after that was destroyed by fire in 1887, transferred his quarters to the building owned by C. C. Butler. In 1896 he moved thence to Samuel Jack's building, in which he has maintained his office ever since. Dr. Fash has been successful during the twenty-five years of his practice in Farmington, and has gained the confidence and respect of an extensive patronage.

In November, 1883, Dr. Fash was united in marriage with Katherine Foltz, who was born in Farmington, Ill., where in her early youth she utilized the opportunities for mental instruction afforded by the public schools, from which she graduated. This union has resulted in the birth of one child, James H. In religious connection the Doctor is an earnest member and worker in the Congregational Church, in which he has for twelve years served the Farmington Congregational Sunday school as Superintendent. Mrs. Fash is also a constant and zealous church worker, having belonged to the choir of the Congregational Church for nearly twenty-two years, in which she has acted as organist.

Politically the subject of this sketch upholds the principles of the Republican party, and in fraternal circles is identified with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. Camp of Farmington. In the latter order he was the First Clerk and Second Venerable Counsel. He is also affiliated with the American Home Circle.

FENGEL, Henry C.—Of those resourceful German-Americans who have fashioned their careers within the boundaries of Deersfield Township, Fulton County, few are better known than Henry C. Fengel, who, in 1855, crossed the seas with his parents, John L. and Mary (Walters) Fengel, from Germany, where he was born September 14, 1845. At the age of ten years the lad found many avenues for the employment of his ingenuity and strength, for his father took up a timbered tract of eighty acres, which must needs be cleared ere the seed could be planted or harvests gathered. In a clearing a log house was erected, in which the family lived ten years, and then succeeded to more pretentious quarters, in the building of which the son took a prominent part.

With many duties confronting him Mr. Fengel found the acquiring of an education difficult and uncertain, and at best attended school but a few months during the winter season. He always has occupied the home place in Section 12, and he also owns eighty acres in Section 14. Until his retirement from active life in 1901, he followed general farming and stock-raising, and after he became owner of the homestead added many improvements to those planned and executed by his father. He has a comfortable residence, well constructed barns and outbuildings, vegetable and flower gardens, orchard, and many of the comforts and luxuries known to the man whose agricultural energies have reached to the enlightenment of the twentieth century.

In Joshua Township, Fulton County, February 25, 1869, Mr. Fengel married Elizabeth Ebersman, who was born in Germany, September 3, 1848, and who is the devoted mother of four children: Mary B., Emma, Newton H. and Elvina. In politics Mr. Fengel is a Democrat, and in religion a Lutheran. He has been prominent in township affairs for many years, and has served as School Director and Road Commissioner. He has kept pace with the time in which he has lived, and is one of his township's popular and enlightened agriculturists.

FIKE, William M., who is successfully engaged in the abstract, real-estate, loan and insurance business in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Woodland Township, Fulton County, March 20, 1853. He is a son of John M. and Eliza Jane (Onion) Fike, who were married October 27, 1850. John M. Fike, who was a native of Indiana, was born April 27, 1827, and died December 23, 1862. Eliza Jane Onion, a daughter of Joel and Eleanor Onion, was born December 4, 1830, and died January 26, 1901. John M. Fike and his wife were the parents of five children, namely: Martha E., born August 4, 1851, deceased August 30, 1852; William M., born March 20, 1853; Mary Elizabeth, born July 27, 1855; John Jay, born May 14, 1857, and Jasper Newton, born August 31, 1860, deceased April 18, 1866.

The great-grandfather of William M. Fike was of German nativity and spelled his name Feik. His son, who came to the United States and located in Pennsylvania, spelled it Fyke, and the style adopted by John M. was Fike, which orthography has since been used by the family. When a young man John M. Fike came to Fulton County, where he met the lady who afterward became his wife. During the Civil War he served in the Third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and while in the field contracted diseases which finally terminated his life. About the year 1850 he bought a farm in Section 10, Woodland Township, this county, which has since been the home of the family and where John Jay and his sister, Mary E., still reside.

His father having died when William was but a boy, the responsibility of managing the farm and caring for the rest of the family devolved upon him. He worked the farm in summer and attended the district school during the winter. After finishing his schooling he entered Hedding College at Abingdon, Ill., still teaching winter terms in the district until 1879. At that period he attended school at the Gem City Business College at Quincy, Ill., after which he taught till the year 1883, at which time he was appointed Deputy Circuit Clerk under W. R. McLaren, holding the office until December, 1886. He was the regular nominee for Circuit Clerk in the Republican convention and was elected in November, 1888. He served until December, 1892, and on the organization of the Farmers' State Bank accepted the position of Cashier, which he held one year. In 1893 he resigned and engaged in his present business of mortgage loans and insurance, in which he has been very successful.

On October 17, 1889, Mr. Fike was married to Zadie Snively, a daughter of Perrin and Eveline (Wright) Snively, of Cuba, Ill. This union resulted in three children, namely: Louise, born May 24, 1894; George Lawrence, July 12, 1898, and Eveline Irene, October 20, 1902.

Mr. Fike has been a resident of Fulton County for half a century, and in his official and business relations has always proved competent and faithful. In the line of private effort he is known as an enterprising and reliable man, who possesses good qualifications and unquestioned integrity. Fraternally Mr. Fike is a member of M. W. A. Camp, No. 228, and of the Court of Honor. Mrs. Fike is a leading member of the Christian Church, Lewistown.

FILLINGHAM, John F.—From a life of continuous and substantial civilian effort the war record of John F. Fillingham rises as a supreme and overshadowing experience. This fact is the more remarkable, as the flag he defended was of an adopted country, to which he came in 1854 from Norfolk, England, where he was born December 16, 1842. Mr. Fillingham is the youngest of the nine children of his parents, John and Mary (Fuller) Fillingham, who arrived with all but their oldest son in Canton, Ill., November 4, 1854, taking up land in Banner Township, where the father died at the age of seventy-seven years and the mother at the age of seventy-five.

Twelve years of age when he arrived in Banner Township, the youth of Mr. Fillingham experienced much of the hardship in that thinly settled community, his hours of work extending from sunrise to sunset. He secured but a limited education and was but eighteen years old when the opportunity to serve his adopted country presented itself in the culmination of strife between the North and the South. Enlisting in Company K, Seventh Illinois Cavalry, August 24, 1861, his company marched first to Springfield and thence to Cairo and Bird's Point, Mo., where four of their men were shot by guerillas while on patrol duty. As a part of General Pope's army they besieged New Madrid and, during a dark and stormy night, forced the evacuation of the city and took possession of the ammunition and stores. At the battle of Island No. 10 this company took many prisoners, and, transferred to Pittsburg Landing as a reinforcement, they participated in several battles around Corinth and in the siege of that city. At Farmington occurred the death of Major Applington, and after an encounter at Tuscumbia Creek and Boonville, Miss., the company went into camp at Rienzi. They next guarded the railroad at Courtland and Russellville. At the latter point Mr. Fillingham being taken ill, later spent some time in the hospitals at New Madrid, Corinth and Benton Barracks, St. Louis. In April, 1863, he rejoined his regiment, which was then at La Grange, Tenn., and later during the same year participated in the famous Grierson's raid through Mississippi to Baton Rouge, La. They also guarded the railroad at Moscow for a time, the following Christmas at Somerville cutting their way through a surrounding file of the enemy with the loss of a few killed and captured. Returning to La Grange, they remained there until February 1, 1864, when they undertook, but subsequently abandoned, the ill-advised William L. Smith raid. After a veteran furlough Mr. Fillingham participated with his regiment in skirmishes at Pulaski, Shoal Creek and the battles of Columbia, Franklin and Nashville. At Gravelly Springs, Ala., they turned their horses over to General Wilson's command. The company then went to Eastport, Miss., and later to Tupelo, Miss., and was finally remounted at Decatur, Ala., and stationed at Huntsville from July to November, 1865, and finally discharged at Nashville on November 4, 1865. Although enlisting as a private Mr. Fillingham was mustered out as an Orderly Sergeant. He had many grim and forbidding experiences; his clothes were many times pierced with bullets, and on his birthday he held in his hands from morning until night a carbine that was hot enough to burn from rapid firing. He was a brave and fearless soldier and, from sources of which he is not aware, it is known that he performed many deeds of generosity and self-sacrifice upon the battlefields of the South.

After the war Mr. Fillingham purchased a farm which since has increased in value and productiveness through his wisely directed and unflinching industry. A mechanic of more than ordinary ability, his knowledge in this direction has been a source of interest and profit, especially in the line of machinery. He has various country properties besides his home place in Canton Township and his residence in the city of Canton, to which he moved with his family on March 1, 1899. Mr. Fillingham has marked executive ability and has held many offices of trust and responsibility in both town and country. He was elected Supervisor of Banner Township for 1888-89, was Supervisor of Canton Township eight years, Road Commissioner of Orion and Banner Townships, Alderman in the city of Canton and Assessor of Canton Township during 1905-7-8. These positions have been filled with business ability and a broad knowledge of the general needs of the community. He is a Republican politically, and fraternally is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Grand Army of the Republic.

The marriage of Mr. Fillingham to Sybil E. Packard, a native of Ohio and daughter of Lee and Emeline Packard, occurred February 1, 1866, soon after Mr. Fillingham's return from the war. Of this union there have been born six children: Byron L., John A., Mary E., Sybil Grace (deceased), William L. (deceased), and an infant who died unnamed. Mr. Fillingham is one of the strong and reliable men of the community, and his services in the interests of agriculture, mechanics, politics and war cannot be overestimated. He has a fine and interesting personality and is most thoroughly appreciated and respected by those who have known him longest and best. In the words of his appreciative and devoted wife, "he is and has always been one of the best, the kindest and most loving of husbands in the State of Illinois," and in fitting response he declares that "a more faithful and loving wife no man ever had."

FINGEL, C. P.—In all save the accident of birth, C. P. Fingel is an American citizen, for he was but four years old when brought to this country by his parents, John and Mary (Lang) Fingel, from Germany, where he was born in 1844. His father was an artisan in Frankfort, Germany, for many years, and upon locating in Pittsburg, Pa., pursued his chosen calling there for the remainder of his active life.

Arriving in Deerfield Township in 1866, C. P. Fingel bought eighty acres of land, and in 1867 was united in marriage to Sarah Burson, a native of Pennsylvania, whom he had known in his boyhood. In 1872 he bought of George Burson eighty acres of land, and also farmed an additional eighty acres belonging to his wife, the entire tract being located in Sections 11 and 12, Joshua Township. He was one of the men who maintained a high standard of agricultural practice, and he placed on the market many head of Shorthorn cattle, Poland-China hogs and Norman horses. He had shrewd business ability, and about twelve years ago was in a position to retire on a competence to Canton, where he owns a beautiful home, and is surrounded by refinements and comforts impossible when he started upon his independent career. In his family are the following-named children: Mary, wife of William Moore; Margaret, and Carl. One of Mr. Fingel's most absorbing activities has been in connection with the Presbyterian Church, in which he has held office for many years. He is deeply interested in the Sunday School, and contributes generously to it and other departments of church work. Fraternally he is associated with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. Besides creditable service as Supervisor and School Director in his township, Mr. Fingel is honored as a veteran of the Civil War, having served for one year in the Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He is one of the community's broad-minded and intelligent citizens and the graduate of an occupation which he has dignified with ability, resource and success.

FINK, Charles L., an enterprising and successful miller of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Sedgwick County, Kans., on October 13, 1877, a son of Eli and Harriet (Murphy) Fink, natives of Virginia and Illinois, respectively. Eli Fink was a farmer by occupation and Charles L. was reared in Kansas, where the father died when the son was about three years old and the mother when he was about seven. After this the early years of his life were spent in different families, working for his board and clothes. In 1893 when about sixteen years of age, he came to Illinois and located in Cuba, Fulton County, where he received his education in the public schools and the high school, graduating from the latter after a course of four years, after which he taught school for one year and then entered the Illinois State Normal University at Normal, Ill. After pursuing a three years' course in this institution, in June, 1900, he took charge of the mill in which he had been interested in partnership with John Hutsizer. This was originally a tannery, which had been built in 1898, and which they remodeled into a mill. After operating this concern two years Mr. Fink assumed charge alone and has since conducted a general milling business, grinding all kinds of grain but not manufacturing flour. He also keeps a hay and feed-store and cider mill, making vinegar, and has recently begun the manufacture of concrete building blocks. He remodeled the steam plant in 1904, installing a new 25-horse power engine, and in the spring of 1905 introduced additional improvements, substituting, for the old stone burr, attrition machinery.

Mr. Fink is unmarried, is a business man of superior qualifications and abounding energy, and supervises a large variety of details with close scrutiny and diligent application. His ability and enterprise have already been rewarded with success.

On political matters Mr. Fink supports the principles of the Prohibition party, and religiously is a member of the Christian Church. His fraternal associations are with the A. F. & A. M., being elected Master of Cuba Lodge in 1906 and re-elected the following year. In the spring of 1907 he was elected by the Citizens' party to the office of Mayor of the city of Cuba, Ill.

FISHER, Colin R.—With the coming of Jacob Fisher to Fulton County in 1855 an element of strength and purpose was added to the upbuilding forces of a promising and prosperous community. That the ideals of work and citizenship cherished by this frontiersman have been transmitted to those succeeding him in the race is not questioned by those familiar with the history of the family for the past half a century. Jacob was a natural mechanic, with a genius for manipulating carpenter's tools, and he came from Westmoreland County, Pa., with his tool chest, family and few worldly possessions, landing at Copperas Creek Landing after a voyage on the Ohio, Mississippi and Illinois Rivers. Upon the land which he bought in Young Hickory Township his son, Frank M. Fisher, grew to maturity and his grandson, Colin R. Fisher, was born December 29, 1875.

Frank M. Fisher was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., November 19, 1850, and was five years old when the family came to Illinois. Accustomed to the use of tools from boyhood, he eventually settled in the town of Middle Grove, where he plied his trade for a couple of years and then engaged in merchandising until failing health compelled his retirement from that occupation in 1890. He next operated a butcher shop, and in time retired on a competence. Mr. Fisher was a man of character and experience, and was prominent in the political and general affairs of his adopted town. A Democrat, he served as Postmaster under the administration of Grover Cleveland from 1884 until his resignation in 1890, and also served as School Trustee and Township Collector. For many years he was very active in the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, took a keen delight in the Sunday-school work and derived social satisfaction from membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. February 11, 1875, he was united in marriage with Lydia Louise Swigart, a native of Fairview Township, and daughter of John and Mary (Tipton) Swigart, early settlers and large landowners of Young Hickory Township. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher are the parents of the following named children: Colin R., Charles W., Myrtle L., Neal R., Roscoe F. and Lela Maude.

As the oldest son of his parents, Colin R. Fisher remained on the home place until his twentieth year, when he started out on his own responsibility, laboring as a farm hand in different parts of Fulton County. In 1900 he rented the farm of Mr. Matthews, and after four years of success, moved to the farm of his grandfather Swigart, which is one of the finest and most valuable properties in Young Hickory Township. He cultivates at present 160 acres, all of which is improved, and turns his attention principally to Polled-Angus cattle, Poland-China hogs and blooded horses. He has a delightful country home, equipped with practically all of the comforts and conveniences known to the up-to-date and successful agriculturist. The marriage of Mr. Fisher and Henrietta Jane Blakeslee, of Fulton County, occurred in Peoria, Ill., November 30, 1898. Of this union there are three children: Clifford T., Forrest B. and Ralph. Mr. Fisher subscribes to the principles of the Democratic party and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is an enterprising and capable man, thoroughly posted on current events and in close sympathy with everything which tends to the development and growth of his native township.

FITZSIMMONS, Andrew (deceased), formerly a well known and much respected farmer of Avon, Fulton County, Ill., was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1822, a son of John and Mary (Murray) Fitzsimmons, both of whom spent their entire lives in Ireland, where the father was a farmer by occupation. The childhood of Andrew Fitzsimmons was passed on the home farm, and in early youth he received his education in the schools of the neighborhood. He remained with his parents until he was eighteen years of age, when in company with one of his brothers in 1840 he emigrated to the United States. Proceeding to Illinois he settled in Fulton County, where, through industry, economy and integrity, he became the owner of a very desirable farm in the vicinity of the town of Avon. There he cultivated the soil for many years, respected by his neighbors and by all who knew him for his honest dealings and blameless life. He died in Avon village, December 3, 1880, leaving an estate including eighty acres of land. His mortal remains were laid in St. Augusta Catholic Cemetery.

The marriage of Mr. Fitzsimmons took place in Augusta, Ill., January 26, 1863, when he was wedded to Margaret Logan, who was born in County Mayo, Ireland, August 8, 1846, a daughter of James and Bridget Logan. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Fitzsimmons resulted in four children, namely: Mary, William, John and Margaret, all of whom are deceased with the exception of John, who is a resident of Avon. Politically Mr. Fitzsimmons is identified with the Democratic party, and served in the capacity of School Director. In religious faith he was a devout Catholic, as is his worthy widow, who is still a highly respected resident of Avon.

FLAKE, Frank, a retired farmer of Avon, Ill., who was successfully engaged in farming in Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., from the time of reaching his majority until his retirement from active pursuits, was born in the locality which is still his home, December 6, 1856. He is a son of William and Nancy (Nelson) Flake, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. William Flake, who always followed farming, came from Ohio to Illinois in 1847, settling in Fulton County, where he has since resided. Frank Flake was reared on the paternal farm and received his education in the district schools of the vicinity. In early manhood he began farming on his own responsibility, and was thus engaged for a number of years. He is still the owner of the farm formerly operated by him, consisting of 100 acres in Union Township, the improvements on which are the result of his work.

On April 14, 1886, Mr. Flake was married, at Avon, Ill., to Ella Ahearn, a native of Fulton County, where she was born April 24, 1867, the daughter of Daniel and Nancy Ahearn, residents of the same county. Her father is Irish by nativity, and the birth of her mother occurred in Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Flake have one child—Lorena. In politics Mr. Flake is identified with the Democratic party, and has served the public as School Director. His religious connection is with the Christian Church.

FLAKKE, Harriet Jane.—The influx of pioneers into Fulton County in 1835 exceeded in number all who had previously cast their fortunes with the then unpromising locality. Among the arrivals of that year was John Flake, who was born in Indiana, April 8, 1811, and who availed himself of the cheapness of the land to take up eighty acres that stretched in wild, unbroken line across the prairies. He was possessed of grit and determination and prospered as the years passed by, in time owning a 100-acre tract. While still young and comparatively poor he married Elizabeth Jenkins, who was born in Ireland and who survived for many years his death, which occurred October 21, 1889.

Harriet Jane Flake was born on her father's farm in Fulton County, January 25, 1857, and was educated in the country school near her home. Her life has been a quiet, domestic one, devoted to the tasks around the house, and in later years to the grave responsibility of assisting in the management of the farm. Her friends are many in the township and her kindness of heart and loyalty to all interests whatsoever are everywhere acknowledged. Miss Flake has never married.

FOLEY, George L., a well known resident of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., who has followed coal mining since he was a boy of fifteen years and for several years was manager of an extensive coal mining enterprise in the vicinity of Canton, was born in Peoria, Ill., in 1876, a son of W. E. and Kate L. Foley. Mr. Foley is the younger of a family of two children, namely: William F. and George L. Foley.

In early youth the subject of this sketch enjoyed the advantages afforded by the public schools of Peoria, and after finishing his studies secured employment in a coal mine. In this occupation he continued for several years. Together with his brother, W. F., and his father, he located at Canton in 1902 and sunk a mine on the Shepley farm. The brothers purchased five acres of land and leased 600 acres of coal area. They built a shaft and equipped it with the Shaw hoisting machinery, furnishing the mine and plant with electric lighting appliances and installing electric motors in their blacksmith shop. In connection with their work are used Shaker sieves and the Christie box-car loader. The output of the mine is 350 tons daily and the force employed numbers 100 men. The equipment of the plant is sufficient to hoist 1,000 tons of coal per day. All of the product of this mine is shipped to the Northwest via the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, on the tracks of which it is located. December 16, 1905, the Messrs. Foley sold their Canton mine to H. W. Lynch & Company, of Peoria, and are now operating a mine at Mapleton, Peoria County.

Mr. Foley was joined in matrimony in 1898 with Maggie Wright, who was born in England, a daughter of William Wright. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Foley, namely: Katie, Paul and Margaret. Fraternally Mr. Foley is affiliated with the Order of Eagles. He is considered one of the most energetic, capable and promising young men in Fulton County in his sphere of operation.

FOOTE, Charles F.—Ordinarily heredity has no rights which the biographers of successful Americans, especially those of the West, feel bound to respect. However, it counts for much in shaping the course of some men, and emphatically must be noted when the tendency born in a man is fostered by an ever-present influence along the same lines, crowding other avenues of thought, and compelling minute attention to the demands of one's surroundings. Supplementing environment and training, heredity has counted in the case of Charles F. Foote, owner and manager of the Ipava Woolen Mills, with which he has been connected since 1880. Mr. Foote has been grounded in the woolen manufacturing business ever since he was eight years old, and there are few men in the country similarly employed who have a more comprehensive grasp of this important industry. In Winchester, Middlesex County, Mass., where he was born November 12, 1850, his father, John Foote, was engaged in the same avocation, which he industriously and profitably followed during his entire life.

John Foote was born in 1827 in Leeds, the largest city in Yorkshire, and the fifth largest city in England. Leeds is the chief seat of the great English woolen industry, and with it the Foote family has been connected for several generations. John Foote, true to the tradition of his forefathers, learned the business from the bottom round of the ladder, and to know that he is the equal of any workman in the world. He was fifteen years old when he came to America in 1845, locating in Massachusetts, the heart of the woolen industry on this side of the water. He worked at his trade in various parts of New England, and in Cherry Valley, Mass., married Martha Childs, who was born in Portland, Maine, and died in Rushville, Ill., in 1903. Their children (all of whom are still living) are: Charles F., the subject of this sketch; Alfred, proprietor of the Fey House, Rushville; Ada, a resident of the British Possessions; Walter, in charge of the yarn mill at Rushville, and H. G., employed in the John Foote & Son's woolen mill. When the Civil War broke out the oldest son, Charles F., was eleven years old. The latter had begun to work in the woolen mills at Newport, N. H., at the age of eight years, and still was struggling with the rudiments of the business when, in 1864, father and son enlisted in Company K, Eighteenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the war. From Newport, after the war, the elder Foote moved with his family to Otsego, Mich., and from there to Rock Island, Ill., where he was chief carder and spinner in the mills of that town. In 1870 he located in Rushville, Ill., and organized the company of J. Foote & Sons, which established the Rushville hosiery mills, soon after converted into a yarn mill, and which, under the firm name of J. Foote & Son, has been in continuous operation for thirty-five years.

Charles F. Foote severed his connection with the Rushville mills in 1880, and in partnership with William Moorehouse bought a half-interest in the Ipava Woolen Mills, which had been established about 1840. Upon the death of Mr. Moorehouse, in 1892, Mr. Foote succeeded to the entire ownership of the mill, and since has managed it with increasing financial satisfaction. When he first became interested in the mill it was doing a business of about $40,000 a year, but it since has increased to $65,000 a year and has a weekly pay roll of $175. For the past four years no outside trade has been solicited, either jobbing or retail, a mail order business being resorted to entirely. During the past year looms, jacks and cards have been added for manufacturing the finest woolen fabrics, and it now is one of the best equipped woolen mills in the country. With his many years of experience, his excellent business foresight, and his managerial ability, it is needless to add that Mr. Foote accomplishes the best possible results with his manufacturing plant. He has his own electric light plant, operated by a Cowles engine, and he also supplies the pumping power for the city water works. It is his habit to employ good workmen and pay them good wages, a common sense view which saves him many thousands of dollars yearly.

At Knoxville, Ill., Mr. Foote was united in marriage to Sadie L. Saddler, a native of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Foote have two children, of whom Ina is the wife of Clare Marshall, a prominent farmer of Fulton County, and John is in business with his father. Mr. Foote is socially inclined, and a prominent member of the Masons, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is a Republican in politics, and in religion a Methodist. He also is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Foote is a man of leading characteristics, public spirited, popular, honorable in all his dealings and through his upbuilding of one of the town's most worthy industries, a commercial factor of widespread influence.

FORD, George (deceased), formerly a well-known farmer of Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the State of Pennsylvania, a son of William Ford and wife. William Ford died leaving a widow and nine children, who located at an early period in Fulton County, where they made their home in Putman Township. Subsequently the mother went West, where she died. Of this family, George Ford was the eldest. His arrival in Fulton County took place about 1834. In youth he received his early training in the primitive district schools, and on reaching mature years, left the home farm and applied himself to farming on his own account, continuing in this occupation during the remainder of his life. He died in 1877, aged sixty years. Mr. Ford was devoted to his home, an industrious and upright citizen, and highly respected by all who knew him.

Mr. Ford was united in marriage with Elizabeth Shaw, a daughter of Alexander Shaw, and they had ten children: William, deceased; Harriet, deceased wife of James Fleming, of Lewistown, Ill.; Sarah and Zachariah, deceased; Jerry, of Marbletown, Fulton County, Ill.; Nancy, wife of John Murphy, a sketch of whose life appears in this volume; Charles, of Ettna Green, Ind.; John and Emma, deceased; and

BALTHAZER JACOBS

Jackson C., a farmer in Buckheart Township. The mother of this family arrived in Fulton County in 1836, her husband having located there two years previously. The former, a most estimable woman, died in 1904.

FORD, Jackson C., who is successfully engaged in farming in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., and is equally successful in the proprietorship of a livery and feed barn at St. David, Fulton County, was born in Lewistown Township, Fulton County, November 13, 1858, a son of George and Elizabeth (Shaw) Ford, natives of Pennsylvania. A sketch of his father's life appears in another section of this work. The subject of this sketch was reared on the paternal farm and received his early mental instruction in the public schools of Bryant, Fulton County. In 1861 the family moved to Buckheart Township in that county and settled on a farm of 160 acres in Section 29, where Mr. Ford has since lived and where he has always been engaged in farming. Besides general farming he has devoted his attention to breeding a superior grade of horses, cattle and hogs. In May, 1905, Mr. Ford erected two buildings in St. David, one for store purposes and the other for a livery and feed barn, to which he bestows considerable attention. It is a first-class place in every particular, and especial attention is given to feeding and caring for horses. Mr. Ford keeps an excellent collection of turnouts, single and double, and succeeds in affording satisfaction to his patrons.

On January 12, 1883, Mr. Ford was united in matrimony with Louisa F. Berry, a daughter of John and Louisa (Byers) Berry, pioneer settlers of Fulton County. Her father is now a resident of Lewistown, Ill., her mother having departed this life. Mr. and Mrs. Ford have six children, namely: Jesse, who is in charge of the home farm; and Ross, Mary V., Arlo Jackson, Dottie D. and Ralph Roosevelt, who are with their parents. In politics Mr. Ford is an unwavering Republican, and has always done his utmost to promote the success of that party. Since early manhood he has been identified with the best interests of Fulton County, and is one of the most worthy, substantial and useful members of the community.

FOSTER, Samuel J., one of the oldest and most honored among the pioneer citizens of McDonough County, Ill., but now living in retirement at Table Grove, Fulton County, was born at Foster's Point, McDonough County, December 30, 1832, and enjoys the distinction of being the first white child born in the township. He is a son of Arthur J. and Sarah (Kelso) Foster, both of whom were natives of the State of South Carolina. At an early period the Foster and Kelso families journeyed from the South to Indiana, where the parents of Samuel J. Foster were joined in matrimonial bonds about the year 1830. In 1831 Arthur J. Foster and his wife left Indiana and located in Macon County, Ill., shortly afterward establishing their home in McDonough County. The former, who was a farmer by occupation, was born in 1800. He was a man of unflagging industry, provident methods and strict probity of character, and his exemplary and useful life came to an early close in 1843. Although always busy and diligent in and out of season, he nevertheless found time to take an active interest in the cause of church and school and gave freely of his means to promote their interests. He donated the one acre of ground which has always been the site of the Foster's Point Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which he was a devoted member. Public spirited to a marked degree, he set out a fine sugar grove and did many things tending to advance the general welfare of the place. His charities were unostentatious, but liberally bestowed. In all his beneficent deeds he had the hearty co-operation of his worthy helpmate, and both were held in the highest esteem by all who knew them. Their hospitable home was the abiding place of the preacher and before the church was built it was the meeting point of the synod of the denomination to which they belonged. Their nearest neighbor was then about six miles distant. Politically Mr. Foster was a Whig and when a young man was an ardent admirer of Abraham Lincoln, to whose speeches he often listened.

Sarah (Kelso) Foster survived her husband many years, passing away a half century later at the advanced age of ninety-three years. The remains of these honored pioneers lie together in the old family graveyard on the homestead farm, the hallowed scene of the strenuous endeavors of their brief but happy wedded life. To Arthur J. and Sarah (Kelso) Foster were born seven children, as follows: Henry W.; William D., who lives at Table Grove, Ill.; John N., who resides at Foster's Point, Eldorado Township, McDonough County; Samuel J.; Sarah, deceased, who was the wife of James H. Lowe, of Rocky Ford, Colo.; Abner D., whose home is in Nebraska, and Johanna C., widow of J. S. Gettis, who is a resident of Chicago.

Samuel J. Foster was reared to agricultural pursuits and in early youth thoroughly utilized the opportunities for mental training afforded by the public schools in his vicinity. His entire life has been spent in McDonough County, all of its active period being devoted to farming operations. His labors have been uniformly successful and his business transactions have involved the handling of many thousands of dollars. The farm on which he was born is among his present possessions. He is the owner of 227 acres of land and has amassed a handsome competency as a dependence for his declining years.

In 1854 Mr. Foster was united in marriage with Mary McMahon, who was born in Dubois County, Ind., in 1833. Her father and mother died in that county, the former in 1836 and the latter in 1850. When about seventeen years of age she came to Illinois and made her home with one of her aunts. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Foster resulted in nine children, as follows: Sarah V., widow of William Vail and a resident of Table Grove, Ill.; A. D., of Macomb, Ill.; James M., deceased; John L., who is engaged in farming in Industry Township, McDonough County; Henry L., who lives on the old farm in Eldorado Township; Eva, who is with her parents; Nellie C., wife of William Barkley, a farmer in Scotland Township, McDonough County; Luella, wife of Edward Ansbury, of Macomb, Ill., and Samuel R., who is on the old homestead in Eldorado Township. Their father rendered each of the children, on growing to maturity, the assistance necessary to start in life, and those surviving having been provided by him with thorough mental instruction, are living comfortable and useful lives, and are respected members of the communities to which they severally belong. All of them are consistent members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. With this church their father and mother have been closely and prominently identified for many years, the former having joined it in 1843 when twelve years of age. For half a century he has officiated as one of its elders and as Superintendent of the Sunday school. He has always been ready with his means in affording help to the poor, and every good cause has felt the impulse of his kindly and benevolent heart.

Since attaining his maturity the subject of this sketch has witnessed many marvelous changes in McDonough County, and with all the wonderful transformation which that region has undergone, he has borne his full share in the labor attending the process of development. He has been one of the most eminently useful of the faithful workers who laid the foundations of the material, moral and educational prosperity of his section of the State. His career has been unsullied by venality and unmarred by selfishness, and the ripening years that crown his head are attended by the consciousness of steadfast fidelity to the obligations of duty and by the assurance that he enjoys the profound esteem and regard of the entire community.

FOSTER, William Arthur Holmes.—The largest and best equipped livery establishments in Table Grove is owned and operated by William Arthur Holmes Foster, a native son of McDonough County, Ill., and scion of a family represented in that county as early as 1826. Mr. Foster was born in Eldorado Township, McDonough County, February 21, 1857, a son of W. D. and Elizabeth (McClintock) Foster, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively, and grandson of John Arthur Foster, of Kentucky, and of William McClintock, a native of Ireland. W. D. Foster came to McDonough County in 1826 with his parents, the family taking up land from the Government, where they spent the rest of their lives. The son eventually became the possessor of an adjoining property in McDonough County and remained thereon until his retirement to Table Grove in 1892.

William Arthur Foster lived at home until his marriage to Mattie Bailey, who was born in Eldorado Township, and thereafter established a home of his own on a farm adjoining that of his father, October 22, 1879. Ten years later he engaged in the hardware business in Table Grove with J. M. Keach, and three years later purchased the interest of his partner and conducted the business alone for three years. He then sold a half interest in the business to his brother-in-law, J. D. Bailey, with whom he continued the business until September, 1900, when they sold out to Griffith Brothers. Mr. Foster then engaged in the livery, feed and fuel business, and also has been engaged to some extent in the purchase and sale of blooded horses. In November, 1903, he established himself in his newly built and modern barn, which is equipped with facilities for conducting an up-to-date and increasing business, and there has been largely patronized by the best element in the town and surrounding country.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster have five children: Lillian, wife of Elias Holston, of Pennsylvania; Lawrence B., Aubrey T., Anna and Neva F.

FOSTER, William D.—The retirement of William D. Foster from active life, July 12, 1892, was justified by the accomplishment of success in its broadest sense, by many years of devotion to the science of farming, by faithfulness to private and public duties and conscientious regard for the perpetuation of his name and labor in the bringing up of his children. Mr. Foster occupies a pleasant, lawn-surrounded home in Table Grove, this county, furnished in accordance with refined taste and practical ideas of comfort. His life has been a steadfast and busy one, and the end of his working days finds him prosperous financially and rich in the esteem of a large circle of friends.

Born November 5, 1826, in Davis County, Ind., Mr. Foster is a son of Arthur J. and Sarah (Kelso) Davis and grandson of Henry Foster and Henry Kelso, all of whom were born in the State of South Carolina. All of his people on both sides of the family have been members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which he also has held membership since early boyhood. Reared on a farm and educated in the subscription schools of both South Carolina and Illinois, he was five years old when his parents moved to the latter State in 1831, settling on land in Eldorado Township, McDonough County, where the father died when William D. still was in his teens. The latter, with his brother, continued to live on the home place with their mother, William being next to the oldest of five sons and two daughters.

The marriage of William Foster and Elizabeth A. McClintock occurred May 29, 1851, Mrs. Foster having been born in Ohio, and a daughter of William and Nancy (Decker) Foster, the former born in Virginia and the latter the first white child born in Guernsey County, Ohio. After his marriage Mr. Foster bought sixty acres of the home place, erected a residence and barn thereon, and eventually bought enough more to make a farm of 110 acres. He developed a fine and valuable property and had one of the most comfortable and hospitable homes in the township. Here were born his children, the order of whose births is as follows: Mrs. Florence Battenburg; Mrs. Frances Smith, of Missouri; William A., engaged in the livery business in Table Grove; L. C., a farmer of Eldorado Township, McDonough County; Harry, a farmer of the same township, and Mrs. May Wetzel, occupying the home place. Mr. Foster is a Republican in politics, but never has taken an active part in local governmental affairs. He is a genial and sympathetic man, and the grind of labor has not hardened his nature or rendered him less the friend of youth and happiness.

FOUTCH, Francis M., one of the oldest and most prominent of the pioneer farmers of Fulton County, Ill., is a native of Sangamon County, Ill., where he was born June 27, 1833. He is a son of John and Rhoda Foutch, who settled in Fulton County in 1835, locating in Isabel Township. Details pertaining to the antecedents and history of the Foutch family may be found in a record of the life of James Foutch, which appears elsewhere in this volume. The subject of this sketch was brought to Fulton County by his parents when he was two years of age, and grew up on the paternal farm, attending school in the old log schoolhouse in early youth. Mr. Foutch well remembers the desolate, barren condition of "South Fulton" at that period and the abundance of wild game that was to be seen in all directions. Deer, especially, were plentiful, and venison was a common article of food. As a substitute for bread the early settlers were accustomed to grate their corn and prepare hominy. The first grist mill in this locality was built by George Duncan on Spoon River, and the settlement was named Duncantown. In 1856 Mr. Foutch located in Section 27, Isabel Township, where he carried on farming until 1883, when he moved to Woodland Township, buying forty acres in Section 12. In 1903 he purchased eighty acres in Section 15 of the same township, where he has since made his home. On this farm is a vein of the finest quality of coal four feet thick, which is mined by his son. No reliable estimate can be made of its extent, but the supply is thought to be unlimited.

In the reminiscences of his school days Mr. Foutch recalls the log schoolhouse, with its split log benches and writing desk of similar material fastened to the wall; the chimney made of sticks plastered over with mud, and the teacher hired at one dollar per quarter for each scholar, with the privilege of "boarding round" with the pupils. The principal school books of those days were the "Webster's Elementary Speller" and the English Reader, a "sum" placed on the blackboard by the teacher sometimes supplying the place of an arithmetic. Later these gave place to a new edition of Webster's Speller, Ray's Arithmetic and more advanced text-books.

The factory which furnished the cloth for the clothing of those days was "the mother." The wool was sheared from the sheep, carded into rolls, spun into yarn and woven into cloth, and manufactured into winter clothing in the home. For summer wear flax furnished the principal material, after the growing and breaking of the flax, most of the work being done by the women. For shoes the head of the house bought the leather and then hired a shoemaker in the fall to come to the home and make the shoes, and when these were worn out the wearer went barefoot the rest of the year.

Power for breaking the soil by the primitive farmer was obtained almost entirely by the use of oxen, one yoke being sufficient for the breaking up of old ground, but when new ground was to be broken, from three to five yoke being necessary. The plow was made of wood, except the share, the latter being a metal plate about six inches wide by eight inches long. When the ground was broken the top of a small tree of brush was used as a substitute for a harrow to cover the grain when planting wheat or oats. When corn was planted the ground was marked off with a single shovel plow, the corn being dropped by some one following the plow and covered by others using the hoe. After the sprout had appeared above the surface, it was often necessary for the farmers' boys to watch the field during the day to keep the crows and blackbirds from destroying the crop. The corn was cultivated with the shovel plow and the hoe, and wheat and oats were cut with the cradle and thrashed with flails or trampled out by horses on a smooth earthen floor, the separation of the grain and chaff being done, after the removal of the straw, by pouring the threshed out mixture from some elevation, allowing the lighter portions to be carried away by the wind. In case of the absence of the wind before the days of the fanning mill, this was often accomplished by getting up an artificial flow of air by fanning with a sheet. When corn was maturing in the ear it was often found necessary to protect the growing crop from destruction by squirrels and other wild animals. In handling sheaves of grain and hay the place of the steel pitchforks of the present day was supplied by wooden forks, either home-made or a forked stick cut from a small tree in the woods. Mr. Foutch recalls the fact that the first produce sold by his father consisted of some shelled corn, which, after being hauled to town, commanded a price of fifteen cents per bushel. The price of eggs about that time was three cents per dozen, and trapped quails sold at twelve and one-half cents per dozen.

In 1856 Mr. Foutch was united in marriage with Elizabeth Ledmon and commenced house-keeping on Section 27, Isabel Township. Five children resulted from this union, three of whom are deceased. Those surviving are: Frank, a coal mine operator in Section 15, Woodland Township; and Annie, who resides in Summum, Ill., and is the widow of Charles Hart. The mother of this family died in 1876. On June 27, 1888, Mr. Foutch was married to Hortency Martin, who was born in 1853, a daughter of Vangooris Martin, of Kerton Township. Her father was a native of Ohio, and her grandfather, of Pennsylvania. She had been previously married, her husband dying in 1877. Her first marriage resulted in one daughter, Daisy, born in Kerton Township, and now the wife of Lafayette Salisbury. Mr. and Mrs. Foutch are the parents of six children, namely: Jessie, Martin, Judson, Bessie, Hirundo and Lecta.

For seventy-one years Mr. Foutch has been a resident of Fulton County, and during all his mature years has ranked as one of its useful and respected citizens. He has done his full share in clearing and cultivating its soil, and has witnessed the extraordinary strides of progress from the days of dim lighting by means of the old tallow-dip to the advent of railroads, telephones, electric lamps and rural free deliveries. He has been among the foremost in promoting religious and educational interests, and has taken an active and prominent part in all that pertains to the welfare and progress of the county. In politics he is a Republican, his father having been an old line Whig. While a resident of Isabel Township Mr. Foutch filled several offices successively, with ability and fidelity. Of late years he has made it a rule to support the most worthy and suitable candidates for county offices, irrespective of partisan affiliations. He enjoys the unqualified respect and cordial regard of all classes of people.

FOUTCH, James, one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens of Isabel Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Sangamon County, Ill., September 3, 1828, being of German ancestry and a son of John and Rhoda (Ray) Foutch, natives of Kentucky. John Foutch removed from Kentucky to Illinois about the year 1820, before the completion of the survey of government land in the State, and he and his family were among the earliest settlers of Sangamon County. About the year 1834 the family located in Fulton County, James being then a lad of six years. But one little log cabin then stood in the part of the township where his parents settled, and his father bought the tax title to this farm from Elijah Terrell, which was the beginning of the settlement. His parents had three other children, namely: Francis M., born in Woodland Township; Charlotte, deceased wife of Ezeriah Thomas, a farmer of Fulton County, and Henry, who died in infancy. The mother of this family died about the year 1840, and John Foutch afterward married Lucretia Ferris, by whom he had nine children, namely: John, who is engaged in farming in Isabel Township, Fulton County; Thomas, who occupies the farm where John Foutch located when he first settled in Fulton County in 1834 and which has always remained in the Foutch name; David and William (deceased); Louisa; widow of Newton Stivers, who makes her home with Thomas Foutch; Edward, who lives on a portion of the old homestead; Anna Larsh, who is a resident of Havana, Ill.; Charles, who carries on farming in Isabel Township, Fulton County, and Lincoln, deceased. John Foutch died about 1891, and his second wife passed away in about 1895. Both were members of the Christian Church. The father was a man of strong domestic attachments and his chief pleasure and comfort were found in the home circle. His first wife was a devoted member of the Baptist Church.

James Foutch has been a resident of Isabel Township for more than seventy-one years. He was present at the meeting and well remembers the occasion when the name "Isabel," suggested by Stephen Dewey, was adopted for the township. The boat landing was then called "Point Isabel." Mr. Foutch received his early mental training in the district school, held in a rude log cabin, goose quills being used for pens. The "big boys" among the pupils were wont to cut the huge logs at noon to keep fire in the primitive fireplace. Mr. Foutch remained at home until 1858. After his marriage he built a small house on the homestead farm, where his house-keeping began, and in 1861 built his present home on Section 26, Isabel Township, this being the first commodious frame dwelling in the township.

Mr. Foutch bought his first forty acres of land from his father and has added to this until he now owns 240 acres in Sections 23 and 26, Isabel Township. This land, wild and barren when purchased by him, has been developed into one of the best improved farms in the entire township. He has taken a deep interest in the progress of the locality with which his whole life has been identified, and has borne an active part in the attainment of the great results which have been accomplished in that region.

In August, 1858, Mr. Foutch was united in marriage with Nancy S. Leadman, a native of Terre Haute, Ind., where she was born June 17, 1842, a daughter of Jefferson and Catherine (Stevens) Leadman, of that place. The mother died in Indiana and in 1845 the father, with his five children, came to Fulton County. Three of his children are still living: Mrs. Foutch; Anna (Mrs. Stevens), of the Indian Territory, and Joseph, of Havana, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Foutch became the parents of seven children, namely: Samuel, of Peoria, Ill., born July 29, 1858; Carrie, born November 16, 1860, who is the wife of Charles Thomas, of Lewistown, Ill.; James, who was born May 9, 1863, and died February, 1864; Joseph, a farmer in Isabel Township, born November 23, 1865; Addie E., born February 26, 1868, who is the wife of Alonzo Bainter, a farmer in Isabel Township; Hugh, born July 10, 1870, also a farmer in that township, and Minnie, born January 6, 1873, who is the wife of Harry Cniley, of Jacksonville, Ill.

In politics Mr. Foutch has been an unwavering Republican since his first presidential vote for John C. Fremont in 1856. He has filled various local offices, served as Township Assessor and for twelve years represented his township on the Board of Supervisors. Aside from these he positively declined to accept political preferment.

Mrs. Foutch is a member of the Christian Church. Mr. Foutch has always contributed liberally toward the promotion of church work and for the advancement of the cause of education. He has lived an industrious, upright and useful life, and now, as the shadows of declining years begin to gather about him, his pathway is lighted by the serene consciousness that he has faithfully discharged the obligations of duty to the utmost of his ability.

FOX, John M.—In both the yesterday and today of Canton the jewelry establishment now operated by John M. Fox has proved a substantial force among the rising institutions of the town. No branch of merchandising is slower in its growth or more conservative in its methods than the jewelry business. Non-fluctuating values largely are responsible for the condition and, latterly, the same are intensified by exactions of the association to which most reliable jewelers belong. It follows, therefore, that men engaging in the calling are of calm and non-speculative mind, reliable as to morals, definite in their purpose and not easily led from accustomed grooves. No exception to this conclusion was found in the life of Jeremiah M. Fox, who came to Canton in 1851 and established the business which has weathered the storms and changes of more than half a century.

Jeremiah M. Fox, father of John M., was born in Bucks County, Pa., and his wife, formerly Sarah J. Johnson, was born in New Jersey. In 1849, the year that witnessed the departure to the Pacific coast of thousands of fortune seekers, was the time chosen by Mr. Fox to bring his family overland to Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., where he built the first mill that woke the echoes of that section, and interested himself in otherwise contributing to the upbuilding of its enterprises. At one time he engaged quite extensively in the cattle business and was the first railroad agent in the village of Norris. His jewelry business in Canton was started on a small scale and when repair work constituted the principal source of revenue. He was honest and faithful and content to await the slow rewards of the years.

John M. Fox was born in Canton, Ill., August 14, 1864, and was educated in the public schools of his native town and at Illinois College, Jacksonville. He early became his father's assistant in the store, and when he succeeded to the management of the business was well equipped by a thorough and practical training. The career of Mr. Fox has been characterized by industry and economy, and by well directed interest in affairs which contribute to the upbuilding of the town. He is socially prominent and popular and is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias, Masons and the Eagles. In Carthage, Mo., he was united in marriage June 20, 1890, with Jennie Kline, a native daughter of Peoria, Ill.

FREDERICK, R. Kelly.—Mr. Frederick is a son of the late James Ward Frederick, an early pioneer of Lee Township, and one of the most extensive and prosperous stock raisers of Fulton County. He was a Pennsylvanian by birth, but came to Fulton County with his parents when a boy of ten years, and resided in Lee Township from that time until his death, November 30, 1900, at the age of seventy years. His wife, the mother of the subject of this sketch, is still living on the family homestead. She is a native of Lewistown Township, where her marriage occurred, her maiden name being Sarah E. Boyer.

R. Kelly Frederick, who is the third in a family of ten children, was born in Lee Township, Fulton County, March 28, 1863, where he received a good education in the district schools and the Virgil High School. He is the proprietor of a farm of 280 acres, on which he raises both general crops and live stock—a combination which has made him one of the successful agriculturists of his section. In politics he is a Republican and has served on the School Directorate of the township for a number of years. In religious work he is identified with the Methodist Church.

On the 29th of January, 1891, Mr. Frederick was married in Union Township, Fulton County, to Josephine Kutchler, a native of that township, where she was born March 29, 1872. Two children have resulted from their union, Greely and Audrey.

FULTON, Thomas K.—It has been the mission of Thomas K. Fulton to be identified in his fortunes with Fulton County since the end of the Civil War, and through his energy and good judgment to promote community interests in that period generally recognized as difficult and reconstructive. At the time of his arrival here he was twenty-two years old, the possessor of a good constitution, a practical common school education and an enviable record as a brave and patriotic soldier. Born in Washington County, Pa., May 8, 1843, he is the fifth in order of birth of nine children of John and Hannah (McMillan) Fulton, farmers by occupation and natives also of the Quaker State. His paternal grandfather, Joseph Fulton, came from Ireland to Pennsylvania in his youth, and his maternal great-grandfather, Dr. John McMillan, came from Scotland and established Jefferson College, at Canonsburg, Pa., the first college west of the Alleghany Mountains. His maternal grandfather, Samuel McMillan, was born in Pennsylvania and married Isabella Harper, a native of that State.

At the age of eighteen, September 24, 1861, Mr. Fulton enlisted in Company A, Eighty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, under Colonel J. B. Howell, and until the spring of 1863 was attached to the Tenth Army Corps, taking part in the "Peninsular Campaign" from Williamsburg to Fair Oaks. The regiment then was attached to the Eighteenth Army Corps and sent to take part in the siege of Forts Wagner, Sumter and Gregg, and the siege of Petersburg in 1864. In all he participated in twenty-eight battles, and though in the thick of the fight on many occasions, escaped injury, imprisonment or protracted illness. He was discharged from the service at Pittsburg, in his native State, and returned to civilian life a sadder, wiser and broadly experienced man.

In the Prairie State, directly after the war, Mr. Fulton began to work by the month, and October 18, 1865, was united in marriage to Cyrena A. Swan, daughter of William and Jane (Allison) Swan, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively. Of this union there have been born two children: Frank R. and Myrtle B. The former married Heiress Baker and at the present time lives on the home farm. Mr. Fulton eventually acquired his present splendid property in Orion Township, consisting of 220 acres, upon which he is extensively engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He is a well educated and well posted man, well abreast of the times in all that pertains to agriculture and its most practical development, and taking a keen interest in education, politics, religion and home-making.

GADDIS, John W., a well known and successful banker of Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Jacksonville, Ill., on December 5, 1859, the youngest son of Dr. John V. D. and Julia (Wilson) Gaddis, natives of New York and New Jersey, respectively. Dr. Gaddis, the father of the subject of this sketch, settled in Fulton County about 1838 and there engaged in the practice of his profession, in which he became quite prominent. In 1855 he removed to Jacksonville, where he continued in practice, and was also interested in mercantile lines. His wife, Mrs. Julia (Wilson) Gaddis, was a daughter of the Rev. A. D. Wilson, who was the founder of the German Reformed Church of Fairview.

John W. Gaddis grew to manhood in his native city of Jacksonville and received his primary education in the public schools of that place and for a time was a student in Illinois College. Later he took an academic course at Freehold, N. J., and a business course in the Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Coming to Fairview, Fulton County, in 1881, he for a time was engaged in mercantile business as a member of the firm of Gaddis & Wilson, and after conducting the business alone from 1883, entered into partnership with Harry C. Hill, organizing the firm of Gaddis & Hill, dealers in groceries, hardware and notions. In 1885, in conjunction with Messrs. T. H. Travers, L. W. Davis and P. B. Voorhees, Mr. Gaddis assisted in organizing the Fairview Banking Company, a private banking concern, which began business on July 1st of that year, and of which Mr. Gaddis has been Cashier continuously to the present time. A sketch of this bank will be found in the chapter on "Financial Institutions."

On March 19, 1889, Mr. Gaddis was united in marriage with Sarah Ledeboer, a native of Holland, Mich., daughter of Dr. L. Ledeboer, of that place, and of their union there have been two children, John and Lillian R. Politically Mr. Gaddis is identified with the Democratic party and fraternally is a member of Fairview Lodge, No. 350, A. F. & A. M., in which he has held the office of Worshipful Master. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Reformed Church of Fairview. His ability as a business man and financier has been demonstrated by his experience in connection with the same institution for more than twenty years.

GALLAGHER, Patrick W.—Of the men whose ability, industry and forethought have added to the character, wealth and good government of Canton, this county, none are better known than Patrick W. Gallagher. Mr. Gallagher is a lawyer, not only by education and long practice, but by temperament and preference. He has been in active practice for twenty-nine years, and seventeen of these years have been spent in Canton. Political tendencies and executive ability have added to his possibilities of professional compensation and have broadened his efforts into the channels of Justice of the Peace, Police Magistrate, State's Attorney and Judge of the City Court.

Mr. Gallagher's family has been represented in Canton since 1854, coming here from Liverpool, England, where Patrick W. was born July 1, 1852. His parents, William and Mary (Rafferty) Gallagher, were born in Ireland, the former in County Mayo and the latter in County Roscommon. Besides the parents and Patrick, a sister, Maggie, comprised the party of immigration, and after the location in Canton three other children were born: Delia, Ella and Katie. The mother died in 1891. Patrick received his preliminary education in the public schools of Canton and at the age of seventeen entered the establishment of the "Fulton Ledger," where he mastered the trade of printing, and remained for three years. Finding printing an insufficient outlet for his ambition, he read law in the office of J. L. Murphy, of Canton, and was admitted to the bar of Illinois in 1875, when twenty-three years of age. Alert and resourceful, he already began to attract the attention of the older and mature minds, and was regarded as promising material for important civic responsibilities. His political bent sided with the Democratic party, and ere he had become established in a law office he was elected Justice of the Peace and Police Magistrate.

Changing his base of operations to Cuba, this county, in 1876, Mr. Gallagher engaged in a general practice of law and in 1880 was elected State's Attorney for the first time. December 7, 1879, he was united in marriage to Judith C. Mowery, who was born in Cuba and who graduated at the high school of her native town. To Mr. and Mrs. Gallagher have been born four children: William M., Mary M., Z. Rae and Donald J. Upon his return to Canton in 1888 Mr. Gallagher went into legal partnership with Oscar J. Boyer under the firm name of Gallagher & Boyer, an association amicably and profitably continued until 1892. In that year he was again elected State's Attorney and in 1901 was elected Judge by a large majority and is the present incumbent, having been re-elected in 1905. He has been prominently identified with many phases of city life, and is an enthusiastic promoter of fraternal organizations, being a member of the A. F. & A. M., Morning Star Lodge, No. 134; Canton Chapter, No. 68, R. A. M.; Canton Council, No. 23, R. & S. M.; Damascus Commandery, No. 42, of Havana, Ill. and Evening Star Chapter, No. 46, O. E. S.; the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and the Court of Honor.

Mr. Gallagher is primarily a counselor, having a keen mind, strong practical sense and ready insight into the most intricate legal complications. He is courteous and faithful to clients, retains a wholesome belief in the predominating goodness of human nature, and places dependence upon those professional and general principles which secure the greatest justice and the greatest happiness to the society of mankind.

GARDINER, Joseph Beriah (deceased).—Of the merchants who have helped to sustain the business integrity of Canton, Fulton County, for the last quarter of a century mention is due Joseph Beriah Gardiner, who established a hardware business here in 1883 and in 1905 became President of the stock company which assumed control of a responsibility grown too heavy for the failing health of the founder. This hardware business is one of the oldest as well as largest in the city, and it reflects the untiring zeal of the man who, from a small beginning, advanced its fortunes to the prominence of a necessary commercial adjunct.

The sterling integrity and steady purpose of Mr. Gardiner were an inheritance from worthy Puritan sires and model matrons, and on both sides of his family he was descended from men who arrived on American shores not long after the tattered, weather beaten sails of the "Mayflower" loomed on the seaward horizon off the Massachusetts coast. The first arrival from England was the great-great-grandfather, Nicholas Gardiner, who settled on Exeter Flats, R. I., where the great-grandfather was born and also the grandfather, Beriah Gardiner, whose natal day was November 16, 1771. Beriah Gardiner was a seafaring man who rose to command of his own craft, and he died on Exeter Flats, February 12, 1853. He was twice married and reared a large family of children, among whom was Joseph H. Gardiner, the father of Joseph Beriah.

Joseph H. Gardiner was born February 22, 1811, and was reared and educated in Rhode Island, where also he learned the carpenter's trade. Uprooting himself from the surroundings so long connected with the family fortunes in Rhode Island, he journeyed with his useful trade to Yates County, Central New York, where in 1831 he was united in marriage to Margaret Rawalt, whose lamented death occurred July 15, 1884. The year of the marriage of the young people they undertook the tedious journey from Yates County to Canton, traveling with a wagon and team for a period of five weeks and several days, and soon after settling on the farm in Joshua Township which Mr. Gardiner was to own and occupy until the close of his long and useful life. He soon abandoned the tools of the shoemaker and for them substituted the implements of the farmer, and through perseverance and excellent business capacity became one of the best known, most substantial and wealthiest farmers of his township. By no means a man of one idea, he diversified his energies into many useful channels, becoming the owner of a blacksmith shop, a cultivator factory, a saw and grist mill and part owner of a mercantile concern. Ere he had reached this gratifying stage of success he endured all of the hardships and deprivations which fall to the lot of the pioneer, and until the last of his life he delighted to recall incidents of the early days and compare them with the advantages at the disposal of those of the present. The river at that time was not dependable and often was so low that boats found it unnavigable. In this emergency it was necessary for this early farmer to take his grain to the market in Chicago with an ox team in order to keep his family supplied with the necessities of life. He was shrewd and far-sighted, and was known at times to make a clean hundred dollars a trip by purchasing groceries, clothing and general provisions in Chicago and selling them to the settlers who lived in Joshua Township. At other times, when the river was navigable, he shipped his produce to St. Louis and brought back supplies for a year. He was energetic and resourceful, the kind of pioneer needed in all new and promising communities, and he arose to every emergency of his environment, entering heart and soul into local government affairs, and besides filling many local offices of importance represented his township in the Board of Supervisors two terms. At the time of his death he was the oldest settler in Joshua Township and one of the oldest in Fulton County, and no man who had invaded this county in the days of its trials and loneliness won more sincere respect for his largeness of heart, character and attainment. He saw far beyond the rim of his extending and fertile acres, beyond the profits of his shop and mill and store, and in his later years surrounded himself with the elegancies and refinements of existence, spending generously of his substance in the interesting cities of the country, which he delighted to visit and explore and to which he returned for rest and recreation again and again.

Joseph Beriah Gardiner was born on his father's farm in Joshua Township, March 10, 1844, and was educated in the public schools of Fulton County. Many years of his life were spent in the pursuit of farming, in which he was thoroughly drilled in his youth, and his future took on new interest February 13, 1872, when occurred his marriage with Allie Duncan, daughter of an early settler of Fulton County. Of the children of this union the first born, a son, died in infancy, and Mand is now living in Canton. Mr. Gardiner was a Gold Democrat in politics, and fraternally a member of long standing of the Knights of Pythias. Well did he sustain the family reputation for noble and useful citizenship, and in response to his industry and ability friends arose to cheer him on his way and honor and esteem were his portion from his business and general associates. He died February 6, 1906, his wife having preceded him January 6, 1900.

GASKILL, William H., who is among the most substantial and prosperous farmers in Fulton County, Ill., where he has lived in Canton Township since 1875, was born in Ohio County, Ind., on April 1, 1850, a son of Francis L. and Margaret (Avey) Gaskill, natives of New Hampshire and Ohio County, Ind., respectively. Francis L. Gaskill, who was also a farmer by occupation, went from New Hampshire to Indiana and after living in that State for several years moved to Illinois, and settled in Fulton County in 1875. Having bought eighty acres of land on the site of the present town of Brearton, he located there and carried on farming during the remainder of his active life. This property Mrs. Gaskill and her son Benjamin sold to the Brearton Coal Company in 1901. Francis L. and Margaret (Avey) Gaskill were the parents of three children, namely: Eliza, wife of Thomas Mills, residing in Canton Township; Benjamin, who resides in Canton Township, and William H., the subject of this sketch. The father of this family was a thorough farmer and a useful member of the community. In politics he was a Democrat and in religion a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died on October 20, 1882, but his wife still survives at the age of eighty-one years, residing with her son Benjamin.

William H. Gaskill in early youth received his education in public schools convenient to his home in Indiana. He was reared to farm life and accompanied his parents to Fulton County, Ill., in 1875. Since that time he has been engaged in farming there. He moved on his present property in Section 1, Canton Township, three years after his arrival in the county and has added to the improvements thereon. Formerly it belonged to his father-in-law. Together Mr. Gaskill and his wife are the owners of 547 acres of land in Sections 1 and 12, in Canton Township, and Sections 6 and 7, in Orion Township. The greater portion of this land is rented out. Mr. Gaskill devotes some attention to the raising of stock.

The marriage of the subject of this sketch took place October 23, 1879. On that date he was wedded to Mary Motsinger, who was born in Fulton County and is a daughter of Henry and Sarah (Wolf) Motsinger, the father a native of Washington County, Ind., and the mother of Fulton County, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Motsinger were the parents of two children: Mrs. Gaskill and John, who died at the age of nineteen years.

Although not active in politics, Mr. Gaskill is a supporter of the Democratic party. His religious views are in accordance with the doctrine of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. and Mrs. Gaskill are the parents of a daughter, Lena F., who was born August 27, 1887.

Mrs. Gaskill's father, Henry Motsinger, was the son of Michael and Barbara (Gilstrop) Motsinger, the former born in North Carolina and the latter in South Carolina. Early in the 'forties this couple came to Fulton County, Ill., from Washington County, Ind., and settled in Orion Township. Seven years later they moved to Canton Township and lived there until their deaths. Henry Motsinger, the father of Mrs. Gaskill, was born in Washington County, Ind., October 29, 1826, and accompanied his parents to Fulton County, the home of the bride's parents, Thomas and Joanna (Colman) Wolf, in Orion Township, November 14, 1858. Mr. Henry Motsinger married Sarah Wolf.

Mr. Motsinger was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was Steward and Trustee. He died November 19, 1894. The wife died February 16, 1895.

GEARHEART, William A.—In William A. Gearheart, Orion Township has a practical and zealous farmer, and one who, for at least half a century, has promoted the best interests of the community. Born in Fulton County Mr. Gearheart was educated in the public schools and has always been identified with that locality, receiving a thorough agricultural training from his father, John Gearheart, who was a native of Pennsylvania. In 1876 Mr. Gearheart married Lillian Ross, daughter of Isaac W. Ross, the latter a prominent merchant of Canton, and granddaughter of Gilbert Thorne, who moved from Marion County, W. Va., to Illinois, in 1827. Isaac Ross settled in Orion Township, where he died several years ago, his wife surviving him and making her present home in the city of Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Gearheart have two children: Edith and Jessie. Mr. Gearheart is engaged in farming, devoting his attention to raising produce and stock-growing. He represents one of the fine and early families of the county and is himself highly respected by all who know him.

GEESEMAN, George W.—Among the most favorably known and comfortably circumstanced of the retired farmers of Fulton County, Ill., is the worthy gentleman whose name prefaces this biographical narrative. He is one of the fortunate few representing the agricultural element of the county whose diligent exertions and systematic husbandry, through years of persevering toil, have enabled him, while still within the limit of life's meridian, to enjoy the rewards of unremitting industry under conditions of sound health, contentment and freedom from care. To all the gratification attending such conditions the subject of this sketch is richly entitled by the meritorious strivings of his active career.

George W. Geeseman is a native of Pennsylvania, where he was born at Mercersburg, Franklin County, on November 11, 1846. His parents, William and Susan (Hill) Geeseman, were also of Pennsylvania origin. William Geeseman was a shoemaker by trade, which in his day was a very essential and remunerative vocation. He remained in his native State for several years after his son, George W., had moved west to Illinois, and ultimately joined the latter in Fulton County, making his home with his son until 1878, when he passed from this life. He was an honest and industrious man and an object of general respect. George W. Geeseman received his early education in the public schools of Pennsylvania and located in Fulton County, Ill., in the year 1871. About three years later he returned to his native State, and after his marriage there in 1874 returned to Illinois, where for a few years he rented farming land in the vicinity of his former place of work. By persevering effort and thrifty methods he acquired the means necessary to buy a farm in Fairview Township, Fulton County, just north of Fairview village. This farm, containing 160 acres of land, he purchased in 1886, at which period he moved there, put up the requisite buildings and otherwise improved the place. On it he was successfully engaged in farming until 1902, when he purchased a house and one acre of ground in the eastern portion of Farmington, where he has since maintained the family residence. His mother, some time after the decease of her husband, returned to Pennsylvania, where she made her home with Mr. Geeseman's sister Rebecca until her death, on the 14th of March, 1896, at the age of eighty-nine years. She was a woman of most excellent traits of character and lived a very useful life. She was a granddaughter of John Hill, who was a native of England and came to the United States when a boy and lived to the extreme old age of 130 years. This remarkable instance of longevity is well authenticated and there can be no question of the accuracy of the statement.

On the 5th of February, 1874, Mr. Geeseman was united in marriage with Kate Yeakle, who was born in Pennsylvania, where in girlhood she enjoyed the advantages of the public schools in the vicinity of her parents' home. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Geeseman resulted in eight children, as follows: Elsie, Orpha, William C., John B., Earl, Harry, Adelle and Susie, all of whom are living. The eldest daughter, Elsie, resides in Fairview, Ill., and is the wife of James Garretson. She is the mother of two children: Ruth and May. Orpha is at home with her parents. William C. carries on the home farm of 160 acres in Fulton County owned by his father. He married Leona Smith, of Farmington, Ill., who belongs to a family of old settlers in Fulton County. John B. makes his home under the parental roof. Earl lives in Peoria, Ill., where he is employed in the Inter-State Bank. Harry, who is single, is a member of the home circle. Adelle is engaged in teaching, and Susie, the youngest, is a pupil in the Farmington High School. The mother of this interesting family is a woman of fine characteristics, who has endeared herself to many appreciative friends.

In politics Mr. Geeseman is not inclined to take an active part, although he usually votes on the side of the Democratic party. His religious belief is in accordance with the doctrines of the Bible. He is a man of irreproachable and upright life, and is ranked among the most useful citizens of Farmington.

GEESEMAN, William C.—The Geeseman farm in Fairview Township is one of those landmarks whose improvements indicate almost every stage of progress in agriculture during the past half century. It is 160 acres in extent, and in addition to fulfilling its mission as a money maker has succeeded to an atmosphere as homelike and hospitable as any property developed by pioneer grit and determination. Of George W. Geeseman, the establisher of the family in the wilderness of Fulton County, detailed mention is made elsewhere in this work. The son, William C. Geeseman, who three years ago assumed control and management of the farm, was born in Canton Township, Fulton County, May 25, 1878, and has lived on this farm twenty odd years.

William C. had average country opportunities and in the district school was considered an apt and enquiring student. At the age of twenty-four he left home and engaged in farming near Middle Grove for a year, returning then to the home place, which he since has managed. He is a young man of progressive ideas and thorough knowledge of the science of farming. February 18, 1903, he was united in marriage to Leona Smith, who was born in Fairview Township, January 27, 1883. Of this union there is a son, George P.

GILLAM, Earl C., proprietor of the American Grocery Store, North Main Street, Lewistown, Ill., was born in that place December 11, 1879, the son of George W. and Alice E. (Fassett) Gillam, the father being a native of Rushville, Ill., and the mother's family emigrating from New York State. George W. Gillam, who was a telegraph operator throughout his active life, died in Lewistown about 1893 and was buried at Rushville. His widow, who still makes her home in Lewistown, is the mother of Walter B., a commercial salesman of Lewistown (now deceased); Erle C.; Clyde, who died in infancy, and Julianne, who lives at home.

Earl C. Gillam received his education in the schools of his native place and commenced his business career as a grocery clerk. In 1901 he was elected City Clerk, holding that position for two years, or until the spring of 1903. In the latter year he was employed as a clerk in the grocery of W. L. Strode, continuing thus after the business passed into the hands of T. W. Moss. On December 1, 1904, Mr. Gillam purchased the store himself, since which time he has successfully conducted the business alone, constantly adding to its stock and increasing its patronage. By his diligent attention to the requirements of the public, his careful and intelligent buying, his courteous treatment of customers and his prompt and honest dealings, he has established a trade which is not surpassed, either in quantity or quality, by any similar patronage in Lewistown.

Mr. Gillam was united in marriage September 19, 1905, to Jennie Bordner, daughter of Moses Bordner, whose biography will be found elsewhere in this publication. Fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias, being a member of Lodge No. 146, Lewistown, and politically is identified with the Republican party. He is young, businesslike, enterprising and promising, eager not only legitimately to advance his own interests, but anxious to promote public movements which are meritorious and feasible.

GILMER, Joseph R., who has been in the insurance business at Canton, Fulton County, Ill., for the past twelve years, is a native of that city, where he was born December 23, 1857, his parents being J. C. and Sarah (Lenox) Gilmer. In his earlier years he was a cigar maker, and followed various pursuits before establishing himself in the fire insurance business. His business has reached large proportions, and is largely in the agricultural communities surrounding Canton.

Mr. Gilmer is well known among the fraternities, having filled all the chairs in Odd Fellowship, and being also identified with the Elks, Knights of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and Black Eagles. For twenty-five years he has been a faithful member of the Methodist Church, and is esteemed in every way as a substantial and honorable citizen. In politics he is a Republican.

Married at Canton October 22, 1890, to Miss Alice Coykendall, Mr. Gilmer had the unspeakable misfortune to lose his wife by death on the 16th of January, 1906. Left to comfort him in his affliction are two bright children—Eva B. and Doney M.

GILSON, Sanford.—Beginning his independent life under difficulties and having in his youth scant opportunity for acquiring an education, Sanford Gilson has yet prospered in his affairs, and, after years of devotion to the soil of Fulton County, is living in retirement in a pleasant home in Sumnum. Mr. Gilson was born in Pleasant Township, this county, March 2, 1841, a son of John and Melissa (Bronson) Gilson, natives of New York and Ohio, respectively. The elder Gilson came to Fulton County about 1834 and some years later moved from the vicinity of Otto, Isabel Township, to a farm in Pleasant Township, where his death occurred in 1853. There were seven children in his family, four of whom are living. Sanford being the second in order of birth.

As a boy Sanford Gilson worked from sunrise to sunset on his father's farm and little arose to disturb the monotony of his existence until the breaking out of the Civil War. In 1862 he enlisted in Company I, Eighty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years, took part in the battles of Perryville and Stone River and while on the long march through Kentucky was taken ill through exposure and sent to the hospital at Bowling Green, that State. During the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn., he was again placed on the sick list and confined to the hospital at Nashville. Here, after partial recovery, he was honorably discharged from the service, and after returning to his home was unable to do any work all that summer. In 1864 he found employment at farming by the month and soon after took charge of the old homestead, where, September 2, 1864, he was united in marriage to Julia A. Myers, who was born in Indiana in 1847 and came to Fulton County with her parents in 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Gilson are the parents of five children: Melburn, born May 31, 1866, living on the home place; Charles, a farmer of Bernadotte Township; Lilly, widow of James Vaughn, who died in 1900, mother of Jessie and Goldie Vaughn and present wife of George Roberts, of Pleasant Township; William, on the home place, and Ora.

In 1879 Mr. Gilson bought 159 acres of land in Section 23, Pleasant Township, which he cultivated until retiring from active life to his present home in Sumnum, during February, 1905. As his children have attained maturity he has given them comfortable homes, and all have started out in life under circumstances to which his own life was a stranger. In politics Mr. Gilson is a Republican, but he has confined his activity to the casting of his vote. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the Christian Church.

GLASER, Adam.—A record of the agricultural upbuilders of Fulton County would be incomplete without due mention of Adam Glaser, who, though no longer the active head of his fine farm of 240 acres, is one of the youngest and most energetic men of sixty years in Union Township. As aids in his intelligent pursuit of success Mr. Glaser has had the substantial traits of Teutonic forefathers, who followed the science of farming in their native land and were first represented on this side of the Atlantic by Adam Glaser, Sr., the father of the Fulton County pioneer. The elder Glaser was reared to farming in Germany, and there married Catherine Glee, with whom he sailed to America at an early day and settled in the State of Pennsylvania. His death occurred at an advanced age, as did also that of his wife.

Born on a farm in Pennsylvania October 10, 1838, Adam Glaser, Jr., remained in his native State until 1864, during which year he came to Fulton County, Ill., and there worked six months for John Harper, near Farmington. Then returning to his native State he remained until 1870, when he again came to Fulton County and purchased the farm which he has since enlarged to its present proportions. He was accompanied by his wife, whom he married in Pennsylvania August 3, 1860, and who in girlhood was known as Susan Myers, a native of Pennsylvania, and born November 20, 1837. Five children were born of this union, of whom three have grown to useful manhood and womanhood under the guidance of their thrifty parents, namely: John Calvin, Addison Emmert and Mary Etta. At the present time the sons, John and Addison, are operating the farm, and by the infusion of fresh ideas and youthful ambition, are adding such improvements and innovations as have come to the notice of agriculturists since the retirement of their father. Mr. Glaser is a Republican in politics, but he has never found time or had inclination for office holding. So methodical and well ordered have been his agricultural labors that he has been saved the nervous strain and worry which besets those less happily constituted. He has always admired and practiced honesty and fair dealing, and upon these fundamentals of citizenship rests his enviable and worthwhile reputation.

GLASER, Addison E., one of the substantial farmers of Union Township, Fulton County, is the son of the pioneer Adam Glaser, whose biography appears elsewhere in this work. The latter is now living in retirement, comfortable in worldly affairs and honored for his uprightness and strength of character.

The subject of this sketch was born in Pennsylvania, May 15, 1859, was reared on the family homestead in Union Township, where he has resided since early boyhood, and through all his years of maturity has been a successful farmer and stock-raiser. It is such progressive and substantial records as his that explain the fine standing of Fulton County as a wealthy agricultural district—certainly among the most prosperous in the State of Illinois.

Addison E. Glaser was married in Young Hickory Township, February 18, 1891, to Lillie J. Locke, a native of Young Hickory Township, born August 2, 1878. Mr. Glaser is a Republican in politics, but having never sought office is not known as a politician. He is, however, widely recognized as one of the most intelligent and useful members of the community with which he has so long been identified.

GOODWIN, Perry B., M. D.—Good birth and breeding, augmented by the best general and professional training acquirable in this country, contribute to the present success and future promise of Dr. Perry B. Goodwin, a medical and surgical practitioner of Summit, Fulton County, since June, 1905. Dr. Goodwin is a young man of twenty-eight, who brings with him to the Central West an earnest and clearly defined purpose, and who develops around him that atmosphere of intellectual and moral refinement peculiar to the more settled communities of New England. Connecticut, where he was born in Bristol, Hartford County, November 20, 1878, has been the ancestral home of the family since a period soon after the arrival of the "Mayflower," and there occurred the births of Major Leonard P. and Mary (Cadwell) Goodwin, parents of Dr. Perry B.

Major Leonard P. Goodwin has spent the greater part of his life in Bristol, where he established one of the pioneer hotels, and successfully conducted the same according to the changing standards of many years. When the Civil War broke out he entered the service as a private in Company B, of a Connecticut cavalry regiment, was made Captain of the company and finally advanced to Major, the rank which still clings to him as a civilian. He is now living in retirement, after filling many important positions in the community and attaining to prominence in Democratic politics. He is one of the best known hotel men in the State, and one of the most public-spirited citizens of Bristol. His wife, who died in 1879, was the mother of six children, of whom Clara is the wife of E. A. Rogers, of Plymouth, Conn.; Cora, a resident of Los Angeles, Cal., and widow of Dr. L. Labonti; Florence, wife of Howard E. North, stenographer and bookkeeper for the Electric Light Company at Redlands, Cal.; Bertha, wife of Mr. Lyons, of New Britain, Conn., and Bayton H., foreman of the Bottling Works at Bristol, Conn.

Left motherless when less than a year old, Dr. Perry B. Goodwin was taken by a Mrs. Schriver to Terryville, Conn., where he was educated in the public schools and where, at the age of seventeen, after graduating from the high school, he worked for a year in a lock factory. He then took a preparatory course in the Bristol High School for the Yale Medical College, and at the same time was assistant to Dr. H. D. Brennan, a leading surgeon of Bristol. After passing the required examination he entered upon the four years' course at the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Baltimore, Md., graduating therefrom in the class of 1904. During this time he had taken a course in the Maternity Hospital in Baltimore and had spent the vacation of his third and fourth years in the Northampton (Mass.) Insane Hospital. In March, 1905, he went to Portland, Me., from Cromwell, Conn., and there took the State examination which permits him to practice in the following States without further investigation of his merits: Maine, Maryland, New Jersey, Vermont, Georgia, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada and Kansas. During his brief sojourn in Sumnum Dr. Goodwin has acquired a practice as gratifying personally as it is financially. He has an excellent medical library and a valuable collection of medical and surgical appliances.

October 3, 1905, Dr. Goodwin was united in marriage to Mabelle London, a native of Bristol, Conn., and a young woman of culture and high social standing. The Doctor is fraternally identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, in politics is a Republican and in religion a Congregationalist. He is genial and approachable in manner, skillful in diagnosis and treatment and has completely won the confidence of the most conservative members of the community.

GORHAM, Richard Sullivan.—An intelligent and purposeful participation in the happenings which make up the history of Fulton County between the time of his arrival in 1836 and the present, Richard Sullivan Gorham claims place also among the county's agricultural promoters and the well known and financially strong citizens of Avon. Born in Allegany County, N. Y., November 2, 1833, Mr. Gorham, on the paternal side, is descended from an old New England family, early identified with the Vermont, where Freeman Gorham, the father of Richard, was born December 12, 1800. Freeman Gorham stepped out of his agricultural environment long enough to qualify as a medical practitioner, and thereafter practiced medicine for the balance of his active life. While still his prosperity was a matter of expectation rather than reality, he was united in marriage to Parua Sullivan, a native of New York, and who was born August 21, 1812. In 1836, when their son Richard was three years old, Dr. Gorham came with his family by way of the smaller streams to the Ohio, then down that stream to Cincinnati, where they took passage on board a boat to St. Louis, and from there ascending the Illinois to Peoria, settled on land near Ellis-ville, Fulton County. After remaining here three years they removed to Ellisville, the Doctor meanwhile continuing his practice. That he was a man of courage and determination admits of no doubt, for he knew well the nature of the country to which he journeyed, and the hard and exacting duties of the men who undertake the science of healing in the pioneer days of the State. He amassed a competence in return for his labor, and left to those who survive him fragrant memories of usefulness and love of humanity.

As soon as he was old enough to make his labor of value Richard Sullivan Gorham began work on the paternal farm and during the leisure of the winter season attended the Ellisville District School. In 1852 Richard S., in company with a large party of emigrants, went overland to California, leaving Ellisville on May 2d of that year in wagons—known in that day as "prairie schooners"—each wagon drawn by six or eight yoke of oxen or cows. When cows were used for this purpose they also furnished the milk and butter for persons belonging to the train. The party reached Marysville, Cal., in the latter part of September, and during his stay in California Mr. Gorham devoted most of his time to working on a ranch, or in the mines or quartz mills in Yuba, Sutter, Butte, Plumas and other nearby counties. He returned to Illinois in September, 1866, after an absence of fourteen years. With the exception of this episode Mr. Gorham's ambition has never strayed to other means of livelihood, and he has given to farming that concentration and thoughtfulness which must necessarily bring him financial and general success. At the present time he owns a farm of 160 acres in Union Township, and a home where he and his wife reside in the town of Avon. On June 4, 1868, he was married, in Coldwater, Mich., to Harriet M. Sweet, who was born in Pennsylvania April 26, 1842. Of this union there are six children, namely: Viola, who is keeping house for her brothers, Walter and Ernest, on the home farm; George, who married Cora Gill, and died August 24, 1905; Walter, on the home farm; Charles, who married Viola Park, and resides in Kewanee, Ill., and has one son, Oliver; Mark, who died at the age of ten years; and Ernest, with his brother Walter, on the home farm. Mrs. Gorham was the daughter of George S. and Nancy Jane (Hopkins) Sweet, the former a native of Saratoga County, N. Y., and the latter of Tompkins County, N. Y. Mr. Sweet was first a carpenter and joiner in the East, but later pursued the occupation of farmer. In 1859 he sold his farm of 150 acres in Erie County, Pa., and moved to Coldwater, Branch County, Mich., in 1860, and there was engaged in the grocery business for six years and in dry goods two years. His wife died there, and he afterward lived with the subject of this sketch until the time of his death, in 1898. He was a Republican in politics, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and associated with the Masonic and Odd Fellows fraternities. Mrs. Gorham was the oldest of six children, of whom four are now living.

GOUDY, William C.—(See page 204).

GRADY, Orlistus R., a well known and prosperous poultry dealer of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born near Pleasant Plains, Sangamon County, Ill., on April 14, 1867, and received his early education in the public schools of the town which is now his home. He is a son of Robert M. and Olive (Jackson) Grady, natives of Menard County, Ill., and Dearborn County, Ind. The father followed farming in Sangamon County until 1880, when he moved with his family to Cuba, Fulton County. In 1881 he engaged in the poultry business, dressing the first poultry handled in that village. He also entered into the dairy business there, in which he continued three years. He is now living with his wife in retirement in Cuba.

In 1890 O. R. Grady engaged in the poultry trade, which he carried on alone until 1895, when he entered into partnership with Samuel S. Huffman. The firm lasted until 1902 and built the present storehouse in 1898, the main building being forty by forty feet and the "L" twelve by twenty feet in dimensions. Since 1902 the firm has been known as O. R. Grady & Company. Mr. Grady's brother, Henry H. Grady, being associated with him. The concern uses three wagons on the road collecting poultry the year round and handles about 1,500 pounds per day.

On December 22, 1892, Mr. Grady was married to Gertrude A. Murphy, a native of Cuba, Ill., who died September 1, 1905. In politics Mr. Grady is a Republican, serving as Township Collector in 1893 and 1894 and as Constable in 1896 and 1897. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. of A. Mr. Grady is one of the persevering, energetic and diligent class that always accomplish good results, being a man of keen business judgment and trustworthy character.

GRAHAM, John Gleason (deceased).—When the proposed hospital to the memory of John G. Graham shall have been erected in Canton by his daughters, the city of his adoption will have a characteristic reminder of a man who contributed largely to the purpose and achievement of its history and who, responding to the best opportunities of his environment, became widely known as a civil engineer, merchant, agriculturist and legislator. The death of this honored pioneer January 24, 1869, at the age of fifty-one years, was an event still recalled by many of the older inhabitants and still mourned by those whose lives he brightened as father, friend, counselor or benefactor. Many helpful lessons evolve from this life of human usefulness, and not the least sifting through the haze of years is that good name and positive, creative occupation are among the most valuable of man's contributions to posterity.

The earliest setting of the life of Mr. Graham was a farm near the village of Northumberland, Saratoga County, N. Y., where he was born November 17, 1817, and where his father, John Graham, settled after removing from the picturesque hills of Vermont. The elder Graham married Polly Gleason in Saratoga County and upon his death his son and namesake, then a lad of tender years, went to live with his paternal grandparents. The boy's slumbering power awoke to high ideas of life and work and to a keen appreciation of education, which he acquired in the public schools and a New York Academy. It was his privilege to convey to others the knowledge thus gained, and as an educator he developed that mastery and personal influence which proved among the most useful assets of his later life. While teaching and studying he devoted his leisure to civil engineering. It was as a civil engineer that he came to Illinois during the early 'forties to aid in the construction of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, and it was the money received for his services that enabled him to lay in a stock of general supplies for the general store that he established in Canton. He rapidly grew in favor as a merchant and his position enabled him to keep in touch with the opportunities for investment by which he was surrounded, more especially in town and country property. A large part of his fortune was made from investments in land, and he engaged also in agriculture to some extent.

Previous to the war Mr. Graham maintained a strong Democratic attitude, but the appeal for the restriction of slavery fell upon heeding ears and he thereafter voted the Republican ticket. He was the kind of man to observe and represent the needs of the community of which he was an integral part, and he was elected a Representative in the State Legislature for three terms (1858-1864) and also served as a Delegate from Fulton County in the State Constitutional Convention of 1862. His retirement from business life preceded the taking up of arms in the Civil War, although he served as a member during the greater part of that period and was an interested and intelligent observer of the events leading up to and following this great National struggle. The companions of his later years were the family he had cherished, the friends he had won and kept, and the books that he loved, and he found enjoyment in the retrospection which contained naught of the selfishness and sordidness which accompanies the success of many men of wealth. While economical and thrifty and a believer in wise and cautious expenditure, he yet was generous when occasion demanded and a liberal contributor to worthy local causes. He became one of the largest stockholders and chief advisers of the Canton National Bank, a fact which lent strength and efficiency to the affairs of that institution.

While unusually prominent in the undertakings of his adopted town, it was in his home that Mr. Graham evidenced those traits which are the hallmarks of noble and good citizenship. His ideals tended to intellectual freedom and progress, to individuality, personal initiative, affection, consideration and thoroughness. To his wife, formerly Lydia Wills, he was a devoted husband. Mrs. Graham came on the paternal side from old Scotch stock, and on the maternal side from Scotch-Irish forefathers. In her character she was lovable and sympathetic and commanded the respect and esteem of all with whom she was ever associated. As a mother she was tender, patient and forgiving, and the repository of the ambitions, plans and griefs of her children. Of these, Charles failed to survive the vicissitudes of childhood; Ella also died in childhood; Caroline is a resident of Washington, D. C.; John W. died in 1891, and Alice L. lives with her sister in Washington. Mrs. Graham died March 31, 1886. It was the mission of herself and husband to create a home atmosphere of culture and refinement. Wealth and its beneficent use, friendship and its advantages, health, happiness, usefulness—all were considered and turned to practical account by a family whose surviving members are reminders of an important period of Central Western activity.

GRAY (Judge) John A., a very prominent and successful lawyer of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Morgan County, Ohio, April 18, 1842, and received his early training in the common schools of Cuba, Fulton County. He is a son of Joseph K. and Margaret (Grimes) Gray, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. The paternal grandparents, Ogden and Nancy (Lappin) Gray, were natives, respectively, of New York and Ohio. On the maternal side the grandparents, William and Mary (Lawson) Grimes, were of Irish birth. The father, Joseph K. Gray, who was a blacksmith by trade, moved with his family from Morgan County, Ohio, to Canton, Ill., in the summer of 1849, and after living there somewhat over a year, located in Cuba, Ill., where the family was reared. There the son, John A., attended the public schools until able to earn something by labor, after which he was occupied in farming and other work in summer and attended the local school in winter. In the winters of 1859 and 1860 he was engaged in teaching school.

In April, 1861, Mr. Gray enlisted as a private in Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and went to the front. He was wounded near Fort Holt, Ky., in September, 1861, and was afterward transferred to the Eleventh Regiment Illinois Cavalry, then in camp in Peoria. With this regiment he served until December 20, 1864, when he was mustered out at the end of the period for which the regiment had first enlisted. The first nineteen months of his service were spent as a private, Sergeant and Regimental Sergeant Major, and in October, 1862, he was promoted to be Second Lieutenant of Company M of his regiment. He was subsequently promoted to be First Lieutenant, and as such served on the staffs of Generals Hatch, Mizener and Osborn of the Cavalry Division of the Army of the Tennessee. On July 5, 1864, Lieutenant Gray was made Captain, vice Captain Moffitt, who was killed in battle, and from that time until his discharge from the service, commanded his company.

Returning home early in 1865 Mr. Gray conducted a store in Cuba, Ill., for one year, and then moved to Dent County, Mo., where he was engaged in farming for about the same length of time. After a trip to Western Kansas and the Indian Territory, he returned to Illinois in the fall of 1867 and entered the law office of Ingersoll & Puterbaugh, of Peoria. After being admitted to the bar he began the practice of law in Cuba, Ill., in 1869. In March, 1871, he removed to Lewistown, Ill., and became a member of the firm of Shope & Gray, which relation continued until Mr. Shope was elected to the circuit bench in 1879. After continuing business alone for a few years Mr. Gray became associated with H. M. Waggoner, under the firm name of Gray & Waggoner, this partnership lasting until 1893. In January, 1896, he removed to Chicago, where he spent one year, when he returned to Fulton County and has since made Canton his home.

On July 26, 1863, Mr. Gray was united in marriage with Blanche Berry, a native of Fulton County, Ill., where she acquired her mental culture in the local schools. Two children were born of this union, namely: Lucian, of Lewistown, Ill., and Blanche (Mrs. J. L. S. Hunt), of the City of Mexico. Three grandchildren are numbered with the family. In politics Mr. Gray is a Republican; was twice a member of the Board of Supervisors of Fulton County, of which body he served one year as Chairman; was a member of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872-74), and in June, 1897, was elected Judge of the Ninth Judicial Circuit of Illinois, and was re-elected without opposition for a second term in June, 1903.

In fraternal circles Judge Gray is identified with the G. A. R., and is also affiliated with the B. P. O. E. and the A. F. & A. M., in the latter body a Royal Arch Mason. The lives of few of the citizens of Fulton County have been more clean-cut, well-rounded and uniformly developed than that of Judge Gray. It has been honorable and commendable in every stage. His military career was a signal credit to his country and the State, and the significant fact that he was last elected to his present eminent position without opposition attests the estimate placed upon him by his fellow citizens as a lawyer and as a man.

GRAY, Lucien.—Born in Dent County, Mo., January 5, 1867, Mr. Gray is a son of Judge John A. Gray, who is mentioned at length in another part of this work. He received his

MR. AND MRS. T. P. LITTLE

Fulton County, was born at Urbana, Ill., April 19, 1836, the son of William and Sarah (Owen) Green, both natives of Ohio. The father, William Green, was a musician and instructor in music, and also the patentee of certain mechanical inventions, including the first turning lathe ever put to practical use. Mr. Green comes of military stock, his ancestors for several generations having been identified with the military struggles of their respective periods—his father, William Green, being a soldier of the Mexican War; his grandfather Green, of the War of 1812, and his maternal grandfather Owen and paternal great-grandfather Green both being soldiers of the Revolution. The last-named member of the family was a near relative of General Nathaniel Green of that historical period.

The subject of this sketch obtained his early education in the district schools of Illinois, and after leaving school was employed in farm work until the beginning of the Civil War, when on August 17, 1862, while a resident of McDonough County, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served three years, being mustered out August 16, 1865. The commander of this company was Captain Abraham Newland, still living, a well known citizen of McDonough County. The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment took part under General Grant in the Vicksburg campaign, for forty-six days being engaged in the siege of that rebel stronghold. During this historic struggle Mr. Green received a wound, in consequence of which he was disabled for a time, and from which he has never fully recovered. After retiring from the army he remained for some time in the vicinity of Tennessee, McDonough County, but in 1887 removed to Farmington, Fulton County, where he continues to give his attention to garden work, his disability preventing him from embarking in more active employment.

Mr. Green was united in marriage in 1887 to Mary Hurley, who was a native of Indiana, but received her education in the district schools of Illinois, where she has lived since 1843. In that year her parents located in the city of Springfield, where they resided in the vicinity of the Lincoln home. During this period she was acquainted with the family of Stephen T. Logan and the Governor's family. In girlhood she was accustomed to go to the Lincoln home every day for the family supply of milk, and enjoyed the opportunity of being personally acquainted with the traits of character of one afterward connected with the most famous struggles in the history of nations, and whose name has become illustrious throughout the civilized world. Subsequent events strengthened the impressions made on her mind by these dairy visits, of which she has ever since retained a vivid recollection, and she delights in recounting many interesting incidents connected with the life of the great President, as he then appeared to her in the home circle. Mrs. Green left Springfield in 1855, then moving to Peoria, where she remained until 1860. She then made her home for a time seventeen miles south of Farmington, but since leaving Peoria has lived most of the time in Farmington. She is the mother of six children, namely: Maria, Theodore, William, Albert Edwin, George and Evelina M. As may be naturally inferred from his military record Mr. Green's political views are in harmony with the principles of the Republican party. In religious belief he is a Methodist, and is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

GREER, Thomas L., a successful merchant of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Industry, Ill., March 4, 1872, a son of Alfred W. and Anna (Kemper) Greer, natives of Kentucky and Illinois, respectively. In boyhood the subject of this sketch received his rudimentary instruction in the public schools, and while still in his teens began working as a clerk in Industry. At the age of eighteen years he moved to Macomb, Ill., where he pursued a course of study in the Normal School. After this he again applied himself to clerking in a dry goods store. When he was twenty-two years old he commenced selling dry goods on the road, and continued in this occupation up to the time when he located in Canton in 1902. Since then, in partnership with J. L. Scripps, of Rushville, Ill., he has built up a good patronage in the dry goods line. He is a good business man and pays strict attention to his trade.

On September 30, 1895, Mr. Greer was joined in wedlock with Umatilla Pennington, who was born in Industry, Ill., and received her mental training in the schools of Macomb. Two children have blessed this union: Helen Loraine and Robert Allen. Fraternally Mr. Greer is affiliated with the Masons, Knights of Pythias and Elks.

GREWELL, John Madison, now a resident of Ipava, Ill., is a pioneer agriculturist of Pleasant Township, Fulton County, and is well known historically for his connection with the introduction of steam threshing into Fulton County. He is a native of Harrison County, Ohio, born November 12, 1834, a son of John and Jane (Hill) Grewell. His father was a native of Maryland and his mother of Monongahela County, Pa. Thomas Grewell, the grandfather of John M., came to Fulton County with his son John, where he died at the venerable age of ninety-eight years. An instance of his remarkable vitality is shown by a tramp of three miles which he took some two days before his death. In 1846 the father, with his family, located in Fulton County, residing the first year in Bernadotte Township. In 1847 he rented a farm in Pleasant Township for a term of five years, later buying eighty acres of wild prairie land in Vermont Township. Upon the latter he erected a log house and eventually transformed the property into a beautiful homestead.

Mr. and Mrs. John Grewell were the parents of four children: Nancy, who married Jack Brown and left a large family; Christopher, who served the Union in the Civil War as a member of an Iowa regiment and is now a resident of Texas; John Madison, and Isaac, whose last known residence was in Colorado. The mother of this family died January 14, 1868. The father was for many years a Justice of the Peace in Ipava, and was an active and honored member of the Presbyterian Church. He was a Democrat, but never actively participated in mere partisan politics.

The early life of John M. Grewell was spent upon his father's farm in Pleasant Township and in attendance at the district school. When about sixteen years of age, being a sturdy, self-reliant youth, he formed a partnership with William Mathews in the operation of a traveling threshing outfit. They finally bought a threshing machine, the power for which was furnished by ten horses. For forty-seven years he conducted this line of industry, and when steam was introduced operated the first improved machine in Fulton County. With the growth of the agricultural interests of the county his own business developed, so that, with the profits from the old farm in Pleasant Township, which he inherited at the death of his father, he accumulated a competence, and, in 1881, moved from the family homestead into the village of Ipava that he might give his children a good education.

On February 28, 1858, John M. Grewell was married to Elizabeth Cooney, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Clemons) Cooney, who came to Fulton County about 1854. His wife was born in Huntingdon County, Pa., January 19, 1842, and the two began their married life upon the farm in Pleasant Township, where six of their seven children were born, namely: Annie V., who was born May 26, 1861, married James Farr, a farmer of McDonough County, Ill.; George C., born October 10, 1862, died December 11th, following; Sherman H., born June 18, 1864, is a traveling salesman, with his residence in Galesburg, Ill.; Mary B., born February 11, 1867, is Mrs. Demp. Hibbs, her husband being connected with the Santa Fe Railroad at Marxville, Kans.; Bertha E., born January 20, 1872, is married to Clark Miner, a farmer of Eldorado Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Cordelia, born August 10, 1874, is living at home; and Elma, born September 21, 1884, died October 30, 1885.

Both Mr. and Mrs. John M. Grewell have been residents of Fulton County since they were twelve years of age, and have formed an important personal element in its growth and prosperity. They have lived to see the development of a new country, and have not only been promoters of its progress, but have reared a large family of children to useful, prosperous and happy men and women.

GRIFFITH, John Taylor, editor of "The Canton Daily Herald," was born on a bleak November day on the banks of Eagle Creek, in Scott County, Ky., the son of Dr. and Mrs. F. J. C. Griffith, his ancestors on both sides being early settlers of that part of Kentucky. Mr. Griffith lived there until ten years of age, when his parents moved to Illinois, locating in Crawford County. When about fifteen years old the subject of this sketch went to Robinson and there entered the public schools and completed the high school course. It was during this time that young Griffith first acquired a knowledge of the printing business. After working there about two years as a compositor in a printing office conducted by Richard and Percy Talbot—at the time two of the best-known editors in the southern part of the State—young Griffith went West and spent some time as a printer in Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico and other Western States and Territories, and later bloomed out as a reporter on "The Wichita Daily Beacon." Becoming tired of the West and possessing a desire for a more extensive education than the high school afforded him, he returned home and in a short time thereafter entered the University of Kentucky, where he spent the greater part of two years taking a special course. Then he went up into the mountains of Eastern Kentucky and became associated in the newspaper business with Judge H. Clay Lilly, for more than a quarter of a century one of the most distinguished Circuit Judges in Kentucky, and for forty years one of the Republican leaders in the mountain districts of his State. After a partnership lasting more than three years Mr. Griffith retired from the firm for the purpose of completing the course already begun at the university. Shortly thereafter Judge Lilly answered the final summons and passed away from the cares of earth, and with his going Mr. Griffith has always felt that one of the best men he ever knew ceased to be here, but lives eternally elsewhere. Later Mr. Griffith went to Frankfort and did work as correspondent of the "Louisville Evening Post" and the "Lexington Morning Herald." After being there engaged little more than a year, Mr. Griffith went to Georgetown in his native county of Scott, and brought into existence the first Republican paper ever published in that county. This enterprise was in the interest of Governor W. O. Bradley, Kentucky's first Republican Governor, then being groomed for a favorite son endorsement for the Presidency. When through with this enterprise Mr. Griffith came to Illinois and became the editor of "The Robinson Republican," with which he remained for about two years. His next newspaper connection was with "The Stalwart" at Watseka, Ill., with which he did heroic work until 1903, when he became connected with "The Daily Herald" at Morris, Ill., his merit as a newspaper writer having attracted the attention of the publisher of that paper. After remaining in that field about three years he came to Canton in April, 1906, having become possessed of an ambition to individually direct the destiny of a newspaper enterprise. As a result of that ambition "The Canton Daily Herald" was brought into existence and of which he is the editor-in-chief. It can be seen that Mr. Griffith is a newspaper worker of extensive experience. He is familiar with all parts of the business, which includes a mastery of the mechanical end. He is a writer of fine ability, being quick of apprehension and rapid in execution.

From the start "The Canton Daily Herald" has met with favor. Its growth has been satisfactory to the publishers, and under Mr. Griffith's able editorial management it is gaining a position in the field it occupies that is attracting attention. More and more, as the days come and go, evidence is being presented that its success is assured. Mr. Griffith is married and resides at 346 North Avenue B, in the city of Canton. His wife was Miss Braddie L. Covington, a native of Scott County, Ky., and they have one child, Mary Margaret, a little girl now nearing her fourth year. She is her mother's little treasure and her father's delight.

Since the foregoing sketch was put in type Mr. Griffith has disposed of his interest in the "Canton Herald" and has accepted a position in connection with the "Canton Daily Register."

GRIGGS, James.—There are few older settlers in Fulton County than James Griggs, who arrived here in 1829, and in his more than four-score years, has built up a reputation for integrity and general worth as rare as it has been upbuilding to Orion Township. He is the owner of a finely improved farm of 160 acres on Section 1, in Orion Township, and is credited with being one of those men who maintain, into the eventide of their lives, those genial and kindly thoughts which make them a blessing and inspiration to those around them. He has kept pace always with the advance in agricultural science, and his improvements indicate a painstaking and cautious judgment.

In Cayuga County, N. Y., where he was born, June 10, 1819, Mr. Griggs' parents, George and Sarah (Harker) Griggs, owned a small farm, the resources of which were inadequate for the support of their family. George Griggs had served in the War of 1812 and was destined for further military service in the Black Hawk War, which occurred the year after his arrival in Fulton County, in 1829. Both he and his wife were of the kind which have caused the wilderness to disappear and who have developed by the faithfulness and self-sacrifice of their lives the ideal conditions which make the Central West a safe and prosperous dwelling place. James Griggs was ten years old when the family settled in Fulton County, and his educational chances were meager and uncertain, but his opportunity for hard work unlimited. When old enough to handle a gun he found abundance of wild game to test his aim, and strategy and caution were necessary to ward off the approach of stealthy Indians. It was not a comfortable or hopeful place to live in, and a crudeness prevailed in house and field hardly conceivable to the more modern mind of today. The family circle continued to widen until there were eight children, and of these Harvey married Elizabeth Long; Pruella became the wife of William Thurston; Mary remained unmarried; Franklin D. married Deborah Largent; Asenath was the wife of George Champ; Susan became the wife of William Brown, and Jeremiah married Eunice Yaw.

James Griggs married Mary Ann Brown for his first wife, her death occurring about a year later. In 1856 he married Dulcena E. McMains, of which union there were five children, and of these George W. married Belle Gruniger; Edwin E. married Maud Frank; Mary Ann became the wife of Frank Jacobs, and Susan remained unmarried, for years being engaged in the profession of teaching. It was the privilege and pleasure of Mr. and Mrs. Griggs to give their children far better educational advantages than they themselves enjoyed, and in no way has Mr. Griggs evidenced his breadth of mind and progressiveness more distinctly than in his general support of the schools of his township. His ability and good judgment received constant recognition in this direction for twenty-five years, during all of which time he was a member of the School Board. His first presidential vote was cast for Martin Van Buren, and ever since he has supported the doctrines of the Democracy. In religion he is a Baptist. He survives, like an oak in the forest, the majority of those who started in life when he did, and his memory is a panorama of those small and large events which make up the history of the white man's labors in Fulton County.

GROOM, John B., one of the most energetic, persevering and thorough going among the younger element of agriculturists in Fulton County, Ill., is the subject of the sketch, a well known and prosperous resident of Fairview Township. Mr. Groom was born in Warren County, Ill., August 29, 1882, a son of William and Jeannette (Milligan) Groom, natives of Illinois and Indiana, respectively. The birthplace of the former was Fairview Township, Fulton County, and the date of birth August 14, 1854. The latter was born in Dearborn County, Ind., March 9, 1855. William Groom was a farmer by occupation, industrious, diligent and thrifty, and his labors were attended by well merited success. He spent his earlier life in Henderson and Warren Counties, Ill., and after carrying on farming there for a number of years moved to Fulton County, where he located in Fairview Township in 1885. At that period he inherited a farm of 245 acres, which he cultivated with satisfactory results during the remainder of his active career. He departed this life February 1, 1902. William Groom and his estimable spouse became the parents of nine children, of whom John B. is the fourth. The others are: C. E. Groom, J. A. Groom, S. C. Groom, J. G. Groom, C. G. Groom, M. L. Groom, F. W. V. Groom and T. R. Groom.

In boyhood the subject of this sketch received a good mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood, and passed his youth under the paternal roof, assisting his father in the operation of the farm. After reaching years of maturity he engaged in agricultural pursuits on his own responsibility and has since continued in this occupation. He has lived in Fairview Township for more than twenty years and as boy and man has been regarded by his neighbors as worthy of respect and confidence. He is conducting the same farm which his father inherited during his infancy, and his brother, James G., is associated with him in the work. They carry on general farming and devote considerable attention to the breeding of Poland-China hogs. In connection with the farm they also operate all kinds of threshing machinery.

On November 2, 1904, Mr. Groom was united in marriage in Canton, Fulton County, with Lottie Roberts, a native of Kansas, where she was born March 7, 1874, and in girlhood obtained her mental training in the public schools. In political matters Mr. Groom is a supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Church. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs and current events, and seems assured of a prosperous and useful future.

GUSTINE, William C.—With the exception of eight years, three of which were spent in the Union service during the Civil War, the activities of William C. Gustine and those of the Bernadotte Flouring Mill went hand in hand from the fall of 1856 until the retirement of the master miller in 1902. A business association of forty years argues stability for both man and mill, but particularly does it reflect the faithfulness and ability of the human side of the partnership. In the same degree that Mr. Gustine was an important commercial factor in Bernadotte, was he also an intelligent observer of the changes which took place in Fulton County after his arrival there in 1838. At that time he was two years old, having been born in Fayette County, Ohio, August 5, 1836, the oldest of the ten children of Amos and Elizabeth (Childers) Gustine, pioneers of both Ohio and Illinois.

Amos Gustine had a thorough knowledge of one of the most necessary callings in the early days—carpentering—which he followed to the material benefit of himself and the community. Settling in the fall of 1838 in the neighborhood of Canton, he removed the following year to a place called Tuscumbia, on Spoon River, where he established a large building business and constructed barns and residences without number throughout that entire section. Later he changed his headquarters to Bernadotte, where he still pursued his occupation as a builder up to the date of his death, which occurred in 1885. Mr. Gustine had the far-seeing judgment of the pioneer, took a keen interest in public affairs and was especially active in politics. At first a Whig, he adopted the principles of the Republican party at the time of its organization in 1856, and while not an office seeker, aided the local cause in no small degree. His wife survived him until 1903. Of the children younger than William C., James A. served three years in Company G, Fiftieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; Walter A. three years in Company J, One Hundred and Third Illinois Infantry, and now lives at Table Grove, Fulton County; Mary Jane is the wife of Samuel Norman, a soldier during the Civil War in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois Infantry; Hannah is the deceased wife of Samuel Norman and left two children; Emily is deceased; Sarah A. is the wife of James Curry, of Fremont, Neb.; John is a resident of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Marion D. is deceased, and Susan lives with her brother, William C.

The school experience of William C. Gustine was limited to a few months each year at the subscription schools, and as soon as his strength and size permitted he became a wage-earner in a minor capacity in a sawmill. His entire business life, therefore, was devoted to milling. He was twenty years old when he went into the mill at Bernadotte, and at that time both mill and miller were in an embryo stage, destined for many rounds of progress ere their largest usefulness had been attained. The mill was built about eighty years ago, and still retained the old burr system, well adapted to leisurely times and non-critical palates. It is a patriarch among mills, however, being one of the first erected in the county, and its sing-song hum of industry has rarely been suspended since its advent first swelled the local pride and furnished evidence of manufacturing progress.

With the breaking out of the Civil War the responsibility in the mill became of secondary importance to Mr. Gustine, and October 1, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Fiftieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry for three years. Mustered into service at Camp Wood, Quincy, Ill., the Fiftieth was sent to Hannibal, Mo., then to St. Joseph, the same State, and later taking part in the battles of Forts Henry and Donelson. At the expiration of fifteen months of hard service Mr. Gustine was a total wreck from rheumatism contracted during the wet season, and after spending six weeks in a hospital in St. Louis was sent to his home on a furlough. Upon partially regaining his health, March 9, 1865, he rejoined his regiment at Louisville, Ky., thereafter accompanying it to Washington and to Springfield, Ill., where his honorable discharge took place July 15, 1865. His service was marked by zeal, courage and faithfulness, and his recollection of the stirring times of the rebellion were among the most treasured of his life.

In August, 1865, Mr. Gustine returned to his old position in the Bernadotte Mill, and from then until his retirement he was either assistant or head miller, with the exception of three years spent in a mill in Galesburg and two years at another place. In the meantime modern machinery supplanted the older processes of milling, season succeeded season, and of all the landmarks in the community none were more familiar than the mill and the flour-covered miller. Mr. Gustine's retirement from business robbed a stable industry of one of its most experienced and cautious advisers, and the value and extent of his service cannot be overestimated, considered either from the standpoint of the enterprise with which he was connected or as regards general milling interests in this part of the State.

May 23, 1860, Mr. Gustine married Mary Ann Vice, who died in 1899 after filling a large place in the hearts of her family and friends. Mrs. Gustine was a woman of intelligence and rare good sense, as well as a devout and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Of her four living children, James E. is the oldest son; Alta May is the wife of William B. Compo, of Jetmore, Kans.; Lewis A. is a resident of Kewanee, Ill., and Maud L. is the wife of Franklin Robertson, of Bernadotte, Ill. Although never active politically Mr. Gustine supported the Republican party with his vote and aided in the election of his office-seeking friends. Socially a Mason, he was esteemed for his quiet dignity of manner, his kindness of heart and for his many ways of contributing to the well-being of the community.

HAGAMAN, Charles E., who is one of the most stirring, wide-awake and promising young farmers in Fairview Township, Fulton County, Ill., is a native of that township, where he was born November 13, 1882, a son of John B. and Anna (Swartz) Hagaman, who were Pennsylvanians by birth, and members of very prominent families in that State. After their removal to Illinois they were equally prominent in both social and religious circles. John B. Hagaman was a farmer by occupation, in which pursuit his industry, frugality and painstaking diligence gained for him deserved success. He located in Fulton County at an early period, and purchased 107 acres of land in Fairview Township, which his son, Charles E., now cultivates. He was a man of high character, conspicuously identified with all local enterprises for the promotion of the public welfare, and influential in local political affairs.

Charles E. Hagaman made diligent use, in early youth, of the opportunities for mental training afforded by the district schools in the neighborhood of his home, and assisted his father in the work of the farm. Before attaining his majority he was engaged in farming on his own responsibility and since he reached the age of nineteen years has cultivated 293 acres of land, besides putting some improvements on the homestead property. His attention is devoted chiefly to general farming. He has thus far met with invariable success and bids fair to become one of the most prominent farmers of Fulton County.

On February 18, 1893, Mr. Hagaman was united in marriage, in Fairview Township, with Ada Schleich, a native of that township, where she was born August 25, 1881, and enjoyed the benefits of the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Hagaman have become the parents of one child, named Leonard.

In politics the subject of this sketch is in hearty accord with the principles of the Republican party, and religiously he adopts the creed of the Lutheran Church. He has a wide acquaintance throughout Fulton County and is very popular with all who know him.

HAINES, Theodore H.—The business of stock-raising, under the favorable conditions offered in Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, has an enthusiastic and altogether successful follower in the person of Theodore H. Haines, owner of a fine farm of 112 acres on Section 32. Not only does Mr. Haines maintain the reputation for business-like effort won by his pioneer father, James Haines, but he has augmented this by a demonstration of what may be accomplished when one is young, strong, clear of brain and studiously inclined in the beginning of the twentieth century.

Mr. Haines has spent his entire life in Fulton County, where he was born May 15, 1871, his parents, James and Rachel (Smith) Haines, having settled in Isabel Township, that county, upon their arrival from Ohio. The elder Haines followed farming and stock-raising until his retirement from active life in Duncantown, Isabel Township, where he still makes his home and where his wife died in 1905. It has been his good fortune to see his six children well settled in life and himself financially independent. In former years he was active in the councils of the Democratic party and represented the broad-minded and intelligent country gentleman of his time. Rose, his oldest daughter, is the wife of George Dilworth, of Isabel Township; Prudey is the wife of Levi Allen, of Waterford Township; Lydia is the wife of Sherman Wilson, of Waterford Township; Lucy is the wife of Logan Cruzan, of Bernadotte Township, and Mary is the wife of Dr. E. G. Davis, of Lewistown.

Being the only son in his father's family, Theodore H. was early called upon to share the responsibility of the farm management, and at the age of fifteen could accomplish as much as men much older and stronger. At the age of eighteen he began working by the month, but immediately after his marriage, in March, 1897, settled on a farm which he bought about the same time. Mrs. Haines, whose maiden name was Kate Lally, was a native of Bernadotte Township and daughter of Thomas Lally, of whom mention is made on another page of this work. Under his judicious management the farm which Mr. Haines bought in 1897 has developed into one of the finest stock farms in Berdanotte Township. He has well defined ideas regarding stock-raising, and never deviates from his policy of raising only high-grade stock. He has demonstrated that it is cheaper in the end to feed blooded stock than the inferior kind, and he believes that one's reputation and purse suffer from a violation of this rule. As a result he has the finest of Poland-China hogs, having purchased his first hog of O. J. Roberts, of Bryant, and he also has Durham cattle and Percheron horses. In the spring of 1905 he disposed of sixty-five head of shoats, nine months old and averaging 267 pounds. For these he received the highest market price of five and a half cents per pound. He entertains justifiable pride in his Percheron horses, of which there are seven at present, averaging 1,218 pounds. He considers Durham cattle the finest in the land, and his numerous samples would seem to justify the assertion. No man in the county can make a better showing as far as grade in stock is concerned, and it is not surprising that this young farmer finds himself with a constantly increasing bank account, as well as with a reputation second to none in his neighborhood. He makes a scientific study of everything pertaining to the work of the farmer, but adopts innovations only when their practicability has been fully demonstrated.

While public spirited and ready to participate in anything for the advancement of the community, Mr. Haines has refrained from active effort as an aspirant for political honors, contenting himself with casting his vote as a Republican. He is heart and soul a farmer, an appreciator of the farmer's independence and freedom from restraint and a believer in his mission as the foremost factor in the world's progress. Mr. and Mrs. Haines have two children: Mary, born December 25, 1897, and Mildred, born January 29, 1901.

HALL, J. G., who is successfully engaged in the livery business in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that place in 1877, and there received his early mental training in the public schools. He is a son of J. M. and Jane (Lane) Hall, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. J. M. Hall settled in Cuba in 1853, and for some time followed teaming. In 1864 he engaged in the livery business in the quarters now occupied by the subject of this sketch, who has conducted it since his father's death. Previous to 1864 the father followed the same occupation in another place. He was among the first men to pursue this line of business in Illinois, and remained in it continuously up to the time of his death in 1902. Mr. Hall is also interested in farming just north of Cuba. He keeps a good equipment of horses and vehicles, pays close attention to business, and enjoys a good patronage. Mr. Hall is unmarried and fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P.

HALLAR, William H.—No man within the city of Canton has contributed more to the making of his surroundings than William H. Hallar. Turn where you will large buildings and small, beautiful residences and modest homes, banks and industrial concerns, places of worship and educational institutions, structures for the housing of public utilities—these, and more which contribute to the architectural ensemble of a flourishing town, have fallen into his hands when the skeleton was ready for the brick mason, and remained under his watchful supervision until the last brick had been cemented in place. No greater tribute could be paid to his skill, business sagacity and reliability.

Inheriting his mechanical ingenuity, Mr. Hallar's youth offered every opportunity for the development of his inclination. His father, George W. Hallar, was a brick mason, brick manufacturer and contractor, who, after his arrival in Canton in 1848, was engaged in the manufacture of brick and in building until his death in 1873. Among the undertakings he built the First Congregational Church and the residence of W. H. Parlin, and he thoroughly drilled his four sons, William H., G. F., John L. and J. R., in the kind of work to which his own life was devoted. William H., who was born in Mercersburg, Pa., January 17, 1843, lost his mother in 1857, when he was thirteen years old. He was five years old when he arrived in Canton with his parents, and he soon after began to attend the public schools, continuing thus until beginning to learn the brick mason's trade with his father. He was eighteen years old when the Civil War plunged the country into uncertainty and grief, and, on August 11th of the following year, enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served until the termination of hostilities. He saw much of the grim and terrible side of warfare, and was taken prisoner at Hickory Hill, S. C., and released just below Lake City, Fla., April 29, 1865. Returning to Canton after the war Mr. Hallar worked at bricklaying for his father and George Coleman, who were partners, and from 1870 until 1873 was in the employ of Mr. Coleman, with whom he then organized a partnership. Soon after they began the construction of buildings on the west side of the square and after that on the north side, and also built the Parlin and Orendorff works, a number of residences, and did considerable work for W. H. Parlin. In 1881 Mr. Hallar entered into partnership with Mr. Lockwood, the latter taking the place of junior member of the firm, and built up the east side of the square, and all but three buildings on the south side; the Hewitt schoolhouse, and many other structures, including seven buildings in the city of Cuba, a like number in Farmington and the high school building in Rushville, Ill. On the retirement of Mr. Lockwood the firm was changed to W. H. Hallar & Brother, this association being continued until 1901, when William H. Hallar went into business alone. During the partnership of the Hallar Brothers they erected many prominent buildings, including the First National Bank Building, the Steve Drake Building, the new Methodist Episcopal Church, the McCall and Kellogg schoolhouses (in fact, Mr. Hallar has been connected with the erection of every schoolhouse in Canton, besides many in the country districts), the plow works and foundry, new engine house, the Canton National Bank, the Pabst and Michaels building, the Dean cigar factory, and addition to the Presbyterian Church; also rebuilt the Opera House after a fire and the gas works. In 1901 Mr. Hallar built the Reservoir, the splendid homes of W. G. and William J. Orendorff, the Canton House and the Odd Fellows' Hall; and, in 1903 erected the Canton High School (said to be the finest of its kind in the State), the water tower and the first city building. Indeed, he may be said practically to have built the business portion of the city of Canton.

On March 4, 1866, Mr. Hallar was united in marriage to Elizabeth Stookey, who was born in Bedford, Pa., November 4, 1846, and three sons and three daughters were born of this union, namely: William C., Edward R. and Ernest L.—each of whom is a master bricklayer; Mary Katherine, Margarette and Elizabeth Maude. The mother died on April 2, 1903.

Aside from the formality of casting his vote Mr. Hallar pays little attention to politics. He is personally popular and possesses social qualities of a high order, and is identified with the A. F. & A. M., Morning Star Lodge, No. 734, and Canton Chapter, No. 68, R. A. M.; the Ancient Order of United Workmen of America, the Bankers' Life Association and the G. A. R. He is a prominent figure at the reunions of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Hallar is a well-informed and broad-minded man, lending to his business a progressive spirit, and to the community an extent of practical usefulness which it is difficult to correctly estimate.

HAMER, Edward, a well-known retired merchant of Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Middletown Township, Delaware County, Pa., September 30, 1816, being a son of Abram and Mary (Hinkson) Hamer. Edward, the subject of this sketch, was reared in his native county, in his boyhood enjoying but meager advantages in mental training. He attended the subscription schools in the vicinity of his home until the year 1832, when he became a pupil in an academy in Wilmington, Del., remaining there one year. In 1837 he applied himself to teaching. In the spring of 1838, in company with his friend, Frank Taylor (afterward the noted Dr. Taylor, traveler and instructor), he left the old home and went to Boston by sea. The young men wished to enter college and thought to hear of one in that city suited to their needs, but after several days spent in this quest they decided to go to Amherst. On their way thither they met the enterprising Principal of an academy in Plymouth, N. H., who induced them to enter the Plymouth school. After nine months of study Edward returned to Pennsylvania and again engaged in teaching, this time in Chester, Pa. In the spring of 1841, in conjunction with his cousin, Patterson Hamer, he embarked in the mercantile business in Hamorton, Pa., under the firm name of E. & P. Hamer, which partnership continued for thirteen years. In 1854 after closing out the business in Hamorton Edward came West and settled in Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., and Patterson Hamer and family coming the following year, the partnership was continued.

Edward went to Philadelphia in the spring of 1855 and bought a stock of goods, which he shipped to Browning, on the Illinois River, thence by wagon transporting them to Vermont. From its inception the enterprise was a notable success. Subsequently he was prominently identified with the business interests of Vermont for many years, and figured as one of its leading citizens. In 1882 the firm of E. & P. Hamer sold their mercantile establishment and retired from active business life.

In 1860 Mr. Hamer married Miss Andrew Anna Morris, of Chester County, Pa. She and their two daughters are still living. Mr. Hamer is an earnest advocate of temperance principles and supports the Prohibition ticket at the polls. In youth and early manhood he was in close and constant relations with the Quaker element in Pennsylvania, and although he never joined the sect, he became deeply imbued with their doctrines, and the teachings then impressed upon his mind have been the dominating inspiration of his subsequent career. His mind is reasonably clear and vigorous for a man of his advanced years, and he is erect in his carriage and alert in all his movements. His dullness of hearing is his greatest trouble, as he has never suffered a week from illness in his long life. His great pleasure is in reading, thus keeping in touch with the activities of the world through books and newspapers. Over and around his venerable head are gently hovering the ceaseless benedictions of the people of the region in whose development he has born so conspicuous a part.

HAMER, Thomas.—(See page 216).

HAMMAN, George, who is among the most prosperous, substantial and extensive farmers in Young Hickory Township, Fulton County, is a native of Alsace, Germany (then France), where he was born on January 23, 1845, a son of George and Caroline (Statt) Hamman, both of whom were also natives of that province. By occupation George Hamman, the father, was a farmer and also followed the trade of a cooper. He spent his whole life in his native country, dying there in 1895.

The subject of this sketch received his mental training in the public schools of Alsace, and at the age of twenty-two years (in 1867) came to the United States, first locating in Greenbush, Warren County, Ill., where he remained between nine and ten years. In 1876 he moved thence to Young Hickory Township, Fulton County, where he purchased of Joseph Campbell a farm consisting of 110 acres. In 1880 he bought 100 acres belonging to the Hoagland estate, situated on Section 15, in the same township. His next purchase was 100 acres on Section 16, and eighty acres of the Quinn estate, on Section 9, all lying in the same township. Mr. Hamman is also the owner of 122 acres on Sections 22 and 27, on Coal Creek, in Young Hickory Township, and fifteen acres on Spoon River. On these several tracts he has made all the improvements, some of them in 1894 and others of a later period. In 1900 he built his present residence on Section 15. Mr. Hamman carries on general farming and is also engaged in the raising of stock to a considerable extent. All his undertakings have been attended by deserved success, and he is ranked as one of the foremost farmers of the county. This prominence in agricultural pursuits is wholly due to the energy, perseverance, wise management and honorable dealing which have been the distinguishing features of his life. Aside from his record as a farmer, he has maintained an excellent standing as a citizen, and is considered one of the most worthy and useful members of the community.

In February, 1877, Mr. Hamman was joined in wedlock at Galesburg, Ill., with Catherine Kepler, who was born in Fulton County, and is a daughter of Mathias Kepler and wife. Seven children have resulted from this union, namely: Lucy, Caroline, John A., Laura, George R., Cora and Nellie. Mr. Hamman's religious connection is with the Lutheran Church.

HAMMITT, George W.—When a citizen of any community has lived to the age of three-score and ten years, maintaining through all vicissitudes an unblemished character, faithfully meeting the obligations incident to his lot and discharging with manly fidelity the duties incumbent upon him in all the relations of life, it is a pleasing task to place the story of his career in an enduring form. The possession of such a record by the family which he has toiled to rear, and its transmittal to their posterity, is not only a boon to them, but the narrative of his worthy deeds, preserved in the permanent characters of a book, serves as a wholesome incentive to all others who may chance to peruse the pages containing it. The foregoing lines apply with obvious pertinence to the much respected subject of this sketch, George W. Hammitt.

Mr. Hammitt was born in Brownsville, Ohio, in February, 1836, a son of James W. and Nancy (Turner) Hammitt, of whom the former was a native of Ohio and the latter of Pennsylvania. James W. Hammitt, a man of strong character and strict integrity, was a blacksmith by trade and followed that occupation for several years in Brownsville, Ohio. In 1842 he sold his interests there and moved to Illinois, locating two and a half miles southeast of Cuba, Fulton County. Two years later he leased the farm of John Rector, situated a little southwest of Cuba in the same county. There he remained, successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits for four years. In 1848 he purchased what was known as the "Sol Sherwood farm" in Cass Township, which he sold the following year and established a blacksmith shop in Cuba, Ill., where he pursued his earlier occupation for two years. He then moved to a place situated two and a half miles southeast of Canton, where he remained until 1854. In that year he bought a farm in La Salle County, Ill., which he cultivated until 1868, when he disposed of the property and went to Ottawa, Kans., and there departed this life in 1872.

G. W. Hammitt received his early mental training in the district schools and assisted his father on the latter's farm in La Salle County until 1862. In that year he enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under the command of Captain Ludington. In the engagement at Hartsville, Tenn., he was taken prisoner and after being kept five days under guard by the Confederate troops, was paroled and exchanged in April, 1863. He went on with his regiment, took part in the battles at Buzzard's Roost, Tenn., and Rome, Ga., and followed Sherman in his March to the Sea. He was wounded by grape-shot in the hand and arm at the battle of Missionary Ridge and has two fingers that are almost useless. He went on foot from Louisville to Washington, D. C., where he was mustered out of service, having participated in the Grand Review. He received his honorable discharge in Chicago and returned home in 1865. In 1866 he moved with his family to Ottawa, Kans., where he remained until 1874, when he returned to Canton, Fulton County. In 1875 he was engaged as shopman for a mining company and served in the capacity of overseer of the shop and work for twelve years. In 1884 he located in Farmington, Fulton County, where he has since resided most of the time. Mr. Hammitt is the owner of a house and some lots in Smithfield, Fulton County, Ill., but has spent but little time in that place.

On December, 1860, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Harriet Fouts, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., where in girlhood she received her mental training in the district schools. Mrs. Hammitt comes from a family of early settlers in Fulton County, where her father, Dugan Fouts, located in 1833 and entered a tract of land in Buckheart Township by patent from the Government in 1834. She is in possession of two bedspreads (called counterpanes) that are counted of value on account of their age and peculiar design. One was hand-worked by Mary Hutchinson and the other by Elizabeth Hutchinson, annts of Mrs. Hammitt, in 1835. Mr. Hammitt has a tin lantern that was used in 1830 by one Henry Smith. These relics are much prized in the family on account of their age, history and original ownership, which are well authenticated. Mr. and Mrs. Hammitt are the parents of seven children, as follows: Lucy M., Henry F., Charles L., G. Kirk, Hattie, Harry and Anna.

In political relations Mr. Hammitt is an ardent upholder of the principles of the Republican party, and served in the capacity of Constable in Buckheart Township for six years. Fraternally he is a prominent member of the G. A. R., George Hunter Post, No. 145, and his estimable and devoted wife is a revered member of the W. R. C. Both are held in the warmest regard by their neighbors and friends, and are profoundly respected by a wide circle of acquaintances.

HAMMOND, Robert.—Prior to purchasing his present valuable farm in Pleasant Township in 1879, Robert Hammond ran the gamut of hardship and discouragement, and we know of no one who is entitled to more credit for lifting himself above the limitations of a responsible and cheerless youth. Born in Ireland, March 17, 1854, Mr. Hammond is a son of Robert and Margaret (Nelson) Hammond, the former of whom was first a farmer and later a groceryman in his native land. Robert Hammond, Sr., brought his family to America during the summer of 1854, and in New York City followed the grocery business until the breaking out of the Civil War. A natural patriot and enamored of the profession of arms, he enlisted in a New York regiment under the first call for three months' volunteers. Returning to his home at the expiration of this brief service, he performed the sad office of burying his wife, and on a soldier's limited stipend was confronted with the care of his five motherless children. These children are all living, Mathew, the oldest son, being a resident of Jersey City, N. J.; John, a business man of Paterson, N. J.; Robert a farmer of Pleasant Township; Sarah is the widow of Mr. Andrews and lives in Keokuk, Iowa, and George W. is a resident of Newark, N. J. That the calamity which befell the family in 1861 was not insurmountable is proved by the success which has come to all of the children. The two oldest sons started out as newsboys in New York City, and now are prosperous citizens of their respective cities. Robert, George and his sister were placed in a juvenile home in New York City, where they enjoyed educational and other advantages. These things accomplished, the elder Hammond was free to pursue soldiering as his favorite occupation, and he soon enlisted in a New York regiment for three years' service, during that time participating in some of the most important battles of the Rebellion. At the close of the war he still heard the bugle call and missed the routine and order of the camp. In consequence he enlisted in the regular United States army and died as a soldier at Huntsville, Ala., in 1874, after serving the military interests of his adopted country for thirteen years.

Robert and George Hammond remained in the juvenile home in New York for nine months and then both were bound out, Robert to Jacob Smith, of Isabella Township, Fulton County, Ill., and Gorge to the latter's son, John Smith. In 1879 George Hammond returned East to his brother Mathew, then living in Newark, N. J., and Robert, during the same year, after eight years of hard work, was turned loose upon the world to make his living as best he could without a cent in his name. He accepted the only alternative, that of a farm hand by the month, and eventually turned his hand to many kinds of tasks ere he had gained a financial foothold. In 1878 he married Mary E. Hall, daughter of Thomas Hall, of Ipava, and in 1879 moved to his present farm, which then was in a dilapidated and run-down condition. His capacity for industry and business has wrought great changes upon this property, and today it stands as a model of what may be accomplished by a man who is bound to win out in the calling he is best fitted to pursue. He makes a specialty of high-grade stock, having about fifty head of cattle and a large number of horses and hogs. His shipments of stock net him a comfortable annual income, and he is successful as a grain and general produce raiser. In the death of his first wife, January 21, 1895, Mr. Hammond sustained an overwhelming loss, for his helpmate was a noble woman, and was honored and loved by all who knew her. There were eight children of their union: Sadie, wife of William Jones, of Isabel Township; Eva, wife of Otis Porter, of Pleasant Township; John, a farmer in Isabel Township, who married Maggie Vaughn; Frank, a farmer of Pleasant Township, who married Kate Kelley; Lee, Loren, Mary E. and Nora, who died in infancy. December 22, 1897, Mr. Hammond married Hannah A. Brown, daughter of Samuel Brown, of the vicinity of Lewistown, and of the union there are three children: Gladys, Julia and Charles.

Ever since casting his first presidential vote, Mr. Hammond has been independent in politics and has voted always for principle rather than party. He has served as Collector of his township and for years was a member of the School Board. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons and the Modern Woodmen of America. Remembering the trials of his early life, he is kindly disposed and generous towards those less fortunate than himself and there are many in the county who are indebted to him for a substantial lift in times of emergency. He is honorable and high-minded, an excellent farmer and public-spirited citizen.

TELITHA MARTIN

HANLON, William, the present efficient and popular Mayor of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in County Clare, Ireland, February 22, 1848, and received his early educational training in the Peoria (Ill.) ward schools. He is a son of Thomas and Ellen (Murphy) Hanlon, natives, respectively, of Counties Limerick and Clare, Ireland. John and Mary (Lee) Murphy, the maternal grandparents, were born in County Clare, as were also the great-grandparents on the maternal side, John and Ellen (Lee) Murphy. On the paternal side Patrick and Mary (Higgins) Hanlon, the grandparents, were born in County Limerick, Ireland, as were also the great-grandparents, Valentine Hanlon and his wife.

Mr. Hanlon's parents and their families came to the United States on a sailing vessel in 1849. They traveled by wagon from Chicago to Peoria, Ill., where they lived until 1860, when they moved to a farm in Orion Township, Fulton County. In 1866 the subject of this sketch went to Montgomery County, Kans., and thence to Europe in 1871. Returning to this country he arrived in Chicago in October, 1871, where he spent the three succeeding years. He then went to Peoria County, Ill., where he engaged in farming, and in 1890 moved to Canton. He has been the Canton agent of the Pabst Brewing Company since 1892.

On February 20, 1876, Mr. Hanlon was married to Elizabeth A. McDonald, who was born in Peoria County, Ill., where in girlhood she received her educational training in the district schools. This union resulted in four children, namely: Gertrude F., who died aged one year and ten months; William T., Ellen A., and Mary E. In religion Mr. Hanlon is an adherent of the Catholic faith, and in politics an active and influential Democrat. From 1898 to 1900 he served as Alderman of the First Ward of Canton, was Tax Collector five years, Road Commissioner for one year (but resigned), and was School Director eight years. In 1904 he was elected Mayor of Canton for a term of two years, and in 1906 was again elected to the same office. Under his administration a new city building has been erected and a paid fire department has been installed; three-fourths of a mile of brick pavement has been constructed; the water works have been improved; fifteen acres have been purchased as an addition to the cemetery; and several new streets have been opened; in fact, Mr. Hanlon's administration has been characterized by much progression. Mr. Hanlon is also a director of the Canton Hospital Board. In fraternal circles he is identified with the Catholic Order of Foresters, Eagles, Traveling Men's Association, the B. P. O. E. and the I. O. R. M.

HANSON, Grier, D. D. S., a most courteous and skilful member of his profession, who is engaged in a growing practice at Lewistown, Ill., was born in McDonough County, Ill., June 24, 1870. His great-grandparents on the paternal side were Southern people, the great-grandfather, Samuel Hanson, being born on the eastern shore of Maryland in 1748, and dying in 1832, while his great-grandmother, Rebecca Waterman, was a native of Loudoun County, Va. His maternal ancestors, as far removed as his great-grandfather, were Pennsylvanians, his name being George Frybock; the grandfather, John Frybock, was born in the Keystone State in 1790 and reached the advanced age of eighty-six years. His wife, born in Virginia in 1796, died at the age of seventy-two. James Hanson, the paternal grandfather, was a native of Mason County, Ky., born in 1799, and died in 1883, while his wife, Elizabeth Mackey, of Center County, Pa., died in 1861, aged fifty-eight years. Luke and John Hanson, of the early generations of the Kentucky branch, remained in that State, Samuel removing to Ohio in 1800.

Amaziah and Eliza (Frybock) Hanson, the parents of the Dr. Hanson, are among the prominent old pioneer families of McDonough County, Ill., both being natives of the Buckeye State, the former born in Ross County in 1825, and the latter in Pickaway County, in 1838. Of their children, Emerson is a claim agent for the Burlington & Missouri system in Nebraska; Dr. Ralph Hanson is a resident of Spokane, Wash.; Ivan, Edward and Anna live at home, and Myra is the wife of George Rigg, of Hamilton, Ill.

Dr. Grier Hanson is a graduate of the Chicago College of Dental Surgery, a member of the class of 1897, and for three years was engaged in practice in that city. In 1900 he located in Lewistown, buying the practice of Dr. Bradley, which he has since maintained and greatly extended. He is a member of the Lewistown Lodge, No. 104, A. F. & A. E., of Macomb; the Illinois Dental Society, and the Odontographic Society of Chicago. He is a Republican in politics.

HARMISON, John, M. D. (deceased), who was one of the most prominent and successful physicians of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Cuba, Ill., October 20, 1851, a son of Sarah and John Harmison. In boyhood the subject of this sketch attended the public schools in his vicinity, and in early manhood entered the Missouri Medical College at St. Louis, from which he was graduated March 5, 1878. He established himself in the practice of medicine in Cuba, Ill., and acquired an extensive and lucrative patronage. In addition to his professional work he carried on a successful drug business in a store building erected by himself. He was always prominently identified with all movements intended to promote the welfare and prosperity of his town.

On August 11, 1880, Dr. Harmison was united in marriage with Effie Whitnah, who was born in Canton, Ill., where in girlhood she received her early mental training in the public schools. Mrs. Harmison is a daughter of A. J. Whitnah, a worthy citizen of Canton. Politically Mr. Harmison was a Democrat. For several years he was a member of the Cuba School Board and always took a deep interest in educational matters. Fraternally he was a member of the Cuba Lodge, No. 534, A. F. & A. M.; Canton Chapter, No. 68, Royal Arch Masons, and Damascus Commandery, No. 42 (Havana, Ill.), Knights Templar. Dr. Harmison died September 30, 1892, leaving behind him a spotless reputation, whose life was illuminated by good deeds.

HARRELL, William J. (deceased).—The value of a useful trade, of making one's energy count toward one thing, of forging steadily ahead regardless of obstacles and discouragements, found emphatic expression in the life of William J. Harrell, for twenty-seven years foreman of the blacksmithing department of the Canton Plow Works. Mr. Harrell squared his account with the world in manly and honest fashion, and when his life ended, April 14, 1900, it was felt that the community owed him much for the lesson in faithfulness and thoroughness taught by his success. Mr. Harrell was born on a farm in Fulton County, Ill., September 24, 1842, a son of Josiah and Melissa (Patterson) Harrell, the former a native of Kentucky. The peaceful pastoral life of Mr. Harrell found a rude awakening in the Civil War, in which he enlisted under an early call for troops in 1861, serving for three years in the Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and afterward enlisting as a veteran in the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry for one year. Returning to his home February 18, 1866, he engaged in the blacksmithing business, later becoming foreman of the blacksmithing department of the Plow Works.

In November, 1866, Mr. Harrell married Belle B. Bailie, who was born in Terre Haute, Ind., her father being a native of Virginia and her mother of Kentucky. Mrs. Harrell was educated in the public schools of Indiana and a private school in Canton, and is a woman of culture and refinement. She is especially prominent in fraternal circles, and for eight years has been Grand Receiver of the Grand Lodge of the Degree of Honor. She also is a member of the Rathbone Sisters, Fraternal Tribunes, Rebekahs and Ladies of the Circle, G. A. R. She is large-hearted and generous, a patron of clubs and philanthropic organizations, and numbers among her friends many of the most worthy people of the town. Mr. Harrell was prominent in Republican politics, and, although never desiring office himself, often worked for his friends who were officially inclined. He was a kind and considerate husband, warmly seconded his wife's social efforts, and invariably attributed a large share of his success to her economy, co-operation and sympathy.

HARRISON, Francis M., who is among the oldest and most highly reputable citizens of Fulton County, Ill., and whose fine farm is located in Section 18, Liverpool Township, was born in Lewis County, Ky., August 9, 1828, a son of James and Sarah (Lee) Harrison, natives of Virginia. James Harrison was a son of Thomas and Barton (Lee) Harrison, also natives of that State. The grandfather Harrison was born near Fairfax Court House, in the James Valley. Both the grandparents spent their whole lives in the Old Dominion. James Harrison, the father of Francis M., journeyed from Virginia to Illinois in 1855 and located in Fulton County, where he made his home until his death in 1861. He and his wife were the parents of six children, two of whom died in infancy. Francis M. was the first-born. The others were as follows: Ruth, deceased, who became the wife of Joseph S. Toncary, also deceased, and left a family in Fulton County; Louisa, deceased, who was the wife of Jasper Walker, a resident of Lewistown, Ill.; Mary Y., deceased, who was the wife of Joshua Cleary, and on the death of her husband returned home and remained with her father until the date of her death.

The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm in his native State and received his mental instruction in the primitive subscription schools of that period, his father paying a certain sum for three or six months' tuition. In 1848 he located in Fulton County, Ill., and went to work at farming by the month. In 1853 or 1854 he purchased eighty acres of land in Section 18, Liverpool Township, where he made his permanent home. The place was heavily timbered and he found it necessary to clear a spot sufficiently large for a dwelling. He cut the timber, hewed the logs and built a house, in which he installed his bride of the preceding year. The tract was densely covered with large oak and shellbark hickory growth, and after establishing himself in his new home he commenced the work of cutting the trees and digging up the stumps. To this labor he diligently devoted his time and strength until the land was ready for tilling. He now has a finely cultivated and improved farm, created by his toil from a state of nature. His farming operations have been careful, systematic, thorough and successful, and the stock raised by him is of the superior grades.

On March 4, 1852, Mr. Harrison was united in marriage with Elizabeth M. Walker, who was born in Lewis County, Ky., a daughter of Hugh M. Walker, a native of that county. Her parents are deceased. Three children resulted from this union, namely: John W., who is engaged in farming near Cuba, Fulton County; Dora, who became the wife of Buchanan Kelso, a resident of Rocky Ford, Colo., and Sidney S., wife of Noah Willcoxon, who carries on farming in Liverpool Township. In politics Mr. Harrison is a supporter of the Democratic party. He has ably and faithfully discharged the duties of various township offices, and has taken an active and prominent part in developing Fulton County to its present productiveness and prosperity.

HARRISON, Dr. Frank M., a widely known and highly successful physician residing near Bryant, Fulton County, Ill., who is also the owner and operator of an extensive farm in Section 32, Buckheart Township, this county, was born near Newark, Ohio, February 9, 1856. He is a son of Spencer and Georgiana (Hall) Harrison, natives of the same locality. The Hall family was originally from Virginia. At an early day the Harrison family moved to Fulton County, Ill., locating in Cuba, where Dr. Harrison's mother died about the year 1866. She and her husband were the parents of four children: One who died in infancy; Dr. Henry M., a very prominent physician of Quincy, Ill., where he is a specialist in eye, ear and throat diseases, on which he lectures in the Medical College at Keokuk, Iowa, and also has charge of the hospitals at Quincy; Dr. Frank M. and Dr. John R., of Glasford, Ill. Spencer Harrison's second wife was Johanna Mosher, born in 1841. In 1901 he moved to the vicinity of Laporte, Tex., where he operates a fruit farm. His children by the second union are William, Ernest, Bert, Winnie, Grace and Margaret.

Dr. Harrison received his primary education in the schools of Cuba, Ill., and was afterward engaged in teaching for seven terms. He studied medicine under Dr. James K. Welch, for many years a prominent physician in that vicinity, and in 1875-76 pursued a course of study in the Keokuk (Iowa) Medical College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1878. On August 5th of that year he located near Bryant, Ill., and has since been one of the leading physicians in that part of Fulton County. He has kept well abreast of modern developments in medicine and surgery, and having a complete library and all the current professional publications, has continued his medical researches with constancy and assiduity. When he began practice in this township he started as a stranger in a new field, and has grown in reputation and patronage until he now commands the entire confidence of the people for miles around.

In connection with the practice of medicine Dr. Harrison owns and operates a farm of 360 acres, which is one of the best improved in Buckheart Township and includes a very attractive residence and barns of corresponding quality. On his property is a fine herd of Polled-Angus cattle, and he makes a specialty of Morgan roadsters. When he started in professional life his mother presented him with a horse and his grandfather lent him forty dollars to help him along. Now his practice extends throughout Fulton County.

On December 2, 1880, Dr. Harrison was united in marriage with Florence Ashton, who was born on the farm now owned by him. She is a daughter of Edward Ashton, deceased, a native of Ohio and one of the worthy pioneers of Fulton County. Her mother died in 1897 and her father passed away in 1902, being the founders of one of the leading families of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Ashton were the parents of six children, as follows: John W., of La Mar, Mo.; Lewis D., of Alhambra, near Los Angeles, Cal.; Francis M., who lives near Farmington, Ill.; Mary E., deceased wife of Oliver Barnett; Sarah, wife of Everett Carter, a farmer of Putman Township, Fulton County, and Ida, wife of Joseph H. Moran, who also lives at Alhambra, Cal.

Dr. and Mrs. Harrison are the parents of two sons and three daughters, as follows: Sarah Estella, born August 13, 1881, wife of John Graybeal, a farmer in Lewistown Township, Fulton County; Lela Blanche, born May 19, 1885, who is with her parents; Bruce Ashton, born December 21, 1886, a graduate of the Canton (Ill.) High School, class of 1905; Georgia Mabel, born May 18, 1892, and Otis, born August 9, 1895. The children have had a thorough education and Miss Lela is an accomplished artist, many excellent drawings from her hand adorning the home. Sarah Estella was educated in the Knox Conservatory of Music. Bruce has taken a course of medicine this year (1907) at the Iowa Medical College, Keokuk. In politics the Doctor is a supporter of the Republican party, and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. of Canton, and other lodges.

HARRISON, James B., who is successfully engaged in farming in Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Liverpool Township, that county, March 29, 1869. He is a son of Barton L. and Charlotte (Willcoxon) Harrison, the former a native of Lewis County, Ky. Mrs. Barton L. Harrison is a daughter of Marshall N. Willcoxon and a granddaughter of Captain Elijah Willcoxon, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume. The subject of this record was reared on the home farm and in youth received his mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood. He remained under the paternal roof until he reached the age of twenty-four years, assisting in all the details of the work and never missing an evening's feeding of the stock.

On January 15, 1904, Mr. Harrison moved to his present farm, and is now engaged in cultivating 166 acres of very productive land. Besides cultivating grain he devotes considerable attention to stock-raising, breeding superior grades of various kinds of stock. He is a diligent, careful and enterprising farmer, and the best of results reward his labors.

On January 1, 1893, Mr. Harrison was united in marriage with Jessie E. Kelso, a daughter of John W. and Amy (Bodwin) Kelso. Her mother died when Mrs. Harrison was seventeen months old. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison have three children, namely: Francis, born October 11, 1894; James W., born July 18, 1895; and Nellie M., born May 29, 1898. In politics Mr. Harrison advocates the principles and supports the candidates of the Prohibition party. Fraternally he is connected with the Mutual Protective League. He and his worthy wife are consistent and active members of the Church of the Nazarenes. Both as a farmer and as a citizen Mr. Harrison maintains an excellent standing, and enjoys the respect of all who know him.

HARROD, Allen Hamilton, whose standing as a citizen of Fulton County, Ill., is very high and who has been intimately identified with the material growth and industrial development of the county for more than half a century, was born in Scott County, Ind., on January 4, 1831. His father, William Harrod, was a Kentuckian by nativity, having been born in that State May 22, 1779, the first white child born in Louisville, and his mother, Elizabeth (New) Harrod, was born December 6, 1786, in North Carolina. William Harrod, who was a lifelong farmer, settled in Scott County, Ind., about the year 1825, and was known as one of the most industrious, energetic and persevering among the pioneers of that period. He became the owner of a tract of 300 acres of land in Union Township, Fulton County, on which he made the usual improvements and then carried on general farming during the remainder of his active life. William Harrod died in 1835 and his wife passed away July 1, 1875. They were the parents of ten children, of whom Allen H. Harrod is the youngest.

In early youth Allen H. Harrod received a common school education in the district schools of Scott County, Ind., and on reaching years of maturity came to Illinois and commenced farming for himself. During the Civil War he rendered valiant service in the cause of the Union as a private in Company I, Seventy-second Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry ("Board of Trade Regiment") in which he enlisted August 14, 1862. He took part in the campaigns of this regiment and was mustered out of service in 1863.

Mr. Harrod has been twice married, both ceremonies taking place in Knox County, Ill., the first on April 3, 1850, when he was united to Hiley Cox, who was born December 7, 1830, in Canton, Ill., a daughter of James and Eleanor Cox, natives of Indiana. Mrs. Harrod died August 28, 1875. On March 16, 1876, Mr. Harrod was united in matrimony with Eliza J. Babbitt, also a native of Fulton County, where she was born March 28, 1847. The present Mrs. Harrod is a daughter of James and Mary A. Babbitt.

Politically Mr. Harrod strongly favors the principles of the Prohibitionists and exerts all his influence in behalf of the enactment of laws prohibitory of the liquor traffic. For forty years he served as Justice of the Peace and for twelve years acted in the capacity of Notary Public. In religious convictions he adheres to the faith of the Christian Church. Fraternally he is prominently identified with the Grand Army of the Republic. He is one of the most highly respected citizens of Fulton County. His acquaintance is wide, and among the host of people who appreciate his excellent qualities of head and heart are large numbers who regard him with the most cordial friendship and entertain a warm solicitude for his welfare.

HARROD, Jephtha Revel, a well known and progressive farmer residing on what is known as "the Meadow Brook Farm" in Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Scott County, Ind., September 28, 1845, a son of Samuel B. and Eliza Ann (Gaddy) Harrod, natives of that State and county, where the former was born September 20, 1818, and the latter November 20, 1822. Samuel B. Harrod was a farmer by occupation and followed that pursuit in the county where he was born during his whole life. His death occurred on his farm there, November 2, 1902.

Jephtha Revel Harrod received the elementary instruction of his boyhood in the district schools of Scott County, Ind., and completed his education in the Quaker Academy, at Washington, in that State. He made his home in the vicinity of his birthplace until he was about twenty-six years of age, when (in 1871) he moved to Fulton County, Ill., and purchased the farm on which he has since remained. He is the owner of 200 acres of land, and in addition to general farming devotes considerable attention to the raising of stock. Mr. Harrod is a veteran of the Civil War, having enlisted February 1, 1865, in Company F, One Hundred and Forty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until January 22, 1866, when he was mustered out.

The marriage of Mr. Harrod took place at Knoxville, Ill., on December 19, 1871, being wedded to Sara Jane Cox, who was born in Union Township, Fulton County, November 30, 1845. She and her husband are the parents of one son, Samuel Glenn Harrod.

In political matters Mr. Harrod is arrayed on the side of the Republican party, and for five years he served as School Director. His religious connection is with the Christian Church, and fraternally he is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic. On his farm of 200 acres he devotes his attention to general farming and stock-raising, and has won a reputation for enterprise and stability of character.

HARROD, Penuel, M. D.—No one who has lived and labored in Avon, this county, since the early 'seventies has more emphatically succeeded to the good will and confidence of his fellowmen than Dr. Penuel Harrod. Not only have skill and ability contributed to the usefulness of this popular physician, but an inheritance of old New England traits has lent strength and conservatism beyond the average to his character and influence. His people were among the early settlers of Scott County, Ind., where he was born January 21, 1844, a son of Samuel B. and Eliza N. (Gaddy) Harrod. She was the mother of six boys, five of whom are now living. After her death the father married Malinda Ward, by whom he had three sons and one daughter. Of these one boy and one girl are now living.

In the public schools, the great highway of human equality, the Doctor studied while assisting his father on the farm, and he graduated from the high school at Salem, Ind., equipping for his professional life at the Cincinnati (Ohio) Medical College, from which he was duly graduated in 1866. From the fall of 1866 until he came to Illinois in 1869 he practiced medicine in his native State of Indiana, and in the latter year located at St. Augustine, Ill., where he lived until coming to Avon in 1873. For many years he practiced both medicine and dentistry and still adheres to the former, having among the long established families a dependable and extensive patronage. In addition to his professional resources Dr. Harrod has operated a drug store in Avon since 1876, and in connection therewith carries a line of wall paper, oils, books and stationery and jewelry. The building in which this store is being conducted at present was erected by the Doctor in 1895, and is a two-story structure, twenty-two by sixty-two feet, the upper story of which is rented out.

Dr. Harrod's faith in the future of the town has been evidenced in innumerable ways, for he has invested heavily in real estate and has built, besides his home and store, the block occupied by Mr. Lockwood, which is about the size of his store building, and he is also the owner of the Sunburg Building. His many sided experiences have included service in the United States Army as a member of the Home Guards, Ninth Indiana Militia. He is a member of the Masons and Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On December 31, 1866, in Scott County, Ind., Dr. Harrod was united in marriage to Anna Weldon, a native of Kentucky, whose death occurred January 30, 1900. To Dr. and Mrs. Harrod were born two children, of whom Weldon is deceased and R. Wilbur, a graduate of the Bellevue Medical College, of New York City, is now a surgeon in St. Francis Hospital, New York City. Dr. Harrod is a member of the Christian Church of St. Augustine, Ill. He is a man of broad sympathies, pleasing personality, a larger faith in the goodness and happiness of the world than the average member of the profession, and of old-time courtesy and consideration. His professional and business ability has contributed materially to the establishment and maintenance of high civic ideals.

HART, Edward.—Few remain amid earthly scenes of the early hardy group of venturesome men and women who were present at the beginning of organized society in the States of the Middle West. Those who confronted the hardships and privations of the pioneer period in Illinois, and whose lives have been bounteously lengthened out into the third generation succeeding their birth, are conspicuous through their fast diminishing numbers. Fulton County counts perhaps a score of these venerable citizens, the sole survivors of a body of sturdy toilers whose patience, courage, endurance and integrity laid the foundations for the prosperity now prevailing. They are justly regarded with affectionate veneration in the communities where their lots are cast. Of this number one of the worthiest, although far from being the oldest, is the subject of this sketch, Edward Hart, a retired farmer, who has made his home in Farmington since 1894.

Mr. Hart is a native of the State of Connecticut, where he was born on February 29, 1828, a son of Henry and Ann (Street) Hart, also natives of that State. Henry Hart was a resident of the town of Goshen, Conn., where he was engaged in the manufacture of clocks, an industry for which the Nutmeg State was famous in early times. He made the then long journey to Illinois in 1835 and located in Fulton County in the vicinity of Farmington, where he purchased a tax title to 320 acres of land, situated in Section 20, Township 8 North, Range 3 East. Having partially cleared this tract, he put up the necessary buildings thereon and applied himself to the work of tilling the soil. He settled on this half-section before the Illinois State Road was surveyed, and continued to conduct farming operations there until the time of his death.

The subject of this sketch assisted his father on the farm until he reached the age of fifteen years, utilizing the advantages afforded by the log schoolhouse of the district, in which he obtained what mental training was possible for a farmer's boy at that day in the country schools. At the age already mentioned he began learning the trade of a carpenter, which he successfully followed for a number of years. At the time of the "gold fever" in 1849 he went to California and there engaged in gold-mining, operating a placer mine of his own for about six months, and returning to Farmington in the spring of 1851. He was a witness of the construction of the first two miles of railroad built on the Isthmus of Panama. Soon after his return home he bought a farm in Fairview Township, Fulton County, of which he still remains the owner. To the cultivation of this farm he devoted his attention until 1894, when he retired from active labors, purchasing a residence and other property in Farmington, where he has since lived. More than seventy years have elapsed since Mr. Hart was brought to Fulton County by his parents, and he has spent nearly all of this long period within its limits. From 1844 to 1847 he was engaged in carrying the United States mail on horseback from Farmington to Fairview.

On May 6, 1857, Mr. Hart was united in marriage with Lucy Robbins, who was born in Connecticut. Her father, Henry Robbins, was one of the early settlers of Peoria County, where Mrs. Hart in girlhood received her mental training in the district schools. Her residence in that section of the State has extended over nearly three-score and ten years, mainly passed in Fulton County. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Hart resulted in the birth of four children, two daughters and two sons.

In politics the subject of this sketch is a supporter of the Republican party. In the ripeness of his years he enjoys the cordial esteem of all who know him and the consciousness of having spent an industrious and upright life.

HART, J. Marion.—Three townships of Fulton County have profited by the work and influence of John Hart, Fairview Township, in which he settled as a young man upon coming from New Jersey at an early day, and where he married Hannah Hall; Deerfield Township, where he lived six years, and Canton Township, where he now owns and conducts a farm near the city of that name. Of the children of this early settler one of the best known is J. Marion Hart, who was born on the Fairview Township farm May 6, 1875, and who is one of the estimable and prosperous agriculturists of his native locality.

Like his father, Mr. Hart has led a somewhat migratory existence, in his twentieth year locating in Farmington Township, on the Wilson farm, and two years later moving to the Eschelman farm, in Canton Township. Two years later he moved to his present home on the farm of his father-in-law, H. M. Dikeman, in Fairview Township. Mr. Hart is engaged in general farming and stock-raising and is making a success of his chosen calling. His marriage to Clara M. Dikeman occurred December 25, 1895, Miss Dikeman having been born in Farmington Township, February 1, 1873. Mr. and Mrs. Hart are the parents of two children—Clarence M. and Nina M. Mr. Hart takes a commendable interest in local politics and for several years has promoted the cause of education as a member of the School Board.

HARTMAN, William McCoy.—Mr. Hartman represents the class of comparative newcomers from the German agriculturists of the Eastern States who long for the broader tracts of the Middle West. He comes of the Pennsylvania stock than whom none are more industrious, reliable or desirable as residents of a rich and developing country.

William M. Hartman is a native of Franklin

County, Pa., born August 27, 1869. Conrad Hartman, his father, is a German by birth and has never left that county since his emigration to it, having been continuously engaged there as a patient tiller of the soil. The mother, formerly Mary Long, is a native of Fulton County, Pa.

The subject of this sketch was educated in the district schools of his native county, and did his full share of work upon the family farm until he was prepared to see what he could accomplish for himself. In 1893, being then about twenty-four years of age, he came to Fulton County, Ill., and worked for eleven months on the farm of A. E. Hatch, near Avon. At the end of this time he was united in marriage at Prairie City, Ill., on February 1, 1894, with Etta Glaser, a native of Union Township, Fulton County, born August 20, 1872, and rented a farm, on which he lived for seven years. He then bought a farm of 120 acres in Union Township, in the vicinity of Avon, on which he has since carried on general farming and which he has brought to a high state of cultivation. Mr. Hartman is a Democrat in politics and a member of the German Reformed Church.

HARVEY, Lewis Paul (deceased), whose cultured and estimable wife, formerly of Chicago, was for many years one of the most highly esteemed residents of Canton, Ill., came of an old and substantial New England family, his immediate ancestors having high standing in Connecticut. Mr. Harvey was a native of that State, born in Stamford, April 20, 1853, a son of Paul and Lucy (Strickland) Harvey, both parents also being natives of Connecticut. There his father was engaged in the hardware business, but at an early day removed with his family to St. Louis, Mo., where he continued in the same line and where, with his wife, he passed his last years. Paul Harvey was an Episcopalian in religious belief, and in politics a Democrat, both in his conduct and his character well upholding the substantial and honorable family name.

Lewis P. Harvey was of a family of three children, consisting of two sons and a daughter. His education was obtained in the public schools of St. Louis, but his bent was so manifestly toward a business career that it was not thought advisable to give him a collegiate training. At the age of twenty he was connected with a firm extensively engaged in the coal business, and, after being rapidly advanced in position, in a short time became the head of a like enterprise himself, which he successfully conducted until 1880. He was then employed for a year and a half as a traveling agent for the Joliet Steel Company, and in 1883 became identified with the hide and leather business, in which he became an expert and an authority of national repute, although up to that year he had been entirely unacquainted with the field. His first connection in this line was with the firm of Smith & Gaenslens, Chicago.

and his keen mind, tireless industry and powers of initiative soon made him a leading factor in the expansion of their trade. Mr. Harvey was sent to New York as their strongest representative, and, while pushing the business there, was offered a position of even greater responsibility by the widely-known firm of Fayerweather & Ladew. Representing one of the largest and wealthiest hide and leather houses in the country (the firm were proprietors of three extensive tanneries), the scene of his business labors and successes was again transferred to Chicago, and, with that city as his headquarters, he rapidly developed the already large Western trade of this Eastern concern. For seven years his personal advancement was both remarkable and substantial, and his judgment, not only as to domestic hides and leather, but in the lines of seal skins and fine furs, was referred to by men who were veterans in the business. Mr. Harvey opened his Chicago office in 1885, and, although solicited by many other firms to assume their business, retained his connection with Fayerweather & Ladew, and when ill health, caused by overwork, compelled him to relinquish his responsibilities, he had been advanced not only to a munificent salary, but had reached the highwater mark of reputation in the field which he had so rapidly mastered.

At Peru, Ill., on the 6th of February, 1883, Mr. Harvey was married to Lucile Elaine Taylor, who was born in Francistown, N. H., May 25, 1859, a daughter of Rev. Lathrop and Lucinda (Brickett) Taylor, both natives of the Old Bay State. Mrs. Harvey was a descendant of the distinguished author, Leonard Wood, and her ancestors stepped upon American shores from the historic "Mayflower." Her father was a prominent Congregational minister, at one time Moderator of the Ministerial Association, who for more than half a century preached the Word both East and West, and in all the length of that period failed but twice to appear in his Sunday pulpit. That certainly is a record for faithfulness difficult to parallel. Rev. Lathrop Taylor spent his earlier years among the rugged and picturesque people in the Cape Cod region, North Chelsea and Buckland, Mass., these being scenes of his youth and early manhood. He worked on the family farm, learned and followed the clockmaker's trade, taught school and finally worked his way through a theological seminary. He first preached at Taunton, Mass., and successively occupied pulpits at Springfield, Vt.; Francistown, N. H.; Bloomington, Ill.; Madison, Wis.; Farmington, Ill. (twelve years), and Peru and Wheaton, Ill. His death occurred at the last named city, January 25, 1897, at the age of eighty-two years, and his wife (Mrs. Harvey's mother) passed away at Canton, January 15, 1902, aged eighty-three. Mr. Taylor had been twice married, his first wife (Hannah Maria Hall) bearing him six children, and his second wife two daughters. W. L. Taylor, of Canton, and so well known through Canada and the Northwest as a traveling representative of the Parlin & Orendorff Company, is a child by the first marriage, while Mrs. Harvey is the older daughter by the second union.

Two sons were born of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis P. Harvey, the elder of whom, Hugh Taylor Harvey, is now connected with the Scudder Syrup Company, of Chicago. Inheriting decided musical talents from his mother, when quite young he sang in the choir of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Kenwood (Chicago), and afterward acquired considerable reputation as a vocalist, being a member of the Apollo Club and other musical organizations. He attended Brown's Business College, Galesburg, and at the St. Louis World's Fair won the prize for the greatest proficiency in penmanship, open to the 5,000 pupils attending the Brown chain of colleges in various parts of the country. Lewis Paul, the second son, is a student of the Canton High School and also possesses notable musical tastes, being a member of the High School Orchestra and the Star Band of Canton.

During the last years of Mr. Harvey's brilliant business life the beautiful family home at Kenwood was the center of much refined sociability, of which music was the main attraction. To Mrs. Harvey's charms as a woman and a hostess was added her brilliancy as a pianist, and the Kenwood home was certainly a refining influence in that part of the city. After Mr. Harvey's death, February 4, 1894, his wife became a familiar figure at Steinway Hall, Chicago, and a valued addition to the McHenry School of Music, acting as accompanist for many notable soloists. For several years she was also organist of the Michigan Avenue Congregational Church, and since then, both in Chicago and Canton, has been a most successful teacher of music, besides being a ready composer of decided talent. From April, 1900, up to 1907, Mrs. Harvey's residence was at Canton, Ill., where her talents, her warm heart, her sociability, her benevolence and her maternal devotion won her a large circle of admirers and life-long friends. On November 16th, of the latter year, she was united in marriage with James F. Leland, Secretary of the Munsell Publishing Company, of Chicago, which city is now their home.

Before Mr. Harvey's life was brought to such an untimely end he had not only achieved a reputation in business, but had become very popular socially. He was a member of the Hyde Park Club, the Illinois Club and the Union League Club, all of Chicago; and was identified with such fraternities as the Royal Arcanum and the Royal League, holding at one time the position of Grand Registrar of the former order for the State of Illinois. His popularity was so pronounced that in 1886 he was put forward by the Republicans as a candidate for the presidency of the Board of Cook County Commissioners, but proved to be too open-hearted and open-handed to make a successful politician. He was a man of most admirable traits of head and heart; was implicitly trusted by business associates and personal friends; was kind and generous in his family and abroad, and, although he made no pretensions, accomplished much good in an unostentatious way.

HATCH, Arthur E., one of the most extensive farmers and stock-raisers in Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., and a very prominent and influential citizen of his locality, was born in the township where his farm is situated, in December, 1861. Mr. Hatch is a son of Jerome B. and Mary (Wood) Hatch, respectively natives of Ohio and New York. The birthplace of the father was Gilford, Medina County, in the former State, where he first saw the light March 9, 1827, and the mother's birth occurred in Madison County in New York, June 21, 1826.

Jerome B. Hatch was one of fourteen children born to his parents, and lost his mother at the age of thirteen years. Her death disrupted the family circle and young Jerome was soon obliged to exert himself to earn a living. When eighteen years old he journeyed overland from Michigan to Avon, Fulton County, arriving utterly without financial resources. He went to work as a farm hand and in course of time bought farming land, following this occupation in Union Township until 1892, when he retired to Avon, having acquired a handsome competency. His wife, Mary (Woods) Hatch, was a daughter of Asa and Mary Woods, being the fourth in succession of eight children. Her father's family came by wagon to Fulton County, Ill., in 1836, and settled on a farm called the "Mings place," a little north of Avon. There Mary Woods spent her school days and grew up to womanhood. On November 7, 1852, she became the wife of Jerome B. Hatch, the ceremony that united the couple ushering in a union which lasted fifty-three years. Their first housekeeping was on what was known as the Chatterton place, and after a number of removals they eventually settled down on the farm lying southeast of the village, where thirty-one years of their lives were spent. In 1892 they established their home in Avon, where both passed away, the father dying April 9, 1905, and the mother October 22d of the same year. They were the parents of six children, three of whom died in infancy. Those surviving are: Warren W., George A. and Arthur E. The mother of this family had seven brothers and sisters. In politics Jerome B. Hatch was an unswerving Republican. The religious connection of both husband and wife was with the Universalist Church.

In early youth Arthur E. Hatch received his education in the Avon schools, and on reaching mature age began farming in partnership with his father. Thus he continued for about twelve years, but since that period has conducted farming operations alone. He has the 320-acre homestead, located on Sections 29 and 30, Union Township, where he was born and where he has lived for forty-three years. The improvements on this farm were made by his father and himself. In addition to general farming he is a prominent and successful feeder. In order to be more convenient to school he bought an eight-acre home adjoining the village of Avon, on which he has made his home since 1904.

Mr. Hatch was married October 15, 1885, at the home of the bride's parents in Union Township, Fulton County, to Cornelia Adaline Yeoman, daughter of Samuel and Catherine Maria (Hopper) Yeoman, and four children have been born to them, namely: Oral, Walter, Hazel and Arthur. Mrs. Hatch was born in Paterson, N. J., April 10, 1865, and at two years of age came to Illinois with her parents, who located in Union Township, which has been her home ever since. She is the youngest of a family of eight children, and has two brothers—J. B. and G. H. Yeoman, and two sisters, Mrs. S. J. Brinkerhoff and Mrs. A. Snyder—still living. Mr. Samuel Yeoman, the father, was born in New Jersey August 22, 1822, came to Illinois in 1867 and died at Avon, November 9, 1896, while his wife was born in Bergen County, N. J., December 1, 1828, and died at Avon, September 15, 1895.

In politics Mr. Hatch is identified with the Republican party and has held the office of Township Supervisor four years, having been first elected in 1904.

HATCH, George A.—A splendidly improved farm of 200 acres on Section 30, Union Township, Fulton County, bears witness to the early morning and late-at-night energy of George A. Hatch, an extensive breeder of high-grade cattle and Percheron horses, and raiser of the general produce which has made the name and fame of the Central West. Mr. Hatch is a native of Warren County, Ill., and was born January 19, 1857, a son of Jerome B. and Mary (Woods) Hatch, a resume of whose lives may be found elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Hatch was reared among the most favorable of agricultural surroundings, and his tendencies have never been side-tracked into less peaceful and satisfying occupations. His education was that of the district schools of Fulton County, to which he moved with his parents at the age of four years, and his life took on character and purpose at the age of twenty-one, when he embarked in an independent farming enterprise on one hundred acres of land. Industry and good management have resulted in a continual increase of his fortune, and his original farm has been enlarged to 230 acres, and he also owns a farm of 150 acres in the central part of Union Township. His farm equipment conforms to the highest known standards, and applies particularly to stock-raising, of which the owner is an earnest promoter. Some of the finest cattle and most valuable Percheron horses raised in the State have come from his farms, and he has exhibited extensively at county fairs. He has a stately and comfortable rural home, and within is that invariable good fellowship and hospitality which distinguish the well-bred, intelligent and thoroughly progressive agriculturist.

A staunch supporter of local Republican politics, Mr. Hatch has filled many offices within the gift of his fellow townsmen, and at the present time is serving his fourth year as Chairman of the Republican Township Committee. His home is presided over by his wife, formerly Helena Van Winkle, a native of New Jersey, and a daughter of John J. Van Winkle, an early settler of Fulton County. Six children have been born into his family: Arthur O., who resides in St. Clair County, Mo.; Mary, now Mrs. O. E. Walker, who also resides in Missouri; John A.; Nora B., wife of Melvin Whisler, who lives in Warren County, Ill.; Robert J.; Nealy and Ruth. In religion Mr. Hatch is a Universalist. He is a man of solid and reliable traits of character, generous and consistent in his contributions to worthy causes, and a vigorous promoter of education, morality and temperance.

HATCH, John A.—The third generation of the Hatch family to maintain the agricultural and stock-raising prestige of Fulton County, and to contribute also to the large wealth, promise and social prominence of Warren County, is represented by John A. Hatch, son of George A. and Lena (Van Winkle) Hatch, and grandson of Jerome Bonaparte Hatch, establisher of the family in Fulton County. With his backing of family traditions, superior education, natural refinement and high ideals, this young man stands for the most desirable and helpful element which could invade any agricultural region at the beginning of the twentieth century. Until recently Mr. Hatch continued to live in Union Township, where he was born March 31, 1883, and where he received a thorough training in all things pertaining to the successful management of a farm. Like the other members of his family, he is inclined to specialization, and turns with enthusiasm to stock as the most desirable and paying of country resources. In Warren County, to which he removed a short time ago, Mr. Hatch carries on farming on 400 acres of land rented from A. P. Tompkins, of Avon, equipped with special reference to the breeding, feeding and shipping of stock, and where, from the standpoint of comfort and convenience, he has a home unexcelled in that vicinity.

Notwithstanding his youth—at present being but twenty-four years old—Mr. Hatch has surrounded himself with all of the elements supposed to encourage and furnish incentive to the ambitiously inclined, and among these the most important is a sympathetic and charming wife, who is mentally and temperamentally in accord with his desire to secure the greatest possible good and happiness from existence in the country. Florence Alma Taylor was born in Fulton County, April 16, 1880, and her marriage to Mr. Hatch occurred December 16, 1903. Of this union there is a daughter, Mabel Vera Hatch. Mr. Hatch is a Republican in politics, but is not a member of any church. He has a genial and likeable personality, understands the social attribute of putting people in a good humor and on friendly terms with themselves, and in all of his dealings has thus far evinced the strictest regard for the ethics of finance.

HAVERMALE, Daniel G.—When, on Monday, March 26, 1888, the Lutheran Cemetery, four miles west of Canton, Fulton County, received the mortal remains of the beloved and venerable Mrs. Peter Havermale, the final chapter was peaceably closed in the life of one of the pioneer mothers of Joshua Township. Three days later her companion of nearly sixty-six years was laid by her side; so that death even was not long unkind to them. At the time of his decease Peter Havermale was eighty-eight years of age, and his wife had passed away at the age of ninety; thus full of years and honor did this venerable couple pass to the Beyond. They had given to the world eight children (of whom Daniel G. was the fourth), three of the number having devoted their lives to the ministry, and all were honorable and useful members of their communities. They had lived to see not only their children prosperous and respected, but to witness the wilderness to which they came in middle age blossom into cultivated fields, into villages and cities. Thus their later years were made happy and spiced with the transformations of their surroundings.

Peter Havermale was born in Washington County, Md., October 30, 1799, and his wife (formerly Maria Gardenour), January 1, 1798, she being a native of the same county. On June 16, 1822, occurred their marriage in Maryland, in which State were born five of their children: Noah, Samuel G., John, Daniel G. and George W. In 1832 the family removed to Montgomery County, Ohio, and there were born the sixth and seventh sons, Marion F. and Joseph S., and the only daughter, Louisa. In 1844 the parents, with their children, came to Fulton County, and in the following year located on the old homestead, four miles west of Canton, where the remainder of their lives were spent, except a period of four years, during which they resided in Canton. The members of the family, who have so well served the Methodist Church in their ministerial capacities, are Samuel G., George W. and Marion F.

Daniel G. Havermale, as an earnest and wise member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Canton, has perhaps done more than any other one man to bring the local organization to its present substantial standing, as evidenced by a house of worship, which is a beautiful and stately religious memorial. For years he has been one of its most active trustees, has long served as President of the board, and freely given of his time, his counsel, his strength and his means to further the cause to which the family name is so strongly cemented.

Mr. Havermale was born August 8, 1829, in Washington County, Md., as were his father and grandfather. When a boy of sixteen he came to Canton and assisted Judge Hippell in the postoffice and his general store, and well remembers how a terrific attack of homesickness impelled him to steal a ride on the stage to the family farm. When he was seventeen his father "gave him his time," however, and thereafter he was his own master, and in his early years he engaged in the carpenter and cabinet-making business. For the first two years he earned something like forty dollars in a year, with board, but gradually developed a contracting business of his own. On February 8, 1852, he married Sara Jane Kline, and soon after built a residence on the west side. In 1854 he moved to Cuba, where, until 1859, he operated the Central Hotel, returning then to the old homestead in Joshua Township to assist his father in running the farm. He was thus engaged until 1881, during which period he also made himself useful in the public service as Road Commissioner, Tax Collector, etc. In the year named he removed to Canton, which has since been his home, one of his first ventures being the erection of the Havermale Flats on South Avenue A, which, despite the dark prognostications of his business associates, have proved to him a source of continuous profit. He occupies a beautiful home on West Elm Street, and, besides the real estate mentioned, has other property which places him with the most substantial citizens of Canton.

Mr. Havermale has been twice married, his second wife, to whom he was united November 25, 1892, being Mrs. Freytag, whose maiden name was Enola Adams, who had been the mother of two children by her first marriage. One child has been born of this marriage, Daniel Goodlet, September 7, 1896. Rev. Lewis F. Freytag, the son by Mrs. Havermale's first marriage, is a graduate of the Upper Iowa University, and a Methodist minister at Randalia, Northeastern Iowa; the daughter, Lucille, is taking courses in music and elocution at the same institution. Mrs. Havermale herself is a woman of thorough education and culture, and is a leading member of the Canton Methodist Episcopal Church.

HAVERMALE, Joseph S., a respected pioneer of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., and a well known bricklayer and contractor of that city, is the seventh son of Peter and Maria (Garde-nour) Havermale, born in Johnsville, Montgomery County, Ohio, on October 25, 1838. His parents were both natives of Washington County, Md., and there five of their children were born, the remaining three being natives of Montgomery County, Ohio, whither the family removed in 1832. In 1844 they came to Fulton County, Ill., and in 1845 located on the old homestead, four miles west of Canton, where, with the exception of four years passed in the city, they spent the remainder of their long and honorable lives. They were laid side by side in the same grave, wife and husband dying within three days of each other, on March 26th and March 29th, respectively, of the year 1888, after having traveled life's journey together for nearly sixty-six years.

On March 1, 1856, then eighteen years of age, Joseph S. Havermale located in Canton, and, with his brother John, began work at his trade as a bricklayer. He thus continued until the spring of 1862, after which he worked on a farm for six years, resumed his trade for a year at Fairbury, Livingston County, Ill., and in the fall of 1869 returned to Canton. In 1871 he migrated to Olathe, Johnson County, Kan., and engaged in agricultural pursuits until August, 1875, and since then has been a resident of Canton.

Like all the other members of his family Mr. Havermale has been a steadfast Methodist since the years of his early manhood, having been a member of the church since 1858. He has served as Trustee, been Superintendent of the Sunday School and faithfully performed the duties of other offices. His fraternal record embraces twenty years' membership (1878-98) with the United Workmen; but his political experience was short and decisive. A Republican in national politics he was induced to run as a candidate for Alderman from the Third Ward on the Anti-License ticket, and was elected in 1878. He served for one year, and, as he earnestly and pathetically expresses it, "I got enough cussin' in that short time to last me a lifetime."

On November 24, 1861, Mr. Havermale was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Eyerly, who was a native of Clearspring, Washington County, Md. Her parents came to Fulton County in 1857. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Havermale has resulted in two children: Alma, now Mrs. William Blakeslee, of Canton, and Frederick Lewis, married, and engaged with a large house of Quincy, Ill., which deals in heating apparatus and electric supplies.

HAVERMALE, Rev. Marion F. (deceased).—The name of Rev. Marion F. Havermale is inseparably associated with the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Illinois during, and for several years following, the Civil War. His experiences ran the gamut of exposure, privation, hardship and incessant demand upon time and energy which fell to the lot of the early clergy, and which called for a degree of endurance, faithfulness and self-sacrifice rarely found in the churchmen of the present, and which the time neither demands, expects or encourages. Mr. Havermale, who, for many years after retiring from active church work, lived on the fine old homestead purchased by his pioneer father in Joshua Township, was of German descent, but born in Montgomery County, Ohio, August 3, 1834. About a century and a half ago a sturdy forefather sailed away from the German shores and established the family near Hagerstown, Md., at which time the land deeds and marriage certificates were signed Houvermahl, later changed to Hawvermale, and still later to Havermale.

It was on this old farm near Hagerstown that Peter Havermale, the father of Marion F., was born in July, 1796, and January 1, 1798, in the same neighborhood, was born Maria Gardenhour, whom he subsequently married. Mr. Havermale learned the weaver's trade in his youth, but for the greater part depended upon agriculture for a livelihood. He came of a sturdy race and he had sturdy ambitions, chief among these being the desire to grow up with a new country and become an integral part of its enlightenment and prosperity. Journeying to the wilds of Montgomery County, Ohio, in 1833, he remained there about eleven years, and then, desiring to go farther West, started for Illinois in the spring of 1844. The following winter, while living in Farmington, Fulton County, Mr. Havermale bought 150 acres of land on Section 24, Joshua Township, upon which he located the next spring, and for a year occupied a rude log cabin constructed in a timber clearing. An opportunity for better housing presented itself the following year, owing to the disestablishment of a Swedenborgian colony a mile north of his farm, which had known a fitful year of existence. The colony had erected a number of small buildings, and manufactured considerable brick with which to build a house of worship. By the purchase of this brick Mr. Havermale was enabled to erect a substantial brick house for himself and family in 1846, and the following year witnessed the building of a barn, both of which structures are in possession of the family at the present time, and in an excellent state of preservation. Mr. Havermale prospered as a farmer and stock-raiser, and his fine character and great good sense won him influence and many friends. In early life he was devoutly attached to the Lutheran Church and was a member of its Council; but in later life he turned for religious consolation to the Methodist Episcopal denomination. He was a Republican in politics, and, though opposed to holding office, was prevailed upon to serve the community in many minor capacities. The circumstances surrounding his demise, March 27, 1888, were typical of his harmonious and happy home life, for the wife who had helped him in the hour of trial and uncertainty was spared to him until nearly the end of his journey, her death preceding his but three days, on March 24th. Both were buried in the same grave. They were the parents of the following children: Noah, whose death in the Chatsworth wreck, in 1887, was the first recorded in the family for forty-eight years; Samuel G., who was ordained to the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church; John J., who became a farmer of Joshua Township; Daniel G., who, after leaving his farm, is living in retirement in Canton; George W., who was for years a Methodist Episcopal preacher in De Soto, Kans.; Marion F.; Louisa F., wife of John F. Randolph, of Canton Township; and Joseph S., who became a brick mason.

In a home atmosphere which impelled three of the sons of the family to qualify for ministerial work in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Marion F. Havermale developed earnestness and fervor of mind, and a sincere desire to be of practical usefulness to his fellow-men. His preliminary education was acquired in the public schools, and he was ordained to the ministry in 1860, thereafter preaching under the auspices of either the Rock River or Central Illinois Conferences. During the Civil War he was appointed Chaplain of the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry by Governor Yates, but as the regiment had already started with Sherman on his famous March to the Sea, and he would be unable to reach it in time, he resigned at the end of three months. He also was drafted in the army about the same time as occurred his appointment, but for family and other reasons preferred to furnish a substitute, which cost him about seven hundred dollars. Some time during the '80s Mr. Havermale gained permission from the Conference to return to the old homestead in Joshua Township, that his aged parents might have the benefit of his care and protection. After the death of his parents he came into possession of the homestead, and up to the time of his own death directly or indirectly managed it, deriving from its fertile soil an income sufficient for the gratification of his simple but cultivated tastes. He was much beloved for the good that he accomplished, for the example set of a noble Christian manhood ever struggling toward a higher ideal, and for the lesson in patience and unselfishness emitting from his life.

At Cuba, Ill., December 30, 1855, Mr. Havermale married Mary C. Cluts, also of German descent, and member of an old Pennsylvania family. Mrs. Havermale was born November 2, 1837, and is the fifth oldest of the nine children of Joseph and Evanna (Eckenrode) Cluts, early settlers of Fulton County. To Mr. and Mrs. Havermale were born the following children: Clara A., born December 26, 1856; Percy W., born April 25, 1859; Charles M., born September 10, 1864; Mattie D., born September 24, 1868, and who is a graduated trained nurse; and Jessie M., born May 27, 1873, and Clara A., who died December 30, 1862. Mr. Havermale died June 12, 1901.

HAYSLIP, Frank N., of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., contains quite a representation of the younger business element, among whom are some whose antecedents give ample evidence that a substantial and prosperous career awaits them in the future. One of the most enterprising and capable of these, and one to whom success in life seems fully assured by reason of his exceptional progress while still in early manhood, is the gentleman whose name stands at the head of this sketch.

Frank N. Hayslip was born in Fulton County, Ill., in 1875, a son of I. N. and Charlotte (Butler) Hayslip, the latter having been born in Peoria County, Ill., and the former a native of Ohio. The father of the subject of this sketch has been a resident of Farmington for a long period, having located in that town about the year 1870. During three years of this time he conducted a barber shop, one of the first established in Farmington. Although past middle life he is fully as capable of good work as when in his prime, and is still active in promoting all public measures intended to advance the best interests of the community. He is a man of upright character and enjoys the respect of all who know him. His son, Frank N., received his early mental training in the public schools of Farmington, and since his studies has been engaged in various mercantile connections there. He is now acting in the capacity of manager in the store of G. L. Wilson, who carries a complete line of clothing and furnishing goods. For two years he was in the employ of C. A. Smith, proprietor of a jewelry store. He also worked two years for Juter & Moore, of Peoria, Ill., and three years for Harned, Bergner & Von Maur, of the same city. The Wilson store, of which he is at present manager, occupies a building erected about the year 1870 and is owned by J. C. Robb. In it the firm of Rose & Vandersloot formerly conducted a grocery store.

Mr. Hayslip is unmarried. In fraternal circles he is identified with the K. of P. He is thoroughly efficient in his present business connection, possesses good executive ability and a faculty of close application to the details of his work, and is characterized by that courtesy of deportment which always induces patronage and wins friends.

HEALD, Charles T.—To none of its pioneer families is the city of Canton more indebted for its financial strength and integrity than to that established in the then small community, more than half a century ago, by Charles Thaddeus Heald. Like so many of the founders and builders of civilization in the Middle West, this former banker and present abstract and title broker sprang from the soil of New England, and carved his way to prominence and usefulness by unaided industry and a noble aspiration to rise above the humble surroundings of his early life. Born in Chester, Windsor County, Vt., January 21, 1834, he is a son of Prescott and Mary H. (Whipple) Heald, who also were born, reared and spent their entire lives in the Green Mountain State. The paternal great-grandfather, Daniel Heald, was born in historic Concord, Mass., and married Abigail Wheeler, who was born and grew to womanhood among the same inspiring moral and intellectual surroundings. Daniel Heald at one time lived in Lincoln, Middlesex County, Mass., where his son, Amos Heald, grandfather of Charles T., was born, and whence he removed to Windsor County, Vt., as a young man in search of broader outlook. Amos Heald married Lydia Edwards, of Temple, Hillsboro County, N. H. The maternal family of Whipple also represented the best New England stock, and in the very early history of the country was among the stable elements of Grafton, Worcester County, Mass., where James Whipple, the maternal great-grandfather, was born and spent his young manhood. His son, Oliver Whipple, the maternal grandfather, was born in Ipswich, Essex County, Mass., and in time established the family name in Vermont, where he married Lydia Leland, of Springfield, that State.

Charles Thaddeus Heald was educated in the Chester Academy and the Kimball Union Academy, of Meriden, N. H. On February 14, 1855, he was united in marriage to Amelia M. Aikem, a native of Windham, Vt., and a student also at Chester Academy. Mr. and Mrs. Heald became the parents of six children: Charles Prescott Heald, Mrs. Addie H. Wyeth, Mrs. Alice M. White, Edward A. Heald, Nellie A. Heald, and Mrs. Marion Gress. Arriving in Canton in 1858, Mr. Heald became interested in merchandising and banking, and for forty-five years was uninterruptedly identified with the latter occupation. He has sought no honors outside of what seemed to him his legitimate field of activity, and as a Republican has contented himself with casting a fair and impartial vote. In former years he was an active associate of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and he still is, and for many years has been, one of the stanch supporters and workers in the Congregational Church. He is of that rugged mental and moral material which has scattered throughout the country from the North Atlantic coast, and everywhere has laid abiding foundations of character and worth.

HECKARD, M. J.—The firm of Heckard & Sons, brick manufacturers, represents the development of a business established by M. J. Heckard in Canton, Fulton County, in 1892, and now operated by John M. and J. W. Heckard, sons of the founder. The name is one of the very early pioneers of the county, to the up-building of which three generations have contributed their quota of stable and honorable citizenship. John Heckard, father of M. J., came to Richland County, Ohio, from Maryland, presumably in the beginning of the 'thirties, and to Fulton County in October, 1832, bringing with him his wife, formerly Catherine (Kenan) Heckard, who was born in Hagerstown, Washington County, Md. John Heckard was a natural mechanic, a trend which led him to follow carpentering to some extent, but eventually to depend upon blacksmithing, which he followed in Joshua Township in connection with farming. He died on his farm at an advanced age in August, 1839.

M. J. Heckard, born on the Joshua Township farm December 1, 1838, found few opportunities awaiting him in the thinly settled community. Owing to the limitations of the country schools his education was largely self-acquired, but, as often happened under such circumstances, his very hardships and tests of endurance were stepping stones to self-control and self-independence. Outgrowing his taste for farming, he removed to Champaign County and engaged in the manufacture of tiles, and later added brick ovens to his tile equipment, combining the two with satisfactory results from 1878 until 1891. Realizing the advantages of a larger community and closer proximity to shipping facilities, he came to Canton in 1892, and the same year established the plant which since has grown to be one of the largest in the county. Though the younger energy and greater advantages of his sons, his work is guaranteed continuance and enlargement, for both are practical brick manufacturers, having learned the business from the bottom of the ladder, and under the capable guidance of one of the best authorities on brickmaking in the Central West.

The marriage of Mr. Heckard and Ellen Barry occurred November 23, 1862, Mrs. Heckard being a native of Belfast, Ireland, and an early settler of Fulton County. Of this union there are three children living and two are deceased. George died at the age of twenty-four and Isabella died at the age of twenty-one. Those living are: Anna A., the wife of Garrett Dally, who resides in Chicago; John W., who married Beulah Grim, and James W., who married Lillie Hummelt. Mr. Heckard is a Democrat in politics, but has never been active in the local deliberations of his party. Fraternally he is connected with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, and in religion is a Roman Catholic, being a member of the St. Mary's Catholic Church of Canton. His life has been an active and useful one, and his business success is a tribute to the qualities of perseverance, honesty and good judgment.

HECTORNE, A. P., an energetic and prosperous farmer of Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Avon, Ill., May 21, 1850, a son of Nicholas and Mary Ann (Mauvais) Hectorne, natives of France. Nicholas Hectorne came with his wife to the United States about the year 1845, and settled in Illinois in 1849. By trade he was a shoemaker, but on locating in Fulton County he bought a farm, which he improved, and followed farming on it as long as he lived. On this farm the subject of the present sketch was reared, receiving his education in the district schools of Union Township. At the age of twenty-eight years he engaged in farming on his own responsibility and although he learned the carpenters' trade and worked at it more or less for fifteen years, his main occupation has been farming.

In 1877, at Avon, Ill., Mr. Hectorne was united in marriage with Blanche Gill, a native of that place and a daughter of James and Mary (Able) Gill, the father born in Kentucky and the mother in Illinois. James Gill was a blacksmith by trade and he and his wife first made their home in Fulton County about the year 1850. Mr. and Mrs. Hectorne have had one child, Edmond P., who is with his parents. In politics Mr. Hectorne is a supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and has served as Township Collector for one year and held the office of Assessor three terms. His religious connection is with the Catholic Church.

HELLE, Fred, Jr.—Under the practical tutelage of his pioneer father of the same name, Fred Helle, Jr., grew to maturity on the farm in McDonough County, where he was born November 8, 1862, and where he lived until 1869, when his family removed to Fulton County. Educated in the public schools, and having a natural predilection for farming, the young man then began an independent career as a renter of the Peter Yarter farm, a year later purchasing 179 acres on Section 18, Cass Township. This farm formerly was owned by L. W. Ross.

In 1903 Mr. Helle added to his original farm 187 acres in the same section, and at present is devoting his attention principally to stock-raising, in which he is successful, and of which he has a thorough understanding. In Mason County, Ill., on April 2, 1891, Mr. Helle married Euphemia Miller, who was born in Lewistown, Ill., January 15, 1868. Of this union there are five children: Maro, Cordia, Ross (deceased), Violet and George W.

HELLER, Franklin, a well-known retired farmer, now living in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Putman Township, Fulton County, on September 13, 1848. He is a son of Daniel and Mary (Black) Heller, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Ohio. The paternal grandfather was John Heller, a Pennsylvanian. Daniel Heller, the father, came with his parents to Fulton County in 1835, and first located in Farmington Township. Subsequently he moved to Putman Township, and there purchased 160 acres of land situated a mile southeast of Cuba, which he improved in a most thorough manner. There for a number of years his father operated a tannery, served as Supervisor of the township and held other local offices.

Franklin Heller was educated in the public schools of Cuba, Ill. He was one of a family of seven children, four of whom are still living, and in early manhood he assumed the conduct of the home farm. He now owns 240 acres, which he himself farmed until 1901, when he built a fine residence in Cuba, which he occupied in 1902. His farms are now rented.

On February 6, 1870, Mr. Heller was united in marriage with Sarah Hasty, who was born in Putman Township, Fulton County, and died on January 6, 1902. The offspring of this union were four children, namely: Orphie (Mrs. Churchill), Lucy V. (Mrs. Watson), M. Blanche (Mrs. Brown) and Curtis F. Politically Mr. Heller is a Republican and held the office of Road Commissioner for one term. Religiously he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is one of the most prominent citizens in this portion of the county.

HEMENOVER (Hon.) William Hart (deceased), former Justice of the City Court, Canton, Ill., was born in Byron, Sussex County, N. J., July 4, 1822. The family is of German descent, the first American ancestor, Anthony Hemenover, having come from Moravia before the American Revolution. His son, George H., married Phoebe Angeline Allen, a descendant of General Ethan Allen, of Ticonderoga fame, and of this union the subject of this sketch was born. The original family name was "Hem-in-over" ("of the upper house"), but was changed by the subject of this sketch while engaged in journalistic work in Warren County, N. J. At twelve years of age he was known as the "Boy Politician"; from twelve to twenty was engaged in learning the printer's trade in the office of the "Sussex County Herald," in which he served as foreman and editor for three years. He then became proprietor of the "Warren County Journal" at Belvidere, N. J., for three years, and also served as Mayor of that city two terms and was State Printer one term. The father was a farmer and also engaged for a time in mercantile pursuits. The grandfather was a native of Germany and after coming to America bought a farm in Northwestern New Jersey, on which William Hart Hemenover was born. The newly arrived immigrant looked from one mountain to another over the valley, with a lake at each end, and finally bought the valley tract, consisting of about 1,000 acres, paying the Indians therefor seven army coats, five gallons of apple whisky (hard cider) and a quantity of ammunition. This land was afterward divided between the children of the pioneer.

When the subject of this sketch was six years old his father moved to the county seat of Sussex County, and there engaged in business, but soon closed out his business, removing to Clyde, Wayne County, N. Y. This was soon after the famous Morgan episode, in which the Masonic fraternity was charged with murdering one William Morgan, who had mysteriously disappeared after revealing the alleged secrets of Free Masonry. Mr. Hemenover retained a vivid recollection of the popular excitement which followed this incident. Here the father engaged in the hotel business, taking charge of what was known as the "Dixon Stage House," its name being changed to "Hemenover Corner," and here remained five years. He then returned to New Jersey, settling at Newton, the county seat of Sussex County, and there resumed the mercantile business. At this time (which was about the year 1844) the son, William H., became an apprentice under U. G. Fitch in the office of the "Newton (Sussex County) Herald," a paper still in existence. The father died in Belvidere, the county-seat of Warren County, N. J., after which the son went to Hoboken, where he took charge of the "Hudson County Democrat." The mother is still living at Belvidere. While employed as editor of the Hoboken paper Mr. Hemenover came west and was employed as a reporter of the Lincoln-Douglas debates in 1858 for a New York paper, after which he located on the south line of Warren County, Ill., five miles west of Prairie City, where the Mound Church is located. Here he bought eighty acres of land, but remained only two years. This land he improved and afterward sold at an increase of $100 per acre. It can not now be bought for $200 an acre. After leaving Warren County Mr. Hemenover bought 180 acres of land in Fulton County, four and a half miles northeast of Canton, known as the "old Barnes farm." This land he improved and sold at a good figure, when he removed to Canton and became a clerk in the drug store of Dr. Arthur Bell, remaining there about three years. Saving his means he then bought town property and a farm in Warren County of eighty-eight acres, paying for it $18 per acre. After improving this land he, two years later, sold it at $36 an acre, with a crop of seventy-five acres of corn on the same land for $9 per acre. He then bought eight acres in the southwest corner of Canton Township, where he sunk a coal shaft, but suffered an attack of typhoid fever, which lasted three months. Returning to Canton he bought the corner on which the Canton Hotel stands. This property was burned down, and, although inadequately insured, was promptly rebuilt about 1900. He had also for a time conducted the old Pacific Hotel, now the New Churchill House at Canton. His hotel business was turned over to his son Edwin.

For a number of years previous to 1896 Mr. Hemenover served as a Justice of the Peace, but during the year 1896 was elected Justice of the City Court, a position which he retained several years, and to which he was re-elected, but on account of impaired health and deafness, felt it necessary to resign, much to the regret of his constituents. His official record was characterized by fairness and impartiality, and no appeal was ever taken from any of his decisions. His official career also included one year as Mayor of the city of Canton, and as foreman of the first fire department organized at Newton, N. J.

Mr. Hemenover's political recollections cover the last campaign of Andrew Jackson for the presidency, and he ever remained a Jacksonian Democrat. His political policy was based on the motto, "the greatest good for the greatest number," and in casting his vote he sought to secure the best interests of all the people. A cherished souvenir of historic times, which he preserved with great care in his later years, was a solid mahogany stand which had been used in paying the colonial troops during the Revolutionary War, and which he bought while keeping a hotel at Green Village, N. J., at an auction sale of goods belonging to a Dr. Everett.

Judge Hemenover was a Baptist in religious belief, as were his parents, while his wife is a Methodist. He was married at Newton, N. J., August 24, 1845, to Julia Denman Barton, who was born at Stockholm, N. J., March 6, 1826, a daughter of Andrew D. Barton and wife, who were of Irish descent. The former died at the age of ninety-one years, and the latter aged ninety-six, being able in her later years to thread a needle without glasses. The father in early life was a blacksmith, but later became a farmer and fruit dealer, and in religious faith was an ardent Methodist.

Mr. and Mrs. Hemenover were the parents of seven children, of whom all except one are living, namely: Susan Eveline, who became the wife of a Mr. Gosnel (deceased), by whom she had three children: Angeline, married Jacob Whitmore and has three children; Catherine, the wife of Dr. Louis Boyles, has three children; Isabelle, now a widow, having been married twice, first to Frank Chilles and second to John Winegar, both now deceased, and became the mother of two children by the first marriage and one by the second; Mirlam, married William Welsh, Secretary of the T. P. A., and is Government Inspector at Peoria; Edwin R. V. W., married Evaline Girdes, has one child and is at present proprietor of the Canton Hotel; one child, who died at the age of six years, was a prodigy in mathematics and a pet of the entire community. Mr. Hemenover became a member of the Masonic fraternity in 1842, and for the remainder of his life retained the satin hand-painted apron which he wore that year; had also been an Odd Fellow. Among the souvenirs preserved by him was a photo of members of the New Jersey State Editorial Association, which was the first of its kind organized in America, and of which he was a member, and another of leading journalists of the East, in which he was a prominent figure. A man of genial temperament and the possessor of an interesting fund of reminiscences he had a large circle of friends, and was a generous supporter of measures tending to the public good and the welfare of the community in which he lived.

HENDERSON, Isaac G.—The activity of Isaac G. Henderson has spanned many years of central Western history, and has embraced success in blacksmithing, agriculture and politics. Arriving at Bernadotte, Ill., as a rugged lad of fifteen, he first of all was useful in building the log cabin which was to shelter the family from the heat of summer and the cold of winter, and a year later removed to Section 2, Cass Township, Fulton County, where his father, Mason T. Henderson, entered 320 acres of land. The elder Henderson was born in Virginia, moved at an early date to Fayette County, Ohio, and there married Catherine Larkin, a native of that State. In Fayette County Isaac G. was born December 19, 1828, and there the family remained until their removal by wagon to Illinois in 1843. The Cass Township farm proved a profitable investment, for son and father soon taxed its resources and fertility, with the result that an additional 120 acres gave them in all 400 acres, upon which to pursue general farming and stock-raising. Mason T. Henderson achieved prominence as a farmer and politician, and in the latter capacity served his township as Justice of the Peace and Highway Commissioner. His death occurred in 1884.

At the age of twenty-one years Isaac G. Henderson left home and learned the blacksmith trade, which he followed until 1855, in which year he married Elizabeth Fast, a native of Licking County, Ohio, born June 9, 1827. The young people began housekeeping on eighty acres purchased by Mr. Henderson in Cass Township, and in 1857 he added 120 acres more, upon which they carried on general farming and stock-raising until the retirement of Mr. Henderson in 1886. Since then the family home has been in Cuba, Fulton County. The children in the family are: Nelson, Arthur, Mary, Alice (wife of Mr. Deakin), Fred and James.

Like his father before him Mr. Henderson has ranged his political preferences on the side of the Democratic party, and has served as Supervisor, Road Commissioner, School Director, Constable and Justice of the peace. Personally Mr. Henderson is popular and agreeable, and at the age of seventy-eight retains his mental and physical vigor, and his interest in the larger undertakings of the infant century.

HENDERSON, Wesley N.—The family of which Wesley N. Henderson is an industrious and successful representative was established in Cass Township, Fulton County, by his father, Nathaniel Henderson, in 1843. The latter was born in Virginia, and in early life removed to the wilds of Ohio, where he married Catherine Larkins, a native of the Buckeye State. He journeyed from Ohio to Fulton County in a wagon, bringing little with him save the absolute necessities of life, and depending solely upon the fertility of the soil and his own indefatigable energy. To his original property he added from time to time until he owned 300 acres of land, which, at the time of his death, was practically all under cultivation.

Wesley N. Henderson was born May 1, 1849, on the farm upon which his father settled upon coming to the State, and since has made this his home. He received a practical common school education and a thorough training in agriculture and farm management. In Monmouth, this State, May 19, 1890, he married Ida Casper, who was born in Warren County, Ill., January 18, 1853, and to their union have been born five children: Lanson, Thomas J., Minnie B., Marvin E. and May. Mr. Henderson now owns 240 acres of the old homestead, having bought out the other heirs, and he is engaged in general farming and stock-raising. His land reaches into three sections—2, 10 and 11—and is well adapted to the produce generally associated with the Central West. Mr. Henderson has been an active Democrat for many years and now is serving as Justice of the Peace, having formerly held the office of Deputy County Sheriff and Constable. He is an attendant at the Methodist Episcopal Church. Altogether he is a wide-awake and progressive agriculturist, a public-spirited and enlightened citizen, and a promoter of education, good government and kindred civilizing agencies. In character he is upright and reliable, and enjoys the confidence and good will of all who know him.

HENKLE, R. F.—One of the oldest real-estate, loan and insurance enterprises in Canton is that established in 1869 by C. N. Henkle. The founder, a poor boy, was the best possible candidate for a successful real-estate business. He worked harder than would the son of wealthy parents, and he was less easy to discourage. His field of operation was an advantageous one, both from the town and country standpoint, and he pursued clean methods and made his word and judgment respected. The result was a brokerage business which, while financially paying, placed the community in a favorable light to those living in adjacent towns and country. The business of Mr. Henkle passed from his management to that of his brother, R. F. Henkle, in October, 1897, and since has prospered through the energy and excellent business capacity of the younger man.

R. F. Henkle is a native of Appanoose County, Iowa, where he was born September 25, 1856. His father, E. W. Henkle, was born in Virginia in 1809, and his mother, formerly Elizabeth Smith, was a native of Ohio, born in 1813. The former died in 1886, and the latter in 1884. The subject of this sketch had the educational advantages of the public schools of Canton, and, after an absence from the city for some years, returned to assume the responsibility of his brother's affairs in 1897. In 1879 he was united in marriage to Melvina Freed, a native of Iowa, and of this union there are seven children: Gertrude, Pearl, Elizabeth, Mabel, Esther, Frankie and Newton. Mr. Henkle is a Democrat in politics, and, in 1903, was elected Supervisor of Canton. He is fraternally connected with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

HENRY, John B., one of the firm of Ehrenhart & Henry, dealers in fresh and salt meats, on South Main Street, Lewistown, Ill., was born in Lewistown, Fulton County, September 10, 1881, a son of John B. and Clara (Walker) Henry. The father was one of the leading attorneys of Fulton County. He was of Irish extraction and inherited that genial humor and sparkling wit for which the sons of Erin are noted. He was quite entertaining in company and made many friends. He soon won a prominent place in the profession. He died in 1887 and his worthy widow still makes her home in Lewistown.

John B. Henry, Jr., received his mental training in the Lewistown High School, graduating with the class of 1897. He then pursued a course of study in the Gem City Business College, Quincy, Ill., where he graduated in 1900. On his return home he bought a half interest in the meat market above mentioned. This partnership has proved very successful and the patronage of the concern has steadily increased. The firm conducts one of the best equipped markets to be found not only in Lewistown, but in this section of the State. They use machines such as are in vogue in the best places of the kind in the larger cities. They slaughter their own stock, make their own sausage, and operate a cold storage department, having a capacity of twenty-five animals.

The subject of this sketch is a thoroughly capable business man and his methods of dealing have gained for him the confidence of his patrons. Politically Mr. Henry is a Democrat and fraternally is a member of the K. of P.

HERBERT, George R., Mayor of the city of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., who has been prominently identified with the business and public interests of that community for a number of years, was born in the county on February 28, 1859. He is a son of Albert and Barbara (Baughman) Herbert, natives of Ohio, his father being numbered among the pioneers of Fulton County, where he settled in 1836. In 1849 he went to California, spending two years there, and on his return bought 160 acres of land in Section 27, Cass Township, where he was successfully engaged in farming during the remainder of his life. He was a man of much force of character and strict probity, and took a good citizen's interest in public affairs, serving as Township Collector and Assessor. He died March 24, 1882, and his wife is living in Fulton County.

MRS. JOHN McCLELLAND

George R. Herbert was reared on the paternal farm in Cass Township, and in his youthful days utilized the advantages of the district schools in the vicinity of his home. In early manhood he devoted himself to farming, and successfully continued in that occupation until 1886. In that year he retired from agricultural pursuits and established his residence in Cuba, where he has since taken a conspicuous part in the commercial and official activities of the city. In 1892 he assumed the management of the Andrews Brothers & Company lumber interests in Cuba, which that firm sold to the Alexander Lumber Company in 1904. The concern, under Mr. Herbert's management, which has done business in Cuba for about twenty years, is one of the most complete lumber yards and building supply depots in Fulton County. Mr. Herbert is also extensively interested in town property, owning large business blocks which he rents and supervises.

On March 4, 1881, Mr. Herbert was united in marriage with Cora Murphy, who was born in Fulton County and is a daughter of Albert Murphy, a highly respected citizen of Cuba. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert have one son, Albert, who is a student in Brown College, Galesburg.

In politics Mr. Herbert is an earnest Democrat, and a very prominent and influential factor in the local councils of his party. He has held the office of City Treasurer and has served five terms as President of the Board of Education. For three terms he has efficiently and faithfully discharged the duties of Mayor of Cuba, and is now serving in that capacity. During his administration, in 1900, a fine electric light system was installed by the city, which operates it and maintains sixty-five arc and 1,200 incandescent lights. Mr. Herbert is a man of superior executive ability and high character, and commands the respect and esteem of the entire community.

HERBERT, Theodore, who is successfully engaged in farming in Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township on August 15, 1853. He is a son of James M. and Sarah (Orwig) Herbert, natives of Ohio, where the father was born in Ashland County in 1826. The paternal grandparents were John and Becky (Long) Herbert, the former a native of New York State and the latter of Delaware, and they were married in Ohio. On the maternal side the grandparents, John and Jane Orwig, were born in Ohio. James M. Herbert came with his parents to Cass Township about the year 1835, when Fulton County was new and very sparsely settled. After he reached maturity he purchased land in Section 24, Cass Township, and at the time of his death, December 11, 1902, owned 160 acres there. The widow is living with Mrs. J. S. Swanson at Gray Ridge, Mo.

Theodore Herbert is the second of a family of eight children, six of whom are still living. In boyhood he attended the district schools of Cass Township, and on reaching maturity applied himself to farming. He now owns 270 acres in Cass Township, forty acres being located where he now lives in Section 24. This he bought in 1894. He has made all the improvements, having built a fine house in 1892, and, with his sons, works all the land himself.

On March 13, 1881, Mr. Herbert was united in marriage with Nancy A. Vanhouten, who was born in Cass Township, and is a daughter of James Vanhouten, one of the early settlers of the township, the father dying in 1895 and the mother in 1893. The children resulting from this union are: James Edward, who is now attending college at Adrian, Mich., studying for the ministry; Carrie May (Mrs. James H. Smith), who resides adjoining the home place; Clyde and Ray.

Religiously Mr. Herbert is affiliated with the Methodist Episcopal Church. In general politics he is a Democrat, but votes for the men and measures he thinks to be the best interests of all the people. He is one of the most careful and systematic farmers in Fulton County, and through his energy and method the best results are produced.

HERRING, Horatio N., who is among the most energetic and thriving farmers in Putman Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township on January 13, 1849, a son of Major Joseph R. and Margaret (Moran) Herring, natives of Maryland. (See sketch of Joseph R. Herring immediately following.) The subject of this sketch was reared on the paternal farm and received his early training in the district schools in the vicinity. On reaching the age of twenty-one years he applied himself to farming on the homestead for himself, and this continued successfully for a long period. In 1897 he purchased the John I. Oviatt farm, and now has 400 acres of land, all of which he operates, besides 436 acres of the home farm. On this property he has made all the improvements, the last of which was a barn 48 by 50 feet in dimensions, built in 1894. He devotes considerable attention to stock-raising, of which he raises a large amount.

In August, 1878, Mr. Herring was united in marriage with Sarah Weaver, a native of Fulton County, and daughter of Alfred Weaver, a native of Virginia. Five children have resulted from this union, namely: Josie, Horace, Martin, Sybil and Alfred. In politics Mr. Herring is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Mutual Aid Society. He is one of the prosperous and substantial farmers of the township, which has so long been his home, and is respected by all who know him.

HERRING (Maj.) Joseph R., for many years an energetic and successful farmer in Putman Township, Fulton County, Ill., but now living in leisurely enjoyment of the fruits of his toil, was born in Baltimore, Md., August 18, 1820. His father, Thomas Herring, was a native of Baltimore, while his mother, Hannah (Burnett) Herring, was born in Richmond, Va. His grandfather, also named Thomas Herring, was a native of Scotland, who, on account of his hostility to monarchical despotism as it then existed, left his native country with his wife and daughter, settling east of Baltimore on Herring's Run, which received its name from him. Thomas Herring (II), father of the subject of this sketch, with five others, was captured on a vessel from Baltimore and pressed into the British naval service, but refused to acknowledge allegiance to the King of England. He spent his life upon the sea, serving for two years under command of Commodore Stephen Decatur, but finally died while rounding Cape Horn. His wife, Hannah (Burnett) Herring, and mother of Joseph R., was born in 1800 and died in 1835. Mr. Joseph R. Herring has in his possession a miniature portrait of his father painted on ivory, which was placed on a carved piece of mahogany attached to the breast of an eagle, and presented to his father by Commodore Decatur in recognition of meritorious service in the American navy.

Previous to coming to Illinois in 1845 the subject of this sketch was employed for five years in the mill of the Baltimore Water Company. From the period of his arrival in Fulton County until the time of his retirement from active life, with the exception of an interval of military service, he was engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1861 he enlisted in the Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, was elected Lieutenant of his company, and then went to Camp Butler. In 1862 he was promoted to a captaincy and in 1864 to the rank of Major.

On March 8, 1846, Mr. Herring was united in marriage with Margaret Ann Moran, who was born in Baltimore, Md., and he and his wife became the parents of four children, namely: Hannah, wife of Frederick Stockbarger, residing in Moulton, Iowa; Horatio Nelson, who married Sarah Weaver and is now residing on the old homestead; Josephine H., widow of J. W. Resor, and Librarian of the Canton Public Library; and Margarete, the wife of Charles H. Barnard, residing in Canton Township. Mrs. Herring died February 12, 1887.

In politics Mr. Herring has followed the fortunes of the Whig and Republican parties. His religious faith is that of the Baptist Church. Fraternally he is a member of the G. A. R., Joseph Hooker Post, No. 64. As a farmer Mr. Herring was careful and methodical, and the best results attended his work. As a man he has always been upright and dutiful, and as a citizen has taken an earnest interest in the public welfare. The respect and esteem of all his fellow citizens are the solace of his declining years.

HEYLIN, Jesse, was born December 15, 1865, in what is known as the Barker Grove settlement in Farmers Township, Fulton County, three miles north of Table Grove. He worked on farms and attended school in the neighborhood until he was eighteen years old, when he began teaching school. He followed the avocation of teacher, newspaper reporter and publisher until 1893, when he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, being admitted to the bar and becoming a practicing attorney in 1895. In 1897 he was elected a member of the Board of Supervisors from Canton and declined renomination. He was City Attorney of Canton from 1900 to 1904. In June, 1907, he was appointed Master in Chancery of the Circuit Court of Fulton County, which position he still holds.

Speaking of his work as a member of the Board of Supervisors the "Fulton Democrat," published at Lewistown, in its issue of September 28, 1898, says:

"Mr. Heylin has made himself famous in a day and rendered to Fulton County the greatest service ever performed by a Supervisor in its annals of seventy-five long years. The county has been bankrupt by boodle pauper bills, criminal expenses, county supplies, bridges over cowpaths, etc. The Supervisors have taxed the people to the limit allowed by law and put the county in debt over $30,000 for current expenses, without one dollar expended on public buildings, macadam roads or other permanent or creditable improvements. At the late July session the County Board seemed for the first time to realize the terrible condition to which the county had been brought. The one wail of these gentlemen about the streets of Lewistown during that session was: 'What shall we do to be saved?'"

"In a helpless and hopeless way the Board appointed a committee to make a full investigation of this subject and report to the September session their findings and recommendations, with the hope that some escape might be found from utter bankruptcy and ruin. Chairman Marshall appointed as such committee Messrs. Jesse Heylin, of Canton; James Neville, of Joshua, and A. G. Morse, of Farmington. With the approval and consent of his colleagues Mr. Heylin proceeded upon an exhaustive investigation of the evils from which the county is suffering and inquiry into possible means of lawful escape from them. He sent letters of inquiry to all the County Clerks and Chairmen of County Boards in the 102 counties of Illinois, and to many prominent officers outside of the State. The result was that he received full and valuable replies from hundreds of these able men. The inquiries presented to them called out a mass of information and suggestions that enabled Mr. Heylin to make at the September session of our County Board a full and exhaustive report upon all these vital questions, the whole epitomizing in the standing rules, as formulated by Mr. Hey-

MR. AND MRS. ROBERT McCLELLAND

lin, adopted almost verbatim and published officially in the "Fulton Democrat" of last week, which in February next becomes the law in Fulton County on these questions, and which, if adhered to, will end forever the wretched method of county expenditures that has bankrupted the treasury and brought disgrace and despair to our people.

"This report and these Heylin standing rules bear the closest scrutiny. Apparently they cover the whole scope of the vital questions involved. Fault-finders and critics find themselves answered and confounded by a second careful reading of the rules. But more important than all else, the Heylin standing rules are law.

"The report and rules are a masterpiece. The credit is exclusively due to Supervisor Jesse Heylin. Radical and uncompromising a Republican as he is, the "Fulton Democrat" cheerfully accords him this high praise that eminently is his due."

Mr. Heylin was one of the founders and promoters of the Canton Chautauqua Association, and has ever been an active participant in every forward movement for the benefit of the community in which he resides.

HEZLEP, James, a well known and much respected farmer and stock raiser, living on Section 30, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Waterford Township, that county, July 28, 1852, a son of James and Eunice C. (Sykes) Hezlep, natives of Pennsylvania. The parents settled in Fulton County about the year 1830, locating in Waterford Township, where the mother died, October 10, 1873, and was buried in Oak Hill Cemetery. James Hezlep, Sr., afterward moved to Independence, Montgomery County, Kan., where he died December 24, 1886. He and his wife were the parents of the following children, namely: Samuel and Jennie, who died in infancy; William Porter, who died November 20, 1867; Lucretia, who married J. W. Smith, and died October 2, 1902, leaving four sons and two daughters; Jennie, wife of E. P. Truitt, a resident and editor in California; James; and Mary B., who married Alexander McEwen and died in California January 15, 1901.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the home farm, and received his mental training in the district schools in the vicinity of his home and in the public schools of Havana, Ill. In the spring of 1876 Mr. Hezlep went to Montgomery County, Kan., where he was engaged in farming for about thirteen years. In 1889 he returned to Fulton County and farmed for a while on rented land. In 1903 he moved to the George W. Bordner farm, which he now operates on shares. He is a careful, systematic and enterprising farmer and his labors are attended by satisfactory results. His stock, of which he has a considerable amount, is all of good grades. Mr. Hezlep is a man of strict integrity and upright life, and maintains an excellent standing as a citizen.

On October 6, 1875, Mr. Hezlep was united in marriage with Mary Belle Patterson, a daughter of Robert and Isabel (Moore) Patterson, of Ohio, who settled in Liverpool Township some years previously. There Mrs. Patterson died February 21, 1873, and her husband passed away October 6, 1877. They were the parents of three children, namely: Mary Belle; Martha Ellen, who married L. W. Potts and died February 12, 1871; and Lydia Jane, who became the wife of Homer L. Knott and died June 15, 1892, leaving three children—Frank, Fannie and Don.

Mr. and Mrs. Hezlep have had nine children, as follows: William M., born March 2, 1876; Almira B., born August 25, 1877; James Roy, born August 11, 1879, who was a soldier in the Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry and served three years in the Philippines; Fred Porter, a farmer in Waterford Township, born March 6, 1881, who married Celesta Knott; Minnie A., born March 11, 1883, wife of Raymond Payne, a resident of Cedardale, Okla.; Frank Grover, born April 15, 1886; Chester T., who was born March 24, 1888, and died July 27, 1904; Alva Edward, born December 13, 1890; and Dollie Lucretia, born January 21, 1897. In politics Mr. Hezlep is a supporter of the Democratic party, and has filled the office of Road Commissioner with credit to himself and acceptability to his constituents. He takes a deep interest in church work, and is a steadfast advocate of the cause of the schools. The best interests of his township and county have always found in him an earnest advocate. Mr. and Mrs. Hezlep are consistent members of the Christian Church.

HICKEY, T. O.—As an educator T. O. Hickey stands high in public esteem in Fulton County, of which he has been a resident since 1892. Mr. Hickey was born in Ohio, July 15, 1870, a son of R. F. and Evalyn (McClure) Hickey, natives of the Buckeye State, and grandson of Mr. and Mrs. William Hickey, who were born in Virginia. His maternal grandfather, Andrew McClure, was born in Maryland.

The educational advantages of Mr. Hickey were afforded by the common schools and the Ohio State Normal, and he eventually taught school two years in his native State. For four years he was engaged in the same occupation in Peoria County, and while there served as a member of the Board of Trustees of the town of Glasford. Since coming to Fulton County he has taught about eight years, and in the meantime has been prominent in local politics, serving as Supervisor of Banner Township during 1903-04, and as Justice of the Peace for several years. In 1893 Mr. Hickey married Anna Davis, a native daughter of Illinois, and former pupil of her husband. Fraternally Mr. Davis is connected with the Order of Eagles.

HIGGINS, Daniel M.—The career of Daniel M. Higgins is an expression of well directed and intelligent industry, of devotion to the best interests of the community, and promotion of the best tenets of agriculture. His financial standing is indicated by the possession of about 1,120 acres of land in Illinois and Kansas, all of which has come to him through the exercise of thrift, good management and business sagacity. Mr. Higgins, whose home place consists of 240 acres in Section 25, Deerfield Township, is a native of Cass Township, Fulton County, where he was born October 25, 1852. He is the fourth in order of birth of seven sons and two daughters of Hiram and Elizabeth (Baughman) Higgins, the former of whom was born in Ohio in 1820, and the latter in Cass Township, this county, in 1828. Hiram Higgins came in a wagon from Ohio to Cass Township about 1844, where he was married in February of the same year, and soon after set up housekeeping in a log cabin on Section 32. He later bought land in this section and Section 29, in time owning a farm of 400 acres, the greater part of which was under cultivation. After his death, October 27, 1883, his widow remained on the homestead a couple of years, and then spent the balance of her life with her daughter, Mrs. Ellen Landis. Mr. Higgins was a public-spirited and enterprising pioneer, and eventually filled various offices of trust and responsibility.

Average opportunities accompanied Daniel M. Higgins to the threshold of his independent career. He early was taught to make his energies of value around the home farm, and was largely concerned with its management at the time of his marriage, in 1883, to Sarah E. Heller, a native of Deerfield Township, and born September 17, 1858. Mrs. Higgins is a daughter of John J. and Lydia (Zimmerman) Heller, natives of Ohio and Deerfield Township, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Higgins are the parents of the following children: Hayward C., Charles Meredith, Boyd V., Gladys May and Audrey M. For the two years following his marriage Mr. Higgins lived on the home place, and then went to Missouri, where he experienced indifferent agricultural success for three years. Returning to Illinois with renewed appreciation of its advantages of soil and climate, he lived on the farm of his father for about four years, then purchased part of the place, which he sold two years later. He then became owner of his present home place of 240 acres, formerly the property of N. S. Johnson, in Section 25, and later bought eighty acres in Section 35, also 164 acres skirting the river, which latter property he disposed of in 1905. He also owns 800 acres of land in Kansas, and on all of his property is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, making a specialty of the latter occupation, however. While many improvements existed on his farms at the time of purchase, he has built and rebuilt extensively, and has kept pace with the advance in agriculture through the various mediums at the disposal of intelligent students of land culture.

A Democrat in political affiliation, Mr. Higgins has avoided the thorny and uncertain ways of the office-seeker, contenting himself with the casting of an intelligent and well-thought-out vote. At the same time he is not unmindful of his duty in promoting clean and fair local government, and he has acceptably served as Tax Collector and Supervisor of Deerfield Township. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. A man of sterling general worth, he is respected by all with whom he is associated, and presents, in the variety and extent of his success, an example worthy of emulation by the youth of the rising generation.

HILL, C. M.—On a plantation in Franklin County, Ala., C. M. Hill was born March 1, 1831. His destiny as an upbuilder of Fulton County, Ill., was early foreshadowed, for his parents, William and Sarah (Cotton) Hill, were even then contemplating removal from the sweltering Alabama summers to the more bracing and promising climate of a Northern State. Preparation for their departure was long drawn out, but the family set out with wagon and oxen in the spring of 1834, camping by the wayside at night, and for three months were at the mercy of the changeable elements. Arriving in Fulton County, Ill., they located on Section 27, Farmington Township, where the elder Hill reared his cabin of logs, cleared his land, and was gaining the competence which he sought when over taken by death in 1846. He suffered the trials and discouragements which were the lot of the pioneer, and, having no nearer market, hauled his grain and general produce to Copperas Creek, Liverpool and Peoria. To himself and wife were born seven children, all of whom were scattered to homes and occupations of their own when the mother died in 1875.

C. M. Hill gained a rudimentary education in a house built of logs, fourteen feet square. When his mother died in 1875 he moved to his present farm on Section 27, Farmington Township, where he built a frame house in 1876, and where he owns 160 acres of land. Practically all of the improvements are of his making, and the property is one of the most valuable in the township. Attention to business and good judgment enabled Mr. Hill to retire from active farm life in 1898, but he still makes his home on the old homestead with tenants having charge of the farm. Mr. Hill is a Republican in politics, and although averse to office-holding, has served several years as a member of the Board of Education. From early manhood he was a member of the Reformed Church at Norris until it was disbanded, since then never having united with any other denomination.

At Farmington, Ill., in 1856, Mr. Hill was united in marriage to Mary A. Hulick, a native of Farmington Township, and a daughter of Isaac and Ruth A. (Mills) Hulick, natives of Kentucky, and early settlers of Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Hill have been born twelve children—six boys and six girls—all of whom are living, namely: Francis M., Edward L., Alva W., Charles R., Robert W. and Clinton C. (boys), and Louisa A., Clara E., Almira E., Mary E., Sarah E. and Dessie A. (girls). The mother was called away by death on June 10, 1898. All the children were present at her obsequies.

HILTON, Cyrus.—One of the most earnest promoters of the stock and grain trade in Cuba and vicinity is Cyrus Hilton, who, aside from any prestige he may have received from connection with a fine old pioneer family of the county, has mapped out his own fortunes with a certainty of intent and purpose which could have no other result than substantial success. Mr. Hilton was born in Putman Township, Fulton County, in 1853, a son of David and Sarah (Bishop) Hilton, natives of Ohio. David Hilton had in him the making of a pioneer, and his opportunity came in the later 'thirties, when he sold his farm in the Buckeye State and came overland with wagons to Fulton County, and settled on eighty acres of land in Section 24, Putman Township. He lived to an advanced age, and to some extent realized his expectations in coming to a crude and undeveloped community.

Cyrus Hilton was reared on a farm, and in 1874, at the age of twenty-one, married Sarah Foxweather, a native of Fulton County. He continued to engage in general farming and stock-raising until 1889, when he purchased the Maxwell place of six and one-half acres and one hundred acres known as the "Winter Bottom farm," and ever since has been engaged in the stock and grain business, making a specialty of draft horses of Norman pedigree and high-grade cattle. Since purchasing this farm Mr. Hilton has operated it in connection with a partner under the firm name of Bean & Hilton. Many fine improvements mark the management of the present owners, and the place is considered one of the best equipped in the county, having a delightful country residence, substantial barns and ample facilities for feeding and handling large numbers of stock. Mr. Hilton is one of the best informed and most progressive residents of his township, a man of genial and approachable manner, and keen interest in the affairs which engage the attention and affect the welfare of the community. For some time he has been a member of the Town Board, and also of the Board of Supervisors. He is fraternally connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

HINDE, John R. M. D., who is successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that place August 26, 1875. He is a son of Robert M. Hinde, who is a resident of the same town, and is retired from active life.

Dr. Hinde received his early instruction in the public schools of Lewistown, and subsequently graduated from the high school. He then took up a three years' course at Notre Dame University, South Bend, Ind., completing his studies in 1893. In 1897 he entered Rush Medical College, Chicago, from which he was graduated with the class of 1902. After four years of close application to his books he received his diploma, returned to Lewistown, and opened an office in the Beadles Block. He has already acquired a good practice, and enjoys the confidence of his patients and the general public. On political issues Dr. Hinde is ranked on the side of the Democratic party. Religiously he is an adherent of the Catholic faith.

HINKLE, Samuel R., lately a much respected and retired farmer residing in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., but now deceased, was born in Washington County, Md., December 2, 1837, a son of Samuel and Anna (Rickard) Hinkle, natives of Franklin County, Pa., where the father was born in 1805 and the mother in 1803. On coming to Illinois they located in Joshua Township, Fulton County, where the father followed farming. He died in January, 1877, and his wife passed away in 1879.

The subject of this sketch came to Fulton County with his parents, having attended the district schools in his boyhood. He was reared on the farm, and on reaching maturity carried on farming until his retirement from active life. He built his recent home in Canton in 1903.

On February 21, 1860, Mr. Hinkle was married to Miss Minerva F. Randolph, who was born in Canton Township, Fulton County, in 1837, and in girlhood received her mental training in the district schools in her neighborhood, and at Galesburg, Ill. After a singularly harmonious married life of forty-seven years, Mrs. Hinkle was left alone by the death of her husband from heart trouble on March 20, 1907, after an attack of la grippe. They had no children, but the children of other families were often made welcome and happy visitors in their hospitable home. Few men in Canton were more widely known than Mr. Hinkle, and his passing away was deeply deplored by a large circle of friends. He was a Republican in political faith, and held a number of positions of trust and responsibility, including those of School Trustee for several years, Assistant Supervisor of Canton Township two terms and Road Commissioner for twenty years. Mr. Hinkle was not a member of any church, but was an earnest believer in the doctrines of the Swedenborgian, or New Church, of which he was a liberal supporter and faithful attendant upon its services whenever held.

HOLLISTER, Lester.—The junior member of the firm of Ray & Hollister represents the kind of business material to which the older residents of Avon look for a maintenance of stable, progressive conditions. His largest usefulness lies in the future, as he now is but twenty-seven years old, having been born on a farm in Fulton County March 17, 1879. He represents the third generation of his family in Fulton County, his grandparents having arrived here while still it was a wilderness, and with little to start with, succeeded to a large and fertile property. His father, Lawrence H. Hollister, was born in Fulton County September 22, 1858, and his mother, Mary (Anderson) Hollister, was born in the same county October 8, 1857. For many years Lawrence H. Hollister has owned and occupied a farm in Union Township, 160 acres in extent, and well equipped with facilities for extensive general farming and stock-raising.

As Lester Hollister grew to maturity he developed commercial rather than agricultural tendencies, and, like his present business partner, began his active city life as clerk in a grocery store. He acquired a practical common school education in the town of Avon, and started his present grocery and meat business February 3, 1906. Because of his energy and enthusiasm and sound business tactics he is bound to realize his ambitions, and to see many years of activity in his wholesome, necessary and profitable calling. Mr. Hollister is social in his tendencies, is prominent among the Knights of Pythias and in the Universalist Church. Politically he subscribes to the principles and issues of the Republican party. He was one of the first to volunteer from Fulton County in the Spanish-American War, and creditably served through the greater part of the struggle as a member of Company D, Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He is popular and well liked and has hosts of friends throughout the town and county.

HOLT, Thomas A.—Of the younger generation of farmers whose efforts promise to lend vigor and prestige to the future of Bernadotte Township, special mention is due Thomas A. Holt, son of William Holt, the latter one of the large landowners and most successful agriculturists in Fulton County. Mr. Holt was born in the village of Bernadotte, Fulton County, October 1, 1870, and his entire life has been spent within the boundaries of this township. He received a thorough manual training under his father, and has always recognized farming as one of the best, most independent and most useful occupations of mankind.

The material assets of Mr. Holt are represented by the farm of forty acres on Section 18, purchased in 1896. Ten years of occupancy have individualized the place, and converted it into an indicator of the personal traits and characteristics of the owner. To some extent general farming is carried on, and various kinds of high grade stock graze in the pastures. The home is a roomy, comfortable one, and the barns and outbuildings are modern and in good repair. Mr. Holt's settlement upon his farm occurred at the time of his marriage, January 27, 1896, to Emma C. Hannon, who was born in Astoria, Ill., August 4, 1870. There are four children in the family, namely: Paul, born in 1897; Wayne, born in 1899; Helen, born in 1901; and Arthur, born in 1903. Mr. Holt is a Republican politically, and fraternally a Knight of Pythias. With his wife he is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He has energy, resource and keen intelligence, which qualities insure him business success.

HOLT, William.—For more than thirty-five years the name of William Holt has been identified with Fulton County, and during that time his zeal has found an outlet in the occupations of peace and war, and his experiences have ranged from sickness and health, from poverty to prosperity. He is one of the very early families of Bernadotte Village, where he was born October 11, 1839, and to which came his father, Willard Holt, in 1831. Willard Holt and his wife, Minerva (Nichols) Holt, were born among the rugged hills of Vermont, and it would seem that something of the granite of their surroundings entered into the framing of their thoughts and aspirations. At any rate, their journey westward was accomplished only after the most severe sacrifices in order to purchase clothing, food and other equipment, and on the way they met with many obstacles and disadvantages incident to travel at that early day. To encourage him upon his arrival in the wilds, as Illinois then was known, Mr. Holt had the assurance of a comfortable livelihood from his trade of brick mason and plasterer, and this he followed in Bernadotte for the balance of his active life.

William Holt has grown up with Fulton County. The prairies of the Central West were as ignorant of their possibilities for usefulness as was the barefooted boy whose meager education was acquired at the first subscription school in his neighborhood. Eventually he began work on a farm and was thus employed when the Civil War presented a claim upon his energy and patriotism. Enlisting in August, 1862, in Company I, One Hundred and Third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, he went into camp at Peoria, and from there was ordered to the front, where, at Mission Ridge, the One Hundred and Third distinguished itself by charging up the ridge and capturing the rebel batteries. Later the regiment advanced to Atlanta, Ga., in all taking part in thirty engagements, and Mr. Holt remained an active factor in the ranks until at Raleigh, N. C., he was overcome by sunstroke and passed for dead. He had no hospital record, but through nerve and determination and by the aid of his commanding officer, Colonel Wright, he rallied sufficiently to be able to follow the regular routine of the camp, being finally discharged at Chicago, June 21, 1865.

After returning he was unable for some time to engage in active work, but having finally recovered he rented a farm in Bernadotte Township, purchased a team of horses and turned his attention to farming. On October 31, 1866, he was united in marriage to Mary Z. Brice, who was born in Miami County, Ohio, August 7, 1834, a daughter of William and Margaret (Martin) Brice, who were early settlers of Ohio, and died in that State. Mr. and Mrs. Holt became the parents of the following named children: Rachel J., born December 15, 1867, the wife of George David McDowell, of Kansas; Thomas, born October 1, 1870, a farmer in Bernadotte Township, who married Emma Hannon; and Frank, born November 24, 1878, who married Gertrude McCoy, and lives on a farm in McDonough County. In 1880 Mr. Holt purchased eighty acres of land on Section 18, Bernadotte Township, under heavy timber, all of which he has cleared and improved. Owing to affection of the eyes and heart, probably resulting from exposure during the Civil War, he has been unable to do any hard work during the past few years, and has handed over to younger strength a large part of the farm responsibility. Nevertheless, he has been an influence for good, leading a wholesome and simple life, honest in all of his undertakings, and public spiritedly interested in all that pertains to the welfare of the community. In spite of illness and discouragement, he retains his hold upon the bright side of life, and his heart and sympathies go out to the interests and enthusiasms of the younger generation around him. Mr. Holt has voted the Republican ticket ever since the organization of that party, but he has never held office or been active in local politics. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HOOPES, Henry Clay.—Of the men who have actively participated in the agricultural transformation of Vermont Township, this county, during the past quarter of a century, none are better or more favorably known than Henry Clay Hoopes, owner of a valuable farm on Section 16, and native of a farm a few miles distant from the village of Vermont, where he was born September 3, 1855. (For a more detailed account of the family, see sketch of John A. Hoopes on another page of this work.)

The early influences of Henry Clay Hoopes tended to an appreciation of agriculture as a means of livelihood, and as a boy he was trained to every demand of this important occupation. He had average educational opportunities, confined principally to the winter terms of school, and remained under the paternal roof until after his marriage, November 28, 1879, to Jane Mulkins, who was born in Howard County, Ind., May 7, 1860, a daughter of John and Phoebe (Le Masters) Mulkins. Mr. Mulkins died at the beginning of the Civil War, during the period between his enlistment and mustering in, and his wife subsequently married James Patterson, with whom she came to Illinois in 1868, her death occurring in 1877.

In 1880 Mr. Hoopes purchased eighty acres of land on Section 16, Vermont Township, thirty acres of which were under cultivation, and the balance he cleared of timber and undergrowth, in time adding thirty acres to the original investment. That he has been one of the busy men of the community is apparent from the many changes which he has wrought upon his farm, and the excellent equipment which lightens labor and contributes to economic results. Twenty-two years upon the same property have witnessed a realization of his most practical ambitions, and have placed him among the scientific and progressive landmen of the township. The telephone and rural delivery are but two of the advantages which his energy has helped to introduce, and the splendid rural thoroughfares and well-kept fences speak volumes for the public-spiritedness of himself and his fellow agriculturists.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoopes have had eight children: Homer M., born December 20, 1880, who died April 26, 1904; Elmer, who died at the age of eighteen months, May 25, 1885; Harry, born November 20, 1885; Fannie A., born September 7, 1880, who was married Easter Sunday, 1906, to Ira J. Brown, a farmer of Vermont Township; Johnnie, born August 20, 1890; Ethel J., born April 17, 1894; Lorena Bell, born October 26, 1896; and Donna H., who died at the age of eighteen months. Politically Mr. Hoopes is extremely liberal, although he leans to the side of Republicanism. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. and Mrs. Hoopes, as well as Harry and Fannie, are members of the Christian Church, and are active in its social and benevolent work. The children have been given the best educations the neighborhood affords, and all are studious and purposeful young people. Mr. Hoopes himself is appreciated for his sterling traits of character, for his genial manner and his substantial contribution to the well-being of the township in which his entire life has been passed.

HOOPES, John A.—Few men have contributed more practical encouragement to grain and general produce raisers in Fulton County than John A. Hoopes, whose milling and elevator business has been one of the chief commercial factors of Ipava and vicinity since 1888. With a variety of experience to back him in his project, Mr. Hoopes purchased forty acres of land adjoining Ipava in 1887, at $100 per acre, and the extent of the improvements since instituted may be surmised when it is known that recently he refused $250 an acre for the same. In fact, the present equipment would be sufficient for the conduct of a four hundred instead of a forty-acre farm. In 1888 he began the purchase of grain and general Central Western products, and since has erected a mill with a capacity of 300 bushels every fifteen hours, and which manufactures all kinds of grain foods except flour. The elevator has a capacity of 10,000 bushels. A large amount of mill feed and patent stock foods is kept on hand, and the extensive trade maintains the old while constantly adding new customers.

The financial success of Mr. Hoopes is augmented by a moral influence second to none in the community. He carries with him into business and social life a splendid ethical perspective, and a capacity for acknowledging the good and weeding out the undesirable in general existence. His origin and training have fostered this discrimination. Born on a farm in Vermont Township, Fulton County, December 20, 1849, he is a son of Ellis and Grace (Foulke) Hoopes, the former born at Chester, Pa., in 1804, and the latter near Brandywine, same State, in 1810. The paternal branch of his family traces its origin to the great house of Lancaster, and claims both Scotch and English ancestry. The maternal family knew generations of existence in picturesque Wales. Both the Hoopes and Foulke families were established in the State of Ohio during pioneer days, where the parents were married, and whence they came to Vermont Township, Fulton County, in 1842. It was their fate to endure the struggles and deprivations which confronted the settler in his frontier home, and the father tilled his land and helped to subdue the wilderness until the death of his wife in 1879. He then went to live with his son Henry, where his death occurred in 1886, at the age of eighty-four years. Reared in the faith of the Society of Friends, he maintained the simple tenets of that faith during his entire life, rearing his children in an uncompromising attitude towards truth and morality. He was quiet and unostentatious, avoiding all publicity, and craving no official or other recognition. It was his good fortune to live and to see his twelve children grow to maturity, and his five sons and seven daughters settled in homes of their own. Ten of his children are living. The oldest daughter, Margaret, the widow of Abner Wileman, died in 1895, her husband having been killed at the battle of Stone River during the Civil War, while serving as regimental color-bearer in Company B, Eighty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; Elizabeth, the widow of Anson Haskins, of Erie, Kan., is now deceased;

Susan and her husband, Lewis Kelly, are both deceased; Sarah, widow of Rufus Rhodes, lives in Red Lands, Cal.; William, a farmer of Vermont Township, served in Company B, Eighty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years; Ann, a resident of Vermont, Ill., married for her first husband Amos Miller, a soldier of the Eighty-fourth Illinois Infantry, who died in the hospital at Quincy, Ill., and, for her second husband, Thomas Nelson, a soldier of Company G, Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, also now deceased; Silas F., a resident of Santa Cruz, Cal., served during the war in the regimental band of the Third Illinois Cavalry; Ellis is a resident of Vermont, this State; Ruth is the wife of Stephen Frazier, of Viola, Richland County, Wis.; John A.; Mary, wife of Woodson Brown, of Barnhill, Wayne County, Ill.; and Henry C., a farmer of Vermont Township.

That life held something besides a placid country existence became apparent to John A. Hoopes when the Civil War broke over the land, and he saw his brothers depart upon their mission of uncertain issue. He was fourteen years old when he enlisted, January 26, 1864, in Company G, Fiftieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years, or until the end of hostilities. Joining the regiment in Lynnville, Tenn., in March, following, he was with Sherman during the famous march to the sea, and eventually took part in the grand review in Washington, D. C. The Fiftieth was mustered out of service July 13, 1865, and a sadder, wiser and more resourceful lad returned to his duties on the paternal farm in Vermont Township. In the fall of 1867 the unrest created by his comparatively brief military experience found vent as a member of the Regular Army, which he joined in Wisconsin, September 25th, having arrived in Wisconsin the year previous. As a member of Light Battery B, Fourth United States Artillery, he was stationed at Leavenworth, Kan., and soon began a three years' service on the frontier of Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska and New Mexico. After his discharge at Fort Riley, Kan., September 25, 1870, he returned to Vermont Township, and again took up farming as a means of livelihood.

October 12, 1871, Mr. Hoopes was united in marriage to Josephine M. Knock, who was born in Farmer Township, Fulton County, in April, 1853, a daughter of Daniel E. and Phoebe (Easley) Knock, natives of Delaware and Ohio, respectively. In 1876 Mr. Hoopes bought a 163-acre farm in Bernadotte Township and lived thereon until, disposing of the same, he removed to Ipava in 1883. For a year he was interested in the hardware business in Ipava, and for two years followed carpentering and building, at the end of that time purchasing the farm which he since has owned and occupied adjoining the town. Mr. and Mrs. Hoopes are the parents of the following named children: Bessie L., who died in infancy; F.

Raymond, who is in the restaurant business in Ipava; Josephine A., wife of A. V. MacDougal, of Atlanta, Neb.; Grace, wife of Clyde Morley, of Libertyville, Iowa; Luther L., who married Lizzie Busey and lives in Kewanee, Ill.; Paul E., a bookkeeper and stenographer at San Bernardino, Cal.; Frances E., wife of Fred Brown, of Farmer Township, Fulton County; Clinton B., a student; and Edith H., living at home.

Mr. Hoopes has watched the development of Fulton County for more than half a century, and during that time has been an integral factor in its material and general growth. He is especially active in the cause of temperance and has worked with might and main for the destruction of the liquor traffic. He is a member of the State League, and an honorary member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. He also is a member of the National Anti-Cigarette League, which has for its object the abolition of the use of tobacco in any form by minors. Mr. Hoopes is active in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and contributes generously to this, as to other interests and charities. He is a large-hearted, well-balanced and very popular man, intensely interested in all that pertains to the lasting welfare of the community.

HORN, Jacob.—Identified with Fulton County for fifty-two years and known chiefly as a soldier whose subsequent efforts have been handicapped by physical disability due to war's insatiable demands, Jacob Horn has succeeded in spite of difficulties that to some would seem insurmountable, and is the owner of eighty-three acres of finely improved land in Woodland Township. Born in Knox County, Ohio, September 27, 1836, Mr. Horn is a son of Martin L. and Julia (Oller) Horn, natives of Washington County, Pa., and of German ancestry. Martin Horn brought his family to Fulton County in 1854, settling in the west half of Woodland Township, where his death occurred in 1886. His first wife died in 1863 and he subsequently married Maria Kelly, who died in 1870. Later still he married Martha Severn, who now lives in Browning, Schuyler County, Ill. Of the first union eight children were born, six of whom are still living, the subject of this sketch being the oldest. The others were: John, a retired farmer of Saunders County, Neb.; Isaac, a retired farmer living in Astoria; one daughter, who is the wife of Mr. Miers, of Fandon, McDonough County; Ellen, wife of Solomon Miers, of Astoria; Rebecca, wife of Jacob Baumgartner, a carpenter and builder of Sumnum; Sarah Ann, deceased wife of Martin Ely, of Woodland Township, and Molly, deceased wife of Jackson Horton, of Woodland Township. Mr. Horn was an uncompromising Democrat, but conceded to others the freedom of opinion which he demanded for himself.

Jacob Horn was eighteen years old when he came to Fulton County and he lived with his father until his marriage, August 27, 1858, to Nancy Bateson, who was born in Perry County, Ohio, and came to Fulton County with her parents in 1856. The Bateson family settled in Lewistown, where they remained for some years, but finally located on the farm now owned by Mr. Horn in Section 15, Woodland Township. After his marriage Mr. Horn located on land along the Vermont Road, west of Astoria, and in 1861 built a house for his family on his father's farm in Woodland Township. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company H, Eighty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years, and shortly after was overtaken by nervous prostration, in consequence of which he was transferred to the Invalid Corps at Louisville, Ky. Later he was sent to Indianapolis, Ind., on garrison duty, and there helped to guard 10,000 Rebel prisoners. In addition to his own frail health he was destined to undergo a serious strain on account of the news of his wife's death, August 9, 1863. Only the week before he had received a letter from her stating that she and the children were well and encouraging him in his life as a soldier. On receipt of the sad intelligence of his wife's death he was at once given a furlough and returned home to provide a home for his children, soon thereafter rejoining his regiment, from which he was honorably discharged at the end of the three years' service. The children of this marriage were: Lewis E., a farmer of Woodland Township; Nancy E., who died at the age of twelve years; William Lincoln, of Pasadena, Cal., and Lorena, who died in infancy in 1868.

For three years after the war Mr. Horn was unable to perform manual labor. In 1868 he contracted a second marriage, this time with Margaret Shelby, a native of Virginia, who came to Fulton County with her parents in 1857, and of this union there were three children: Sadie, wife of Walter Merrill, living on the old homestead; Abbie, wife of Mace D. Keeper, a farmer of Woodland Township, and Daniel, an invalid, living with his father.

About 1881 Mr. Horn bought his present farm of eighty-three acres on Section 15, Woodland Township, and since has made important improvements, transforming it into a valuable and productive property. Notwithstanding his enfeebled condition he assisted in making the 10,000 rails required for fencing the farm and has set out many of the trees, which have converted it into one of the best fruit-raising properties in the township. He is surrounded with the comforts and conveniences due to a courageous and tried soldier, and many evidences abound of his taste and enterprise during the fifty odd years of his connection with the history of Fulton County.

Ever since he heard Abraham Lincoln make a speech in favor of freedom in 1854, Mr. Horn has been identified in his political convictions with the Republican party. He also holds pronounced prohibition views, resulting largely from what he saw in the army of the bad effect of liquor. He has been a member of the Christian Church ever since he was seventeen years old, while his wife is connected with the United Brethren denomination. Mr. Horn has filled various public trusts but of late years has been practically retired from business except the superintendence of his farming interests.

HOVELL, Jacob John.—For the past eleven years the meat market of Jacob John Hovell has been one of the chief sources of food supply in the town of Avon. Many causes contribute to the success of this popular merchant, not the least of which is a thorough knowledge of his business and a determination to keep his particular branch thereof up to the highest known standard. His shop is made attractive through the strict observance of cleanliness and order, the courtesy of clerks, moderation of prices and good quality of products.

Mr. Hovell has known no other home than Fulton County, where he was born May 14, 1843. The name of his father, Thomas Hovell, is enrolled among the very early settlers of this section, he having arrived here in the summer of 1838. Thomas Hovell was born in England February 14, 1809, and sailed to America in 1836, locating first in Ohio, whence he removed a year later to Iowa, and thence to Fulton County. Purchasing land in the vicinity of Ellisville, he engaged in general farming and with comparatively little to start on acquired the ownership of about 1,400 acres of land. His success necessarily indicated stable character and business qualities, and he had a moral nature in keeping with his sagacity and thrift. He married in early life Prudence Reynolds, who was a native of Indiana, born May 25, 1820, and to whose practical co-operation he attributed much of his good fortune.

In his youth Jacob J. Hovell acquired a knowledge of both farming saw-milling, of which he made practical use until establishing his present business in Avon in 1895. He received a common school education and has always been public spirited and in favor of excellent schools and general advantages for the youth of the county. In Prairie City, Ill., September 8, 1875, he married Mary E. Bradbury, a native also of Fulton County, born October 29, 1849. Seven children have been added to his family: Leon L., Flora L., May, Frank T., Prudence, Alice and Oren. Mr. Hovell espoused the cause of Democracy in early life and has filled the local offices of Road Commissioner and Tax Collector. Fraternally he is a Mason and Odd Fellow. His long residence within its boundaries and his association with at least three lines of business have given him a wide acquaintance throughout the county, and materially contribute to the maintenance of his present large and lucrative meat business.

HOWARD, Isaac.—In the fall of 1831 a crude and heavily laden wagon drawn by oxen ended its long overland journey in the search for a desirable location, and upon its occupants alighting near what now is Smithfield, Fulton County, still another family was added to the human toilers who were to add vigor and purpose to the early history of Illinois. The owner of the ox-team was Samuel Howard, who was born in Virginia in 1800, and the wife who accompanied him and who later shared his hardships and discouragements with fortitude and patience, formerly was Anna Alderman, a native of New York State, born there in 1802. But for a short time only the travelers occupied their log habitation, moving then to the vicinity of Bernadotte, near Table Grove, where they built another cabin and began the cultivation of 190 acres of land obtained from the Government. Samuel Howard was not destined to a prolonged Illinois career, for long before his dreams of wealth came true his death occurred prematurely in 1838, sixty-nine years ago.

The year after the arrival of his parents in Illinois, in the pioneer home in Table Grove Township, on March 20, 1832, Isaac Howard was born, and at the age of six years was left fatherless. Early responsibility awaited his growing strength and he became a farm hand in different parts of the county, through his energy and economy saving a considerable sum of money, as wealth was counted at that time and place. In 1852 he was able to arrange for the purchase of 320 acres of land in Section 20, Cass Township, and February 21, 1856, brought a wife to preside over his domain, who since has contributed much to his success and advancement. In girlhood Mrs. Howard was Hannah Baughman, a native of Cass Township, and born January 26, 1837. She became the mother of four children, one of whom died in infancy. Those still living are: John W., of Smithfield; Charles G., at Canton, and Luella, wife of Alfred Voorhees. Mr. Howard made all of the improvements on his place, substituted his early residence for one of modern construction and convenience and built barns which provided facilities for stock-raising and storage. In 1900 he retired from active life, and since has sold all of his land but the sixty acres upon which he is passing the evening of his life. He has gained moderate wealth and honor while pursuing his industrious and well directed career, and has not only set an example of practical, intelligent farming, but has served his township in satisfactory manner as Supervisor, Assessor and Collector. Mr. Howard is a man of scrupulous honor and all his life long has observed fairness and consideration toward his fellowmen.

HOWARD, J. W., a well known and prosperous merchant of Smithfield, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Cass Township, Fulton County in 1861, a son of Isaac and Hannah (Baughman) Howard, natives of Fulton County. Isaac Howard was born in 1832. His home was on Section 29, Cass Township, where he always followed farming with success. He served as Township Supervisor for several terms.

The subject of this sketch was reared on his father's farm and in early youth received his primary education in the public school in Smithfield. For some years he was engaged in agricultural pursuits, continuing in that line until 1887. In that year he bought a stock of hardware in Smithfield and has since conducted a general hardware concern, including paints, oils, fencing, etc., also having a tinshop connected with the store. The business was originally started by C. K. Parvin, who was succeeded by R. H. James, who, in turn, disposed of it to Mr. Howard. Mr. Howard is also a member of the firm of Howard Brothers, of Canton, Ill., and is the owner of a harness shop in Cuba, Ill., where he has built a store. His business enterprises have all proved successful, and he is recognized as a sound and energetic business man.

In 1891 Mr. Howard was united in marriage with Clara Zeigler, a native of Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Howard have been blessed with four children, namely: Ray, Anna, Edith and Ruth. Fraternaly Mr. Howard is affiliated with the M. W. A.

HOWETER, Benjamin, who is among the most successful farmers in Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Berks County, Pa., on February 12, 1847. He is a son of Benjamin and Anna (Lighy) Howeter, natives of the Keystone State. Benjamin Howeter, Sr., settled with his family in Fulton County in 1866, locating on a farm in Section 27, Cass Township. There he carried on farming successfully for many years, and at the time of his death, in 1899, was the owner of 460 acres of very productive and well improved land. He was a farmer of great energy, perseverance and thrift and a citizen of the best repute.

Benjamin Howeter was brought up on the paternal farm, and in boyhood fully utilized the advantages of the district schools in the vicinity of his Pennsylvania home. Since early manhood he has been constantly engaged in farming and has devoted considerable attention to the raising of stock. He is the owner of 157 acres of land in Section 27, Cass Township, and 120 acres in Section 22. All the improvements on his property have been made by him, his comfortable and attractive residence being erected in 1904.

On April 15, 1869, Mr. Howeter was joined in the bonds of matrimony with Mary E. Slock, who was born in Pennsylvania and is a daughter of Conrad and Anna (Reichert) Slock, natives of that State. Mr. and Mrs. Howeter are the parents of five children, as follows: Charles, Amelia (Mrs. Joachim), Cora E. (Mrs. Huffman), Jesse A. and Loren A., at home. In political contests Mr. Howeter votes the Republican ticket. He has made, in the long years of his unremitting labor in Cass Township, a most creditable record as a farmer and citizen.

In his church membership he has been a Lutheran from boyhood and his wife is also identified with that denomination, while most of the children are adherents to the United Brethren Church.

HUBBLE, William Thomas.—A comparatively recent recruit to the farming contingent of Union Township, Fulton County, is William Thomas Hubble, who, in 1899, transferred his allegiance from his native State of Virginia, where he was born in Smith County, November 27, 1866. His parents, Thomas and Elizabeth (Houston) Hubble, were born in Ohio, and the former accompanied his parents to Virginia when a child, remaining in the Old Dominion for the balance of his life. He was a farmer by occupation and possessed considerable business ability.

The youth of William Thomas Hubble was spent on his father's farm and he was educated in the common schools. February 18, 1894, in Prairie City, McDonough County, he was united in marriage to Etta May Zuck, who was born in McDonough County, Ill., April 6, 1871, and of which union there is a son, Charles E. When Mr. Hubble first arrived in Fulton County he worked as a farm hand, having comparatively small means to depend on, but some three years ago purchased his present farm of 160 acres in Union Township. During his brief occupancy many changes have been made upon the property, and the presence of an orderly, practical and intelligent manager is everywhere apparent. Mr. Hubble is engaging in general farming and stock-raising, with a decided preference for the latter department of agriculture. He is a Republican in politics, and is at present serving his township as School Director. In religion he is identified with the Universalist Church.

HUDDLESON, Thomas, a well known farmer of Lee Township, Fulton County, was born in Franklin County, Ohio, January 16, 1848, the son of Mahlon Huddleson, a native of Pennsylvania, and Rebecca (Couch) Huddleson, born in New Jersey. The son Thomas spent his life with his parents until 1858, when at ten years of age, his father having died, he came to Illinois with an uncle who settled in Lee Township, Fulton County, which has since been the home of the subject of this sketch and where, since reaching years of maturity, he has been engaged in farming and stock-raising. In this time his career has been one of marked success, and he is now the owner of 240 acres of the most valuable land in Lee Township.

Mr. Huddleson has been twice married, first in Lee Township, on May 13, 1877, to Elizabeth Jumps, of McLean County, Ill., who was born July 15, 1850. His second wife's maiden name was Ella Maskin, who was born in Pennsylvania July 3, 1847, and to whom he was married November 10, 1892. Mr. Huddleson is the father of seven children, namely: Bert P., Lulu M., Effie, Nettie, Wilbur, Gertrude and Lester. In his religious faith Mr. Huddleson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He takes an active interest in educational matters in his home township, and for several years has served as School Director. In his political relations Mr. Huddleson acts in co-operation with the Democratic party.

HUDSON, (Prof.) Joseph Samuel.—The Canton Sanitarium, established in May, 1902, by Prof. Joseph S. Hudson, has so far realized the expectations of its founder and gained its hold upon the public confidence as to suggest its future recognition among the leading establishments for healing in Fulton County. Its facilities for the care of the sick are modern and complete, its rooms sunny and well ventilated and the most scientific and experienced care is promised those who entrust themselves to its benefits. Prof. Hudson is a healer of long standing, and since the beginning of his practice has shown a tendency to think for himself and draw away from many of the dogmas which have held medical science in leash for centuries. He has ability, independence and originality. Born in Marietta, Washington County, Ohio, March 18, 1849, he comes of a family long established in the Buckeye State, of which also both of his parents were natives. Educated in the public schools, he in time went to Emporia, Lyon County, Kan., where he graduated in Prof. Hanlin's Institute of Healing. He also took a diploma from the Wittmer Institute of Healing, which has a national reputation. He traveled for some time, stopping certain days in other towns in Kansas, finally locating permanently in Canton.

In 1881 Prof. Hudson married Mary S. Maulsby, a native of Canton, Ill., and daughter of William and Matilda (Turner) Maulsby. Previous to her marriage Mrs. Hudson was an educator. Her grandfather on the maternal side was Sterling Turner, who came to Fulton County in 1830, and there settled and raised a family of thirteen children, Mrs. Hudson's mother being the oldest. Her father came to Fulton County with his parents in 1830. Her uncle and mother's brother, William P. Turner, who came to Fulton County the same year with her father, was one of the prominent and influential citizens of the county, especially in church and Sunday-school work, being accustomed to attend County, State and National Conventions, and having established the first Sunday school in Fulton County. He was interested in the movement for the establishment of an industrial college, but died before the plan was realized.

Mrs. Hudson's parents were married in 1837, and she was one of a family of two children, her only sister being Mrs. Margaret Orr, wife of Alexander Orr, now a resident of Canton. Mrs. Hudson received her education in the neighborhood of Bethel Chapel and later in the High School of Canton, where she fitted herself for teaching, in which she engaged in 1860, finally retiring in 1896. Her active work in this line covered a period of twenty years, during which she was employed at different times in Fulton, Stark, Knox and Logan Counties, Ill., and in Dundy County, Neb. Prof. and Mrs. Hudson are members of the Methodist Church. Prof. Hudson is a Republican in politics, but is not an office seeker, devoting his energies almost exclusively to the management of his sanitarium. He is a genial and approachable gentleman, sympathetic in his nature and disposed to look upon the humanitarian as well as scientific side of his profession.

HUFFORD, Levi.—None of the pioneer farmers of Fulton County has made a more enviable record than the gentleman whose name begins this biographical record, and who stands prominent and conspicuous among the steadily diminishing group of early settlers, whose labors laid the foundation of the prosperity of that region. Mr. Hufford was born in Scott County, Ind., January 12, 1831, and is a son of George and Mary (Vest) Hufford, of whom the latter was born near Frankfort, Ky., and was a relative of the late Senator George G. Vest, of Missouri. George Hufford and his wife were married in Kentucky and some time afterward moved to Scott County, Ind., where the husband died in 1832. In the following year his widow moved to Fulton County, Ill., where she died about the year 1860. She and her husband were the parents of the following children besides Levi: Eliza, who married Andrew Fouts and had one child, Martin, all being deceased; Mary, deceased, who was the wife of Abner Ford, also deceased, leaving a family; James, who served four years in the Fifty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, participated in many hard-fought battles, returned home and was killed by the cars in Polk County, Mo.; Wesley, deceased, who married Nancy Bull, also deceased, and Francis M., a member of the Fifty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, who was captured at Shiloh, taken to Memphis, Tenn., died in the hospital there and was buried in the National Cemetery.

After her husband's death the mother of these children lived solely for her family. She kept them together until they reached mature years and had the pleasure of seeing them all comfortably situated before she departed this life. She was a woman of noble qualities, conscientious, considerate, diligent in well doing and was a devout member of the United Brethren Church.

Levi Hufford was about two years old when his mother brought him to Fulton County. He was reared on a farm and was mentally trained in the primitive district schools of that period. He made his home with his brother-in-law, Andrew Fouts, until he was eighteen years old and then went to work at the carpenter's trade. After learning this he began contracting and building, and under his supervision were constructed many of the best houses in that part of the county, which still stand as monuments to his skill. Mr. Hufford purchased his first forty acres of land in Buckheart Township, Fulton County. It was covered with timber and the price was $700. He cleared and grubbed this tract and out of it made a farm which he sold, going then to Doniphan County, Kan., where he bought a tract of 160 acres. He never saw this land, but disposed of it at a profit of $1,000. He then purchased eighty acres of improved land in Buckheart Township, which he also sold, buying the 160 acres in Section 5, Liverpool Township, on which he now lives and which constitutes one of the finest farming properties in that portion of Fulton County. All of his undertakings have resulted successfully and he has accumulated a handsome competency. Mr. Hufford was one of the organizers of the Canton National Bank, in which he holds considerable stock, which commands a large premium, having doubled in value. The total assets of the bank are $1,000,000 and it is one of the most stable financial institutions in that city. Mr. Hufford has been one of the busiest men in Fulton County. He devotes a good deal of attention to stock-raising, and the cattle and hogs on his farm are of superior grades.

In December, 1856, Mr. Hufford was united in marriage with Marinda J. Johnson, a daughter of the venerable Dr. Isaac Johnson, one of the pioneers of Fulton County. This union resulted in the following children: Eugene, who resides on the home place; Sophronia, wife of Elmer Post, a farmer of Putman Township, Fulton County; Chloe, wife of Charles H. Conklin; Rosetta, wife of Henry Moran, a farmer in Buckheart Township, and Mabel, wife of Prof. Charles L. Wallace, of Canton, Fulton County. The mother of this family died in April, 1892. In politics Mr. Hufford is a strong Republican. He cast his first Presidential vote for John C. Fremont and has steadfastly supported the Republican party throughout his life. Mr. Hufford is held in high esteem by a wide circle of acquaintances.

HUGHES, Edward Burns, M. D.—The professional experience of Dr. Edward Burns Hughes has been acquired in the local schools in several towns in Illinois, including those near Cuba, where he was born July 25, 1840; Bernadotte, Ipava, Smithfield and Canton, the last named city having been his home since October, 1899. The Doctor represents one of the early families of Illinois, long identified with agriculture, his parents being George Washington and Margaret Ann (Boylan) Hughes, the former born in Rome, Ga., and the latter in Ohio. George W. Hughes enlisted from Lewistown, Ill., in Captain Sains' Light Horse Cavalry during the Black Hawk War, and participated in the battle which resulted in Stillman's defeat near Rock River. George W. Hughes died near Lewistown, Ill., in March, 1849, when the son, Edward B., was less than nine years of age.

His mother having married again in 1855, the subject of this sketch was thrown entirely upon his own resources. After receiving his primary education in the local public schools he also took a course in Hedding College at Abingdon, Ill., and in 1858 began teaching, which he continued for twenty-five years, in the meantime studying medicine, and for ten years of this period (1873-83) practiced medicine in conjunction with his calling as a teacher, having previously taken a course in the Medical College at Keokuk, Iowa. He was esteemed for his thoroughness in instruction and his excellence in discipline, and his schools invariably maintained a high standard of practical scholarship and deportment. During this quarter of a century he was something more than an educator, his energies reaching out into active interest in politics, during which he received the support of the Democratic party in many offices of trust and responsibility. In Bernadotte Township he was Town Clerk and Road Commissioners, and was also Clerk in both Cass and Pleasant Townships.

The marriage of Dr. Hughes to Angenette Tuthill occurred in Bernadotte, Ill., August 25, 1869, and of this union there is a son, Claude David. Mrs. Hughes was a native of Rochester, N. Y., and was educated in the public schools of Bushnell, Ill. Mrs. Hughes died July 10, 1890, after a lingering illness of neurasthenia, ascites, or general dropsy. He has not since remarried. He has one son who is unmarried. Dr. Hughes is an honored member of different branches of the Masonic fraternity (A. F. & A. M., R. A. M. and R. & S. M.), Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America. He possesses in generous measure the qualities which make the personally popular as well as financially successful physician, and his reputation is firmly established as an earnest, cautious and painstaking healer of men.

HUGHES, Emmett J., the popular and efficient City Clerk of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Columbus, Ohio, January 12, 1878, a son of T. F. and Susan (Ronston) Hughes, natives, respectively, of Pennsylvania and Ohio, who came to Lewistown in 1879. His father died in 1898, but his mother and her three children survive. Of these, Wilbur, a druggist, resides in Keokuk, Iowa, and Arthur is employed as clerk in a furniture store in Lewistown.

In boyhood Emmett J. Hughes attended the public schools, and, at intervals, applied himself to various kinds of work. For three years before he left school he followed painting a part of the time, and for five years thereafter was employed as janitor of the high school. He is a young man of ability, of good mental attainments and of strict integrity. His success in life is attributable solely to his own energy and perseverance. Politically Mr. Hughes is a Democrat. He was elected Township Clerk by a large majority, although ordinarily the township is heavily Republican. In 1903 he was nominated by the People's party for City Clerk of Lewistown, and was elected by a decisive margin. Again, in 1905, he was elected City Clerk on the same ticket by the largest majority received by any candidate. His conduct of this office has been highly efficient and has met with signal approbation. Fraternally Mr. Hughes is affiliated with the K. of P.

HUGHES, George W.—The active career of George W. Hughes is a part of the yesterday of Fulton County, but his substantial agricultural and political efforts are constantly brought to mind by his familiar presence in Astoria, to which he retired in May, 1882, and where he owns a comfortable home amid pleasant surroundings. Of French maternal ancestry, Mr. Hughes was born in Wooster, Wayne County, Ohio, January 12, 1822, and is the second oldest of the five sons of Colonel Taylor and Mary (De Moss) Hughes, natives of Maryland.

Colonel Taylor Hughes was born near Baltimore, Mr., and served as a soldier during the War of 1812, being present at and participating in the battle of Baltimore. During this critical struggle his wife, anxiously waiting in her home near the city of Baltimore, listened in fear to the booming of musketry and cannon. After the War of 1812 he came to Ohio and settled near Wooster in that State. In the fall of 1840—the year of General William Henry Harrison's election to the Presidency—he brought his family to Fulton County, Ill., settling in Woodland Township, where all his sons remained until the establishment of homes of their own. While residing in Ohio he served as Colonel of the State Militia, and served as officer of a Light Horse Company. With the exception of a short time spent in Kansas, Colonel Hughes continued to make his home in Woodland Township, Fulton County, until his death in 1874, at the age of eighty-four years, his wife surviving him six years and dying at the age of eighty-six years. Of their descendants John D., the oldest son, born in Maryland, died in Summum, Fulton County; William T., born in Ohio, died in Woodland Township and is buried near Summum; Joshua Hughes, born in Ohio, died in Summum, and Neil, the youngest, found his last resting place in the same peaceful town. Colonel Hughes was prominent as a farmer and politician in Maryland, Ohio and Illinois, in the former State supporting the Whig cause and in the two latter States endorsing the principles of Republicanism. He was quiet and unassuming in manner, but the possessor of much force of character and determination. In religion he was a Baptist, while his wife attended the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In the acquirement of an education George W. Hughes was confronted with many serious obstacles, chief among which was the necessity for assisting with the family maintenance. He was consumed with a hunger for knowledge while still very young, and at odd times devoured every book that came within reach of the humble household. At night, when the weary members had gone to their rest, he tarried in the glow of the fireplace, studying arithmetic, grammar and geography and reading the records of the men whose deeds have enlivened the march of the ages. He readily recalls reading in the last rays of the daylight, when his arms were swollen and sore from swinging the cradle for eighteen consecutive days. After his marriage, in 1843, to Susan Elliott, he rented a farm in Woodland Township and then bought a small tract of land, adding thereto until he owned 280 acres in one body. Possessed of shrewd business ability, his investments always have resulted in gain, and his energy has converted a comparatively unimproved tract into one of more than average fertility. For the greater part Mr. Hughes has either sold or divided his property among his children, but still retains an income sufficient for all reasonable needs, and in addition assists many less fortunate than himself.

The first wife of Mr. Hughes died October 9, 1881, leaving nine of her eleven children, two having died in infancy. Of those who attained maturity, Hannah Maria is the wife of Ellis Shields, of the vicinity of Summum; Myron A. married Miranda Salesbury and died in Nebraska; Ariel Josephine is the wife of John J. Shields, of Canton; Emma (deceased) was the wife of George Saulsbury, of Woodland Township; Helen A. is the wife of Preston Prather, a farmer of Astoria Township; Julius is mentioned elsewhere in this work, and Taylor is deceased. October 18, 1883, Mr. Hughes was united in marriage to Mrs. Addie L. Cook (nee Bader) as his second wife, who, by her former marriage, had four children: Alva B., of Council Bluffs, Iowa; Park H., of Ogden, Utah, General Agent of the Oregon Short Line Railroad; Raymond, proprietor of the Ogden Steam Dye Works, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Essie, wife of Orlando Ewall, a grocer in Council Bluffs. Mr. Hughes is a Republican in politics and has held several local offices of importance, being a Justice of the Peace during the administration of Governors Matteson and Bissell. He is noted for his liberality and public spiritedness and for his generous support of education and other enlightening agencies. In his religious views he is a Free Thinker.

HUGHES, (Rev.) John.—In Rev. John Hughes is found one of the most wholesome and human of philosophers and most courageous ethical teachers that Fulton County ever has known. The fragrance of his faith, the encouragement to be found in his business success, the extent of his insight and services as a legislator, the strength and dynamic power of his public utterances and his maintenance of the truth in which he believes and for which he ever has been ready to make war when attacked, unite in the making of a career of more than average purpose and usefulness. Table Grove, the present home of Mr. Hughes, has been the returning place of his life ever since his family was established in Fulton County in the autumn of 1834. He then was three months old and had accompanied his parents, George and Esther (Mayo) Hughes, in a wagon from what then was Geddis, but now is Syracuse, Onondaga County, N. Y., where he was born June 1, 1824. The father also was born in Geddis and the mother was a native of Bridgeport, N. Y., the former being of Welsh ancestry and of the fifth generation of his family in America.

George Hughes, the father, was a farmer in New York State, and upon his arrival in Fulton County took up land in Farmers Township, where his wife died December 20, 1891, at age of seventy-nine, his own death occurring July 31, 1881. Mr. Hughes was a man of character and personality, and wielded a strong influence over those around him. He was a preacher and follower of the gospel of industry and had pronounced opinions upon religion, politics and the general conduct of life. He was a staunch Republican and deeply grounded in the Universalist faith, to the propagation of which he contributed for many years. He conquered rather than was conquered by the hardships of the frontier, and when prosperity smiled upon the prairies he readily adapted himself to its demands and prerogatives. No man of his time and place succeeded to a greater measure of respect from his fellowmen. Of his two sons Freeman died in infancy.

At a very early period in his life John Hughes evinced a predilection for study, and whatever leisure could be found when his home tasks were done was turned to the acquisition of knowledge. He had the power of concentration, and therefore the gift of memory, qualities which have converted his brain into a storehouse of profound and useful knowledge. It was his good fortune to graduate from the Farmington High School to Lombard College, at Galesburg, Ill., and it was during the latter part of his collegiate life that he entered upon study for the Universalist ministry. In 1854, at the age of twenty, he preached in Avon his first sermon, and thereafter he maintained his research along theological lines until entering upon his active ministerial career in Macomb, Ill., in 1860. From 1861 until 1867 he preached wherever duty called, often riding long distances through the country and undergoing the trying experiences and hardships of the early pioneer preacher. In the meantime he had developed debating power, which for many years he vigorously applied to the spread of the Universalist doctrine, then but imperfectly understood. Unquestionably he was the best defender the church ever had in this part of the Central West, and he unhesitatingly accepted every challenge, regardless of the creed, denomination or standing of his opponents in debate. In 1866 he had a debate with Joshua Dunham, at Pennington's Point, lasting four days, and in 1868 built the church at Table Grove after a debate with Elder J. C. Reynolds, deceased. Since its organization he has been connected with the Table Grove Church about eighteen years. In 1872 he held a debate with a Methodist Episcopal clergyman, Rev. J. H. Hughey, D. D., which resulted in the building of a Universalist Church in Bloomfield, Iowa, of which he had charge eleven years, and at Lafayette, Starke County, he held a debate with Clark Braden and thereafter built the church at that place. After a debate at Elmer, Mo., with Elder W. P. Throgmorton he erected a church at Atlanta, near Elmer, making the fourth church erected by him as results of his argumentative powers. He was two years pastor of the church at Muskegon, Mich., and for the same length of time was located at Litchfield, Ill. During all of these years he has conducted church campaigns in various parts of the Western States, and through his instrumentality several congregations have been organized and placed on a working basis.

During the Civil War Mr. Hughes was a staunch Republican, but when the money question became an issue he espoused the cause of Democracy. He was a member of the State Legislature from the Forty-third District in 1900 and again in 1902, and besides supporting the Local Option bill, introduced a measure giving the wife equal rights with the husband in the guardianship of children. At the present time Illinois is the twelfth State to adopt this just measure. In addition he introduced a bill giving tax-paying women the right of franchise for all save constitutional offices. The political services of Mr. Hughes have been marked by the same public spiritedness and zeal which characterize his other activities, and emphasize his nearness to the common needs of the people and his hearty sympathy with their ideals and aspirations.

The marriage of Mr. Hughes and Jemima Bailey occurred September 13, 1855, and of the union there were four children: An infant who died unnamed; George, a lawyer by profession and a farmer residing near Yates City, Ill.; Charles E., occupying the old homestead, and Lizzie, wife of W. D. Perry, a farmer of Farmers Township. Mrs. Hughes died January 23, 1879. Her children received excellent educations, and George and Lizzie are graduates of Lombard College, Galesburg, Ill., of which Mr. Hughes has been a Trustee for forty years.

On February 10, 1880, Mr. Hughes was united in marriage to Catherine Matteson, who was born in Bellevue, Mich., January 2, 1854, a daughter of John and Annie (Miller) Matteson, who came from Germany to America when a child. Mr. Matteson departed this life in November, 1903, and he is survived by his wife, who still makes her home in Bellevue. They were the parents of six children, of whom Julia is the wife of Griffin Cummins, and resides in Assyria, Mich.; Eli J. is a resident of Adrian, Minn.; Charles is a resident of Sioux Rapids, Iowa; Ida is the wife of George Kent, of Assyria, Mich., and Harry G. lives in Bellevue, Mich. Mrs. Hughes was educated in the public schools of Bellevue and subsequently engaged in teaching in her native town and Grand Rapids, same State. She was ordained a minister in the Universalist Church in 1895, and since has had charge of a church in Sharpsburg and Swan Creek, preaching in each once a month. For two years she was President of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association, in which she has been active for many years. She is a woman of more than ordinary mental endowment and strength of character, and enjoys a proud position among the women of the land who seek the greatest privileges and the broadest influence for their sex. Fraternally she is associated with the Rebekahs. Mr. Hughes is a member of the Masons and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His life has swept by with settings of increased prosperity and enlarging opportunities for usefulness, and his name is enrolled among those who have deepened and broadened the channels of human brotherhood.

HUGHES, Julius E., a prominent and successful farmer in Section 17, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Woodland Township, Fulton County, February 13, 1858, a son of George W. and Susan (Elliott) Hughes, natives of Ohio. His father was born January 12, 1822, and is still living in Astoria, Ill., healthful and active, at the age of eighty-five years. The worthy mother was born April 19, 1824, and died September 9, 1881. They removed to Fulton County from Holmes County, Ohio, in 1840. The paternal grandfather was Taylor Hughes, who was born August 24, 1792, and married Mary De Moss, who was born August 21, 1798, of French descent. They settled with their family in Fulton County in 1840. Both are buried in Woodland Township. They were the parents of ten children, six of whom are living, the father of Julius E. being the eldest of the survivors. The other children were: Joshua, deceased; Amanda, widow of John G. Smith, a resident of Summum, Ill.; Millie, who is also living there, the widow of Thomas Shores; Ruth, the widow of Thomas Hagan, and living in Astoria; Mary, wife of James M. Onion, a resident of Summum; John D., deceased, who left a family; William, deceased; Ariel, deceased, who became the wife of Julius Elliott, deceased, and Cornelius P., deceased.

George W. Hughes and his wife were the parents of the following children, namely: Hannah M., wife of Ellis Shields, of Pleasant Township, Fulton County; Myron H., deceased; Ariel J., wife of John J. Shields, of Canton, Ill.; Emma, deceased, wife of George Salisbury, a farmer of Woodland Township; Abel W., deceased, husband of Addie Wagoner, who left one child—Beatrice; Augusta, wife of Preston Prather, a farmer in Astoria Township; Julius E., Franklin T., deceased; Susan Ada, wife of Lee Hughes, a resident of Jacksonville, Ill.; George W. and Louis, who died in infancy.

The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm and received his early mental instruction in the district schools in the vicinity of his home, assisting meanwhile in the farm work. He remained under the parental roof until his marriage in 1881. In 1902 Mr. Hughes bought the farm of 200 acres in Lewistown Township, on which he has since resided. In the spring of 1903 he moved to this farm, which is one of the best in the township. He devotes his attention to general farming and raising stock. On his premises may be found grades of stock of all kinds, and he is ranked as one of the most systematic, progressive and substantial farmers of Fulton County.

On January 9, 1881, Mr. Hughes was united in marriage to Addie J. Wagoner, a daughter of George and Maria Wagoner, natives of Pennsylvania. This union resulted in one child, Alletha, born December 11, 1882, who married Lucius L. Shields, a farmer of Pleasant Township, Fulton County. The mother died April 13, 1885. On November 25, 1886, Mr. Hughes was wedded to Lora Atkinson, and their union was the source of five children, as follows: Percy, born October 8, 1887, who died the same day; Irma, who was born October 28, 1888, and is a teacher in Fulton County; James G., born April 24, 1891; Constance, born August 30, 1895, and Nell, born December 1, 1900. On that date the mother of this family passed away. On April 1, 1905, Mr. Hughes was joined in wedlock with Elizabeth Manley, who was born in Harris Township, Fulton County, the daughter of Jacob and Rachel (Fouts) Manley. Both the Manley and Fouts families were among the honored pioneer settlers of the county. Mrs. Hughes in girlhood attended the district schools in the vicinity of her home and afterward became a pupil in the Bushnell Normal School and the Macomb Normal School and Business College, receiving a thorough mental culture. She is well known as an estimable and cultured lady, and for fourteen years previous to her marriage was engaged in teaching, for two years in Iowa and twelve years in McDonough and Fulton Counties. Her mother is still living in Lewistown, her father having passed away in 1898. They were the parents of five children, namely: Allen, a farmer in McDonough County, Ill.; Flora, wife of Charles Converse, of Seattle, Wash.; James a farmer in the vicinity of Bushnell, Ill.; Elizabeth, and Rachel, who married Frank Comstock, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume.

In politics Mr. Hughes is a Republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the K. of P. Lodge, of Lewistown.

HUMMEL, Asa W.—When Thomas Hummel journeyed from Ohio to Fulton County, Ill., in a prairie outfit during the early years of the white man's occupation, he found conditions which spelled suffering, hardship and indefatigable labor. Taking up land on Section 14, Young Hickory Township, he cleared the same, put in his seed, and surrounded himself and family with such rude and questionable comforts as the country afforded. With the spur of poverty behind him he forged to the front with no uncertain stride, and what was to become a family landmark grew to represent the enterprise and possibility of the first settlers. On this farm Marcus Hummel, son of the pioneer, was born and reared, and here in turn Asa W. Hummel, the son of Marcus, was born August 4, 1875. Marcus Hummel followed farming during his entire active life, reared a large family of children and contributed in many ways to the stable upbuilding of his township.

Asa W. Hummel shared the educational, social and general advantages of his neighborhood, and remained under the parental roof until attaining his majority. January 5, 1877, he married, at London Mills, Myrtle Swigert, who was born in Missouri, January 5, 1877. Soon after Mr. Hummel settled on what formerly was the Sam Abbott farm, which had been purchased by his father, and which he still owns and manages. It consists of 115 acres, on which the owner follows general farming and stock-raising. Practically all of the improvements have been made by Mr. Hummel, as the place was devastated by fire several years ago. In the comfortable modern home four children have been born: Nettie M., Burton W., Bertha B. and Cecil R. Mr. Hummel is active in local politics, and has been a member of the Board of Education for six years. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. In the conduct of his farm Mr. Hummel gives evidence of progression and enterprise, qualities apparent also in his promotion of education, good government and social purity.

HUMMEL, Clyde V.—Of the young and promising exponents of agriculture and stock-raising Young Hickory Township may well place reliance upon such enterprising native sons as Clyde V. Hummel, who was born on the farm he now occupies September 11, 1879, and who operates 147 acres of his father's old homestead. Mr. Hummel also owns eighty acres of land in his own right, and devotes both properties to general farming and stock-raising, making a specialty of the standard bred Wilkes horses and Poland-China hogs.

Mr. Hummel gained a practical education in the common schools of his township, and was thoroughly drilled in farming by his pioneer father. January 25, 1902, he was united in marriage to Cora Conlan, who was born in Knox County, Ill., June 7, 1861, and is the mother of one son, Lowell H. Mr. Hummel is a supporter of the Republican party, a member of the Knights of Pythias and an active worker and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a young man of character and purpose, and is thoroughly in sympathy with his noble and satisfying occupation.

HUNTER, George A., proprietor of a liquor store in Canton, Ill., was born in Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., in 1871, a son of James and Amanda (Fink) Hunter, natives of Illinois and Ohio, respectively. At an early period James Hunter entered into the restaurant business in Farmington, and conducted an attractive place of entertainment until the time of his death. He was a well known citizen and a man of considerable influence in political affairs, being the incumbent of several local offices at different times. On his decease G. A. Hunter, who received his education in the Farmington schools, and assisted his father in the work of the restaurant, succeeded the latter in the management, continuing thus about three years. He then sold the place and after being employed for a while in Canton, opened a liquor store in Farmington, which he kept for eight years. Disposing of this property, he went to Astoria, Ill., and thence to Beardstown, Ill., where he was similarly engaged until 1904. At that time he bought out the Weiseman concern on West Elm Street, in Canton, which he has since conducted.

Mr. Hunter was married in 1895 to Maude Keith, who was born in Rock Island, Ill., and their union has been the source of four children, namely: Amelia, Gladys, Edna and Keith. Mr. Hunter is a man of popular traits and has many friends in Canton, as well as in the other localities where he has lived from time to time. He is fraternally affiliated with the Order of Eagles.

INGERSOLL, Charles E., a retired farmer and lumberman of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., is a native of that city, born in the year 1849, the son of Henry F. and Eveline (Dewey) Ingersoll, his maternal grandfather, Stephen Dewey, having served for many years as County Clerk of Fulton County, while his father was one of the early and prominent merchants of Canton. His uncle, J. W. Ingersoll, came to Illinois from his native city of Ithaca, N. Y., in the year 1837, and until the fall of 1839 was in the employ of the State, engaged in the preliminary survey of the Illinois Central Railroad. H. F. Ingersoll had in the meantime settled in Canton, the former abandoning his profession as a civil engineer to form a partnership with his brother in the mercantile business, under the firm name of H. F. & J. W. Ingersoll. They first purchased a stock of goods of D. W. Vittum, opening a store on the southeast corner of the square, and Mr. Vittum became a third owner in the business in the spring of 1840, afterward buying out the entire concern. Ingersoll Brothers then conducted another store on the northeast corner of the square until 1843, had an establishment on the east side for the succeeding three years and in 1846 removed to the site of the present Ingersoll Block, which was erected by J. W. Ingersoll in the summer of 1868.

In the late '50s and early '60s the Ingersoll brothers also engaged extensively in the packing of pork and shipped large quantities of grain from Copperas Creek and Liverpool to St. Louis. In 1864, having severed their varied and successful business relations, H. F. Ingersoll bought the Vittum farm and retired to agricultural pursuits, while John Ingersoll continued to conduct various mercantile and real-estate enterprises. There were five children in the family, of whom, besides Charles E., two are living, viz.: A daughter in Fulton County and a son, who is a Philadelphia physician.

Charles E. Ingersoll was partially educated in the public and high schools of Canton, and afterward was a student at Cornell University. Business and agricultural pursuits, however, were more to his liking than literary matters, and for fourteen years he was superintendent of the old family farm near Canton, and another near Gilman, Iroquois County. For six years he also engaged in the lumber business in Canton, but retired in 1897, and now devotes his time to the care of his farming lands in Fulton County and to various investments of a similar nature which he has made in Wisconsin.

In December, 1888, Mr. Ingersoll married Miss Alice Parlin, daughter of William Parlin, and they have had two sons and one daughter: William Parlin, Charles Dewey and Winifred A. The family home is a commodious and beautiful residence on East Chestnut street. Mr. Ingersoll is a Republican and a Knight of Pythias, but is a man of domestic and quiet tastes and has no desire to go abroad into politics and fraternal life.

INGERSOLL, Henry F. (deceased), one of the most extensive and prosperous merchants who figured conspicuously in the business activities of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., at an early period, was born in Stockbridge, Mass., October 31, 1815. He was one of the pioneer settlers of this region, having journeyed to Canton from Ithaca, N. Y., in 1839. Together with his brother, John W. Ingersoll, he purchased the stock of goods of D. W. Vittum. In the spring of 1840 Mr. Vittum bought a one-third interest in the concern and was identified with its affairs under the style of Ingersoll & Vittum, until the fall of 1841. At that period he purchased the interests of the Ingersoll brothers. The Ingersolls immediately began business again under the old firm name of H. F. & J. W. Ingersoll. During the early years of their enterprise they packed pork and shipped an immense amount of grain from Copperas Creek and Liverpool, Ill., to St. Louis. About 1880 Henry F. Ingersoll retired from active business, but never lost interest in the affairs of the city he had done so much to develop, his death occurring September 12, 1890.

On April 2, 1846, Mr. Ingersoll was united in marriage with Eveline Dewey, a native of Lewistown, Ill., and a daughter of Stephen Dewey, of that place, who was elected County Clerk of Fulton County in 1837 and served in that capacity for a number of years. In politics Mr. Ingersoll was a Republican. Religiously he was associated with the Congregational Church. In his day he was one of the most important factors in the growth of Canton and his life left an indelible impress upon the progress of the city.

IRWIN, Isaac.—The fact that Isaac Irwin was able to retire from active life in 1895, at the age of fifty-two, argues well for his industry, business ability and wise disposal of opportunity. His fortunes have joined those of Fulton County for one year less than half a century, and his occupation has been that pursued by his forefathers in Pennsylvania for more than a century—the tilling of the soil and the raising of the products necessary for the well-being and maintenance of mankind. His parents, Isaac and Catherine (Markell) Irwin, owned a farm in Pennsylvania and it was there that Isaac Irwin, Jr., was born September 30, 1843.

Mr. Irwin had a meager and unsatisfactory early education, but the very limitations under which he labored stimulated a love for self-improvement which has continued uninterruptedly up to the present time. It was necessary for him to make himself useful at a very early age, for the small farm was called upon to supply the needs of nine children, eight of whom are still living. Isaac was thirteen when he arrived in Fulton County in 1856, and in time, by economy and unremitting application, he was able to invest in land of his own, adding to it until he was the possessor of 160 acres in Putman Township. Of this he now owns 128 acres, from the rental of which he derives a comfortable income. He married, May 2, 1868, Catherine Dougherty, a native of McDonough County, this State, and daughter of Robert Dougherty, a large land owner and early settler. Mr. and Mrs. Irwin are the parents of nine children, those living being: Mrs. Christina Donovan; Mrs. Emma Pittman; Mrs. Lulu Decker; Clarence, living in Cuba; Harley and Earl. Mr. Irwin has never identified himself with any particular political party, casting his vote according to the merits of the candidates. He is highly esteemed in the community and has many friends.

IRWIN, John, a substantial and prosperous farmer and well-known banker of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Center County, Pa., April 20, 1848, and there in boyhood received his mental training. He is a son of Isaac and Catherine (Markland) Irwin, natives of Pennsylvania, the former being born in York County, that State. Isaac Irwin located in Cuba at an early period, bought land and carried on agricultural pursuits.

John Irwin was ten years old when he was brought to Fulton County; was reared on his father's farm, and has always followed agriculture. At present he owns his farm of 327 acres, two and a half miles southeast of Cuba, where stock-raising has long occupied much of his attention, as well as the care of city property in Cuba, where he resides. In 1893, together with others, he entered into the banking business, and on August 11, 1902, they organized the Farmers' State Bank in Cuba. Of this institution Mr. Irwin is President; M. M. Waughtel, Vice President; P. H. Snively, Cashier, and M. C. Scott, Assistant Cashier. The Directors are as follows: John Irwin, Joseph Beam, John Prickett, H. H. Rogers, J. C. Shyrock, M. M. Waughtel and P. H. Snively.

On March 1, 1868, Mr. Irwin was united in marriage with Eliza J. Waddell, who is a native of Ohio. In politics Mr. Irwin is a supporter of the Democratic party, and has held the office of Police Magistrate of Cuba for eight years. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., M. W. of A. and Royal Americans. He is a man of energy, and is regarded as one of the most useful members of the community.

JACOBS, Balthazer (deceased).—To the lover of nature no occupation known to man furnishes more interesting possibilities than the nursery business. Recent developments along this line have been as wonderful as they were formerly unexpected and unbelievable. Yet even to the man who labors faithfully to maintain standards already established and who has no time to explore in luring paths of promise, there always is that satisfaction in accomplishment possible only when one works in collaboration with the elements of creation. Canton has had its share of earnest, painstaking nurserymen, men who delighted in their labor and contributed liberally to the well-being of the community. Few, however, have had a longer or more prosperous career than Balthazer Jacobs, the possessor of a competence and now retired from active life, but formerly the best-known nurseryman in Fulton County.

Mr. Jacobs first became interested in his chosen occupation in his native Rhine Province, Germany, where he was born November 25, 1827. Besides himself, his parents, Peter and Mary (Rechner) Jacobs, had six other children: George, Joseph, Jacob, Antoine, Elizabeth and Mary. The family lived on a farm, from which Balthazer departed at the age of fourteen to learn the wagon-making trade, with which useful accomplishment well in hand he emigrated to the United States in 1850, some time after the death of his father and fourteen years previous to the death of his mother. He worked at his trade in New York City, Buffalo and other New York towns, and finally turned his attention to the carpentering business in Buffalo and Niagara Falls, a trade which he subsequently followed for a year in Polo, Ogle County, Ill. He then purchased eighty acres of land, which he cultivated until 1865, and from then until 1869 was variously employed in different parts of the State. Selecting Canton as a favorable site for the establishment of a nursery business, he began on a small scale with a quarter of an acre in the heart of the city, setting the same to a high grade of potatoes, for which he found a ready market. His business grew apace until he owned eleven lots on Elm Street and one and a half lots on White Street, equipped with two dwellings and three large green-houses. His gardening business included practically all of the vegetables in popular demand and he derived a large income from his beautiful and seasonable flowers, as well as the products of his berry culture. His vegetables, flowers and fruits reached the remote corners of the county, and his name became associated with all that was best in garden provisioning and floriculture.

The marriage of Mr. Jacobs and Anna Mary Walters occurred in May, 1877. Mrs. Jacobs was born in Germany and is a daughter of Conrad Walters, also born in Germany. There are five sons in the family, viz.: George, Carl, Lewis, John and Frank. Mr. Jacobs is a member of the Roman Catholic Church and his wife is a devout member of the German Evangelical Lutheran Church. Both are among the highly esteemed and substantial German-Americans of this town, representing in their quiet, industrious and orderly lives that element from across the sea which has ever been a credit to the industries, government and social life of this country. Mr. Jacobs died November 29, 1898, in his seventy-first year.

JACOBUS, Andrew J.—An arduous and hazardous task confronted those venturesome and hardy men who forsook the security and comforts of their Eastern States in early days, and penetrated the wilds of the untrodden West to establish there for themselves new homes. None but themselves and their children can realize, in the faintest degree, the difficulties with which they have contended, the perils to which they were exposed, and the privations which they endured. Fortunately they were animated by an indomitable spirit and sustained by inflexible resolution, and patiently, perseveringly and steadfastly accomplished their mission, leaving to their posterity the fruits of their enterprise an advanced civilization. To the memories of the devoted and self-sacrificing wives of the pioneer settlers of Illinois adequate tribute can never be rendered, but the remembrance of their virtues has served as a high incentive in molding the lives of their children, some of whom still survive amid scenes of their childhood. Among these venerable men is the subject of this personal record, Andrew J. Jacobus, a retired farmer now living in Farmington, Fulton County, Ill.

Mr. Jacobus was born June 19, 1829, at St. Omer, Decatur County, Ind., the son of James and Eliza (Broderick) Jacobus, natives of the State of New York. Simon Jacobus, his grandfather, who was a native of Vermont, was a soldier in the War of 1812, serving in a New York regiment, and being wounded in that conflict. James Jacobus removed at an early period from New York to Indiana, whence in 1846 he came to Illinois, where he purchased a farm in the southwest quarter of Section 17, Farmington Township, Fulton County. There he remained successfully engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in 1899, departing this life at the age of ninety-five years, six months and five days, having always enjoyed good health until shortly before his decease. His son, Andrew J., received his early mental training in the district schools of Indiana, and accompanied his parents to Illinois when about seventeen years of age. After his marriage he applied himself to the cultivation of his farm, situated in the northwest quarter of Section 17, Farmington Township, until 1884. In that year he moved to Farmington, purchasing a house and lot near the schoolhouse on Fort Street. This he sold in 1893 and built a residence on Main Street south of Fort Street, which he sold to William Greenhouse in May, 1902, and bought of Mrs. Converse a house on the same street, north of Fort Street. He is now living in retirement, his family being composed of his wife and grandchild, Charles Taber. For the past few years he has not enjoyed the best of health.

On February 25, 1869, Mr. Jacobus was united in marriage with Anna Tabor, a daughter of William Tabor. Mrs. Jacobus, a most estimable woman, is a native of Indiana, and there, in youth, received her education in the district schools.

In politics the subject of this sketch has acted with the Republican party, has served as a member of the School Board, and was acting in that capacity when the "Shadd Hills" schoolhouse was built. This was erected in District No. 7, in 1859, and continues in use for school purposes at the present time. Mr. Jacobus has lived a long, upright, industrious and useful life, and in the ripeness of his years is an object of sincere respect and cordial esteem on the part of his neighbors and many friends.

JENKINS, David M.—For the past eleven years David M. Jenkins has been a member of the retired colony of Cuba, Fulton County, where he owns a pleasant home and devotes himself to its oversight and improvement. He still is active and possessed of sound faculties, although seventy-five years have unrolled their length since his birth, April 15, 1832. His memories are culled from experiences as an agriculturist, miner and soldier, and particularly are rich in incidents relating to the very early history of the State of Illinois.

With his parents, T. S. and Mary (Shelton)

Jenkins, natives of Tennessee and Kentucky, respectively, David M. Jenkins, when two years of age, settled in the southern part of Fulton County in 1834, his father taking up 160 acres of Government land near Waterford, near Spoon River. This property was cleared and developed and the owner acquired a competence in produce and stock, at the same time taking an active part in politics and other phases of community growth. The senior Mr. Jenkins was a Justice of the Peace for twenty-one years, and during that time settled practically all of the disputes which arose in the township. He also served as Collector and Supervisor. He made the Spoon River farm his home until the death of his wife in 1844, where his death also occurred in 1875. He was the parent of seven children, of whom only two are living.

From 1852 until 1854 David M. Jenkins lived in California, and in the mining camps of that region sought to wrest a quickly gained fortune. Returning with but partially realized expectations, he located on forty acres of land near Waterford, which in 1881 he sold and removed to 160 acres of land in Deerfield Township, which he still owns and upon which he lived until retiring to his present residence in Cuba in 1895. At the beginning of the Civil War he enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and through the ever changing experiences of the Rebellion, carried his knapsack and bravely performed his part as a private, being wounded in the battles of Missionary Ridge and Resaca.

In 1859 Mr. Jenkins married Mary Peterson, a native of New Jersey, and of this union there are seven children: Mary, wife of George Tompkins, of Kansas; Elmer, deceased; Asahel, George, Anna, wife of Mr. Boyer, of California; Fred, on the home farm, and Hobart, who is an attorney-at-law. Mr. Jenkins is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His association with the county has tended to its betterment, and to its support of honest, patriotic and high-minded citizenship.

JENKINS, Lemuel C., an enterprising and energetic young farmer, who is making rapid progress in acquiring a prominent position in the agricultural ranks of Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., is successfully pursuing his vocation in Section 23 of that township. He was born in the State of Virginia, December 25, 1876, a son of Abraham and Dundean (Crow) Jenkins, natives of the Old Dominion, where their social position was among the first families. Abram Jenkins was a farmer by occupation, and his life was spent in his native State in the pursuit of agriculture. He departed this life October 15, 1900. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: Granville B., who is engaged in farming in the vicinity of Oak Park, Va.; Nimrod A., who follows a like occupation near Cuba, Fulton County, Ill.; Walker J., who is associated with his brother Lemuel in operating the Campbell farm; Wilton J. and Bertha V., who are at home; Mary, deceased; and one that died in infancy.

J. J. Mosher

In youthful days the subject of this sketch attended the common schools of his native State, where he spent his subsequent years until 1902. On February 28th of that year he left Virginia, and located in Fulton County, Ill., whither his brother, Nimrod, had preceded him about two years. On his arrival Mr. Jenkins went to work by the month on Mr. Fred Pickett's farm, where he spent one summer. In 1903 he was likewise employed by Mrs. Samuel Campbell, and, in 1904, took charge of that lady's farm, containing 160 acres. There, in conjunction with his brother, as before mentioned, he is engaged in general farming, and also devotes considerable attention to the raising of good grades of horses, cattle and hogs. He gives preference to the Norman breed of horses. His hogs are the best grade of Poland-Chinas, and his cattle, of the Polled-Angus variety.

After he had become fully established in his new surroundings Mr. Jenkins sent for his worthy mother and the rest of the family, and they joined him in the spring of 1904, thus reuniting the members of the household. In politics the subject of this sketch is a supporter of the Democratic party, and fraternally is affiliated with the K. of P. His good qualities have won him many friends, and he has the good wishes of all who knew him. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JENKINS, W. T.—Emerging from the background of the early history of Fulton County is the strong and courageous personality of Thomas S. Jenkins, who was born in Tennessee, and who, hearing the call of the prairies of the Central West, brought his family with team and wagon to Illinois in the early part of 1830. He was a minister of the gospel for many years of his life and for some years was a Justice of the Peace, but his material wealth was gathered from the soil of the township upon which he was one of the first arrivals, and to the cultivation of which he spent the balance of his life. He was an important political factor before, during and after the organization of the county and was regarded as a man of broad views, sound judgment and invariable moral rectitude.

James K. Jenkins, representing the second generation of his family in Fulton County, was born on his father's farm and educated in the early schools of his time. He married Minerva Ham, of Lewistown Township, and reared a family of two sons and two daughters, of whom W. T., now filling the position of engineer for the Essex & Fritz Coal Mining Company, was born in Waterford Township, this county, September 8, 1865. The young man was reared on the home farm and attended the public schools during the winter season and, developing decidedly mechanical tendencies, ran a threshing machine and studied engineering for several seasons. November 27, 1892, he received a mining engineer's certificate, and ever since has followed that calling, meeting with the success due his energy and ability. He became identified with the Essex & Fritz Coal Mining Company about eighteen months ago. July 25, 1894, he was united in marriage to Osie M. Childers, a native of Fulton County, and of this union there are six children: Bertha O., Ida M., James K., Alice, Thomas S. and Cecil. Mr. Jenkins is fraternally identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is an industrious and painstaking man and enjoys the good will and respect of all who know him.

JEWELL, William S., the able and efficient State's Attorney of Fulton County, Ill., was born in Logan County, Ill., May 12, 1867, the son of John F. and Julia (Smith) Jewell, natives of Illinois. They were the parents of the following children, namely: William S., Ida, wife of Harry B. Stoge, of Lewistown, Ill.; Josephine, wife of Harry Mathews, of Canton, Ill., and Elizabeth, Clara and Minnie, who dwell under the parental roof. John F. Jewell was a member of the Thirty-second Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil War, and took part in Sherman's March to the Sea. In the battle of Atlanta he was struck in the left shoulder by a ball, which glanced downward. On account of the location of the ball the surgeon declined to undertake its extraction, and for twenty long years he carried it in his body, causing him at times great suffering. The ball gradually worked its way to his side and made its exit under the arm. He followed farming until he came to Lewistown in 1893, when the effects of this wound, resulting in a general impairment of his health, compelled him to retire from active life. Enos Jewell, the father of John F., was one of the pioneers of Fulton County and a prominent figure in the early history of Lewistown.

The early years of William S. Jewell were spent upon the farm. He attended the district schools in the neighborhood of his home and made the most of his educational advantages. In 1892 he entered the office of Judge Edwards and began the study of law, continuing thus for two years. He then spent one year in the office of John A. Gray, now Circuit Judge in the judicial district of which Fulton County forms a part, and afterward reviewed his studies for three years. In 1899 he was admitted to the bar and by diligent application to his profession, combined with superior talent, attained an excellent standing as a lawyer and now ranks among the leading members of the Fulton County bar.

In politics Mr. Jewell is a staunch Republican and takes an active interest in the success of his party. In 1899 he was elected City Attorney of Lewistown and was re-elected in 1901. In 1900 he sought the nomination for State's Attorney, but was defeated by Bernard H. Taylor, who, on being elected, appointed the subject of this sketch First Assistant State's Attorney. In 1904 Mr. Jewell received the nomination and was elected State's Attorney by a majority of 1,577. In the administration of the affairs of this office he has reflected honor upon himself and his constituents. In fraternal circles Mr. Jewell is identified with the K. of P., M. W. A. and is a member of Lewistown Lodge, A. F. & A. M.

JOHNSON, Charles E.—To no one man does Canton owe more for a practical demonstration of substantial and effective building than to Charles E. Johnson. Skill, energy, resource and continual advancement are levers in the constructive machinery of this master builder. He has the natural pride of the true artisan, especially of one who uses his worth to create, and who must needs, in the future he surrounded by his work, and hear on all sides the estimate placed by the community. Mr. Johnson established his contracting business in Canton in 1895, and with characteristic energy has lost no time in useless idleness, but by the sheer force of his determination to succeed, and his firm belief in his ability to accomplish anything within reason, has brought work his way, and made it of lasting good to the community. Of the buildings due to his skill may be mentioned the residences of H. H. Orendorff, H. B. Heald and George Chapman; the Page, Mathews, Duval and Eyerley apartment buildings; and the high school building, completed in 1903, fourteen months after the start. At the time of this writing Mr. Johnson is building a hotel for Henry Roberts on South First Street.

Mr. Johnson has spent practically his entire life in Canton, where he was born in 1864, a son of Seymour and Eliza (Lair) Johnson, natives of New Jersey and Ohio, respectively. His father came to this county with his parents when a child, locating on a farm three miles north of Canton. Charles E. was educated in the public schools, and in early life evidenced the mechanical ingenuity which finally found vent in the carpenter's trade, and in later life in that of building and contracting. Mr. Johnson married Lottie Zwisler in 1886, and he has a son and a daughter, Rodney and Blanche. He is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Knights of Pythias and the Order of Eagles; is also a member of the Carpenters' Union. To his superior trade qualifications Mr. Johnson adds the advantages of keen intelligence, broad, general information and a personality pleasing, adaptive and confidence inspiring. He has many friends and a promising future.

JOHNSON, George W.—Starting upon his independent career at the age of twenty-one years and with few advantages save an irregularly acquired education, George W. Johnson has worked his way to the ownership of a farm of 111½ acres on Section 24, Ellisville Township. Mr. Johnson was born in the village of Ellisville, Fulton County, September 15, 1866, the son of Wesley and Mary (Lock) Johnson, who were natives of Ohio, and who some time after their marriage in 1849 came to Ellisville, where the father followed his trade of blacksmithing for twenty years. He then purchased a small farm in the vicinity of the town, which he operated for several years. Then he returned to his trade, which he followed until his death in 1886.

In 1887 George W. Johnson went to Kansas, where he proved up a land claim in Hamilton County, that State. Returning to Illinois in 1888 he worked out by the month until 1891, when he began farming on rented land, which he continued until 1901. He then bought a farm of 135 acres on Section 21 in Young Hickory Township, Fulton County, which he sold in 1904 and bought a farm in Charles Mix County, S. D., where he engaged in farming one year. Then returning to Illinois he bought the farm in Ellisville Township, where he now resides, and on which he carries on general farming and stock-raising, and is making many fine improvements.

Mr. Johnson's marriage to Emma Bernhardt, who was born in Lee Township, July 14, 1863, occurred May 27, 1891, and of their union there is a son, Ellis. Mr. Johnson espoused the cause of Republicanism in his early voting days, and since has served his party in numerous capacities, among them as Justice of the Peace for many years. He is a staunch supporter of the Christian Church. A man of intelligence and forethought, he commands the esteem and good will of all who know him, and is recognized as one of the township's most potent and up-building influences.

JOHNSON, Jesse P., a banker of superior ability, high character and excellent repute in financial circles, whose name is familiar to the people of Fulton County, Ill., and the adjacent country, as President of the Bank of Avon, of which he is the founder, was born in Warren County, this State, in December, 1861. He is a son of James C. and Emily R. (Pittman) Johnson, also natives of that county. The father was for many years a merchant at Greenbush, Ill., where he was a prominent and prosperous member of the community. He is still living but has withdrawn from mercantile endeavors and is passing the leisure period of a busy career in comfortable retirement at Avon, an object of sincere respect and cordial regard to all who enjoy his acquaintance. His worthy wife died in March, 1907. To them were born four children, as follows: Jesse P., Samantha, W. B. and Charles W.

In boyhood Jesse P. Johnson attended the public schools of Warren County, Ill., and later completed his education in the Quincy Normal School. Until he entered upon a banking career the greater portion of his mature life was occupied with agricultural pursuits. He had about 700 acres of land in Warren County, on which he carried on general farming, devoting a considerable share of his attention to feeding cattle. In 1900 he organized the banking institution of which he is now the head, building the two-story structure, nineteen by seventy feet in dimensions, in which the operations of the bank are conducted. The chief official of the institution besides Jesse P. Johnson is Frank G. Johnson, its Cashier. The bank transacts a general banking business and has a membership in the State Bankers' Association. The farmers of the region surrounding Avon and the business people of the town repose a large degree of confidence in the Bank of Avon, and its patronage is constantly increasing. It is the owner of 190 acres of land lying within the limits of the village corporation and 310 acres in Warren County, Ill.

On December 28, 1881, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage with Ida N. Irving, who was born in the State of New Jersey. Four children resulted from this union, namely: Harry, who died in 1901; Franklin G., Jesse P., who is attending school, and Sylvester S.

In politics Mr. Johnson supports the policies of the Republican party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P. and the A. F. & A. M. He is very successful in his business undertakings and his executive qualities are of an exceptional character. As a financier the sagacity and sound judgment manifested by him are recognized by all. In private life his course is exemplary, and as a citizen he is one of the most useful members of the community.

JOHNSON, John W.—Two occupations, farming and preaching, have entered into the career and contributed to the usefulness of John W. Johnson, who is a Fulton County pioneer of 1857 and the owner, by virtue of his unaided endeavor, of a farm of 260 acres in Sections 3 and 4, Banner Township. The first twenty years of his life Mr. Johnson spent in Marshall County, W. Va., where he was born November 24, 1837, the son of Abraham and Martha (Crawford) Johnson, Southerners by birth and farmers by occupation.

Educated in the early subscription schools of the South, Mr. Johnson supplemented his youthful training by the research of later years, and even when working by the month after his arrival in Fulton County, in the spring of 1857, spent his leisure in storing up information which should broaden his opportunities in time to come. Economy and industry resulted in his final ownership of his present farm, which is well improved and devoted to breeding stock and raising general produce. He farmed uninterruptedly until 1880, in the meantime devoting much of his spare time to the spread of religious doctrine, and in 1880 was ordained a minister of the Gospel in the Methodist Protestant Church.

A staunch Republican, and now, as formerly, active in the councils of his party, Mr. Johnson has represented his county in the Illinois Legislature four consecutive terms (1894-1902), and also has served as Supervisor and School Director. His marriage with Elizabeth Johnson, a daughter of Robert Johnson, of Washington County, Pa., occurred February 13, 1860, and of this union there have been three children, two of whom are living: Patience, the wife of E. P. Pool, of Canton, and Edgar A., also of Banner Township. Mr. Johnson is a man of firm character and pronounced ideas, and his life is a lesson of patience, thoroughness and goodness. Serenity of disposition and optimism of view have drawn to him the affection of many and the honest regard of all who know him.

JOHNSON, Stephen, foreman of the Alexander Lumber Company in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Canton Township, Fulton County, in 1861, a son of Emsley and Eleanor (Brook) Johnson, of whom the former was born in Canton Township, and the latter in the State of Ohio. Mr. Johnson received his education in the district schools, and in the Dixon and Bushnell Normal schools. In 1890 he went into the lumber business, with which he has been connected ever since.

In 1892 Mr. Johnson was married to Emma Fouts, who was born and schooled in Canton, Ill. Politically he is a supporter of the Democratic party, and fraternally has been identified with the K. of P. for twenty years.

JONES, Thomas, the well known, efficient and popular Superintendent of Streets in the city of Canton, Ill., was born in Caseyville, St. Clair County, Ill., December 8, 1859, a son of Lewis L. and Elizabeth (Morgan) Jones, natives of Wales, who emigrated to the United States about the year 1860. Six years later Lewis L. Jones came to Canton, Ill., and for eight years acted in the capacity of Steward of the Fulton County Poor Farm, afterwards carrying on farming in Orion Township. He departed this life in 1902, his wife passing away in 1903. Thomas Jones received his education in the common schools of Fulton County, and was reared on his father's farm. He was appointed Superintendent of Streets by Mayor Hanlon, and has made an excellent record in discharging the duties of that office.

In 1883 Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Catherine Maguire, a daughter of John Maguire, who came to this country February 11, 1846. Mr. Maguire was born at Manor Hamilton, County Leitrim, Ireland, June 24, 1826, his grandfather having been engaged in the practice of medicine there. Some time after landing in New York City, Mr. Maguire went to Newburgh, N. Y., on the Hudson River, where he remained five years on a farm. He was married in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., January 1, 1850, and after the event went west to Wisconsin, locating in the town of Whitewater, where he remained eleven years. In 1863 he moved to Canton, Ill., and followed farming and city work until prevented by old age from active exertion. He makes his home with Mr. and Mrs. Jones. He is the father of eight living children, as follows: Ann, Bedelia, Thomas, a resident of Elmwood, Ill.; John and Dennis, who live in Nebraska; Mary, whose residence is in Elmwood, Ill., and Mrs. William Snycart and Mrs. Andrew Stewart, both of whom are living in Knox County, Ill., at Rapatee. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have one daughter, namely: Catherine Willison. Both husband and wife are held in high esteem for their many good qualities, and their friends are numerous. Mr. Jones is a prominent member of the I. O. O. F.

JUDD, S. Corning.—(See page 310).

JONES, William D., a well known and prosperous merchant of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., is a native of Wales, where he was born in 1848, his parents being Lewis L. and Elizabeth (Morgan) Jones, also natives of that country. When he was an infant of one year Mr. Jones was brought by his father to the United States. The passage across the Atlantic was made in a sailing vessel and after a voyage of seventeen weeks the family landed at New Orleans. Thence proceeding north by way of the Mississippi River, they continued their journey up the Missouri to Council Bluffs during the memorable cholera epidemic of that period. Then crossing the plains in a wagon drawn by an ox-team, they finally reached Salt Lake City, remaining there eighteen years. Returning East in 1867, they came to Illinois, locating in the vicinity of O'Fallon, St. Clair County. There the father followed the occupation of a mine operator until he moved to Fulton County, where he was likewise engaged at Rawalt for a number of years. William D. Jones received his education in the common schools of Utah and accompanied his parents in their different removals, applying himself to farming on reaching Fulton County, on a place which his father had bought in Orion Township. Thus he continued until 1893, when he established his home in the city of Canton, and there spent three years in the ice and soda-water trade. In the spring of 1891 he bought out the De-Wolfe concern in Canton and has since that time conducted this business on North Main Street. The farm in Orion Township, consisting of 160 acres, is still his property, and has been thoroughly improved.

In 1875 Mr. Jones was united in marriage with Libbie Abbott, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., and four children have resulted from this union, namely: Frederick and Albert, deceased; Anna and Blanche. Mr. Jones has built up a large and profitable patronage. He is a man of excellent character and good business qualifications, and his standing in the community as a merchant and as a citizen is of the best.

KEEFER, Edward W., a well-known and successful lawyer of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Dauphin County, Pa., May 2, 1868, and is a son of John Keefer, a native of Pennsylvania. He has several brothers and sisters, namely: Stephen, who lives in Lancaster, Pa.; Mrs. Elizabeth Emerich, who is a resident of Hummelstown, that State; John, of Massillon, Ohio; Mary (Mrs. Walters), of Harrisburg, Pa.; William, of Elkhorn, Colo.; and Katherine, of York, Pa. The father of this family died when Edward W. was but three years old, and the latter then went to live with an elder brother.

Edward W. Keefer spent his boyhood on the farm, and pursued the elementary branches of study in the district schools, remaining in Pennsylvania until 1882. He then came to Astoria, Fulton County, where he was employed at farm work. From his wages he saved a sufficient amount to attend a normal school for two terms and prepare himself for teaching, being thus employed for two terms. During these years he read law, and after relinquishing the teacher's work, he continued his studies in the office of Kinsey Thomas. In 1892 he entered the Wesleyan University, at Bloomington, Ill., and was admitted to the bar in 1893. After completing his studies he spent two years in Oklahoma and California, opening a law office in California. In 1896 he returned to Astoria and practiced law there one year. Coming to Lewistown, he entered into a law partnership with W. C. Worley, and in 1901 was appointed Master in Chancery. He has gained a good standing in his profession, and is Secretary of the Fulton County Bar Association.

On June 25, 1903, Mr. Keefer was united in marriage with Etta May Robertson, daughter of James Robertson, of Astoria, and their union has resulted in a son, Jerome, born June 9, 1904. In politics Mr. Keefer is a staunch Republican and takes an active interest in the success of his party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P.

KEELER, Thomas M., of Fulton County, who has been long and closely identified with its development and prosperity, and is now one of the most extensive and substantial farmers and stock-raisers in Liverpool Township, as well as one of the most highly honored members of the community, was born in Lewistown Township, this county, July 2, 1838. He is a son of Benjamin F. and Mary A. (Ackerson) Keeler, natives, respectively, of Franklin County, Ind., and Licking County, Ohio. When about eighteen years old Benjamin F. Keeler became dissatisfied with the conditions and prospects in his native county and was sent thence to Illinois, stopping in Fulton County, where he was employed on monthly wages by Garrett Ackerson. This connection led to his elopement with that gentleman's daughter, Mary, and they were married in April, 1834. Garrett Ackerson and his wife, Mary A., were married in the city of New York, and soon afterward journeyed to Licking County, Ohio, whence, after remaining there a short time, they proceeded by team to Illinois. Mr. Ackerson settled on Section 11, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, where he was engaged in farming until his death.

The union of Benjamin F. Keeler and Mary A. Ackerson resulted in the following children, namely: Maria, born December 16, 1835; Thomas M.; Elizabeth V., deceased, who was born June 27, 1841, and married Tiffin R. Knott, a farmer in Section 20, Liverpool Township; Sarah A., born May 28, 1843; and Garrett, who died in infancy. Sarah A. first married John G. Ackerson, by whom she had two children, Laura B., who is living in Vermont, wife of Charles Craft, and John G., who died in infancy. Her husband died and she afterward wedded Robert Miller, a resident of Vermont, Fulton County. Maria married Isaac Berry. She died February 21, 1896, and her husband passed away in April, 1903. They had one daughter, who is the wife of William F. Chapin, a resident of Lewistown, Fulton County.

Mrs. Benjamin F. Keeler, after the death of her husband, married John Kendall, by whom she had two daughters: Martha, deceased, wife of James Black, who served during the Civil War in the Seventeenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Mary M., who married P. N. Whitney, of Chanute County, Kan., and had four children. Martha also had four children, who are with their father in Bucks County, Pa. Her second husband having died, Mrs. Keeler, the mother of James Keeler, married a third time, wedding John Heller, a prominent citizen of Cuba, Fulton County. She died December 13, 1890, and he passed away in 1892.

After Benjamin F. Keeler's elopement and marriage the bridegroom and bride returned to her father's home on horseback, where the latter was introduced as Mrs. Keeler and the newly wedded couple were forgiven. Besides his pardon, he gave them a good dinner and forty acres of land. After they began house-keeping he added 200 acres more to this present, making 240 acres in all. Eighty acres of this was still Government land, and was deeded direct to Benjamin F. Keeler by the Government, being the only such transfer then made in that township. Mr. Keeler was a very energetic and determined man; when he resolved on a certain course, nothing daunted him, nothing checked him, and his strong, rugged nature made him prominent and conspicuous in the unsettled conditions that prevailed at that early period.

Thomas M. Keeler was reared to farm life, and received his early mental training in the district schools. At the age of seventeen years he started out in life for himself and went to work at six dollars per month, but soon proving that his services were worth twenty dollars per month, he received that amount as long as he continued working in that way. He afterward bought an old, dilapidated saw-mill, which he remodeled and operated, and in the course of ten years cleared the equivalent of $10,000 in teams and land. He purchased the mill with the accumulation of his monthly wages, borrowed a yoke of oxen with which to make his first year's run, and then bought the cattle and the old log wagon. His first forty-acre purchase was heavy timber land, which he cleared and sawed the logs. Having run out of timber he bought eighty acres, with which he did likewise, and this land is now in corn and grass. From the timber he paid all expenses and the cost of the land, in just one year. He next purchased eighty acres more, heavily timbered, cut the timber, sawed the logs into lumber, and paid for the second eighty acres. Then buying a ninety-acre tract, he went through the same process, and in two years had cleared and paid for that also. In this way he secured land costing $3,000. Beginning with forty acres, Mr. Keeler has acquired tract by tract until he is now the owner of 512½ acres of land, in Sections 20, 21 and 28, Liverpool Township, solely through his own incessant toil and thrifty management. His residence is one of the best in the township—commodious and well finished—and he has two spacious and substantial barns, with the requisite conveniences for weighing and handling all kinds of stock. He makes a specialty of Durham cattle and Norman horses. In all his undertakings he has been remarkably successful, and has been generally recognized as one of the leading men of Fulton County. He is President of the Keeler & Clark Telephone Company, and has been closely identified with all important improvements in his vicinity for many years.

On March 18, 1866, Mr. Keeler was united in marriage with Minerva Clark, born November 2, 1845, a daughter of Zebadiah and Millie (Alsburry) Clark, natives of Ohio. Mrs. Keeler's parents settled in Fulton County at a very early period. Isaac Clark, her grandfather, operated a saw-mill there in the pioneer days, and from him Mr. Keeler gained much useful information in this line. Mahala Clark, the twin sister of Mrs. Keeler's mother, was the first child born in Liverpool Township, the first lady to be married, the first to become a church member, and the first child of her family to die, passing away February 28, 1906. She was the wife of James A. Shelby, a farmer in Liverpool Township.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. Keeler became the parents of five children, as follows: Mary A., born January 13, 1867, wife of Leonard S. Berry, a farmer in Section 21, Liverpool Township; Millie, born July 17, 1868, deceased September 8, 1870; Tiffin R., born February 13, 1870, who is on a portion of the paternal farm and in charge of his father's saw-mill; Frankie Ross, born December 27, 1873, who dwells under the parental roof; and Thomas Zebadiah, born March 11, 1877. He married Carrie Brown, a daughter of James Brown, and is the father of two children—Dewey B., born July 8, 1898, and Jessie B., February 5, 1900.

In politics Mr. Keeler is a Democrat. He has filled with signal credit several of the township offices, among them that of Justice of the Peace, which he has held for six years under appointment made by Governors Yates and Deneen. He is also the Government Correspondent for Fulton County. For fifteen years he served as School Director, and was always instrumental in securing the most efficient teachers possible, realizing the great need and value of educational advantages. The interests of the school system have ever found in him a vigorous advocate. For sixty-seven years Mr. Keeler has made his home in Lewistown and Liverpool Townships. In 1890 a railroad station was established near his farm and he opened a store there, and in June, 1894, was appointed Postmaster under the Cleveland administration. Mr. Keeler has seen Fulton County develop from a wilderness into a garden, and has sturdily, steadfastly and faithfully borne his part in bringing about the marvelous transformation.

Fraternally Mr. Keeler is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. of Lewistown. His worthy and estimable wife is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Both are among the most highly respected and cordially esteemed members of the community.

KEELING, Atharian, now an octogenarian, and one of the oldest residents of Fulton County, Ill., where he has lived for forty-five years, has been among the most successful merchants and farmers of the county, and by long continued and strenuous effort, has accumulated a competency. Age has touched him lightly, and for a man bearing the weight of more than four-score years, he is remarkably vigorous in mind and body. He is now living in comfortable and contented retirement on West Street in Farmington, happy in the faithful companionship of the wife of his early manhood, and attended by the respect and cordial good wishes of many friends.

Mr. Keeling was born in the State of Kentucky on May 12, 1823, a son of Lewis and Lydia (Howey) Keeling, natives of Virginia. Lewis Keeling was a brick manufacturer, contractor and builder, and pursued these occupations in Elizabethtown, Hardin County, Ky., being also extensively engaged in real-estate transactions. He settled in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., in 1826, where he still continued in the brick-making line, with much success. He was a very energetic man, of substantial qualities, and led an upright life, being greatly respected. His son, Atharian, located in Canton, Fulton County, in 1841, and conducted a general store there under the firm name of Mafel & Keeling, for several years. He also devoted some attention to contracting in brick work until 1872. In that year he moved to Farmington, Fulton County, and established a brick manufacturing plant and yard on the corner of Fort and Main Streets. In 1850 he purchased a farm in Section 2, Farmington Township, the operation of which he still supervises. He and his worthy wife are very comfortably situated in their cozy home, and both are remarkably well preserved, considering their advanced years.

In 1848 occurred the marriage of Mr. Keeling with Mary Jane Wilson, a daughter of Samuel Wilson, who was a farmer by occupation and one of the earliest settlers in Fulton County, his farm being situated six miles west of Farmington. His residence in the county covers a period of more than seventy years, and the entire region was almost a wilderness on his arrival. Mr. and Mrs. Keeling became the parents of five children, as follows: Oscar H.; Mary Helen; Alice A. (Mrs. W. C. Pogie); Clara Inez (Mrs. L. B. Baylor); and Jessie L.

Mr. Keeling's religious belief is in accordance with the creed of the Baptist Church. In fraternal circles he is still identified with the I. O. O. F., and in duration of membership is next to the oldest in the Olive Branch Lodge now living, having been initiated the week following its organization. It is a fact which Mr. Keeling recalls with much interest, that, while still a resident of Elizabethtown, Ky., he was acquainted with Abraham Lincoln.

KEIME, Solomon W.—The agricultural labor of Solomon W. Keime has spanned fifty-eight years of Fulton County history, and has resulted in the ownership of valuable tracts of land in Cass, Bernadotte and Putman Townships. Born in Stark County, Ohio, March 18, 1833, Mr. Keime is a son of Daniel and Katherine (Kennel) Keime, natives of Pennsylvania, and born in 1805 and 1810, respectively. Upon the family's removal to Illinois in 1850 the elder Keime bought a home in Putman Township, and thereafter followed the trade of a carpenter for the balance of his active life.

The meagerness of his father's financial resources resulted in the early departure from the home of all his children, and Solomon W. assumed the responsibility of self-support at the age of twenty. Arriving in Putman Township in 1848, he soon after rented a farm and subsequently bought the 160 acres of land in Cass Township, on Section 31, which since has been his home, continuously adding to its equipment and general improvements and converting it into an ideal country place. In the meantime also he purchased a 104-acre tract in Bernadotte Township, which has since passed into the possession of his son.

In the fall of 1862 Mr. Keime enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Third Regiment,

J. W. NEVILLE AND FAMILY

Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served throughout the war. He was wounded at the battle of Missionary Ridge and was confined in the hospital for five months, when he rejoined his old regiment and was with Sherman on his famous March to the Sea. In the fall of 1865 Mr. Keime was mustered out in Louisville, Ky., went thence to Chicago and, after receiving his pay, came at once to Fulton County and resumed the work of the farm.

In Cass Township, March 11, 1859, Mr. Keime married Lavina Mason, who was born in Ohio February 20, 1845, and who became an early settler in Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Keime are the parents of the following children: Mrs. Martha Martindale; Charles; Ulysses G.; Samuel; James; Sarah; Elvia; and Edward R. Coming to this county alone at an early age when most boys are protected by family influences and aided by the assurance of sympathy and support, Mr. Keime has wrought well with the material at hand, and has established a reputation as a capable, successful and high-minded agriculturist.

KELLOGG, William, former Congressman from the Fulton County District, was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio, July 8, 1814, came to Canton, Ill., about 1838, and there engaged in the practice of law, for several years being associated with A. L. Davidson; in 1849 was elected to the Sixteenth General Assembly; in 1850 became Justice of the Circuit Court for the Fulton Circuit, serving for nearly three years; in 1856 was elected Representative in Congress, by two successive re-elections serving three terms (1857-63). In 1866 he was appointed Chief Justice of Nebraska Territory, but later returned to Illinois, locating in Peoria, where he was elected State's Attorney for Peoria County, serving from 1872 to 1880. Originally a Whig, he became a Republican, but in 1872 was a member of the convention at Cincinnati which nominated Horace Greeley as the Liberal candidate for the Presidency. During the latter years of his life he served as Collector of Internal Revenue for the Peoria District, his death occurring in that city.

KELLY, Stephen A., is one of the leading pioneer citizens of Fulton County, the Kelly homestead farm having been purchased by his father, John B. Kelly, in 1840. On this farm Mr. Kelly was born November 26, 1856, and here he has lived continuously, with the exception of a brief residence in Dakota, as a wheat raiser, begun in 1883. The extent of the old homestead is about 300 acres, and it is doubtful if the advancement in agricultural science has been elsewhere more faithfully observed or more intelligently applied.

Mr. Kelly had the numerous character-building advantages which arise from being reared in a large family. There were fourteen children in the household of his father, all born of the latter's marriage to Rachel Proctor, of McLean County, Ill., which took place February 19, 1842. The first wife of the elder Kelly (formerly Elizabeth Smith) died in 1841, a year after her marriage.

John B. Kelly, the father, was born in Cattaraugus County, N. Y., February 6, 1820, and upon coming to Fulton County in 1840 located on the farm now owned by his son, where his death occurred August 10, 1890. His pioneer labors were rewarded with financial success, and he became a leader in Republican politics, a promoter of many of the enterprises which tended to the permanent betterment of the community. He was one of the original Republicans of the State, cast his Presidential vote for Fremont, and, at some time during his life, held practically all of the offices within the gift of his fellow townsmen. Not only was he very active in raising troops for the Civil War, but encouraged two of his sons to enter the service. He was a man of high principle and great general usefulness. As a respite from his strenuous life he became one of the excursionists from Peoria to Niagara Falls, which resulted in the terrible Chatsworth disaster, August 10, 1887, and because of severe injuries sustained at that time, was obliged to relinquish many of his former responsibilities.

In the emergency which arose from his father's impaired health, Stephen A. Kelly stepped into the breach and assumed the management of the large property. He had received a practical training in the public schools, and was thoroughly grounded in agriculture, and its attendant business transactions. His tastes, inclinations and abilities tend to produce the best results of his calling. He found his work congenial and satisfying, and therefore has been successful. The homestead farm is now owned by William Kelly, who resides in Pekin, Ill., and it is managed by John F. Kelly. In 1895 Stephen A. Kelly left the home place and went to the old Roy farm of 160 acres in Orion Township, Section 23, which he had purchased, and remained there four years. He then came to Breeds and entered mercantile circles, establishing a general store, which he is still conducting. He now owns 200 acres altogether in Orion Township.

Mr. Kelly inherits many of the qualities of his father, and one of these is a capacity for painstaking and efficient public service. Notwithstanding that he lives in a Democratic stronghold, he is a staunch Republican, and his popularity is best attested by the fact that he was elected to the Board of Supervisors by a large majority. He is now a Justice of the Peace. Fraternally he is connected with the M. W. of A. He is an affable, courteous gentleman, kindly disposed towards all, and untiring in his zeal for the well-being of the community.

KELSO, Charles P., a well-known citizen of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., and Manager of the W. M. Simpson Lumber Company, in which he is a stockholder, was born in Lewistown, June 27, 1864, a son of David and Sarah (Hendrickson) Kelso, the former a native of Licking County, Ohio, and the latter of Peoria County, Ill. David Kelso was one of a family of seven brothers, who came to Fulton County at an early period. Two of these only are now living, John and James, who are in Colorado. David Kelso, who was by trade a cooper, came to Fulton County in 1862, and is remembered as one of the most worthy and highly respected citizens of Lewistown. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as also is his widow. They became the parents of six children: One who died in infancy; Charles P.; Eliza, wife of D. M. Tanner, a contractor and builder of Lewistown; Mary, wife of Frank Mills, a carpenter in Lewistown; Roy, foreman of the J. C. Simpson Lumber Company, at Galesburg, Ill., and Claude G., of Lewistown.

Charles P. Kelso received the mental training of his boyhood in the country schools near Lewistown, and, at the age of eighteen years, started in life for himself. He went to Escanaba, Mich., and was there employed for five years as assistant to the agent of the American Express Company. Severing this connection, he secured a position as fireman on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, which he held four years, and was then promoted to be engineer. Not wishing to continue railroad-ing, he returned to Lewistown, and for a time followed the carpenter's trade. He assumed his present position in 1895. In 1902 he bought stock in the W. M. Simpson Lumber Company, and when the company was incorporated, during the same year, he was chosen Manager of the Lewistown branch. The company has nine yards, one being located at each of the following places: Lewistown, Galesburg, Mt. Pulaski, Arlington, Elmwood, Colchester, Flora, Carmi and Eldorado, all in Illinois. Under Mr. Kelso's management, the business of the concern has considerably increased, having doubled its former trade.

On January 6, 1894, Mr. Kelso was united in marriage with Mae Stutes, who was born in Fulton County, a daughter of Andrew J. Stutes. She never knew a mother's care, as Mrs. Stutes died when Mae was but an infant. Four children resulted from this union, namely: Celia F., born October 4, 1894; Meredith W., who died in infancy; C. Lyle, born August 25, 1898; and Ruth Louise, born November 29, 1903. In politics Mr. Kelso follows the fortunes of the Democratic party, and fraternally is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Court of Honor. Mr. and Mrs. Kelso are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

KEPLER, Henry.—The descendants of the German agriculturists make fine citizens, because they have been taught that progress comes only with hard and persistent work, directed by common sense and a due regard for the rights of others. Advancement based on nimble wits alone is not in their philosophy, and the result is that, in agricultural communities, whose steady growth is founded on sheer strength of brawn and mind, the German element is invaluable. Henry Kepler well represents the racial characteristics of his people. His father, Matthias, was born in Germany, while his mother, of German descent, was a native of Pennsylvania. Matthias Kepler located in Pennsylvania when he first immigrated to the United States, and in Indiana Henry was born on the 25th of October, 1851. Four years later the father came with his family to Fulton County, bought a farm in Ellisville Township and was engaged in its improvement and cultivation until his death.

The subject of this sketch was educated in the district schools of Ellisville Township, and, no less, upon the home farm, having been a resident of this locality since 1860. His life work has been that of farming, and that he is considered a most honorable representative of his community is shown by the fact of his continuance in the office of School Director for a period of twenty years. In his political relations Mr. Kepler has always been a Republican and is a member of the United Brethren Church. On the 8th of April, 1876, in Ellisville, Fulton County, Mr. Kepler was united in marriage with Lucy D. Potter, who was born October 14, 1856, in New Jersey. They have one child, Arthur Leroy.

KETCHAM, (Mrs.) Mary (nee Addis), a most worthy and estimable resident of Orion Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Fulton County, February 5, 1845, the daughter of Aaron D. and Jane (Suydam) Addis, natives of New Jersey. Her paternal and maternal grandfathers, James Addis and Joseph Suydam, respectively, were natives of that State, as was also her maternal grandmother. Mrs. Ketcham was reared on her father's farm in Fulton County, and in girlhood enjoyed the advantages of the district schools in the vicinity of her home. Near Monterey, in 1867, she was united in marriage with Josiah Ketcham, an industrious and thrifty young farmer of that locality. Mr. Ketcham was a man of excellent traits of character, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of those who came in contact with him in the daily walks of life. He prospered in his farming operations, and at the time of his death, which occurred October 1, 1891, was the owner of a finely improved and highly productive property. He and his wife became the parents of five children, namely: Jennie (Mrs. Jackson); R. A. Ketcham; Eva (Mrs. McMillan); Sherman and Herschel. Mrs. Ketcham is an earnest and devoted member of the Methodist Church. She is possessed of most attractive qualities of mind and heart, and is cordially esteemed by all who have the pleasure of her acquaintance.

JASPER N. ONION

KETTENRING, Adam.—Wherever he has elected to cast his fortunes on this side of the water, the transplanted German of the solid middle class has proved a factor of worth and importance. He has the ability to plan and the perseverance to execute, and having practical and non-visionary needs, lives easily within the competence fashioned by his brain and hands. To such a class belongs Adam Kettenring, a resident of Deerfield Township since his arrival from the Fatherland in 1884, and the owner of 240 acres of improved land on Sections 9 and 16.

Born July 31, 1851, Mr. Kettenring was educated in the common schools of Germany, and received that practical home training which falls to all children of Teutonic birth. For many generations his people have been farmers, and his parents, Valentine and Katherine (Schäfer) Kettenring, were no exception to this rule. Mr. Kettenring assisted his father with the work around the home place, and in time was called upon for the prescribed three years of military duty. November 20, 1879, he married Elizabeth Zumstein, who was born in Germany, October 22, 1855, and of the union there have been born six children: Ida, Hugo, Mary, Anna, Flora and Linda. His family accompanied Mr. Kettenring to America in 1884, and he first purchased eighty acres in Deerfield Township, adding 160 acres thirteen years later. He has built and rebuilt, plowed and sown, reaped, stored and sold with excellent results, and today is one of the substantial and progressive men of his prosperous community. In addition he has taken a commendable interest in politics and other phases of local growth, and as a staunch Republican has served as School Director for several years. A man of deep religious convictions, he lives up to the teachings of the German Lutheran Church, in which he has been an elder for many years, and to the support of which he is a generous contributor.

KINGERY, Christian B.—The value of efficiency and faithfulness, as applied to those who serve the interests of reliable concerns, is emphasized in the life of Christian B. Kingery, for the past eight years a polisher in the Parlin & Orndorff shops at Canton, Ill. Mr. Kingery has been a resident of Fulton County since 1868, coming here at the age of eight years from Dayton, Montgomery County, Ohio, where he was born March 1, 1860. His father, Noah Kingery, was born in Washington County, Md., and his mother, Sarah (Booker) Kingery, was a native of Ohio. Noah Kingery was a farmer by occupation, and after arriving in Fulton County in 1868 located in Joshua Township and engaged in general farming and stock-raising. Eventually he retired from active life in Canton and died there April 21, 1904, at the age of seventy-six.

Christian Kingery spent his early life on the farm in Joshua Township, and during the winter season attended the district schools. His nature craved the greater activity of the cities, and in November, 1893, he came to Canton, and for a time engaged in teaming, later entering the Parlin & Orndorff shops in a minor capacity. January 27, 1884, he married Ella Otto, daughter of John and Mercy (Ellis) Otto, who came to Fulton County during the early 'fifties, and the former of whom lives in Potter County, S. D., while the latter lives with her daughter, Mrs. Kingery. Mr. and Mrs. Kingery are the parents of four children: Noah, Walter, Grover and Dollie May. Mr. Kingery is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the American Yeomen. He is a skilled workman, a progressive citizen and a genial, companionable gentleman.

KINGSLAND, Royal M.—A comparatively recent addition to the real-estate brokers and insurance writers of Canton, Royal M. Kingsland established his interests here in July, 1902, bringing with him a commendable ambition to succeed, and the force of character and ability to withstand temporary discouragement and competition with older and more experienced brokers. Mr. Kingsland belongs to one of the well known families of the State, being a son of George B. Kingsland, for many years a prominent contractor and builder of Peoria, Ill. The elder Kingsland was born in Vermont in 1844, and as a young man came to the then small town of Peoria, which continued to be his home during the greater part of the time until his death in 1883. He married Helen M. Hicks, of Canton, who was born in 1857, a daughter of Asa Hicks, a pioneer of Illinois, and for many years the owner of a grist and flour-mill at Canton.

Mr. Kingsland was educated in that great field of human equality, the common school, and afterward engaged in educational work for about four years. He then established his present business. October 15, 1893, he married Mayme Lane, a native daughter of Canton. He is an earnest and high-minded Republican, and with his broad outlook upon life and intense public-spiritedness, should prove an important factor in maintaining the local integrity of his party. He is well known fraternally, and his standing in the community is materially augmented by association with the Olive Branch, No. 15, I. O. O. F., the Encampment and the Rebekahs. Mr. Kingsland has many qualities which should commend him to the favorable attention of the business and social world. He is honest, industrious, painstaking and enthusiastic. He seeks the best, and intends to find it, and therein lies the secret of overcoming obstacles and making light of discouragements.

KLINE, John G., who has been successfully engaged in farming in Section 3, Joshua Township, Fulton County, Ill., for about thirty years, was born in the State of New Jersey, on July, 5, 1848, a son of Miller and Elizabeth (Aller) Kline, also natives of that State. Miller Kline removed with his family from the East to Illinois in 1851, settling in Fulton County, where he located in Section 3, Joshua Township. The tract of 160 acres, which he bought of Elias Beavers, contained no dwelling except a log cabin. The father cleared the land, made all necessary improvements, and there carried on farming for many years.

The subject of this sketch was one of three children, two of whom were girls. He was reared on the paternal farm, and in boyhood studied the usual rudimentary lessons in the district schools of his vicinity. About the year 1875 he took charge of the farm, and has operated it ever since. In addition to general farming, he raises a good deal of high-grade stock and breeds fine roadsters and heavy draft horses. His farming operations have been attended by successful results and he is looked upon as one of the most thorough farmers in his township.

Mr. Kline has been twice married. His first wife was Louisa Wyckoff, who was a native of Illinois. This union resulted in three children: Lida (Mrs. Mays), Carrie (Mrs. McMullen), and Cornie. In 1889 Mr. Kline was united in marriage with Sadie E. Kline, of Young Hickory Township, and they became the parents of four children, namely: Hattie, Leonard, Raymond and Ardis. The mother of this family died August 28, 1905.

In his political relations Mr. Kline is identified with the Democratic party. He is a man of sound character and is respected by a wide circle of acquaintances.

KNOTT, Noah Theodore, who has spent his whole life of forty-eight years in Fulton County, Ill., many of these being very laborious and productive years, was born in Deerfield Township, in that county, in 1858, a son of Job and Sabilla (Runk) Knott, the former a native of Fulton County, and the latter of Pennsylvania. The occupation of Job Knott was that of a farmer, and in this his industry, perseverance and economy were rewarded by merited success. The grandfather of the subject of this sketch, also Job Knott, journeyed from Virginia to Illinois in the early '30s, traveling by wagon, and settled in Fulton County. He first bargained for land where the city of Canton is now situated at three dollars per acre, but as there was found to be some defect in the title, he finally purchased on Sections 3 and 10 in Deerfield Township. He applied himself diligently to the task of clearing and improving this purchase, and was there engaged in tilling the soil during the remainder of his active life. His son Job continued to live where his father had located, cultivating ninety acres of his own, but subsequently bought out the interests of a brother and sister in the paternal estate, and ultimately became the owner of 635 acres. On this he devoted his attention to the raising of fine, thoroughbred stock, besides buying and selling stock throughout the country. He maintained his residence in Section 10 and made many improvements in his different farms. To him and his worthy wife were born nine children. Of this family the seven surviving are scattered over the various States of the Union.

Noah Theodore Knott received his early mental training in the district schools in the neighborhood of his birthplace, and remained under the parental roof until the time of his marriage. In 1892 he commenced farming for himself on his father's land, east of the home place, and in 1900 moved to an eighty-acre farm which his father had bequeathed to him. This he has improved and built up, and on it he has since carried on general farming with satisfactory results. He also bestows a good deal of attention to stock-raising, making a specialty of Shorthorn cattle, and buys and sells large quantities of stock.

In 1892 Mr. Knott was united in marriage on the farm where he lives to Nora Ginther, a native of Fulton County, where she was born, and where, in early youth, she obtained her education in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Knott are the parents of two children: Eva and Iva J.

In political affairs the subject of this sketch gives his support to the Republican party. He has rendered good service to the township in the capacity of school director, and bears an excellent reputation as a man and as a citizen.

KNOTT, Robert A.—Few families have been longer identified with the history of Fulton County than that represented in Ellisville for the past five years by Robert A. Knott. In 1828 there would seem to have been little to attract the youth from the settled East to an Indian country, which still was a happy hunting ground, the home of the deer and other big game, of widely separated traders, and whose thoroughfares of travel were the trails worn hard by the tread of dusky feet. Yet hither came John Knott in 1828, and, with few of this world's goods to keep him company, took up a tract of land in the vicinity of Table Grove. Here his son Job, the father of Robert A. Knott, was born and reared, and from this old landmark removed to Deerfield Township, which continued his home until his death at the beginning of the twentieth century. Both men had the grit and determination which constituted the chief assets of the successful pioneer, and their names were associated with large usefulness and practical, useful endeavor. Job B. Knott married Savilla Runk, also a native of Fulton County, and to whose economy and thrift he owed much of his success.

Robert A. Knott was born on the Deerfield Township farm August 8, 1874, and while performing his share toward keeping up the home property, managed to secure an excellent education in the public schools and at the Bushnell Normal School. Beginning at the age of twenty-one years, he taught school forty months, and then farmed for two years on the tract of eighty acres, on Section 9, Deerfield Township, which he still owns, but which now is occupied by a tenant. In 1902 Mr. Knott bought out the implement business of William Basel, and three years later sold out to James N. Blakeslee, since that time devoting his energy to the supervision of his various town and country holdings. About five years ago he purchased a home in Ellisville, of which town he is one of the popular and progressive young capitalists.

The marriage of Mr. Knott and Lulu D. Norris occurred in Ellisville December 25, 1895, Mrs. Knott being a native of Lee Township, born December 8, 1877. There are two bright children in the family—Eunice J. and Chester R. Mr. Knott evidences a commendable interest in Republican politics, and has served as Constable of Ellisville for two years. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

KREIDER, Christian (deceased).—Christian Kreider was descended from that stock of Pennsylvania Germans whose habits of industry and morality have done so much to found new communities on an enduring basis. His parents were John and Margaret (Gilbert) Kreider, who were both born in Lebanon, Pa., in which vicinity his father was engaged in farming for many years before coming to Illinois. The subject of this sketch was educated in the common schools of Lebanon, where he was born May 5, 1822. He was reared on the family farm and accompanied his parents to Lee Township, Fulton County, Ill., when they established their home there in 1846. In the succeeding years the father greatly improved the property and at his death it passed into the possession of his son Christian, who has faithfully assisted in its improvement.

Christian Kreider continued in his career of well earned prosperity and, like a worthy citizen, as he became safe and comfortable in his fund of worldly possessions, was willing to devote a portion of his time to public affairs of his home township. He served as School Director for some years, and was Postmaster at various times. At the time of his death, December 27, 1899, he had become the owner of a homestead of 151 acres, and his position as a moral and religious character was as secure as that of a man of affairs and worldly substance. He was a Methodist in religious faith and a Democrat in politics.

On December 18, 1867, Mr. Kreider was married, in Macomb, Ill., to Lavina Milligan, a native of Scott County, Ohio. His second marriage was to Mary Cowperthwait, who was born at Canton, Ill., May 5, 1843, and who still survives him. There were eleven children in the family of the deceased, viz.: George M., Lucy, Sarah E., William P., Martha J., Howard C., Lena L., Musetta M., Samuel J., Henry L. and Ralph C.

KRISCHKE, Joseph, ex-Mayor of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., furnishes a forcible example of the hearty assimilation of foreign-born citizens into the body politic of American communities. The cities and States of the Union readily, even instinctively, recognized the meritorious and adaptable personality which may be utilized to the advantage of the general public. Although an Austrian by birth Mr. Kriskhke possesses the true American stamina and adaptability, and his fellows therefore called upon him for many years to represent them in the affairs of a developing and vigorous community.

Born in Silesia, Austria, about 150 miles from Vienna, in the year 1828, Joseph Kriskhke is the son of Ignatz and Mary Regina Kriskhke, his father dying in 1833 and his mother in 1852. His parents were in humble circumstances and he early learned the butcher's trade, at which he commenced to work regularly when he was fourteen years of age. With a scant education, but with a good trade at his fingers' ends, the young man sailed from Hamburg for America on the 15th of September, 1854, landing at New York twenty-three days thereafter. Within the following two weeks he struck Chicago, went by rail to La Salle, thence to Fort Madison, Iowa, and finally, partly by water and partly by stage, interspersed by considerable foot work, he reached Liverpool, Fulton County. One of his friends had previously found employment there in a packing house, but when they arrived upon the ground they found the establishment closed, and passed on to Canton, where they secured work. Mr. Kriskhke thus continued for about ten months, but, as there was only one butcher then in Canton, decided that there was an opening for him in the line of his regular trade. Eventually he bought out the firm of Moyer & Ayers, butchers, and established a good business, in which he was engaged from October 15, 1858, to October 15, 1895.

Mr. Kriskhke has been a staunch Democrat since 1860, when he rallied enthusiastically to the support of Stephen A. Douglas. For years he took a deep interest and a leading part in ward politics, and was elected to represent the Third Ward in the City Council. Altogether he served as Alderman for nine terms, in 1877, 1884 and 1886, and from 1890 to 1895, during this long period of municipal service being assigned to all the important committees and conducting himself with energy and practical ability. In 1888 he was elected Mayor of Canton by a good majority, and in that capacity materially added to his former reputation for executive talents and honorable dealings. He has also served as a member of the Board of Review. Of late years Mr. Kriskhke natives of New York. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Kutchler resulted in three children, namely: Effie P., John E. and Josephine E. John Kutchler, the only son, as before stated, is in partnership with his father in stock-raising, feeding and shipping, as junior member of the widely known firm of James Kutchler & Son, whose headquarters are in Avon, Fulton County.

The political opinions of Mr. Kutchler are in accordance with the platforms of the Democratic party, although he has never mingled in politics with any view of official preferment. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs and current events, and dutifully discharges the duties pertaining to citizenship. His religious connection is with the Methodist Church. In fraternal circles he is identified with the A. F. & A. M. Agriculturally and commercially he is one of the prominent men of Western Illinois and is known and respected over a wide range of country.

LALICKER, George.—One cannot follow the long career of George Lalicker without renewing appreciation of those homely, sterling qualities which, when allied with practical business sense, lift men from obscurity to influence and from poverty to wealth. Mr. Lalicker was born on a farm in Hamilton County, Ohio, April 7, 1821, the son of John Lalicker, a European by birth, and an arrival in America previous to the War of 1812. The elder Lalicker carried a musket in the second conflict with England, and a constant reminder of his service was the permanent deafness resulting from the shot and roar of the cannon. He was an early arrival in Hamilton County, Ohio, where he married and did fairly well at farming. In 1823 he made a trip down the river to New Orleans, and while there was taken sick, and it is presumed was buried either in or near the Southern city. His wife died four years later, in 1827.

George Lalicker is the sole survivor of his parents' six children. Left an orphan at the age of six, when ten years old he came to Fulton County with his sister and her husband, soon after beginning to shift for himself as a wage-earner. When twelve years old he went to Quincy, Ill., with Mr. Townsley, and there was set to grinding paint by placing the article on a marble slab and grinding it with a piece of rock. This experience nearly proved his undoing, for he contracted paint poison and was laid up for some time in consequence. He thereafter went to work on a farm and in 1844 his sister sent for him to return to Ipava, near where he worked on a farm by the month. In the meantime, January 13, 1842, he had married Rebecca Parvin, who was born in Ohio April 7, 1823, a daughter of Hosea and Elizabeth (France) Parvin, who moved to Indiana in 1825 and to Fulton County in 1832. The Parvin family reached this county Monday evening and the following Wednesday the mother died. The father subsequently went to Texas, where his death occurred in 1885. Mr. Parvin had contracted a second marriage, and had reared a large family of children, few of whom survive at the present time.

Few of the experiences which fell to the lot of the early settlers of the Central West were omitted from the early married life of Mr. and Mrs. Lalicker. They went to housekeeping in a little log house made of hewn wood, the floor being of puncheon, made by splitting a log through the center. Looking back over these times both husband and wife wonder how they endured the trials and deprivations that came their way. As was the case with all the married settlers, the wife contributed more than did the husband to the well-being of the family, making both ends meet when a meeting seemed practically impossible. Mrs. Lalicker's work was never done, and its extent would be incomprehensible to the housekeeper of today. Not only did she cook, wash, keep the house and nine children clean, but she spun the wool, colored it and wove the material for the clothing of herself, husband and all of the children. Of these children, Highley Ann is the wife of Hamilton Bidwell, of Axtell, Marshall County, Kan.; John J. is deceased, Mary E. is deceased, Sarah J. is the wife of Andrew Harwick, of Ipava; William H. is a farmer in Pleasant Township, this county; Amanda is the wife of Josiah Creek, of Oklahoma; Susan A. is the wife of William Shago, of Dunlap, Morris County, Kan., and Eva M. is the wife of Joseph Morgan, living on the old homestead in Pleasant Township.

To the original forty acres upon which he settled in the poverty-clouded days of the early 'forties, Mr. Lalicker has added until he now owns 200 acres all in one body and under a high state of cultivation. Every building, every fence, every improvement of any kind whatsoever, is due to the untiring zeal of this worthy couple. And notwithstanding all that they have had to contend with their home has always been an open one and the wayfarer, be he friend or stranger, has always found a warm welcome. They have given liberally of their means to the furtherance of schools and charities, churches and worthy interests in general, and have provided their children with a practical common school education, training them at home for noble and useful man and womanhood. After seventy-five years in and around Ipava, sixty-four of which have been spent as man and wife, they find a wonderful compensation for their trials and sufferings in the good will and esteem of their fellowmen, and in a degree of prosperity which never seemed possible to the dwellers of the rude log cabin. In 1890 they retired to their present home in Ipava, where comfort, peace and plenty brighten the latter end of their pilgrimage.

LALICKER, William.—Not only is William Lalicker the architect of a substantial fortune, acquired through agricultural enterprise, but in its acquisition he has maintained the reputation for industry and reliability established in Fulton County by his pioneer father, George Lalicker, who journeyed Illinoisward from Clermont County, Ohio, in 1831, settling after years of uncertain struggle on Section 3, Pleasant Township. William, like the rest of his father's nine children, received such education as could be secured during the winter term of school, and such lessons in economy and thrift as the meager resources of the family made necessary. Born on the Pleasant Township farm May 29, 1853, he was twenty-two years old at the time of his marriage, September 3, 1875, to Mary Lampton, who was born in Lewistown September 3, 1854, a daughter of William and Lydia (Morgan) Lampton, natives of Ohio and early settlers of Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Lampton were married in this county in 1830, and the former died here in 1883, at the age of eighty-six, while the latter died at a comparatively early age in 1860. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom the following attained maturity: Lucia, widow of J. E. Ellis, now a resident of Des Moines, Iowa; Manda, wife of Thomas Parkinson, of Riverside, Cal., and mother of seven children; Minerva, wife of Thomas Painter, of Galva, Henry County, Ill.; Frank, a farmer in Fulton County; William, formerly a resident of Canton, Mo.; Jennie, deceased wife of William Rowe, of Des Moines, Iowa; Lydia, deceased wife of John Locust, of Chicago; Miron, deceased husband of Lillie (Dew) Lampton, who is the mother of three children, and Julia, one of the early teachers of Fulton County.

After his marriage Mr. Lalicker settled on the old homestead in Pleasant Township and in 1879 removed to the Ross farm in the same township, in 1881 returning to the old farm of his parents. In 1886 he became a land owner for the first time, purchasing forty acres adjoining the old place, but this he sold during the year and bought 120 acres on Section 4, Pleasant Township, formerly owned by the eleven Montgomery sons, who were among the very earliest settlers of Fulton County. That the Montgomerys still retain an interest in the homestead is evident when a grandson of the pioneer settler visits the place each year and notes the great changes which have taken place upon its broad acres. In place of the old log cabin is a fine modern rural home, roomy and comfortable, bespeaking the refined taste and numerous requirements of the present occupants. The general improvements are in accord with established standards of the present, for although Mr. Lalicker is fifty-three years of age, he is progressive in the extreme and welcomes any innovation which promises better results.

In political affiliation a Democrat, Mr. Lalicker has avoided office holding as a rule, although he has served as a member of the Board of Education for many years. In religion he is a member of the Christian Church, and contributes generously to its support. Mr. and Mrs. Lalicker are the parents of seven children: Pearl M., born February 28, 1877, the wife of Blake Johnson, a farmer of Pleasant Township; Chauncey, born November 14, 1878, married Annie Forsyth and has two children—Sheldon and Maurice; Cora Belle, born September 16, 1880, died August 24, 1889; Corda, born October 4, 1882; Freddie, born September 6, 1883, married Lena Ready and has one daughter—Cora; Sophrona, born April 27, 1885, died September 2, 1885; Dollie, born February 22, 1888, wife of Henry Clanin; Sherman, born February 12, 1890; George, born December 27, 1891, and Lawrence and Florence (twins), born April 12, 1893, and died June 17 and September 14, 1893, respectively. All of the children surviving have been given advantages of which their parents never dreamed, and all are healthy, happy and prosperous. The family occupies one of the delightful and productive farms of the county and are justly esteemed for the kindly and reliable traits of its members. In 1906 Mrs. Lalicker and her oldest daughter, Mrs. Blake Johnson, made a trip to California for the purpose of visiting her sister, Mrs. Thomas Parkinson, whom she had not seen for twenty years. During their tour of six weeks they visited many Western cities, including Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, the Island of Santa Catalina and other noted places.

LALLY, Thomas (deceased).—The family of which Thomas Lally was the American head has taken a prominent part in the change wrought in Fulton County since 1849. Mr. Lally and his wife, Mary (Hannaher) Lally, were born in Belfast, County Mayo, Ireland, and came to the United States in a sailing vessel in 1848. Locating in St. Louis, Mo., Mr. Lally worked in a rope factory for eight dollars a month, then proceeded by boat up the river to Liverpool Township, Fulton County, where he went to work in the harvest field of Jonathan Bordner, after tendering the latter his last twenty-five cents for his breakfast. Six weeks later he appeared upon the scene in Lewistown, the first Irishman to honor that community with his labor, and became assistant engineer at a salary of nineteen dollars per month. A little later he was advanced to the position of first engineer, receiving thirty dollars per month, a salary considered princely in those days, although he was obliged to board himself.

In 1852 Mr. Lally went to work for 'Squire Boyte, with whom he got along in the best possible manner, and added considerably to his little hoard of money. This he finally invested in two teams of horses, with which he conducted a freighting business between Lewistown, Liverpool and Peoria. Freighting in those days was a paying business, and in 1865 he was in a position to purchase 260 acres of land on Section 21, Bernadotte Township, all timber with the exception of about seventy-five acres. With the aid of his sons Mr. Lally proceeded to clear his land, and in time he added to it another 120 acres, making in all 330 acres. Not a vestige of fence adorned the property at the time of purchase, but in time seven miles of hedge protected the interests of the owner, five miles of which since has been replaced by wire fencing. Mr. Lally and his wife traveled close together on their earthly pilgrimage, and in death they were divided by only two months, the wife dying in January, 1892, and the husband following her in March of the same year. They lived to see all the timber cleared away, fine barns and general buildings erected and modern machinery supplant the old-time implements of the pioneer. Mr. Lally was public spirited and energetic, a staunch Democrat and a devout member of the Roman Catholic Church.

The old Lally homestead on Section 21 is now being operated by Edward and John Lally, sons of the pioneer, the former of whom was born in Lewistown July 8, 1856, and the latter in 1864. The farm is owned by John Lally, one of the progressive agriculturists of the township, who makes a specialty of Jersey hogs and high-grade cattle and horses. Mr. Lally married Maria Sweeney, of Vermont Township, this county, and daughter of an Illinois pioneer. Mr. Lally is a Democrat in politics, and has held several local offices of importance, including that of School Director and Highway Commissioner.

LANCE, J. Willard, the Cashier of the Fulton County Bank at Table Grove, Ill., has had fifteen years' experience with the uncompromising and accuracy-compelling methods of monetary science as revealed behind the counters of Illinois institutions. As are all successful and reliable cashiers, he is methodical in his habits and practical in his ambitions. Steadiness of life aim has been imparted to him by progenitors who braved the hardships and dangers of pioneer life in the State, and he himself is a product of the prairies, having been born on a farm in New Salem Township, McDonough County, Ill., February 4, 1870. His father, William E. Lance, was born in Cook County, Ill., and his mother, Melissa (Morley) Lance, was born to very early settlers of Fulton County.

On his father's farm Mr. Lance developed a strong constitution and when a lessening of home duties permitted attended the public schools. To this preliminary education he added a course in business at the Western Illinois Normal School of Bushnell, Ill., during 1890 and 1891, carrying off the highest honors in his class, and thereafter returned to the farm and the larger responsibility of its management. In September, 1891, he became Bookkeeper and Assistant Cashier in the Bank of Good Hope at Good Hope, Ill., a position which he creditably filled for nine years, or until offered the position of Cashier in the Swan Creek (Ill.) Bank. Upon the organization of the Fulton County Bank, at Table Grove, November 1, 1905, Mr. Lance was tendered his present position, the other officers of the institution being A. A. Cornell, of Galesburg, President, and Loren Morley, of Table Grove, Vice President. Mr. Lance is a heavy stockholder in the bank and his wide acquaintance with the farmers and business men of the State renders him a valuable adjunct to its success.

The marriage of Mr. Lance and Agnes Markham, of Randolph, Ill., occurred November 24, 1892. Mrs. Lance is a daughter of Daniel Markham, a prominent and influential farmer of McDonough County. Mr. and Mrs. Lance have two children—Roscoe and Marie. Mrs. Lance is an active member of the Presbyterian Church. Socially Mr. Lance is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. In politics he is a Republican, and while a resident of Good Hope, Ill., filled many places of local importance. He is a promoter of stable and conservative interests, and as a citizen and banker maintains standards in keeping with the best welfare of the community.

LANDERS, James Robert, M. D.—Good birth, good breeding, fine mental endowment and a capacity for infinite painstaking, contribute to the present large usefulness and future bright prospects of Dr. James Robert Landers, a medical and surgical practitioner of Ipava, Ill. Dr. Landers comes honestly by his predilection for medicine, as he was practically reared in the office of his father, Dr. James H. Landers, one of the leading practitioners of Shepherdsville, Bullitt County, Ky., where the son and namesake was born August 4, 1861, the younger of two sons, the elder, Dr. Franklin L. Landers, dying August 10, 1883. On the maternal side Dr. Landers claims distinguished connections, his mother, America F. Crist, being a granddaughter of General Henry Crist, around whose name centers many of the notable undertakings of Kentucky pioneer life. General Crist settled early in the Bourbon State, laid out the town of Shepherdsville, and was the first to manufacture salt at old Salt Lick, in that State. He represented his district in the Legislature and in Congress, and attained to industrial, political and general prominence. Dr. James H. Landers died April 4, 1867, and in 1868 his widow married Dr. H. F. Crenshaw, for forty years engaged in the practice of medicine in Mount Washington, Ky. Dr. Crenshaw died June 7, 1905, his wife having predeceased him June 22, 1893. They were the parents of three children: Dr. J. M. Crenshaw, of Redlands, Cal.; Dr. O. M. Crenshaw, of Taylorsville, Ky., and F. W. Crenshaw, who died in young manhood.

The preliminary education of Dr. James Robert Landers was acquired in the public schools of Shepherdsville, Ky., and after school hours he invariably assisted his father in the latter's office. His professional and general training went hand in hand, and while still very young he was grounded in materia medica and understood how to prescribe for common human ailments. He also became expert in extracting teeth, and his prescribing and tooth-pulling skill found encouraging support among the colored population. At the age of twenty-one he entered the Hospital College Medical Department in the North Central University of Kentucky, and after graduating, June 16, 1885, engaged in practice with his stepfather, Dr. H. F. Crenshaw, for a few years. June 20, 1890, he was united in marriage to Julia Merrifield, of Bloomfield, Ky., and great-granddaughter of Colonel Merrifield, representing one of the fine old families of the Southern State.

The year of his marriage Dr. Landers located in Fairland, Ill., and on November 21st of the following year his home was desolated by the death of his wife. On June 14, 1893, he married Lulu M. Patterson, of Madisonville, Ky., a daughter of C. H. Patterson, commercial agent in Kentucky and Tennessee for the Page Woven Wire Fence Company, of Adrian, Mich., in which he is a heavy stockholder. Upon leaving Fairland Dr. Landers practiced for six years in Moultrie County, Ill., and November 22, 1904, located in Bernadotte, Fulton County, where he has established a large and lucrative practice. Dr. and Mrs. Landers are the parents of one son, Robert, born July 7, 1894. The Doctor is socially connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He represents a kind of medical practice which is a long way removed from the standards of even a decade ago. His progressive mind mercilessly rejects dogmas whose only claim is their antiquity, and which have no place in the sunlight of modern investigation. Practicability and simplicity are the watchwords of his professional efforts. He is one of the most careful and expert diagnosticians in Fulton County, and one of its most inquiring students. In the search for clearer vision and larger capacity for usefulness he has taken post-graduate courses in several of the principal cities of Illinois and Kentucky, has made a special study of chemistry, and of the various occult sciences which throw light upon mental suggestion as an aid to healing. Against spurious or impure drugs he has insured himself by securing his supplies from reliable headquarters, and as a rule compounds his own prescriptions, thus minimizing the possibility of mistakes. He is a frequent contributor to the leading professional periodicals of the country, especially along therapeutic lines, his ideas upon the operation and administration of remedies for disease, hygiene, dietetics or the application of diet, atmospheric and other non-medicinal influences to the preservation or recovery of health being the result of profound thought and extended practical experience. In manner Dr. Landers is genial and optimistic, traits which contribute materially to his business as well as social success.

LANE, George W.—Nearly three-score and ten years have elapsed since the venerable gentleman whose name furnishes the caption of this personal narrative made his first appearance in Fulton County, Ill., and he has been a witness of and participator in the development of that region since its primitive stages. His agricultural experience on Sections 15 and 22, Canton Township, Fulton County, where he now lives in comfortable retirement, covers a period of thirty-seven years, and during that extended period he has done his full share to promote the progress and conserve the welfare of the locality where he is restfully passing the evening of his life. Mr. Lane is a son of John A. and Christina (Toner) Lane, natives of that State, who came to Illinois in 1837, locating in Fulton County. They traveled the entire distance by team, the journey consuming six weeks. John A. Lane first established his home in the vicinity of Fairview, Ill., where he was engaged in farming for twenty years. At the end of that time he moved to a place near Canton, Ill., and there continued his customary occupation until his death, which occurred in 1854, the mother dying in 1876. The first dwelling of the family in Fulton County was a log cabin and the purchase price of the first tract of land was $11 per acre. The father's life was devoted to arduous toil, and its record, in private and public, was free from reproach.

George W. Lane was born in Somerset County, N. J., July 1, 1822. He attended the public schools convenient to his home in early youth, and at the age of fifteen years accompanied his parents on their journey westward. He was reared to farm work and remained on the family homestead until a short time after his father's decease. In middle life he became connected with an Eastern supply company, and for eighteen years traveled over the country, engaged in selling machinery, in which he was successful. He bought the farm where he now lives, consisting of 135 acres, situated on Sections 15 and 22, Canton Township, of John G. Graham, in 1859. Some of the improvements now standing there were built by him. On this property he carried on general farming and stock-raising until 1900, when he rented the premises and abandoned active business pursuits.

In 1848 Mr. Lane was united in marriage with Elizabeth Garrett, of Fairview, and in 1903 married as his second wife Sophie Stont, who was born in New Jersey. Mr. Lane is spending his declining years in exemption from care, and is conscious of the warm regard and hearty respect of all who know him.

LA RUE, George C.—The youth obliged to make his own way in agriculture, without means or influence, should take heart from the experience of George C. La Rue, one of the foremost farmers and stock-raisers of Vermont Township, Fulton County. Mr. Le Rue comes of a family numerously represented in Fulton County, and invariably are its members men of high character and well-directed usefulness. He is one of the five children of Samuel and Elizabeth (Kenney) La Rue, the former born in France and the latter in Pennsylvania. Samuel La Rue, a blacksmith by trade, was an early settler in Pennsylvania, where he conducted a shop and later in life engaged in farming. His death occurred during the latter 'fifties, his wife subsequently marrying E. H. Smith, with whom and the rest of the family she came to Fulton County in 1868. Settling in Woodland Township, near Lewistown, Mrs. Smith reared a second family and died near Table Grove, Ill., aged about fifty-six years. She was a woman of superior intelligence and ability as a disciplinarian and during her entire active life a devout member of the Dunkard Church. Of her first family M. K. La Rue, a resident of Huron, S. D., formerly lived in Astoria and in Schuyler County, this State; Abe K. is a farmer in Logan County, Ill.; Samuel K. is a farmer of Vermont Township, and Amos is a merchant in Astoria.

The success of George C. La Rue has been achieved on the basis of a common school education, a careful home training, which stimulated a desire to be of use in the world, and the quality of perseverance which assures the accomplishment of any task undertaken. Until his twenty-third year he worked by the month on farms in different parts of Fulton County, and on February 5, 1879, was united in marriage with Emily F. Robinson, daughter of T. C. Robinson, a prominent farmer of Vermont Township. With his wife Mr. La Rue settled on the farm which represented his first land purchase, and upon which he had paid but $2,500 of the purchase price of $4,500. That his energies have been turned to good account and that he possesses more than average business and general ability may be judged from the fact that, starting with practically nothing, he now owns 403 acres of valuable land, 236 of which is in Vermont Township and 167 in Pleasant Township. He has devoted his attention to general farming and stock-raising, and a reasonable share of his profits have been invested in improvements, including substantial buildings and labor-saving machinery. An understanding of scientific agriculture has secured the best results from his land, and its disposal is arranged with a view to the greatest economy of expenditure, as well as the largest rewards from such side lines as poultry and gardening.

While cherishing no political aspirations, Mr. La Rue has stanchly supported the principles of the Republican party. He has been especially active in promoting the cause of education as a member of the School Board for several years, and his zeal has resulted in the establishment of high standards and the employment of the best teachers obtainable.

While not a member of any church, he gives liberally to religious organizations, and is a generous contributor to charities and social demands. He began to work at farming in the county when he was twelve years old and his fiftieth year finds him one of the wealthy, successful and influential agriculturists of Vermont Township.

LA RUE, Samuel K.—The personal influence and financial stability of Samuel K. La Rue are the result of patient application to farming, prudent investment and the habit of living always within his income. At the outset of his independent career he found little to encourage him in the dreary round of duties on the farm of his parents in York County, Pa., where his birth occurred on January 21, 1854, and near which he secured the rudiments of an education in the subscription schools. In the veins of Mr. La Rue is the blood of French and German ancestors. His father, Samuel La Rue, married Elizabeth Keeny, whose parents were of German birth. The elder La Rue was a blacksmith by trade, but turned his attention to farming, in which he was moderately successful. His death, which occurred after the birth of his youngest son, Amos, revealed in his will the desire that his sons should learn some useful trade, a desire which was destined to failure, as all took to farming except Amos, who now is a merchant in Astoria.

Samuel K. La Rue was fifteen years old when the family moved from Pennsylvania to Illinois. At the age of eighteen he began to work on a farm by the month and in 1875 engaged in the butchering and stock business with his two brothers for a couple of years. In 1879 he began to cultivate the farm of Samuel Clements on shares, continuing thus until his marriage, December 2, 1880, to Josephine David, daughter of Easley David, a pioneer of Fulton County, and long a resident of Pleasant Township. Mr. and Mrs. La Rue began housekeeping on a farm of sixty-eight acres which Mr. La Rue purchased the year previous, and upon which he still owed a thousand dollars. At the time of disposing of this farm, in 1895, it had been increased to 137 acres, and Mr. La Rue then purchased 160 acres for $13,000. He has a comfortable home and valuable farm, and his methods of conducting it have entitled him to rank among the progressive and enlightened agriculturists and stock-raisers of his township.

Mr. La Rue has done much to encourage education, good roads and clean government. Under the wise direction of himself and wife ten children have been reared from infancy, and several are occupying homes of their own. In the order of their birth the children are as follows: Grace, wife of Raymond Russell, a farmer of Grant County, Neb.; James, a farmer in Vermont Township, Fulton County; Alice, a successful teacher in Fulton County; Neily, on the home place; Frank, his father's able assistant on the home farm; Perry, Irvin, Mary, Martha and Robert George. The moderation of his life, the practical quality of his efforts and the good will and honesty which have characterized all of his dealings with his fellowmen have won for Mr. La Rue a warm place among the foremost promoters of agriculture in Vermont Township.

LASSWELL, David A.—The Lasswell family is one of the oldest in Deerfield Township, and its changing fortunes, described at length elsewhere in this work, have gone parallel with the transformation begun here during the first quarter of the nineteenth century. At that remote period, in 1824, Henry Lasswell, the father of David, was born in a rude log cabin on the unclaimed and untilled prairie of the township, and when grown to manhood married Sarah H. Rush, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1830. David A. first saw the light in the same locality December 20, 1850, and to the educational and general advantages of this part of the county owes his rise from modest circumstances to a fair measure of social and agricultural prosperity.

Mr. Lasswell secured his education under the usual disadvantages which confront the youth who has to work hard during the busy farming season, and whose leisure, at best, is sufficiently rare to be appreciated and turned to the best possible account. At the age of twenty-four he left home and invested his earnings in a farm of 120 acres on Section 28, Deerfield Township, and in the township which had profited by the energy and good judgment of both his grandfather and father, began the carving of his own independent fortune. Practically all of the improvements are due to his initiative and ability to get along, and his farm embodies the advanced and practical utilities of the progressive and up-to-date agriculturist who believes in elevating his mental as well as financial surroundings. The first marriage of Mr. Lasswell occurred March 12, 1885, to Mary Schrodtt, who was born in Deerfield Township, May 2, 1852, and his second marriage occurred July 1, 1905, to Mae L. Morgan, who was born in Joshua Township, August 13, 1861. There are three children in the family: John, Florence and Carrie.

A Republican in politics, Mr. Lasswell has dignified with good judgment and honest service various local offices, among them that of Constable and member of the School Board. Although not a member of any church he is a man of clearly defined moral views, and may be depended on to contribute his share toward the furtherance of charitable or other local interests.

LASWELL, Samuel, a veteran farmer of Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township, October 11, 1832, and received his early training in the district schools in the vicinity of his home. He is a son of John and Phoebe (Morris) Laswell, natives of Virginia. John Laswell came to Cass Township in 1830 and located on what is now known as the Tate Farm, where he carried on farming.

The subject of this sketch was the fourteenth of a family of fifteen children, of whom he is now the sole survivor. About the year 1855 he bought a tract of 180 acres of land in section 4, Cass Township, which he cleared and improved, and on which he has since lived. On coming to this place he built a sawmill, known as "Laswell's Mill," which has been in operation ever since this region was first settled.

On October 17, 1853, Mr. Laswell was united in matrimony with Sarah Lippy, a native of Pennsylvania, and four children were born to their union, namely: Mary (Mrs. Huffman), deceased; Melissa (Mrs. Bowlin); John, who lives in Cass Township, and Phoebe (Mrs. Evelyn). Politically Mr. Laswell is a supporter of the Democratic party and religiously is connected with the Christian Church. To the endurance, patient industry, perseverance and sturdy integrity of Samuel Laswell and his contemporaries is mainly due the present abounding prosperity of Fulton County.

LATOURETTE, Arthur.—A companion of the wilderness of Fulton County and a sharer in the prosperity unfolded by the zeal and understanding of its tireless workers, Peter Latourette spent his days in the pursuit of agriculture and at the time of his death in 1886 owned an excellent farm of 100 acres in Fairview Township. He was born in New Jersey in 1826 and his wife, formerly Julia Redormer, was born in the same State in 1836. Of the children of their union Arthur, now representing the family as a farmer of Young Hickory Township, was born on the Fairview Township farm August 25, 1875.

Educated in the public schools and enjoying the average advantages of the well-bred country youth, Arthur Latourette has followed uninterruptedly the occupation of his father and has succeeded in spite of many hindrances and discouragements. Leaving the paternal roof at the age of sixteen years, he worked as a farm hand in various parts of Fulton County, and in 1901 bought 160 acres of land in Section 23, Young Hickory Township, where he since has been engaged in general farming and stock-raising. At Galesburg, Ill., March 23, 1897, he was married to Amanda White, thus becoming allied with one of the pioneer families of Young Hickory Township, where his wife was born August 13, 1876. To Mr. and Mrs. Latourette have been born two children, Lois and Mae. Mr. Latourette is a Democrat in politics, but thus far has not invaded the field of office-seeking. He is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a consistent member of the Christian Church. Highly respected by all who know him, his labor in the past has brought many satisfying compensations and his future holds much of hope and promise.

LAWS, James M., Circuit Clerk of Fulton County, Ill., and prominent both as a business man and a public official, was born in Putman Township February 14, 1851, a son of James H. and Louisa (Hasson) Laws. His father was a native of Virginia and his mother of Kentucky, migrating to Fulton County at a very early day, where the former died December 24, 1854. There were five children in the family, James M. being the third in order of birth. The other members were: Ione, wife of H. C. Carver, of Canton, Ill.; S. T. Laws, also of that place; W. H. Laws, of Los Angeles, Cal., and Emma O., at the old homestead in Buckheart Township. Mrs. Laws married William Fuits and to them were born five children, namely: C. F., of Buckheart; L. C., of Lewistown; Butler, an auctioneer of Canton; Maggie, deceased; and Rosa, wife of Charles Andrews. William Fuits, the father, died in 1875. The mother is still living on the old homestead farm in Buckheart Township.

The parents of James M. Laws settled in Fulton County about the year 1835; so that he may be accounted as of the real pioneer stock. He was reared upon the farm and received most of his education in the common schools, the progress of his life to early manhood being that of the average youth of an agricultural district. He assisted in the management of the farm until 1870, when he went to Kansas, but came back in 1872 and settled in Cuba, Ill., where he pursued the grain, stock and coal business until 1894. Mr. Laws was married October 14, 1875, to Mary Harrison, a daughter of John and Sarah (Coykendall) Harrison, her parents being natives of New England. In 1894 he was nominated by the Republican convention for the office of Sheriff, and in a close contest, with the Democracy as the party in power, was elected by a majority of 780 votes. In the discharge of the duties of his office he was so successful that in 1904 his party placed their approval of his career as Sheriff upon record by selecting him for the position of Circuit Clerk, for which he received a majority of 1,690. His courteous, prompt and methodical dispatch of the business which comes before him has gained for him new friends and admirers, who will stand by his former supporters in making his present position secure, and his prospects for further advancement are bright. Mr. Laws has always evinced an active interest in public affairs, irrespective of politics. Fraternally he is identified with the Masonic Order (Cuba Lodge, No. 534; Canton Chapter, No. 68, and Damascus Commandery, of Havana, No. 42).

Mr. and Mrs. James M. Laws have been the parents of five children, one of whom, Bruce, died in infancy. The surviving members are: Harry H., a farmer, whose interests are located near Cuba; Grace O., Lute C. and Mary, and they all have been thoroughly educated and equipped for the practical duties of life.

LAWSON, Jerome, who has been for several years successfully engaged in farming in Joshua Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Franklin County, Pa., on February 5, 1855. He is a son of James and Jane (Morrow) Lawson, natives of Pennsylvania. James Lawson, the elder, moved from Pennsylvania to Fulton County in 1858, and bought a farm in Deerfield Township, where he carried on farming for many years and is now living on the old place practically retired.

Jerome Lawson was reared on his father's farm and received his early education in the public schools of Fulton County. He was engaged in farming in that vicinity until 1893, when he bought from John Polhemus a farm of 200 acres, on which he built and rebuilt various buildings until he made a fine home. On this property he carried on farming until 1901, when he rented the place. He has eighty head of cattle and also owns lots in Fairview, Fulton County. He is a director in the Home Fire Insurance Company. He is now building a house in Fairview as a permanent home which he expects to occupy shortly.

On February 25, 1880, Mr. Lawson was united in marriage with Emma Polhemus, who was born in Joshua Township, Fulton County, February 23, 1860.

In politics Mr. Lawson is a Democrat. In 1900 he was elected Supervisor of Joshua Township, and has filled that office for six years. He affiliates with the Reformed Church. Mr. Lawson is a man of enterprising habits and full of energy and maintains an excellent standing as a citizen.

LAWYER, Charles E., principal of the High School at Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born near Industry, McDonough County, Ill., July 4, 1872, a son of Thomas and Catherine (Comer) Lawyer. After passing through the common schools of his native county he pursued courses at the Western Illinois Normal School, Bushnell, and Lincoln University, and then entered Knox College, from which he graduated in 1898. Mr. Lawyer taught at Industry one year and at Macomb four years, when, in the spring of 1905, he was called to Canton to assume his present position, which has greatly increased his reputation as an efficient and progressive educator.

On December 27, 1899, Mr. Lawyer was united in marriage to Miss Myrtle Butcher, who is also a native of Industry, McDonough County. Their two children are Kenneth and Dorothy. Although he is a Mason and a Red Man, and a member of the Court of Honor and Knights of Pythias, Mr. Lawyer has never held office in any of the fraternities. In his religious belief he is a Presbyterian, and, although brought up under the teachings of Democracy, has reasoned himself into the position of an Independent. In general intercourse Mr. Lawyer is affable and pleasing, and, while he carries into the schoolroom the same courteous bearing, he is a good disciplinarian, clear and firm in the enunciation of his methods and an interesting, effective and up-to-date instructor.

LEISTER, Theodore E.—Mr. Leister is one of the industrious and reliable farmers of Lee Township, classed with the rising generation of agriculturists, who are acknowledged to be as broad and scientific in their methods and as fruitful in valuable results to the community as the workers in any other branch of modern industry. In the field of agriculture it has often happened that the fathers and grandfathers have secured the broad and fertile tracts of land which the sons and grandsons have brought to their full capacity of productiveness. The rough, preliminary labors of the pioneers are as necessary as the developing work of the after generations; all combine for the general advancement of the wonderful agricultural interests of the West.

Theodore E. Leister is of Southern birth, a native of Carroll County, Md., born August 29, 1869. His father, William Leister, was also born in that county on the 3d day of May, 1844, while his mother, whose maiden name was Margaret Hinman, was born in Germany, February 14, 1838. William Leister first came to Fulton County in 1870, residing near Canton for a short time; then lived at Zion for three years; returned to Canton, where he remained for eight years, and finally moved to Lee Township, where he still resides, having retired from the farm, working in his shop, engaged in blacksmithing and general repair work.

As the family came to the county when Theodore was an infant, for all practical purposes it has been his home during his lifetime. He was educated in the common schools of Canton and the district schools of the county, was reared on the farm and two years after his mother's death, which occurred November 8, 1900, he bought his father's farm of eighty acres. Mr. Leister is now the owner of 160 acres of good farm land and is a breeder of Polled Durham cattle, Poland-China hogs and Shire horses. He has taken a useful part in township affairs, having served as School Director for a number of years. He is a Prohibitionist in his political relations, a member of the Methodist Church South and is highly respected for his good character and unassuming worth. On February 18, 1896, Theodore E. Leister was married to Ella Silver, the ceremony taking place in her native township of Lee, where she was born, May 3, 1866. They have one child, Hazel.

LEWIS, David W., ex-Mayor of Canton, Ill., is one of the best-known citizens of Fulton County, having been six years at the head of the municipal affairs of Canton and a prominent anti-license Alderman of the city. He is a veteran of the Civil War, and since coming to Canton, nearly forty years ago, has been engaged in painting and paperhanging.

David W. Lewis is a native of Franklin County, Pa., where he was born June 29, 1845, the son of Samuel and Susannah (Lynch) Lewis. His father, a native of Philadelphia and an iron-master by occupation, never came West, but lived and died as a resident of the Keystone State. As a youth David saw two and a half years of sobering service in the Civil War, serving in the ranks as a member of Company E, One Hundred and Twelfth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. After the war he worked in the car shops at Altoona, Pa., and in May, 1868, located at Canton. Thus since early manhood Mr. Lewis has been a resident of Canton, Ill., and it is his highest commendation that during the later years of his life its citizens should honor him with the best offices in their gift. He represented the First Ward in the Common Council for three terms, being elected on the Anti-License ticket, and his course met with such favor during that period that the Republicans elevated him to the chair of the Mayoralty. He served in the higher position from 1898 to 1904, and it is quite likely that he has by no means reached the limit of his political preferment. Mr. Lewis is widely connected with the fraternal orders, having an active membership in the G. A. R., I. O. O. F., K. of P. and A. O. U. W. In religious faith he is a Methodist.

David W. Lewis has been twice married, first on December 23, 1869, to Belle Bowman, who died January 10, 1895, and by her he is the father of Arthur M., who is now a resident of Chicago, connected with the Railway Mail Service. Mr. Lewis' marriage to his present wife (Aldora Sexton) occurred June 8, 1899.

LEWIS, O. J.—Many of the young men who owe their early training to the productive farms in the vicinity of Canton, have outlived their home environment and developed business qualities better suited to the activity of the city than the quiet of the country. That it is commendable to seek that which is most congenial, and therefore better done, is a truism lying at the foundation of all worth-while success. The grocery business established in Canton in 1902 by G. M. Sedgwick and O. J. Lewis under the firm name of Sedgwick & Lewis, is an instance of the kind of far-sightedness here referred to. Mr. Lewis was born at Bryant, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, in 1872, and was educated in the public schools, learning more, however, from observation than from books.

The firm of Sedgwick & Lewis was dissolved in 1903, since which time Mr. Lewis has owned the business and conducted it alone. The location has remained the same, on the east side of the square, but its methods are constantly changing, in conformity with the more advanced standards and greater expectations of the people. Mr. Lewis insists upon absolute neatness and cleanliness in his store, and upon systematic arrangement of the products for sale. He is obliging and courteous, moderate in his prices, and fair in his representations. In 1894 he established a home of his own, marrying Mary Jenkins, who was born in Astoria in 1873. Fraternally Mr. Lewis is connected with the Eagles and Red Men.

LIBBY, John, an industrious and wide-awake farmer of Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., and a worthy representative of the younger element of the agricultural class, is a native of that township, where he was born in 1877, a son of Cyrus and Sarah (Boswell) Libby, the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of Ohio. John Libby is one of the pioneer settlers of Fulton County, having moved from his Eastern home to Illinois in 1832. He located in Buckheart Township in that year, purchasing a tract of land, which he cleared and improved. On this place he followed farming for many years. Advancing age ultimately compelled him to relinquish the labors of the farm, but he is still living on the spot which he transformed from a desolate condition into a scene of productiveness and comfort, and is an object of great respect to many friends, who appreciate his excellent traits of character. He became the father of seven children, but the mother of this family has passed away.

John Libby was reared on his father's farm and in boyhood enjoyed the advantages of the public schools of the vicinity. In early manhood he was engaged for some time in farming on his own account, but later followed railroading a few years. In 1904 he returned to farming, and since then has pursued that occupation on the home place of eighty acres, so long cultivated by his father, who lives with him. Besides general farming he devotes considerable attention to stock-raising. In 1904 Mr. Libby was joined in matrimony with Mabel Henderson, who was born and schooled in Fulton County.

LILLIE, Azro E.—Mr. Lillie is an insurance man of broad experience, whose initial training was with the Continental Insurance Company, with which he was associated from 1889 until 1894, when he became connected with the German Insurance Company, for some years acting as Special Agent and Adjuster, with headquarters at Freeport, Ill. On April 1, 1907, he accepted a position in connection with the Williamsburgh City Fire Insurance Company of New York, which he still retains. Mr. Lillie has been a resident of Avon since 1857, coming here with his parents, Samuel A. and Augusta M. (Fay) Lillie, from Vermont, where he was born in Bethel, Windsor County, that State, July 22, 1851. His father was also born among the rugged hills of Vermont, September 24, 1818, and his mother, claiming the same place of nativity, was born October 31, 1828. The elder Lillie was a farmer by occupation, and after coming to Fulton County continued to occupy a farm near the town of Avon until his death in 1900.

While still young in years Azro E. Lillie aspired to a more diversified life than that afforded the agriculturist, and his education and training were directed to that end. From the country schools he went to the academy at Prairie City, Ill., and later entered Knox College, at Galesburg, Ill., which he attended two years. He was a youth of industrious tendencies and considerable method, traits which have been of invaluable service to him in later years. Work in the open fields of his father's farm built up a strong constitution, and gave him that appreciation of the fundamentals of life, which cling persistently to the country reared lad. The insurance business has netted him a comfortable income, and he owns a fine home in Avon, and a 160-acre farm near the town, upon which the earlier years of his life were passed.

At Prairie City, Ill., June 13, 1882, Mr. Lillie was united in marriage to Mary J. Meyers, who was born in Fulton County, November 8, 1861, and who is the mother of one son, Lewis Fay, born July 14, 1889. Mr. Lillie has been identified with the Republican party and is a member of the Golden Gate Lodge, No. 248, A. F. & A. M. in religion he is a Congregationalist. As conducted by Mr. Lillie the insurance business is an honorable, necessary and thoroughly praiseworthy accompaniment of civilized existence. Its original and best tenets are upheld, and public confidence, that most necessary adjunct of stable business, is persistently maintained.

LINGENFELTER, Aaron.—Since its establishment in Fulton County in 1848, the Lingenfelter family has unfailingly sustained the most intelligent and practical interests of the community and has manipulated with equal courage and ability the implements of the land-tiller and the weapons of the soldier. Its men have demonstrated the worth of industry and integrity, and its women have kept their houses in order and taught their children to be fair, honest and considerate in their dealings with their fellowmen. It was in such an atmosphere of encouragement that Aaron Lingenfelter was reared by his parents, Jacob and Sarah (Claar) Lingenfelter, natives of Pennsylvania, in which State he was born (Blair County) November 8, 1841.

Mr. Lingenfelter was about seven years old when his parents located on Section 18, Buckheart Township, and his youth knew no experience out of the ordinary until the breaking out of the Civil War. He was twenty years old, lacking four months, when he enlisted in Company A, Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Presson and Colonel Stewart, the regiment eventually becoming a part of the Seventh Division, Army of the Tennessee, and in November a part of the Fifteenth Army Corps. The regiment participated in thirty-two battles and was under fire one hundred and twenty-five days. At the battle of Shiloh, April 6, 1862, 278 men dropped out of the ranks as killed, wounded or missing. In April, 1864, Mr. Lingenfelter veteranized for three years after a furlough of thirty days, and up to that time he had fortunately escaped injury or illness, responding to every roll-call. At Kenesaw Mountain, June 27th, he received two flesh wounds, which, however, did not incapacitate him for service, and July 22 his left fore finger was shot off, the gallant Captain J. M. Augustine losing his life in the same encounter. He accompanied Sherman on his March to the Sea and at Statesboro, Ga., was captured with four others by the Confederates, finally making his escape to the Union lines ere he had been conveyed to Andersonville. Of this piece of good fortune he retained a memento in the shape of a handkerchief with twenty-two bullet holes in it, made by the uncertain aim of a guard who sought to stay him in his flight and later produced from his hip pocket. After the capture of Savannah the regiment marched through the Carolinas, and on March 21, 1865, Mr. Lingenfelter was shot through the shoulder and disabled for life. After remaining in different hospitals until July 22, 1865, he was honorably discharged, his enlistment calling for only eighteen days more of service. He came back to the old life in Fulton County with his right arm shorter by four inches than his left one and his system undermined by the exposure and vicissitudes of the soldier life. In recognition of his services and suffering the Government has awarded him a pension of $36 per month.

Notwithstanding his crippled condition Mr. Lingenfelter has woven compactly and well the strands of his life, has acquired a competence through the successful tillage of eighty acres of land and has surrounded those dependent upon him with educational and general advantages. His marriage to Charity Hedge occurred March 17, 1870, and three children have been born of their union: Elizabeth C., Ernest and Minerva (Nernie) M. Nernie (Minerva) is the wife of William Pollitt and they have one daughter, Forrest; Elizabeth is the wife of Lee Pollitt and they have two boys, William and Jacob, and three girls, Nernie, Leona and Mattie; and Ernest Lingenfelter has four children—two boys, Floyd and Bruce, and two girls, Burneada and Hazel. Mr. Lingenfelter's civilian life has been one of quiet and uninterrupted devotion to his home and surroundings, and out of his labor and experience has come the regard of all who know him and a reputation unexcelled as a soldier and man.

LINGENFELTER, Matthias, a resident of Fulton County, Ill., for half a century and for many years one of its most substantial and prosperous farmers, was born in Pennsylvania February 21, 1833. His father, Jacob Lingenfelter, was born in Baltimore, Md., and his paternal grandparents, George and Sarah (Claar) Lingenfelter, were natives of Holland and Pennsylvania, respectively. Jacob Lingenfelter came with his family from Maryland to Illinois in 1848, settling in Buckheart Township, Fulton County. Matthias Lingenfelter grew up on the home farm, remaining with his father until he was eighteen years of age, and receiving his education in the district schools of the neighborhood. In early manhood he learned the trade of a blacksmith and followed that occupation in the same locality for thirty years, then devoting his attention exclusively to farming. On July 12, 1855, Mr. Lingenfelter was joined in matrimonial bonds with Rebecca Evans, who was born in Licking County, Ohio, and their union has been the source of ten children, as follows: Joseph E., John P., Jacob A., Anna A., Ida E., Sarah S., Matthias, Jr.; Barbara E., Richard E. and Luella.

In religion Mr. Lingenfelter is an adherent of the Dunkard faith. Politically he is an earnest Republican and has always stood high in the confidence of his party associates. He has served as School Director for eighteen years and has held the office of Trustee, in both of which capacities he discharged his duties most efficiently. No man in Buckheart Township occupies a warmer place in the estimation of his neighbors and fellow townsmen than Matthias Lingenfelter, and in this cordial regard his faithful wife enjoys her full share.

LINTON, George K., a highly respected retired banker of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Johnstown, Pa., June 11, 1859, a son of Colonel John P. and Anna (King) Linton, also natives of that place, where the mother still lives. The father, who was a prominent and successful attorney in Johnstown for many years, died August 11, 1892. The grandfather King came to Fulton County in 1866, and organized the First National Bank of Lewistown. During his residence in Lewistown he was identified with all the leading industries of the place. He financed and started the woolen mills, and was one of the most public-spirited men in the city. He disposed of his Lewistown interests in 1884 and returned to Pennsylvania, where he died December 8, 1903, at the age of ninety-five years. Colonel John P. Linton's family consisted of eleven children, three of whom died in infancy. Of the others besides George R., Phoebe lives in Johnstown, Pa.; Reuben M. is deceased; Robert R. is a merchant, and Ivan R. live at Johnstown; Selah L. is a civil engineer; Anna is the wife of John E. McLane, of Pittsburg, Pa.; and Kate is at home.

George K. Linton received a good education, enabling him to fill successfully the positions of responsibility which he has held in his early and later home. After finishing his studies he came to Lewistown in 1877 and accepted a position as bookkeeper in the First National Bank, and subsequently served as assistant with Turner, Phelps & Company. In 1894 he organized the Lewistown National Bank, but afterward disposed of his interests in that institution. He is now the largest stockholder in the Havana (Ill.) National Bank. He has been identified with the banking and mercantile interests of this section since the time of his coming to Illinois.

On August 14, 1884, Mr. Linton was married to Lizzie Fahnestock and their union has resulted in two children: Margie and Ruth (twins), born September 1, 1885. Both of them are graduates of the Lewistown High School.

Politically Mr. Linton is a Democrat and has filled several township and city offices to the satisfaction of the people. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P. and the M. W. A., in connection with the latter being chairman of the Grand Lodge of the State. Mrs. Linton was for many years a member of the Presbyterian Church, and also a member of the choir.

LITTLEJOHN, David S.—Among the most worthy and substantial of the sturdy pioneer farmers of Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, Ill., is David S. Littlejohn, who has lived in that township since 1839. He was born in Clarke County, Ohio, January 25, 1836, a son of Abram and Sarah (Shafer) Littlejohn. The former was a native of Scotland, whence he came to the United States, first settling in Virginia, whence he removed to Clarke County, where David was born. The Shafers were of German ancestry. Sarah Shafer was early left an orphan and was reared among strangers, her marriage to Abram Littlejohn taking place in Virginia. From Clarke County, Ohio, the family came to Illinois, on October 27, 1839, arriving in Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, where they located on Section 13. There Abram Littlejohn rented a farm with two small cabins, and afterward bought 120 acres of land in the southwest quarter of that section, where he passed the remainder of his life, dying in February, 1853. His son, David, still owns the original 120 acres purchased by the former in 1839. Abram Littlejohn was a typical pioneer. His energy was inexhaustible, was strong in his likes and dislikes, but was a thorough believer in fair play. If friendly, he was a stanch friend in time of need. His worthy widow died in 1893, at the ripe old age of ninety-two years, having been familiar with all the wonderful changes that had taken place in Ohio and Illinois since her removal from her girlhood home in Virginia. She and her husband were the parents of five sons and five daughters, as follows: Elizabeth, who was the wife of Dan Stewart, both now being deceased; John; Margaret J., deceased, wife of Isaac Harris, also deceased; Phoebe A., who lives on the old homestead, and is the widow of John Landis; Catherine, who died in infancy; Magdalene, wife of Thomas Scoville, and living in the Indian Territory; William, who, when about six years old, was killed, being thrown from a horse; David S.; Abram, a gardener of Lake County, Ill., residing near Chicago, and Perry, who died in infancy. John, before mentioned, a prominent farmer of Bernadotte Township, married Margaret Barkley, and died, leaving a family. His wife is also deceased.

With the exception of about three years spent in the West, Bernadotte Township has been the home of David S. Littlejohn for sixty-seven years. He was reared on the home farm and, when he needed a little extra spending money, went out and caught a 'coon or killed a deer. Many a time he has worked for twenty-five cents a day. His first possession was an old-fashioned rifle and the next article which he owned was a shotgun, paid for in venison hams at twenty-five cents per pound, the total price being eighteen dollars. He was a crack shot, always attending the shooting matches, and "young Dave" never found anyone who could beat him at a target. In the early days when the family wanted meat for dinner he would go out and shoot a wild turkey. He has killed ten turkeys in one forenoon, and on one day killed three deer before noon. Wild game was abundant and the sport was full of excitement.

Mr. Littlejohn received his early education in the subscription schools. People who had children were in the habit of subscribing a certain sum for the tuition of each scholar. Then the teacher was engaged and received the amount raised in the district for three or four months' teaching, which usually amounted to five or six dollars. At the age of twenty-four years Mr. Littlejohn left the parental roof and in company with John A. Hulvey rented a farm in McDonough County, Ill., for two years. In 1863 he removed to Omaha, Neb., then a village containing about one thousand inhabitants, and was there employed by a Mr. Pollock to drive a team, hauling Government freight. In 1865 he returned to Fulton County, getting safely back to his old friend Hulvey's place at 12 o'clock on an October night. In August, 1865, Mr. Littlejohn purchased seventy-two acres of land in Section 24, Bernadotte Township, thinking then that would be a sufficiency, but he found himself unsatisfied with this and bought more, until he became the owner of 832 acres, besides three lots in Evergreen Park, Cook County, Ill., and one lot in Lake County, Ill., just north of Chicago.

On February 13, 1868, Mr. Littlejohn was united in marriage with Mary E. Goudy, who was born in Ohio and came to Fulton County with her parents in 1865. She is a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Van Tilburg) Goudy, long residents of Bernadotte Township, her father dying January 8, 1906. Two children resulted from this union: William E., born August 13, 1870, who lives on the old homestead, and Frank C., born February 6, 1873. The former married Catherine McAdams and has one child, Lucien A., and the latter wedded Inez Smith, who was born in Fulton County, and is a daughter of Arilous Smith. Two children were the offspring of their union, namely: Fay Carliete and Charles Glenn.

Mr. Littlejohn during his residence in Fulton County has always been one of the leading men of that locality. He has been active in church and school work and cheerfully pays a large school tax, although he has no children to educate. Farming has been his life work and in that pursuit he has been one of the most successful men who have worthily represented the agricultural element of Fulton County. Besides his other interests he is the owner of stock in the Lewistown Sanitary Resort.

In politics Mr. Littlejohn is a Democrat, but while taking a lively interest in current political issues, has always positively declined to become a candidate for office. Of late years he has felt that the interests of the State and country are of more importance than mere party success and has paid more attention to the character and qualities of those who solicit the popular suffrages than to their partisan claims. For a number of years he served as School Director, but refused to act longer in that capacity.

The Littlejohn family has done its full share in reclaiming Fulton County from the condition of a wilderness and developing the region to its present productiveness and prosperity. David S. Littlejohn started in life with only a good constitution and a resolute determination to get to the front, and his successful career furnishes a strong incentive to the aspiring element of the rising generation to follow his example.

LLOYD, Robert, a highly respected resident of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., who carried on general farming in Joshua Township, Fulton County, with successful results for many years, but in later life devoted himself exclusively to stock-raising, was born in Ontario, Canada, February 23, 1839, a son of William and Sarah Secomsa (Holmes) Lloyd, natives of England, the former born in London and the latter in Sheffield. William Lloyd, who was a farmer by occupation, came with his parents from England to Canada when he was sixteen years old and Sarah Holmes accompanied her parents across the Atlantic at the age of four years. Both families settled in Canada. There William Lloyd and Sarah Holmes were married in the course of time and their union was blessed with twelve children.

Robert Lloyd received his early mental training in the public schools of Ontario and remained on the paternal farm until he was about eighteen years of age. He then left Canada for the United States and in 1857 made his way to Henry County, Ill., where he was employed as a farm hand for a few years. In 1865 he moved to Fulton County and settled upon a farm of eighty acres in Joshua Township belonging to his wife. That was the family home until 1894, when Mr. Lloyd purchased of Frank Randolph eighty acres adjoining, where he lived until his removal to the town of Canton. Mr. Lloyd formerly raised a great many Norman horses, Durham cattle and Poland-China hogs, but toward the latter period of his active labors confined himself to breeding Duroc hogs.

On October 8, 1861, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Hannah M. Burson, who was born in Walnut Grove, McDonough County, Ill., where, in girlhood, she enjoyed the advantages of the public schools. Mrs. Lloyd is a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Henry) Burson, natives of Pennsylvania, who settled in Illinois at an early day and were engaged in agricultural pursuits. Two children resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd, namely: William B. and Robert C. The former is engaged in the commission business in Wichita, Kan., and the latter is Superintendent of Soil Survey in the University of Illinois for the State.

In politics Mr. Lloyd is a supporter of the Republican party. He has rendered faithful and efficient public service in several capacities, having held the offices of Road Commissioner, School Treasurer, Collector, Assessor, etc. His religious connection is with the Congregational Church. Mr. Lloyd purchased his present neat and comfortable residence in Canton in the spring of 1906. He has lived a very active and industrious life and has always been regarded as an upright, public-spirited and useful member of society.

LOCKWOOD, George Arthur, a worthy representative of the younger class of the farming element of Fulton County, Ill., who is successfully engaged in his chosen pursuit in the vicinity of the paternal homestead, was born in Union Township, Fulton County, October 17, 1880. Although his experience in farming on his own responsibility is of comparatively brief duration, enough has already been developed touching his characteristics as a farmer and his methods of operation to warrant the assurance that he is destined to rank at no distant day with the substantial and prosperous tillers of the soil who have given Fulton County its prestige among the agricultural districts of the State. He is a son of Lewis R. and Louisa (Burrage) Lockwood, natives of Illinois, and his father carried on farming with uniform success in Union Township, Fulton County, for twenty-five years. A sketch of the lives of his parents appears in another place in this volume.

The primary education of George Arthur Lockwood was obtained in the district schools convenient to his birthplace and his rudimentary studies were supplemented by attendance at the Avon High School. His early youth was passed under the parental roof and until he reached the age of nineteen years he made himself serviceable in assisting his father in the routine of the home place. At that period he commenced farming for himself and his labors have been attended by well-merited returns. In addition to general farming he devotes a considerable portion of his time to dealing in horses and cattle, which he has made a profitable feature of his business life. The farm upon which he lives consists of 120 acres, located in Section 29, Union Township.

RESIDENCE OF MRS. W. J. ORENDORFF, CANTON

On March 29, 1899, Mr. Lockwood was united in marriage with Maude Kreider, the ceremony taking place in Lee Township, Fulton County. Mrs. Lockwood is a native of Fulton County, where she was born December 21, 1877, a daughter of Christian and Mary (Cowperthwaite) Kreider, whose former home was in Canton. This union has resulted in three children, namely: Raymond, born December 16, 1899; Lewis, born December 20, 1902, and Harold, born May 22, 1907.

In the matter of politics Mr. Lockwood takes his stand on the side of the Republican party. He enjoys the good will and respect of his neighbors and in the early stages of his agricultural career are plainly manifest those qualities of resolute purpose and diligent perseverance which, with the honorable character conceded to him by all, cannot fail to make him ultimately one of the foremost farmers of his locality.

LOCKWOOD, George W., a contractor of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born at Mercersburg, Pa., in the year 1840, his parents being Alexander and Harriet (Holler) Lockwood. When he was quite young the family started for Western Illinois, first taking stage to Pittsburg, thence down the Ohio, and up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers by boat; after a journey of several days finally landing at Copperas Creek. There were four in the family at the time, and they are all still living, besides George W., a sister and a brother in Chicago and one sister in Canton.

George W. Lockwood learned the trade of a bricklayer, and during the years of his activity in Canton has not only followed that line, but has done considerable stone masonry and plastering. About the only serious break in his industrious life was that occasioned by the War of the Rebellion, which occupied three years of his career, and, although that was a strenuous period, like other old boys who wore the blue, he has never regretted this offering which he made to the cause of his country. A member of Company K, One Hundred and Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, he participated in all its engagements in the Southwest, was with Sherman in his March to the Sea, as well as in the subsequent Carolina campaigns and marches, and finished his military service with that grandest of war pageantries, the Grand Review at Washington, receiving his honorable discharge and final muster out at Louisville, Ky.

On December 30, 1868, Mr. Lockwood married Miss Mary Elem, whose parents were of an old Tennessee family, the ceremony being performed at Canton. Their three children are: William Plattenburg, a bricklayer; Frank Alexander, a paper hanger, and Bell Elem, now Mrs. O. G. Haynes. Mr. Lockwood is a Republican and a member of the G. A. R. After the war he became a member of the I. O. O. F. and is also identified with the Modern Woodmen of America.

LOCKWOOD, Lewis R.—A gentlemen's clothing and general furnishing establishment was started in Avon, this county, in 1901, by Lewis R. Lockwood, and since has passed to the combined management of the founder and his cousin. These enterprising outfitters have the right kind of commercial spirit and have built up a paying trade on fair representation and thorough knowledge of public demand. They carry several grades of goods, moderately priced, and in sufficient variety to encourage local patronage on the part of men both of modest and exclusive tastes. In consequence they have won the confidence and support of the community and are reckoned among its substantial business pillars.

Lewis R. Lockwood is a native of Illinois and was born on a farm in Warren County in 1855. Ten years before his birth his parents, James and Sarah J. (Dunbar) Lockwood, natives of New York State (the former born in 1819), came overland in a wagon from New York to Avon, and after two years in the then small hamlet bought a farm of eighty acres three-quarters of a mile west, in Warren County. This farm, at the time entirely unimproved, took on scope and fertility under the industry of the thrifty New Yorker and for half a century he lived among its resources, accumulating the competence which enabled him to retire to Avon, where his death occurred August 27, 1899. The wife, who shared his lesser and greater fortunes with unchanging gentleness and sympathy, still lives in Avon, but two of her three children have passed beyond the ken of her hopeful and encouraging smile.

Upon leaving his father's farm in Warren County Mr. Lockwood purchased 120 acres of land in Union Township, where he made fine improvements and surrounded himself with the comforts and refinements suggested by an intelligent and far-seeing mind. About six years ago he moved to Avon and left his farm in the hands of his second oldest son, George, and two years later embarked upon his present business venture. The wife of Mr. Lockwood formerly was Louise Burrage, daughter of an Illinois pioneer, and her marriage occurred in Warren County in 1876. The oldest of the three children, William, is a business man of Avon and the youngest child, Alice, is the wife of Mr. Keffer, of Warren County.

Mr. Lockwood is a member of the Universalist Church. Politically he is a Republican, often casting his vote for the man best qualified to serve the interests of the community. By sheer pluck, industry, enterprise, ability and integrity, the country lad of average endowments and little material assistance has risen to represent the wealth, social position and influence of a progressive community, has drawn around him friends who admire his character and depend upon his judgment, and has reared an interesting family, the members of which are filling honorable positions in life.

LOCKWOOD, William Alfred.—Numerous advantages result from the increasing tendency of men learned in the science of law to embark in occupations outside their immediate sphere of activity. This is the natural result of a profession which equips its devotees for success in more lines of business than any other wage-earning medium, causing it to be justly regarded as a means, rather than an end, and as an adjunct, rather than an entirety. The result is necessarily an elevation of commercial standards, an avoidance of complications, a means of adjustment out of courts, and a general simplifying of conditions through a knowledge of underlying principles and penalties. An illustration of this modern phase of law is found in William Alfred Lockwood, whom circumstances, rather than personal selection, shifted from a promising legal practice in Chicago to a successful merchandising venture in Avon.

Mr. Lockwood is the third in succession from the founder of his family in Illinois. He was born in Avon, September 25, 1879, and is one of the town's youngest business men. His father, Louis Riley Lockwood, was born in Warren County, Ill., November 17, 1855, and his mother, Louise (Burrage) Lockwood, in the same county, May 13, 1856. His paternal grandparents were James and Sarah J. (Dunbar) Lockwood, natives of New York State. Mr. Lockwood enjoyed educational advantages in keeping with his father's wealth and position. After graduating from the Avon High School he entered Drake University at Des Moines, Iowa, and later the Ann Arbor (Michigan) Law School, and the Kent Law School, of Chicago, graduating from the latter in 1901. Mr. Lockwood began the practice of his profession in Chicago and while thus employed was recalled home by the death of his two brothers, a calamity which fell heavily upon the hearts of his parents. It was owing to the solicitations of the latter that he consented to remain in Avon, and as the town was too small and its irregularities too infrequent to support an attorney, he turned his attention to merchandising, for which he is particularly well adapted. He carries in his establishment a complete assortment of dry goods, notions and small supplies, and the qualities of obligingness, tact, consideration and good judgment are conspicuous in his management.

Mr. Lockwood was united in marriage at Avon, Ill., June 7, 1906, with Fannie Estella Churchill, a native of that place, born July 26, 1881, and they have entered upon their married life with the prospect of a happy future and with the best wishes of a large circle of friends. Mr. Lockwood is keenly appreciative of the duties and obligations, as well as advantages of wealth, and his public-spiritedness finds expression in many avenues of civic advancement. He adheres staunchly to the principles and issues of the Republican party, and is one of the most prominent among the younger politicians of the county. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias and Masons and in his religious views is a Universalist. Genial in manner, cultured in mind, large of heart and optimistic in nature, Mr. Lockwood is a fair representative of the vigorous younger element upon which is based the accomplishments and more civic progress of the next half century.

LONG, Mrs. Dora Spurgeon.—Among other claims upon the consideration of her fellow townsmen Mrs. Dora Spurgeon Long presents that of being one of the financially strong and the socially popular element of Avon, where the greater part of her life has been spent, and where she is known as one of the most intelligent, well informed and tactful of the younger married women. Born in Warren County, Ill., December 14, 1873, Mrs. Long in girlhood was Dora Spurgeon, daughter of Israel and Elizabeth (Marshall) Spurgeon, the former born in Kentucky in 1829 and the latter in Virginia in 1832.

Israel Spurgeon was reared on a Kentucky farm and in response to the call of the prairies, came to Warren County, Ill., at an early day, bringing with him few visible assets, but a wealth of character, determination and natural ability. In order to make both ends meet in the beginning of his sojourn in the State, he engaged in teaming for a few months and subsequently invested his small earnings in a body of land, which he improved and stocked and made comfortable and profitable. The humble teamster was destined to realize many of his well-formed ambitions, for at the time of his death he owned nearly 5,000 acres of land in Warren County, and had attained a far-reaching influence in general township affairs. He was a man of forceful and strong character, the possessor of more than average business ability and he stood for all that was worthy and practical in agricultural life and developments.

After graduating from the high school in Avon Dora Spurgeon completed a four years' course in German and music at St. Mary's, Notre Dame, Ind. She continued to live with her parents when not in school until her marriage December 1, 1891, to Edward Long, and since then she has been a familiar figure in the social and religious life of the town, being a welcome guest at many local functions and a tireless worker in the Universalist Church. Mrs. Long has inherited 590 acres of the parental farm in Warren County.

LONG, Henry, the capable and efficient superintendent of the Norris Coal Mining Company's mine at Norris, Fulton County, Ill., is a native of England, where he was born in 1860. In 1868 he came to the United with his parents, who settled in Iowa, where he spent his boyhood and received his mental training in the public schools, and later engaged in coal mining. About 1899 he came to Norris, Fulton County, Ill., where he opened the mine for the Norris Coal Mining Company, of which he has been in charge ever since. The company built the present plant, which is equipped with up-to-date machinery. It furnishes employment to 175 men, and its output is about 150,000 tons per year, which is all shipped to other points. The vein of coal is four feet six inches thick and the company has 1,300 acres of land leased with mining rights. It also owns ninety-five houses and a store in Norris.

Mr. Long was joined in wedlock with Arzilla Applegate, who was born in Iowa, and their union resulted in eight children, namely: Edward W., Elma, Mabel, Ezra, Henry Walter, Hazel, Ellen and Dale. Under Mr. Long's capable management the work of the Norris Coal Mining Company is progressing with good results.

LOVE, Francis M., Postmaster of Lewistown, Ill., has given efficient service in his present position since 1898, has had several years' experience in the Government employ at Washington and is an influential Republican leader in county politics. He was born in Sangamon County, Ill., March 12, 1865, and when quite young was left an orphan. He passed his early life upon a farm and in attending the district schools of Fulton County, locating at Lewistown as a grocery clerk in 1887. Later he was employed on the "Lewistown Lance," a weekly paper, published by Jesse Heylin.

In 1890 Mr. Love began his official career by becoming a clerk in the Census Bureau at Washington, holding that position for about two years, resigning to accept a position in the Lewistown postoffice under R. E. Griffith. This clerkship he retained from September, 1891, until 1894, serving during the following two years as Assessor of Lewistown Township and City Treasurer of Lewistown. During the year 1897 and the early part of 1898 he worked on the "Lewistown Republican." On April 1, 1898, President McKinley appointed him to his present position, to which he was reappointed in 1902 by President Roosevelt, and again for his third term in 1906.

In September, 1899, Postmaster Love was united in marriage with Miss Kate Weirauch, whose father was a former prominent business man of Lewistown, and her mother (a daughter of Jonathan Bordner) a member of one of the honored pioneer families of Fulton County. Mrs. Love served as Assistant Postmaster for eight years, retiring from the postoffice in 1906. She takes an interest in society and club life. Mr. and Mrs. Love have one child, an infant daughter.

For a number of years past Mr. Love has been a member of the Republican County Central Committee, and is also a member of the Republican Congressional Committee. He still retains a connection with journalism, being the local correspondent for the "Chicago Tribune," "New York World" and the "St. Louis Globe-Democrat," and is fraternally affiliated with the K. of P. and M. W. A.

LOWE, William H., a prosperous and highly respected farmer of Fulton County, Ill., and an honored veteran of the Civil War, was born in the county which has been the scene of his lifelong labors August 7, 1842. He is a son of John and Isabelle (Riley) Lowe, the former a native of Ireland and a grandson of John and Nancy (Todd) Lowe, both of whom were natives of Ireland, as was the father, John Lowe. William H. Lowe received a good practical education in the common schools of Fulton County and was reared on the home farm. Soon after the beginning of the Civil War he enlisted in Company H, Fifty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served three years and three months at the front. He was a faithful and gallant soldier and, besides other engagements and skirmishes, took part in the battles of Shiloh and Mission Ridge and the Siege of Vicksburg. During his last year's service he was Sergeant of his company and was honorably discharged at Chattanooga, Tenn., October 30, 1864. After being mustered out he returned to his home in Fulton County and applied himself to farming, in which he has continued ever since with profitable results.

In 1867 Mr. Lowe was united in marriage with Ann Eliza Breed, who was born in Connecticut, a daughter of Jonas and Sarah (Wright) Breed, and where in girlhood she received a good education. Five children resulted from this union, namely: Mary I., Charles R., John H., Anna B. and J. Bernice. Politically Mr. Lowe has always been an earnest Republican, and his party has manifested its confidence in him, and its respect for his record in war and peace by electing him successively Highway Commissioner and Supervisor of his township. He is a member of the Hooker Post, Grand Army of the Republic.

LUKER, Charles.—The advent of Charles Luker in Canton dates from the introduction of gas to the town in 1873. Mr. Luker came here as a practical plumber and gas-fitter with A. E. Swift & Brothers, of Chicago, who, with John H. Snyder, erected the gas plant and superintended the starting of this great public utility. Leaving the employ of the plant at the expiration of three years, Mr. Luker engaged in a private plumbing and gas-fitting business, which, for twenty-seven years, has been closely connected with the lighting and sanitation of the town. Not only has he given of his best effort to his business, but has trained to master workmanship in the same line his three sons, Charles, John Henry and William Horace, who, in 1887, became members of the firm, and are his invaluable assistants. These young men eventually will succeed to the entire management of the business, and thus the city is assured of the continuance of one of its most necessary and practical enterprises.

Mr. Luker has the perseverance and determination of his countrymen in England, where he was born in 1840, and where he was reared in the large family of his parents, Charles and Maria (Smith) Luker. In 1863 he married Maria Preston, also a native of England, and in 1868 came to America, his chief source of dependence then being a thorough knowledge of the plumbing and gas-fitting business. From Pittsburg, Pa., he went to Chicago in March, 1869, and there conducted a plumbing and gas-fitting business until coming to Canton in 1876. While in Chicago he became a member of the Masonic fraternity, and ever since has been identified with this ancient organization. Besides his sons, Mr. Luker has two daughters, Anna Elizabeth and Ada Maria. Mr. Luker is one of the self-made, well made men of the community, and enjoys an enviable reputation for skill, reliability and public-spiritedness.

LUMAN, Jesse.—One of the earliest landmarks still standing in Fairview Township is the log house erected in 1838 by Jesse Luman, founder of the family of that name in Fulton County, Ill., and the owner, at the time of his death in 1856, at the age of forty-eight years, of a large and promising property. In its successful weathering of the storms and changes of sixty-eight years this crude survivor of man's courage and fortitude may be taken as an indication of the continuously helpful association of the family with Fulton County. The hardy pioneer and his wife, Mary (Shreeves) Luman, were natives of Franklin County, Ohio, and Bedford County, Pa., respectively, and they brought with them to the wilderness their four-year-old son, William S. Luman, who was born in Franklin County, Ohio, January 1, 1834.

William S. Luman was destined to take an important part in the second generation up-building of Fulton County, and especially of Fairview Township, where he succeeded to the farm of 160 acres taken up by his father from the Government, and for which the latter paid one dollar and a quarter an acre. The son imprinted upon this property his strong sense of method and order, adding to it until he owned 300 acres at the time of his death, on May 19, 1898. His memory was stored with interesting information concerning the early days of the State, and he lived to win a large competence and the esteem and good will of all who knew him. Through his marriage, April 1, 1858, to Mary A., daughter of Miles and Mary (Fisher) Cook, he became allied with a family celebrated in the annals of early American colonization, the immigrating ancestor of which came to this country with William Penn, settling in the city of Philadelphia. From him sprang men famous as scholars, soldiers and statesmen, men possessing character, purpose and strong initiative. Mrs. Luman was born August 14, 1837, in Todd Township, Huntingdon County, Pa., and during her life in Fairview Township was beloved for her qualities of sincerity, gentleness and sympathy. She became the mother of seven children: Jesse F., Alice, Amos W., John, Elijah O., Ernest and Charles A. She died December 6, 1893.

Like many another farmer lad with cravings beyond the borders of the paternal acres, Jesse F. Luman, born January 28, 1859, inaugurated his independent career as a school teacher, following that occupation uninterruptedly for eleven years in different parts of Fulton County. He had authority and practical knowledge, and became the friend as well as instructor of those intrusted to his care. His own opportunities had been those of the public schools, Hedding College and the Bushnell Normal, his graduation from the latter institution occurring in 1884. In 1892 Mr. Luman bought the furniture and undertaking business of H. G. Arms, conducting the same for some time in partnership with his brother. In 1894 he erected a store twenty-nine by sixty-six feet, ground dimensions, of brick and with basement, which, with his stock and good will he disposed of to Mr. Henry in 1902. He then established the clothing, gentlemen's furnishings, boot and shoe enterprise, which he sold to R. B. Henton, of Minnesota, in 1907. To the faculty of accumulating Mr. Luman adds a capacity for successful investment, and he owns a tract of 320 acres in North Dakota and 400 acres in Southern Minnesota, near St. Paul.

The marriage of Mr. Luman and Mary Catherine Olson occurred in Peoria, this State, December 29, 1885, and of the union there are two daughters, Vera L. and Jesse A., both of whom are engaged in educational work in Fulton County. Mr. Luman is a Democrat in politics, and in religion is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons. An earnest and high-minded gentleman, Mr. Luman contributes to the character and worth of his adopted town, and in his business methods sets an example of courtesy, consideration and integrity.

LYBARGER, Lewis A.—When Lewis A. Lybarger came to his present home in Vermont Township, Fulton County, in 1881 he found a heavy growth of timber, including many of the giant oaks which still cast a grateful shade during the noonday heat, but the majority of which have been hewn and turned to more practical uses. In their place is a beautiful farm with fine fences, far-reaching meadows, vegetable and flower gardens and an orchard having many varieties of fruit, which are the special pride of the owner. Although almost seventy years of age, Mr. Lybarger still is an enthusiastic farmer, rejoicing in the progress of the younger generation around him and finding peace and comfort upon the land which is his by virtue of untiring industry and shrewd financial ability. He has cleared seventy of his first eighty acres and now owns 110 acres, devoted to stock-raising and general produce. His home bespeaks an appreciation of the refinements of life, and the surrounding grounds are a rest and delight to the eye.

Born on a farm in Licking County, Ohio, June 24, 1835, Mr. Lybarger is a son of Joseph Lybarger, who was born in Bedford County, Pa., in 1806, and as a youth went to Ohio, where he met and married Johannah Ewing. The young people and their children came to what then was Fulton Center, Fulton County, Ill., in 1856, and the following year moved to Harris Township, where the father continued farming until his death, September 24, 1878. His wife, who was born in Ohio in 1827, died in August, 1886. Their second son, Lilburn, is now a farmer of Montana. During the Civil War he served two years in the Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was wounded at the battle of Shiloh in the left hip and arm, the ball still being imbedded in his flesh. Milton, the third son, served in the same company and regiment as his brother, but for three instead of two years. George and Joseph died in infancy; James is a farmer in Lee Township, Fulton County; John R. lives near Roseville, Warren County, Ill.; Elizabeth is the widow of Isaac Mercer and lives with her brother, Lewis A.; Mary is the wife of Charles Wheeler, a farmer of Harris Township; Hester is the wife of Channing Baugh, of York County, Neb., and Sarah J. is deceased.

The youth of Lewis Lybarger was similar to that of other youths of his neighborhood, including its share of hard work, sometimes unwillingly performed; its attendance at the district school with the accompanying adventures, creditable and otherwise, and its social diversions at the church and in the homes of his friends. February 19, 1863, he was united in marriage to Nancy M. Stewart, a native of Astoria Township and a daughter of Allen and Nancy (Parrish) Stewart. The Stewarts came from Knox County, Ohio, to Fulton County in 1855. Mr. and Mrs. Lybarger settled on a farm in Harris Township, Fulton County, but soon after removed to Mound Township, McDonough County, where the wife died in 1879. Of their union there were the following children: Rebecca E., who was born December 24, 1863, and died at the age of nine months; Albert C., born June 22, 1865, now a farmer in Vermont Township; Mary, born March 3, 1868, the wife of Richard Atherton, of Vermont Township; Cora M., born April 13, 1871, wife of Sherman McLaren, of Vermont Township; William, born July 8, 1873, married Emma King and at present is Marshal of Table Grove; Charles H., born December 15, 1875, married Bertha Bogue and lives on the old homestead; Sarah F., born September 24, 1878, is the wife of Charles Brown, of Vermont Township. May 6, 1886, five years after settling on his present farm, Mr. Lybarger married Sarah C. Stoops, daughter of Andrew and Margaret (Lipscomb) Stoops, and of this union there have been born five children: Alice P., born August 1, 1888; Carl C., born August 9, 1881, died April 29, 1893; Lewis R., born August 10, 1893; Hester J., born February 3, 1896, and Lilly H., born August 1, 1898.

For many years of his life Mr. Lybarger was an active Republican, and for eight successive years was a member of the Board of Supervisors for Vermont Township. He has also served on the Board of Education, and it was largely through his efforts that the present school district was established and schoolhouse built. He is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and fraternally is connected with the Patrons of Husbandry. No man in the township is held in higher esteem than Mr. Lybarger, nor has any contributed more substantially to its agricultural and general upbuilding.

LYBARGER, Milton C., who owns a farm of 300 acres in Lee Township, where he is engaged in farming and stock-raising, has been a resident of that locality for over half a century, having come to Fulton County with his parents at the age of fourteen years. He was born in Knox County, Ohio, June 28, 1842, a son of Joseph Lybarger, a Pennsylvania farmer, and Johanna (Ewing) Lybarger, a native of Ohio. The father, who came to Fulton County in 1853, first settled near Gorham Tavern, but in 1858 removed to Marietta, where he died October 1, 1878.

Milton C. was educated in the district schools of Fulton County and had experienced the training of the average farmer's son when the Civil War began. In October, 1861, he enlisted in Company F, Fifty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged from the service in November, 1864, having thus devoted three years of his youth and early manhood in defense of his country—a fine basis for patriotic and valuable citizenship. Mr. Lybarger passed his majority while in the military service, voted the Republican ticket during the Civil War and has supported it firmly ever since. Needless to add, he is a member of the G. A. R. Post and takes an active interest in its campfires and other gatherings.

On July 28, 1872, Milton C. Lybarger was united in marriage with Sarah E. Burchett, the ceremony occurring at the home of the bride in Macomb. Mrs. Lybarger is a native of McDonough County, where she was born September 23, 1854. To this union have been born Gertrude, Rufus E. and Orrie E. The family are identified with the Methodist Church.

LYNCH, W. E.—During the twelve years of its existence the dry goods establishment owned and conducted by W. E. Lynch has developed from comparatively small to large proportions, and from a trade dependent upon the casual passersby to the continued and substantial patronage of many of the foremost families in Canton and vicinity. At the beginning of the enterprise it was located at the northeast corner of the Square, but at the end of a year a change was made to No. 26, on the west side of the Square, a still later advance being the present store at 42, the same block, which was first occupied in February, 1904. From 1893 until 1902 Mr. Lynch was in partnership with his father, P. I. Lynch, but since that time has conducted the business alone.

The elder Lynch, his wife, formerly A. Elliot, and his son, W. E., all were born in West Virginia, the latter in Harrison County, that State, in 1869. The young man was reared on a farm and had better educational opportunities than fall to the lot of the average country lad, attending the public schools and the University of West Virginia. His youth was circumscribed and uneventful until 1891, when he went to Colorado to act as a clerk for his brother, the journey affording him that unalloyed pleasure and interest which visits the heart when one is young, strong and fearless. In 1892 he was united in marriage to Pearl Bennett, a native of Oregon, Mo., and whose education was acquired in the public schools of her native town and at Valparaiso, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Lynch are the parents of three children: Mildred, Waitman and Audra. Mr. Lynch came from Colorado to Canton, and as heretofore mentioned, started upon his increasingly successful mercantile career. He is a Republican in politics and in religion a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In large degree Mr. Lynch possesses the qualities necessary for successful merchandising, not the least of which is a thorough knowledge of human nature, ability to keep abreast of the times and its exactions, consideration for employes and tact and courtesy in dealing with the general public.

MADDEN, (Rev.) Thomas E., the esteemed pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in County Galway, Ireland, December 24, 1863, and is a son of John and Bridget Madden. The father came to the United States with his family in 1870, landing at Boston, and went at once to Waltham, Mass., where he and his wife still reside.

Thomas E. Madden spent his boyhood in Waltham, attending the common schools, and afterward entered the high school, from which he was graduated with the class of 1883. During the next two years he attended Boston College, an institution under Jesuit auspices, and subsequently pursued a final course of study in Holy Cross College, at Worcester, Mass., whence he was graduated with honor in September, 1886. Having completed the requisite collegiate courses he entered St. Bonaventure's Theological Seminary in order to prepare himself for the priesthood. From this institution he graduated in 1889 and June 29th of that year was ordained a priest in Atchison, Kan., by the Rt. Rev. Louis M. Fink, O. S. B. He then began the labors of his ministry in connection with churches in Topeka, Fulton and Paola, Kan., which occupied his time until 1893. In October, 1893, he came to Peoria and was appointed assistant pastor at Monmouth, Ill., where he remained until August, 1898. At that period he became a resident of Lewistown and pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church.

Both in a spiritual and material sense the work of Father Madden has been very successful. Since he commenced his ministrations in Lewistown he has refitted the church edifice and rearranged its exterior, making it the most attractive home of worship in the city. He is a genial and warm-hearted man, and commands the confidence and respect not only of his own parishioners but enjoys the cordial esteem of a large circle of Protestant friends. He extends hearty hospitality to all who visit his church or home, and greets all guests with a pleasant word and cheery smile. He invariably exerts his great influence on the side of right, and lends liberal aid to all movements tending to promote the public welfare. All who listen to his pulpit utterances are impressed by his strong intellectual resources and the energy which characterizes his work. The life of Father Madden has been a beneficent one, and its results are abundantly manifest wherever he has labored.

In 1905 Father Madden built St. Thomas' church at Table Grove, Ill., at a cost of $3,100, the congregation having heretofore worshipped in private houses and finally in the Opera House. In 1906 he rebuilt St. Anne's Church at Bushnell, this edifice being a beautiful brick structure of Roman architecture and an ornament to the town. In connection with his work it is appropriate to add a brief historical record of St. Mary's church, over which he has presided with such good results for nearly a decade. The first resident pastor at Lewistown was appointed in September, 1880—Rev. Bernard W. Corley. He was followed in July, 1881, by Rev. Michael C. O'Brien, who is now pastor at Alexis, Ill. The next pastor was Rev. T. J. O'Callahan, in 1882, who was followed in February, 1884, by Rev. L. Thiebes (deceased). In December, 1885, Rev. W. B. Jansen took charge and in December, 1887, was succeeded by Rev. J. G. Libert, now the pastor at Canton. In February, 1892, he was followed by Rev. T. J. Finn (deceased), and in May, 1892, Rev. M. J. Flynn (deceased) took charge and remained until August, 1898, when Father Madden assumed the pastorate. The present edifice was built about 1864 and was attended by the pastors of Canton, Ill., until 1880.

MANION, Martin, who carries on farming with good results in Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., is a native of Ireland, where he was born in 1839, a son of Thomas and Mary Manion, of Irish nativity. Thomas Manion was a farmer by occupation. The subject of this sketch attended the public schools of his native country, and helped about the home farm until he was twenty-three years of age. In 1862 he came to the United States and located at Scranton, Pa., where he was employed in coal-mining until 1866. He next followed the same occupation at Bryant, Ill., until 1880, when he bought a farm of eighty acres in Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., at a later period purchasing of P. Murphy eighty acres more. He has made all the improvements on his 160 acres, on which he carries on farming with satisfactory results.

In 1870 Mr. Manion was united in wedlock with Elizabeth Frost, who was born in Ohio, and eight children have been the offspring of this union, namely: James Thomas, Minnie (Mrs. Evans), Fanny (Mrs. McAdams), William, Maude (Mrs. Huff), Mary (Mrs. Church-ill), George and Charles.

MAPLE, Daniel Webster (deceased), formerly Postmaster of Canton, Ill., as well as Mayor of the city, and for many years one of the most prominent citizens of Fulton County, was born in Canton February 24, 1837. His father, Thompson Maple, who was a native of Kentucky and a merchant by occupation, came with the mother from that State to Illinois, settling in Canton during the pioneer period, and Daniel W. was their first-born son. The early education of the latter was received in the public schools of Canton, Jubilee College and Knox Academy, and before attaining his majority was taken into partnership in the general store of his father. For a time in the early 'sixties he was his father's associate in the commission business in Chicago, in which his brother, Edgar, was also interested. He then devoted his attention to farming, becoming the owner of a place known as the "William Winnegar farm," a short distance west of Canton. This he sold after the death of his first wife in 1886, purchasing the property on the northwest corner of Main and Spruce Streets, in Canton, where he resided, being engaged in the dry-goods trade in Galva, Ill., for a short time. In the course of his business career, besides the connections above mentioned, he successively filled the positions of secretary of the David Williams Coal Company, Cashier of the C. D. Hollitt Bank and Bookkeeper for the Andrews Brothers' concern.

The first marriage of Mr. Maple took place in 1856, Sarah E. Hall then becoming his wife. Four children were born of this union, namely: William, Harry, Frank and Fred. Their mother passed away in 1885. In 1900 Mr. Maple took as his second wife Mrs. Jennie (Hulit) Colville, a daughter of the late Andrew B. Hulit, who still survives her husband. Mr. Maple retired from active pursuits in 1904 and died October 22, 1905.

In religion Mr. Maple was an adherent of the faith of the Baptist Church and politically was an earnest Democrat and wielded a potent influence in the local councils of his party. During the second administration of President Cleveland he held the office of Postmaster of Canton; also served several terms as Alderman from the Second Ward, and was elected Mayor of Canton four times, his last term expiring in 1892. He was a steadfast promoter of the interests of the public schools and of all measures for the welfare of the community, and was especially a warm supporter of the Canton Fire Department. His death was deeply lamented and his memory is warmly cherished, not only by the bereaved family and his former associates in official responsibility, but by all who were familiar with his traits of character as a man and a citizen.

MAPLEWOOD COAL COMPANY, The, of Peoria, Ill., although having its headquarters in that city, is a corporation whose extensive operations in the vicinity of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., are indicative of the huge proportions which the coal-mining industry has attained of late years in that section of the State. Aside from the magnitude of these interests in Fulton County, which impresses the beholder with sensations of wonder, the prodigious strides made within a comparatively recent period in improving and perfecting the methods of mine-working through ingenious contrivances of modern invention, which enhance the facilities of production and multiply the precautionary appliances for safeguarding the lives of subterranean toilers, are strikingly manifest in the region above mentioned. In no enterprise, however, is such an advancement more conspicuously manifest than in that of the company which forms the subject of this description.

"Mine No. 1" of the Maplewood Coal Company was opened just west of Farmington in 1900. In the fall of that year it was thoroughly equipped, the necessary buildings were completed and operations were commenced. The plant was destroyed by fire in 1903, but was speedily rebuilt. The steam hoisting machinery is of the latest type, and an electric lighting plant furnishes illumination for the entire mine. There is a fine arrangement of shaker screens, which size the coal almost to a precise degree, separating it into lump, egg, nut, pea and slack, and a loader, operated by steam power, is in use for loading box cars. On one occasion the mine turned out 1,643 tons of coal in eight hours. The output at present is an average of 1,400 tons per day, which requires the services of about 500 men under ground. In location the mine is convenient to the Iowa Central and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, and all the coal is shipped to the Northwest. A switch engine belonging to the company is constantly in use for switching cars. Vein No. 5, now being worked, has a thickness of four feet and is 125 feet below the surface of the ground. Mine No. 2, located a little southwest of Farmington, was sunk in the summer of 1905. It has an absolutely fire-proof shaft, constructed wholly of steel, with the most perfect modern machinery for moving cars, run by an 18 by 36 first-motion engine. The mine is lighted by electricity. When in full operation it is expected that the quantity of coal hoisted will amount to 2,000 tons per day, necessitating the labor of 800 men in this mine. The company has built fifty-eight houses for miners in Farmington, besides a residence for the superintendent, and has seventy other buildings and miners' boarding houses, of approved construction, each provided with steam heat and containing about fifteen rooms. In this mine, Vein No. 5, four feet in thickness, is being worked, out of which the coal is hoisted from a depth of 150 feet. The mine has a boiler plate, self-supporting smokestack, resting on an 18 by 24 feet solid concrete base, twenty feet deep.

The work in these mines is carried on under the direction of Superintendent J. F. McElwee, a gentleman of fine traits of character and superior order of executive ability, who has occupied his present position since the Maplewood Coal Company began operations in this vicinity. Mr. McElwee is a native of Warsaw, Ill. When quite young he was brought by his parents to Peoria, and his first business experience was in connection with the distilling trade. In 1895 he entered upon a mining career, and has since then continued in this occupation. He maintains his residence in Peoria, going and coming daily between that city and Farmington.

MARINER, Floyd E.—One of the old and prominent families of Fulton County has a worthy and popular representative in Floyd E. Mariner, the owner of a tract of 280 acres of land in Section 29, Orion Township, and the breeder, on an extensive scale, of Belgian horses, blooded cattle and Poland-China hogs. Mr. Mariner was born on a farm in Section 19, Canton Township, February 24, 1861, which is still in possession of the family. The old place is rich in memories of Eliphalet and Julia C. (Lord) Mariner, who settled upon it in the summer of 1836, and who, with few assets save health and hope, forged their way through the hardships and limitations of the frontier. In addition they reared a family of seven children, of whom Floyd E. is the sixth in order of birth.

Floyd E. Mariner was reared to an appreciation of agriculture as a livelihood, and has never departed from the teachings of his youth. Encouraged to industry and economy of time, he attended the public schools during the winter season, and at the age of twenty-four, on March 25, 1885, was united in marriage to Emma Sargent, daughter of Davis and Sarah Sargent, early settlers of Fulton County, and old residents of Canton. Mr. Mariner is a young man of intelligence and experience, and these, combined with an earnest desire to lead a broad and useful life, tend to a continuation and enlargement of his present success.

MARKLEY, Jacob A., one of the popular citizens of Lee Township, Fulton County, in which his grandparents originally settled in 1837 and to which his father came as a youth of eighteen years, has spent most of his life in that township and is known as one of its successful farmers. One of his main characteristics is cheerfulness, which may partially account for his success, as it certainly does for his popularity. Mr. Markley is a native of Deerfield Township, where he was born June 1, 1864, the son of Joseph Markley, a native of Ashland County, Ohio, born in 1819, and Mary (Rose) Markley, born in New Jersey in 1830. The father was a farmer and miller who came to Fulton County with his parents in 1837, and after reaching manhood followed the same occupations here until his death.

Mr. Markley has thus been virtually a lifelong resident of Lee Township, being educated in its district schools and reared on his father's farm. He has meanwhile established his own good name within its limits, whether considered as farmer or citizen. In politics he is a Democrat, and has served as School Director for a period of fifteen years. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On March 24, 1887, Mr. Markley was married at Macomb, Ill., to Hettie A. Marvel, who is a native of Platt County, Ill., where she was born March 30, 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Markley are the parents of two children—Roy and Boyd.

MARKLEY, Joseph W., one of the younger class of farmers of Lee Township, Fulton County, who is advancing to prosperity and substantial citizenship on his individual merits and independent work, is giving his sole attention to farming, and is already owner of a valuable homestead of ninety acres, which he is improving with judicious industry. Mr. Markley was born at Babylon, Fulton County, on March 4, 1871, and was educated in the district schools and upon the family farm, both trainings being of value to the rising young farmer. On October 21, 1903, he was married at the paternal home of his bride in Macomb, Ill., to Pearl

E. B. Plummer and

Rock, of Lee Township, who was born on the 17th of April, 1880. Mr. Markley is a Democrat in politics but has never interested himself in partisan affairs.

MARQUIS, D. J., the efficient manager of the Cuba Brick and Coal Company in Fulton County, Ill., was born in McDonough County, Ill., in 1873, a son of Solomon and Martha (Wright) Marquis, natives of Illinois. Solomon Marquis was a farmer and his son, D. J., was reared on the home farm, in boyhood receiving his mental training in the public schools of Rushville, Ill., and in early manhood engaging in coal mining. In 1902 he became the manager of the Sunny Side Mine, continuing in this capacity until the proprietors reorganized as the Cuba Brick and Coal Company, of which he was made manager. The company built a plant with a capacity of about 16,000 brick per day, where they are engaged in the manufacture of building brick, employing ten men. Mr. Marquis is also interested in coal mining.

In 1896, Mr. Marquis was united in marriage with Cora Crone, who was born in Schuyler County, Ill. The children resulting from this union are Kenneth and Geneva. Fraternally Mr. Marquis is identified with the K. of P. In the management of the two companies above mentioned he has manifested good executive capacity and fully demonstrated his energy and fidelity.

MARSHALL, Carl, a resident of Ipava, Ill., is President of the State Bank, one of the most substantial and reliable financial institutions of Fulton County, and the proprietor of 1,080 acres of finely improved farming lands, all in one body and located in Bernadotte Township. It is difficult to conceive of a more solid combination for the attainment of financial security than a bank founded upon the prosperity and landed values of such a rich agricultural county as Fulton. Mr. Marshall is one of the largest stockholders in the bank and his status as a farmer and a citizen is typical of the material upon which it rests and which has made the institution of which he is the head illustrative of the best type of the country bank in a farming community—something founded upon a rock, which the speculations and the panics of the metropolis cannot affect.

Mr. Marshall is a native of Fulton County, being born in Vermont Township September 22, 1850, a son of James S. Marshall, a biography of whom will be found elsewhere in this work. He attended the district schools of the neighborhood and was reared to health and independence upon the old home farm. There he remained until he was twenty-four years of age, when he was united in marriage with Jeannette Mathews, the special date of this event being February 5, 1874. Mrs. Carl Marshall is a daughter of William and Mary (Hannum) Mathews, who from Ohio first migrated to Indiana and then to Pleasant Township, Fulton County, where Jeannette was born June 19, 1852. The parents both died in Ipava.

After Mr. Marshall's marriage the young couple settled on Section 30, Bernadotte Township, where upon 160 acres of land he began his career as a farmer, a landed proprietor and a financier. To his farming he soon added stock-raising, being remarkably successful in his feeding operations. From time to time he added other adjoining tracts of land until he finally owned, as stated, 1,080 acres in one magnificent body, and attained the distinction of being the most extensive feeder of live stock in Fulton County, the number ranging from 200 to 400 per year. Of his two children Clare is now in charge of the principal farm of 880 acres. His daughter, Irma Edith, is the wife of J. R. Wood, a furniture dealer and undertaker of Ipava.

The farm mentioned is one of the most valuable in Fulton County. The residence is of the most approved and modern construction. It is built of brick with fourteen-inch hollow walls, is heated by steam (lead pipes), and is not only supplied with all the conveniences desired by the city housekeeper but is architecturally attractive, and is not only comfortable but beautiful. Besides the residence there are nine substantial barns and outbuildings upon the farm, making the entire agricultural plant as complete as any in the county. This remained the home of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall until 1903, when they removed to their fine residence on Main Street, Ipava, as Mr. Marshall's large interests in the State Bank made his presence in the village necessary. Although the bank was not established until September, 1902, its business has so increased that it now demands virtually all his time and ability. As stated, his son Clare is in active charge of his agricultural and stock interests, the two being associated in full partnership.

As is the case with most of the leading citizens in a rich and settled farming community, the progressive career of Carl Marshall commenced with his marriage in 1874. The thirty-two years which have since passed have but furnished accumulative evidence of his stalwart character, his unfailing integrity and his practical ability. Although popular throughout the county, he has never sought office, albeit he would undoubtedly have secured the solid support of his Democratic co-voters and many Republican friends. He is a Mason of high rank—a Shriner and Knight Templar.

MARSHALL, Clare V.—A representative of that broad-minded, cultured and over progressive element which is to mold the future agricultural policy of Fulton County is found in Clare V. Marshall, the present manager of the large estate of his father, Carl Marshall, extended mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. Mr. Marshall was born on the farm he now occupies March 30, 1876, and acquired his education in the district schools and the high school of Ipava, from which he graduated in 1893.

The farm which is profiting by the ability and experience of Mr. Marshall is 1,080 acres in extent, and one of the largest, best equipped and valuable in Fulton County. It is devoted to the classes of stock and products which flourish best in the Central West, and each department is conducted according to the best scientific knowledge obtainable. Since it was placed on a paying basis no expense has been spared in its improvement, the argument being that the best, in the end, follows the line of least resistance. The residence, a large brick structure, is modern in design and furnishing, and the barns, also of brick, afford facilities for the housing of large numbers of stock. It would be difficult to find any advantage of country existence which has not been introduced on this model farm, or any luxury of equipment invented for the lifting of the drudgery of agricultural life. There are on the farm from 200 to 400 head of cattle and from 500 to 600 head of hogs.

The wife of Mr. Marshall, whose maiden name was Ina Foote, is a native of Rushville, Ill., and daughter of Charles Foote, a prominent early settler represented on another page of this work. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have had eight children: Gladys S., living with her parents; Edith and Nelda, who died of diphtheria in March, 1904; Stewart, on the home place; Don, who died in infancy; Glenn, Dean and Sarah. Mr. Marshall enjoys an enviable popularity in Bernadotte Township, not only because he is a representative farmer but because of his genial and pleasing traits of character. Ten years as manager of his extensive property has demonstrated the possession of business-like and honorable methods, and a progressiveness which must tend to the continued well-being of the community. He is a Democrat in politics and socially is connected with the Knights Templar Commandery of Havana, and the Knights of Pythias of Ipava. At present he is serving as School Director.

MARSHALL, George W., a resident of Ipava, Ill., has extensive agricultural interests, being the owner of 400 acres in Fulton County, Ill., and 800 acres in York County, Neb., all of which is being successfully managed on the co-operative plan. He is a younger brother of Carl Marshall, the prominent banker and farmer of Ipava, and a son of the well known James S. Marshall, who is deceased and whose biography appears in another part of this volume. The subject of this sketch was born November 26, 1852, in Vermont Township, Fulton County, and spent his early life on the old homestead in the monotonous but useful method of getting an education from the district school and learning the value of work on his father's farm. He also took a course at the Jacksonville Business College, graduating from that institution in 1874. Mr. Marshall then returned to Vermont Township, and being the youngest of the sons, continued work upon the home farm of 160 acres, of which he finally assumed entire management. After his father's death he remained with his mother upon the homestead until 1893, when they removed to Ipava. The mother died September 23, 1905.

On May 30, 1895, George M. Marshall was united in marriage with Corilla, daughter of Charles and Mary C. (Burrows) Stafford. Mrs. Marshall's father was among the honored pioneers of Vermont Township, while her mother was a native of Providence, R. I., and the member of a family highly esteemed in that community for more than half a century. In 1896 Mr. Marshall erected a beautiful residence in Ipava, at the corner of Mechanic and Orchard Streets, where, with his wife and mother, he now resides among the really substantial citizens of Fulton County.

Besides owning the old Cadwallader farm of 160 acres, which was entered as early as 1832, and other lands in Fulton County, he is, as already stated, extensively interested in lands in York County, Neb., which he operates in partnership with resident farmers on the co-operative plan. Upon the Nebraska farm are fed from 200 to 300 head of cattle and an average of about 500 head of hogs, the enterprise from the first having proven profitable and very satisfactory to all concerned. Mr. Marshall has been so absorbed, first in the care of the old Vermont Township homestead, and later in the development of his Nebraska live stock enterprise, with the establishment and improvement of his handsome family residence in Ipava, that he has had no leisure, had he the inclination, to devote any attention to politics. Theoretically he is a Democrat, but in local matters his vote is determined by the personal fitness of the candidate for office. He is connected with the Masonic fraternity, is liberal in his views and in his contributions to worthy objects, and his addition to the citizenship of the village has proven a decided increase of strength to the cause of public progress.

MARSHALL, James Stewart.—Evidences abound on every hand that the influence of a good and capable man is not limited to the days of his brief sojourn among accustomed surroundings, but rather is reflected in the lives of those with whom he becomes associated, and through them filters to the oncoming generation which shall contribute to the community's growth. This truism was forcibly emphasized in the career of James Stewart Marshall, through whose death, January 26, 1884, Fulton County lost a pioneer who had contributed generously of his brain and heart and muscle to its upbuilding, and who, because of wise and sagacious disposal of opportunity, had accumulated, in addition to the wealth of public confidence, a large and valuable country estate. The life of Mr. Marshall began August 6, 1816 in Jefferson County, Ohio, and he was a son of William and Margaret (Laycock) Marshall, natives of Ireland.

The parents of Mr. Marshall began their married life under circumstances which would have discouraged the young people of the present. Both came from Ireland to Pennsylvania with their parents as children, had grown up in the same neighborhood, shared the same joys and sorrows and acquired about the same amount of education by irregular attendance at the public schools. Their personal belongings at the time of their wedding consisted principally of the clothes on their back, and on horseback they came to Jefferson County, Ohio, from Pennsylvania, took up their abode among the most primitive and lonely surroundings, and spent their days in developing a wild prairie farm. Of their children, Joseph married Sarah Carr and both are deceased; Thomas married Susan Argo and died in Ohio; Moore married Sarah Bogue; John died near Ipava, this county; William died in infancy; Sarah became the wife of William Marshall and settled near Vermont, Ill.; Jane became the wife of William Argle, of the vicinity of Vermont; Dinah was the wife of Robert Humphrey and settled near Marietta, Ill.; Maria was the wife of Moses Van Sickle and lived near Astoria; Elizabeth is the wife of Stephen Merrill, of Astoria Township; Priscilla is the wife of Robert McClelland, of near Astoria, and Margaret died near Vermont, Ill., in 1835, at the age of nineteen.

James Stewart Marshall, developing an early inclination to work out his own destiny in a new locality, came on horseback, as had his father before him, to the place of his selection. The journey from Jefferson County, Ohio, to Vermont, Ill., was a long one, and his assets consisted of a large and unconquerable hope and the brain and physical strength required for its realization. For two years he worked as a millwright in Vermont, and in 1837 bought 160 acres of land in Vermont Township and erected a cabin thereon, December 14, 1835. Soon after he was united in marriage to Edith A. Bogue, daughter of Job Bogue, also one of the early pioneers of Fulton County, and with his wife began the labor of clearing his land that seed might be planted in the springtime. He expected to succeed, and expectation, persistently pursued and backed by industry and common sense, almost invariably brings its reward. As his operations became more diversified and his prospects more promising he added to his land and used discretion and good judgment in the selection of his products. The years witnessed the addition of such machinery and general improvements as were sanctioned by his conservative, cautious mind, and he left no loopholes for the careless disbursement of a fortune which he had earned after the fashion of the best of the pioneers. He was wise enough to realize the advantage of pleasant as well as profitable surroundings, and gardens, a well kept orchard and beautiful trees added to the general impression of comfort and refinement.

Mr. Marshall kept his property intact until a short time before his death, and his disposition of the same was as carefully and painstakingly planned as were all the acts of his life. While not a member of any church, he contributed generously to church and general organizations in the township, and could always be counted on to promote, with money and influence, such projects as were calculated to be of lasting benefit to the community. Politically he subscribed to the principles of the Democratic party, but he was a home-loving, quiet, unostentatious man, and the honors of office never appealed to his desire. Mrs. Marshall departed this life September 23, 1905. She was the mother of fifteen children and nobly bore her part as helpmate in all the trials and discouragements which visited the days of their adversity, retaining her gentle and loving ministrations to children and friends when prosperity permitted a greater enjoyment of life. Of the children, Moore died in Ipava January 5, 1903; Sarah is the wife of Washington Henderson, a prominent retired farmer of Macomb, Ill.; Job P. married Miss Branson and lives in Vermont, this State; Phoebe J. is the wife of Lewis Howell, of Vermont Township; Carl Marshall is represented elsewhere in this work, and Olive is the wife of John P. Fleming, known as "Cap" Fleming. Eight of the children died in infancy. Around him Mr. Marshall created an atmosphere in which it was a pleasure to live, in which people were reminded of their highest ideals, and of those possibilities of mental and material well-being which come of proper use of the gifts with which human kind are endowed.

MARSHALL, Samuel P.—Of so fine and commanding a personality as Samuel P. Marshall one speaks most who speaks least. His career, outlined against the history of Fulton County for more than half a century, requires for its posterity setting no platitudes or embellishments, having worked itself out simply and harmoniously and in accordance with the invincible truths which have filtered through the ages for the enlightenment of mankind. Born in Jefferson County, Ohio, January 11, 1831, Mr. Marshall came at the age of eighteen months with his parents to Fulton County in 1832, and after a short stay in Vermont Township moved to the farm which remained his home until his removal with his family to the village of Ipava in 1868. This farm, half a mile east of Ipava, is eloquent of his pride and individuality, and still is owned by the family, a reminder of a strong man's rise from humble beginnings. A common school education supplemented the agricultural training of Mr. Marshall, and it is needless to say that this was acquired under difficulties and added to during the entire course of his life. His marriage to Mary A. Latta in Grandview, Iowa, occurred in 1855, and of the union there were four children: Belle Nichols, wife of C. S. Barrows; Nevada, deceased at the age of three years; Sherman L., and Mary A., wife of R. O. Stoops.

No better expression of the general thought in regard to Mr. Marshall is available than that embodied in the article of his friend, W. T. Davidson, in the "Fulton Democrat," January 15, 1891, and it is with a sense of absolute fairness and justice that a part of the article is here quoted: "In politics Mr. Marshall was a stalwart Democrat, and was an honorable and useful man in his party. For many years he was Supervisor of his township, and it is not too much to say that he was one of the ablest and most valuable Supervisors the county has ever had. He was a member of the State Legislature two terms, during 1885-87, and, although handicapped as a member of the minority party, suggested several valuable measures and was instinctively and effectively the advocate of every reform act proposed in that body. He was not identified with affairs of statesmanship, and made no effort at public speaking, yet he exhibited rare good sense relating to the needs of the people in the matter of State and national legislation. In business matters he was peculiarly the manager of his own affairs. He had no confidences in this line, and there is no man in our knowledge of whose wealth so little is known. He was by nature a peacemaker. No man living or dead in Fulton County ever settled so many neighborhood differences or adjusted so many incipient law suits as did Mr. Marshall. His sympathy led him to interfere numberless times in the prosecution of misdemeanors. We remember to his infinite credit more than one young man who has become an honored and useful member of society because Mr. Marshall shielded him from rigorous and heartless enforcement of law for some thoughtless escapade.

"But Mr. Marshall shone brightest in his home life. He was wonderfully devoted to his wife and children. They were his best loved theme. His beautiful home testifies to this devotion. Nothing that money could provide was too good for them. Well may that wife and those children feel that their loss is irreparable, for there are but few husbands and fathers as loyal and devoted as he was. He was a valuable citizen of his town and county, and for long years will be sorely missed in the councils of our leading men.

"Mr. Marshall had lived longer in Pleasant Township than any other citizen. His loyalty to his childhood home was remarkable. He died at his home in Ipava at noon of January 9, 1891, aged sixty years lacking two days, and was interred in the Ipava cemetery with the solemn services of Free Masonry."

MARSHALL, Sherman Latta.—The Cashier of the Ipava (Ill.) State Bank is by inheritance and training well equipped for his responsible position. He comes of a family given to valuable and practical accomplishment, and he is the son of a pioneer who set an example of noble and useful living—a man whose life work ran parallel with the history of Pleasant Township for a longer period than did that of any other of its settlers and who contributed generously of brain, heart and intellect toward the sustaining of its interests and the increasing of its wealth. It was in an orderly and harmonious household in Ipava, this county, that the life of Mr. Marshall began, November 13, 1863, and he subsequently attended the public schools of his native town, graduating from the high school in 1880. From then until his graduation in the class of 1885 he attended the University of Illinois, and the following year he graduated from Brown's Business College, Jacksonville, Ill.

The business career of Mr. Marshall followed close upon his leaving the schoolroom, for in the fall of 1886 he became bookkeeper of the Ayers Bank, of Jacksonville. During 1889-90 he was Cashier of the Coronado Beach Hotel Company, at Coronado Beach, Cal., and from 1897 until 1902 was manager of the Marshall estate, assuming his present position with the Ipava State Bank during the latter year. Mr. Marshall is a departure from the long accepted type of banker, having a degree of adaptability and public spirit rarely associated with his prototype of several years ago. He relieves the arid and unchangeable routine of his labor with participation in politics and society, in both of which he wields a sane and progressive influence. An uncompromising Democrat, he served as Supervisor of Pleasant Township during 1893-1904, as Chairman of the County Board from 1897 until 1904, as State Alternate to the National Democratic Convention at Kansas City in 1900, and as State Delegate to the Fifteenth Congressional District Convention at St. Louis in 1904. He is fraternally connected with the Blue Lodge, Royal Arch, Commandery, Mystic Shrine and Eastern Star, A. F. & A. M., and with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias.

MARTIN, Harmon.—Among the retired farmers of Ipava are men who, while appreciating the enormous strides in progress during the past half century and the many advantages which lighten the burdens and increase the well-being of those of the present generation, yet look longingly upon many of the accompaniments of the frontier, and especially to that peace of mind which competition and the craze of wealth for wealth's sake have relentlessly and unalterably routed. Harmon Martin, when sitting before his bright fire in the winter time, likes to dwell in retrospection upon conditions as he found them during the 'forties, when but two houses adorned the site of Ipava, one occupied by John Easley and the other by Henry David, and when the former owned the greater part of the land upon which since have sprung into existence the beautiful homes and flourishing industries of the town. There was a little church near by, and on Sunday morning approaching it for miles around were the settlers in rough wagons hauled by peaceful oxen, a restful contrast to the nerve-destroying locomotion of the twentieth century automobile. Then products were pure and honey was made by bees, and man struggled for a home and the simple comforts and simple luxuries of life. It was to such a region that Mr. Martin came with his parents in 1841 from Belmont County, Ohio, where he was born May 6, 1839, a son of Hugh S. and Martha S. (Smith) Martin, who settled in Bernadotte Township, where the father died in 1868 and the mother in 1872.

Hugh S. Martin turned to good account the undeveloped land which he found in Bernadotte Township. He was industrious and had excellent judgment, qualities as essential to success on the frontier as at the present time. Turning his attention principally to sheep-raising, he succeeded so well that, with his 160 original acres as a nucleus, he in time became the owner of 1,000 acres of land. For his first land he paid fifty cents an acre, and for the remainder one dollar and fifty cents. At the present time some of this land is worth $120 an acre. At one time Mr. Martin had 3,000 head of sheep roaming over his lands, and in addition he raised large quantities of grain and other food for his stock in the winter. He was methodical and exacting in the management of his property, and it was these traits that advanced his fortunes and placed him among the sheep kings in the middle of the last century.

Young Harmon Martin found plenty of work around his father's farm, and from sunrise to sunset he tended sheep on the prairies—a decidedly monotonous if not physically difficult task. Eventually he brought a young wife to the old place, his marriage to Mary McCamant, of Ohio, taking place in January, 1864. Samuel McCamant, the father of Mrs. Martin, came to Fulton County in 1854, settling in Ipava, where he followed the carpenter trade until shortly before his death, February 11, 1896. He was born in Virginia and lived for many years in Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have two daughters, of whom Vada C. is the wife of Charles Stines and lives on the old place with her parents, and Annie E. is the wife of Jesse F. Brock, a farmer of Bernadotte Township. Not long after his marriage Mr. Martin's father gave him a farm, to which he moved and which he cultivated continuously for thirty-six years, in 1903 moving to Ipava, where he since has lived retired. Mr. Martin is not identified with any church, but contributes liberally of his means to the support of the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife has been a member since her fifteenth year. He is of the old school of courteous and honorable men, one who would scorn to do an ungenerous or inconsiderate act and whose loyalty to friends and their interests has never been questioned.

MARTIN, (Mrs.) Telitha, a well known and highly esteemed resident of Canton, Ill., and widow of the late Howard Martin, was born in Lewistown, Ill., on October 28, 1823, a daughter of Elijah and Elizabeth (Duff) Putman, natives, respectively, of North Carolina and Kentucky. Her marriage to Howard Martin occurred on June 18, 1846. Mr. Martin was born in Orange County, N. Y., October 14, 1814, and came to Illinois in 1836, locating on a farm in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, where he engaged in farming until 1877, when he moved to Canton, where he died July 25, 1880. His death was the result of an accident, his horse becoming frightened and backing off the bridge near the gas works. In politics Mr. Martin was originally a Whig and later a Republican, and served as Assessor of his township for several years.

After her marriage Mrs. Martin's parents moved to Davis County, Iowa, where they died. Her union with Mr. Martin resulted in three children, namely: John, who died in infancy; Mary, who died October 11, 1894, and Charles, who died August 23, 1899.

MARVEL, W. S., who is successfully engaged in the livery business in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Joshua Township, Fulton County, December 15, 1854, a son of Shannon and Mary Ann (Creath) Marvel. The subject of this sketch was brought up on his father's farm in Joshua Township, and in boyhood attended the district schools in the vicinity of his home. He first started in the livery business at London Mills, Ill., about 1885, and was subsequently engaged in the same line at Fairview, Ill., for two years. In 1901 he located at Canton, where he has since conducted a livery establishment with much success. He is a diligent and painstaking man, has a good stock of horses and a presentable vehicle equipment and his patronage is steadily increasing.

MASTERS, Thomas D., junior member of the law firm of H. W. Masters & Son, Lewistown, Ill., was born in Petersburg, Ill., September 20, 1877. In 1881, as a child, he came with his parents to Lewistown, Ill., receiving his preliminary mental training in its public schools. He entered Notre Dame College in 1893, spending two years in the literary department, finally completing the course in the University of Chicago in 1897. During the latter year he entered the law department of the Michigan State University, but finished his legal studies in the Chicago College of Law in 1899. Mr. Masters was admitted to the bar December 5, 1900, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession in Lewistown in association with his father, H. W. Masters.

Thomas D. Masters was married June 6, 1900, to Gertrude Mettler, of Toledo, Ohio, a daughter of Stanford Mettler, her father being a furniture dealer of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Masters have one child—Thomas D., born October 21, 1903. In politics Mr. Masters is a Democrat, and his substantial abilities are calculated to bring him to the foreground of his professional field.

MATEER, Charles A., M. D.—In adding the name of Charles A. Mateer to its citizenship in 1897, London Mills was to profit by the services of a man who possessed both the ambition and ability to make himself a factor of large professional usefulness. Dr. Mateer is of Pennsylvania Scotch-Irish ancestry, and in the Quaker State were born his parents, James and Esther A. (Glendening) Mateer, the former April 3, 1829, and the latter September 5, 1836. The family for generations had been farmers, and James Mateer came to Fulton County in 1865, a few years later settling on the farm in Young Hickory Township, where his son, Charles A., was born September 5, 1867. With the exception of the period between 1851 and 1853 spent in California the elder Mateer conducted general farming and stock-raising in Young Hickory Township from the time of his arrival until his death, November 27, 1905.

Charles A. Mateer received his education in the common schools of Northern Illinois, the Normal School at Dixon and the Kentucky State University at Lexington, Ky. Professionally he was equipped at the Hahnemann Medical College in Chicago, from which he graduated in 1896, and later practiced medicine and surgery in Hammond and Burnettsville, Ind., coming from the latter place to London Mills in 1897. In the meantime a gratifying patronage has grown up around him, and a large following has responded to his practical demonstrations of skill and resource. A rare quality among professional men, he has also shrewd financial sagacity, and is one of the promoters and a stockholder in the local Telephone Company. Dr. Mateer is a member of various medical societies, and fraternally is connected with the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Masons. At Farmington, Ill., April 2, 1890, he was united in marriage to Eliza Jacobus, a native of that place, born February 10, 1869, and to them have been born three children: James E., Mary E. and Charles H. Dr. Mateer has a tactful and sympathetic manner, and a personality which inspires confidence in his good will and ability.

MATHEWS, H. T.—When H. T. Mathews was fourteen years old opportunity knocked at his door in the guise of a minor position with the Parlin & Orendorff Plow Works, at Canton. Of course he had gone out to seek a chance of livelihood, for his people were poor and the necessity arose for the conversion of his young strength into the wherewithal of existence. Sufficient that he was industrious and faithful, and that he recognized the advantage of association with a concern which offered many avenues of advancement to the ambitious and deserving. Nine years later, in 1881, he was appointed foreman of the works, a position which he since has maintained with the same conscientious and painstaking methods that secured his promotion. He thus has been in the employ of the same concern for thirty-four years, and it is felt that his rise is a tribute to those fundamental qualities of mind and heart which rarely fail in securing the advancement of the possessor.

A native of Washington County, Md., Mr. Mathews was born in 1858 and is of Scotch-English ancestry. His father, C. J. Mathews, was born in Virginia in 1832 and died in 1897, and his mother was born in Cornwall, England, in 1839, her death occurring in 1887. Before her marriage she was Sophia Body. The family came to Illinois during the Civil War and, after a year spent in Decatur, located in Canton, where the father worked as a shoemaker for many years, but during the last years of his life was in the employ of his son in the Parlin & Orendorff Plow Works. H. T., who was about five years old when he arrived in Canton, attended the public schools for a short time only, but this early deficiency seems not to have interfered with his subsequent and continuous effort to acquire a practical education. In fact at the present time Mr. Mathews is rated as one of the well informed citizens of the community, taking an intelligent interest in politics and identifying himself closely with the local undertakings of the Republican party. That he is an important factor in its deliberations has been attested on many occasions, but he is particularly appreciated in his own, or the Fifth Ward, of which he has been an Alderman since 1895. For the past six years he has been a member of the Republican Township Committee.

In 1881, the year that he became foreman of the Plow Works, Mr. Mathews married Margaret Dennis, who died in 1896. His present wife formerly was Josephine Jewell, sister of State's Attorney Jewell, of Lewistown, Ill. Mr. Mathews has a social side which relishes a good story or timely joke, and he takes great pleasure in exchanging courtesies with his friends. For several years he has held membership in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. He is popular with his subordinates in the works, a man of great kindness and consideration, of true dignity and unquestioned integrity.

MAUVAIS, Henry C.—Among the native sons of Avon who are not only maintaining the pioneer records of their fathers, but are establishing precedents for their successors, mention is due Henry Mauvais, who, with his brother, Joseph, is conducting a hardware and implement business in his native place. Mr. Mauvais was born near the site of his present business May 7, 1880, a son of Henry and Catherine (Heckerin) Mauvais, the former born in France and the latter in Missouri. Henry Mauvais early felt the limitations surrounding the peasantry in sunny France and emigrated to the United States, where, in Avon, he followed his trade as a cabinet-maker for many years.

During his youth Henry Mauvais studied in the public schools of Avon, making a creditable record as a scholar and as a follower of various occupations, among them that of farm hand for about three years. Leaving the farm, he became the assistant of his father in his building operations, ultimately embarking in the implement and hardware business, with which he has since been connected. He carries a complete line of farm implements and hardware and is able to supply on demand those expensive adjuncts for farming operations not owned by the average general farmer. He has a third interest in his father's estate, amounting to about $10,000, and owns a pleasant home surrounded by lawn and shade trees.

In St. Augustine, Ill., April 15, 1903, Mr. Mauvais was united in marriage to Pauline Clements, a native of Kansas, and born April 19, 1878. To Mr. and Mrs. Mauvais has been born a son, Henry C. In political affiliation Mr. Mauvais is a Democrat, but as yet has limited his party service to a conscientious casting of his vote. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church and in his daily life reflects the teachings of that history-old denomination. Mr. Mauvais is a genial and obliging gentleman and has many friends in the town which has witnessed practically all of the struggles and successes of his life.

MAUVAIS, Joseph N.—With the coming of Henry Mauvais, a carpenter, to Avon in the early history of that town there was established a family which since has reflected credit upon local business, social and religious conditions, and which now is represented by the pioneer's two sturdy and dependable sons, Joseph N. and Henry Mauvais, owners and managers of a flourishing implement business. Mr. Mauvais was born in Avon January 13, 1878, a son of Henry and Catherine (Heckerin) Mauvais, natives of France and Missouri, respectively.

To some extent Joseph N. Mauvais acquired his father's trade and worked with the older man in his long established carpenter shop. His education was of the public schools of Avon and his general opportunities were similar to those of his brother, Henry. Mr. Mauvais is an exceptionally intelligent and well informed young man, thoroughly devoted to his business and absorbed in music, for which he has marked ability. He owns property to the amount of $5,000, and his social standing is unexcelled, he being popular and the recipient of many fine friendships. Politically he follows the family bent towards Democracy and the well known disinclination towards office-holding. He is a consistent Catholic and a member of several local social organizations.

MAXWELL, Jacob H.—While one usually associates the profession of farming with men whose tastes and inclinations are in the main intensely practical, one occasionally meets an exception and is forced to the conclusion that some other occupation has sustained a severe loss in the making of a landsman. This is true of Jacob H. Maxwell, the possessor of unusual mechanical and artistic ability, yet who is an excellent farmer, and in the country finds that peace and absence of turmoil so dear to the studiously and artistically inclined. When Mr. Maxwell came to Fulton County in 1853 and settled on his present farm of 169 acres he was master of two useful trades, blacksmithing and plastering. The former he had learned previous to his twelfth year in Chester County, Pa., where he was born February 17, 1817, and where his father, a blacksmith by trade, died in 1829. At this crisis in the family fortunes young Jacob H. went to Philadelphia and there learned the plasterer's trade, at the same time becoming an expert in the construction of cement walks and well-curbs. During his four years' apprenticeship he received little more than three meals a day for his services, yet the time given never has been regretted, as he laid the foundation of more than average skill in ornamental stucco work, which he subsequently carried on as a contractor in Boston, Washington, New York and many other Eastern cities. In fact he worked on many of the finest buildings in these towns, accomplishing really wonderful results in stucco ornamentation. Mr. Maxwell also learned all there was to know of concrete pavements, a process discovered by Coglid Beaton, whose name was first attached to the work.

When Mr. Maxwell arrived in Fulton County in 1853 it was with the intention of retiring from trade work and applying himself exclusively to farming. His land was very wild and a stranger to all improvements. The prairie grass reached to a man's head, and deer and a variety of large game abounded. His record as a marksman is based upon the shooting of fifteen deer and many dozens of wild turkeys. His skill as a stucco worker, however, was soon discovered, and in the absence of many experts in the line at that time he gradually was drawn into the building vortex, and furnished some of the finest ornamental work for the churches and public buildings of Fulton County. He also has constructed many concrete walks in different parts of the county, and many of those laid thirty years ago are today in a perfect state of preservation. His farm has been developed to the growing of produce which flourishes in this part of the Central West, but he has depended upon some specialties, and has made an exhaustive study of bee culture. In this line he has developed a unique method, which consists of building a small house, around the inside walls of which are ranged boxes or bee hives, which have doors opening from both the inside and outside of the house. He has demonstrated that bees housed in this way produce fifty per cent. more honey than in the old way. Mr. Maxwell is artistic to his finger tips, and many evidences of this appear on his own property. His grounds are beautifully laid out, and have all of the floral and other aids which delight the heart and soul of lovers of the beautiful. He makes baskets from flowers and alum, and jimson weeds, and is an expert at fruit-grafting, producing some fine specimens of Illinois fruits.

For forty years Mr. Maxwell has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, and during that time has been active in local social undertakings. He is in sympathy with the Republican cause, but always has refused to accept official recognition. Mr. Maxwell has been married seven times. His first wife, whose maiden name was Joan Campbell, died in Ohio, and his second wife, Mrs. Lucinda (Bunday) Maxwell, also born in Ohio, became the mother of four children: Sarah J., the deceased wife of Albert Wyant, of Ipava, Ill.; Alexander, a brick-mason, residing in Ipava; Hattie, wife of Abraham Heckerd, of Ipava, and Esther, wife of Richard Smith, and the present Postmistress of Esthe, Okla. The second wife of Mr. Maxwell died about ten days after his arrival in Fulton County, and he later married Lydia Brown, after whose death he married Mrs. Conn, of Ipava. The fifth Mrs. Maxwell was formerly Mrs. Rebecca Hager, and the sixth, who died April 25, 1901, was the widow of Dr. Meredith, of Ipava. The present Mrs. Maxwell was in girlhood Mary Little, and later the wife of Mr. Cannon. She was born in Licking County, Ohio, a daughter of T. P. Little, who was a pioneer of Fulton County. Mrs. Maxwell's girlhood was attended by many hardships, and she well remembers milking from twelve to fifteen cows every night and morning when she was sixteen years old. Notwithstanding his many years and many experiences Mr. Maxwell retains his youthful spirits, and takes a keen interest in the general happenings around him. With his cheerful philosophy, his simple habits and good constitution he should be able to still further discredit the Psalmist's allotment of years.

MAXWELL, Samuel.—As history is counted in the Central West seventy years includes the extremes of frontier and twentieth century existence. Naught save the fertility of the soil and the abundant water and timber supply beckoned the courageous from their settled homes in the East during the 'thirties, and that one came at all augured the possession of virile and purposeful traits of character. Such a man was James Maxwell, who with his wife, Polly (Corbett) Maxwell, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively, came to Astoria Township in 1836, and soon after settled where their son now lives in Section 13. A more wild and unsettled region it were difficult to find, and instead of roads the wayfarer was obliged to follow the trails of Indians and wild animals. Mr. Maxwell helped to erect the first log cabin in Astoria, and his first home on the farm was of round logs, this primitive dwelling later giving place to a hewn log cabin. Although deprived of educational advantages in his own youth, he worked zealously for the establishing of schools in the wilds, and though a member of no church, contributed generously of his means to the support of religious organizations. Quiet and unassuming, beneath his calm was a wealth of principle and determination, both of which he exercised in the small as well as large emergencies of life, thereby winning a reputation above the average for integrity and consideration. Of his five children two are living, and of these Elizabeth is the wife of Noah Rawley, a retired resident of Astoria. Both Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell died during the early 'seventies. In earlier times he was a Whig, but he became a staunch supporter of Abraham Lincoln and the cause he represented.

Following upon a youth uneventfully passed on his father's farm, Samuel Maxwell, at the age of twenty-two, enlisted February 22, 1865, in Company G, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for one year. During his brief service he did garrison duty at Camp Butler and also was sent into Tennessee and to the Duck River in 1865. He did not participate in any of the great battles of the campaign and fortunately avoided illness, imprisonment and many of the more trying experiences of warfare. Honorably discharged from the service at Murfreesboro, in September, 1865, he received his final pay at Camp Butler, returning almost immediately to the home farm, where he took up the duties as his father's assistant. A longing to grow up with the country the other side of the Mississippi led him on an overland trip to Nebraska, where he engaged in farming for a couple of years in Nemaha County. Later he made another trip to that county, but the death of his father and the division of the 160 acres comprising the home farm necessitated his remaining among the surroundings of his childhood, and he since has not wandered beyond the boundaries of his native State.

The Maxwell farm is finely improved and a beautiful place in which to live. The home is modern and comfortably furnished, the barns are substantial and erected with due allowance for increase of business and an appreciation of flowers, shade and fruit trees and general aesthetic surroundings are marked and well carried out. The farm has been the home of a variety of high grade stock, and it is to this department of agriculture that Mr. Maxwell is most earnestly and painstakingly devoted.

Since February 22, 1874, Mr. Maxwell's home has been presided over by a genial and sympathetic little woman, who formerly was Sarah Bricker, a native of Pennsylvania, and who came in early life to Fulton County with her father, Amos Bricker, also born in the Quaker State. To Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell have been born ten children, nine of whom are living: Belle, wife of George Hammell, of Lincoln, Neb.; Minnie, living at home; James, who married Eva Foster; Charles, who married Edith Wright, and Frank, Bert, Ella, Elsie and Hubert, living at home. While no office-seeker, Mr. Maxwell is a staunch supporter of Republican politics, and has held many important positions in the community. Like his father, he is the friend and promoter of schools and churches, and for years has been an active worker in the United Brethren congregation. All his mature life he has been an intelligent observer of the local trend of affairs and takes pleasure in contrasting the present with the days of his childhood on the thinly settled prairies. His land is valued at $175 an acre, but the associations of the old place are stronger than its money value, and under no consideration would the owner part with its pastures and fields and sunlit meadows.

MAXWELL, Thomas H.—Born in New Athens Township, Harrison County, Ohio, November 4, 1847, Thomas H. Maxwell is a son of Samuel A. and Elizabeth (Hager) Maxwell, the former of whom died in 1849, when his son was two years old. In 1853, when the lad was five years old, he came with his mother and stepfather to Illinois, making the journey by pike to Wheeling, W. Va., thence by boat to Havana, Mason County. Soon afterward the family settled near Marietta, Fulton County, where the mother died in 1856, leaving two children, of whom Jane is the wife of Loren Morley, of Farmers Township.

After the death of his mother Thomas H. Maxwell lived with his maternal uncle, John Hager, near Ipava, until he was twenty-six years old. He then married Lavina Boozel, daughter of J. W. Boozel, a Fulton County pioneer, and went to housekeeping on a farm which he rented from Nathan Perry for four years. Successful beyond his expectations, he next rented a farm of Mr. Bolanger, near Ipava, for two years, and February 1, 1884, he bought a seventy-four-acre tract in Section 21, Farmers Township. The land had been cultivated to some extent and contained a small frame house and barn and a few minor improvements. To these he has added with patience and persistence and now has a home which would appeal to the best business and home-loving instincts of the most exacting agriculturist. His comfortable and capacious house has been surrounded with shade trees, shrubs and flowers, and he has an orchard of two acres, containing pear, peach, plum and apple trees and four varieties of grapes. In addition to general produce he raises a variety of stock, including graded Poland China hogs and shorthorn cattle.

Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell are the parents of seven children, three of whom are living: Perry, born April 14, 1878, married Nellie Harkarader, and now is transfer agent for the Santa Fe Railroad Company at Los Angeles, Cal.; Jennie, born June 9, 1882, is the wife of O. H. Seward, of Table Grove, and Charles, born September 4, 1887. Mr. Maxwell has been an intelligent and earnest observer of the changes which have come to the southern part of Fulton County during the last half century and has added his quota of encouragement and support to education and kindred civilizing agencies. At all times social in his inclinations, he has been a member of the Knights of Pythias of Table Grove for many years, and has taken a keen interest in the spread of religion, though not affiliated with any particular denomination. He alone is responsible for the prosperity which he now enjoys and which should lend encouragement and support to others whose prospects in life seem as cheerless as once did his own.

MAYNARD, Lonis C.—No family whose association with Fulton County spans the distance between the early 'thirties and the present has more surely arisen to the opportunities created by the development of the section than that established in the wilderness of Buckheart Township by Jeffrey A. Maynard in 1830. While the advance guard of civilization now is composed of all sorts and conditions of men, it was different in the days when "Old Hickory" was President. Then the lazy and shiftless and weak-souled remained at home and the new communities were composed of strong and resolute characters; to know a man who came West at that time was to know that he was of earnest and positive character. Such was Mr. Maynard, who was born in the heart of the Puritan country of Massachusetts in 1809, and who eventually married Rebecca Fouts, with whom, at the age of twenty-nine, he traversed west by canal, stage and boat to Fulton County in 1830. In a clearing he erected his rude cabin of logs, startling the big game which for several years was to furnish sustenance for the settlers, and deepening that grim foreboding in the hearts of the Indians whose fleet feet still pressed the trails of their dusky sires.

In this cabin Lonis C. Maynard, for many years one of the foremost citizens of Canton, this county, was born October 14, 1833. Two years more rolled by with their burden of deprivation and hardship, and then the great storm of 1835, recalled as one of the most devastating in the history of the State, demolished the cabin. It was rebuilt, of course, and eventually was replaced by a more pretentious home and the land surrounding it became productive and valuable and was the center of a thriving family community. Living always within the margin of his means and counting wealth by what he was able to save, Mr. Maynard in 1860 assisted his son, Lonis C., to establish a shoe store in Canton, but for the greater part he himself remained on the farm, where he died four years later, in 1864.

In Louis C. Maynard the strength and conservatism of his father was tempered by that breeziness and resourcefulness which come to people who spend their youth in new localities and themselves help to shape its future conditions. He was educated in the early subscription and the public schools of Canton and spent his life on the farm until embarking in the shoe business with his father in 1860. At that time he was twenty-seven years old. Mr. Maynard married, October 18, 1864, Harriet E. Cole, who was born in Charleston, Ind., and in 1869 or 1870 he retired from the shoe business and engaged in real-estate brokerage, which was followed uninterruptedly until his death, September 16, 1881. He was a man of sound business ethics, and by reason of his faith in the future of the county and his thorough knowledge of its land values and general resources, materially aided in the settlement here of people and industries. Aside from the example of his well-ordained and useful life, Mr. Maynard left a rich legacy of intellect and purpose to his children, all of whom profited by superior educational opportunities and by the chances thus enfolded to reach beyond the average in human attainment. Margaret, a teacher in the high school of Canton, is a graduate of Cornell University, New York. Louis C., a legal practitioner in Dallas, Tex., is a graduate of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., and the law department of Harvard University. Isabella, a gifted musician, is a graduate from the musical department of Knox College Conservatory.

McBROOM, Edward, who is among the prominent and favorably known representative farmers of Fulton County, Ill., and a member of a family long identified with the development of that section of the country, was born in Canton Township, Fulton County, on July 11, 1861. With the exception of five years, during which he was a resident of Canton, Ill., the paternal farm has been his home since that date. Mr. McBroom is a son of Jeremiah and Mary (Dancer) McBroom, the former born in Canton Township, January 5, 1837, and the latter in Ohio, December 13, 1835. The grandfather, Hewitt M. McBroom, who was a native of Pennsylvania, was born November 14, 1802, and died in 1877, while his wife, Bridget McBroom, was born June 1, 1802, and died in 1892. The former, who was a farmer by occupation, came West in 1834 and settled on the land which is still the family homestead. He diligently applied himself to the task of clearing and breaking the virgin ground, made the necessary improvements thereon and carried on farming during the remainder of his life. In 1848 and 1850 he built the house and barn now standing on the place. He was the father of seven children, namely: Elizabeth, Mary A., Hewitt, Jr.; Jeremiah, Harriet, Olive and Alfred—Harriet and Alfred still surviving. Jeremiah McBroom, father of the subject of this sketch, grew up and continued in the work of cultivating the soil where his sire had begun, the property then consisting of 185 acres of land. He devoted his entire active life to agricultural pursuits. He and his worthy wife became the parents of five children, namely: Caroline L., Edward, Flora

B., Lillian May and Albert J. Edward and Lillian May (McBroom) Taylor are the only surviving children of this family.

In boyhood Edward McBroom made the best use of the advantages afforded by the public schools in his vicinity and since 1885 has been engaged in farming on the home place except for a period of five years, as above mentioned. During his residence in Canton he purchased the City Mills, which he conducted for two years.

Mr. McBroom has been thrice married. On October 14, 1886, he was united in marriage with Carrie A. Turner, who was a native of Illinois, and born in McDonough County. This union resulted in five children, as follows: Lee, born April 14, 1888; Mary, born August 13, 1889; Harley A., born October 13, 1892, died in 1895; Mildred, born October 21, 1894, and William J., born September 16, 1896. The mother of this family passed away October 1, 1899. The second marriage of Mr. McBroom occurred February 27, 1901, when he was united to Mrs. Zananara A. (Nelson) Barnes, who passed away February 15, 1903. On June 7, 1905, he took as his third wife Elva Freeman, who was born in North Carolina.

The political opinions of the subject of this sketch are in harmony with the policies of the Republican party.

For three years he held the office of Road Commissioner of Canton Township, and served two years as Alderman of the city of Canton. In fraternal circles Mr. McBroom is affiliated with the A. F. and A. M. and the K. of P. He is a man of excellent traits of character and is highly esteemed by all who enjoy his acquaintance.

McCALL, James Harvey.—The passing of more than a quarter of a century since the death of James Harvey McCall, in Mountain City, Nev., August 30, 1873, has not sufficed to lessen in the minds of those who survive him their appreciation of a man whose name was synonymous with integrity, justice, honor and business capacity, and who, though a resident of Canton for little more than a decade, had permanently identified himself with the best material, intellectual and moral advancement of the city. Of Scotch parentage and early American ancestry, Mr. McCall was born in 1809 in Baltimore, Md., and in 1814 removed with his father's family to York County, Pa., in 1825, locating in Lancaster County, the same State. Until the spring of 1835 he was engaged in farming and in milling in Pennsylvania, but during that year came with his oldest sister to Peoria, Ill., and for six months rented and operated a grist and saw mill on Kickapoo Creek. He then returned to Peoria and worked at the carpenter's trade for a year, afterward combining that with farming until in 1839, when, with John Monroe as a partner, he built and loaded a flatboat with produce, which they floated down the river to New Orleans. Returning, Mr. McCall became interested in feeding cattle and hogs and strangely enough, fed his stock in the first pens in Peoria from slop from the first distillery in Peoria, which was erected by Captain A. S. Cole.

On June 10, 1845, Mr. McCall married Louisa Raymond and in April of the following year received injuries which incapacitated him for labor for several months. Beginning in the spring of 1847, he operated a saw mill with a partner for a couple of years, then added a grist mill, which, soon after being completed, was destroyed by fire. Rebuilding his mill in the spring of 1852, he became a member of the firm of Moss, Bradley & Company, afterward McCall & Frazier, and thus operated the mill until the fall of 1862. In the meantime he had purchased a distillery in Canton, which he then took possession of, and in time he became one of the founders of the First National Bank, of which he was President for the remainder of his life. During the fall of 1872 Mr. McCall went to California on business and on his return trip met men whose interesting accounts of mining on the coast inspired him to investigate the prospects for himself. Putting his desire into execution, on June 16, 1873, he left for the West, where he spent some time in different localities, and, notwithstanding the effort it required to write in crude mining communities, kept his family fully informed of his journeyings, prospects and health. In his last letter to his loved ones at home he spoke of being in excellent health and no apprehension was felt or doubt expressed of his safe and speedy return home, but a telegram announcing the coming of the remains of Mr. McCall in the company of A. B. Chapman, was the first intimation received by anyone in Canton that all was not well with this honored citizen. The report spread consternation not only in his family, but among his many friends and business associates, for during his comparatively brief occupancy of his Canton home he had come to be regarded as one of nature's truest, noblest men and had won for himself more than average confidence and good will.

Mr. McCall was buried with the impressive ceremonial of the Masonic fraternity, in the councils of which he had been prominent for many years. An address was delivered by Rev. H. B. Smith, of Peoria, an old-time friend of Mr. McCall. During the funeral services the banks in the city were closed and business was practically suspended. Thus passed from the ken of those who loved him a man upon whose shoulders fell the mantle of splendid qualities of mind and heart, one endowed with the traits of generosity and hospitality, whose bearing gave evidence of calmness of soul and well-balanced temperament, and who walked steadfastly and courageously among his fellowmen.

McCALL, Mrs. Louisa.—The unique distinction of being the first lady bank director in the United States belongs to the late Mrs. Louisa McCall, who held this position in the First National Bank of Canton from 1877 and was Vice-President of the same institution from 1899 until her death on January 11, 1907. Of English-Irish ancestry, Mrs. McCall was born in London, England, October 26, 1824, on both sides of her family coming of forefathers who have encouraged the refinement and genius of their women and the nobility and strength of their men.

Charles Richard Basden Raymond, father of Mrs. McCall, was born in London, England, August 22, 1800, and by occupation was a tea tester with the East India Tea Company for many years. He married Margaret Priscilla Widenham, who was born at Widenham Castle, County Cork, Ireland, in December, 1798. The Widenham ancestors were first chronicled in British history in 1651, when one Lieutenant Widenham went with Cromwell into Ireland and received what still is known as the Widenham castle and estate. Mrs. Raymond's brother, James, was an officer under Wellington at the battle of Waterloo. The Raymond family also is of ancient and creditable lineage, but unfortunately no record has been kept of the lives of its members.

In December, 1834, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond and their family set sail for America from the London docks and after ten weeks upon the deep landed in New Orleans, La. Thence they came up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers to Peoria, which was then but little more than a trading post on the outskirts of civilization. Both Mr. Raymond and his wife were cultured and scholarly and brought to this country a fine library, music and a violin in addition to their living essentials. They were people of ready adaptability and resource and in the absence of schools for that purpose taught their older children literature, music, mathematics and history, and to the education of their daughters added needlework of every description and housekeeping. Mr. Raymond was a genial, sociable, tactful and considerate gentleman, and the farm upon which he settled in Peoria County became the Mecca for the brightest minds that then contributed to the growth of Central Illinois. An Episcopalian in religious faith and association, he naturally attracted the bishops and high churchmen to his home, and in their company passed many pleasant and profitable hours.

Mrs. McCall was about ten years old when her parents settled on the Peoria County farm and to her childish mind the change from the multitudinous interests in the English metropolis to the crude surroundings of the frontier was as strange as it was incomprehensible. As a child she evidenced scholarly tastes, and threw herself with enthusiasm into the studies and pursuits superintended by her parents. Even then she was laying the foundation for the large responsibilities which were to crowd her mature life and especially developed those qualities inseparably associated with the arid occupation of banking. She was systematic, orderly, thorough and even executive at an age when most children find greatest solace in the companionship of their dolls, and in addition to these solid traits she was a musician of merit, possessing an excellent voice. This pioneer family placed no premium upon idleness, and to develop one's mind and talents was not only a pleasure but a duty. Mrs. McCall therefore was the soul of industry and also was obedient to her parents, respectful to authority and reverential.

In Peoria County, Ill., June 10, 1845, occurred the marriage of Louisa Raymond and James Harvey McCall, the latter born in Baltimore, Md., and whose Scotch ancestor established a ferry near Baltimore, still known as McCall's Ferry. To Mr. and Mrs. McCall were born four daughters: Margaret Louisa, now Mrs. Entwistle, of Canton, born May 7, 1846; Grace Caroline (Mrs. McCall Black, of Canton), born March 1, 1849; Josephine Elizabeth (Mrs. William Babcock, of New York), born September 22, 1851, and Agnes (Mrs. Charles Levings, of Chicago), born November 20, 1855. Until the autumn of 1862 Mr. and Mrs. McCall lived in Peoria, Ill., then removing to Canton, where Mr. McCall died August 30, 1873. Four years later, as heretofore stated, Mrs. McCall was made a director in the First National Bank of Canton, and in January, 1899, became Vice-President of the same. Possessed of ample wealth, inherited from her husband, and of high business capabilities, she employed her means most generously in the interests of charity and the promotion of religious progress. She was instrumental in organizing the Ladies' Aid Society of Canton, of which she was President for twenty-five years; was liberal in church work and in aid of the Young Men's Christian Association, and contributed to the Canton Fire Department and the beautifying of the McCall school building, which was named in her honor. She was one of the organizers of the Eastern Star Chapter of Canton, of which she was the first Worthy Matron. Her death occurred, as already stated, on January 11, 1907, as the result of impaired health, beginning with an attack of pneumonia in May, 1905, and the honors paid to her memory on the occasion of her funeral attested the estimation in which she was held by a large circle of devoted and admiring friends.

McCANCE, Henry Wheeler.—Mr. McCance now occupies a nice farm of eighty acres near Smithfield, Fulton County, having entirely retired from the occupation of stock-feeding, in which he was formerly extensively engaged. He is a veteran of the Civil War, a Republican of local prominence and has been honored with many local offices.

Henry W. McCance is a native of Belmont County, Ohio, where he was born on the 24th of September, 1849. His father, James McCance, was born in the Buckeye State September 26, 1824, and his mother, Mary (Wheeler) McCance, February 7, 1827. The former, who was a farmer, came to Fulton County in 1857 and first settled near Marietta, continuing to reside in the county until his death, July 27, 1902. The subject of this sketch has always resided in Fulton County with the exception of a short term of service in the Civil War. The boy was not yet sixteen years of age when, on February 8, 1865, he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, receiving his discharge September 5th following.

On October 17, 1875, Mr. McCance was married at Marietta to Emma McBeath, who was born in Harris Township, Fulton County, on the 14th of October, 1852, and they have become the parents of five children, viz.: Florence, Alta, Renda, Mary and Pearl. During his many years of residence in his present locality the fellow citizens and friends of Mr. McCance have repeatedly testified to their confidence in his moral character and ability by calling him to fill such township offices as Road Commissioner, Justice of the Peace and School Director, and in all of them he has met the full expectations of his constituents. As stated, he is a Republican and is firm in his party allegiance. In religion he adheres to the Methodist faith.

On June 20, 1895, Mr. McCance was united in marriage with Marietta Boynton, of Prairie City, where the ceremonies occurred, and where the bride was born, April 12, 1873. Their union has resulted in three children—Russell D., Esther M. and Ralph E.

McCAUGHEY, John W.—The energy and business ability of John W. McCaughey have built up a grocery business in Bernadotte, Fulton County, which compares favorably with the best concerns of the kind in larger and more thickly settled communities. The owner has a thorough knowledge of his occupation, sufficient courage to weather inevitable depressions in trade and sufficient wisdom to realize that only by maintaining a high standard can he hope for uniform and continued success. Mr. McCaughey is a native of Jefferson County, Ohio, where he was born February 4, 1848, one of the four children of Harrison and Elizabeth (Hoyle) McCaughey, the former born in Jefferson County, Ohio, in June, 1814, and the latter born in Lancastershire, England, November 3, 1823. Mrs. McCaughey came to America with her father, John Hoyle, the rest of the family coming in 1828, and settling near Steubenville, Ohio, where her marriage to Mr. McCaughey occurred June 3, 1842.

Uncle Harry and Aunt Betsy, as Mr. and Mrs. Harrison McCaughey were familiarly called, were a veritable blessing to the communities in which they lived. Large-hearted, hospitable, generous to a fault, the friends of laughter and good fellowship, the ready sympathizers with the under dog in the life struggle, they drew around them the love and good will of young and old, and the respect of all who knew them. In 1849 they left Ohio and came to Bernadotte, Ill., then a small hamlet, and soon after located in Marietta, where Mr. McCaughey established a mercantile business. Disposing of his store, he purchased a farm three miles west of Bernadotte, but later moved into the town, where he conducted a cooperage business until 1860. From then until 1869 he ran a general store in Bernadotte, and upon disposing of the same, operated a hotel in Vermont, until failing health necessitated his return to Bernadotte, where his lamented death occurred July 30, 1884. Mr. McCaughey was vitally interested in church and educational matters, and as Supervisor, Township Treasurer and Postmaster rendered honorable and efficient public service. There are many who recall his acts of kindness, his unflinching good humor, his tact and consideration. He was a good man and dealt fairly with his fellowmen. Aunt Betsy, who survived her husband until 1899, was an ideal wife and mother, a devoted church worker and unflinching friend. She knew how to make those around her comfortable and could drown her own desires in the needs of those dependent upon her interest and sympathy. Of her children the youngest died at the age of three years; Mary is the widow of Earl D. Tuthill, the latter one of the leading merchants of Bernadotte for many years, and whose business now is conducted by his wife and son, Harry; James is a business man of Smithfield, Fulton County, and William died at the age of twenty-three.

John W. McCaughey gained his first wage-earning experience on a farm, and in connection therewith attended the district schools and the high school at Vermont. For some time he clerked in his father's store, and in 1869 started a mercantile business of his own, conducting the same until 1871. He thereafter both farmed and ran a store, and in 1886 was appointed Postmaster of Bernadotte, a position which he held uninterruptedly until 1900, a period of fourteen years. In connection with the management of the postoffice he laid in a stock of provisions, and since 1900 has devoted his entire time to the grocery business. His devotion to Democratic politics has resulted in his election to many local offices, and at the present time he is serving as Township Clerk.

The marriage of Mr. McCaughey and Mary M. Kimball occurred May 2, 1877, and of the union there are four children—Louis L., present Township Collector; Charles, deceased; Leonard and Lorena. Mr. McCaughey has supplied an element of strength and substantiality to this county for the past fifty years and has been one of the most interested as well as active observers of its developing prosperity.

McCLELLAND, John.—Within a half mile of where he now lives adjoining the village of Astoria, John McClelland was born on his father's old homestead, March 25, 1840. No native son of the township, whose pleasure and mission it has been to follow the footsteps of his sire, has better maintained the personal honor and public-spirited characteristics of the best class of pioneers, or more forcefully and persistently projected the usefulness of his family into a later and more progressive period than has this popular farmer of Section 24. In his youth Mr. McClelland had average advantages and opportunities. His preliminary education was of the practical kind to be had in the district schools, and with this foundation he has persistently pursued the by-ways of knowledge through the medium of books and periodicals. To him farming is both congenial and profitable, and within it are compensations for the finer qualities of mind and heart. His appreciation of land tillage waned temporarily during his fifteenth year, when he sought release from the ceaseless round of duties on his father's farm in a general store in Astoria, where he served as clerk two years. At the age of seventeen he was back again in the country, and at the age of eighteen assumed entire control of the property upon which his father had settled in the early '30s. In 1865 he was united in marriage to Ann Hopkins, who was born in Ohio in 1838, a daughter of G. D. Hopkins, and of this union there are four children: Laura N., wife of Andrew Mummert, a farmer of Astoria Township; Esther H., wife of J. S. Carter, of Astoria; Albert J., a resident of Cuba, Ill., and Edna, wife of A. P. Bubb, of Peoria. One child died in infancy.

Two years after his marriage, in 1867, Mr. McClelland purchased eighty acres of land on Section 23, Astoria Township, which was in a raw and run-down state, and the sole equipment of which was a dilapidated frame dwelling. His industry created a transformation of this property and in time he added another eighty acres adjoining the village on the south, and now has one of the most beautiful and highly cultivated tracts of land in the township. His home is well built and comfortable, his barns large and convenient and his implements, fences and general improvements give indication of a progressive, practical and inquiring mind. For the past twenty years he has been raising Poland China hogs, and he also raises high-grade cattle and Percheron horses. Mr. McClelland was the first man in the township to sell agricultural implements.

On February 17, 1872, the first wife of Mr. McClelland died and on April 8, 1874, he married Pauline M. Bartholow, daughter of Jasper and Olive (Saverns) Bartholow, Illinois settlers of 1858. Mrs. McClelland was born in Knox County, Ohio, and is the mother of three children: Emory C., who died January 28, 1898; Robert C., born February 14, 1878, married Veda Conner, December 14, 1899, has two children—Mildred J. and Martha G.—and lives on the old home place in Astoria Township, and Myron Jasper, born September 11, 1884, living at home. In political affiliation Mr. McClelland is a Prohibitionist, but in the absence of candidates representing his own party does not confine himself to either Republicans or Democrats. For the past forty-five years he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and towards this, as well as towards many popular causes, he has observed unflinching and wise generosity. He is one of the very liberal-minded and progressive men of the community, and as a citizen and agriculturist has evidenced qualities worthy of admiration and emulation.

McCLELLAND, Robert.—Fulton County, in 1828, presented as great possibilities of hardship as it did of prosperity to the wayfarer who strayed within its borders, erected his cabin and prepared to take from the soil the sustaining means of life. A sane and splendid hope must have lit up the horizon of one so venturesome, for no short cut to fortune lured him hither, nor was he beckoned by other rewards than those developed by the slow process of the seasons. Before agriculture there is no occupation, and the end of Indian occupation found untilled lands and primeval forests. It was to such a region that Robert McClelland came in 1828, and it was from a far different community that his silent and regretted departure at the age of seventy-six was taken in 1876. His life and work are held in misty remembrance by even those of his kin who are carrying forward his labor, but of those of the same age, who shared his hardships and labored with him in the latter '20s, all are gone.

Mr. McClelland was born in County Antrim, Ireland, during the first year of the nineteenth century and owing to the death of his father he was thrown upon his own resources at the age of twelve. After an apprenticeship to a weaver from his twelfth to his fourteenth year he then invested his scant savings in a ticket to America, setting sail from an Irish port, and arriving in New York after many weeks upon the deep. For a short time he tarried in Ohio, but soon pushed on to Bond County, Ill., finally arriving in Fulton County in 1828. The smoke of the wigwag was a familiar sight, and big and little game insured a living to both pale and copper-faced dwellers of the wilderness. Renting a farm in 1830, Mr. McClelland the following year arranged, without any capital, for the purchase of 160 acres of land on what now is Section 24, Astoria Township, a tract covered with white oak and traversed by a friendly little stream. In the clearing he erected his hewed-log cabin, and soon after sent for his sister in Ireland to come and share his fortunes. Diligently he cleared his land, put in the seed and gathered the harvests, and at the end of five years, on June 30, 1836, took unto himself a wife, Priscilla, daughter of James Stuart Marshall, who came from Ohio to Fulton County in 1855. Mrs. McClelland proved a noble helpmeet and unflinching sharer of the trials and discouragements of her husband, and together they laid the foundation of the prosperity which they of the present profit by and enjoy. Both were devoutly religious, and, until its dissolution, were constant attendants of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Afterwards they were equally helpful members of the Baptist Church.

Mr. McClelland took quite a prominent part in the early politics of the county and was a member of one of the first Boards of Supervisors of his township. His judgment was of a kind which caused him to be often consulted upon matters of local importance, and he always took great interest in schools, charities, roads and the poor of the community. It was easier for him to disburse than to make money, more especially as he had an innate and unchangeable faith in human nature. He looked always for the good in people and never permitted himself to speak ill of any one. His faith sometimes was imposed upon, but never lessened, and notwithstanding the fact that he gave away and lost much, he left a property out of all proportion to his most sanguine expectations upon coming to America. Seven children were born into his family: Mary Jane, the deceased wife of W. O. Hopkins, of Chicago; John; Margaret, the second wife of W. O. Hopkins, of Chicago; Nancy and Willie, twins, who died in infancy; Sarah E., the deceased wife of H. C. Mooney, of Astoria; Edward, occupying the old homestead in Astoria Township, and Nancy Olive, widow of S. A. Hunter, of Astoria. All of the children attended the public schools, and as each left the home roof to enter upon larger responsibilities, he took with him a generous share of his father's hard-earned fortune. The character and work of Robert McClelland won an enduring place among those from distant lands, whose courage and far-sightedness made them sharers in the early civilization of Fulton County.

McCRACKEN, Ira A., a prosperous and influential farmer of Section 6, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., and one of the leading citizens in his community, was born in that township September 17, 1854. He is a son of William and Fannie (Bordner) McCracken. Mrs. William McCracken was a daughter of Peter Bordner, a review of whose career appears on another page of this volume. William McCracken was born in Licking County, Ohio, November 28, 1829, a son of John and Margaret (Simcox) McCracken. John McCracken was a native of Athens, Ohio, and was of Irish descent, Margaret McCracken, his wife, being of French derivation. She was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., and both died in Licking County, Ohio. In that county William McCracken was married to Fannie Bordner April 14, 1851. Her birth occurred April 15, 1831, and in 1851 she and her husband journeyed overland to Fulton County and settled just east of Lewistown.

The first farm which William McCracken owned was in Section 7, Liverpool Township, being known as the Post and Conklin farms, and there the family made their home until 1859. In that year he purchased 160 acres of land in Section 7, in the eastern part of Liverpool Township, where he spent the remainder of his days. At intervals he added to his original purchase, until at the time of his death he was the owner of 400 acres of land, all under culture, and improved with good dwellings and substantial barns. His wife passed to her final rest March 4, 1892, he surviving her until February 7, 1902. She was a woman of noble qualities and a true Christian mother, and both were respected and honored for their many virtues and kindly charities. While William McCracken was not a member of any church, he gave freely of his means toward the support of religious work, and when his mission here was fulfilled he expressed himself as ready to meet the devoted companion of his life, who had gone before. Just before he departed this life he called Ira to his side and taking him by the hand, said: "Ira, goodbye. I hate to leave you, but I am ready to go to meet mother. You will soon follow." And thus he passed away.

The children of William McCracken and his wife were as follows: M. Arista, born May 30, 1853, a farmer, occupying a portion of the old home farm, who married Mary Morton, by whom he had two children—Allie and May; Samuel, born February 19, 1856, a farmer, owning and cultivating 160 acres near the old homestead, who married Hattie Raker, by whom he has five children—Maude, Bryan, Hattie, Don and Bessie; Jennie, born February 7, 1864, wife of John J. Denney, by whom she has three children living; and Ira A., of whom this record treats, who is single, and is operating a portion of the homestead farm. (A sketch of Mr. McCracken's brother-in-law, John J. Denney, appears elsewhere in this volume.)

Ira A. McCracken has 360 acres of land, mainly in pasture, and devotes his attention principally to raising and feeding stock. He has one of the best improved farms in the township and his labors are attended with abundant success. He is regarded as one of the leading farmers and most substantial citizens of his township. In politics he is a Democrat, but has never sought public position.

MC CREARY, Nicholas (deceased), whose residence in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., began in 1827, and extended over a period of four-score years, and whose life, had he survived six months longer, would have rounded out a century of existence, was born in Baltimore, Md., April 9, 1806. His father and mother were also natives of that city and there, in boyhood, their son Nicholas received his scholastic instruction in the public schools. On attaining his majority he left the East and, making his way to Illinois, located in Canton, Fulton County. His early occupation was that of a wire weaver, but he subsequently bought land and was successfully engaged in farming in the vicinity of Canton during the remainder of his active career. At an early day he purchased the George Jewell farm, where he lived until his withdrawal from active pursuits. He then bought property in Canton and there maintained his residence until his death in 1905. Besides his home there he was the owner of other property interests.

Mr. McCreary was twice married, in early manhood being united in matrimony with Frances Hughes, in Maryland. This union resulted in four children, all born in Fulton County, and all of whom are living, namely: James, whose home is at Smithfield, Fulton County; John, who lives in Missouri; William, who is a resident of Canton, Ill., and Parmelia, who is the wife of John Myers, of that city. John and William are veterans of the Civil War and members of the Grand Army of the Republic. The mother of this family died in Canton. The second wife of Mr. McCreary was Martha Ashford, a daughter of Moran and Ann (Hayden) Ashford, of Baltimore, Md., and the offspring of this marriage was nine children, five of whom still survive.

In religion Nicholas McCreary was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. Politically he was a Republican from the time of the organization of that party, a man of picturesque character and worthy qualities. After passing the meridian of life he served as a sort of a landmark to the younger generation, a constant reminder of the successive stages of development in the region with which he was so long and so honorably identified. His record, spanning nearly a century, was without reproach, and in his declining years he was the object of profound veneration and sincere good will among all classes.

McCULLOUGH, George.—For the past five years Farmington Township has profited by the energy and good judgment of George McCullough, who owns and operates a farm of 120 acres on Section 13. During his occupancy Mr. McCullough has added to the improvements of the former owner and bought thirty acres of land adjoining the original farm on the west. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and conducts his affairs along practical and modern lines.

Born in Eden Township, Peoria County, Ill., in 1874, Mr. McCullough is an adopted son (by blood relationship a nephew) of Harvey and Mary E. McCullough, both natives of Ohio, the former of whom came to Peoria County with his parents in 1848. The elder McCullough by occupation was a farmer and about eighteen years ago came to Farmington Township, where he purchased of James Christy ninety acres of land on Section 13, and lived in Farmington for a number of years before his death, which occurred in 1901. His son had the advantages of the public schools and grew to stable and reliable manhood. Mr. McCnllongn is numarried. He is not interested in politics otherwise than as a voter, his preference being for the policies of the Republican party. In religious belief he is a Presbyterian.

McCUMBER, Clyde I., D. D. S., who has entered upon a successful dental career in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Lewistown, June 21, 1882, a son of John and Elizabeth (Prickett) McCumber, residents of Lewistown. The subject of this sketch spent his boyhood on a farm, meanwhile receiving his mental training in the district schools in his neighborhood and the Lewistown public schools. On completing his studies there he decided to adopt the profession of dentistry, and in 1901 entered the Dental Department of the Northwestern University, Chicago, where for three years he applied himself diligently to the course there prescribed. Graduating with the class of 1904, he returned home and became associated in dental practice with Dr. J. R. Maguire. In the fall of that year he purchased the interest of Dr. Maguire and since then has practiced his profession alone with success.

On September 10, 1904, Dr. McCumber was united in marriage with Mary Edna Lee, who was born August 21, 1883, and is a daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Bearce) Lee, of Lewistown. Mrs. McCumber has received a thorough literary and musical education and is gifted with many graces of mind and character. Both her own family and that of her husband have long been identified with the best element in Fulton County. In politics Mr. McCumber is a republican and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

McCUNE, James (deceased), former merchant of Fulton County, Ill., and later Associate Justice County Court in Missouri, was born in the State of Pennsylvania in 1804 and at a very early day came to Illinois, settling in Lewistown, Fulton County, where for a time he taught school, but later removing to Ipava, that county, where he engaged in the mercantile business. He had married Eliza Long and by this marriage had one son, Joseph L. (See sketch in this volume.) He continued to engage in mercantile pursuits until 1869, when he sold out and removed to the State of Missouri, where he was elected an Associate Justice of the County Court. His wife having died after his removal to Missouri, he returned to Illinois in 1871, and was there married to Rachel David. Mr. McCune's death occurred in May, 1873, while still in office in Missouri. His second wife still survives in sound mental and physical health, enjoying life in the locality which, with the exception of her residence in Missouri, has been her home for more than seventy years.

Mr. McCune's death was commemorated by his associates on the County Board by the adoption of the following resolutions, adopted in honor of his memory:

"Whereas, We learn with deep regret and profound sorrow of the sudden death of our Associate Justice, James McCune;

"Resolved, (1) That by the death of Judge McCune the county has lost a good citizen and a faithful and efficient public servant, society and the church an ornament worthy of our imitation, and his neighbors and family an earnest friend and an affectionate husband and father.

"Resolved, (2) That these resolutions be spread upon the records of this county and a copy thereof delivered to the family of the deceased.

"Resolved, (3) That as a future mark of respect to his memory the court do now adjourn until tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock.

"By order of County Court.

"Witness my hand and seal of office, May 5, 1873.

WILLIAM H. ROBERTS, Clerk."

McCUNE, James H., a highly educated and able young business man of Ipava, this county, was born in that town, January 14, 1875, being the son of the late lamented Joseph Long McCune, a public character and a leader in religious as well as practical walks of life. (See biography of Joseph L. McCune.)

The early years of James H. McCune were spent in obtaining a thorough elementary education from the public schools of Ipava and in acquiring a foretaste of his mature career in business. Graduating from the village high school in 1892, he completed his education by pursuing advanced courses in the Lake Forest University and the University of Chicago. He left his college days behind him in 1900 and returned to Ipava to assume a portion of his father's large interests, which had been cast upon him by the death of the latter in 1893. For a number of years prior to his death his father had been conducting a lumber and grain business, the management of which was now undertaken by the younger man. Since that time Mr. McCune has carried this enterprise to a very successful conclusion. Two large elevators, with a capacity of 30,000 bushels, are employed in the grain department of the business, and he has made many valuable improvements in the handling of the lumber. A great improvement made under his management is that of keeping all the lumber under shelter, both its appearance and keeping qualities being thus improved. His entire conduct of the great responsibilities thrown upon him have demonstrated that he is possessed of fine business and executive qualifications, and the straightforward nature of his dealings has strengthened the confidence which his abilities have implanted.

On May 14, 1903, James H. McCune was united in marriage with Eleanor Chambers, a daughter of John L. Chambers, of Jacksonville, Ill. She is a native of that city, where she was educated, and is a lady of broad culture. They have one child, John Chambers McCune. Both Mr. and Mrs. McCune are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which the former is an elder and a trustee.

Mr. McCune is active in educational as well as in church matters. In politics he is a conservative Republican, but is public-spirited and enterprising in the advocacy of enterprises which he believes are for the general good of the community. In official capacities he has served as a member of the City Council and Village Treasurer. In a word, there is no man of his years in this section of the county in whom the public of his locality and his immediate associates have a more abiding confidence than in the personality of James H. McCune.

MCCUNE, Joseph Long, for many years the leading business man of Ipava, this county, and a public character as well, identified prominently with religious and charitable movements and with the legislation of the State, was of such remarkable activity of body and mind that his physical frame was worn out before its time and he fell a victim to the great white plague in his sixtieth year. He was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, April 9, 1834, his parents moving to Illinois in 1837 and settling near Lewistown, Fulton County. There he obtained his early education and after clerking in the store of Beadles & Evans of that place, pursued his higher studies at Muskingum College. In 1856 he settled in the village of Ipava, and from that year he was a large figure in its growth, its public enterprises and all movements calculated to advance its best interests.

The deceased was interested in many lines of business and finances. He was senior member of both the banking firm and the general store, which he founded, and with which his name is inseparably associated; also proprietor of a lumber yard, grain business and implement house, and was interested in a nursery, vineyard and other enterprises. In the midst of these various activities he so impressed his personality upon public and political affairs that in 1888 he was elected to the Legislature by the Republican party, of which he had been a lifelong member. He was also an enthusiastic and eminently useful member of the Presbyterian Church, and it is largely due to his efforts that the present handsome edifice of that denomination in Ipava was erected.

In the spring of 1893 Mr. McCune was forced to surrender, in the midst of all his useful works, to that scourge of mankind—consumption. He made a last effort to recover his health, however, through the pure mountain air of Colorado, starting for the West in July of that year. The relief of the brave sufferer was but short-lived, for he expired at Colorado Springs December 20, 1893. He was survived by his wife, Martha Elizabeth (nee Quillin), to whom he was married August 28, 1860, and by three children. His widow, his daughter Adelaide and James H., one of his sons, reside in Ipava, the last named evidently being destined to succeed his father as a broad and fine figure in the home community. H. L., the second son, has been a leading lawyer of Kansas City, Mo., and is now Judge of the Circuit Court.

MCDOWELL, William Montgomery, M. D. (deceased), for many years a physician and surgeon of high repute and extensive practice in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., and also prominent in civic affairs, was born in Mercersburg, Pa., June 20, 1820. He was a son of Dr. John and Margaret (Montgomery) McDowell, natives of Pennsylvania, who spent their lives in that State, where the father was one of the noted men in the medical fraternity. The family was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and it is a noteworthy fact as showing inherited tendencies that four successive generations embraced members of the medical profession. Dr. William M. McDowell was the eldest in a family of five children, of whom Anna Mary is also deceased. Dr. Andrew McDowell is a practicing physician of Galesburg, Ill.; Caroline married Rev. James Cochran, who in November, 1859, commenced his ministry as a pastor of the Canton Presbyterian Church, and Virginia is a resident of Kansas City, Mo., her husband being Dr. Bell, a pioneer druggist of Canton.

Mr. McDowell acquired his literary education at Mercersburg, Pa., and afterward pursued a professional course in New York under the celebrated Dr. Mott. Graduating in surgery at the New York Medical University, he practiced for a short time in his native town and then established himself in Ohio. About the year 1847 he opened an office in Canton, where he continued his professional labors and secured an extensive patronage in the town and surrounding country. Thereby he acquired considerable means, which he judiciously invested in real estate, and at his death, March 27, 1877, he left a handsome fortune, embracing town property, farms in Fulton County and lands in Iowa and Missouri. On November 25, 1849, Dr. McDowell was united in marriage with Melvina Tyler, who was born in New York State November 25, 1829. Mrs. McDowell is a daughter of Wells and Helen Maria (Nichols) Tyler, both natives of New York, and her father was a contracting shipbuilder, who, at an early period, settled in Fulton County.

Dr. McDowell was not connected with any religious denomination, but attended the services of the Presbyterian Church. Politically he was first a Whig, then a Republican. For two terms he served as Mayor of Canton and acquitted himself in connection with his official duties with ability and fidelity. In his fraternal relations Dr. McDowell was identified with the I. O. O. F. and the A. F. and A. M., being a prominent member of Morning Star Lodge in the latter order, which conducted the ceremonies of his burial. Mrs. McDowell is passing her declining years in the midst of every comfort that abundant means and thoughtful minds can provide, and is an object of unfeigned respect and heartfelt regard to the numerous friends, who appreciate her worthy qualities.

McFARLAND, George Alexander.—The general hardware and plumbing business of George A. McFarland at Avon, this county, has existed under its present management since January 6, 1904, having been purchased at that time from McElvaine & Son, who established it in 1900. The present owner, however, is by no means a recent recruit to commercial circles, for he formerly was associated in the implement enterprise of his father, George E. McFarland, who, after an active and well-directed career, is now living in retirement.

George E. McFarland, the father, was born on the farm of his parents in Fulton County, July 25, 1852, and in the harvest field and country school laid the foundation of that shrewd common sense and practicability which accomplished his subsequent success. The merchandising instinct prevailing over the agricultural, he established an implement business on a small scale in Avon, which in time assumed large proportions, and became an important factor in promoting scientific agriculture in the county. He was the means of introducing much of the modern labor-saving machinery now used in the surrounding country, and because of the very nature of his business and his upright, reliable methods, he became widely and favorably known over a large area. He was accommodating and considerate, and, in perspective, his career is regarded as among the most useful and creditable which have contributed to the upbuilding of this community. Mr. McFarland married Emily Hectorne, who was born in Fulton County, December 31, 1853.

Born in Avon, June 19, 1882, George Alexander McFarland grew to manhood under the directing care of wise and loving parents, and although many cares crowded around him, he secured a practical education in the public schools, completing his training in the Avon High School. In addition to his other business qualifications he is an experienced tinner and is as familiar with all departments of the implement, hardware and plumbing business as any man in the county. He enjoys a monopoly in his particular line and has no local competitors in business. He carried a large stock of general hardware, stoves, furnaces and plumbing apparatus, and employs four tanners in his shop the year round.

Successful beyond the average in business, Mr. McFarland is equally favored socially and is one of the best liked and most popular bachelors in this section. He is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias and a consistent, but by no means ambitious, Democrat. He is a keen appreciator of the amenities and ethics of business, as well as of tact, agreeableness, consideration and good humor in social and general life. At the early age of twenty-five he is firmly established in a useful and honorable occupation, and bids fair to become one of the community's most substantial and influential citizens.

McGINNIS, Winfield S.—Since March, 1879, live-stock and real-estate interests in Canton, this county, have had a wide-awake promoter in Winfield S. McGinnis, representative of one of the early families of Illinois, and for many years intimately connected with the development of the stock business in Sangamon County. Mr. McGinnis was born at Loami, in the latter county, November 12, 1860, and is a son of David E. and Ruth A. (Greenwood) McGinnis, natives of Illinois, and born, respectively, August 14, 1828, and February 27, 1832. David E. McGinnis became one of the largest live-stock dealers in Sangamon County, and for years conducted a live-stock and real-estate business in Loami, where his death occurred February 4, 1890. In 1882 Mr. McGinnis' shipments of cattle to Buffalo and other Eastern points had reached especially large proportions, he being then in partnership with his son, Winfield S., who had already become prominent in the live-stock line. The elder McGinnis was a man of shrewd business ability, and exerted a strong influence in many other directions in Sangamon County. He is survived by his wife.

Winfield S. McGinnis profited by the public schools of Loami and in October, 1871, began his wage-earning career at the age of eleven by entering his father's office, where he learned the business from the bottom up. In 1879, then only nineteen, he shipped two carloads of hogs from Loami—the largest shipment made up to that time from the county. The next year he embarked in business for himself, and in 1884 formed a partnership with his father for the purpose of dealing in cattle at Wakeeney, Kans. Two years later he entered the real estate business at that point with John A. Nelson, State's Attorney of Trego County, their operations eventually covering four counties, and resulting in advancing the price of ranch land from five to twenty-five dollars per acre. The effect was to create one of the biggest land booms ever known in that section of the State. As Mr. McGinnis was the active agent in these transactions, he was brought into decided prominence, and his reputation as a successful promoter was established. He became the first Secretary of the Trego County Fair, and took the lead in the issuing and disposing of the bonds for the erection of the new court house.

Mr. McGinnis has not only earned a high reputation in the live-stock and real-estate business in Fulton County, but is widely known as the most influential promoter of its electric railway system. He is also recognized as one of the most enterprising emigrant agents in the West, and has done fine work for both the

O. S. Randolph

Union Pacific and Southern Pacific roads. He had charge of a special tour over the Southern Pacific to Wharton, Tex., in November, 1902, and took the first tourist car out of Canton, Fulton County, August 25, 1905, its destination being the Lewis & Clark Exposition, Portland, Ore. Mr. McGinnis' popularity as an executive and business man has also brought him into prominence as a political leader, and he is at the present time one of the most influential members of the Republican County Central Committee of Fulton County. His strength is shown in the fact that he was the first Republican ever elected Assessor in that county, which was in 1896.

Winfield S. McGinnis was first married March 11, 1880, to Lottie Jacobs, who died November 7, 1900, his present wife before marriage being Vadia R. Legg, their union occurring June 25, 1903. Mrs. McGinnis was born and reared in the vicinity of Lewistown, this county. The children of the family are all by the first marriage, as follows: Lessie S., born December 24, 1880; Guy C., April 25, 1882; Glen O., August 29, 1884; Lora M., March 10, 1886; Lloyd S., July 27, 1891; Fern, April 13, 1893; Leila W., February 21, 1897, and Lottie J. M., October 26, 1900. At a comparatively early age Mr. McGinnis has amassed a competence and has earned a high position in the business and public world by sheer strength of character, courteously and legitimately applied to the difficulties and problems which he has encountered. He owns a pleasant home in a desirable part of Canton, and mixes freely with its social as well as business life, being an affable gentleman and a strong man.

McKENZIE, D. R., an enterprising young agriculturist of Lee Township, is the son of Richard and Mary (Paul) McKenzie, both natives of Illinois. He was born in Davis County, Iowa, February 20, 1875, his father having removed thither in 1870. In 1893, however, Richard McKenzie returned to Canton Township, Fulton County, and settled on a farm.

As he was eighteen years of age when the family again located in Illinois, his education and training were virtually confined to his native State. His life work has been agricultural, whether as an assistant to his father or on his own responsibility, his independent career being entirely along the line of general farming. Mr. McKenzie is at present carrying on farming on rented land in Lee Township.

D. R. McKenzie was married in Lee Township, February 17, 1899, to Lizzie Lybarger, a native of that township, born September 28, 1879, and they have had one child—Charles D. Mr. McKenzie is a Republican in politics, and, taken all in all, is one of the progressive citizens of the locality, whose career promises continuous advancement.

McKINLEY, Calvin.—The late Calvin McKinley, so long a prominent stock-raiser and worthy citizen of Central Illinois, and during the later years of his life a resident of Woodland Township, this county, was an early pioneer of this section of the State, as was his father, the well known John McKinley (see biography elsewhere). The family homestead was in the township named, and he remained there until after he had reared quite a large family, when finding his rather small farm inadequate for their support, he removed to Mason County, Ill., but after six years returned to the old place in Woodland Township. Mr. McKinley had the patience, aptitude and good judgment to advance his fortunes, notwithstanding his domestic responsibilities and his small opportunities. As a boy he worked by the day at whatever honest labor he could obtain, and, being a natural mechanic, he was called upon to repair wagons and buggies and rebuild houses and barns in the early days of the county. This special talent, combined with his skill as a husbandman, had brought him comparative comfort at the time of his death in April, 1882. The deceased was a Democrat, a faithful member of the United Brethren Church, a good citizen and an honorable gentleman, but like other representatives of the family, had no ambition to push himself into publicity.

Nine children were born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin McKinley, as follows: John, who is a resident of Mason County, Ill.; Nancy E., deceased; Henry, who occupies a portion of the old homestead; Charles, a resident of Philadelphia, Pa.; Joseph (of whom see sketch); Rebecca, now the wife of Sylvester Markley, this county; Cordia, wife of Henry Bennett, of Philadelphia; Mahala (Mrs. Upton Prather), who is a resident of Astoria, this county, and Fred, who lives in Woodland Township. The honored mother of this family now resides with her daughter, Mrs. Upton Prather.

McKINLEY, John.—At a very early period in its history John McKinley came to Bond County, Ill., from his native State of Ohio, and while Woodland Township, Fulton County, still bore traces of recent Indian occupation, located on the farm now owned and operated by his grandson, Joseph McKinley. Thus he became the founder of the McKinley family in Central Illinois, and various of its members have steadily contributed to the prosperity and good name of that section by their industrious, well-ordered and creditable careers. With the exception of five years spent in Mason County, this State, Mr. McKinley continued to live in Woodland Township until his death in 1886. When he arrived in what is now Astoria he passed the first night under a spreading elm tree, which probably still does duty in the park, and soon afterward took up 230 acres of land, which he cleared and improved into a beautiful and valuable property.

In the paternal family were five children, of whom but one survives—Julia, wife of Samuel Byers, of Astoria. A sister, Melvina, married a Mr. Litchfield; Mary J. was the wife of a Mr. Fosett and reared quite a family; Alec died on a farm near Astoria; Calvin, in 1847, married Mahala Kerran, daughter of Benjamin Kerran, an early settler of Illinois.

John McKinley was a quiet unobtrusive man and a very devout member of the United Brethren Church. It was largely through his zeal and labor that the church of that denomination in his neighborhood was built and sustained. He was the friend of education and for many years was a member of the School Board. Altogether his life was a credit to the township and an inspiration to the coming generations of young men.

McKINLEY, Joseph.—Representing the third generation from John McKinley, who came from Ohio, and at an early day settled in Bond County, Ill., and afterward in Fulton County, the present Joseph McKinley was born on the farm he now owns and occupies on Section 34, Woodland Township, April 15, 1863. He is a son of Calvin McKinley, whose biography, as well as a sketch of the grandfather's life, appears on another page of this work.

Joseph McKinley remained at home until his marriage, April 17, 1893, to Magethe Prather, a native daughter of Woodland Township, and after the death of his father he purchased the old homestead of 130 acres, which he proceeded to generally improve. His present beautiful surroundings are largely of his own making, for he has planted and fostered an abundance of shade and fruit trees, shrubs and flowers, and has installed facilities for general farming and stock-raising operations on a large scale. He is especially interested in high-grade stock, including horses, cattle and hogs, and conducts his farm upon scientific and modern principles, maintaining neatness, order and a general atmosphere of thrift.

Mr. and Mrs. McKinley are the parents of two children, of whom Aubrey was born April 10, 1899, and Clarence W. June 14, 1903. Mr. McKinley finds time to cultivate the social quality and is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America of Astoria. In politics he is a Democrat, but aside from the formality of casting his vote upon well-considered public questions, is not active in political matters. He is one of the open-minded and well-posted men of his township, an advocate of progress and enlightenment and a staunch supporter of honest business and clean social life.

McLAREN, Frank Nelson, M. D.—A conscientious and painstaking exponent of medical and surgical science is found in Frank Nelson McLaren, who since his arrival in Table Grove in October, 1904, has gained a professional foothold exceeding his most sanguine expectations. In invading the realms of an inexhaustible science Dr. McLaren has swung from the moorings of his youth, for his earliest business associations were those of the repair shop, wagon manufactory and implement enterprise of his father, John N. McLaren, in Ipava, where the son was born, March 29, 1878. His mother's maiden name was Jennie Deary, and both of his parents are still residents of Ipava.

Dr. McLaren early evidenced the studious habits which lend splendid promise to his future. Graduating from the high school at Ipava in 1896, he entered the Eureka Preparatory School and, finishing the course in the spring of 1900, in the fall of the same year entered the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he graduated from the four years' course April 20, 1904. Upon arriving in Table Grove the following autumn he fitted up a suite of rooms in a central part of the village, having a laboratory, electric appliances, a complete stock of drugs and all necessary devices for a general medical and surgical practice. Eternal vigilance and incessant research are the watchwords of his career, and the letting of light upon the problems which have puzzled the ages seems to him the largest compensation in the art of healing. Dr. McLaren is a member of both the State and National Eclectic Societies. Fraternally he is connected with the Masons at Ipava and the Knights of Pythias of Table Grove. Also he is a member of the national Greek letter fraternity "Tau Alpha Epsilon." In political affiliation he is a Republican. To his professional equipment the Doctor adds a delightful manner and many ingratiating qualities, and his friends, once won, are retained indefinitely.

McLAREN, John N.—For thirty-three years John N. McLaren has applied himself steadily to the blacksmith trade in Ipava, this county, and for twenty-six years he has combined blacksmithing with the operation of a carriage, buggy and wagon establishment. He is a native son of Fulton County, and was born on his father's farm in Woodland Township, May 17, 1845, a son of William and Rachel (Fiske) McLaren.

William McLaren was born in Scotland and, after the death of his father, when the lad was eight years old, emigrated to the United States with his mother, her three sons and two daughters eventually settling in the vicinity of Summum, this county, where William McLaren died, July 12, 1890, his wife surviving him until February 14, 1891. Of the children in his family Nancy is the wife of Alonzo Palmer, of Canton, this State; Christopher C. is a brick-maker of Summum; W. R. is a physician and surgeon of Knoxville, Ill.; Nancy C. is the widow of Dr. M. T. Schenk, of Summum; Benjamin F. died in 1855; Israel is a contractor and builder of Siloam Springs, Ark.; Francis M. is a harness-maker in Ipava, and Belle is the wife of Abe Markley, of Summum. William McLaren and his wife were devout members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the former leaned toward Republican politics.

At the age of seventeen, when his strong constitution had been reinforced by such education as was afforded in the public schools, John N. McLaren became an apprentice to an Astoria blacksmith, and was thus employed at his trade until his enlistment, in January, 1865, in Company C, One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for one year. After a service as uneventful as it was brief, he was honorably discharged from the service in February, 1866, and thereupon returned to his forge in Astoria, where he remained until 1868. He then opened a blacksmith and repair shop in Summum, and October 13, 1870, was united in marriage to Jennie Deary, a native of Astoria, and daughter of Washington and Julia Deary, who were born in Kentucky, and came to Fulton County in the early days. Mr. Deary gave up his life to the Union cause in the Civil War and his wife died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. McLaren, in 1901.

In 1873 Mr. McLaren sold his shop in Summum and bought a shop in Ipava, his patronage here proving of such an encouraging nature that in 1879 he added to his stock a large line of vehicles. He had been reasonably successful and has won a reputation for expert workmanship and reliable business methods. With his wife he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally a Mason. He also is connected with the Grand Army of the Republic. To Mr. and Mrs. McLaren have been born the following children: Gertrude, who died in infancy; Daisy, wife of Charles E. Dunblazier, of Kellerton, Iowa; Frank N., a medical practitioner of Table Grove, Fulton County; Mary Viola, living at home; Charles, an educator in the schools of Havana, Ill.; twins who died in infancy, and John R., born September 22, 1892.

McLOUTH, Sherman, who is engaged in farming on an extensive scale in Section 35, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Liverpool Township, Fulton County, May 4, 1865. He is a son of Socrates and Rebecca (Horton) McLouth, the former born near Palmyra, N. Y. He went from New York to California at the time of the gold fever and on his return in 1855, located in Fulton County, Ill., where his marriage to Miss Horton took place. His journey to California in 1849 was made with a yoke of oxen, and at that time he had been married to a Miss Harrison, who accompanied him on the trip. She died, leaving a son, Charles, who located in Liverpool Township, Fulton County, where he lived a number of years.

Socrates McLouth taught school in winter and farmed in the summer season until February, 1864, when he enlisted in the One Hundred and Third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served one year, and then returned to the farm in Liverpool Township. On this farm he carried on agricultural pursuits until his death in May, 1888, his widow passing away in June, 1904. They were the parents of three sons and five daughters, as follows: Eva, wife of John W. Grigsby, of Seward, Neb.; Frederick, who is on the old home farm in Liverpool Township; Amanda, wife of William Pickerell, of Seward, Neb.; Sherman; Nettie, wife of Crayton Kelso, of Rocky Ford, Colo.; Marvin, who died in Nebraska; Ada, wife of Robert Harrison, a farmer of Liverpool Township, and Leora, wife of James Bordner, a farmer residing near Lewis town.

Sherman McLouth was reared on the home farm and received his education in the common schools, remaining under the parental roof until he was twenty-two years of age. At that period he rented eighty acres of land, which he cultivated for two years, and in 1889 made his first purchase of land, consisting of eighty acres in Liverpool Township. Selling this in 1890, he bought the old home farm, which he sold to his brother Fred in 1891, and again rented a farm. In 1894 he purchased eighty acres in the "bottom lands" of Liverpool Township, and in 1899 became the owner of 195 acres in Section 35, Buckheart Township. After raising four crops on the last place he sold it in 1903 and in May of that year bought 170 acres in Section 35, Buckheart Township, making a very superior farm of 250 acres in one body.

When Mr. McLouth left the old homestead at the age of twenty-two years his father gave him a team of horses. With this gift he started in life, and these old faithful dumb friends are still on his farm, one aged twenty years and the other twenty-one. From that team he has raised twenty-three colts and the old animals are now his best friends, doing their full share of the farm work. No price would separate them from their owner. Mr. McLouth's 250 acres are under a high state of cultivation and he has a good grade of stock of all kinds.

On October 17, 1889, Mr. McLouth was united in marriage with Mary Chapin, a daughter of George and Rachael (Fleming) Chapin. This union resulted in six children, as follows: Mabel, who was born September 25, 1890; Naf-ton, November 1, 1892; Ula, May 4, 1894; Rachael, born in June, 1897; one who died in infancy, and Estie, born May 6, 1902. The mother of this family was born August 19, 1871, in Liverpool Township. A sketch of her father, George H. Chapin, appears elsewhere in this volume.

In politics Mr. McLouth is a Republican and has filled several local offices with ability and fidelity. By energy, enterprise, intelligent methods and diligent application to the task before him, he has achieved notable success, and is one of the most substantial farmers and prominent citizens of his locality.

McMILLAN, Granville M.—No man in Banner Township is more substantially and honorably identified with the agricultural and commercial growth of his part of the State than Granville M. McMillan. Opportunity in the environment of this thrifty farmer has never been allowed to knock twice at the door, but has been turned to the best possible account from both a personal and community standpoint. From small beginnings and without the encouragement of money or influence, he has come to be the owner of more than 800 acres of land, which, in its tillage and general improvement comprises one of the garden spots of a populous and prosperous region.

Mr. McMillan was born February 9, 1856, in Trumbull County, Ohio, a son of John and Catherine McMillan, natives of Pennsylvania, and early settlers of Ohio. The youth spent his time after the usual manner of farmers' sons, sharing the educational, religious and social advantages of his neighborhood and forging to the front in his understanding and knowledge of agriculture. He came to Fulton County in 1879, at the age of twenty-three, and, desiring to extend his business knowledge, took a course the following winter at the Commercial College in Keokuk, Iowa. For some months he worked as a farm hand, then rented land and soon after his marriage, August 8, 1882, arranged for the purchase of his first tract of land. That he has been an exceptional manager and shrewd investor is patent to all who know of the struggles of his youth and the industry of his maturity.

The wife of Mr. McMillan formerly was Mary Pickering, daughter of Maynard Pickering and Jemima (Rockhold) Pickering, the former born in Wirt County, W. Va. Mr. Pickering came to Fulton County in 1852. His wife was a daughter of Starling Turner and widow of E. M. Rockhold. Mr. Turner was a prominent man in the early history of the State and achieved more than passing fame as a scholar and scientist. He was particularly interested in astronomical research, and possessed a valuable collection of instruments and books. Imbued with a spirit of humanity, he was generosity personified, and among other contributions to the community erected a church opposite his home, still known as Turner's Church. Mr. and Mrs. McMillan are the parents of nine children—four sons and five daughters: John M., born August 29, 1883; Charles H., born June 2, 1886; Minnie, born December 15, 1889; Mary Maude, born October 18, 1891; Mabel W., born September 27, 1893; Frederick G., born July 2, 1895; Amy C., born December 13, 1897; Lucy Alma, born July 31, 1899, and Chester Fayette, born October 25, 1902. Mr. McMillan is a Republican in politics, and has filled the offices of Township Clerk and Treasurer of the School Board.

MEEHAN, P. W., was born in Morris, Grundy County, Ill., on March 11, 1854, and is a son of Dennis and Mary (O'Conner) Meehan, natives of Ireland. In boyhood he received his education in the district schools and after he reached maturity engaged in coal mining. For seventeen years he operated a mine at Breeds, Ill., under the style of the Orion Coal Company, mining about 300 tons per day, and employing from seventy-five to ninety men. In 1901 he came to Cuba, Ill., and organized the East Cuba Coal Mining Company, of which he is president and manager, the mine having a capacity of 1,000 tons per day, and furnishing employment to from 200 to 250 men. For a time Mr. Meehan was engaged in mercantile pursuits, but has practically retired from active business life.

Mr. Meehan's wife was formerly known as Kathleen Warren, who was born in Eugland, the daughter of Samuel Warren, also a native of that country, and five children resulted from this union. Of these two are deceased, those living being: Charles H., Marguerite and Mary.

In politics Mr. Meehan is a Democrat. He is a man of superior executive ability and under his direction the business of his mining company is prospering.

MENDENHALL, Charles E., of the firm of L. B. Mendenhall & Son, furniture dealers and undertakers, of Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Havana, this State, July 13, 1864. He is a son of Lewis B. and Frances J. Mendenhall. The father is a native of Morgan County, Ohio, and a narrative of his useful life may be found on another page of this volume. Charles E. Mendenhall received his education in the public schools of Ipava and Havana, Ill., and at Kansas City, Mo., and then began learning the cabinet-maker's trade. The first piece of furniture which he made was a walnut chair, which is still preserved in the family. He followed cabinet-making and carpenter work and has made many choice articles of furniture, his early home being fitted out with articles made by his own hands. In the art of cabinet-making he has few superiors, being a natural genius in this line. This has been his constant occupation except during three years when he was engaged in farming. He was employed for a while in one of the principal cabinet factories in Peoria, and his skill was manifestly so superior that he was tendered the foremanship of the concern. He returned home, however, and opened a cabinet shop in Vermont. During his school days in Ipava he read medicine with Dr. Everenden and then spent eighteen months in Kansas and Colorado. He has traveled considerably and never had any difficulty in retaining a position, nor was he ever discharged by any employer.

Mr. Mendenhall's two years of medical and anatomical study enabled him to be of valuable service in times of emergency, and he always held himself in readiness to respond to any call of sickness for a year before he embarked in the furniture and undertaking business. After the furniture store was in operation he attended the Western School of Embalming and was examined by the State Board of Health, which gave him a certificate and license as an embalmer. He also received a diploma from the Western School of Embalmers in Chicago. He has always kept thoroughly posted in all the details of his profession and each year receives a supplementary certificate from the State Board of Health. In addition to his regular occupation Mr. Mendenhall is an inventor of several useful articles. The last one was a rack for linoleum, which rolls seven rolls of that article. It is built on rollers and can be easily moved to suit convenience in showing the goods. In all his work Mr. Mendenhall shows a peculiar fitness for his chosen profession of an undertaker and embalmer. He has a highly artistic manner of trimming and dressing a casket and his medical and anatomical study enables him to use exceptional skill in arranging the mortal remains. Under the present management the furniture business of the Mendenhall establishment has been trebled.

Mrs L. S. Randolph

On October 16, 1889, Mr. Mendenhall was united in marriage with Maggie Sexton, who is a daughter of James and Mary (Broyer) Sexton. Three children have resulted from this union, namely: Vera, born August 21, 1893; Clifford, April 18, 1897, and Harvey, January 13, 1900.

In politics Mr. Mendenhall is a supporter of the Republican party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and the A. F. and A. M. Professionally he is a member of the Illinois State Undertakers' Association. He and his wife are members of the Christian Church, in which he has for many years officiated as Deacon. Mr. Mendenhall takes a deep interest in public affairs and is always prompt and active in promoting any measure intended for the benefit of the community of which he has been so enterprising and useful a member.

MENDENHALL, Lewis B., of the undertaking and furniture firm of L. B. Mendenhall & Son, of Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Morgan County, Ohio, December 21, 1832. He is a son of Aaron and Debler (Brown) Mendenhall, both of whom were born and reared in Chester County, Pa. His grandparents were English. About the year 1828 his parents settled in Ohio, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The father died in 1864 and the mother in 1841. They were the parents of ten children, five of whom are still living, Lewis B. being the youngest of the family. Elizabeth married Barrett Thompson, of Pleasant Township, Fulton County. Both are deceased. Isaac died at Chester Mills, Ohio, leaving three children—one daughter in Vermont; James, of Ipava, Ill., and Lemuel, of Bernadotte, same State. Edith, deceased, was the wife of Ellis Thompson, also deceased. Joseph lives on the old home farm in Ohio. Lydia married Josiah Wood. Both died in Ipava, Ill., where their son, Oliver, is in the furniture business. Rachael, widow of Edward Moore, lives in Lewistown, Ill., and Thurza, wife of John Wood, is a resident of Milan, Mo. Naomi was wedded to Madison Conn and both died in Ipava, Ill., while Israel is engaged in farming near Milan, Mo.

Lewis B. Mendenhall was reared on a farm and received his education in the district schools of his native county. He remained at home until he was fifteen years old and was then bound out to learn the tailor's trade. At that time he was quite small for his age and his father thinking he would never be able to handle the plow and do general farm work, determined to fit him for something more suitable to his strength. The period of his apprenticeship was three years, and for his services he received his board and clothing. At the end of the term, in 1851, he located in Vermont, Ill., and worked at his trade with a Mr. Debler. In the fall of that year he returned to Ohio and was employed in tailoring until 1853. From that time until 1857 he lived in Zanesville, in that State, and then went into business at Ipava, where he remained until 1862. In that year he moved to Havana, Ill., and engaged in the boot and shoe business, continuing there until the fall of 1867. He then sold out and went into the patent drive well business in Mason County, Ill., which he followed until 1871. This he also sold out at that time and removed to Neosha Falls, Kas., where he was engaged in farming. In 1873 he was employed in the car shops of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, and in 1876 returned to Illinois and went to work at the carpenter trade in Havana. In 1878 he moved to Ipava, where he remained until 1881. In that year, together with Oliver Wood, he bought a steam threshing outfit, which he combined with a saw mill outfit in 1885, operating both until 1901, and from 1901 to 1904 he took a long-needed rest.

In April, 1904, Mr. Mendenhall purchased the undertaking stock of Dick Kirkbride, and shortly afterward bought Cox Bros.' stock of hardware and furniture. Disposing of the hardware, he combined the furniture and undertaking stocks under the firm name of L. B. Mendenhall & Son. A record of the life of the son, Charles E., appears on another page of this volume. They have an extensive line of goods in each department and have acquired a large and lucrative patronage.

On September 23, 1853, Mr. Mendenhall was united in marriage with Frances J. Hitchcock, at Zanesville, Ohio. Six children resulted from this union (four of whom are living), as follows: Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Ida May, wife of Charles Hamm, of Vermont, Ill.; Oscar, who died in infancy; Mary, wife of Merritt Williams, a farmer living near Harvard, Neb., and Nellie, wife of Alexander Sexton, of the town of Vermont. The mother of this family passed to her reward July 15, 1902. She was graciously permitted to live until she saw her children grown to manhood and womanhood and, as a result of her conscientious training and assiduous care, become useful members of society. She was a lifelong member of the Christian Church.

In politics Mr. Mendenhall is a Republican and has filled the office of Police Magistrate with ability and fidelity. Fraternally he has been affiliated with the I. O. O. F. for forty-one years. As a citizen he is highly regarded and has always earnestly supported all worthy public enterprises. In him the church and school have always found a steadfast and generous advocate, and he has ever been closely identified with all that pertains to the best interests of the community.

MERCER, Rhoades P.—With the exception of a barn erected by an earlier occupant, all of the improvements on the 223¼ acres belonging to Rhoades P. Mercer, on Sections 9, 10, 15, 16 and 21, Vermont Township, Fulton County, are due to the exertions of this popular farmer, and mark the progress which has characterized his labor since, at the age of twenty-two years, he rented a small part of the property in 1874. Mr. Mercer was born near the town of Vermont, Fulton County, January 4, 1852, a son of Isaac and Lydia A. (Frymen) Mercer, natives of Chester County, Pa., and Ohio, respectively.

Isaac Mercer went early from Pennsylvania to Ohio, where he married, and whence he removed to Fulton County, Ill., during the latter 'forties. A butcher by trade, he secured employment in the packing houses of Logsdon & Staberford at Fulton and in 1856 invested his earnings in a brush farm on Section 21, Vermont Township, where he built a log cabin and proceeded to clear and improve his land. In the thinly settled community his home became a center of hospitality and his wife was a ministering angel in times of sickness and distress. This couple arose bravely above the hardships and deprivations which came their way, and at the time of his death in 1900, at the age of eighty-six, Mr. Mercer owned 240 acres of land, all under cultivation. With his wife, who died in 1897, he was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and during the years of his prosperity contributed generously to the churches and schools of his neighborhood, at the same time performing many kindly services and aiding many a youth struggling to get a business foothold. In his family were the following named children: William J., owner of part of the old homestead in Vermont Township; Ann M. and Mary J., both deceased in infancy; Hannah E., wife of Martin K. Dobinson, of Lewistown, Ill.; Rachel A., wife of Gus Howdel, of Eldorado Township, McDonough County, Ill.; Lucretia, wife of George Welch, of Vermont Township; Rhoades P.; Edward, owning part of the old homestead; Jonathan L., deceased at the age of two years; Levi, deceased in infancy, and Emily E., wife of Frank Pauch, of Toledo, Ohio.

In his father's home Rhoades P. Mercer received lessons in thrift and economy which later built up the structure of his success. He enjoyed average schooling opportunities and his responsible life began with his marriage, August 25, 1874, to Alice Knock, and his settlement upon a part of the farm he now owns and occupies on Section 10. For a number of years he rented this farm and finally bought a part, adding thereto from time to time until his property assumed its present proportions. His labor has spanned an important agricultural era and he well remembers the time when he drove a yoke of oxen to the old-fashioned plow and harrow, and when the scythe and cradle did much now accomplished by the reaper and binder. Where formerly there was a covering of brush and scrub oaks now gleams the golden grain under the summer sun, and peaceful kine graze where roamed the wild deer and turkey. Such advantages as his industry has brought within reach of his family probably never was thought of by the boy who started out in life empty-handed, and who had the inestimable boon of poverty to spur him to noble action. In addition to general farming and stock-raising, for a number of years Mr. Mercer has operated the neighborhood threshing machine.

In keeping with his acknowledged public-spiritedness, Mr. Mercer takes a commendable interest in politics and therein is liberal, although he professed preference for the Democratic party, which he has served in various local capacities. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Patrons of Husbandry. He is not a member of any church, but his wife is a staunch believer in the tenets of the Society of Friends. Mrs. Mercer is a woman of fine and gentle character and all her life long has wielded an influence for purity in morals, usefulness in connection with local charities and kindness and consideration in the home. Of her three children Amy is the widow of William Stuart and the mother of three children—Perry, Daisy and Lillie; Clarence is a farmer on Section 15, Vermont Township, and Carl S. is at home. Mr. Mercer represents the most substantial of the agriculturists of his township, and by all who know him is regarded as one of those whose influence has tended to moral and material advancement.

MERRILL, Giles E., a well known and successful poultry dealer of Avon, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Greenbush, Warren County, Ill., December 13, 1862, a son of Frederick and Lucretia (Paine) Merrill, natives of Massachusetts and Ohio, respectively. Charles Paine, the maternal grandfather, was born in Ohio and was a son of General Paine, who fought in the War of the Revolution. When the city of Painesville, Ohio, was organized that name was bestowed upon it in honor of one of the ancestors of Mr. Merrill's mother. Frederick Merrill settled in Illinois at an early period, traveling from his former home to Chicago by water, and making the journey from Chicago to Greenbush by stream. There he embarked in general merchandising, also buying pork and grain, which he hauled to Liverpool, Ill., whence the consignments were shipped to their various destinations. He was a successful merchant and accumulated considerable means, also held several local offices in succession, including that of Supervisor, and for fourteen years served as Postmaster of Avon. His industrious and useful career came to an end in 1892. Eleven children were the offspring of his union with Lucretia Paine, seven of whom are still living. A sketch of the life of one of them, Arthur Merrill, also appears in this volume.

In early youth the subject of this personal record attended the public schools of Avon, where he obtained a good mental training in the elementary branches. When he first began life on his responsibility he went into the general merchandise business in partnership with a brother at Avon under the firm name of Merrill & Merrill. This concern the Merrill Brothers conducted for a number of years in a two-story building 44 by 80 feet in dimensions, built by themselves. They relinquished the enterprise in 1895. About 1889 they began to devote a portion of their attention to the poultry trade, and Giles E. Merrill has continued to carry on this branch of the work. He buys and dresses fowls and ships his purchases in carlots to the East. He deals also largely in eggs. He has a branch concern at Colchester, Ill., and from both places the shipments average a carload per week. The business has constantly increased from the outset, and now requires the services of twenty-five men. Five teams are continually kept in use in the country surrounding Avon for the purpose of collecting poultry for his trade. Mr. Merrill is also interested in a store at Greenbush, Warren County, and is engaged in the ice business in Avon, supplying the town from three large ice houses which he constructed.

In 1885 the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Cassie M. Snyder, who was born in New Jersey, and three children have resulted from this union, namely: Lucretia, Bertha and Andrew. In religious belief Mr. Merrill is a Congregationalist. A man of keen judgment and correct principles and thoroughly imbued with the energy and perseverance which assures success, he has made an excellent business record.

MERRILL, William H.—Among the pioneer residents of Fulton County, Ill., the record of none gives evidence of a more upright, honorable and useful life than that of William H. Merrill, who still owns and occupies the farm in Woodland Township where he was born, October 11, 1841. His father, Stephen Merrill, was one of the most vigorous, energetic and influential characters who figured in the early annals of that region. His mother, a most worthy helpmate for such a man, was Elizabeth (Marshall) Merrill, whose family history is portrayed in a sketch of the life of Stewart Marshall, which appears elsewhere in these pages. Stephen Merrill was born in the State of Maine in 1798. He remained in his native place until about the year 1834, when he made his way to Illinois and settled in the wilderness where now stretches out the fertile and productive acreage of the subject of this sketch. He took this land on a squatter's claim, just as the Indians had left it, and a patent was afterwards issued to him by the Government. On a portion of the tract stood a small cabin. He subsequently erected a snug hewed-log dwelling, 18 by 24 feet in dimensions, in which all his children were born. He and his wife were the parents of one son and seven daughters, who grew to maturity, five of whom are living. The members of this family were: Hannah, who married Lester Husted, of Greencastle, Mo., a retired farmer, who moved from Illinois to that State in 1866; Jane, deceased, who was the wife of Henry Smith, of Montana, and left one child, who still survives; Isabel, wife of John Moore, of Butte, Mont.; William H.; Margaret, who died at the age of nineteen years; Angeline, who is the widow of Henry Shelly, and resides in Woodland Township, Fulton County; Elizabeth, wife of W. B. McLaren, who lives in Galien, Mich., and Lydia, who resides in the vicinity of Plymouth, Ill., the wife of O. O. Weaver. Another child died in infancy. The father of this family was a very enterprising and progressive man. In early life he was a sailor and spent fifteen years in that occupation. On settling in Fulton County he devoted himself to agricultural pursuits, developing a highly cultivated farm and establishing an attractive and hospitable home. In the wonderful transformation which took place in the general conditions of the county during the fifty-four years of his residence in it he bore an active, conspicuous and creditable part. Public-spirited in a marked degree, he was chosen to fill several positions of official trust, in which he amply justified the popular confidence reposed in his ability and fidelity. In politics he was originally a Whig, but on the formation of the Republican party allied himself with that organization and remained steadfast in his adherence to its principles to the end of his life. He held the office of Justice of the Peace and was the first Assessor elected in Woodland Township. For many years he was a devout member of the United Brethren Church. In 1835 he was married to Elizabeth Marshall, a woman of noble qualities, who faithfully and devotedly shared the arduous labors of their pioneer experience. Stephen Merrill died in 1890, at the age of ninety-two, his wife passing away in 1894, at eighty-six years of age.

William H. Merrill, as before stated, was born on the paternal farm in 1841 and spent his boyhood and early youth in assisting in the farming operations, meanwhile attending the district school. On this spot he has spent his entire life, worthily upholding the traditions of an honored parentage, and becoming one of the most prominent, substantial and highly respected members of the community in which his busy and useful career has been passed. He is recognized as one of the leading citizens of Fulton County and has always been closely identified with its material, moral and intellectual development. In all public enterprises and institutions he has taken an active and intelligent interest. His farm is one of the most thoroughly cultivated and finely improved in the county, and his home is commodious and attractive. On the farm he maintains a good grade of all kinds of stock.

On October 11, 1864, Mr. Merrill was united in marriage with Mary E. McClung, who was born in Augusta County, Va., May 22, 1842, a daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Hafner) McClung, natives of Virginia. Her parents settled in Fulton County in 1854, locating in Woodland Township, but both are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Merrill have had six children, namely: Walter, who is engaged in farming in Woodland Township; Maggie, wife of A. F. Karnes, of Fridley, Mont.; Oliver, in charge of the old homestead; Ira, who died in infancy; Mittie, wife of James T. Chapman, a locomotive engineer, and Eva, wife of I. C. Johnson, a farmer of Woodland Township. Oliver married Maggie Lowe, and Walter is the husband of Sadie Horn.

Although never an aspirant for public office, Mr. Merrill has always been an unswerving supporter of the Republican party. His first ballot was cast for Abraham Lincoln, and he has voted for every Republican President of the United States since that time. For more than forty years Mr. Merrill and his wife have been consistent members of the United Brethren Church, and have always been earnest and diligent in evangelical work. Both are regarded with the utmost respect by their old-time neighbors and associates, and both enjoy the confidence and warm regard of a numerous acquaintance.

MESSLER, M. B.—A familiar figure on the streets of Canton ever since his arrival here in 1851, M. B. Messler has been variously identified with the business interests of the town, but principally has been known as a plaster contractor, a watchmaker and repairer and holder of important local offices. Mr. Messler was born amid humble surroundings on a farm in Montgomery County, Ohio, in 1832, and was one of eleven children to depend upon the slender resources of his parents, Reuben and Mary (McFarland) Messler, natives of Maryland. The father was born in 1806 and the mother in 1807, and they moved to Ohio when it was a wilderness and bravely undertook the hardships and sacrifices of pioneer life. Removing from Ohio to Canton Township in 1852, they settled on a farm and engaged in general farming and stock-raising, the father passing from life in 1868 and the mother in 1873.

M. B. Messler preceded his parents to Canton by one year, bringing with him, besides a strong constitution and a willingness to work, a thorough knowledge of the plasterer's trade. The comparatively new country to which he came offered abundant employment for his trade, and he followed it from 1853 until 1873, latterly employing as many as seventeen hands. He became one of the best known and most skilled workmen in the vicinity, and was about the only man in the county who could do ornamental plaster work. The Parlan and Babcock homes were among those which profited by his skill, but there are monuments to his labor scattered throughout the town and county. In the meantime, in 1860, he started a watch stand on the square, and for twenty-seven years this stand weathered financial depression and prosperity and all the varied changes which swept over the community during that time. The owner was reliable and skillful, moderate in his charges and the soul of honor, and he was sadly missed from accustomed haunts when he gave up the little stand and performed his tasks at his home.

Mr. Messler cast his first presidential vote for a Republican candidate and ever since has been a staunch supporter of that party. In earlier days he filled many offices within the gift of the people, and in 1901 was elected Justice of the Peace and re-elected in 1905. His first wife, who formerly was Mary E. Spencer, died in 1890. His present wife, Mrs. Eliza Jane (Angler) Messler, is a native of Mercersburg, Pa. The only child and daughter in the family now is Mrs. Whitehouse, of Santiago, Cal. Mr. Messler has derived social and general advantages from connection with the Masons, being a charter member of the Bohemond Lodge, No. 54, organized in 1866. Too much emphasis cannot be laid on the sterling worth which has contributed to his own and the city's good, or to the faithfulness and devotion to duty which has characterized his every undertaking.

MIDDLEKAUFF, Joseph A. (deceased), formerly a well known, industrious and reliable citizen of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., where he spent the latter years of a comparatively brief life, respected and trusted by his neighbors and acquaintances, was born in Hagerstown, Md., July 11, 1854, a son of Simon P. and Johanna (Neunenmaker) Middlekauff, who were also natives of Maryland. Simon P. Middlekauff was a farmer by occupation. Joseph A. Middlekauff was reared on his father's farm, and in boyhood attended the public schools in the vicinity of his home, assisting his father in farming until he reached years of maturity. Afterward he continued at farm work throughout the period of his life in the East. After coming to Illinois he located in Canton, where he became a blacksmith, and as such secured employment in the extensive establishment of Parlin & Orendorff, where he remained for eleven years, the connection being severed only by his death, which occurred June 4, 1890. He was the object of hearty good will on the part of all his associates in work and of those of his fellow townsmen who knew his worthy qualities as a man and as a citizen.

The marriage of Mr. Middlekauff took place at Foreston, Ill., on February 10, 1881, when he was wedded to Emma Mitchell, a daughter of George W. and Phœbe (Wilson) Mitchell. Her father was a native of Hagerstown, Md., and her mother was born at Catonsville, in that State. George W. Mitchell and his wife settled in Illinois in the early '30s, locating in Ogle County, Ill., where the former was engaged in the mercantile business. Both are deceased. They were the parents of eight children, of whom three are living. Nine children resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Middlekauff, of whom four are living. In politics Mr. Middlekauff was a supporter of the Democratic party and fraternally was identified with the Mutual Aid and the I. O. R. M.

Mrs. Middlekauff is still residing in Canton, where her excellent traits of character have endeared her to all with whom she comes in contact in the daily walks of life.

MILLARD, George A., who is engaged in farming on his birthplace, on the homestead where his father followed the same occupation, and in the township where his grandfather also was a tiller of the soil, was born in Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., in 1864, a son of George and Margaret (Smith) Millard. The father was a native of Fulton County and the mother of the State of Ohio. Grandfather Levi Millard, who was born in Rhode Island, came to Fulton County at an early day and followed agricultural pursuits.

George Millard bought the 160-acre farm where his son, George A., now lives, for $500. All the improvements on the place were made by him.

The subject of this sketch is one of a family of nine children, five of whom are living. In boyhood he was a pupil in the district schools of Cass Township, and spent his early youth in assisting his father on the home farm. He has always lived on this farm, although he owns 300 acres more on Sections 35 and 36 of the same township, most of which he farms personally. He also raises considerable stock.

In 1887 Mr. Millard was joined in wedlock with Ella Long, who was born and schooled in Cass Township. Three children were the offspring of this union, namely: Minnie, Lottie and Jessie.

MILLER, F. R., M. D., who is successfully engaged in the practice of his profession in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Beardstown, Ill., in 1872. His father, Edward P. Miller, was a native of Kentucky, born in 1819, and his mother, Catherine M. (Wright) Miller, was a native of Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill. Edward P. Miller first settled in Jacksonville, Ill., whence he later moved to Beardstown.

Dr. Miller graduated from Northwestern University, Chicago, in 1900, and immediately began the practice of medicine in Canton. He is considered a competent and reliable physician and his patronage is constantly increasing. Politically Dr. Miller is a Republican and fraternally is identified with the A. F. and A. M. and the B. P. O. E.

MILLER, George W.—The men who came to Fulton County in 1836 were of necessity patient plodders, content to await the rewards of a slowly developing civilization. There were no short cuts to fortune such as fired the zeal of the argonauts of '49, but there existed sane and practical opportunities for the man to whom labor was a beneficent and necessary feature of his existence. To such a class belonged Marcus Miller, father of George Miller, the latter one of the best known farmers of Bernadotte Township, and a native of Fulton County, where he was born in Cass Township, October 14, 1839.

Marcus Miller was born in New York and his equipment for Illinois pioneering included a mastery of the cooper trade and a practical knowledge of farming. Soon after his arrival here in the fall of 1836 he settled on land in Cass Township, and married Susannah Waftel, a native of Ohio. His early sojourn here had all the accompaniments of the early days, including hunting, intensely cold winters, absorbing occupation and few comforts. In addition to tilling his land, from which he first removed the timber, he followed his trade of cooper, principally when the work of the day was completed, and when sufficient barrels were finished to warrant so long a journey he loaded them onto a wagon or sledge, according to the season, and marketed them in Canton. He accumulated a fair competence, but the arrival of nine children in his family left little to hoard and necessitated the strictest economy. Besides George W., the oldest of his children, there were: Henry, a farmer of Farmer Township; Oliver, living in Bernadotte Township; Cal, deceased; Mary A., wife of John Hamilton, of Bernadotte Township; Sarah, wife of Joseph Hupman, of Putman Township.

When George W. Miller was a small lad one of his first tasks of importance was assisting his father in barrel-making. He was entrusted with making the staves, and when old enough used to drive the supply of barrels to Canton. He used to work in the fields from early morn until sunset, and in the evening work at barrel-making. Few farmer boys of the present time lead so strenuous a life as did this embryo farmer and cooper of early days. The days and years succeeded themselves uneventfully until the breaking out of the Civil War, when a new duty and perspective appeared to the youth of the land. In 1862 he enlisted in Company J, One Hundred and Third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served until mustered out at Louisville, Ky., at the close of the war. He carried his musket and vigorous soldiery into many of the principal battles of the Rebellion, and when his original regiment went out of service was transferred to the Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. His recollections of the war are many and interesting. He was at Raleigh, Smith County, Miss., when General Lee surrendered to General Grant, and on the following morning, April 14, 1865, he saw the flag run down to half-mast upon the announcement of the assassination of President Lincoln. This calamity produced a profound impression among the soldiery, and is recalled by Mr. Miller as one of the saddest experiences of his life.

Returning to the old home in Cass Township, Mr. Miller sought to drown out the horrors of war in the peace of a pastoral existence. He soon after married Rachel Baldock, a native of Kentucky, and a daughter of John R. Baldock, a very early settler of Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have had the following children: John, a carpenter by trade; Martha, wife of James Dare, a farmer of Bernadotte Township; Hansel, a farmer of Cass Township, who married Minnie Wilson; Titchie, also a farmer, who married Ola Anderson; Susie, deceased; Alta, living at home, and Lina, also on the old homestead.

The greatest trials in the life of Mr. Miller came with his settling on forty-two acres of land in Bernadotte Township in 1875. This region was particularly wild, and his land was covered with a heavy growth of walnut timber, which he first felled and then extracted the stumps. His first home was a small log cabin, but this was succeeded by a frame structure when prosperity began to come his way, and this, in turn, gave way in 1900 to the present large and modern home of the family. That a lover of nature has planned and executed the surroundings is apparent to all who tarry within its gates. A garden furnishing tempting products supplies a table in bounteous variety, and one may rest from the summer sun under fruit, shade or ornamental trees. Flowers abound also and those numerous little incidentals which speak of long and intimate association with a given locality. Mr. Miller is a Republican in politics and a public-spirited, highly respected citizen.

MILLER, Nathan D.—Among the farmers of Fulton County, Ill., the results of whose operations render a good account of their husbandry, is the subject of this sketch, who carries on farming on Section 25, Lewistown Township. Mr. Miller was born at Roane Mountain, East Tennessee, November 27, 1877, a son of Jacob Miller and wife, of whom the farmer was a native of Tennessee and the latter of North Carolina. Both are now residents of St. David, Fulton County, where the father is engaged in merchandising. They were married in 1865 and became the parents of three children besides Nathan D., one sister, who is the wife of J. Boone, of St. David; Etta and Frank, who are at home.

Nathan D. Miller was reared on a farm and received his early mental training in the common schools. Being naturally inclined to mechanical work, and having manifested some skill in that direction in his youth, he applied himself to learning the carpenter's trade and followed that occupation for some time, alternating between farming and carpentering. Since reaching mature years he has combined the two lines of work during the greater portion of his life. In 1901 he made a purchase of forty-five acres of land on Section 25, Lewistown Township, where he is engaged in general farming, and also devotes considerable attention to the raising of good grades of stock. He is a careful and thorough farmer and his labors have been attended with good results.

On January 1, 1901, Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Bertha A. Johnson, a daughter of Homer and Lydia A. (Bolender) Johnson, of whom the former is now deceased. The mother is now the wife of John Downs, who is engaged in farming in Liverpool Township. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have been blessed with two children, namely: Jessie T., who was born November 29, 1901, and Don D., born January 19, 1903.

In politics Mr. Miller is a believer in the principles of the Republican party. He takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs, and whatever measures are proposed tending to promote the general welfare meet with his earnest support. Religiously he adheres to the faith of the Baptist Church.

MILLER, Oliver E.—The most satisfying compensations of rural experience have rewarded the good judgment and untiring industry of Oliver E. Miller, the owner of 308 acres of improved land in Sections 7 and 18, Cass Township, Fulton County, and a man who has wielded an influence for progress and noble citizenship in this part of the State for half a century lacking two years. Mr. Miller was born on a farm in Knox County, Ohio, March 31, 1834, a son of Hiram and Susanna (Onderkirk) Miller, Illinois pioneers of 1835.

Hiram Miller was born in 1801 on a sterile farm in Vermont and in childhood moved with his parents to New York, where he was united in marriage to Susanna Onderkirk, both being then residents of Oswego County, N. Y. In 1833 Hiram Miller and family removed to Knox County, Ohio, where the son, Oliver, was born. In 1835 they came to Knox County, Ill., which remained the family home for twenty years. The elder Miller then moved to Cass Township, Fulton County, a little later taking up his residence in Davis County, Iowa, and later still making his home in Oregon and Washington Territory for about four years. He then returned to Iowa, where his death occurred in 1871.

When the family moved to Cass Township in 1858 Oliver E. Miller began farming on his own account, having on April 7th of the same year married Mary A. Varnold, a native of Cass Township, born January 1, 1840. Of this union there have been born five daughters and four sons. The daughters are: Mrs. Sarah E. Heller, Mrs. Ezilda Woody, Mrs. Cinderella Ellis, Mrs. Lydia Darst, Mrs. Permelia Little, and the sons: Levi L., Benjamin F., John A. and Grover C. After twenty-five years on a rented farm Mr. Miller in 1882 bought 100 acres of land in Section 8, Cass Township, which still is his home, and he also owns forty acres in Section 7 and 160 acres in Section 18. Practically all of the improvements are due to his energy and initiative, and general farming and stock-raising have been carried on under the most favorable circumstances. While acquiring a comfortable competence, Mr. Miller has led a by no means self-centered life, but has taken a keen interest in education, politics, local government and the social life of the community. For several years he was a member of the School Board, and as Road Master has materially aided in promoting the present superior highway system in Cass Township. He represents the reliable and substantial element of the community, and in the autumn of his life is cheered by the good will and affection of many friends and the consciousness of having performed, to the best of his ability, his obligations as farmer, husband, father and citizen.

MILLER, S. S. (deceased), for many years one of the most industrious, upright and highly respected farmers of Canton Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Franklin County, Pa., in 1833, a son of Jacob and Catherine (Swigert) Miller, his father having been a native of Germany and his mother of Pennsylvania. In the latter State the subject of this memoir received the benefits of a good common school education during his early youth, and at a later period learned the trade of a carpenter.

A short time after reaching his majority Mr. Miller left his Eastern home to better his fortunes in the West, and proceeding to Illinois, settled in Fulton County. After his arrival there in 1856 he at first applied himself to his trade, which he followed for several years. He then determined to enter upon agricultural pursuits, and in 1863 bought from William D. Johnson a farm of 148 acres situated on Section 6, Canton Township, to which he subsequently added seventy-one acres, bought of John Otto, on the opposite side of the road from his original purchase. On this place Mr. Miller carried on farming throughout the remainder of his life, and it is still the family homestead, occupied by his worthy widow and two of her sons, who continue the work so long conducted by the lamented husband and father. All the present improvements on the property were made since Mr. Miller came into possession of it, and some new buildings have been put up by the family since his death, which occurred March 25, 1892. He was a very diligent, careful and thorough farmer and success attended his labors. In all the relations of life he was faithful to the dictates of duty.

Mr. Miller was married in 1858 to Mary C. Negley, a native of Franklin County, Pa., where she was born in 1840. Her father, Jacob Negley, was a physician, who settled in Fulton County in 1844, living, however, but a short time after he established his home there. The children resulting from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Miller were as follows: P. D., who lives in Peoria, Ill.; Wissie A. (Mrs. Rice); George B. who is engaged in farming; Allan A. and Clarence E., who are on the home farm; Cardie M. (Mrs. Routhledge); Sarah C. (Mrs. Wolfe), and Fred S., whose home is in Canton. The estimable mother of this interesting and capable family, a lady of most amiable character, strong common sense and sound judgment, still retains her vigor of mind and body and is the object of sincere respect and cordial regard among a wide circle of friends.

MILLER, William M.—For the past fifteen years the firm of Buckley & Pursley, of Peoria, has been represented in Table Grove by William M. Miller, than whom there is no more efficient and careful grain and seed buyer in Fulton County. Mr. Miller keeps a careful eye upon this important State industry and by paying the best prices and insisting upon the best products encourages high standards among the surrounding farmers. The local elevator has a capacity of 13,000 bushels and the products most in demand are grains of all kinds, clover, timothy and other seeds grown in the Central West. Aside from his business standing Mr. Miller is an interesting personality and furnishes to the youth of the rising generation practical hints on how to succeed in life. In his youth he had few advantages which were not self-acquired, but he is of good birth and his molding influence has encouraged sobriety and industry. Born in Monroe County, Ind., December 18, 1846, he is a son of Isaac and Martha J. (Berry) Miller, the latter a daughter of Colonel William Berry, at different periods a prominent citizen of both Indiana and Illinois. The Miller and Berry families came to Illinois in 1852, settling in Adams County, whence they removed in 1855 to the vicinity of Blandinsville, McDonough County. As a Democrat, in 1860, Colonel Berry was elected to the State Senate for the McDonough district, serving in the Twenty-second and Twenty-third General Assemblies (1860-64), and later removing to Macomb, where he died at an advanced age. Of his nine children four are living: Robert, of Bedford, Iowa; Emma, wife of Albert Peckinpaugh, of Chicago; John A. and Green T.

Isaac Miller arose from small beginnings to the class of reliable and substantial farmers. Three generations of the family have been grain dealers. At the age of eight years he was left to assist in caring for his mother and two younger children, and he early put his shoulder to the wheel and rose to the emergency. His youthful strength was enlisted in the effort to supply common necessities, and his book learning was almost entirely a matter of his mature years. The possessor of limited means at the time of his marriage, he advanced to the front with the aid of an economical wife, thirteen children eventually becoming members of their family. Of these William M. is the oldest; Addison H. is a farmer in Missouri; Robert W. died in infancy; Mary M. is the wife of Henry Linville, of Missouri; Jameson M. also is a farmer in Missouri; Alvin B. is a farmer in Oklahoma; Lewis C. owns the old home place in Nodaway County, Mo.; John Milton died in infancy; Effie A. is the wife of E. T. Nesbit, of Colorado; Jennie D. is deceased; Samuel and Thomas were twins, of whom the former is a railroad man in the northern part of the State and the latter deceased, and Martha J. is the wife of John Powell, of Canada.

As the oldest son in the family, William M. Miller shouldered responsibility at an early age and had little chance for self-improvement. He remained at home until his twenty-second year, when he married Ellen Mustain, born near Blandinsville, McDonough County, a daughter of Nathan and Hannah (Wilson) Mustain, of whom the former came to McDonough County in 1832. Mr. Mustain died in 1876 and his wife ten years later. They had ten children, of whom Mrs. Miller is the oldest. Mr. Miller followed farming until 1890, when he removed to Table Grove and assumed his present position with the Peoria grain merchants. He has always been the true friend of education, and while in McDonough County engaged in educational work for some time, having fitted himself for the task during the brief leisure permitted on the farm. He was an excellent penman, a branch of instruction of far greater importance then than now, and he taught for a time also in Nodaway County, Mo., where his family lived for a few years. He also filled various township offices while engaged in farming, and was a member of the School Board for fifteen years.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller are members of the Christian Church at Table Grove, and Mr. Miller has been an elder in the same for twelve years. In the family are five children: Luna, who is the wife of H. E. Kinney, cashier of a bank in Table Grove, and the mother of two children—Eugene R. and Leon B., the latter deceased; Bessie, a music instructor; Edward N., superintendent of the accident department of the Aetna Life Assurance Company, of Peoria, and Grotus B., Assistant Cashier and Bookkeeper of the Farmers' Bank at Table Grove. Mr. Miller has given his children every possible advantage and all are filling honorable and worthy places in the business world. All are graduates from the Table Grove High School with the exception of Luna, who graduated from the high school at Garner, Iowa. Mr. Miller is among the enlightened and progressive men of the community, a generous contributor to worthy causes and the recipient of the good will and esteem of all who know him.

MINER, Edward A., a well known and well-to-do brick manufacturer of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Bennington, Vt., October 15, 1842, a son of Charles H. and Louisa (Steele) Miner, natives of New York and Massachusetts, respectively. The union of Charles H. Miner and Louisa Steele resulted in six children, namely: Horace C., of Lewistown; Edward A.; Phoebe, who died in infancy; Nancy, widow of John Bestler, of Naperville, Ill., and Susan and Eugene, who died in infancy. Charles H. Miner moved with his family from the East to Aurora, Ill., in 1855. There he followed his trade of brickmaker until 1863. In that year he moved to Lewistown, Ill., where he died in 1885. His wife passed away in Lewistown and rests by the side of her husband in Oak Hill Cemetery, near the city.

Edward A. Miner received a fair common school education and since reaching years of maturity has spent his life in the manufacture of brick. The Miner family has always been engaged in brickmaking. The brothers worked together until 1895, when Edward purchased his brother's interest and now conducts the concern. His plant is equipped with all the latest improvements in machinery for turning out first-class brick. The yard is located near the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway depot, in East Lewistown, and has a capacity of 10,000 brick per day.

In 1861 Mr. Miner was married to Mary Mahoney, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Mahoney, natives of Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Mahoney were the parents of three children, as follows: Thomas, deceased; Ellen, widow of Matthew Ward, of Waukegan, Ill., and Mrs. Miner. Of the children born to Mrs. Miner Jesse died in infancy; H. T. died at the age of thirty-six years, and Margaret became the wife of Charles Massey, and resides at Waukegan, Ill.

For many years Mrs. Miner has grieved over the disappearance of a favorite uncle, Val O'Brien, a miller by trade, who came to the United States from Ireland, but has ever since been lost to his relatives.

Religiously Mr. Miner and his wife are devout members of the Catholic Church. He is a liberal contributor to all church or municipal enterprises of a worthy character, and is highly respected by all who know him, as is also his estimable spouse.

MINGS, James Franklin.—Three generations of the Mings family have contributed to the agricultural development of Fulton County.

Louisa A. Randolph

The first, represented by Joseph Mings, the second by James Franklin Mings and the third by Willis Gilmore Mings. Joseph Mings arrived with the vanguard of civilization in 1835, having driven overland from Kentucky, where he was born July 9, 1809. With him was his wife, Harriet (Davis) Mings, who was a native of Maryland, and born December 4, 1808. Whether by the exercise of sagacious judgment or affected by that tide which leads men on to fortune, this young man chose the hard and exacting life of the pioneer at a time when there was little to strike the fancy of young people who had been reared among the smiling farms of the Southern States. The eye that looked upon the unpicturesque landscape needed the keener vision of a seer to discern the gathering multitude, with the bewildering hum of industries and trade that soon was to change alike its character and future. Building himself a rough log hut, he cast his fortunes with the rising community, and for years was spared to share in its growth and unfolding prosperity.

James Franklin Mings was born in St. Augustine, Knox County, Ill., August 16, 1837, two years after the arrival of his parents in the wilderness. A good constitution, an active, well-balanced mind and an upright character seem to have been his endowment. His parents gave their son such advantages of education as their isolated and unsettled condition permitted. As soon as his strength would permit he shared in the labor of subduing the woods and soil, and he was called upon to shoulder responsibility while still of tender years. The home farm profited by his work until his marriage, December 6, 1860, in Monmouth, Ill., to Sarah Elizabeth Nance, who was born in Tennessee, July 16, 1842, a daughter of John W. and Nancy (Simmons) Nance. Mr. Nance was born in North Carolina, May 15, 1814, and his wife was born in the same State, February 20, 1815. He came to Fulton County in 1845, soon after purchased a farm in Warren County and engaged in general farming and stock-raising for several years. Mr. and Mrs. Mings were the parents of seven children: Laura, deceased (wife of Harry Townsend); Willis G., Charles, Russell, Allen, Louise and Christine.

From the time of his marriage until his lamented death, November 28, 1898, Mr. Mings continued to engage in farming in Union Township, at first owning a small property, but eventually leaving to his heirs an estate of 300 acres. He was a firm adherent of the Republican party and for many years promoted the cause of education as a member of the School Board. In religion he was associated with the Universalist Church. He sleeps in the cemetery at Avon, and all who will may know of a life well spent, charged with good fellowship and generous impulses; industrious, kindly disposed, the soul of honor and the friend of many.

MINGS, Willis Gilmore.—The name of Willis Gilmore Mings is a familiar one in Avon and Fulton County, and interest attaches to the subject of this sketch not only because he is the son of James Franklin Mings, of whom extended mention is made elsewhere in this work, but because he is a comparatively young man of excellent character, giving promise of large future usefulness. Mr. Mings was born in Warren County, Ill., July 28, 1863, and was educated in the public schools of that county and at Avon, his people moving to a farm near the latter place in the fall of 1882. Reared to farming, and adapted by nature to the many exactions of that occupation, he in time became an independent land-owner, and at present owns a property comprising fifty-three and a half acres in Union Township, where he has conducted general farming and stock-raising for many years.

In Avon, December 31, 1885, Mr. Mings married Florence Minnie Rose, born in Fulton County, July 7, 1867, the daughter of a Fulton County pioneer. To Mr. and Mrs. Mings have been born four children: Claire Harold, Vera Florence, Estelle Mande and Bernadine Rose. Mr. Mings has filled many offices of trust and responsibility in Union Township, as well as in the city of Avon, which became his permanent home in 1904. He was Township School Trustee for nine years, also served as Treasurer of the Avon Fair Association, of the Avon Improvement Association and the Greenbush Telephone Company. He is a staunch Republican and a public-spirited and progressive citizen. With his wife and family Mr. Mings is identified with the Universalist Church.

MITCHELL, Charles E., a resident of Fairview Township, Fulton County, Ill., during his entire life, and for many years well and favorably known in connection with the lumber and grain trade there, was born in Fairview, Fulton County, on April 24, 1860. His parents, Peter and Rachael (Wykoff) Mitchell, were natives of the State of New Jersey. Peter Mitchell settled in Illinois during the 'forties, locating in Fulton County. He was a cabinet-maker by trade and followed that occupation until the time of his death, which occurred on December 30, 1894. His widow still survives. They were the parents of twelve children, namely: Phoebe, Albert, Andrew, Alired, George, Charles, Emma, Mary, Minnie, Willie, Martha and John.

The subject of this sketch attended the public schools in his vicinity when a boy and worked at farming until he was about twenty-one years old. At that period he took charge of the grain elevator and business of T. H. Traverse & Co., and since 1890 has acted in the capacity of manager of the concern of Buckley, Persley & Co., in the same line. In partnership with J. W. Davis he afterwards engaged in the lumber business in Fairview and in 1894 their interests were purchased by James C. Simpson, who erected the present buildings of the concern, and Mr. Mitchell has since had the management of the business also. Besides lumber, the concern deals in all varieties of building supplies. The elevator of Buckley, Persley & Co., of which Mr. Mitchell is manager, and which is located on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, was erected in 1900. It has a capacity of 18,000 bushels, and Mr. Mitchell has charge of the receiving, loading and shipping of all kinds of grain in this connection.

On July 16, 1884, Mr. Mitchell was joined in the bonds of matrimony with Mary C. Rabenaw, who was born in Fulton County, and is a daughter of Lewis and Elizabeth Rabenaw, natives of Germany and America. Five children have resulted from this union, namely: Viola and Gladys, both deceased; Lillian, born June 23, 1891; Charles, born August 16, 1893, and Inez, born March 14, 1899.

In politics Mr. Mitchell is a supporter of the Republican party and fraternally is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. He is possessed of good business qualifications and his energy and diligent application to the duties devolving upon him have won merited success.

MITCHELL, Mathew H., a retired merchant of Ellisville, Fulton County, Ill., and for many years a prominent and successful farmer in Deerfield Township, that county, was born in Hillsboro, Montgomery County, Ill., on March 17, 1830, a son of Mathew and Mary (Freeman) Mitchell, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of South Carolina. The father, whose occupation was that of a farmer, settled in Illinois at an early period. In 1835 he located in Fulton County, purchasing eighty acres of land in Section 25, Deerfield Township. At a later date he bought eighty acres more. These tracts he broke up and improved, and there followed his customary pursuit until 1853, when his laborious and useful career came to an end. He was an intelligent man, of forceful and upright character and a public-spirited member of the community. A petition was prepared and circulated by him for the establishment of a postoffice at Fiat, Fulton County, and he became the first Postmaster there, serving in that capacity for a number of years. To him and his worthy wife were born one child, M. H. Mitchell. The mother passed away in 1859.

The subject of this sketch received his early education in the public schools of Fulton County and was reared to farming. In 1865 he went to Washington County, Iowa, where he bought a farm of 160 acres, on which he lived two years. At the end of that time he sold the property and returned to Deerfield Township, buying 160 acres in Section 3, known as the Blount farm. This he sold in 1890 to J. E. Schafer and moved to Ellisville, where he was engaged for three years in the lumber trade. In the spring of 1893 he disposed of his lumber interests and embarked in the hardware business, dealing in general hardware, also handling ranges, paints, oils, etc. For a time he was associated with a partner, but afterwards bought out the interest of the latter and conducted the concern alone until March, 1905, when he withdrew from active pursuits.

On March 12, 1852, Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage with Calphurnia Wheeler, a daughter of Marvin and Polly Ann (Hosselton) Wheeler, who was born in the State of New York. Eleven children resulted from this union, seven of whom are living. Those who survive are as follows: Riley, George, Eva Jane (Mrs. Young), Ellen (Mrs. Weaver), May (Mrs. Eftland) and Pearl (Mrs. Frederick). H. L. Mitchell became the proprietor of the hardware store formerly kept by his father. For a few years he was engaged in farming in Union Township, Fulton County. In 1892 he married Wilda Babbitt, of that township, a daughter of Isaac Freeman and Alsie (Phelps) Babbitt. Her father was a native of Ohio, where he was born March 17, 1810. He was among the pioneer settlers of Union Township. H. L. Mitchell and his wife are the parents of two children—Ross and Claude.

In politics the subject of this sketch is a Democrat and has been active and influential in the local affairs of his party, having filled nearly every public office within the gift of the citizens of Deerfield Township. His religious connection is with the Christian Church. Mr. Mitchell is a man of sterling qualities and during his long career as farmer and merchant has wrought with most commendable zeal, energy and constancy for the best interests of the people at large.

MONTGOMERY, A. K.—Old age is honorable and worthy of veneration when viewed as the climax of a virtuous and well spent life. To have lived to the verge of four score and ten years—a period almost a decade beyond the limit set by the Psalmist in the pages of Holy Writ—is primarily the result of a careful observance of the laws of nature, and to have reached that advanced stage in the earthly journey with all the receding years unmarred by reproach, is indeed a consummation devoutly to be wished. Crowned with honor and upheld by a sustaining faith is he who can look back over so long a career in the serene consciousness that he has faithfully discharged his duties to his God, his country and his fellowmen. Among the few to whom such a retrospect is possible may be counted the venerable and greatly esteemed subject of this biographical review, A. K. Montgomery.

Mr. Montgomery is a native of the State of Pennsylvania, where he was born on April 8, 1818, and where in early youth he received his mental training in the public schools. Both his parents, Simpson Walker and Nancy (Cald-welt) Montgomery, were also natives of Pennsylvania. The paternal grandfather was John Montgomery, a record of whose birthplace has not been preserved. It is known, however, that he was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, while his son, Simpson Walker Montgomery, served in the War of 1812. The latter was a musical instructor by occupation and he also taught school in the Keystone State. Subsequently he was engaged for a few years in farming, and still later, in Fayette County, Pa., conducted a flouring mill for a considerable period.

The subject of this sketch moved from Pennsylvania to Illinois, locating at Farmington, Fulton County, on August 13, 1846. Shortly after his arrival he went into the saddle and harness trade, in which he continued until 1854. At that period he sold out and purchased the general store of A. D. & H. Reed, which he conducted for two years. This he then sold to George Stetson and bought the hardware store of Reed & Abbott, where he remained until 1868. He then sold out to Taylor & Stetson, retiring to his farm, the operation of which he supervised. In 1874 he purchased the old academy building property, using the brick and other material from that structure, when demolished, to build the residence which he now occupies. The old academy was erected in 1848. Its builder was James Hill, who was the founder of the school, in which he was an instructor for a number of years. The Farmington High School was afterwards conducted in the building until it was purchased by Mr. Montgomery.

On May 12, 1844, Mr. Montgomery was united in marriage with Angeline Reisinger, who was born at Carlisle, Pa., where she received her early training in the public schools. One child, Florence, resulted from this union, who became the wife of W. L. Taylor, of Canton, Ill., and who died in Washington, D. C. Mrs. Montgomery died July 31, 1906, aged eighty-two years, tacking thirteen days. She was one of the worthiest wives and, in her later years, was able to do painting or sketch work without the use of glasses and manifesting an exceptional taste in colors. As an artist in this line few at her age compared with her in merit.

In politics Mr. Montgomery is a supporter of the Democratic party. He was a member of the School Board when the Farmington High School was built (since burned), the cost of its construction being $39,000. His school taxes alone in that year amounted to $440. He was elected Mayor of Farmington in 1867. In fraternal circles he is identified with the I. O. O. F. and religiously adheres to the faith of the Congregational Church. Mr. Montgomery and his wife previous to her death were said to have been the oldest married couple in Farmington, and perhaps in Fulton County. Mr. Montgomery has been one of the principal factors in the development of the community of which he is an honored member. He is now living with his grandson, Captain B. H. Taylor, in the city of Canton.

MOORHOUSE, Omar J.—The career of Omar J. Moorhouse reflects practical and useful ideals and its range of activities has included the promotion of agriculture, education, religion, politics, banking and insurance. A native son of Fulton County, Mr. Moorhouse was born on a farm in Liverpool Township, January 15, 1853, a son of Eli and Susan (Shaw) Moorhouse, natives of England and Ohio, respectively. The elder Moorhouse came at an early day from England to Ohio, where he married, developed a fine farming property and died in 1896, at an advanced age. His wife, who had passed away in 1892, was the mother of ten children, three of whom are living. Of these Marvin is a farmer in Kingman County, Kans., and Ollie is the wife of E. E. Veatch, of Kentucky.

Throughout his youth Omar Moorhouse was animated by an earnest desire to secure a good education, and this he did, often at the expense of much needed rest, after long hours in the harvest field. He attended the common schools of Cuba and Lewistown, and thereafter applied himself to school teaching in the winter time and farm work during the summer season. After five years of this combination of effort he devoted himself exclusively to farming on a tract of 160 acres, in Section 12, Bernadotte Township. This land placed him among the land owners of the county, as well as among its most intelligent farmers, for he had left no stone unturned to become an enlightened exponent of scientific agriculture.

On June 11, 1874, Mr. Moorhouse married Carrie E., daughter of Samuel and Jane (Smith) Munson, the former an honored pioneer of Fulton County. Mrs. Moorhouse was born October 12, 1856, and is the mother of seven children: Lulu, wife of M. R. Van Houten, a resident of Kansas; Clarence, of Canton, Ill.; Dr. Charles V., a practicing physician of Marietta, this State; Leroy E., a farmer in Cass Township; Blanche E., living with her parents; Frank D. and Hansel O.

As he was one of its most successful educators, so has Mr. Moorhouse been one of the most successful farmers of Fulton County. His property in Bernadotte Township grew to express his regard for method and order, and became one of the most comfortable and pleasant, as well as most profitable, farming enterprises in the neighborhood. He continued to be the leading and most progressive landsman in that section until 1902, when he sold his farm and bought 165 acres of land on Section 2, Bernadotte Township, and 172 acres on Section 35, Cass Township, making 337 acres, practically all in one body. In 1903 he moved from Bernadotte to his farm in Cass Township, pending the erection of his present beautiful and modern country residence on Section 2, Bernadotte Township. The county does not afford a finer rural home than this, which has ten rooms, a furnace, gas, complete water equipment and those general advantages which bring the comforts of the city dweller within range of the rural resident. The barns and outbuildings afford ample facilities for an extensive stock and general produce business.

A capacity for accumulation, which, after all, is an expression of thrift and economy, is one of the leading and most desirable traits of Mr. Moorhouse. It has made him one of the largest stockholders in the Farmers' State Bank and a stable factor in the County Fire Insurance Company, of which he has been President for several years. A Democrat in politics, his principal and most meritorious party service has been as Supervisor of Bernadotte Township, to which he was first elected in 1891, and which he has held uninterruptedly ever since. No one in the township has a larger or more comprehensive knowledge of its needs and possibilities than has Mr. Moorhouse, nor has any one presented and promoted those needs more practically or intelligently. So satisfactory has been his tenure of office that he has several times been tendered the chairmanship of the committee, but owing to the pressure of other business, he has been obliged to forego the honor. He has the fullest confidence of all members of the board and his judgment is consulted and advice followed upon all important matters which arise for adjustment.

Ever since young manhood Mr. Moorhouse has been a member of the Baptist Church, and with his family is an active worker in the local church. He is particularly interested in the Sunday-school, of which he is Superintendent, and he is very popular with the children, over whom he has great influence. One would search far for a man guided more implicitly and continuously by his good genius, who has the well-being of the community more at heart, or who is more unflinchingly to be depended on from the standpoint of good judgment, morality and public-spiritedness.

MORAN, H. C., the subject of this sketch, was born in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., on the 29th day of September, 1869, a son of R. L. and Sybil (Cummings) Moran, of whom the former was born in Baltimore, Md., and the latter in Massachusetts. R. L. Moran came to Illinois from Maryland in 1835 and located seven miles southwest of Canton, where he was engaged in farming until 1884, when he removed to Canton, where he died on June 13, 1903.

H. C. Moran attended the country school in Buckheart Township until 1884, when he entered the High School in Canton, from which he graduated in May, 1889. In 1895 he was married to Ida A. Weaver, of Bryant, Ill. Mrs. Moran died on the 17th day of June, 1907, leaving one child, Murlea Mae, of the age of eight years.

In politics Mr. Moran is a Republican. He has thrice been elected to the office of Justice of the Peace of Canton Township and from 1901 to 1905 held the office of Clerk of the City Court of Canton. For the last two years Mr. Moran has been pursuing the study of law at the University of Illinois, from which institution he expects to graduate in 1908. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. and A. M., Court of Honor and Knights of the Globe.

MORAN, M. R.—In no department of human activity have there been greater strides during the past few years than in photography. The man who succeeded a decade ago would find himself hopelessly in arrears should he, with no additional equipment, attempt to cope with the conditions of the present. Photographic portraiture is an art which admits of infinite conception, and requires varied knowledge and great capacity for painstaking in its development. The men who maintain its highest artistic methods necessarily have a thorough knowledge of human nature and are artistic and scholarly in their inclinations. To this class belongs M. R. Moran, to whom Canton has long looked for the best possible results in his calling, and who has a patronage by no means limited to either town or county.

Born in Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., February 22, 1861, Mr. Moran is a son of William H. and Susan Ann (Evans) Moran, the former a native of Baltimore, Md., where he was born in 1813, and the latter a native of New York, born in 1833, a daughter of Samuel Evans, of England. The elder Moran in early life moved from Baltimore to Mississippi, where he learned the trade of blacksmithing. He was a son of Richard L. Moran, of French extraction, and an early settler of Maryland. William H. followed his trade for many years in Lewistown, and in 1862 came to Canton, where he still worked at blacksmithing, and whence he removed to the farm in Buckheart Township, where his death occurred in 1878. His wife and three children survived him and the former subsequently married Robert Sebree, now deceased. Of the brother and sister of M. R., William H., Jr., is a farmer of Buckheart Township and Mary L. married Milo G. Rader. The children were educated in the public schools and M. R. early evidenced artistic inclinations. He learned the business of photography with C. W. Mangrum, of Canton, and was in partnership with Mr. Mangrum for a couple of years. In 1886 he established a business of his own, which he conducted uninterruptedly until selling out in 1892. For the following two years he was absent from Canton, but in 1894 returned and opened another studio on South Main Street. His studio is light, airy and artistic, and in its equipment permits the most satisfactory results possible with present-day knowledge of photography.

The marriage of Mr. Moran and Susan B. Trites occurred in Canton in 1885. Mrs. Moran is a daughter of George J. and Louise Trites, who came from Philadelphia to Fulton County in 1848. The Moran home is one of the delightful ones of the town and its hospitality and good cheer are instantly dispensed. Mr. Moran has identified his political fortunes with the Republican party ever since he was old enough to judge of political principles. As a fraternalist he is an enthusiastic and long-standing member of Jefferson Lodge, No. 7, I. O. O. F. He is popular and widely known and to his other business qualifications adds those of courtesy, tact, obligingness and strict integrity.

MORAN, Richard L., one of the honored pioneers of Fulton County, was born on Section 19, Buckheart Township, August 9, 1857. His birth took place in one of the primitive log cabins that marked the pioneer period. He is a son of Richard L. and Sybil (Cummings) Moran, the latter of Scotch ancestry. The father was a native of Baltimore, Md., and moved West with his parents, Richard L. and Ann Moran, who were natives of the same State. The family settled in Fulton County in 1835. Grandfather Moran located in Putman Township, and there spent the remainder of his life. One of his descendants, Nelson Herring, now owns the old homestead. Grandfather Moran's first wife died in her native State and his second wife was buried in the old Major Nelson Cemetery, where also rest the remains of her husband.

Richard L. Moran, the father, was born in 1816. When eighteen years old he accompanied his father to Fulton County, and in 1841 was married to Sybil Cummings. In 1842 he located in Buckheart Township and built his cabin of logs cut from the heavy timber land near where it stood. There his first six children were born. He and his wife were the parents of nine children, as follows: Oliver, who died of measles at LaGrange, Tenn., while serving in the One Hundred and Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil War; Edmund P., a farmer in Buckheart Township; Albert, who was killed by lightning about the year 1865; Emma, J., wife of Harland Attebery, a farmer of Harrison, Ark.; Annie, wife of William Plummer, a carpenter of Bryant, Ill.; Richard L.; Joseph H., a farmer in Buckheart Township; Ella, wife of David C. Nelson, a farmer in VanBuren County, Iowa, and Harry C., a Justice of the Peace in Canton, Fulton County.

In politics the father of this family was an ardent supporter of the Republican party, to the success of which he devoted his utmost effort. The school system also found in him a steadfast champion. To his children he gave a thorough common school training, fitting them all for the practical duties of life. In the home circle he was a kind and indulgent parent, granting all proper privileges and imposing no arbitrary restraints. He made the home a spot around which their youthful affections closely clung. The children settled, as each married, near the scenes of their childhood.

In 1859 Mr. Moran erected a commodious and convenient ten-room stone residence, which his son, Richard L., now occupies. The property has been in the family name since 1836. In 1884 the venerable father left the old homestead and lived in retirement in Canton, Ill., until his death, June 17, 1903, at the age of eighty-eight years. He was a leading, influential and profoundly respected member of the community, which sorely missed his familiar presence when he was summoned to that "bourne whence no traveler returns." His worthy and estimable widow still survives, residing in Canton, at the age of seventy-eight years.

The subject of this sketch, born on the home farm, has never been absent from it for the length of one month during the forty-eight years of his life. In its vicinity he received his early mental training in the district schools and as he reached mature years applied himself to farming on his own account, remaining under the parental roof until his marriage. He first rented a part of the home farm and six years after the retirement of his father to Canton moved to the family residence, where he has made his home since 1900. The Moran farm consists of 247 1/2 acres of land, 200 acres of which have been cleared of the heavy timber and underbrush which originally covered it, and are now under a high state of cultivation. Mr. Moran keeps a good grade of all kinds of stock and is a careful, systematic, progressive and successful farmer. For seventy years the name of Moran has been identified with the best interests of Fulton County and the subject of this sketch has had his full share of experience in the pleasures and hardships of pioneer life.

On November 17, 1880, Mr. Moran was united in marriage with Phoebe E. Newton, who was born in Putman Township, Fulton County, November 17, 1859, a daughter of Isaac and Rebecca (Cluts) Newton, natives of Pennsylvania. Her father is deceased, while her mother is still a resident of Putman Township. Mr. and Mrs. Moran became the parents of four children, namely: Jesse D., born February 3, 1886; Dean Newton, born June 9, 1891; Roscoe Cummings, born January 29, 1898, and Neola May, who died in infancy. The surviving children are with their parents.

In politics Mr. Moran is a firm Republican and is now serving as School Trustee. He has also filled the offices of School Director and Road Commissioner to the satisfaction of his constituents and takes a lively interest in church and school work. Fraternally he is affiliated with Bryant (Ill.) Camp, No. 4436, M. W. A., with which Jesse D. is also identified. Mrs. Moran is a member of Lodge No. 689, Royal Neighbors, in which she officiates as Recorder.

MORAN, Richard Lyon, whose successful life as a farmer in Fulton County, Ill., has covered a period of more than three-score years, was born in Maryland, a son of Richard L. and Ann (Hayden) Moran, who were also natives of the State of Maryland. Richard L. Moran, the father, was a farmer by occupation and followed that pursuit in the East during his whole life. In boyhood Richard Lyon Moran attended the public school convenient to his home and assisted in his father's farming operations until he reached years of maturity. Shortly after attaining his majority he determined to try his fortune in a new field, and in the fall of 1844 came to Illinois, where he settled in Buckheart Township, Fulton County. The tract which he selected for his permanent home was situated in the dense forest, and no human habitations were so located as to favor him with near neighbors to relieve the solitude of his surroundings. Mr. Moran built a log cabin and a small barn and applied himself diligently to the task of clearing that portion of the land necessary for immediate use and breaking up the soil for cultivation. In the course of time, after getting a fair start in farming, he made other improvements and gradually brought the greater part of his original purchase into a productive condition. His farm now consists of 225 acres, on which he has long been engaged in general farming with profitable results.

In 1843 Mr. Moran was united in marriage at Cuba, Fulton County, with Sybil Cummings, a daughter of Israel W. and Susannah (Carr) Cummings, her father being a native of Dunstable, Mass., and her mother of Greenoch, Scotland. Nine children were the issue of this union, eight of whom are still living, as follows: Oliver C., born March 26, 1845; Edmund P., born December 5, 1847; Albert, born in 1850; Emily J., born July 14, 1853; Ann, born June 9, 1855; Richard L., born in 1864; Ella and Harry.

In politics Mr. Moran is a supporter of the Republican party. As a farmer he has had a long, industrious and successful career, and as a citizen he has always enjoyed the respect and esteem of all with whom he has been brought in contact.

MORAN, William H., a prominent and enterprising farmer in Section 20, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Lewistown, Ill., December 23, 1855, a son of William H. and Susan (Evans) Moran, of whom the former was a native of Baltimore, Md., and the latter of the State of New York. William H. Moran, Sr., accompanied his father, Richard Moran, to Fulton County in 1835. He was a blacksmith and after working some time at his trade, kept a general store until the fall of 1864. In that year he moved to Canton, Ill., where he continued in mercantile pursuits. Subsequently he applied himself again to his trade, which he again relinquished to engage in the auction business. In 1870 he moved to Bryant, Ill., and resumed blacksmithing. In 1873 he purchased a farm just north of Bryant, where he lived until 1877, when he bought the farm now occupied by his son, William H. He died in 1877, leaving the following named offspring: William H.; Marcus, a photographer of Canton, Ill., and Mary L., wife of Benjamin Wilson, of Canton. The first born of this family died in infancy. The mother of this family still survives at the age of seventy-five years, and makes her home with her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Wilson.

The subject of this sketch received his early mental training in the common schools and was reared to farm life. In 1875 Mr. Moran bought the farm of fifty-five acres which has since been his home. He has a good grade of Morgan roadsters and other superior stock, among which are the Durham and Shorthorn cattle, maintaining a high appreciation of the latter breed. He has been for years the local representative of the Phoenix Nursery, of Normal, Ill., and has sold more fruit and ornamental trees, shrubbery and all nursery products which tend to beautify the home than any other man in Fulton County. He handles also the Canton (Ohio) incandescent lamp, which has proved of great value, producing a light of 100-candle power.

On October 25, 1876, Mr. Moran was united in marriage with Rosetta Hufford, who was born near Canton, Ill., March 3, 1862. A sketch of the life of her father, Levi Hufford, appears on another page of this book. This union resulted in four children, namely: Susan B., who died at the age of five years; Levi G., born February 16, 1889; Hazel L., who died in infancy, and Ruby J., born March 4, 1899. In politics Mr. Moran was formerly a Greenbacker, and now advocates the principles of the People's party. He has filled the office of School Director and has been active in support of the schools of his township. He and his wife are devoted members of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Moran has always been identified with the best interests of Fulton County and is regarded as one of the most useful citizens of the community.

MORGAN, Peter W.—After a long life of industry and usefulness the worthy citizen of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., whose name constitutes the caption of this sketch, is now spending his declining years in comfortable and contented retirement. Mr. Morgan was born in Jefferson County, N. Y., on August 30, 1830, a son of William M. and Hannah (Wheeler) Morgan, who were also natives of the State of New York. His grandfather, William Morgan, who was of Welsh nativity, came to the United States near the close of the eighteenth century and settled in New York State, where he lived until his son, William M., moved to Illinois. The grandfather, together with his brother, General George Morgan, rendered faithful service in the War of 1812, making his home in Illinois after that contest was ended. The former lived with his son, William M., in Fulton County, just west of the town of Farmington, spending the remainder of his days on the farm which his son had there purchased.

The father of the subject of this sketch was a shipbuilder by occupation and worked at ship carpentering on Lake Ontario. His arrival in Fulton County occurred in the year 1836, when most of that region was forest and uncultivated prairie. He bought a tract of land in Vermont Township, which he cleared and improved, and upon which he lived, successfully engaged in the cultivation of the soil, until the end of his life, in 1871. He was a man of untiring industry and strict probity and a most zealous and energetic worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Peter W. Morgan obtained what mental training was possible in those early days and, under the circumstances in which his lot was cast, by attending the district schools at intervals of respite from his work of assisting his father on the farm. While still young he learned the trade of a carpenter, and continued to live in the vicinity of his father's place, engaged in carpentering and building. In 1866 he bought lot 2 in Section 2, Farmington Township, containing eight acres of land, on which he built a good-sized and substantial house of brick, constructed in accordance with his own designs. All the finishing work of the residence was done by himself. There he and his wife have made their home for forty years, with the exception of a short time spent in Nebraska, and there they expect to remain to the end of their lives, as it is a spot where they have enjoyed great comfort and contentment. Mr. Morgan was at one time engaged in the plow works in Farmington, being employed in the capacity of a grinder and polisher during the winter months. It is his opinion that some of the younger people now living in Farmington are unaware that such a shop was ever operated in the town.

On May 2, 1852, Mr. Morgan was united in marriage with Martha Crowell, who was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio, and in early youth received the customary mental instruction in the district schools of Illinois. Six children have been born of this union, namely: Olney K., Olive A., Orpha M., Florence, Carrie and Ernest, all of whom are married and living away from the parental home. Mrs. Morgan is a woman of much amiability and strength of character. She is a devoted Christian and is very energetic in the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she and her husband are long-time members. In politics Mr. Morgan is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party. In 1906 he served in the capacity of Tax Collector. He and his worthy wife are ranked among the most estimable and useful members of the community.

MORGAN, William O., whose experience in agricultural pursuits in Fulton County covers many years, was born in Putman Township, that county, March 7, 1839, a son of Jonas and Delilah (Berg) Morgan, of whom the former was a native of Virginia and the latter of Ohio. Jonas Morgan settled in Fulton County in 1835, locating in Putman Township, where he purchased eighty acres of land in Section 28, and there spent the remainder of his days engaged in farming. He was among those who took part in laying out Putman Township and rendered faithful public service in township offices at that early period. He departed this life January 15, 1893, and his wife passed away on April 8, 1895.

The subject of this sketch was reared on his father's farm and in boyhood attended the common schools of the neighborhood. His whole life has been spent in farming. In 1862 he bought eighty acres of land in Section 27, Putman Township, on which he made all the improvements, and has since devoted his attention there to farming and stock-raising. He is a careful and thorough farmer and his labors are rewarded by success.

On January 23, 1862, Mr. Morgan was united in marriage with Tabitha Warriner, a native of Cuba, Ill., and a daughter of Judge J. T. and Sarah (Hay) Warriner, natives of Virginia. Four children were the offspring of this union, namely: Harvey, Alfred, Noah and Grace. Politically Mr. Morgan ranges himself on the side of the Democratic party. He takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs and has performed creditable and faithful service in the offices of Road Commissioner and School Trustee several terms.

MORRIS, Jacob (deceased), formerly a worthy and highly esteemed citizen of Joshua Township, Fulton County, Ill., whose entire life was devoted to agricultural pursuits, was born in Fulton County, a son of A. C. and Mary (Pennington) Morris, natives of Pennsylvania. A. C. Morris was an early settler in Fulton County, locating in Joshua Township, where he followed his occupation of farming. The son, Jacob, who was one of a family of seven children, grew up on his father's farm and in early youth attended the district schools in the vicinity of his home. His mature life was wholly devoted to farming. In 1896 he purchased 160 acres of land, on which he pursued his customary vocation for about one year, passing to his final rest in 1897. He was a very industrious, careful and diligent farmer, an affectionate and devoted husband and a tender and considerate father.

The marriage of Mr. Morris occurred in 1889, when he wedded Phoebe A. Bowman, who was born in Fulton County, a daughter of John W. and Anna (Scott) Bowman, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Kentucky. They were the parents of three children. The father of Mrs. Morris, who was a blacksmith by trade, settled in Joshua Township in 1848. For a time he followed blacksmithing and afterwards carried on farming during the remainder of his life. Mr. and Mrs. Morris became the parents of two children: Maston J. and Frederick, both of whom are with their mother. Mrs. Morris now has 220 acres of land, which she has managed since her husband's death, assuming direction of all details of the farming operations. Her home is one of the most comfortable and attractive in that section of the county.

MORRISON, B. A., proprietor and operator of a bottling concern in Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Pontiac, Ill., in 1882, a son of John O. and Mary (McCashland) Morrison, who were natives of Illinois, and became the parents of three children. At Pontiac John O. Morrison followed the occupation of a mechanic.

In boyhood the subject of this sketch attended the public schools in the vicinity of his home and his first employment was with his uncle in the bottling works at Canton, Ill., where he continued three years. At the end of that period his uncle sold out to a Mr. Calkins, and Mr. Morrison remained in the employ of that gentleman for about three months. In February, 1904, he located in Farmington, Ill., starting a bottling plant there in partnership with his uncle, but of which he is now the sole proprietor. He manufactures and bottles all kinds of soda water and other soft drinks, including ginger ale, etc. His plant is equipped with machinery for making and putting up these goods, and its capacity is about 100 cases per day. Mr. Morrison conducts his business in a two-story building, eighteen by fifty feet, built by Mr. Short for this purpose. The concern supplies a trade extending all over that part of the country and ships to more distant points. Two wagons are required for this purpose during a portion of the year, and one is in use all of the time. The enterprise is a complete success and its projector is reaping the reward of energy, judgment and close attention to business.

In 1905 Mr. Morrison was united in marriage with Maude Johnson, who was born in Fulton County, and is an adopted daughter of Ezra Johnson, a well known resident of Canton, in that county. In fraternal circles Mr. Morrison is affiliated with the K. of P. and the Rathbone Sisters. He is favorably known wherever his products are in demand, and his friends are many.

MORRISON, James A.—Since its establishment in 1890 the music store of James A. Morrison has supplied a many-sided need in Ipava, this county, and has realized the reasonable expectations of its owner, whose family, with brief absences, has been identified with the community since 1853. Born December 25, 1844, Mr. Morrison is the older of the two sons of Samuel and Margaret (Ross) Morrison, natives also of Mifflin County, Pa., and by occupation farmers and merchants.

In Mifflin County Pa., Samuel Morrison conducted a general store, which he closed out in 1853, and for which he substituted farming in the vicinity of Ipava, Ill. Continued trouble with his eyes necessitating the abandonment of country life, he moved to Princeton, Bureau County, this State, where he taught music until 1857, in which year his eyes became so troublesome that he went to Philadelphia for treatment, leaving his family with relatives and friends in Mifflin County, their former home. Receiving practical benefits from his expenditure of time and money, he returned to Ipava in 1860 with improved eyesight, and thereafter lived on a farm in the vicinity of the town for several years. He then located in Ipava and started a music business, which he conducted uninterruptedly and successfully until his death in 1878. He was of a quiet, retiring nature, highly sensitive and artistic, and his influence was for the betterment of people and conditions. He was a Republican in politics and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His wife survived him until 1892 and the same year witnessed the untimely death of her younger son, John H. Morrison, a gifted lawyer of Kansas.

John H. Morrison was born in Mifflin County, Pa., in 1850 and was educated in the public schools of Ipava. Qualifying for the law, he removed to Oswego, Kans., where soon after he was elected State's Attorney and finally represented his district in the State Legislature. He was one of the most talented as well as most prominent young lawyers of Oswego, and his death caused profound sorrow in the community whose interests he so well sustained. He left a wife, formerly Louise Caruthers, and a son and daughter, Ralph and Maude.

The early inclination of James A. Morrison was toward the profession of agriculture, in the practice of which, as a farm hand, he earned his first money. He was thus employed when the seething discontent between the North and South culminated in the Civil War, and September 8, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, Eighty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, his regiment being composed of 960 men. Transported in stock cars to Louisville, Ky., the regiment at once started after General Bragg, on the way encountering a fight at Perryville, and thereafter continuing the long march from Louisville to Nashville, Tenn., which consumed the greater part of two months. Arriving at Nashville, Mr. Morrison fell ill with malarial fever caused by exposure, and was sent to Hospital No. 16, at Nashville, remaining there until March, 1863. After an examination of all inmates of the hospital it was ordered that all unable to serve within six months be sent to their respective States, and Mr. Morrison was sent to Chicago, where, after a few months, he was again examined and owing to continued disability, was transferred to the Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, from which he was discharged July 5, 1865, by general order No. 116.

After the war Mr. Morrison continued to farm in Fulton County until 1883, when he returned to Ipava and engaged as a clerk in a grocery store. He was connected with mercantile affairs until 1890, and then started the business with which he has since been identified. He carries a stock of pianos, organs, stringed instruments and music and in addition maintains a sewing machine, carpet and rug department. A liberal income is derived also from a repair department, special facilities having been provided for the repair of musical instruments and machines, and for the renovating and cleaning of carpets and rugs. The trade extends for several miles into the surrounding country and, through excellence of management and adaptiveness to various tastes, a considerable trade has been localized which else had drifted to larger cities of the State.

On March 28, 1873, Mr. Morrison was united in marriage to Sarah Musgrove, who died in 1882, leaving two children—J. C., a resident of Rock Island, Ill., and Mary, a stenographer in the office of the Occidental Insurance Company, at Springfield, this State. Two of the children died in infancy—Luella and Samuel. In 1893 Mr. Morrison married Mrs. Mary A. Kost, widow of William Kost. Of this union there were two children, of whom Marvin died in September, 1894, and Quinn was born in July, 1898. Politically Mr. Morrison is a Republican, and he has held many local offices, including that of Police Magistrate four years and Collector and Assessor several terms. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias, also the Grand Army of the Republic. Since early manhood he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for the past fifteen years has been choir master of the same. He is a high-minded and public-spirited gentleman, an excellent business man and a faithful friend. His various experiences have left him a wiser and more useful citizen, the possessor of treasured memories, of which the most inspiring was viewing the homely, exalted face of Abraham Lincoln, the Great Emancipator, as the victim of unfounded fury lay in his last sleep at Chicago.

MORSE, James E., for twenty years a prosperous farmer in Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Jerusalem, N. Y., on May 8, 1834, a son of John and Emeline (Briggs) Morse, both natives of New York State, where the former was born in 1807 and the latter in 1805. John Morse, also a farmer by occupation, settled in Illinois in 1852, locating in Fulton County, where he bought a farm consisting of 160 acres in Union Township, where he followed his customary vocation during the remainder of his life, dying April 28, 1877. To them were born four children, as follows: James, Mary, Martha and Leonard. The father of this family was a man of notable energy and thrifty habits, and his sterling traits of character were recognized by all. In political action he was a Democrat and in religious belief a Presbyterian.

The early education of James E. Morse was received in the schools of Goshen, Ind., which was the first home of his parents in the West, and he spent his youth in making himself useful on the paternal farm, and until well advanced in middle life he carried on farming in Illinois. In 1880 he moved to Kansas and after farming in that State two years changed his residence to Iowa, where he remained until 1886, when he settled down permanently in the locality where he still follows his lifelong pursuit. His farm is situated in Union Township and consists of 180 acres.

In Union Township, Fulton County, on October 25, 1857, Mr. Morse was joined in wedlock with Mary Kutchler, a daughter of John and Sophia (Vanati) Kutchler, who was born in Greenspond, N. J., on May 30, 1839. Mr. and Mrs. Morse became the parents of four children, namely: Emma, John, Edward and Jeanette. In politics Mr. Morse is a follower of the Democratic party and fraternally is identified with the A. F. and A. M. He is a careful, systematic and painstaking farmer and his labors have been attended with deserved success. As a man he enjoys the respect of all with whom his dealings bring him in contact, and as a citizen his record is that of a useful member of the community.

MOSHER, Joseph J., who was formerly engaged in farming in the vicinity of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., but now a prosperous real-estate dealer in the city of Cuba, was born there June 6, 1836, a son of Joseph and Catherine (Ackerson) Mosher, natives of Maine and Ohio, respectively. Joseph Mosher went from Maine to Ohio at an early period. There he married and in 1829 settled in Putman Township, Fulton County, where he entered a quarter section of land in Section 18 of that township, and where he lived and later carried on farming and stock-raising.

The subject of this sketch was reared on his father's farm, in boyhood receiving his training in the public schools of the vicinity. As he grew up he applied himself successfully to farming, continuing this occupation until a few years ago, when he abandoned it and devoted his attention to real estate, selling lots and lands. In 1877 he bought eighty acres of military bounty land within the city limits of Cuba, on which he made improvements. The property was first owned in 1818 by Daniel Morgan, but Mr. Mosher purchased it from the Harmison estate. He is also the owner of 150 acres in Section 6, Putman Township; sixty acres in Section 14; fifty acres in Section 22, and has 800 acres in South Dakota, making his real-estate holdings over 1,000 acres, besides considerable property in Cuba. He now rents all of his farming property and whatever business he does is in the line of home lots and western lands.

On January 28, 1857, Mr. Mosher was united in marriage with Harriet R. Hill, who was born in the State of New York. Six children resulted from this union, namely: Charles; Jerome, who died aged thirty-five years; Fred; Helen; Catherine (Mrs. S. C. Duffie), who with her family resides with her father, and Mary (Mrs. Leroy Millard), residing in Cuba.

Politically Mr. Mosher is an Independent, voting for the men and measures he thinks to be the best interest of all the people, and in his religious relations is a member of the Christian Church.

MOWERY, M. T., who as farmer and merchant has been favorably known to the people of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., for many years, was born in that town in 1855, a son of Jacob and Mary (Henderson) Mowery, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of Ohio. Jacob Mowery was among the pioneers of Fulton County, having located in the town of Cuba about the year 1830. At first he followed the occupation of a blacksmith and was afterwards engaged in farming. The subject of this sketch spent his boyhood on the parental farm and obtained his education in the district schools of the neighborhood. In early manhood he applied himself to individual farming and continued in that pursuit until 1897, when he purchased the Bolton grocery concern in Cuba, which he conducted for three years. He afterwards devoted his attention to farming for a like period, when he again left the farm and bought out the Mosher Brothers' Hardware Store in Cuba. This he conducted until 1905, when he disposed of the business to Putman Brothers. He owns a farm of 143 acres, which is partly situated within the town limits, and on which is a coal mine operated by Applegate & Lewis. He is also interested in farm property in Cass Township.

In 1885 Mr. Mowery was joined in wedlock with Emma Siever, who was born in Lewistown, Fulton County, and two children have been the offspring of their union, namely: Mabel (Mrs. Allbright) and Charles Jacob. Mr. Mowery has represented his ward in the Cuba City Council and fraternally is affiliated with the I. O. O. F.

MUMMERT, Andrew.—During 1905 the retired colony of Astoria was augmented by the arrival of Andrew Mummert, whose activities have been centered in Fulton County since the close of the Civil War, and whose career is expressive of the possibilities of country life when directed by a well-trained mind, an earnest purpose and a keen appreciation of its benefits and prerogatives. Mr. Mummert represents a widely known family in this part of the State, and one which, since an early period in American history, has been identified with York County, Pa., where he was born April 18, 1857. He is one of the thirteen children of Jonas and Elizabeth (Stremmel) Mummert, both natives of the county just mentioned and farmers by occupation.

Jonas Mummert passed the early years of his life on the farm in York County purchased by his father upon his arrival from Holland, and which still is owned by members of the family. He was born in 1818 and in 1839 married and settled on a farm of his own in the same county. Many-sided and ambitious, he eventually embarked also in the grist and lumber mill business, in time shipping a car of grain to Baltimore twice a week. Contracting the Western fever, he disposed of his farm and mills after the war and upon his arrival with his family in Woodland Township in 1865, purchased 300 acres of land, half of which was under heavy timber growth. Clearing the timber, he erected the substantial brick house which still indicates the enterprise and prosperity of the proprietor, and to which have been added modern barns, fences and other general improvements. To some extent he followed general farming, but he was specially interested in stock, and felt a commendable pride in his Clyde and other draft horses. He realized the best thus far known in agricultural surroundings and at the time of his death, in 1874, left an estate rich in association, fertility and possibility. John, his oldest son, lives in Astoria; George is a farmer in Woodland Township; Conrad is a resident of Iowa; Amanda died in York County at the age of five years; Cornelius lives on the home farm; Jonas lives in Iowa; Polly became the wife of Jesse Amick and lives in Missouri; Moses is a farmer in Iowa; Lizzie became the wife of Michael Lehman, of Astoria; Andrew lives in Astoria; Barbara is the wife of Rev. E. Eshelman, of Avon, Ill.; Lucy died in York County at the age of three years; Savilla is the wife of H. Duple, of Decatur, Ill., and an infant died unnamed. The death of little Lucy was particularly affecting, and the occasion one of the saddest in the family history. Lucy was a ray of human sunshine and was exceedingly bright and advanced for her age. The day before her death her mother was holding her in her arms, when she called out to her father, who was entering the house, and asked him to take her, remarking, "It may be the last time, as I am going to die tomorrow." No seriousness was attached to her remark until the morning of the following day at 11 o'clock, when the child life went out in reality, leaving those who loved her in almost uncontrollable grief.

Andrew Mummert was nine years old when he came to Fulton County and he remained with his parents until his seventeenth year, when he started out on his own responsibility as a farm hand. Three years later he felt sufficiently prosperous to embark in matrimony, and July 18, 1878, married Sarah Hann, who was born in Astoria Township, March 4, 1857, and who died March 20, 1901. There was one child of this union, Dolly, who is the wife of Guy Mooney, of Chicago. The second marriage of Mr. Mummert occurred February 12, 1902, to Laura McClelland, born in Astoria Township September 9, 1865. After his first marriage Mr. Mummert worked in the coal mines for three years, then invested in 100 acres of land in Astoria Township, formerly owned by Henry Schusler. Five years later he bought eighty acres, and after another five-year period another eighty acres, finally disposing of forty acres and purchasing an additional sixty acres. He now owns 260 acres in Sections 26 and 35, Astoria Township. Within the past few years he has not been actively engaged in farming, and at present has a man on his property.

A Democrat in politics, Mr. Mummert has rendered signal service to his township as a member of the Board of Highway Commissioners, and during his term of office the roads have been much improved and a number of bridges erected. He also served as Supervisor two years and in the spring of 1906 was elected a Justice of the Peace. Mr. Mummert represents the substantial and reliable element of the town and county, and his life affords an example of moderation, thrift and public-spiritedness.

MUMMERT, John.—Horticultural science, than which no broader or more fascinating pursuit is open to the student landsman, has an intelligent and resourceful exponent in John Mummert, whose activities long since have passed the experimental stage and developed into one of the most successful enterprises of the kind in Fulton County. Born in York County, Pa., March 18, 1848, Mr. Mummert is a son of Jonas and Elizabeth (Stremmel) Mummert, natives of the same State and county, and Fulton County pioneers of 1865.

Mr. Mummert remained under the paternal roof in Pennsylvania until his twenty-first year, when he was united in marriage to Rebecca Krout, a native also of York County, born July 15, 1843. He continued to farm in the Quaker State until 1869, when, hearing favorable reports from his family, which had preceded him in 1865, he came to Woodland Township, Fulton County, Ill., July 12, and for four years followed the bricklayer's and mason's trade. He then turned his attention to farming until 1877, and for the following two years worked on the railroad as a section hand. His next occupation was coal mining, in which he was engaged until 1882, when he sold his farm and bought ten acres of land in the outskirts of Astoria, upon which he since has engaged in fruit-raising on an extensive scale. He has made a practical study of his chosen occupation and has accomplished results which have gained him a reputation for originality, insight and resource. It is doubtful if any home in the county has more beautiful or artistic surroundings, as the owner has a keen eye for natural effects and thoroughly understands the scenic value of plants, shrubs, trees and vines. The sojourner within his gates is refreshed by the spirit of harmony in arrangement and coloring, the attention to minute details and the variety of useful and beautiful growths possible of encouragement in the Central West.

In political affiliation Mr. Mummert is true to the traditions of his family and votes the Democratic ticket. In addition to official honors tendered him in the past, he now is serving on the board of city fathers of Astoria. He has various gifts which do not find expression in his immediate environment, one of which is auctioneering, which he conducts with vigor, tact and great persuasiveness. One child has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mummert—Dora, wife of Lincoln Wilson, of Woodland Township.

MUMMEY, Charles W.—The impression seems well founded that among the sturdy upbuilders of the region west of the Alleghanies such accessories as ancestors or family traditions count for little as a community asset. There is something about the prairies that makes a man want to rely upon himself, to develop his latent forces and relegate to a respectful distance the deeds of his forefathers, which might overshadow or interfere with the workings of his own individual destiny. Nevertheless, no class of men are more appreciative of creditable forefathers, or more ready to do honor to the qualities which brought them to the front in the times in which they lived. An instance at hand is Charles W. Mumme, a man of wide experience and pronounced usefulness; an intelligent, wide-awake factor in the commercial life of Farmington, and one of the most successful hardware merchants in Fulton County.

The traits of four nationalities have filtered into the makeup of Mr. Mumme—English, Welsh, French and German—and he claims kinship with men prominent as civilians and warriors in early colonial times. His paternal great-grandfather, Christopher Mumme, a native of Maryland, served during the Revolutionary War under "Mad Anthony" Wayne, so named because the Indians could never find him sleeping. He rounded out eighty years of existence, as did also his son, John Mumme, the grandfather of Charles W. John Mumme moved at a very early day to Morgan County, Ohio, took up land, which he improved, and where he passed the rest of his life. Two of his brothers, Joshua and Samuel, served under General William Henry Harrison in the War of 1812. Mr. Mumme married a Miss Hammond, who was born in Virginia, and whose mother, Ursula (Barnett) Hammond, was of French nativity. Mr. Barnett, father of Ursula, came to America with the Marquis de Montcalm and fought with him against General Wolfe at the fall of Quebec. At her father's house Ursula met both the French Marquis de La Fayette and Gen. George Washington. The Hammonds were of English descent and remote bearers of the name lived in the shadow of the British throne.

David and Sarah W. (Smith) Mumme, parents of Charles W., were born in Virginia, the former in 1819 and the latter in 1824. David was a very early settler of Morgan County, Ohio, where he was a pioneer merchant. For years he did an extensive business in McConnellsville, handling large quantities of produce, which he shipped down the river in flatboats. He was prominent as a member of the Whig party and at one time was a candidate for the Legislature. Eventually he removed to Kansas, his death occurring in his home at Milton, Sumner County, that State, in 1887. His first wife died in 1847, leaving three sons, of whom Charles W. is the only survivor. Mr. Mummey married as his second wife Martha Strong, of Morgan County, Ohio, who died in Kansas in 1886. Of this union there were twelve children, five of whom are living. Mr. Mummey was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and fraternally was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

When old enough to make his labor of use Charles Mummey began to work in his father's store in Ohio, and in time was sent down the river with flatboats loaded with produce. For many years he followed the river, and in 1864 became a pilot on a boat engaged in carrying supplies of all kinds for the Government between Pittsburg and Cincinnati. He also transported mules and soldiers by the thousand to the Union armies in the South. Eventually he became captain of the steamboat Emma Graham, and upon resuming land occupations engaged in the manufacture of petroleum products, in which he subsequently failed. He then dealt in pork with fair success and finally entered the employ of a wholesale grocery concern, for which he traveled from coast to coast for thirty-three years. He also traveled for Bell, Conard & Company, of Chicago, for fourteen years, and for Charles J. Off, of Peoria, this State, for four years. About 1885 he settled in Farmington, where he since has been very successful in the hardware and agricultural business.

Mr. Mummey adheres to the principles of the Republican party, and besides holding other offices, has been Justice of the Peace for the past two years. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. January 18, 1862, he was united in marriage to Sarah A. Brown, who was born May 10, 1841, within a mile of McConnellsville, where Mr. Mummey himself was born, January 19, 1840. Mrs. Mummey was a daughter of Simkin H. Brown, a native of Harrison County, Ohio, and granddaughter of George Brown, who came from Ireland. Simkin Brown married Jane Graham, also of Harrison County. He was a prominent Democrat in Ohio and died in Morgan County in 1888, his wife surviving him for ten years. To Mr. and Mrs. Mummey have been born the following named children: Mary V., wife of Paul R. Murray, of New Philadelphia, Ohio; Anna, wife of James Robb, of Farmington; William H., a resident of Minonk, Ill.; Charles B., who died in September, 1904, at the age of thirty; Frank, who married Leona Allen, and lived in Southwest Virginia; Albert V., a resident of La Junta, Colo.; Alice L., a resident of Farmington, Ill.; Edith, who died at the age of eight years; Harry, a resident of Farmington, and two children, who died in infancy. Mr. Mummey is one of the substantial and well balanced men of the community, an earnest promoter of all that tends to the enlightenment and happiness of the community and a believer in the doctrines of fairness and integrity who never fails to follow his own teachings.

MUNGER, Edwin, favorably known as Manager of the Alexander Lumber Company, of Canton, Ill., was born in Albany, N. Y., August 11, 1849, a son of Henry F. and Agnes (McFarland) Munger, of whom the former was born in Columbia County, N. Y., and the latter in Scotland.

In youth the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the public schools of Detroit, Mich., and Cedar Rapids, Iowa. He started in the lumber business about the year 1872, with H. F. Getchel & Sons, of Des Moines, Iowa, with whom he remained seven years, being subsequently connected for a like period with the Clinton Lumber Company. His next ten years were spent with the S. K. Martin Lumber Company, of Chicago. This connection terminated in 1898, and since that period he has been associated with the Alexander Lumber Company at Chicago and other points. In February, 1902, he located as the representative of this company in Canton.

On July 5, 1871, Mr. Munger was united in marriage with Mary Murray, who was born in Fairfield, Iowa, and received her early education in Polk County, that State. The children resulting from this union who still survive are: Herman, Frederick, Clarence, Caswell, Bessy and Nellie.

In politics Mr. Munger is a supporter of the Republican party, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is identified with the A. F. & A. M., K. of P. and I. O. R. M. Mr. Munger has, during his comparatively brief residence in Canton, acquired an excellent reputation throughout the community as a capable and reliable business man, and a useful and worthy citizen.

MURPHY, Albert T., formerly a prominent and successful merchant of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., but now living in retirement in that town, was born in Lincoln County, Ohio, on July 13, 1838. He is a son of Solomon and Martha (McKilney) Murphy, natives of Ohio. The father settled in Fulton County in 1853, locating in Cass Township, where he successfully followed farming during the remainder of his life. He died in June, 1876, and his wife passed away in 1854.

Albert T. Murphy was reared on the farm and received his education in the common schools of Ohio. From early manhood until 1876 he was engaged in farming. In that year he abandoned farm work, moved to Cuba and entered into the grain and cattle business. In 1882 he engaged in the hardware trade, dealing in agricultural implements, vehicles, etc., but still continued for several years in the grain and cattle line. He disposed of the latter interest in 1890 and sold his hardware store in 1902. Since that period he has lived in retirement.

On January 26, 1861, Mr. Murphy was joined in wedlock with Hannah Baughfman, who was born in Fulton County and is a daughter of Henry and Maria (Baughfman) Baughfman, natives of Virginia. Seven children were the offspring of this union, as follows: Cora (Mrs. Herfert); Maggie (Mrs. Hill); Etta (Mrs. Smith); Anna (Mrs. Moss); Gertrude; Henry and Charles R.

In politics Mr. Murphy was a supporter of the Democratic party. He has served for two terms as Collector of Putman Township, Fulton County. Fraternally he is identified with the A. F. & A. M. He is a man of high character and has always lived an honorable life. All who enjoy his acquaintance recognize his worthy traits, and regard him with respect and esteem.

MURPHY, George, a well known and popular hotel-keeper of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Cuba, Ill., on October 20, 1865, and received his early mental training in the public schools of his native town. He is a son of Milton and Clementine (Murphy) Murphy, natives of Ohio. At the age of twenty-three years the subject of this sketch engaged in the manufacture of building brick in Cuba, Ill., and continued in this occupation for sixteen years. He then sold his plant and was engaged for three years in the ice business. At the end of this period, in February, 1905, he bought the hotel known for twenty-seven years as the "Cuba House," and which formerly belonged to his brother, "Si" Murphy. To this hotel, which is now called the "New Cuba House," Mr. Murphy has built an addition containing eight rooms upstairs, and underneath a barber shop, wash-room and a dining room, eighteen by sixty feet in extent.

On September 1, 1889, Mr. Murphy was united in marriage with Mary Serena Bishop, who was born in Putman Township, Fulton County. Three children—Ralph, Hazel and Oscar—resulted from this union. Fraternally Mr. Murphy is identified with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. He possesses, in a notable degree, the qualities so essential to a successful public host—keen judgment, affability, courtesy and geniality of temperament.

MURPHY, John P., one of the leading plumbers of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., is a native of Ireland, born in Queens County, July 25, 1866, the son of James M. and Kate (Phelan) Murphy. Mr. Murphy received a common school education in his native land, where he also thoroughly learned his trade, and in 1889 emigrated to the United States. He first settled in Quincy, Ill., where he attended the Gem City Business College, and thus prepared himself to become an independent member of any community in which he might settle. Several years afterward he located in Canton, forming a partnership in the plumbing business with J. B. Buckley, under the firm name of Buckley & Murphy. Since the severance of that connection he has conducted an independent business and his reliable work and courteous ways have developed it to goodly proportions.

On June 26, 1898, Mr. Murphy married Miss Minnie Webster, daughter of Chauncey Webster, a well known retired merchant of Canton. They have had two children—Lawrence W., seven years of age, and Robert E., now an infant of eight months. Mr. Murphy is independent in politics, but as a Catholic conforms to the religion of his forefathers. His wife is a Baptist. In his fraternal associations he is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. All in all, he is a shrewd, reliable, progressive and honorable man, a most creditable representative of the skilled workman and business man, and a striking example of the success of the Irish-American. His handsome and tastefully furnished residence on North First Avenue indicates a generous thoughtfulness for those dependent upon him, which is a typical trait of the best citizenship of his adopted country.

MURPHY, Joseph L. (deceased), former lawyer of Canton, Ill., and an extensive landowner, was born in Lycoming County, Pa., July 12, 1833, the son of Richard and Elizabeth (Fitzpatrick) Murphy, both natives of Queens County, Ireland. The father was a cousin of Sir Edward Fitzpatrick, and the family traced their ancestry to the "Black Knights." The grandparents were James and Bridget (Wheeler) Murphy, the former a large and powerful man physically and a business man of Queens County, Ireland, as well as a wealthy landowner.

The father of the subject of this sketch, who was a farmer, went to Belfast, in the north of Ireland, to marry the lady to whom he was engaged. Everything was ready for the wedding, but after he arrived his fiancée, who was the oldest of the family, refused to carry out the marriage contract because he was a farmer. A younger daughter then spoke up and said she would take her sister's place. The offer was promptly accepted, the marriage contract was signed, the wedding ceremony performed and the couple lived a happy life. The grandfather Fitzpatrick was an excise officer under the British government in the days of George III., and Mr. Murphy retains the parchment commission of his ancestor.

Richard and Elizabeth (Fitzpatrick) Murphy came to Illinois in 1839. At that time they were the parents of six children, of whom three sons were deceased, while three daughters—Mary, Ellen and Anna—accompanied their parents to their adopted country. Of these Ellen died in youth in Joshua Township; Mary died in Quincy, Ill., about fifteen years ago, having inherited a large fortune from an uncle, with whom she had lived, and leaving the same at her death to her brother and two sisters, and Anna E. became the wife of James Hopkins, now deceased, and is now living in Quincy. After arrival at St. Louis the family proceeded up the Illinois, landing at Copperas Creek, Fulton County. Here Mr. Murphy built a camp-fire and, leaving his family, walked in company with a Mr. Doolittle to Canton. Being favorably impressed by the town, he returned to Copperas Creek and brought his family to Canton, which became their home for a time. Later they removed to St. Augustine, near the northwest corner of the county, where Mr. Murphy was engaged in teaching school for a year, but returning in the fall of 1840, bought a farm seven miles northwest of Canton, to which he made additions until he became the owner of 205 acres, and there he died on Christmas Day, 1850, and was buried at St. Augustine. Mr. Murphy (the father) was a Latin and Greek scholar, a Catholic in religious belief and a Democrat in political affiliation. Two children were born to him and his wife after their arrival in the United States—Joseph L., the subject of this sketch, and Louisa, a daughter, who is still living in the city of Quincy. The mother died in 1870 at the home of the son, Joseph L.

In youth Joseph L. Murphy received his educational training in the district schools of Joshua Township, and under charge of his father and other teachers. Full of boyish energy, on one occasion he joined two of his schoolmates on Christmas Day in barring out a teacher who was not popular with his pupils and had refused to give them a Christmas holiday. He also attended the "Dayton School," in Quincy, where he had as fellow students the sons of ex-Governor John Wood, of that city. Later he spent some time at the Magee College, in Missouri, but on leaving school began the study of medicine with a Dr. Fitzgerald, who had been ordained a priest in Ireland, but having retired from the priesthood, had adopted the medical profession. Dr. Fitzgerald was a man of learning and a cultivated linguist, having command of eight languages. The practice of surgery not proving attractive to Mr. Murphy, he entered upon the study of law with Warren & Wheat, a prominent law firm of the city of Quincy. In the meantime he was offered a position by a wealthy aunt in the East, who desired his aid in looking after her business affairs, but after a trial of three months, not being pleased with his employment, returned to Illinois, resumed his studies and was admitted to the bar in 1863. In 1865 he began practice in the city of Canton, which he continued alone for twenty years, when he formed a partnership with Gilbert L. Miller, who had formerly studied in his office, and at the time was practicing in Springfield, Ill. After four years this connection was dissolved by Mr. Murphy's retirement from practice on account of ill health and because of the large private interests outside of his profession which demanded his attention. He then turned his attention seriously to real estate, his first investment in this line (years before) being a little brick house in Swan's Addition to the city of Canton. This was followed by the purchase of 1,600 acres of script lands in Iowa at eighty cents per acre, the titles being based on soldiers' warrants. At the time of his death he was still owner of 640 acres of these lands, which had appreciated in value until they were worth sixty dollars per acre, besides city property in Rock Rapids, Ia. He was also the owner of 1,450 acres in Minnesota, 250 acres in Fulton County, Ill., and considerable property in the cities of Canton and Quincy, Ill. One of his most profitable real-estate enterprises in Canton was what was known as J. L. Murphy's Addition to the city. During the later years of his life he disposed of a considerable part of his original real-estate holdings, both in farm lands and city property.

In politics Mr. Murphy was a leading Republican, and was honored with a seat in the National Convention which met at Baltimore in 1864 and nominated Abraham Lincoln for his second Presidential term. Locally he served as a Justice of the Peace for several terms in the late 'sixties, was Mayor of Canton in 1871-2, and was Alderman from the Fourth Ward in 1880. Reared as a Catholic, according to the faith of his parents, he was yet a liberal supporter of all Christian denominations. In 1880 Mr. Murphy was initiated as a member of the Masonic fraternity, becoming identified with Canton Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Chapter R. A. M., and Knights Templar Commandery. He was also a member of the I. O. O. F.

Mr. Murphy, who remained unmarried, traveled quite extensively in the later years of his life, and was brought in contact with many distinguished men. His death occurred at his home in Canton, Ill., on the 28th of January, 1907. Tall and fine-looking physically, the character of the deceased was in keeping with his outward appearance, so suggestive both of energy and balance; for he was a man of generous impulse and public spirit, deeply interested in the advancement of the community, and his activity in its best progress was always guided by sound sense and broad judgment.

MURPHY, J. W., a well known farmer in Section 24, Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township in 1857, a son of Abraham and Sarah (Henderson) Murphy, natives of Fulton County. The grandfather, William Murphy, was one of the early settlers of Fulton County and carried on farming in Cass Township, Section 24, until he died. In boyhood the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the district school in his neighborhood and in early manhood applied himself to farming and stock-raising, which he has since followed. In 1894 he purchased 215 acres of land in Section 24, Cass Township, and has built and remodeled until his residence premises present an attractive appearance.

In 1881 Mr. Murphy was united in marriage with Ann Deakin, who was born in Fulton County, and six children have resulted from this union, namely: L. E., C. D., Alta May, Ray, Marie and Ruth. Mr. Murphy has served the township as School Director and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M.

MURPHY, Milton, a retired farmer, whose life in Fulton County, Ill., covers a period of nearly three-score and ten years, and whose immediate ancestors were among the earliest of the pioneer settlers of that region, was born in Cass Township, Fulton County, January 13, 1838, a son of William and Margaret (Artman) Murphy, of whom the former was born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Kentucky. William Murphy, whose occupation was that of a farmer, came to Fulton County with his parents when quite young. The family remained a short time in the East and settled in Fulton County in 1831, the journey westward being made by wagon, together with other immigrants. The Murphy family settled on a tract of land in Section 13, Cass Township, a mile and a half from Cuba, Ill., their nearest neighbor being Abraham Baughman, a well known pioneer, whose home was four miles distant. There Mr. Murphy pre-empted eighty acres of land, going to the Government Land Office at Quincy, Ill., in order to secure the title. At a late period he acquired forty acres more by purchase. On the homestead claim William Murphy built a log cabin and lived in it until he was able to put up a more comfortable dwelling. All other necessary improvements were made by him, and here he carried on farming up to the time of his death. Shortly after settling there he was drafted to serve in the Black Hawk War. He and his wife were the parents of four sons and one daughter, of whom but one (the subject of this sketch) now survives.

In boyhood Milton Murphy attended school in a log house, without a brick, nail or window-sash in its construction, light being afforded by glass fixed in the crevice of a split log. He remained with his parents until he entered his twentieth year, and then rented a farm, which he cultivated for five years. At the end of that period he bought 120 acres in Section 11, Cass Township, on which he made most of the improvements, afterward purchasing forty acres more. There for fourteen years he carried on farming during the summer and dug coal in winter time. He and his wife were involved in the Chatsworth disaster. In 1892 he bought a lot in Cuba, Ill., on which he built a residence, which he has since occupied as his home.

The marriage of Mr. Murphy took place in Cass Township on March 19, 1857, to Clementine Murphy, who was born in Licking County, Ohio, a daughter of Solomon and Martha (McKinney) Murphy. Her parents moved from Ohio to Fulton County in 1853 and settled in Cass Township, where her father bought and operated a farm. Milton Murphy and his wife were blessed with nine children, eight of whom are living, namely: George B., of Cuba, Ill.; William S.; Eddie Ross, of Bushnell, Ill.; Albert E., of Cuba, Ill.; Cyrus A., who lives in Canton, Ill.; Phoebe A. (Mrs. Mosher); Martha M. (Mrs. Brown), of Cuba, Ill.; and Emma E. (Mrs. Deakin). In politics Mr. Murphy is a Democrat. For sixteen years he held the office of Justice of the Peace of Cass Township, and has served as a member of the Cuba Town Board. He is a man of high character and commands the respect and confidence of all classes.

MYERS, John Henry.—John Henry Myers and the farm upon which he lives in Union Township have developed together, and the evolving of the former from a crude, irresponsible lad into an intelligent and wide-awake exponent of twentieth century agriculture, is not more pronounced than is the transformation which has come over this landmark among farms in Fulton County. Mr. Myers was a small boy when he came with the other members of his family from Franklin County, Pa., where he was born February 26, 1845, and where also were born his parents, John F. and Mary (Miller) Myers, the former in 1798 and the latter in 1800. The elder Myers had the stamina and perseverance necessary for successful pioneering, and although not among the very early arrivals, he took up the burden of land cultivation under the unfavorable conditions of fully half a century ago, converting his opportunity into the splendid property now owned and operated by his son, John Henry.

To the original property of his sire John Henry Myers has added from time to time, and now owns 280 acres of fine, fertile land in Union Township. He has one of the best homes and most profitable farms in the county. Surrounding him are evidences of a refined and progressive mind, and an appreciation of those life accessories which, while equal to those to be found in the cities, are happily destitute of the accompaniments of feverish hurry and competition. Mr. Myers in youth had the advantages of the country schools, which training in later life has been augmented by constant reading of books and magazines. He is one of the well posted men of his neighborhood and has well defined views upon all subjects which engage the popular attention. Around him has gathered an interesting family of seven children: Mary S., Della E., Clay, Gertrude M., Frank P., Roy and Lena P. Before her marriage Mrs. Myers was Mary M. Schneider, and her birth occurred in Union County, Pa., July 19, 1848. The marriage ceremony was performed in Ellisville, Fulton County, February 14, 1867.

In political affiliation Mr. Myers is a Republican, and while ignoring most political opportunities, he has served several years as a member of the School Board. In religion he is identified with the German Baptist Church, with which his family has been connected for many years. He is one of the most successful and enterprising general farmers that his township has produced, and is held in high esteem by appreciators of material, moral and intellectual worth.

MYERS, William D., an enterprising and progressive citizen of Canton, Ill., who owns and operates a coal mine just west of St. David doing business under the name of the Buckheart Mine, was born in the city where he now lives, in 1871. He is a son of Johnson J. and Mary E. (Amsley) Myers, natives of Pennsylvania, the birthplace of both parents being Mercersburg. Johnson Myers came to Canton, Ill., at the close of the Civil War, in which he served as a private in the One Hundred and Tenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, throughout the conflict. By trade he was a tailor, and was engaged in that occupation in Canton until the time of his death in 1878. In early youth William D. Myers received his education in the Canton public schools, and his first work was with the Central Union Telephone Company of Canton, by which he was employed for six years. In 1902 he became superintendent of a coal mine near the city, acting in behalf of the Canton Coal Company, and in 1904 he bought this property, and operated the mine until abandoned in December, 1905. On November 16, 1906, he purchased from Whitebreast Fuel Company their mine, known as Mine D, located one mile west of St. David, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He employs from fifty to sixty men and mines about 200 tons of coal per day, work being done at present on vein No. 5, which has a thickness of four feet and eight inches.

Mr. Myers is a man of good business qualifications and diligent application to the details of his work. He is full of energy and perseverance, and his labors are attended by profitable results. He has many friends and is fraternally affiliated with the B. P. O. E., K. of P., M. W. A. and C. of H.

NAGEL, George (deceased).—Of those sons of Germany who contributed to the early upbuilding of Canton, and who eventually retired to watch from secluded homes the labors of those who succeeded them in the race, mention is due George Nagel, who, in 1859, established a grocery and bakery which he conducted for many years. Mr. Nagel, who died February 27, 1903, was born in Germany June 17, 1834, and came to America at the age of twenty. For a time he lived in the city of New York, later taking up his residence in St. Louis, and still later spending some time in both Springfield and Lincoln, Ill. In the latter town he married Mary A. Morrow, who died in 1864, leaving three children: George, living in Iowa; Charles, who is engaged in the hotel business at Oxnard, Cal.; and Mary, living in Los Angeles, Cal. At Brooklyn, N. Y., in January, 1865, Mr. Nagel married Kathrina Friedly, also a native of Germany. Mr. Nagel having gone to Germany for his bride, and of this union the following children survive: Christina; Mrs. Alexander Strong, and Mrs. Henry Hunter, of Canton; and Mrs. Louis Hohn, wife of a physician of Guthrie, Okla.

Thrice during his life did Mr. Nagel return to his native land, and while there renewed the friendships of his boyhood days, and came back with keener appreciation of the opportunities afforded him on this side of the water. He was an honest and fair-minded man, an excellent baker and obliging grocer, and in his immediate family was the recipient of a wealth of affection, sympathy and confidence. The deceased was a Republican, but never desired public office. He had been a Mason in his younger years, but for the last thirty years of his life had paid little attention to anything not pertaining to his family and business. He was a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is also a member.

NAPPIN, Ira.—A striking illustration of what perseverance, constancy, sobriety, industry and self-reliance will accomplish, when combined with a high sense of moral responsibility, is found in the career of the worthy citizen of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., whose name stands at the head of this sketch, and who has steadfastly adhered to his occupation of wagon-making in one place for more than thirty years. In this quality of constancy, fixedness of purpose, the undeviating pursuit of a plan of action, is contained the secret of success in multitudes of cases, and to this, in conjunction with the other sterling traits already mentioned, is attributable the creditable and successful career of Ira Nappin.

The subject of this sketch is a native of Canada, born in Sterling, Ontario, on December 22, 1838, the son of David and Cynthia (Guernsey) Nappin, his father having been born in Canada, and his mother in the State of Vermont. During the greater portion of his life David Nappin was engaged in agricultural pursuits, and in this occupation was remarkably successful. He was a man of notable energy, strong character and upright dealing. He died in 1841 on his farm, to which he had devoted many years of careful toil. His wife, formerly Cynthia Guernsey, was a member of one of the families which settled in Canada about the close of the Revolutionary War. She was a woman of superior qualities, a devoted and faithful helpmeet and a kind and considerate mother.

The early education of Ira Nappin was obtained in the district schools of Canada, and after his marriage he started a wagon-shop, which he conducted for a short time, when he sold out and was engaged in the grocery business for about two years. Then selling his grocery he engaged in business in the wagon-shop with which his brother David was connected, and in which he has continued for more than thirty years. It is located on Fort Street, one block west of Main Street, in Farmington, in a building originally erected for the manufacture of plows. Mr. Nappin has a very complete equipment, including all utensils requisite in a shop of this kind, and has enjoyed a profitable patronage from the beginning of his operations.

On September 27, 1866, Mr. Nappin was united in marriage with Emily Harris, who was born in Farmington, Ill., and there in girlhood received her mental training in the public schools. To Mr. and Mrs. Nappin have been born seven children: Catherine, Harry, Amelia, Willard, Edna, George and Adelaide. The mother of this family was born in the house now occupied by them, which was built by her father, John S. Harris, about the year 1850. It is a spacious and commodious residence of the old colonial type, which the builders aimed to imitate, and with some changes would be a very attractive and comfortable home. About the time of its erection Mr. Harris built five similar dwellings of which this is the largest, containing ten or twelve rooms. Mr. Harris and his wife, Prudence (Griffin) Harris, were married at Chestertown, Md., and, after living for a time in Montgomery County, Ohio, moved in a covered wagon to Farmington, Ill., in 1837. The former was a miller by trade, and on arriving at Farmington his first work was to build a flouring mill, which was long known as "the old mill". He was accounted a wealthy man for those days. His death occurred November 24, 1864. Nathaniel Harris, the grandfather of Prudence (Griffin) Harris (but who was no relation to John S. Harris), was born at Powhatan Court House, Va., August 26, 1759. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, fought in the battle of Guilford, N. C., and died at Versailles, Woodford County, Ky., August 12, 1849, at the age of eighty-nine years and seventeen days.

In politics, Mr. Nappin, although at present not actively interested, is a supporter of the policies of the Democratic party, and keeps himself well informed concerning public affairs. He was a member of the Town Board when the Farmington Water-works were built. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is regarded as one of the most substantial, reliable and useful citizens of Farmington.

NEBERGALL, J. H., who is successfully engaged in farming one mile north of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that vicinity in 1851, a son of Philip and Elizabeth (Hess) Nebergall, the former a native of Ohio, and the latter of Pennsylvania. Philip Nebergall settled in Fulton County in 1844, locating in Cass Township, where he bought 120 acres of land of John Orwig, on which he successfully carried on farming, working also at his trade of cooper.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the home farm and has always been engaged in farming. About 1893 he purchased of John A. Gray 114 acres of land a mile north of Cuba, Fulton County, where he has since followed general farming, devoting considerable attention, also, to stock-raising. Under a portion of his farm there runs a thick vein of valuable coal. His sons are engaged in the butchering business in Decatur, Ill., where they have conducted two markets since 1900.

In 1873 Mr. Nebergall was united in marriage with Miss Kirby, who was born in the State of Ohio, and of this union have been born three children, namely: Don E., Minnie M. and Harry L. Mr. Nebergall is a painstaking and thorough-going farmer, and his labors are attended by deserved success.

NEGLY, J. H.—The establishers of the Negly family in America and their immediate successors were intimately connected with the early history of Pennsylvania, contributing to its commercial growth as agriculturists, millers and merchants and to its religious development as clergymen and reformers. From peaceful households some went forth as soldiers of the Revolution, stacking their muskets upon many a battlefield, and returning after weary years to find their homes devastated and their loved ones scattered. The progenitors of J. H. Negly, a farmer of Fairview Township, were his parents, Jacob and Mary (Bowermaster) Negly, both of German descent, and the former a blacksmith as well as farmer. This couple had the following children: John, Mary, Jacob, Elizabeth, Elijah, Daniel, Barbara B. and Joseph B. Of these Jacob, the father of J. H. Negly, married Rose Angle, also of German descent, and during his active life was a farmer and preacher in the German Baptist Church. Jacob Negly came to Illinois in 1844 and bought 160 acres of land in Fairview Township, thereafter tilling the same and preaching in the township for several years. He lived to an advanced age and was one of the most highly honored of the community's early preachers and agriculturists. He lived in Kansas from 1869 until 1875.

J. H. Negly was born on his father's farm in Fairview Township, in May, 1862, and was educated in the schools of his neighborhood. Reared to farming he remained on the paternal property until his marriage in 1887 to May Lattimer, a native of Kansas, and in 1896 went to Iowa, where he remained and farmed for two years. Returning to Fairview Township he bought 160 acres of land formerly belonging to his brother and cousin, in Section 8, and this remains his home at the present time, and the scene of his practical and most successful efforts. Mr. Negly is a public-spirited and enterprising townsman, the recipient of the good will and esteem of a community in which practically his entire life has been spent.

NEVILLE, James W., whose record as a farmer and citizen in Joshua Township, Fulton County, Ill., is of the highest order, and who is a member of one of the pioneer families in that region, was born in Joshua Township, on September 4, 1856. He is a son of Michael and Mary (Emory) Neville, his father having been a native of County Limerick, Ireland, and his mother of the State of Ohio. Michael Neville came to the United States in 1833, locating near Baltimore, Md., and two years later he settled in Joshua Township, this county. About the year 1845, he bought 160 acres of land in Section 22 of that township. This he improved, and in 1858 purchased of Henry Emory 103 acres, on which his son, James W., now makes his home. On the later tract the father was engaged in farming until the time of his death, which occurred on May 31, 1890. To him and his faithful spouse were born eight children, five of whom are still living: Sarah, wife of P. H. Barry, who resides in Joliet, Ill.; Rosella, wife of A. Rehner, of Canton, Ill.; Ella (single), who lives in Canton, this county; James W.; and Albert J., who married Mary Randolph and also resides in Canton. The mother is now living in Canton. Michael Neville was of intense energy and strict probity. In politics, he was a Democrat and in religion, a Catholic.

James W. Neville received his education in the public schools of Joshua Township, and at the age of twenty-three years began farming on the home place. In 1904 he acquired title to the property from the other heirs of his father's estate, and is also the owner of 160 acres in Section 22, and 108 acres in Section 15, the same township, which formerly belonged to the Abbott estate. All of these farms are under his own management. About the year 1882 he commenced raising Shorthorn registered cattle, of which he had fifty or more head in 1904, and during that year disposed of most of them in a sale which was the largest ever held in the county. Mr. Neville has built barns, and made some other improvements on his property, and has added to his herd of Scotch cattle from the best breeds of Europe and America, expecting to supply the very best of registered stock.

On Thanksgiving, 1901, James W. Neville was united in marriage with Ella Baughman, who was born in Fulton County, and is a daughter of Henry and Matilda (Cameron) Baughman.

On political issues, Mr. Neville, votes for the men and measures he thinks most conducive to the best interests of the public at large. In 1884 he was elected Supervisor of Joshua Township, and again held this office at a later period. He was a member of the Board of Supervisors at the time of the erection of the present court house in Lewistown. Religiously he is an adherent of the Catholic faith. All the undertakings of Mr. Neville have been attended by success, and in material acquisitions, force of character and civic usefulness, he ranks as one of the most prominent among the substantial and influential factors in the activities of Fulton County.

NEVILLE, John W.—Of the men who have lent dignity of character, excellence of labor and largeness of general co-operation to affairs in Fulton County for a considerable period, few are more widely known or generally respected in their neighborhood than John W. Neville, owner of eighty acres of land in Joshua Township. It has been the privilege of this still active farmer to live close to the heart of nature, to partake generously of her rewards and to respond with enthusiasm and clear judgment to her opportunities for advancement. He comes of sturdy and honorable lineage and one which has furthered the universal gospel of industry.

Born in Baltimore County, Md., May 8, 1830, Mr. Neville is a son of Patrick and Johanna (McMahan) Neville, both of whom were born in County Limerick, Ireland. Patrick Neville emigrated from his tax-ridden country to Canada during the early 'thirties and a year later removed south to Baltimore County, Md., where he rented a plantation, with negroes, and conducted a dairying enterprise until 1835. Not realizing his expectations, and imbibing the spirit of the West, he embarked in a prairie schooner overland to Fulton County, Ill., where he purchased a half section of land in Joshua Township, upon which he made his home and prospered until his death, November 29, 1844. His wife survived him ten years. He was a Democrat in politics and a member of the Catholic Church. There were six sons and four daughters in the family, only two of whom survive—John W. and Dennis.

The first school attended by John W. Neville was known as the Moore's Chapel School, in the timber, and he next went to the Randolph School, leaving the latter at the age of sixteen to devote his time exclusively to work on his father's farm. Five years later he turned his attention to engineering and the distilling business, eventually purchasing 180 acres of land in Joshua Township, now owned by S. W. Ash. During the last year of the Civil War he sold this farm and bought the 110 acres which remained his home until 1878, in that year buying his present farm of eighty acres. All of his farms have profited by his wise application and untiring industry, and his present home reflects the qualities which have brought him success and standing among his fellow men. His home has ever been a happy and hospitable one, and even the unknown wayfarer finds a welcome and refreshment beneath his roof. His improvements cover a wide range of years and are of a thoroughly practical and dependable nature.

J. C. Robinson

Since casting his first vote Mr. Neville has stanchly supported the Democratic party, and has held practically all the local offices, including those of School Director and Road Commissioner. His service invariably has given satisfaction, and has added to the confidence and esteem in which he is held. April 17, 1852, Mr. Neville was united in marriage to Catherine McMahan, a native of Georgetown, D. C., and a daughter of Thomas and Mary (O'Herrin) McMahan, who were born in County Limerick, Ireland. The McMahan family came from Ireland in the early 'thirties, settling in Maryland and eventually coming west to Fulton County, Ill., with the Neville family. They purchased land in Joshua Township, engaged in general farming for a few years, then for a time lived in the city of Canton, finally making their home with Mr. Neville, where the mother died in 1868, and the father in 1876. Mr. McMahan was a Democrat in politics, and a member of the Catholic Church. To Mr. and Mrs. Neville have been born ten children, of whom Charles T. married Theresa Mahar for his first wife and Grace Shroder for his second wife; Mary J. and Elizabeth are both single and live with their father; Dr. Dennis Neville married Elizabeth Metcalf and lives at Upland, Neb.; John W. married Elizabeth Swan and lives in South Dakota; James H. lives in Spokane, Wash.; Dr. Frank M. is a resident of Nebraska City, Neb.; Joseph lives in Lincoln, Neb.; Sylvester W. married Viola Klutz and lives in El Paso, Ill., and George F. makes his home with his father.

NEWSAM, Thomas.—The mining of bituminous coal is one of the most important industries in the State of Illinois. It is not only a source of great wealth, but at the same time serves as a medium of employment for many thousands of men and a means of livelihood for multitudes of dependent families. In this respect Fulton County is one of the busiest and most productive portions of the State. The cultivation of its fertile farms and the operation of its almost exhaustless mines go hand in hand to make it one of the prime contributors to the bountiful prosperity of a great region. To supervise all the details of the working of one of the mines for which Fulton County is noted requires a man of notable energy, sound judgment and tactful discretion, and such a man is the subject of this sketch, Thomas Newsam, who has the management of a well known mine in the vicinity of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., in which capacity he has acted since 1893.

Mr. Newsam is a native of Illinois, having been born at Orchard Mines, Peoria County, December 20, 1874. His father, Richard Newsam, and his mother, Frances (Nelson) Newsam, are of English nativity. On coming to the United States Richard Newsam proceeded directly to Illinois, where he engaged in coal mining in Peoria County. This occupation he has pursued successfully for many years. He is a keen-minded and energetic man, thoroughly competent in his line of business. His son, Thomas, received his early mental training in the public schools of Peoria County, and in his youth gained considerable experience in connection with mining matters, which has proved of great value to him in later years. In 1903 his father and elder brother purchased coal-mining property near Farmington, which they have since operated, the subject of this sketch serving as superintendent of the work.

The mine under Mr. Newsam's supervision is thoroughly equipped with steam hoisting machinery for getting out the coal, and underground, mules and electricity are in use. The Messrs. Newsam built or rebuilt all the buildings connected with the plant. The mine has a hoisting capacity of 500 tons per day, which is its average output, and furnishes employment to about 100 men. Vein No. 5, which is being worked at present, has a thickness of four feet, and the coal is hoisted from a depth of 112 feet. The Messrs. Newsam are the owners of the coal rights. Thomas Newsam has followed the occupation of coal mining from early youth, and before taking his present position served as manager of the "Star Mine" for three years.

In 1896 Mr. Newsam was united in marriage with Adaline Robinson and they have become the parents of three children, namely: Edith, Earl and Grace. Fraternally Mr. Newsam is identified with the I. O. O. F., K. of P. and the A. F. & A. M., in the latter order being a member of the Blue Lodge. He is regarded as one of the most competent and promising young men in the community in which he lives.

NICHOLS, Fred R.—An integral part of the human force which keeps in operation the plant of the Parlin & Orendorff Plow Company of Canton is Fred R. Nichols, who served as millwright from the spring of 1901 to the spring of 1905. He is at the present time in the contract-business—and is now putting up a four-story brick office building and a two compartment flat building besides smaller jobs. Mr. Nichols is a natural mechanic, and since early youth has been absorbed and fascinated by the intricacies of machinery. He comes honestly by his inclination, as his father, George W. Nichols, was also a millwright, and followed that occupation for the greater part of his active life. George W. Nichols, of whom a more extended mention may be found elsewhere in this work, was born in Pompey, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1822, and died in June, 1904. He married Hannah Coleman, born in Pompey, and with her removed to the wilds of Iowa, changing his place of residence to Canton, Ill., in the summer of 1896. Mrs. Nichols died in 1894. Mr. Nichols has to his credit the planning and construction of the largest saw-mill in the world—that of W.

J. Young, at Clonton, Iowa—also built mills on Georgian Bay, Canada, several in Michigan and all up and down the Mississippi River.

Fred D. Nichols was born in Clinton, Iowa, in 1863, and was educated in the public schools of his native city. In Clinton, September 23, 1885, he married Mary H., daughter of Isaac Newton Manville, of Clinton, Iowa, and of the union there have been born five children, one of whom died in infancy. Those living are Eva M., Harry M., Helen J., and Mary Elizabeth. Mr. Nichols is a staunch Republican, and in 1904 was elected Alderman of the First Ward, and is now serving his second term. While a resident of Iowa he was for five years a member of the National Guard (State Militia), and received therefrom his honorable discharge. Fraternally he is a member of the Court of Honor and the Knights and Ladies of Honor. He has led a quiet and uneventful life, and has devoted himself to his calling with a singleness of purpose and conscientious regard for the best interests of his employers that could not fail to bring him success. He is popular with his fellow employes at the works, has the gift of making the best of things, and of seeing enough of good and interest in his friends and surroundings to make life broad and worth while.

NIELSEN, John P., who is successfully practicing his profession of dentistry in Vermont, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Denmark, March 28, 1870, the son of Niels and Carrie (Petersen) Jensen, also natives of Denmark. In 1884 the family emigrated to the United States, and settled in McLeod County, Minn., where they still reside, engaged in farming on 160 acres of land.

In early youth the subject of this sketch attended the public school in his native country for eight years, the law requiring every child, from the age of six years to that of fourteen, to go to school all the year, there being no summer vacation.

After coming to this country, Mr. Nielsen continued his quest after knowledge, and devoted much time to the acquiring of the English language, in order to fit himself for whatever position he might be called upon to fill. He went to work, and utilized his nights in study, applying himself assiduously to his books. In the meantime he traveled considerably through the Western and Middle States. In 1898, he entered the dental department of the Northwestern University at Chicago, and for three years studied and operated in that institution. He graduated with the class of 1901, receiving the highest honors, and never having failed in an examination. For nearly two years after his graduation he practiced his profession in Chicago. In 1902, he established himself in practice in Vermont, Ill., with all new apparatus required for modern dental operations. By diligent attention to his work, Dr. Nielsen has acquired a profitable patronage, and by keeping himself fully abreast of all current developments and improved methods in his art, has maintained an excellent professional standing, and inspired confidence in his skill throughout the community. Meanwhile his amiable disposition and genial deportment have attracted to him many staunch friends.

On September 26, 1898, Dr. Nielsen was united in marriage with Martha Christiansen, a native of Germany. Two children have been born of this union, namely: Ernee, born November 3, 1899, and Alice, born November 5, 1901.

In politics, Dr. Nielsen is a supporter of the best man in his judgment for office and no party man. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. Religiously he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church. He is professionally connected with the Illinois State Dental Society, the McDonough and Fulton County Dental Societies, and the First District Dental Society.

NORTON, William.—In William Norton, Fulton County has an able conservator of her agricultural interests, as well as faithful promoter of those important adjuncts to community life, good schools and good roads. Mr. Norton was born in South Bend, Ind., August 24, 1844, and came to Illinois in 1864, spending the first ten years in the city of Canton. He then moved to his present farm in Farmington Township, where he owns 257 acres of land in Section 17. This property he purchased in 1877, and since has been one of the most successful and extensive breeders of Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs in the township. He has built and rebuilt, fenced, ditched, and improved generally, and has a delightful home and profitable property.

January 16, 1873, Mr. Norton married Miss Adelaide Myers, who was born in Farmington Township, June 12, 1850, and of their union there are seven children: Archibald C., George H., Ralph W., Roy C., William P. (deceased), Joseph C., and May T. Ever since arriving at the responsible age Mr. Norton has been an apostle of industry, and has practiced economy, temperance and thrift. He is well posted on current events, and one of the public-spirited, far-seeing and dependable men of the community.

O'BRIEN H. E.—Although a resident of Canton only since March 1, 1905, H. E. O'Brien has demonstrated within the year that he is a young man of force and ability, and promising acquisition to the business life of the town. As a member of the firm controlling the Canton Monumental Works, his ambition has a worthy incentive, as the works must necessarily increase with the growth of the town, providing the present high standard of workmanship is maintained.

Mr. O'Brien is a product of the country life of Fulton County, his youth having been spent on a farm in Liverpool Township, where he was born August 15, 1868. He is of Irish-German descent, his parents, James and Caroline (Snyder) O'Brien, having been born in the State of New York and Tennessee, respectively. Mr. O'Brien was educated primarily in the public schools of Bryant and Lewistown, Fulton County. He married Ella F. Wason, daughter of a pioneer of Buckheart Township, Fulton County, who was educated in the public schools of Cuba. Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien are the parents of two children: Lela R. and Opal G. Mr. O'Brien is a Republican in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a young man of pleasing personality, and at once impresses one with his earnestness and sincerity.

O'DONNELL, Dennis, who has been a resident of Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., since 1857, and since reaching years of maturity has carried on farming in that township with uniform success, was born in Peoria County, Ill., on December 24, 1854, a son of Patrick and Bridget (Kanaley) O'Donnell, both of whom were born in County Kerry, Ireland, the former in 1818 and the latter in 1820. The occupation of Patrick O'Donnell was that of a farmer. He came to the United States in 1850, landing in New York City, and thence proceeded to Illinois, where he settled in Peoria County. Leaving there in 1857 he purchased a farm in Union Township, Fulton County, and remained there until his death, which occurred on January 20, 1893. He was a Democrat in politics, and in religious faith a Catholic. He and his wife were the parents of six children—five boys and one girl—all of whom are still living.

Dennis O'Donnell attended the district schools of Fulton County in boyhood and staid with his parents until their age rendered them incapable of conducting the farm, when the property was divided, Dennis receiving the home place on which he has since resided. His farm is situated in Section 8, and consists of 190 acres.

On February 9, 1893, Mr. O'Donnell was united in marriage, at Avon, Ill., with Mary Ellen Kearney, who was born in Tazewell County, Ill., April 2, 1854, a daughter of Edward and Catherine (Morris) Kearney, natives of Ireland. One child has resulted from this union, namely: Garnet Catherine. Mr. O'Donnell and his family are devout members of the Catholic Church, and politically Mr. O'Donnell is a Democrat. He is a careful, industrious and systematic farmer, and an honorable, straightforward man, who faithfully discharges his duties as a citizen.

O'DONNELL, M. J.—As a follower of the oldest occupation known to the human race, M. J. O'Donnell has achieved that success which comes to a man who finds his work congenial, and who invests it with determination, enthusiasm and natural ability. The builder has ever before him the chance of making himself an enormously useful factor in a community, and a realization of this possibility has come to Mr. O'Donnell in Avon, of which he has been a resident for about fourteen years.

The setting of the youth of Mr. O'Donnell was a farm near St. Augustine Ill., where he was born April 3, 1860. The resource of the Irishman descended to him through his father, Patrick O'Donnell, who was born in Erin, as was also the mother of the subject of this sketch, Bridget (Kanaley) O'Donnell. In his native land the elder O'Donnell had little to stimulate his ambition, but he arose to his opportunities on this side of the water, to which he migrated in 1851, settling in Union Township, Fulton County, in 1855. Purchasing an eighty-acre farm near St. Augustine, he so wisely managed his affairs that, in time, he owned about 400 acres of fertile, valuable land, all under cultivation, and equipped with good buildings and general improvements. His death occurred during the early 'nineties and that of his wife in January, 1906.

After completing his education in the public schools of Union Township, M. J. O'Donnell learned the carpenter's trade of James Bramble, of Peoria, and thus launched among the necessary people of the world. He took the advice of Horace Greeley and tried his fortunes in the State of California. After five years of trade experience on the western coast, he located in Avon, and since has been engaged in a general building and contracting business, besides building, improving and selling several places within the town limits. He has built himself a shop, where he works when not superintending construction work, and taken all in all, he is one of the busiest and most enterprising captains of industry within the borders of the town. In Galesburg, Ill., in 1899, he was united in marriage to Carrie (Schneider) Rawalt, a native of Illinois. Mr. O'Donnell is a member of the Roman Catholic Church, is popular and highly esteemed, and one of the largest employers of labor among the builders of the community.

O'DONNELL, Robert.—The gentleman named above is a leading stock-raiser and dealer of Union Township, where he was born on Christmas Day of 1859. He was raised on the home farm, his father being one of the pioneers of the county. Robert O'Donnell was educated in the district schools and St. Augustine High School and developed into an intelligent, reliable and practically successful young man. He continued to reside in Union Township and has gradually centered all his attention upon the breeding of Poland-China hogs, in which specialty there is no more pronounced expert in the county than Mr. O'Donnell.

On the 27th of December, 1887, Mr. O'Donnell was united in marriage to Margaret Fogarty, of Knox County, Ill., who was born May 8, 1860, and they have had three children: Francis P., James P. and Robert. In his religious faith Mr. O'Donnell is a staunch Catholic, and never fails to vote the Democratic ticket, although he has never entered politics to any great extent. His term as a public official rests to date, with his commendable service of three years as School Director.

OLDS, John N.—Both in private life and in public affairs John N. Olds proved himself eminently capable, energetic and trustworthy, and during the long period of his association with Fulton County, won a permanent place as a practical and determined promoter of the best business interests of the city of Canton. Mr. Olds is of Scotch-English extraction, and was born on a farm in Saratoga County, N. Y., March 8, 1835. His father, Otis Olds, was of the New England type, and spent the first years of his life in Connecticut. His mother was his father's second wife, and her name was Lucinda, daughter of John Smith. Otis Olds and his wife both died in the State of New York, leaving four children, three of them younger than John N.

After completing his education in the public schools of New York John N. Olds came to Canton, Ill., and became a clerk in the general store of his uncle, Amos Smith. At the expiration of eight years he had so thoroughly mastered the business and made himself so necessary to its advancement that he was taken in as a partner, the firm name being changed to Smith & Olds. The stock in this store was chiefly hardware, and at the end of six years Mr. Olds sold his interest to his partner, thereafter engaging in the grocery business until the destruction of his store by fire in 1868. Nothing daunted, he rebuilt upon the site of his former business a two-story brick structure, and from that date until his death conducted an increasing and remunerative trade with the town and surrounding country.

The marriage of Mr. Olds and Emma L. Birch occurred in 1866, Mrs. Olds being a native of Ohio, where the earlier years of her life were spent. She became the mother of one son, Frank Birch Olds, who now is deceased. Mr. Olds was identified with the Olive Branch Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He was a progressive and well informed business man and won the respect and good will of a large circle of friends and patrons.

ONION (Hon.) Jasper N.—In his varied capacities as agriculturist, educator, Justice of the Peace and legislator, Hon. Jasper N. Onion has won a permanent place among developing agencies of Fulton County. The family name is one of the oldest in this part of the State, and since its establishment here in 1835, has established a reputation for industry, perseverance and enterprise. Joel Onion, father of Jasper N., was born in Kentucky, April 22, 1804, and as a boy moved with his parents to Indiana, where he married Elinore Shields. The latter was born in 1808 and with her parents shared the early hardships of the Hoosier State. She was of English ancestry and her immigrating ancestor on the paternal side settled on a farm in the vicinity of Louisville, Ky. Something of the iron and sturdy persistence of her forefathers was shared by this courageous pioneer woman, for to her far-sightedness and economy her husband owed much of his success. They came by boat to Fulton County during the summer of 1835, passing the first cruel winter in Woodland Township, and in the following spring removing to Kerton Township, where Mr. Onion succeeded to the distinction of civic father of Westpoint, which he laid out and the municipal fortunes of which he vigorously promoted. Although Westpoint is no longer recognized on the map, at one time was quite a center of activity, answering the description of a trading post and meeting place for the settlers. The chills and fever finally shook loose the Onion family and in the emergency they moved in 1838 to Section 9, Woodland Township, where they remained forty-four years, or until 1882, then locating in Sumnum. Mr. Onion there built himself a home, where his wife died in 1885, and where his own death occurred nine years later in 1894. He was the parent of ten children: William, who died in infancy; Elizabeth J., deceased in 1901, the wife of John M. Fike, a soldier from 1861 until 1863 in Company H, Third Illinois Cavalry, and who died soon after his return from the field; James M., a resident of Astoria, and soldier during the Civil War in Company B, One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois Infantry; Preston, deceased; Martha and Ellen, deceased in infancy; Cordelia, a resident of Sumnum; Jasper N.; John J., also living in Sumnum; and Taylor, on the home farm. Mr. Onion was one of the most intelligent and well educated of the early settlers in Fulton County, and the settlers used to depend upon him to make out their legal papers and attend to affairs requiring special general knowledge. Although a staunch Republican he was elected to the Board of Supervisors in a Democratic stronghold, and was one of the first Collectors in Woodland Township, taxes at that time being required to be paid in gold. He also acted for years as a pension agent after the war, and in that capacity secured pensions for many disabled soldiers of the county. Force of character and a large fund of common sense made him a leader in local affairs, and his name is written large upon the annals of the community which he both promoted and adorned.

Hon. Jasper N. Onion was born on his father's farm in Woodland Township, June 4, 1846, and in early life gave evidence of that sincere desire for knowledge which since has characterized his life. As the tasks of the daytime permitted little leisure in which to attend school, he studied diligently by night, even though physically exhausted, and prized a book which opened vistas of information as he would a dear and valued friend. The first years of the Civil War found him an earnest supporter of the Union cause and, in April, 1864, he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry for 100 days' service. At the expiration of this term he veteranized in Company K, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry for one year, and was discharged from service at Springfield, Ill., September 18, 1865. Returning to Woodland Township he combined farming and attending school, and when qualified engaged in educational work in the winter time, working on the farm in the summer. For seventeen terms he was an increasingly successful instructor, and was popular in Woodland, Kerton and Pleasant Townships, where he boarded around among the families of his pupils, and established many friendships which have stood the test of subsequent years.

September 27, 1870, Mr. Onion married Eliza J. Shelly, a native of Virginia, and daughter of Daniel and Catherine (Heffner) Shelley, who came to Fulton County in the fall of 1857. Soon after their marriage the young people started housekeeping on land north of Summum, where their three children were born and reared, and where the mother died June 15, 1899. Of the children Edna O. and Elmer were twins. The former, now deceased, was the wife of Charles Scrogum, and the mother of Nellie, Hobart and Susan Scrogum, and the latter, a farmer of Pleasant Township, married Mamie Cooper and has four children, Wayne, Dean, Eugene and Albert. March 20, 1906, Mr. Onion married Mrs. Elva Bogue Farr, widow of Samuel Farr and daughter of Joel Bogue. After the death of his first wife Mr. Onion divided his property among his children and March 20, 1906, moved into the beautiful home he had erected in Summum on North Broadway.

Ever since old enough to vote Mr. Onion has supported the Republican cause, and has taken an active interest in the local councils of his party. Twice he has served as Justice of the Peace for the usual term, and his decisions have been rarely reversed by the higher court. In 1900 he represented what now is the Forty-third District in the Legislature, having received a gratifying majority in a Democratic community. Personally he is a staunch advocate of prohibition, but never has allied his forces with that party. His attitude toward temperance extends to all phases of his life, and moderation and caution have been conspicuous qualities since early youth. He always has kept in the middle of the road, avoiding extremes, and riding no hobbies. Honesty and industry have been his guiding stars, and have brought him the rewards of confidence, wealth, influence and happiness. Mr. Onion has never sued or been sued, but he has had occasion to find out that, by those who knew him best, his word was as good as his bond.

OREN, Dr. Samuel Allen, who is now successfully engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Lewistown, Ill. was born in Philadelphia, Pa., November 16, 1854, the son of Dr. Jesse Oren and Mary A. P. (Pray) Oren. Both parents were of leading Pennsylvania stock, their ancestors being among the early pioneers of that State. Dr. Jesse Oren was born September 22, 1824, the son of John Oren, Jr., who was born November 18, 1792, the son of Joseph Oren, who was born in 1754, the son of John Oren, Sr. John Oren, Sr., and his son Joseph were extensive land-owners, and lived near Newberrytown, York County, Pa., about twelve miles southeast of Harrisburg. Here they experienced many troubles during the Revolutionary War, their house being leveled to the ground in mid-winter, and ten children, with their mother, turned out to find shelter from snow and ice among those who had escaped the ravages of the raiding war party. About this time the maternal great-grandfather, Jacob Keller, escaped capture and threatened death by jumping into the Susquehanna River, at the junction of Sweet Arrow Creek and the river; into which trap he had been chased by the Tories. The river and creek were both high and filled with floating ice, and the falls (or rapids) being only a half-mile below, Mr. Keller took his chances, and succeeded before reaching the falls in mounting a large cake of ice, going over the falls safely and landing on a small island about three miles below, where he remained nearly three days, waiting the closing of the river so that he could reach the land. The island has been ever since, and is to this day, known as "Keller Island," in commemoration of Mr. Keller's remarkable experience. The island was uninhabited at the time, and a fast of nearly three days in the winter time, with the temperature below the freezing point, and after such a passage down the river, must indicate a strong vitality and a fast grip on life. On the maternal side the Prays figure in the early history of the State, one of them being elected Governor of Pennsylvania, after a contest which brought on what is known as the "Buckshot War," and is part of the written history of the State. It will be noticed that both sides of the family from which the subject of this sketch hails, can easily be traced back to the other side of the Revolutionary War, making our subject about as near American "blue blood" as can be found.

Dr. Jesse Oren, father of Dr. Samuel A., was a regular physician of the old school, attended medical lectures at Jefferson and Penn Medical Colleges at Philadelphia. After graduating and receiving the degree of M. D. from the latter institution, he went to Europe and there served on the Russian Medical Staff, during the Crimean War, being promoted to the rank of Major, with an increase of salary, for special proficiency while in the line of duty. Returning to Philadelphia after the war, he engaged in the practice of medicine there for a short time, when he turned his face to the West, moving to Iowa City, Iowa, in September, 1856, later laid out the town of North Liberty in that State, and succeeded in having a mail route established from Iowa City to Cedar Rapids, via North Liberty. In the spring of 1858 he moved to Laporte City, Iowa, where he engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery with Dr. Jesse Wasson, of that place, but in 1862 moved onto a farm which he had purchased near Laporte City, and there continued the practice of his profession while superintending his farm for the remainder of his active life.

The subject of the sketch, Dr. S. A. Oren, as before stated, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., coming west with his parents while a small boy, and there grew up amid the environments of a frontier country, enduring the hardships of pioneer life along with his parents. Of his early training, it may be said that he was brought up on the farm at work, studying from 5 to 6 o'clock in the morning, or until breakfast. This was true when at home in the winter time, as at other seasons. At the age of three years he was unable to read manuscript; the drill was never abated and, perhaps, pushed to the extreme; at least he well remembers when he was sent up stairs to study and told to "call for dinner when so much of a Latin verb could be conjugated, and not before," and, "don't you forget it." "Depend on no one, but draw upon yourself," was the ever ready advice of his father. "To be thrown overboard is the best stimulation to develop a healthy growth in the individual. None drown who are worth saving." Such were the environments among which he was raised. At the age of fifteen years he was sent to the Iowa State University at Iowa City, where he attended college irregularly from 1869 until 1878, alternating between teaching school and working on the farm until money enough could be earned to pay his expenses in college and then off to college again. He also attended the Upper Iowa University for a time. Dr. Oren is a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Keokuk, Iowa, also a graduate of the Homeopathic Medical Department of the State University of Iowa, being the first graduate in that department. In this institution he also graduated in the Law Department, and was admitted to the bar of the Iowa Supreme Court, and of the United States District and Circuit Courts. But why this course in law? The answer is, to improve his judgment in business affairs. The Doctor believes that we never get enough knowledge, and it is best to get all you can.

On December 25, 1878, he was married to Miss Kate E. Welton, daughter of the late Prof. H. S. Welton, of Iowa City, formerly professor of ancient and modern languages in the State University of Iowa. Of this union have been born five children, all living: Samuel Leo, Arthur Allen, Lilla Eva, Daisy May and Merlin Jesse. All of these children now live in Lewistown, the oldest, Dr. Samuel L. Oren, who is a graduate of the Medical Department of Barnes University of St. Louis, Mo., being associated with his father in the practice of medicine. The second son owns and carries on the "O. K. barber shop" in Lewistown. These two sons are married; the remainder of the family at this writing are living with their parents at home. For his wife Dr. Oren has only praises; she has been to him a veritable help-mate all through his business life. The Doctor opened his first office in Laporte City, Iowa, moved from there to Mount Auburn, Iowa, in 1880, where he practiced medicine until 1891, and, with the help of his wife, ran a drug store for eight years. In the fall of 1891 he sold out and moved to Iowa City and practiced medicine there and attended clinics in the Medical Department of the State University until 1904, putting in most of the time in special attention to diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. From there he went to Chicago and took a special post-graduate course in the Chicago Polyclinic and after practicing there for a time moved to Lanark, Carroll County, Ill., and thence to Lewistown, his present home. Dr. Oren has been a resident of Illinois only about twelve years, but he says that is long enough to become acclimated. In practice he is a "Regular," believing that the practice of medicine is too broad a field to countenance a "pathy" of any kind. He is a strong advocate of a higher standard of medical education, and has ever been one of those advocating the highest possible standard. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Illinois State Medical Society, the Military Tract Medical Association, and Fulton County Medical Society.

He was Surgeon on the B. C. R. & N. Ry., in Iowa for eight years, and during that time was a member of the International Association of Railway Surgeons. Dr. S. A. Oren and son, Dr. S. L., are among the leading physicians in the old county seat city of Lewistown, having their office on South Main Street, in a new brick building erected by the Doctor especially for an office, and enjoys a very large general practice in the city and surrounding country. In addition, they do special eye-ear-nose and throat work, and are "ocnlists," although they do not "limit their practice" to that line at all. Aside from the practice of medicine, Dr. S. A. Oren has been somewhat of a speculator, owning at one time a large interest in a Horse Importing Company; also a large herd of Shorthorn cattle.

At present he is owner of a 600-acre stock and grain farm in Black Hawk County, Iowa, well improved, and some 320 acres in Nebraska and Colorado, together with property in Lanark and Lewistown, Ill., and other property. Politically he is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and work with that society; but in church matters, as well as in medicine, the Doctor's views are broad and liberal, even to higher criticism, believing that every action of a man constitutes a link in the chain necessary to accomplish the end sought; in other words, he takes no stock in merely professing, and a great deal of stock in doing things in religion as well as otherwise. Fraternally he is a member of the A. F. & A. M., I. O. O. F., M. W. A., and several other fraternal orders; is Medical Examiner for quite a number of old-line and fraternal insurance companies, and belongs to that class of physicians who believe in keeping abreast with the times. His office is equipped with an X-Ray outfit and numerous instruments and appliances for the diagnosing and treatment of diseases. The spirit of investigation has marked his professional career. He dispenses with arbitrary methods, and uses the remedies that stand the test of current experience.

ORENDORFF, John (deceased), a pioneer settler of Fulton County, Ill., was born in Wilkes County, Ga., April 23, 1796, and spent much of his early life in various Southern States. In 1818, at the age of about twenty-two, he came to Illinois, and two years later (November 14, 1820), in Washington County, Ill., married Margaret Sayle, who was a native of Wilkes County, N. C., and a relative of General George Washington. On April 16, 1825, he became a resident of Orion Township, Fulton County, settling on a farm which continued to be his home for forty-nine years. He served as a Justice of the Peace for many years, and while holding this office performed the first marriage solemnized in Fulton County. He also erected the first frame dwelling in Orion Township. At a camp-meeting conducted by the celebrated Peter Cartwright, near Canton, in 1832, Mr. Orendorff and his wife were converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which they remained consistent and devoted members for the rest of their lives, their house being the hospitable home of itinerants for many years. As a citizen, he was a man of strong character, industrious, honest, sociable and philanthropic, ever ready to aid any good cause or any deserving but needy individual, according to his ability and the necessities of the case. He and his wife had five sons and two daughters, all except one son, who died young, living to maturity. The elder daughter, Caroline, married William Parlin, of the firm of Parlin & Orendorff, agricultural implement manufacturers, at Canton, Ill., and the younger, Sarah, married John Riley. Of the surviving sons, William J. is a member of the firm of Parlin & Orendorff; John W. died April 21, 1883; Henry H. is a dealer in hardware and agricultural implements at Canton, Ill.; and Washington S. died October 11, 1899. Mr. Orendorff, Sr., died January 28, 1876, his wife having preceded him, July 16, 1867.

ORENDORFF, Ulysses Grant, whose reputation is synonymous with the fame of Canton, Ill., as a center of prodigious industrial activities, and whose personality is associated far and wide with one of the most extensive manufacturing enterprises in the world, was born in that city April 16, 1865, a son of William J. and Mary (Rohrer) Orendorff. (See sketch of William J. Orendorff in the following section of this volume.) His paternal and maternal grandparents were John and Margaret (Sayle) Orendorff, and Henry and Mary (Doner) Rohrer, respectively. William J. Orendorff was one of the founders of the present colossal Parlin and Orendorff agricultural implement establishment, with which the subject of this writing is conspicuously identified, the former having joined his business fortunes with those of Mr. Parlin in what was then a concern of comparatively limited extent in 1852.

Ulysses G. Orendorff obtained his preliminary mental instruction in the schools of his native place, and completed his education in the seminary at Easthampton, Mass., Evanston, Ill., and Jacksonville, Ill., shortly before obtaining his majority. As a young man he developed practical talent of an exceptional order, and manifested a special aptitude for a mercantile career. In 1886, he became connected with the office department of the Parlin & Orendorff Company, and through energy, diligence and close application to the task before him, rose to the position of Assistant Secretary of the company three years later. In 1891, he was made Secretary, and in addition to the duties thus devolved upon him, was invested with the responsibility of Treasurer in 1896. His father, who had for a considerable period taken a less active part in the company's affairs, had by degrees intrusted his personal interests in connection with the business to the subject of this sketch, and since the death of the former in 1897, the latter has ably and worthily fulfilled the family traditions, and performed his part in carrying out the general policies which have gradually led to such stupendous results. The Parlin & Orendorff concern ranks as the largest establishment devoted to the manufacture of agricultural implements in the United States, and its product is distributed not only over all the States and Territories of the Union, but finds a large market in foreign lands. Its plant in Canton extends over many acres of ground, and its employes are numbered by thousands.

Mr. Orendorff was elected President of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association in 1906, and while his eminent business abilities have made him widely known in his own State, they have also, in recent years, given him a high reputation in commercial circles throughout the country. He has officiated as Treasurer of the National Association of Agricultural Implement and Vehicle Manufacturers, a body representing $170,000,000 of capital invested; 85,000 employes; and 4,000,000 tons of freight received and shipped annually. He is a member of the executive committee of the Mutual Life Policy Holders' Association of New York City, and bears other important relations with various organizations and corporations.

On August 11, 1896, Mr. Orendorff was united in marriage with Daisy R. Baughman, who was born and educated in Canton, Ill., and is a daughter of Abraham and Mary (Capps) Baughman, natives of that place. Mr. and Mrs. Orendorff are the parents of one daughter, Helen B.

In politics Mr. Orendorff is a Republican. Socially he is a member of the Chicago Athletic Club and the Hamilton Middy and South Shore Clubs, of the same city. He has always been an earnest advocate and patron of every measure intended for the promotion of the best interests of Canton, and a liberal contributor to its educational and charitable institutions.

ORENDORFF, William J. (deceased), who was, for many years, prominently identified with the industrial interests of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., in connection with the Mammoth Plow Works which have made the name of that city a familiar word throughout the agricultural-implement using area of the United States, was born in Orion Township, Fulton County, January 14, 1829, a son of John and Margaret (Sayle) Orendorff, the former a native of Wilkes County, Ga., and the latter in Wilkes County, N. C. John Orendorff and his wife moved to Illinois in 1825, and settled in Orion Township, Fulton County. There the mother of William J. departed this life on the homestead farm July 19, 1867, his father surviving her until January 28, 1876, when he, too, passed away.

In early youth, the subject of this sketch enjoyed such advantages as were afforded by the district schools of Orion Township and the public school of Canton. In 1852, he became connected with the Parlin Plow Manufactory, and in 1857 was admitted to partnership in that enterprise. A description of the inception and the development of this colossal establishment, to the upbuilding and prosperity of which Mr. Orendorff devoted so many years of his time and energy, is contained in a memoir of the life of William Parlin, which forms an interesting chapter of this volume. The memories of these two men, as alert, keen-minded, sagacious and untiring co-workers in a stupendous undertaking are indissolubly linked in the commercial annals of Canton and Fulton County. From the beginning of his connection with the concern, Mr. Orendorff supplemented the endeavors of his worthy associate in a most able and efficient manner, and much of the marvelous growth of this enterprise is attributable to his diligent and faithful co-operation.

On September 28, 1856, Mr. Orendorff was united in marriage with Mary Rohrer, daughter of Henry Rohrer, a native of Lancaster County, Pa., and formerly a prominent and highly-respected citizen of Canton. Mr. and Mrs. Orendorff became the parents of four children, as follows: Arthur L., William H., Ulysses G. and John W., all of whom are reputable and useful members of society in their respective spheres of activity. In politics Mr. Orendorff was an adherent of the Republican party, and was influential in its local councils. He represented his district in the Thirty-fourth General Assembly of Illinois (1884-86). He was a man of strong character, sound judgment, thorough practical information and unswerving integrity. In public affairs he took earnest and unselfish interest, and whatever movements were likely to promote the general welfare received his unhesitating and hearty support. He was a useful member of the community and was greatly respected by a wide circle of acquaintance. The death of Mr. Orendorff occurred October 18, 1897.

OVERMAN, Nathan (deceased).—The useful labor of Nathan Overman is clearly inscribed upon an early page of Fulton County history, and though thirty years have elapsed since the close of his life, in 1877, there are many old settlers who recall his earnest aims and peaceful, quiet existence. His was a kindly and generous heart, one tuned to a love of flowers and children and the animate things of nature, and he thus found constant delight in his ever-widening occupation, that of florist and nurseryman. He came at an advantageous time, when men were subduing the wilderness, and emerging from the first stern hardships, were seeking to infuse a certain beauty into their surroundings, to regard trees as shade and fruit producers, as well as necessities for fuel and buildings, and flowers as an incentive to something above the thought of sordid gain. Into this niche this early nurseryman came with his slips and seedlings, and for many years his business at the Mound was liberally patronized by the town and country folk from near and far.

Mr. Overman was born in Indiana in 1818 and came of poor but industrious parents, who could give him few of the opportunities which youth craves. He gained a fair education, principally through the application of later years, and from general farming branched out into the nursery business as more profitable and congenial.

His first wife (formerly Fannie Hudnell) died in 1867, leaving four children, and his second wife, Mrs. Augusta H. (McDonough) Hinman, a native of Tazewell County, Illinois, (her parents being from Connecticut) survives him and has two children, Lorraine and Albert. Mr. Overman confined himself strictly to his home and business and was never known in politics save when casting his vote. He was honorable and straightforward in all his dealings and, in addition to a successful business, left the heritage of a good name and worthy example. He died March 17, 1877. Mrs. Overman now resides at her elegant home, No. 425 East Elm Street, Canton, Ill.

RESIDENCE OF C. B. ROBINSON 1847A

PALMER, Jasper, who is successfully engaged in farming in Fulton County, Ill., was born in that county November 20, 1861, a son of Henry and Amanda (Talmadge) Palmer, natives of Saratoga, N. Y. The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm and in early youth obtained his mental training in the district schools in the neighborhood of his home. In August, 1891, Mr. Palmer was united in marriage with Lena Swan, who was born in Illinois, and there received her early mental training. One child, Henry, has resulted from this union. He has served one term as School Trustee and School Director.

PARLIN, William (deceased), one of the most conspicuous among the promoters of the industrial interests of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., and the founder of a manufacturing establishment there which has tended more than all others to give that city its wide reputation as a mechanical center, was born in Acton, Middlesex County, Mass., January 21, 1817. He was of English derivation, his ancestors having come from England at an early period and settled in Massachusetts Colony. Among their descendants was Samuel, grandfather of William, who, with his son, Warren, was a gallant soldier in the War of the Revolution. They were connected by family ties with the famous General Warren, who fell at Bunker Hill.

William Parlin was a son of Warren and Lydia (Davis) Parlin, the latter a daughter of Jonathan Davis, who also participated in the Revolutionary War. His cousin, Captain Davis, was among the slain in the battle of Concord, being the first of the patriot officers to fall in the struggle with the mother country. Mr. Parlin received his early education in the common schools of Middlesex County and, having finished his studies, learned the blacksmith's trade, at which he worked for awhile in his native State. Having determined on a change of conditions, he started westward and after a somewhat tedious journey, arrived in Canton, Ill., July 4, 1840. There he started a small blacksmith shop, which he afterward developed from an insignificant beginning into a colossal enterprise, known throughout the United States.

In 1847 Mr. Parlin began the manufacture of plows, starting at the corner of Fourth and Elm Streets, in Canton, where a portion of the mammoth plow works now stands. Modern facilities had not yet become available and his operations were confined wholly to hand work. In 1857 the first engine in use by him, a six-horse-power machine, was a substitute for the natural horse power. The capacity of the plant was enlarged as time went on, new buildings were erected and new inventions were utilized in the different processes, until this erstwhile unpretentious concern broadened out into one of the most extensive and complete manufacturing concerns of its kind in this country, the ramifications of its trade being pushed to the remotest markets of the continent, and the magnitude of its operations involving the employment of great numbers of men. The establishment now covers six entire blocks and turns out plows of various styles suited to the conditions in all agricultural regions. In addition to these it produces cultivators, sulky plows, road scrapers, stalk cutters and many other kinds of agricultural implements, all made by special machinery. In 1857 William J. Orendorff, a sketch of whose life is contained in this volume, became a partner of the founder of the enterprise.

On January 7, 1845, William Parlin was united in marriage with Caroline Orendorff, a daughter of John Orendorff, of Orion Township, Fulton County. Four children resulted from their union, namely: Artemas F., who died at the age of eighteen years; William H.; Clara E., and Alice C., who became the wife of Charles E. Ingersoll.

In politics Mr. Parlin was a firm supporter of the Republican party. On the incorporation of Canton he was one of the first members of the City Council, and served several terms in that capacity. He also held the office of School Director, and ably and faithfully discharged the duties of Mayor of the city. He was an earnest advocate of temperance principles, and while not a member of any church, was recognized by all as a man of strict probity and an exemplary citizen. To all religious denominations he was a liberal contributor, and to the cause of education a steadfast friend. All measures for the welfare of the community found in him an earnest advocate. The great industrial enterprise which he founded and which his indomitable energy and perseverance carried through its initial period, stands as a monument of his ability and sagacity. Mr. Parlin departed this life June 20, 1891.

PARR, Samuel, a highly respected resident of Fairview Township, Fulton County, Ill., where for twenty-three years he has had a successful experience in farming and coal mining, and is one of the most prosperous and substantial citizens of the township, is a native of England, having been born in Bingham, Nottinghamshire, on November 2, 1839. He is a son of Samuel and Mary (Hart) Parr, both of whom were of English nativity. In England the occupation of the former was that of a farm bailiff. Samuel Parr, Sr., and Mary (Hart) Parr were the parents of eight children.

The subject of this sketch received his early mental training in the grammar schools of his native country. He came to America in 1856 and after spending one year in Canada, in 1857, he crossed over into the United States and located in Adams County, Ill., where he remained twenty-two years. In 1879 he made a visit to Ellisville, Fulton County, for the purpose of prospecting for coal. Four years afterwards (in 1883) he purchased 273 acres of land in Section 38, Fairview Township, Fulton County. Of this he cleared and improved about 200 acres, on which he carried on farming. His principal object in making this purchase was, however, to get possession of coal lands. In this he was successful, and is now the owner of what he considers the best vein of coal in Fulton County. On January 8, 1900, he opened his mine on the Fulton County Narrow Gauge Railroad, operating a drift mine, with a vein of four feet eight inches of coal. This he subsequently leased to Essex, Fitz & Co., who now carry on mining there. During the Civil War Mr. Parr rendered faithful service to his adopted country in defense of the Union. He was a member of Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and participated in all of its campaigns for three years.

In 1868 Mr. Parr was joined in matrimony, in Schuyler County, Ill., with Theresa (Bramble) Pilgrim, who was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1847, a daughter of Major Bramble, of that State. Her father was one of the early settlers of Schuyler County, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Parr became the parents of six children, of whom four are living. The political opinions of Mr. Parr are in accordance with the principles of the Republican party. In fraternal circles he is identified with the Union Veteran Volunteers of Galesburg.

PARRY, Jesse.—More and more is it demonstrated that a cultivated mind and fine instincts reach their highest development oftentimes among agricultural surroundings, diffusing around them that refinement and peace which are the hall-marks of the born gentleman toiler. To such a class belongs Jesse Parry, one of the large land-owners of Woodland Township, and a native of Fulton County, born in Astoria Township, January 13, 1851. The oldest son of William Parry, mentioned at length in another part of this work, the youth was reared among average surroundings, receiving a thorough agricultural training, and eventually assuming much of the responsibility of the farm management. An earnest seeker after knowledge, he supplemented his common school education by such reading and research as was possible during his leisure, and remained at home until his marriage with Sarah M. Lewis, also representing one of the pioneer families of Fulton County. Mrs. Parry was born in Kentucky March 1, 1850, being one of seven children of Wilson and Mahala Lewis, the youngest of whom now is past the half-century mark, and all of whom are living. James Lewis is a merchant in St. Mary, Hancock County, Ill.; Daniel is a farmer near Colmar, Ill.; William lives in Boston, Barton County, Mo.; Nancy is the wife of Perry Clupper, of Jewell, Kan.; Malinda is the wife of Harvey Swisher, of Hancock County, Ill.; Sarah is the wife of Jesse Parry, and John Lewis lives in Burlington, Kan.

Directly after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Parry settled on what now is the George Schuman farm, which William Parry had cleared and made one of the beautiful homes of Astoria Township. About 1881 he rented 155 acres in Section 30, Woodland Township, and in 1884 purchased the farm to which he since has added until he owns 248 acres in one body. As a life accomplishment this property should afford infinite satisfaction to the owner, who started out in life with few visible assets and whose industry and good judgment alone are responsible for his success. On every hand are evidences of high-mindedness and painstaking qualities, of regard for the taste and personal requirements of the various occupants, and for those things which tend to the satisfaction of life independent of financial gain. In the family are the following named children: Mary C., born December 30, 1872, the wife of William Cassell, and the mother of two children—Della and Jesse—and who died January 29, 1893; John H., born February 2, 1875, married Fannie Gruber, daughter of Jacob Gruber, and is a farmer in Astoria Township; William O., born October 26, 1877, married Stella Elgin, and is operating a farm in Woodland Township, and Stephen E., born October 4, 1885, married Cora, daughter of John C. Damer.

A staunch supporter of the Republican party, Mr. Parry has never aspired to office, but has rendered valuable service to the township as a member of the Board of Education. He also has promoted practical and scientific methods of agriculture and by his successful example has encouraged the breeding of Percheron horses, Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs, never for an instant relaxing his high standards or his pride in the steady and lasting development of his neighborhood. His life is devoted to honesty and fairness, to the accumulation of a competence which calls for no sacrifice of principle and to a citizenship which shall leave the world the better for his having been a part of it.

PARRY, William.—With his noble head touched by the snows of eighty-five winters and his strong face and capable hands bronzed by the sun which has beat upon almost as many harvesting seasons, William Parry is today the personification of a life well lived, of energies well directed, of a mind tuned to the harmony of his surroundings and of a heart which has lost nothing of its warmth and sympathy in its journey from the log cabin to the affluence of the twentieth century. This vigorous personality, outlined against the background of events in Fulton County since 1837, command the confidence and respect of as large a following as any who have helped to redeem the wilderness in this part of the State. He has built up character as well as fortune and has supported the substantial and fundamental processes of civilization.

Born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, June 16, 1822, Mr. Parry in 1836 accompanied his parents, Caleh and Rebecca (Engle) Parry, to Sangamon County, Ill., in 1836, and the following year to Fulton County, where the father died at the age of eighty-three and the mother at the age of ninety-three, lacking eighteen days. Caleb Parry was born among the picturesque mountains of Wales, and as a boy came to America with his parents, locating presumably in Virginia, where he married and farmed for several years. After coming to Fulton County and taking up land in Astoria Township, he became an important adjunct to the neighborhood, and his industry, thrift and integrity gave him lasting place among the good and purposeful men of the community. His wife, at the remarkable age of ninety, could thread her needle without the aid of glasses, and her constitution remained strong and her faculties alert until almost the end of her life journey. Her longevity was a tribute to moderation and an all-around development of powers, for she was idle only when she slept, and in the early days spun the yarn and knit the stockings for her children, also wove the cloth and made their garments for the entire household. It was her mission to rock the cradle of twelve little ones, two of whom died in infancy, ten attaining maturity. Of the latter Mary married William Crawford, moved to Knox County, Ill., and with her husband died at an advanced age; Hannah became the life of George Sayers, and both now are deceased; Rheum married Sherman Wycoff, who, since her death, has lived near Redfield, Iowa; Rebecca is the deceased wife of Charlie Turner, and Nancy spent her last years in the home of her brother Enoch, who, with William, are the sole living representatives of this large family.

William Parry, though only fourteen years old when he arrived in Fulton County, already was an independent toiler, having in his native State of Ohio worked by the day for eighteen and three-fourths cents. He was well developed, had strong muscles and could plow, reap and chop as much wood in a given time as a full-grown man. In Astoria Township he attended the district schools for a few terms and after his evening tasks were completed, studied in front of the fireplace, which, with candles, constituted the only means of heat and illumination with which he was familiar until purchasing his first iron heater during Lincoln's second administration. August 10, 1840, he married Miranda Walker, a native of Maryland, and daughter of Jesse Walker, the latter a pioneer of Ohio and Illinois, arriving in the latter State about 1838. Mr. and Mrs. Parry settled on the farm now owned by Mr. Parry's brother Enoch, living in a log cabin for a number of years. He then bought the farm now owned by George Schuman, a son-in-law, and in all has improved several hundred acres of land, at the present time owning the 320 acres upon which he located in 1864. He has a beautiful home, reflecting his thoroughgoing character and regard for detail and method, and also evidencing his love of nature and the joy he has experienced in collaborating with it.

To Mr. and Mrs. Parry were born the following named children: Isaac, Caleb and Rheum, who died young; Catherine, deceased, wife of William Dupree; Jesse; John, a resident of Normal, Ill.; William, who died in 1906; Stephen, residing in Astoria, and Belle, wife of George Schuman, on the old homestead in Astoria Township. August 10, 1892, Mr. and Mrs. Parry celebrated their golden wedding, the guests at that time numbering 300, and all participating in the noonday dinner provided by a generous host. They came mostly from Astoria, but other towns and townships were represented, and the gifts took the form of a gold-headed cane for Mr. Parry, upon which was inscribed "1842" and "1892," and the wife who had shared his hardships and prosperity was given a silver cup and saucer with gold lining and a plush spring rocker. In the opinion of the oldest inhabitants who participated in this festive occasion, it was the most enjoyable they ever had known. Mrs. Parry survived her golden wedding nine years, her death occurring March 26, 1901. She was an exceptionally noble and agreeable woman and lived to see herself surrounded by nine children, nineteen grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren.

That the years have dealt kindly with Mr. Parry was proved during his sixtieth year, when he cradled forty acres of heavy wheat, accomplishing on an average seven and a half acres a day. In the early days he was a stanch Whig, but later espoused the principles of the immortal Lincoln, of whom he is an intense admirer. During the Civil War, while not a soldier in the field, he did much to aid the wives and children left behind in the county, and no night was too dark or storm too severe to interfere with his self-imposed errands of mercy. This spirit of self-sacrifice and desire to be of actual use in the world has kept his heart young and his hopes high; has drawn to him innumerable friendships and boundless gratitude. To hear him talk of the early days is like reading from an old romance. He has always looked on labor as the salvation of the race and has welcomed physical weariness as part of the great developing process of human kind. He recalls that in June, 1836, he helped clear the timber from the ground where now stands the Cooper Brothers' store in Astoria. At that time the tract was the finest blackberry patch Mr. Parry ever had seen. The ground was black with the delicious wild berries. Although the Indians long since had departed, they still came back to the old haunts, for there still were hundreds of deer and thousands of wolves to make the night mournful. The returned redman was a peaceful being, with the light of other days in his eyes and a dead hope in his heart. And thus is inscribed upon the history of Fulton County the life and labor of a good and capable man, one with a broad catholicity of view, of great generosity and wisdom of heart, and one who is greatly beloved for what he has become, as well as for what he has accomplished.

PARVIN, C. K., a prominent and influential citizen and prosperous merchant of Smithfield, Fulton County, Ill., who is serving his third term as Postmaster of that town, was born in Union County, Ind., in 1852, a son of S. R. and Anna (Tice) Parvin, natives of New Jersey. In early youth the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the public schools of Bardolph, Ill., where his father moved with the family in 1857. There the latter followed his trade of shoemaking for a number of years. The son lived in McDonough County, Ill., until 1868, when he moved to Knox County, Ill., remaining there until 1873, when he located in Smithfield. Before establishing himself there he had been connected with the grain trade. In Smithfield Mr. Parvin was engaged in teaching school until 1880. In that year he built a store, which he conducted for four years. At the end of that period he embarked in the general mercantile line, and in 1900 his store was destroyed by fire. His present place of business was erected by him in 1901. He has branch stores at St. David, Fulton County, and Sciota, McDonough County, and owns an elevator in Smithfield, where he deals in all kinds of grain.

In 1876 Mr. Parvin was united in marriage with Emma Vincent, who was born in McDonough County, Ill., and they have five children, namely: Harry, Pearl, Ralph, Lela and Earl. In politics Mr. Parvin is a prominent Republican, and is influential in the local councils of his party. He was appointed Postmaster of Smithfield by President Harrison, in 1897, was reappointed under the McKinley administration, and has been the incumbent of that office ever since. In fraternal circles Mr. Parvin is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. and is also a Yeoman. He is a man upright character and in commercial circles is ranked as a merchant of exceptional ability and sagacity.

PAUL, Jeremiah.—In Jeremiah Paul is found a retired citizen of Ipava whose industrious and well directed efforts entitle him to a place among the upbuilders of Fulton County. Born in Adams County, Ohio, March 18, 1829, he is a son of Jeremiah and Hannah (Elrod) Paul, natives of Maine and Pennsylvania, respectively. The elder Paul was born near the Kennebec River, Maine, September 13, 1802, and by trade was a pike-builder and contractor. He constructed many well known highways throughout Ohio, the most notable being the pike from Marysville, Ohio, to Lima, Ky. He was an early settler of Ohio and his death occurred in that State May 19, 1851. The first Mrs. Paul died in Millersburg, Ohio, December 23, 1830, and for a second wife Mr. Paul married Mary J. Hamer. Of the first union there were three children, one of whom died in infancy, while the oldest son died in Bowling Green, Ky., during the Civil War as a soldier in the 103d Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The two surviving children of the second union are: Lewis Paul, of Linn, Kans., and Annie, wife of Thomas Hurd, of Newport, Ky.

The opportunities enjoyed by the farmer boy of the present were missing from the youth of Jeremiah Paul. Yet his energy and ambition overcame the limitations that surrounded him, and at the age of nineteen he had qualified as a country school teacher. In order to do this he allowed himself little leisure and after working in the fields from sunrise to sunset, he would remain far into the night poring over books by the flames of the winter fire or the light of the moon. On March 6, 1845, he left his home and came to Fulton County with his uncles, Michael Elrod and Eben Paul, reaching here March 18th the same month. The uncles took up land in Waterford Township and young Paul began working on a farm in the summer time, in the winter turning his attention to school teaching. About this time he had many interesting experiences, and on many occasions made trips down the river with a raft to the southern markets. He remembers hauling hogs to market in the early days and receiving a dollar and twenty-five cents per hundred for them.

On January 1, 1851, Mr. Paul was united in marriage to Ann E. Scoville, and of the union there were two children, both of whom died in infancy. Mrs. Paul died March 1, 1859, and Mr. Paul subsequently married Mrs. Emma Griffith (nee Quigley), daughter of Robert Quigley, a pioneer of Fulton County. Through her marriage with Thomas H. Griffith Mrs. Paul had three children, of whom Mary P. became the wife of Solon Culver; Melvin R. is a resident of Oklahoma City, Okla., and Eliza died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Paul are the parents of the following children: Charles H., born in Waterford Township, this county, March 1, 1860; Sidney R., born January 3, 1865, a farmer in Bernadotte Township, who married Lula Hopkins, and Eva C., born September 21, 1867, the life of James M. Stephens, of McPherson County, Kans., and the mother of two children—Marion J. and Carrie.

In 1846 Mr. Paul enlisted in the local regiment organized to help drive the Mormons out of Nauvoo, Ill., but when they reached that town they found the trouble over and the matter adjusted. At the breaking out of the Civil War he enlisted in the Second Illinois Cavalry, Company C, for three years, and after a year and eight months with his regiment was discharged, March 23, 1863, for disability. During the service he took part in many long marches and some important battles, and was captured at Holly Springs, Miss., but soon after paroled. The exposure and deprivations of war told heavily upon him, however, and the years have failed to remove all traces of his severe experience.

In 1884, on account of his wife's health, Mr. Paul removed to Arkansas, purchased a farm and settled down to general agriculture. The change proved anything but satisfactory, however, for continued chills and fever necessitated frequent return trips to Illinois, and in 1896 they made permanent location here. Purchasing 125 acres in Bernadotte Township, the family lived thereon until coming to Ipava in 1901. In 1905 the farm was disposed of, leaving Mr. and Mrs. Paul a comfortable income to satisfy the demands of their declining years.

Formerly an old-line Whig, Mr. Paul allied his interests with the Republican party at the time of its organization, and ever since has taken a keen, if unofficial, interest in its undertakings. When a boy of thirteen he allied his religious fortunes with the church of the Newlights, but in later years became a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is an honorable and public-spirited man and deserving of all the peace and happiness that life can bestow.

PAVEY, Henry.—The excellent business standing of Henry Pavey rests upon many years of activity, but principally is it the outgrowth of the successful hardware business with which he was connected in Ipava from 1869 until 1894. He is further known as a natural mechanic, as an experienced miller and foundryman, as a public-spirited promoter of stable and practical conditions and as a typical representative of the best class of Englishmen who wander to foreign shores.

Between the Central West as he found it in 1849 and the town of Tiverton, Devonshire, England, where he was born, February 15, 1823, Mr. Pavey found a great contrast. Tiverton had its municipal birth in the dawn of English history, and when the fierce, barbaric Celts held undisputed sway. It was founded by the Romans fifty years before the Christian era, and five years later was conspicuous as a base of military supplies during the invasion of Julius Cæsar. The Tiverton of today is a quaint and interesting town of 11,000 inhabitants and its architectural variance suggests the passing of its many generations of citizens. Within its boundaries is the famous Blundell College, founded by the scholar and philosopher, Thomas Blundell, during the sixteenth century, and its neighborhood is inextricably bound up in the verity and romance which have enlivened the slow moving ages. Not far away is Exmoor, where occurred the contest between Jan Kidd and Robbins Snell, in the great romance of "Lorna Doone," by Blackmore. The great names in English history, which for a time have been connected with Tiverton, are very many. It was the privilege of Mr. Pavey to listen to such great statesmen as Palmerston and Gladstone, the former the latter's greatest rival, and by many considered his equal in oratorical force. Palmerston's official title was Viscount John Henry Temple. Mr. Pavey also heard Richard Cobden, the English statesman and political economist, especially noted as an advocate of free trade and peace; and John Bright, the distinguished Liberal statesman, orator and writer.

Mr. Pavey's father was William Pavey and his mother was Mary (Davys) Pavey, daughter of John Davys, whose ancestor came from Wales to Tiverton in 1580 and settled upon land to which the family had an indeterminate lease. Mr. and Mrs. Pavey were the parents of eight children, of whom two sons and two daughters are deceased. Of those living Joseph is an architect and builder of Chicago; Ann is the widow of Captain John Evenden, inventor of the jacket can, and Emma is the widow of Mr. Ames and lives at Woolton Courletay, Dunster-Tauten, England.

Reared to farming as the most dependable of occupations, Henry Pavey in early youth developed mechanical ability which had no place in the operation of a farm. He soon made use of his greater gifts and, as he was thorough and painstaking, he never was obliged to accept the low wages of the average mechanic. When well established as a mechanic ambition began to knock at his door and he responded by emigrating to the United States during the summer of 1849, at that time being about twenty-five years old. He had already decided to purchase land in the vicinity of Waukegan, Ill., but after working on a farm there for a few months he decided that he liked mechanics better, and therefore entered the employ of the Waukegan Iron Foundry. His worth received ready recognition, and he was soon made foreman of the foundry and remained in that capacity until the company failed in 1856. He then leased the foundry and operated it on his own responsibility for several years, or until embarking in the sash and door manufactory with Senator Kirk, of Lake County, Ill., in 1864. In this also he was successful and in 1867 sold out and removed to Chicago, where he engaged in the hardware business for a couple of years. In 1869 he came to Ipava, this county, established a hardware enterprise on a small scale and paid the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad for the first two carloads of freight ever received at Ipava. As the town grew in size and importance he enlarged his business, and in the spring of 1894 sold his stock of hardware, but retained the right to install his hot-water heating system in the town and surrounding country. After putting in sixteen plants he sold his heaters in 1898 and since has lived retired from active business.

The first marriage of Mr. Pavey occurred in 1852 to Sarah A. Landsay, who died in 1854. The following year he was united in marriage to Mary Tratt, of Waukegan, Ill. (his partner's sister), who died November 19, 1898. Of this union there were two children: Sarah Ann, wife of Conrad Haney, who has four children—Lewis, Milton, Ruth and Alice; and Mary Alice, wife of L. P. Gouglar, for the past thirty years station agent at Ipava for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and who has five children—Judson, Philip, Robert, Zella and Mildred. Mr. Pavey has voted the Republican ticket ever since he became an American citizen, and he was one of the organizers of the party in Waukegan, this State. He has always been averse to office-holding, but has aided in many ways the local standing of his party. He attends preferably the Baptist Church, but since living in Ipava has been active in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is respected for his many amiable and excellent traits of character, and for the example of sterling manhood which he has contributed to the annals of his adopted town of Ipava.

PEARSON, Edward, a well-known merchant, member of the firm of Dainty & Pearson, in St. David, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, August 27, 1872, a son of Thomas and Catherine (Oakley) Pearson, natives of England. Catherine Oakley's first husband was Jabez Dainty, with whom she came to the United States, first locating in Maryland. Thence they journeyed by river to St. Louis, and then up the Illinois to Peoria. From there they went to Henry County, from Henry to Tazewell, and from Tazewell to Fulton County, where they effected a permanent settlement in Buckheart Township. Their union resulted in four children (three of whom are still living), namely: George, born January 1, 1855, in Henry County, Ill.; William, deceased; Frank, of East Peoria, Ill., and Jabez, a farmer in Buckheart Township. The father of this family died about 1862. Mrs. Catherine Dainty married Thomas Pearson in 1863 and this union was the source of five children, as follows: Daniel, who is a farmer in Buckheart Township; Mary, wife of John Ely, of Chillicothe, Ill.; John, of East Peoria, Ill., and Sarah, wife of Andrew Haag, residing near Chatsworth, Ill. Thomas Pearson died in East Peoria, Ill., January 23, 1893, but his widow, still living, is a resident of that place.

The subject of this sketch was reared to farm life and received his educational training in the common schools and in Brown's Business College, Peoria, graduating from that institution with the class of 1896. He then located in St. David, and he and George Dainty entered into a business partnership. They began in a small way, but Mr. Pearson having ample experience, they have developed a large trade. The firm does a general mercantile business, the concern being divided into three departments. The dry goods and grocery department is thirty by seventy feet in dimensions; the meat market twenty-four by forty feet, and upper room twenty by forty feet. Mr. Pearson has charge of the business and attends to the buying. The firm has built up a trade second to none in this section and transacts a business of from $45,000 to $50,000 a year. By fair dealing and strict attention to their affairs they have won the confidence of the people to an unusual degree. The postoffice is located in the store building and George Dainty is postmaster.

On June 23, 1897, Mr. Pearson was united in marriage with Mary Evans and three children have resulted from their union: Cyril, Wayne and Deneen. In politics Mr. Pearson is a Republican, is a member of the St. David City Council and fraternally is affiliated with the K. of P. and the M. W. A. of Bryant, Ill. He is one of the most prominent, enterprising and popular members of the community.

PERKINS, Frederic Allen, of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Canton, September 23, 1880, a son of Ransom A. and Martha A. (Steele) Perkins, the former a native of Chicopee, Mass., and the latter of Bridgewater, N. Y. The paternal grandparents, Allen M. and Julia R. Perkins, were natives of Connecticut, where the former was born in Plainfield, and the latter in Glastonbury. On the maternal side the genealogical line of Mr. Perkins is traceable to his great-grandfather, Roger Wolcott Steele, grandson of Roger Wolcott, who was a Governor of Connecticut during the colonial period. The grandparents of Mr. Steele, Albert and Alice (Love) Steele, were natives of Bridgewater, N. Y.

Frederic Allen Perkins received his primary education in the common schools of Canton and supplemented his preliminary studies by a course in the University of Illinois, receiving the degree of LL. B. in 1901 and being admitted to practice by the Supreme Court the same year.

In politics Mr. Perkins is a supporter of the Democratic party and fraternally is affiliated with the B. P. O. E. and A. F. and A. M. He was elected City Attorney of Canton in 1904 and was re-elected in 1906; also served as Master in Chancery of the City Court of Canton for several years.

PERKINS, G. W.—Of the contracting builders who have contributed much to the past of Canton, and who, because of their superior equipment and progressive ideas, may be counted on to share in the development of the future of the town, mention is due G. W. Perkins, who has been a resident of Illinois since 1874, and a citizen of Canton since 1893. Mr. Perkins was born in Cortland County, N. Y., in October, 1851, a son of Olney and Lorenda (Wheeler) Perkins, natives of Berlin and Solon, N. Y., respectively.

Mr. Perkins comes honestly by his mechanical ingenuity, for his father was a mechanic, and it was from him that the son learned the trade of carpenter and builder. The older man eventually pursued his calling in Wisconsin, his death occurring in Marion, Kans., in 1886. His son, G. W., started out on his own responsibility in 1874, locating in Marshall County, Ill., whence he went to Marion County, Kans., remaining there five years, when he moved to Kansas City, where he resided four years. Upon arriving in Canton in 1893 he worked for Mr. Hoag for two years and in the spring of 1895 engaged in business for himself, from the first receiving encouraging patronage from both the town and county. For fourteen months he was foreman of construction at the plow works and was general superintendent of work on the U. G. Orendorff residence in Canton. Mr. Perkins has the kind of enthusiasm for his work that not only enables him to master it thoroughly, but impels him to seek its broadest and most interesting manifestations. He has a keen eye for the artistic and practical, and that his labor will stand the test and approbation of years admits of no doubt.

The home of Mr. Perkins is presided over by his wife, who formerly was Mary C. Gapen, a native of Marshall County, Ill. Mr. Perkins is a member of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, the Ideal Union Insurance and the Masons. He is popular with his employees, courteous and considerate towards those who wish to profit by his skill and on friendly and helpful terms with his fellow contractors.

PERKINS, Ransom Allen, for many years one of the most prominent citizens of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., both in mercantile and public relations, but now living in honored retirement, was born in Chicopee, Mass., October 4, 1838. He is a son of Allen M. and Julia A. (Robertson) Perkins, natives of Connecticut, where both were born in Glastonbury.

In early youth R. A. Perkins received his education in the public schools of Utica, N. Y. From 1861 to 1865 he served in Company D, Fifth Regiment, New York Veteran Volunteer Cavalry, from which he was mustered out as Captain. In 1873 he left Utica, N. Y., and located in Canton, Ill., where he engaged in merchandise business, in which he continued for a long period with unvarying success.

On January 17, 1866, Mr. Perkins was joined in wedlock with Martha A. Steele, who was born and schooled in Bridgewater, N. Y., and they became the parents of two children: Albert S. and Frederick A.

In political relations Mr. Perkins has always been an earnest and influential Democrat. In 1885 he was appointed by President Cleveland Postmaster of Canton. He was elected Mayor of the city in 1882 and was re-elected the following year. He was instrumental in establishing the present system of water works and in making what is now known as Jones Park one of the most attractive features of the city. Mr. Perkins retired from active business in 1898. Fraternally he is a member of Joseph Hooker Post, G. A. R.; Bohemond Lodge, K. of P., and Anchor Lodge, A. O. U. W. He is a man of high principle and strong character and has been a potent factor in the development of Canton.

PERRINE, J. A., an enterprising and thorough-going farmer of Canton Township, Fulton County, Ill., where he is well known and has many friends, was born in that township April 14, 1861. His parents, James and Barbara (Martin) Perrine, were natives, respectively, of New Jersey and Maryland, and the birthplace of his grandfather, Daniel Perrine, was in the former State. James Perrine accompanied his parents at an early day to Ohio, whence, in 1842, they moved to Illinois, locating in Fulton County, where the grandfather Martin was engaged in farming throughout his life. In 1858 James Martin bought of his father eighty acres of land in Section 17, Canton Township, and at a later period purchased more, until he became the owner of 200 acres in one tract. This he improved and cultivated, making his home there until his death in 1879. He was a diligent, careful and thrifty farmer, an honest man, and enjoyed the respect and good will of all who came in contact with him.

The subject of this sketch attended the Mound School, in his vicinity, when a boy, and there received a good mental training in the elementary branches. He was reared to farm life and continued to live on the home place, where he carried on farming until 1893. In that year he bought the farm where he now lives, consisting of eighty acres in Section 7, Canton Township. This he improved, building a house in 1893, and a new barn in 1901. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising with good results.

In 1882 Mr. Perrine was united in marriage with Eva M. McBlain, who was born in Fulton County, and there in girlhood enjoyed the advantages of the public schools. Five children have resulted from this union, namely: Nellie, James, Carrie, Marie and Charles. Since Mr. Perrine reached the age of twenty-four years he has served with marked credit and fidelity as School Director of his township. In fraternal circles he is identified with the M. W. A. He has worthily maintained the record before made by two generations of his family in Canton Township, and wherever known is highly esteemed.

PHILLIPS, David A.—The possession of a splendidly equipped farm of 200 acres on Section 1, Orion Township, by no means represents the claims of David A. Phillips upon the consideration and appreciation of his fellow townsmen. He is a genial man, who spreads hope and sunshine around him, and is always willing to lighten the load of some one less fortunate than himself. Having only kindly thoughts for others, he has brought his own way the good will and friendship of practically every one that he has ever known, and is unquestionably one of the most popular men in the community. A diversity of occupations had thrown him in contact with all classes of people in the township, and beginning with his arrival here in 1874, and the establishment of his wagon-making shop, he for years attracted work as much by his kindly personal qualities as by his expert skill as a tradesman. Besides wagon-making he had acquired a thorough knowledge of the tanner's, carpenter's and painter's trades and has therefore had at his command many ways of making himself a useful member of society. For several years he has been weaning himself away from work, for he now has arrived at the age of eighty-six and is deserving of the leisure as well as the prosperity which rewards his well directed energy.

Mr. Phillips is a native of New York, where he was born October 18, 1820. On both sides of his family he is descended from men active in the stirring times around 1776, and his paternal grandfather, Luke Phillips, served in the Continental army seven years and seven months. His parents were Nehemiah and Phœbe (Hopkins) Phillips, natives of Rhode Island, the latter a daughter of Stephen Hopkins, and granddaughter of Benoni Hopkins. John Brown, an uncle of Mrs. Phillips, was one of the zealous patriots who assisted in throwing the tea overboard in Boston harbor, and thus precipitated hostilities between the mother country and the colonists. There were nine children born to Nehemiah Phillips and his wife, several of whom are deceased, and some of whom are residents of Wayne County, Mich., to which the family removed at an early day.

While a resident of Fort Wayne, Ind., David A. Phillips married Rebecca I. Knox, to whose economy, cheerfulness and sympathy he attributes a large share of his success. To them were born seven children: Albina, who married William Milam, of Lincoln, Neb.; Annetta, who became the wife of John Brown, of Lane County, Ore.; Orlando, who married Emma Tindall, and settled in Farmington, Ill.; Ira Melvin, who married Belle Loman, of Peoria County, Ill.; Edgar A., who married Ida Opie, and settled on the old homestead; Seward Lincoln, who married Cora Gamble, and located in Peoria County, and Mary E., who remains unmarried. Mr. Phillips has ever been a staunch Republican. He is not connected with any religious organization, but his life is one of uprightness and morality, guided by unchangeably high principles. His association with the township has been for its betterment, and the lesson in industry and patient application which emanated for years from his little shop and still is a pronounced feature of his advanced age, has been far-reaching in its effect.

PHILLIPS, Truxton N., a successful and prosperous carriage-maker of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., where he has spent most of his time since early childhood, was born in the State of New York on June 5, 1849, a son of Henry and Susan (Irons) Phillips, the former a native of New York State and the latter of Rhode Island. Henry Phillips came from New York to Illinois in 1856 and settled in Fulton County, where he secured employment with Milton Hoffman, in Farmington, as a wagon and carriage-maker, remaining as foreman in the Hoffman shop until 1877. He was a thorough master of his trade and an excellent workman. His son, Truxton, received his early mental training in the public schools of Fulton County and worked in the shop with his father until the latter went to Trinidad, Colo., and later to Doniphan, Neb., where he afterwards died.

After the removal of his father from Farmington the subject of this sketch spent three years in Iowa, returning in 1882 and resuming work at his trade. Mr. Phillips possesses the requisite knowledge and skill to construct a carriage in its entirety, his experience having been acquired at a period when it was impossible to ship carriages to the factory for the purpose of repairs. Very few men of his age have the ability to do this owing to the fact that in such factories carriage-building is now done by piece work, and the same man is not engaged on all parts of a carriage. Mr. Phillips owns a comfortable residence on North Main Street, in Farmington. He remembers well some of the destructive fires which have occurred in that town during the last thirty-five years. One of these consumed the two-story plow factory owned by Fawcett, Caywood & Co., having a capacity of forty plows per day, furnishing employment to 125 men, and covering a half block of ground. In this factory Mr. Phillips was employed as a wood-worker and finisher. It was burned down June 23, 1870, and shortly afterwards was rebuilt as a brick structure, 100 by 160 feet in dimensions, and operated until about 1880, when it was demolished. Mr. Phillips planned and built the first hay-loader manufactured at these works. He also constructed the woodwork for the first plow turned out by this firm, which was placed on exhibition at the fair at Canton, Ill., in 1871, and was awarded a premium. Another memorable fire in Farmington was that which destroyed the old school building, December 9, 1890. This was three stories in height and valued at $25,000.

On January 31, 1872, Mr. Phillips was united in marriage with Alice M. Merchant, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., and there in girlhood enjoyed the advantages afforded by the public schools. A son, Walter L., was the offspring of this union.

In the political contests of his town and county Mr. Phillips is not inclined to take an active part, but ordinarily supports the candidates whom he deems best fitted for the offices sought. He does not neglect, however, to inform himself in regard to public affairs and to keep posted concerning current events. He is a man of upright character and honorable dealings and is respected by all.

PHILLIPS, William.—Since his arrival in Fulton County in 1889 William Phillips has been identified with the production of coal in the Canton mines and as evidence that his industry has been well applied has amassed a comfortable competence. Mr. Phillips is one of the representative Englishmen of the town, having the sturdy inclinations and more than the average adaptability of those of his countrymen who seek citizenship under the Stars and Stripes. He takes a keen interest in politics and while in no sense an office-seeker, was elected Alderman of the Third Ward in the spring of 1903. His social inclinations find an outlet as a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and his business is advanced by identification with the Miners' Union.

RA Swill

Mr. Phillips comes from one of the interesting places in England, having been born in 1859 in the forest of Dean, Gloucestershire, West Midland, England. The forest of Dean, largely composed of crown land, is situated between the Lower Wye and the Severn Rivers, southeast of the famous cathedral town of Gloucester, and is renowned for its deposits of coal and iron and its oak and beech trees. Through long experience in the mines of Gloucester Mr. Phillips came to America as a practical coal miner, a man whose opinions and judgment could be of immediate use to the community. In his native land he established a home of his own in 1884, marrying Jane Harris, a native also of Gloucester, and of which union there are four children: Annie, John W., Emily and Ruth. Mr. Phillips is esteemed for his kindly nature, public spirit, upright character and thrift and for the business sagacity employed in the development of one of the important natural resources of the community.

PIGG, Lewis P.—The capacity for finding enjoyment in what one has to do, of being able to invest one's labor with interest and enthusiasm, are essentials of success which have been incorporated in the career of Lewis P. Pigg, owner of a valuable stock farm of 288 acres on Section 9, Bernadotte Township. Although Mr. Pigg's possession of this property dates only from 1899, it already reflects the ideas and individuality of its manager, as against the blind following of methods of operation practiced by his predecessor. The admirer of high-grade stock must needs feel in his element on this fine farm, for here is much to stimulate his interest and increase his information. Shropshire sheep, Percheron horses, Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs attain perfection under the best possible conditions of housing and feeding, and general farming is conducted with the most modern of agricultural devices.

Mr. Pigg was born September 18, 1852, on Section 5, Bernadotte Township, a son of Anderson and Mary (Sanders) Pigg, the former born in Tennessee in 1806 and the latter in Baltimore, Md., August 6, 1805. James Pigg, the paternal grandfather, moved to Casey County, Ky., and there died about 1865, having, in the meantime, entirely lost his eyesight. November 23, 1830, Anderson Pigg, accompanied by Messrs. Randall and Beadles, removed to Fulton County, Ill., settling in Bernadotte Township. Formerly Mr. Pigg had engaged in farming entirely, but here he engaged in various occupations while becoming accustomed to his strange and unsettled surroundings. He eventually bought the farm on Section 5, where Lewis P. was born and where his death occurred in 1893. He was a quiet, unassuming man, an old-line Jackson Democrat and attended the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was the parent of four children, of whom James S., born in July, 1843, died May 30, 1864; Lydia, widow of James Kirkpatrick, of McDonough County, Ill., and Permelia J. (deceased) was the wife of Wallace Knock, of Bunch, Kans.

Lewis P. Pigg has spent his entire life on a farm. In youth he attended the public schools, but it is safe to assume that he has learned more from observation and experience than from books. He remained under the parental roof until his thirtieth year, and as an independent farmer was sufficiently successful to justify the establishment of a home of his own, which he did after his marriage, in February, 1883, to Laura Whiting. Of this union there were three children: William, born in 1885; Inez, born September 21, 1887, and died the same year, and Frances, born April 17, 1889. Mrs. Pigg died at the birth of the last named child. On February 1, 1895, Mr. Pigg was united in marriage to Cora E. Freiley, born in Bernadotte Township, April 28, 1868. Of this union there are five children: Irma, born October 27, 1896; Wayne, born March 19, 1897; Freiley, born August 27, 1899; Dwight, born June 20, 1900, and Harold, born in February, 1905. Mr. Pigg is an uncompromising Democrat, but inclination never has led him into the vortex of political activity. He has led a busy, temperate life, one in which an effort always has been made to see the bright side of things, to cultivate the best thoughts and wisely utilize his opportunities.

PIPER, Abner (deceased). For many years the name of Abner Piper was connected with a flourishing boot and shot business in the city of Canton. The town has known no more stable and reliable merchant. He was one of the colony of retired men, a few of whom are living on borrowed time, but as he stood upon the threshold of ninety years, there was little to indicate the physical and general disabilities which are supposed to accompany such generous extension of human existence. Mr. Piper was born in Phillipston, Worcester County, Mass., April 1, 1817, a son of Artemus and Mary (Hammond) Piper, grandson of Abel Piper, great-grandson of Noah Piper and great-grandson of the establisher of the Piper family on American soil.

In Scotland, where the Piper family was known for generations, was laid the foundation of the rugged health and sterling characteristics ever associated with those bearing the name. Abel Piper was an inn-keeper by occupation, and after he returned from the Revolutionary War his tavern was a popular meeting place for those who had carried the musket in the momentous struggle for independence. He was something more than a soldier, gaining, by his courage and knowledge of military tactics, the rank of Lieutenant of Minutemen. The surroundings of this old-time inn still are fresh in the mind of the grandson of the colonial Lieutenant, who, as a child, often visited the well conducted hostelry.

Of an entirely different occupation was Artemus Piper, who in early life became a sailor, and later was a teacher of navigation. He was born at Gerry—later changed to Phillipston—Mass., in 1783 and during the War of 1812 was in command of a revenue cutter, from the deck of which he witnessed the fight between the "Boxer" and "Enterprise." Mr. Piper married Mary Hammond, daughter of Paul and Anna (Davis) Hammond, who was a native of Falmouth, Mass.

Mr. Hammond also commanded a craft during the War of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Piper were the parents of six children, the order of their birth being as follows: Julia Ann, Artemus D., Ambrose H., Phoebe Rose, Abner and Betsy Catherine.

Abner Piper was reared on a farm, the environment of which he outgrew, in time turning his attention to the trade of shoemaking. While learning his trade he continued to work a part of the time in the harvest fields, but from his nineteenth year devoted his energies entirely to the shoe business. In Templeton, Mass., he became a cutter in one of the large shoe establishments, and in 1838 came west to Galena, Ill., to visit a brother-in-law. While in Galena he was interested in merchandising for a short time, but soon after came to Canton, later moving to Ohio, and from there returned to his native State, where he was employed in a shoe manufactory until locating in Canton with his family in 1865. Still he did not entirely sever his connection with the manufactory in the East, but as foreman returned each year to superintend its affairs, eventually, however, giving up his Canton home, as the strain of frequent travel proved too great. From 1870 until 1876 he lived in the Bay State, and then located permanently in Canton, where he established the boot and shoe store so long and favorably connected with his name. He became a steady and conservative element in business, evidencing those personal qualities which laid the foundation of the substantial commonwealths of the New England States.

The marriage of Mr. Piper to Betsy M., daughter of Paul and Catherine (Mason) Hammond, occurred in Sidney, Me., in 1847. The Hammond family has been long established in America, connected originally with Concord, Mass. There are three children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Piper, of whom Warren H. married Sarah C. Smalley and has five children—Abner C., Harry R., Betsy M., Bertie and Mary. Warren H. married, as his second wife, Ellen S. Stevens. The two youngest sons, Carlos A. and Vernon A., are prominent business men of Canton. The latter is a prominent fraternalist and for years has been connected with the Olive Branch Lodge, No. 15, I. O. O. F. Mr. Piper's death occurred at Canton, Ill., February 5, 1894. His life was crowned with financial success, but what is more to be desired, he set an example of upright, noble and moderate living which won for him the respect and good will of the entire community. Few of our venerable men exceeded him in grace of character, kindness of disposition, usefulness and companionable disposition.

PIPPITT, Robert.—One of the progressive farmers of Fulton County of the younger generation, Robert Pippitt is the son of a very early pioneer, John Pippitt. His father, who was born January 8, 1823, came to Fulton County in 1840, settling in Union Township during that year and later purchased the land which, by years of persevering industry, he transformed into the family homestead. The elder Pippitt was a native of Ohio, while his wife (formerly Elizabeth Talant) was born in Tennessee, September 18, 1832.

Robert Pippitt, the subject of this sketch, was born on the old home farm in Union Township, August 16, 1866, and has been a resident of that locality all his life. He assisted his father in the performance of the labors usually falling to the lot of a farmer's son, meanwhile attending the district schools, and from them receiving such education as he could, until at the age of twenty-four years he was qualified to found a home of his own.

On February 16, 1890, Mr. Pippitt was married, in Union Township, to Christiana Richardson, who was born in that township just twenty years before. Of this union seven children have been born, namely: Ralph, Anna E., Elizabeth, Farley, Mary, Clara and Alice. Although Mr. Pippitt is a Democrat, he has confined his politics to faithfully voting his ticket, the care of his family and the proper conduct of his farming operations consuming all his time, energies and abilities.

PITTMAN, David W., a well-known farmer and grain-dealer of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., and one of the prominent and successful business men of his community, was born at Independence, Putman Township, Fulton County, May 6, 1861, a son of John and Caroline (Ayers) Pittman, natives of Harrisonville, Bedford County, Pa. The paternal grandfather, Richard Pittman, was also born in that State. The great-grandfather on the same side was a native of Scotland, and the great-grandmother was of German descent. John Pittman, the father, was born in 1821, while his father, Richard Pittman, was born in 1791 and died in 1874. Richard Pittman had a family of three daughters and one son. The daughters died between the ages of sixty-eight and eighty-two years.

John Pittman settled in Fulton County in 1857, locating in Putman Township, where he bought a farm of 240 acres, which he owned at the time of his death, eighty acres of it being the home place. For many years he was a teacher in his native State. His wife, Caroline, passed away December 25, 1864. Their union was the source of seven children, namely: Richard E.; George S., deceased; Mary, deceased wife of James W. Mason, a resident of Canton, Fulton County; Elizabeth, wife of Herbert Sipes, a farmer in Waterford Township; Jacob, of Cuba, Ill.; David W. and William F., deceased.

John Pittman married as his second wife Elizabeth Keims, this union resulting in three children: Charles L., a farmer in Putman Township; Frank O., a farmer and hardware merchant in Cuba, Ill., and Jennie E., wife of Jasper DeWitt, a farmer in Joshua Township, Fulton County. The decease of Mr. John Pittman, the father of this family, occurred August 30, 1905. Beginning in Fulton County with limited means, he had, by industry, frugality and perseverance, accumulated a handsome competency. In politics he was a Democrat and filled with credit nearly every office in his township, his fellow townsmen insisting on imposing public trusts upon him as long as he would accept them. For many years he discharged the duties of Supervisor. He was public-spirited, always identified with the best interests of the county. Church and school alike ever found in him a strong advocate. He was a man of absolute integrity, his word being considered as good as his bond.

David W. Pittman, the immediate subject of this sketch, was reared on the paternal farm, where he made his home until he was twenty-four years old. He meanwhile received his mental training in the district schools and has passed his entire life in Fulton County. In 1885 he engaged in the grain business at Civer Station, remaining there one year; then spent one year at Bryant, Fulton County, and in 1888 located in Lewistown, Ill., where he devotes most of his attention to buying and shipping grain. In addition to this he owns and manages a farm of 250 acres in Sections 10 and 15, Waterford Township. His business and farming operations have proved successful, and he is ranked as one of the substantial men in Fulton County.

On September 8, 1886, Mr. Pittman was united in marriage with Mattie J. Anderson, a native of Illinois, and a daughter of William and Sarah (Martin) Anderson. Six children have been the offspring of this union, namely: Mary E., Hazel M., David E., Ross F., Verna L. and John W., all of whom have received a thorough mental training in the schools of Lewistown.

In politics Mr. Pittman is a Democrat and has held office as a member of the Board of Review of Fulton County and served as a member of the Lewistown City Council. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P., M. W. A. and Court of Honor.

PLATTENBURG, William D., a prominent bank official of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that city April 21, 1862, and is a son of William D. and Margaret J. (Ward) Plattenburg, of whom the former was born in Wellsburg, W. Va., and the latter in Circleville, Ohio. His father came to Illinois in 1854, and was engaged in the lumber business under the firm name of Plattenburg & Son for about twenty years, and subsequently conducted a boot and shoe store for thirteen years. He died June 14, 1899.

In his youth William D. Plattenburg attended school in Canton. In 1882 he went into the First National Bank of that city as clerk, and became Cashier of the institution in 1892. He is also Treasurer of the Canton Union School District, and is reputed to be a man of excellent business capacity.

On January 22, 1897, Mr. Plattenburg was married to Adele Shepley, who was born in Fairview, Ill., and received her early education in Canton. One child, Virginia, is the offspring of this union. In politics Mr. Plattenburg is a supporter of the Republican party and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. and A. M. and the K. of P.

PLUMER, Thomas R., M. D.—What higher relation can a man bear to the community in which he lives than does that member of it who, with knowledge gained through long and diligent research and with skill perfected by years of ripe experience, devotes himself to the task of staying the ravages of disease, mitigating the pangs of suffering and restoring the stricken to health? And then, when the faithful physician supplements high professional qualifications with noble personal traits of character, he rises into an exalted sphere of activity, and his life is a boon to his fellowmen. Such a life has been that of the subject of this record, Dr. Thomas R. Plumer, one of the prominent and respected residents of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., for the past seventeen years.

Born on April 3, 1830, in Westmoreland County, Pa., he is a son of William and Sarah (Robertson) Plumer, natives of the Keystone State. William Plumer was a sturdy and thrifty tiller of the soil, upright in his dealings, respected by his neighbors and prosperous in his vocation. He was the father of a family consisting of twelve children, nine of whom were boys. Four of the offspring of his union with Sarah Robertson, a most estimable and devoted mother, are still living.

The subject of this sketch spent his boyhood and youth, as most farmers' sons are wont to do, turning his hand to whatever task was required of him by way of assistance in his father's farming operations. His early mental training was obtained in the public schools in the vicinity of his home in Pennsylvania, and he studiously utilized every opportunity to improve his mind up to the time of beginning his preparation for a professional career. He then commenced the study of medicine with Dr. A. G. Marsh, of New Richmond, Ohio, and after completing his studies with Dr. Marsh entered into practice in that State in 1857. In 1859 he moved to Illinois and established himself in practice at Smithville, Peoria County, where he remained until 1868. In that year he went back to Ohio, where he remained for one summer, but returning in the fall to Illinois, began practice in Trivoli, Peoria County, remaining there until 1889. At that period he bought out the business of Dr. Albert D. Gove, M. D., of Farmington, and has there been engaged in practice ever since. In recent years he has taken into partnership with him his son William and Dr. Frank C. Robb. With the exception of the summer spent in Ohio in 1868 he has practiced medicine in the vicinity of Farmington since the time when he first located at Smithville.

He is still attending to his professional duties, but is contemplating a withdrawal from active duty in this line in the early future. At present he is the oldest practicing physician in this section of the State.

On May 3, 1860, Dr. Plumer was united in marriage with Temperance L. Swickard, who was born in Jefferson, Ohio. She departed this life in 1874. In 1882 the Doctor entered into matrimony for the second time, wedding Henrietta Porter, of Pennsylvania. His first wife bore him five children, namely: Jacob S., deceased; Alexander, who is engaged in the practice of veterinary surgery; William, who is associated with his father in practice; John A., also a physician, and Mary S., deceased. Politically Dr. Plumer has been for many years identified with the Republican party and in fraternal affiliation is a member of the I. O. O. F. He has always been held in high esteem in Fulton and Peoria Counties as a skillful and faithful physician and a public-spirited and useful citizen.

POE, George Oliver (deceased), formerly a well known and much respected citizen of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that place January 28, 1855, a son of George R. Poe and wife, natives of Maryland. James R. Poe was a farmer by occupation and followed that pursuit in Maryland and Illinois throughout his active life. In boyhood George R. Poe attended the public schools of Canton and spent his youth in working on a farm. At the age of twenty-one years he learned the trade of cigar-maker and was connected with that business until his death. For a considerable period he acted in the capacity of foreman of the W. O. Dean Cigar Factory, in Canton. In this position he proved his efficiency and the fidelity with which he served his employer's interests was generally recognized. He died April 9, 1897.

In January, 1883, Mr. Poe was united in marriage at Canton, Ill., with Alice Middlekauff, a daughter of Simon P. and Joanna (Nuenemaker) Middlekauff. In Maryland Simon P. Middlekauff was engaged in agricultural pursuits, but when he moved to Illinois in 1877 he withdrew from active work and located in Canton, where he lived in retirement. One child resulted from the union of George O. Poe and his wife, namely: Ralph W., who is a tinner by trade.

In politics Mr. Poe was a supporter of the Republican party, and as a citizen maintained an excellent standing. In private and domestic life he was dutiful and exemplary and enjoyed the confidence and respect of many friends. Mrs. Poe still survives, and is very highly regarded by a wide circle of acquaintances on account of her estimable traits of character.

POISOT, Albert A.—Prominent among the progressive farmers and stock-raisers of Fulton County, Albert A. Poisot has raised himself to enviable distinction by specializing along the latter department of agriculture, and now is without a rival as the largest stock-buyer and feeder in his section of the State. Mr. Poisot is a wide-awake and invaluable citizen of Avon, near where his entire life has been spent, and where he was born on a farm October 16, 1866. His father, Francis Poisot, was born in France June 10, 1838, and as a young man came to the United States to profit by its larger opportunities, eventually becoming a part of the best country element of Fulton County. With few worldly assets at the outset of his career, he made steady advance in the new country, finally establishing a home of his own by marrying Martha Jane Hovell, who was born in Fulton County November 14, 1840.

Albert A. Poisot inherited French thrift and resourcefulness from the paternal side of his family, and as a youth profited by the public schools and those opportunities and diversions which fall to the lot of the well-born and well-bred country lad. A natural trader, and with a keen appreciation of good stock, he applied himself to scientific research in connection therewith and today is a recognized authority in this important field. While rising to his present position of assured financial and general importance, he has acquired 1,000 acres of valuable land and owns besides a home within the town of Avon.

Mr. Poisot has never sought political honors, notwithstanding that he is a stanch supporter of the Democratic party. His religious preferences are with the Universalist Church, to the charities and general support of which he is a generous contributor. For the past twelve years he has maintained a home of his own, having married December 25, 1895, in Union Township, Fulton County, Nevie Babbitt, a native of Warren County, Ill., born March 17, 1875. Of this union there are two children—Ruth and Phyllis.

POISOT, Francis.—Underlying and directing the more than average agricultural success of Francis Poisot is that far-sighted and reasonable thrift which characterizes the peasantry of France, and which, notwithstanding the glitter and color and seeming extravagance and magnificence of those in high places of Paris and the provinces, yet obtains as a steady current, and by its very existence making possible that fascination of national life which charms and attracts the less volatile people of the world. Transferred to the crude and undeveloped regions of the United States, this same capacity for saving, for making little go far, for philosophically accepting whatever of hardship and discouragement accompanies one's struggles toward fortune, have made of the transplanted Frenchman one of the most desirable and commendable of citizens.

Mr. Poisot was born in France June 10, 1838, a son of John and Mary (Simney) Poisot, also born in France. When Francis was five years old, in 1843, he came with his parents to America, and the same year located in Fulton County, where the father purchased a farm of 140 acres. The following year a return trip to France was planned, but upon arriving in Pennsylvania on the way to New York, the father was taken ill and died and was buried in a lonely grave, far from friends or kindred. The rest of the family eventually crossed the ocean to their native land, and Francis in 1854 returned with his mother to Fulton County, locating upon the farm purchased by his father ten years before. With this property as a nucleus he built up a substantial farming enterprise, made many practical improvements, always keeping his earnings ahead of his expenditures. That he now owns a thousand acres in Fulton County argues well for his business sagacity and resource. For years he has made a specialty of high grade stock, but of necessity his standards can be maintained only by farmers of large and abundant means. He has outstripped in land accumulation practically all of his contemporaries in the county, and is one of its largest individual tax-payers.

A rarely beautiful devotion to his aged mother, until her death in 1864, indicated to all who knew him the character and loyalty of Mr. Poisot. The following year, November 21, 1865, in Knox County, Ill., Alexis Poisot, brother of Francis, was united in marriage to Martha Jane Hovell, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., November 14, 1840, and who is the devoted mother of three children, Albert being the sole survivor of the children by the first marriage. In political preference Mr. Poisot is a Democrat, but he has no official aspirations. In religion he is a member of the Catholic Church. At the age of fifty-eight Mr. Poisot is one of the young, energetic men of the community, who, nevertheless, is inclined to rest upon his honors, and permit his son, Albert, to assume the responsibility of managing the large estate. The wealth and resource of the county have unfolded to no more deserving recognizer of opportunity, or to any who have contributed more substantially to its permanent well-being.

POISOT, Mrs. Martha Jane (Hovell).—One of the oldest and most substantial families connected with Union Township is that of which Mrs. Martha Jane (Hovell) Poisot is a worthy representative. As Martha Jane Hovell this estimable woman passed her girlhood on the farm of her father, Thomas Hovell, where her birth occurred November 14, 1840, and where she was trained in those housewifely arts which have since contributed to her success as wife, mother and home-maker. Her education was that of the district schools, which she attended during the winter season and which, with her home work, her church associations, and the diversions afforded in the neighborhood, contributed to a youth of interest and usefulness.

Too much cannot be said of the energy and resource of Thomas Hovell, who was born in England February 14, 1811, and who came while still young in years to America, bringing with him as assets his health, his ambition and his determination to succeed. He was united in marriage with Prudence Reynolds, who was born in Indiana May 25, 1820, and with whom he settled on a farm in Fulton County, Ill., then a thinly populated region. He was not the kind of man to plod along in a narrow rut, and with the same amount of produce year after year, so in time he added to his possessions until he owned 1,400 acres of land. His success indicated large business as well as general ability, and his home became one of the best equipped and most paying in the county, and to participate actively in many of its forward movements. He was a staunch supporter of education and religion and was an active member of the Universalist Church. Mrs. Hovell died May 5, 1894, and Mr. Hovell lived until November 6, 1897.

The marriage of Mrs. Jane Hovell and Francis Poisot occurred in Knox County, Ill., November 21, 1865, and of the union there are two children, Netta and Louise. Mrs. Poisot has gathered around her a large circle of friends and she is much beloved for her many fine and womanly traits of character.

POLHEMUS, Garrett V. (deceased), whose farming experience in Fulton County, Ill., commenced in the pioneer days, and whose residence in that county extended over a period of sixty-four years, was born in Somerset County, N. J., October 28, 1821, a son of Daniel G. and Maria (Voorhees) Polhemus, natives of New Jersey, where the father was born, November 21, 1795. His marriage to Maria Voorhees took place January 21, 1821. Daniel G. Polhemus was a farmer by occupation and a son of Garrett and Jane (Hageman) Polhemus. In youth he received a common school education in New Jersey, and after being engaged in farming in that State for several years, made a journey to Illinois in 1837. Two years later he brought his family from the East to Fulton County, where he ultimately became the owner of 517 acres of land in Fairview Township. There he carried on general farming during the remainder of his life, raising also considerable stock. In politics he was a Republican and in his religious associations a member of the Reformed Church. To him and his wife were born four boys and six girls.

Garrett V. Polhemus attended the public schools of New Jersey in boyhood and at the age of sixteen years accompanied his father to Fulton County. In early manhood he commenced farming for himself and continued thus during his active life. His labors were attended with uniform success, and he was at one time the owner of 258 acres of land on Section 28, Fairview Township, some of which was afterward included within the limits of the town of Fairview. His farming career in Fulton County was in progress before the advent of railroads, and he often hauled wheat to Chicago, selling it at fifty cents per bushel. He devoted a considerable portion of his time to raising and feeding stock.

On December 7, 1848, Mr. Polhemus was married at Fairview, Ill., to Jane V. Brokaw, a native of New Jersey, and a daughter of William and Helena (Ditmers) Brokaw. This union resulted in a family of five boys and three girls, of whom six are still living, namely: Henry, who resides at Aurora, Ill.; Helen (Mrs. Demott), whose home is in Crookston, Minn.; John, of Norman, Okla.; Emily (Mrs. Cox), of Canton, Ill.; William, who occupies the homestead property; and Abraham L., whose residence is in Peoria. William, who was born in 1857, remained on the homestead farm, which he now rents and has charge of.

Mr. Polhemus remained on his home farm in Fairview Township for forty-four years, in 1894 removing to Fairview Village, where he erected a residence inside the corporation limits similar to that which he had occupied on the farm, and here he continued to reside until his death on February 15, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Polhemus celebrated their "silver wedding" on the home farm in December, 1873, and their "golden wedding" twenty-five years later (1898) in their home at Fairview, the event being commemorated by the presence of a large number of friends, including two—Mr. Garrett Voorhees and Mrs. Matilda Wyckoff—who had witnessed the marriage ceremony fifty years previous. On Mrs. Polhemus' side of the family were celebrated three golden weddings and on Mr. Polhemus' side two similar events. Mr. Polhemus' religious connection was with the Reformed Church, and politically, he was a supporter of the Republican party. He held the office of Supervisor three years, and for fifteen consecutive, and three later years, served as School Director. His memory is warmly cherished by his family and the many friends who knew his excellent traits of character, and his record will long be held in honor as that of one of the most upright and useful among the early settlers of Fulton County.

POLHEMUS, William B., who is a son of Garrett V. and Jane V. (Brokaw) Polhemus, was born in Fairview Township in 1857, where he has since lived on the homestead farms, of which he still retains the management. He comes of sturdy pioneer stock, his grandparents, Daniel G. and Maria (Voorhees) Polhemus, were natives of New Jersey, the grandfather having been born November 21, 1795, and his marriage with Maria Voorhees was solemnized January 21, 1821. He was a farmer by occupation and received a common school education in New Jersey, coming to Illinois in 1837. Two years thereafter he brought his family from New Jersey to Fulton County, and later became the owner of more than 500 acres of land in Fairview Township, where he continued his farming operations until his death. The family consisted of four boys and six girls. He was a member of the Reformed Church.

Garrett V. Polhemus, the father of William B., was educated in the public schools of New Jersey, and at the age of sixteen years came with his parents to Fulton County. He followed in the same life vocation as his father, was uniformly successful and continued as an agriculturist to the time of his death. At one time he owned 258 acres of land, a portion of which is embraced in the present limits of the village of Fairview. In his earlier farming experiences he, like all others of the locality, labored under the disadvantage of a lack of transportation, and often hauled wheat to Chicago, where he received only fifty cents per bushel. He was a veteran of the Civil War.

G. V. Polhemus was married December 7, 1848, at Fairview, Ill., to Jane V. Brokaw, a native of New Jersey and a daughter of William and Helena (Dithrens) Brokaw. This union resulted in a family of five boys and three girls, of whom six are still living, namely: Henry, who resides at Aurora, Ill.; Helen (Mrs. Demott), whose home is in Crookston, Minn.; John, of Norman, Okla.; Emily (Mrs. Cox), of Fairview, Ill.; William, the subject of this sketch, who occupies the homestead property; and Abraham L., whose residence is in Peoria. William, who was born in 1857, always remained on the homestead farms, which he now rents and has charge of. The father of this family passed away February 15, 1903. His religious connection was with the Reformed Church. Politically he was a supporter of the Republican party. He held the office of Supervisor three years and for fifteen years served as School Director. His memory is warmly cherished by his family, and by the many friends who knew his excellent traits of character and his record will long be held in honor as that of one of the most upright and useful among the early settlers of Fulton County.

POLLITT, James T.—One of the oldest and most respected residents of Fulton County, Ill., who has spent nearly three score and ten years within its borders, and is still an honored occupant of the farm in Section 1, Liverpool Township, to which he was brought by his father in the pioneer days which tried men's souls, was born in Lewis County, Ky., June 19, 1835. He is a son of James and Mary (Thomas) Pollitt, the former a native of Somerset County, Md., where he was born July 20, 1798, and the latter, of Fauquier County, Va., where she was born March 16, 1802. The Pollitt family is of Scotch-Irish origin. Jonathan Pollitt, the grandfather, moved at an early period from Maryland to Lewis County, Ky., where he and his wife died. In the fall of 1835, James Pollitt journeyed with his family to Fulton County, Ill., and settled near the City of Lewistown. In 1837 he bought the farm where his son, James T., now lives, in Section 1, Liverpool Township, where he spent the remainder of his days, dying February 14, 1875, at the age of seventy-six years, his wife surviving him until May 20, 1880. They were both held in high esteem by their neighbors and acquaintances, and, although James Pollitt was a blunt, outspoken man, he was so thoroughly upright and equitable that he commanded the respect of young and old alike. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: Alexander H., who died at the age of sixty-three years; Alvin A., a farmer in East Liverpool Township; George and Jonathan, deceased; Mary, deceased wife of John Farris, also deceased; Francis M., who died in 1874; James T.; Sarah A., deceased, who was the wife of Wesley Brinegar, a resident of Canton, Ill.; Susan, who died in childbirth, the infant son also dying; and Nancy A., wife of Martin Hughes, residing near Bridge Station, Fulton County.

James T. Pollitt was an infant when his parents settled in Fulton County. He was reared on the farm where he now lives, and received his education in the subscription schools of the primitive settlement. His whole life has been devoted to farming in Liverpool Township, and in this pursuit his industrious habits, systematic methods and careful management have been productive of satisfactory results. On his farm of 165 acres his family have grown to manhood and womanhood, married, and moved to homes of their own. Mr. Pollitt still supervises the farming operations, and raises the best bred stock, including Norman horses, Shorthorn cattle, Poland-China hogs and a good grade of mules.

On June 25, 1874, Mr. Pollitt was united in marriage with Arilla Beckstead, a daughter of George Beckstead, a native of Canada, who was for some years connected with a packing house in Canton, Ill., and afterward moved to a farm in Liverpool Township, where he died. Mr. and Mrs. Pollitt have had six children, as follows: Harriet C., wife of Theodore Black, a farmer in Liverpool Township; one who died in infancy; James A., who married Martha Kendall, and died in 1896, leaving two sons—James T. and Jesse B.; Ambrose D., who married Martha A., widow of his brother, James A., by whom he had five children—Arilla A., Polly K., Dorothy D., Goldie and Hobart R.; Mary F., wife of James D. Raker, a farmer in Liverpool Township, who has had four children—Ambrose D., Hattie and Georgia (twins), and James Robert; Georgia (who died in infancy), and Benjamin E., who looks after the home farm. He is a member of Maples Mills Camp, No. 2027, M. W. A.

In politics, Mr. Pollitt has been a Republican, since the organization of that party. Originally he was a Whig, and cast his first presidential vote for Millard Fillmore. Since that period he has voted for the Republican candidates, State and national. He has always taken a deep interest in local affairs, warmly supporting church and school work, and has served as School Director. He has been identified with the development of Fulton County for sixty-eight years and has been prominent in the advocacy of all measures inaugurated for the general welfare. In the wonderful transformation which has completely changed the face of nature in the region to which he was brought as an infant, he has borne a manly and faithful part, and is now reaping the reward of many toilsome seasons, conscious of duty done, and enjoying the good will of all who know him. His worthy and estimable wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

POLLITT, Oliver P.—A very enterprising and prosperous farmer and stock-raiser, living in Section 14, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., who is regarded as one of the prominent representatives of the agricultural element in Fulton County, was born in Liverpool Township December 7, 1848. He is a son of Alvin and Emily (Estes) Pollitt, both of whom are living in the township named, where the former is engaged in farming. They became the parents of nine children, as follows: Oliver P.; Laura, wife of Abner Garrens, a farmer in Liverpool Township; John A., a farmer in the same township; James T., who lives in Pekin, Ill., a sketch of whose life is contained in this work; Alexander, also farming in Liverpool Township; William, of Brereton, Fulton County; Charles, a farmer in Banner Township; Della J., wife of Oscar McGraw, of Canton, Ill.; and one who died in infancy.

Oliver P. Pollitt was reared to farm life, and received his education in the district schools of his neighborhood. He has always made Liverpool Township his home except for two years spent in Decatur County, Iowa. For several years, he worked at farming by the month. After his marriage he located in the southwest part of the township, where he made his home until 1883, in that year moving to his present home farm of eighty acres. He now owns 320 acres in Section 14, and eighty acres in Sections 22 and 23, a total of 400 acres. On the home farm he keeps the best grades of horses, cattle and hogs, and, in general farming his intelligent, systematic and progressive operations are productive of the most satisfactory results. He is ranked among the notably successful and substantial farmers of Fulton County.

On April 9, 1876, Mr. Pollitt was united in marriage with Mary C. McElwee, who was born near Ripley, Brown County, Ohio, March 7, 1843. She is a daughter of George and Hannah (Bowman) McElwee, natives of that State, where her father was born in Adams County, and her mother, in Brown County. The family settled in Fulton County in 1865, locating near the famous Depler Well, in Lewistown. In 1866 they sold that farm, and purchased a place in Putman Township, where Mrs. McElwee died March 9, 1883. After her death, her husband made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Pollitt, and died April 6, 1892. They were the parents of the following children: Mary C.; Elizabeth, who died at the age of twenty-six years; Lydia, who died when fifteen years old; George, who died at the age of thirty-seven years; Francis M., of Macon, Neb., who married Mrs. Nellie Randall; Minerva M., wife of Albert Roberts, of Canton, Ill.; Amanda, wife of Jacob Anderson, of Pacific Junction, Iowa; Hattie, deceased wife of John Lewis, who lives with their six children, in Oklahoma; and Benjamin F., a physician of Wilcox, Neb.

Mr. and Mrs. Pollitt are the parents of four children, namely: George A., born October 10, 1876, a farmer in Banner Township, Fulton County; Madge M., born October 14, 1880; James G., born December 28, 1884, who lives with his parents, and Herbert, who died in infancy. George A. married Eva M. Beckstead, and has had three children; Clifford B., Mary M., and one who died in infancy. Madge M. was married to Sherman Stockman March 7, 1900, and has three children—Orval C., born March 17, 1901; Oral C., July 18, 1902, and Hazel, April 24, 1906. For seventeen years, Mrs. Pollitt was a successful teacher in the schools of Ohio and Fulton County, and is a lady of culture and rare strength of character.

In politics, Mr. Pollitt is an earnest and in-fluent Republican. He has held the office of Tax Collector for two years, and that of Assessor for a like period, giving perfect satisfaction to his constituents in both positions. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., being a member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 734, of Canton. Mr. Pollitt is a man of the highest character, and enjoys the sincere respect of a wide circle of acquaintances.

POOL, Edgar P., a well known builder and contractor of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born on a farm about three and a half miles east of that city December 1, 1853. His parents, Andrew and Julia (Everett) Pool, were both Kentuckians, and came from their native State to the locality named in 1850. Here Edgar P. was reared, was educated in the district school of his locality, and early mastered the trade of carpentry, which, with the years, has developed into a contracting business of some proportions. Mr. Pool spent the years from 1882 to 1886 in Kansas and Nebraska, but with that exception has continuously resided in or near Canton. In politics he has always voted for Republicanism, and his religious connections have been with the Presbyterian Church. Fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, in which he has held the position of Banker.

On November 15, 1887, Mr. Pool was married to Miss Emma Johnson, who was born on the old Kelly property near St. David, where the marriage ceremony occurred. Her parents were John W. and Elizabeth (Johnson) Johnson, her father being one of the most prominent Republicans of Central Illinois. Mr. Johnson served four terms in the State Legislature, from 1894 to 1900 and 1902 to 1904. Mr. and Mrs. Pool have no children of their own, but when she was six years of age Morna was welcomed into their family as if she had been of their flesh and blood. Morna Johnson Pool, as she is known, is a bright girl employed in the Canton telephone office.

POOL, Lawrence J.—A well known and prosperous stock-raiser, whose farm is situated in Fairview Township, Fulton County, Ill., is a native of Union Township, in the same county, where he was born January 4, 1862, a son of Thomas and Charlotte Pool, whose birthplace was also in Union Township, and whose lives are portrayed on another page of this work. The occupation of Thomas Pool was that of a farmer, in which his industry, thrift and persevering toil brought him deserved success, and he and his estimable helpmate were blessed with six children.

In his boyhood, Lawrence J. Pool enjoyed the advantages of the district schools in the vicinity of his home, meanwhile helping his father to carry on the work of the farm. He remained with his parents until he reached maturity, and since attaining his majority, has been most of the time engaged in farming and stock-raising. For three years, however, from 1894 to 1897, he conducted a livery business in Fairview, Fulton County. Since 1900, he has devoted his attention exclusively to the raising of stock and his operations have been attended with abundant success.

On October 16, 1889, Mr. Pool was united in marriage with Anna Van Lew, the ceremony occurring in Union Township, Fulton County. Mrs. Pool was born in Joshna Township, that county, January 13, 1862, and there received her mental training in the public schools. She is a daughter of William and Elizabeth Van Lew, natives of New Jersey. Mr. and Mrs. Pool are the parents of a daughter, whose name is Nellie, and who is a bright and interesting girl.

On political issues, Mr. Pool is arrayed on the side of the Republican party. He has served his Township in the offices of Road Commissioner and School Director, giving entire satisfaction to his constituents. His religious convictions are in accordance with the creed of the Congregational Church. The fraternal connection of Mr. Pool is with the I. O. O. F., in which he is a prominent and active member. He is an intelligent observer of current events, and has a wide acquaintance throughout his section of Fulton County, and wherever known, is regarded as a progressive, upright and useful citizen.

POOL, Thomas, now living in comfortable retirement near Avon, Fulton County, Ill., where he is surrounded by hosts of friends who solicitously regard his welfare, was formerly one of the best known farmers in that county, in which he has spent nearly three-score years of his busy and useful career. Mr. Pool was born in LaPorte County, Ind., March 31, 1833, a son of John and Elizabeth (Fulton) Pool, natives of Virginia and New York, respectively. His father was born March 9, 1806, and his mother, August 29, 1810. Both were persons of excellent family connections, and both were held in high esteem by the people of the various localities where they successively resided. The entire life of John Pool was devoted to farming. At an early period he made his home in the State of Indiana, whence he moved with his family to Illinois, settling in Fulton County, October 2, 1843. He bought a farm of eighty acres in Buckheart Township, on which he made the necessary improvements, and successfully carried on farming for nine years. In 1852 he established his home in Farmington Township and continued farming there until 1856, moving then to Union Township, where he died May 7, 1885. His wife passed away in 1889. To them were born five children, namely: Rebecca A., Thomas, Joseph, Sarah, and John.

Thomas Pool, of this family and subject of this sketch, was reared to farm life, and in boyhood attended the district schools of his birthplace in Indiana, and later those of Fulton County. He accompanied his parents in their various changes of location, and in 1856 commenced farming for himself on the place where he spent the remainder of his active life. His labors were uniformly successful, and, in 1905, he withdrew from agricultural pursuits with sufficient means to comfort his declining years. Mr. Pool rendered good service to his country during the Civil War. He enlisted in Company 1, Seventy-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry (the "Board of Trade Regiment"), on August 14, 1862, and took part in all its campaigns until he was mustered out, August 14, 1865.

The nuptial ceremonies of Mr. Pool and Charlotte Leeper took place in Fairview Township, Fulton County, January 15, 1857. Mrs. Pool was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, June 24, 1836, and is a daughter of Thomas and Eliza (Lake) Leeper, natives of New Jersey. Six children have been the offspring of this union, namely: Cary S., Lawrence J., Effie, Jannette, Alma and John H. In the matter of politics, Mr. Pool has been a lifelong and steadfast supporter of the Republican party. For four years (from 1886 to 1890) he served with efficiency and fidelity as Supervisor of Union Township, Fulton County. In religious belief, he is an adherent of the Methodist Church, and his sole fraternal connection is with the G. A. R., of which he is a prominent member.

Mr. Pool is one of Fulton County's most highly reputable citizens, and has been closely identified with its material, moral and educational development. His long extended record has been free from reproach, and he commands the utmost confidence and respect throughout a wide circle of acquaintance. His genial disposition and invariable affability of manner have always attracted to him warm friends, and those whose hearty good wishes he enjoys are numbered only by the many who know the honorable spirit and kindly emotions that have dominated his whole life.

POPER, John W.—Ex-Alderman Popper is well known as an honest, influential citizen of Canton, as well as a master cabinet-maker, which also was his father's occupation. He was born at Chambersburg, Pa., on March 7, 1868, the son of Jacob M. and Jane (Barnes) Popper. His parents never came West, and his mother died at Chambersburg, Pa., February 25, 1875; while the father is still a resident of that State, engaged in his joint trade of carpentry and cabinet-making.

John W. Popper was educated in the district and city schools of his native place and at an early age took up the branch of cabinet-making, so that he was already considered an expert when he came west to Farmington, Fulton County, on February 22, 1886. Believing Canton a better field for his trade, he removed to that place during the following year, and has since continued a resident of this city. He was at once recognized as an industrious and skillful workman, and it was not long before his value as a man of public affairs was suspected. Since the Republicans have returned him to the City Council and he has creditably served for two terms in that body, these surmises have been fully verified. In fraternal circles Mr. Poper is known as a member of the Order of Elks and Knights of Pythias.

The subject of this sketch was married at Farmington, Ill., March 30, 1893, to Anna M. Kelly, of that place, a daughter of Robert and Harriet (Marshall) Kelly.

PORTER, Elmer.—It is to such energetic and progressive young farmers as Elmer Porter that the great advance in agriculture and stock-raising during the past few years is due, and it is to such as he that Fulton County looks for a continuation of her present unparalleled prosperity. Though young in years, having been born in Pleasant Township, Fulton County, February 27, 1862, Mr. Porter's active life has spanned an important farming era, for he well remembers the old-fashioned single-shovel plow and other crudities which contributed to the drudgery of land-tilling two-score years ago. He owns a 120-acre farm on Section 23, Pleasant Township, but this he rents to a tenant, he himself having charge of the farm of T. C. Robinson, on Section 14, Pleasant Township. This farm formerly was the property of Arthur Smith, and Mr. Porter has been connected with it as co-operative manager since the spring of 1888. It has brought him substantial financial reward and a wealth of varied experience. Upon it are represented all of the departments of farming known in the Central West. During the eighteen years of his occupancy uniformly excellent crops have rewarded the labor of the agriculturist, and large shipments of high-grade stock have been the rule. No improvement or equipment essential to scientific farming is omitted from this property, and conditions are especially favorable for the breeding of graded Norman and Percheron horses, Poland-China hogs and Aberdeen Angus cattle. To his congenial tasks Mr. Porter brings a well trained and studious mind, one wholly in sympathy with agriculture as a means of livelihood, and keenly concerned for the comfort and well-being of the dumb creatures entrusted to his care.

Mr. Porter is a son of Samuel and Mary M. (Gilson) Porter, the latter a daughter of John Gilson, one of the early pioneers of Fulton County. (For further particulars of the Porter family see sketch of Samuel Porter in this volume.) Mr. Porter attended the public schools of Pleasant Township, and remained on the home place until attaining his majority. In 1887 he married Cora A. Knowles, daughter of Noah Knowles, a pioneer of Fulton County, and now a resident of Ipava. Mrs. Porter was born in Pleasant Township January 26, 1869, her mother being Irene (Cooper) Knowles, whose parents came to Fulton County at an early day. To Mr. and Mrs. Porter have been born the following named children: Nellie Wayne, born October 31, 1889; Ruth Anna, born June 22, 1893; Ruby Gay, born May 22, 1896; Faith, born July 22, 1901; and Paul Elmer, born December 29, 1904. Before his marriage Mr. Porter rented of his father for four years the old homestead of 160 acres, and one year after marriage moved onto the farm which he since has occupied and managed. He is a Democrat in politics, but aside from the formality of casting his vote, is not identified with the undertakings of his party. Mr. Porter has a personality which inspires confidence and wins him many friends. He is instinctively honest and high-minded, cordial in manner and sympathetic in nature, and is firmly entrenched in the best life and effort of the community.

POST, Earl, a rising young farmer in Section 32, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born on his father's farm in the same township, April 22, 1882, and is a son of Stephen and Leah (Reger) Post, whose biographical record appears in another section. Earl Post was reared on the parental farm and received his early education in the district schools of his neighborhood. On reaching maturity he made farming his permanent occupation, and his labors have already been attended with satisfactory results. He is ranked among the enterprising and progressive farmers of Buckheart Township, and on his farm may be found a good exhibit of all kinds of stock, of a superior grade.

On April 10, 1901, Mr. Post was united in marriage with Lena F. Wilcoxon, a daughter of Marshall N. Wilcoxon, and a native of Fulton County. Two children have resulted from this union—Violet M., born June 19, 1902; and Russell E., February 25, 1905. In politics, Mr. Post is a supporter of the Democratic party.

POST, Stephen, for many years one of the most prominent, worthy and successful farmers in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., who is now living in retirement, is of German ancestry and well remembers the pewter plates which his grandmother brought from her native land. The family name was originally spelt "Pfost." Mr. Post was born in Lewis County, Va., (now Upshur County, W. Va.) February 26, 1830. He is a son of Daniel and Mary (Hefner) Post, natives of Virginia. The grandfather, Abram Pfost, had two brothers, Martin and Isaac. Abram settled near Buchanan, on Buchanan River, Va., and there built a mill that was widely known; Martin located in the vicinity of Jess's Run, Va., and Isaac became a resident of Missouri.

Daniel Post and his wife were the parents of twelve children, as follows: Abram, who resided at the old home, and died in June, 1906; Jacob and Isaac, both deceased—the latter having been a soldier in the Confederate army, who passed through the Civil War and was killed by the falling of a tree; Stephen; Nicholas, who lived in Upshur County, W. Va., and died in May, 1906; George W., of Barbour County, W. Va.; Jenima, deceased wife of Joel Casto, also deceased and formerly a prominent Virginian; Annia Q., widow of George L. Queen; Mary Jane, wife of Albinas R. Marple, of Upshur County, W. Va.; Cenna, widow of Jacob Lance, who was killed in his own home during the Civil War; Elizabeth, widow of James Freil, of Upshur County, W. Va.; and Sarah, deceased wife of Dow Lewis, of the same county. The parents of this family died in their native place in Virginia. Three of the sons were conscripted and forced to serve in the Confederate army.

Stephen Post was reared on a farm, and obtained his early mental instruction in the common schools of the county where he was born. After his school days were over, he continued his studies, and became familiar with those practical branches of knowledge which enabled him to conduct his own affairs intelligently and successfully.

In 1864 Mr. Post was forced into the Confederate army and assigned to detached duty. During this service he was taken prisoner by the Union troops, taken to Wheeling, Va., thence to Camp Chase, Ohio, and finally, to Rock Island, Ill., where he was released on parole, August 5, 1865. He had a comrade who was released at the same time, and this comrade had a sister living in Fulton County, Ill., whither Mr. Post proceeded in company with his friend. There he was invited to make his home with Isaac Black until he could make arrangements to take care of his family which was left in Virginia, and there he bought a farm of 265 acres, which he sold, and purchased 160 acres in Section 6, Buckheart Township, Fulton County. In 1866 his family moved to their new home, which has since then been Mr. Post's place of residence. No improvements had been made on this purchase, and he began at once to put the property in shape, and continued building and improving until his farm became one of the finest in the township. To the original tract he added from time to time until his landed possessions comprised 480 acres, which he has divided between his children.

On August 5, 1851, Mr. Post was united in marriage in Virginia, with Leah Reger, a daughter of Major G. Reger, who served in the War of 1812. There being some family objections to this marriage, the bridegroom and bride eloped to Marietta, Ohio, where the wedding ceremony was performed. They started to return home the next day and went to work, Mrs. Post being able to spin, weave and work up flax and wool. Eight children were the result of this union (five of whom were born in Virginia), as follows: Loretta J., wife of Joshua Williams, a blacksmith, of St. David, Ill.; Elmon E., who married Sophronia, a daughter of Levi Hufford, a farmer of Putman Township, Fulton County; Emozeta, wife of John Long, of Bryant, Ill.; Albert S., a farmer in Liverpool Township, Fulton County; Daniel

A., a farmer in Buckheart Township, who married Nervia E. Horton; Oscar L., also a farmer of that township, who married Laura Kelly, a daughter of Samuel Kelly; and Earl, a farmer in the same township, who married Lena Wilcoxon, and whose life is portrayed on another page of this volume.

As his sons and daughters have grown up their father has provided handsomely for each, and all are now highly-reputable members of their respective communities. In Mr. Post's career have been manifest those qualities of diligence, perseverance, thrift and constancy that characterize the sturdy German stock from which he is derived. In addition to this, he has lived an exceptionally upright and unselfish life, and no man in Fulton County has more and truer friends than Stephen Post. For forty years, Mr. and Mrs. Post have been devoted members of the Christian Church, and one of the former's favorite scriptural quotations is the Saviour's prayer in the Garden of Gethsemane. In him and his estimable wife, through all their lives, the cause of the church and the school has found willing helpers and generous friends, and to no appeal of the worthy poor has either ever turned a deaf ear.

POTTER, Frank C., of the younger generation of farmers, is a native of Fulton County and so much impressed with its agricultural and residence advantages that, like thousands of others, he has never been able to see that he could better himself by making a change of location. His father, who came here in 1859, came to the same conclusion, and, as Frank C. has two boys of his own, it is likely that another generation of Potters will add their labors and worth to the upbuilding of the community of which the family has been a substantial element for nearly half a century.

The subject of this sketch was born in Ellisville Township, Fulton County, on the 21st of January, 1866, which was the birthday of his father, Alfred Price Potter, born on the same day of the month in 1827. The latter was a native of New Jersey, as was his wife (formerly Elizabeth R. Crate), born August 8, 1826. As the father was not satisfied with the scope of Eastern farming, he came to Fulton County in 1859, purchased a farm and began its cultivation and development into a comfortable homestead.

Frank Potter remained with his parents on the farm where he was born until he reached manhood, when he entered upon an independent career, but always in his chosen occupation of farming. There is every promise that he will in due time become one of the most prosperous and influential citizens of his locality. He has already served as a public official, having been School Director for three years. Mr. Potter is a Republican and a member of the Prairie City Presbyterian Church.

POWELL, John R.—Although variously identified with affairs in Fulton County since his arrival here in 1839, it is probably as a moral and religious teacher that John R. Powell will be longest and most gratefully remembered. In harmony with this keynote in his life is his service as a soldier in the Civil War, he still retains an active interest in the reunions of the fast thinning ranks of the veterans in that historic conflict. Of Scotch-Irish ancestry, Mr. Powell was born March 5, 1833, in Adams County, Ohio, and in 1835, was brought by his parents, Thomas and Margaret (Engle) Powell to Menard County, Ill., two years later removing to Fulton County, and settling on a farm North of Astoria, in Astoria Township. Thomas Powell is recalled but indistinctly by his son, for he died in 1840, a year after his arrival in the township, and when the lad was barely ten years old. The mother subsequently married a man named Aultizer, and died in Mason County, Ill. There are but four survivors of the seven sons and three daughters in this family, and all seem to have inherited a sense of responsibility for the spiritual welfare of mankind. The oldest son, Curtis, was a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church forty years; Rev. Dr. William Powell, now residing near Baders, Ill., was a preacher in the same denomination twenty-five years, and John R. Powell has been a leader in church affairs since long before the Civil War. Martha A., one of the daughters in the family, married Jacob Oglett and lives in Salem, Ore.; David is a retired merchant of Mason City, Ill.; Jefferson S. is connected with the Fair Grounds at Salem, Ore.; and Thomas is deceased.

John R. Powell spent his youth in the midst of hardship and privation, and among a people who had to create their own opportunities. At that time Astoria was known as the McNeil settlement, and consisted of a few log houses and fewer industries. The most prominent man in the section was Billie Tate, who lived on the farm now occupied by Benton Sharp, and whose house, with the exception of a few cabins, was the only human habitation between Astoria and Lewistown. The nearest schoolhouse was three miles distant, and on his way to it Mr. Powell often encountered from fifteen to twenty deer. His education was acquired under great disadvantages, for the school was a subscription one, and he would have to stop attendance every little while to work for his further tuition. To pay for his first spelling-book he gathered hazel nuts, carried them on his back to Vermont and sold them. The schoolhouse was a rude affair, and in winter was made cheerful by the blazing logs in the huge fireplace. There was no floor, and, of course, no glass in the apertures for admitting light. In order to familiarize himself with the rudiments of arithmetic, grammar and history, the boy would sit up after the family had retired, throw chips in the old fireplace, and by its light wrestle with the intricacies of Ray's Arithmetic and Kirkham's Grammar. He also was a serious student of the Bible, and while still his years were few, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he subsequently was a minister for several years.

In connection with farming Mr. Powell learned the plasterer's trade, and was thus employed at the breaking out of the Civil War. In 1862 he enlisted in Company H, Eighty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years, and as part of the Army of the Cumberland participated in many of the earlier battles of his regiment. During the charge at Kenesaw Mountain, June 29, 1863, he was wounded at nine in the morning, and left on the battle-field for dead. At three in the afternoon he regained consciousness, and, when attempting to rise, he again was fired at by the enemy. Finally he was taken to the hospital at Nashville, later on granted a furlough, and subsequently rejoined his regiment at Chattanooga, Tenn. At Wellington he was given command of the distribution of supplies, and had charge of the camp, and at Alexander, Va., he had charge of hospital ward, and the distribution of provisions. When peace was declared he returned to his home in Woodland Township, and after regaining his health, again followed the plasterer's trade.

The first marriage of Mr. Powell occurred February 4, 1854, to Julia A. Litchfield, a native of Ohio, and of the union there were five children: James Curtis and Ransom B., who died in infancy; Lorenzo D., a resident of Long Lane, Mo.; John W., a builder and contractor of Chicopee, Kan.; and Aretta, wife of H. C. Walton, of Antioch, Ark. Mrs. Powell died September 9, 1870, and February 4, 1871, Mr. Powell was united in marriage to Mrs. Eliza J. Adkinson, a native of Fulton County, and daughter of Samuel Tarry. Mr. Tarry was born in Ohio and became an early settler of Kentucky, where he married Miriam Turner, and whence he came to Illinois in the pioneer period. By her former marriage Mrs. Powell had four sons, one of whom is living—Johnson Adkinson, of Pittsburg, Mo. To Mr. and Mrs. Powell have been born eight children: William, a farmer in Woodland Township; Samuel, a resident of Oakville, Iowa; Thomas, who lives in the vicinity of Mason City, Ill.; Nellie, wife of John Waggoner, a farmer of Woodland Township; Ida, wife of Frank Waddell, of Oakville, Iowa; Robert Lincoln; and Benjamin, of Oakville, Iowa.

Without any preparation for the ministry other than self-acquired, Mr. Powell was granted an exhorter's license in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and through his strong and forceful preaching many have been brought within the fold of that denomination. About twenty-five years ago Mr. Powell, being so situated that he could not reach the Methodist Church, joined the United Brethren Church, in which also he was given a license to preach. He has done very effective work in the local church in East Woodland Township for many years, and his simple and beautiful style of expression, backed by his masterful personality, has been increasingly, convincing and attractive. He has improved every opportunity to uplift his fellowmen, and even during the Civil War, when wounded, labored zealously to extend the comforts of religion to those around him. Mr. Powell has been prominent in fraternal circles since early manhood, and still maintains his association with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Politically he is a Republican. As a reward for a well-directed career Mr. Powell's later life is accompanied by those satisfying compensations—peace of mind and the love and confidence of his fellowmen. He has worked out a high and clearly defined purpose, which, after all, is the finest evidence of success.

PRATT, John.—To the time of his retirement to London Mills about eleven years ago, John Pratt was one of the most industrious and successful agriculturists of Young Hickory Township, this county. He had good judgment, common sense, and the commercial capacity well developed. From his rise from small beginnings one may glean many helpful lessons. Born on a farm near Richmond, Va., in 1830, he was ten years old when his parents, John and Mary E. (Faulkner) Pratt, moved from the Old Dominion to Ohio, and he was about twenty-one when the family fortunes were shifted to Young Hickory Township, in the beginning of the '50s. He helped to clear and improve the original eighty acres taken up by his father, lent his strength to the erection of the modern frame house which supplanted the one of log construction, and otherwise contributed to the growth of Section 11, from which all of the seven children gained their start in life.

In addition to faithfully performing his home duties, John Pratt worked out on other farms in the township, and in this way secured hay and feed for the stock of his father ere the land was improved to produce. Later he made an independent start on sixty acres of land, for which he paid ten dollars an acre, and which he subsequently sold for fifteen dollars an acre. He next bought eighty acres on Section 1, and twenty acres on Section 10, Young Hickory Township, continuing his purchases from time to time until he owned 300 acres. His land yielded abundantly of general produce, and he raised Shorthorn and Durham cattle, usually having about a hundred head, and the same number of hogs (Poland-China) and sheep. Since retiring from active life he has rented his farm, deriving a comfortable income therefrom.

The marriage of Mr. Pratt and Mary E. Street occurred in Young Hickory Township in 1855, Mrs. Pratt being a native of Ohio, and daughter of William Street, a prominent farmer of the Buckeye State. Mr. and Mrs. Pratt are the parents of five daughters and one son, as follows: Eliza Jane, deceased, former wife of John Burnett, of Fairview Township, this county; Sarah C.; Minnie F., the wife of Harvey

Foster, of McDonough County, Ill.; Frances B., wife of William Luman, of Kansas; Mary Emma, living at home; and Wm. E., who married Ella Wadkins, of Knox County, Ill.

Mr. Pratt has led a quiet, industrious life, and has ever avoided public honors of a political nature. However, he has served acceptably as a member of the School Board and Pathmaster of the Township, and invariably has evidenced intelligent and helpful interest in the progressive and upbuilding agencies of the community.

PREDMORE, G. Mahlon, M. D. C.—That most useful of all quadrupeds, the horse, has a humane and skillful overseer of its welfare in Dr. Mahlon Predmore, a resident of the town of Avon, Fulton County, Ill., since his graduation from the Chicago Veterinary College in the class of 1905. Dr. Predmore is a native of Illinois, born near Youngstown, Warren County, August 28, 1876. His parents, Raymond B. and Addie (Crandall) Predmore, also were Illinoisans, the former born in New Jersey in 1846, and the latter in Knox County, in 1847. The father, Raymond B. Predmore, was a farmer by occupation, and a representative of a family established in the State at an early day.

Dr. Predmore, when about five years of age, came with his parents to Avon, Ill., where he entered the public schools, and was graduated from the high school in the class of 1895. He then attended the school of Architectural Engineering at the University of Illinois for two years, but being obliged to create his own opportunities for advancement, engaged in teaching for several terms. With the proceeds obtained in this line of labor he then attended the Chicago Veterinary College, where he established a reputation as a conscientious and ambitious student, winning a gold medal for the highest average in all branches, and a special prize for advance work in dentistry. Few young men are better equipped for this chosen calling than is this agreeable and popular veterinary surgeon. He has a bright and inquiring mind, a disposition to make himself of practical use in the world, and a keen appreciation of the possibilities as yet undiscovered in his calling.

A Democrat in politics, Dr. Predmore has no political aspirations, nor does he seek any honors not immediately connected with his life work. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias, and in religious belief is a Universalist.

PRICHARD, Robert, whom it is no invidious comparison to designate as one of the foremost farmers of Fulton County, Ill., and no empty tribute to pronounce one of its leading citizens, was born in Licking County, Ohio, March 11, 1831. He is a son of Jordan and Artemicia (Shaw) Prichard, of whom the former was a native of Washington, Pa., and the latter, of Ohio. The family is of German descent. The father went from Pennsylvania to Ohio at an early period, and there occurred his marriage. Husband and wife journeyed to Fulton County in 1836, making the trip overland and settling in Section 16, Liverpool Township. There Jordan Prichard made his home until 1849, when he, his wife, and a son and daughter died of cholera. From 1836 until the time of his death he was one of the leading men of his locality. Possessing a thorough mental training, he was for years a prominent teacher. He also officiated as Justice of the Peace, and creditably filled various offices in Liverpool Township. The children of the family were as follows: Mary J., deceased wife of John Adkins; Robert; Alexander, who died of cholera in July, 1849; James, a retired citizen of Lewistown, Ill.; Elizabeth, wife of John White, of Prairie City, McDonough County, Ill.; Benjamin, who served four years in the Fifty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil War; Eliza, who died at the age of four years; Nancy, who died in infancy; Sarah, deceased wife of Nathaniel White; Ellen, wife of F. M. Connelly, Macomb, Ill.; and Rebecca, who died of cholera, in July, 1849.

When the Prichard family settled in Fulton County, wild game was abundant, but the members of it had little time to hunt, grubbing the stumps and clearing the fields fully occupying their attention. They were among the most active people in the county, and took a leading part in its development. The horrors of the dire epidemic of 1849 are the saddest remembrances of all their long years of experience in Illinois. Since 1836 Robert Prichard has moved but three times, and has lived during the entire period in Liverpool and Lewistown Townships. From early manhood, he has always followed farming and in 1878 erected his present residence in Section 15, Lewistown Township.

Although occupied for years with the duties of public office, Mr. Prichard has always maintained control of the farming interests. He has been a breeder of Percheron and fine road horses, as was his father before him, and keeps a superior grade of other stock on his farm of ninety-six acres adjoining the city of Lewistown. His lifework has been eminently successful. In manner and deportment he is plain, unassuming and outspoken, and his frankness attracts hearty friendship. To the needy he always turns a willing and kindly ear, and all worthy public enterprises have found in him a ready and earnest supporter. It is a saying with him, that "he got born fifty years too soon," as modern machinery has made the farmer's life easy, and his mind often reverts to the old wooden mold-board plow, and the stumps through which he has guided it, or swung the cradle. None could cut more grain than he, and now, when he sees the self-binders and riding plows and hears the young men complaining of farm work, it appeals to his sense of the ridiculous.

On November 18, 1854, Mr. Prichard was united in marriage at Erie, Whiteside County, Ill., with Rebecca Shelby, a daughter of Noah and Maria (Nevitt) Shelby. This union resulted in five children, as follows: Dr. George W., one of the leading physicians of his section of Kansas, who was waylaid and killed on a beautiful, moonlight night, May 1, 1891, at Coldwater, Kan.; Alice S., wife of Frank Kast, a resident of Beardstown, Ill.; Peter, a hardware merchant of Alexander, Minn.; Olive, wife of James Ashbaugh, of Lewistown, Ill., bridge foreman of the Fulton County narrow-gauge road; and Robert N., proprietor of the hotel at St. Paul, Neb.

In politics Mr. Prichard has always been a very active and influential Democrat. In 1852 he cast his first presidential vote for Franklin Pierce, and ever after took a prominent part in political affairs. He has creditably filled all the township offices, having served as Deputy Sheriff under David Waggoner, and as Jailor and Deputy under O. P. Randolph, the first Republican Sheriff in the county. In the fall of 1870 Mr. Prichard was elected Sheriff of Fulton County, and was re-elected in 1872. For eight years and four months he was connected in different capacities with the duties of the Sheriff's office. After serving two terms as Township Supervisor he retired from active politics. Fraternally he has been affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., for thirty years, and to the churches he has always contributed liberally of his means. No man has taken a deeper interest in the welfare of Fulton County than Robert Prichard, and to no other man within its borders do its people render more unfeigned respect.

PRICKETT, John.—Among the leading citizens of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., who for a long period of years took an active and influential part in the activities of that community, is the worthy gentleman of whom this personal record treats. Mr. Prickett was born in Noble County, Ind., September 7, 1838, and is a son of Isaiah and Eliza (Lothridge) Prickett, natives of Ohio. Two of their children died in infancy. The others are as follows: Harrison, Captain of Company A, Fifty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil War, who was killed soon afterwards by being thrown from a sleigh; Nicholas A., who died in March, 1899, and is buried in the cemetery near Lewistown; Susan C., wife of O. M. McCumber; and Eliza J., wife of John McCumber. The family settled in Fulton County in 1852, and the father bought a farm, on which he spent the remainder of his life in agricultural pursuits. He was a plain, unassuming man, of upright character and correct habits, and enjoyed the respect of all who knew him.

There is a family tradition that early in the colonial days three brothers by the name of Prickett emigrated from England to the Southern States, and that the one who located in Virginia planted the branch with which John Prickett is identified. The great-grandfather was killed by the Indians before he had reached the prime of life, and about 1826 the grandfather visited Vermilion County with the intention of entering land and locating, but was taken sick and died at the home of a friend. Isaiah Prickett, thus left fatherless at the age of ten years, began life's labors at that tender age as a farm hand at $6.25 a month, his home being then in Ohio. In 1836 he settled in Noble County, Ind., which remained the family home until 1852, when, on account of the unhealthfulness of the climate and impelled by the prevailing spirit of Western adventure, he started with teams for Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill. John Prickett was then a sturdy youth of fourteen.

The winter of 1852-53 was spent on the O. P. Davis place. In the spring of 1853 the family moved to a farm belonging to Jacob Prickett, a brother of Isaiah Prickett, where they lived until 1854, when the tract of land which later became the old Prickett homestead was bought. The original eighty acres (now owned by Mrs. C. M. McCumber) is in Section 15, Lewistown Township, and at the time of its purchase by Isaiah presented, for improvements, a clearing of about eight acres and a hewn log house. At the time of his death in 1901, the farm had been increased to 130 acres, improved by thorough cultivation and modern frame buildings, and he also owned eighty acres in Section 10. At one time he controlled a very large body of swamp lands, comprising 1,800 acres near Thompson's Lake, in Waterford and Liverpool Townships. The wife of Isaiah Prickett died in 1892, and the remains of both father and mother are now resting in the Sugar Grove Cemetery, where repose so many of the early settlers of Lewistown Township.

It will rightly be inferred from a perusal of the above narrative, that John Prickett is a pioneer of two States, and has passed through experiences which few men are privileged to recount. The story which he tells is therefore full of interest and worthy of careful reading:

"I will say that my early life was spent on the farm and that I bore my part in the work of clearing the old Noble County farm in Indiana, and later helped to clear and improve the old Prickett homestead in Lewistown Township. When we first located in Indiana the Indians had not left and I remember visiting an Indian camp with father. Various wild animals roamed through the country then, deer being plentiful and bears being frequently seen. Father was quite a hunter and kept the table well supplied with wild meat, even after we came to Illinois. Why, I myself have killed wild turkeys right within what are now the corporate limits of Lewistown. The journey from Indiana to our new home in Illinois was made with horse teams and consumed about two weeks. The route lay through a wilderness of timber and swamps, with here and there a town and a section that had been opened up to settlement, and we camped out and slept in and under the wagons at night.

"I was about fourteen years old when we came to Fulton County and part or most of my boyhood was spent in Indiana. I received my early schooling in the log schoolhouses of Noble County. Some of the first temples of learning in which I pursued my studies were heated by fireplaces for which the larger boys had to cut the wood, and having the light admitted through greased paper which covered the openings cut in the logs. They were supplied with home-made furniture, such as slab benches with wooden pins for legs, and writing desks made of boards laid on wooden pins projecting from the walls. I began life's labors on a farm in the wilderness, with no educational advantages save those that the times afforded, but after we came to Fulton County I attended the Lewistown Seminary four years and I have a fairly good education.

"During the first years of our residence in Fulton County all kinds of wild game were plentiful and the streams were full of fishes. I have grown to maturity in Fulton County and was early taught habits of industry and economy. I helped to chop, burn and clear the timber from the old home place and became an adept with the axe. I remained with my parents long after I was of age and was one of the last of the boys to leave the family fireside. The idea finally grew upon me of establishing a home of my own."

Mr. Prickett was twenty-eight years of age when he left the old parental home, having been married during the early part of the year. He now set out to establish a household of his own, with very little money, but with strong muscles, a fair education and a determination to conquer all adverse circumstances and obstacles. After his marriage he settled on a farm of 100 acres, which had previously been bought of an uncle, located in Bernadotte Township, and after living there for about a year and a half, bought the old home place, some time after purchasing the old Burrington farm of 170 acres, then belonging to his father-in-law. This was in the early 'seventies. Mr. Prickett's indomitable will, his capacity for labor and his fine managerial ability were all brought into full demand during the following quarter of a century, as there was an indebtedness of over $7,000 upon his property which, with interest, he was obliged to meet, as well as maintain an increasing household, and maintain his farm and his homestead according to modern standards. But he taught school in the winter months (was thus engaged altogether for seventeen terms), farmed during the remainder of the year, and attended to outside matters early in the morning and late at night. But he rolled up his sleeves, kept a clear head, and had the satisfaction of bringing his land to scientific productiveness, erecting a large modern brick residence and planting around it choice ornamental and fruit trees, and after spending some $7,000 in improvements, of selling his fine property for $25,000. In 1889 he retired from the farming and stock-raising operations, bought the Judge Shope property in Lewistown, and went to the village to live, but afterward purchased other real estate for residence and investment purposes.

In 1894 Mr. Prickett became actively connected with the Farmers' State Bank of Lewistown and was three years President of that institution, being still a stockholder. In 1903 he assisted in the organization of the Farmers' State Bank of Cuba, in which he is a stockholder and a director. Besides successfully managing his financial interests Mr. Prickett is engaged in the handling of his real estate and in the care of various estates, his judgment in such matters being highly valued. But whatever success has come to him, he is always free in the acknowledgment of deep gratitude for the faithful assistance and unflinching support of his good wife, like himself, a pioneer, who performed her great part in laying the foundation of the present prosperity of the township and county.

On February 15, 1866, Mr. Prickett was united in marriage with Mrs. Margaret Lenhart Apple, a daughter of John and Eliza Lenhart, of Perry County, Ohio. Her parents lived near Zanesville, Ohio, but moved to Fulton County with their family in 1852. Mr. and Mrs. Prickett are the parents of seven children, namely: Della Eliza, who is the wife of William C. Fitzhenry, and lives on the old home farm; Mary, who is a member of the family household; John Henry, who resides in the vicinity of Hastings, Neb.; Frederick W., who is engaged in farming in Lewistown Township, Fulton County; Henry, who is a farmer in Hall County, Neb.; Harriet, who is the wife of Rev. Charles Fitzhenry, of Lewistown, Ill., and Charles C., who is connected with Hasson's drug store. All these children have enjoyed the advantages of an excellent education, the three youngest having attended college and graduated therefrom.

In politics Mr. Prickett is a supporter of the Republican party, and still takes the interest of a good citizen in public affairs. He has served with ability and fidelity on the Board of Supervisors for four years. He has witnessed the marvelous changes which have transformed Fulton County from a scanty settlement to a center of productiveness and prosperity, and has done his part in promoting this development, being one of the most highly esteemed citizens of the community. The family are active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

PROCTOR, J. W.—Strictly speaking there is no new country, and pioneers and pioneer life no longer exist. An absorbing and fascinating condition has passed into history, and its lessons and inspiration live principally in the retrospection of those who endured the hardships and contributed by various services and diversified gifts to the upbuilding of the present. Fulton County has as noble a roll call of early settlers as any part of the Central West, and among those inseparably associated with the Fulton County records, none are more deserving of perpetuation in its annals than J. W. Proctor.

Mr. Proctor was born in Sangamon County, Ill., and, while still an infant was taken by his parents to Lewistown, of which he remained a citizen for forty-eight years. He received the training of the common schools, and his home life was such as to develop the finest traits of character. He was a typical pioneer, and his forceful personality fitted well into its exacting grooves. Various connected with the interests of Lewistown during his extreme youth, in maturity he established the first bank of the town, now the First National Bank, and presided at its head for many years. Removing to Canton in 1875 he there found a field for his business abilities, for some years operating the Williams Coal Mine under lease, and was also interested for some time in mercantile business, retiring about 1881 or 1882. He was one of the organizers and for many years President of the Fulton County Old Settlers' Society. The home of his own making dated from 1854, when he was united in marriage to Mary Antoinette Talbott. Two children have been born of this union: Francis L. and Hattie T. For many years Mr. Proctor has lived retired, a quiet and unostentatious citizen of a city which owes much to his largeness of mind, heart and purpose.

PUTMAN, Floyd F.—One of the most recent recruits to the professional equipment of Canton is Floyd Putman, representative of one of the early and prominent families of Fulton County, and a young man who, at the age of twenty-five, stands upon the threshold of a promising and worth-while legal career. Mr. Putman is a native son of Illinois, born in Civer, Fulton County, October 8, 1880. He was educated in the Canton public schools, and after graduating from the high school entered the Law Department of the University of Michigan, completing the course in the spring of 1904. The following October he was admitted to the bar of Illinois, and in Canton, where he had been known for years and had hosts of friends, began the uphill work of competing with the older, more conservative and more experienced professional element. Mr. Putman has force of character, strong ambitions and a keen sense of the ethics and amenities of legal practice. He is prominent socially and is identified with the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks.

QUICK, Roscoe H.—What formerly was the Daniel Vittum farm in Deerfield Township has been owned and managed by Roscoe H. Quick since the fall of 1900. At the time of its purchase no improvements existed on the place, but four years have witnessed a marked change, the owner having erected a modern home in 1903 and the following year a basement barn, thirty-six by forty feet ground dimensions. Prior to this time he had erected a granary and seed-house, a scale and implement house and hog and poultry houses. In addition he has thoroughly drained the farm, built fences and purchased agricultural implements, and now has one of the most homelike and profitable properties in the township. Mr. Quick devoted a part of his 160 acres to general produce, but makes a specialty of pure-bred stock, principally Duroc Jersey hogs, having about 200 in the herd. He is practical and progressive in his tendencies and makes a scientific study of the occupation in which he is engaged.

Mr. Quick is one of the younger farmers of the township and is a native of Fulton County, born in Joshua Township, August 27, 1877. He comes of Eastern stock, his parents, Andrew Jackson and Elizabeth (Gardiner) Quick, having been born and reared in New York State. Of the elder Quick mention is made elsewhere in this work. Mr. Quick was educated in the country schools and on March 20, 1901, in Knox County, Ill., was married to Nelle A. Wilson, a teacher of stenography in the Champaign Business College, who was born in Tiskilwa, Bureau County, Ill., March 23, 1876. Of this union are two daughters: Hazel L., born December 3, 1902, and Margaret, born October 2, 1906. Mr. Quick remained with his parents until locating on his present farm and in the meantime has taken a prominent part in promoting local agriculture, his position being indicated by his presidency of the Farmers' County Institute, in which he formerly served as Secretary. He is one of the best informed and most studious farmers of the community, bringing to bear upon his work intelligence, insight and genuine appreciation.

QUIGLE, Emery.—In his agricultural operations Mr. Quigle has adopted the modern method so prevalent in the arts of science and industry of specializing; so that, although he farms quite extensively, he devotes most of his attention to the breeding of English Shires and road horses. In this branch of the live-stock business he is widely and favorably known, his dealings being largely with the wealthier classes.

Emery Quigle is a native Illinoisan, born in McDonough County, on the 16th of April, 1856. His parents were Lewis Quigle, a Pennsylvania farmer, and Anna (Heimanoever) Quigle, who was born in New Jersey. The father settled in Lee Township at an early day, and remained there until his death. Mr. Quigle was educated in the district schools and inured to his life work on the home farm. He was industrious and careful, at the same time energetic and enterprising, with the result that he increased his original holdings until he is now the owner of 400 acres of land, devoted both to farming and horse-breeding.

In Lee Township, on the 5th of February, 1879, Emery Quigle was united in marriage with Elizabeth Krider, a native of the township named, born December 18, 1860. They have had four children, Lewis C., Herbert C., Earl J. and Edith. His family and the care and improvement of his fine property have naturally monopolized much of Mr. Quigle's time, but not entirely to the exclusion of public affairs. Educational matters have always interested him, and for some years he has served as School Director of the Township. He is a Republican, member of the I. O. O. F., and identified with the religious and charitable work of the Methodist Church.

QUIGLE, Herbert C., is the son of Emery Quigle, an early settler of the county and a prominent breeder of live stock. Although still a young man he is making a pronounced success of his specialty, the raising of English Shires and road horses. Mr. Quigle was born in Lee Township, on the 6th of November, 1882, and was educated in the district schools and trained to a useful life on the old family homestead. At an early age he became a thorough farmer and an expert in the raising and dealing in live stock, and although he is not yet twenty-four years of age, can give valuable "pointers" on the breeding of horses to many men who have been engaged in the business a much longer time.

On the 6th of November, 1905, Mr. Quigle was united in marriage with Minnie Emroy, of Prairie City, Ill., the ceremony occurring at Macomb, the home of her parents. Mrs. Quigle was born on the 8th of May, 1884. Her husband is a good Republican, but too busy making a home and a reputation to be a politician. They were both members of the Methodist Church.

QUIGLEY, William H.—One of the best farms on Section 25, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., is owned and carefully and successfully cultivated by the well known farmer whose name stands at the beginning of this personal record. William H. Quigley was born in Liverpool Township, Fulton County, August 20, 1872, the son of Sidney and Amanda (Arnett) Quigley, of whom the former was a native of New York and the latter of Kentucky. Both are still living, the father being engaged in farming in Liverpool Township.

The subject of this sketch in early youth received his educational training in the district schools, his first schooling, however, being under the tuition of his father, while busied about the farm in the tasks customary for farmers' sons. He thus assisted in farming operations until 1893, when he began tilling the soil on his own account, since that period making farming his sole occupation and Lewistown Township his home. He is now operating the old Bordner farm, where his wife was born, and which was her father's homestead, consisting of 195 acres, the spot where he located on first settling in Fulton County. From it Mrs. Quigley's father cleared away the heavy timber in the pioneer period and now its fertile and productive area attests the faithful work of his hands. Mr. Quigley is an energetic and enterprising farmer and in addition to general farming raises a good grade of horses, hogs and cattle. His labors are being attended by successful results.

On September 10, 1893, Mr. Quigley was united in marriage with Charlotte D. Bordner, who was born March 2, 1874, a daughter of Moses and Elvira (Ewers) Bordner. A sketch of the life of her much respected father may be found on another page of this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Quigley have had six children, one of whom (Bennie K.) died in infancy. Those surviving are: Arthur B., born May 9, 1894; Benjamin R., born November 20, 1896; Hobart R., born January, 1897; Ivan and Lillian (twins), born December 28, 1899, and Jennie I., born August 19, 1902.

In politics Mr. Quigley indorses the principles of the Republican party and takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P. and M. W. A. He is a man of excellent character and is respected by all who enjoy his acquaintance.

QUILLIN, James W., the banker, of Ipava, has for thirty years been at the head of one of the most flourishing financial institutions of a private character in Fulton County. It is the ambition of many men to be manipulating the affairs of some great metropolitan bank, but if they fully realized what a splendid field there is for sound business and financial ability in the smaller agricultural communities, there would not be so much unsoundness in the banking circles of the large cities. While James W. Quillin might have succeeded as fully in Chicago as he has in Ipava, he had the good sense to avoid the overcrowded city and establish a house in a quieter community, which is a great credit to his judgment and ability and to the village where he is so highly honored.

Mr. Quillin was born in Wellsburg, W. Va., September 6, 1850, son of Ezekiel Quillin. The family had removed from Clarkesburg, Va., in 1854, but as they left Wellsburg in 1858 and then made Ipava, Ill., their home, he even acquired most of his schooling in this State. He finished his education in that village, working upon the farm until 1865, when he entered the store of his brother-in-law, J. L. McCune, holding a simple clerkship. He was thus employed until 1871, after which he was connected with a lumber yard for a year. In 1873 he purchased a half interest in the general merchandise store known as J. L. McCune & Company, the partnership continuing for twenty years, or until the death of the senior member of the firm in 1893. After Mr. McCune's death the heirs of the estate managed the business until 1902. The company carried a large and well-selected stock of general merchandise, valued at from $15,000 to $20,000. After the death of Mr. McCune Mr. Quillin had entire charge of the banking interests, the company having purchased the private banking house of Henry P. Ayers in 1876, and about 1900 withdrew entirely from the store.

On November 11, 1885, Mr. Quillin was united in marriage with Clara Hann, she being a daughter of George L. and Jane (Cooksie) Hann, natives of Ohio. They have become the parents of four children, as follows: Howard H., born October 17, 1887; Mary, April 25, 1890; Robert, April 27, 1894, and George W., September 2, 1897. Mr. and Mrs. Quillin are members of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Quillin himself is actively identified with the Masonic fraternity and has been unwaveringly attached to Republicanism. For eight consecutive years he creditably served as President of the Town Board. Since early manhood he has been foremost in the public enterprises which have proved advantageous to his home locality, and is generally one of the most influential men in this section of the county.

RANDOLPH, Charles S., Postmaster of Ipava, Ill.—There are many respectable, easy-going people who are content to believe in all matters just as their fathers, grandfathers and great-grandfathers did before them. There are others who have formed individual beliefs in some unaccountable way and will never change them, no matter how forceful the arguments may be which may arise in opposition to them. Custom, material advancement, sensitiveness to criticism, weakness, sheer cowardice—all conspire to keep the majority within the limits of conservative beliefs, especially in matters of religion. What wilt people think? How will my expressed belief affect my business, my prospects in life? are questions which are answered with more or less independence and bravery by everyone. Mrs. Grundy may be a myth, but she is a very real one to most of us. Occasionally a character of such independence and force comes upon the scene that, despite his refusal to enroll himself with the great majority of conservative thinkers and speakers, he forges ahead in his material career while maintaining his independence of belief in the field of thought. Of this type is Charles S. Randolph, the honest, capable Postmaster, and the outspoken, true-hearted citizen of Ipava.

In religion Mr. Randolph comes out squarely and says that he is an agnostic; that is, that his mind is open to conviction with the presentation of reasonable proofs—and that is his attitude in all fields of thought in which his amiable and talented wife fully agrees with him. While vigorously holding to this mental attitude, he firmly believes in an active, useful, liberal life, and thinks that, in order to be truly good, men and women should be busy from twelve to sixteen hours daily, either at their own business or in helping their neighbors; and personally he carries out this latter belief to the letter. He claims earnestly that the life itself should be worthy of imitation; that beliefs and professions will take care of themselves; finally, that the history or biography of men and women cannot be truly written until they are dead.

Briefly the outward facts in the life of Charles S. Randolph are that he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Randolph and was born in Fayette County, Pa., June 14, 1854. In 1864 he came with his parents to Fulton County, Ill., where, with the exception of three years spent in Dakota, Washington and other parts of the far West, he has since resided. He was reared on a farm, studied hard while a boy, in his youth and as a young man; read law, but never practiced, and on December 20, 1891, married Leone Bell Robinson. They have had no children. Mr. Randolph has always been a firm believer in the principles of the Republican party, and was appointed Postmaster of Ipava in 1897. The general verdict is that the village never had an official who performed his duties more faithfully or successfully. (Incidentally, it may be appropriately stated in this connection that Mr. Randolph has just received word from Washington, D. C., of his reappointment as Postmaster for another four years' term. This he regards as a great honor, coming, as it does, through President Roosevelt, whom he regards as one of the greatest characters ever born.) While this is his present calling the business of his life has been, and is at this time, that of a pharmacist, which has covered a period of twenty-six years and earned him a high reputation. At the present time he is serving as President of the Fulton County Druggists' Association, President of the Postmasters' League of Fulton County and Treasurer of the Postmasters' State League. Fraternally he has a wide connection, being a member of the Masonic Order, an Elk, Knight of Pythias, Modern Woodmen of America and is affiliated with the Court of Honor, Royal Neighbors and the Eastern Star.

Mr. Randolph has in his possession a sword which has done service in three wars, but he hopes that it will in the future be only an ornament in the library—that war will only be resorted to as the last extremity to save the nation from monarchy or dissolution—that all other difficulties may be settled diplomatically. He is proud that history records the fact that the first Attorney General of our grand old country was a Randolph.

RANDOLPH, Mrs. Charles S. (nee Leone Belle Robinson), Assistant Postmaster, Ipava, Ill., was born near Ipava, Ill., December 4, 1864, the youngest daughter of Hon. Thomas Chockley and Sarah Ann Robinson, and was married to Charles S. Randolph December 20, 1891. Mrs. Randolph, to whom her husband attributes much credit as his helpmate, possesses a real business mind, blended with a strong individuality and a desire to see right and justice always prevail, was reared on a farm (as was her husband), and there received her education amid rural surroundings. She has a remarkable memory, is a strenuous student of nature and a lover of history, geography, art and travel. After her marriage to Mr. Randolph she spent much of her leisure time with her husband in his pharmacy. Her desire to be doing something and to know more of the hidden mysteries of the vegetable and mineral kingdoms led her to spend some of her leisure hours with the United States Dispensatory and the United States Pharmacopœia, which resulted in her passing the examination for assistant pharmacist. She is now Assistant Postmaster and in that position renders her husband efficient aid in the discharge of his official duties, and is also a full partner in his business as a pharmacist. Mrs. Randolph is a working member in the local lodges of the Eastern Star, Royal Neighbors and Court of Honor, but loves her home more than all. To do right from a personal sense and knowledge of right, without fear or promise of reward, is her religion; to be real and true in love, to be honest in purpose, to be cheerful in life, and to have a model home, is her ambition. Mrs. Randolph is proud of the fact that the beginning of the Robinson family in America came with the arrival of the "Mayflower" at Plymouth Rock in 1620.

RANDOLPH, John Fitz (deceased).—Among the many worthy farmers of Fulton County, Ill., whose agricultural and personal careers have reflected lasting credit upon the communities in which their lives were spent, is John F. Randolph, for nearly half a century a prominent and much respected citizen of Joshua Township, in that county. Mr. Randolph was born in Indiana May 26, 1833, his parents being John and Anna (Rawalt) Randolph, natives of New York and Pennsylvania, respectively, the father born in Yates County, N. Y., in December, 1776, and dying in 1847. The mother died February 13, 1878. Jephtha Randolph, the grandfather, took part in the War of the Revolution. John Randolph was a school teacher in New York State and his purpose in going West was to buy land on which to give his sons a start as farmers. The Randolph family, after their removal to the West, first lived in Indiana, but settled in Fulton County, Ill., in the early 'forties, locating in Joshua Township, where John Randolph built a saw mill on Putt Creek. He also owned a farm in that locality, on which he spent the remainder of his life. He and his wife were the parents of eleven children, six of whom are still living. The father was a Whig in politics and in religion a Swedenborgian.

John F. Randolph was a young lad when he was brought to Joshua Township. In order of birth he was the sixth of the family and has three sisters, namely: Jane (Mrs. D. Y. Miller), Minerva (Mrs. S. R. Hinkle) and Ann Eliza (Mrs. Lewis E. Trites), a sketch of whose husband's life may be found elsewhere in this volume. In early youth Mr. Randolph attended the Joshua Township public schools, in which his future wife was also a pupil. At a later period he continued his studies at Lomhard University, Galesburg, Ill. When about twenty-two years of age he bought 160 acres of land in Canton Township, on which he carried on general farming until about three years previous to his death. Through energy and thrifty management he became one of the most extensive land-holders and property-owners in Fulton County, and left a large estate to his heirs. His farms in that county comprised about 600 acres. In addition to these he was the owner, at one time, of 1,760 acres of land in Kansas, a portion of which is still a part of the estate, and had 160 acres in Nebraska, still a part of his estate. He erected several buildings in the town of Canton, among which are the Randolph Block, the building occupied by Leaman's laundry, the Pacific House and the Randolph residence on Chestnut Street. He also owned an interest in the Joplin lead mines.

On February 14, 1856, Mr. Randolph was married in Fulton County to Louisa Havermale, who was born in Montgomery County, Ohio, twelve miles from Dayton, on March 3, 1836. Mrs. Randolph is a daughter of Peter and Mariah Havermale, natives of Maryland. For a record of the Havermale family reference may be made to a sketch of the life of Rev. M. F. Havermale, which appears elsewhere in this volume. The following children resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Randolph, namely: Flora, who is the wife of Alba Page, and lives in the State of Washington; Thurston, who married May McDonald, and is the father of one child—Jessie; Viola, who is the wife of George Miller, of Fulton County, and has two children—Bertha and Harry; Orpha, who died when a year and a half old; Arty (now residing in Kansas), who married for his first wife Alberta Reichert, and by whom he had one daughter—Ruth; his second marriage was with Marie Powers, and they have two children—John F. and Carl; and John F., who married Pearl Divilbiss, and lives on the old homestead farm in Fulton County. John F. and wife have one son—Keith.

Politically Mr. Randolph was a Greenbacker and Populist. He was also identified with the Grange. For some years he served as School Director of Joshua Township. His religious connection was with the Swedenborgian denomination. He was one of the most forceful, keensighted, progressive and successful of the many notable men who have left their impress on the material development of Fulton County. On June 6, 1905, his busy and useful career came to an end, leaving, aside from his bereaved family, many former associates, who sorely miss him from the scene of his long-continued activities. Mrs. Randolph, for nearly fifty years the faithful companion of his life, still survives, surrounded by every comfort that abundant means can provide, tenderly cared for by her affectionate family and conscious of the warm regard of many friends.

RANDOLPH, Mrs. Isabel, widow of the late Oliver Perry Randolph, of Ipava, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Fayette County, Pa., June 14, 1832, the daughter of John and Nancy Balsinger, who were natives of Germany and emigrated with their parents to the United States, settling in Pennsylvania. Their daughter, Isabel, received her education in her native county and in 1850, at the age of eighteen, was united in marriage with Oliver Perry Randolph, a native of the same county, whose sketch appears in this connection. Mr. and Mrs. Randolph continued to reside in Pennsylvania until 1864, when they removed to Illinois, settling near Astoria, Fulton County, which continued to be their home until 1882, when they moved to Ipava, where they lived for the remainder of Mr. Randolph's life. Mrs. Randolph now resides in Peoria with her daughter. They became the parents of twelve children, eight boys and four girls, of whom six were born in Pennsylvania and four in Illinois. Of these children three sons and the four daughters are still living. (See sketch of Oliver Perry Randolph in following section.)

In her youth Mrs. Randolph united with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, of which she has ever since been a devoted member. In her every-day life everything in the way of mere society has been disregarded or turned aside to meet the demands of the family and the home, and devoting her attention to her husband and her children she has found her highest enjoyment, winning the memory of a devoted wife and mother in the fullest meaning of the word. Such characteristics entitled the American woman, in the estimation of her descendants and beneficiaries, to rank as the true queen—a higher rank even than that of the mere wearer of a golden crown or the royal purple. "Home, Sweet Home," was Mrs. Randolph's favorite lullaby, and her children believe that no one could sing it more sweetly than she. To live an honest, unpretentious life; to add to the happiness of humanity; to love the home and its surroundings, and to use her hands and brain to decorate and beautify that home; to honor her husband and care for her children, and to leave the world the better by example—these are the highest attributes and aspiration of the true woman—and such has been the ambition illustrated in the amiable life of the subject of this sketch.

RANDOLPH, Jephtha F., who is among the most enterprising and progressive of the younger agricultural element of Joshua Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township June 7, 1877. He is a son of Louis and Elizabeth (Andrews) Randolph, natives, respectively, of Ohio and Illinois. Louis Randolph is one of the early settlers of Joshua Township, where he has been successfully engaged in farming since his arrival in Fulton County. In 1884 he purchased of Newton Ellis the farm where his son Jephtha now lives.

RESIDENCE OF MRS. SARAH SMITH, CANTON

Jephtha F. Randolph was reared to farm life, and in early youth received his education in the schools of Canton, Fulton County, supplementing the instruction there obtained by a subsequent course of study in Brown's Business College at Galesburg, Ill. He then applied himself to farming in his own behalf and since 1901 has been the owner of 120 acres of his father's original purchase. There, in addition to general farming, he devotes considerable attention to stock and makes a specialty of raising fine Norman horses. He is possessed of notable energy and pursues intelligent methods of operation, and his success attests the diligence and thoroughness of his work.

On December 16, 1903, Mr. Randolph was united in marriage with Lucille M. Sloss, who was born in Farmington, Ill., and is a daughter of Daniel W. and Lucy (Maynard) Sloss, the former a farmer in that vicinity.

In politics Mr. Randolph is a supporter of the Democratic party, but votes for men and measures promising the greatest good to the greatest number. He has served the public efficiently in the office of Township Clerk and is a member of the Baptist Church.

RANDOLPH, Lewis F., Sr.—No man in Fulton County has a more creditable and commendable record as an individual and as a citizen, and none represents a worthier parentage than Lewis F. Randolph, formerly one of the most extensive and successful farmers in Joshua Township, Fulton County, and now living in comfortable retirement amid the scenes where he has passed three score and ten years of his life. Mr. Randolph was born in Utica, Clark County, Ind., July 4, 1835, a son of John F. and Nancy (Rawalt) Randolph, of whom the former was born in Yates County, N. Y., and the latter in Pennsylvania, but reared in New York. John F. Randolph went from New York to Indiana at a very early period and in 1835 removed to Fulton County, Ill., locating in the Military Tract on the identical spot in Joshua Township where the subject of this sketch now lives. For some time he dwelt in a log house, but fifteen acres of the tract on which his humble home stood being then broken up. He afterwards entered the half of Section 18, in Canton Township, besides seventy acres on Section 7, adding more from time to time, until his possessions aggregated more than 1,200 acres in Joshua and Canton Townships. Over 700 acres of this tract are still in the hands of the Randolph family. About the year 1840 Mr. Randolph built a house, which was the place of his residence during the remainder of his life. In 1837 he built the first schoolhouse in Joshua Township, and in 1854 this was replaced by a brick building, which has since given place to the "Randolph School," erected in 1900, and which now marks the site of the original schoolhouse of that name. Mr. Randolph was one of the early teachers in Indiana, was also a surveyor there and made globes, maps and charts, and in 1841-42, after coming to Fulton County, there held the office of County Commissioner. In early life he served as a soldier of the War of 1812. To him and his faithful wife were born ten children, of whom six are still living, namely: Maria Jane, wife of D. Y. Miller, of Canton, who has seven children—three sons and four daughters—of whom one son is a Judge in Iowa and another (Gilbert) a lawyer in Canton; Lewis F., the subject of this sketch; Minerva, wife of Samuel Hinkle, of Canton; Eliza, wife of Lewis Trites (deceased), whose biography appears elsewhere in this work; Washington F., who married Mary Ann Moore, has three children and resides on the old Moore home place in Fulton County; Franklin married Anna Meek, who has two children and resides in Canton. Of these three children—Lewis F., Minerva and Eliza—were all born on July 4th and Washington F. and Franklin are twins. Another brother, Daniel, was born on Christmas Day, 1828, and died on Christmas Day, 1848. The father of this family was a man of high character, great force of will and exhaustless energy, and commanded sincere respect wherever known. In politics he was an old-time Whig, and in religion a Swedenborgian, being a member of the first church of that denomination established in Fulton County. He died April 20, 1845, and his wife February 13, 1878.

Lewis F. Randolph was brought by his parents to Joshua Township in the fall of 1835—the year of his birth—and was reared to farm life on the homestead, this locality having been his home during his whole life. In boyhood he received his training in the subscription schools of that locality, and after reaching maturity followed farming with unvarying success until his retirement from active business pursuits. His landed holdings increased until he became the owner of 600 acres, of which he still retains 250 acres, having divided the remainder among his children. Besides carrying on general farming he devoted considerable attention to the raising of stock, and in 1873 imported the first Norman horse brought into Fulton County. He usually raised from 200 to 300 hogs yearly. During the Civil War Mr. Randolph rendered gallant service in defense of the Union, serving in Company F, Sixty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

On January 28, 1864, Mr. Randolph was united in marriage with Elizabeth Andrews, who was born in Fulton County, a daughter of H. V. and Sarah (Shane) Andrews, natives, respectively, of Ohio and Virginia. Three children blessed this union, namely: Mary (Mrs. A. J. Neville), who resides on the old Andrews homestead in Canton Township; Jephtha F., who married Lucille Sloss, and they have one child—Jephtha Jr.—and reside on a farm in Joshua Township, adjoining the subject of this sketch, and Lewis F., Jr., who married Maud Divilbiss, and resides adjoining his father, and has one son—Charles Lewis. H. V. Andrews, the father of Mrs. Lewis F. Randolph, was brought to Fulton County, Ill., by his parents when he was five years of age, both parents dying there a few months later. They had previously settled at Fort Clark (now Peoria) when that region was a wilderness, and Indians and game were abundant. In 1820 they moved to what is now Fulton County, then a part of Pike County, embracing all the territory northwest of the Illinois River. They settled in what is now Canton Township, and the family owned and operated the farm now belonging to Sylvester Lane, on which Mrs. Randolph was born. Mr. H. V. Andrews died there in 1903, his wife having preceded him in 1895. Mr. Andrews was an Anti-Slavery Republican (or Abolitionist) and a deacon in the Baptist Church for fifty years. There were nine children in this family, of whom six are living, namely: Harvey, who resides in Peoria; Elizabeth (Mrs. Lewis F. Randolph); George B., of Canton; Abner B., also of Canton; Sarah, wife of Louis Kruse, of Chicago, and Corwin H., who married Rossa Whitmore, of Canton.

In politics Mr. Randolph is independent, supporting men and measures which he believes to be for the best interests of all the people. For about forty years he served his township as School Director and also held the office of School Trustee for some time. Religiously he is an adherent of the New (Swedenborgian) Church. Mrs. Randolph is a member of the Baptist Church. Fraternally Mr. Randolph is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. His life has been one of great usefulness and has been closely interwoven with the development of Fulton County. Wherever his acquaintance extends he is cordially esteemed and regarded with unfeigned respect.

RANDOLPH, Oliver Perry, at one time Sheriff of Fulton County, and the first Republican elected to office therein, was the father of the present Postmaster of Ipava. His was a strong character—strong in its likes and dislikes; kind of heart and generous, often to his own disadvantage; above all, helpful to the unfortunate; plain of manner, outspoken and brave, both physically and morally. It is not difficult to understand from what source Postmaster Randolph drew for many of his distinctive traits of character, when the rugged personality of O. P. Randolph is considered. In discussing his ancestry Mr. Randolph was accustomed to trace it to John Rolfe and Pocahontas, the Indian heroine who saved the life of Captain John Smith, the head of the party who founded Jamestown, Va. He would speak of his lineage with vigor and pride, and there is evidence in the Jamestown record that his claim was well founded. According to these records, "Thomas Rolfe, the son of John Rolfe and Pocahontas, married Jane Poyers, and they had a daughter, Jane Rolfe. Jane Rolfe married Colonel Robert Bolling, and they had a daughter, also called Jane. Jane Bolling married Ryland Randolph, son of Richard Randolph, of Curles Henrico." It was this Richard Randolph from whom O. P. Randolph claimed to be a lineal descendant. Thus descended from strenuous old Virginia stock, Oliver Perry Randolph was, like his ancestors, strongly imbued with a lofty patriotism. He was not a member of any church, but united very early in life with the Masonic fraternity, and it is said of him that he could work with a vigor equaled by but few men of his day.

Born in Fayette County, Pa., February 26, 1830, Oliver P. Randolph married Isabelle Balsinger, also a native of that county. Seven children were born to them there and four in Astoria, Fulton County, Ill., the parents moving to Ipava in 1880. Of these eleven children seven are still living, viz.: Charles S., the Postmaster of Ipava; Franklin P., a resident of St. Louis, Mo.; Annie, wife of James G. DeLent, of Peoria, Ill.; Elizabeth, now Mrs. V. I. Ball, living at Concord, Ill.; Margaret; D. W., also a resident of Peoria, and Mollie D., living with her mother in that city. The deceased children were: John B., who came to Astoria with his parents in 1864, moved to Elmwood, Ill., in 1884, and died at the latter place December 22, 1904; William T., who died in Ipava, and O. P., Jr., who passed away in Lewistown.

On coming to Fulton County in 1864 the father purchased land and engaged in farming on an extensive scale, also buying and shipping stock in large quantities. He continued thus employed until 1878, when the Republicans of Fulton County put him forward as their candidate for Sheriff and elected him—as already stated, he being the first member of the Republican party elected to office in Fulton County. He filled the position for two years, his sons, John B. and Charles S., acting as his deputies, and the office has never been conducted with more general satisfaction to law-abiding citizens and with greater dissatisfaction to evil-doers, than during that period. Upon the expiration of his term of office Mr. Randolph moved to Ipava and engaged in the feed and livery business, in which he continued until his death, which occurred at his home in Ipava at 12:30 p. m., July 24, 1900, aged seventy years, four months and twenty-seven days.

The deceased was not only charitable and generous to individuals, but freely gave of both his time and money to the support of public enterprises which he considered feasible and worthy, so that his death was deeply felt as a personal bereavement and a loss to the community at large. His noble wife, who shared his pleasures and hardships, his reverses and successes, and was at his side through them all, is now an honored resident of Peoria, Ill., being seventy-five years of age and a lifelong member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

RAWALT, Milton.—Morally, socially and financially, Milton Rawalt belongs to the best element in Orion Township, Fulton County, in which he has spent the greater portion of his life, and where he was born September 20, 1843, in a hewed log house about a hundred feet from his latest home in that locality. This farm has been in the possession of his family ever since 1830.

The early days of Orion Township knew no more active and many-sided personality than Jonas Rawalt, father of Milton, nor had it a settler whose character and abilities were more in accord with its needs and possibilities. Of rugged Revolutionary stock, he was a grandson of a Commissary General in the Continental army and son of John Rawalt, a native of Pennsylvania. Jonas was born and spent the first few years of his life on a farm in Northumberland County, Pa., and then moved with his parents to Onondaga County, N. Y., but later returned to his native State. He subsequently moved to Clark County, Ind., of which he was an early settler, and where he learned the distillery business, which he subsequently combined with farming. In Indiana, March 23, 1825, he married Deida Robins, a native of South Carolina, and in 1829 again yielded to an unconquerable desire to share in the development of an unsettled region, and with his wife and two children, John and Enoch, journeyed with a wagon and a three-horse team to Fulton County by way of Bloomington, Ill. The first year was spent on the farm of David Fouts, south of Canton, and during that time he entered land now owned by his son, consisting of 160 acres. His rising prosperity was best indicated by his dwelling places, and in shorter time than it would take the average, his rude frame dwelling was replaced by a hewed log building on the southwest corner of his farm, and this in turn was abandoned for the substantial home which still stands on the old homestead, and where his demise occurred December 22, 1882. The passing of twenty-three years has not served to efface the invaluable political and general services of this stalwart pioneer. Great force of character, marked executive ability, practical common sense and disinterested public-spiritedness opened to him doors of opportunity denied the equally worthy but less discerning and capable individual. He was the first County School Commissioner, and after the organization of the township represented it on the first Board of Supervisors, of which he was the first Chairman, and on which he remained for ten years. He was also the first member of the Legislature from Fulton County (1838-40), and in this, as in other official capacities, proved his worth as a large-minded and well-posted representative of the people. About 1856 he graduated from the Whig into the Republican party, and when the seething discontent between the North and South culminated in the Civil War, with his three sons, John, Enoch and Benjamin, he enlisted as a soldier, and ere his service was completed won the rank of First Major of the Seventh Regiment Illinois Cavalry. John became a member of Company I, One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois Infantry, and died in the service; Enoch was a member of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, and Benjamin served as Adjutant in the Eighth Minnesota Infantry. In religion Mr. Rawalt was a consistent Swedenborgian, and served as trustee and treasurer of the local church for many years. His wife, who shared his pioneer struggles and later prosperity with true womanliness, died October 27, 1878, after a wedded life of fifty-three years. She was the mother of the following named children: John, who died in Memphis, Tenn., as a soldier of the Union; Enoch, who died in October, 1885; Henry and Seth, who died in infancy; Jane, who became the wife of Charles H. Ganson, of Urbana, Ohio; Mary, who became the wife of William M. Ganson, of Havana, Ill.; Benjamin, who removed to Colorado; Elizabeth, who became the wife of Edward Whiteford, of Manito, Ill.; Milton, who now resides in Galesburg, Ill., and Jonas R., who went to Colorado and entered land near the city of Denver.

Milton Rawalt had the advantages of the average youth of his time and place. From the country school near his home he entered the Urbana (Ohio) University and subsequently took a course at Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Chicago, from which he graduated March 23, 1865, on the anniversary of the marriage of his parents. His practical business training began as a clerk in a Canton bank, and he later was connected with the Mechanics' National Bank of Chicago, Ill. Had ill health not cut short his business career and rendered imperative less confining occupation, agriculture would doubtless have lost a practical and intelligent promoter. As it was, he returned to the old homestead and worked it in connection with his father, but in 1868 changed his base of operations to a farm of 120 acres seven miles east of Gilman, of which two months later he sold forty acres for the same price that he had paid for the entire farm. In 1883 he disposed of the remaining eighty acres, which he had highly improved, and bought the old homestead in Orion Township, where he had been born and reared, and with every inch of which he was familiar. He still owns the entire 160 acres, which is supplied with comfortable and commodious buildings and every facility for conducting agriculture to the best advantage.

September 24, 1868, occurred the marriage of Mr. Rawalt and Alice A. Bartels, daughter of Henry A. and Catherine (Rowe) Bartels, natives of Germany and Pennsylvania, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Rawalt are the parents of the following children: Chauncey Otis, who was educated at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill.; Anna M., who died June 5, 1883, at the age of ten years; Lena Maud, wife of H. A. Walton; Lillie E., wife of A. C. Renick; Harry B., and Milo R. In 1891 the family moved to Galesburg, Ill., in order that the children might enjoy the privilege of attending Knox College, but in the near future contemplates returning to their former home in Fulton County.

Mr. Rawalt is firmly Republican and has served the township in various capacities, including that of School Trustee and Director. Like his father before him, he is a member of the Swedenborgian Church, as are also his wife and eldest son, and he contributes of his personal interest and financial help to the maintenance of the organization. An intelligent and enterprising citizen, possessing high ideals and the courage of his convictions, no native son of Crion Township has built up a more stable or enviable reputation than has the subject of this sketch.

RAY, Andrew W.—Because of the business ability and popularity of the men directing its affairs the grocery and meat enterprise of Ray & Hollister promises to become one of the substantial and necessary adjuncts to the commercial life of Avon. Established February 3, 1906, the concern already has a liberal patronage in both town and county, a few months only having demonstrated that this particular supply depot is a pleasant and satisfying place in which to trade. The firm started out upon the practical footing of good goods at moderate prices, and it is their intention to maintain a policy of honesty and consideration towards all with whom they have to deal.

Andrew W. Ray, senior member of the firm, is one of the youngest and best known business men of the town. Born on a farm in Warren County, Ill., June 20, 1883, he comes of one of the very early families of Warren County, where was born his father, C. Clinton Ray, October 24, 1860, and his mother, Amanda (Simmons) Ray, February 13, 1858. C. Clinton Ray was a general farmer in early life, but later engaged in the stock business and for years bred, raised, fed and purchased high-grade stock of all kinds. Removing with his family to Fulton County in 1888, he was engaged for a couple of years in the meat business in Avon, but afterward resumed his stock enterprise, in which he is extensively engaged at the present time.

Educated in the public schools of Avon, Andrew W. Ray also took a course at the Gem City Business College, Quincy, Ill., and began his wage-earning career as a clerk in a grocery store. So naturally did he take to this branch of effort and so well did he utilize the opportunity of his year's clerkship that he determined upon his present business, which now carries a stock valued at $3,000. Mr. Ray is a Democrat in politics, and in religion a Universalist. He is a generous, whole-souled young man, always ready to do a favor, and by his tact and courtesy wins the friendship of many and the good will of the entire community.

RAY, David Scott, M. D.—For the past eleven years the name of David Scott Ray has been increasingly identified with the best tenets of medical and surgical science in the town and vicinity of Cuba. By many of the longest established and most conservative families his skill, resource and obliging temperament have come to be regarded as indispensable, and there exist many who are indebted to him for their restoration to health, happiness and usefulness. Dr. Ray has the zeal which recognizes no limitations to his calling, and the great unrest which projects him into ever-widening channels of research. His most prized attributes in part are inherited from colonial sires, who braved the cruel deprivations of early New England, and whose successors, when duty called, followed the martial fortunes of Washington in the Revolutionary period. To these Eastern pioneers his parents, David S. and Arminda (Zoleman) Ray, both traced their descent, although the former was born in North Carolina and the latter in Ohio. The mother was a daughter of Peter and Lucinda Zoleman, also natives of the Buckeye State.

The elder Ray was married in Missonri, and it is presumed, came to Fulton County about 1848. He later lived in Mason County, Ill., where his son, David Scott, was born in 1860. The youth of the lad was a migratory one, as his father traveled for a monument manufacturing firm, and was obliged to visit many parts of the country. He was educated first at Lewistown, later at Vermont and still later at Bushnell and Marietta. His first self-supporting ambition lay in the direction of telegraphy, which he mastered in a comparatively short time, and the following year was stationed at Marietta, where he discharged his duties for the railroad company with promptness and efficiency for ten years. But the station-master was a dreamer, who heard a larger voice above the tick of his instrument, and in time he abandoned the narrow confines of the station and entered the Medical College from which he was graduated in 1892. Starting at the bottom round of the professional ladder, at Bryant, Ill., he remained there three years, and then came to Cuba, which has responded to his bid for co-operation with commendable promptness and mutual benefit. At first he practiced in partnership with Dr. Walch, but since the severance of this connection he has practiced alone.

The family of Dr. Ray consists of his wife, who formerly was Susan J. Jackson, and three children: Arthur J., Blake E. and Clayton E. Dr. Ray is a member of the County, State and National Medical Associations and attends many of the conventions of the same. His identification has had much to do with molding the political undertakings of his adopted town, which he has served as Mayor and Alderman for several terms. He also served as Supervisor for two terms while living at Bryant. A prominent and popular fraternalist, he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Masons and Knights of Pythias. Energy, adaptability, gentleness and sympathy have blazed the way for a gratifying realization of professional ambitions, and by the same token it may be said of Dr. Ray that much is promised to a man who has, in addition, the maturity, practical experience and broad outlook upon life of forty-five years.

RAY, George W.—Among the prosperous and substantial farmers of Fulton County, Ill., whose successful careers reflect credit upon the community in which they live, is the worthy citizen of Section 9, Liverpool Township, to whom this personal record pertains. Mr. Ray was born in Ashe County, N. C., on July 24, 1843. He is a son of William and Annie (Faw) Ray, natives of that State. The maternal grandparents were from Germany and the Rays are of Irish origin. Three brothers of that family were its first representatives in this country, and among these was Jesse Ray, who emigrated from Ireland at an early period and settled in North Carolina. He was the father of James Ray, who was the grandfather of George W. William and Annie (Faw) Ray became the parents of eight children (of whom two died in infancy) as follows: James J., who died in North Carolina in 1867; Henry H., who lives in West Virginia; Elizabeth, widow of James Scott, who resides on the old home farm in Ashe County, N. C.; George W.; John A., a resident of Chehalis County, Wash.; Lee Roy, a rancher residing near Los Angeles, Cal.; Mary, deceased wife of Kin Edwards, of Ashe County, N. C., and Thomas F., who is on the homestead farm in that county. The mother of this family died in 1872 and the father's second wife was Catherine Ray. She and her husband passed away in the county where they made their home.

George W. Ray was reared on the farm and obtained his education in the subscription schools of that day. In his native county, when the Civil War broke out, he enlisted in Company B, Sixth Regiment North Carolina Cavalry, in which he served from May, 1862, until March, 1865. He was with the command of General Bragg in Kentucky, where he did garrison duty. Four of the Ray brothers were soldiers in the Civil War. Henry Ray was present at the surrender of General Lee, serving under General Wade Hampton. On that occasion General Grant restored to Henry Ray his horse, and the latter returned to his North Carolina home.

After he was honorably discharged from the Confederate service in 1865 George W. Ray located in Fulton County, Ill., and went to work by the month on the farm of Jerry F. Willcoxon, in Liverpool Township. In 1867 Mr. Ray purchased eighty-four acres of brush and heavy timber land, clearing it and erecting a comfortable and attractive residence, with substantial barns and good outbuildings. His farming operations have been successful and he raises the best grade of shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs.

On June 24, 1866, Mr. Ray was united in marriage with Annie A., a widowed daughter of Captain Elijah Willcoxon, whose first husband was Appleton Vail. Her father was one of the most conspicuous, highly honored and widely known of the pioneer settlers of Fulton County, and a sketch of his meritorious career is contained in this volume. Mrs. Ray departed this life June 6, 1904, and her death was a very severe blow to her husband. She was one of the noblest of women, kindly, charitable and good to all, irrespective of class or condition, and was beloved by all with whom she came in contact. A devoted member of the old regular Baptist Church, its work and worship were her delight. A consecrated Christian in the highest and fullest sense, her virtues made the influence of her life a blessing to all and caused her death to be a source of deep lamentation throughout the community. On February 6, 1905, G. W. Ray married Amelia Esther Willcoxon, widow of John Byers, and daughter of M. W. and Harriet Willcoxon, natives of Fulton County.

Mr. Ray has always been a man of strong domestic tendencies and a dutiful, considerate and tender husband and father. He has taken a good citizen's interest in public affairs and in politics is a Democrat, but has steadfastly declined to accept office. He enjoys the respect and esteem of all who know him.

RAY, Samuel S.—The butcher business of Samuel S. Ray has weathered the changes in Canton for the past thirty-five years and now is profiting by the confidence so gradually and substantially built by its careful and progressive owner. His shop has long been one of the city's chief sources of supply, and the viands handed over its counters invariably have expressed honest dealing and fair intent. Many of its customers have grown old as its patrons, and have paid into its coffers a large percentage of their earnings. The policy of the establishment never has wavered from high business standards, a desire to please and invariable courtesy.

Mr. Ray was born in Canton July 7, 1860, a son of Arthur and Mary A. (Smith) Ray, natives of Ireland and Fulton County, Ill., respectively. He was educated in the public schools, and December 18, 1883, was united in marriage to Lillie A. Munson, a native of Kanakee, Ill., and who was educated in her native town and in Pekin, Ill. Earlier in life he learned the trade of horseshoeing, which he followed about twelve years, when he turned his attention to his present business. Mr. Ray enjoys wide social prominence, and is a member of the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. He is personally well liked and popular, and contributes not a little to the business and general stability of the community.

REA, J. S.—For the past thirty years the grocery, queensware and hardware store of J. S. Rea has kept pace with the growth of Avon, winning the confidence and support of the community and netting its owner a substantial yearly income. Established in 1869 by B. Rose, the store was operated by him until purchased by the present owner, March 10, 1876, since which time many changes have been noted and great expansion of trade has resulted. The present structure—a two-story brick—was erected in 1885, and is twenty-six by eighty-five feet ground dimensions. The store occupies the entire lower floor, while the upper floor is rented to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which organization Mr. Rea is a member of long standing. He also is a prominent politician, and though in no sense an office-seeker, has served for one year as Collector of Union Township.

Mr. Rea inherits his mercantile proclivities from his father, Franklin Rea, who was born in Lancaster County, Pa., and in early life learned the carpenter's trade. He was a pioneer of Morgan County, Ohio, and after settling there substituted merchandising for carpenter work and followed the same for several years. His wife, Mary (Lemmon) Rea, also was born in Lancaster County, and became the mother of a large family of children, all of whom received a practical common school education in Morgan County. The sons were trained in the principles of merchandising in their father's store, and J. S. was thus employed until striking out for himself in Avon in 1876, at that time being thirty years old, having been born in Morgan County, Ohio, November 21, 1846.

The marriage of Mr. Rea and Laura J. Curry occurred in McDonough County, Ill., in 1872, Mrs. Rea being a daughter of Jacob Doran and Rachel Curry, natives of Eastern Ohio. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rea, namely: Frank D., Nellie O. and Rachel Mary. The son of this family, a well educated and enterprising young man, has been his father's business associate for several years, and his partner for the past two years. A continuance of the stable and well conducted enterprise is thus practically assured when the older partner shall lay aside the cares of business and resign himself to a well merited leisure.

RECORD, Charles F., a prominent old-time farmer, now living in retirement in Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the State of New Hampshire in 1842, a son of Nahum and Martha (Fernel) Record, natives of that State, the father, Nahum Record, being the proprietor of a shoe manufacturing concern. Moving to Illinois in 1854, he engaged in the same business in Farmington in partnership with Edward Bean, employing a number of men, and in which he continued up to the time of his death.

The subject of this sketch received his boyhood's mental training in the public schools of New England, and accompanied his parents to Fulton County, Ill., when he was twelve years old. A short time afterwards he returned to Massachusetts, where he secured employment in a boot and shoe factory. At the age of fourteen years he went on board of a vessel as a cabin boy, making the passage between Kennebunk, Me., and Haverhill, Mass., and was thus employed for one year. In 1861 he attempted to enlist in the First Regiment, Maine Cavalry, but failed to pass on account of his age. In the same year he made a like attempt to join the Boston Battery in Boston, Mass., but was rejected for the same reason. Coming to Illinois in 1862, he again offered to enlist in a Chicago Board of Trade battery, but failed for the third time because of the insufficient age. Still persisting in his effort to enter the army, he was finally mustered into Company G, One Hundred and Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which he joined in Fulton County, and in which he took part in the siege of Vicksburg, the engagements at Coldwater and Holly Springs, Miss., and in the battle of Lookout Mountain, where he was wounded and sent to the hospital in Memphis, Tenn., after his recovery rejoining his regiment. On August 25, 1865, he was mustered out of service at Springfield, Ill., and, returning to Fulton County, engaged in farming. This occupation he followed continuously until his retirement from active labor. Besides other property he is the owner of a ten-acre piece of fruit-bearing land just north of Farmington.

In 1868 Mr. Record was united in marriage with Ruth Wellman, who was born in Indiana, and received her early mental training in the public schools of Illinois. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Record resulted in four children, namely: Frank, James Perry, Anna and Charles F.

RECTOR, Louis T., an enterprising and progressive farmer of Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township on November 1, 1874, a son of Wilson and Lemyra (Beadles) Rector, natives of Ohio. Wilson Rector settled in Fulton County at an early period, locating in Cass Township, where he has been successfully engaged in farming for many years.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the home farm and received his early training in the district schools of his neighborhood. Since early manhood he has carried on farming in his own behalf. In 1896 he moved to Section 1, Cass Township, and began operations on land purchased by his father two years previously. He manages a farm of 240 acres and, besides general farming, bestows much attention to the raising of stock. He is a wide-awake and diligent farmer and his labors are rewarded by good results.

On September 19, 1894, Mr. Rector was united in marriage with Myrtle Vanhouten, who was born in Cass Township, Fulton County, a daughter of George and Esmarelda (Totten) Vanhouten, natives of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Rector have become the parents of three children, namely: Mabel, Dane and Helen. In politics Mr. Rector is a supporter of the Democratic party. He takes an intelligent interest in public affairs and is always ready to do his part in the promotion of the general welfare.

REED, Herbert E.—Among the men whose mastery of a useful trade has advanced them to important business responsibilities in Canton, there are many who take a keen interest in civic affairs, and through the possession of executive and general ability are identified in practical fashion with the political, educational and fraternal welfare of the community. Of these none is better known than Herbert E. Reed, who came to Canton as an experienced blacksmith in 1896, and who ever since has been foreman of the blacksmithing department of Parlin & Orendorff.

Mr. Reed developed his trade inclinations in Roseville, Warren County, Ill., where he was born in 1859. His parents, James G. and Sophia (Mahood) Reed, were born in Pennsylvania, the former in 1831 and the latter in 1835. Mr. Reed brings to his chosen work a well developed intelligence, for his educational chances included the public schools and Abingdon College, in both of which he made a record as a painstaking and sagacious student. In 1889 he married Mattie C., daughter of Levi C. and Kate Roadhouse, of Galesburg, Ill. The children of this union are Delos L., Kate L., James G., Warren T. and Helen S. In 1903 Mr. Reed was elected Alderman for the First Ward, which honor was followed in April, 1905, by his election to the Board of Supervisors of Canton Township. He is prominent in social circles and is a member of the Masonic order, Knights of Pythias and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in the last of which he is Past Grand. Mr. Reed dignifies his trade by giving it his best effort, and by keeping in the advance guard of workers in the same line. His tact and consideration, no less than his strength of character and authority, render him popular with his employes, and he has the faculty of securing from them conscientious and painstaking co-operation.

REIHM, Albert.—Of the native sons of Young Hickory Township who are carrying forward the work begun by their sires in the early days of the Central West, mention is due Albert Reihm, who was born September 9, 1876, and whose father, Philip Reihm, mentioned at length elsewhere in this work, arose from a small beginning to agricultural, political and social prominence.

Albert Reihm was reared to an appreciation of country life, and in his maturity is bending every effort to realize its most practical and satisfactory compensations. Not only does he operate the home farm of 118 acres, which he rents from his father since the latter's retirement in 1898, but a farm of his own comprising eighty acres. With a preference for stock-raising, he also raises general produce, and his surroundings are in accord with the best cultivation and housing of the same. A fine garden, orchard, shade trees and ornamental plants contribute to the homelikeness and comfort of his family, the house-head of which is his wife, formerly Effie Borley, whom he married in Young Hickory Township, January 25, 1899, and who was born in Butler County, Kan., May 18, 1878. Mr. and Mrs. Reihm are the parents of two children—Raymond and Everett.

Mr. Reihm has been prominent in Republican politics for several years, and has served a term as Road Commissioner and several years as School Director. He is a member of the Christian Church. His outside relations are eminently agreeable and helpful, and he is the sharer in many friendships and the general good will of the community.

REIHM, Philip, for many years a successful farmer in Hickory Township, Fulton County, Ill., now living in comfortable and honored retirement in the town of Fairview, Fulton County, was born in Mersbaugh, Germany, on May 17, 1834, a son of Daniel and Louisa (Cooper) Reihm, natives of Germany, where the father followed farming. Daniel Reihm and his wife were parents of six children, namely: Daniel, Philip, Balthazer, Mary, Abiline and Margaret.

Philip Reihm came to the United States in 1851 and spent the first five years in Oneida County, N. Y. In 1858 he settled in Fulton County, Ill., where he has ever since maintained his residence. Soon after his arrival there he commenced farming on 118 acres of land on Section 28, Hickory Township, which he had purchased, and of which forty acres were improved. The remainder was grubbed and improved by him, and he devoted his attention to general farming and stock-raising. This farm he continued to cultivate until 1898, when he abandoned active pursuits and retired to private life in Fairview. Mr. Reihm formerly owned another farm of ninety-two acres, which he sold in 1905. He rents the home place to his son Albert and occupies the Fairview residence, which he bought in 1898. In 1862 he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served his country faithfully for three years. He took part in the battles of Missionary Ridge and Black River, participated in the Siege of Vicksburg and marched to Chattanooga.

In 1865, in Deerfield Township, Fulton County, Mr. Reihm was united in marriage with Catherine Fingel, who was born in Germany. Mrs. Reihm is a daughter of Leonard and Magdalena (Walter) Fingel, who settled in Fulton County in 1855, locating in Deerfield Township, where the father owned eighty acres of land, and carried on farming during the remainder of his life. Mr. and Mrs. Reihm became the parents of eight children, namely: Henry, Kate (Mrs. Alpaugh), Charles, Frank and Fred (twins), Philip, Albert and Sylvester. The religious connection of Mr. Reihm is with the Lutheran Church. In politics he is a Republican and has rendered efficient public service as School Trustee. Fraternally he is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic. In all the relations of life he has faithfully fulfilled every obligation, and his record as a man and as a citizen is without blemish.

REPASS, William M., who is successfully engaged in farming on Section 8, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Wythe County, Va., July 26, 1856, a son of Rev. John C. and Annie (Crager) Repass, and a grandson of Rufus Repass, who lived in Pennsylvania at an early period. Rev. John C. Repass was born August 17, 1828, and his wife, Annie Crager, who was born in the State of Virginia, May 5, 1822, still survives, and her residence is at Rural Retreat, Wythe County, Va.

Ten children were born to Rev. and Mrs. John C. Repass, namely: James W., born April 29, 1849, whose home is in Wythe County, Va.; Daniel D., born August 16, 1850, and now engaged in farming in Smyth County, Va.; George R., born May 14, 1852, and also carries on farming in the same county; Luther K., who was born August 3, 1853, and is engaged in the same occupation in Wythe County, Va.; Rhoda J., born December 18, 1854, and became the wife of Thomas Groseclose, a farmer in the last named county; William M., to whom this record pertains, born July 26, 1856; Albion, born May 1, 1858, who lives in Roanoke County, Va., and has been for twenty years a conductor on the Norfolk & Western Railroad; Emory S., born September 30, 1860, who carries on farming at Rural Retreat, Wythe County, Va.; Sarah, born February 11, 1862, wife of a Mr. Trout, who is connected with the Western Union Telegraph Company at Augusta, Ga., and John C., Jr., born December 17, 1863, a resident of Smithville, Ga., also employed by the same company. The father of this family died June 14, 1903, at the age of seventy-four years, nine months and twenty-seven days. He was a widely known minister of the Lutheran Church and one of the strong pillars of that denomination for more than fifty years. His life was replete with good works.

The subject of this biographical sketch was born and reared on the old home farm in Wythe County, Va., and received his mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood. When he was about nineteen years old he went to Ashe County, N. C., and there followed the occupation of a blacksmith for four years. In January, 1881, he made a trip to Pueblo, Colo., where he was employed in the round house of a railroad. From that place he went, in the fall of 1884, to the vicinity of Wichita, Kans., where he worked on a farm until December, 1885. At that period he located in Fulton County, Ill., and went to work at farming by the month. Since establishing his residence in Fulton County Mr. Repass has been one of its most energetic and progressive citizens. His farm, on Section 8, Liverpool Township, consists of 138½ acres of land under a high state of cultivation. He is engaged in general farming and raises good grades of stock of all kinds. Although a thorough, diligent and painstaking farmer, he finds time to keep himself fully informed in regard to current events, and takes an earnest interest in public affairs.

On October 7, 1891, Mr. Repass was united in marriage with Mary I. Willcoxon, a daughter of Marshall N. Willcoxon, and a granddaughter of Captain Elijah Willcoxon, a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Repass became the parents of four children, as follows: Annie May, born May 21, 1893; William M., born September 5, 1894; Dorothy Estelle, born April 28, 1896, and Marion Merle, born December 29, 1897.

In politics Mr. Repass is an active and influential supporter of the Democratic party, although conservative in his political action. He has ably and faithfully filled local offices of trust in connection with the school system and has proved worthy of the confidence thus reposed in him by the people of his township. He is now serving with marked acceptability as School Trustee and has always been a vigorous advocate of the interests of the schools. He is a man of upright character and enjoys the respect and esteem of a wide circle of acquaintance. His worthy and estimable wife is a consistent member of the Christian Church.

REYNOLDS, J. F., a prominent merchant of Fulton County, Ill., was born in Iowa in 1865, a son of James C. and Eliza J. (Carr) Reynolds, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Indiana. James C. Reynolds went to Iowa at the age of sixteen years, where he worked on a farm, but in 1883 moved to Fulton County, Ill., where he has continued in the same occupation.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the paternal farm and received his early mental training in the public school in Iowa. He was one of a family of seven children, all of whom were boys, and all now living. He began his business life as clerk in a general store in Smithfield, Ill., and after working one year in that capacity, in conjunction with his brother bought out the concern, which he conducted for about four years. Selling out at the end of that time, he spent two years in farming, and then went into the general mercantile business in Ellisville, Ill., in which he remained two years. Subsequently he bought out Norris & Weaver's store in that place, which he kept for five years. He then consolidated the concern with his brother's store, and, in 1897, added a line of agricultural implements. He now conducts the implement business alone, dealing in all kinds of farm machinery, buggies, wagons and manufacturer's hardware. In 1893 he erected a store building twenty-four by seventy feet, and has also a warehouse thirty-six by sixty feet.

In 1884 Mr. Reynolds was united in marriage with Kate Watson, who was born in Smithfield. One child, Maude (Mrs. Balmer), has resulted from this union. Mr. Reynolds is a member of the I. O. O. F.

RHODES, Walter Hancock, former banker of Lewistown, Ill., now of Omaha, Neb., was born in Havana, Mason County, Ill., July 4, 1871, the son of John W. and Cyrene (Hancock) Rhodes, and received his education in the public schools of his native place and Iowa College, Grinnell, Iowa, graduating from the former in 1889 and from the latter in 1893, from which he received the Ph. B. degree. Mr. Rhodes' father was a soldier of the Civil War, enlisting as a private and being advanced before his final discharge to the rank of Captain, serving in all during the whole of the war period or more than four years.

After graduating from his alma mater Mr. Rhodes returned to his home at Havana, but soon engaged in the banking business at Lewistown, being employed as Assistant Cashier of the Lewistown National Bank from February 22, 1894, until August following, when he became Cashier of the same institution, a position which he held until May 1, 1907. In the meantime he assisted in organizing other banking institutions in Fulton County, including the Ipava State Bank at Ipava, and the State Bank of Cuba, serving as Vice-President and Director of the former until his retirement from the banking business in Lewistown and as Director of the latter. On May 1, 1907, he retired from the Lewistown National Bank to accept a position in connection with the National Mutual Fire Insurance Company at Omaha, Neb. His standing as a business man is indicated by his continuous connection with the banking business in Fulton County for a period of more than thirteen years.

On June 5, 1895, Mr. Rhodes was united in marriage at Freeport, Ill., the bride's paternal home, with Flora Belle Wolfe and they have two children: Mildred Bernice, aged nine years, and Charles Wolfe, aged six years. Mr. Rhodes is a Republican in his political views and the social and fraternal organizations with which he is connected include the Y. M. C. A., the Masonic Order, the Knights of Pythias, the Omaha Field Club and the Illinois Bankers' Association.

RICE, George F.—A keen sense of responsibility and thoroughness in the discharge of the many-sided duties which have lined his long avenue of life have given George F. Rice a permanent place among the men of endurance, courage and large usefulness in Fulton County. Mr. Rice swells the long list of Fulton County residents who owe their nativity to the State of Pennsylvania, where he was born in Perry County, that State, October 25, 1851. He was reared to farming, and as a young man of energy and ambition came to Fulton County in 1872, locating in Orion Township, where he since has devoted his time to the cultivation of his land and the raising of fine stock. He is the owner of 160 acres of land, and for several years he has been engaged in selling agricultural implements and shipping grain and hogs, his shipping point being Breed's Station.

Through his marriage to Alice Kelly, of Fulton County, Mr. Rice has become the parent of two sons: Earl Edmund and William Elmer. Mrs. Rice is a daughter of J. B. and Rachel Kelly, one of the earliest and most prominent families of the county and Orion Township. Formerly Mr. Rice was prominent in the local Grange, and did much to further the interests of the farming population. He is well informed and wide-awake, and his friends in the township and county are many.

RICHARDSON, Martha A. (M. D.), who is successfully engaged in the practice of medicine in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Corydon, Wayne County, Iowa, on November 1, 1871, being a daughter of Milton and Lucinda (Wymer) Richardson, natives of Iowa.

In girlhood Dr. Richardson attended the district schools of her birthplace and later became a pupil in Corydon High School. She then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Keokuk, Iowa, from which she was graduated with the class of 1896. The preparation of Dr. Richardson for her chosen profession was very thorough, and the successful results of her practice in Canton attest her diagnostic ability, as well as her skill in therapeutics. She commands, in an unusual degree, the confidence and esteem of all with whom she comes into professional and social contact and her patronage has steadily increased since she located in Canton.

Dr. Richardson is a member of the American Medical Association, the Fulton County Medical Society and the Military Tract Medical Society.

RILEY, Henry, a well known and thriving farmer in Section 12, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born January 20, 1858, in Buckheart Township, this county, where the town of Bryant now stands. He is a son of William and Mary (Blair) Riley, of whom the father was born near Maysville, Ky., and the mother at Portsmouth, Va. William Riley settled in Fulton County in 1834, locating in Buckheart Township, and was engaged in farming in the county until his death in 1873. His widow passed away in 1886. Since the period of his arrival in Fulton County, thirty-eight years before his demise, William Riley had been identified with its progress and had done his utmost to promote its best interests. A memoir of his life appears in another section of this volume.

Henry Riley was reared on the farm where he now lives, his father having moved there in 1858, when Henry was but two months old. As he grew up he received his education in the district schools of the vicinity and the public school at Lewistown, and since early manhood has carried on farming on the old homestead with invariable success. He is a general farmer and in addition devotes considerable attention to raising stock of superior grades.

On October 14, 1880, Mr. Riley was united in marriage with Sarah M. Wertman, a native of Fulton County, and a daughter of John and Sarah (Emmons) Wertman, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively. Four children have resulted from their union, namely: John W., born July 29, 1881, and Glenn E., October 28, 1883, who are at home; Bertha E., February 18, 1886, and Sarah M., November 2, 1888. Mr. Riley has afforded these children excellent educational advantages, which they have improved to the utmost, and Mrs. Riley is a member of a family long prominent in Fulton County.

In politics Mr. Riley is a supporter of the Republican party and takes a useful and unselfish interest in public affairs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the M. W. A. and the K. of P. He is a man of upright character, is recognized as strictly honorable in all the relations of life and maintains a high standing in the community as an exemplary citizen.

RILEY, William A., formerly a prominent and prosperous farmer, located three miles north of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., but now living in retirement in the city of Lewistown, was born on a farm near the site of the present town of Bryant, Fulton County, October 21, 1845. He is a son of William and Mary (Blair) Riley, natives, respectively, of the vicinity of Maysville, Ky., and the city of Portsmouth, Va.

Mr. Riley's great-grandfather, William Riley, was of Scotch-Irish descent, and lived in Pennsylvania. The grandfather, also William Riley, was born in that State and moved to Kentucky, where he was married to Mary McIlvain. In 1829 he died at his home in Lewis County, Ky., and in 1833 his widow and her ten children traveled by wagon to Rushville, Ill., moving the next year to the farm near Bryant now occupied by her grandson, Everett Carter.

Mrs. Riley and her five sons and five daughters lived on that farm together and after the marriage of all the children except two (Walter and Charles), who died there, she made her home with her son John on the same farm until her death. But one of this family of ten children now survives—Mary A. (Mrs. Little), of Vermont, Fulton County. The others were as follows: Louisa (Mrs. Lindley), James, Margaret (Mrs. Hasson), Walter, William, John, Charles, Eveline (Mrs. Laws) and Harriet J. (Mrs. Carter).

William Riley, father of William A., was born April 5, 1811, at Cabin Creek, near Maysville, Ky., settled in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, in 1841, and was engaged in farming there and in Lewistown Township until his death, February 7, 1873. His widow survived him until October 6, 1886, when she, too, passed away. The father was closely identified with the development of Fulton County and was a man of much prominence, being held in high esteem. He was wedded to Mary Blair April 24, 1843, and six children resulted from their union, namely: William, Mary E. (Mrs. Laws), John H., Eveline, Henry and Indiana. The career of the father of this family is suitably portrayed on another page of this work.

William A. Riley was educated in the district schools of his neighborhood and in 1858 moved with his parents to the farm on Section 12, Lewistown Township, now occupied by his brother Henry. There he remained until 1880, having charge of the home place after his father's death. In that year he purchased the farm three miles north of Lewistown now occupied by John Taylor, where he lived until 1904, moving then to Lewistown. His farming operations have been invariably successful, and he is now living at leisure in the enjoyment of a competency. He is a man of upright character and a public-spirited citizen.

On October 10, 1876, Mr. Riley was united in marriage with Mattie Pritchard, a native of Liverpool, Fulton County, Ill., and a daughter of George and Amanda (Rice) Pritchard, natives, respectively, of New Hampshire and Vermont. Mrs. Riley's birth occurred in Liverpool, Fulton County, Ill., her father being born near Ipswich, N. H., and her mother at Thetford, Vt. They were married in Lewistown, Ill. The father came west and settled at Farmington, Fulton County, about 1840, engaging in mercantile pursuits all his life. He died in 1874 and his wife in 1860. George Pritchard was a Republican and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Into his family were born six children—three sons and three daughters—of whom two sons are deceased. Three children have resulted from this union, namely: Lena, a teacher at Lewistown; George, of Los Angeles, Cal., and Ella. Politically Mr. Riley is a supporter of the Republican party. The descendants of Mary (McIlvain) Riley, the pioneer settler of the family in Fulton County, have become quite numerous, and since 1897 it has been their custom to hold annual reunions in the form of picnics in the grove on Henry Riley's farm, in Section 12, Lewistown Township. About one hundred relatives are usually in attendance on these interesting occasions. (See sketch of William Riley, Sr., at end of this chapter.)

ROBB, James C.—Among the few typical representatives of the agricultural element of Fulton County, Ill., whose industry, energy and careful management in farming operations have enabled them to relinquish active labors while still in the prime of life and to enjoy in leisurely retirement the fruits of former toil, is the worthy gentleman to whom this personal record pertains. The competency which he now happily possesses assures him a future blessed with comfort.

Mr. Robb is a native of Illinois, where he was born on a farm two and a half miles south and one-half mile east of Farmington, Fulton County, on December 20, 1852. He is a son of Andrew and Susan (Swigert) Robb, the former born in Ohio and the latter in Pennsylvania. His grandfather, James Robb, was a native of the State of Vermont. He had the rare distinction in those days of having served his country with credit in two wars. A soldier in the War of 1812, in which he enlisted from Ohio, and bore an honorable discharge; he also fought in the Civil War, having joined the Union army in 1863, and served until the end of the conflict. In 1847 Andrew Robb left Ohio, where he had been engaged in agricultural pursuits, and settled in Fairview, Fulton County, Ill. In 1849 he moved to Farmington Township, where he purchased 120 acres on Section 24, and on this farm erected the first buildings. During the Civil War he was drafted for the service, but furnished a substitute on account of the paternal care required by his family of young children. He departed this life at his home in Farmington on September 3, 1884. He was a man of industrious habits and upright character, and was respected by all. He was a Republican in politics and at different times held all the local offices, including that of Justice of the Peace.

James C. Robb received his early instruction in the district schools of Farmington Township and assisted his father on the farm until he reached years of maturity. After his father's death he moved with his mother to Farmington, though still conducting farming operations on the old homestead. Later, however, he rented the farm and has since lived in retirement in Farmington. He now owns an aggregate of 265 acres there. He is also the owner of a fine residence on Main Street in Farmington, where he maintains his residence.

On December 9, 1890, Mr. Robb was united in marriage with Anna F. Mummey, who was born on April 4, 1868, in McConnelsville, Ohio, and received her early mental training in the district school and high school of Farmington, Ill. Mrs. Robb is the daughter of Charles W. Mummey, who settled with his family in Fulton County in 1872, and whose sketch appears on another page of this volume. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Robb has resulted in four children, namely: Mary Luerma, who died at the age of three months; Francis C., Zelda Marie and Agnes Vanessa. Mrs. Robb is a most estimable lady of culture and refinement—the ideal wife and mother. Their home is a Mecca for friends, who always meet a most cordial and hearty welcome and receive generous entertainment.

In politics Mr. Robb is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party and in religion adheres to the faith of the Congregational Church. He is a prominent citizen of Farmington, where he and his estimable wife are held in high esteem and are ranked among the most useful members of the community.

ROBERTSON, James H.—Agriculture and merchandising are so closely allied that a knowledge of either is an invaluable asset in the promotion of the other. The man who has been well trained in farming has a comprehension of values and utilities not acquired in any other way, and when he leaves the farm and embarks in the store business he broadens and enlarges his former activities. It is to the latter occupation that James H. Robertson now devotes his daily life, and his efforts have rebounded to the commercial stability of Smithfield since the beginning of 1900. Mr. Robertson represents one of the pioneer families of the State, his father, James M. Robertson, having come from Ohio at an early day, while his grandfather, John Cannon, took up government land in Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, where the grandson was born, March 27, 1871. The elder Robertson eventually spent twenty-five years in different parts of the country, principally in Iowa and Dakota, but returned to Illinois in 1903, and from that time made his home with his son in Smithfield until his death October 10, 1906.

James H. Robertson profited by the public schools of the town and county and continued to farm, until establishing his present business in 1900. His resources were severely tested by a fire which demolished his store and stock August 17, 1901, but he rebuilt in short order and now conducts business in a large brick structure on Main Street. He carries a large stock of general merchandise and enjoys an extensive and lucrative patronage.

In connection with his store Mr. Robertson has taken an active interest in local politics and is one of the stanch supporters of the Democratic party. During the process of rebuilding he held the office of Village Marshal, and at other times has been Town Constable, Street Overseer and Alderman. June 22, 1902, he was united in marriage to Lena McCaughey, a native of Vermont Township, Fulton County, born December 8, 1876. On March 17, 1907, to this union was born one daughter, Fern. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and subscribe generously to its active and material support. Fraternally Mr. Robertson is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He has the gifts of mildness, courtesy and consideration, which, combined with practical commercial ideas and strict integrity, render him one of the most promising and useful of the county's younger generation of toilers.

Mr. Robertson's mother died when he was only two months old and he lived with his grandfather, John Cannon, from that time.

ROBERTSON, Jasper, proprietor of Randolph Hotel, Ipava, Ill., was born in Pleasant Township, Fulton County, Ill., April 16, 1863, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Robertson, both natives of Ohio. Coming to Illinois by water, when the boat finally landed at Havana, Ill., the father's means had been entirely exhausted, all that remained of a marketable value being his handmade rifle. This he was obliged to pawn in order to pay the freight on his goods. Taking his scant household belongings to the new house which had been erected in Pleasant Township, Fulton County, he set to work to earn a living and redeem that most important staff of life in those days—his rifle. Being a stonemason by trade, he soon found work and nearly the first money he earned was spent for the purpose indicated, and the trusty rifle, which played such a leading part in the first days of the settlement of the Robertson family in these parts, is now in possession of Jasper Robertson. Jesse Robertson, the father, finally moved into Ipava, and there followed his avocation as a mason until his death. The deceased was a Democrat, but his politics ended when he had cast his vote. His wife survived him until March 19, 1883. To Mr. and Mrs. Robertson were born these children: John, now deceased; Sarah, who was the wife of Wesley Worley, of Elmwood, Ill., but now deceased; Charles, a resident of Pekin, Ill.; Alexander, of Ipava, and Lorenzo, also living in that place, and Jasper, the youngest of the family.

Jasper Robertson's early life was spent in acquiring a fair education and in the monotonous pursuit of a livelihood. On June 20, 1885, he was united in marriage with Charlise Belles, who was also a native of Pleasant Township. They are the parents of five children, namely: Lizzie, born February 3, 1887, and holding a teacher's certificate, but at present living at home; Mabel, born May 11, 1889, a graduate of the high school (class of 1905), also living at home; Lloyd, born February 21, 1891, and died June 7, 1891; Dean, born March 12, 1896, and died July 20, 1896, and Clyde, born July 28, 1900. Mrs. Robertson and her daughter Mabel are members of the Presbyterian church.

Since their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Robertson have made Ipava their home. Mr. Robertson is a carpenter by trade, and for a number of years was Street Superintendent and City Sexton. In the performance of his official duties, as well as in his private workmanship, he gave general satisfaction, gaining and retaining the confidence of all with whom he had dealings. On June 26, 1905, Mr. and Mrs. Robertson assumed charge of the Randolph Hotel and by their courtesy and good management have brought it to rank with the best hostelrys in this part of the State.

ROBINSON, Charles B.—The knowledge that he has contributed materially to the agricultural, social and moral wealth of the community in which his entire life has been spent, is one of the satisfying compensations growing out of the industrious and well directed career of Charles B. Robinson. Mr. Robinson's worldly assets are represented by the farm of 400 acres adjoining Ipava, in Vermont Township, where he was born December 24, 1859, and by the splendidly appointed home in which he now lives retired within the limits of the town. A son of Thomas C. and Sarah Ann Robinson, mention of whom may be found in the sketch of T. C. Robinson, Mr. Robinson had the average early opportunities of the country bred youth of his time and place, and he readily absorbed the knowledge of farming imparted by his father's ripe experience.

At the time of his marriage, November 24, 1881, Mr. Robinson succeeded to the management of the home place, which then consisted of 165 acres. His energy and resourcefulness created a need of more extensive holdings, and he added to his real estate from time to time until his present 400-acre farm has been the result. He engaged in general farming to some extent, but made a specialty of high-grade cattle, which furnished the largest agricultural revenue. He developed into what was commonly regarded as a remarkably successful and prosperous farmer, and one who thoroughly understood the economic and scientific features of the trade. His stock business grew to a yearly shipment of from seventy-five to one hundred and twenty-five head a year, and his barns, outbuildings and general facilities conformed to his progressive and practical ideals. This farm remained the dwelling place and pride of Mr. Robinson until 1904, when he moved to his present home, which is one of the finest rural residences in Fulton County. He still occupies himself with the management of his farm, but his arrangements permit greater leisure than he has heretofore enjoyed.

The wife of Mr. Robinson, whose maiden name was Maggie T. Shaver, was born April 1, 1860, in Fulton County, to which her father, George Shaver, came at an early day. Mr. Shaver died in 1883, and his wife in 1873, leaving five children. The nine children of Mr. and Mrs. Shaver were as follows: Mary C., wife of Lewis D. Zoll, of Niles, Okla.; Henrietta, deceased in infancy; Winfield, deceased; Melvin, deceased; Parmelia, wife of George Coleman, of Bunker Hill, Ind.; Annie, the deceased wife of George Anson, of Iowa; John, living in Lexington, Ill., and Samuel H., on the old place in Fulton County. To Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Robinson have been born four children: Joseph, born November 14, 1883; Bessie, born December 1, 1890; Fred, born August 11, 1895, and Irma, born November 28, 1903.

Mr. Robinson has taken a commendable interest in local Republican politics, and has creditably filled a number of local offices. Especially is he interested in the cause of education, and in the furtherance of those general agencies which produce the highest citizenship, and therefore the most enlightened civilization.

ROBINSON, Harry E.—In noting the qualities which have raised Harry E. Robinson from the drudgery of a mortgaged farm to his present standing as one of the foremost citizens of Table Grove, one is forced to renewed appreciation of courage, moral strength, honesty in public and private life, and unselfish devotion to business, political and general obligations. The present position of Mr. Robinson may be defined as a furniture merchant, as an efficient funeral director and embalmer of Fulton County, and as a zealous and fearless member of the Board of Aldermen.

The farm in Bethel Township, McDonough County, where Mr. Robinson was born May 2, 1868, became the home of the family in 1863, in which year his parents, Samuel E. and Hannah (Anderson) Robinson, and his grandparents, John C. and Rebecca (Elliott) Robinson, came in a wagon overland from Uniontown, Pa. The birth of John C. Robinson occurred in a sailing vessel on the trackless waste of the Atlantic in 1805, while his parents were on their way from Ireland to America. He was reared on the farm near Uniontown and there married, his wife being a native of the Quaker State. Mr. Robinson died February 18, 1882, and his wife died in July, 1886. Of their nine sons and three daughters only one son and one daughter are now living, namely: Benjamin E., a soldier during the Civil War, and now a retired farmer of Pennsylvania; and Jennie, wife of Art B. Frisby, of Galesburg, Illinois.

Samuel E. Robinson was born October 10, 1732, on the farm of his parents near Uniontown, Pa., and died on the Bethel Township farm September 10, 1884. He is survived by his wife, who is now married to Thomas Bailey, of Table Grove. Mr. Robinson and his parents are buried half a mile from the farm upon which they settled in 1863. He was a man of strong character and broad sympathies, a devout member of the Baptist Church, and a firm believer in the party of which Abraham Lincoln was the noblest exponent. His admiration of the great Emancipator amounted almost to reverence, and he never wearied of relating incidents which marked the progress of the rail-splitter to the presidential chair. He was diligent and a hard worker, but nevertheless, he left a mortgage on his farm which seriously embarrassed his heirs. Of his five children John died in infancy; Della C. died at the age of three years; Harry E. is the subject of this review; Orta died at the age of three years; and William R. is a farmer in Pleasant Township.

After finishing his training at the district school near his home, Harry E. Robinson took a course at the Macomb Normal and at the Business College in the same town. He first achieved independence as a clerk in a general store and at the end of eighteen months, during June, 1890, came to Table Grove and established a furniture business with a capital of $350. From this small beginning he developed a large trade, but in 1899 sold his business and returned to Bethel Township, where he operated the old homestead until disposing of the same in 1900. To this old farm he had given much of the best effort of his life, and it was he who lifted the mortgage when his school days were over, and turned the property unincumbered over to his mother. While in the township he achieved political prominence and served as a member of the Republican County Central Committee when the township was carried for McKinley, the first time that it had gone Republican in its entire history. From the farm Mr. Robinson went to Columbus, Ohio, and was identified with a business house there until August, 1901, when he returned to Table Grove and the following October bought the furniture and undertaking business which he has since conducted. In 1892 he had taken a course and received a diploma from the undertaking school of Professor Sullivan, in Peoria, and in 1902 took a post-graduate course in the Barnes Undertaking School in Chicago, also passing the State examination and receiving a certificate entitling him to practice anywhere in Illinois. He carries a large stock of furniture and a full equipment of funeral supplies.

March 18, 1891, Mr. Robinson was united in marriage to Myrtle Bailey, daughter of Thomas Bailey, a pioneer of McDonough County, and a present resident of Table Grove. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson have four children: H. Edison, born January 10, 1892; S. Miles, born July 14, 1893; Nancy L., born October 23, 1896; and Martha, born March 29, 1904. The family are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Robinson is an elder, and he was largely instrumental in securing the funds for the erection of the present church building, which now is entirely out of debt. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Court of Honor. Mr. Robinson has been prominent in local politics for many years, has served as Town Clerk, and now is serving his fourth year as a member of the City Council. He has worked strenuously and fearlessly for a clean and fair city government, and is known to possess high and progressive civic ideas. His home life is ideal, and his hospitality is extended to the large circle of friends who find sympathy and good cheer in one of the most beautiful and artistic residences in Table Grove.

ROBINSON, Henry Oscar.—The name and deeds of the Robinson family have been clearly outlined against the background of events in Fulton County for the past sixty-five years. In the person of Charles Branson Robinson was introduced into what was then a thinly settled community an element of moral strength, physical endurance and mental vigor. A representative of the Society of Friends, this early settler reflected a purity of motive and clearness of forethought as rare as it is helpful and inspiring. He was born in Chester County, Pa., May 30, 1815, and died in Fulton County, Ill., in July, 1903, at the age of eighty-eight years. Mr. Robinson came to the Central West as a bachelor, at the time having few material resources upon which to found the prosperity which he subsequently enjoyed. Taking up land in Vermont Township during the latter 'forties, he married Elizabeth Scott, a native of the vicinity of Wheeling, W. Va. and who came West in 1846 to make her home with her sister, Mrs. Mary A. Green. The young people started housekeeping under conditions which would have dismayed the youth of today, but they had stout hearts, an abundance of energy and industry and no temptations, the satisfying of which would exceed their means. Both were devout Quakers, a faith which remained with them and brightened their entire lives, and which still is subscribed to by the wife, who is now seventy-eight years old. During his sixty years in Fulton County Mr. Robinson exerted a potent influence in farm, church and educational circles, and was so ardent a lover of peace and harmony that he often went out of his way to adjust complications arising between his friends and neighbors. A strong Republican, he yet never held an office, nor did he, in defiance of the teachings of his church, ever invade a court room as a witness or prosecutor. He never sued, nor was he ever sued by anyone. He walked sternly and relentlessly along the religious paths of his forefathers, in all ways conforming to their community and individual ideals. Of his six children Thomas resides in the vicinity of Ipava; Theodore is a farmer near Table Grove, Fulton County; Henry Oscar owns a farm in Pleasant Township; William F., with his mother, occupies the old homestead in Vermont Township; Olive J. is the wife of Charles Dallas, who died May 25, 1906, and Edward R. met his death by lightning at the age of seventeen years.

Henry Oscar Robinson was born on his father's farm in Vermont Township, December 10, 1856, and was educated in the district schools and the high school at Ipava, which he attended two years. His youth knew much of the dreary drudgery of farming, but his tasks were softened by the refining and developing influences of his home, and the gentle care and sympathy of his parents. He was twenty-seven years old when he departed from the home roof to seek the benefits and rewards of an independent life, and at the same time to assume the responsibility of home-making through his marriage, September 12, 1883, to Mary A. Miller, who was born in Vermont Township, February 6, 1862, a daughter of Abner and Ethlinda Miller. Abner Miller was born in Harrison County, Ohio, in 1835, and in 1852 settled in Vermont Township, where his death occurred in 1895. His wife lives on the homestead with her youngest son, Elwood. Of the other children in her family Jonathan L. lives on a farm near Holdridge, Neb.; Fannie is now Mrs. Koons, of Thayer, Neb.; Josephine died in 1899; Emma is the wife of Charles Ellison, of Vermont Township; Lois died in 1891, at the age of twenty-one years; Jesse G. is a farmer in Iowa, and Howard owns a farm adjoining the old homestead in Vermont Township. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson are the parents of five children: Leonard M., born June 26, 1884, died August 20, 1896; Lawrence S., born June 16, 1888; Henry Parry, born October 12, 1894; Laura E., born August 1, 1897, and Mary L., born December 31, 1901.

In 1886 Mr. Robinson purchased a 120-acre tract situated on Section 8, Pleasant Township, and moved thereon during March of the same year. To this property he since has added eighty acres, and now owns 200 acres in one body. In connection with general farming he is extensively engaged in stock-raising, making a specialty of Poland-China hogs, of which he has many registered, and of Durham cattle. He is a great appreciator of fine stock and derives constant pleasure, as well as profit from their breeding and care. His improvements are practical and well advised and an atmosphere of comfort and prosperity pervades the farm. Adhering to the faith of his father, one would not expect of Mr. Robinson ostentation or display, and in this the observer is not disappointed.

A rare interest in the general welfare of the community has characterized the entire active life of Mr. Robinson. A Republican in politics, for the past six years he has been a member of the Board of Education of Ipava, his farm being in that district, and he has held other offices within the gift of his fellow townsmen. He is fraternally connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, while his wife is an officer in the Royal Neighbors of Ipava Lodge, No. 624. Mrs. Robinson is a woman of high intellectual attainments, and for five years previous to her marriage was engaged in educational work in Fulton County. Mr. Robinson has maintained the pioneer reputation of his father and has added thereto, in his own life, the qualifications which enable a man to reach the height of influence and usefulness in his chosen occupation during the strenuous period comprising the last of the nineteenth and the beginning of the twentieth centuries.

ROBINSON, Theodore.—Of the men who have long lent dignity and progressiveness to the business of agriculture in Farmers Township, none are held in higher esteem than Theodore Robinson, whose entire life has been spent in

MR. AND MRS. H. W. STANDARD

Fulton County, and who was born in Vermont Township, July 16, 1854. Of his father, Charles B. Robinson, a sketch may be found on another page of this work. Mr. Robinson was reared on the paternal farm, and made that his home until his twenty-eighth year. He was educated in the public schools of his native township and had the average advantages and training provided by well-to-do parents.

January 4, 1883, Mr. Robinson married Mary Elizabeth Dorsey, who was born in Bernadotte Township, June 13, 1856, a daughter of Lewis Dorsey, one of the honored pioneers of Fulton County. Mrs. Robinson's birthplace was midway between the villages of Bernadotte and Ipava, where she was educated in the Martin school and spent the first twenty-seven years of her life until her marriage in 1883. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson began housekeeping on a small scale on what is known as the Hedge farm, east of Ipava, and six miles southeast of their present home. After renting this place for six years, Mr. Robinson, in 1889, bought their present home on Section 33, in Farmers Township, one mile from Table Grove, and here they have lived for the past eighteen years. Mrs. Robinson has spent more than fifty years of her life in the three townships named and during that time has never been outside of Fulton County, moving to their present place December 5, 1889. Mr. Robinson at once began to build and to remodel his farm, erected sheds for his machinery and temporary quarters for his stock, in time adding to his land until he owned 146 acres, 130 of which are under a high state of cultivation. He has devoted his attention chiefly to stock-raising and buying, and each year ships large numbers of hogs and cattle to market. His implements and general improvements have been selected with rare discretion, and suggest the man who is willing to profit by the experience of others, rather than one who recklessly bows down to the novelty of invention.

Although liberal in his political tendencies, Mr. Robinson inclines to the Republican party, and usually supports it with his vote. He has held many township offices, and has been identified with many phases of township development. Mr. Robinson is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, while Mrs. Robinson is a welcome member of the Oakwood Camp, No. 320, Royal Neighbors, and is prominent in both the social and religious life of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson take great delight in their two children, both of whom are in a fair way to realize the expectations of those near to them. Dessie Alverda, born September 2, 1885, in Pleasant Township, east of Ipava, is a graduate of Class 1903 of the Table Grove High School, and also is an accomplished musician. The son, Amberloy, born September 2, 1890, in Farmers Township, has attended the high school at Table Grove, and is a young fellow of great promise. The married life of Mr. Robinson has been a particularly happy one, and the rare friendship begun between himself and wife in their youth has but strengthened with the trials and successes of the years.

ROBINSON, Thomas.—Since his appointment as rural delivery mail-carrier, November 17, 1903, Thomas Robinson has not missed a day in the performance of his task as distributor of the mail along the route No. 2. This faithfulness to duty is one of the strong and leading traits of this popular representative of an old pioneer family. Mr. Robinson was born in Vermont Township, Fulton County, October 10, 1849, and lived upon the old home farm until his twenty-first year. He was educated in the district schools, and September 27, 1871, married Rebecca J. Grewell, a native of Bernadotte Township, and daughter of Isaac Grewell, mentioned elsewhere in this work.

With his young wife Mr. Robinson established a home east of Ipava, in Pleasant Township, and in 1879 moved to Saunders County, Neb., where he remained until the following December. Returning to Ipava, he made that place his home until 1883, when he settled in Saline County, Neb., where he engaged in general farming until March, 1887, when he entered 160 acres of land in Arapahoe County, Colo. During the latter part of 1889 he located on the old farm east of Ipava, but in 1901, owing to ill health being obliged to abandon farming, settled in the town of Ipava. From then until his appointment to the rural mail delivery service he lived in retirement. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson are the parents of five children: Elizabeth J., wife of W. O. Littleton, a farmer of Bernadotte Township, and has four children—Lolla, Zella, Idres and Vain; Florence Edna, wife of George W. Bohannon, of Ipava, who has five children—Cecil, Pauline, Clinton, Richard and Dortha; Oliver, a farmer of Ellensburg, Wash., who was married March 17, 1906; Eleanor L., at home; and Olive J., a graduate of the Ipava High School, and a school teacher for the past two years.

For more than sixty years the name of Robinson has been a prominent one in Fulton County, and during that time its members have invariably promoted education and good government, and have been closely identified with the best interests of the community. Mr. Robinson, as a Republican, has held a number of offices, including that of School Director. He subscribes to the creed of the Presbyterian Church, although he and his wife were reared in the Quaker faith. His wife and daughters, Eleanor and Olive, are members of the Presbyterian Church.

ROBINSON, Thomas Chalkley.—Self-acquired wealth; liberal ideas, ambitions expressed in promoting agriculture, education, religion and simplicity of living, as well as unquestioned public and private integrity, constitute the fundamentals upon which rest the enviable standing of Thomas Chalkley Robinson, a pioneer of 1841, and at present a retired citizen of Ipava. As have his family for generations, Mr. Robinson subscribes to the tenets of the Society of Friends, founded in 1669 by George Fox, the much persecuted Puritan shoemaker of Nottingham, England, and it is the introduction into the wilderness, sixty-five years ago, of the law-abiding, warless and peaceful beliefs of the reformer, that lends interest and substantiality to the sojourn here of the Robinson family.

Born on a farm in Chester County, Pa., November 13, 1819, Mr. Robinson is the only survivor of the seven children of Thomas and Annie (Branson) Robinson, natives also of Chester County. In 1825, when he was but six years old, Thomas Chalkley's parents removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio, locating on a farm near Mount Pleasant, which remained the home of Thomas C. until 1841. In the spring of that year he came to Illinois and located in Woodland Township, Fulton County, during the following winter settling on the northeast quarter of Section 1, Vermont Township. This region at that time was still wild and unbroken, but abounded in timber, game and an abundance of water. Mr. Robinson put up the architectural idea of the wilderness—a rough log house—and this constituted his bachelor quarters until his marriage, on November 7, 1850. His bride, Sarah Ann Easley, was a daughter of John and Nancy (Kinsey) Easley, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively. Mr. Easley was an early settler of Ohio, and his daughter, Sarah Ann, was born in Harrison County, that State, August 10, 1829. The Easleys moved to Illinois in 1832, and Mr. Easley became the civic father of what now is Ipava, but which then was known as Pleasantville. He platted the embryo town, contributed generously towards its early needs, and gave the three lots comprising the school property, the ground for the old cemetery, the land upon which stands the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal Churches and the two parks. In 1843 he erected what now is the famous Ipava Woolen Mills, but which in its original state was a linseed oil factory. Eventually the factory was converted into the first carding mill in the county, having as motive power a treadmill worked by two oxen, the fuel being a big ox-whip. This progressive pioneer died in 1873, leaving behind him innumerable evidences of his stable business ability, and broad public spirit.

The pure air, abundant game, freedom from restraint and infinite possibility of the prairies were among the cheering compensations which made the cabin life of Mr. and Mrs. Robinson a happy and contented one. They were children of nature, in sympathy with its moods and contented with its rewards. The sun and rain, heat and cold, all contributed to a whole which they had expected and in which they gladly shared. Unstinted hospitality prevailed among the cabin dwellers, of whom at first there were few. The Robinson land was covered with wild grass and timber, which yielded reluctantly to the ingenuity of man, but which eventually developed into one of the most valuable farming properties in Fulton County. Five children came to gladden the home of this worthy couple: Louisa, wife of Joseph Fleming, a retired farmer of Vermont Township; Emily, wife of George La Rue, a farmer of Vermont Township; Charles B., a leading farmer of Fulton County, who married Maggie Shaver; Leona, wife of C. S. Randolph, druggist and Postmaster of Ipava; and Florence who died at the age of five years.

Since his location in the county, Mr. Robinson has exerted a controlling influence upon many phases of its growth. Few happenings of moment but have profited directly or indirectly by his judgment or pecuniary assistance. The church and school have reaped the benefit of his munificence, as well of his untiring personal labor in their behalf. The building of the railroad, with its civilizing tendency, was made possible largely through his financial contributions. Various township offices have been invested with dignity and non-partisan largeness through his occupancy, although since its organization he has been a staunch supporter of Republicanism. His position in the community is that of a man who has lived according to the best that he knew, whose abilities have been trained upon the things that are worth while, and whose general character is such as to win him those most splendid and satisfying of rewards—the consciousness of well-doing and the esteem of his fellowmen.

ROBINSON, William T.—An impressive illustration of what may be accomplished within a score of years by industry, sobriety and persistent endeavor is furnished in the career of the gentleman to whom this record pertains since he established his home in Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., not long after coming to this country. Without aid from adventitious sources and relying solely upon his own inherent energy, perseverance and sound judgment, he has built up a business that is highly creditable to himself and the community of which he is a worthy member.

The subject of this sketch, William T. Robinson, is a native of the Emerald Isle, where he was born in 1855, a son of David and Matilda (Cunningham) Robinson, both of whom were also natives of Ireland. The early mental training of Mr. Robinson was obtained in the public schools of his native land. After coming to Illinois, in 1885, he embarked in the livery business in Farmington, Fulton County, having purchased the interests formerly held by Robb & Saunders. In this line he remained for five years, but sold out in 1890 and bought part of a stock of furniture, with which he started in that branch of trade. He also opened an undertaking establishment, which he has conducted in connection with his furniture store since that period with success. In 1881 Mr. Robinson was united in marriage with Emma Mason, who was born in Farmington, Ill., where she enjoyed the advantages of the public schools in early youth. Their union has resulted in two children: Minnie and James.

ROBISON, Marvin T., a well known and successful attorney-at-law of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in San Francisco, Cal., April 11, 1869, a son of Charles F. and Mary L. (Hovell) Robison, the latter being the daughter of Thomas Hovell, a native of England, who came to the United States and located in the vicinity of Avon, Ill., where Mary L. Hovell was reared and became Charles F. Robison's wife. Mr. C. F. Robison served during the Civil War in Company D, First Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and was honorably discharged at the end of his term of service. He then went to San Francisco, where the subject of this sketch was born. He returned to Illinois in 1871 and located at Ellisville, Ill., where he is now engaged in the practice of law. His union with Mary L. Hovell resulted in three children, namely: Almira, wife of Joseph C. Heylman, of Canton, Ill.; Olive, who became the wife of Owen Jones, a farmer in Knox County, Ill.; and Irene Zoe, a teacher in the Ellisville (Ill.) schools.

Marvin T. Robison attended the public schools of Ellisville in his boyhood, and later pursued a commercial course in the Gem City Business College at Quincy; after which he taught school in the public schools of Fulton County, Ill. During his school days he studied law in his father's office. Subsequently he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, and after taking full course in that institution was graduated in 1895. On being admitted to the bar he commenced practice at Ellisville, but in the spring of 1896 removed to London Mills, Ill., where he remained until 1901. In February of that year he came to Lewistown and formed a partnership with Kinsey Thomas, under the firm name of Thomas & Robison. The firm was dissolved in December, 1902, since when he has conducted a successful practice alone. As teacher and lawyer, the life of Mr. Robison has been a busy one. In the preparation of his cases he is very careful and painstaking and his thoroughness inspires confidence in his clients in these trials, and in all who look to him for legal counsel. In deportment he is modest and unassuming, but the reputation gained by his solid qualities as a lawyer secures for him his full share of practice in Fulton, Knox and adjoining counties.

On December 24, 1894, Mr. Robison was united in marriage with Minnie D. White, a daughter of Nathan White, who was among the honored pioneers of Fulton County. Six children have resulted from this union, five of whom are living, namely: Thelma L., born May 3, 1896; Zelpha M., born October 16, 1898; Gwelda

E., born April 4, 1900; Melba Z., born September 3, 1901; Kenneth G., born February 12, 1903; and Euelna M., born August 30, 1906, died December 30, 1906.

In politics Mr. Robison is a Democrat and earnestly advocates the principles of his party. He takes an active part in political campaigns, and is a forceful and impressive speaker on the issues of the day. In 1904 he was nominated for the office of State's Attorney, but, although running far ahead of the National ticket in the county, was defeated. He served one year as Supervisor for Young Hickory Township, and gave entire satisfaction to his constituents. In all public measures, he takes a lively and useful interest. In fraternal circles Mr. Robison is identified with the K. of P., M. W. A. and C. of H.

ROCK, John M.—More than fifty years have passed at this writing since the worthy farmer, whose name introduces these lines, arrived, a mere child, in the United States. He passed his sixth birthday on the ocean and on June 7, 1855, became a resident of this county, accompanying his parents to Illinois and settling down in the new home prepared for him in Fulton County. Within that period, since reaching manhood, he has made such diligent use of his opportunities that, by means of industry, economy, and wise management he has been enabled to retire from active labors, having accumulated a sufficiency of this world's goods to make the remainder of his life comfortable and pleasant and to provide a suitable inheritance for his children. That all of this has been accomplished while he is still in the prime of life is abundant evidence of the energy, perseverance and thrift that have marked his course.

Mr. Rock was born in Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, May 8, 1849, and is a son of Simon and Elizabeth (Schnur) Rock, natives also of that country. He came with his parents to Fairview Township, Fulton County, June 20, 1855. Some time afterward his father, together with two of his friends, named Walter and Fingel, bought a farm consisting of 240 acres of Harmon Andrews, in Deerfield Township, this county. This land they divided, each taking eighty acres. Simon Rock was very successful in his farming operations and ultimately became the owner of 370 acres in Deerfield Township. In politics he was a Democrat, and cast his first vote for Stephen A. Douglas. He and his wife were the parents of nine children, five of whom are still living. The father died July 11, 1889, aged eighty-two years, and the mother January 21, 1890, at the age of seventy-nine. Both were members of the Lutheran Church.

John M. Rock was reared on his father's farm, and in early manhood commenced an independent career. He prospered in all his undertakings, and in 1892 moved to Joshua Township, Fulton County, having bought of Edward G. Standard a farm of 246 acres there, on which he has since made his home. He built barns and a convenient and attractive house on the place, and carried on general farming and stock-raising until his retirement from active pursuits. He devoted considerable attention to Shorthorn cattle and raised Poland-China hogs somewhat extensively. Since his withdrawal from the labors of the farm, his sons have had charge of it.

On August 11, 1874, Mr. Rock was joined in matrimony with Mary C. Wagner, who was born in Pennsylvania. This union resulted in the birth of three children, namely: Simon J., Nora E. (Mrs. Wm. F. Steck), and Joseph L.

In politics, Mr. Rock has always supported the principles of the Democratic party. He served as Constable of Deerfield Township for seven years, and held the office of Township Collector two years. For nine years he acted in the capacity of School Director there, and has filled a like position in Joshua Township fifteen years. The duties of all these public trusts he has discharged with credit to himself, and to the satisfaction of all concerned. Mr. Rock is widely known in Fulton County. He is looked upon as a man of very substantial traits of character, and is considered one of the leading citizens of his locality. He is a faithful member of the Lutheran Church, and has held the office of Deacon for many years and Superintendent of the Sunday School eight years. His wife is also a member of the same denomination, as are his children.

RODDIS, Charles.—The office of Elder in the German Baptist Brethren Church, conferred upon Charles Roddis December 7, 1904, is the highest gift in the church of that denomination. The honor is held by but three men in Fulton County. That Mr. Roddis is deserving of the responsibility is believed by all familiar with his honorable and well directed life. Briefly outlined, his religious career began at the age of fifteen, when he joined the Church of England. Upon coming to America he united with the Presbyterian Church, and December 2, 1894, became a member of the religious body with which he since has been connected. In 1895 he assumed charge of the Sunday School, and in 1897 was called to the ministry, since which time he has devoted practically all of his time to church matters. The first call is known as a degree, and March 10, 1900, he received his second degree, to be followed by the office he now holds. The Woodland Church, over which he presides, is a large and harmonious organization, and the best of good fellowship obtains among its members. During the five years of his pastorate he has enlarged the opportunities and good work of the church, and placed it on a firm financial footing. He receives no stated salary, and for this very reason the extent and kind of his efforts to make lighter the burdens of mankind are the more to be commended.

The layman occupations of Mr. Roddis have been many. He was born in Warwick, England, March 19, 1854, a son of Samuel and Louise (Brownich) Roddis, both born in England, the former, May 13, 1832, and the latter, August 26, 1824. The parents were married in 1853, and in 1883 the father and his daughter, Fannie, came to America, locating in Ipava, this county, the mother and her two daughters joining him the following May. In America the father followed the occupation of tiling, and completed several large contracts in Fulton County and surrounding territory. Among these was the tiling of a course extending from Havana, Ill., to Scotland Township, McDonough County, in which he had the assistance of his son, Charles. Through this occupation he accumulated a fair competence, and after the death of his wife, August 4, 1897, he lived in Ipava until 1898, when he sold his home and for three years lived with his son, William, in 1902 fixing his residence with Charles Roddis, where his death occurred December 12, 1905. In England members of the Church of England, they attended the Presbyterian Church in this country.

Charles Roddis began to earn his own living at the age of eleven years, and from eleven to sixteen he was employed in a brick yard in England. He next worked in the iron and glass works at West Brownich, where he met with an accident, and for three months was confined in a hospital at Stratford-on-Avon. In 1871 he went to Liverpool, and soon after to Nottingham, in the latter town working in the iron foundry until 1874. He then enlisted in the Royal Marines, which he left the following year, and began to labor for a concern in Uxbridge. In May, 1876, he sailed for America, and upon joining his family in Ipava, engaged as a miner until 1884. During that year he and his brother, Robert, opened up what since has been the property of the Ipava Coal Company, on Section 17, Pleasant Township, and which they operated together until 1884. Mr. Roddis then went to St. Louis and Lewistown, returning to Ipava and mining in 1888. The following year he purchased forty acres of land which he operated for coal between 1900 and 1902, since which time he has followed farming on a small scale in connection with his church work.

January 3, 1882, Mr. Roddis married Elizabeth Cole, who was born in Missouri, a daughter of Nicholas and Annie Margeretta Cole, a native of Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Roddis have adopted two children, of whom Bessie is the wife of Levi Weber, of Pleasant Township, and Roy D., also is at home. Mrs. Roddis who fully shares her husband's ambition to be a moral uplift in the community, and who so lightened his labors by her sympathy and active co-operation, was laid to worldly rest February 14, 1906.

RODDIS, William.—At the age of thirty-three years William Roddis finds himself the possessor of a valuable farm of 223 acres on Section 28, Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, Ill.,

Mr Stephens Mary Stephens

equipped with modern buildings and machinery, and stocked with Percheron and Norman horses and high-grade cattle and hogs. When this young farmer started upon his independent career he could not have purchased a foot of this farm, and its ownership means several years of struggling against odds, and patient hoarding of savings for which he gave the best there was in him. He has had the benefit of a many-sided experience, and his farm is conducted along the most approved and practical lines.

Mr. Roddis was born on a farm in Pleasant Township, Fulton County, August 18, 1873, a son of Robert and Josephine Roddis, natives of England and Illinois respectively. In another part of this work may be found details of the family history. At the age of fifteen years William Roddis ceased to look to the home farm for support, and with a common school education to aid him, found employment as a clerk in the grocery store of George H. Weaver. For six years he continued to hand goods over the counter of this establishment, and in 1894 invested his earnings in a coal-mine east of Ipava, which he operated very successfully for three years. Disposing of his mining interests in 1897, he purchased the grocery and queensware store of Mr. McCaslin in Ipava, and for six years was the leading merchant of the town, catering to a trade which extended far beyond the borders of the village. No one sold more or better goods than he, or at more reasonable prices. In 1903 he disposed of his store at a liberal profit and again engaged in the coal business, continuing in this line until he sold out in 1906, when he purchased the farm upon which he now lives.

The marriage of Mr. Roddis and Nettie Long occurred January 21, 1894, and of this union there have been three children: Harry, born in 1896; Gail, born in 1893; and a third born in January, 1903. Mrs. Roddis is a native of Illinois, and her parents were numbered among the pioneers of the State. To her economy and sympathy her husband owes a large measure of his success. Mr. Roddis has social as well as business qualifications, and is a popular member of the Masonic Order, Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America. He is physically and morally a fine type of American manhood, and his experience and ability should place him among the foremost and most wealthy agriculturists of the county.

ROGERS, Dr. H. H., who is engaged in the practice of his profession in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Indiana in 1870, a son of John H. and Sarah (Maus) Rogers, also natives of that State. The father, John H. Rogers, was a successful merchant in Indiana for many years. The subject of this sketch received his early training in the public schools, and afterward entered the Louisville (Ky.) College of Physicians and Surgeons, where he spent two years in the study of medicine. He subsequently pursued a course in the Keokuk (Ia.) College of Physicians and Surgeons, from which he was graduated in 1898. After graduating he first located at Eureka, Ill., where he remained a short time, but on January 1, 1899, established himself in Cuba, Fulton County, where he has since practiced with unvarying success. He is a member of the Fulton County Medical Society and the Military Tract Medical Society. The building in which his present offices are located was erected by him in 1904.

In 1898 Dr. Rogers was united in marriage with Jennie M. Thomas, who was born in Cuba, Ill., and two children have resulted from this union, namely: J. C. Thomas and Harvey Marion. Mrs. Rogers is a graduate of the Keokuk College of Physicians and Surgeons of the class of 1898, and is also engaged in practice in Cuba with gratifying results. Dr. Rogers is creditably discharging the duties of a member of the School Board, of which he is Clerk, and also holds the offices of both City and Township Physician. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., belonging to the Cuba local lodge; Mohammed Temple, Peoria; Damascus Lodge, K. T., of Havana, Ill.; and Canton Council, No. 23. He is also identified with Canton Lodge, No. 626, B. P. O. E.

The Doctor was formerly a Director of the Farmers' State Bank of Cuba. His practice is large and constantly increasing, and he enjoys the confidence and respect of the community.

ROHLINE, Emil.—The blacksmith and implement shop of Emil Rohline is one of the busiest and most successfully managed trade establishments in the town of Smithfield, this county. Its forge and anvil have been in almost constant operation on week days since 1897, and the trade which rewards the owner's enterprise and skill is continuous and appreciative, being recruited from both the town and surrounding country. Mr. Rohline has the most modern and practical appliances of his trade, and his work is invariably well done and satisfactory.

The son of Charles J. Rohline, who was born in Sweden in 1832, Emil Rohline inherits his mechanical ability from his father, who learned the blacksmith business in Sweden, and continued to practice the same after his emigration to America in 1884, and his settlement in his present home in Bloomington, this State. From early youth the son learned to make himself useful around the shop, and at the age of twenty drew the salary of an experienced blacksmith. In 1893 he removed to Cuba, Ill., and started a shop of his own, in 1896 opening a business in Seville, which he operated until coming to Smithfield in 1896. He now has a large shop and implement store, the latter fifty by seventy feet in ground dimensions.

In Bloomington, Ill., May 19, 1890, Mr. Rohline married Albertina Erickson, who was born in Sweden May 24, 1870, and who is the mother of three children: Florence, Warner and Frederick. Mr. Rohline is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally, is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. In religion he is a member of the Swedish Lutheran Church. He is a genial and painstaking man, and among his many patrons has warm and dependable friends.

ROHRER, Christian (deceased), formerly one of the most substantial farmers and respected citizens of Fulton County, Ill., was born in Lancaster County, Pa., April 8, 1838, a son of Henry and Mary (Doner) Rohrer, natives of Pennsylvania, where the father carried on farming for a number of years. Henry Rohrer journeyed with his family from Pennsylvania to Illinois in 1830, settling first near Quincy, whence he subsequently moved to Fulton County, locating on a farm three miles north of Canton, where he followed his wonted pursuit during the remainder of his life. He died in 1876 and his wife passed away on the same farm.

Christian Rohrer was eight years of age when he accompanied his parents from the East to Fulton County. In boyhood he attended school in an old log cabin in the vicinity of his father's place, and afterward continued his studies in the public school in Canton. His youth was spent in the routine duties of farm life on the paternal acres and he continued to work for his father until he attained his majority. After his marriage he bought land of the latter, which he cultivated for several years. He ultimately became the owner of 320 acres in Fulton County and 640 acres in McLean County. In the course of time ill health compelled him to relinquish the labors of farming, and he rented his lands and withdrew from active pursuits. His death occurred September 28, 1899. He was a man of excellent character and strict integrity, and during the healthy period of his life was an energetic and thorough farmer. In religious faith he was a Methodist, and politically he was a supporter of the principles of the Republican party.

In Lancaster, Pa., on December 20, 1860, Mr. Rohrer was united in marriage with Elizabeth Herr, who was born in that town February 13, 1837, a daughter of Benjamin Herr and wife. Five children were the offspring of their union, four of whom are still living, namely: Henry, Adeline, Christian and Cyrus. Mrs. Rohrer's grandparents were of German nativity. The first member of the family who emigrated to America was Hans Herr, who crossed the Atlantic in 1710, bringing five sons to the American colonies. The Herr ancestry is of ancient origin, as is shown by a coat of arms found on the "Armorial General" of Reistrap. The family was "free," or, in other words, of noble antecedents, and was possessed of vast estates in Swabia. One of the ancestors of Benjamin G. Herr was known as Hugo, the Herr, or Lord, of Bilried. In the year 1593 John, Lord of Bilried, obtained a testimonial from the Emperor Ferdinand, proving the Herr armorial bearings, which are a shield surmounted by a helmet and two horns of plenty. In 1534 Dr. Michael Herr, of Hagemann, Alsace, was an author of considerable repute, having published a work entitled "Die Neue Welt," containing a narrative of the discovery of America. Mrs. Rohrer is still in the enjoyment of her wonted vigor of body and mind and is surrounded by all the comforts which tend to promote contentment in her declining years. She is a woman of amiable traits of character and an object of warm regard to all who know her.

ROHRER, John H.—In John H. Rohrer is found a striking example of the kind of material which had brought Canton Township into the limelight as a scientific agricultural center. At the comparatively early age of fifty-four years, this honored man has amassed a sufficient competence to retire from active life in Canton, where he purchased a part of the Coleman estate, and since has surrounded himself with those comforts and advantages which contribute to the satisfaction of a refined mind. Beginning his independent career with few material assets, and no more than the average country advantages, it will be seen that he has accomplished his tasks in much shorter time than the average, which fact is the more praiseworthy in that he has done his work well, and has established a precedent which younger agriculturists would do well to follow.

Born in Washington County, Md., July 11, 1848, Mr. Rohrer is a son of Abraham and Mary (Geltmacher) Rohrer, natives of the same State and county. Abraham Rohrer was a farmer in his youth and early manhood, but for the past twenty years has operated a grist mill in Maryland. He has four sons and two daughters, of whom John H. is the third oldest. The Maryland home was one in which lessons of industry and honesty were taught daily, and where self-sacrifice and independence were encouraged. In 1868, when John H. was twenty years old, he came to Canton Township and worked on a farm for two years. He then combined farming and threshing for a few years, and in 1879 moved to a farm near Bushnell, McDonough County, where he lived three years. Returning to Farmington Township, he lived there until 1878, when he located on the farm in Canton Township which he still owns, and where for years he was known as one of the most extensive general farmers and stock-raisers in the township. He made a specialty of draft horses for about eighteen years, and also raised large numbers of Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs. His farm is well equipped with substantial buildings and agricultural implements, and the years of patient tillage have converted its fertile acres into more than ordinary value and productiveness. At the present time the farm is managed by Samuel Rohrer, oldest son of the owner, who received a careful training under his father and is a most estimable and capable young man.

The marriage of Mr. Rohrer and Alice Eshelman occurred in February, 1879, Mrs. Rohrer being a native of Fulton County, and a daughter of Samuel and Catherine Eshelman. Besides Samuel, on the home farm, Mr. and Mrs. Rohrer have three children, of whom John W. is in Kansas, and George and Fannie are at home. In political affiliation Mr. Rohrer is a Republican. He is in all respects a sincere minded and highly respected man, of excellent habits and kindly disposition, and, while not directly connected with any religious organization, or ambitions of political preferment, is a stanch supporter of churches, education and all that tends to the substantial betterment of the community.

ROLLER, George B., a well known and prosperous brick manufacturer of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Washington County, Pa., February 21, 1855, a son of Matthew and Susan (Bronson) Roller, of whom the former was born in Germany in 1824 and the latter in Ohio in 1829. Matthew Roller was a blacksmith by trade. He came to this country about the year 1845 and located in Pennsylvania. In 1857 he settled in Canton and followed farming four miles east of town between four and five years. He then moved into town, where he died in 1884. His wife's people were from Ohio, but she was reared in Pennsylvania, where she died August 1, 1884.

In youth George B. Roller attended school in his native town. In 1873 he was employed in the Parvin & Orendorff works, where he continued until he established himself in the brick business in the spring of 1889. He first started in a plant opposite to his present location, to which he moved in 1900. At the outset he made sand-molded brick exclusively for about a year, but has since made sidewalk and paving brick only. He is a capable business man and has built up a flourishing trade. On March 25, 1877, Mr. Roller was married to Juliet Palmer, who was born in Canton in 1856 and educated in the Canton High School. Four children have been the offspring of this union, namely: Henry P., born January 27, 1878; Ethel M., born October 29, 1879; Charles L., born December 3, 1890; and Donald T., born November 15, 1897.

Mrs. Roller's parents were born in the vicinity of Saratoga Springs, N. Y. They were Henry and Amanda (Talmadge) Palmer. Mrs. Roller graduated from the Canton High School in 1875 and then taught for two years. The eldest of her children, Henry P. Roller, was bookkeeper for ten years in the Canton National Bank. His connection with the bank began on his graduation from the high school, and ended with his death in July, 1903. On November 14, 1899, he married Edna May Maxwell, a daughter of N. W. Maxwell, of Canton Township. Fraternally Mr. Roller is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., belonging to the Blue Lodge and to the Encampment with all its branches in Canton. He is also a member of the I. O. O. F.

ROSE, Frank, a well known musician of Fulton County, proprietor of the Cyclone Store and a member of the firm of Mosley & Rose, real-estate, loan and insurance agents, located at Ipava, Ill., was born in Mound Township, McDonough County, Ill., on the 25th of November, 1866, a son of James A. Rose, a prominent farmer of Vermont Township, Fulton County. (For details regarding family history see sketch of James A. Rose, elsewhere in this work.)

The early years of Frank Rose were passed on the family homestead, assisting in the farm work and attending the neighboring schools. At the age of seventeen he entered the Western Normal School at Bushnell, Ill., and after completing the course returned to the farm. There he remained until 1887, when, still desirous of a more complete mental training, he became a student at the Northern Indiana Normal School at Valparaiso. He pursued a thorough business course in that institution, and upon his graduation in 1888 returned home to engage in the piano and organ business, locating at Washington, Iowa. He then removed to Winfield, that State, and while engaged in the musical line at that place was married to Ella F. Skipton.

Frank Rose was married on the 11th of February, 1890, to Ella F. Skipton, a native of Henry County, Iowa, and a daughter of J. H. and Vianna Skipton. They were the parents of two daughters, Ella F. (Mrs. Rose) and Clara, wife of David Hess, a farmer residing near Winfield. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rose are the parents of six children: Hazel, born in Washington, Iowa; Ralph E., in Vermont Township, Fulton County; James H., in Clarion, Iowa; Frank, in the village of Vermont, Iowa; Julian D., in the village of Vermont, Ill.; and Lucille, a native of Ipava.

After engaging in the music business at Winfield, Iowa, Mr. Rose removed to Toledo, in the same State, and after a short experiment there, settled, in 1891, at Washington, Iowa. In the same year he returned to Fulton County, locating at Canton as salesman for H. H. Orendorff & Company. He became connected with James A. Mowers, of Ipava, in 1892, and in the following year was employed as a traveling salesman by the Ipava Cigar Company. On account of the panic of that year the factory was obliged to close and Mr. Rose was then connected with the Singer Sewing Machine Company until January, 1895. During the following four years he was again engaged in the music business, to which he is so admirably adapted, at Clarion, Iowa. He remained at that location until 1899, when, on account of ill health, he was forced to sell his establishment and return to Vermont, Ill. While there he composed and taught music and wrote for magazines and newspapers along the line of his specialty, his work in all these fields giving him a high reputation as a skilled and learned professional.

In March, 1904, Mr. Rose located in Ipava, offering to the public a special line of merchandise which has proved attractive and profitable. In November, 1905, he formed a partnership with L. Mosley, under the name of Mosley & Rose, for transactions in real estate, loans and insurance. Mr. Rose's wide musical attainments, his thorough business training and his broad personal acquaintance, are a guarantee that both of these enterprises will fulfill the substantial promises of the present.

ROSE, James A.—For the entire sixty-eight years of his life James A. Rose has been identified with Fulton and the surrounding counties, preferably the former, where he was born in Astoria Township, August 26, 1838, and where, since 1871, he has owned an extensive land-holding in Vermont Township. A son of William and Anna (Linn) Rose, his family was among the early contingent of Ohio. The Roses are of Scotch-English ancestry and the Linns of German extraction. William Rose, the father, was born in Guernsey County, Ohio, March 22, 1816, and his mother in Clermont County, that State, October 24, 1816. The wedding of the parents occurred December 31, 1835, when the father was barely nineteen years old, and their housekeeping was inaugurated under circumstances that would have dismayed the less venturesome youths of the present time.

William Rose was a man of great energy and industry, which qualities lifted him from poverty to affluence. When he brought his wife from Ohio to Fulton County in October, 1836, his visible assets consisted of six hundred dollars and a yoke of cattle, all of which he had earned after buying his freedom, for which he paid his father $300 in 1834. He afterward bought a horse and put him in the lead of his ox-team. His first stop was near Ipava, where he occupied the Eli Branson farm for a few months, in the fall of 1837 settling in Astoria Township, where he bought a tax title to the property he occupied for thirty-two years. He at first erected a home of rough logs, in the architecture of the wilderness, and in time this was succeeded by a pretentious rural residence, equipped with all the conveniences and comforts known to the agricultural class at that time. At the time of his death, March 15, 1889, he owned nine hundred and fifty-two acres of land in Illinois, and Wayne County, Iowa. He began his independent existence as a boatman on the Ohio River, and ended it as one of the largest tax payers in Fulton County. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat, but his retiring disposition and avoidance of all ostentation and display ran counter to any serious political ambitions. He was a deeply religious man, and with his wife was a devoted member of the United Brethren Church. With his own means, in 1870, he erected a church on his farm, known as Rose's Chapel, and he contributed generously to the subsequent support of local church affairs. He was equally energetic in school promotion, and gave of his means to secure good teachers and school-room equipment.

One of the most interesting reminders of the old days of the county is the wife of Mr. Rose, who, in October, 1906, attained to ninety years. This genial and intelligent woman is a lesson in moderation and industry, and her chief delight is to tell of the times that tried the souls of men, and either made or broke them with its hardships and discouragements. She is the mother of five sons and five daughters: John V., of Bushnell; James; Reuben, deceased in infancy; Elizabeth J., wife of Andy Bryan; Susan, deceased, former wife of K. Lindsay; Ann Eliza, wife of Frank Mumey; Edith, deceased wife of John S. Snook; Esteline, deceased; William R., of Astoria Township, and Uriah T.

James A. Rose remained under the paternal roof until his twenty-first year, having received his education in the early subscription schools, for the maintenance of which each farmer paid according to the children in his family. On October 29, 1862, he married Mathilda Harris, who was born in Virginia, a daughter of James and Phoebe (Applegate) Harris, Fulton County pioneers of 1856. The young couple rented land in McDonough County until 1863, when he bought for his father 160 acres of land for which he paid $4,000, and on which he moved—renting it of the elder Rose and paying for the same in gold, according to the requirement at that time. In order to secure this gold Mr. Rose journeyed to Chicago, where he exchanged his paper money for gold at the rate of two dollars and fifty cents in paper for one dollar in gold. In 1868 he rented this farm and bought 160 acres in Wayne County, Iowa, and in 1871 he came to Fulton County where, in February, he bought the old Lindsay farm of 256 acres in Sections 15 and 16, Vermont Township. This farm had a history, and was interesting because of the fact that upon it Mr. Lindsay erected the first distillery, and manufactured the first whiskey made in the State of Illinois.

Mr. Rose found his newly acquired property in a dilapidated and unsatisfactory condition, yet, notwithstanding his obstacles, he raised five thousand bushels of corn the first year. At the present time he owns 320 acres, upon which he has introduced the wisest and most modern of improvements, having much valuable machinery and a residence and general buildings of substantial construction. His fences and incidental appurtenances are kept in good repair, and he has one of the best managed and scientifically conducted farms in Vermont Township.

Mrs. Rose was born in New Cumberland, Hancock County, Va., September 6, 1842, and died in Vermont Township October 13, 1904. She was a woman of rare and noble traits of character, the friend of the sick and unfortunate, and in her family the personification of gentleness and sympathy. The night before her final summons she sat reading her Bible when taken ill, and the next morning at six she breathed her last. Especially was she devoted to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and through her personal efforts sufficient money was raised to erect what now is known as the Spring Grove Methodist Episcopal Church, on the Rose farm. Mr. and Mrs. Rose were the parents of five children: Elizabeth A., wife of Seldon Bradley, and mother of five children—Blanche (who died at the age of seven months), Dean, Maud (who died aged fourteen months), Leroy and Portney; William Franklin, mentioned elsewhere in this work; Ora Belle, wife of Albert Lybarger, living on the old homestead, and the mother of two sons—LaVerne and Lloyd; Maggie, wife of Fred Welsh, a farmer of Vermont Township, who has a son, Wade; and Iva Myrtle, wife of Orin Wayne, a farmer near the old Rose homestead, and the mother of one son, Wayne, and one deceased, Jesse Glenn, who died at the age of four months. Seldon Bradley, the husband of Elizabeth A., operates a part of the home farm.

Mr. Rose is a staunch Democrat, but though often solicited to do so, he never has been willing to accept official honors. He has been a Methodist for many years, and his money has been generously given to the Spring Grove Church. In addition to his reputation as a general farmer and stock-raiser, he has rendered signal service to the community during the threshing season, and for the past forty-six years has operated a threshing machine in Fulton, Schuyler and McDonough Counties. Beginning with the old horse-power machine, he has kept pace with the improvements in machinery, and finally owned an expensive steam thresher. Mr. Rose embodies the qualities most desired and needed in the solid men of the community, and his name and labor are associated with its best and most substantial upbuilding.

ROSE, W. H.—The family of which W. H. Rose is the sole survivor has been substantially identified with the State of Illinois ever since its establishment this side of Lake Michigan in 1836. That year witnessed the arrival, in the then small and muddy hamlet of Chicago, of Roswell Rose, who was born in Oneida County, N. Y., February 2, 1801, a son of Phineas Rose, who carried a musket in the Revolutionary War. Roswell Rose came to Chicago well prepared to share the uncertain fortunes of the infant community basking under the frowning walls of Fort Dearborn. He had been educated by his mother, a woman of strong character and scholarly attainments, and he had learned to know men through his work as an educator for a number of years. As an aid to self-support he had learned the carpenter's trade, and, before coming West, had risen to considerable prominence as a builder and contractor in Buffalo, N. Y. He remained but a year in Chicago, being tempted by the inducements offered in the country to land purchasers, more especially in a section twenty miles northwest of Chicago. For six years he lived on and improved his farm, and then moved to Waukegan, which was then donning a spirit of municipal importance, and offering a prolific field to men apt with the use of tools. He erected the first mill in Waukegan, as well as private and public structures, and in 1850 came to Fulton and Warren Counties, and purchased a half-interest in a mill on Swan Creek, formerly owned and improved by John and Riverus Woods. In the fall of the same year he brought his family from Waukegan and located on what is known as the Saunders farm, on the northeast quarter of Section 13, Greenbush Township, which had a log house and a few minor improvements, the house having been built in 1838 by Loren Woods. Three years after his arrival the log house was replaced by a somewhat pretentious frame building, on the south side of the creek and near the mill, which continued to be his home for the remainder of his life. His mill became one of the interesting enterprises in the community, and, operated for the first time with his partner, Riverus Woods, in 1851, it did a large business with the surrounding country, farmers bringing their products from a distance of twenty-five to thirty miles. The capacity of the mill often was sorely taxed, and many times its patrons were obliged to stay in the neighborhood and wait their turn for several days. Swan Creek in the early days supplied sufficient power for the operation of the mill, but with the influx of settlers its flow was diminished, and steam was resorted to. The transition was no less picturesque if more expeditious methods, but in the minds of the older generation at least, the drowsy hum of the busy old mill remains a quaint and interesting recollection. Its history was scarred with an element of tragedy, however, for on September 5, 1867, Mr. Rose was caught in a part of its machinery and instantly killed, and thus the old management passed away, for the other partner, Riverus Woods, had responded to the call of the inevitable the year before. The wife of Mr. Rose formerly was Elizabeth Ingraham, of Oneida County, N. Y., and she became the mother of six children. She died November 29, 1870, a few years after the death of her husband, R. Rose. Harriet died near Santa Ana, Cal., September 21, 1898, at the age of seventy-one, having married a Mr. Nichols; Havilah R. Rose died in Avon August 11, 1900, at the age of seventy years; Silas N. died at Memphis, Mo., September 22, 1898, at the age of sixty-six years; Cyrus, twin of Silas N., died in Lake County, Ill., at the age of eight years; Birney died in Avon February 2, 1877, at the age of thirty-one years; and W. H., the only survivor, is a resident of Avon, Ill.

W. H. Rose was born on a farm in Lake County, Ill., in September, 1838, and was educated in the Lake County and Avon public schools. He was twelve years old when his father moved to Avon to engage in milling, and he continued with his father in the mill until the latter's death, and then operated the mill on his own responsibility until disposing of it about 1869. He then bought a farm near Avon, of 180 acres, and now owns three farms in Warren County. About five years ago he traded some of his country land for his present home in Avon, and at present employs his leisure in looking after his country and town interests.

A predilection for public affairs has drawn Mr. Rose into many county enterprises of a political, business and social nature. A staunch Republican, he has served as Supervisor, member of the Village Board, and member of the School Board which constructed the public school building. He was one of the organizers and chief promoters of the Fair Association, about thirty years ago, and served as its President. His life experiences have included a military service of six months during the Civil War as a Lieutenant in Company C, One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. For the past forty-five years he has been a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in religion is a Universalist.

The marriage of Mr. Rose and Harriet A. Stevens, of New York, occurred in Waukegan, Lake County, Ill., in 1860, Mrs. Rose being a daughter of Almon Stevens, a native of New York, and a farmer of Luke County. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Rose: Mrs. Frankie Leigh, Mrs. Florence Mings, and Mrs. Nellie Cline—the first two of Avon, and the last named of Abingdon, Ill. Mr. Rose is a man of character and purpose, and of unquestioned integrity. His life has been a busy and well directed one, and from both a character and material standpoint, may be accounted a successful one.

ROSS, Ossian M.—John Eveland, the first actual settler within the present limits of Fulton County, had scarcely got snugly settled in his new home on the banks of Spoon River ere Ossian M. Ross and family came in to be his neighbors, and to wield a greater influence in molding and forming the history of the county, perhaps, than any other family that ever resided in it. Ossian M. Ross was born in New York State August 16, 1790, and was united in marriage with Miss Mary Winans in Waterloo, N. Y., July 7, 1811. Mrs. Ross was born April 1, 1793, in Morris County, N. J. Mr. Ross was a soldier in the War of 1812 and came to this section to secure the land given him by the Government for services rendered as a soldier. In 1820 Mr. Ross, with his family, came to Alton, Ill., and in the spring of the following year (1821) with his family and a few men employed by him to make improvements, sailed up the Illinois River to Otter Creek in a keel-boat. It was his intention to locate upon the southeast quarter of Section 29, Isabel Township. He, with three companions, had come up from Alton the year previous (1820), explored this country and selected this place because there was a good mill-seat there. It was his intention to erect a water-mill on this stream at that point; but after traveling up Otter Creek for some distance in their cumbersome keel-boat, they came to a large tree fallen across the stream, which made a barrier that could not easily be passed over or around. These sturdy pioneers, however, were not easily turned from their course. They made preparations to saw the log into pieces and remove it. This scheme was frustrated, however, and the whole course of Mr. Ross' plans changed. A heavy rain fell during the night and in the morning the log they intended sawing was six to eight inches under water, and therefore out of reach of workmen. He ran his boat stern foremost back down Otter Creek to the Illinois, and up that stream to Spoon River. He entered this stream and started up its swift swollen waters for Mr. Eveland's, intending to go on to where he owned three quarter-sections of land. They experienced the greatest difficulty in ascending this turbulent stream, made so by recent heavy rains. It consumed several days of constant hard labor to reach Eveland's. At places men were put upon the bank and with ropes dragged the boat along. This was slow motive power and known as cordelling. Then they would get hold of overhanging limbs of trees and pull the boat along in that way. They finally reached Eveland's, in whose cabin the party was welcomed. There they remained until his teams and stock arrived. These were brought across the country. Mr. Ross, with his teams, then started for his own land, where Lewistown now is. Men were sent ahead to cut down trees and clear a road. On arriving at the end of the journey Mr. Ross jubilantly exclaimed to his family, "We are now on our own land!" His daughter, Mrs. Steel, of Canton, who was then a little girl, quickly spoke up, "Why, pa, have we come all this distance just for this?" Nothing but a vast wilderness was spread out before them and the little girl expected to find something wonderfully fine, else they would not have endured all the hardships that had befallen them on their long journey. There have been many hearts made sad by the disappointment received on their arrival into this country during its first settlement, when, after traveling for weeks through an almost unbroken country, the husband and father would stop his jaded team under the boughs of a large tree many miles from the nearest white inhabitant and say, "Our journey's end is reached. This is our home. Alight." Surely, as it did to little Miss Rose, it must have seemed to the wife and little ones that they had come a long way to make their home in the wilderness among the wild beasts.

In twenty-four hours after arrival Mr. Ross had a shelter made for his family. It consisted of poles set in the ground, tent fashion, and other poles laid across these and covered with bark. Harvey L. Ross, his son, says he distinctly remembers helping carry bark to cover this shanty. Mr. Ross immediately set about building a log cabin, which was located where Major Newton Walker's residence now stands. He was so well pleased with the location of his land that he determined to lay off a town, which he did, and secured for it the county seat for the County of Fulton when it was organized.

Among those who came with Mr. Ross were Mr. Nimon and wife. He was a blacksmith and lived here a long time. Mr. Ross also brought with him a shoemaker by the name of Swetling. He and Nimon died many years ago and were buried in the eastern part of Lewistown near where the old Presbyterian Church stood, which was the first burying ground in the county.

Mr. Ross died in 1837 at Havana, Ill., which had been his home for a number of years, and where he had conducted a hotel and been the proprietor and manager of a ferry across the Illinois River.

ROSS FAMILY, The.—The following more detailed history of the Ross family, of which Ossian M. Ross was the head in Illinois, is taken from a "Pioneer History of Fulton County" (1884), compiled and edited by Harvey Lee Ross, a son of Ossian M. Ross:

"In closing my pioneer history of Fulton County I thought that it would be proper and right for me to give a short biographical sketch of my own life and also of some of my ancestors, as some of my children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren might have the curiosity to know something about their genealogy and where their ancestors came from, and I will therefore give such genealogy as far as I have been able to trace it back to the Ross and the Lee families.

"My great-grandfather, Zebulon Ross, came from Scotland to America and settled in Dutchess County, N. Y., in the year 1728, and died in the same county at the age of ninety years. He had a son, Joseph Ross, who was married to Abigail Lee, a daughter of Thomas Lee. Thomas Lee was a soldier in the Revolutionary War and it was after him that the Lee part of my name was given me, which is Harvey Lee Ross. My grandmother, Abigail (Lee) Ross, came to Illinois in 1824 and died at my father's house in Havana, Ill., in 1834. I have often heard her tell of her father, Thomas Lee, being a soldier in the Revolutionary War. Thomas Lee's ancestors came from England to America about the middle of the seventeenth century. There were two branches of the Lee family, one of which branches settled in the State of New York and the other in the State of Virginia. Both branches came from the same original stock.

Their ancestors had held positions of honor and trust in the old country, and some of those who settled in New York and Virginia occupied prominent places in the colonial history of America, in the State Legislatures and in the councils of the Nation. Joshua Lee, brother of Thomas Lee, was for many years a member of the New York State Senate. One of the Virginia branch, Richard Henry Lee, drew up and submitted to Congress the resolution of June 7, 1776, declaring that the United Colonies of America are and ought to be free and independent States; that they absolved themselves from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and Great Britain is and ought to be totally absolved, which resolution was adopted by the Continental Congress and signers of the Declaration of Independence.

"Thomas Lee, the father of Abigail Lee, was born in Fishkill, N. Y., November 15, 1739, and died at Penn Yan, N. Y., January 22, 1814. His wife, Mattie Sherman, was born in 1743 and died October 14, 1833. Thomas Lee and Mattie Sherman were married in 1760 and had ten children. Their oldest daughter, Abigail Lee, was born in 1760 and married Joseph Ross. Joseph Ross and Abigail Lee had born to them the following children: Joseph, Ossian M., Matthias, Thomas L., John N., Eliza, Maria and Sallie.

"Ossian M. Ross was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., August 16, 1790, and died at Havana, Ill., in 1837. His wife, Mary Winans, was born in New Jersey April 1, 1793, and died at Peoria, Ill., in 1875. Ossian M. Ross and Mary Winans were married in Seneca County, N. Y., July 7, 1811. There were born to them the following children: Lewis W., Harriet M., Harvey Lee, Leonard F., Lucinda C. and Pike C. Ross.

"The services of Thomas Lee in assisting in the establishment of American independence during the War of the Revolution were as follows: He was Second Lieutenant of Captain Jack Rosekrance's company, Colonel Jack Holmes, Fourth Regiment New York Continental Line, 28th of June, 1775; promoted First Lieutenant August 3, 1775. He was Captain of the Eighth Company, Fifth Regiment New York Continental Line, commanded by Colonel Louis Dubois, November 21, 1776; resigned May 9, 1778. He was also Captain in Colonel Zephaniah Platt's Regiment of New York Associated Exempts, October 19, 1779. He was also Captain in Colonel Louis Dubois' Regiment of New York Militia July 1, 1780. (References, pages 140, 231, 257, 285 and 529 of Vol. I, 'New York in the Revolution,' or Vol. XV of the published 'Documents Relating to the Colonial History of the State of New York,' published by Reed, Parsons & Co., Albany, N. Y., 1887; also page 261 of 'Heitman's Register of Officers of the Continental Army,' published by H. B. Heitman, at Washington, D. C.). Captain Thomas Lee's services in the Continental army were equivalent to service in the regular army of today.

"In regard to my own life, I, Harvey Lee Ross, will say that I was born in Seneca County, N. Y., October 10, 1817, and came with my parents to what is now known as Fulton County, Ill., in 1821. We came down the Ohio River and up the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers in a keel-boat. The country at that time was a vast wilderness, inhabited only by Indians and abounding with wild animals. It was several years after we came to Illinois before the country became sufficiently settled to establish schools, and I had little opportunity in the years of my youth to obtain an education. What education I did get was obtained at the little log schoolhouses, though, in 1836, when I was nineteen years of age, my father sent me to Illinois College, at Jacksonville, Ill. I had attended college scarcely a year when my father died. He had been engaged in extensive business enterprises, and in consequence of his death I was obliged to leave school and come home and take charge of my mother's business, which put an end to my college life. When I entered Illinois College I took in with me as college chum William H. Herndon, who for many years was the law partner of Abraham Lincoln, and who was the author of the book entitled 'Life of Abraham Lincoln,' by W. H. Herndon. I have had something to say of this book in my sketch of the early life of Lincoln.

"My father, Ossian, was engaged for many years in farming and in the mercantile business and in trading with the Indians, and the early part of my life was spent on the farm, in the store and in trading with the Indians. I would often take long trips into the country, far away from any white neighbors, in company with Indian traders, whom my father kept employed, and I then learned to speak the Indian language quite well. I, at a very early age, learned the use of fire-arms, and was very often out hunting and trapping, as the country in those times abounded in wild game. Great droves of deer and large flocks of wild turkey could be found everywhere. I have shot wild turkeys when but seven years of age, and have killed deer when twelve years old. I can remember catching eight wolves in steel traps set around the carcass of one dead horse when I was but twelve years of age. In 1832, when I was fifteen years of age, I carried the mail on horseback, once a week, from Springfield to Monmouth, Ill., the distance being about 135 miles. I frequently had to swim my horse over streams of water three or four times a day, there being no bridges, with the mailbag strapped across my shoulders to keep the mail from getting wet. I will mention one of my adventures. I was traveling from Monmouth to Knoxville, the distance being twenty miles, and not a house was there between the two villages. A dark and rainy night came on, when I was ten miles from Knoxville, and when I had reached the place where the city of Galesburg now stands the grass was very high in the road, and all of a sudden I heard a hungry pack of wolves set up a tremendous howling right behind my horse, and from the noise they made I supposed that the whole country was alive with wolves, so I applied the whip to my horse, and was not long in getting to Knoxville, and I probably made as good time on horseback as the railroad trains are making at the present time. In the year 1833, when I was sixteen years of age, I took a trip from Havana, in Mason County, Ill., to what was called the 'Lead Mine Country' in the northwestern part of Illinois, a distance of about 225 miles. The greater part of the road ran through an unbroken wilderness. In many places the white settlers were from fifteen to twenty-five miles apart. There were many deep and dangerous streams of water to cross, and it was certainly a long and dangerous trip for a boy to take alone and on horseback. I found many Indians on the road and sometimes stayed with them over night, and always found them kind and friendly. The cause of my taking the trip at that time was this: My uncle, Joseph Ross, had some three years before gone to the lead mines, taking with him his only child, my cousin Ossian, a boy about five years of age. My uncle was taken sick and died, leaving this boy with strangers, and no one to look after him; so I went there and brought him home with me. He, at the time of this trip, was only eight years of age. I was some twenty days in making the trip, and we got home all in good shape.

"One of the first business enterprises I engaged in after I became of age was to purchase an interest in a steamboat, called the 'Navigator,' which ran from St. Louis, Mo., to LaSalle on the Illinois River. I held the position on her of steamboat clerk. After running on her a year I sold out my interest and then took a wife. I was married on the 1st day of January, 1840, to Jane R. Kirkpatrick at Canton, Ill. Upon our marriage we went to Havana, Ill., and there kept the Havana Hotel and also the ferry across the Illinois River, and we engaged in farming and stock-raising. I was later appointed Postmaster at Havana, Ill., by President Martin Van Buren. In 1844 I removed to and settled on a farm of forty acres adjoining the town of Vermont, in Fulton County, Ill., and as I had never learned a trade, nor studied for any profession, I had to rely on my hands and head for a living in the world. I settled down on my little farm and went to work and planted out a fine orchard, which, in after years, yielded me from eight to ten thousand bushels of fruit a year. I added to my little farm from time to time, until I had a farm of 400 acres, all well improved. I also engaged in buying lands and improving them and selling them to such emigrants as came to the county and wished to purchase improved farms. I continued in that business until I had become the purchaser and had disposed of six farms in Fulton County and fourteen farms in McDonough County, Ill.; and those farms are, at the present time, among the very best in those two counties. I have good reason to believe that I have had a greater number of acres of land broken up and put in cultivation than any other man that has ever lived in McDonough County. I only mention these facts to show that I have not been an idler or drone in the great hive of human progress, but have taken some part in helping to develop the great resources of the country.

"My principal occupation through life has been that of a farmer, although I engaged in the mercantile business in connection with my farming operations for about ten years. I have never been an office seeker and have had but little desire to hold office, although I have held a few small offices. I have held the office of Town Councilman, Town Treasurer, Supervisor, Justice of the Peace and Postmaster. I was twice elected Treasurer and Director of a railroad. I have usually voted the Democratic ticket, but when I came to California, in 1881, I attended the Democratic State Convention and found that a large majority of the delegates to the convention were saloon keepers and wholesale liquor dealers, and that the prominent questions which came before the convention were the repeal of the Sunday law, which was then the law of the State of California, and the enactment of laws in the interest of liquor dealers; so I left the Democratic party and joined the Prohibition party, and, at the State Prohibition Convention in 1884 I was selected as a delegate to the National Prohibition Convention that was held in the city of Pittsburg in 1884, at which convention the Hon. John P. St. John was nominated for President. At that convention twenty-eight States and three Territories were represented by 465 delegates. It was at this convention that I first had the opportunity and pleasure of seeing and hearing that grand and noble lady, Miss Frances E. Willard. She placed in nomination for President John P. St. John, and on that occasion she made one of the most eloquent and powerful speeches that was heard during the convention. I felt a little honored in being chosen with her on the committee that drafted the platform and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted by the convention. I have been a member of some temperance organization for over half a century. I have never indulged in the use of liquor or tobacco in any form and, during the more than eighty years of my life, I do not think that I ever had to exceed more than five days of sickness, and I attribute my good health and length of years very materially to abstaining from the use of liquor and tobacco. My wife and I lived together lacking but three days of fifty-eight years. There were born to us six children, four sons and two daughters. Our first child, Ossian, died when eighteen months old. All my other children are married and have families. They are Harriet S. Hall, Frank W. Ross, Mary F. Childs, George C. Ross and Joseph L. Ross. I have twelve grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. I have been a member of the Presbyterian Church for sixty years. I was converted under the preaching of the Rev. Dr. David Nelson, at a Presbyterian camp-meeting held near the town of Canton, Ill., in 1838. I first joined the Presbyterian Church at Canton, Ill., in 1838. I have been a member of the Presbyterian Church at Vermont, Ill., and also of the Presbyterian Church at Macomb, Ill. I held the office of Presiding Elder in each of those churches, and have represented each of them in the Presbytery. I am at the present time a member of the First Presbyterian Church at Oakland, Cal., which has a membership of over 1,300."

Harvey Lee Ross spent the last twenty-five years of his life at Oakland, Cal., where he died in 1907, aged nearly ninety years. Sketches of other members of the Ross family follow in order of birth.

ROSS, Lewis W., the oldest son of Ossian M. and Mary (Winans) Ross, was born in Seneca Falls, N. Y., December 8, 1812, and came with his parents to Illinois in 1820. The family settled in Fulton County in 1821, on land for which the father, Ossian M., had obtained a patent from the Government for his services as a soldier in the War of 1812, and which afterward became the site of a part of the city of Lewistown, named in honor of the son, Lewis W. The latter received his education in the pioneer schools of Fulton County and after the Black Hawk War of 1832 joined a battalion of rangers under the command of Major Bogart, organized for the purpose of protecting the frontier from Indian depredations, and with which he assisted in patrolling the country between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, making their headquarters at Galena. He later took a three years' course in Illinois College, then in its infancy, and in 1835 began the study of law with Josiah Lamhorn, a noted lawyer of his day, being admitted to the bar about 1837, first locating at Havana, Ill., which had been his father's home, and where he remained until 1839, when he removed to Lewistown, which continued to be his home up to the date of his death, October 29, 1895. In 1846 he enlisted as a soldier in the Mexican War, serving as Captain of Company K, Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, Colonel E. D. Baker commanding. Before his enlistment he had been twice elected to the Legislature from Fulton County (1840-42 and 1844-46), in 1848 was chosen Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket, in 1860 was an unsuccessful candidate for Lieutenant Governor on the same ticket and in 1862 was elected to Congress from the Fulton District, serving by successive re-elections three terms (1863-69). Other political and official positions held by him included those of delegate to the Democratic National Convention of 1860, held at Charleston, S. C., and that of 1880 at Cincinnati, at which General Winfield Scott Hancock was nominated for President, and as delegate to the State Constitutional Conventions of 1862 and 1869-70.

Colonel Ross, as he was widely known, was married June 13, 1839, to Miss Frances M. Simms, a native of Virginia, born July 18, 1821, and they lived to celebrate their golden wedding June 13, 1889. Of their four children John W. was Commissioner of the District of Columbia for several years and also served as Postmaster of Washington City, but is now deceased; Jennie is the wife of G. K. Barrere, now of Los Angeles, Cal., and Lewis C. and Pike C., residents of Lewistown, the former having charge as executor of his father's estate and the latter engaged in mercantile business. Mrs. Ross survived her husband several years, dying on the anniversary of his death, October 29, 1902.

ROSS, Gen.- Leonard Fulton, the third son of Ossian M. Ross, was born at Lewistown, Ill., July 18, 1823, two years after the arrival of the family in Fulton County, was educated in the common schools, also spending one year in Illinois College, Jacksonville, after which he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1844. In November, 1845, he married Catherine M. Simms, and during the same year opened a law office in Vermont, Fulton County. In June, 1846, he enlisted as a private in Company K, Fourth Regiment (Col. E. D. Baker's) Illinois Volunteers for the Mexican War, and was soon promoted to First Lieutenant, and after having joined the army under command of Gen. Winfield Scott, took part in a number of historic battles, including the capture of Vera Cruz, the battle of Cerro Gordo and events leading to the capture of the City of Mexico, and also performed important service as bearer of dispatches for Gen. Taylor. After his return from Mexico he was promptly elected Probate Judge, two years later chosen County Clerk, serving four years, when in 1852 he engaged in merchandising and still later in farming and stock-raising. Promptly after the beginning of the war in April, 1861, he organized a company, which finally became a part of the Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, one of the first mustered in for three years' service, on the organization of the regiment being chosen Colonel, and seeing service in the States of Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee. Early in 1862 he was appointed by President Lincoln Brigadier General, serving until after the fall of Vicksburg, when believing the war nearly ended, he tendered his resignation in order that he might give his attention to his private affairs. In January, 1865, he married as his second wife Mary E. Warren, and during the following year removed to his farm near Avon, Fulton County, where he devoted his attention to farming and fine stock-breeding. During this period he was prominent in agricultural and stock-breeding circles, serving first as Secretary and later as President of the Fulton County Agricultural Society, and for nine years was President of the Red Polled Cattle Club of America. In 1882, selling his farm in Fulton County, he removed to Iowa City, where he engaged in stock-breeding and dairying, in the meantime visiting England for the purpose of examining the high-grade herds of cattle in that country. After a residence of twelve years in Iowa, in 1894, he returned to Lewistown, Ill., and joined his brother, Lewis W., in the organization of the Lewistown National Bank, of which he was Vice-President and Manager for two years. Originally a Democrat and a member of the Democratic National Conventions of 1852 and 1856, with the advent of the Civil War he became a Republican, served as Collector of Internal Revenue in his district from 1867 to 1869; was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress in a Democratic district in 1868 and again in 1874 and a member of the Republican National Convention of 1872. Of earnest, patriotic impulse, he served his country faithfully and unselfishly in every official position he was called upon to fill. General Ross spent the later years of his life in comparative retirement, and during the year 1898 visited Cuba and old Mexico, in the latter recalling the memories of historic events in which he had participated a half-century previous. His death occurred on January 17, 1901.

ROWLAND. John Riley, educator and Superintendent of Public Schools in Fulton County, Ill., is a native of the county and has there spent all his life, except about eight years spent as a student and teacher, mainly in Ohio. He was born in Pleasant Township, three miles east of Ipava, July 5, 1860, the son of James and Susannah (Parkinson) Rowland. The father and his two brothers, William and Riley Rowland, were the first settlers of that township, coming there from Kentucky in 1828 and locating on Section 3, where James Rowland continued to reside until his death, with the exception of two or three years in the early 'fifties occupied in an overland trip to California and back during the great rush to that region in search of gold.

John R., with a sister and two brothers, was left an orphan so young that he scarcely remembers his parents. The boy found a home with various relatives and neighbors, working on the farm in the summer and attending district schools for a few months each winter, till the spring of 1878, when he entered the preparatory school of the National Normal University at Lebanon, Ohio, then one of the oldest and best institutions of the kind in the United States. After completing a business and a teachers' course, he pursued other courses, receiving the degree of B. S. in 1880. Later, as his circumstances permitted, he did considerable post-graduate college work, principally in the same institution, devoting several summers especially to such study. In September, 1880, Mr. Rowland began teaching school at Fairmount, near Dayton, Ohio, where he was engaged for five successive terms. After spending another year in his Alma Mater studying law, and then taking a tour through various Western States, he returned to Illinois in 1886, and since that date has been constantly and closely identified with the educational interests of Fulton County. Briefly outlined, the honorable record of his more than twenty years' continuous service in the county's public schools is summarized as follows: He taught one year (1886-87) in the country near his birthplace, and then, in September, 1887, became principal of schools at Ipava, retaining this position two years, and was re-employed for a third term, which in 1889 he resigned to take charge of the Central Normal College at Lewistown. Here he remained till 1891, when the school passed from its chartering company's control into private hands. Next he assumed the principalship at Table Grove, where he graded the schools, put in a course of study, and organized the high school, remaining three years, from 1891 to 1894. As Superintendent of Schools at Cuba for the following two years (1894-96) he had an enlarged field of labor, re-classifying the pupils and revising the curriculum. In 1896 he accepted the Superintendency of the Avon schools, which position he still holds.

The high school at Avon is classed among the very best in the State for a town of its size, having a full four-years' course, the merit of which is attested by the fact that it secures the admission of the school's graduates, without examination, to any college, as well as to the Universities of Illinois and Chicago. The high school enrollment reaches about seventy-five annually, including a large number of pupils from outside districts who pay a tuition fee of $2.50 per month. Three regular teachers are employed in this department and five in the lower grades, the instruction in vocal music, drawing, and manual training being under the direction of specialists.

Mr. Rowland's standing as an educator was recognized by his nomination, in 1898, on the Democratic ticket, for the office of County Superintendent of Schools; but, although receiving his party's full vote, he failed of election, the Democrats being in the minority. Though not thereafter a candidate nor desirous of the place, he was unanimously renominated in 1902, but again defeated. A Democrat of the Jefferson-Douglas-Bryan faith, he has never aspired to any political honors, although always active in matters of public policy, and frequently called upon to act as a Delegate in county and State Conventions of his party. He is an earnest and consistent advocate of temperance and other civic and social virtues. His activity, however, in politics and like affairs is tactful and considerate, and has never been regarded as "offensive partisanship."

He is a member of the National Educational Association, the Illinois State Teachers' Association, the Central Illinois Teachers' Association, and various other professional organizations, participates regularly in their deliberations, and in most of them has been honored with important official positions. He also does much newspaper and editorial work, contributing frequent articles to educational and literary periodicals, and has often been an instructor and lecturer in teachers' institutes in Fulton and other counties. In 1896, he founded "The Fulton County School Journal," which he edited and published successfully for three years, and until its plant was destroyed by fire. At present he is Secretary of the Avon Summer Lyceum Society, a local Chautauqua assembly.

Mr. Rowland was married September 22, 1886, at the residence of the bride's parents in Bernadotte Township, near Ipava, Ill., to Miss Laurie Esther Smith, born September 7, 1863, a daughter of William and Ellen (Hopkins) Smith, and they have had seven children—two boys and five girls—namely: Roland March, Leland Young, Beryl (deceased), Sibyl, Doris, Carol, and Aldis,—the oldest being sixteen years of age and the youngest one year old. Mr. and Mrs. Rowland were formerly members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but are not now identified with any religious organization.

ROY, Theresa.—Interesting information concerning the early days of Fulton County is by no means monopolized by the sterner sex, who first plowed up the prairies and built the rude habitations which temporarily offered shelter from storm and sun. The producers of comfort and good cheer, when the day's work was done and weariness visited the human frame, performed as great and imperative a duty as did they of more muscular frame. But as most of those who came in maturity to this region in 1837 have passed beyond the power of transmitting their knowledge of conditions as they found them, it is left to those who then were children, to talk around winter fires of that frontier life and work and experience which nevermore can be known of men.

To that class which has grown to maturity with the county belongs Theresa Roy, whose gentle and industrious life bears testimony to the patience and fortitude of the women of the early days. Miss Roy was born on a farm in Fulton County, August 10, 1837, a daughter of George and Jane (O'Hara) Roy, who were born in County Antrim, Ireland, the former in 1796, and the latter in 1797. The parents crossed the Atlantic in a sailing vessel during the summer of 1822, and after spending fifteen years in Ohio, in 1837 came to Illinois where he lived but three years, his death occurring in 1840. Besides Theresa, who is the second youngest of the family, there were nine other

Miss Roy assisted her mother with the housework as a child, and when grown to maturity assumed a larger share of the household responsibility. She attended the early subscription schools, and has always been a devout member of the Catholic Church, even as a little child braving inclement weather and long distances to attend mass. She is much beloved and has many loyal friends, and her life has been a benediction to many who were in want or trouble. She inherits forty acres of her father's valuable estate.

RUCKER, William T., Cashier Farmers' State Bank, Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., is a man of broad experience, being a telegrapher, well versed in the railroad business, a practical bookkeeper and remarkably strong as a general financier and executive. The place and the man are, in short, admirably adapted to each other. From infancy William T. Rucker has been a resident of Illinois, although born in McMinn County, Tenn., on the 4th of March, 1851. He is a son of William and Nancy (Witt) Rucker, and when two years of age (in 1853) was brought by his parents to Macon County, Ill., there his father died in 1858 and his mother in 1861. Nine children were born to William and Nancy Rucker, Mr. Rucker being the youngest of the family. The other members were as follows: James, residing in Macon County, Ill.; N. W., a grain dealer doing business in the same county; John, of Dade County, Mo.; Sarah E., wife of George C. Davis, of Decatur, Ill.; Mary, deceased, formerly Mrs. Ed. Horton, of Decatur, Ill.; Malidad D., deceased, who became the wife of George W. Lichtenberger and left a family; and Maggie, who died at the age of thirty-five.

Until he had reached mature manhood William T. Rucker was gathering a large fund of physical and mental strength in an agricultural community. He worked upon the farm, attended the common schools of the neighborhood, and at the age of twenty-seven was fully equipped for any labors which might come to him. Leaving home, he first studied and mastered telegraphy at Assumption School, after which he accepted a position with the P. D. & E. R. R. at Hervey City. He remained at that post for about two years, losing no opportunity in the meantime to acquaint himself with the general duties of a station agent. The result was that at the end of that period he was appointed agent at Nameoka, near St. Louis, thus securing a connection with the Wabash system. Then followed his promotion to the position of operator and assistant agent at Astoria, with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. After being thus employed for about a year he was a bookkeeper for the Emmeson & Skinner Coat Company, Astoria and Dunfermline, this county, serving at the latter place also as agent for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. In 1891 he was appointed Deputy County Treasurer, and in 1894 became connected with the Farmers' State Bank as Assistant Cashier, being advanced to the Cashiership of the institution in 1895. In the fullest sense of the word he has filled that responsible position for the past eleven years, bringing to the performance of its duties courtesy, promptness and broad financial judgment. He is also officially identified with the educational affairs of the community, having for three years been an efficient member of the School Board.

In 1878 Mr. Rucker was united in marriage with Sarah E. Chance, and they have become the parents of the following children: Ira, living at home; Orlie, who married Rhuhy Moore, and resides at Decatur, Ill.; Earnest, Ray and Nina, all at home. Ira is in charge of his farm of eighty acres adjoining the city of Lewistown. Both Mr. Rucker and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His fraternal relations identify him with the Masons, M. W. A. and Court of Honor.

RUSSELL, D. Harvey.—Three generations of the Harvey family have tilled the soil of Fulton County and the properties favored by their occupancy invariably have borne the stamp of thoroughness, method and success. The instigator of the family immigration from Ohio to this part of the State was Joseph Russell, a native of the East, who in early life settled in the wilds of the Buckeye State, and where his son, John Russell, the father of D. Harvey, was born in 1835. John Russell, now a farmer of Deerfield Township, Fulton County, was two years old when the family made the long trip by wagon from Ohio to Fulton County, and he grew to maturity on the farm of 160 acres upon which his father settled near Ipava. To his inheritance he made additions and at the time of his death, in 1891, owned 282 acres in one tract. He married Elizabeth Knock, born in Fulton County in 1839.

D. Harvey Russell was born on the Ipava farm February 6, 1868, and at the age of twenty, after receiving the average advantages of his time and place, embarked in an independent farming venture on rented land near Ipava. Frugal and practical, he in 1898 invested his earnings in 217½ acres of land on Section 28, in Deerfield Township, formerly owned by D. W. Vittum, and in less than ten years has effected many important changes upon his property. During the past year he has erected a barn thirty by forty feet ground dimensions, has rebuilt his residence and made other improvements. His land is well drained and rich in quality, affording abundant crops of the produce generally associated with the Central West. He is also successful in raising high grade stock, preferring Poland China hogs and Shorthorn cattle. Since February 16, 1892, his home has been presided over by his wife, who formerly was Delilah Chipman, a native of McDonough County, and born April 4, 1874.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell are the parents of three children: Allan, Gale and Iva. Mr. Russell takes only a voting interest in politics, nor does he seek without the borders of his farm for social diversion. He is a home-loving, quiet man, absorbed in his work and loyal to the few whom he honors with his friendship.

SANDBERG, Andrew.—The firm of Sandberg & Whalen, contracting builders, of Canton, Ill., was established in February, 1903, and though one of the more recent concerns of its kind, already has to its credit a long list of important constructions. Among these may be mentioned the residences of Anna Monroe, John Neastrum, Mrs. Mary Harder, David Thomas, C. W. Vars, Mrs. A. C. Smith, Mrs. Mary Fuller, G. T. Otts and Thomas Greer.

Andrew Sandberg, senior member of the firm, and a man of much practical mechanical experience, is a native of Sweden, where he was born April 30, 1851. He was reared on a farm and received a common school education, and in 1875 married Mathilda Anderson, also born in Sweden, with whom and two of his children he came to the United States in 1880. Locating in Canton, he worked five years in the coal mines of Mr. Heald, and then turned his attention to the art of building as an employe of C. H. Stanley, contractor. He was thus engaged for twelve years, and for the following five years worked for Edward Rice, after which he conducted a business of his own for one year, or until establishing his present partnership with Homer Whalen in 1903.

Mr. Sandberg has a pleasant home of his own in Canton, built by himself, and modern in design and furnishings. There are four children in the family: Gus, Helda, Anna and Albert, of whom Anna is deceased. The death of this little daughter cast a gloom over an otherwise harmonious and happy household, for Mr. Sandberg shares the spirit of domesticity always associated with his countrymen, and seeks to place every possible advantage at the disposal of his children. He is a member of the Swedish order, Mulade Youman, and of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners. Concentration and industry have been important factors in his rise from humble and discouraging early conditions, and he thus is an example to those of the young men of the community who labor under similar limitations.

SAUNDERS, Henry C., one of the oldest and most substantial farmers of Fulton County, Ill., whose residence there has covered a period of nearly three-score years, and who has been closely and prominently identified with the marvelous development of that portion of Western Illinois, was born in Putman Township, Fulton County, on September 6, 1837, and with the exception of about thirteen years spent in Iroquois County, Ill., his life has been spent in his native township. Mr. Saunders is a son of Christopher and Aurelia (Putney) Saunders, both natives of the State of New York, where the former was born in 1799, and the latter in 1803.

Christopher Saunders, also a farmer by occupation, left New York in 1835 with his family, and proceeded westward to the Ohio River. On this he went by raft to Louisville, Ky., his ing there wagon breaking down during the journey. Arriving at Louisville, he sold his effects, and worked his way to Cairo, Ill., and thence to Havana, Fulton County, going directly to a tract of 160 acres in Putman Township, which he had previously secured in a trade. To the task of clearing this land he applied himself at once, and after breaking it up and making the necessary improvements, he carried on farming there during the remainder of his life, rearing a family of ten children. He was a man of sturdy qualities, and bore an excellent reputation among the pioneer farmers who had confronted the same ordeal of hardship, privation and arduous toil. Christopher Saunders departed this life on December 8, 1863, and his worthy and faithful spouse passed away February 17, 1875. In politics, Mr. Saunders was a Republican, and in religion a Presbyterian.

The subject of this sketch remained at home with his parents until he was about twenty-four years old, obtaining the mental training of his youth in the district school of the vicinity and helping his father in the work of the farm. In August, 1861, he enlisted as a private in the Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, with which he served three years. After returning from the war, he remained at home until 1871, and then went to Iroquois County, Ill., where he purchased a farm, which he cultivated until the winter of 1884. At that period he bought of James McCutcheon a farm of 160 acres in Canton Township, known as the "Joseph Martin place." On this, which is his present home, and a very productive piece of property, Mr. Saunders has made all the improvements, including the erection of a spacious and comfortable residence. He is also the owner of another farm consisting of 203 acres, situated in Canton and Joshua Townships, which he purchased in 1902, from Lewis Trites.

Henry C. Saunders has been twice married. On October 3, 1868, he was joined in wedlock with Fannie McGreary, a daughter of Nicholas and Martha (Moran) McGreary, who was born and educated in Fulton County. Three children were the offspring of this union, namely: George, who resides in Canton, Ill.; Clara (Mrs. Eshelman); and Firman, who is engaged in farming. The mother died February 27, 1874. On January 8, 1878, Mr. Saunders was united in matrimony with Mary Porter, also a native of Fulton County and daughter of Isaac and Lovenia (Barkus) Porter, natives respectively of Maryland and Ohio. In girlhood Mrs. Saunders received her education in the public schools and was later a student at Hedding College, Abingdon, Ill. In 1839 her parents came from Ohio to Illinois, and settled in Fulton County, where Mr. Porter carried on farming in Putman Township. Mr. and Mrs. Porter reared a family of nine children, and Mr. Porter became the owner of considerable land. The last marriage of Mr. Saunders resulted in five children, namely: Julia (Mrs. Hill), born October 13, 1878; Clay, who was born June 4, 1885, and dwells under the parental roof; David, a farmer, who was born January 13, 1887; and Letty, born December 14, 1888, and Mina, born August 10, 1891, who are with their parents.

In political affairs, the subject of this sketch is a supporter of the Republican party. In fraternal circles, he is identified with the G. A. R. Mr. Saunders is widely known throughout Fulton County, and wherever his acquaintance extends, is regarded as an upright and worthy man, and one of the foremost representatives of the agricultural element in his section of the State. He commands the esteem and confidence of all who come in contact with him in the daily walks of life.

SAUNDERS, Mark W., who has been for many years a successful farmer in Putman Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township on May 8, 1846, a son of Christopher and Aurelia (Putney) Saunders, natives of the State of New York. Christopher Saunders settled in Fulton County about 1835, locating in Section 13, Putman Township, where he bought 160 acres of land from his brother and engaged in farming during the remainder of his life. He died in December, 1862, the mother surviving until 1872.

Mark W. Saunders was reared on his father's farm, and in boyhood attended the district schools in the vicinity of his home. In 1869 he took charge of the farming operations, which he has ever since continued, and all the present improvements on the place have been made by him. In 1887 he built a fine house and spacious and substantial barn. He is also the owner of 106 acres of land in Section 14, Putman Township, his entire landed possessions now covering 266 acres. Mr. Saunders was a soldier in the Civil War, having enlisted in Company K, Seventh Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, February 27, 1864, and served until November 20, 1865. When he was honorably discharged, having participated in the battles of Columbia, Franklin and Nashville, Tenn.

On New Year's Eve, 1868, Mr. Saunders was united in matrimony with Sarah McCrary, who was born in Putman Township, this county, June 14, 1849, and is a daughter of Nicholas McCrary, who is engaged in farming there. Mr. and Mrs. Saunders became the parents of the following children, namely: Josephine (Mrs. E. A. Blackaby); Ella (Mrs. Wm. McCumber); Jesse, who married Josephine Bayliss; Kate (Mrs. Ralph Ford); Alvin; Fosket (married Orpha Jewett); Datus E., and Beulah. The last four children are at home. In politics, Mr. Saunders espouses the cause of the Republican party, and fraternally is affiliated with the Joe Hooker Post, G. A. R., of Canton. He is a useful citizen of his township, and is respected wherever known.

SAUNDERS, Dr. Reamer (deceased).—The late Dr. Saunders, of Avon, was one of the most successful physicians of Fulton County. He stood high in his profession, and as his training up to early manhood was along agricultural lines, he was closely in touch with the people around him. As the deceased was both popular and a good business man, he met with deserved financial, as well as professional success. At his death he left a fine estate of 1,540 acres, which is now in possession of his family.

Reamer Saunders was born in Meigs County, Ohio, on the 8th of May, 1821. His father, a farmer of York State, Abraham Saunders by name, was born February 7, 1791, and his mother (formerly Sarah Kimes), a native of Ohio, on the 18th of December, 1800. In 1834 Abraham Saunders migrated from Ohio to this county, and settled near Canton, where he remained with the family for six years. He then removed to Hancock County, where he spent the remainder of his life.

Dr. Saunders laid the foundation of his education in the district schools of Ohio and Illinois, and later attended Knox College at Galesburg, Ill., but was engaged in farming until he was twenty-two years of age. He then put in action a plan which had been gradually forming in his mind, and commenced the preparation for his professional career. In 1843 he read medicine with Dr. Christie, of Farmington, and subsequently attended the University of Missouri, at St. Louis, from which he obtained his degree.

The Doctor remained a resident of this county until he completed his medical course, when he opened an office for practice at Greenbush, Warren County, this State. It was while there that he had a short Civil War experience. In August, 1861, he enlisted for military service, in the line of his profession, but after five months was discharged on account of ill health. In 1872 the Doctor located in Avon, where he established a fine general practice, which he retained and increased up to the time of his death, November 13, 1897. The deceased was a firm Republican, and at the time of his decease was a believer in Presbyterianism, although not a member of the church.

Dr. Saunders was married in Warren County, Ill., November 19, 1846, to Mary Anna Kirkpatrick, a native of Springfield, Ill., born August 19, 1831. They were the parents of three children: Clara E., born February 7, 1854, being the only living child; Juliet, born December 19, 1847, died January 17, 1849; and Sarah M., born June 26, 1850, died April 9, 1879. She was the wife of Robert Foster Johnston, of Warren County, this State, and was married

James Ten Eyck

PETER TEN EYCK

February 2, 1870. Mr. Johnston himself died December 15, 1885. They were the parents of two children, namely: Frank E., who was born March 14, 1872, and died October 20, 1891; and Leon Earl, born February 26, 1875, died May 12th of the same year.

SAVILL, Robert A., is one of the large business men of Canton, who have made the city one of the most progressive communities of Central Illinois. A stranger coming to the city notices at once the substantial condition of its streets and sidewalks—an unfailing evidence of prosperity and good management—and for this municipal virtue Mr. Savill is largely responsible, as he is an extensive contractor in these lines. He is also a large coal dealer, and if any carnivals or other attractions are to be undertaken in a way to draw trade to Canton, the public instinctively turns to "Bob" Savill as the proper party to do the boosting. He is one of the most substantial, large-headed, large-hearted and honorable citizens of the place, is a stalwart Republican, has been a candidate for Mayor and had he been really ambitious for political honors, would have been chosen to that office and other higher positions in that field.

Several members of the Savill family have been prominently identified with the industrial and business development of Fulton County. As early as 1854 J. & J. M. Savill, uncles of Robert A., established a foundry and machine shop at the north end of South Second Street and conducted the plant until 1859, when they dissolved partnership and for years afterward continued separate establishments alone. In the late 'fifties and the early 'sixties Edwin Savill, a cousin, operated a saw mill and a grist mill at Copperas Creek, near Canton. The families were all natives of either Yorkshire or Lancashire, England, and emigrated to Fulton County in 1844, first locating at the only available landing place, Copperas Creek.

Robert A. Savill is a son of Abram and Anna (Tibet) Savill, his father being a Yorkshireman and his mother a native of Lancashire. His parents came to Fulton County with quite a colony of Savills in 1844 and the father established himself as a blacksmith and a farmer a few miles from Canton. Here Robert A. was born, August 22, 1850, and in the following year the family removed to Cincinnati, where Mr. Savill engaged in the mustard business, but afterward returned to Canton, and finally died in Stark County, Ill., in 1894.

Robert A. Savill established his present business in 1872 as a young man of twenty-two, and for years has been one of the most extensive coal dealers and sand contractors in the interior of the State. His strength as a citizen is based not only on his successful and honorable record as a business man, but on his personal popularity, the latter having been enhanced by his prominent connection with the fraternities. He joined the Knights of Pythias in 1896 and has served as Chancellor, Commander, Deputy Grand Chancellor and Representative to the Grand Lodge; has been twice Exalted Ruler of the Elks and is a Mason in good standing.

On June 12, 1873, Mr. Savill was married to Miss Martha Coffee, a native of Alabama, and their daughter, Ruth D., is now Mrs. Thomas H. Ledden, of Chicago.

SCHAFER, Henry, who has successfully carried on farming in Deerfield Township, Fulton County, Ill., for thirty-three years, is a native of Germany, where he was born in 1837, a son of Theobald and Catherine (Neutsinger) Schafer, who were also of German nativity, and always lived in that country. The occupation of Theobald Schafer was that of a farmer, and he and his wife were industrious, frugal and thrifty people.

The subject of this sketch attended the public schools of his native country for the customary legal period and on attaining the required age, served two years in the army, purchasing a substitute for the rest of his term. After being employed in various kinds of work in the fatherland until he was well advanced in mature years, he determined to seek a broader and more profitable field of labor in America. He accordingly crossed the Atlantic and landed in New York in 1870. Thence he went to Canada, where he remained from May until November of that year. He then came to the United States, proceeded to Illinois, locating in Fulton County, where he lived with his brother in Deerfield Township, and where he worked until 1874. In that year he bought from John Foltz a farm of eighty acres on Section 9, Deerfield Township, for $2,800, on which he built a house and barn and made all other necessary improvements. This has ever since been his home. He has added to the original purchase two forty-acre tracts of pasture land, and has been successfully engaged in general farming, devoting a portion of his time to the raising of stock.

In 1877 Mr. Schafer was united in marriage in Deerfield Township with Anna M. Schrode, who was born in that township, a daughter of Wendel Schrodt and wife. Her father was a native of Germany, coming to the United States when a young man. Seven children resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Schafer, namely: Henry Jacob, Anna Mary (Mrs. Cameron), Catherine (Mrs. Howie), John Lewis, Albert Newton, Orphie and Flora.

On political issues the subject of this sketch is a supporter of the Republican party, and has rendered efficient and creditable service to his township in the capacity of School Director. In religious faith he is an adherent of the Lutheran Church. He is a man of sterling traits of character, upright habits and intelligent and honorable methods of dealing, and the present prosperous condition of his affairs is solely attributable to his energy, perseverance, frugality, honesty and sound judgment.

SCHAFER, John E., County Clerk of Fulton County, Ill., is one of the substantial citizens of the younger generation, who has proven by his personal record and individual worth the sterling value of the German element to the material and civic progress of American communities. Having first shown his ability as an industrious, useful member of the community, with the desire and the determination to manage his own affairs with common sense and foresight, he was called first to the conduct of township affairs, and managed them with such credit to himself and with such satisfaction to the public that he was elected to his present position in the service of the county.

Mr. Schafer is a native of Deerfield Township, Fulton County, where he was born September 21, 1862, the son of Jacob and Lavina (Ehresman) Schafer. His father, who was born in Rhinepfalz, Germany, emigrated to America at the age of nineteen, first locating at a point in Oneida County, N. Y., where he worked for four years at a salary of $100 per annum. He then returned to his native land, but not for long, since his experience in the United States had already convinced him that it was not only a land of promise, but one in which the promise was realized by substantial good—the only place for the poor young man, and with the good old German ideas of domestic life, with its substantial happiness and comforts. About 1854, therefore, Jacob Schafer returned to the United States, finally settling in Deerfield Township, where he went to work by the month. Before long he had saved enough money to buy eighty acres of land, rough and uncultivated, upon which he erected a log cabin, as the basis of a homestead. Within two years the property had been so well improved that he decided to bring a wife into his home, which he did in the marriage of Miss Ehresman mentioned above. This happy event occurred May 10, 1856. Mrs. Schafer was also of German ancestry, the daughter of Daniel Ehresman, a pioneer of Fulton County. To Jacob Schafer and wife were born four children: Mary E., wife of Ransom Tomkins, a farmer in Joshua Township; Susan C., wife of John W. Erhesman, of Cass Township; Martha M., who married Frederick Marr, the couple now residing on the old homestead in Deerfield Township, and John E., subject of this sketch.

In 1864, when John E. was but two years of age, the first wife died and Jacob Schafer subsequently married Mrs. Sarah E. Laswell. The father continued to reside in Deerfield Township until his death on March 14, 1898. The deceased was born March 26, 1830, and although a native of Germany, had passed his life in the United States since he reached the years of manhood. He was an American in everything but birth, and during the forty-four years of his residence in Fulton County was among its most prosperous and progressive farmers. He improved and increased his original tract of farming land until he was the owner of 200 acres, constituting a finely improved homestead. His sterling worth as a citizen earned him many proffers of public advancement, but he was content to abide by his record as a private individual and although an earnest supporter of Republicanism, had declined to be a candidate for political office.

John E. Schafer was raised on the home farm and early learned what it meant to work and economize, as well as intelligently to plan. He assisted his father, attended the district school and finally became a pupil in the Normal College at Bushnell, Ill. After leaving school, instead of teaching, however, he instinctively turned to the soil as the more promising field of labor, and his success in the operation of a rented farm in Canton Township for a period of four years proved the wisdom of his choice. Although independent in his agricultural operations almost from the first, Mr. Schafer felt the need of a domestic partner and accordingly, on the 4th of November, 1888, was united in marriage with Ida M. White, a native of Deerfield Township, born October 8, 1867, a daughter of Nathaniel and Sarah (Pritchard) White. (See biography of Robert Pritchard elsewhere in this work.) Mr. and Mrs. Schafer became the parents of two children: Flossie D., born January 14, 1890, and Lavina M., born December 18, 1903, and died February 4, 1905.

Until he was elected to the county clerkship four years ago Mr. Schafer resided in Deerfield Township, with the exception of the period when he was farming on rented land in Canton Township. After renting for about four years he purchased 160 acres near the old home and engaged in general farming and stock-raising. The feeding, buying and shipping of stock have always formed a large share of his business, and he often has as many as 200 head of stock upon his land. The success which has attended his transactions is attested by the fact that to his original purchase of 160 acres of land he has added at different periods until he is now the proprietor of 552 acres of farming and grazing property.

Besides ably managing his large private interests Mr. Schafer has devoted himself earnestly and effectively to the public duties which have been entrusted to him. He has been an ardent and influential Republican, his political record commencing in 1896 by his election to the Board of Supervisors as a representative of his township. After serving in that office for two years in 1899 he was chosen Town Clerk in face of the fact that the township was normally Democratic. His service was so satisfactory in that position that in 1902 the Republican Convention nominated him for County Clerk and his constituents elected him by a good majority. In the higher public post he has also acquitted himself with that efficiency, courtesy and ability which proves that he has a proper sense of the responsibilities of a public trust.

While Mr. Schafer has never been a church member, all religious and moral movements tending to improve the community have in him a practical and warm supporter. Mrs. Schafer is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally Mr. Schafer is a member of the K. of P., M. W. A., A. F. and A. M., Court of Honor and M. P. L. His wife is also a member of the Court of Honor.

SCHENK, Chester.—Because of the extent and quality of his usefulness, his commercial soundness and acumen, his public spirit, integrity, and nearness to the fundamental requirements of citizenship, Chester Schenk affords an encouraging example of success gained through the proper use of everyday abilities and opportunities. Of Mr. Schenk it may be said that his life-work is a response both to his early teaching and to the needs of his environment. He has laboriously climbed every round in the mercantile ladder, and storekeeping was the first real interest to rivet his youthful attention. Born in Summum, Fulton County, November 28, 1862, he is a son of John and Mary Robinson (Branson) Schenk, the latter a daughter of Charles Branson, who was one of the prominent pioneers of Fulton County. John Schenk was born in Virginia September 22, 1819, and died March 29, 1898. His wife was born in Ohio November 18, 1824, and died March 30, 1896. In the cemetery at Ipava sleep, under shady trees, this honored couple, who, united in the early trials and deprivations of their lives, were permitted to so long journey together, and to so closely follow each other to the bourne whence no traveler returns.

John Schenk secured a fair education in Virginia, and as a young man journeyed to the wilds of Illinois where he engaged in school teaching and established a home of his own. Coming to what then was Oberlin, but now is Summum, in Woodland Township, he erected the second house in the infant community, and for some time engaged in educational work on the old subscription plan, his leisure being devoted to the study and teaching of music. As his ambition underwent transmutation, he converted his schoolhouse into a general store, placing therein the first stock of goods brought to the now prosperous village of Summum. In time he erected the store building now occupied by Jesse Danner & Son, and for many years it was the chief center of activity, as well as the favorite meeting place of both local and distant purchasers. He had the mercantile instinct well developed, was the possessor of those invaluable assets of tact and courtesy, and knew how to drive a shrewd and profitable bargain. He was especially fortunate in his land investments, and became one of the best known and largest property owners in the Winchester Valley. In proportion as his financial fortunes took on substantiality did his public services increase and his benefactions multiply. He was generously personified, and many who now are successful, owe their start in life to his encouragement and practical assistance. A staunch and uncompromising Democrat, he retained the vehemence and pride in his political principles which characterize to this day the native sons of Virginia, yet he was singularly averse to serving his township in any official capacity. His earliest as well as his last religious opinions were centered in the Mennonite Church, which also was one of his largest charities. Of his four children, Dr. Myron Phelps Schenk, deceased, was for many years a successful medical practitioner of his native town; Fannie is the deceased wife of Dr. Clark, of the vicinity of Joplin, Mo.; and Carrie is the wife of William Russell, of Friend, Neb.

The education of Chester Schenk was obtained in the public schools of Summum and Rushville and after graduating from the high school in the latter, he took a course in the Gem City Business College, at Quincy, Ill., completing the same in 1880. From a mercantile standpoint, his father's store was first interesting as a repository for things satisfying to the palate, but this stage gave place to one filled with such hard realities as sweeping, window-washing, and fire-making, the latter operation testing his enterprise and good nature during the early hours of very cold mornings. He did up bundles and handed goods over the counter when he was almost too small to see his customer, but his experiences were developing, and the atmosphere of change stimulating; so that he contracted a genuine liking for catering to the purchasing public. His school days over he practically assumed the management of the store, and in 1893 had accumulated sufficient capital to become owner of all he surveyed. This comprised about $7,000 worth, but difficulties arose after he had added to his own the stock of R. H. Zimmerman, an old-time merchant of Summum, and led to the erection of his present brick store, which is one of the most substantial and most prepossessing in Southern Fulton County. He carries a fine, clean and varied stock of goods, charges reasonable prices, and gives ample returns. The subterfuge of misrepresentation is relentlessly tabooed from his establishment, and in consequence he is thoroughly trusted and relied upon by the larger part of the town and surrounding country. That honesty and fair dealing are the best policy is demonstrated anew in the career of Mr. Schenk, for he receives high credit in Bradstreet, and exerts a strong influence upon many phases of municipal growth.

While not a member of any church, Mr. Schenk is a generous contributor to religious societies, and supports with his contributions a variety of charities. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. On May 1, 1890, Mr. Schenk was united in marriage to Luzella Sweney, who was born in Peoria, Ill., May 6, 1863, a daughter of John B. and Florence V. (Bowen) Sweney, natives of Gettysburg, Pa., and Illinois pioneers of 1855. Mr. Sweney was for many years a carpenter in Peoria, and died there in 1894, his wife surviving him until 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Schenk are the parents of three children: Anita Louise, born July 12, 1892; Gladys Helen, born December 5, 1893; and Allen Melvin, born September 4, 1899, died December 18, 1905. The death of Allen Melvin was the saddest catastrophe that has darkened the married life of Mr. and Mrs. Schenk. They had been erecting the beautiful home now occupied by the family, and everything had been placed therein which could contribute to the happiness and comfort of the children. The little room of the stricken boy was all ready for him, and contained his toys and the playthings which he loved. Just before the removal from the old to the new home he was taken with diphtheria, and in spite of all that loving parents and expert medical aid could devise for his recovery, he passed beyond the border, leaving a vacant chair as reminder of his bright and promising presence. It is in his immediate home circles that Mr. Schenk finds fullest measure of appreciation, for he is instinctively considerate of others, regarding his honorably acquired wealth as a means of furnishing those near and dear to him the greatest aids to comfort, peace and happiness. As a merchant he invests his occupation with its requirements of good judgment, good heart, and unquestioned integrity, which far-sighted qualities insure him a permanent place among the substantial upbuilders of his native community.

SCHISLER, Henry.—During his long residence within the borders of Fulton County, Henry Schisler has worked out an admirable destiny, and from small beginnings has drawn around him for the comfort and happiness of his later years such substantial compensations as wealth, the affectionate devotion of his well established children, the credit for having contributed largely to the general development of the community, and the confidence and good will of his business and social associates.

As his name indicates, Mr. Schisler is of German ancestry, and his family was established in this country by his grandfather, who crossed the ocean after the Revolutionary War and settled in York County, Pa. Here Henry Schisler was born May 20, 1835, and here also was born his father, John Schisler, and his mother, Lydia (Schinbarger) Schisler. The Schisler farm in York County was in the neighborhood of Loganville, and one of the most vivid early memories of Henry Schisler is of the two opposing armies crossing the river at that point and robbing the town of provisions. The oldest son of the family was taken a prisoner at that time, and forced to lead the Confederate Army to its desired destination. Besides Henry, there were four other children of the first marriage of the father: Catherine, deceased wife of Samuel Hollinger, also dead; John, who owns what was left of the old home in York County, but lives in Manchester; Eliza, deceased, former wife of J. Hartman, who settled in Michigan prior to the Civil War; and George, a farmer of Eldorado Township, McDonough County. John Schisler married for his second wife a Miss Miers, who bore him five children, one of whom died in infancy, and two of whom are living: Jacob, of Hartford City, Ind., and Samuel, of Denver, Colo.

As a means of self-support Henry Schisler learned the cigar making trade, and by the time he was eighteen years old had saved quite a few dollars. Lured hither by reports of larger opportunities, he started west in 1854, and after a short stop in Ohio, came on to Fulton County, where he soon found employment in a brick-yard. He later learned the brick-mason's trade, and for five years followed brick laying and building in different parts of the county. October 14, 1858, he was united in marriage to Magdalene Wise, a native of York County, Pa., and daughter of Peter and Sarah (Kare) Wise. After the death of her parents, Mrs. Schisler came to Fulton County with her sister, Mrs. John Bricker, settling in Sumnum in 1855. Mr. and Mrs. Schisler are the parents of nine children: Sarah E., wife of Joseph Strennell, of Astoria, this county; Samuel, a farmer of Astoria Township, who married Lydia Eppert; Amanda, wife of Emanuel Fitz, of Redclond, Neb.; Charles, deceased husband of Ellen (Davis) Schisler; Lydia, wife of Granville Sayers, of Astoria; Mary, wife of John Rowland; Edward, a farmer in Astoria Township, who married Josephine Blanchfield; Rose Ellen, wife of David Sullivan, a farmer in New Salem Township, McDonough County, Ill.; and an infant, deceased.

After his marriage Mr. Schisler was variously employed until 1866, when he bought eighty acres of land in Section 26, Astoria Township, upon which had been erected a small log house, and a few inferior outbuildings. The land was covered with a heavy growth of timber and hazel bushes, also hundreds of labor-defying stumps, and much effort was necessary before even a small patch could be cultivated. From time to time this land has been added to, and now the farm consists of 387 acres, which, however, gives but partial impression of the real work accomplished by Mr. Schisler. At one time he owned 800 acres of land, but as his children have grown up he has given to each a farm, with the result that he is surrounded by those near and dear to him, and within a small compass is a large community of family interests.

Mr. Schisler has large and liberal ideas regarding general affairs, and while politically a Democrat, is not hide-bound in his belief or exactions. Particularly has he encouraged and insisted upon the best possible educational opportunities for his own and the children of the other settlers, and he has given generously to enterprises which appealed to his humanity and reason. He has demonstrated what a man can accomplish by pursuing practical and straightforward methods, and by exercising always in his associations with his fellowmen the qualities of integrity, consideration and kindness.

SCHISLER, John.—Fulton County is indebted for some of its best citizenship to the descendants of the early Dutch settlers who have brought order and resource and splendid development to the State of Pennsylvania. From this Eastern community of settled conditions and ideals have journeyed many whose names stand for sterling worth in this community, and among them none are more typical than John Schisler, an arrival of 1853. Mr. Schisler owns a beautiful residence in Astoria, where he has lived in retirement since 1893, and he also is the possessor of a tract of 260 acres in Woodland Township, which, in its splendid cultivation, represents the labor of practically his entire active life.

Mr. Schisler spent the first twenty years of his life in York County, Pa., where he was born December 4, 1833. His father, Louis Schisler, and his mother, Anna (Hullinger) Schisler, were born in the Quaker State, and accompanied their son to Pennsylvania in 1853. The elder Schisler was a hard-working, industrious man, and in Pennsylvania accumulated a small property, which, however, he disposed of upon locating in Astoria. He was a high minded and public spirited, and his straightforward manner and invariable sincerity won him the confidence and esteem of all with whom he was associated. He was a very devout man, and one of his largest activities was the German Baptist Church, of which he was a member from early youth until the end of his life. Into his family came ten children, eight of whom survive him.

After the death of Louis Schisler, in the fall of 1853, his son, John, assumed control of his business, and remained at home with his mother until his marriage, in 1856, at the age of twenty-three, to Mathilda Fitz, who was born in Pennsylvania, June 1, 1837, and in 1850 moved with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Fitz, to Fulton County. Shortly after the ceremony the young people located on eighty acres of land in Woodland Township, and engaged in general farming and stock-raising until the death of Mrs. Schisler June 12, 1891. Mr. Schisler bought his present residence in Astoria in 1888. To his original farm he added until he owned 260 acres in one tract, well improved, and equipped with substantial residences and outbuildings. During the war he gained quite a start in an agricultural way, disposing of his wheat for $2.25 a bushel, and other products in proportion. The grain he hauled to Sharp's Landing, on the Illinois River, and thence it was taken in barges down to St. Louis. This farm has supplied the market with many head of fine cattle, high grade horses and Poland China hogs.

To Mr. and Mrs. Schisler were born eight children: Jacob, who died in Woodland Township; John, who is living retired in Astoria; Benjamin, who is a high school educator in California; Lewis, who resides in California; Henry, who is occupant and manager of the farm in Woodland Township; Ellen, who was her father's housekeeper in Astoria, but is now residing in California; Mary, who was engaged in educational work in Fulton County, but is now her father's housekeeper; and one who died in infancy. Mr. Schisler is a member of the German Baptist Church, and for many years has been active in promoting its religious, social and financial interests. In politics he is a Republican. The upright and public-spirited life of Mr. Schisler has attracted to him the confidence and esteem of the community, as well as the warm friendship of many who, like himself, have developed with the forces within rather than without.

SCHLEICH, John B.—Among the well-known farmers of Fairview Township, Fulton County, Ill., whose careers have been especially remarkable for enterprise, perseverance and tenacity of purpose, and who have advanced themselves from humble beginnings to conditions of substantial prosperity, is the worthy gentleman whose name stands at the head of this personal record. John B. Schleich was born in the State of Connecticut, December 19, 1853, a son of Jacob and Mary (Weber) Schleich, natives of Germany. Jacob Schleich followed farming in the fatherland and continued in that occupation after emigrating at an early period to the United States. He first settled in the State of Connecticut and after remaining there for some time, brought his family to Illinois and established his home in Fairview Township, Fulton County, where he still carried on farming. He and his good wife were the parents of five children, of whom two died in infancy.

The subject of this sketch grew up on the home farm and in boyhood received his mental training in the district schools of the neighborhood, meanwhile assisting his father on the farm in the summer season and at odd intervals while acquiring his schooling. Remaining under the paternal roof until he reached his majority, he applied himself to farming on his own account in 1874, first on a place belonging to Daniel Bryherd, in the vicinity of Farmington, Fulton County, and afterwards on the Dan Zook property. In the latter location he remained until he was employed as a mail carrier, traveling the route from Yates City to Rochester, which service he continued to perform for six months. He then worked on the home farm one year for his brother Peter, going thence to Deerfield Township, where he and his brother Charles rented the John Rose farm of 240 acres, on which they carried on farming in partnership two years. At that time John B. married and brought his wife to the farm mentioned, which became the Vandercar farm, on which he lived nine years. In 1893 Mr. Schleich purchased 230 acres of land partly improved from Isaac Deswelge, on which, in 1900, he built a barn thirty-two by fifty-two feet in dimensions, and another of the same size in 1902. He is engaged in general farming and devotes a good portion of his time to the raising of shorthorn cattle and Poland China hogs. His labors have been attended by satisfactory results and he is regarded as one of the most substantial and prosperous farmers of his township. While energetic and progressive, he is, nevertheless, careful and systematic in his methods of operation, and his farm is one of the most productive and profitable in the county.

Mr. Schleich was united in matrimony September 24, 1885, with Sarah Frances Deswelge, the ceremony occurring on his present premises, where his wife was born, February 17, 1858. Three children have blessed their union, namely: Raymond L., born January 2, 1888; Mildred F., born September 28, 1893, and Hazel M., born June 1, 1896.

On political issues the subject of this sketch is arrayed on the side of the Republican party. For nine years he rendered efficient and faithful service to his township on the Board of School Directors, and served as clerk of that body for nine years. He is a man of unblemished integrity and a useful citizen.

SCHNEIDER, John C.—That congenial work bears within it large possibilities of success is emphasized in the career of John C. Schneider, a farmer and stock-raiser of Ellisville Township, and a native of Union Township, Fulton County, where he was born May 5, 1850. Joseph and Catherine (Heming) Schneider, parents of John C., were born in Milton, Pa., in 1816 and 1822, respectively, and coming overland to Fulton County in 1851, settled on a forty-acre tract in the vicinity of Ellisville. As their land yielded of its abundance more land became necessary and the father added 140 acres, upon which he enlarged his general farming and stock-raising industry. He became widely known as a practical and scientific farmer and as a man whose word was as good as his bond.

In 1878 John C. Schneider started out on his own responsibility in Union Township, where he bought eighty acres of land and made it his home until 1892. He then sold this property and bought a similar amount on Section 6, Ellisville Township, upon which he since has made many improvements, including a new house and barn, fencing, tiling and tree planting. In Ellisville, February 20, 1878, Mr. Schneider married Florence Brown, who was born in Chester County, Pa., July 13, 1852. He is a Republican in politics and a member of the German Lutheran Church. Wide-awake and enterprising, his farm and himself are important adjuncts to the present and future prosperity of the township.

SCHOLES, George W., who is among the most enterprising and prosperous farmers in Fulton County, Ill., and is ranked as one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Liverpool Township, was born in the town of Liverpool, this county, February 14, 1857. He is a son of Benjamin and Lucinda J. (Deaver) Scholes, the former a native of England and the latter of the State of Maryland, of German descent. The father was born in 1820 and came to the United States about 1840. The future wife and mother became a resident of Illinois when quite young, accompanying her father to Kaskaskia. After the death of the latter she made her home in Fulton County with her sister, Mrs. Colonel W. A. Dickerman, and there Benjamin Scholes met her, their marriage occurring in the county. Soon after landing in the country from Yorkshire, England, Benjamin Scholes volunteered his service in the Seminole War. After that war was terminated he located in St. Louis and was engaged in steamboating on the Mississippi River until about the year 1849, when he journeyed to Fulton County and settled in the town of Liverpool. There he was a merchant for many years and in 1873 moved to his farm on Section 2, Liverpool Township, having bought 240 acres there in 1869. In 1873 he began to clear the heavily timbered portion and improve it, and at the time of his death he had one of the most highly cultivated farms in the township. He was a very enterprising, progressive man, and took a deep interest in public matters. While engaged in business at Liverpool he was recognized as one of the leading merchants of the county. He died in March, 1877, having been identified with the development of Fulton County for thirty-seven years. His widow survived him until 1890. Eleven children resulted from their union, three of whom died in infancy. The others are as follows: Eva D., wife of James A. Toncary, a sketch of whose life may be found in this work; George W.; Franklin T., a street car motorman in Galesburg, Ill.; Willard B., a farmer in Liverpool Township; Lucy, a teacher in Canton, Ill.; Minnie G., who died in 1892, at the age of thirty-two years; Bertha, deceased, and Dr. Paul S., of Canton, Fulton County.

George W. Scholes was educated in the public schools of Liverpool and Bryant, Ill., and was reared on the home farm. He has followed farming all his life, and has been one of the most successful agriculturists in this section, being now the owner of 320 acres of land on Sections 2 and 11, Liverpool Township. He has one of the most attractive homes in Fulton County, and his farm is among the best improved, best arranged and best cultivated in that section of the State.

On November 16, 1881, Mr. Scholes was united in marriage with Mary E. Snider, a daughter of John H. and Jemima Snider, of whom the former is deceased and the latter a resident of Canton, Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Scholes have had two children, namely: Clyde A., born July 25, 1882, who married Myrtle M. Maus, a daughter of James P. Maus, a farmer in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, and Maude A., born March 8, 1884, who died August 24, 1900. The daughter was the pride of the home, an accomplished scholar and endowed with rare musical talent. In the bloom and abounding promise of her youth this most amiable and highly gifted girl was snatched away by untimely death. She was a pupil in the Canton High School and was drowned while bathing during vacation.

In politics Mr. Scholes is a supporter of the Republican party and in connection with public affairs is an influential and useful member of the community. Fraternally he is affiliated with Maples Mills Camp, No. 5580, M. W. A. He and his worthy and estimable wife are members of the Maples Mills Methodist Episcopal Church.

SCHOLES, Paul S., M. D., a well known and successful physician and surgeon of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Liverpool, Fulton County, Ill., on November 21, 1870, a son of Benjamin and Lucinda (Deaver) Scholes, the former a native of Yorkshire, England, and the latter of the State of Maryland. Benjamin Scholes was born in England in 1820, came to the United States in 1839 and soon afterwards volunteered as a soldier in the Seminole War. Subsequently he went to St. Louis and was engaged in steamboating on the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers for several years, after which he located in Liverpool, Ill., where he continued steamboating, also conducting a general store for a number of years. In 1873 he moved upon his farm, where he died, March 6, 1877.

In boyhood Paul Scholes attended the district schools of Liverpool, Ill., and afterwards became a pupil in the Canton High School. Still later he pursued a course of study at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., from which he was graduated with the class of 1895. He then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Chicago, graduating therefrom in 1898, when he began the practice of medicine in Canton.

On October 15, 1902, Dr. Scholes was united in marriage with Bertha Chapman, who was born in Knox County, Ill., and received her mental training in the public schools there and at Oberlin College, Ohio.

Politically the subject of this sketch is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He is a member of the Canton Physicians' Club, the Fulton County Medical Society, the Illinois State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. Dr. Scholes is a thoroughly competent physician and has succeeded in building up a good practice. He enjoys the confidence and respect of those to whom he renders professional service and has an excellent standing in the community.

SCHRODT, John Henry.—Of the younger generation of agriculturists of Lee Township, mention is due John Henry Schrodt, who is carrying on farming on 260 acres of rented land in that township. Mr. Schrodt was born on a farm in Deerfield Township, Fulton County, April 12, 1876, coming of Teutonic ancestry, his family having been established during the thirties in the State of Maryland, where his father, Martin Schrodt, was born March 10, 1836, and whence the latter moved to Deerfield Township with his parents in 1856. In his business career Mr. Schrodt has known no other occupation than that of farming, to which he brings industry and a correct appreciation of the importance of his calling. His education was obtained in the district schools, but he is an earnest student of modern, up-to-date methods in agricultural lines, giving promise of future success. His marriage occurred in Bushnell, Ill., November 9, 1899, to Bessie Rock, a native of Fulton County, born May 23, 1882, and two children have been born to them, Archie and Kenneth. In politics Mr. Schrodt maintains the family traditions, espousing the cause of the Democratic party. He has served as a member of the School Board, and is a young man of energy and resourcefulness, with a promising future before him.

SCHRODT, John Martin.—German enterprise, thought and philosophy are reflected in the careers of all the men of the Schrodt family, who have contributed to the upbuilding of Fulton County. Already four generations have added their quota of effort, and from the labor of each have arisen new and higher standards of life, labor and responsibility. The love of home, conservatism and strict economy which is drilled into the humblest of the sons of the fatherland, seems never to desert them in their wanderings to foreign shores, nor does it fail in its reflection in their sons and sons' sons. This truism is emphasized in John Martin Schrodt, owner of 160 acres of land in the township where he now resides, and a native son of Deerfield Township, where he was born July 28, 1852. Mr. Schrodt is a son of John W. and Mary H. (Mahr) Schrodt, and grandson of John and Margaret Schrodt, all natives of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany.

John W. Schrodt was born February 3, 1820, on a farm in Hesse-Darmstadt, and when eleven years of age, in 1831, accompanied his parents to America. Locating first in Baltimore, Md., a year later the family moved to Westminster, in the same State, and some time later to Hagerstown, still later making their home in Chambersburg, Pa., for two years. They then moved to Ohio, and still later to Deerfield Township, Fulton County, purchasing land on Section 10, where the father died December 12, 1868, and the mother March 11, 1870. John W., at the age of fifteen, left home and learned the shoemaker's trade in Hagerstown, Md., and on February 7, 1847, married Mary C. Mahr, daughter of Philip L. and Anna M. (Schnurr) Mahr, both of whom died in Ohio during the early 'fifties. After his marriage Mr. Schrodt gave up shoemaking and established himself on a rented farm, in 1850 coming to Deerfield Township, where he bought land on Section 7. This land was covered with timber, but he cleared and improved it, and in time owned 200 acres. He was a staunch Democrat and though but little in the public eye, served as Road Commissioner and School Director for several terms. He was a devout member of the Lutheran Church and until overtaken with a severe lameness attended regularly the services of his church. Of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Schrodt John died at the age of one year; Wendle died March 11, 1884, at the age of nineteen years; Henry married Martha Stick and settled in Deerfield Township; Philip married Clara Gardner, who died in 1884; Jennie married William Knott, who died in 1884; John W. married Delia Melton, and lived in Lee Township; Margaret became the wife of Harry Schafer, of Deerfield Township; Mary became the wife of David Laswell, of Deerfield Township; the others are George, Lewis and Catherine.

Educated in the public schools of Deerfield Township, John Martin Schrodt took naturally to farming and has always regarded it as one of the most satisfying occupations of mankind. Under the able direction of his father he learned the essentials of agriculture, and his progressive mind has responded and kept pace with the advance in later methods of operation. His farm is under a high state of cultivation and is devoted to general farming and stock-raising, preference being given to the latter. He is a Democrat in politics and in religion a German Lutheran. Mr. Schrodt has been a member of the School Board for nine years and during that time has shown commendable zeal in securing good teachers and general educational advantages. The marriage of Mr. Schrodt and Delia Melton occurred in Macomb, Ill., September 15, 1888, Miss Melton being a native of Knox County, Ill., born November 27, 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Schrodt have one daughter, Mary Anna.

SCHRYOCK, J. C., who has been for a long period successfully engaged in the hardware trade in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, in 1844, a son of Milton and Rebecca (Coron) Schryock, natives of Kentucky. Milton Schryock was among the pioneer settlers of Fulton County. He came from Kentucky to Illinois at an early period, settling in Fulton County in 1833, where he followed the occupation of a blacksmith. Subsequently he devoted his attention to farming in Buckheart Township. In this he was successful, and continued the pursuit of agriculture during the remainder of his life.

The subject of this sketch was reared on his father's farm and received his mental instruction in boyhood in the district schools of his neighborhood. After reaching maturity he applied himself to farming on his own account, and continued thus for a number of years. In 1883 he entered into the hardware business in Cuba, Fulton County, and has since followed that line of trade with successful results. He handles farm implements of all kinds, builders' hardware, wagons, buggies, etc., with a tinshop in connection. He is a thoroughly competent business man, and pays close attention to his trade.

In 1873 Mr. Schryock was joined in matrimony with Emily J. Hackett, who was born in Fulton County, and four children resulted from this union, namely: Charles, Gussie (Mrs. Smith), Lloyd and Hazel. In fraternal circles Mr. Schryock is identified with the A. F. & A. M.

SCOTT, Aaron Ernest, well known throughout Fulton County, Ill., as the editor, publisher and owner of the Astoria Search Light, and one of the ablest and most enterprising newspaper men in his section of the State, was born on a farm in Wayne County, Ill., August 8, 1868. He is a son of Aaron E. and Eliza (Hunt) Scott, natives of Edwards County, Ill., the birthplace of the father being the town of Albion, that county. The paternal grandparents were William and Jane (Ewing) Scott, the former born June 17, 1797, in Onondaga County, N. Y., and the latter in Virginia, February 16, 1800. The grandfather on the maternal side, Thomas Hunt, was born in the last named State in 1798, and the birth of the grandmother, Mary (Edmonson) Hunt, occurred in Cumberland County, Ky., in 1806. The education of Mr. Scott was obtained in the common schools and in the high school at Fairfield, Ill., to which place he moved with his widowed mother when he was about eighteen years of age. He also took a short commercial course at Hayward College, in Fairfield. The death of his father had thrown him upon his own resources before the completion of his education, and he secured employment in a printing office, working steadily therein for a number of years. Thus he acquired much of that knowledge which has since served him to such good purpose. In September, 1891, he took up his residence in Lewistown, Fulton County, where he purchased the Lewistown Lance, which he successfully conducted for the following three years. Selling his interest there in 1894, he moved to Astoria, Ill., and founded the Astoria Search Light, which he now edits and publishes, and of which he is the sole proprietor. Starting at the bottom of the ladder without financial resources and favored by no adventitious aids, he has by dint of resolute purpose, diligent application and inherent merit, forged to the front, and his paper now ranks among the best in Central Illinois.

On June 1, 1892, Mr. Scott was united in marriage with Jessie M. Cain, who was born in Bath, Ill., and received a high school education. Mr. and Mrs. Scott maintain an excellent social standing and are much esteemed by a large circle of acquaintances.

Politically Mr. Scott is a steadfast Republican, but nevertheless the Search Light, while firmly upholding and strenuously advocating the principles and policies of that party, deals fairly with all phases of public opinion. While a resident of Fairfield Mr. Scott acted in the capacity of Assistant Postmaster for two years. In fraternal circles he takes an active and prominent part. He is identified with the A. F. and A. M., being a Royal Arch Mason and a Knight Templar. He is also affiliated with the M. W. A. and with the orders of the Court of Honor and Eastern Star. In religious belief he is an adherent of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Scott is one of the leading citizens of his locality and exercises a strong and wholesome influence in behalf of the best interests of the community in which he lives and the welfare of Fulton County.

SCOTT, George L., a well known and prosperous grain and stock dealer of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Port Republic, Rockingham County, Va., on November 16, 1846, and there, in youthful years, received his education in the public schools. He is a son of Amos and Margaret (Hanna) Scott, natives of Virginia, where they both died.

George L. Scott was reared on his father's farm in Virginia and in the Civil War served as a soldier in the Confederate army. In 1883 he located on a farm south of the town of Cuba, this county, where he was engaged in farming until 1891. In that year he moved into the village and started a flour mill, which he operated until it was destroyed by fire in 1896. In the year following he went into the grain and stock business in Cuba, in which he has since continued. The elevator which he conducts has been in operation about twenty years, and he is also the owner of a farm of 166 acres in Putman Township and another of 140 acres in Cass Township, Fulton County, both of which are rented out. He is a very competent business man, and his enterprises have met with merited success.

On October 20, 1880, Mr. Scott was joined in wedlock with Edmonja Ewan, who was born in Port Republic, Rockingham County, Va., and four children have resulted from this union, namely: Marshall, Carrie, Reuben and Mattie. Mrs. Scott was a daughter of Robert and Carrie (Lewis) Ewan, who came to Fulton County in 1858 and located two miles west of Lewistown. Both are now deceased.

Politically Mr. Scott is a believer in the principles of the Prohibition party and his religious connection is with the Methodist Protestant Church. He is a man of high character and his influence is always exercised in behalf of the right cause.

SCOTT, Samuel Ewing, one of the best known pioneers of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., has now held the office of Commissioner of Highways for twenty-one years, and has been in the public service in some capacity for the past forty years. He was for a long time Deputy Sheriff, and whatever office he has held has reflected his honesty and efficiency. Mr. Scott was born in Jefferson, Madison County, Ohio, on the 27th of May, 1836, his parents being James and Rachel (Pippot) Scott. His father was born in Ireland, while his mother was of French ancestry. In October, 1839, when he was in his fourth year, his parents migrated from Madison County, Ohio, and settled on a farm just east of Canton, not far from where he has resided for some thirty-five years. In this locality Samuel E. was reared, educated in the district schools and found employment first on his father's farm and afterward in the working and management of his own property. The young man became a voter shortly after the organization of the Republican party and has never voted any other ticket. Being of a sociable, as well as mechanical, disposition, he soon became quite popular among his fellow townsmen, with the result, as noted, that they have kept him pretty continuously in office since he was comparatively a young man. As he put it, his chief occupation is still "building bridges and constructing roads."

On the 17th of December, 1857, Mr. Scott was united in marriage with Miss Matilda Richey, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Kessel) Richey, natives of Pennsylvania. There were twelve children in the Richey family, of whom five sons and three daughters are still living. The father died in 1895, at the age of eighty, but the mother is living with Mrs. Scott, her daughter, a well preserved lady of eighty-eight years. To Mr. and Mrs. Samuel E. Scott have been born the following: John Hartley Scott, Charles Edward, George Thompson, Daisy Emma, Luella Myrtle and Maggie Rachel.

SCRIPPS, John Locke.—The mercantile career of John Locke Scripps has redounded to the credit of Canton and to that of the pioneer family of which he is a worthy representative. Mr. Scripps was born in Chicago, Ill., October 17, 1866, and was educated in the public schools of Canton, embarking upon his business life at a comparatively early age. The forefathers of Mr. Scripps pursued their respective avocations in England, where was born his paternal great-grandfather, William Scripps, in the quaint old cathedral town of Ely, Cambridgeshire. William Scripps married Grace Locke, and in time removed to London, where their son, Rev. John Scripps, grandfather of John Locke, was born. Rev. John Scripps married Agnes Corrie, of Kirkcudbright, Scotland, with whom he came to America at an early day, finally locating in Rushville, Ill., where William H. Scripps, father of John Locke, was born, and where he married Mary R. Little, a native of Rushville. Miss Little was a daughter of George and Jane (Lloyd) Little, the former a native of Columbia, Pa. Further mention of the family connections are to be found elsewhere in this work.

John Locke Scripps established a home of his own January 26, 1903, marrying Frances A. Arnold, who was born in Greencastle, Ind., and educated at De Pauw University. Mr. and Mrs. Scripps are the parents of a daughter, Mary Elizabeth. Mr. Scripps supports the principles of the Republican party, but has never aspired to political honors. He is fraternally connected with the Masons, being a member of the Knights Templar and Medina Shrine. He is highly esteemed for his excellent business and social qualities, and for an interest in public affairs which prompts co-operation in many of the efforts of municipal improvement.

SEATON, George Washington.—Among other claims to consideration, George Washington Seaton is known to Cantonians as the first cigar inspector of the town. He came to Fulton County as a young lad from Crawford County, Ind., where he was born May 9, 1833, and ever since has made Fulton County his home. Mr. Seaton is of German ancestry, his paternal grandfather, John Seaton, having come from Germany to America about the middle of the last century, settling presumably in the State of Tennessee, where James Seaton, the father of George Washington, was born and where he married Winifred Roberts, a native of Kentucky.

Educated in the public schools of Fulton County, G. W. Seaton at first engaged in farming with his father, but eventually drifted into business in Canton, as before stated, serving as the city's first cigar inspector. He is a natural politician, a staunch Republican and has served five terms as Alderman of the First Ward. His first wife dying in 1879, Mr. Seaton married, September 6, 1890, M. V. Downing. Mr. Seaton's first wife, Louise (Culton) Seaton, was a native of Fulton County, and became the mother of six children: William P., Anna, Charles A., Kate, Frederick and George W. Fraternally Mr. Seaton is identified with the Morning Star Lodge, No. 734, A. F. & A. M. He is one of the community's most honored and useful citizens.

SEAVEY, William S. (deceased), for many years a well known and successful photographer of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Sandwich, N. H., on January 22, 1823, a son of John M. and Sophie (Bean) Seavey, natives of North Carolina and New Hampshire, respectively. John M. Seavey died when his son William was five years old. At the age of ten years the subject of this sketch was taken to New York and subsequently spent five years in Canada. After visiting various places at different periods, in 1851 he located in Canton, Ill. During the Civil War he enlisted in the Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry under the command of Colonel William Pitt Kellogg, and served during the entire war. His health having become impaired, General Grant made him Official Photographer of the army. Mr. Seavey voted for General Grant for President, this being the only Republican vote he ever cast. He had over $500 worth of valuable war photos destroyed in his gallery by fire. He was the first photographer in Canton, and at the time of his decease was the oldest operator in that line in the city. He was very successful in his business, and during his long residence in Canton made hosts of friends, who entertained for him a profound esteem.

On July 1, 1851, Mr. Seavey was united in marriage with Harriet E. Culton, who was born in Lexington, Ky., September 24, 1830, and was brought to Canton, Ill., in 1836, at six years of age. Her father, Robert C. Culton, was a native of North Carolina, and her mother, Ann (Ferguson) Culton, was born in Lexington. In politics Mr. Seavey was a supporter of the Democratic party and fraternally was affiliated with the G. A. R. and I. O. O. F. His decease occurred July 1, 1896. He was a man of irreproachable character and a highly respected citizen.

SEBREE, H. W.—The name of H. W. Sebree is principally connected in Canton with a wagon manufacturing enterprise, of which he was owner and manager for thirty-three years. He was successful and progressive in his business, constantly added to it and placed it in harmony with the times, and in addition invested his earnings in much local realty, including both business houses and dwellings. Today he is one of the community's wealthy and substantial citizens.

Mr. Sebree was born in Indiana October 17, 1822, son of James and Elizabeth (Trotter) Sebree, both of whom were born in the Old Dominion. Mr. Sebree was educated in the public schools, and his youth was uneventfully passed on a farm, the opportunities of which failed to fit into the larger ambitions of his mature manhood. Consequently he embarked in wagon making, and to this he gave his best efforts with satisfactory success. He now is living in retirement.

May 27, 1852, in Fulton County, Mr. Sebree married Margaret Simpson, and of this union there have been five children: Clara, John S., Anne (deceased), Emma and Stella T. Politically Mr. Sebree espoused the cause of the Republican party upon its organization, but never has been inclined to seek or accept official honors. He was a staunch Abolitionist during the Civil War, but did not enlist as a soldier. He is a man of high honor and excellent standing in the community, and his entire life has been illumined by kindly deeds, gentle judgment of his fellowmen and practical service for mankind.

SEBREE, Melvin Milton.—The Sebree family has been identified with the growth of Fulton County since 1841, so that the appellation "pioneer" may be applied to it in the fullest sense of the word. It was in that year, when Illinois was a frontier State of the far West, that Charles Wesley Sebree, the father of the subject of this sketch, came from Indiana and bought a farm in Fulton County. He improved the place, raised a family thereon and became a highly respected citizen of Canton and of Union Township. The father was a native of Indiana, born December 11, 1819, and his wife, Louisa (nee Kelling), was also born in that State, November 22, 1831. It was not until after their removal to Illinois, where they were married, that Melvin M. Sebree came upon the scene, his birthplace being Canton and his birthday February 27, 1856.

Our subject was educated in the district schools of Fulton County, has never abandoned his original occupation of farming and is now the proprietor of a choice homestead, on which are successfully conducted general agricultural operations, with the raising of superior live stock. Mr. Sebree is a Republican, but has never sought political preferment.

On the 9th of December, 1879, Melvin M. Sebree was united in marriage with Margaret B. Pierce, the ceremonies taking place at Bushnell, Ill. His wife is a New Jersey lady, born March 15, 1857, and they have one child, John C. Sebree.

SECRIST, Clarence P., a worthy representative of the younger element of wide-awake and progressive agriculturists of Fulton County, Ill., is successfully engaged in farming in Fairview Township, that county, where he is looked upon as possessing the qualities assuring a prosperous career. Mr. Secrist is a native of the State of Pennsylvania, where his birth took place in Franklin County in 1875. He is a son of Abraham and Susan E. (Zimmerman) Secrist, both of whom were Pennsylvanians by nativity. Abraham Secrist was a well known and substantial farmer and a man of high standing and excellent reputation in his locality.

In early youth Charles P. Secrist obtained a good mental training in the public schools in his native State, and remained under the paternal roof until some time after he reached his majority. When he was twenty-three years old (in 1898) he located in Fairview Township, Fulton County, where he was employed in farm work until 1903. In that year he commenced farming on his own responsibility on eighty acres of land owned by a Mr. Wilson. A year later (1904) he began the cultivation of 160 acres known as the James Dykeman farm, situated on Section 18, Fairview Township. On this place he has since kept up the improvements, conducting general farming and stock-raising, and making a specialty of Polled-Angus cattle.

In 1902 the subject of this sketch was united in marriage in Pennsylvania with Mary Zimmerman, a native of that State. Mr. Secrist is an energetic and persevering farmer and his labors have been productive of good results.

SHAFER, Charles.—One of the well known agriculturists in Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., is Charles Shafer, whose farm is conveniently located on Rural Route No. 3, not far from the town of Avon, which is his postoffice and market town. He was born in this township February 28, 1869, the son of George and Elizabeth (Locke) Shafer, the father born in Ohio in 1841 and the mother in the same State in 1843. Following in the footsteps of his predecessors, George Shafer chose farming as his life work, carrying on this occupation first in his native State, but during his young manhood, in 1867, he came to Illinois and purchased a farm in Union Township, Fulton County. Here, in addition to raising the various kinds of grain common to the farms of the Middle West, he raised stock extensively, making a success of both branches of business.

The early career of Charles Shafer was not unlike that of other youths of his neighborhood, and after gleaning such education as the schools of his home district afforded, he turned his attention to assisting his father on the home farm. When the time came for him to strike out on his own account he chose the peaceful life of the farmer, and has since had no reason to regret the choice that he then made. Besides carrying on general farming, he owns a threshing equipment which he uses during the threshing season among the farmers of his vicinity, this alone proving a source of large profit.

In Salisbury, Sangamon County, Ill., Charles Shafer formed domestic ties with Mary L. Fields, the marriage ceremony being performed March 22, 1906. Like her husband, Mrs. Shafer is a native of Illinois, her birth occurring in Union Township, Fulton County, March 27, 1871. The farm on which Mr. and Mrs. Shafer make their home comprises 123 acres of excellent land, which was given to Mrs. Shafer by her father. In their religious belief Mr. and Mrs. Shafer are Methodists and attend the church of that denomination at Avon. Politically Mr. Shafer is a believer in Republican principles, and his vote and influence are always given in behalf of that party.

SHAUGHNESSY, David Joseph.—The blacksmith who has wandered so long through song and story, the man of hard muscles, strong physique, genial manner, ready wit and innumerable companionable qualities, seems to have a living counterpart in David Joseph Shaughnessy, owner and proprietor of the only blacksmithing establishment in the town of Avon. Increasing prosperity and popularity have hovered around this shop ever since the owner sent out the first merry clang of the anvil in 1877, and no one has come permanently to rival his honors as one of the best general blacksmiths and wagon-makers in Fulton County.

Though born in Canada, October 10, 1855, Mr. Shaughnessy is of Irish parentage, both his father, John, and his mother, Bridget (McMahon) Shaughnessy, having been born in County Mayo, Ireland, the former in 1831 and the latter in 1837. John Shaughnessy learned the trade of gardener and florist in his youth, and soon after migrating to Canada in 1852 married and established himself as a gardener and florist, which occupation filled his entire active life. David Joseph remained at home until his fifteenth year, in the meantime acquiring a fair common school education and a general knowledge of gardening. His tendencies were mechanical, however, and he therefore served an apprenticeship to a blacksmith during 1871-72, and in 1875 removed to Michigan, two years later arriving in Avon, Ill.

December 25, 1878, Mr. Shaughnessy was married to Elizabeth Dillon, who was born in Avon August 5, 1862. In his adopted country he has espoused the cause of the Democratic party. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in religious belief a Roman Catholic. Mr. Shaughnessy has acquired a competence through his labor, and, what is better still, has won the lasting regard of hosts of friends and the confidence of the entire community. His patrons come from many miles in the country, and for many of them he has been doing work for more than a score of years. His life is a lesson of industry, frugality, honesty and good humor.

SHAW, Henry, a prosperous, enterprising and prominent farmer, who has pursued his vocation for many years on an extensive scale in Section 1, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born just south of Bryant, Ill., February 11, 1848, a son of Robert and Catherine (Bordner) Shaw, the latter being the eldest daughter of Peter Bordner. Robert Shaw, who was born January 12, 1812, was among the first settlers of Fulton County, arriving from Ohio and settling in Liverpool Township. He died February 28, 1888, and his wife died in 1893. They were the parents of thirteen children, namely: Alexander, a farmer in Liverpool Township; Elizabeth, who died at the age of four years; Sarah, who was the wife of Abraham Weaver, a resident of Slabtown, Ill., and died in 1878; Peter, who died at the age of twenty-three years; Emeline, wife of James Walker, of Bryant, Ill.; Mary A., wife of a Mr. Schoenover, a farmer, near Cuba, Ill.; Isaac, of Downing, Mo.; Henry; Jasper, of Sullivan, Ill.; Rebecca, wife of John Barker, of Downing, Mo.; John, of the same place; Amanda, wife of Fred Rowe, also of Downing, Mo.; and James, of Nebraska.

About the year 1868 Robert Shaw sold a 333-acre farm in Fulton County and moved to Downing County, Mo., where he bought land. At the time of his death, in 1888, he owned 930 acres in that county, which was under good cultivation, besides 320 acres in Liverpool Township.

The subject of this biographical record was reared to farm life. He received his mental training in the district schools, sitting as a pupil on the old slab benches. As soon as he was old enough he devoted his attention to farming, which has been the occupation of his entire life. His first purchase of land was 240 acres in Section 6, Liverpool Township, and he is now the owner of 440 acres. Every improvement on this land has been made by him. In the fifty-eight years of his residence in Fulton County he has never been absent from it but once, and during the whole period of his mature life he has been actively identified with the development and best interests of the county. Mr. Shaw devotes considerable attention to the breeding of Percheron horses, of which he now has about forty head on the farm. He also raises Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs. He is an intelligent, systematic and enterprising farmer, and the results attained justify his methods, and attest the success of his operations.

On February 4, 1871, Mr. Shaw was united in marriage with Sarah Pollitt, a daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (Easters) Pollitt, who was born September 28, 1852. This union has resulted in six children, as follows: One who died in infancy; Minnie, born March 9, 1874, wife of John Beebe, a farmer in Banner Township, Fulton County; Rufus, born September 8, 1881, married Eva Raker and now a farmer in Liverpool Township; Ora, born December 26, 1883, who died at the age of three years; Blanche, born November 26, 1887, who attends to the domestic affairs of the household, the mother having died in 1895; and Bernice, born October 14, 1895.

In politics Mr. Shaw is an adherent of the Democratic party and has served the township as School Director. He is a vigorous advocate of the interests of the school system, as well as an earnest and influential supporter of all institutions and enterprises that promote the public welfare.

SHAW, Hiram R., one of the oldest and most popular hotel clerks in the State of Illinois, now discharging the duties pertaining to such a position in the New Churchill House, at Canton, was born in Franklin, Venango County, Pa., on February 13, 1845, a son of Robert and Martha Shaw, natives of Pennsylvania. Both of his parents were members of prominent families in the localities where they were respectively reared, Judge McCalmont, a jurist of high repute, being a relative of his father, who was also a nephew of the gallant soldier, Colonel William Shaw. On the maternal side, he is allied by kinship with the Blairs and Montgomerys, noted in early times. Robert Shaw, who was a farmer by occupation, and a man of excellent character and blameless life, died in 1852, his wife passing away in 1881. They were the parents of three boys, of whom one is living. In the days of his boyhood Hiram R. Shaw attended the common schools, having been brought to Illinois in 1853, and as he grew older, commenced working on a farm, continuing in this employment several years. Since then he has had an extended experience in hotel work in various localities. His first position as clerk in a hotel was in Canton, where he secured employment in 1867. For a time he held a similar position in Bloomington, Ill., and subsequently in Beardstown. Finally, he again settled in Canton, becoming connected with the Churchill House, where he has since remained. He is the owner of about thirty acres of fine land just outside the corporate limits of Canton, on Rural Free Delivery Route No. 5, where his family residence is located.

On October 26, 1882, Mr. Shaw was united in marriage at Canton with Frances L. Wilson, who was born in Illinois, a daughter of Samuel T. Wilson, a native of Ohio. One child, Raymond R., is the issue of this union, whose birth occurred October 24, 1888.

In political action Mr. Shaw has always followed the fortunes of the Democratic party, and although not mingling in the activities of party campaigns, takes a keen and discriminating interest in civic policies. His religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he has long been a consistent member. He has a comfortable and convenient rural home, where the friends of the family are always assured of a hearty welcome. Mr. Shaw is a veteran in the task of suitably receiving and accommodating the traveling public. He has come in contact with many distinguished men during his hotel experience, and has a wide and pleasant acquaintance extending through all sections of the country.

SHAW, William H., the popular and efficient Postmaster of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Dublin, Ireland, January 23, 1848, and received his early school training in London, Ontario, Canada. He is a son of Benjamin and Anna (Lester) Shaw, natives of Thurles, County Tipperary, Ireland. Thurles was also the birthplace of his paternal grandmother, Margaret (Langley) Shaw, her husband, Thomas Shaw, having been born in County Kilkenny. The great-grandparents on the father's side were also Irish. Ireland likewise was the native country of all the maternal ancestors, as far as known. Joshua and Hannah (Sloan) Lester, the grandparents, were born, respectively, in Ardrestown, Thurles, and Kilmarekthomas, County Waterford, while his great-grandparents, Richard and Eliza (Prior) Lester, were natives, respectively, of Ardrestown, Thurles and Oressogue.

The subject of this sketch came to Canton from London, Canada, August 11, 1873, and from that date until May 31, 1877, was superintendent of Humphrey, Bell & Co.'s packing house. From January 1, 1877, to March 1, 1881, he was associated with Samuel Burrell in the management of the Churchill House. At the latter date Mr. Shaw purchased Mr. Burrell's interest and was its proprietor until May 7, 1904. In 1878 Mr. Shaw built and operated the first telephone line in Canton, connecting Parlin & Orendorff's office and the office of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads with the Churchill House. At that time the telephone was owned by the Gold Stock Company. In 1881 Mr. Shaw built the Canton Telephone Exchange and the toll-line to Lewistown, Bushnell, Elmwood and Breeds, connecting with the Peoria toll line. The Canton Exchange and toll lines were controlled by the Central Union Telephone Company.

Commencing in 1883 Mr. Shaw was Chief of the Canton Fire Department for twelve years. After the fire which consumed the Ellsworth Block in Canton the City Fire Department was in a very bad condition, but with the co-operation of citizens and the Fire Company Mr. Shaw brought it into a condition of efficiency second to none in the State.

On June 6, 1877, Mr. Shaw was united in marriage with Emma A. Burrell, who was born in Wolcott, N. Y., and received her youthful mental training in Canton. Four children resulted from this union, namely: Tyler B., William H., Jr., Charles L. and Benjamin B.

Politically Mr. Shaw is a Republican. In 1882 and 1883 he was elected Alderman of the Third Ward of Canton, and in 1885 was elected Assistant Supervisor, serving a full term. He has been appointed four times Postmaster of Canton, serving his first term by appointment of President Harrison, and being reappointed successively by President McKinley and by President Roosevelt, and is now serving his fourth term by a second reappointment by President Roosevelt.

In fraternal circles Mr. Shaw is identified with the A. O. U. & W. W., K. of P. and B. P. O. E. For the past twenty-five years probably no man has figured more conspicuously in all that pertains to the development and prosperity of Canton than William H. Shaw.

SHAWGO, Lester, a retired farmer, now living in the village of Summum, Fulton County, Ill., and one of the oldest and most highly respected residents of that vicinity, is a native of the State of New York, where he was born June 7, 1832. His father was Rev. George Shawgo, but of his mother's maiden name or antecedents he has no knowledge, nor has he any recollection of her, she having passed away when he was about two years old, leaving him without the maternal care so essential and important to one of that tender age. His father's second wife was Julia Evans, and eight children were the offspring of that union, of whom seven are still living. Both parents of this family are deceased. They removed successively from New York State to Pennsylvania, later to Ohio, and in 1854 to Illinois, being twenty-one days in making the last named journey. On arriving at their destination the father bought land in the vicinity of Summum, where he carried on farming operations during the remainder of his life. The region where he settled was then mainly in an uncultivated condition, and many indications of its primitive wildness were to be seen in all directions. He was a minister of the Baptist Church and in connection with his farming preached for thirty-five years.

Lester Shawgo spent his early manhood in the manner common to farmers' sons in a new country. He remained at home and applied himself industriously to the task of getting the best results from the freshly tilled land, cradling wheat and plowing corn with a double-shovel plow. The settlement was thinly peopled, and but two dwellings then stood on the site of the now prosperous village of Summum, which then bore the name of Schencktown. Mr. Shawgo has done his full share in pushing forward the many improvements that have marked the development of his locality since 1852. For thirty years of this period he followed threshing as a means of livelihood, during twenty-six years of the time using the old horse-power thresher and afterwards running a steam threshing machine. In 1901 he retired from active pursuits and purchased the pleasant and comfortable residence which he now occupies in Summum.

Mr. Shawgo has been thrice married. His first wife was Marinda Beatty, by whom he had six children, of whom all but two are deceased. Those surviving are: William, who is engaged in farming in the neighborhood of Dunlap, Kans., and Lewis, who follows the same occupation in Pleasant Township, Fulton County. The remains of their mother rest in the Hart Cemetery, near Ipava, Ill., east of which place the family were living at the time of her death. The second wife of Mr. Shawgo was Elizabeth Smith, and one child resulted from their union, namely: Mary Eva, deceased, wife of Louis Vaughn, a farmer residing in Pleasant Township. Mrs. Elizabeth Shawgo died July 6, 1870. Mr. Shawgo's last marriage, January 7, 1873, was with Emeline Crick, their offspring being five children, two of whom are deceased. The survivors of this union are: Annie, who married Harvey Lehman, a farmer in Vermont Township, Fulton County; Peter Ellsworth, who is engaged in farming in Pleasant Township, and Cora May, who is with her parents.

In politics Mr. Shawgo has always followed the fortunes of the Democratic party. His religious connection is with the Christian Church, to which he has belonged for more than twenty-five years. Mrs. Shawgo is a devoted member of the German Baptist Brethren Church. Both husband and wife are greatly esteemed by a wide circle of friends.

SHELBY, Joseph A., one of the oldest and worthiest of the many prominent farmers on Section 11, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Waterford Township, this county, December 28, 1843, and is a son of Noah and Maria (Nevitt) Shelby, natives of Ohio, where they were married. In 1836 they settled in Fulton County, locating in Waterford Township, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The mother died in 1844 and the father in 1851. They were devout and earnest Christians, and were constant in their Master's service. They were the parents of the following children: James, Adam, Mary, Susan and William, all deceased; Rebecca, wife of Robert Prichard, a farmer in Lewistown Township, Fulton County; Nancy, wife of Elijah Willcoxen, of Liverpool Township, Fulton County; Asa, who enlisted in a Minnesota regiment during the Civil War, and died in the service, and John, a resident of Brownsville, Minn., at the outbreak of the Civil War (as at present), who enlisted in a Minnesota regiment. Mr. Shelby married for his second wife Mrs. Ellen Kidd, by whom he had one child, George, now deceased.

Joseph A. Shelby was but eight years old when he was bereft of the tender care of a fond mother. After the death of his father he went to the home of his brother, who was then living in Brownsville, Minn., and there remained until 1859. His sister, Mrs. Prichard, together with her husband, visited this brother and Joseph returned with them to Fulton County and became a member of their household, where he remained until April, 1865. At that period he began working by the month, and by dint of industry and perseverance, forged his way to success. After a while he bought a forty-acre tract of land, which he cleared and developed into a good farm. This he sold and purchased a farm of 180 acres on Section 16, Liverpool Township, where he lived until his removal to Maples Mills, dividing this farm with his children. Remaining there until February 28, 1905, he then moved to his present farm on Section 11, Liverpool Township, where he owns eighty acres. Since early manhood he has been identified with the best interests of Fulton County and has always enjoyed the sincere respect and warm esteem of his fellow citizens.

On April 13, 1865, Mr. Shelby was united in marriage with Mahala Clark, a daughter of Zebadiah and Millie (Allsburg) Clark, natives of Ohio. This union resulted in five children, namely: Marion F., a farmer in Liverpool Township, born March 2, 1866, who married Gertrude Preston; Robert W., also a farmer, of the same township, born June 15, 1870, who married Ida Stevens; Mary, born October 22, 1875, wife of Edward Arnett, who lives three miles east of Canton; Maude, born October 1,

Susan A Turner

1878, who died March 28, 1880, and Sophronia, born January 10, 1881, who is the wife of Perry Arnett. The last named reside in Liverpool Township and have two children—Chester and Ralph. Of the thirteen grandchildren which have been born ten are living.

By the help of his devoted wife, whom he married while he was still working by the month, all the subsequent success of Joseph A. Shelby was made possible. Their labors were always in unison, and they were ever in hearty and fond accord. Many happy years were passed in their home, but their pleasures were not unmingled with pain. Hardships and privations often confronted them, and many were the trials and difficulties which they were compelled to undergo incident to the surroundings and conditions of that early period. While living on the farm on Section 16, the health of Mrs. Shelby began to fail. No improvement was manifest after the removal to Maples Mills, and eight days after they occupied their new home on Section 11, Liverpool Township, she succumbed to death. She had seen the orchards and gardens planted by the early settlers wither and die under the blighting frosts and in like manner she fell a victim to the ravages of disease. She was a noble woman and a devoted wife, and the memory of her gentle words and kindly deeds will be enshrined in the stricken heart of her bereaved husband until he shall rejoin her in the realms beyond. He still clings to the home where the ties of long-continued affection were severed, and endeavors, as best he may, to bear with equanimity the burdens of life, its chief pleasure having vanished. For many years he has been a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with which he united at the age of eleven years.

SHEPLEY, A. Clifton.—No history of Fulton County would be complete without the name of A. C. Shepley, a resident of Canton, Ill., where he is engaged in the insurance and loan business. The earliest member of the family of whom we have any authentic knowledge was the paternal grandfather, Wilder Shepley, who descended from a long line of Scotch ancestors, through whom the family name was established in Massachusetts. Among the children comprising his family was Oliver Shepley, who was born in Groton, Mass., in 1786. Reared and educated in the midst of the pioneer conditions that existed there at that time, he grew to stalwart manhood, and in 1832, when about thirty-six years of age, ventured out into what was then considered the Far West, coming to Fulton County, Ill. So well pleased was he with the outlook that he purchased a farm on Section 32, on which he continued to follow farming throughout his active years, although this did not absorb his entire thought or ability. On the other hand, he took a prominent part in the political life of his community, and for two terms represented his constituents in the State Legislature. During his younger years he had qualified himself to follow the medical profession, having acquired his education along this line in Paris, France, and for several years practiced his profession in Florida, but after locating in Illinois he did not resume this line of work, finding sufficient occupation in the care of his farm and in filling the offices of trust and responsibility imposed upon him by his fellow citizens. During the early days he was Government Indian Agent for the western part of the State. In the meantime he accumulated large holdings of real estate, and at one time supported a deer park of about twelve acres, not infrequently having as many as thirty-two deer in his park. As will be seen from the foregoing Mr. Shepley was a prominent figure in the business and political life of his community, and it goes without saying, that his friends and acquaintances were numerous. His home was more like a hotel than a private residence, saving one difference; everything was free and entirely at the disposal of those he loved to entertain.

Mr. Shepley classed among his personal friends many men of world-wide fame, among them George Peabody, of London, England, for whom he acted as financial agent, a man of strong convictions and firm in what he was convinced was right. During his service in the Legislature he crossed swords, so to speak, with Abraham Lincoln, who, while serving in the same session, was his opponent in politics, and the two had many an argument. Though Mr. Shepley was a firm believer in the Bible and its teachings, he never united with any church. This holding out on his part was looked upon as little short of heresy by a Baptist minister who undertook to change his views by means of an early interview. When the minister called he was invited to take a social glass, which in those days was considered customary. During this visit he noticed a keg of whisky in the cabin and in a short time he returned with a bottle of honey, which he wished trade for an equal measure of the whisky. At an earlier period, during the War of 1812, Mr. Shepley was with Jackson at the battle of New Orleans, where he served as surgeon with rank of Major, and he also participated in the Seminole War.

Oliver Shepley was first married to Atlanta Phelps, by whom he had one son, Washington Shepley. Some time after the death of his first wife, in 1832, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Lydia Lawrence, who was born in Hollis, Mass., March 28, 1803, and who, by her first marriage, had one child, Amos Lawrence by name. Three children were born of her marriage with Mr. Shepley, as follows: Andrew J., the father of the subject of this sketch; Thomas J., who married Mary Van Arsdale, of Fairview, Ill., and who died July 28, 1878, leaving two children, Oliver and Grace; and Lydia M., who became the wife of Eli Paul and died in 1874.

Andrew J. Shepley was born in Groton, Mass., where he was reared until his parents moved to the frontier of Illinois in 1837. He formed domestic ties by his marriage with Jane W. Van Arsdale, a native of the latter State, her birth occurring at Fairview, Fulton County. Among the children born to Andrew J. and Jane W. (Van Arsdale) Shepley was A. Clifton Shepley, whose birth occurred in Deerfield Township, Fulton County, Ill., June 2, 1877. After attending the common schools in the vicinity of his home he entered the high school at Canton, and still later attended a commercial college. The close of his school life was simultaneous with the beginning of his business career, and he is now engaged in the insurance and loan business in Canton, Ill., where he is known and respected for his upright methods as a business man. His marriage in 1897 united him with Stella M. Hetrick, of Red Oak, Iowa, who was born in Canton, Ill., and there received her education.

SHEPLEY, Andrew J.—The real-estate and loan business established by Andrew J. Shepley in 1884, and of which his son, A. Clifton Shepley, is now a partner, has gone hand in hand with the development of Canton for more than two decades, and undoubtedly has contributed largely toward the advantageous disposal of property and the honorable and satisfactory placing of loans, as any concern of the kind in Fulton County. Mr. Shepley is one of Canton's foremost and most substantial citizens, and while his name necessarily is associated with one of the early and influential families of the county, his success is self-made, and in its scope and usefulness directs attention to qualities of perseverance, business integrity and ability and high regard for the welfare of the community. He was born in Groton, Middlesex County, Mass., January 19, 1833, a son of Oliver and Lydia (Lawrence) Shepley, and grandson of Wilder and Lucinda Shepley.

Oliver Shepley, than whom no more forceful personality invaded the pioneer days of Fulton County, was born in Groton, Mass., in 1786, and without any special advantages or inducements developed into a man who believed in doing things. With him to plan was to act. Set down in any locality, he was bound to attract its opportunities and invest them with the iron and vigor of his mind and will. He was a Cromwellian sort of man, hating a lie and recognizing no compromise with truth. These qualities were filtered through a long line of Scotch ancestry and lost none of their force in his parents, who came from Scotland and settled in Middlesex County.

Mr. Shepley chose the profession of medicine as an outlet for his early ambition, qualifying therefor in Paris, France. Returning to his native land, he settled in Florida, and while actively engaging in the practice of medicine, took part also in many undertakings which enlivened and molded the history of that time.

In the War of 1812 he was with Jackson at the battle of New Orleans, and gained the rank of Sergeant, and he also participated in the Seminole War of 1818-19. Outgrowing his environment in the South and craving that stimulus which comes of extremes of climate, he came to Illinois in 1832 and after a year in Wilmington, bought land on Section 32, just west of Canton. The destiny and duty of the pioneer accorded well with his stern and unyielding, but yet likable nature, and he further was aided by greater means than were the greater portion of the arrivals in these wilds. As land was cheap and agriculture the greatest inducement offered the settlers, he abandoned his profession and set about improving his land, investing heavily in additional property until he owned vast tracts throughout this section. His personality and home became potent factors in the community. He had the Scotchman's idea of hospitality, and never was it more lavishly or unstintingly dispensed. As the years wore away and he added to his social and business friends many prominent politicians of the State, his house took on the aspect of an inn, with the difference that entertainment was free, and good will abundant and unchanging. At one time Mr. Shepley maintained and took great pride in a twelve-acre deer park, which proved a great curiosity, and attracted people from far and near. The deer in the park varied in number, but often there were at least thirty-two of these beautiful and graceful animals.

While the community as a whole welcomed Mr. Shepley, he was not regarded as a desirable or orthodox religious acquisition. While a firm believer in the Bible and observing its most important tenets in his daily life, he steadfastly refused to identify himself with any church or denomination. Evidently his views on the subject had preceded him, for the year of his arrival the Baptist minister of the neighborhood gave vent to bitter denunciation of what he was pleased to call the — Yankee, and deeply regretted his presence in their midst. However, the minister was not above the weakness of curiosity, and in time called at the Shepley home that he might study his particular aversion at close range and gauge the length of the Yankee horns. As was customary, he was invited to take a "nip," and in so doing his attention was called to a keg of whisky in the cabin. A few days later a slight change of heart was indicated by his appearance with a bottle of honey to exchange for a bottle of whisky, in the cheering company of which his resentment is supposed to have undergone still further modification.

Mr. Shepley was first and always a Democrat, and he espoused the cause with the same vehemence and rugged sincerity that he applied to all of his interests. Twice was he elected to the Legislature, and on one occasion served with Abraham Lincoln, with whom he more than once crossed political swords. His co-workers included many of the most prominent Democrats in the State, and scarcely any undertaking of his party but met with his hearty co-operation and support. For years he was Indian Agent at Quincy, Ill., and he also was agent for George Peabody, of London, England, of international fame.

Mr. Shepley's first wife was formerly Atlanta Phelps, and of the union there was a son, Washington. In 1832 he married Mrs. Lydia Lawrence, who was born in Hollis, Mass., March 28, 1803. Mr. and Mrs. Shepley were the parents of three children: Andrew J., Thomas J. and Lydia. Thomas J. married Mary Van Arsdale, of Fairview, Ill., who died July 28, 1878, leaving two children—Oliver and Grace. Lydia M. Shepley married Eli Paul, who died in 1874. As a former marriage Mrs. Shepley had a son, Amos Lawrence. The life of Oliver Shepley passed with settings of increased prosperity, and he died in 1863, leaving the richer heritage of an honorable name and an inspiring example of rich and noble manhood.

Andrew J. Shepley was a small child when his father came to Illinois, and his educational facilities were necessarily more limited than those which the older man had enjoyed in the conservative and more settled East. He gained strength of body in the harvest field and a clear mind from association with the elements of peace which comprise the every-day life of country dwellers. In 1864 he married Jane W. Van Arsdale, who was born in Fairview, Ill., in 1841, the second daughter of Peter B. and Christina Van Arsdale, Illinois pioneers of the early 'thirties. The family of Mr. and Mrs. Shepley include three children: Mrs. Alice A. Abbott, Mrs. Adele Plattenburg and Andrew Clifton. Soon after his marriage Mr. Shepley succeeded to the management of the old homestead, and remained thereon until locating in Canton in 1884. He is a Democrat in politics and although he has passed seventy-two mile-posts of existence, he retains the vigor and unimpaired faculties of one many years his junior. He is respected for his many admirable traits of character, for his geniality and approachableness, and for the tendency to progress and advancement, which has characterized his active life.

A. Clifton Shepley, only son of Andrew J. Shepley, was born on a farm in Deerfield Township, Fulton County, Ill., June 26, 1877, and was educated in the Canton public schools and Commercial College. Mr. Shepley found an opportunity waiting for him in his father's loan and insurance business, and that he now is a partner in the concern augurs the possession of worth-while and reliable business qualities. Mr. Shepley is a Democrat in politics, but as yet has rendered no special aid to the local undertakings of his party. In 1897 he was united in marriage to Stella M. Hetrick, a native of Red Oak, Iowa, and formerly a student in the public schools of Canton.

SHIELDS, Perry O., who is successfully pursuing the vocation of a farmer and stock-raiser in Fulton County, Ill., is located on Section 35, Lewistown Township, where he cultivates 110 acres of exceptionally productive land. He is a son of Andrew J. and Jane (Willcoxen) Shields, natives of Fulton County. Andrew J. Shields is engaged in farming in Buckheart Township, Fulton County. His wife died in 1870. Two children—May, deceased, and Perry O.—resulted from their union. The former was the life of Street Harden, of Los Angeles, Cal. The father of Perry O. Shields subsequently wedded Nettie Ford, a native of Kentucky, and by this union had two children, namely: Della, wife of William Snider, living in Buckheart Township, and Ina, wife of Charles Snider, of Dunfermline.

The subject of this sketch was brought up to farm life. He received his mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood and has lived in the same vicinity ever since. Including the 110 acres on Section 35 which he owns, he operated in 1905 310 acres of land. Besides general farming he keeps a superior grade of stock—horses, cattle and hogs—preferring the black and Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs. He is classed among the most thorough and successful farmers in Fulton County. Mr. Shields has witnessed and taken part in many changes in that region since his boyhood years.

On February 13, 1885, Mr. Shields was united in marriage with Madeline Bordner, born March 6, 1868, a daughter of Moses and Elvira (Ewers) Bordner. Her father was an honored pioneer settler of Fulton County, a memoir of whose life constitutes an interesting chapter of this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Shields became the parents of five children, namely: Bessie, who was born September 15, 1887, and died August 23, 1899; Ira, born February 28, 1889, and died December 2, 1890; Frank H., born October 12, 1892; Henry D., born April 29, 1895, and Edith L., born December 10, 1899.

In politics Mr. Shields is an adherent of the Democratic party, but is liberal in his political views. He has creditably filled the office of Road Commissioner of his township. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P. As a farmer and as a man and citizen he is ranked among the representative characters in the community of which he is a member.

SHIELDS, William, who in duration of residence is one of the oldest farmers of Fulton County, as well as one of the most successful and substantial, is located on Section 10, Liverpool Township. He was born near Canton, this county, November 26, 1836, and is a son of Andrew J. and Margaret (Red) Shields. Robert Shields, the father of Andrew, was a native of Tennessee, migrating from that State to Indiana and thence to Fulton County, Ill., where he settled near Canton. There he was successfully engaged in farming for many years and finally became a resident of Canton itself, where he died. His first wife, Naomi Little, who accompanied him from Indiana, died at a very early period on the farm on which he originally settled. His second wife was Mrs. Brown, who moved with him into Canton, where she also died.

Andrew J. Shields was a native of Indiana and located in Fulton County at an early period. He and his wife were the parents of seven children, as follows: Martha, widow first of Wesley Pittman and then of Alfred Weaver; William; Mary Ellen, deceased, wife of Humphrey Murphy, of Iowa; Robert, a resident of Cozad, Dawson County, Neb.; Andrew J., who is engaged in farming in Buckheart Township, Fulton County; Naomi, widow of Henry Fisher, of Urbana, Ill., and Margaret, widow of Boone Willcoxen, who resides in Lewistown, Fulton County. The mother of this family died October 10, 1896, the father having passed away just after the cholera epidemic of 1849.

William Shields was but a lad when the death of his father occurred, and has but a faint remembrance of him. The former has been a resident of Fulton County for sixty-eight years, with the exception of three years spent in McDonough County, Ill., and has always been engaged in farming. He is the owner of 200 acres of highly cultivated land and his farming operations have always been attended by the best results. He has borne the reputation of being one of the most thorough farmers in his township.

On May 14, 1861, Mr. Shields was united in marriage with Nancy Willcoxen, a daughter of Elijah C. Willcoxen, son of Captain Elijah Willcoxen, a memoir of whose life is contained in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Shields became the parents of the following children: Prudence L., born September 5, 1862, who was the wife of George Coleman, and died September 6, 1887; Andrew L., who was born August 22, 1863, and died March 14, 1864; Elijah C., a farmer in Liverpool Township, who married Minnie Black, and has two children—Earl and John; Annie, born July 6, 1866, who married Wiley Ray, and is the mother of Ethel, Wiley A., George, Clifford, Hazel M., Sylvia, Jessie E. Clugston and an infant; George L., who is a member of the parental household, and Charles G., born October 24, 1880, a farmer in Liverpool Township, who married Mary Preston, and has two children—Herman and Ross.

In politics Mr. Shields is a supporter of the Democratic party. He takes an earnest interest in public affairs. Although he never aspired to office, he has creditably discharged the duties of School Director and has been a steadfast advocate of the interests of the public school system. He has done his full share in promoting the material prosperity of his township and county, is a man of most upright character and correct life, never having used tobacco or liquor in any shape, and in the community where he has lived so long, is greatly respected and regarded as one of its most useful and exemplary members.

SHIERY, Henry, Cashier of the State Bank of Cuba, in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Pennsylvania and there received his mental training in the public schools. He is a son of Daniel and Elizabeth (Cordel) Shiery, also natives of Pennsylvania. The subject of this sketch located in Canton, Ill., in 1868, and worked there as a tinner until the fall of the same year, when he settled in Cuba, and, in connection with a Mr. King, as partner, bought the tinshop and hardware business of Robert Berch. This they conducted for seventeen years, after which Mr. Shiery operated the concern alone for five years, retiring from it in 1889 to enter the banking business. The banking house was operated under the firm name of W. W. McCoy & Co. for two and a half years, after which the style was changed to McCoy & Shiery, and still later to H. Shiery & Co., so remaining until July, 1902. At that period it was organized as the State Bank of Cuba, with U. T. Baylor, President; George E. Snyder, Vice-President; Henry Shiery, Cashier; and F. H. Cole, Assistant Cashier. The Directors are Messrs. Baylor, Snyder, Rhodes, Waughtel and Shiery. The bank is incorporated under the laws of Illinois, does a general banking business and is a member of the State Bankers' Association. It has a capital stock of $25,000, with $5,000 surplus, and owns the building in which its business is transacted.

In 1854 Mr. Shiery was united in matrimony with Catherine Hess, who was born in Pennsylvania, and four children have been born of this union, namely: Alice and John Henry, deceased; Cora A. (Mrs. Cole); and Bertha. Mr. Shiery has held the office of Township Supervisor and in fraternal circles has been identified with the A. F. & A. M. for thirty-four years. He is considered a sound and conservative financier and enjoys the confidence of the business and farming element of the community.

SHINKEL, George Washington.—Shrewd business ability, special adaptiveness to his calling, appreciation of its many advantages and belief in his own power to succeed placed George Washington Shinkel among the foremost and most substantial promoters of agriculture in Fulton County. From the prairies his unaided industry brought forth ample means, permitting his retirement to Avon in 1893 and his consigning to younger hands the tasks that made up the sum of his existence for twenty-four years. He has a modern and well furnished home on a pleasant street just outside of the corporation, and is regarded as one of the financially strong and morally high retired farmers.

Mr. Shinkel comes of old Pennsylvania Dutch stock, and he was born on a farm not far from the City of Brotherly Love, March 8, 1845. His parents, John and Mary (Smith) Shinkel, were also natives of the same State, the former born March 17, 1798, and the latter December 6, 1800. They were farmers by occupation and spent their entire lives in the Quaker State. Their children were reared to be honest and industrious and received better educations than usually fell to the lot of the average farm-born boys and girls.

George Washington graduated from the country school near his home and also attended the Union Seminary in New Berlin, Pa. Ambitious of more promising surroundings than were to be found in his native State, he came to Illinois at the age of twenty-four, reaching Fulton County April 19, 1869. Soon after he made arrangements to assume the management of the farm upon which so many of the later years of his life were spent, and on January 6, 1876, was united in marriage to Mary E. Walker, who was a native of Fulton County, where her birth occurred January 1, 1855. Four children were born to them, namely: Etta, who died May 3, 1906; Mina, Anna and Nellie. Mrs. Shinkel is a daughter of J. G. and Minerva (Brown) Walker, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Fulton County, Ill. They were the parents of nine children, as follows: Mary E., William W., Sidney, John C., Frances M., Arvilla Ann, George M., James H. and Eddie, who died in infancy. The parents lived on a farm in Lewistown Township, and in 1869 removed to Union Township, where he continued farming until 1893, when he rented his farm and moved to Avou, where he is still living. The wife and mother passed away March 5, 1894. Mr. Walker has since sold his farm.

Local Republican politics has found a staunch supporter in Mr. Shinkel for many years, and for nine years he has served as Township Assessor and ten years as a member of the School Board. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Rebekahs. He is known throughout the county as a dependable and upright man, one who regards his word as he would his bond, and who has ever maintained the highest methods of farming, and the noblest ideals of home and community life.

SHIPP, Dudley M.—One of the most impressive instances of the power of innate energy, self-reliance, indomitable resolution and incessant perseverance in molding an unaided career is manifest in the life of Dudley M. Shipp, who is one of the most influential and extensive farmers in Fulton County, Ill., as well as one of its most prominent and useful citizens. Mr. Shipp was born in Taylor County, Ky., October 11, 1832, a son of Walker and Rebecca (Mardis) Shipp and a grandson of John Shipp, who was originally from Virginia. The father, who was by occupation a farmer, was born in Virginia. Thence the family moved to Taylor County, Ky., settling afterwards in Hart County. Grandfather John Shipp was one of the earliest settlers of Taylor County, much of the wild game still remaining there on his advent. He built a wolf den and among his first catches was a huge black bear. When hunting he often came across panthers and but for his skill as a marksman would have been in great danger.

In 1855 Dudley M. Shipp left the old home in a wagon and journeyed to Menard County, Ill., remaining there until 1859. In September of that year he went to Havana, hauling his possessions in a wagon, and was employed on a farm in Isabel Township, Fulton County, at $20 per month, without board. Thus he worked for about a year for James Harpham. Having become the owner of some stock at the end of four years, he bought 164 acres of wild land on Section 24, Isabel Township, and built a two-room hewn-log cabin, sixteen by twenty-four feet in dimensions, which still stands as a reminder of the early days of his experience in Isabel Township. In January, 1865, he moved into his new home and there lived until 1873, when he bought his present farm on Section 27, Isabel Township. In the fall of 1864 his parents located in Fulton County, where his father died in 1866. They had eight children besides Dudley, namely: John, who died at the age of sixteen years; Francis M., who died at the age of twenty-one years; James M., who was a Union soldier in the same regiment with John, and died in the hospital after the battle of Shiloh, in 1862; Sally A., widow of John Seay, a resident of Havana, Ill.; Malinda, who died at the age of eighteen years; Ellen, wife of Joseph Jackson, of Miami, I. T., and Harriet, deceased, wife of Thomas Seay, also deceased, who left two children—James and Bert. After the death of her husband the mother made her home with Joseph Jackson, her son-in-law, in Indian Territory, and there died in 1893.

When Dudley M. Shipp arrived in Isabel Township he had two dollars and fifty cents in his pocket and was five hundred dollars in debt. After working by the month for one year he put in a crop of corn the following season and sold the product for $135. He then resumed his monthly work and the third year hired two men and put in seventy-five acres of corn. The Civil War breaking out, his men enlisted and left him alone. As he could obtain no other help, he began to plow his corn and did all his work, toiling from early until late, and plowing the balance of fifty acres in the time required by two men to plow seventy-five acres, accomplishing this work with only one horse. His first start in the stock business was the purchase of three small steer calves, for which he paid $12, realizing from them $40 each on eighteen months' feed. He now has a superior grade of all kinds of stock. Through this sort of energy, thrift and perseverance he became one of the most successful farmers in Fulton County. To his first purchase of 164 acres, for which he paid $700, he added at intervals until he is now the owner of 827 acres of land, of which 686 are in Isabel Township and 141 in Lewistown and Bernadotte Townships. He has always been one of the hardest of workers and to his untiring industry, together with economy, frugality and fair dealing, is attributable his great success. Born in a slave State, he was always opposed to the institution and left Kentucky on account of it.

Dudley M. Shipp was first married December 15, 1851, wedding Mary A. Seay, a daughter of John Seay. Mrs. Shipp was the daughter of John Seay and Phoebe Ann (Littlejohn) Seay, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio. Her father was a farmer. The mother came to Fulton County when she was fourteen years of age and the father when he was twenty, and there they met and were married. The result of this union was eleven children, all of whom are living. The mother is also now living in Bernadotte Township, where Mrs. Shipp and all the children were born in a log house, which is still standing. Her father bought 143 1-3 acres of timber and cleared the land, while her mother spun flax and sheared the sheep, and thereby provided clothing for the entire family. The mother is a devoted member of the Free Methodist Church. The father was a most exemplary man and chiefly affiliated with the Dunkard denomination. He was an exceptionally kind and loving father and husband and when he was suddenly called away his loss was not only deeply felt by his immediate family, but by friends and neighbors throughout that part of the county. Three children resulted from this union, namely: Charles J., who died in infancy; John H., of Oklahoma, and George, who also died in infancy. The mother of this family died March 22, 1882. On October 21, 1882, Mr. Shipp was united in marriage with Sadie E. Landis, and their union has been the source of four children, as follows: Dudley L., who died May 8, 1906, at the age of twenty-one years; Bruce, Flossie and Earl.

In politics Mr. Shipp has been a firm and active supporter of the Republican party from an early period, having cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. He was an ardent admirer of that great man and his cup of joy was filled when he read the Proclamation of Emancipation. Mr. Shipp has served in various local offices with signal credit to himself, having acted as School Trustee for twenty-five years. He has taken a deep interest in the school system, realizing its prime importance the more on account of the meagerness of his own educational advantages in youth. He has cheerfully and liberally aided in all movements to promote the cause of education and pays taxes for its support in six school districts in Fulton County. In his religious faith Mr. Shipp is a Baptist, his wife being a member of the Free Methodist Church. Taken all in all, Mr. Shipp's career is one of the most remarkable instances in the annals of Fulton County of the rise to prominence and affluence of a man without extraneous aid and solely through his own intrinsic worth.

SHOPE, Simeon P., ex-Justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois, and a former citizen of Lewistown, Fulton County, was born at Akron, Ohio, December 3, 1836, a son of Simeon P. and Lucinda (Richmond) Shope, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Louisiana. S. P. Shope, Sr., went to Mississippi while a young man, and there married, after which he removed to Akron, Ohio, later residing successively at different places in Michigan, Illinois and Missouri, finally locating at Metamora, Woodford County, Ill., and dying at El Paso, in that county, in 1867. S. P. Shope, Jr., was educated in the public schools and at Eureka College, after which he read law with Judge Norman H. Purple and Elihu N. Powell at Peoria, and was admitted to the bar in 1858, beginning practice at Metamora, but later removing to Lewistown. After serving one term as Representative in the General Assembly, to which he was elected in 1862, in 1877 he was elected Justice of the Circuit Court for the Sixth Judicial Circuit to fill the unexpired term of Judge Joseph Sibley, deceased, and two years later being re-elected for a full term. At the close of the latter term in 1885 he was elected to the Supreme Bench, serving a full term of nine years, until 1894, when he retired and has since been practicing his profession in Chicago. Judge Shope was married in 1857 to Sarah M. Jones, a daughter of Wesley and Eliza Jones, of Lewistown, and who died January 4, 1882, leaving two living children. In his political relations Judge Shope has been a Democrat, and besides serving in State and local conventions of his party, was a member of the Democratic National Convention of 1884 at Cincinnati, which nominated Grover Cleveland for his first term as President, and also that which endorsed the nomination of Greeley in 1872. He is a member of several fraternal orders, including the Masons, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen.

SHORT, Amos T., one of the most prominent, enterprising and prosperous citizens of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., who is successfully engaged in the real-estate business in that city, was born in Farmington Township, Fulton County, March 23, 1861, a son of Scott and Anna (Thompson) Short, natives of Ireland. On coming to the United States Scott Short, who was a farmer by occupation, first located in Pennsylvania, moving thence to Illinois in 1848, and sojourning for a time in Farmington, Fulton County. He then bought a farm in Salem Township, Knox County, Ill., which he afterwards sold and went to Trivoli, Ill., whence he returned to Farmington. Subsequently he moved to Nebraska, purchasing a farm there. He and his wife became the parents of seven children, six of whom are living.

In boyhood Amos T. Short attended the district schools of Farmington Township and completed his education in the Central Northern College and the State Normal School of Indiana. He then engaged in teaching school, which he continued for ten years in Peoria, Fulton and Schuyler Counties; also taught elocution in Farmington. In 1886, while still engaged in teaching, he invested in the livery business in Farmington in partnership with W. S. Short, in which he is still interested. Retiring from teaching in 1894, he turned his attention to the real-estate business, which he is still prosecuting, his transactions covering farm properties in Knox, Peoria and Fulton Counties, in Illinois, and extending throughout Texas and the Southwest, the Dakotas, Minnesota and Canada. From June, 1906, to November, 1906, he was in partnership in the latter enterprise with G. P. Burrell. Mr. Short is a member of the Business Men's Association of Farmington. The Pike Block in that city was built by him.

In religious belief Mr. Short is a Congregationalist. Politically is a Republican, and is popular in his party, exercising considerable influence in its local councils. In the spring of 1905 he was elected City Clerk of Farmington. In fraternal circles he is identified with the I. O. O. F., in which he has served as Secretary of Memento Lodge for fifteen years. Mr. Short is a man of exceptional mental capacity and of extensive information and is accounted one of the most energetic and progressive among the leading citizens of Farmington.

SHREVES, William T.—One of the first pale faces to invade that domain of the Indian, since christened Young Hickory Township, was Asa Shreves, a cabin dweller who took up Government land and converted the same into a valuable and paying property, and who established a precedent of life and labor since maintained by a large following. Of those bearing the name fifty-three sleep in the shadowy churchyard at London Mills, which town arose upon land homesteaded in the early days by Madison Shreves, brother of Asa, and uncle of William T. Shreves, the latter a harness merchant of London Mills for the past thirteen years.

Samuel Shreves, father of William T., and son of Asa Shreves, was born on the Young Hickory Township farm and married Malvina Roberts, a native of Kentucky. Mr. Shreves succeeded to the old place upon the death of his father, and upon it his son, William T., was born in 1864. The father finally sold the property and allied his fortunes with the young State of Kansas, where he still lives, and where all of his seven children were reared. Of these William T. remained in Kansas until his eighteenth year, when he returned to London Mills, having, in the meantime, learned the harness maker's trade, which he followed in London Mills, Prairie City and Altoona, finally permanently locating in the latter city during the early '90s. Beginning with a small shop he now has a large business, makes and repairs harness and saddles, and carries a full line of buggies, wagons, whips, robes and other horse-faring necessities. From the first he has placed his dependence upon good goods and fair representation, with the result that he has many permanent patrons among the best people of the town and country.

Mr. Shreves is a wide-awake and progressive man, and has been prominently identified with the political and social life of the town of his adoption. A staunch Democrat, in compliance with his own inclinations and family tradition, he has held various local offices, including that of Township and Village Clerk, which latter position he still holds. He stands high in Masonic circles, and for three terms served as Worshipful Master of Lodge No. 848, of London Mills. He also is identified with the Knights of Pythias, and has passed through all of the chairs of Lodge No. 224. In June, 1897, Mr. Shreves was united in marriage to Viola Sherman, of Kansas, and daughter of William D. Sherman, a farmer of Young Hickory Township. A daughter, Ruth, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Shreves. Mr. Shreves is one of the substantial business men and promoters of London Mills, and has won an enviable reputation for integrity, good judgment and public-spiritedness.

SHRYOCK, William M., senior member of the firm of Shryock & O'Brien, proprietors of the large and flourishing monumental works at Canton, Fulton County, Ill., represents a family which for more than seventy-four years has been identified with the industrial and business progress of this section of the State. His grandfather, Milton Shryock, migrated from his native State of Kentucky to Illinois in 1833, and located in Canton as its first blacksmith. During the same year, from the Blue Grass State, came the Carver family, of whom the daughter Rebecca is the member in whom this sketch is mostly concerned. She was a comely girl of eighteen, born near Lexington, Ky., February 6, 1815, and in the year following her arrival in Canton (1834) married the stalwart young blacksmith. From the town, in 1836, the thrifty couple moved to the farm now forming a part of the village of St. David. There Mr. Shryock opened a general store, prospered in business, successfully speculated in lands, and at his death in June, 1891, owned one of the finest farms in the coal region, and other valuable property. He was universally respected, both for his able and honorable business qualifications and his strong and Christian traits as a man. Three generations of the Shryock family have been engaged in mercantile pursuits in St. David, the present firm of Dainty & Pierson continuing the business of the old Shryock store, which has been in operation for more than seventy years. Mrs. Milton Shryock is still living, at the advanced age of ninety-two years, a remarkable illustration of physical and mental preservation.

Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Milton Shryock, four of whom are deceased, those living being: Mrs. S. C. Wasson, of Canton; John C. Shryock and Mrs. George T. Baylor, of Cuba, and Henry Shryock, of St. David. James P. Shryock, the father of William M., died March 17, 1892, less than a year after the decease of Milton Shryock, to whom he was closely attached, and it is believed that the demise of the elder had much to do with the final decline of the latter.

James Pleasant Shryock was born in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., on the 18th of August, 1838, and at the time of his death was fifty-three years, six months and twenty-seven days old. On January 2, 1862, he married Miss Sarah W. Weller, and in the following August enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for service in the Civil War. After one year's campaigning he was discharged on account of sickness. In January, 1863, he united with the Methodist Protestant Church at old Ebenezer Chapel, under the ministry of Rev. George L. Taylor. After his return from the army he devoted himself for many years to the pursuit of farming, and subsequently opened a store at St. David. Closing this out, he removed to Cuba in 1888, where he bought an interest in the Cuba and Leaman Clay Works. After disposing of this interest he became a partner in the formation of the Cuba Cigar Company and continued as its traveling representative until failing health, about a year before his decease, compelled him to withdraw from active work. His funeral, which took place at Cuba, was under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity, as he was for many years an active member of the Morning Star Lodge, No. 734, and of Canton Chapter, R. A. M. His remains were taken to Canton for burial, and the citizens of both places, in every possible way, expressed their deep sorrow over his death and their high appreciation of his fine, substantial and Christian traits of character. The deceased was for many years a very earnest supporter of the Methodist Protestant Church, and was never absent from a business meeting so long as his health would permit. While a resident of Cuba he was a member of the Town Board, gave much attention to public improvements, and showed in his public service, as in all other activities, an unflinching faithfulness and broad common sense. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. James P. Shryock were: Ida May, who married William Shurtleff, connected with Riley & Bailor, general merchants of Cuba; William M., of Canton; Freydess, unmarried; and Mary, who died in infancy.

William M. Shryock was born near St. David, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, on the 16th of May, 1866. After acquiring an education in the common branches he assisted his father on the farm and in the store, and for twelve years was engaged in agricultural pursuits. In 1902 he conducted a hardware and implement business at Cuba, which he conducted until he located in Canton, in July, 1904. He then founded the business mentioned, which has been steadily developed until it is one of the leading industries of the city.

On February 6, 1886, Mr. Shryock was united in marriage with Miss Minnie C. O'Brien, daughter of James and Caroline (Snider) O'Brien, who came to Buckheart Township as early as 1860. Mrs. Shryock's father was born in New York, while her mother is a native of Tennessee. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Shryock are as follows: Carrie Glenn, Sarah H., Harry James, Lyle W., Cecil B., Gerald S., Helen and an infant (unnamed). In national politics Mr. Shryock is a Republican, but an independent in local matters. At one time he served as Town Clerk of Buckheart Township, although, as a rule, he has been too busy to "dabble" in politics. He is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, Canton Lodge No. 295, and was a charter member of Bryant Camp, No. 4436. For about sixteen years he has attended the Christian Church, and is a man of unquestioned personal honor as well as of business ability.

SHULL, John Newton.—The township of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., has no more thoroughgoing, systematic and diligent farmer within its borders than the subject of this sketch. Mr. Shull, whose farm is located on Section 12 of that township, is a native of Virginia, where he was born in Milnesville, Augusta County, August 30, 1864. The birth of his parents, John and Catherine (Goode) Shull, both of whom are deceased, occurred in the same locality. John Shull departed this life on September 22, 1904, at the age of seventy-four years, his wife having passed away in 1896. Mr. Shull's grandfather, John Shull, was of German descent and was a man of prominence in Virginia. Grandfather Goode's family was of German origin. John and Catherine (Goode) Shull were the parents of twelve children, two of whom died in infancy. The others are as follows: Henry, who is at the old homestead; Frances, who is the widow of Frank F. Stoutamyer, and lives in Virginia; Daniel P., whose home is also in Virginia; Mattie, who is the wife of Jacob Plecker, and resides near the old homestead in that State; William, who still remains in the Old Dominion; Jennie, who married Edward Davis, and is at home; John Newton, the subject of this sketch; Howard, who lives in Virginia; Samuel and Minor, who are at the old home.

After receiving his early mental training in the common schools of his native State, John N. Shull first located in Fulton County in 1885. In the fall of 1888 he went back to the scenes of his boyhood, where his experience in farm life had begun. Six months afterwards he returned to Illinois and worked at farming by the month for several years. In 1896 he took charge of the Wertman farm, remaining there until 1900, when he undertook the operation of the old John S. Lee farm, on Section 14, Lewistown Township, where he has been very successful. He cultivates 160 acres and, besides his general farming, is a breeder of fine hogs. His stock always brings the highest price and the township figure for it holds good in the Chicago market. Mr. Shull is now engaged in raising full-blooded Percneron and Norman horses and Polled Angus cattle, and all of his stock is of the best grades.

On December 2, 1896, Mr. Shull was united in marriage with Minnie Hess, a native of Fulton County, and a daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (Gustine) Hess, of whom the former is deceased and the latter resides in Lewistown, Fulton County. Three children have resulted from this union, namely: Gladys, born June 16, 1900; Carter, born August 25, 1904, and Clare, born December 7, 1906. In politics Mr. Shull is liberal in his views. He is public-spirited and takes a good citizen's interest in the affairs of the township and county, but has persistently declined to accept office. In voting he always applies the test of character. He is recognized as one of the best farmers in the township and has received many awards at different fairs on the quality of his stock exhibits.

SIMMONS, Charles.—The hoisting engineer of the Canton Union Coal Company is a young man of energy and ability whose present responsible position has been gained after unremitting application to the business of mining. Of Thomas Simmons, a member of the firm with which his son is connected, mention is made elsewhere in this work. He is one of the best known coal miners in this section of the State, and enjoys an enviable reputation for probity and sagacity.

The entire life of Charles Simmons was spent in Canton, where he was born in 1875. He was educated in the public schools and entered upon his independent life as an apprentice to a cigar manufacturer, which he successfully followed until 1897, when he became interested in coal mining, advancing rapidly through various stages to the position of hoisting engineer, which he assumed in April, 1904. The company is one of the largest in Western Illinois, and Mr. Simmons has proved an important factor in promoting its success.

At Fort Madison, Iowa, in 1896, Mr. Simmons was united in marriage with Lona Murray, and of the union there is one daughter, Verna. Mr. Simmons is in no sense a politician, nor is he interested in affairs outside of his immediate field of usefulness. Fraternally he is connected with the Knights of Pythias.

SIMMONS, Mrs. Charlotte L. J.—It is doubtful if any member of the leisure class of Avon can lay claim to such contrast of existence, or to such tangible or mental reminders of interesting personages and associations, as Mrs. Charlotte L. J. Simmons. The chief life scenes of this well known woman have been Florence, Italy, the most fascinating and interesting art and literary center of the southern peninsula, and Fulton County, destined to ceaselessly move toward its supreme prosperity ever since her arrival here in 1841. Mrs. Simmons was born in Florence, December 10, 1827, and in her youth attended the schools of the beautiful city of Dante and Savonarola, of Michael Angelo and Fra Angelica. Her parents were Eloi Dennis and Amanda Theresa (Gallet) Mailliard, natives of Morfontaine, France, and born March 9, 1797, and September 26, 1804, respectively.

Eloi Dennis Mailliard was a man of education and diplomacy, and for years was the personal and trusted attendant of Joseph Bonaparte, eldest brother of the Emperor of France, his brother (Louis Mailliard) being the life secretary of Joseph Bonaparte and the executor of his will at his death. Like the ill-fated Exile of St. Helena, Joseph was born at Corte, Corsica, his natal day being January 7, 1768. His death occurred in Florence, Italy, July 28, 1844. Joseph arose through his own ability and the influence of his brother to high places, becoming a member of the Council of Five Hundred in 1798, Council of State in 1799, King of Naples in 1806 and King of Spain in 1808. He lived in the United States from 1815 until 1832, under the name of the Comte de Survilliers, and returned to Florence, with its heroic recollections of the best and most glorious in the life of Italy, where his death occurred as heretofore stated, in 1844. It was as the every-day companion of this man that Mr. Mailliard spent many years of his life, and, in connection with him and his own private interests, he visited the United States in 1816, 1824, 1838 and 1841, his journey here in 1838 resulting in his purchase of the farm near Avon, Fulton County, upon which he settled with his family in 1841. Nor was Joseph Bonaparte the only person of note with whom Mr. Mailliard was identified. He knew well Charlotte, daughter of Joseph and Julia Clairry Bonaparte. Caroline in 1800 married Prince Murat, the great cavalry commander, and after the overthrow and execution of the latter for complicity in Austrian affairs, in 1815, was known as the Countess Lipona.

Charlotte Bonaparte, who became godmother of Mrs. Simmons, was born in Paris, France, October 20, 1781, and August 18, 1803, married Louis, King of Holland, who was the father of Napoleon III., and brother of the famous Emperor Napoleon I., and it was through her generosity and appreciation of the faithful services to her brother Joseph that Mrs. Simmons inherits from her father many tokens of priceless value. To her father was given by Joseph Bonaparte an "Ecce Homo" of Raphael, 400 years old, and a miniature of Joseph and Charlotte Bonaparte, and to Mrs. Simmons Princess Charlotte presented personally a set of rubies and opals, a cross and earrings, which were once in possession of Queen Caroline, and which had fallen to Charlotte upon the division of the Queen's property. These and many other relics Mrs. Simmons prizes as reminders of her dynastic early surroundings, and her personal recollections of a family than which none has played a greater part in shaping the destiny of the world.

Mrs. Simmons' present home consists of thirty acres within the limits of Avon. All of her life since 1841 has been spent in this community. Her Florentine education was supplemented by instruction from a private tutor in this county, and her early impetus toward mental growth has been zealously followed up with continuous reading and research during the intervening years. In Avon, May 18, 1847, she was united in marriage to George Simmons, who died January 6, 1892, and of the union there are two children, George, Jr., and Emlia. The family are members of the Roman Catholic Church. Notwithstanding her seventy-seven years, Mrs. Simmons' memory is unclouded, and her other faculties unimpaired. Sixty-five years upon the prairies of the Central West have made of her a loyal American citizen, yet she treasures her earlier memories of the quaint, romantic city upon the banks of the sluggish Arno, and her unpurchasable relics which speak of friendships among people whose names are written large upon the pages of European history.

SIMMONS, Thomas.—The value in business of concentrating one's forces upon a given line of activity, of correctly gauging its importance among the needs of the world, and keeping pace with the ever-changing conditions surrounding it, is confirmed anew in the success of Thomas Simmons, manager of the Canton Union Coal Company. Mr. Simmons has been studying the coal question ever since the beginning of his wage-earning career, thirty-one years ago. He then was twenty-four years old, having been born in 1852, on a farm in St. Louis County, Mo. His ancestors on both sides of the family pursued their respective callings in England, in which country were born his parents, Joseph and Mary A. (Pearson) Simmons. The family came to America in 1842, locating soon after in St. Louis County.

Mr. Simmons was educated in the public schools and in 1874 began to work in the coal mines of Illinois, continuing thus until 1886. He was frugal and industrious, besides his own ambition, having the incentive of providing for his own home, established in 1873 through his marriage to Delia, daughter of J. W. Grover, of Canton, Ill. Of this union there are two children—Charles and Joseph. In 1884 Mr. Simmons took charge of the coal business of A. W. Heald, and in 1895 organized the Canton Union Coal Company, of which he since has been manager. Mr. Simmons supports the Republican party with his ballot, but he has never entertained official aspirations. His fraternal connections are with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias. He is truly a self-made man, climbing from the bottom round of the ladder without other aids than a kindly and courteous nature and large capacity for painstaking industry. He is public-spirited and progressive, and always has advocated those worthy undertakings which were calculated to advance the community in which he lives.

SIMPSON, John F., who has been successfully engaged in farming in Farmington Township, Fulton County, Ill., since 1860, was born in that township on June 9, 1842, a son of John and Margaret (Cordner) Simpson, natives of Ireland. John Simpson followed the occupation of a weaver in the old country. He came to the United States in 1824 and lived for a time in Philadelphia, where he worked at his trade. In 1834 he made his way to Illinois, and after spending ten months in Canton, located on Section 12, Farmington Township, purchasing 160 acres of land of Charles Sargent, fifteen acres of which had been broken up. His journey from Philadelphia westward was made by canal to Pittsburg, thence to Copperas Creek, Ill., by river, and to Canton, Ill., by ox team wagon. At first he lived in a log cabin on his new purchase, but subsequently built a convenient frame dwelling, which he occupied until his death, in 1854. To him and his wife were born seven children, as follows: Ann J., Margaret H., Sarah M., William, S. James, Mary E., and John F.

John F. Simpson has spent his life on the homestead properly. In boyhood he attended the district schools in the vicinity, and completed his education in a select school. He took charge of the paternal acres in 1860, and from that time carried on general farming and stock-raising there, with invariable success. Of late years he has raised some fruit and berries. The farm consists of 205 acres.

Mr. Simpson has been twice married. In 1871 he was united in marriage at Farmington, Ill., with Martha Dickie, who was born in Pennsylvania. Six children resulted from this union, namely: William N., Walter D., I. Warren, Mary E., Margaret and Burt N. The mother of this family died in June, 1880. On February 18, 1885, Mr. Simpson wedded, as his second wife, Sarah E. Patterson, who was born in Greenfield, Ohio, and accompanied her parents to Illinois when she was quite young. The offspring of this marriage was one child, Alice K., born December 12, 1887.

In politics, Mr. Simpson is a Republican, and his religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church. Two older brothers of Mr. Simpson, William and S. J., served in the Union Army during the Civil War, the latter dying at Pittsburg Landing a few days after the battle there. William is still living near Fort Scott, Kan.

SINGLETON, J. E.—As one of the native born sons of Avon, Ill., Mr. Singleton has lived to see many wonderful changes in the development of his home city, both in numbers and in importance as a business center. His father, Joseph R. Singleton, who was a native of Ohio, came hither and located as early as 1855, his chief stock in trade at that time consisting of his knowledge of the plasterer's trade. He found competent workmen in his line in considerable demand, so he was never at a loss for work. To the plasterer's trade he later added stone and brick masonry, and throughout his life followed work along these varied lines. He passed away in Avon in 1904. His marriage united him with Alvira Houts, who was born in Indiana, though, while she was still a young child, her parents removed to Illinois and settled in Avon, and here it was that her marriage with Mr. Singleton was celebrated. During the Civil War Mr. Singleton responded to his country's call for able-bodied men, and after his term of service was over he returned to his home in Avon and once more resumed the peaceful pursuits of civil life. At one time he served as Township Collector.

J. E. Singleton was born in Avon in January, 1859, and after receiving his education in the schools of his native town, for a few years found employment with neighboring farmers. Deciding that his tastes did not lie in that direction he determined to learn the mason's trade, in which he was trained by his father, who was an expert in that calling. From the time of completing his apprenticeship until recently, or for about twenty-six years, he has followed his trade continuously, having in the meantime also been engaged in contracting and building. He has executed contracts in Quincy, Galesburg, Bushnell and for one winter he followed his trade in Riverside, Cal. Much of the building that has been done in Avon has been executed by Mr. Singleton, who is an adept in his line, as is evidenced in the substantial character of the structures which he has erected. In 1902 he erected the residence now occupied by the family, the grounds covering six acres, and formerly known as the Peterson place. Besides the home place Mr. Singleton also owns eighty acres, which he purchased from Charles Murphy, and which lie one mile east of Avon. He has also made investments in business property, having recently purchased a new brick business block, 24 by 62 feet.

In Avon, in 1901, Mr. Singleton was married to Sophia Hovell, who through her parents, Thomas and ——— (Reynolds) Hovell, was the descendant of a long line of English ancestors. Mr. Singleton takes a commendable interest in the welfare of his home town, and for about ten years he has been a member of the Town Board. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias, while in his religious preferences he belongs to the Universalist Church.

SLACK, Alexander (deceased), one of the oldest residents of Fulton County, Ill., where he spent about forty years in farming operations, was born in Lancaster, England, April 21, 1822, a son of John and Anna (Garside) Slack, who were also natives of that country, and there passed their lives. The occupation of the father was that of a mechanic.

In boyhood Alexander Slack attended the public schools for a short time in Lancashire, and at a very early age went to work in a factory, in which he was employed until he came to the United States in 1846. At first he located in Rhode Island, remaining there until 1849, when he made his way to Illinois and settled in Fulton County. The journey was accomplished by canal to Buffalo; thence to Chicago by lake, and from LaSalle to Copperas Creek, Ill., by river. For a few months he sojourned in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, and in the fall of 1849, established his home in Section 32, Farmington Township, where he had purchased forty acres of land. His brother, Nathaniel, broke up and fenced the land and Mr. Slack bought a log cabin of Dr. Newton, another early settler, which he moved to the tract, making other necessary improvements thereon. He afterwards bought an additional forty acres to the south of the first. There he was engaged in general farming and stock-raising until 1885, when he withdrew from active pursuits. He marketed his grain at Copperas Creek, and hauled his hogs to Lancaster. On retiring from work he left the care of the farm to one of his sons, who is also the owner of 200 acres in that vicinity.

In 1844, Mr. Slack was joined in matrimonial bonds with Hester Cross, the marriage occurring in his native country, which was also that of his wife. Two children were the offspring of this union, namely: William and Henry, who are on the homestead property. The mother died May 5, 1895, and Mr. Slack on March 20, 1907. In politics, Mr. Slack supported the policies of the Democratic party. For a number of years he served his township as School Director.

SLAUTER, Perry M.—Among those whose residence in Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., dates from a very recent period, but who have in a short time become prominently identified with the business interests of the town, is the gentleman whose name forms the caption of this article. By exceptional capacity in his vocation, sound methods of dealing and innate force of character, he has already drawn to his store, within less than two years from the time of beginning operations, a fair share of public patronage, and made it as attractive a resort as any of the long-established jewelry concerns in Farmington.

The subject of this sketch is a native of the State of Missouri, where he was born in the village of Novelty, in 1871, a son of William Wesley and Mary M. (Cratzer) Slauter, the former born in Indiana in 1830 and the latter a native of Ohio. William Wesley Slauter was a farmer by occupation and was engaged in tilling the soil in Indiana for a number of years. He served five years in Company K, Twenty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, in which he ranked as Lieutenant. He was captured by the Confederate troops and confined in Libby Prison for six months. He was a man of diligent habits and excellent character and commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact.

Perry M. Slaughter received his early mental training in the public schools of Indianapolis, Ind., and after finishing his studies secured his first employment in a jewelry store. With that business he has been connected since he reached the age of fourteen years, and has attained a degree of expert skill second to that possessed by few who are engaged in it. He has mastered in full the construction of watches and clocks, and is experienced in every detail of the watchmaker's art. On one occasion Mr. Slaughter engraved a gold pen, which was presented to President Roosevelt by the colored people of Indianapolis. In that city he acted in the capacity of manager for J. C. Lipe, a diamond merchant and importer, and later was head mechanic for Ayers & Sons, jewelry manufacturers, of Keokuk, Iowa. Mr. Slaughter located in Farmington in 1904 and established himself in the jewelry business, conducting also a repairing shop, and has built up a fine trade.

In 1895 Mr. Slaughter was united in marriage with Zula Z. Stafford, who was born in Indianapolis, Ind., where in early youth she attended school. This union has resulted in two children—Henry and William. Mrs. Slaughter is a daughter of Mr. Stafford, who is the foreman of E. C. Atkins' saw manufacturing concern. She was at one time the buyer for Gumvinsky & Co.'s millinery establishment in Indianapolis. She is an expert milliner and conducts a first-class millinery store in Farmington. Both she and her husband have been remarkably successful in their respective lines during their short residence there, and this result is attributable, as before stated, to a high degree of competence in their respective lines and the possession of sterling traits of character. Mr. Slaughter's religious belief is in accordance with the creed of the Methodist Church and fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and the K. of P.

SLOSS. William, a retired farmer of Canton Township, Fulton County, Ill., who is now exempt from the cares of active exertion, having through years of industry, economy and careful management, acquired a competency, was born in the township where he now resides, on October 23, 1847, a son of John and Elizabeth (Butler) Sloss, natives of North Carolina and Virginia, respectively. John Sloss left his southern home in 1833, and journeyed to Illinois, settling in Fulton County. He located in Section 3, Canton Township, where he bought from the Government a tract of 148 acres of land. Having improved his purchase, he applied himself to the cultivation of the soil, and followed that occupation during the remainder of his life, dying November 26, 1850. His wife passed away August 8, 1871. They were the parents of six children, namely: Tamzen E., Daniel W., Sarah V., John, William and Joseph.

William Sloss was reared on his father's farm, and in early youth attended the district schools of Canton Township. On reaching years of maturity he devoted his attention to farming in the same vicinity, which he continued thus with constant success, improving his farming property in comfortable style, building a house, barn, etc., on the premises. Besides his farm of 179 acres in Section 3, Canton Township, he is the owner of 160 acres of land in Section 35, Farmington Township. In 1902, he built an attractive residence a short distance north of Canton, which he has since occupied as his home.

On December 8, 1886, Mr. Sloss was united in marriage with Mary McCutchen, who was born in Fulton County, and one child, Anness, has been the offspring of this union. Politically, the subject of this sketch is a supporter of the Republican party, and although not active in partisan contests, takes an intelligent interest in public affairs. He has been one of the most successful farmers of the county, and his personal character and standing are of a high order.

SMITH, (Colonel) Augustus B. (deceased).—A gallant soldier during the Civil War, for many years identified with a successful hardware business in the city of Canton, one of the most efficient Sheriffs that Fulton County has ever known, and for many years a popular member of the retired colony of the town. Colonel Augustus B. Smith was one of the most interesting and attractive personalities that have lent worth and distinction to this part of the State, and that have drawn from its opportunities and environment the essentials of a broad and public-spirited life.

Colonel Smith was of New England lineage, born in Greenfield, Saratoga County N. Y., June 2, 1833. He was reared on the farm of his father, John Smith, who was born in Connecticut, but who came to Greenfield as a young man, and there passed the balance of his life. He married Cynthia Hewitt, representative of an old New York family. At the age of eighteen Augustus B. started out to seek the experiences and rewards of an independent life, journeying to Illinois, where (in Vermont) he clerked a couple of years in the general store of Judge Tunnick. For some time his life was threatened by a severe attack of cholera, but upon recovering he took up the burden of self-support with renewed zest in his native Saratoga County, clerking for two years for his brother, J. G. Smith. For the following few months he clerked for another brother, Amos, in Canton, Fulton County, and next lived at Copperas Creek Landing, where he engaged in the commission business with fair success, and where all of his earthly possessions were destroyed by fire. Returning to Canton, he established a hardware business with his brother Amos, and was thus employed at the breaking out of the Civil War.

The Civil War service of Colonel Smith was not the whim of a youth seeking novelty and adventure, but the settled conviction of a man of twenty-nine, whose sympathies were aroused in a cause thoroughly and intelligently understood. Enlisting in August, 1862, in Company K, One Hundred and Third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, he was mustered in as First Lieutenant, in July, 1863, was advanced to the rank of Captain, and during the Atlanta campaign was promoted to the position of Inspector General of the First Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps. Up to this time he was in continuous command of his regiment, and participated in practically all of the important battles which distinguished that period. He was to the fore in the siege and capture of Atlanta, and thence accompanied General Sherman on his March to the Sea, through the Carolinas to Richmond, and on to Washington, where he took part in the Grand Review. His honorable discharge occurred in Louisville, Ky., in 1865. The martial career of Colonel Smith was distinguished by courage, initiative, and profound knowledge of military tactics. He was a stern and relentless disciplinarian, and as Inspector General maintained the highest and most rigid tenets of that office. Nevertheless, a kindly heart and inexhaustible sympathy might be detected under the demeanor of the soldier, and instances are numerous of considerations shown and kindnesses proffered. But he was first of all the soldier, the man who, knowing how to control himself, could command and control others.

Returning to Canton, the experiences of camp and field faded gradually as Colonel Smith again took up the burdens and responsibilities of civilian life, and he continued to conduct his hardware business until elected Sheriff of Fulton County, in 1886, on the Republican ticket. His record as Sheriff, during which he made his home in Lewistown, is recalled as an able and eminently satisfactory one. Varied experience had made him a judge of men, and the habit of discipline and command, acquired in the war, facilitated a control of the unruly and lawless element with which he had to contend as Sheriff. Under his administration crime was materially lessened in the county, and it lost ground as a comfortable or hospitable abode of evil doers. He was otherwise honored by the Republican party of the State, serving, with the rank of Colonel, on the staffs of at least two of the Governors of Illinois—that of Governor Oglesby in 1885, and of Governor Fifer in 1889.

Colonel Smith was thrice married, the ceremony uniting him with his last wife, formerly Addie Payne, taking place in 1882. He was the father of four children; Gussie E. by his first marriage, and Charles, Albert and Jerry, by his second marriage. Colonel Smith bore out in his personal appearance the strength of character and varied ability which contributed to and regulated his usefulness. He was an earnest, masterful man; a loyal friend and forgiving foe; a man who profited by his experiences, and drew therefrom sane and practical ideas of life and work. He died May 22, 1904.

SMITH, Charles M., who has been a life-long resident of Banner Township, Fulton County, where he was born February 26, 1868, and where at the present time he occupies a farm of eighty acres on Section 7, is one of the progressive and well posted agriculturists of his neighborhood, a student of men and affairs, and a great reader of periodicals which reflect the great improvements of the age along the lines of his chosen occupation.

Though inheriting many of the admirable qualities of his pioneer father, William H. Smith, a sketch of whom may be found elsewhere in this work, Charles M. has worked out his own success along independent grooves, and has done his own thinking, planning and managing. He had the advantage of such farming and business training as his father was able to give him, and which included a thorough knowledge of milling, in which the older man engaged for several years. His education was acquired in the public schools. September 19, 1889, he was united in marriage with Clara, daughter of Thomas Fouts, the latter one of the pioneers of Fulton County, and of the union there is one son, Elmer. Mr. Smith follows in the footsteps of his forbears politically, and supports with his vote the Democratic party. He is a home-loving, quiet citizen, and his friends and immediate associates admire his sincerity and kindly feeling, and those whom he meets in the paths of commerce rely upon his integrity and good judgment.

SMITH, Cyrus (deceased), who—if any one ever deserved the appellation of a self-made man—was fully entitled to that characterization, and who was long a very conspicuous figure in the industrial and mercantile annals of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the vicinity of Saratoga, N. Y., November 5, 1823, a son of John and Cynthia (Hewitt) Smith, both natives of the State of Connecticut. John Smith followed farming throughout his active life. He and his wife were the parents of fourteen children, all of whom grew to maturity. One of them, Edwin Smith, is now living at Greenfield Center, Saratoga County, N. Y., where he is engaged in farming.

Cyrus Smith attended the subscription schools of Greenfield Center in boyhood, and on account of the expense incident to the maintenance of so large a family, found it necessary to assist his parents by working diligently during his youth. He was "his mother's boy." He carried strawberries six miles for her in order to exchange them for groceries, and chopped wood on the mountains, hauling it home with oxen for domestic use. While still young he had the misfortune to break both of his arms, and this affliction added to the many difficulties with which he was obliged to contend. At the outbreak of the California gold-fever he went to that territory in quest of the precious metal, and after prospecting without success, returned to the East. In 1848, he located in Canton, Ill., with but twenty-five cents in his possession, and was employed in the hardware trade by his brother, Amos, who had settled in Canton some years previously. The store was in a building now owned by the widow of Cyrus and occupied by Scripps and Greer. In 1858 the two brothers, Cyrus and Augustus B., were prosperously engaged in the grain, warehouse and hotel business at Copperas Creek Landing, where they suffered a loss of about $40,000 by fire. After the destruction of their property, Mr. Smith had $500 left, and bought, of Joel Wright the lot on which Mrs. Smith now lives. Her mother took Joseph Maxwell's children to care for them, and through that incident, Mr. Smith became acquainted with the lady who afterwards became his wife. For one year, he was engaged in the hardware business in connection with his brother and John Olds. He then leased a grocery store on the north side of the square, in Canton, where he remained three years, making satisfactory profits. After that he was without occupation until his brother Amos died, in 1870, when he bought the latter's business interests. He also purchased a half-interest in the store building belonging to Mrs. Jennie Fisher, a daughter of his brother Amos. Sixteen years afterwards he purchased the other half-interest in this building, and continued in business there until the time of his death. At that time he was the owner of 300 acres of land in the vicinity of Canton, on February 8, 1878, having bought the "Stockdate" farm, which, however, was never cultivated by him. He passed away October 1, 1903.

At Hudson, Ill., on November 7, 1877, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Sarah Orr, a daughter of Andrew and Nancy (Sales) Orr, who was born on a farm near Springfield, Ill., December 27, 1840. Her mother died when she was quite young, and she was reared by Mrs. Rebecca Ewing, of West Virginia. Mrs. Smith is a first cousin of former Governor Orr, of South Carolina. Mrs. Smith, who is surrounded by all the comforts of life, is still vigorous and vivacious, and is distinguished by her many graces of mind and heart. She is a very estimable woman, and is held in cordial regard by numerous friends.

Cyrus Smith was a Republican in politics, and although never an aspirant for official position, always took an intelligent and lively interest in public affairs and current events. He was a man of acute mental powers, keen perception, sound judgment and indomitable energy. He will long be remembered as one of the most diligent, reliable and successful merchants who has ever been identified with the business activities of Fulton County.

SMITH, Francis M., who is successfully engaged in farming in Section 11, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, was born in that township November 11, 1861, a son of William Walker Smith, a sketch of whose life may be found elsewhere in this volume. The birth of Mr. Smith took place on the paternal farm, and there he was reared, receiving his mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood and the high school of Lewistown, Fulton County.

On reaching early manhood the subject of this sketch applied himself to farming on his own responsibility. Although still a comparatively young man, he has witnessed many changes in the methods of farming operations since he became able to make himself useful on the parental homestead, and often recalls the period when he plowed corn with the old-fashioned double-shovel plow. He is the owner of about ninety-eight acres of excellent land, well improved and under a high state of cultivation. Much of his attention is devoted to stock-raising, and he breeds the best grades of horses, cattle and hogs. He is an enterprising and thorough farmer and his diligent and energetic efforts have produced satisfactory results.

On December 31, 1884, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Carrie Buffum, who was born in Fulton County, Ill., a daughter of George and Maria (Minter) Buffum. Her father died in December, 1884. Her mother still survives and is a resident of Lewistown. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are the parents of two sons, namely: Lucien L., who was born November 1, 1887, and Willard F., born in February, 1891. To them Mr. Smith has afforded the best of educational advantages, of which they have made appreciative use, and bid fair to become serviceable and reputable members of the community.

In politics Mr. Smith is a firm supporter of the Republican party and has creditably filled various local offices of trust. His first presidential vote was cast for Blaine and Logan. He has always manifested an earnest interest in public affairs and has taken a prominent part in the furtherance of all measures devised to promote the general welfare. In him the cause of education finds a warm advocate and liberal patron. Mr. Smith and his estimable wife are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

SMITH, Francis Marion, who for years has been a local Republican of considerable influence and usefully concerned in school matters, was born May 17, 1859, a son of John F. and

JOHN WINCHEL

Sarah J. (Williams) Smith, both natives of Adams County, Ohio. The father was a farmer, came to Fulton at an early day and became very successful and wealthy. Francis lived with his parents upon the farm and did much to assist his father to a position of comfort and independence. While becoming proficient in the science and practice of agriculture, he acquired a far broader education than most young men who designed to follow that industry. After laying a solid elementary foundation in the district schools he pursued courses both at the Western Normal School, at Bushnell, Ill., and at Hedding's College, Abingdon. Thus fortified Mr. Smith confidently entered into the independent life of the wise husbandman, being successful both as farmer and man. He is now the proprietor of 130 acres of finely improved land, comprising his valuable homestead, and has also a substantial standing as a man of affairs. For years he has served as School Director with great personal credit and to the public satisfaction. In politics he is staunchly Republican.

On the 12th of September, 1893, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Mary A. Leister, of Canton, Ill., the ceremony occurring in Lee Township. His wife was born November 18, 1871, and of their union there have been born five children: Vera A., Alice V., Dora F., Esther V. and Ray A. Mr. Smith is a leading member in his locality of the Methodist Church South.

SMITH, Francis V.—Through the business ability, obligingness and courtesy of its owner, the grocery store of Francis V. Smith in a comparatively short time has become an important source of supply to the people of Ipava and vicinity. Mr. Smith derived much of his knowledge of food products on the farm of his father in Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, where he was born February 28, 1868, and where he lived until attaining his majority.

Mr. Smith first entered upon an independent business career on a cattle ranch in Iowa, where he remained nine months, and during that time saved the greater part of his earnings. Returning to Ipava in 1893, he was united in marriage to Emma Faye Culver, a native of Missouri, and daughter of Solon Culver, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. For two years after his marriage Mr. Smith operated the home farm in Bernadotte Township, and in 1895 moved into Ipava, whence he made a trip to Eldorado Springs, Mo., in the fall of 1897. Having secured a position as clerk in a general store, he again settled in Ipava in 1899, and until 1903 served as clerk in the general store of William Roddis. He then bought a stock of groceries and established a business of his own, in the meantime working up a trade which has far exceeded his expectations.

Mr. Smith entertains a commendable interest in public affairs, is a firm believer in good schools and general civilizing agencies, and supports by his vote the Republican party. He is prominent socially and a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. With his wife he is identified with the Presbyterian Church.

SMITH, James.—It has been the privilege of the subject of this sketch to live beyond man's allotted four-score years and, in the evening of his ninety-one years, realizes the development of the fine farming property which has been his home for seventy-five years, in the accomplishments of which he has been an active factor as well as in the events which have contributed to the history of Fulton County. Mr. Smith was reared in the midst of humble surroundings in Hart County, Ky., where he was born August 12, 1816. His parents, Daniel and Rachel (Garrison) Smith, were natives of Alabama, who settled in Hart County about 1809. About 1819 Daniel Smith moved with his family from Kentucky to Hamilton County, in Southern Illinois, where James Smith grew to manhood, a tireless worker on the home farm, the numerous tasks of which limited the possibilities of his attendance at the district school, and interfered even with his efforts at self-education.

It was during the summer of 1840 that Mr. Smith accompanied his brother-in-law, James Trotter, from Wayne County, Ill., to Fulton County, the journey being made on horseback, and under trying circumstances. They were obliged to travel at night, owing to the green-head flies which tormented the horses and they made a final settlement on Otter Creek, Pleasant Township, where their cabin was one of the three or four then standing between the creek and the village. The cabin completed the family were brought to it, the wagon drawn by cattle, an ox one year old and a two-year old heifer being put on the lead and the harness wrapped with greased rags to drive the flies away. Those were wild and poverty stricken days, although the Indians had taken their departure, leaving at least one less element of danger. Deer and game of smaller sort were abundant, and to hunt was a necessity as well as past time. The prairies stretched unbroken into the distance, intercepted by growths of timber which contributed fuel and building material.

To his new home Mr. Smith brought his wife, formerly Ellen Harwick, of Tennessee, and the younger children, of whom Perry was the baby. There were seven children in all, of this first marriage of Mr. Smith, three of whom died in infancy. Of the survivors, Myron died August 20, 1905; Daniel lives in Bloomfield, Iowa; and James is a resident of Santiago, Cal. The first home of the family in the county had little to recommend it to the rural resident of the present. It was built of round logs, with puncheon floors and upstanding stools. The bed was made by boring holes in the side logs, and inserting heavy wooden pins upon which the framework of the bed was stretched. It was said to be comfortable, and the cabin was well daubed to protect the occupants from winter winds. The farm comprised eighty acres, and with five yoke of oxen Mr. Smith broke most of the land between Ipava and Duncantown. He became an expert Nimrod, and so plentiful was game that he was almost invariably accompanied on his daily tasks by his reliable flint-lock gun. This style of gun, now a curiosity, was the salvation of the pioneer. Flint was sold the same as caps of the present, and one flint lasted a long time if one chipped the flint with a knife, occasionally. As Mr. Smith engaged in splitting rails, his gun always was beside him, and he would look up now and then to see a deer or wild turkey, which fell before his unerring aim. It was not unusual for him to split 200 rails a day, and he always returned home with some kind of trophy of the chase to hang to the rafters of the rude log cabin. During corn planting time Mrs. Smith would take little Perry out into the field, place him in a corner of the fence, and drop corn into the rows laid out by her husband, and eventually covered by him with the hoe. Wheat was cut with a cradle—a laborious task, but lightened by the settlers through an interchange of work.

In 1850 a cloud fell upon the little home through the death of Mrs. Smith. Her husband subsequently married Harriet Kelly, of whose children, Annie died at the age of fifteen years; Rachel, who is the wife of Melton Carter, resided in Summum; John is on the old homestead, having married Sarah Wise; and Adrian was left motherless at three years of age, through the death of Mrs. Smith in 1868. In 1872 Mr. Smith married Julia A. Babcock, widow of Henry A. Babcock, one of the pioneers of Fulton County. During all these years Mr. Smith had been one of the most kindly disposed and helpful of farmers, aiding with his generosity many less fortunate than himself, and proving a benefactor, when trouble or some calamity visited the community.

Night or day, his services were at the disposal of those in distress, and only those who participated in the upward struggle of the county know of the frequency of these opportunities. During the Peters flood in Otter Creek, the houses of the Peters family was washed away, and Mr. Smith swam out, rescued the entire family, and placing them in a tree, swam back to land to arrange for their removal to a place of greater safety. This he accomplished by lashing logs together and placing a wagon-box on this improvised craft, succeeded in bringing the imperiled family to land. During the dreadful small-pox epidemic he was tireless in well-doing, his days and nights being devoted to digging graves, and otherwise assisting in quelling the dread calamity. Out of his experience have come peace, happiness and prosperity, the good will of all who have known him, and the appreciation of the community at large. In politics he has been a non-active Democrat.

SMITH, Jerry B., a proficient and prosperous druggist of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Canton, this county, on April 3, 1873. He is a son of Augustus B. and Tennessee (Hague) Smith, of whom the father was a native of New York State, and the mother of Cleveland, Tenn. The father was prominent among the early settlers of Fulton County, being a pioneer hardware merchant of Canton. He was influential in politics, and held the office of Assessor, and other positions of township trust. He also served a term as Sheriff of Fulton County.

J. B. Smith was the youngest of four children, all of whom are living. He received his early education in the public schools of Canton, and at the age of fifteen years became connected with the drug business, the theory and practice of which he thoroughly mastered. In 1892 he succeeded to the firm of A. B. Smith & Company, druggists, in Cuba, and in 1904 bought out the drug store of D. W. C. Harrison, consolidating the two concerns. He is a licensed druggist and conducts a thoroughly equipped establishment.

On March 11, 1896, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Maggie Smith, who was born in Fulton County, and is a daughter of Lorenzo and Almede Smith. Mrs. Smith's father died in 1886; the widow married Theodore Martin and resides at Astoria, Ill. One child, Frank L., has resulted from this union. In politics, Mr. Smith is a supporter of the Republican party, and in fraternal circles is identified with the A. F. & A. M., M. W. of A., K. of P. and Court of Honor. He is a man of strict integrity, and takes a good citizen's interest in the welfare of the community. Professionally, his skill and efficiency are recognized by all, and his diligent attention to the affairs of his store is constantly increasing its patronage.

SMITH, Martin E., who has been successfully engaged in teaching in Fulton County, Ill., for the past twenty years, and is now proprietor of the City Hotel, No. 405 South Main Street, Lewistown, Ill., was born in Otto, Fulton County, Ill., June 2, 1864. He is a son of William and Maria (Tefft) Smith, natives, respectively, of Madrid, Mo., and Delavan, Ill.

William Smith's father died when the former was but a child. William Smith served during the Civil War as a member of Company G, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and had two half brothers in the Confederate army. A sister is now living at Havana, Ill., the widow of William Kelly. William Smith and his wife had eight children, namely: Frederick R., a farmer in Pleasant Township, Fulton County; Burton C., a farmer in Isabel Township, in the same county; Willard, a carpenter who lives near Summum, Ill.; Darrel, a farmer in Otto, Isabel Township; Minnie, wife of John Lynch, of Pleasant Township; Almyra, wife of Sherman Smith, who lives in Southern California; William, Jr. (deceased); and Martin E.

MRS. ELIZA A. WINCHEL

The early life of the subject of this sketch was spent on a farm. He attended the district schools, and by dint of hard study obtained a good mental training. Afterwards, he began teaching in the same district, and was quite successful. In 1887 and '88, he attended the Northern Illinois Normal School, and then took a correspondence course in Trainer's School of Natural Sciences, Decatur, Ill., receiving his diploma and a first-grade certificate. Later on Mr. Smith took a similar course in the Inter-State School of Chicago, affiliated with the Northwestern University, and received a diploma therefrom. For twenty years he has been one of the most popular and successful teachers of Fulton County, and for six consecutive years he taught in the same district, thus clearly demonstrating his ability and popularity as an instructor. In September, 1905, he assumed the position of principal of the Bryant schools and has taught there for the past three years.

On February 14, 1905, Mr. and Mrs. Smith took charge of the City Hotel in Lewistown. Mrs. Smith has the management of the culinary department, and under her direction the house is rapidly becoming popular with the traveling public. Both host and hostess are genial and affable people, and the patrons who once partake of their entertainment are wont to become guests again.

Mr. Smith's wife was formerly Miss Melissa J. Cullins, a native of Fulton County, Ill., and a daughter of Joseph and Jane (Severns) Cullins, natives of Ohio. They were united in marriage October 4, 1888, at Goodland, Kans., and two children have blessed this union: Maude M. and Earl J. Mrs. Smith is an active member of the Christian Church. Mr. Smith is fraternally identified with the Modern Woodmen of America.

SMITH, Sidney J.—Among its most intelligent and practical farmers Ellisville Township numbers Sidney J. Smith, whose family has lent its good name and honest intent to Fulton County since 1858, and who is the owner of a farm of 160 acres on Section 6. Mr. Smith was born in Ellisville Township June 27, 1863, five years after the arrival in that locality here of his parents, Andrew J. and Elizabeth (McKay) Smith, the former born in New York in 1834 and the latter in Ohio in 1837. Andrew J. Smith was a farmer in early life and later a carpenter, a trade which he followed in Ellisville for several years, and later in Avon, where his death occurred in 1895. During the Civil War he enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirtieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served to the close of hostilities.

At the age of fifteen Sidney J. Smith began to shift for himself, and in 1893 had acquired sufficient capital to purchase 120 acres of land belonging to the Potts estate on Section 6, Ellis Township. He at present carries on farming on 160 acres. He has kept up the old and made many new improvements on the property, and is extensively engaged in general farming and stock-raising, making a specialty of high-grade stock and grain. In Knox County, Ill., during March, 1891, Mr. Smith married Florence M. Potts, who was born in Ellisville Township, December 14, 1862, and is the devoted mother of three children—Kay, Dean and Noel. In politics Mr. Smith is independent and aside from casting his vote is inactive. Fraternally he is a Knight of Pythias. Long residence within the township has brought him financial and general compensation, chief among which are the esteem and confidence of his fellowmen.

SMITH, Dr. Thomas Theron, well known dentist of Canton, Ill., was born in Lewistown Township, Fulton County, on the 28th of June, 1871. His parents were Aaron and Almira (Austin) Smith, his father having been born in Ohio December 16, 1833, and his mother on the old Austin homestead, five miles northwest of Lewistown, where she was reared, and which was her mother's home during most of her long married life. The Austins were originally from Virginia and came of an old and substantial family. Mrs. Aaron Smith passed away from the old homestead October 24, 1883, her husband having preceded her on June 18, 1882. Their marriage occurred August 25, 1853. Of their family are still living their three sons and three of their four daughters.

Aaron Smith, the father, was an industrious, unassuming farmer, and although always a Republican, quite unambitious for office. He was, however, very earnest in his advocacy of good township roads, served as Commissioner for some time and made a fine local record in this line of public work. He was also a soldier of the Civil War, having enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving afterward in Company K, Twenty-fourth Regiment, V. R. C., his honorable service covering the period from August 11, 1862, to July 18, 1865, when he was mustered out at Washington, after participating in the historic review of the Union army after the close of the war.

Dr. Thomas T. Smith spent two years in the Lewistown High School before coming to Canton in 1889. In that year he entered the office of Dr. Charles A. Wedge, and obtained five years of valuable experience before entering upon his professional studies at the Chicago College of Dental Surgery. Having completed the regular three years' course at that institution, he returned to Canton for the practice which has since come to him with encouraging regularity and increasing volume. The Doctor is identified with the Illinois State and the First District Dental Societies and stands high with the profession. His fraternal relations are as a member of the Sons of Veterans, Knights of Pythias and Red Men. In politics he is a Republican.

On October 30, 1902, Dr. Smith married Miss Azuba Hagaman, an adopted daughter of Benjamin Hagaman, a pioneer of Norris, Fulton County. She lived there with her foster parents until the death of Mr. Hagaman in 1900, when, with her mother, she removed to Fairview, where she was married.

SMITH, William, was a sterling and an honored pioneer farmer of Bernadotte Township, who died at his home in Ipava, Ill., on the 10th of June, 1900. He was born in Cumberland County, Pa., March 6, 1827, his parents being also natives of the Keystone State. When he was quite young they removed to Ohio, where the family remained until 1837. In that year he located in Illinois, although he was then but ten years of age, making his home in Effingham County until 1839. The boy then started on foot for his home in Coshocton County, Ohio, arriving safely, but naturally weary, at his destination. He remained in Ohio until 1852, or until he was twenty-five years of age, and then made the return trip to Illinois, again on foot.

Upon this occasion Mr. Smith stopped in Vermont Township, Fulton County, where he engaged himself to work by the month, being thus employed on a farm for the succeeding two years. In 1854 he returned to his old Ohio home, remaining there until 1858, when he again located in Fulton County as a farm laborer. On October 21, 1860, William Smith was joined in wedlock with Ellen Hopkins, daughter of Dr. G. V. Hopkins, at that time a resident of Woodland Township, Fulton County. As is usually the case this event was the commencement of a more independent and prosperous career; for soon after his marriage he rented a farm, which he operated with success until 1863, when he was enabled to purchase 200 acres in Section 34, Bernadotte Township. Of this tract he sold forty acres, and then industriously and skillfully improved a farm of 163 acres, making it a comfortable family homestead until 1898, when, most of his children having matured into men and women, he retired from active life and moved to Ipava. There, as stated, he died in 1900.

Although not connected with any church, the deceased was a man of the strictest integrity and an uncompromising sense of honor; and he was not only virtuous, from the standpoint of personal honor, but he possessed the positive qualities of helpfulness and practical encouragement, both to the private needy and to church and educational movements which appealed to him as for the public good. In all things his habits were founded on temperance, although strongly opposed to the use of tobacco in any form. Such a character could not but be respected, honored and loved, albeit its true value could only be known by those who held the closest relations to it—the wife, sons and daughters.

To Mr. and Mrs. William Smith were born the following children: Margaret, born July 17, 1861, who became the wife of William Rowland; Mary Ann, born September 2, 1862, who died in infancy; Laura E., September 7, 1863, who married Professor John R. Rowland, one of the leading educators of this part of the State; Phœbe, October 30, 1865, who was the wife of Henry Rowland, a farmer of Bernadotte Township, and died February 15, 1904; Francis V., February 28, 1868; William and Henry (twins), September 21, 1870 (William died February 4, 1873); John D., September 30, 1872; Garrett B., July 10, 1876; and Nellie H., February 28, 1884.

SMITH, William H.—The name of William H. Smith is inseparably associated with the history of Illinois for at least fifty years following his arrival in the State in 1837. He came of the South, bringing with him to an undeveloped and practically unknown country a wealth of resource and unspoiled ambition, tempered with rare judgment and business sagacity. In his veins flowed the blood of agriculturists, tradesmen and patriots, and that dignity upheld his actions commonly associated with people accustomed in youth to the settled conditions of the Old Dominion, where he was born in Smithfield, Jefferson County, February 4, 1819. His father, Henry Smith, was born in Brandenburg, Prussia, Germany, July 4, 1777, and in boyhood learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed diligently as a journeyman after his arrival in Baltimore, Md., July 4, 1799. It was while traveling from house to house and making shoes for whole families at a time, that he met his future wife, Mary Fry, who was born June 5, 1783, in Jefferson County, Va., and who died February 14, 1829, leaving six daughters and three sons: John F., Catherine, Phœbe, Frances, Mary Eliza, Harriet, William H., Elizabeth and Braxton D. Mr. Smith subsequently married a second wife, by whom he had two children—Mary and Mathilda S. Mr. Smith participated in the War of 1812 and, at the age of eighty-eight years and five months, died December 4, 1864, in the house which he built at the time of his marriage, and where also died both his first and his second wife.

William H. Smith secured his education under difficulties of two kinds, the first because of scarcity of teachers in Virginia and the second because of his own predilection for youthful diversion as against the grind of the school-room. He therefore was classed among the observers rather than the students of mankind, and from practical experience gained a wealth of the best kind of education. At the age of fourteen he sought to learn the tailor's trade of his brother-in-law, but having lost an eye, the occupation proved too trying and confining. He next learned the milling business under another brother-in-law, with the understanding that he was to receive $2.50 per month and board. The young man was encouraged by his father and brother-in-law to try foraging in the West, and, being without the means of proceeding thither, the brother-in-law gave him a hog, which, when fattened, brought him the sum of $12.18. He also sold an old smooth-bore rifle given him by his father for about $12, and in all managed to accumulate about $30, with which he set out to seek his fortune in the Central West, May 1, 1837. It is said of Mr. Smith that he accomplished the journey to Peoria practically on foot, trudging courageously through a portion of his native State, Maryland and Pennsylvania, and stopping at country taverns and farm houses. By assisting to carry wood on board a steamer he secured passage from Wheeling to Peoria by boat, and during this water journey had many interesting experiences. Peoria was a small town when he reached there, and he soon found employment in a brick manufactory, where he blistered his hands making brick of mortar in the old-fashioned way. He later arose to a paying position in the manufactory, in time accepting a position in a mill at Utica, Fulton County, of which he eventually became manager and finally sole proprietor, and in connection with which he fitted up and operated an old distillery. Through later association with dishonest partners he lost out at the milling business, and then, upon the urgent request of the older people of the community, assumed charge of a school where were pupils older and larger than himself. He next engaged in the mercantile business in Utica, but his ardor was dampened and his possibilities diminished by thieves breaking in and relieving him of $300, gotten together at great sacrifice, to purchase additional stock. Thereupon Mr. Smith, much discouraged, repaired to a farm of 120 acres, which he had secured from Warner Hurd, at that time separated from his wife. Here also was trouble for the erstwhile brick manufacturer, miller and merchant, for the deed to the property lacked the signature of the owner's wife, and Mr. Smith was obliged to buy it again upon the death of Mr. Hurd. In this emergency he was obliged to borrow several hundred dollars and to pay interest at 12 per cent.

Beginning his farm life in a small log cabin, and with few buildings or implements, Mr. Smith struggled as only a brave and strong man can struggle under trying and discouraging circumstances. As his fortunes looked up and he came out from under the burden of debt he invested in stock and unimproved property, disposing of the latter at an invariable advance. Before the advent of the railroads he kept up a brisk trade with river boats, supplying them with beef, vegetables and general edibles. In 1856 he built a steam saw mill, where the timber of the region was converted into lumber, and thus he became an agent towards opening up the resources of the township. In 1868 he bought what was known as the Fidler farm and later twelve sections of land in Seward and Butler Counties, Neb. In November, 1881, he paid $14,300 for the tract of land still owned by his family, and in the spring of 1885 added to his possessions 212 acres in the south part of the McKinley lands, paying for the latter $8,000. He also became owner of 379 acres in Mason County, Ill.; eighty acres in Walnut Grove, a farm of 175 acres in Peoria County, and other country and town property in various portions of Illinois. These large holdings were innocent of mortgages or other incumbrances, and represented the labor and spirit of a man who knew how to mold circumstances rather than be molded by them, and who had arisen splendidly to the emergency created by his early misfortunes.

The first wife of Mr. Smith was Lavina Bybee, a daughter of T. T. Bybee, to whom he was married May 24, 1839. After a wedded life of four months and ten days the young wife passed away, leaving her husband, then but twenty years old. On November 19, 1840, he married as his second wife Elizabeth C., a daughter of Elijah Wilcoxon, and cousin of his first wife. The second Mrs. Smith died April 4, 1863, at the age of thirty-eight years, seven months and five days, the mother of five sons and seven daughters, four of whom died in early life. May 6, 1866, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Abbie Mason, who is the mother of two sons and two daughters. Mr. Smith is a Republican, but never has been active in the councils of his party. Too much cannot be said in commendation of the fortitude and energy which have characterized his life, and the results achieved by his vigorous methods.

SMITH, William Walker, one of the most honored of the pioneer farmers of Fulton County, Ill., who is living in comfortable retirement in Section 14, Lewistown Township, was born in Lewis County, Ky., November 10, 1816, and is a son of John and Amelia (Walker) Smith, who were natives of Kentucky. In 1834, the family journeyed from Lewis County in that State to Fulton County, Ill., and settled in Lewistown Township in the fall of that year. There William W. Smith has ever since made his home. John Smith and his wife were the parents of seven children, namely: Mary; Nancy, who wedded Franklin Putman (both now deceased), having accompanied her parents to Fulton County in 1834; America, who married William Bissell, both deceased; Minerva, who married John Conner, deceased; Sidney, who was the wife of John Beadles, deceased; Francis M., deceased; Holyoke; and Jeffers, who wedded Joshua Ward, both deceased. The mother of this family passed away in 1873. When she and her husband settled in Fulton County land which now brings $100 and $125 per acre was sold at $1.50 and $2.00, and wild game and ague abounded everywhere.

William W. Smith has lived in Fulton County seventy-two years, and during his active life was one of its leading men. He first located on a tract of eighty acres thickly timbered, which he sold in 1857, and bought another eighty-acre tract for which he paid fifty-seven dollars per acre. His first dwelling was a hewn-log house, a story and a half high, eighteen by twenty feet in dimensions, and roofed with hewn shingles. Inside, Mr. Smith lined the cabin with lime and mortar. The weather boarding he shaved with a drawing knife, and then put it on and painted it. Then he laid the floors, and built the chimney outside, in the Kentucky style. He dug the wells, and quarried the rock and walled them. He has been one of the hardest workers of the pioneer band, and smiles at this advanced period in the country's history, when he contrasts the dearth of comforts and the struggle for existence, which marked the experience of the early settler, with the facilities of the telephone and free delivery. In those times Mr. Smith hauled saw-logs to Ellisville, Ill., for milling, and when the supply of salt was exhausted he started for St. Louis to renew it, but obtained a sufficiency at Alton to meet the needs of the neighborhood, paying $4 per bushel. Mr. Smith's father-in-law, on several occasions, hauled wheat to Chicago, and exchanged it for groceries. In 1841, was produced the heaviest crop of wheat ever raised in Fulton County, and the harvesting of Mr. Smith's wheat and oats required forty-two days with the hand sickle. After being tramped out with horses, the grain was hauled to Liverpool, Ill., and sold at forty cents per bushel; the wheat brought eighty-five cents.

On February 18, 1844, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Mary Ann Crossthwaite, and their union resulted in seven children, as follows: Snowden, who is engaged in farming in Fulton County; Viola, deceased, who became the wife of Isaiah Hummel, also deceased; Mary A., who is the wife of John W. Ashton, a resident of Lamar, Mo.; Lucy M., deceased, who became the wife of Edward Moore, also deceased; Emma, who is the wife of George W. Thomas, and resides in Rushville, Ind.; Francis M., who carries on farming just east of one place of his brother, Snowden, and is the husband of Carrie Buffum; and Clarence G., who wedded Eva Smith and is a resident of Urbana, Ill. Two years after his first wife's death, in 1885, Mr. Smith took for his second wife, Eliza J. Kelso, a native of Kansas.

In politics, Mr. Smith was a Whig until the election of William H. Harrison as President in 1840. Since the organization of the Republican party he has since steadily voted that ticket. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his wife is connected with the Presbyterian denomination. Mr. Smith is regarded with profound respect and warm esteem by hosts of friends, whose cordial good wishes attend his declining years.

SNIVELY, Charles D., M. D.—Eight years of effort to maintain the health of a large part of the population of Sumnum has drawn the career of Dr. Charles D. Snively within the fold of a large and emphatic need, giving him an increasing outlet for a wealth of professional and general usefulness. Dr. Snively was born January 20, 1875, in Cuba, Fulton County, of which town his father, Frank M. Snively, was for years one of the foremost citizens and merchants. His mother, Elizabeth (Laswell) Snively, was also born in Cuba, a daughter of parents who came early from Ohio, and settled west of the old town of Centerville (since christened Cuba), which then boasted but few of the pale-face brotherhood. The property deed of Mr. Laswell was signed by President Buchanan.

Frank M. Snively was born in Richland County, Ohio, and as a young, unmarried man came to Cuba during the latter '30s, engaging in the harness business with his father, Henry Snively, to whom he was indebted for a knowledge of the trade. Noting the need of a general store, in 1865 Mr. Snively established a business which, from a small beginning, he developed into one of the most substantial interests this town has known. The store that had its rise in the re-construction period following the Civil War, kept pace always with the increasing needs of the community, and still is a familiar feature of the commercial side, being at present operated by George and Frank Snively, sons of the founder.

While on a business trip to Peoria, this State, in July, 1901, Mr. Snively was thrown from a street car, sustaining the injuries which resulted in his death in less than an hour. This lamented occurrence removed a prosperous and influential citizen, a man who accumulated a competence through straightforward methods, and who strove always for the best educational, political, commercial and social welfare of the town of his adoption. Mr. Snively was prominent in the councils of the Democratic party, but his inclination lay far from the feverish uncertainty of office seeking. Nevertheless, he served a quarter of a century on the Cuba Board of Education, and during that time labored unceasingly for the best possible local opportunities. He is survived by his wife, who owns the largest share in the mercantile business, and who, during their many years of association, shared his high ideals and practical ambitions. They were the parents of the following children: Flora A., wife of G. N. Grigsby, of Peoria; George E., a merchant of Cuba; James C., a physician and merchant of Fruitdale, Ala; Elsie M., living at home; Lewis W., managing editor of the Mt. Pleasant (Iowa) Republican; Frank R., a business partner with his brother, George E., in Cuba; Jessie, formerly a teacher in the Enreka (Ill.) College; Leah M., who died a month after her marriage to William Campbell, while visiting the St. Louis Exposition; and Ruth, attending the Eureka College.

As a lad, Charles D. Snively made himself useful around his father's general store, and in 1892 graduated from the Cuba High School. During the following two years he was in the store, and in the meantime began reading medicine with his brother, James C., and Drs. Welch and Ray, of Cuba, and in the fall of 1894 entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, at Keokuk, Iowa, from which he was graduated in the class of 1899. While in college he took private lessons of Dr. F. B. Dorsey, an authority on diseases of women and children, and he located first at Flatt, Fulton County, where he remained about a year. In 1898 he fixed his residence at Summum, this county, and in 1900 took a course in the New York Post-Graduate School and Hospital. The Doctor has a well equipped office, and appliances for the most delicate and exacting demands of his profession. He has been deservedly successful, and is a necessary adjunct to many of the finest households in this part of the county.

On March 5, 1902, Dr. Snively was united in marriage to Hattie Rice, a native of Astoria, and daughter of George W. and Alice (Toler) Rice, natives of Pennsylvania and Astoria, respectively. The Doctor is a member of the Fulton County Medical Society and the Illinois State Medical Society. Fraternally, he is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. Personally, he is a young man of rare discretion, tact and helpfulness, an earnest and painstaking exponent of the best tenets of medical science, and an indefatigable seeker after those things which produce health and therefore happiness to the human race.

SNIVELY, Clarence Eugene, editor and publisher of the Daily and Weekly Canton Register, Canton, Ill., was born at Ellisville, Fulton County, July 4, 1854, the son of Naaman and Almada (Dunning) Snively. After receiving the benefit of a common school education, in 1867, at the age of thirteen years, he began to learn the printer's trade in the office of the Rushville (Ill.) Times, completing his apprenticeship in the office of the Pekin Register. In 1873 he went to Carlinville, Ill., where he became connected with the Carlinville Democrat, in which he was owner of a half-interest for the space of one year. In October, 1877, he removed to Canton, Fulton County, in June of the following year becoming proprietor of the Canton Weekly Register, to which twelve years later (1890) he added a daily edition, and has conducted both papers continuously to the present time. His newspaper interests have proved financially successful, and the daily and weekly editions of the Canton Register now rank among the most prosperous papers in the Military Tract district, being published from a building especially erected for that purpose in 1900.

For more than a quarter of a century Mr. Snively has been a prominent leader in local and State politics, for twenty-six years serving as Secretary of the Republican Central and Executive Committees of Fulton County, and early in 1885 being appointed by President Arthur, Postmaster of the city of Canton, retaining this position for a period of nineteen months and until the appointment of his successor by President Cleveland. In 1889 he received from Governor Fifer an appointment on the Board of Canal Commissioners, which he retained for four years and until after the accession of Governor Altgeld. In 1897 he was re-appointed to the same position by Governor Tanner, which he has continued to occupy by successive re-appointments, under the administrations of Governors Yates and Deneen, up to the present time, also serving since 1897 as President of the Board. Few, if any, members of the Canal Commission have ever had a longer term of service or more extended experience in this connection than has the subject of this sketch.

Other positions of a political character occupied by Mr. Snively include those of Alternate to the Republican National Convention of 1884; and Delegate and Secretary of the State delegation to both the Republican National Conventions of 1888 and 1896. He has also been a member of the Republican State Central Committee since 1900, and Chairman of the Press Committee of the same body since 1904. He was one of the founders of the Illinois Republican Editorial Association, serving two terms as Secretary and an equal number of terms as President, and, at the present time, is a member of the Executive Committee of that organization, which he has occupied since retiring from the Presidency.

Mr. Snively was married at Pekin, Ill., on April 6, 1873, to Miss Cecelia Ray Young, and they have the following named children: Clarence Eugene, Jr., Elizabeth, Ray, Jane, Earl, Ethan Allen, Dorthy, Donald, Marion and Nellie. His political sentiments are indicated by the official positions he has occupied, and during the more than twenty-five years of his public life he has been one of the influential factors in connection with the history of Fulton County and Western Illinois.

SNIVELY, George E., a well-known and successful general merchant of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that village July 18, 1862, a son of Francis M. and Elizabeth (Laswell) Snively, natives respectively of Ohio and Illinois. Francis M. Snively entered into the mercantile business in Cuba, Ill., in 1865, and was thus engaged until his death, in 1900. He dealt in boots and shoes, wall paper, dry goods and general groceries. He served one term as Coroner. He was also for years a member of the Village Board, and of the School Board for twenty-five years.

The subject of this sketch is one of a family of ten children. In boyhood, he received his mental training in the public schools of his native town, and afterwards pursued a course of study in the Jacksonville Business College.

He then entered into business with his father, and thus continued until the latter's death, when he assumed entire charge of the concern. He owns a farm of eighty acres on Section 25, Cass Township, and also writes some fire insurance.

On May 29, 1885, Mr. Snively was united in matrimony with Eliza Efnor, who was born in Cuba, Ill., and there attended public school. This union resulted in six children, namely: Lois, Edna, Orrin, Mary, Jean and Esta. As between political parties, Mr. Snively casts his lot with the Democratic party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. A. In business affairs he is competent and honorable, personally is respected, and, as a citizen, is regarded as a useful member of the community.

SNIVELY, Perrin H., Cashier of the Farmers' State Bank of Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that town on October 17, 1841, and there in boyhood, received his education in the public schools. He is a son of Henry and Sarah (Stevenson) Snively, natives of Pennsylvania. The father located in Cuba in 1839, and in the '40s entered into general merchandising, continuing thus until his death in 1860. In early life the son learned the harness business, in which he was engaged for seven years, subsequently becoming a salesman in a general store, which he conducted successfully for twenty-two years. On August 11, 1892, the Farmers' State Bank was organized, of which he became Cashier and has since acted in that capacity. He is also interested in farming property in Fulton County, and now owns 330 acres in Putnam and Cass Townships, also city property in Cuba.

On September 2, 1863, Mr. Snively was united in marriage with Mary E. Wright, who was born in Fulton County and is a daughter of William and Amelia (Hull) Wright, natives of Maryland and Virginia, respectively. Two children have resulted from this union, namely: George L., who lives in St. Louis, Mo.; and Zadie (Mrs. W. M. Fike), who resides in Lewistown, Ill.

Politically, Mr. Snively is a supporter of the Democratic party. From 1886 to 1890 he served as County Clerk with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of his constituents. Religiously he is connected with the Christian Church, and fraternally is identified with the A. F. & A. M. He possesses superior business ability, is a man of absolute rectitude of character and is regarded as a useful and influential citizen.

SNYDER, Andrew.—For over thirty-two years the subject of this sketch has made his home in Avon, Fulton County, Ill., and during this time has added materially to the upbuilding and progress of this part of his adopted State. Of Eastern birth and parentage, he was born in Paterson, N. J., January 24, 1844, a son of Andrew and Helen (Van Houten) Snyder, both natives of New Jersey. By trade the father was a contractor, a calling which he continued to follow throughout his active years.

Andrew Snyder, Jr., passed his boyhood and youth in the place of his birth; in fact, until grown to manhood, he had had little or no acquaintance with the world outside of Paterson. He was educated in that city, and as soon as his school days were over apprenticed himself to his father to learn the carpenter's trade. No doubt he inherited a predilection for the calling, and when to this is added the thorough instruction and training which his father was qualified to impart, it goes without saying that he learned his trade rapidly and was soon prepared to begin work independently. As a thorough master of his calling he had no difficulty in finding all the work he could do, the most of his contracts being executed in Paterson and New York City. Though he was meeting with excellent success as a contractor and builder in the East, the fact that his wife's parents were planning to settle in the Middle West induced him to consider a similar change of location and, in 1875, both families transferred their homes to Fulton County, Ill. Coming at once to Avon, Mr. Snyder here continued the contracting and building business, and during the nearly thirty years in which he followed the calling, erected many of the substantial buildings within a radius of twenty miles of Avon, both residences and business blocks. It was about the year 1903 that he gave up following his trade and for a time clerked in the mercantile establishment of Merrill & Merrill. With the confidence born of experience he soon felt qualified to enter mercantile life in his own behalf, and in March, 1905, he bought out the dry-goods department from his former employers, the business since that date being conducted under the name of Snyder & Co. Besides a full line of dry-goods and ladies' furnishings, his stock includes boots and shoes, oilcloth and all similar household furnishings.

While still a resident of Paterson, N. J., in 1865, Mr. Snyder was united in marriage with Selena C. Yeomans, who, like himself, was a native of New Jersey. The only child born of their union was Catherine M., now Mrs. Merrill. Mr. Snyder takes a lively interest in the well-being of his home town, and, as a member of its town board, does all in his power to forward measures that will redound to the public good. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow, being a charter member of the lodge in which he holds membership. Both Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are members of the Congregational Church of Avon.

SNYDER, C. W.—Strict attention to business and undaunted faith in ability to succeed have been foremost factors in the rise of C. W. Snyder, general manager of the business of Armstrong & Company, cigar manufacturers of Canton. Mr. Snyder is a native of Canton, and was born in 1860. His original business equipment was a good name, a fair endowment of intellect and a practical common school education. His father, D. W. Snyder, who was born in 1836, was a native of London, Mercer County, Pa., and his mother, who was born in 1840, was a native of Ohio, and died in Canton in January, 1905. The elder Snyder was a cabinet-maker by trade, and after years of employment in the carpenter and building business, turned his attention to an undertaking business in Canton, which he conducted for years in partnership with his brother George. He was thrifty and resourceful, and accumulated a comfortable competence.

C. M. Snyder became identified with the Armstrong Manufacturing Company in 1891, and ten years later, in July, 1901, became general manager of the business. He is interested in Democratic politics, and fraternally is prominent, being a member of the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Eagles and Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Snyder has been twice married. His first wife, whom he married in 1890, died in 1895. The present Mrs. Snyder, whom he married June 23, 1901, was Lou Spencer, daughter of George Spencer, of Canton. There are two children in the family—Panline A. and Carroll R. In the character and work of Mr. Snyder, the family name received additional local prestige, and more than ever is identified with stable and reliable civic growth.

SPENCER, William J., a well known resident of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., and Vice President and General Manager of the Monmouth Coal Company, was born in DuPage County, Ill., on March 6, 1859, and there received his early mental training. He is a son of William H. and Mary (Lawler) Spencer, natives of Ireland, where the father was born January 25, 1828, and the mother in 1820. William H. Spencer was engaged in railroad work for the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, and had previously done similar work for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Company in Iowa and Missouri. He died at St. David, Fulton County, in 1893, his wife having passed away there in 1885.

The subject of this sketch came to Canton in 1883, and has always been identified with the coal industry. The Monmouth Coal Company was organized in 1901, with J. R. Hanna, of Monmouth, as President; W. J. Spencer, of Canton, as Vice President and General Manager; W. D. Brereton, of Monmouth, Secretary and Treasurer; and Charles P. Jacobson, of Brereton, Superintendent.

On May 10, 1893, Mr. Spencer was married to Minnie Della Wasson, who was born in September, 1864, and died January 11, 1894. No children were born of this union. In politics, Mr. Spencer is a Republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M.

SPRAGUE, Leigh T., a well known, efficient and popular teacher of Orion Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born near Glasford, Peoria County, Ill., on October 29, 1871, a son of Lycurgus S. and Laura (Lighthody) Sprague, natives of Illinois. In youth, the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the schools of Bushnell and Canton, Ill., and accompanied his parents to Orion Township, Fulton County, where his father bought forty acres of land in Section 35, and there engaged in farming. Since 1891, Mr. Sprague has pursued the occupation of a school teacher, and is now the principal of Breed's School. Wherever he has taught, he has been regarded as thoroughly competent, and has enjoyed the confidence and respect of pupils and parents, alike.

On March 20, 1894, Mr. Sprague was united in marriage with Bertha Houston, who was born in Fulton County, and is a daughter of John and Maggie (Crothers) Houston, natives of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Sprague are the parents of four children: Shelby and Elva, Ethelyn and Lillie. In politics, Mr. Sprague is connected with the Republican party. He has held the office of Town Clerk one term, and, in the spring of 1905, was elected Supervisor of Orion Township, in which capacity he is now serving with efficiency and fidelity. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Star Encampment.

SPULER, Lewis J.—Of the well-to-do miners whose activity is centered around Farmington none is better or more favorably known than Lewis J. Spuler, at present operating the mine known as Black Hawk No. 1. Mr. Spuler is of German paternal ancestry, and was born on a farm in Rock Island County, Ill., August 29, 1862. His father, Peter Spuler, was a native of Battenburg, Germany, and his mother, Magdalena (White) Spuler, was a native of Michigan. The elder Spuler learned the cooper's trade in his native land, and after emigrating to America followed the same in Buffalo, N. Y., and in Rock Island, Ill., making the latter town his home until his death. He and his wife were the parents of three children.

At an early age Lewis J. Spuler began working in the mines of Rock Island County, and later learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed successfully for eight years. In 1889 he returned to his former occupation of mining near Norris, Fulton County, and in 1891 came to Farmington where he has since been very successful in connection with the Black Hawk No. 1. His marriage to Mary Growcutt occurred in Angus, Iowa, in 1886, and of their union there are six children: John, Irena, Roy, Lewis, O., and Allegra. Mr. Spuler is a Democrat in politics and fraternally is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the F. R. L. A. In 1905 he was elected Supervisor of Farmington Township, and has served as Alderman of the town of Farmington four years. He is a capable and public-spirited citizen, genial in manner and honorable in action, and his association with Farmington is to his own and the town's advantage.

SPURGEON, Elmer.—Besides being the owner of the most beautiful residence in Avon, Fulton County, Mr. Spurgeon owns a section of land in Warren County, Ill., which in point of fertility would be hard to excel. Born in Warren County May 17, 1876, he is a son of Israel and Elizabeth (Marshall) Spurgeon, the father born in Kentucky in 1829 and the mother in Ohio two years later. Throughout his life the father adhered to the calling to which he was trained in his childhood, carrying on farming first in his native State, and later in Illinois. Upon coming to the State in an early day he located first in Avon, but shortly afterward he removed to Warren County and purchased a farm, and from that time on followed farming throughout his working days.

To Elmer Spurgeon, more than to the average youth of his acquaintance, fell the privilege of gaining an education outside of that provided by the schools of his home town. Supplementary to his grammar school training he attended the high school at Avon, later was a student at Notre Dame, and the finishing touches to his education were received at Knox College, Galesburg, Ill. When his college days were over he returned to the home farm and gave his father his services in the care and management of the farm, and after his father's death he continued its management until his removal to Avon, whither his mother had in the meantime removed.

Mr. Spurgeon was united in marriage with Maggie A. Ault, who was born in Fulton County September 5, 1880. In fraternal and club circles in Avon Mr. Spurgeon is a well known figure, being a member of the Masons, Order of Eastern Star, Knights of Pythias, the B. B. O. E., and also a member of the Business Men's Club of Avon. He finds his church home in the Universalist Church and with his wife attends the services of that denomination in Avon. Politically he is a Democrat.

STAGGS, James William, who as a farmer and citizen of Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., maintains a record second to none, was born in that county March 26, 1856, his birthplace being in Union Township. His father, James T. Staggs, was a native of Ross County, Ohio, where he was born August 26, 1830, and his mother, Sara Ann (Kutchler) Staggs, was born June 20, 1833, in the State of New Jersey. James T. Staggs was a farmer by occupation. His arrival in Fulton County occurred in 1849 and his first purchase of land of eighty acres, on Section 28, Union Township, was the farm on which the birth of his son, James W., took place. There the father was successfully engaged in his customary pursuit of farming until his death on May 18, 1902, the decease of his wife taking place December 20, 1887. They were the parents of five children, as follows: J. H., J. W., G. M., Mary E. and Mina S.

In boyhood James W. Staggs attended the district schools convenient to his home and afterwards was a pupil in the high school at Avon, Fulton County. His early youth was spent on the paternal premises, where he has remained all his life, except during a period of three years' residence in Abingdon, Ill., where he located in 1893, but returned to his farm in 1896. His farming methods are systematic and progressive, and he is known throughout the county and beyond its limits as a successful breeder of Durham cattle.

The wife of Mr. Staggs, formerly Miss Ida E. Little, with whom he was united in marriage at Avon, Ill., September 7, 1882, was born in Mercer County, Ill., February 9, 1860, a daughter of William F. and Elizabeth (Shoemaker) Little, natives of Illinois and Virginia. This union resulted in six children, as follows: Mina E., William F., Edna B., James G. B., Jessie L. and Cordelia.

On political questions Mr. Staggs adheres to the principles of the Republican party. Religiously his connection is with the Methodist denomination. He is the owner of 400 acres of land and is recognized as one of the most prominent and prosperous farmers in his locality. As a citizen he maintains an honorable standing and his character commands respect wherever he is known.

STAMBAUGH, George H., one of the most enterprising, progressive and successful of the younger element of farmers and stock-raisers in Fulton County, Ill., whose farming operations are carried on in Section 34, Pleasant Township, is a native of Fulton County, where he was born in Woodland Township, January 23, 1877. He is a son of Michael and Sarah (Bear) Stambaugh, details of whose lives, together with further particulars in regard to the family history, may be found in a biographical record of the former, which appears elsewhere in these pages.

George H. Stambaugh was reared on the home farm and his education was obtained in the township district schools, his youthful efforts being meanwhile devoted towards assisting his father in cultivating the lands and attending to the routine work of the place. In 1897, after his marriage, Mr. Stambaugh rented 160 acres of land in Woodland Township, which he occupied for one year, after which he rented another farm consisting of 240 acres, situated in the vicinity of Leesburg, where he was quite successful. He next rented the farm which he now conducts, and in 1904 the 320 acres on Section 34, Pleasant Township, became his property. He now devotes his attention largely to the breeding of full-blooded Shorthorn cattle, of which he has a fine herd on his farm, maintaining also a good grade of draft horses. Mr. Stambaugh possesses in a notable degree all the qualities which enable a man to take the lead in whatever he undertakes—intelligence, resolute purpose, untiring energy and diligent application to the details of the work he has in hand. His efforts have been rewarded by very favorable results, and although one of the youngest representatives of his vocation in the township, he has attained a prominent standing among the most successful farmers in his locality.

Mr. Stambaugh has been twice married. On February 5, 1899, he was united in matrimony with Leah Bucher, who was born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of Cyrus Bucher, one of the wealthiest and most widely and favorably known citizens of Fulton County, an extended narrative of whose career appears in another portion of this volume. Two children followed this union, namely: Clara May, born December 3, 1899, and Beulah Belle, born October 1, 1903. The mother of these children, a most amiable and estimable woman, died October 12th of the last named year. Mr. Stambaugh wedded for his second wife Fannie Bucher, another daughter of Cyrus Bucher, and in every respect worthy to take the place of her lamented sister in Mr. Stambaugh's household, being the possessor of many graces and exceptionally fine traits of character. Mrs. Stambaugh was born in Fulton County, January 1, 1884. She and her husband are the parents of a son, Jay B., born June 16, 1905, and a daughter, Verna Marie, born November 17, 1906.

In politics Mr. Stambaugh is a supporter of the Democratic party. Religiously he and his wife are earnest and active members of the German Baptist Brethren Church, a denomination commonly known as the Dunkards. Mr. and Mrs. Stambaugh are held in the highest esteem by all who know them, and the circle of their acquaintance is wide.

STANDARD, Hezekiah W., who is counted among the substantial, progressive and representative farmers of Fulton County, Ill., was formerly a resident of Joshua Township, that county, where he was born January 13, 1851, but is now living retired in Canton, Ill. His parents, Thomas and Rachael (Peterson) Standard, well known pioneers of that region, were natives of Kentucky and Ohio, respectively. Thomas Standard, whose occupation was that of a farmer, settled in Fulton County, in the year 1828, locating in the vicinity of Lewistown, where he remained until the following year, when he moved to Joshua Township. There, after farming for two or three years on what was called the Kaiser place, he bought eighty acres of a Mr. Day in 1832. On this he made all the improvements and carried on farming during the remainder of his life, at one time being the owner of between three and four hundred acres. He was twice married, first to Rachael Peterson, who bore him six children, his second wife bearing him the same number. Thomas Standard departed this life in 1877. He was a man of sturdy character and irreproachable habits. In politics he was a Democrat and in religious belief a Methodist.

Hezekiah W. Standard received his early mental training in the country schools of the neighborhood where he was born. At the time of his mother's death in 1890 he took possession of the paternal farm, which he has since owned. It consists of 253 acres of land, situated on Sections 23 and 24, Joshua Township. In 1893 Mr. Standard built a large barn, and in 1895 erected a spacious and convenient residence, and all its surroundings are of modern construction and conducive to comfort. In 1906 Mr. Standard erected a new and beautiful brick residence in Canton at 269 North Main Street, where he and his wife now reside.

On August 31, 1874, Mr. Standard was united in marriage with Sarah Kingery, who was born in Ohio, a daughter of Noah and Sarah (Bourcher) Kingery, natives, respectively, of Maryland and Ohio, and Mr. and Mrs. Standard are the parents of the following children: Arthur, born January 3, 1875, now a resident of Fairview, Fulton County; Minta (Mrs. Cathers), born November 4, 1876, and now a resident of Peoria, Ill.; Marion, born December 28, 1878, now employed in a mill in Chicago; Henry, who dwells under the paternal roof; Harvey, born December 4, 1888; Hezzie, born March 13, 1886, also with his parents; Perry, born March 5, 1889, now on the home farm; and Clara Belle, born July 22, 1898.

In politics the subject of this sketch is a supporter of the Democratic party and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., K. of P. and M. W. A. Individually, socially and in his civic relations he has always maintained an excellent standing and commands the respect and confidence of a wide circle of acquaintances.

STANLEY, Charles H.—For two years lacking half a century Charles H. Stanley has been a resident of Canton, this county, and during the greater part of that time has been identified with the building interests of the town. To his skill and ability are due many of the imposing and substantial structures now occupied as residences or used for business, and evidences are abundant of his having contributed very largely to the generally pleasing architectural aspect of the town. In addition to thoroughly understanding his business Mr. Stanley had the faculty of commanding excellent service from others, and as a large employer of labor won a reputation for great consideration and tactfulness. He at all times has been the broad-minded and thoroughly earnest citizen.

Mr. Stanley comes of not only excellent but cultured parentage, his father, Robert F. Stanley, also a native of England, having been a minister in the Church of England. His mother formerly was Caroline Hester, daughter of John Hester. Charles H. was born in Buckinghamshire, England, February 10, 1834, and when three years old was brought to America by his parents, settling for a brief time in New York City, but afterward moving to Rochester, the same State. Here the father died in 1848, when his son was fourteen years old, leaving besides the latter three other children to the care of his wife. After Charles had completed his education in the public schools of Rochester he served an apprenticeship as carpenter to his uncle, Charles H. Stanley, with whom he remained three years, and thereafter went to Cleveland, Ohio, to work at his trade for another uncle. Discerning brighter business prospects in the Central West, he visited first Havana, Ill., in 1856, but the following year came to Canton, which since has been his home. His energy and ability soon found recognition on a small scale, but as his work became his advertisement, it was not long before his prospects of success were practically assured.

While a resident of Havana, Ill., Mr. Stanley was united in marriage to Nancy Meeker, who died in 1861, leaving a son, Charles C., who is now an Alderman of Canton. The second wife was formerly Dorenda Bybee, daughter of James Bybee, an early settler of Fulton County. Of this second union there is a daughter, Luella J., wife of Jacob Abbott, a prominent attorney of Canton. Mrs. Dorenda Stanley died in 1901. December 25, 1905, Mr. Stanley married Mrs. M. E. Richardson, widow of Captain Richardson, of Milwaukee, Wis. Since his first voting days Mr. Stanley has been a staunch Democrat, and though unsolicited, he has been honored with several elective offices, among them that of Alderman of the Fourth and Fifth Wards. For years he has been prominent in fraternal circles, and is a member of the Morning Star Lodge, No. 734, A. F. and A. M.; Canton Chapter, R. A. M., and the Knights of Pythias. He is a man of strong and upright character, has lent solidity and worth to the city of his adoption and is now living retired in comfort and honor.

STANNARD, James.—A continuous resident of Union Township since his birth at Avon, on the 20th of February, 1858, James Stannard is one of the substantial farmers who have given Fulton County such a high standing among the agricultural districts of the State. He is a son of English parents, Sullivan and Caroline (Carley) Stannard, but as he lived with an uncle from the age of seven years until he reached manhood, he knows little or nothing relative to his ancestors.

Mr. Stannard was educated in the district schools of Union Township while assisting his uncle on his farm and finally establishing himself as an independent husbandman. As a School Director for three years he has evinced an intelligent interest in the public school system of the township, and been practical in his suggestions and work. He is a Democrat in politics, a Catholic in religion and is identified fraternally with the Loyal Americans and the American Guild.

Mr. Stannard was married at Avon on the 20th of October, 1886, to Molly Fahey, a native of that place, born February 17, 1863, and one child has been the result of their union—Ella, born September 21, 1887.

STELL, W. D., whose farming operations in Putman Township, Fulton County, Ill., are among the most extensive and successful carried on in that portion of the county, and who is a member of a family long and favorably known there, was born in Putman Township in 1868, a son of John and Rebecca (Ray) Stell, the father a native of Germany and the mother of Ireland.

John Stell came to the United States in 1838 and proceeded to Illinois, where he settled in the locality which has since been the home of his son. He carried on farming and was also a carpenter by occupation. In both of these pursuits his labors were productive of successful results. After his first purchase of land he continued to buy additional tracts until he became the owner of between six and seven hundred acres. His industrious and useful life came to an end in 1898 and the faithful companion of his long and arduous exertions passed away in 1904.

In early youth the subject of this sketch pursued the elementary studies customary in the country schools, and assisted in his father's farming operations until the time of the latter's decease. Shortly after he began farming for himself on the home place and has since made a number of substantial and attractive improvements on the property, having built a fine barn and erected a spacious and commodious residence. His farm consists of 230 acres of land. Besides general farming his time is occupied to a large extent in the raising of Aberdeen and Polled Angus cattle.

The marriage of Mr. Stell took place in 1898, when he was joined in wedlock with Tillie Winsor, who was born in Buckheart Township, Fulton County. Two children have resulted from this union, namely: Mary and Rebecca.

STEPHENS, James W.—Superior educational and general advantages are shaping the career of James W. Stephens into promising channels and yielding him a comfortable income as a farmer on Section 23, Woodland Township. Born not far from where he now resides, May 8, 1868, Mr. Stephens is a son of William Stephens, a pioneer of Fulton County, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. In 1873 the family moved to near Bushnell, in which town the youth attended the public schools and later the Western Normal. After working on the home farm for a few months Mr. Stephens followed up his educational training with a trip through the West, visiting Oregon, Washington and other States, and returning to his former home in 1898. He was united in marriage to Lena Bloomfield, daughter of R. L. Bloomfield, one of the early and honored pioneers of Fulton County. Mr. Stephens now is managing 320 acres of land and is engaged in general farming and stock-raising. He gives little attention to matters outside of what he considers his legitimate business, but nevertheless is public-spirited and inclined to promote the stable, elevating interests of the township. In his family are two children—Myrl, born April 22, 1900, and Helen, born May 26, 1903.

STEPHENS, William.—No more pronounced study in contrast is available among the up-builders of Fulton County than that presented in the career of William Stephens. Mr. Stephens' twentieth century status is represented by the ownership of 840 acres of land, upon a part of which he worked as a lad at twenty-five cents a day in payment of an outstanding debt of seventy-five dollars. Between his labor-enslaving and poverty-clouded days and those of the prosperous present have occurred many varied and developing experiences, the very existence of which stamps him as a man of courage, initiative and purpose. Excellent antecedents and character moulding surroundings were among the first advantages of Mr. Stephens, the meagerness of his environment forcing him to the persistent exercise of his abilities. The farm where he was born in Campbell County, Ky., in 1828, was eloquent of the courage and endeavor of his grandfather, the Rev. John Stephens, who, from his native State of Virginia, removed to Booneville, Ky., when a boy, then to Campbell County, locating on a farm six miles from Alexandria, then among the outposts of western civilization. In his capacity as a preacher and farmer, he helped subdue the wilderness and direct the moral destinies of men, being one of the eloquent and self-sacrificing leaders who promulgated the doctrine of the Baptist Church along the frontier. So numerous were the Indians at the time of his arrival that the settlers around Booneville built a stockade in which to gather for protection at times of outbreak. When the men went afield to plant their crops or to the forest to hew timber, they invariably carried their guns with them. James Stephens, the son of the Rev. John, and father of William Stephens, was born in Campbell County, Ky., July 8, 1801, and on September 13, 1827, married Margaret Peck, who was born in that county August 15, 1811, daughter of Peter Peck, a soldier in the War of 1812, was in the battle of the Thames, in Canada, when Tecumseh, the famous Indian Chief was killed by Dick Johnson only a few steps from Mr. Peck at the time. Margaret Peck was a granddaughter of a German who came to America at an early day. With his wife and four children, among whom was the son William, then ten years old, James Stephens came to Illinois in 1836, in a wagon drawn by a yoke of oxen preceded by a leading horse. He was poor, and all that he had in the world accompanied him to the wilderness of Fulton County. Selecting a 100-acre tract in Woodland Township, he was obliged to pay three dollars an acre for it, his resources necessitating an outstanding indebtedness of seventy-five dollars. The owner of the land suggested, in this emergency, that William, the son, after sufficient land had been cleared to plant some corn, should assist him with the clearing of his own place, receiving for his services twenty-five cents a day. This proposition was taken up by the lad who, swinging an ax from early morn until late at night, little dreamed that he would some day be the owner of the ground under his feet. At that time game abounded in great variety, and hunting constituted one of the chief diversions and necessities of the settlers. When news by letter came from the country of their birth in the old Bourbon State, the postage thereon was twenty-five cents. These people of the wilds, parents and children, treasured their memories of Kentucky, and when, two years ago, William Stephens returned to Campbell County, he found springs which had delighted them dried up, and naught remained of the old homestead save parts of the foundation.

The family lived three years in the rude log-cabin which had been erected while they were camping in the open air, sleeping at night in the wagon, and its accompaniment was a log stable in which to house the horse and oxen during the winter. Later they built a hewed log house, which still is a feature of the homestead, a weather-beaten, richly associated structure, between the walls of which existed such hope and courage as lifted its occupants above the dire discouragements of life. During the first year five acres were planted to corn, and a few years later grain was raised in large quantities and hauled in wagons to Sharp's Landing on the Illinois, to be loaded on some craft headed for St. Louis. Corn brought twenty-five cents a bushel for several years. The family owned one of the three wagons in Woodland Township, and there were but three school-houses within its borders. Mr. Evans, the first teacher of William Stephens, is buried on the Stephens farm, and his erstwhile pupil now cuts away the waving corn above his resting place. The father bought more land as prosperity rewarded his efforts, and at the time of his death, on March 27, 1876, he owned 300 acres. He was a man of sterling general worth and unquestioned integrity, and agriculturally and otherwise established a high standard. In politics he was a Democrat, and in religion a Baptist. To him and his wife were born eight children younger than William: Mary, a native of Kentucky, who became the wife of O. W. Vanderville, now deceased; John H., a farmer of McDonough County Ill.; Peter, a farmer who died in Kansas; Enoch, who died in Woodland Township, Fulton County; Joseph, residing in Kansas; Eleanor, wife of John B. Frick, of Washington; Andrew, who died in infancy; Francis Marion, a resident of Washington; Angeline, wife of William Salisbury, of Woodland Township, and George W., who died in Oregon.

As he attained his majority ambition and adventure knocked loudly at the door of William Stephens, and at the age of twenty-three, on April 3, 1853, he set out with a family from Ipava for the Territory of Oregon, crossing the plains with ox-teams in seven months and seven days. During his stay in Oregon, in 1854, he was engaged in farming a few months in the Willamette Valley; and with a party of about twenty miners, assisted in organizing the county of Coos and the town of Randolph on the Pacific coast. During the latter part of the same year he went south to California, where he was engaged in mining for several years, but in the fall of 1858 returned by way of the Isthmus of Panama and New York City to his former home in Woodland Township, Fulton County. Mr. Stephens' life-story reads much like a page of fiction as it relates his varied experiences as he crossed the plains, and later traveled from coast to coast. Still unsettled after his return to Fulton County, in the spring of the following year he went to Kansas, where he bought 440 acres of land, upon which he staid for a short time only, and which he finally sold in 1867. In 1860 he went to Colorado, again returning to Woodland Township in the following year and remaining there until 1872. He then bought 160 acres near the old home, upon which he carried on farming until 1873, when he moved to McDonough County and there purchased a farm of similar proportions. This continued to be his home until 1890, when he sold his land there and, returning to Astoria Township, there purchased his father's old homestead of 300 acres in Woodland Township and added thereto until he now owns 840 acres. Of this large property, much is under cultivation, constituting one of the most valuable and productive holdings in Fulton County. The marriage of Mr. Stephens to Mrs. Mary (Welker) Markley occurred February 21, 1864. Mrs. Stephens in girlhood was Mary Welker, and she came to Fulton County with her parents, David and Margaret (Darling) Welker, when thirteen years old. To Mr. and Mrs. Stephens have been born six children, of whom Margaret married S. Cooper, a merchant of Astoria; Etta became the wife of J. R. Pritchett, an attorney of Buda, Ill.; James is a farmer of Woodland Township; Helena is the wife of W. Black, a merchant of Henry, Ill.; Olney lives in Rushville, Ill.; and Joseph operates a farm in Woodland Township. Politically Mr. Stephens is a Democrat, and local party undertakings have profited by his judgment and executive ability. He has been a member of the County Central Committee of his party and has served several terms as Supervisor of Mound and Woodland Townships. He is one of the best informed and most widely read, and one of the most intellectual and studious of the promoters of agricultural science in Fulton County, and for many years his opinion upon important phases of farm development has stood as final among those who sought larger views and riper counsel than they themselves possessed. He is recognized as a man of ability and integrity, is respected by all who know him, and much beloved by such as enjoy his intimate acquaintance.

STEVENS, Willis E., a prominent and favorably known resident of the village of Avon, Fulton County, Ill., who, in addition to the conduct of farming operations in the vicinity of that place, devotes considerable attention to the management of his newspaper, the Avon Sentinel, was born in Lake County, Ill., on June 13, 1863. He is a son of Almon and Almira (Thomas) Stevens, natives of the State of New York. The father, whose occupation was that of a farmer, first established his home in Lake County in 1842. After remaining there about twenty-one years he moved to Fulton County, locating in Avon, where he officiated as Police Magistrate, being the first citizen of Avon to act in such capacity. He was a man of unusual intelligence and much force of character, and was held in high esteem by his townsmen. Politically, he was a Republican and in religion, a Congregationalist. He departed this life in 1895, his wife passing away in 1898. They were the parents of five children, as follows: Harriette, wife of W. H. Rose, who resides in Avon, Ill.; Charles died in 1905 at Keytesville, Mo.; Alice, wife of C. B. Edmonson, of Abingdon Ill.; Frances, twin sister of Alice, who married A. H. Johnson, of Lincoln, Neb.; and Willis E.

The gentleman to whom this personal record pertains obtained the mental instruction of his early days in the Avon school, and at a very early age, was employed by Herman J. Herberitz in connection with the Avon Sentinel, which was founded by Mr. Herberitz in the spring of 1879. Since 1881, M. Stevens has been the proprietor of this paper, and has conducted its publication. In conjunction with its issue, he does job-printing of all kinds. The Sentinel has a weekly circulation of 900 copies, and the plant is equipped with a power press and gasoline engine. Mr. Stevens owns a farm of thirty-six acres in Section 18, Union Township, on which is obtained clay for a tile and brick manufacturing concern located there. He is also the owner of a forty-acre farm, situated in Section 28, of the same township.

On May 26, 1887, Mr. Stevens was united in marriage with Edith Belding, a daughter of Robert and Mary A. (Richer) Belding, who was born and schooled in Union Township, Fulton County. Four children were the result of this union, namely: Mabel, A., born November 7, 1888; Wayne E., born July 24, 1892; Robert A., born November 17, 1894, and Charles Arthur, born January 27, 1907.

In political action Mr. Stevens supports the policies of the Republican party. He formerly served with credit as Township Collector and held the office of Village Clerk from 1898 to 1906. Religiously he is a Congregationalist. His fraternal affiliation is with the M. W. of A. and the K. of P. Among his neighbors in Avon and throughout his section of Fulton County Mr. Stevens is much esteemed and bears the reputation of being a man of superior information, sound judgment, strict integrity and commendable public spirit.

STEVENSON, Dudley O.—Various farms in Fulton County have been improved by the occupancy of Dudley O. Stevenson, at present operating the Marion Lawson place in Deerfield Township. In a little less than ten years since 1898 Mr. Stevenson has increased the value of this fine property, has extensively engaged in general farming and stock-raising and established a standard of agricultural procedure creditable to any enlightened community.

Born in Putman Township, Fulton County, November 23, 1868, Mr. Stevenson is the son of John and Lavina (O'Brien) Stevenson, the former of whom came to Putman Township before its organization, bought 160 acres of timber land and married a native daughter of the wilderness. He cleared and improved his 160 acres on Section 19, reared a large family of children and died the possessor of a valuable estate and the good will and esteem of all who knew him. His son, Dudley O., reared to participate in the needs and activities around him, grew to rugged manhood and at the age of twenty-four engaged in independent farming on the S. A. Kelley property, in Buckheart Township. Two years later he spent a year operating a saw mill and threshing machine, then moved to an eighty-acre farm in Putman Township, upon which he remained until assuming the management of the farm he now occupies, in 1898. In Fairview Township in 1891 Mr. Stevenson married Dessie Tennis, of Fairview, who died the following year. In 1895 he was united in marriage to Effie M. Tennis, sister of his former wife, and of this union there have been born six children: Clarence, Ralph, Edith, Ethel, Ruth and Clyde. Mr. Stevenson is a scientific farmer and excellent business man and has made a success of tenant farming. He is adaptive and obliging and has the faculty of getting along with all with whom he is associated.

STEWART, James M., one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., who is now living in leisurely retirement from the sphere of public activity, was born in Alexandria, Licking County, Ohio, September 15, 1844. He is a son of Richard and Philena (Twining) Stewart, the former a native of Virginia and the latter having been born in Newark, Ohio. The Stewarts are of Scotch descent, while the Twining ancestry runs far back in America. Besides James M., Richard Stewart and his wife had four other children, two of whom died in infancy. The others are: Austin W. Stewart, a resident of Taylorville, Ill., and Annie E., wife of W. H. Failing, of Cambridge, Neb. When the father left his Virginia home he went to Ohio, where he was engaged in farming, and thence he moved to Fulton County, Ill., bought land and followed in the same occupation until his death in 1879. He was buried at Cuba, Ill., but his widow is still living at the age of eighty-five years.

James M. Stewart received his early education in the district schools of his neighborhood and helped his father on the farm until August, 1862, when he enlisted in Company E, One Hundred and Twenty-first Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, being the youngest of the 106 members of the company. The regiment figured very conspicuously in the battle of Chickamauga, and after the close of the war the State of Ohio erected a monument to indicate the regiment's position on Sunday, September 20, 1863. This position was on the extreme right of General Thomas' lines on Snodgrass Hill, Horseshoe Ridge. The brigade to which the regiment was attached was composed of the Seventy-eighth Illinois Regiment and the Ninety-eighth, One Hundred and Thirtieth and One Hundred and Twenty-first Ohio Regiments, together with Battery M, Illinois Light Artillery. The brigade charged the ridge at 2 o'clock p. m., driving the divisions of Hindman and Johnson, of Stonewall Jackson's corps, from their position, and from that time until 6 o'clock p. m. the One Hundred and Twenty-first Ohio Regiment withstood the combined assaults of the two Confederate divisions. The last year of Mr. Stewart's service was spent in the headquarters office of the Inspector General of the Second Division, Fourteenth Army Corps. Of the 106 members of Company E "Morgan" was one of the nineteen who survived to be mustered out at Washington, D. C., after the Grand Review. The loss of the One Hundred and Twenty-first Ohio Regiment in the battle of Chickamauga was sixty-seven per cent. of its number. Company E lost its captain, a gallant leader of men.

After the war was over Mr. Stewart went to Daviess County, Ind., and in the fall of 1866 he came to Fulton County, Ill., and located in the vicinity of Cuba. On October 23, 1887, Mr. Stewart was united in marriage to Frances Stenbeck, of Adams County, Ill., who died October 23, 1900, and was buried at Cuba, Ill. On November 6, 1901, Mr. Stewart married Mrs. Sarah J. Hill, of Danville, Ind., who is a daughter of Joseph McVey, and comes of a prominent Kentucky family, being also a sister-in-law of Chief Justice John Hackley, of Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

In politics Mr. Stewart is a strong Republican and formerly was zealous and active in party work. In 1882 he was the Republican nominee for Sheriff of Fulton County, and defeated his opponent, David Waggoner, by a large majority. He discharged the duties of the shrievalty in such an able and faithful manner that on the expiration of his term of four years his party nominated him for County Treasurer and elected him to that office. In this position, also, he acquitted himself with signal ability and to the satisfaction of all. On completing his term he retired from active pursuits after a busy and honorable career, during which he bravely served his county and proved himself a worthy and useful citizen of Fulton County. Fraternally Mr. Stewart is identified with the G. A. R., K. of P. and M. W. of A.

STOOPS, Benton C.—The purpose and enterprise which led William Stoops to avail himself of the pioneer opportunities of Fulton County, are reflected in large measure by his son and successor, Benton C. Stoops, an industrious and dependable general farmer and stock-raiser on Section 10, in Vermont Township. Born in a rude log cabin on the farm he now owns and occupies, April 12, 1859, Mr. Stoops has spent his life after the manner of men who regard industry as a boon, and their special occupation the one for which, by inclination and training, they are best qualified to creditably fill.

The meager chance of the early country school created in Mr. Stoops a craving for knowledge, which his industry has since been able to gratify. While still continuing his arduous duties around the home place, he completed a general business course by studying in the evening, and thus laid the foundation for that commercial knowledge without which the farmer of today may not hope for the largest agricultural compensations. He practically has been in charge of the homestead since 1877, and November 24, 1882, he was united in marriage to Anna Russell, daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Robinson) Russell, pioneers and large landowners of Fulton County. In the meantime the log cabin has been supplanted by a pretentious modern dwelling, barns and other structures have been built and rebuilt, shade and fruit trees have been set out and a country enterprise developed which, doubtless, is far removed from the most ambitious dreams of the original establisher of the family in the wilderness. For the past four years Mr. Stoops has devoted his energies largely to stock-raising, at the present time having twenty-two head of registered stock. He has been successful with Shorthorn cattle, Poland China hogs and high-grade horses, netting a comfortable annual income from the disposal of the same.

By no means self-centered in his ambition, Mr. Stoops has taken a keen interest in community affairs for many years, and for a quarter of a century has been identified with the Patrons of Husbandry, an important factor in encouraging the best tenets of country life. The meetings of this organization have been held in the Union Center schoolhouse, and Mr. Stoops on many occasions has been Master of the home lodge. He also is President of the South Fulton Grange, Picnic and Fair Association, the latter holding yearly reunions in September on the grounds of the association in Farmers Township. These picnics are above the general run of similar entertainments, and not only have a fine stock show in connection, but provide an excellent literary and musical entertainment. The best speakers are secured for the occasions, and the whole countryside turns out to make the outings enjoyable, as well as instructive and helpful. For many years Mr. Stoops has been a member of the Board of Education.

Mr. and Mrs. Stoops are the parents of two children: Dwight, born April 28, 1884, and Harry C., born January 10, 1889. The sons have been given every advantage within the power of their parents, and both are young men of character and principle. Mr. Stoops represents the rugged, sterling and practical citizenship of the Central West, and, like his father before him, sets an example of good judgment and integrity which they of the rising generation might follow with profit.

STOOPS, Perry H.—The professional life of Dr. Perry H. Stoops is an expression of zeal, scholarship and large human usefulness. Since 1891 he has been a resident of Ipava, this county, and during that time his name has become a household one, and his services are in demand throughout a large part of the surrounding country. Dr. Stoops was born July 5, 1863, in Vermont Township, Fulton County, this State, of which his father, William Stoops, was an honored pioneer. (See his biography in another section of this work.)

Dr. Stoops was reared on the paternal farm and received his preliminary training in the district schools. Later he attended the Western Illinois Normal, at Bushnell, this State, and eventually taught school a couple of years in Fulton and McDonough Counties. In the meantime he had developed an interest in medicine, devoting his leisure to its mastery, and in 1886 graduated with honors from the Rush Medical School, of Chicago. For the following year he practiced in the northern part of the State, and in 1888 opened an office in Union, Iowa, remaining there until 1891, when he located in Ipava.

On February 26, 1887, the Doctor was united in marriage to Belle Boothby, a native of Warren, Joe Daviess County, Ill., and of the union there are four children: Edna M., William W., Richard B. and Edwin B. In politics Dr. Stoops is a Democrat, in religion a Presbyterian and fraternally is connected with the Ipava Lodge, No. 213, A. F. and A. M., and the Modern Woodmen of America.

Dr. Stoops is a charter member of the Fulton County Medical Society and a member of the Illinois State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is an influential factor in professional circles in the county and is esteemed for his learning and its successful application. His office is equipped with the best of surgical appliances, and his experience and ability, with his pleasing personality and progressiveness, assure him the most satisfying compensations of his calling.

STOOPS, William.—From 1836 until the end of his life, February 14, 1905, at the age of ninety years, one month and three days, William Stoops was an interested spectator of the unrolling of Fulton County history. For the greater part of that time he was an active force in the development of Vermont Township, and was especially promotive of excellent results in agriculture and education. Ushered into his school life among the crudest of surroundings in Hamilton County, Ohio, where he was born January 11, 1815, he himself was permitted few schooling opportunities, but his mature years awoke to the value of mental training, and he was ever zealous in its behalf. For twenty years he was a member of the Board of Education of his township, and during that time always paid the largest salaries and secured the best possible teachers. He gave liberally also of his means for the cause of education, and he always encouraged his children to avail themselves of every avenue that led to knowledge.

As a farmer Mr. Stoops progressed with the times, and set always a high standard. He came of a family of industrious people, and his father, Michael Stoops, had the dogged perseverance of the Pennsylvania Dutch, of whom he was one, and in which State he was born. Migrating in early youth to Ohio, he married Ellen Van Sickle and in 1836 came to Fulton County, where he encountered the trials and deprivations which awaited the arrival of the '30s. Between that time and his death in 1876, he improved a fine farm, accumulated a reasonable competence and won the respect and good will of those whose courage had also led them into the wilds. His son William first homesteaded a farm in Pleasant Township, but finally moved to Vermont Township, where he lived until 1885. He then retired from active life to Ipava, where, among comfortable surroundings, he passed the balance of his life.

Mr. Stoops was thrice married. His first wife formerly was Hannah Lindsey, who became the mother of eight children, but one of whom is living—Mrs. William M. Guthrie, of Vermont. Mrs. Stoops died January 30, 1852, and Mr. Stoops subsequently married Keziah Clark, who died December 28, 1860. Of this union there were five children, two of whom are living: Mrs. William Holmes, of Auburn, Neb., and B. C. Stoops, of Vermont Township. The third Mrs. Stoops was Mrs. Margaret (Hannah) Wentworth, daughter of William Hannah, and of this union there were four children, two of whom are living: Dr. P. H. Stoops and Professor R. O. Stoops, of Jacksonville, Ill. Mrs. Margaret Stoops died in June, 1892. Mr. Stoops was a member of the Presbyterian Church during his entire reasoning life and contributed generously towards its support. He was a man whose word was better than his bond, whom every one admired and respected, and who lived up to and firmly appreciated the worth of homely, sterling virtues.

STRODE, Robert.—Of the younger generation of agriculturists who continue to dwell amid the surroundings of their boyhood and with their newer energy and broader outlook augmenting the labor of their sires upon landmark homestead, mention is due Robert Strode, who was born where he now lives on Section 23, Farmer Township, Fulton County, June 30, 1876. Mr. Strode is a son of James Patterson and Hannah (Clemens) Strode, and grandson of James Strode, all of whom were born in Ohio, and settled at an early day in Fulton County.

James Patterson Strode was educated in the early subscription schools of Ohio and Illinois and after his marriage entered 160 acres of Government land in Farmers Township. He was an active and ambitious man, and in 1857 went to Kansas to look over the country, and while there served in the border war. Returning to Fulton County, he continued farming until the breaking out of the Civil War, when he enlisted in the Fiftieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being elected Second Lieutenant of his company, in which he served for three years. When peace was restored he resumed his quiet pastoral life in Fulton County, but in 1883 went to Nebraska, where, in Custer County, he homesteaded 320 acres of land. From 1886 until 1889 he lived in Table Grove, Fulton County, when he again settled on the old homestead, where his death occurred in 1901. He was a successful farmer and left to his heirs the Custer County farm in Nebraska and 223 acres in Farmers Township, Fulton County. He is survived by his wife, who still lives on the old place. Mr. Strode was a prominent and influential man, a staunch Republican and the holder of a number of important local offices. He was public-spirited and generous, and many branches of local endeavor were aided by his financial or other support.

Robert Strode was educated in the public schools of the country and of Table Grove, and at the age of twenty-one succeeded to the entire management of the home farm. He finds his occupation both congenial and profitable and success has enabled him to buy the interests of his brother, Edmund Clemens Strode, in the home farm. The brother referred to is one of the leading legal practitioners of Lincoln, Neb. Mr. Strode devotes his attention to general farming and stock-raising, and has surrounded himself with many of the comforts and conveniences which render agreeable the once hard and thankless tasks of the farmer. He also owns an interest in the farm in Nebraska. He is a young man of progressive ideas and pronounced general ability, a loyal Republican and a popular member of the Masonic Order and Knights of Pythias.

STRODE, Dr. William S., a prominent physician of Lewistown, in active and growing practice, an enthusiastic and learned naturalist of wide reputation, and a stirring and successful citizen, is a native of the county which is proud to claim him. He was born in Farmers Township, Fulton County, December 8, 1847, the son of Thomas and Catherine (Smith) Strode, his mother being the daughter of Jesse Smith. Dr. Strode's father was a Pennsylvanian, who migrated first to Ohio and then to Illinois, settling in Farmers Township about the year 1834. Both he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives there, Mrs. Catherine Strode dying about 1854, when William was seven years of age. Of the Doctor's three brothers and one sister Albert was killed in Arkansas about 1899; Curtis J. is a farmer of Harris Township; Jesse J. is engaged in agriculture in Farmers Township, and Addie is living in Peoria, Ill.

Dr. Strode's boyhood was that of the average lad reared on a farm and depending upon the district schools for the foundation of his education. For recreation he hunted and fished, as did most of his comrades, but unlike the average youth in an agricultural community, keen thoughts and thorough reading accompanied the observations made during these rambles, ostensibly for pleasure alone. Moving and living creatures especially appealed to him, and through his eyes and books he eagerly studied the habits and beauties of birds and insects. As years passed he became more deeply versed in these phases of nature study, making methodical and scientific collections, until finally he possessed probably the finest museum of a private nature, confined to birds, bugs, butterflies, shells, minerals and plants, in the State of Illinois. More wonderful still, it is said that you may take him a ten-mile drive anywhere within the limits of the commonwealth, and he will describe and classify the habits of any living thing (within these families) which may chance to come across his path. Along his specialties he has contributed many articles to scientific journals, both American and European. When it is remembered that this prominence as a naturalist has been earned only as a side issue from the chief purpose of his life, it is evident that the Doctor is a man of remarkable versatility as well as ability.

After graduating from the district school Dr. Strode completed a course in the Gem City Business College at Quincy, Ill., in which he was also a teacher for a number of years, his pedagogical experience extending even to the schools of Fulton County. Prior to this period, however, he had seen military service, enlisting, as he did, during the Civil War, when only sixteen years of age. For a year he followed the fortunes of Company G, Fiftieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged at the close of the war. During the Spanish-American War, after he had attained a high standing as a physician, he raised a company of 120 men and repaired to Peoria, Ill., to again enter the military service, and was elected a Surgeon of the regiment, but as the quota was already filled, his command failed to be mustered in and returned home, greatly to the disappointment of all concerned.

Dr. Strode's medical education was obtained at Rush Medical College, Chicago, and he has been in active and successful practice since his graduation from that institution in 1884. His location at Lewistown dates from 1891. At present he is not only a leading private practitioner, but Secretary of the Board of Pension Examiners, President of the Board of Education and member of the City Board of Health, having held the first position for the past sixteen years. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Court of Honor and the G. A. R. Dr. Strode married Amelia Steel, a daughter of Dr. John Steel, and of this marriage four children have been born: Winifred, a resident of Silver City, S. D.; John W., of the same place; Muriel, living in Chicago, and Walter L., of Lewistown. The mother of this family died in 1888, and in 1890 the Doctor married as his second wife Julia Brown, of Lewistown, by whom he has one daughter, Catherine, now twelve years old.

STRONG, Ozias G., M. D.—The best of human usefulness would seem to have been realized in the life of Dr. Ozias G. Strong, than whom there never was a more venerated member living of the vanguard of professional men of Canton and Fulton County. Dr. Strong stood as the old-time practitioner, so loved by the families of Fulton County, who ever had the courage of his convictions and who retained his hold upon old faiths and dogmas only so far as they appealed to his reason and judgment. In the fashioning of a broad and liberal citizenship his energies were beyond his immediate sphere of action, and included participation in politics, society and general local undertakings.

In outwitting the old biblical injunction as to length of years Dr. Strong followed closely in the footsteps of both his father, Ozias Strong, Sr., and his grandfather, Horatio Strong. The former in early life was a farmer, later a lawyer, and still later, for forty years, a magistrate of Wilkesville, Vinton County, Ohio. The latter, who was born in Massachusetts, on the paternal side was of English-Irish and on the maternal side of Scotch descent, and spent the greater part of his life on a farm, dying there at the age of eighty-five years. The mother of Dr. Strong formerly was Annis Gregory, of Connecticut.

Born on the paternal farm in Meigs County, Ohio, August 12, 1818, Dr. Strong was early schooled in agriculture and in the subscription institution near his home. Aspiring to a broader life than was the lot of the average farmer's son, he entered Athens (Ohio) Academy, and soon after began the study of medicine with Dr. J. H. Smith, of Meigs County, that State. After taking a course of lectures at Starling College, Columbus, Ohio, he began the practice of his profession in Meigs County, at the expiration of three years moving to St. Louis, where also he practiced for several months. His next place of residence was Hannibal, Mo., where the Doctor turned from professional to mercantile pursuits, engaging in business with Messrs. Smith and Dick, under the firm name of Smith, Dick & Company. At the same time he became interested in Democratic politics and served as Marshal and Collector of City Revenues, to which he was elected in 1853. His business departure proved a keen disappointment, owing to various unpleasant complications, and after three years he moved to La Grange and engaged in the tobacco business. Here also his excellent executive and general qualities drew him into prominence, and he served his party as Recorder and Police Magistrate. In the meantime the Doctor's professional views underwent a radical change, simplifying themselves into homeopathy, for the better understanding of which he entered the St. Louis Homœopathic College, from which he was duly graduated in the spring of 1858.

During the fall of his graduation Dr. Strong located in Canton, and entered with zeal and renewed enthusiasm into medical practice, soon winning a following which oftentimes required the application of years. His skill in diagnosis and treatment, his success with many complicated and supposedly incurable diseases and, above all else, his faith in the best tenets of his new creed of healing, created a demand for his services which netted him an annual income of many thousands of dollars. Necessarily his labors were not confined to the city limits, but rather extended throughout the county and included many of the foremost families, who for years depended upon his unquestioned proficiency.

For his first wife Dr. Strong married Bethena E. Pavey, of Hannibal, Mo., who died in this city, leaving five children: Jared D., George W., Charles H., Jesse W. and Lizzie L. Of these, George W. became manager of a large book concern in Buffalo, N. Y.; Charles H. is a graduate of the Chicago Homœopathic College, and became a practitioner of Providence, R. I.; Jesse W. became proprietor and editor of the Canton Republican, on September 18, 1890, and Lizzie became the wife of C. H. Atwater, of Quincy, Ill. The widow of the deceased bore the girlhood name of Maggie Linabery, and is a native of Morris County, N. J., but who was educated in the West, to which she removed in early life with her parents. Dr. Strong was a member of the American Institute of Homœopathy, and for many years was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity. As in his old age his years of greatest activity were characterized by moderation and breadth of mind, by great intellectual force and a capacity for absorbing and utilizing the best in books, people and life in general. Upon no practitioner of the early days rested in greater measure the esteem and affection of his professional and social associates, and his demise Mary 2, 1893, was greatly deplored by not only the city of Canton and Fulton County, but by many others, who were his friends and admirers in this part of the State.

STUMP, D. M., one of the oldest and most highly esteemed citizens of Fulton County, Ill., with the development of which he has been intimately identified during a period of nearly three-score years, was born in Perry County, Pa., on February 29, 1828. He is a resident of Avon, Fulton County, where for more than a generation he has conducted a fire insurance agency with gratifying success.

Mr. Stump is a son of William A. and Catherine (Mumper) Stump, natives of Lancaster County, Pa. William A. Stump was a blacksmith by occupation and followed his trade in Pennsylvania until the time of his death in 1860. He served in the War of 1812 and was a man of tireless industry and blameless character. To him and his worthy spouse were born twelve children, of whom the subject of this sketch and two sisters, Mrs. Elizabeth Sheriff, of Ceresco, Mich., and Mrs. Barbara Hand, of Everest, Kans., are the only survivors.

D. M. Stump's mother died when he was about eight years old and about a year later his father married again. The neighbors made the youth believe that the devil was entering the home, so, as his stepmother came in at the front door, he went out at the back door and never became acquainted with her, and never lived within fifty miles of his former home thereafter. For two years he made his home with a brother-in-law in Cumberland County, Pa., and then went to work in a woolen mill for a Mr. Galaspa, where he helped pick, card, spin, weave, full, shear and press wool into cloth, worth from eight to ten dollars per yard. The mill was a large one and run by an eighteen-foot overshot water wheel. While watching the fulling of the cloth at the mill Mr. Galaspa's daughter would come down to stay with him and teach him to read and write, which was about the extent of his education, as he never attended a public school.

On leaving the mill he went to work at blacksmithing and wagon-making, which trade he followed at Lowden, Pa., until 1847, the last year of the Mexican War. He then went to Chambersburg, Pa., and enlisted in the regular army and still retains the original poster calling for volunteers, a copy of which follows:

"A few able-bodied men, wanted for the best arm of service. Those who calculate on enlisting for the war may rest assured that every attention will be paid to making them comfortable and contented with their situation. In addition to the liberal allowances made by the Government to the soldier, he will be entitled to a warrant for 160 ACRES OF LAND, to be located by himself on any of the public lands in the United States, besides a bounty of TWELVE DOLLARS.

CHAS. T. CAMPELL, Lieut. U. S. A.

"On Recruiting Service, Chambersburg, February 26, 1847."

His company consisted of four commissioned officers and 132 non-commissioned officers and privates. They traveled afoot from Chambersburg to Pittsburg, a distance of 150 miles, and then took a boat for New Orleans, La. There they were joined by others who made up the regiment and went aboard ship again and sailed to the mouth of the Rio Grande, where they spent the month of May in a camp of instruction some miles south of Matamoros. About the first of June they embarked for Vera Cruz, but owing to a "calm at sea" the bark which he was in could not go on, and they were picked up by an English man-of-war and taken to Tampico, where they boarded a steamship for the rest of the journey. Arriving at Vera Cruz too late to join General Scott, they advanced to Puebla under General Pierce, and there joined the main army. On the 13th of August they started for the city of Mexico. Entrenchments and fortifications extended for miles around three sides of the city and they had to take a wide detour to the south and west. When they reached San Augustine on the 18th, their regiment, with Scott's body-guard of cavalry under Captain Phil. Kearney, had a brisk skirmish with a body of the enemy, and this opened the way for the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, which occurred on the 19th and 20th, and in which their army obtained great victories, but at serious loss of killed and wounded. After the battles of Molino del Rey and Chapultepec, on the 8th and 12th of September, they entered the City of Mexico on the morning of the 14th and the "Stars and Stripes" were soon floating from the flagpole of the National Palace. The "Halls" of the Montezumas were ours.

In January, 1848, the regiment was sent to Taluca and from there to Larma, where they remained until May 28th when peace was declared and they took up the march home. They marched back to Vera Cruz, where they embarked on a sailing vessel for New Orleans, and, after landing there, took a steamship, the "Crescent City," for New York, landing at Fort Hamilton, on Long Island. On September 16, 1848, they were discharged from the United States Army, then consisting of one commissioned officer and twenty-seven non-commissioned officers and privates. Nine others had been discharged and sent home during the war, making thirty-six out of the 132 who started to arrive home. The others were either killed or died during the war.

After his discharge Mr. Stump returned to Lowden, Pa., and there again took up the occupation of a blacksmith, which trade he followed until 1850, when he started westward, traveling by boat from Pittsburg, Pa., to Copperas Creek, Ill., which required twelve days. With others who came at that time he was taken to Canton by Matthew Mitchell, now a resident of Ellisville, their conveyance being a spring-wagon, then called a "democrat." It being Sunday, they met persons going to church riding in lumber wagons with boards for seats, which seemed very strange to ladies reared in the East. One of the ladies in the party remarked that, if obliged to go to church in that kind of a conveyance, she feared she would not go. Later they were much surprised to meet a load of people in a wagon drawn by oxen, and to their questions as to whether this was a common sight, Mr. Mitchell replied that it was. Some of the young men of those days took ladies behind them on horseback to church and parties. Mr. Stump remained in Canton, working for William Parlin at his trade of blacksmith, and later for Mr. Colton, and while there the late James H. Stipp was his roommate. While working for Mr. Colton he met E. D. Mailliard, who urged him to come to Woodstock (now Avon), stating there was no blacksmith there, and, on July 7, he started for that place, carrying his knapsack with him. The dry wit of Mr. Mailliard is not forgotten. Once while watching Mr. Stump putty some holes in a hub he asked the reason, and Mr. Stump replied that it was as good as wood. He then remarked, "Build me one wagon all of putty." He arrived in Woodstock on the 8th of July, 1850, and rented the blacksmith shop then owned by Lawson Woods, and near where the dwelling of Mrs. William Chatterton, on Woods Street, now stands. In 1851 he purchased the land and built a shop on the west part of the lot now owned by Miss Mary Dustman. He moved into the house which he now owns after his marriage in 1854, and, with a few brief intervals, has lived there ever since. The maple tree now standing in front of his house he brought from Overman's nursery, near Canton, in 1851, carrying it on horseback. It now measures nearly fourteen feet in circumference.

In 1853 he solicited subscriptions to the Northern Cross Railroad, now forming a part of the Burlington System. Nehemiah Bushnell was then President of the road, and Benjamin Prentiss, afterwards General Prentiss, was a Director. In six weeks' time he sold stock to the amount of $72,000. Later he entered the agricultural business and sold machinery for C. H. and L. J. McCormick, of Chicago, and Gaar, Scott & Co., of Richmond, Ind. While engaged in this business he began to write insurance, but, in 1889, having relinquished the agricultural business, began to devote his entire attention to the insurance business, and now has one of the most extensive agencies in this part of the State, Stump's Insurance Agency being a household word for miles throughout the surrounding country and towns.

On April 23, 1854, Mr. Stump was married to Caroline T. Wright, daughter of D. N. Wright, who came to Woodville from Huron County, Ohio, in 1844. At that time there were only eight families where now our beautiful and prosperous Avon is located. She has been confined to her home the greater portion of the time for the past thirty years, but has borne her ills cheerfully and patiently, and enjoys the many blessings left to her. During all these years her husband has been very solicitous for her comfort, leaving nothing undone that would in any way contribute to her happiness. Saturday, April 23, 1904, marked the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Stump. No elaborate plans were made for celebrating their golden anniversary, but relatives and friends called at their residence on Woods Street during the afternoon and evening to join in commemorating the happy occasion. A few minutes before eight the company present ceased conversing and Oliver Crissey, in his happy style, addressed the bride and groom in a few well-chosen words. He referred to Mr. Stump as a man of strong and positive convictions, who had always taken an active part in politics and all questions of public interest, and it was only natural that such a person should sometimes be held up in the light of criticism; but, said Mr. Crissey, during the forty-eight years of his residence in Avon, he had never heard the home life of Mr. Stump spoken of except in the highest terms of commendation, and Mrs. Stump had, so far as her strength would permit, faithfully discharged the duties of wife and mother. By way of reminiscence, Mr. Crissey said that the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Stump was without doubt the most romantic that had occurred in Fulton County to that time. Soon after locating in Avon, in the early days, Mr. Stump fell in love with Miss Caroline Wright, then a handsome girl of fourteen years. Her parents did not look with favor upon the courtship, which continued for four years, and bitterly opposed the marriage. This opposition resulted in establishing the first rural mail delivery in this place. W. H. Rose, then a young lad, served in the capacity of carrier and performed his duties faithfully and well. The mail he carried consisted of love messages between the young couple. With aid from other friends the wedding arrangements were finally made and successfully carried out. The ceremony was performed at the home of Stephen Tompkins, on the corner of Main and Woods Streets, by E. G. Roe, who at that time held the office of Justice of the Peace. Mr. and Mrs. Wright became reconciled after a few weeks, and received the young couple to their home with open arms. Mr. Crissey then delegated Mr. Rose, who had carried their love messages fifty years ago and more, to deliver to them the gifts that had been so generously and lovingly contributed by their friends, and he accepted the honor with becoming modesty, remarking that it seemed as if he were still destined to be a "go-between," but felt glad to serve in that capacity. There were nine persons at this happy gathering who were present at the one fifty years previous, namely: Mrs. Stephen Tompkins, R. W. Townsend and wife, Mrs. Oliver Crissey, Mrs. Catherine Woods, James McGowan, W. H. Rose, Gilbert Tompkins and Albert Tompkins.

To Mr. and Mrs. Stump were born three children, one of whom, Lawrence, died in 1884. The other two are Mrs. James Shawcross, of Glenville, Neb., and Lee H. Stump, of Avon. In politics Mr. Stump is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, always taking an active interest in village, township, county, State and National elections. In 1856 he held the office of Supervisor of Union Township. He was one of the original promoters of the Avon Fair and has always worked for its success. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

SULLIVAN, W. J., who is successfully engaged in the milling business in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Taylor County, Ky., August 1, 1856, and there received his early mental training in the district schools in the vicinity of his home. He is a son of William and Louisa (Wade) Sullivan, natives of Kentucky, where the father was born in Taylor County and the mother in Madison County.

The subject of this sketch came to Canton January 1, 1899, and has since been engaged in milling with successful results. Previously he carried on farming in Blandinsville Township, McDonough County, Ill. He is a good business man and gives strict attention to the operation of his mill. On December 13, 1883, Mr. Sullivan was united in marriage with Addie Able, who was born in Marion County, Ky. Five children have blessed their union, namely: Bernice, Bessie, Josie, Ray and Lee. Fraternally Mr. Sullivan is affiliated with the Eagles and the Tribunes.

SUYDAM, William Edgar, who is successfully engaged in stock-raising on an extensive scale in Fairview Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township, August 31, 1874, a son of John and Anna (Leigh) Suydam, both of whom are natives of Fairview Township. John Suydam was engaged in farming there during his entire active life. He was brought to that vicinity by his parents in 1851. They settled near the town of Fairview, where John Suydam subsequently purchased 113 acres of land. This he cultivated with good results until the time of his retirement from active labors, in 1902. Since that period he has made his home in Fairview.

William Edgar Suydam spent his childhood in the manner customary with farmer's children and in early youth enjoyed the advantages of the district schools in the vicinity of his home, assisting his father in the work of the farm during the summer season, and at intervals attending school. Since reaching years of maturity, he has carried on general farming and stock-raising on his own responsibility. At the outset he started for himself near Farmington, Fulton County, but finding that he required more land in order to conduct stock-raising operations in accordance with his plans, he moved to his father's place and there rented 320 acres in addition, which is the property of James Ten Eyck. Mr. Suydam feeds a great deal of stock, shipping from five to six carloads of cattle, and the same quantity of stock, every year.

On March 17, 1897, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage, at Peoria, Ill., with Elizabeth McManu, a native of Fairview Township, where she was born January 1, 1874. Three children have resulted from this union, as follows: J. Wynne, W. Lloyd, and Amber M.

In politics Mr. Suydam is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. For three years he discharged the duties of the office of School Director of the Township with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the public. His religious connection is with the Christian Church. He is an intelligent, energetic and persevering man, straightforward and reliable in business transactions and a worthy representative of the younger element of the agricultural class in Fulton County. Among his neighbors, he is regarded as one of the most useful members of the community.

SWEARINGEN, Carl V. (deceased).—The ranks of the younger generation of business men of Canton sustained a severe loss in the death of Carl V. Swearingen, February 2, 1902. This young man had a future of great promise and had received a training second to none in the store of his father, Ezra F. Swearingen, one of the pioneers of Fulton County, of whose history more may be found elsewhere in this work. His mother's maiden name was Mary J. Salisbury.

Mr. Swearingen was educated in the public schools of Canton and, while very young, learned to do up bundles and wait on customers in his father's grocery store. He finally became independent and married Bertha A. Ross, to whom was born one daughter, Catherine. Mr. Swearingen was a Republican in politics and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was genial in manner, obliging and tactful, and embellished his brief career with many loyal friendships.

SWEARINGEN, Ezra F.—The grocery business has one essential advantage—it is an absolute necessity. Nevertheless, too many people trade upon this supposition, and, in consequence, are a long way removed from the hustling resourceful man known as the twentieth century grocer. As in all lines of business, a financial creed is necessary in order not to fall behind in the procession. We know of no one better qualified to advise on the subject than Ezra F. Swearingen, who has been a grocer in Canton for the past twenty-six years, and who at times has had the management and control of as many as ten stores. His experience should be worth much to the young man who thinks he fits into a similar groove.

As is usually the case, Mr. Swearingen at first belonged to the corner grocery type, but he refused to get in a rut, and consequently a way was opened for him to move from the same corner. He had the chance for expansion open to all others in the same position, and he used it, for expansion is the result of well directed labor. Two years after embarking in the business he became the partner of O. T. Salisbury, this connection continuing for ten years, or until 1893. Since then he has conducted his Canton branch alone.

Mr. Swearingen was twenty-four years old when he entered upon his career as a grocer, and he marked out his business chart as clearly as his capital, knowledge, field and scope would permit. He moved slowly in the beginning until he had learned the motion of fortune's wheel, and never ventured ahead until he had an objective point in view. He has compelled attention by his unique schemes for getting customers, and his departure from thread-bare traditions. His goods always have been arranged in orderly and attractive manner, and with a view to harmonious color effects. Cleanliness of shelves and floors is always insisted upon, and his clerks are compelled to carry out the general scheme of neatness in their personal attire. He directs much attention to supplying the best goods obtainable for the money, and has a reputation for reliability that in itself is a trade winner. He never advertises anything that he hasn't on hand, and he never resorts to the expedient of premiums or free contributions. He wins out on merit, good nature, courtesy and patience with women, who are his chief customers, and belief in himself and his ability to succeed.

Mr. Swearingen was born in Dewitt County, Ill., November 7, 1857, a son of E. W. and Mary J. (Sommers) Swearingen, natives of Lewis County, Ky., and Piatt County, Ill., respectively. His father died in 1880, the year before the son left the home farm and came to Canton, and his mother died in 1893. The strictest economy prevailed in the home in Dewitt County, and the children comprising the family circle were obliged early to face the problem of self-support. Ezra F. attended the public schools, and on the farm learned much of produce and exchange which fitted in well with his later occupation of food merchant. He is an agreeable and obliging man, and his standing in the community rests upon the sure foundation of confidence and respect.

SWEET, Charles R.—Through the energy and resource of many of its citizens and the favorable soil conditions in its vicinity, the manufacture of brick has come to be regarded as an important industry in Canton. The efforts of the first manufacturer necessarily have been vastly improved upon, and of those responsible for a higher precedent none are deserving of more credit than Charles R. Sweet. Mr. Sweet came from Wisconsin to Canton in 1882 and his first place of business was in what was known as the old Whitley brick yard, started by a man named Craig. Ten years later he removed to his present yards, where he has a greatly increased capacity. His equipment is modern and permits of a high grade of brick employed principally for building purposes.

Mr. Sweet was born on Caldwell's Prairie, Racine County, Wis., September 18, 1856, a son of Robert T. Sweet, who was born on a farm in New York State, June 3, 1833, and who died on a farm in Racine County, in February, 1904. On the maternal side Mr. Sweet comes of one of the earliest of the pioneer families of the Badger State. His mother formerly was Catherine O. Caldwell, born at Caldwell, Wis., in 1837, a year after the organization of Wisconsin Territory. The country at that time was wild and the settlers few, and the hardships of the long, bitterly cold winters exceeded in severity those endured by the settlers who located in Illinois. Yet how much more desolate was the region upon the arrival of the Grandparents Caldwell while yet Wisconsin was a part of Michigan Territory. The grandfather, Joseph Caldwell, was born January 7, 1792, and the grandmother, who was born in 1796, is said to have been the first white woman in Wisconsin. The town of Caldwell and the prairie surrounding it, now a splendid agricultural section, form a permanent link between the old and the new order of things, and in name are a tribute to the courage and endurance of those rare pathfinders whose forms have grown misty and immovable in American history.

Mr. Sweet was reared on the Caldwell Prairie farm and to its compulsory duties attributes the strong constitution and abounding vitality of his mature years. His education was largely self-acquired, prompted by the unsatisfactory character of that afforded by the country school near his home. Gradually he outgrew the environment which had accomplished so much for him physically, and at twenty-six years began to mingle with the business life of Canton. While still a resident of Wisconsin, in 1880, he married Izillia White, and one son, Carl, has been born of their union. Mr. Sweet pays little attention to things outside his immediate sphere of action, and especially finds little satisfaction in political undertakings. However, he is a fraternalist of long standing and a member of the Masons and Knights of Pythias. His business tenets are of the highest, and twenty-four years' association with the same community have placed him among its important creative factors.

SWENEY, John Juvenal.—At the age of sixty-two John Juvenal Sweney is practically retired from active life, but while turning over to younger hands the responsibilities which crowded former years, he still occupies the farm of 160 acres in Lee Township, upon which the greater part of his life has been spent. Mr. Sweney is of Irish-Dutch ancestry, and was born in Northumberland County, Pa., February 10, 1845, a son of Major K. and Elizabeth (Ten Brook) Sweney, also natives of the Quaker State.

Major Sweney was born in Pennsylvania August 18, 1817, and was the oldest of the children of Montgomery and Mary M. (Kehr) Sweney, the former born in Ireland in 1787, and the latter in Northumberland County, Pa., in 1795. The family immigrated to Fulton County during the summer of 1838, and here Montgomery Sweney died in Lee Township in 1868, his wife surviving him until 1882. Major K. Sweney accompanied his parents to Illinois, where until 1839 he was a member of the editorial staff of the first newspaper printed in Fulton County. Having then abandoned this occupation, he settled on a farm where he remained until returning to his native State. During the summer of 1846, he again located in Illinois, taking up land on Section 23, Lee Township, and to this he added until he became the proprietor of a large farm in an excellent state of cultivation. His neighbors in Lee County were few at first, and he endured the hardships and privations of frontier life. To obtain his mail he was obliged to go to Canton, and had to pay twenty-five cents postage on a letter. Mr. Sweney reared and furnished a good education to eight children. He was a Democrat in politics, and served his township as School Director, Assessor and Supervisor. He was an Elder for many years, in the Presbyterian Church, and fraternally, was an Odd Fellow. His death occurred in 1898.

John Juvenal Sweney was about a year old when his parents brought him to Fulton County, and he was educated in its public schools, and developed a strong constitution on his father's farm. His life has been a busy one, and confined to his farm and home, requiring few outside diversions or interests. On November 20, 1872, he married in Lewistown, Ill., Susan W. Lewis, who was born in Virginia, March 17, 1850, and is the devoted mother of seven children: William C., Flora, Maude, Nellie (now Mrs. C. J. Homer, of Prairie City, Ill.); Fred L., Fannie and Donald K. Mr. Sweney is a Democrat in politics. For many years he has stanchly supported the cause of education as a member of the School Board, and his children have been given a chance to acquire practical training under the best possible country conditions.

SWIGERT, Clifford M.—Born October 17, 1881, upon the farm in Section 4, Fairview Township, of which he now is manager, Clifford M. Swigert is a son of William and Anna (McGuire) Swigert, the former a native of Young Hickory Township, Fulton County, and the latter of the State of Wisconsin. The elder Swigert was an early settler of Fulton County, and in 1879 located on the farm which since has been in the possession of the family, and which, under his painstaking cultivation, developed from a raw prairie into one of the valuable properties of the county.

Clifford M. Swigert received a common school education, and from early youth was taught to make himself useful about the home place. He succeeded to the entire management of the farm in 1904 and since then has added many improvements, including greater facilities for the care of Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs. His yearly income is increased also by grain and general produce. Evidences abound on every hand of his progressiveness and thrift, and his appreciation of trees, flowers, orchards, and gardens, and other essentials to the well being and happiness of twentieth century agriculturists. Mr. Swigert renounced the bachelor state February 22, 1903, marrying Cora S. L. Knight, a native of Pontiac, Ill., born August 9, 1880. Mr. Swigert is independent in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is well educated, well informed, and public spirited, and in a neighborhood in which his entire life has been passed is held in high esteem.

SWITZER, Jesse T.—As the son of one of Fulton County's oldest pioneers and stanch up-builders, Jesse T. Switzer, up to the time of his death, maintained the excellent reputation established by his father, Jesse Switzer, who was born in Fulton County and as early as 1833 settled with his parents at what was known as Black Jack, Canton Township, where he improved a farm which, to one less courageous, would have seemed an impossibility. It was on the home farm in Canton Township that Jesse T. Switzer first saw the light of day, his birth occurring December 28, 1858. The nearest school to his parents' home was at Farmington, and there he conned his lessons through the grammar grades, after which he took a course in the high school at Canton. As he was the youngest child in his parents' family every advantage in their power to bestow was at his command, and he wisely availed himself of the opportunities which came to him, a fact which was borne out in his superior education and in his advanced views on agriculture.

Applying the knowledge and experience which he had gained in his younger years upon starting out for himself Mr. Switzer took up farming scientifically, and by the exercise of care and sound judgment in his undertakings developed one of the finest farms in Canton Township. While he carried on farming as generally understood, he gave his attention more particularly to stock-raising, and was more than ordinarily successful in this line. His brother, Charles W., was associated with him in his farming enterprises up to the time of his death.

Mr. Switzer's marriage united him with Miss Lena Miller, the ceremony being performed December 22, 1885. Throughout her life Mrs. Switzer has made her home in Fulton County, her birth occurring in Farmington, which was also the scene of her childhood training and education. Her father, D. C. Miller, was a well established farmer in the vicinity of Farmington. Throughout his life Mr. Switzer took a deep interest in matters which tended to upbuild his home community, this being especially noticeable in educational affairs, and as a member of the School Board of his district, he rendered valuable service. His political affiliations allied him with the Republican party, whose principles he believed, if carried out, would bring the greatest good to the largest number.

TANNER, Abram S., who, together with Eugene Tanner, is successfully engaged in the grocery business in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Canton on July 2, 1858, and there when a youth attended the high school. His father and mother, John R. and Mary C. (Sosee) Tanner, were natives, respectively, of West Virginia and Maryland.

John R. Tanner came to Illinois about the year 1855 and located in Canton. He was a blacksmith, and conducted a wagon shop for several years. He then established himself in the grocery line, in which he continued three years. The concern was then operated under the name of Eugene Tanner until January 17, 1905, when the firm style became E. Tanner & Company. John R. Tanner died in August, 1876. The subject of this sketch is a capable business man and his firm enjoys a profitable trade.

On October 20, 1898, he was married to Elizabeth Smith, who was born and educated in Canton, Ill. Politically Mr. Tanner is a supporter of the Republican party, and fraternally he is identified with the Knights of Pythias.

TANNER, David M., a well known and prosperous contractor and builder, of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Madison County, Va., March 9, 1863, a son of Henry P. and Lacey (Enfield) Tanner. The Tanner family is of German origin, and the grandfather and grandmother are now living in the fatherland, the former at the age of ninety-two years and the latter eighty-six years old. To Henry P. Tanner and his wife were born ten children, as follows: James C., a resident of Iowa; Marelus M., a contractor and builder at Orange, Va.; Montcalm H., a farmer in Madison County, Va.; David M.; Irene E., deceased wife of Thomas Raudall, a farmer in Culpeper County, Va., whose children are Eva and Raymond; Emily M., deceased wife of William Birkers, a carpenter in Madison County, Va., whose children are Eiler and Henry; Joseph H., a farmer in Madison County, Va.; Luther A. and Merriwether T., the former a farmer and the latter a carpenter in the last mentioned county, and Olie W., also a carpenter in that county. Of the ten children the two sisters are the only ones in the family who are deceased. All were reared on the old home farm and received their mental training in the public schools of their native State.

The subject of this sketch remained at home until 1884, when he went to Grand Island, Neb., and secured employment in the Union Pacific Railroad car shops. In August, 1885, he located in Lewistown, Ill., and went to work with his brother, M. M., at the carpenter trade. The same fall he began working at the cabinet-maker's trade, which he followed four years. For the next four years he was foreman over the force of T. M. Mercer, an extensive contractor and builder, who had charge of the Auditorium at Galesburg, and the Kellogg School at Canton. In 1896 he engaged in contracting and building, which occupation he has since pursued. He has erected many of the finest buildings throughout Northwestern Illinois, and has made a decided success in this line. He has had charge of the construction of some of the most important structures in Peoria and his reputation is such that he has been called to take the contracts for fine buildings in other States. He is the owner of an attractive residence, with four and a half acres of beautiful grounds, on North Main Street, Lewistown.

On February 23, 1897, Mr. Tanner was united in marriage with Eliza Kelso, born in Fulton County, Ill., March 19, 1866, a daughter of David and Sarah (Hendricksen) Kelso. Her father is deceased and her mother resides in Lewistown. Mr. and Mrs. Tanner are the parents of four children, namely: Winifred E., born September 10, 1887; Raymond H., born September 1, 1891; Ethel, born September 6, 1893, and Clarence, September 21, 1895. In politics Mr. Tanner is a Democrat, although in local affairs he usually follows his judgment as to individual merits without strict regard to partisan considerations. Fraternally he is affiliated with the M. W. A. and the Court of Honor. Religiously he and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church. He is a man of high character and a representative of the best element of Fulton County's prominent citizens.

TATUM, John G., a worthy and highly respected pioneer farmer in Section 7, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born where he now lives, December 13, 1837, a son of Matthew and Lydia (Dollar) Tatum, of whom the former was born in Rowan County, N. C., February 18, 1789, and the latter, in Laurens County, S. C., July 4, 1805. They were married in 1830. From South Carolina, the bride's family moved to Indiana, and from the latter State, in 1827, to Illinois, settling in Fulton County. They first located on the farm now owned by Thomas J. Shepley, near Canton. In 1828, Matthew Tatum made a trip to Galena, Ill., returning in 1829. In 1830 he bought a land patent from Charles Bullard, who had received it from the Government, covering 160 acres. Here he built a small cabin, which was the second built in that region, and marks the settlement of the Tatum family in Fulton County. Matthew Tatum was a leading man there in early days. The pioneers had erected a fort on the land now owned by George Wilcoxen, and at the time of the Westerfield defeat when the settlers hurried to the fort for refuge. Ordeals of that nature, however, were soon a matter of the past. The Indians shortly disappeared, and life in the hamlet became safe. Rattlesnakes were a dangerous pest, and the settlers banded together and made a raid on the reptiles one day, killing 375. After this event, the venomous creatures grew scarce, and ceased to be an object of constant dread. In the winter of 1831-32, the snow fell to a depth of four feet on the level, and for two months travel was almost stopped. When the snow began to melt the low land was inundated in two days. The snow began falling in December, 1831, and covered the ground to the depth mentioned until February, 1832, when it disappeared within three days, causing destructive floods over the whole region.

Matthew Tatum and his wife were parents of seven children, of whom two girls and one boy died in infancy. Those who grew to maturity were as follows: George W.; John G.; Amy and Sarah J. John G. and Mrs. Amy Cluts live on the old home farm. Sarah J., widow of James A. Shields, left two children—Mrs. Belle McIntosh, and Ada, wife of Marion Flood, of Los Angeles, Cal. Of the Tatum family, the first, George W., married Mary Pitcher, in December, 1852, died November 4, 1864, and his widow married Peter Reffner, living near Newton, Kans. Amy, the second child, was born March 29, 1840. She married William H. Cluts (originally spelled "Clutz") January 22, 1857. He died August 4, 1893, leaving eleven children, as follows: George W.; Clinton J.; Elijah G., a veterinary surgeon at Canton, Ill.; John M.; Nellie, wife of D. A. Ward, of Woodford County, Ill.; James W. and Jasper H. of Canton, Ill.; Eva, wife of Dr. Carl G. Turner, of Canton, Ill.; Joseph D., veterinary surgeon of Selma, Ala.; Charles F.; Beda, wife of S. L. Jameson, of Buckheart Township; and Grover C. George W., Charles F., Beda and Grover C. reside in Buckheart Township. Clinton J., Nellie and John are deceased.

Matthew Tatum died September 19, 1868, and his widow passed away November 2, 1872. The father was a very hard-working and energetic man. In disposition and manner he was somewhat reserved, he was conservative in his nature, and careful and deliberate in all his actions, and in business transactions, cautious, almost to a fault. There was nothing radical in his composition, and he believed in the old-fashioned ways. He did his full share in clearing up and developing the new territory, which he chose for his home, and paving the way for the generation that was to follow. In politics, he was a Democrat and took an earnest interest in public matters. He and his worthy wife were consistent members of the old Baptist Church of the township.

John G. Tatum, the subject of this sketch, first saw the day in the little cabin that still stands on the homestead, and was reared on the farm. He received his early mental training in the primitive district schools, and was afterwards engaged in teaching a few years; was also School Director, for twenty-seven consecutive years. He well remembers the period of the old wooden mold-board, and the time when the scouring plow succeeded the wooden plow. And now Mr. Tatum has laid aside farm work, and turned over the plow to the generation succeeding him, not to walk in the furrow as he did, behind the old wooden mold-board, but to ride, thanks to the genius of modern invention. The old home farm now contains seventy-five acres. On it grow many varieties of fruit. All the stock is of superior quality, consisting of Percherons and roadsters, and high-grade Shorthorn cattle. Mr. Tatum was among the first to raise Norman horses in the township, and finding that they excelled, afterwards kept up that breed.

In politics, Mr. Tatum is a Democrat. At an early period he served as School Director, and has always taken an active interest in the schools. Although the township is strongly Republican, he was elected a member of the Board of Supervisors in 1885, and served in that capacity one year. He was also elected Clerk on the Democratic ticket. In the ripening years of a toilsome life, Mr. Tatum is enjoying in comfortable leisure the rest which he has so richly merited. Among the pleasurable diversions of his retirement is the study of mineralogy, and he has an interesting variety of native specimens to occupy his attention. For more than fifty years, he has been worthily identified with the interests of Buckheart Township and Fulton County, and, with the exception of one season, has spent his whole life on the old home farm.

TAYLOR, A. J.—Ready adaptation to opportunity, a capacity for gauging the possible increase in values and the well developed speculative instinct which places the natural broker in a class by himself, are factors which have directed the business energy of A. J. Taylor, in early life a farmer, but latterly identified with real-estate transactions in Canton. Fulton County has profited by the resourcefulness of the Taylors ever since the arrival here in 1832 of Robert Taylor, grandfather of A. J. This adventurous sire entered 160 acres of land from the Government, the deed bearing the signature of the President of the United States. The land as yet never had profited by a white man's occupation, and his task was to break it, prepare it for the seed and gather the harvest which was to constitute the foundation of his fortune. Eventually he retired to Canton, where his death occurred at an advanced age. His son, Samuel W., father of A. J., was reared on the Buckheart Township farm and married Harriet Whitney, a native of Fulton County. Upon his removal to Iowa he engaged in the drug business for a couple of years with Dr. W. D. Nelson, Sr., of Troy, in that State, and also became the owner of a farm, which he traded for property south of Cuba, Fulton County. This, in turn, was traded for a farm north of Canton, which he occupied for many years. The latter property is under a high state of cultivation, having been improved by both father and son, and is very valuable and productive.

A. J. Taylor was born in Ottumwa, Iowa, in 1862, but came with his father to Fulton County, Ill., where he was educated in the public schools, and trained in agriculture on the two homesteads. February 4, 1886, he married Lillian M. McBroom, daughter of Jerry McBroom, and of their union there are four children: Clifford V., Viola J., Agnes A. and Ralph R. Two years before his marriage Mr. Taylor purchased the farm of his uncle, Edward Taylor, consisting of 160 acres, in Canton Township, adjoining which his wife owns 125 acres. This also is an excellent property, apportioned to diversified farming and well equipped with modern buildings and practical agricultural implements.

In 1892 Mr. Taylor came to Canton and acquired the John Woodward business through mortgage, later purchasing a block, in which he established his real-estate office. This building was sold some months later and he purchased the Brunswick Block, which he disposed of in 1900 to become the agent for the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company, of St. Louis. At the expiration of three or four years he gave up the brewing agency and bought the Johnson Building, later disposing of the same to another brewing company, and in June, 1903, bought the business of George B. Henry, which he conducted until August, 1906, when he sold it. A notable contribution to the improvement of the city and the encouragement of home-making resulted through the purchase of what is known as the Whitney Addition to Canton, consisting of forty acres, which Mr. Taylor disposed of in town lots. He also bought forty acres of A. C. Moore, which he still owns. Besides the land of which he is the proprietor, he cultivates 765 acres, upon which he raises grain for the feeding of blooded stock, of which he raises a considerable number. During the last year he raised 245 hogs, and breeds two carloads of cattle annually, besides some high-grade draft horses. In 1895 he made a bid for furnishing the city with electric lights and is to be credited with having brought about this improvement. He has otherwise evinced commendable public spirit and zeal and in all his transactions has been guided by probity, sagacity and good judgment. He is one of the prominent fraternalists of the county, being identified with the Masons, Eagles and Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

TAYLOR, Bernard Hall, an able and prominent attorney-at-law of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Farmington, Ill., February 17, 1871. He is a son of William Lathrop and Florence (Montgomery) Taylor, natives, respectively, of Taunton, Mass., and of Farmington, Ill., and a grandson, on the paternal side, of Lathrop and Hannah (Hall) Taylor, natives of Massachusetts, the former born in Buckland, and the latter at Chelsea, in that State. The maternal grandparents, Alexander Kenney Montgomery and Angeline (Reisinger) Montgomery, were natives of Pennsylvania, of whom the former was born in Lawrence County, that State, and the latter, in Carlisle. The great-grandparents on both sides were Barnabas and Hannah (Billington) Taylor, born, respectively, at Ashfield and Middleborough, Mass., and Simpson Walker Montgomery and Nancy (Caldwell) Montgomery, who were born in Beaver County, Pa. After receiving his preliminary education in the public schools at Canton, Ill., at the age of sixteen years, the subject of this sketch entered the Riverview Military Academy, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., from which he graduated in 1890. He was then employed for one year as drill-master, when he entered the law department of the Columbia University, at Washington, D. C., graduating therefrom with the degree of LL. B. in 1893, in 1894 receiving the degree of LL.M., and in 1896 was admitted to the practice of law in his native State. Promptly after the declaration which led to the Spanish-American War, Mr. Taylor enlisted with his regiment, and was mustered in as Captain of Company M, Fifth Regiment, U. S. Volunteers, at Springfield, on May 7, 1898, under the command of Col. J. S. Culver, and, a week later, proceeded to Camp Thomas, Chickamauga Park, Ga., where they were stationed nearly three months awaiting orders to advance to the front. On August 3d the regiment left Chickamauga for Newport News, Va., expecting there to embark without delay for Cuba. After embarking on board the transport Obdam, the order to proceed was rescinded and the regiment, after remaining on board thirty-six hours, was disembarked and ordered back to camp—this being the second time a similar order had been countermanded. In consequence of the acceptance of terms of peace by Spain, a few days later, the regiment was ordered to Lexington, Ky., where it remained in camp for thirty days, when it was ordered to Springfield, after being furloughed for thirty days, was mustered out on October 16th. The regiment consisted of 1,213 men and forty-seven officers, and those who died during its period of enlistment were Allie C. Post, of Canton, who died at Camp Thomas; Hiram Smith, in hospital at Old Point Comfort; and James Mitchell, in hospital at Lexington, Ky. After returning from the war, Captain Taylor was appointed Judge Advocate of the Second Brigade, Illinois National Guard, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, which position he finally resigned in order to devote his time to the practice of his profession. The order granting his discharge contains the following commendation from his commanding officer, which is herewith copied by permission:

"As company commander he was one of the best in the regiment and the peer of any in the service; faithful, loyal, honest and willing, he made the welfare of his men his care and, as a result, he possesses their confidence and esteem, as well as that of the commanding officer of the regiment. He has all the qualifications and ability to command a battalion, regiment, or brigade.

(Signed J. S. Culver

"Colonel Commanding Regiment."

On his return from his war service, and just before the disbanding of his company, Captain Taylor was presented by its members with a handsome sword, as a token of their esteem as a fellow-soldier and their appreciation as an officer.

On November 19, 1902, Mr. Taylor was married to Allida Ten Eyck, who was born in Holland, Mich., a daughter of James and Rachel (Ledeboer) Ten Eyck, and educated at Jacksonville, Ill. Two children, James Alexander and Francis Montgomery, have been born of this union. Politically Col. Taylor is an active Republican. He held the office of States Attorney of Fulton County from 1900 to 1904. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., K. of P. and B. P. O. E.

TAYLOR, Clyde D., a prominent citizen and well known furniture dealer and undertaker in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that village May 2, 1867. He is a son of Alonzo and Eliza J. (Moss) Taylor, natives respectively of Ohio and Fulton County, Ill. Alonzo Taylor was a farmer by occupation.

Clyde D. Taylor attended the public schools of Cuba in boyhood, and helped his father on the farm until he was sixteen years old. At that period he began working in a furniture concern which in 1872 was established by his maternal grandfather, John W. Moss. Mr. Moss first started with a chair factory and afterward developed the enterprise into a furniture establishment. Mr. Taylor was manager of the Moss Furniture Company for twelve years, and then became proprietor of the concern, which he has since conducted, building the present two-story brick building, twenty-five by ninety-one feet in dimensions, in which the business has been transacted since 1900. He has one of the most completely stocked furniture stores and thoroughly equipped undertaking establishments in this section of the State, and also deals in carpets and glass. He is a man of exceptional business ability in his line and, as a merchant, has succeeded by many years of fair and honorable dealing in gaining the confidence and respect of his patrons to a notable degree.

On September 29, 1896, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage with Tressie Heller, who was born in Cuba, Ill., and this union has resulted in one child, Hester. On political issues, Mr. Taylor is arrayed on the side of the Democratic party. He has served creditably as Township Clerk, City Clerk and Township Collector, and for a number of years has been a member of the City Council. In fraternal circles he is identified with the I. O. O. F., K. of P., M. W., Rebekahs and Court of Honor.

TAYLOR, John T., a well known citizen and prominent and prosperous farmer in Section 2, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Putman Township, January 28, 1854, and in his childhood became the adopted son of J. M. Taylor, his mother being Mary A. (Ford) Taylor. The subject of this sketch received his early mental training in the district schools of Fulton County, and has spent his whole life in that county, with the exception of eleven months passed in other parts of Illinois, and in Indiana. When about nine years old, he was thrown upon his own resources, at an early age began working on a farm by the month, and as he became old enough to earn reasonable wages, carefully saved his earnings.

In 1883, Mr. Taylor purchased forty acres of land in Lewistown Township, to which he shortly afterward added another forty-acre tract. He continued purchasing at intervals until he had accumulated 185 acres, of which he sold 105 acres. At one time he was the owner of 345 acres and then disposed of all but the eighty acres which he first purchased. In September, 1903, Mr. Taylor bought 109 acres and in 1904, nineteen acres more, making 128 acres, in Section 2, Lewistown Township. He now owns 208 acres of land, as the result of hard work and good management. He is one among many examples of self-made men in Fulton County. Besides general farming, he is engaged in raising horses, hogs, cattle and sheep.

On September 17, 1876, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage with Mary M. Shaw, who was born in Lewistown, Fulton County, September 23, 1859, a daughter of Elias and Sophia (Jones) Shaw, of whom the former is deceased. The mother still survives, and resides on the old home-place. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw were the parents of four children, besides Mrs. Taylor, namely: Nettie, deceased wife of Michael Harris; Saloma, who died in infancy; Frank, who died at the age of ten years; and Flora, wife of W. O. Butler, who is engaged in farming in Lewistown Township.

The union of John T. Taylor and Mary M. Shaw resulted in ten children, as follows: Freddie E., who was born November 23, 1878, and died June 18, 1880; Charley L., who was born January 16, 1881, and died April 11, 1884; Minnie B., born January 22, 1883; Nellie T., born February 13, 1885; Ruth S., born May 4, 1888; Don L., born January 11, 1891; John L., born May 5, 1893; Telsa K., born October 31, 1896; Mary M., born December 12, 1900; and Lina D., born July 19, 1903.

In politics Mr. Taylor is a pronounced Republican. He firmly believes in the principles of that party, and steadfastly supports its policies and its candidates. He rode seven miles in order to cast his first ballot, and his first presidential vote was in behalf of Rutherford B. Hayes. Mr. Taylor has filled several township offices, with ability and fidelity. He takes an earnest interest in the cause of education, is a strong supporter of all measures for the public welfare, and is regarded as one of the most useful members of the community.

TAYLOR, S. W.—By those who were privileged to know him, and who were called upon to mourn his untimely death in 1876, S. W. Taylor is recalled as one of the very early school teachers of the city of Canton, this county, who maintained discipline and dispensed knowledge in a crude structure, worked hard and received small remuneration, and who later bent his energies to the development of a fine property in Canton Township. Mr. Taylor was born in Indiana in 1825, and in his youth had few advantages, and no material wealth save what he himself created.

Robert Taylor, father of S. W., was born in far-off Nova Scotia, and as a young man located in Pennsylvania, where he married Mary McCleary. The young people were ambitious of carving their fortunes out of a new country, so came to Indiana, where S. W. remained until receiving his majority. After relinquishing school teaching in Canton, the young man lived in both Troy and Ottumwa, Iowa, where he conducted a general merchandising business, and from which latter town he returned to Canton Township, and purchased the farm upon which the balance of his life was spent. His farm was equipped with the best agricultural improvements known in his time, and he was a careful manager, possessing considerable business ability as well as a knowledge of diversified farming.

The wife of Mr. Taylor, who survives him, formerly was Harriet N. Whitnah, daughter of Andrew and Jane (Hendershot) Whitnah. Mr. Whitnah came to Fulton County at an early day, settling on property in the southern part of Buckheart Township, where he achieved considerable success as a farmer and stock-raiser. The old Whitnah homestead is now occupied by Mrs. Taylor, who, notwithstanding the many trials and activities of her life, retains much of her youthful spirits and health. She is the devoted mother of a large family of children, who, in order of birth, are named as follows: Charles E., Jennie M., Andrew J., Calvin A. (deceased), Anna M., F. Alice and Evelyne. Two of the children are deceased, Carrie having died in infancy. Jennie M. is now the wife of H. C. McKee, of Creston, Iowa; F. Alice married A. R. Whitnah, of Carthage, Ill.; Anna M. is living at home, and Evelyne, the widow of A. W. Davison, formerly of Denver, Colo., was at the time of this writing visiting her mother in Canton. The deceased and venerated father of this family was a quiet, unassuming man, devoted to his family and home interests, and, although he was a Republican voter, had no desire for politics or general township affairs. Honest and high-minded, he was strictly conscientious in the performance of all tasks which confronted him.

TEACH, Mrs. Martha A., widow of William J. Teach, and now engaged in managing part of the home farm formerly occupied by her husband near Avon, Fulton County, Ill., was born near Clear Spring, Md., May 25, 1835, the daughter of Henry and Sarah (Brewer) Masters of that place. At the age of eighteen years she came with a married sister to Illinois, making the journey in a covered wagon, as was the common mode of conveyance of emigrants to the West in those days, finally locating in Fulton County, where she has since spent her life. On February 28, 1857, she was united in marriage at Farmington, Fulton County, with William J. Teach, whose fortunes in life she shared until his death in 1889, since then having lived alone on part of the home farm. Mr. and Mrs. Teach were blessed with ten children, namely: Clara A., Henry M., Ernest M., Sophronia E., Cora M., William A., Delmar D., Ethel M., Guy L. and Charles E., all of whom are engaged in farming except the youngest (Charles E.) who is a graduate of the State University at Lincoln, Neb., and is now Principal of the High School at Fairbury in that State. Politically Mrs. Teach believes in the principles of the Democratic party. Her residence is on Rural Mail Route No. 1, near the village of Avon.

TEN EYCK, Bernard L., who is successfully engaged in farming in Section 33, Fairview

Township, Fulton County, Ill., on a place which was successively the property of his grandfather and his father, was born in Fairview, this county, May 15, 1874. He is a son of James and Rachel B. (Ledeboer) Ten Eyck, of whom the former was born in Fairview, and the latter in Holland, Mich. Grandfather Peter Ten Eyck, who was a native of New Jersey, settled in Fulton County about the year 1837. At first he was engaged in merchandising, and later followed farming. In early life James Ten Eyck, by profession a lawyer, practiced law in Michigan, but after locating in Fulton County, Ill., applied himself to agricultural pursuits. He and his wife were the parents of two children, B. L. and Allida.

In boyhood Bernard L. Ten Eyck attended the schools of Fairview, Ill., and subsequently pursued a course of study at Hope College, Holland, Mich. After completing his education he commenced farming, in which occupation he has since continued with uniformly good results. The farm consists of 370 acres, a part of which is situated in Section 33, Fairview Township, the rest lying in Joshua Township. In addition to general farming, Mr. Ten Eyck devotes considerable attention to stock-raising and feeding, especially in the line of hogs.

On May 27, 1894, Mr. Ten Eyck was united in marriage, at Peoria, Ill., with Mary L. Davis, who was born in Fairview, Ill., and is a daughter of L. W. and Susan (Beam) Davis. Two children have resulted from this union, namely: Esther Rebecca, born March 22, 1897; and Marguerite Davis, born June 7, 1898. In politics Mr. Ten Eyck gives his support to the Democratic party, and is looked upon as one of the most intelligent, enterprising and progressive men in his locality.

TEN EYCK, James.—Among the old residents of Fulton County, Ill., and especially among those who are natives of the county, few are better known or more highly esteemed than James Ten Eyck, attorney-at-law and real-estate and insurance agent, of the village of Fairview. Although a man of intense American spirit and of direct lineal descent from patriots who rendered signal service to their country as officers in the Continental Army during the memorable conflict of the American Revolution, some of the admirable traits which mark his character, and have made him one of the most prominent and useful citizens of his locality, are doubtless traceable to the proverbially sturdy, vigorous and thrifty Dutch ancestry from which he is descended.

Mr. Ten Eyck was born in Fairview, Fulton County Ill., October 6, 1844, a son of Peter and Rebecca (Cox) Ten Eyck, natives of New Jersey, the father born at North Branch, in that State, August 28, 1808, and the mother, at Neshanic, Somerset County, September 15, 1811. The grandfather, James Ten Eyck, was a captain in the Revolutionary War, while Jacob

Ten Eyck, the great-grandfather, came to America from Holland (The Netherlands) at an early date in the Colonial period, settling on Manhattan Island (now the city of New York), whence he moved to New Jersey, locating at North Branch. He held the rank of Colonel under General Washington.

Peter Ten Eyck, the father, was a merchant in New York City until the year 1832. He then removed to Illinois, traveling by way of the Hudson River to Albany, N. Y., thence by canal to Buffalo, N. Y., thence by lake to Detroit, Mich., and thence by stage to Chicago. From Chicago, he made his way on foot to Peoria, Ill., going by boat from Peoria to St. Louis, Mo., and from that point to Quincy, Ill., finally arriving at Macomb, McDonough County, where he remained until 1835. During that year he located in Fairview, which village he made his home until 1846. In the fall of 1840 he rode on horseback from Springfield, Ill., to New Brunswick, N. J., in twenty-one days. In the spring of 1836 he traveled from Somerville, N. J., by wagon and team to Fairview. From 1846 until the time of his death on July 6, 1886, Peter Ten Eyck was a farmer and stock-raiser. His marriage to Rebecca Cox occurred in 1843. She came from New Jersey to Illinois with her father, Jacob E. Cox, and family, in the spring of 1842, settling in Fairview. Mr. Cox was the owner of a farm of 160 acres south of the village, and kept a hotel in Fairview for many years. He died in 1866, his widow surviving him a few years, each dying at the age of eighty-four years. Rebecca (Cox) Ten Eyck passed away May 19, 1905, when ninety-four years old.

James Ten Eyck lived on the home farm, five miles north of Fairview, until he was eighteen years old, meanwhile attending the district schools. He received his classical education in Hope College, at Holland, Mich., from which he graduated in 1871, with the degree of A. B., the degree of A. M. being conferred upon him by his Alma Mater in 1874. He graduated from the Law Department of the University of Michigan in 1873, with the degree of LL. B. Mr. Ten Eyck practiced law in all courts in the State of Michigan until the fall of 1880, since that time his residence having been in Fairview, where he has been engaged in practice, also devoting considerable attention to real-estate and insurance business. During the greater part of the time he has also conducted farming operations. He and his wife spent the year 1900 in Galesburg, Ill.

Mr. Ten Eyck was united in marriage on July 2, 1873, at Holland, Mich., with Rachel B. Ledeboer, a daughter of Bernardus and Alida (Goetselins) Ledeboer. Mrs. Ten Eyck was born in New York City, February 11, 1849. Her father, who was a physician, was born near Amsterdam, in the Netherlands. A son and daughter resulted from this union. The former, Bernard L. Ten Eyck, born in Fairview, Ill., May 15, 1874, married a daughter of

L. W. Davis, of Fairview, and is the father of two girls. Allida, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ten Eyck, born at Holland, Mich., November 3, 1879, is the wife of Bernard H. Taylor, of Canton, Ill., and they are the parents of two boys. In politics Mr. Ten Eyck is a Democrat. He served three terms as City Attorney of Holland, Mich., and has held the office of President of the Village Board of Fairview five years, having also been a member of the School Board eight years and Assessor four years. He has many friends and is greatly respected by all who know him.

TENLY, James M.—One of the most prominent and prosperous among the citizens of Farmington, Fulton County, Ill., is the subject of this sketch, who is also one of the oldest residents of the town, having been brought here by his parents when he was about two years of age. He has lived in Farmington continuously since his early childhood, and during a residence of approximately sixty years has been successfully engaged in various mercantile enterprises, and closely and conspicuously identified with the material, social and moral welfare of the community.

Mr. Tenly is a native of Pennsylvania, where he was born in 1847, the son of William and Matilda (Ellison) Tenly, who were natives of Virginia. William Tenly was a bridge-builder by occupation, and acted in the capacity of superintendent of construction for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, on the Cumberland Valley Division of that road. He built the bridge for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company at "Sir John's Run," and Dam No. 6, on the same line. Locating in Farmington in 1849, he was there engaged as a wood-worker and finisher. The first work done by him in this line was in connection with what is known as the Reed Block, on the north side of Fort Street, in Farmington, and he also worked on another building on Main Street. At a subsequent period he engaged in the real-estate and loan business, in which he spent most of his later years, and met with much success. He was a very capable, energetic and well disposed man, and was respected by all who knew him.

In early boyhood James M. Tenly received his mental training in the public schools of Farmington, and at the age of fifteen years began to learn the trade of a tin, copper and sheet-iron worker under John Tyler, in the hardware establishment of A. K. Montgomery & Co., a sketch of the head of which concern appears elsewhere in this volume. In 1872 he bought out the Widener grocery store, in what was known as the Spence-Cohn Building. This he sold two years later and purchased of Henry Page a furniture and undertaking stock, together with the building which contained it. In 1880 he sold a half interest in this business to A. G. Morse, and in 1895 disposed of the remaining half interest to Mr. Morse, who still retains it. Mr. Tenly is still the owner of the home which his father occupied, and which had been the property of the latter from 1864. He has built a fine house in Fort Street, of his own design, which is said to be the most elegant and elaborately furnished residence in the town of Farmington. It contains thirteen rooms, is steam-heated and is completely modern as many of the more pretentious houses of the large cities. Mr. Tenly has withdrawn from active pursuits and is now living in leisurely and comfortable retirement.

In 1858 the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Sarah A. Bond, who was born in Illinois and in girlhood utilized her opportunities as a pupil in the public schools. One child resulted from this union, Edith F., who is now practicing medicine in Chicago. In religious belief Mr. Tenly is in harmony with the doctrines of the Baptist Church. In fraternal circles he is identified with the A. F. & A. M., being a thirty-second degree Mason and a member of Peoria Commandery, No. 3, and of the Peoria Consistory. He is a very prominent and influential factor of the community in which he lives.

THOMAS, James C., attorney-at-law in Cuba, Fulton County, Ill., and editor and proprietor of the Journal, in that place, was born in Jackson County, Ohio, on January 2, 1852, and is a son of James and Caroline (Creighton) Thomas, natives of Ohio. James Thomas was a farmer by occupation. James C., the son, received his elementary education in the public schools and completed his intellectual training at Hedding College, Abingdon, Ill. He studied law and in 1877 was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Illinois. For some time he practiced law in Bushnell, and in 1822 moved to London Mills, Ill., where he started a paper which he conducted a year and a half. He then located in Cuba, where, in August, 1884, he founded the Journal, a weekly paper which he has since conducted. The Journal has a circulation throughout the surrounding country of 800 copies. The office operates a job-printing department equipped with a power press. Mr. Thomas still maintains his law practice, and attends to a considerable amount of probate business, but has transferred the management of the printing establishment to J. W. Nelson. In 1896 he built the brick block, twenty-four by fifty-six feet in dimensions, where the Journal is published and there he has his office.

On December 30, 1875, at Monmouth, Ill., Mr. Thomas was united in marriage with Annie W. Waggstaff, a native of Ireland, who received her education at Hedding College, Abingdon, Ill. Three children resulted from this union, namely: Maud (Mrs. M. T. Rogers), who, with her husband, is practicing medicine; Myrtle (Mrs. G. A. Millard); and Josie (Mrs. J. K. Orendorff). Mrs. Thomas is principal of the Cuba High School, having been an educator in Fulton County for twenty-one years. In politics, Mr. Thomas is a Democrat. He has served as City Attorney of Cuba, Justice of the Peace and member of the Town Board. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., Cuba Lodge, Canton Chapter, Damascus Commandery, of Havana, and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star; is also identified with the I. O. O. F., M. W. A., and Court of Honor. He is recognized as an able lawyer and a capable journalist, and is among the prominent citizens of Fulton County.

THOMPSON, Francis M., than whom few among the representative farmers of Fulton County, Ill., have accomplished such substantial progress as has marked the comparatively short period of his mature career which he actively devoted to agricultural labors, is living in leisurely retirement on the large and finely improved farm which he acquired by thrift, diligence and sound management before reaching the stage of what is ordinarily designated as middle life. Although barely twenty-five years have elapsed since the attainment of his majority, he is recognized as one of the most extensive land owners of his section of the county, and is enjoying a merited rest from his earlier toil, having amassed a handsome competency.

Mr. Thompson was born in Woodland Township, Fulton County, Ill., January 24, 1861. He is a son of John and Keziah (Herel) Thompson, natives of Coshocton County, Ohio. His parents moved from that State to Illinois shortly after their marriage, settling in Fulton County. They made the journey by wagon, crossing the river at Beardstown. On arriving at his destination, John Thompson had but one dollar left, out of which he found it necessary to buy salt to render his venison relishable. Deer were so abundant as to make venison the customary meat-food of the early settlers, but salt was then so rare an article in that region as to constitute a luxury, and the price of it was very high. The young couple located in Woodland Township about the year 1840, and the first neighbor they met was John Farwell. Mr. Thompson bought a tract of eighty acres in Section 25, on which he built a log cabin, and then proceeded to clear the land. To the original purchase, he subsequently added forty acres. After clearing and improving both tracts, he had a fine farm of 120 acres, on which he spent the remainder of his life. His death occurred on April 4, 1892, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years, his widow dying December 13, 1906, at the advanced age of eighty-five years.

John and Keziah (Herel) Thompson were the parents of nine children, namely: Annie J., deceased; John J., who is engaged in farming in Woodland Township, and was a soldier in the Civil War; Samuel, a resident of Macomb, Ill., who served three years in the Eighty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; C. H., who was a soldier in the One Hundred Thirty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers; James M., whose home is in Mound City, Mo.; Mary E., wife of J. T. Smith, who lives in Oklahoma; George W., a resident of Astoria, Ill.; and Nancy, who resides in Pittsburg, Kans., the wife of William Smith. The father of this family was a man of somewhat quiet deportment, sociably inclined but never obtrusive, and never disposed to meddle in the affairs of his neighbors. His word was as good as his bond. He was never sued at law, and in his long life sued but one man. He was a good trader, and never had a blind horse or mule. All who enjoyed his acquaintance entertained for him a feeling of unqualified respect. In politics, he was a Democrat. Together with his wife, he belonged to the Christian Church.

Francis M. Thompson was reared on the farm in Woodland Township, and there in boyhood enjoyed the advantages of the district schools. He remained on the homestead until 1903, but during his residence there became the owner of 440 acres of land, all in one body, located in Kerton Township, which is his place of residence. In recent years, he has not been actively engaged in farming operations. His life has kept pace with the development of the county, and he has been closely identified with its best interests since early manhood. He is one of its most successful farmers, and his prosperity is solely attributable to the sound judgment which he has always manifested and the thorough and systematic methods which have characterized his management.

On March 7, 1887, Mr. Thompson was united in marriage with Carrie M. Smith, who was born in Kansas, a daughter of Cyrus and Samantha (Walker) Smith. Her parents are deceased. Seven children have resulted from the union of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, as follows: Grace, wife of Jesse Lynch, a farmer in Kerton Township; Tessie and Chester, who are at home; Harry, who died in infancy, and Hardy E., Mabel and Russell. In politics Mr. Thompson is a supporter of the Democratic party and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. and A. M., belonging to the Astoria (Ill.) lodge. He is a man of excellent traits of character, and is held in high esteem by a wide circle of acquaintances.

THORNTON, Stephen Yerkes, editor and publisher of the "Fulton County Ledger," and one of the best known men in his section of the State, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., December 13, 1831, the son of Theodore and Mary (Yerkes) Thornton, both natives of Pennsylvania. In early youth Mr. Thornton attended the district schools, the instruction received there being supplemented by a subsequent pupilage of a year's duration in a private school conducted by his cousin, Rev. Stephen Yerkes, father of John W. Yerkes, late Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the administration of President Roosevelt. Mr. Thornton's residence in Canton began in 1854, and since 1856 he has been sole proprietor of the "Fulton County Ledger." After learning the printer's trade in the office of the "Doylestown (Pa.) Democrat," Mr. Thornton spent a short time, in 1854, in Washington, D. C., in connection with the "Congressional Globe," in June of that year coming to Canton, Ill., which has been his home continuously to the present time. In 1856 he acquired an interest in the "Fulton County Ledger," of which he became sole proprietor a few months later, and with which he has been associated as editor for a period of fifty years. Other business interests with which he has been identified include the Canton National Bank, of which he became one of the original stockholders on its organization in 1886, and of which he has been a Director and Vice-President ever since.

In 1859 Mr. Thornton was elected School Commissioner for Fulton County, being re-elected in 1861, serving two terms; served four terms as a member of the City Council and from 1869 to 1876 was a member of the Canton City School Board, serving in all twelve years, of which five years were spent as Secretary of the Board. His most prominent official position has been that of Representative in the State Legislature, to which he was elected in 1872 and re-elected in 1874. This being soon after the adoption of the State Constitution of 1870, much important legislation was the outcome of the sessions of the General Assembly of that period. In November, 1876, he was the nominee on the Democratic ticket for Secretary of State, but with the rest of the ticket failed of election. His political attitude has been uniformly on the side of the Democratic party, which he represented as a member of its State Central Committee for two terms.

On February 14, 1858, Mr. Thornton was married in the city of Canton to Miss Adelaide Baudouine, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and of their five children three are living, namely: Mrs. C. A. Whiting, of Elgin, Ill.; Mrs. C. I. Bolich, of Canton, and William E. Thornton, who is associated with his father in newspaper work.

Mr. Thornton has been identified with the Baptist Church for more than fifty years, serving for a number of years as member of its Board of Trustees, and fraternally has been a member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 734, A. F. & A. M., for over forty years. His labors have been devoted almost solely during the later years to newspaper work, in which he has won prominence and success.

TOBAN, Marietta Rogers, the much esteemed and worthy widow of Mr. Frank Toban, formerly a prosperous and respected farmer and Postmaster of Grandview, S. D., is a native of Fulton County, where she was born January 31, 1854. She is a daughter of Rolla G. and Amanda (Carver) Rogers, of whom the former was born in Ohio, and the latter in Kentucky. Her paternal grandparents, Edward and Elizabeth (Wood) Rogers, were natives of West Virginia and Ohio, respectively, and her grandfather and grandmother on the maternal side, Pleasant and Catherine (Shryock) Carver, were born in Kentucky.

Marietta Rogers grew to womanhood on her father's farm, and in youth enjoyed the advantages of the district schools in the vicinity of her home, where she received a good common-school education. On April 28, 1880, she was united in marriage with Frank Toban, who was born in Baltimore, Md., October 24, 1851, and who was successfully engaged in cultivating his farm of 320 acres in the locality above mentioned for many years. Mr. Toban died February 8, 1893, in Armour, S. D. Mrs. Toban has one son, Fred, of Orion Township, Fulton County, with whom the mother makes her home. Mrs. Toban is an earnest and consistent member of the Methodist Church, and socially is affiliated with the "Tribunes." She has many friends, who entertain for her feelings of most cordial regard.

TOMPKINS, Albert B., long and favorably known to the people of Fulton County, Ill., as a merchant and banker, is a resident of Avon, in that county, where he was born February 20, 1842, a son of Stephen and Ethelinda (Woods) Tompkins, both of whom were natives of the State of New York, the father having been born in Madison County. In 1833, Stephen Tompkins traveled from New York to Galesburg, Ill., making the journey partly by boat, and the remainder on foot. He built the fourth frame house constructed in Galesburg and opened a shop there, in which he followed his trade of shoemaking and tanning, for one year. In 1838 he located in Avon, Fulton County, and engaged in the merchandise trade, buying grain, packing pork, and hauling his product to Liverpool, Ill., for shipment. This business he conducted for many years with unvarying success, and by energy, perseverance and wise management, amassed a handsome competence. He was a Republican in politics, and served as the first Postmaster of Avon, and was also Township Supervisor. To Stephen Tompkins and wife were born eight children, four of whom are yet living, namely: Albert B., Stephen L., Frank W., and Mrs. Fannie E. Stevens (nee Tompkins). The busy and useful career of Stephen Tompkins was terminated by death December 28, 1898, his wife still surviving. At the time of his decease, Stephen Tompkins was the owner of 1000 acres of land in the vicinity of Avon.

In early youth, the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the public schools in the neighborhood of his birthplace, and was variously occupied until 1865, when he entered into partnership with his father, the firm conducting one of the largest mercantile concerns in Fulton County. The son continued in the same line of business until 1904. Mr. Tompkins is President of the A. B. Tompkins & Company Bank, the other officers being F. W. Tompkins, Vice-President, and W. H. Clayburg, Cashier. The bank is a private institution, and was started in 1884, under the style of Stephen Tompkins & Son. It has a capital of $25,000, does a general banking and exchange business, and its owners are members of the State Bankers' Association.

On November 10, 1868, Albert B. Tompkins was united in marriage with Florence Bliss, who was born in the State of New York, a daughter of David J. and Lavisa (Reynolds) Bliss, natives of New York. Mr. and Mrs. Tompkins have two daughters, namely: Ethel M., Mrs. William H. Clayburg; and Nellie C., who is the wife of Giles M. Clayburg.

In politics the subject of this sketch is a supporter of the policies of the Republican party, and has rendered efficient service as a member of the Board of Village Trustees. In religion he adopts the creed of the Universalist Church, and fraternally has been a member of the A. F. & A. M. since 1864. It is almost superfluous to dwell on the business qualifications of one who has had so long a career as a prominent and successful merchant. Suffice it to say that these qualities are recognized as being of a high order, and that his sound judgment and conservative experience as a financier have won for him general confidence and given him a high standing in the banking circles of his section of the State.

TOMPKINS, George A.—The career of George A. Tompkins adds another to the many illustrations which Fulton County has furnished of the results attainable by intelligence, tact and perseverance when applied to the building up of an extensive business under the favoring conditions which have, for many years, attended all her enterprises. As the Secretary and Treasurer of the Avon Milling & Manufacturing Company for the past thirteen years, Mr. Tompkins has influenced to large extent the development of a stable industry, and one which would have yielded pronounced success to those only who had the sagacity to perceive, and the boldness to push to the best results, so large an opportunity. Two years after his identification with the company, which was organized with a capital stock of $15,000, January 10, 1891, with John Woods, H. T. Townsend and Garret Van Winkle, chief officials, Mr. Tompkins purchased the interest of Mr. Van Winkle, and since has held his present position with the company. The works are among the most complete of their kind in the Central West. All grades of tile, from three to eight-inch are manufactured, also fire clay products, and the output averages 100 cars for shipment and fifty cars for local trade per year. The brick and tile factory are operated the year round. The company have their own water and electric plants, and from them supply lighting for public buildings and private residences in Avon, and water for the fire protection of the city. They own and operate one mile of electric railroad, used to haul clay from the clay-pit to the works, and they own the thirteen town lots upon which the plant is located. The manufactory has been a great boon to Avon and vicinity, as it is a large employer of labor, a large tax-payer and an influential factor in many municipal relations. It has brought to Avon a cause for local pride in the ceramic, as well as agricultural, possibilities of its soil, and in the high character and business ability of the men directing its affairs.

Mr. Tompkins was born in Avon, Ill., during the first year of the Civil War, a son of Gilbert and Mary E. (Davis) Tompkins, the former a native of New York and the latter born in Illinois. He is one of the three survivors in a family of five children, and was educated in the public schools of his native town. Gilbert Tompkins was a merchant by occupation, who came to Illinois in 1856, and for a time was associated in the grocery business with his brother Stephen. He later turned his attention to the nursery business, and it was from this interesting work and study that he finally retired from the cares of active life. His children absorbed in their youth the business spirit, and in their lives have echoed his steadfastness to duty and uncompromising honesty.

Mr. Tompkins is prominent socially as well as commercially in Avon, and is a popular member of the Harmony Lodge, No. 253, A. F. & A. M., of Avon. In 1892 he was united in marriage to Fannie V. Townsend, daughter of R. W. and Rachel (Terry) Townsend, natives of New York and Illinois, respectively, and the former an early settler and merchant of Fulton County. Mr. and Mrs. Tompkins are the parents of a daughter, Winifred G. Mr. Tompkins is a man of broad mind and sympathies, keenly interested in the happenings which are making world history, and a promoter of those educational and general agencies which are bringing about the greater happiness and independence of mankind.

TONCRAY, James A., a successful farmer and stock-raiser, living on Section 3, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Lewistown Township, in that county, October 1, 1853. He is a son of Joseph S. and Ruth S. (Harrison) Toncray, natives of Lewis County, Ky., where they were married.

Mrs. Toncray was a daughter of James Harrison. Joseph Toncray was a son of Joseph and Mary (Smith) Toncray. The family of Joseph Toncray, the grandfather, were residents of Kentucky. The great-great-grandfather was a native of France and the great-great-grand mother was of Scotch-Irish descent. John A. Toncray was conscripted during the French-Canadian War. The family first settled in New York, whence they scattered to different points. At one time they were the owners of large landed estates in Dutchess County in that State. Grandfather Toncray's son, Joseph, first journeyed from Kentucky to Fulton County in 1848, but returned to that State, where his marriage occurred the same year. In 1852 he again made the trip from Marysville, Ky., to Fulton County, Ill., with his family and located in Lewistown Township, where he arrived on December 15th of that year. In 1866 he bought the old Toncray farm in Buckheart Township, where he was engaged in the pursuit of his vocation until 1894. In that year he moved to Bryant, Ill., and there died March 12, 1905. He was born October 16, 1826. His widow is still living in Bryant.

They were parents of seven children, as follows: James A.; Francis E., a farmer near Mt. Vernon, Jefferson County, Ill.; Emma Inez, deceased; Sadie T. (Mrs. Hall), of Canton, Ill.; Wilbur S., a farmer near St. David, Ill., who married Della Carry; Maurice M., a resident of Phoenix, Ariz., and Mary, who is at home in Bryant, Ill. The birth of the mother of this family occurred November 23, 1834.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the paternal farm and his mental training was obtained in the district schools of the neighborhood. At the age of twenty-one years he began working at farming by the month. After his marriage he lived for a year on the old Scholes farm in Liverpool Township, and in 1879 moved to his farm on Section 3, in the same township, which has since been the family home. The property consists of eighty acres, and is in a high state of cultivation. Its owner devotes considerable attention to raising a good grade of all kinds of stock.

On March 27, 1879, Mr. Toncray was united in marriage with Eva D. Scholes, a daughter of Benjamin and Lucinda J. (Beaver) Scholes. Her father was born at Morley, near Leeds, England, November 2, 1821, and her mother was a native of Maryland, where her birth took place December 30, 1831. Mr. Scholes, on coming to the United States, proceeded to Illinois, where he located at Liverpool, and there the marriage occurred May 13, 1852. Mr. and Mrs. Toncray have had seven children, two of whom died in infancy. Those surviving are: Wilton E., born July 21, 1884, a carpenter by trade; Harley S., born October 23, 1885; Anthony R., born November 13, 1887; Russell B., born January 27, 1889; Ruth S., born October 21, 1897.

In politics Mr. Toncray is a supporter of the Democratic party, of which he is an active and influential member. For fourteen years he served ably and faithfully as Township Clerk, and has held the office of Road Commissioner. His worthy and estimable wife is a member of the Church of the Nazarenes. The Toncray family is one of the oldest and most honored in Fulton County and its present representative is regarded as one of the most upright, public-spirited and useful members of his community.

TRITES, John Ham, a prosperous and substantial farmer on Section 19, Buckheart Township, and a pioneer resident of Fulton County, Ill., was born in Darby, Delaware County, Pa., May 22, 1844, and is a son of George G. and Louisa (Davis) Trites, also natives of Pennsylvania. The Trites family originated in Germany, where the name was spelled "Trytze." Four brothers came to America with the old German-Swedish colony, who settled at Philadelphia previous to the coming of William Penn. The Bishop of Sweden, father of Emanuel Swedenborg, was the Bishop of that colony. Both of the parents of John H. Trites were pioneer settlers of Delaware County, Pa., where a generation of the Trites name was born and passed away.

George G. Trites, with his family of ten children, settled in Fulton County in 1844. The father cast his vote for James K. Polk for President of the United States, and started the same day for Illinois. He took passage on what was then known as a "section boat" and went to St. Louis, thence to Peoria, Ill., and thence to Farmington, Ill., where he bought 160 acres of land, which is still the property of two of his daughters. There he and his wife spent the remainder of their years, being lifelong members of the Swedenborgian Church, in which they took absorbing interest. George G. Trites was a strong advocate of the public school system, and was a School Director for a number of years. He lived to reach the age of eighty-seven years. He was a man of strict probity and unimpeachable veracity. Any statement made by him was conceded to be reliable, and his word was as good as his bond.

Mr. and Mrs. George G. Trites were the parents of the following children: Serena; George Davis, of Brighton, Iowa; William, a resident of Leavenworth, Kans., who served in the Civil War as a member of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; Lydia Esther, who is now living on the old home farm near Canton, Ill.; Mary E., who also resides there; Margaret, wife of Jacob Wise, of Beardstown, Ill.; Lewis E., who raised a company of soldiers during the Civil War, served in the same command as his brother William, and was assigned to duty in guarding the Confederate prisoners at Camp Douglas, Chicago; Louise, wife of Charles Lilley, of Wardner, Idaho; John H., and Susan B., wife of Marcus Moran, a photographer of Canton, Fulton County. Serena, the eldest of the family, is deceased, as is also her husband, Theodore Barnard. They left a family of five children, as follows: George, who died in February, 1904; William, who was Professor of Sciences in the Drake University, at Des Moines, Iowa; Charles H. and James, who are on the old home farm near Canton, Ill., and Mary, wife of Charles Slocum, a motorman of St. Louis, Mo.

John H. Trites has made his home in Fulton County since 1844. He was reared to farm life and received his early education in the district schools in the vicinity of his home and in Cole's Business College at Peoria, Ill. He has been a constant reader and has always kept well informed concerning current events. He has made farming his life occupation, and until his marriage, in 1874, remained on the home place. After that event he applied himself to farming on the old homestead until 1885, when he purchased his farm on Section 19, Buckheart Township. In 1886 he moved to this place, which was partially improved, and consisted of 134 acres of land. On his farm may now be seen a high grade of Norman horses, the first ever imported into that locality.

Mr. Trites has not only been a witness of the marvelous changes of the last sixty-one years in Fulton County, but has borne an important part in bringing them to pass. He has helped to reclaim the swamps and dense timber lands and transform the broad area into fertile and productive farms. He has been instrumental in changing frog ponds into homes for prosperous and contented farmers. He has undergone the ordeal of clearing and tilling the land and endured the numerous hardships that confronted the early settlers. He has steadfastly supported all measures for the upbuilding of his township and county, and the churches and schools have always found in him an earnest champion. He has made his home a delightful and attractive spot and taught his children to love it, as representing all the comforts and diversions of life.

On September 2, 1874, Mr. Trites was united in marriage with Sarah Baughman, who was born in Fulton County, and is a daughter of Gideon and Lavina (Artman) Baughman, who journeyed from Ohio to Fulton County, Ill., where they settled in 1833, near the village of Cuba. Gideon Baughman died February 13, 1904, his wife having passed away when Mrs. Trites was a child. Mr. and Mrs. Trites became the parents of the following children: George G., who died in infancy; Lewis D., who is engaged in mining; Susan B., wife of James I. Carter, a farmer in Buckheart Township; John H., Jr., who dwells under the parental roof; Winifred L., who is pursuing a commercial course in the Peoria Business College, and Sylvanus T., who is with his parents. Mr. Trites is not bound by party ties, but upholds men and measures strictly on their merits. Religiously he is a member of the Swedenborgian Church, while Mrs. Trites is a Congregationalist.

TRITES, Lewis E., Sr. (deceased), whose life in Fulton County, Ill., began as a boy of seven years, and was long continued with large material profit to himself, as well as marked benefit to the interests of the community in which he lived, was born in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Pa., May 14, 1838. His father and mother, George G. and Louisa (Davis) Trites, were also natives of Pennsylvania, where the former followed the occupation of a farmer and market gardener. They moved to Illinois in 1845, sojourning for a few days in Farmington, Fulton County, and then locating on a farm in Canton Township, and there passed the remainder of their lives. They were the parents of ten children. (See sketch of George G. Trites.)

In boyhood Lewis E. Trites attended the district schools in the neighborhood of his father's farm and after he grew to manhood always followed farming. He bought a farm of ninety-three acres in Canton Township, and at a later period purchased another of 110 acres. Ultimately he became the owner of 160 acres more, aggregating 363 acres in that township. After pursuing his wonted occupation until 1896 he withdrew from active labors and retired to Canton, where he passed away on April 8, 1903.

In 1862 Mr. Trites enlisted in Company I, Sixty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he was Second Sergeant. He served, however, but five months, having been assigned to the duty of guarding prisoners most of the time, and returned home with his regiment.

On January 11, 1865, Mr. Trites was united in marriage with Ann Eliza Randolph, who was born in Fulton County, a daughter of John F. and Nancy (Rawalt) Randolph, the former born in Yates County, N. Y., in December, 1796, and the latter in Pennsylvania, June 18, 1803. Mr. and Mrs. Randolph were the parents of eleven children, eight of whom grew to maturity, and six of whom are still living. Three of this family, of whom Mrs. Trites was the ninth in order of birth, were born on the Fourth of July: Mrs. Ann Eliza (Randolph) Trites; her brother, Lewis F. Randolph, and her sister, Mrs. Minerva (Randolph) Hinkle, exactly two years elapsing between their respective dates of birth. (See sketch elsewhere in this volume of John F. Randolph.)

In his native State John F. Randolph was a teacher by occupation. He and his wife journeyed to the West, the father's object being to secure land for his boys. They first settled in Indiana, whence a few years later they moved to Illinois, locating in Joshua Township, Fulton County, in 1835. The father died in 1845, when his daughter, Ann Eliza, was but five years old, and the mother passed away February 13, 1878. Jephtha Randolph, Mrs. Trite's grandfather, was a soldier in the Revolutionary War. Sketches of the lives of John F. and Lewis F., her brothers, appear on another page of this volume. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Trites resulted in three children, namely: Halcyon, Carl and Minerva. The two first named are deceased, the second, Carl, having been married to Millie McCreary. Minerva Hinkle Trites, who alone survives, has been employed as a teacher in the graded schools.

The life of Mr. Trites was exemplary in every respect, and he was a useful and greatly respected member of the community. He was a broad-minded, intelligent citizen, an enthusiastic reader, always keeping abreast with the times and taking an optimistic, hopeful view of life. Possessed of a genial, cheerful disposition, he always had a kindly word and deed for his neighbors. His aged parents found his willing hands and reliable judgment at their service at all times. In politics he was allied with the Republican party, but never aspired to public office. In religion he was an adherent of the Swedenborgian faith. Mrs. Trites is residing in Canton, in comfortable circumstances, and is bearing the burden of her successive bereavements with fortitude and resignation, consoled and sustained by the sincere respect, warm sympathy and cordial regard of many friends.

TURNER, Charles Henry (deceased), the beginning of whose agricultural experience in Fulton County, Ill., was coincident with the early stages of the county's growth, and who was for an extended lifetime one of the most prosperous and prominent farmers within its limits, was born in Corinth, Saratoga County, N. Y., October 3, 1833. He was a son of Samuel and Sallie (Brooking) Turner, who spent the greater portion of their lives in that State, where the father was successfully engaged in farming. They settled in Fulton County, Ill., in the year 1835. Samuel Turner died June 17, 1867, and his wife passed away February 25, 1870, each having attained the age of seventy-one years. To them were born seven children, as follows: Mary J., Thomas, Sarah, Charles H., William, James E. and George A.

Charles H. Turner was reared on his father's farm and in boyhood obtained his schooling in an old log schoolhouse in the vicinity of the paternal home. As soon as he reached years of maturity he applied himself to farming on his own responsibility, and continued in that pursuit throughout the remainder of his life. During his early manhood he spent some time in California. He was a very energetic and thorough farmer and a man of unblemished character, commanding the respect and enjoying the confidence of all with whom his transactions brought him into contact in the course of his long and useful career. His landed holdings in Fulton County comprised 340 acres, all under a high state of cultivation. In 1901 he withdrew from farming operations and spent the remainder of his life in retirement at Canton, Fulton County, where his death occurred January 29, 1906.

Mr. Turner was twice married. On February 20, 1867, he was united in matrimony with Delena A. Gorham, who was born October 14, 1835, and died September 26, 1901. The offspring of this union was three children, two of whom are living, namely: Herbert L. and George S., both of whom are engaged in farming in Fulton County. On August 10, 1903, Mr. Turner wedded for his second wife Mrs. Susan A. (McGehee) Shirck, a native of Pennsylvania.

nia. The Shircks settled in Illinois during the 'fifties, locating in Peoria County, where Mr. Shirck, who was a mechanic, owned and operated a hub factory.

In his political relations Mr. Turner was identified with the Democratic party. Fraternally his affiliation was with the Mutual Aid and the I. O. O. F.

Mrs. Turner, who is still residing in Canton, is a woman of high character.

TURNER, George S., a well known and prosperous farmer of Putman Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township July 1, 1869, and there received his early mental training in the country schools. He is a son of Charles H. and Delena (Gorman) Turner, natives, respectively, of New York and Ohio. His grandfather, Samuel Turner, was a New Yorker and his grandfather, Nathan Gorman, was born in Rutledge County, Vt. Charles H. Turner came with his parents to Putman Township in 1835 and located half a mile west of Civer, Fulton County, where he was engaged in farming until 1869. In that year he moved to his present place, which he purchased in 1882. The farm consists of 340 acres on Section 23, Putman Township. In 1900 Charles H. Turner retired from active life and moved to the city of Canton.

The subject of this sketch, in company with his brother, Herbert L., now operates the home farm, and they have made nearly all the principal improvements on the place. Herbert L. Turner was born in 1868 and the two brothers are the only children of the family still living, another brother, Clayton H. Turner, having died in April, 1885.

On May 1, 1900, Mr. Turner was united in marriage with Grace Gulick, who was born in Fulton County, and three children—Irna, Arla B. and Lyle, the latter born March 18, 1907—have blessed this union.

Fraternally Mr. Turner is affiliated with the Mystic Workers. He is a very enterprising and progressive farmer and a citizen of good repute.

TUTHILL, Earl D.—It was the fate of Earl D. Tuthill to rear such a structure of business and character success, that now, although twenty years have joined the past since his lamented death October 4, 1886, the memory of him burns brightly in the hearts and minds of the friends who loved him, and of such survivors of the business contingent as were associated with him during his thirty years of merchandising in the town of Bernadotte, this county. As in life, mention of this early merchant brings to mind a loyal, courteous and high thinking man, one who took his way in all gentleness through the world, leaving people and conditions better than when he first found them.

Born in Genesee County, N. Y., September 11, 1837, Mr. Tuthill was a son of Leonard and Emeline (Logan) Tuthill, also natives of that State, and early settlers in Bernadotte, Fulton County. With the exception of a few months spent in Ipava and Vermont, the son was a resident of Bernadotte during his whole Western life. His first independent occupation was carpentering, at which he became an expert, and this he followed in connection with farming for a number of years. He was frugal and thrifty, and September 17, 1861, established a home of his own, marrying Mary McCoughey, who was born in Ohio, March 20, 1843, and came to Fulton County in early life with her father, John W. McCoughey, mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this work. The year after his marriage Mr. Tuthill embarked upon his merchandising career as a clerk in the general store of Harrison McCoughey, and in 1866 started in business for himself, continuing to operate a general store until the close of his active life. He had many of the most desirable qualities of the successful merchant, and not the least of them was a rare fund of good humor, a natural courtesy of demeanor, and an intense desire to please. People went out of their way to speak to him on the street, and his approach always created an atmosphere of cordiality and kindliness. He adhered always to fair representation, and sought to promote in his patrons an appreciation of high grade commodities, as against those of cheap and unreliable kind. At all times he kept his finger on the pulse of popular demand, and as far as possible catered to all classes and conditions of men.

The married life of Mr. Tuthill was a particularly harmonious one, and it was perhaps in the circle of his immediate family that his considerate and lovable traits were most in evidence. He was kindness itself to those dependent upon his support, and the soul of loyalty to the friends who brightened his pathway with their appreciation and regard. Shrewd business ability and a capacity for saving and wise investment left his wife and son, Harry, in good circumstances, but more than aught else do they treasure the legacy of a good name and noble purpose, which grew out of the life and efforts of one of Bernadotte's most esteemed and useful citizens.

TUTHILL, Harry L.—Of the younger generation of business men of Bernadotte, prominence is deservedly accorded Harry L. Tuthill, the greater part of whose active life has been devoted to a practical study of merchandising, and who owns and conducts one of the most up-to-date and progressive general stores in this part of Fulton County. Mr. Tuthill comes of the second generation of his family to reflect credit upon the State, as his father, Earl Tuthill, was for years one of its representative men.

Both physically and educationally, Mr. Tuthill is well prepared for an energetic business life. He attended first the school of his native town of Bernadotte, where he was born May 13, 1873, and he later graduated from the high school of Lewistown, and took a course at the Western Normal College at Bushnell, Ill. He then returned to Bernadotte and started in business with his uncle, J. P. McCoughey, having a stock of boots and shoes valued at $100, and later adding patent medicines and incidentals. This partnership was dissolved at the expiration of two years, and Mr. Tuthill then purchased the building in which he now conducts his business, and where he has branched out into general lines, including groceries, dry goods, hoots and shoes, drugs, and hats and caps. His stock now is valued at about $2,000.

On December 4, 1894, Mr. Tuthill was united in marriage to a daughter of John L. Thompson, a resident of Friend, Neb., and a child, B. V. Tuthill, was born to them December 20, 1896. Mr. Tuthill is an enthusiastic Democrat, and has done much to strengthen the local standing of his party. For the past six years he has been Township Clerk, and has given the greatest satisfaction in that capacity. He is active in church circles, and fraternally is connected with the Masons and Modern Woodmen of America, having filled various offices in the latter lodge. He possesses the traits of courtesy, consideration and integrity, and maintains, in his many-sided intercourse with the public, the highest tenets of commercial life.

UNDERWOOD, Richard Baxter.—It was given to Richard Baxter Underwood to begin his career in Canton, in 1851, as driver of an ox-team for Captain A. C. Babcock, at fifteen dollars a month, and at the time of his death, March 25, 1898, to cease his activity as President of the First National Bank of his adopted town. It is doubtful if so wide a divergence in his fortunes appeared upon the speculative horizon of the lad of nineteen, who, having been born in Augusta, Me., May 14, 1832, was thus humbly, but honestly, adjusting himself to a life of frontier privation and promise. He had much to aid him in fundamental requisites of good citizenship, for he was of excellent birth, the son of Joseph Underwood, a native of England, and by occupation jewelsmith and Congregational minister. His education was acquired in the public schools of St. Johnsbury, Caledonia County, Vt., and at a boy's school well known in New England.

The resources of Mr. Underwood were well-nigh exhausted after his journey by canal and river to Fulton County, but he was frugal and industrious, and saved money while following the toiling oxen. Next he became a clerk for the mercantile firm of Amos C. and William Babcock, and later still was clerk for Lampport & Company, and Walter & Baughman. In 1857 he became a member of the firm of Seaton, Trites & Underwood, and upon disposing of his interest in the business in 1862, went to Fort Dodge, Iowa, and there engaged in the clothing business. Returning to Canton he became manager for the clothing business of Mr. Resor, after which he engaged in the clothing business on his own account under the firm name of Babcock & Underwood, on the south side of the square. Upon becoming sole proprietor of this enterprise, he erected the store building at present occupied by O. T. Salisburg, and in 1891 sold his business to the Russell Brothers, the present proprietors. For a number of years Mr. Underwood lived in retirement, and in 1889 was elected President of the First National Bank of Canton, in which he had been a director since 1882. He became a money loaner on a large scale, taking as security improved and unincumbered farm lands.

In political affiliation Mr. Underwood was a Republican, but he cherished no aspirations towards political honors. He was a member of the Congregational Church, and contributed generously towards its support. His married life date from August, 1857, and the wife who survives him formerly was Catherine Kinsey, a native of Salem, Ohio, and daughter of Joseph Kinsey, a native of Virginia. Joseph Kinsey, and his wife Margaret (Hipple) Kinsey, the latter born in Pennsylvania, conducted the Philips House, in Dayton, Ohio, for several years, and upon removing to Fulton County settled in Banner Township, when Mrs. Underwood was eight years old. They later spent some time in Ohio, but returned to Fulton County and lived retired. They were the parents of four daughters and three sons: Henry, a retired farmer of Indianapolis, Ind.; Mrs. William Babcock, of Canton; Susan, wife of Charles Maple, of Chicago; Arabella M., wife of William McCreary; Mrs. Underwood, wife of the deceased; and William, who was killed during the Civil War. Mr. Underwood is survived by three brothers: Joseph C., of Menasha, Wis.; Thomas S., of Lancaster, New Hampshire; and J. Roger, of Kelly Lake, Wis. Throughout his life Mr. Underwood maintained a high reputation for honesty, public spirit and ability, and his sojourn in Canton resulted in a strengthening of its commercial and social life, in an uplift of the ethics and amenities of community affairs, and a fine lesson in faith and perseverance for those who now labor in the lesser occupations of life.

UTSINGER, John W.—A creditable utilization of opportunity is found in the agricultural success of John W. Utsinger, who makes his home and conducts general farming and stock-raising on a tract of 417 acres in Deerfield Township, of which he is a native, and where his entire life has been spent. Mr. Utsinger was born December 26, 1851, of German parentage, the son of Daniel and Margaret (Schrodt) Utsinger, natives of Germany—his parents born August 8, 1812, and November 25, 1828, respectively. In spite of the conservatism of his training and surroundings, the elder Utsinger developed ambitions which required the settings of the new world, and hither he came in a sailing vessel in the beginning of the '30s, reaching Farmington Township, Fulton County, during 1839, and a year later removing to Deerfield Township, with which the family name has been connected ever since. Purchasing with his slender means forty acres of land, he added thereto as prosperity came his way and at the time of his death, July 5, 1900, owned 397 acres of rich land. His wife died April 15, 1895.

Educated in the country schools and trained in farming under his father's watchful eye, John W. Utsinger developed sturdy traits of character, and at the age of twenty-one years started out for himself as a tenant on 212 acres of land, in Deerfield Township. Three years later he bought eighty acres of this farm, later adding to it until he owns at present 417 acres. His property is adapted to general farming and stock-raising, and his buildings, residence, and general improvements, indicate a progressive and practical mind. His property stretches into Sections 15, 21 and 22, and a specialty is made of Shorthorn cattle and Poland-China hogs, of which the owner raises many head annually.

April 14, 1881, Mr. Utsinger married Mary A. Ault, a native of Deerfield Township, born August 21, 1862. Of the union there are ten children: Henry T., Charles W., Francis, Jessie, Anna, Lee, Earl, Pearl, Carl and Rilla. A Republican in politics, Mr. Utsinger has wielded an influence for good government, good roads and good schools, and has served in the official capacities of Collector, Supervisor, Assessor, Constable and School Director. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. Since early youth he has been a member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Utsinger has brought success out of the chances which have come his way, and has set an example of thrift and good management, uprightness and public spiritedness.

VAIL, Joseph Calloway, an enterprising, successful and popular farmer and nurseryman in Section 9, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Bernadotte Township, that county, October 6, 1851. He is the only child of Joseph A. and Anna A. (Willcoxon) Vail, the latter, a daughter of Captain Elijah Willcoxon, a memoir of whom appears on another page of this work. She was born December 10, 1825, and died June 6, 1894. Joseph A. Vail was born June 6, 1826, near Middletown, Ohio. His father, Hugh M. Vail, born May 29, 1804, wedded Rebecca Compton, born May 7, 1805. Both were natives of Ohio. Their marriage occurred May 8, 1823, and they settled in Fulton County about the year 1840. They were parents of three children, namely: Elizabeth, who became the wife of Ira F. Ellrod, and died in Bernadotte Township December 23, 1890; Joseph A.; and Randall C., born December 19, 1834.

Joseph A. Vail was a carriage-maker by trade, and followed that occupation on what is now the old Ellrod farm, in Bernadotte Township.

Work made by his hand is yet in use. He died in Bernadotte Township May 19, 1852. Randall C. enlisted in the Union Army during the Civil War. His health was broken down by the exposures and hardships endured in the service, and he fell a victim to disease therein contracted, dying about the year 1867.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the farm and has been a farmer all his life. Since 1851, his home has been in Fulton County, except during eighteen months spent in Texas, in 1873-74. He received his mental training in the district schools of the county, and in the Lewistown High School, from which he received a certificate of qualification as a teacher, and afterwards taught school in Fulton County. In October, 1879, he moved to his present farm of 53½ acres, on which he carries on general farming and stock-raising. He has two acres of nursery growths, and for ten years has sold fruit-trees of all descriptions. In farming and stock-raising, his operations have been successful, and his labors and transactions in connection with the nursery feature have made him widely and favorably known in Fulton County.

On December 28, 1871, Mr. Vail was united in marriage with Louranna Riner, born October 23, 1853, a daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Paddock) Riner, of Preble County, Ohio. The former was born in Ohio November 16, 1828, and died October 29, 1895. The latter was born April 5, 1830, and died December 3, 1868. Joseph Riner moved from Ohio to the vicinity of Elmwood, Ill., in 1854, and was a prominent citizen there. He was the owner of 560 acres of land and was considered one of the wealthy men of Peoria County.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Riner were married in October, 1852, and had the following named children: Louranna; John W., who was born April 4, 1855, and is now a resident of Abingdon, Ill., where he served for years as Chief of Police; James B., born November 4, 1856; Margaret, born October 24, 1858, wife of J. H. Crosthwaite, a farmer of Liverpool Township; Lillian L., born May 5, 1860, who married A. O. Blair, on the police force in Springfield, Ill.; Minnie, born July 29, 1862, who is the wife of David E. Griswold, a resident of Normal, Ill.; and Francis, who died in infancy.

The grandparents of Mrs. Vail, Peter and Margaret (Kelly) Riner, were originally from Virginia. The former went to Ohio when a boy. In 1856, they settled near Elmwood, Ill., where both died—the grandfather, May 14, 1877, and the grandmother, January 1, 1873. They were the parents of the following named children: Joseph C., Jacob, John W., Washington, Melissa, Malinda, Rebecca, Lorinda, Margaret E., Peter J., Phoebe A., and Matthew D. Mrs. Vail's great-grandfather, Henry Paddock, was born January 24, 1775, and his wife, Miriam (Payne) Paddock, was born March 22, 1778. They lived in Kentucky, whence they moved to Ohio, April 6, 1806, and settled near Campbelltown, Preble County, on the old Paddock farm, which is still in the family name. Henry Paddock died in June, 1854, and his wife in 1864. They are buried at Arlington, Ind. Their son Ebenezer Paddock, born August 1, 1801, married Louranna Swayne, born October 13, 1807. He died August 20, 1887, and she passed away December 20, 1838. Their children were Daniel, Jacob, Rachel, Sarah, Elizabeth, James, Phœbe and Reuben.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Vail are the parents of five children, namely: Nettie E., born in Denison, Tex., February 2, 1874; Leonard R., born May 17, 1876, who is with his parents; Annie F., born February 10, 1880, who married Wayne Clark, October 15, 1901, and resides near Canton, Ill.; Joseph R., born October 31, 1888, who dwells under the paternal roof; and Willard C., born July 7, 1892. Nettie E., the first-born, became the wife of Gilbert P. Dickerman, December 30, 1895. They have three children; Annie L., born September 24, 1897; and Gilbert Vail, born October 15, 1898, and Freda E., born April 23, 1906.

In politics Mr. Vail is an active and influential Democrat, and has filled several township offices. For eighteen years he served as School Treasurer, and has held the offices of Collector and Assessor.

In business connection, he has been a Director in the Lewistown Mutual Fire Insurance Company for more than twenty years, and is now serving his third term as its President. In all movements pertaining to the promotion of the public welfare and the development of the industrial, educational and moral interests of Fulton County, he has taken a leading part and is credited as one of the most useful members of his community.

VANDEVANDER, Franklin G., one of the old-timers of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., is a Pennsylvanian by birth and came with his parents from his native county of Huntingdon to Canton, Ill., in March, 1856. He was then nine years of age, and after receiving his education in local schools began bookkeeping in his youth. He has ever since followed that occupation and as bookkeeper and expert accountant is well known. Mr. Vandevander is a man of strict honor and high character and is universally respected.

VANDEVENTER, Lemuel R.—A farm in Orion Township which may well serve as an example of good management and practical results in farming, is that owned and operated by Lemuel R. Vandeventer, on Section 11 of that township. Mr. Vandeventer is an agriculturist who does not allow his residence in the country to interfere with his keeping up with the times or informing himself on the subjects which engage the attention of dwellers in the busier parts of trade. His property evidences due appreciation of the inventions which do away with much of the old time drudgery of farming, and his buildings in particular are modern, well constructed and adequate for all dwelling and general needs.

Mr. Vandeventer was born in Fulton County, Ill., December 16, 1860, a son of John F. and Sarah C. Vandeventer, early settlers and present residents of Illinois, and who had, besides, four other children. Of these Lizzie became the wife of James Rowe and lives in Orion Township; Wilton M. is a lawyer of Chicago; Frank married Sarah Shoemaker and lives in Glasford, Peoria County, and Algernon F. married Clara Davis and lives in Arkansas. Lemuel R. received as practical an education as the county afforded and readily adapted his youthful energies to the occupation of farming. September 10, 1885, he married Cassie A. Kelly, daughter of John B. and Rachel (Proctor) Kelly, the former being one of the very early settlers of Fulton County.

Mr. and Mrs. Vandeventer are the parents of two children: Ray C. and Glenn L. Mr. Vandeventer is a prominent member of the Knights of Labor, a zealous promoter of the interests of the working man. He is an able and painstaking agriculturist and highly esteemed by all who know him.

VAN LIEW, Cornelius W.—The farm of Cornelius W. Van Liew, on Section 30, Fairview Township, is an instructive study in agriculture and stock-raising as conducted under the most enlightened and favorable circumstances known at the present time. Mr. Van Liew can hardly be called the architect of his own fortunes, as his farm was given him by his father, John Van Liew, in 1884, yet this advantage has enabled him to progress the faster, and turn his attention to the higher phases of country life impossible, when burdened with debt and anxiety. His property comprises 160 acres, which is part of the old homestead, and all of its improvements have been made by himself and his father. He is an extensive raiser and feeder of stock, and averages from 200 to 300 head of hogs and cattle a year. In connection with his own farm he rents and operates 200 adjoining acres, devoting it to stock, grain and general produce. Notwithstanding the commercial ability of the owner, and his capacity to utilize every part of his property in the best possible way, the general impression of the place is pleasing and homelike, and abounds in evidences of fine consideration and thoughtfulness for those who dwell within its borders.

The marriage of Mr. Van Liew and Louisa H. Robbins occurred in Fairview Township, this county, February 6, 1884, Mrs. Van Liew being a native of New Jersey. Mr. Van Liew is a social as well as business factor in the community, and a popular member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America. He has a well established reputation for honesty and fair dealing, and enjoys in fullest measure the respect and confidence of his fellow agriculturists.

VAN LIEW, Daniel H., a thorough, diligent and systematic farmer, who has successfully pursued his occupation for a score of years in Section 5, Joshua Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the town of Fairview, Ill., January 4, 1857, a son of John and Mary (Polhemus) Van Liew, of whom the former was a native of New Jersey, and the latter of Illinois. John Van Liew left his New Jersey home for Illinois in 1854, and settled in Fulton County, locating in the vicinity of Fairview. There he bought eighty acres of land and devoted his attention to farming. He pursued his occupation successfully for many years, and ultimately became the owner of 350 acres, having doubled his original purchase by industry, energy and thrifty management. His death occurred December 12, 1899. He was a man of excellent character and upright life, and was respected by all who knew him. In politics he was a Democrat, and took an active interest in the affairs of the township, filling various positions of public trust, among them that of Supervisor, Road Commissioner, etc.

Daniel H. Van Liew grew up on the farm managed by his father, and attended the Fairview public schools in his boyhood. In 1886 he began farming on the land which he now cultivates. He is the owner of 118 acres situated in Section 5, Joshua Township, on which he has made nearly all the improvements. Besides carrying on a general line of farming, he is a stock-breeder, and also raises a good many hogs.

On December 15, 1880, Mr. Van Liew was joined in wedlock with Louisa Hagaman, a native of Illinois, born in Mason County. Mr. and Mrs. Van Liew are the parents of two sons, namely: John G. and Merrill. In politics he is a supporter of the Democratic party. He is a careful and methodical farmer, an honorable man, and a useful citizen.

VANSYCKEL, W. D.—Two generations of toilers have pinned their faith and lent their practical energy to the farming property now owned and managed by W. D. Vansyckel. Samuel Vansyckel, the earlier owner, whose declining years are being spent in retirement in Canton, came here when the settlers were widely separated, and little had been accomplished to suggest the unexampled prosperity of the present. He was a young and unmarried man when ambition directed his steps westward, and after becoming settled here he married Mary Eshelman, daughter of a Fulton County pioneer.

W. D. Vansyckel was born on the Fulton County farm in 1866, the year after his father made settlement thereon, and he since has known no other home. He was reared to hard work and to an intelligent appreciation of the many advantages of country life. As a lad he attended the public schools during the winter and accumulated muscle and breezy ambitions in the harvest field during the summer. Practically all of the improvements on the place have been placed there by father and son, and the latter became sole owner in 1901, purchasing the land outright from the older man. Dissatisfaction with what already has been accomplished is one of the most promising traits of this young agriculturist, and undoubtedly the locality will be still further indebted to him for wise lessons of thrift, economy and public spirit. In 1901 he brought to the old place a young and helpful wife, whose maiden name was Susie Rohrer, a native daughter of Fulton County. The character and work of Mr. Vansyckel commends itself to the progress and enlightenment of the community, and he has many friends to wish him well and sympathize with his worthy and practical aspirations.

VOORHEES, James Francis, the well known proprietor of a thoroughly equipped and busy livery business in London Mills, Ill., was born in Fairview, Fulton County, February 15, 1856. His father and mother, I. A. H. and Mary S. (Letson) Voorhees, were natives of the State of New Jersey. They moved from the East to Fulton County, Ill., in 1850, locating in Fairview, where the father engaged in the mercantile trade. At a subsequent period he went to Farmington, where he established himself in the same line of business. In 1870 he again made his home in Fairview, and remained there until the time of his death, which occurred in 1887. He was a prominent citizen and maintained a high standing as an individual and in his civic relations. In his political relations for a number of years he filled the offices of Township Collector and Town Clerk.

In boyhood the subject of this sketch obtained his mental instruction in the public schools of Fairview, Ill., and as soon as he reached mature years, applied himself to farming. He was afterwards engaged in threshing for several years, and then resumed farming, which he continued for some time. In 1900 he located at London Mills, where he purchased the livery concern of Jesse Combs, which that gentleman had conducted for twenty years. Mr. Voorhees has twelve head of horses in use, does considerable draying and keeps a hearse available for funeral purposes. The equipment of his stables is equal to every requirement in his line of business. He devotes close attention to the details of the work, enjoys the confidence of his customers and has a remunerative patronage.

Mr. Voorhees was married in 1888 to Elizabeth Wykoff, who was born and schooled in Fulton County. Three children were born of this union, namely: Mary Frances, Sarah Louise and Anna.

Fraternally Mr. Voorhees is affiliated with the M. W. A. and the I. O. O. F. For honorable dealings, diligent application to business and a manifest disposition to do justice to all he has made an excellent record in London Mills.

VOORHEES, P. B., one of the leading citizens of Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., whose stock and grain transactions have made him well and favorably known throughout the county, was born in Fairview in 1855, a son of Abraham and Alice (Vanarsdale) Voorhees, natives of New Jersey. Abraham Voorhees accompanied his parents from the East to Illinois when he was about twelve years old. The family settled in the vicinity of Fairview, and as soon as Abraham Voorhees reached mature years he spent some time in farming. Subsequently he engaged in the mercantile business, being one of the earliest merchants in that locality, and occupying the premises now used for a store by Mr. Hill. There he continued until the time of his death, which occurred in 1884, his death having been preceded by that of his wife. He was prominent in local affairs and held the offices of Village and Township Collector. Abraham and Alice (Vanarsdale) Voorhees were the parents of six children.

P. B. Voorhees attended the Fairview schools in boyhood, and in early life began buying and selling stock and grain in connection with Messrs. Davis and Traverse, at the time when the narrow gauge railroad was in process of construction. These gentlemen co-operated for about ten years, and since then Mr. Voorhees has been engaged in the stock business alone. He buys and ships cattle and deals largely in hogs. In the fall of 1905 he completed a large and commodious residence in Fairview, which is now his home.

In 1876 Mr. Voorhees was married in Fairview Township to Susan Swigert, who was born in Fulton County. Her father and mother, William and Jane Swigert, were natives of New Jersey and settled in Fulton County at an early period, William Swigert being engaged in farming. Mr. Voorhees has been an efficient member of the Town Board of Fairview, and also served as Collector for one term. He has been successful in all his undertakings and is one of the reliable, substantial and prosperous members of his community.

VOORHEES, W. T. V. D., widely and favorably known in the financial circles of Western Illinois as the head of Voorhees & Company's Bank, at London Mills, Fulton County, and a member of one of the most prominent and highly respected among the pioneer families of that region, was born in Avon, Fulton County, on January 27, 1869. He is a son of H. V. D. and Phoebe Kline (Wyckoff) Voorhees, of whom the latter was a native of New Jersey. The birthplace of the paternal grandfather, John G. Voorhees, was in the State of New Jersey. Grandfather Voorhees, with his family, journeyed from the East to Illinois at an early period, and settled in Fulton County in 1837, making his home in Fairview. By occupation he was a farmer. He was State Surveyor, and made the survey of that entire region of the State. H. V. D. Voorhees lived in Fairview until 1856, when he located in Avon, and engaged in the lumber trade, continuing thus about twenty years. He was the owner of 600 acres of land in Young Hickory Township. To him and his wife were born five children, as follows: Eleanor and John G., Jr., both deceased; Matthew H.; W. T. V. D., of this review and Ralph, also deceased. The father of this family was a man of excellent character and high standing, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of a large acquaintance.

In early youth W. T. V. D. Voorhees utilized the advantages for intellectual training afforded by the public schools of Avon, and was afterward employed as clerk in a bank at London Mills, for two years. He then went to Ellisville, Ill., where he started in the banking business on his own responsibility. After remaining there for a like period, he spent several years as Cashier of a bank at Fairview. In 1901 he established the Voorhees & Company Bank, at London Mills, in connection with Lawrence W. Davis, afterward admitting James L. Hardin as a member of the company. The concern is a private enterprise, and does a general banking business. The building used for this purpose was erected and equipped by the company in 1901. Besides his banking duties, Mr. Voorhees supervises his farm of 262 acres in Section 16, Hickory Township, the improvements on which have been made partially by him.

On June 30, 1897, Mr. Voorhees was united in marriage with Caroline Davis, who was born in Fairview, Ill., and is a daughter of Lawrence W. Davis, his partner in business. Her mother, Susan (Beam) Davis, is a native of Pennsylvania.

In politics Mr. Voorhees is a supporter of the Republican party, and his religious affiliations are with the Methodist Church. Mrs. Voorhees is a member of the Reformed Church. Mr. Voorhees is regarded as a man of superior business capacity and sound judgment, and in his keen perception and conservative financial methods, a high degree of confidence is reposed by the patrons of his bank and the public generally.

WAGGONER, David J., a former Sheriff of Fulton County, Ill., was born in Pennsylvania August 22, 1822, son of Andrew and Lucinda Waggoner, remained on a farm until he was fifteen years old, when he began learning chair-making and house-painting; in 1846 settled in Lewistown, and in 1850 was elected Sheriff of Fulton County, serving two years, and later was elected to the same office for four different terms, viz., 1854-56, 1858-60, 1866-68, and 1874-78, making in all a service of twelve years. A War Democrat, in 1862 he organized Company A, Eleventh Illinois Volunteer Cavalry (Col. R. G. Ingersoll), largely at his own expense, and which had during a considerable part of the war a sort of independent existence, for a part of its term of enlistment seeing service in the East. Of this regiment Mr. Waggoner was commissioned as Major, and at the close of the war returning to Lewistown, at the following election in 1866 was chosen Sheriff for his third term. Mr. Waggoner was married in Greene County, Pa., in 1845, to Rebecca Darrak, who was born September 21, 1822, and bore her husband six children. Mr. Waggoner was a member of the Masonic and Odd Fellows' fraternities.

WAKEFIELD, Lucius L., M. D. (deceased), who was formerly a well known and successful medical practitioner in Summum, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Kingsville, Ashtabula County, Ohio, September 5, 1835, a son of Dr. Nathan Wakefield, who was of English ancestry, and settled in Connecticut at an early period. The subject of this sketch underwent his scholastic training in the noted Kingsville Academy, where his classmates and associates were such men as Lyman J. Gage, Julius C. Burrows, Albion W. Tourgee and Horace Boies. On graduating from the academy he began the study of medicine with Dr. Andrew Merian, of Madison, Ohio, but on account of ill health was compelled to suspend his studies. He went to sea as a sailor and sailed for three years, becoming the mate of a vessel. In 1858 he came to Illinois and settled at Bath, Mason County, where he taught school several years, in the meantime continuing his medical studies with Dr. Fullerton. In 1861 he entered Rush Medical College at Chicago, from which he was graduated in 1863. He then located at Summum, Fulton County, where he was successfully engaged in the practice of his profession for forty years.

On October 16, 1861, Dr. Wakefield was united in marriage with Dorothy Lest, at Havana, Ill., and they became the parents of three children, namely: Adelaide (Mrs. S. A. Bower), of Kansas City, Mo.; Gay, wife of W. H. Boyer, of Lewistown, Ill., and Ruth, wife of George G. Denslow, of Summum, Ill. Mrs. Wakefield died April 21, 1903, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. S. A. Boyer, in Kansas City. She was born in New Jersey November 6, 1833, and at a later period moved with her parents to Jacksonville, Ill., where her girlhood was spent. Her remains were brought to Ipava and laid beside those of her husband. She was a woman of the finest traits of character, a faithful wife and a fond mother.

Socially Dr. Wakefield was very popular and his professional standing was high, his patients reposing in him the utmost confidence. The date of Dr. Wakefield's death has not been reported by his family to the writer of this sketch.

WALKER, Daniel W.—In the death of Daniel W. Walker, in 1900, Canton lost a citizen who had contributed largely to its wealth of character and purpose, and who, because of a trained mind and pronounced mercantile tendencies, became a necessary factor in the establishment of various of its enterprises. He was one of the forecasters of the present prosperity of the town, and as far as lay in his power lent his hands and brain in aid of a realization of his faith.

Mr. Walker was a son of Vermont, and a grandson of one of the pioneers of that State. He himself was born among the picturesque hills of Windham County, in 1835, and inherited that dependence upon self and combativeness always developed in people who live in the shut-in places of the world. His parents, Bliss and Lorraine (Newell) Walker, also were born in Windham County, of which his paternal grandfather, Edward Walker, was one of the first settlers. The grandfather was a farmer by occupation, and he had the spirit of colonial days, the stimulation of its example, and the pride of inheriting the blood in which it first blazed. He naturally espoused the cause of the down-trodden colonists, enlisted in the Revolutionary War, and stacked his musket upon many battlefields which made the history of that memorable conflict.

Daniel W. Walker was educated primarily in the public schools of Vermont, supplemented by advanced training which equipped him for exacting educational work. He journeyed from Vermont to Mississippi in 1852, but soon after returned, and for a couple of years taught in the academy at Rochester, Mass. Something spoke in his receptive ear of the force and possibility of the Central West, and he came here in 1857, locating in Canton, where he first was identified with the dry goods business. He next conducted a grocery enterprise for a number of years, and later, up to the time of his death was interested in the express business. He was a painstaking, methodical man, indicating in manner and work his careful New England training, and dealing with all men as he would have them deal with him.

A year after his arrival in Fulton County, in 1858, Mr. Walker was united in marriage with Martha E. Walter, who was born in Ohio, and educated in Canton and Eastern Institutions. Mrs. Walker was a daughter of Dr. James R. Walter, an early medical practitioner of the Buckeye State, who arrived in Canton in 1836, just after the great storm. His death occurred in 1855. Mr. and Mrs. Walker were the parents of five children, of whom the following are living: Sarah L., Mrs. Martha E. Dewey, Helen F. and Frederick D. The mantle of ability and usefulness has fallen upon the children of the pioneer, and several are closely identified with interests of importance in the town which their father did so much to up-build. Helen F. Walker, a graduate, and now a member of the faculty of the high school, is a woman of broad culture and special educational aptitude. After completing the course at the high school in 1886, she studied in the East for a year, and afterward took courses at the Wisconsin University, University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and the Chicago University. Sarah L. is a musician of thorough training, being a graduate of the Boston Conservatory of Music and educated chiefly in the East. She has continued her studies in the West and has been a pupil of Harold Bauer, of Chicago, having also taught considerably in Canton and been a potent means in raising the musical standard of the community. Frederick D. Walker is also musically inclined and is leader of the P. and O. Band of Canton.

WALKER, Joshua G.—The retirement of Joshua G. Walker to Avon, in 1894, was justified by many years of activity as a farmer of Union Township, this county, where he still owns a valuable and highly improved property upon which the greater part of his life has been spent. He was four years old when he came to Fulton County with his parents from Kentucky, where his birth occurred in Lewis County October 6, 1831, and in which State was also born his father, Hugh Walker, in 1800. His paternal grandfather, James Walker, was a native of New England, and was of Scotch ancestry. Hugh Walker married Nancy Given, born in his native State in 1810, and to them were born eight children, of whom Joshua G. was the oldest.

The Walker family arrived in Fulton County in 1835, finding here a scattered population, and a few indications of the prosperity which now prevails. They were doomed to discouragement and loss the first year of their settlement in Canton, for the great cyclone swept the town, demolishing their home and those of the majority of the settlers, although no member of the family suffered bodily injury. One of Joshua G.'s most vivid memories of this time are the close quarters of a dry goods box in which he was deposited for safe keeping by his mother. Thus deprived of all their material assets, the elder Walker located on a farm near Lewistown, where, in 1850, he and his wife died within eight days of each other, leaving Joshua G. the head and mainstay of the orphaned children. The lad, then nineteen years of age, continued to work the farm for a couple of years, but the effort to keep the family proved unavailing, and the children were scattered to different homes in the neighborhood, some of them finding occupation with strangers.

For the following three years Mr. Walker worked on a farm for ten dollars a month, and March 28, 1854, was united in marriage to Minerva Brown, who was born in Fulton County June 18, 1831. Of this union there are the following children: Mary E., William W., Ona, John C., Francis M., Anna A., George M., James H. and Eddie B., who died in infancy. Mrs. Walker died March 5, 1904.

From the time of his marriage until his retirement to Canton Mr. Walker lived on and owned a 160-acre farm on Section 26, Union Township, which he developed into a valuable and productive property. He was an agriculturist who adhered to old methods only so far as they were practical and conformed to modern standards, and he readily accepted the innovations which help to raise farming above physical drudgery which formerly characterized it. He dispensed frequent and genuine hospitality, and his family was one of the most popular and highly esteemed in the neighborhood.

Since a comparatively young man Mr. Walker has been an active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for many years the church of that denomination at Avon has profited by his substantial support. He is a Republican in politics, and while a member of the Board of Supervisors of Union Township did much to better the conditions which came under his jurisdiction. Added to his well known business ability and moral rectitude, Mr. Walker has always been esteemed for his optimistic and cheerful philosophy, for a disposition which sees the bright side of even the darkest situations, and a gentle sense of humor which smooths and lightens the rough places of life.

WALKER, Ross Francis, who is quite successfully engaged in newspaper work in Canton, Fulton County, Ill., having previously been elsewhere connected with other enterprises of a like character, is at present occupying the position of Secretary and Treasurer of the Canton Herald Company, the office of which is located on the corner of Main and Pine Streets. Mr. Walker was born at Twin Grove, Wis., on January 7, 1877, a son of Edward L. and Leah M. Walker. The boyhood of the subject of this sketch was spent on the home place, his early education being obtained in the public schools and later in a grammar school and the Art Institute in Chicago. After completing his studies he was employed in the office of "The Interior," a widely known religious weekly of the latter city, from 1896 to 1900, and was associated with Horace M. Ford, special newspaper representative, from 1900 to 1902. For the five years next succeeding he acted in the capacity of business manager of the "Peoria Journal," and on severing his connection with that paper came to Canton, September 15, 1907, where he assumed his present duties. He is a young man of solid intellectual attainments and thorough business qualifications, and during the brief period of his residence in Canton has become very favorably known in newspaper circles and among the leading people of the city.

On November 26, 1902, Mr. Walker was united in marriage in Chicago with Nettie N. Foster, an amiable and accomplished young lady, and two children have resulted from their union, namely: Ross Foster and Horace Edward. The family residence is at No. 324 South Second Avenue, Canton. Socially Mr. Walker is a member of the Creve-Coeur Club of Peoria. In his political relations he is a supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, and his religious faith is in accordance with the creed of the Congregational Church. Mr. and Mrs. Walker have won many friends in Canton and are held in cordial esteem by all who have the pleasure of their acquaintance.

WALLICK, Charles L.—As a farmer and School Director Charles L. Wallick is contributing to the character and development of Lee Township, of which he has been a resident for many years, and in which his family settled not long after the Civil War. Mr. Wallick was born in Knox County, Ill., November 5, 1866, a son of Richard and Elizabeth (Melvin) Wallick, natives of Ohio, the former born in 1829 and the latter in 1842. The father came at an early day to Illinois, and prospered as farmer and stock-raiser in both Knox and Fulton Counties, his death occurring in Lee Township at an advanced age.

Giving his attention to farming on rented land, the subject of this sketch raises the produce customary in this section of the State, and a variety of high-grade stock, which nets him a comfortable income. His married life dates from December 25, 1890, his wife whose maiden name was Martha Wiesner, being born in Deerfield Township, Fulton County, September 25, 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Wallick are the parents of four children, namely: Wilson, Mary F., William and Elizabeth. Politically Mr. Wallick adheres to the principles of the Democratic party, and has been a member of the School Board for the past five years. He is not a member of any church, but renders a generous support to charitable and educational enterprises. He is highly regarded as a farmer and man, and counts among his friends many of the foremost people in the township.

WALTER, Peter E.—Among the worthy farmers of Fulton County, Ill., whose enterprising and thorough methods are rewarded by a satisfactory experience, is Peter E. Walter, who was born in that county on May 7, 1859. He is a son of George H. and Mary Walter, natives of Germany. The father, Walter, was among the earliest residents of Fulton County, having settled there in the '30s, locating in Deerfield Township, where he carried on farming for a number of years.

Peter E. Walter was one of a family of seven children, five boys and two girls; was reared to manhood on the home farm, and in early youth received the customary mental discipline obtainable in the district schools of the vicinity. In 1881 he went to Iowa, where he was engaged in farming until 1900, in that year returning to Fulton County and buying what is known as the Whittaker farm, containing 160 acres and situated in Section 2, Joshua Township. On this property he built a good barn, and improved the residence and other buildings. He is successfully engaged in farming, and, in addition, devotes considerable attention to stock breeding, raising some very fine Durham cattle.

The marriage of Mr. Walter took place on December 6, 1899, when he was wedded to Nellie Cornelius, who was born in Iowa, and is a daughter of Hiram and Rosella (Alter) Cornelius, natives of Ohio. The political views of Mr. Walter are in accordance with the principles of the Democratic party. He takes an earnest interest in current events, and in the public enterprises of the township and county, and is faithful to his duties as a citizen. In fraternal circles, he is identified with the I. O. O. F. and the M. W. of A.

WALTERS, Daniel.—The third white child to owe its nativity to Bernadotte Township was born in a small log house five miles west of Lewistown, October 14, 1827. His name is Daniel Walters, and the years have dealt so kindly with him and he has lived so simple and normal a life that health, happiness and prosperity are among his abiding blessings, and his memory is as a storehouse hung with innumerable pictures of a time that tried the fiber of men, and either made or unmade them with its rigors and hardships. The first white child born in the township was Lucinda Ross, and the second Major Abner Barnes. Mr. Walters is one of the four living of the ten children of William and Elizabeth (Royer) Walters, natives of Jefferson County, Tenn.

Among the mountains of Tennessee William Walters developed the physical strength and mental courage essential to successful pioneering. Through his veins flowed the blood of Irish-German ancestors, and on the maternal side his people were vigorous patriots during the Revolutionary War. His mother not only had carried on the work of the farm during her husband's absence, but she had carried supplies to the soldiers of the Continental army, often wading through ice-clogged streams up to her waist upon her mission of mercy. William Walters and wife moved from Tennessee to Illinois about 1820, first locating in Sangamon County, but a year later removed to Fulton County, where they took up a tract of land five miles west of Lewistown, consisting of 160 acres, which he received in trade for a pony. The situation was not an appealing one, but William Walters was a man of remarkable physical prowess, and all through his life was wont to astonish observers by his feats of daring. It is recorded of him that he could take a two-bushel sack of wheat in his teeth and throw it ten feet, and he at one time shot a deer across Spoon Creek, waded the ice-bound stream and swam back again, carrying the deer by the ear with his teeth. He was an unerring shot, and there was plenty for him to shoot in those days. He knew much of military tactics, as he had served in the War of 1812, and subsequently was a soldier in the Black Hawk War. There were but twelve voters in what is now Fulton County at the time of his arrival, but there were plenty of Pottawatomie Indians, the majority of whom were peaceably inclined. There were bad Indians to be disciplined also, and Mr. Walters used always to carry his gun when he went to feed his stock. When it became known that he had been in the Black Hawk War the Indians of his neighborhood offered a hundred buckskins for his scalp, and it is believed that a number of seekers after this prize met death at the hands of the able cracksmen. Always on the lookout for danger from Indians or wild beasts, he became remarkably clear of vision and quick of motion. About 1834 Mr. Walters sold his Bernadotte farm for $400 and a horse, and moved to Farmers Township, where the old soldier and pioneer passed his last days, his life milestones piling up until he had reached ninety-nine years, his death occurring in 1877. His wife preceded him in 1852.

The first playmates of Daniel Walter were the little Pottawatomie Indians, and their favorite meeting place was on the banks of Spoon River. Until his sixth years he never played with a white child other than his own brothers and sisters. Naturally he learned considerable of the Indian language, and before they finally were ordered to leave the county he had many conflicts with them. He well remembers "Old Rock," as that chief was known among the whites, and he well remembers an incident which nearly proved serious to several people growing out of the tendency to beg, which the Indians cultivated strenuously. An old squaw came to the house to beg meat, and not receiving it, became troublesome and even threatening in her attitude. In the squabble that ensued she was forced to take her departure with but one eye in her head, and then only after an uncle of Mr. Walters had drawn a butcher knife across his own throat in token of what would happen to her should she further annoy the household. Finally the Indians were given notice to leave the country within three days, and in celebration of their departure went to Lewistown and became intoxicated. On their return some of the settlers met them at Duncan's Mill, where a lively encounter took place, the uncle of Mr. Walters being wounded in the fray.

In his youth Mr. Walters had little opportunity for acquiring an education, but life was an education in those days, and without much book learning men became shrewd in reading character, alert in avoiding the perils by which they were surrounded and remarkably quick in carrying through a business transaction. Common sense was bred of the times and he inherited his share from his father, and cultivated his inheritance to large proportions. By the age of twenty he saw his way clear to support another than himself and April 5, 1850, married Sarah Dobbins, a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Rutledge) Dobbins, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. Mrs. Walters was a school teacher in Fulton County for several years before her marriage and she made an excellent wife and mother, at the time of her death in 1876 leaving nine children: Charles R., an influential farmer and stock-raiser of Kansas, and a member of the Kansas Legislature in the early days; Jane A., widow of Franklin Pierce, of Macomb, Ill.; Ellen, wife of Charles Rinehart, of Kansas City, Mo.; Cornelia, wife of George Mayhew, of Farmers Township; Louise, wife of Wellington Rollin, of Table Grove; Emily, wife of John Smith, of Vermont, Ill.; Ida, wife of Lewis Brown, of Fulton County; and Edward, of Monmouth, Ill. In 1877 Mr. Walters married Mary Garrison, from Cornwall, England. All of the nine children born to this family are living, and there are twenty-one of the twenty-three grandchildren living, and six great-grandchildren.

In 1894 Mr. Walters left his farm and purchased the home which he still occupies in Table Grove. Like his father before him, he is a Democrat, and although often solicited to become a candidate for office, he has yielded but once, when elected Coroner of Fulton County. He is a conscientious voter, and the man receiving his vote must possess both principle and ability. Mr. Walters has spent seventy-eight years in Fulton County, and much of this time has been devoted to promoting the agricultural and general welfare of the community. He has always been in tune with his surroundings, and even in the days of hardship was always glad that he had been born in the wilderness far from the greed and pollution of the thickly settled cities. He is fair-minded and honorable, gentle in his judgment of others and the recipient of long and lasting friendships. A genial and truthful witness of things that soon will live only in the pages of history and romance, he is one of the few survivors of the original grand old vanguard of civilization in the Central West.

WATSON, Charles O., M. D.—Aside from any consideration which might arise from his association with one of the fine old pioneer families of Fulton County, Dr. Charles O. Watson has erected around him a solid wall of professional and general confidence, and as a practicing physician and surgeon of Smithfield, in less than ten years has built up a patronage oftentimes not acquired in a score of years. August S. Watson, father of Charles O., was born in Indiana in 1825, and as a young unmarried man, settled on Government land in Cass Township, Fulton County, Ill., where he married Jane Cameron, a native of Fulton County. The elder Watson had the grit and determination of the successful pioneer, and at the time of his death, October 12, 1901, owned, through development and addition, one of the finest properties in his township. Three hundred and twenty acres in extent, this farm still is owned by his three sons, and remains a monument to the energy and resource of one of the honored upbuilders of the State. Mr.

Watson was active in politics for many years, and served as Township Supervisor for several years.

Dr. Watson was reared on his father's farm and educated in the public schools. Ambitious for a broader outlook than that afforded as a tiller of the soil, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, at Keokuk, Iowa, and shortly after his graduation in 1897, began his professional career in Smithfield. He owns city as well as country property, and is one of the most promising as well as most substantial young business and professional men of the community. March 20, 1902, the Doctor was united in marriage to Nita Smith, who was born in Harris Township, Fulton County. March 10, 1873, and who is the mother of two children, Doris and Kester. To his profound knowledge of medicine and surgery Dr. Watson adds an interesting and confidence-inspiring personality, and a keen desire to observe the best tenets of his humane and useful calling.

WAUGH, Joseph, the popular and efficient City Clerk of Canton, Ill., was born in that city, February 25, 1874, a son of William and Mary Waugh, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. William Waugh was a harness-maker by occupation, who came from Pennsylvania to Illinois in 1849, and located in Peoria. Thence he removed to Canton in 1853. He was engaged in the harness business until about 1894, when he retired from active life.

The subject of this sketch received his early education in the public schools of Canton, and afterwards pursued a business course in Quincy, Ill., subsequently becoming connected with an insurance and law office until elected City Clerk.

In politics Mr. Waugh is a Republican. He has held the office of City Clerk of Canton since the first Tuesday in May, 1900, and has discharged its duties ably and faithfully. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Order of Eagles, Knights of Pythias and Elks.

WEAVER, D. P. (M. D.).—The town of Avon has profited by the professional services of Dr. D. P. Weaver ever since the establishment of his branch office here in 1890, and his name has been added to its citizenship since his permanent location in the place during 1900. He is one of the wide-awake and progressive medical practitioners of this part of the county, and numbers among his patrons many of the oldest and best families.

The early life of Dr. Weaver was spent on a farm in Greene County, Pa., where he was born in February, 1849, and which also was the native place of his parents, Isaac and Eliza (Cornwell) Weaver. He had the average advantages of the country youth of his time, but aspired to a broader life than that offered to the agriculturist not thoroughly in sympathy with his work. From the country school he went to Green Academy, at Carmichael, Pa., and his professional training was received at the Cincinnati Eclectic College, from which he was graduated in 1886, and at the American Medical College, St. Louis, which he attended a year. His advantages were largely of his own making, for his parents were in moderate circumstances, and after coming to Illinois, in 1870, he combined school teaching and farming for several years, thus earning the money to pay for his collegiate course. Immediately after his graduation he settled in Prairie City, Ill., and at the end of four years (in 1890), established the branch before mentioned in the town of Avon.

The marriage of Dr. Weaver and Elizabeth J. Lucas occurred in McDonough County, Ill., in 1873, Mrs. Weaver being a daughter of Joseph Lucas, an early settler in the southern part of McDonough County. To Dr. and Mrs. Weaver have been born three children, of whom Florence J. is the wife of Mr. Curtis, of McDonough County, and Beulah E. and Lloyd W. are at home. Dr. Weaver has a pleasing and confidence-inspiring personality, and his professional and general equipment has led him far toward a realization of a broad and exceptionally useful life.

WEBSTER, C. A.—From the rude log cabin in which he was born in Buckheart Township, this county, December 20, 1862, through various stages of educational and general progress to his present position as head of a flourishing drug business in Canton, is the life history of C. A. Webster up to the present time. Mr. Webster comes of New England and Southern stock, his father, Chauncey Webster, having been born in Connecticut, and his mother, Mary (Johnson) Webster, being a native of North Carolina. The family fortunes were shifted from the East to Fulton County, and among the crude and uninviting surroundings of the frontier arose to agricultural and general importance.

At an early period of his life C. A. Webster craved the boon of education and experience, his ambition tending to the opportunities of the cities rather than the fields, and to the more diversified occupations of thickly settled communities. Completing his education in the public schools, he graduated from the Chicago College of Pharmacy in 1884, thereafter adding to his knowledge of the drug business as an employe of P. C. Ross, afterward the firm of Ross & Rubel. On June 27, 1891, he established his present business in Canton, and since has enlarged his custom by efficiency, courtesy and strict attention to the working side of existence.

Mr. Webster established a home of his own August 16, 1894, marrying Ella P. Morehead, to whose sympathy and economical co-operation he owes much of his present success. Mr. Webster is a Republican in politics, and in religion a member of the Baptist Church. His genial manner and unflinching tact make him a leading social factor in the town, and he is identified with the Masons, Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America.

WEBSTER, Chauncey, one of the most prominent of the pioneer merchants of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., who is now retired from active life, was born in Wethersfield, Conn., May 26, 1828. He is a son of Cyrus and Cynthia (Churchill) Webster, also natives of Connecticut.

In boyhood, Mr. Webster attended the district schools of Connecticut and worked on the farm until he was twenty years of age, when he commenced teaching school in the home district at ten dollars a month. In 1850, when he was twenty-two years old, he left Connecticut and journeyed to Wisconsin, where he remained a short time visiting friends. Returning from Wisconsin he went thence to La Salle, Ill., by stage coach; by boat to Liverpool, Ill., where he landed October 3, 1850, and then proceeded to Canton, coming to town on a load of lumber. He was occupied during the winter of 1853 in teaching the district school.

In 1857 Mr. Webster purchased a farm in Buckheart Township, Fulton County, which he sold in 1864, moving then to Canton. His first occupation after his arrival there was as a salesman and clerk for A. B. & N. Hulit in the grocery trade, with whom he remained until 1868. Shortly afterward he engaged in business for himself, purchasing the stock of groceries, hardware, etc., of C. Haynes & Company in 1869. In 1879 he entered the employ of E. F. Swearingen & Company, but resigned his position with this firm in 1888, and engaged with O. T. Salisbury in the grocery line, retiring from business in 1894.

Mr. Webster has been twice married. In the winter of 1853, he was united with Mary Johnson, and their union resulted in three children, all of whom are living, namely: Cyrus A., a druggist in Canton; Frank E., who lives in Michigan; and Minnie (now Mrs. J. P. Murphy), of Canton. The mother of this family died in 1872. On December 4, 1874, Mr. Webster was joined in wedlock with Louise Savill, a native of England, who as an infant of one year came to the United States with her parents in 1844. The issue of this marriage was three children, as follows: Leonard C., of the Canton National Bank; Charles J., of Colorado; and Richard C., who is attending a pharmaceutical college in Chicago.

In politics Mr. Webster is a Republican. For twelve years he served as Clerk of Buckheart Township, and as Township Treasurer for five years. In 1869 he was elected Alderman from the Fourth Ward of Canton. Religiously the subject of this sketch is associated with the Methodist Episcopal Church. While now but a reflective onlooker, during his residence of more than half a century in Canton, Mr. Webster has done his share in all stages of the city's development, and upon no one of her citizens is bestowed more profound respect and cordial regard than upon Chauncey Webster.

WENNSTROM, Peter.—The entire absence of competition alone cannot be construed as reason for the success of Peter Wennstrom, who operated the only men's tailoring establishment in the village of Avon. Mr. Wennstrom is a skillful, painstaking workman, a genial, obliging gentleman, and his trade has been a matter of slow growth and merited recognition of his worth and reliability. His busy hands have been accustomed to measurements and shears ever since he was old enough to be trusted with them, for in Sweden, where he was born May 18, 1862, his father, Erick Wennstrom, was engaged in the same useful occupation. The elder Wennstrom was born in Sweden in 1840, and his wife, Christine (Olson) Wennstrom, was born December 23, 1837. Instead of following the ambitious feet of their children to this side of the ocean, the parents remained in the old country, where the father plied his trade, a respected and industrious member of a small community.

Peter Wennstrom received a practical common school education, and in youth was never idle, his hours out of school being invariably spent in his father's shop. September 28, 1884, he married Catherine Olson, who was born in Sweden, November 19, 1863. Of this union there are four children: Frank J., Gust S., Ernest H. and Esther A. Mr. Wennstrom came to America in 1889, and for eight years conducted a tailoring establishment in Chicago. He then located in Avon, and now has a large patronage in both town and surrounding country. He is a broad-minded and enlightened Swedish-American, taking kindly to the customs and people among whom his lot is cast, and winning among them many friends and well wishers. As yet he has formed no definite political opinions, but leans towards the principles and issues of the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of the order of Masons and Knights of Pythias. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wennstrom are devout members of the Universalist Church.

WETSEL, Daniel W.—For the past twenty years Daniel W. Wetzel has represented a bridge and road implement firm as commercial salesman, and during that time has visited many States and encountered many interesting and developing experiences. Notwithstanding his migratory experience, Mr. Wetzel has a secure place among the residents and interests of Harris Township, of which he has been a dweller for many years, and of which his family is an old and honored one. Born in Augusta County, Va., March 10, 1844, Mr. Wetzel is a son of George Wetzel, a native of Pennsylvania, and an early settler of Augusta County, Va.

George Wetsel was a farmer by occupation and succeeded as such in both Virginia and Illinois. In the Old Dominion he married Sarah Nebergall, and with his family came overland in a wagon to Illinois in 1845, locating near Astoria, where he lived six months. He next spent eighteen months in Vermont Township, then lived six years near Table Grove, finally purchasing a farm of 240 acres in Harris Township, where he conducted general farming and stock-raising until the end of his life in 1888. He was honored for his energy and good judgment, and for his practical interest in all that pertained to the well-being of the community.

Until his seventeenth year Daniel W. Wetsel remained under the family roof and then responded to the call of his country as a soldier in Company F, Fifty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Enlisting October 5, 1861, he participated in the marches, battles and general martial experiences of the Civil War, and October 31, 1864, was honorably discharged at Chattanooga, Tenn. For the following year he lived on the old place in Harris Township, then lived eight years in McDonough County, returning then to the home place, which since has been his headquarters. His management of the family estate has resulted in many substantial improvements, and the development of a property in every way a credit to its original as well as present owner. In the meantime he represented the bridge and implement company for the past twenty years, returning home whenever opportunity offered and himself aiding with the affairs of the farm during the busiest seasons.

In Harris Township, February 7, 1867, Mr. Wetsel married Matilda Lutz, who was born in Augusta County, Va., December 20, 1848, and who is the mother of five children, all of whom are dead except a daughter, Louie, now the wife of David Jeffries. Mr. Wetsel is a staunch supporter of Republican principles and has served the township as Road Commissioner. In religion he is a member of the United Brethren Church. A wide circle of acquaintances and many warm friends attest the business and general worth of Mr. Wetsel, his generosity, kindness and loyalty to all interests whatsoever.

WHALEN, Homer.—The trade of building, of housing the people and enterprises which make up a community, not only is one of the oldest known to man, but its ranks include a far greater number than those of any other kind of skilled labor. There is no place in the civilized world where the builder is not an absolute necessity, and as the possibilities of the calling include few cross lot cuts to wealth and influence, its followers almost invariably are men of moderate and temperate habits, calm judgment, and patient industry. Possessing genuine ability in his line of work, the journeyman advances to the highest compensations of his calling, in which event the remuneration often places him on a financial basis at par with the majority of professional men. To this capable and resourceful class belongs Homer Whalen, formerly member of the firm of Sandburg & Whalen, carpenters and builders of Canton, but now engaged in business alone, having bought out his partner's interest in December, 1906.

Mr. Whalen was born in Schuyler County, Ill., July 9, 1870, and when seven years old came to Canton with his parents. The moderate circumstances of the family necessitated his early assumption of wage earning responsibility, and at the age of fifteen he left the school room to serve a four years' apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade for J. C. Beam. He thereafter continued to work for Mr. Beam as a journeyman for eleven years, and when his employer went out of business became identified with C. H. Stanley, and, still later, with Moran & Stanley. Upon the dissolution of the partnership of Moran & Stanley he remained with the former member of that firm three years, and in February, 1903, formed a partnership with Andrew Sandburg, under the firm name of Sandburg & Whalen. Among the buildings in the county due to the skill and energy of Mr. Whalen and his associates may be mentioned the residences in Canton of N. A. Erwin, Mrs. Carrie McCall Black, Robert Auld, James Sterret, and T. L. Greer; three buildings for Mrs. Mary Rawlston, building for Russell Brothers, and town and country residences for Dr. L. A. Robertson and Alexander Monroe. In the country also he has built homes for Charles Whitmore, George Scholes and others.

The family of Mr. Whalen consists of his wife, who formerly was Cora M. Tullis, a native of Fairview, Fulton County, and three children: Theresa B., Harry Allen and Edward. In political affiliation Mr. Whalen is a Socialist. He is a member of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, and socially is connected with the Knights of Pythias, the Eagles and the Fraternal Tribunes. He is a master of business singularly adapted to his inclinations and abilities, and the fact that his work is congenial adds not a little to his possibilities of continued advancement. As an employer of labor he is considerate and appreciative, and has the faculty of securing from his men the best work of which they are capable.

WHITE, A. S.—Prominent among the men who have to their credit almost half a century of successful farming in Fulton County is A. S. White, since 1901, a retired resident of London Mills, and the owner, by virtue of good management and perseverance, of 178 acres of land in Young Hickory Township. Mr. White was a year old when he came to Illinois with his parents, Samuel and Lucinda (Wright) White, from Columbus, Ohio, where he was born in 1840. Samuel White, the father, was a blacksmith by trade, an occupation that he followed several years in his native State of Ohio, and which he continued in connection with farming after settling on eighty acres of land in Fairview Township, in the fall of 1842. At a later date he sold his farm and bought eighty acres in Young Hickory Township, where were reared his eight children, and where he died at an advanced age. His earlier years in the county were full of struggle and hardship, for he came with all his worldly possessions in a single wagon, after which he cut and sawed logs for his rude cabin, and in later years hauled his products to Copperas Creek Landing and Peoria. He grew with the locality, however, and became one of its reliable, influential and prosperous landowners.

A. S. White continued to make his home with his parents until 1861, when he was married to Jane Darling, a native of Fairview Township, and a daughter of Morrison Darling, a native of Ohio and early settler of Fulton County. Mrs. White, who died in 1897, was the mother of the following named children: William Henry, on his father's farm; Samuel M., also on the home farm; Jerry Foster, living at London Mills; Joseph D., on the home place; and Alice, the wife of J. W. Mateer. With his young wife Mr. White farmed near Bushnell for six years, then returned to Young Hickory Township, where, in 1866, he purchased eighty acres of land, later adding forty-four acres, and still later fifty-four more. This land was in disconnected tracts, and the White family occupied the fifty-four acre tract. While engaged in general farming and stock-raising, Mr. White also operated a threshing-machine for forty years, and, during that time, probably prepared for the market more grain than any one man in Fulton County. Since relinquishing the active management of his farms, he has rented the same to his sons, and is now occupying the home of his wife, whom he married in London Mills in 1901, and who, in girlhood, was Jane Greenwell, and by a previous marriage the wife of Joseph Tuttle, by whom she has a son, John, and a daughter, Mattie.

Ever since he was old enough to distinguish between the two great political parties Mr. White has voted the Democratic ticket, has been Constable of Young Hickory Township for almost two score years, and for many years served as Road Commissioner and School Director. His influence and labor have tended to the best possible local conditions, and in his rise from comparative poverty, he emphasized the possibilities surrounding the most lowly, and demonstrated the worth of industry, economy and perseverance.

WHITE, Joseph D.—As the manager of the farm of 179 acres upon which he was born in Young Hickory Township, August 4, 1881, Joseph D. White represents the sturdy, promising element of a community with which his family has been associated for many years of its upbuilding. Mr. White, in the equalizing influences of the public schools and in earlier life, learned to invest the occupation of farming with intelligence and keen interest. Since assuming the management of the paternal acres his method and understanding have materially advanced, and he is ever seeking new and more practical ways to success.

The marriage of Mr. White and Jennie A. Berry occurred in Ellisville, Ill., February 14, 1901. Mrs. White is a native of Young Hickory Township, born August 4, 1871. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. White—Gladys and Harold. Mr. White subscribes to the principles of the Democratic party, and as a member of the Board of Education for the past two years, has exercised a vigorous oversight of local educational opportunities. The family are members of the Christian Church.

WHITEHEAD, John (deceased), one of the most prominent of the early settlers of Fulton County, Ill., who for about eighteen years after 1863, was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Section 14, Liverpool Township, was born in Saddleworth, England, June 4, 1809, and came to the United States in 1845. He was a son of John and Betty Whitehead, natives of England. When Mr. Whitehead came to this country with his family he landed in New Orleans, the voyage across the ocean having consumed seven weeks, and thence they traveled by steamboat to Copperas Creek, Fulton County, Ill., arriving there April 26, 1845.

John Whitehead was a skilled manufacturer of silk, cotton and woolen goods in his native land, but shortly after establishing himself in his new home, engaged in the sawmill and grist-mill business. He also operated a steamboat, named Liverpool, between Lasalle and Beardstown. He finally purchased 120 acres of wild land which he brought under a fine state of cultivation, the tract being sold to him for the timber that covered it.

Mr. Whitehead's first wife was Nancy Saville, a native of Oldham, England, and a relative of Robert Saville, whose biography is published elsewhere in this work. This union resulted in ten children who were born in England, and three after the family settled in Fulton County. Their names are as follows: Annis (Mrs. Frank Vrell), of Canton, Ill., who died in the spring of 1906; Sarah A. (Mrs. John Coup), who lived in Kansas, where her husband died in 1877; Henry, who died in Liverpool, Ill.; Joseph Saville, who died in England, in 1837; Ralph, who died in Canton; Charles, who died in Liverpool, and Edwin, who died in Colorado Springs, Col., in 1894, 1884 and 1892, respectively; Bramley, of Colorado Springs; Jethro and Martha, who died in England, in 1845; Martha (Mrs. M. Huffman), of Peoria, Ill.; and Elizabeth and Ellen (Mrs. John Whitehead), of Liverpool Township. The father of this family departed this life in 1881, the mother having passed away in 1857. Mr. Whitehead's second wife was formerly Winifred Wood, a native of Yorkshire, England, whom he wedded in 1858. She survived her husband until 1883. Mrs. John Whitehead occupies the old homestead.

John Whitehead was a man of superior intelligence, great practical information and exceptional strength of character. He possessed remarkable energy and tenacity of purpose, and whatever he undertook he carried out. His integrity was beyond question, and his word was absolutely reliable. He contributed his full share toward laying the foundations of the material prosperity of Fulton County. His was a stirring and busy life, and during his venturesome and arduous career the sterling qualities recognized in him commanded the respect of all within the circle of his acquaintance.

WHITEHEAD, John J., one of the oldest and most extensive and successful farmers in Fulton County, Ill., of which he is also one of the most prominent and highly-respected citizens, is a resident of Section 14, Liverpool Township, this county. He was born in Delph, Lancashire, England, March 6, 1845, a son of William and Esther Whitehead, also natives of that country. He died about 1853. She died about 1846. They were the parents of four children. The mother died in England when John J. was but six months old. One of the children, Esther, died in infancy. William Whitehead, with two sons and one daughter, came to America in 1849, landing in New Orleans. Thence they journeyed by river to the place of their destination in Liverpool, Ill., where Mr. Whitehead was employed as a book-keeper and where he resided until his death, about 1853.

The children who accompanied him to the United States were: Stanley, of Liverpool, Ill.; Ann, who died in 1865 and was buried in Canton, Ill.; and John J., who, soon after arriving in this country, was bound out to Bob Battersbee. Through the aid of John Cross, he ran away, and went to Warren County, Ill., and there bound himself out to the Rev. Jerdon Dodge. With that gentleman he worked seven years, for a horse and his clothing. He was subsequently employed by the month until the outbreak of the Civil War. He then enlisted in the First Battalion, Yates Sharpshooters, and was transferred to the Forty-third United States Regiment, and afterwards to the First Regiment United States Infantry, in which he served during the war. He was wounded at the battle of Corinth, and was honorably discharged in 1865. He then returned to Liverpool, Ill., and worked by the month on a farm for three years. This farm he afterward bought and now owns. His first purchase was an eighty-acre tract in Section 13, Liverpool Township. To this he subsequently added 120 acres in Section 14, 110 acres in Section 23, and forty acres in Section 23, 160 acres in Section 12, and four blocks on Liverpool Island.

The life of Mr. Whitehead has been a remarkably successful one, and he is now the owner of 510 acres of most desirable land. Beginning his career as a boy bound out to another, he laid aside his work in the most vigorous years of his youth to serve his adopted country in her hour of extreme necessity, making a gallant record as a soldier, and returned from the great conflict of arms to renew his efforts in the field of industry. The farm is now operated by his sons, under their father's direction, while he enjoys the much needed rest which he so richly deserves.

On August 22, 1870, Mr. Whitehead was united in marriage with Ellen Whitehead, a daughter of John and Nancy (Savill) Whitehead, of Lancashire, England, who came to the United States in the spring of 1845, and settled at what is known as the "Four Corners," northwest of Canton. [A sketch of John Whitehead's life may be seen elsewhere in this volume.]

John J. Whitehead and his wife became the parents of eleven children, as follows: William, a farmer in Liverpool Township, born August 16, 1871; Truman, born January 31, 1874, who lives on Liverpool Island, Fulton County; Nancy W., born October 31, 1875, wife of Hector Beebe, of Pekin, Ill., a railroad time-keeper; Adelia P., born July 20, 1879, wife of Robert Raker, a farmer in Liverpool Township; Viola A., born May 25, 1882, wife of John G. Whitehead, of Liverpool, Ill.; George B., born October 7, 1884, who dwells in the parental home; Minnie L., born November 23, 1886; Roscoe S., born November 9, 1888; Otis R., born October 26, 1890; John Logan, born April 30; and Orval L., born May 5, 1892. The five last named are also part of the household group. All of them have enjoyed good school advantages, and attest the considerate training and assiduous care of their parents. All were born where the father and mother now live, and those who have gone from the parental roof are located in the near vicinity. In politics Mr. Whitehead is a sound Republican. Fraternally he is connected with Joe Hooker Camp 69, G. A. R., and both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WHITMORE, Jacob Russell, connected with the Parlin & Orendorff plow works for more than forty years, and, in length of service, the veteran of that great plant, was born in Fulton County, about three miles northeast of Canton, his present residence. His parents were Jeremiah and Hannah (Mock) Whitmore, natives of Pennsylvania, and were married in Bedford County in 1837, where both families had been settled for generations, engaged chiefly in the tilling of its soil. Jeremiah Whitmore brought his family to this vicinity, coming to Beardstown by boat, then by team to Copperas Creek, the only good landing place in Fulton County, and settling near Canton. Their son, Jacob R., was born in September, 1844, and lost his mother when he was a lad of nine years. His father was a carpenter by trade and the boy received an early training in that handicraft, being already well established with Parlin & Orendorff when his parental instructor died in 1872.

Jacob R. Whitmore entered the service of the Parlin & Orendorff establishment in December, 1864, and, with the exception of three years (1888-91) has been identified with that industry ever since. That period was spent in following his old trade of carpentry, and during a portion of the time he was engaged in building the comfortable residence in which he now lives on Martin Avenue. There is nothing in the way of wood working connected with the P. & O. works with which he is not familiar, his present occupation being pattern-making, in which he stands in the first class of experts.

On January 1, 1865, Mr. Whitmore was united in marriage to Miss Angie E. Hemenover, by whom he has had three children: Harry Jere, Julia Alice and Edwin. In politics Mr. Whitmore is a Democrat and is well known as a Mason and an Odd Fellow. He has filled all the chairs in the latter fraternity, being a member of Olive Branch Lodge, No. 15, of Canton, and in Masonry is identified with Morning Star Lodge, No. 734, and Canton Chapter, No. 68. Mr. Whitmore was a soldier in the Civil War, enlisting in 1862 as a member of Company F, Sixty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

WIESNER, Edward F.—To such vigorous and resourceful men as Edward F. Wiesner Orion Township is indebted for its place among the garden spots of Illinois. Forty-five years of age and a native son of Peoria County, Ill., where he was born November 3, 1861, this earnest and high-minded agriculturist is a sincere appreciator of the dignity and worth of his calling, and of its enormous importance as a fundamental feature of community existence. His farm consists of 160 acres on Section 2, upon which there are located a commodious dwelling, large and well arranged barns and outbuildings, well kept fences and many carefully selected labor-saving devices.

Mr. Wiesner is the only child of John C. and Mary (Metzer) Wiesner, natives of Germany, the former of whom served nine years and six months in the Prussian army. The elder Wiesner now is a wealthy and prominent farmer of Box Butte County, Neb., to which he moved from Peoria County, Ill., of which he was a resident half a century ago. Edward F. acquired a practical education in the public schools and under his father was instructed in all the details of farming and stock-raising. January 30, 1883, he married Nellie V., daughter of John and Mary Scovil, early settlers of Peoria County, and natives of New York and Ohio, respectively. Claude Leroy, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Wiesner, was born September 2, 1886. Mr. Wiesner's success and prominence have been earned by diligence and integrity, and these and other excellent qualities insure him a bright and promising future.

WILCOXEN, (Captain) Elijah (deceased), one of the most prominent pioneers of Fulton County, was born in 1789 in Ashe County, N. C., where he was reared. There he married Charlotte Callaway, a daughter of Colonel Elijah Callaway, one of the leading statesmen of that part of the country, and otherwise connected with some of the best families of the South.

The father of Captain Willcoxen was a nephew of Daniel Boone. In 1815 the Captain moved from North Carolina to Estill County, Ky. He had been a soldier in the War of 1812. He remained in Kentucky until about the year 1830, and then moved to Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., where he bought a farm in Section 5, which is now occupied by Jerry F. Willcoxen, who is next to the youngest of his sons. Captain Willcoxen purchased additional land in that vicinity, and finally accumulated more than 1,000 acres in one body, of which he gave each of his sons 160 acres. He died July 3, 1860, at the age of seventy-one years, and his wife passed away in 1875, when eighty-four years old.

Captain Willcoxen and his wife were the parents of fourteen children, of whom twelve survived the period of infancy. These and their children, about seventy in all, were present at his funeral. His offspring were as follows: Terilda, deceased, who was the wife of Moses Johnson, and left a family; Jesse B., deceased; Nancy M., deceased, who became the wife of William Hummell, also deceased, and left a family consisting of Mrs. Whitenack and Jesse B., of Putman Township, Fulton County; Elijah C., deceased, who married Prudence Putman, also deceased; Mary C., deceased, who became the wife of Isaac Cope, also deceased; Andrew J., deceased husband of Mary J. Grigsby, who is living in Los Angeles, Cal., at the ripe age of ninety years; Mary E., Annie A. and Marshall N., all deceased; James C., who resides in South Dakota; Charlotte, who died at the age of twelve years; a son who died in Kentucky at the age of two years; Jerry F., who occupies the original homestead farm in Section 5, Liverpool Township; and America, deceased, who wedded Joseph Jacobs, also deceased, and left a family of children.

Of those above mentioned, Jesse B. was twice married. He first wedded Priscilla Stufflebeam, and his second wife was Margaret Smith, who still survives, and is a resident of Joshua Township, Fulton County. She is in receipt of a pension as the widow of a soldier in the Black Hawk War. Mary E. became the wife of William Smith, deceased, of Banner Township, Fulton County, one of the leading men of that community. They left a large family. Annie A., first married Appleton Vail, deceased, of Bernadotte Township, Fulton County, by whom she had one son, Joseph, who is engaged in farming in Liverpool Township. She subsequently wedded George W. Ray, who carries on farming in the same township. Marshall N. married Harriet Lasswell, deceased, and left a family of ten children. James C. was twice married. His first wife was Clara Putman, deceased. He subsequently wedded Alice Hair, of Lewistown, Ill., and is now a resident of Black Hawk, S. D.

Elijah Willcoxen was a hero of two wars. Having rendered his country meritorious service in his youth, in the second conflict with Great Britain, he was still ready to answer her call after becoming a citizen of Illinois, and served two years in the Black Hawk War. During the first year, he held the rank of First Lieutenant, and in the last year he was Captain, with headquarters at Peoria. He accompanied Abraham Lincoln on the expedition into the Rock River region. Some of the relics then secured by him, among them a sword and pistol, are still in possession of the family. Besides the fighting tribes, scattered Indians were then numerous in that region.

Captain Willcoxen was, in all respects, a typical American citizen of the transition period of the Middle West. He was distinguished by those sturdy traits of character and rugged virtues that fitted the pioneers for the arduous and hazardous task confronting them. Brave, resolute, tenacious, persevering, he was equipped by nature with those potent qualities of head and heart that enabled the first settlers to wrest the untrodden wilds from their primitive condition, and lay them as a trophy in the lap of civilization. He was endowed with such traits that he was always found leading, never following. In all public enterprises, he was among the foremost, and gave freely of his time and money to every worthy cause. He was one of those rare and dominant characters, whose strong individuality permeates succeeding generations. In politics Captain Willcoxen was a Democrat of the old school. In religious faith he accepted the creed of the early Baptist Church.

WILCOXEN, George R., a well known and successful farmer and stock-raiser, on Section 4, Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in that township November 2, 1877, a son of Marshall N. and Harriet (Lasswell) Wilcoxen, natives of Fulton County. His grandparents, Captain Elijah and Charlotte (Callaway) Wilcoxen, were natives of North Carolina. Captain Elijah Wilcoxen, who was a soldier in the War of 1812, was one of the most conspicuous among the pioneers of Fulton County, where he settled in 1830. After establishing his home there, he also served his country in the Black Hawk War. He and his wife were the parents of fourteen children, two of whom died in infancy. Those who survived until their father's demise, together with their children—in all seventy descendants—were present at his funeral obsequies in July, 1860, making the occasion a memorable one. An elaborate memoir of Captain Wilcoxen may appear elsewhere in this volume.

Marshall N. Wilcoxen was born in Estill

County, Ky., September 5, 1827, and came with his parents to Fulton County, Ill., in 1830. On May 4, 1854, he was united in matrimony with Harriet Lasswell, a native of Fulton County, and a daughter of Andrew and Barbara (Baughman) Lasswell, of whom the latter was born in Trumbull County, Ohio. The union of Marshall N. Wilcoxen and Harriet Lasswell resulted in the following children: Calvin L., who was born August 11, 1855, and died March 6, 1905; Esther A., widow of John Byers, born February 8, 1857; Jerry C., born February 17, 1859, now a resident of Los Angeles, Cal.; Marshall N. and Harriet (twins), born May 3, 1861, of whom the latter died in infancy, and the former is engaged in farming in Liverpool Township; Charlotte A., born September 12, 1863, who married Harvey Goodman, and is a resident of Asheville, N. C.; Nellie F., born October 12, 1866, widow of Edward Kline, who resides in Canton, Ill.; Francis B., born October 12, 1868, who died in infancy; Margaret, born October 16, 1870, who is the wife of Seth Farwell, a resident of Callaway, Neb.; Mary I., born September 7, 1873, who married William Repass, a farmer in Liverpool Township; one who died in infancy, June 20, 1876; George R., born November 2, 1877; and Jesse E., born July 12, 1880. Marshall N. Wilcoxen (now deceased) was a leading citizen of Fulton County, where after coming to that locality in 1830, he spent the remainder of his life. He cleared the old home farm, which his son, George R., now owns and operates, and which has been in the family name for more than fifty years. He died January 5, 1901, and his widow passed away January 17, 1903. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and she, of the Christian Church.

George H. Wilcoxen, the subject of this sketch, was born and reared on the paternal farm and received his mental training in the district schools of the neighborhood. For many years prior to the death of his parents, he had charge of this farm. He is the owner of 160 acres of fertile land under a high state of cultivation, and containing improvements which compare favorably with those of the best farms in the township. He is a thorough, systematic and progressive farmer, and his operations are attended by the best results. He devotes considerable attention to stock-raising, and his horses, cattle and hogs are of superior grades.

On December 25, 1903, Mr. Wilcoxen was united in marriage with Sylvia Black, a daughter of Theodore and Harriet (Pollitt) Black, who was born December 25, 1883. Her father is engaged in farming in Liverpool Township. This union has resulted in two children: Harriet, born May 12, 1905, and Laurence T., born March 5, 1907. In politics Mr. Wilcoxen is a supporter of the doctrines of the Democratic party, and takes a good citizen's interest in public affairs. He is a man of irreproachable character and is highly esteemed throughout the community.

WILLCOXEN, James H., a prominent, influential and progressive farmer of Fulton County, Ill., was born on the farm where he now lives, on Section 8, Liverpool Township, January 16, 1858. He is a son of Jesse B. and Margaret (Smith) Willcoxen, pioneer settlers of Fulton County. The former was a son of Captain Elijah Willcoxen, the founder of the family in that county. Jesse B. Willcoxen first married Priscilla Stufflebeam, a native of Kentucky and a daughter of William Stufflebeam, who settled in Fulton County at an early period. Ten children were born to this union, of whom the first died in infancy. The others were: Francis M., who died when six years old; Terilda, wife of Frank Conley; Elijah C., a farmer in Liverpool Township; William C., also a farmer there; Charlotte, widow of B. L. Harrison; Jesse E., deceased; Harvey H., of Lewistown, Ill., and Joseph J., who is on the old home farm. The mother died in 1852. By the father's second wife, Margaret Smith, he had six children, namely: Sarah E., wife of Joseph N. Walker; James H.; Jacob S.; Noah L., of Liverpool Township; Martha E., wife of Peter Havermale, and Ida, who is with her mother in Joshua Township, Fulton County. Jesse B. Willcoxen died in 1871. He was an upright and dutiful man in all the relations of life, and did his full share of pioneer work. He departed this life honored and lamented by all who knew him.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the home farm and received his mental training in the district schools of the neighborhood. He has devoted his entire life to agricultural pursuits. He carries on general farming and stock-raising. In this occupation he has been very successful, and is looked upon as one of the best representatives of the farming element of Fulton County. He and his brother, Jacob S., own jointly 203 acres, constituting the old homestead farm. The latter was also born on this place, his birth having occurred in 1860. He was united in marriage November 18, 1885, with Maude E. Hummell, a daughter of John and Rebecca (Arnett) Hummell, of whom the former is deceased. Two children resulted from this union, namely: Toland, who was born in 1886, and Chester W., whose birth took place in August, 1890.

The old Willcoxen homestead is the birthplace of fifteen of the Willcoxen children, who grew to manhood and womanhood and married there, and settled in new homes in the vicinity of the spot where their childhood's days were spent. The land was patented from the Government in 1830, being part of a congressional grant. When the Willcoxen family first located in Fulton County Jesse B. Willcoxen served with his father, Captain Elijah Willcoxen, in the Black Hawk War in 1831-32. His widow, who is still living in Joshua Township, Fulton County, receives a pension from the Government for the services rendered by her husband in that conflict. The younger Will-coxens are proud to dwell on the noble record made by their gallant pioneer ancestors.

On March 8, 1883, Mr. Willcoxen was united in marriage with Delta M. Clarke, a daughter of William R. Clarke, a resident of Lewistown, Ill., and also a pioneer settler of Fulton County. This union resulted in four children, of whom the first died in infancy. The others are: Chalmers and Clarence, both of whom dwell under the paternal roof, and William M. In politics Mr. Willcoxen is a supporter of the Democratic party, and takes a good citizen's interest in local affairs. Fraternally he is affiliated with the K. of P. of Lewistown. He is a man of superior intelligence and upright character and is highly respected by a wide circle of acquaintances.

WILLCOXEN, James M.—Among the leading farmers of Liverpool Township, Fulton County, Ill., one of the most prominent is the well known citizen whose name furnishes the caption of this biographical record. He was born in Liverpool Township, March 26, 1848, a son of Elijah C. and Prudence (Putman) Willcoxen. Elijah C. Willcoxen was a son of Captain Elijah Willcoxen, a very prominent citizen of Fulton County in his day, whose career is portrayed in another portion of this volume. Prudence Putman was a daughter of Redding Putman, who was a soldier in the Black Hawk War, and is long since deceased. Elijah C. Willcoxen was the father of a family of fourteen children, four of whom died in infancy. The others are as follows: Redding, who lives in Lamar, Mo.; Elvira, deceased wife of Amos Fall, also deceased, leaving two children—Post and Ray; Nancy, wife of William Shields, a farmer of Liverpool Township, a sketch of whose life is contained in this work; Elijah, who died at the age of eighteen years; Jane, deceased wife of Andrew Shields, who is engaged in farming in Buckheart Township; James M.; Prudence, married, and a resident of the State of Washington; Calloway, who died at the age of eighteen years; Douglas, a farmer in Liverpool Township, and Rebecca, deceased wife of Alfred Ray. The father of this family departed this life in 1872, and the mother passed away in 1883. Both were prominent and highly respected members of the community, Elijah C. Willcoxen being one of the sturdy and resolute pioneers of the '30s, to whose rugged qualities, energy and perseverance the wonderful development of Fulton County may be attributed. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church, and were zealous and active in church work. In politics he was a Democrat and filled various township offices.

The subject of this sketch was reared upon a farm in Section 8, Liverpool Township, near the place where he was born. He underwent his mental training in the district schools and remained under the parental roof until he reached the age of twenty-two years, when he moved to his present farm on Section 9, Liverpool Township. Besides this property, consisting of 100 acres, he is the owner of another farm of equal extent on Section 9, and on the 200 acres is successfully engaged in general farming, raising also a good grade of stock of all kinds.

On April 12, 1870, Mr. Willcoxon was united in marriage with Belle Ford, a daughter of John and Ruth (Kinnlin) Ford, natives of Kentucky, and pioneer settlers of Fulton County. Besides Mrs. Willcoxon Mr. and Mrs. Ford were the parents of three other children, namely: Utta, wife of Andrew Shields, a farmer in Buckheart Township, Fulton County; Nancy, wife of John Berry, a resident of Arkansas, and Sarah, who is the widow of David Strout, and resides in Kewanee, Ill. The parents of this family were members of the Christian Church. The father departed this life June 10, 1894, and the mother passed away in January, 1901.

Mr. and Mrs. Willcoxon are the parents of four children, namely: Dora, born February 5, 1871, wife of Joseph Millett, a farmer in Buckheart Township; John, born July 17, 1875, who is engaged in farming in Liverpool Township, and who married Josephine Elliott; Melvin, a farmer in the same township, born January 19, 1879, and is the husband of Emma Millett, and Roba, born October 29, 1881.

In politics Mr. Willcoxon is a supporter of the Democratic party, and he and his worthy wife are members of the Christian Church. Mr. Willcoxon is a man of excellent qualities of head and heart and no member of the community is more highly esteemed or exercises a more wholesome influence in behalf of the public welfare.

WILCOXEN, Jeremiah F.—In bold, legible characters Jeremiah F. Willcoxon has written his name upon the history of Fulton County, and however much ill fortune may have swept away mere financial results of his achievement, has dramatized his character through his processes of labor, and shown himself master of the opportunities of his life. Mr. Willcoxon's parents, Captain Elijah and Charlotte (Callaway) Willcoxon, came to Fulton County in 1830, being among the first to permanently locate in Liverpool Township. Here Jeremiah F. was born February 17, 1833, and in a rude log cabin graduated from his still ruder cradle to the floor, and from the floor to the doorstep, thence to an increasing participation in the wilderness interests by which he was surrounded. Idleness or failure to develop one's working powers had no place on the frontier, and finally the lad was sent to school during the leisure of the winter season, the first school in the township being held in a log cabin two miles north of his home, which served also as a meeting house for the Baptist congregation. Subsequently other schools were started for the youth of the neighborhood, and as Jeremiah was an apt and inquiring pupil, he in time was sent to the high school in Cuba, held in a brick building. All of the schools were of the subscription order, the parents paying so much per term for each child sent, and the teacher boarding around in the families of different patrons.

After the death of his father Mr. Willcoxon succeeded to the quarter-section of land comprising the old homestead, and by dint of industry and good judgment kept adding to his inheritance, until he at one time owned 2,700 acres. In 1867 he was united in marriage to Lorenda Ryner, a native of Peoria County, Ill., and daughter of Peter and Margaret Ryner. Of this union there were three children: Frank B., who lives with his father; Mary Adell, who lives at home; and Charles L., who married Dale Quigley, has a son, Kenneth Don, and lives on part of the old homestead. Mrs. Willcoxon died March 19, 1884, and in January, 1890, Mr. Willcoxon married Mary C., daughter of Rev. Solomon Hendrickson, the latter an early circuit preacher who was killed on his way to church in West Virginia, by guerillas during the Civil War.

For many years Mr. Willcoxon was known as one of the most extensive stock-raisers in his township, and he derived a liberal income from sheep, cattle, horses and hogs. His land investments were invariably fortunate ones, and he was the means of inducing many people to settle here who otherwise would have selected some other site. He cherished an earnest faith in the future of the county, and his work tended always to a demonstration of his faith. He set an example of scientific and practical farming which would have been a credit to any community in the world, and always has stood for the progression that comes of the untiring research and intelligent application of knowledge. The faculty of accumulation was strongly developed, and he naturally drifted into the banking business, as a large stock-holder and Vice President of the firm of Turner, Phelps & Company. When this institution failed in 1894 much of the land and collateral of Mr. Willcoxon was swept away, his total loss being about $90,000. Few farmers have so much to lose, and few take their financial losses as philosophically and wisely as did Mr. Willcoxon. His sons now own the original old homestead, and have taken from his shoulders much of the responsibility of his affairs.

Since casting his first presidential vote Mr. Willcoxon has allied his political sympathies with the Democratic party. He was Sheriff of Fulton County from 1862 until 1865, and since then has held practically all of the various offices within his township. In religion he is identified with the Christian Church of Bryant, Fulton County. No man who has labored for the good of this county is held in higher esteem than is Mr. Willcoxon. His whole career has been lit by a splendid devotion to principle, an absolute fearlessness in pursuing the course he has marked out for himself. In consequence, his name and reputation stand for what he has gained rather than for what he has lost, for greatest of all the rewards of labor, is that great intangible asset, a noble and upright character.

WILCOXEN, William C., a farmer of long residence and marked prominence in Fulton County, Ill., is located in Section 17, Liverpool Township. He was born in that section, November 6, 1841, a son of Jesse B. and Priscilla (Stuffelbeam) Willcoxon, and a grandson of Captain Elijah Willcoxon, who was the founder of the family in Fulton County, a sketch of whose life may be found in another section of this work. On coming to Fulton County about 1831, he located on Section 17, in Liverpool Township, and the tract of land which he then entered up has continued in the possession of his descendants ever since that period.

Jesse B. Willcoxon first wedded Priscilla Stuffelbeam, a native of Kentucky, and a daughter of William Stuffelbeam, who settled in Fulton County at an early period. From this union resulted in nine children, of whom the first-born died in infancy. The others were as follows: Francis M., who died at the age of six years; Zerilda, who married Frank Conley, a resident of Macomb, Ill., and died October 12, 1863, leaving three children; Elijah C., who is engaged in farming in Liverpool Township; William C.; Charlotte T., widow of B. L. Harrison, also a resident of Liverpool Township; Jesse B., deceased, who was the husband of Margaret Shields, whose home is in Lewistown, Ill.; Henry H., who also lives in that town; and Joseph J., who lives on the old home farm. The mother of this family departed this life June 27, 1854, and the father subsequently married Margaret Smith, by whom he had six children. The offspring of the second union was as follows: Sarah E., wife of Jasper N. Walker, of Lewistown, Ill.; James H. and Jacob S., who are jointly operating the homestead farm; Noah L., who carries on farming in Liverpool Township; Martha O., wife of Peter Havermill, of Canton, Ill.; and Ida B., who makes her home with her mother, in Joshua Township, Fulton County. Jesse B. Willcoxon died October 17, 1872, and was buried in the Salem churchyard. He was a plain, unassuming man, of upright character, and enjoyed the respect of all who knew him. Together with his father, who settled in Fulton County in the early '30s, he helped to reclaim the lands from the wilderness, and also participated with his father in the Black Hawk War. He was a useful citizen, and took an earnest interest in public affairs.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the farm, and received his early mental training in the district schools of his neighborhood. Since then his life has been devoted to agricultural pursuits. In this occupation he has met with merited success. He now owns and operates a farm of eighty acres in a thorough and systematic manner, and raises a good grade of all kinds of stock.

On February 16, 1871, Mr. Willcoxon was united in marriage with Martha J. Sprague, a daughter of Lauren P. Sprague, who is a resident of Banner Township, Fulton County, and one of the honored pioneers of the county, his advent to this region having occurred at an early period in its history. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Willcoxon resulted in two children, namely: Lora V., who died at the age of nine years; and Willard R., who was born August 23, 1883. The latter married Bertha Jordan, and is engaged in farming in Section 17, Liverpool Township, his father having given him forty acres of land on which to begin life for himself.

In politics William C. Willcoxon is a supporter of the Democratic party, and is influential in its local councils, having filled the office of School Trustee for more than twenty years. He takes a lively interest in public affairs, and is regarded as one of the most public-spirited and useful members of the community.

WILLIS, George E., a well known contracting carpenter and builder of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Bushnell, Ill., March 11, 1871, a son of John C. and Catherine (Wilt) Willis, of whom the former was born in Freeport, Ohio, in 1835, and the latter in the State of Tennessee in 1833. John C. Willis came to Illinois in 1850 and located at Ipava, Fulton County, moving to Canton in 1888, where he died in 1904.

George E. Willis came in 1888 with his parents to Canton, having received his early mental training in the district schools of Ipava. In 1893 he began the contracting business in partnership with his father, which was continued four years, but which he has since followed alone.

On September 20, 1891, Mr. Willis was married to Salina Mahr, who was born and schooled in Deerfield Township, Fulton County. One child, William, has resulted from this union. Mr. Willis was elected Alderman of the First Ward of Canton in the spring of 1905. Fraternally he is a member of the K. of P. Lodge, No. 54.

WILLIS, Isaac Newton.—A brief biography of Isaac Newton Willis exists in the expression "He was his brother's keeper." This is true not only from an ethical and benevolent, but from material standpoint. No man who has helped to make history in Table Grove and vicinity has contributed more to the development of his surroundings than did this gifted exponent of the best in building and architecture, as well as in American manhood. His monuments cover a large area, housing a multitude of people and a variety of interests. Yet above their significance and permanence rises the assurance of a life unrolled in the company of high ideals, and tuned always to the harmony of the brotherhood of man.

Mr. Willis was born on a farm near Freeport, Harrison County, Ohio, June 7, 1848, and died in Table Grove March 9, 1904. In 1850, at the age of two years, he came with his parents to Illinois, and before attaining his majority learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed at Havana and other inland towns. He later accompanied the bridge gang from Bushnell north along the Rockford, Rock Island & St. Louis division of the Burlington Railroad, and also worked on the construction of the M. K. & T. Railroad through Southwest Kansas and the Indian Territory. Probably the turning point in his life occurred when he went to Chicago in February, 1872, after the great fire, where, imbued with the spirit of resurrection and renewal which animated the stricken city, his own perspective took on depth and broadness, and the labor of the past seemed strangely inadequate. While busily employed on the new buildings everywhere springing into existence above the charred ground, he attended night school, and under one of the most capable of the city's builders mastered the intricacies of architecture. Naturally gifted artistically, and possessing a true eye for form and color, he thus found his largest usefulness, his most congenial and therefore most successful occupation.

Returning to Table Grove, Mr. Willis entered upon a long career as an architect, builder and contractor, and during 1882-3 conducted his affairs in partnership with two different men. His responsibilities assumed particularly large proportions in 1893, however, when he formed a partnership with his brother, C. P. Willis, and his brother-in-law, Lewis Boyne, under the firm name of L. N. Willis & Company. No firm of the kind is more widely known in this section of the State, nor has any produced more practical and satisfying designs for buildings than those which emanated from the fertile brain of the senior partner. He was fortunate in having splendid mechanics as his aids, and together they labored untiringly in the erection of buildings which are models of latter-day construction and convenience. Every city and village for miles around has examples of the co-operation of the members of this firm, and Table Grove itself stands pre-eminent as a village of beautiful and artistic homes.

In the faculty of accumulation Mr. Willis exceeded the majority of men endowed with keen artistic perceptions. He both knew how to make and keep money, and how to invest it to the best advantage. His wealth was a source of infinite delight to him, enabling him, as it did, to accomplish a world of good for others. He abhorred stinginess and parsimony, and he was equally intolerant of the injudicious use of money. Of actual aid he gave more than will ever be known, or can be estimated in the aggregate. No citizen more readily responded to projects for individual or public relief, or entertainment more whole souled sympathy with education, charity, or general advancement. Personally he was the soul of honor, and his word was recognized as equal to his contract. In fact, in many instances he erected buildings without contracts to bind him in any way. His ideas were sane and comfortable on general subjects, and he was strenuously opposed to corporal punishment, either in the home or school. He felt the interest which all loyal men feel in the government of their locality, and as a Republican filled many local offices of trust and responsibility. Socially he was connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

On October 13, 1878, Mr. Willis established a home of his own, marrying Mariam Bogue, who was born in Vermont Township, Fulton County, this State, November 1, 1856, a daughter of Stephen Bogue, one of the honored pioneers of Fulton County. To Mr. and Mrs. Willis were born seven children, of whom Rena died in infancy; Leura, born May 12, 1888, died August 26, 1904; Maud, born March 5, 1884, is the wife of H. M. Snyder, a farmer of McDonough County; Olive, born January 10, 1886; Frank B., born August 4, 1888; Floyd Newton, born June 26, 1894; and Ruth, born January 9, 1897. With his usual far-sightedness and appreciation of its benefits, Mr. Willis gave his children the best education within his power, and was particularly solicitous concerning the molding influences of their lives. At no time or place did he appear to better advantage than when surrounded by his immediate family, nor to any did he show so unceasingly the wealth of love and kindness in his nature. The funeral of Mr. Willis presented one of the most remarkable manifestations of grief ever beheld in the town of his adoption. Those present represented all walks of life, from the man who carried the hod to him whose wealth paid for the completed structure. They surged into the village from every direction, and joined in a common grief for the loss of a truly noble and manly man.

WILLIS, J. B.—The firm of J. B. Willis & Son fills a large demand in the house-moving line in Canton and vicinity. The business was established here in 1898 by the senior member after conducting a similar enterprise in Smithfield for five years, and in 1902 the son was taken into partnership, thus infusing new energy and life into a well equipped and well organized enterprise.

Mr. Willis is a native of Ohio and was born on a farm in 1851. His father, George Willis, was a mechanic by nature, but a farmer by preference, and his mother formerly was Sarah Pickering. He received a common school education and was early trained to habits of thrift and economy. Since adopting his present line of work he has undertaken many important contracts and has the reputation of thoroughly understanding a business of practical import in all growing communities. October 9, 1873, Mr. Willis was united in marriage to Mary J., daughter of James D. Able, who was born in Henderson County, Ill., in 1851. Mr. and Mrs. Willis are the parents of three children: Elsie, born in 1874; Laura, born in 1877, and Jesse T., born in 1879. Of these Elsie married Jacob A. Dallas, of Smithfield; Laura became the wife of William F. Steel, of Farmington, Ill., and Jesse married Mary Daley, of Orion Township, Fulton County.

Mr. Willis is a hard worker and generous provider for his family. His upright life has made its appeal to the community in which he lives and he is patronized whenever reliable and satisfactory results are required.

WILLISON, Howard, one of the oldest, worthiest and most widely respected of the prominent farmers of a past generation, now living in honored retirement in Lewistown Township, Fulton County, was born in Allegheny County, Md., October 15, 1824, a son of Amond and Mary (Wilson) Willison, natives of that county. About the year 1832 Amond Willison left Maryland and went to Perry County, Ohio, where he was engaged in farming until his death, departing this life in January, 1835, when about thirty-seven years old. He and his wife were the parents of six children, namely: Howard, William H., who settled in Fulton County about the year 1852, but later located in Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., where he died in 1885; Eliza C., deceased, who became the wife of William Laird, also deceased; Jasper, deceased; Assias, born in Pennsylvania, who accompanied William H. to Fulton County, and located in Creston, Iowa, in 1881; and Wesley, who was born in Ohio and died in Lewistown, Fulton County. The mother of this family passed away in 1873. She was a worthy, conscientious and dutiful woman and a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm and received his mental training in the district schools of Perry County, Ohio, in 1855 removing to Lewistown, Ill., where he remained until the spring of 1868. He then rented a farm just east of Lewistown and in 1871 purchased another near Bryant, Fulton County, which he operated until 1901, then bought his present farm of eighty acres on Section 11, Lewistown Township. He has been prominently identified with the growth of Fulton County for a long period, and has taken an active part in the development of its varied interests.

On December 22, 1848, Mr. Willison was united in marriage, in Perry County, Ohio, with Rachael Laird, who was born in Pennsylvania, May 20, 1828, and was a daughter of William Laird and wife, natives of that State. Her father was of Welsh extraction, while her mother's ancestors were Irish. Mr. and Mrs. Willison were the parents of the following children: Marshall, who was born in Ohio, December 3, 1849, and now conducts the home farm; Susan A., wife of Mr. Arvilla, who is engaged in farming near Canton, Ill.

In public affairs the father of this family has always manifested an earnest interest. He is a Republican in politics, and cast his first presidential vote for Rutherford B. Hayes. He has rendered good and faithful service to the people in the offices of City Marshal and Street Commissioner. A man of high character, he is regarded with profound respect throughout the community.

Marshall Willison was wedded January 22, 1880, to Amanda Laws, who was born August 23, 1853, and their union resulted in one child, Nettie B., born March 1, 1881, and who attends to household affairs. Her mother died in January, 1893. Susan A. Willison (Mrs. Clark), before mentioned, is the mother of three children, namely: Flora, Sherman and Mabel. The Willison family is looked upon as one of the most prominent, worthy and estimable in Fulton County.

WILSON, Amos I.—The kind of success which places a man in comfortable circumstances, permits him to enjoy the sane and temperate compensations of life, and, at his zenith, leaves him a clear conscience and many friends, has been achieved by Amos I. Wilson, a large landowner and well known farmer and stock-raiser of Fairview Township, Fulton County. Mr. Wilson has spent all but eight years of his life in Fulton County, whither in 1853, with his parents, P. P. and Catherine (Rightmyre) Wilson, from Monroe County, Mich., where he was born February 14, 1844. Both his parents were born in New Jersey, and came overland to Michigan at an early day, the father finding in Monroe County ample opportunity for the application of his trade of wagon-maker. In Fulton County, to which he later came with team and wagon, he plied his trade in Fairview Township, where he subsequently purchased eighty acres of land, and tilled the same until retiring from active life. His last years were spent in Kansas, to which State he removed and where his death occurred in 1897.

Amos I. Wilson interspersed work on the Fairview Township farm with attendance in the public schools, and when old enough to assume responsibility, rented a farm near his home for three years. At the end of that time he invested in fifty-three acres of land in the same township, in Section 30, later purchasing the 140 acres now occupied and operated by his son. Mr. Wilson gave his attention chiefly to general farming, but raised many high grade cattle, horses and hogs. Latterly he was partially retired from active life, and on his original farm of fifty-three acres is surrounded with much that tends to a happy and contented life. He never has been active in politics or general township affairs, preferring the quiet of his home, and the companionship of those whom he calls friends. At Beloit, Wis., August 8, 1866, he married Carrie Davis, a native of Rockford, Ill., and daughter of an early pioneer of that part of the State. Mrs. Wilson was born September 4, 1844, and is the devoted mother of two children, Margaret and James.

WILSON, Daniel W.—Various wanderings and occupations have contributed to the life experience of Daniel W. Wilson, and out of them he has evolved financial and general satisfaction beyond the average. For the past ten years he has lived in retirement in Table Grove, this county, where he has many friends and the most agreeable of surroundings. Mr. Wilson is of English ancestry, and was born June 9, 1829, on a farm in Parke County, Ind. His father, Caleb Wilson, was born in Virginia, and his mother, Mary (Mote) Wilson, was a native of Georgia. His maternal grandparents were Jeremiah and Rebecca (Richards) Mote, and the former was a son of Jonathan Mote, a native of the vicinity of London, England.

In Parke County, Ind., Daniel W. Wilson received a common school education, and while still in his teens learned the blacksmith's trade. Skill and ambition soon led him into safe financial avenues, and he married Ann Maria Abernathy, a native of Montgomery County, Ind., and daughter of James and Hannah (Throckmorton) Abernathy, born in Virginia and Ross County, Ohio, respectively, and who came to Fulton County in 1834. The grandparents, John and Mary (Brouse) Abernathy, were natives of Virginia.

Daniel Wilson and his wife came to Table Grove, Fulton County, in 1850, the municipal feature of the town at that time being composed of two residences and a schoolhouse. For four years he operated a blacksmith shop, and then moved to a farm previously purchased near New Philadelphia, McDonough County. Fifteen years later he disposed of this farm and bought 260 acres two miles east of Table Grove, which remained his home until moving to the town of Camp Point, 1889. Mr. Wilson here entered the ministry of the Christian Church, with which he had long been connected as layman, and in 1893 he took charge of a church in Knoxville, where, two years later, he was stricken with paralysis. Retiring from active life to Vermont, he two years afterward located in his present home in Table Grove, with whose earliest history he had been connected, and whose destiny he had followed with ever increasing interest.

Since casting his first presidential vote Mr. Wilson has identified his political fortunes with the Republican party. He is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson: Cecilia Dora, wife of W. J. Hiett, of Sydney, Neb.; Melvin Tell, of Mount Pleasant, Iowa; Byron Bennett; Cassius Clay, of Buckley, Wash.; Ulysses Grant, of Hartford, Conn.; Ida, wife of Grant Gay, of Galena, Kan.; Lillian, wife of Arthur Gay, of Camp Point; and Carrie, wife of James Lowe, a minister in the Christian Church, at Galesburg, this State. Mr. Wilson has led an earnest and upright life, and one large in its usefulness and industry. As a blacksmith he was conscientious and painstaking, and as an agriculturist and preacher he has invested his labor with profound studentship and ethical soundness.

WILSON, George, a very prominent citizen formerly of Ellisville, now of Lewistown, Fulton County, Ill., and a worthy descendant of one of the most highly respected of the pioneer families of the county, was born in Fairview, Ill., April 27, 1864, a son of John E. and Maria (Rodonner) Wilson, natives of New Jersey. A. D. Wilson, the paternal grandfather, was a native of that State, and there spent a considerable portion of his life. He made the journey from New Jersey to Illinois in the '30s, and was one of the earliest ministers of the gospel, if not the earliest, in Fulton County. His son, John E. Wilson, was a farmer by occupation, and followed his wonted pursuit in Fairview Township. He was an energetic and enterprising man, and joined the throng, who, in 1849, made their way to California in quest of gold. After his return, he was engaged in farming for many years in Fairview Township, and his labors were attended by success.

Politically he was a Democrat, and in religion a member of the Dutch Reformed Church. He and his wife were the parents of six children, as follows: Abram, George, Daniel, Julia, John C. and Ruth A. Wilson. The father of this family died January 16, 1901, the mother passing away in January, 1870.

In boyhood, George Wilson availed himself of the opportunities for mental improvement afforded by the Fairview schools, and was reared to the life of a farmer. He carried on farming with uniformly good results until 1896, when he bought out the interests of W. T. V. D. Voohrees, in the Bank of Ellisville, a private banking enterprise, organized by W. H. Hogsett, in 1890, and represented in the State Bankers' Association. For the next ten years (July 1, 1896, to July 1, 1906) Mr. Wilson conducted the Bank of Ellisville, at the latter date selling out his banking interest to Mr. E. W. Butler, of Grinnell, Iowa. A month or two later he received the nomination on the Democratic ticket for County Treasurer of Fulton County, successfully made the campaign, and was elected in November following, when he moved to Lewistown (the county-seat) and took charge of his office on the first Monday in December, 1906. Since then, in connection with others, he organized the First State Bank of Canton, Ill., and has been selected for the position of Cashier of this institution.

Mr. Wilson has been twice married. His first marriage was with Nina Parks, of Fairview, Ill., in 1889, who died in 1894, leaving three children, namely: Glenn, born in 1890; Ruth Jeannette, born in 1892; and Lillian, born in 1894. In 1897, Mr. Wilson married as his second wife Mary E. Taylor, of New York. Two children have resulted from this union: Mildred and George, Jr., born, respectively, in January, 1900, and April, 1904.

Mr. Wilson is still the owner of a fine farm in Section 32, Fairview Township, the active operation of which he abandoned on embarking in his present enterprise.

In politics the subject of this sketch is an active and influential member of the Democratic party. He served one term as Supervisor for Ellisville Township, and has acted in the capacity of Treasurer of the village school, and of the township, for a number of years. Fraternally Mr. Wilson is identified with the M. W., and the A. F. & A. M. In banking circles he is accounted sound, conservative and reliable, and in all the relations of life, he has maintained a high record.

WILSON, George.—Half a century has slipped into history since the death of Lambert Wilson on his farm in Farmers Township, August 28, 1855. That this honored pioneer left sons behind him to perpetuate his name and continue his work has been a distinct gain to the community to which he came as a stranger in 1851. Lambert Wilson and wife were the parents of three children: George, Jacob and Eliza. George Wilson, the immediate subject of this sketch, was born in Virginia in 1833, and in 1846 accompanied his parents to Ohio, the journey being accomplished with great difficulty, and with but small provision for the comfort of the travelers. Camping out by night, and resuming their journey at daylight, the mother and daughter rode the only horse belonging to the party, the father and George, the latter then thirteen years old, walking the entire distance. Settling in Ross County, Ohio, the expectations of the family were only partially realized, and in 1851, they set out with their household goods for Fulton County, Ill., the father, Lambert Wilson, taking up the farm now owned by his son in Farmers Township. The son, Jacob, died while the family lived in Ohio, and the daughter, Eliza, later in Iowa.

George Wilson irregularly attended the public schools in both Ohio and Illinois, but, for the greater part, his education was the result of his own effort, being accomplished when the hard tasks of the day were ended. He married Mary Wilson, who came of an entirely different family, and of their union there were three children: Alice, James S., and George, Jr. Of these, the daughter, Alice, is the wife of Lewis Pickle, of McDonough County; George Wilson, Sr., the father of this family, died June 21, 1889, and his wife, Mary Wilson, May 12, 1898. In political affiliation Mr. Wilson was a Republican. Mrs. Wilson was a devout member of the Church of United Brethren. The son, James S., is a resident of Table Grove, Fulton County.

WILSON, James S.—As an agriculturist, office-holder and promoter of education and good government, James S. Wilson is deservedly ranked among the prominent and progressive native sons of Farmers Township, Fulton County, where he was born December 6, 1851, a son of George Wilson, a Fulton County settler of 1851, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Wilson received average educational and other training in his youth and until his twenty-seventh year devoted himself assiduously to assistance in the family support. He then established a home of his own, marrying Effie Thompson, daughter of Charles L. Thompson, and thereafter bought a part of the old farm on Sections 7 and 18. To this he since has added and now owns 160 acres on Sections 7, 18 and 6. Engaged in general farming and stock-raising, he is a disciple of progress and each year has witnessed some addition to his equipment, or some change to more expeditious methods. Of the five children born to himself and wife two died in infancy, those living being Hazel, Lena and Horner. In political affiliation Mr. Wilson is a Republican, and his efforts in behalf of his party invariably have given entire satisfaction. He is a hard-working and earnest man, devoted to his family and friends and observing always honesty and consideration in dealing with his fellowmen.

WINCHEL, John.—None of the pioneer tillers of the soil of Fulton County, Ill., has made a more enviable record, or gained, from seventy years of residence, a higher reputation than John Winchel, who was born on February 5, 1836, in Isabel Township, where he still lives. He is a son of Solomon and Mary (Schick) Winchel, natives, respectively, of Connecticut and North Carolina. At a very early period the father emigrated from New England to the latter State, and there wedded the lady of his choice. By reason of service in the War of 1812, Solomon Winchel received a land warrant from the Government, and entered a claim of 160 acres of land in the southwest quarter of Section 16, Isabel Township, Fulton County, where he was engaged in farming until his death in 1862.

Solomon Winchel and his wife were the parents of six sons and six daughters, of whom three, one son and two daughters, are still living, namely: John; Nancy (Mrs. Athey), a resident of Lewistown Township, Fulton County; and Mary, who lives in Davis County, Iowa, and is the widow of Marion McKee, who died of Bright's disease. The mother of this family passed away in 1862.

In youth the subject of this sketch received his educational training in the district schools. He remembers well the deer and wild game that abounded throughout the region. He recalls the fact that the pioneers not only assisted each other in emergencies, but were ready to turn out and lend a hand on all occasions of sports and merry recreations. One's amusement was often the entertainment of all, and all freely joined when once the fun began. Selfishness was not displayed as commonly as now. The dangers, hardships and privations seemed to link the settlers in a natural fraternity. When often indulging in retrospection, the old times rise up before him, and he longs to gather the family again around the old fireplace in the primitive log cabin.

In 1873, Mr. Winchel bought eighty acres in Section 17, Isabel Township, where he has since made his home. He has not only witnessed, but taken an active part in the great changes that have occurred in Fulton County since 1835. He looks in vain for the many who have passed away, and finds but few left to tell the story of the old wooden plow, with seven or eight yoke of oxen, as it turned up the wild prairie land.

On March 17, 1859, Mr. Winchel was united in marriage with Eliza A. Dunn, a daughter of William and Malinda (Horwick) Dunn, natives of Tennessee, who emigrated thence to Indiana, later removing to Fulton County, Ill., where they spent the remainder of their days. After the death of Mr. Dunn, his widow made her home with Mr. Winchel until her death.

In politics Mr. Winchel has always been a staunch supporter of the Republican party, having cast his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln. He has always taken an active interest in all measures intended to promote the welfare of the township and county, and has been recognized by all as one of the most useful and public-spirited citizens of the community. He has held the office of School Director, in which he rendered faithful and efficient service.

WISE, Daniel.—That patience, good judgment and untiring industry are essential accompaniments of successful farming is confirmed anew in the career of Daniel Wise, who, after many years of striving and self-denial, has recently become the owner of one of the most valuable farming properties in Vermont Township, Fulton County. As his name indicates, Mr. Wise—or as his name formerly was spelled, Weiss—is of Teutonic origin, the son of John and Margaret (Hanlin) Wise, natives of Bavaria, Southern Germany. Both the paternal and maternal families came to America in 1840, directly after the completion of the military service of John Wise, settling in Maryland, where the young people were married, and whence Mr. Wise and his wife came to Fulton County in 1845. They bought forty acres of land in Woodland Township, where their eleven children were born, and where the mother died in 1896, and the father in 1901. Barbara, the oldest daughter, is the wife of Henry Hetzel, of Table Grove; Margaret, who is the widow of John Parr, lives in Astoria; Elizabeth is the wife of Joseph Swartz, of Decatur, Ill.; Lydia is the wife of Charles Krembling, of Decatur, Ill.; Henry is a resident of Summum, this State; Amelia is the wife of Casper W. Atherton, a farmer of Vermont Township; Mary (now deceased), was the wife of John Atherton, of Ipava; Samuel is a farmer of Vermont Township; Rebecca is the wife of Grant Ward, a carpenter and builder of Woodland Township; Daniel; and Sarah, wife of John Smith, a farmer of Pleasant Township.

At the age of eighteen years Daniel Wise left the home whose resources were inadequate for the support of so large a family, and worked as a farm hand for twenty dollars a month. At the end of a year he rented a farm on shares, and through good management and hard work made money for himself and the owner of the farm. August 15, 1886, he married Eva J. Brown, and during the following fall removed to Kansas, but returning two years later rented a farm in Pleasant Township. In 1891 he located in Eldorado Township, McDonough County, where, on January 14, 1897, Mrs. Wise died, leaving five children. Of these, Maggie was born in Allen County, Kan., June 20, 1887; Griff was born in Fulton County, March 11, 1889, and died February 28, 1898; Mabel was born in Fulton County, March 2, 1891; Guy was born in Eldorado Township, McDonough County, in February, 1893; and Edith in the same township March 24, 1895, and died in Woodland Township February 15, 1897. March 17, 1898, Mr. Wise married Mrs. Dora E. Horner, daughter of James M. Onion, an honored pioneer of Fulton County, and mother of Lucile Horner, born November 6, 1894. Mrs. Wise's first husband was William Horner. Mr. and Mrs. Wise have a daughter, Ada M., born in Eldorado Township, April 9, 1904.

From his monthly wages and his renting operations, Mr. Wise managed to save $8,000, and this amount he was able to pay on his present farm, purchased after coming to Fulton County in 1905. He owns eighty acres on Section 12, Vermont Township, for which he paid $125 an acre, and which is one of the most valuable farms in the county. He is engaged in general farming and stock-raising, having on hand a variety of high-grade stock, for the care of which he has ample facilities, and his general improvements are modern and practical. Mr. Wise is a public-spirited and progressive farmer, living always within his income, and providing liberally for the inevitable rainy day. He is a member of the Reformed Church, while his wife is identified with the Christian Church, and fraternally he is associated with the Modern Woodmen of America. While disclaiming political aspirations, he is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, and in other localities has held the office of School Trustee.

WOLFE, Edward C., furniture dealer and undertaker, being a prominent business man of Lewistown, Ill., in these specialties, is a native of McDonough County, Ill., where he was born

May 19, 1877, the son of E. T. and Parmelia (Clark) Wolfe, his father being born in Indiana and his mother in Illinois. Although he spent his early life upon the home farm and received a limited education in the district school of his neighborhood, his youthful aspirations all inclined toward a business career. At the age of seventeen he entered the Indianapolis Business University, in which he spent a number of most profitable years. Later he obtained a practical training in his present lines, which partake of both business and professional features, and in April, 1900, located in Lewistown and purchased the nucleus of his present complete establishment. Subsequently he finished a full course in the United States School of Embalming and passed a creditable examination before the State Board.

Having thus acquired a thorough business education and experience, with an additional mastery of the art of embalming, Mr. Wolfe was abundantly qualified to give complete satisfaction in the different branches of his calling. There is, in fact, no one in Lewistown engaged in special lines of business who has more completely secured the confidence of the people than Mr. Wolfe. He also takes a lively and effective interest in public enterprises, which have for their object the general advancement of the community.

On the 11th of October, 1905, Mr. Wolfe was united in marriage with Eleanor Binnie, of Macomb, Ill., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Binnie, her father being a banker and an honored pioneer and prominent citizen of McDonough County. Mrs. Wolfe is a lady of culture and strong character, especially prominent in church and social activities. In fraternal circles Mr. Wolfe is connected with the A. F. and A. M., M. W. A. and K. of P., and in politics is a Democrat.

WOLFE, J. P., a prosperous and substantial grain dealer of Norris, Fulton County, Ill., and for many years a farmer in Orion Township, was born in that township on December 3, 1841, and there attended the district schools in boyhood. He is a son of Thomas F. and Joanna (Coleman) Wolfe, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of New Jersey. Thomas F. Wolfe came to Orion Township in 1826, and bought 160 acres of timber land. This he cleared and carried on farming there for many years. He and his wife were the first couple married in Orion Township, and their eldest daughter was the first white child born in the township. They had fourteen children. Thomas F. Wolfe was a sturdy pioneer, intelligent, upright and persevering, and maintained a high reputation. His wife was a kindly, patient and diligent helpmate, and her character was marked by the finest womanly qualities. For a number of years Thomas F. Wolfe officiated as a Justice of the Peace.

The subject of this sketch was reared on a farm and followed farming until 1899. In that year he took charge for the Neola Elevator Company, of Chicago, of their elevator at Norris, the capacity of which is 15,000 bushels. He buys and sells all kinds of grain. He also owns a fine farm of eighty acres in Section 5, Canton Township, Fulton County, which is conducted by his sons.

On September 25, 1870, Mr. Wolfe was united in matrimony with Emma Wise, who was born in Canton Township, Fulton County. Eight children resulted from this union, namely: Luella, deceased; George W.; Bertha (Mrs. William Owen); Willie Harry died in infancy; Alta, wife of R. C. Webster; Jeremiah and Warren.

In politics Mr. Wolfe is a Democrat, and is prominent and influential in local campaigns. He served as School Director for thirty-five years. He held the office of Supervisor of Orion Township for twelve years, and that of Canton Township for eight years, twenty years in all. From 1882 to 1886 he held the office of County Treasurer of Fulton County. In all these positions he maintained a high reputation for ability, integrity and fidelity to his trust. His religious belief is that of the Methodist Church. In fraternal circles he is identified with the Modern Woodmen and the Mutual Aid. Personally he is one of the most popular men in Fulton County.

WOOD, Joseph R., the junior member of the firm of Wood & Son, furniture dealers and funeral directors, of Ipava, was born in the city which now is his home, March 30, 1868, a son of Oliver and Sarah (Farquhar) Wood, a resume of whose lives is to be found in another section of this work. Joseph R. was educated in the public schools of Ipava, and after graduating from the high school spent a year in Colorado, returning therefrom and going to work in his father's saw mill. At the age of eighteen he entered the Springfield Business College, from which he graduated in 1888, and with this excellent equipment returned to Ipava and became the partner of his father in the furniture and undertaking business.

The firm of Wood & Son have one of the best equipped enterprises of its kind in Fulton County, and carry a large line of funeral necessities, as well as various grades of furniture, wall paper, window shades, linoleum, carpets and rugs. In 1905 the capacity of the concern was increased by the erection of a fine business block on Main Street, the roominess of which permits a tempting display of goods and a subsequent enlargement of stock, should trade require it. The patrons of the establishment meet with every courtesy recognized in the business world, and the utmost skill is assured in the profession of caring for the departed members of the community. For the management of this department Joseph R. Wood is particularly adapted, having experience, sympathy, tact and discretion. He attended the National School of Embalming at Quincy, Ill., and has taken several post-graduate courses to further perfect himself in his calling.

Mr. Wood established a home of his own November 20, 1892, marrying Irma Edith Marshall, a native of Bernadotte Township, and daughter of Carl Marshall, one of the well known farmers of Fulton County. Mrs. Wood is a woman of many accomplishments and personal graces and a graduate of the Woman's Musical Institute of Jacksonville, Ill. She is the mother of one child, Olive Marshall, born October 6, 1905. Mr. Wood is socially connected with the Knights of Pythias and politically is a Republican, having held the office of Town Clerk. He is one of the wide-awake and enterprising men of the community, and enjoys the respect and confidence of his business associates.

WOOD, S. P.—In the less extensive and populous towns and villages of a State, the Postmaster is very likely to be brought into contact with a greater number of the inhabitants and at more frequent intervals than any other member of the community. Few are the individual residents of either sex who do not become familiar with his presence and deportment and cognizant of his habits and characteristics, and there are likewise few, on the other hand, even to the older children, whom he has not learned to know. With such an intimate relationship existing between the man conducting the post-office and the townspeople depending on it fortunate and thrice happy is the incumbent of that office when all the men, women and youth of the place have for him only words of commendation. Such is the favored position of S. P. Wood, the efficient and popular Postmaster of Farmington, Fulton County, who is the possessor of those qualities of candor, sincerity, faithfulness and affability which give the best class of public officials a high standing in the estimation of those whose interests are intrusted to their care.

The subject of this sketch is a native of Elmwood, Ill., where he was born in 1861, a son of W. M. and Hester (Prosser) Wood, the former a native of New York State and the latter of Ohio. Mr. Wood's father established his home in Illinois in 1853 and his mother brought to the State by her parents when she was but two years old. The early mental training of their son, S. P., was obtained in the public schools of Elmwood, where he grew to manhood, learning the trade of a printer during his youth. From the time when he arrived at years of maturity he has been identified with the newspaper business, in which he has acquired an enviable reputation in his section of the State. For two and a half years before taking up his residence in Farmington he conducted the "Elmwood Gazette," in connection with which he made a successful record. In 1883 he located in Farmington and bought out the "Farmington Bugle," which had been for two years the property of and under the management of James J. Wilson. Of this paper a sprightly, entertaining and reliable sheet, which has a circulation of 900 copies, Mr. Wood is still the owner, publisher and editor. Together with the publication of the "Bugle" he operates a plant thoroughly equipped with appliances for all kinds of job printing, in which line he enjoys a good patronage.

In 1887 the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Lora Lobaugh, who was born in Elmwood, Ill., and there received her youthful mental culture. Mr. and Mrs. Wood are the parents of four children, as follows: Harlan, who is sixteen years old; Edgar, fifteen years; Arthur, thirteen years, and Donald, eleven years. In politics Mr. Wood is identified with the Republican party, in the local councils and campaigns of which he has long been an influential factor. He has held the office of Town Clerk for two terms, discharging the duties of each position to the entire satisfaction of his constituents. In 1898 he was appointed Postmaster of Farmington by President McKinley, and his continuous conduct of that office up to the present time has met with the approval of the community. Fraternally Mr. Wood is affiliated with the I. O. O. F.

WOODCOCK, Wallace, a prominent and successful farmer on Section 26, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born near Belvoir Castle, Town of Strathorn, Leicestershire, England, August 25, 1852, a son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Oglesby) Woodcock, natives of the same place, the former born January 4, 1822, and the latter in 1829. The paternal grandparents were Thomas and Elizabeth (Hornbuckle) Woodcock, who were also born in Leicestershire. Thomas Woodcock, the father of Wallace, married Elizabeth Oglesby, in their native country and in 1854, with their son, then two years old, they came to Fulton County, Ill., locating in Canton, where they remained until 1860, when Mr. Woodcock purchased a farm in Section 3, Buckheart Township, Fulton County, upon which he settled. In 1865, he bought another farm in Section 26, in the same township, where he established his permanent home. His first purchase consisted of eighty acres. To this he added from time to time, until he had acquired 400 acres. On this place he carried on farming until the time of his death, March 11, 1887. His wife survived him nearly two years, dying February 2, 1889. They were the parents of eight children, as follows: Wallace; Thomas A., a farmer in Buckheart Township, born December 31, 1861; Edward, born October 3, 1863; Emma, deceased wife of Harvey Crosthwaite; Isaac, born March 11, 1867; Sarah Ann, born April 15, 1869, died September 25, 1887; Richard, born August 28, 1871; and Charles, born October 8, 1875.

The subject of this sketch was reared on the parental farm, in the meantime, receiving his early mental training in the district schools. After his marriage, Mr. Woodcock lived on the old home farm until 1904, when he moved to his present place on Section 26, Buckheart Township. In addition to general farming, he is a breeder of Shropshire sheep and standard-grade horses and cattle. Mr. Woodcock became a resident of the township when Fulton County was but thinly peopled, the land being then in a wild condition with few improvements, and the glowing future was hidden behind many years of hardship, privation and toilsome struggling. Since he has been identified with the growth and development of the country, and is now—solely through his own industry, energy, perseverance and integrity—one of its prominent and prosperous citizens.

On May 19, 1892, Mr. Woodcock was united in marriage with Tillie Sinate, and their union resulted in two children: Elizabeth, born May 21, 1893, and who is with her father; and Raymond, who died in infancy. Their mother died December 12, 1894. On December 31, 1896, Mr. Woodcock was joined in wedlock with Mrs. Anna McKee, a daughter of James and Nancy Childs, natives of England, who came to the United States in 1885. By her first marriage, Mrs. Woodcock had two children, Milton and Christopher McKee. Her union with Mr. Woodcock resulted in four children, two of whom died in infancy. Those surviving are: Wallace O., born August 2, 1897; and Adelaide, born May 2, 1904.

WOODS, Charles Allen, a rising young farmer of Avon, Union Township, Fulton County, Ill., in the early stages of whose farming operations is clearly manifest the promise of a prosperous development, was born in the vicinity of Avon, Fulton County, October 28, 1875, a son of George and Sarah Woods, natives respectively, of New York and England, a portrayal of whose lives appears elsewhere in these pages, and may be profitably referred to in connection with this personal record. George Woods being a farmer and stock-raiser by occupation, his son, Charles, was naturally reared on the home place, where he remained during the period of his minority. He was the youngest of a family of five children, as follows: Mary, Flora, Lara, Jennie, and Charles A.

In boyhood, Charles Allen Woods attended the district schools in the vicinity of his father's farm, and afterwards studied for a time in the high school in Avon, meanwhile assisting in the routine of farm work. On attaining his majority, he applied himself to his chosen pursuit, and is now the owner of 205 acres of highly productive land. In addition to general farming he devotes much time to the raising of stock, and his efforts thus far have been rewarded with satisfactory results.

On December 31, 1896, Mr. Woods was united in marriage with Addie Thompson, who was born at Fort Madison, Iowa, February 16, 1874.

Their marriage took place at Galesburg, Knox County, Ill. Two children have hallowed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Woods, namely: Fern Lenore, born October 14, 1900; and Gleaphyra Leila, born March 3, 1902.

In his political relations Mr. Woods supports the measures of the Republican party. His religious views are in accordance with the creed of the Universalist denomination, and in fraternal circles is identified with the A. F. & A. M. He is an intelligent, upright, and useful member of the community, an energetic and progressive farmer, and within the range of his acquaintance, are many whose cordial friendship he enjoys.

WOODS, Franklin R., who is among the most energetic and substantial representatives of the farming element in Fulton County, Ill., and whose productive acres are situated in Section 36, Lewistown Township, was born in the city of Lewistown, Ill., June 19, 1853, the son of John M. and Susanna (Myers) Woods, of Licking County, Ohio, natives of Boston, Mass., and Lewistown, Ill., respectively. Grandfather Woods, whose home was in the Eastern States, was lost at sea. John M. Woods was born February 14, 1819, and at the age of fourteen years he came to Illinois, locating at Lewistown, on November 17, 1833. He was a carpenter by trade, and followed that occupation during his entire life. Many of the best appearing and most substantial buildings, scattered here and there throughout Fulton County, attest his skill and care as a builder. John M. Woods was joined in matrimony with Susanna Myers, in Lewistown, Ill., October 7, 1847, and nine children were born of this union: William, who is engaged in farming in Banner Township, Fulton County; John, who died in infancy; Mary, also deceased; Franklin R., the subject of this sketch; James E., a resident of Summerville, Ore.; Walter D., who carries on farming in Section 36, Lewistown Township; Sidney E., who died at the age of seven years; Charles C., a resident of Longmont, Colo.; and Ralph E., who follows farming in Lewistown Township. Mary was the wife of J. H. Dew, and bore him three children, namely: Ida, wife of F. A. Mowder, of Mason County, Ill.; James, who is a resident of Los Angeles, Cal.; and John, who lives in Mason County, Ill. John R. Woods was a man of genial temperament and amiable disposition. He had a pleasant and cheery word for every one, and wherever he went he carried sunshine. Although he suffered much, especially towards the end of his life, being afflicted with that dread disease, cancer, he endured his pain with Christian fortitude and resignation. His last words were: "The conflict is ended, I will soon be at rest." For thirty-three years, he was a devout and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and died as he had lived, strong in the faith, passing away October 20, 1903. His most worthy and estimable wife still survives, having reached the age of eighty-one years April 17, 1907. She makes her home with her children, and like her departed spouse, is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Franklin R. Woods, the subject of this sketch, in early life attended the district schools of his native county and the city schools, and for some time worked with his father at the carpenter's trade. For one year he was also employed as a teacher. Since then his attention has been devoted to farming. In Lewistown Township he purchased a farm which he sold five years afterwards, and bought the interest of the heirs in the Brown farm, on which he now lives. He is the owner of 128 acres of excellent land, sixty of which are located in Lewistown Township, and sixty-eight in Liverpool Township. He carries on general farming and raises a superior grade of stock. He is a thorough-going and diligent farmer, and his farm is a model of careful arrangement and intelligent method.

On October 6, 1880, Mr. Woods was united in marriage, in Lewistown, to Christina Brown, born August 7, 1860, a daughter of William W. and Angeline Brown, both natives of Licking County, Ohio, and early settlers of Fulton County. Mrs. Woods is now the mistress of the house which was her birthplace, her parents being deceased. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Woods has resulted in five children, namely: Temperance M., born June 24, 1883, who is the wife of John Gause, and her husband carries on farming in Liverpool Township; Jessie R., born April 17, 1885; Susanna A., born May 10, 1888; Debba L., born July 31, 1891; and Olie H., born February 27, 1901.

In politics Mr. Woods is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, but is liberal in his political views, and in local affairs, ordinarily votes for the best men. For thirteen years he has been a member of the Board of School Directors and takes a deep interest in the cause of education. He is also a strong advocate of temperance principles. Mr. Woods and his worthy helpmeet are zealous and active members of the Christian Church, in which he is Superintendent of the Sunday School. Both are highly esteemed throughout the community.

WOODS, George (deceased).—Many causes contribute to the almost invariable interest surrounding the first actual settler in any community. As the years lend distance and romance to his arrival, the honor becomes a coveted one, more especially if the settlement has utilized its most enlightening opportunities, and become the abode of peaceful and prosperous humanity. All who knew him eventually must join the vanishing cavalcade, and unless a knowledge of him is transmitted through history, the haze of uncertainty must gather about his name. So unmerited a fate can never befall that zealous pioneer, Asa Woods, who, in the early part of his life, occupied a well worn farm in Madison County, N. Y., and there married Mary Wilford, a native of New Haven, Conn. Eight children were born of this union, five sons and three daughters, of whom three sons—John, Ira and George—are enrolled among the most substantial and helpful element that Fulton County has known.

A strong pioneering inclination led Asa Woods to dispose of his New York farm and equip himself for the long journey overland to Illinois. Starting out with two wagons and teams, and such necessities as were required of food and clothing for several weeks on the road, he set out with his family in the summer of 1836, stopping at night at wayside homes and cooking their meals over crude, kitchen fires. Days lengthened into weeks; experience followed experience; and the worn wayfarers at last arrived in what is now Union Township, Fulton County, in August, 1836. Asa Woods' twin brother, Ira, had come with his family to Fulton County a year earlier (1835), and they were living in a comfortable log house, which was shared with Asa's family until a new frame house was built. Asa purchased 160 acres of Government land a half mile distant from where the village of Avon was subsequently laid out on another Woods tract. In honor of these first arrivals the original hamlet was called Woodville, but was later changed to Woodstock, and still later an unappreciative and unsentimental Postoffice Department supplied the name of Avon. Mr. Woods survived the hardships of pioneer life for twenty-one years, his lamented death occurring about 1855, a half century ago. His personal characteristics have faded somewhat in the minds of his children, but he is recalled as a man of strong character and steady purpose, characteristics which accompanied the majority of the early settlers from comfortable homes in the East to a region of which they knew little or nothing.

George Woods, the fourth son of the pioneer, was born in Madison County, N. Y., June 5, 1831, and was five years old when the family came to Fulton County. He attended the early subscription schools, and at an early age learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in Avon for fifteen years. He then disposed of a farm which he had bought as an investment, and after several years spent in farming and in the carpenter business in Kansas, he returned to Avon and again plied his trade there. Seven years later he located on a farm which he previously had purchased in Union Township, consisting of eighty-five acres, upon which he made improvements, and which continued to be his home until his retirement to Avon in 1898. In 1855 he married Sarah Parkins, a native of England, and of this union were born five children: Flora, Mary, Laura, Jennie and Charles A., of whom the first three are deceased. Mr. Woods was first a Whig and then a Republican, and while never an active politician, he served nine years as Commissioner of Union Township. Mr. Woods' death occurred at his home in Avon, March 13, 1907, and funeral services were held in the Universalist Church of that place on March 15, Rev. F. D. Adams officiating. During the more than seventy years spent in Fulton County he had witnessed a wonderful development, and an evening with him in his quiet, and comfortable home, resulted in the acquiring of a rare fund of information, concerning the lives of the courageous company who succeeded him in settlement, and grew to maturity in the environment of hard work and few diversions. The conscientiousness of well-doing, of using fairly his fellowmen, was one of the rewards which kept him company in the leisure of his evening days, and of the cherished remembrances of his descendants.

WOODS, Ira M.—The career of Ira M. Woods has conformed to the changes which have taken place in Illinois ever since his arrival in Union Township, Fulton County, in August, 1835. He then was seven months old, having been born in Madison County, N. Y., February 28, 1835. In the wilds of Illinois his school and general advantages were necessarily of the crudest kind, yet his surroundings and influences were such as to bring to the surface whatever of assertiveness and independence lay dormant in his nature. With the other members of his family he was the first to establish a residence in Union Township, and as one of its early pioneers, as a soldier during the Civil War and a holder of important township offices, he is entitled to permanent remembrance in the history of the county.

At the age of twenty-four years Mr. Woods purchased a farm of eighty acres in Warren County, later added forty acres to his original property, upon which he lived about fifteen years. He made many fine improvements and sold his land at a reasonable profit. He then bought eighty acres in Union Township, Fulton County, and in 1883 came to Avon, where he engaged in the meat market business for three years. He has a pleasant town home, purchased of James Gill, and in his retirement from active business has surrounded himself with many of the refinements and even luxuries of life.

The military record of Mr. Woods covered three years, during that time being a member of Company C and Company B, First Missouri Engineers. He participated in many of the important battles of the campaign, and since his retirement from camp and field, has been a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. His marriage occurred in Prairie City, Ill., the year after the close of the war, to Hannah A. Davey, daughter of Sylvester Davey, a native of Pennsylvania, and by trade a cabinet-maker. Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Woods: Fannie C., wife of A. Holmes; Alena, wife of H. Rose; Alta, deceased; Walter, Grace, Ray and Emma. Mr. Woods is a Republican of long standing, and in earlier years filled many offices, among them that of member of the Town Board. He is a representative of that sturdy element which has drawn its material and intellectual sustenance from the fertile prairies, and with them has attained maturity through splendid co-operation of awakening forces.

WOODS, J. A.—Of the men who own large country properties and superintend their management from comfortable town homes many are comparatively young in years, if old in accomplishment. To this class belongs J. A. Woods, who has a farm of 200 acres, 120 of which are in Greenbush Township, Warren County, and eighty acres in Union Township, Fulton County. A few months ago Mr. Woods abandoned rural life and bought of M. J. O'Donnell the home which he now occupies in Avon.

Mr. Woods represents a family established in Warren County, Ill., in 1835, by his father, Wilford Woods, who was born in Sullivan, Madison County, N. Y. In early life he came to Illinois where, in Greenbush Township, Warren County, he married Rhoda Butler, and with his wife located on the farm in Warren County which he now owns and occupies, and which at one time consisted of 600 acres. Much of this has been disposed of in earlier years, but the elder Woods is a prosperous farmer, and one of the most honored and successful of the hardy early arrivals in the State.

Born on the Warren County farm in March, 1864, J. A. Woods spent an uneventful youth, enjoying the usual educational and farming advantages that fall to the lot of the boys of his time and place. At Monmouth, Ill., in 1885, he was united in marriage to Dora Simmons, a native of Warren County, and daughter of Martin Simmons, an early settler in Warren County. To Mr. and Mrs. Woods have been born four children: Martin, Seldon, Lena and Nealy. Mr. Woods' activities and interests have not included politics, nor has he been identified with any church or fraternal organization. He leads a quiet, unobtrusive life, and the good that he accomplishes for those less fortunate than himself is known only to himself and the recipients of his bounty. He is an honorable and high-minded man, and is held in high esteem by all who are privileged to know him.

WOODS, John (deceased), was born in Sullivan, Madison County, N. Y., March 11, 1824, a son of Asa and Mary Wilford Woods, and one of a family of eight children—five sons and three daughters. Asa Woods, his wife and children, came to Illinois by wagon in 1836, arriving after a six weeks' journey near the present village of Avon, in North Fulton. John Woods received his schooling in the pioneer school-houses of those days, but in manhood and old age more than compensated for any inadequacies in his early educational advantages by an intelligent and earnest perusal of the best reading matter that came to his hand. When fourteen years old he entered upon an apprenticeship to the blacksmith's trade, which he followed for some time, but later engaged in the business of a farmer and stock-raiser, in which he was very successful.

August 6, 1848, John Woods was married to Lucy A. Chatterton, a native of Virgil, Cortland County, N. Y. Her people arrived in Illinois in 1832. To Mr. and Mrs. Woods were born the following named children: Addie, now residing in Avon, Fulton County, Ill.; Lewis Seldon, who died May 13, 1881; Mary L., the wife of J. H. Ross, who died June 1, 1894; and Frank C., who resides at Avon, Ill. For nearly forty years Mr. Woods resided on his farm in Greenbush Township, Warren County, but in 1889 removed to Avon, where he made his home until the time of his death, August 4, 1894. Mrs. Woods died March 29, 1898. In common with the rest of his family, Mr. Woods was a Universalist in religious faith, and the lot on which the Universalist Church in Avon is built was his gift to the cause he esteemed so much. In politics he was a Republican.

WOODS, Walter D., who is successfully engaged in farming in Section 36, Lewistown Township, Fulton County, Ill., was born in the city of Lewistown, Fulton County, November 2, 1858. He is a son of John M. and Susanna (Myers) Woods, the former a native of Boston, Mass., and the latter, of Lewistown, Fulton County. John M. Woods was born February 14, 1819. At the age of fourteen years he made his way westward, and located in Lewistown November 17, 1833. He was a carpenter by occupation, and erected many of the best buildings in different parts of Fulton County, which are still standing as monuments of his skill at his trade. He wedded Susanna Myers, in Lewistown, October 7, 1847. Their children were as follows: William; John, who died in infancy; Mary, deceased; Franklin R.; James E.; Walter D.; Sidney E., who died at the age of seven years; Charles C. and Ralph E. The father of this family was a very cheerful and amiable man, and had hosts of friends. Even during the sufferings of his final sickness, which was caused by cancer, he maintained a sweet and lovable disposition, and endured the pain that racked his body with the tranquil resignation of a devoted follower of Christ. He was a zealous and beloved member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He died, as he had lived, with unflinching faith in his Saviour, passing away October 20, 1903, at the age of seventy-nine years. The life companion of his joys and sorrows is still living, and shares the home of her son, Franklin R. She is a devoted member of the same church to which her departed husband belonged.

Walter D. Woods received his early education in the district schools and was reared on a farm. At the age of fourteen years, he began to make his own way in the world, and for some years worked by the month at farming. He then rented land, which he farmed until he acquired property of his own. This occurred in July, 1902, when he purchased 128 acres, sixty of which lie in Lewistown Township and sixty-eight in Liverpool Township. On this place, besides carrying on general farming, he raises horses, cattle and hogs, of high grades. He is a careful, systematic and enterprising farmer, and meets with merited success. Fulton County has always been his home, and he has been a witness of great changes in its condition since his childhood.

On July 2, 1882, Mr. Woods was united in marriage with Lucy Harper, a daughter of Wesley and Harriet (Hill) Harper, the former a resident of Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Woods became the parents of eleven children, of whom ten are still living, as follows: Charles E., who is engaged in farming in Liverpool Township; and, John W., Porter H., Bessie L., Harley F., Creston, Myron, Hattie L., Gerald A., and Clyde M., who are members of the family household. Walter C., the third child, died in infancy. The mother of this family was born January 14, 1862. The dates of birth of her ten surviving children, as above mentioned, are: Charles, June 9, 1883; John, April 14, 1885; Porter, November 3, 1887; Bessie, February 13, 1890; Harley, February 19, 1892; Creston, February 12, 1894; Myron, June 26, 1896; Hattie, September 12, 1899; Gerald, February 27, 1902; and Clyde, June 27, 1904.

In politics Mr. Woods is a strong Prohibitionist, advocating the total suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. He and his worthy wife have been, for years, members of the Christian Church, and are zealous and active in promoting the spread of the Gospel and the conversion of sinners. To this cause both contribute liberally of their time and means. Mr. Woods has been a teacher in the Sunday School, and has served as its Superintendent, and is constant, in season and out of season, in his Master's work. As a citizen, he takes an active part in all enterprises undertaken for the welfare of the community.

WRIGHT, John M. (deceased), one of the earliest pioneer residents of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Hanover, N. H., January 21, 1816. He was a son of Royal and Diantha Wright, natives of that place. In youth Mr. Wright received his education in the district schools of his neighborhood in New Hampshire, and in 1835, journeyed to Illinois. In that year he settled at Canton and engaged in farming, in which he continued successfully for many years, or until his death. He was a man of the utmost purity of character and enjoyed the implicit confidence and unfeigned respect of all with whom he came in contact in business and social relations.

On June 7, 1837, Mr. Wright was united in marriage with Catherine Hart, who was born in Goshen, Conn., on April 15, 1815. The nine children resulting from this union were as follows: Royal; Chester and James, deceased;

Julia; Charles; Asher; John; Frank and Frederick.

In politics Mr. Wright was a Republican. Religiously he was a Congregationalist and one of the earliest members of that denomination in Fulton County. He was a Deacon in the Canton Congregational Church, and his father was known as "Deacon Royal Wright, of Hanover, New Hampshire." The subject of this review departed this life on the 27th of December, 1858, universally respected and deeply mourned.

WRIGHT, Nathaniel Stephen, for many years one of the most prominent, successful and highly esteemed merchants of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., of which he is one of the oldest citizens, was born in that city, December 13, 1835, and received his early education in its private schools. He is a son of Joel and Emily (Phelps) Wright, of whom the former was born in Hanover, N. H., October 10, 1892, and the latter in Palmyra, N. Y., October 5, 1798. The paternal grandparents were Nathaniel and Mary (Page) Wright, the former having been born in Hanover, N. H., in March, 1747; and the great-grandparents were Nathaniel and Irena (Sprague) Wright, the former born in Coventry, Conn., January 27, 1711. On the maternal side, the grandparents were Stephen and Lois (Day) Phelps, the former a native of Westfield, Mass., where he was born in 1768, and the latter born in Palmyra, N. Y., in 1777. Luke and Ann (Freeman) Phelps, the maternal great-grandparents, were natives of Westfield, Mass., where the former was born in 1730. John Wright, of Knight's Bridge, London, England, the first of the Wright family of whom there is any record, lived in the seventeenth century. Samuel Wright was the first of the family to come to America, settling in Massachusetts in 1630. The Phelps family is traceable to the year 1520. George and William Phelps came to America from England in 1630, landing at Hull, Mass., on May 30th, of that year.

Joel Wright, father of Nathaniel S., journeyed from Hanover, N. H., to Illinois in 1818, while the region was still a territory. He rode a bay horse, crossing the Ohio River at Cincinnati, and recrossing at Shawneetown, Ill. For several years he lived at Vandalia and Edwardsville, this State, working during the winters in the land office. He was elected Sheriff of Montgomery County, Ill., in 1821. In 1825 he went to the lead mines about Galena, Ill., where he remained until 1828, and then located at Canton. In 1830 he was elected to the Illinois State Senate, the Senatorial district then comprising all the territory north of the Illinois River. He was appointed Postmaster in 1832, and again in 1849, and was a very prominent man of that period.

In 1830, Joel Wright opened a general store in Canton. His first stock of merchandise was shipped on the steamboat "Fairy," which struck a snag near the mouth of the Missouri River and sank, carrying her cargo to the bottom, but the goods were recovered in a much damaged condition. During the Black Hawk War, in 1832, his store and house were stockaded for protection against the Indians. In 1837, although not of the dominant party, he was appointed one of the three (afterwards increased to five) Commissioners of Internal Improvement, discharging the duties of this office with signal ability and unselfish devotion to the interests of the State.

N. S. Wright conducted a general store from 1855 to 1868 with much success. He was afterwards equally successful in dealing in real estate until 1880, when he resumed merchandising. In this he continued until 1903, when he retired from active effort. He is largely identified with the public enterprises of Canton, being especially prominent as the originator and promoter of the Water Works.

On May 27, 1874, Mr. Wright was united in marriage with Laura Kelley, who was born in Lewistown, Ill., and received her mental culture in the schools of that place and in Galesburg and Rockford. Five children resulted from this union, namely: Alice, William Kelley, Charles Henry, Arthur Stephenson and John Stephen.

In politics Mr. Wright is a Republican. Religiously he is a member of the Congregational Church. He is a man of the most upright character and an exceptionally pure life. In his long, busy and useful career he has borne himself so worthily, that the gracious benediction "well done, thou good and faithful servant!" will be his constant solace until the end.

WYCKOFF, John Theodore, one of the leading citizens of Fairview, Fulton County, Ill., and formerly a successful farmer in the vicinity of that town, was born in Joshua Township, Fulton County, March 5, 1863, a son of Joseph and Elizabeth B. Wyckoff, natives of New Jersey. Joseph Wyckoff followed farming for a number of years, but devoted the latter portion of his life to milling. He accompanied his parents to Fulton County about the year 1850, and was married in Joshua Township in 1856. Having bought, in company with his father, 128 acres of land, he improved it, carried on farming there for three or four years, and then moved to another place west of the original purchase, where he remained for the same length of time. Ultimately the family owned about 500 acres. In 1866 Joseph Wyckoff traded his farm for a mill in Fairview, which he rebuilt and operated ten years. He was then occupied for five years in carrying the mail to Norris, Ill., and also kept a store. Resuming farming, he continued in that pursuit until he engaged in the implement trade, with which he was identified during the remainder of his life, dying in 1888.

John T. Wyckoff attended the Fairview schools in boyhood, and passed his youth on the paternal farm. On reaching manhood he applied himself to farming for a while, and subsequently spent three years in the hotel business in Fairview. He then undertook farming again on the "Cox place," just south of that town, but later bought eighty acres of land of Nelson Brown in Section 4, Joshua Township, one mile south of Fairview. There he was engaged in general farming and stock-raising for some years, when he established his residence in his present location.

In October, 1903, Mr. Wyckoff was united in marriage at Fairview with Harriet Emily Fields, who was born in New Jersey, a daughter of Richard and Nancy (Oller) Fields, natives of that State. Her parents came to Fulton County, where her father was engaged in farming.

Mr. Wyckoff is now serving his second term as a member of the Town Board of Fairview. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., I. O. O. F. and M. W. A. His religious connection is with the Reformed Church. He is a man of absolute integrity and commendable public spirit and maintains a high standing in the community.

YEOMAN, Peter, the well known and popular proprietor of a flourishing livery concern in Avon, Fulton County, Ill., is a native of the State of New Jersey, where he was born in 1851. The birthplace of his parents, Isaac and Sarah (Bush) Yeoman, was also New Jersey. His parents moved to Illinois in 1870, and settled in Fulton County, where the father, who was a farmer by occupation, followed his wonted vocation.

Peter Yeoman received the mental training of his boyhood in the public schools of Avon, and was reared to a farmer's life. For several years after reaching maturity, he was engaged in farming, and afterwards in dealing in horses. He is an expert in the latter line, and his operations were attended by profitable results. In 1892 Mr. Yeoman entered the hotel business in Avon, and successfully conducted the Yeoman's Hotel until 1894. In 1897, he bought out the R. Bottman livery establishment, which he has since conducted. The barn and livery accommodations of this concern have been familiar to the people of Avon since 1855. Mr. Yeoman has in use about twelve horses, and attends to all sorts of livery requirements. Besides this occupation, he has forty acres of land lying just east of the town of Avon, on which he carries on farming.

In 1877, the subject of this sketch was united in marriage with Ida Curtis, who was born in Fulton County, and there, in girlhood, enjoyed the advantages of the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Yeoman became the parents of two children, namely: Walter and Mahala. Mr. Yeoman is credited with good business capacity, and devotes himself to the details of his latest enterprise with energy and close application.

YOUNG, Charles.—An instance of a man starting out in life with few visible assets, and through wise disposal of his opportunities transforming his condition into one of more than ordinary prosperity and influence, is found in the rise of Charles Young, a resident of Ellisville Township since 1855, and at present the owner of 630 acres of finely improved country property and a valuable home in the town of Ellisville, in which he lives retired. Mr. Young is one of the six children of John and Anna (Kenton) Young, natives of Pennsylvania, in which State he was born in Allegheny County in April, 1828.

In his youth Mr. Young experienced much of hardship and little in the way of advantages as they are enjoyed by the country lad of the present day. During the long Pennsylvania winters he interspersed work around the farm with attendance at the district school, and thus acquired the taste for knowledge which has led him to devote much of his mature leisure to reading. When he came west in 1855 he had twenty-seven years to his credit, a stout constitution and abundant faith in his ability to succeed. While working for various farmers in Fulton County he broadened his agricultural and general information, laid by what he could conveniently spare of his earnings, and at Prairie City, Ill., in 1859, was united in marriage to Mary Jane Speer, also a native of the Quaker State. During the first year of the Civil War Mr. Young became a landowner, purchasing 100 acres on Section 18, Ellisville Township, which he devoted to general farming and stock-raising, and to which he added as his land yielded ample returns for his labor. His home, his general improvements, his methods and everything pertaining to his life industry were made to conform to the best known standards, and his high-grade cattle, Poland-China hogs and blooded horses for many years sustained a reputation all through Fulton County. In less than thirty years the nucleus of 100 acres had been increased to 630, and during the latter '90s the fortunate owner laid aside his implements of labor, having divided his farm among his three sons, erected a home for each and given each a start in life which, in the poverty of his own cheerless youth, would have seemed princely and beyond compare. His oldest son, Thomas F., has abandoned farming for mercantile pursuits, now being a successful lumberman of Abingdon, Ill. Those occupying the home place are John A., George K. and C. C.

In religion Mr. Young has been active in the United Brethren Church for many years. His career emphasizes the worth of perseverance, good judgment, wise investment and economy, of careful development of children in ways of obedience, gratitude and painstaking methods, and of cheerfulness in labor, combined with looking on the bright side of things, and expecting the best that the time and occupation affords.

YOUNG, H. D., who officiates with marked acceptability as Postmaster of the town of Piatt, Fulton County, Ill., of which place he has been a prominent and highly respected citizen for many years, was born in Pennsylvania in 1856, a son of Lewis and Rachael (Pennington) Young, natives of that State. Lewis Young was a farmer by occupation, and successfully carried on farming throughout his life. The subject of this sketch was reared on the home place and in boyhood utilized the advantages afforded by the district schools in his neighborhood. In 1879 he began teaching school in Fulton County, but during the same year located in Piatt, where he engaged in contracting and building, and also followed the wood-working trade. This he continued until 1900, when he embarked in the agricultural implement line, in which he has been quite successful, building up a good trade. He is a business man of sound judgment and close application.

In 1884 Mr. Young was united in marriage with Mary Morris, who was born in Fulton County, and of this union there have been two children—Mabel and Lala. Their mother, a most worthy and estimable woman, departed this life February 28, 1902.

In politics Mr. Young has always adhered to the Republican party, and has had an influential voice in its local councils. He has served the public efficiently in various capacities, having held the office of Town Clerk for five terms, served one term as Justice of the Peace, and discharged the duties of Clerk of the School Board four years. For a period of eighteen years he acted as Notary Public. He was appointed Postmaster of Piatt by President McKinley, and has since then been the incumbent of that office, giving complete satisfaction. In fraternal circles Mr. Young is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., Loyal Americans and the M. W. A., in which he has officiated as Clerk for four years.

YOUNG, Thomas L.—A capacity for painstaking industry has transformed Thomas L. Young from an impecunious farm hand into the fortunate owner of a farm of 280 acres in Section 4, Banner Township. Those permitted to visit this hospitable home may profit largely thereby, as the owner is a man of excellent judgment and broad knowledge of the principles of agriculture. His home suggests peace and prosperity, his barns and outbuildings are ample for the storage of products and the housing of stock, and gardens, an orchard, well-built fences and minor accessories bespeak the man who expects much from life, and is willing to give the best in himself toward its acquisition.

Mr. Young was born January 17, 1833, and is the third oldest of the six children of John and Mary (Lomason) Young, formerly of Warren County, N. J. His boyhood was a busy one, and permitted little leisure for either pleasure or education. Arriving in Fulton County in 1858, he spent a year working by the month as a farm hand, after which he rented a farm in Mason County, Ill., until possessed of sufficient means to purchase his present farm. On January 17, 1867, he was united in marriage to Ellen Weaver, daughter of Jacob and Mary A. Weaver, Fulton County pioneers of 1839. To Mr. and Mrs. Young have been born the following children: Lenora, John, Mary, Judson, Abbie, Thomas and Jesse. Mr. Young is a Democrat in politics, and in religion a Methodist. He is a quiet, unassuming man, devoted to his family, his friends and the property which has so generously responded to his industry.

ZEIGLER, Willis Terry, M. D., a prominent and successful physician of Canton, Fulton County, Ill., was born in Cass Township, this county, October 30, 1867, and there in boyhood received his early education in the district schools. He is a son of Jacob and Sarah A. (Hinderleiter) Zeigler, natives, respectively, of Ohio and Illinois, and his parents are still living in the old home place in Cass Township.

Dr. Zeigler graduated in medicine from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, at Keokuk, Iowa, March 6, 1896, and began the practice of his profession on March 20th, of the same year. Since then his patronage has constantly increased, as has also the confidence of his patients and the general public in his ability and skill. Dr. Zeigler is a member of the American Medical Association, the Illinois State Medical Society and the Fulton County Medical Society.

On June 27, 1900, Dr. Zeigler was united in marriage with Ray Cecelia Snively, who was born in Bloomington, Ill., and pursued a course of study in the Canton (Ill.) High School. From this union one child, Robert Terry Zeigler, has resulted. On political issues, Dr. Zeigler is in full accord with the Republican party, and in November, 1904, was elected Coroner of Fulton County. In fraternal circles, the Doctor is identified with the A. F. & A. M. (Morning Star Lodge and Chapter of Canton), the B. P. O. E. and Fraternal Tribunes.

ZILCH, Adam.—During the interval between his arrival in Deerfield Township in 1856 and his retirement from active life in 1902, Adam Zilch rose from the position of a farm hand of seventeen, with a strong German accent, few clothes and no knowledge whatever of his adopted country, to the ownership of 500 acres of farm land, and town property in Canton valued at $15,000. He came of sterling farmer stock in the Fatherland, where he was born December 1, 1838, and where his parents, Philip and Catherine (Reiffert) Zilch, owned a small tract of land. Educated in the public schools, his youth was filled with many and hard tasks, and the necessity of industry was impressed upon his mind with unflinching insistence.

With his small earnings tied up in a handkerchief Mr. Zilch stepped from the gang-plank of a sailing vessel in New York in the summer of 1856, and at once came to Deerfield Township, where he secured work on a farm. Still following his principle of industry and saving, in 1859 he was able to become a land-owner, purchasing 120 acres in Section 17. Practical results soon made necessary the further acquisition of land, and he now owns 500 acres in Deerfield Township, besides a beautiful home valued at $15,000, in which he has lived retired with his family in Canton since 1902. His farm is one of the most valuable in the county, and its rental supplies a comfortable income for the enterprising owner.

In Deerfield Township, December 20, 1862, Mr. Zilch was united in marriage with Anna M. Myers, a native of Maryland, where she was born November 13, 1834. Mr. Zilch has served his township as Road Commissioner. His life has been an open and useful one, winning the regard and approval of his fellowmen, and emphasizing the importance of industry, thrift and integrity.

ZITTEL, Henry A.—In Henry A. Zittel, Deerfield Township has a young farmer who conforms his labor to high standards, and who is advancing to prosperity on the homely qualities of industry, good judgment and perseverance. Born on the farm which still is his home, May 10, 1864, he is the son of a prominent Fulton County pioneer, and all of his active life has been spent in the pursuit of agriculture. Educated in the public schools, and broadened by the various experiences which befall the youth of energy and ambition, his independent career began at the time of his marriage, February 22, 1893, to Minnie Shackelford, a native of Joshua Township, Fulton County, born May 28, 1866.

With his young wife Mr. Zittel settled on eighty acres of his father's farm, upon which he has made many of the improvements, including the erection of a residence, barns, outbuildings and fences, and which property he recently purchased. Notwithstanding his many home duties, he is active in general township affairs, is a stanch Democrat and prominent in the lodge of the Modern Woodmen of America. The family are members of the Christian Church, in the social circles of which the daughter, Ada B., is both popular and prominent. Mr. Zittel is an earnest, painstaking gentleman, and his integrity and general worth are appreciated by a wide circle of friends.

ZITTEL, John.—With his material assets wrapped in a small bundle, and his knowledge of English confined to the few phrases he had picked up from his fellow voyagers on board ship, John Zittel came to America at the age of twenty-two years to follow the carpenter trade in the city of Cincinnati. Notwithstanding his limited resources he had a large fund of practical common sense, and a fair education, derived in the common schools of Germany, where he was born in 1826. A few months after arriving in Cincinnati during the summer of 1848, he came to Ellisville, Fulton County, and there followed his trade for five years. He then turned his attention to agriculture, which had been the occupation of his forefathers for generations, buying forty acres of land in Fairview Township, which he grubbed and improved for general farming. This continued his home for eight years, when he purchased the eighty acres in Section 1, Deerfield Township, which formerly belonged to the J. Young estate, and there he now lives. Later on he purchased 100 acres of Mr. Dickson for $5,000. At the present time he owns 500 acres of land in Fulton County, all of which is managed by his sons, as for several years he has lived in retirement.

While still his financial fortunes were a matter of uncertain speculation, in 1855, Mr. Zittel established a home of his own by marrying Elizabeth Erb, who was born in Germany, and who is now the mother of four children: John, William, Henry, and Mary (Mrs. Taylor). Mr. Zittel's career furnishes encouragement and inspiration to the youth of the present who labor under limitations, and who must needs seek their independence in a strange land and among strange people. He has gained his wealth by the exercise of practical, every-day qualities, and by remembering always that a penny saved is a penny earned. The capacity for saving he has handed down to his children, and all are thrifty, industrious and capable members of a younger generation.

ZUMSTEIN, Ernest.—Unlike the average of his countrymen who seek the larger opportunities of the United States, Ernest Zumstein brought with him from Germany a small competence with which to establish his independent career. Born in Germany February 12, 1872, he was reared on the farm of his parents, Adam and Margaret (Schaefer) Zumstein, and in the public schools of the Fatherland received a practical education. Ambitious and resourceful, he left the family associations of centuries and crossing the Atlantic in 1895, came direct to Deerfield Township, where he purchased 220 acres of land in Section 12. This property, formerly owned by A. J. Shepley, was to some extent improved, but the present owner has added much by erecting a house, barn, granary and fences, besides supplying the most modern of agricultural machinery. He raises grain, hay and other products for home consumption, besides high-grade cattle, hogs and horses.

The marriage of Mr. Zumstein to his present wife, Lina L. Zumstein, occurred in New York City February 24, 1901. Mrs. Zumstein is a native of Germany, born January 7, 1870, and they have two sons—Henry and Elmer. Mr. Zumstein adheres to Republican principles, and fraternally is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America. In religion he is a Lutheran.

BIOGRAPHICAL

RILEY, William.—Between the time of his arrival in 1834 and his lamented death, February 7, 1873, William Riley was prominently identified with the history of Fulton County, adding to his already established reputation as a builder and contractor that of agriculturist and stock-raiser in Buckheart and Lewistown Townships. Of Scotch-Irish ancestry, Mr. Riley was born April 5, 1811, in the old Riley homestead on Cabin Creek, Lewis County, Ky., fifteen miles from Maysville. His father, William Riley, was born in Pennsylvania and died in Lewis County, Ky., in 1829, and his mother, Mary (McAlvain) Riley, died in Bryant, Ill.

Both the dwelling in which William Riley lived and the house in which he attended school were made of logs, and the benefits of the latter were obtained by Mr. Riley only after performing his share of labor on a small and not over-productive farm. Possessing marked mechanical ability, he shifted his energies from the farm to the carpenter's trade while still quite young and during the 'thirties came to St. Louis, Mo., with his brother, where he worked on the court house for three years. He also worked at building and contracting at Grand Gulf, Port Gibson, Vicksburg and Natchez, Miss., and other Southern towns, having to his credit many fine public buildings, stores and residences. In St. Louis, April 24, 1843, Mr. Riley was united in marriage to Mary Blair, who was born in Portsmouth, Va., a daughter of William A. and Mary (Bellamy) Blair, natives of Scotland and Ireland, respectively. Mr. Blair was married in Virginia and came to Illinois when Peoria was a trading post, settling near Kewanee, Henry County, where the remainder of his life was spent. He was the parent of eleven children, of whom but two survive. To Mr. and Mrs. Riley were born six children: Mary Eliza, wife of Samuel Laws, of Kirkwood, Ill., and mother of two sons; William A., whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; Evelyn and John Henry, both of whom died in infancy; Indiana, who died in August, 1903; and Joseph Henry, a farmer in Lewistown Township.

A Republican in politics, Mr. Riley never took an active interest in local political affairs as far as office-holding was concerned. Although his character as a whole has been modified by distance and deprived of the distinction of those nearer our ken, he is recalled by many now living as a man of splendid integrity, of great kindness and purity of heart, of devotion to his family and friends and loyalty and faithfulness to the duties and responsibilities of his life.

RAILWAY HISTORY.

IOWA CENTRAL RAILWAY.—The Peoria & Farmington Railroad, extending from Peoria to Keithsburg, Ill., on the Mississippi River, was completed in 1883 and immediately taken over by the Central Iowa (now the Iowa Central) Railway Company, by which, under various changes, it has since been operated. The Illinois portion of the line—between Keithsburg and Peoria—covers a distance of ninety-one miles, of which about fifteen miles are within the area of Fulton County, extending along the northern border of the county. The stations along the line within Fulton County territory are London Mills, on the northern border of Young Hickory Township; Rapatee and Middle Grove, in Fairview Township, and Farmington, in the northeastern corner of Farmington Township. The line enters Peoria County a mile and a half east of the city of Farmington.
