offices of the college as well as a lecture room fitted with all the necessary modern conveniences for scientific lecturing, and having a seating capacity of about two hundred. Friends of the library are very proud of its new home, and justly so, for all who have inspected the building pronounce it, from the Italian marble that lines the main memorial hall to the imposing dome that is seen above the loan desk, both as regards architectural beauty and practical arrangement, a magnificent building.

ENDOWMENT

The library has recently received from Consl C. A. Smith, of Minneapolis University, an endowment of $25,000, the interest of which is to be used exclusively for the purchase of books. This, together with other funds, will give the library about $2,000 annually for the purchase of books.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL POST LIBRARY

The Post library was founded in 1880, and now consists of about one thousand five hundred volumes. Its income for the purchase of books and periodicals is furnished partially by the Quartermaster's Department, U. S. Army, and partially by the detachment funds of the Ordnance Detachment, stationed at the Rock Island Arsenal. The library is for the use both of the officers and enlisted men at the Post and is very freely used. Twenty-four current periodicals and six daily papers are subscribed for.

CORDOVA PUBLIC LIBRARY

The library was first established in Cordova as a reading room in 1876.

The Cordova Public Library was founded in 1878, the tax for a public library having been first voted in April, 1878. The first board of directors, elected at the annual township election in March, 1879, were Dr. J. Hoke, E. N. Elton, Isaac Cool, Thomas Karr, Robert Johnson and Pratt Devoe. Mrs. G. W. Dean was the first librarian. The library occupies rented rooms and consists of 4,000 volumes. The members of the present board of directors are Dr. W. R. Freek, A. W. Mulley, Frank Zimmerman, W. F. Tew, Charles George, A. Benway. Dr. Freek has served on the board continuously since 1880, acting as secretary during that time with the exception of one year, when he was president of the board. Mrs. Matilda Mullery is the librarian.

DAWN OF CIVIL SOCIETY

Should I commence this article starting fifty years ago, I would begin at a time when events were maturing that marked a period forever to be remembered, not only in the history of this county but in that of the civilized world, events immediately preceding the Civil war, in which the people of the county of Rock Island took their part. To commence at such a period, would seem to be like rushing into the glare and brightness of the noonday sun without reference to the morning sunrise and the gradual approach of high noon. As a prelude to my article I wish to refer to the dawn of civil society in this part of the Mississippi Valley.

The most interesting period in any locality is that when the people first began to lay the foundation of civil society on the basic principles that underlie our Anglo-Saxon civilization. These efforts were usually rude in performance but permanent in results. Within the period of thirty years preceding the events of the Civil war the white man voluntarily became the neighbor of the Indian. The Sac and Fox Indians, who lived in this locality, did not appreciate this voluntary association. The Indian foresaw the loss of his hunting grounds. Then also began the final struggle for supremacy and permanent holding. The Indian lost and vacated. The white man won and remained. In this preceding period the settler was practically shut off from communication with the outside world, except by the slow movements of the lumbering stage coach, or by the Mississippi river, on which, during the latter part of this period, plied many commodious river steamers, famous for their jolly and daring captains and pilots, courageous under all circumstances. The levees of the river towns before the advent of the locomotive were crowded with steamers loading and unloading valuable cargoes, to meet the wants of the early settlers, the farmers of the county or the initial citizens of the infant towns and villages.

ARRIVAL OF THE LOCOMOTIVE

But in 1854 came the steam locomotive of the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad which first reached the county of Rock Island from the east. From that time the river steamers lost their precedence, eventually their supremacy was gone, the locomotive was leader. During this preceding period what shifts and struggles the farmers had to make to gather their crops,—for mowing machines, corn planters, reaping machines, and the high class of agricultural implements were scarce, and to the farmer financially burdened the possession of these valuable assistants were only anticipated then by the most optimistic, but neighbor was dependent upon neighbor, assistance service demanded and received like service in return. In this same period how scarce was money, gold and silver especially, gold found only in the vaults of banks to be obtained at a premium, currency issued from remote states or cities—the more remote the most profitable to the issuer—was the main source of supply, sometimes, like Jonah's gourd, the value thereof to perish in a night, money that was par at night was refused in the morning. The traveling citizen often found himself stranded on his way, the value of his money had silently taken wing. The commencement of our period of fifty years, however, found the citizen and the farmer a victor over many of these difficulties. Land values had increased, laborers and transportation facilities were more plentiful, people were optimistic. At the same time there was a foreboding of trouble.

SITUATION IN 1860

The year 1860 found the people of Rock Island county greatly interested and taking part in the political struggle then waging between the democratic party on the one hand, charged with pro-slavery affiliations, and the republican party on the other hand, which had succeeded in drawing to it all classes of men who were anti-slavery in their sentiments. At that period the county of Rock Island contained native Americans from all parts of the Union, those of the North predominating. It also contained citizens and non-citizens of foreign birth, many of the Scandinavian race. During the political agitation that followed the passage of the Kansas and Nebraska bill repealing the Missouri compromise, the county had been thoroughly stirred on the great issue of no more slave territory. In some of the townships the democratic party was in the lead, in others, the republican.

CITIES OF ROCK ISLAND AND MOLINE

At that time the city of Rock Island and the town (now city) of Moline were the principal, in fact, the largest municipalities in the county, and naturally became the centers of political activities. The city of Rock Island and town of Moline differed in a large measure in the character of their respective inhabitants. The city of Rock Island contained many persons of commanding influence from the South of strong pro-slavery opinions, rank opponents of the anti-slavery men derisively called abolitionists. While the difference in numbers was not so great between the pro and anti-slavery men, the intensity of their political feelings was very marked. The city of Rock Island was pro-slavery, the town of Moline anti-slavery. That there was not such great difference in the number of people on political issues is shown by the vote cast for Douglas, Bell and Breckenridge in 1860, 412, which would include the pro-slavery vote. The vote for Lincoln was 392, which was the anti-slavery vote of the city. The democratic party remained the dominant and leading political party in the city of Rock Island until about the year 1872, when at the presidential election of that year, the city gave 720 votes for Grant and 560 for Greeley. For several presidential elections after that time the difference in the city's vote on the presidential candidates was not very marked. In 1884 only fifty-one difference between Blaine and Cleveland, but since that time the city of Rock Island has generally been regarded as a republican city. The town of Moline (Moline was not a city until 1872) was acknowledged to be the center and leader of the anti-slavery people of Rock Island county.

The town (now city) of Moline contained among its early inhabitants many people of New England birth, possessing all of the characteristics of those people. Their positive, determined and radical spirit on all moral questions dominated the town for good. As New Englanders they were positively anti-slavery. On that issue they never compromised. During these anti-slavery days there lived in Moline a New England Congregational minister, of great talent, by the name of Calvin Hitchcock. In the anti-slavery cause the Reverend Hitchcock was a knight in steel armor. From his pulpit there thundered unceasingly from time to time the most positive, unyielding assaults on the system of slavery, as the sum of all villainies and a compromise with hell. Such a commanding character naturally strengthened the anti-slavery sentiment. The town also contained many men who were valuable helpers of the minister. I have not before me the actual vote of the town of Moline in 1860, but as I remember it, it was practically 4 to 1 in favor of Lincoln. I have before me the vote of Moline for Greeley and Grant in 1872, Greeley 279, Grant 692; in 1876, Tilden 235, Hayes 597. It will be seen from the large majority indicated by these figures, that the anti-slavery sentiment in the city of Moline lived long after the death of slavery by the sword.

The city of Moline at the beginning of the past half century was a pushing manufacturing town, and was incorporated in 1872 as a city under the general law for the organization of cities. The first structure that gave it a start as a manufacturing center was a stone and brush dam extending from the south bank of the Mississippi river to the Island of Rock Island, about on a line with the present bridge to the Island. Several mills were supplied with power by the waterpower created by this dam. The principal factory was the plow factory of John Deere, then in its infancy, consisting of a one-story frame blacksmith shop containing three blacksmith forges, two grindstones and other minor machinery and a two-story frame woodshop. From this small beginning has arisen the great plow establishments of Deere & Company and of the Moline Plow Company factories, that now hold such a commanding influence in this city. Other and great industrial concerns, too numerous to mention, have grown and flourished here, sending out to the states around and beyond, articles that for quality and utility have made the city famous as a manufacturing center.

POLITICS OF ROCK ISLAND COUNTY

Politics never were sluggish in Rock Island county, as evidenced by the great political gatherings of the dominant political parties during the several presidential elections up to the election of McKinley in 1896, the marching clubs with their torches and uniforms, the liberty pole with flag flying drawn by horses, wagons filled with beautiful girls representing the states, marching veterans of the Civil war, and other exhibitions. In the matter of marching political clubs, no clubs of after years excelled the marching Lincoln Wide Awakes of the campaign of 1860. These clubs, however, were not confined to the cities of Rock Island and Moline but also came from the country towns on horseback, or often on foot. The farmer boys were always willing and earnest in politics.

PATRIOTISM

I have not attempted to name the different men who have prominently figured in Rock Island county and helped to shape the character of the people. Time and space will not permit. During the past fifty years there have been many men who well deserve to live in the memory of the people. Their influence was for good. It lives after them. Not so with all men. Nor shall I enlarge on the patriotism of the people of Rock Island county during the struggles of the Civil war. The people met their obligations. Many noble men perished. At the close of the war many returned with broken health and shattered constitutions. The veterans of the war were soon swallowed up in the general citizenship of the county, eager to perform their civil duties. In honor of these brave men the county in after years reared to their memory the commanding marble monument now standing in Courthouse Square, Rock Island. Nor were the people of Rock Island county indifferent to the courage and sacrifices of the Confederate soldiers who were confined in the military prison on the Island of Rock Island. Many died in prison. At this day the cemetery of the Confederate dead bears evidence of respectful consideration by the Union soldier for his Confederate opponent.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL

The establishment of the Rock Island Arsenal, after the Civil war, on the Island of Rock Island, was a valuable industrial addition to the working forces of the county, especially to the working men of the cities of Davenport, Rock Island and Moline. Millions of money have been expended by the United States Government for permanent improvements on the island and for wages to the workmen constantly engaged in the manufacture of military supplies. Especially was this true during the Spanish-American war, and must be true in all wars of the nation, although many pray that the day may soon come when the sword shall be beat into a plowshare.

FINANCIAL MATTERS

It is interesting to remember now how the people of the county did transact their business in the years of the '60's, and in the years of the '70's until 1878, when the resumption of specie payment by the Government became a fact.

After the end of the Civil war the people of Rock Island county, like the people in the rest of the states, had to rely for their money on the Government treasury note, fluctuating in value at times yet gradually, in the succeeding years, approaching the gold standard. We can scarcely realize today, when gold and silver is plentiful, how people did business without gold or silver change, no silver coinage; but the Government was equal to the emergency. The five, ten, twenty-five and fifty-cent postal note met the difficulty. Although people in the years immediately succeeding the war looked forward to the day when the bright silver and gold coin would be in evidence, and hoped for its coming, it was not until 1878 that the Rubicon was passed. The business man, farmer and laborer were then paid in good sterling money, if they wished it, yet so accustomed had the people become to the familiar greenback, that the gold was left in the bank to be asked for only when an urgent necessity demanded it. Not so, however, with the simple postal note. The people gladly dispensed with that, preferring the shining silver piece. But the ease with which the Government printed and circulated the greenback and the assurance and confidence that the people reposed in it as a thing of value, led many to hold and cherish dangerous ideas of finance. Many looked at the greenback as valuable in itself, forgetting that it acquired its value because of the ample and abundant Government security behind it. The greenback heresy died away as the precious metals as money once more became the companions of the people.

FARMERS OF ROCK ISLAND COUNTY

The farmers of the county of Rock Island during the past fifty years have only experienced in the same degree the same change that the farmers in other parts of the Union have under the same circumstances. There was nothing in the circumstances surrounding our farmers that led them into different or other channels of experience than passed through by the farmer generally. The beginning of our term of fifty years found little if any land in the hands of the Government for sale to the settler. The county of Rock Island had its large share of population in the persons of miners, mechanics, merchants and manufacturers. The coal fields in Coal Town, Coal Valley, Blossonburg and other parts of the county brought a large number of miners with their families to become permanent citizens of the county. The manufactories of Milan or Camden Mills, Moline and Rock Island brought together people of all classes and conditions, skilled and unskilled laborers, natives and foreigners. These business centers, especially Moline and Rock Island, constantly increased, affording the farmer lucrative markets for his products, the ever-increasing value of the cities reaching out to the financial uplift of the farms and vice versa. Rapidly on the lands the native prairie grass disappeared and in its place came the nutritious blue grass. As is usual in new countries the farmer's house and outbuildings were at first inexpensive as compared with those of later years, but increasing prosperity induced a change for the better. The farmhouses, barns, cornbins and granaries of the farmers of Rock Island county gradually improved in style and size. They compared favorably from year to year with the improvements on farms in other prosperous counties. The general aspect of the farms underwent some change. The rail fence, board fence and hedge fence each had its day with the farmer. The timber of the county, never in abundance, with its gradual exhaustion soon stopped the supply of the old-fashioned original zig-zag rail fence. Then came the osage orange fence, picturesque though sometimes ragged in appearance, running parallel with the six-inch board fence. The question of fencing was ever a serious question with the farmer. A good fence meant peaceable neighbors, while a poor fence often resulted in contention and profitless law suits. However, the barbwire came to his rescue, with its inexpensive character and ease of construction, and it was the practical means by which were ended the bickerings, complaints and contentions of other years, and materially lessened the business of the courts.

During the formative period in the settlement of all new countries, and especially in the laying out of farms, controversies will arise concerning the boundaries and drainage of lands, the laying out of roads and condemnation of land therefor, the building of division fences, the changing of water courses, the trespass of cattle and many other matters incident to a final adjustment of existing conditions in all these matters, and the farmers in this county had the usual experience. In a few localities, and only in a few, contentions were sharp and vicious, violence resulted, sometimes crime; but time, which is a great leveler and pacifier in all cases, made the crooked paths straight and the rough places plain. In looking back through the past years, how well we remember the trail of the lightning-rod seller, how earnestly and convincingly he sought to persuade the farmers of our county to assist Providence in the distribution of the lightning, the result, the farmer had his lightning-rod, and confidence in its protection was the reward of his investment, whether in fact protection was real or imaginary. But this lightning-rod experience was not confined to the farmers. The dwellers in city, town and village came under the same persuasive spell and learned the same lesson.

We look back on the past half century and remember the ever-increasing quality of the horses in the barn, the cattle in the field and the hogs in the pen. The springless lumber wagon, with its spine-racking jolt and the family carriage of the average farmer; but with increased land values and with good crops, the traveling facilities improved. The buggy, surrey and carriage supplemented for pleasure the jolting wagon. In later years, unwilling that the city dweller should enjoy the modern privileges of the telephone and the automobile, the farmer of Rock Island county finds himself now, by reason of these same inventions, within speaking distance of all his neighbors, and able to travel far into the territory of those not his neighbors. No one will deny but that the farmer of Rock Island county is the equal of the average farmer of the state, whether in energy, intelligence, religion or morals. The experience of the last fifty years cannot be duplicated. Men can be born only once, the experience of the early settler, unique and yet natural, can be enjoyed but not repeated.

LOCAL TRANSPORTATION

The convenience of the people in local transportation was first improved by the building of the street railway between Moline and Rock Island. When we view the present commodious, handsome cars now used on our streets in communication with Davenport and Moline, we remember the first quaint little street cars drawn by the mule with the tinkling bell, now replaced by the rushing electric motor car. But the little mule car was preceded by the two-horse omnibus or carriage.

As before stated the cities of Rock Island and Moline were the centers of political activities. The city of Rock Island in its early years, and especially in the years preceding the Civil war, had its burdens. During the years when business enterprises were seeking places to locate, the land surrounding the city was held in the grip of one of its citizens. The result was the city lost opportunities for business and expansion that never presented themselves again to the same degree. When business sites were needed they could not be bought. Yet in spite of these disadvantages the city prospered. The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway pushed its road further west, bridged the Mississippi river, and eventually it became a trunk line, with its connections reaching the Pacific ocean. Other railroads entered, the Western Union afterward, the Milwaukee & St. Paul, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Rockford, Rock Island & St. Louis, the Rock Island & Peoria, the Davenport, Rock Island & Northwestern. The entrance of these railroads brought the people of the county in communication with the North, South, East and West.

IMPROVEMENTS

The streets of Rock Island were first lighted by the oil lamp, following came the gas lamp, then the electric light on tall towers, and finally the brilliant arc light at the street crossings.

The law was first administered in the two-story brick building on the south side of the Courthouse Square, built in 1838, the scene of many bloodless struggles. Able judges and lawyers met and settled contentions when the parties could not. The old courthouse, after serving its purpose, was succeeded by the present beautiful edifice, the cornerstone of which was laid October 1, 1896.

GENERAL REVIEW

I cannot in this article enter further into detail concerning many interesting items of interest that crowd upon my memory. One of the most interesting was the removal of the head office of the fraternal order of the Modern Woodmen of America in 1897, which had been located in Fulton, Ill. Its removal to a larger and more convenient place was determined upon by the officers of the order after several years of legal contention and several occasions of violence, amounting almost to a riot. In September, 1897, the final transfer was made and the head office finally established in the city of Rock Island, where its records of over one million members is kept by a corps of officers and employees, several hundred in number.

It cannot be said that in the past fifty years the villages or towns of the county outside the cities of Rock Island and Moline have made great advances, but many of the men of the county who have made their mark among the people have come from the farms and farm villages, as we may term the country towns. The county of Rock Island has always felt the influence of the country, whenever they had the opportunity to express themselves on questions involving consideration of good order.

To write the recollections of fifty years at first blush would seem to be an easy task with the real facts and circumstances of the past as material for such recollections. But events crowd upon the memory with such resistless energy that they can only be slightly noted as they pass in review. The men and women of Rock Island county who have lived and flourished within its borders during the past half century have been noted for their thrift, energy, patriotism and good influence; may the ambition of the men and women of the next half century be to improve upon the example of the early settlers so as to encourage and strengthen future generations to continue to do what the forefathers have done with such signal success.

OLD SETTLERS' ASSOCIATION

ORGANIZATION

It was on January 10, 1896, that the Rock Island County Old Settlers' Association was organized with thirty-four charter members, the last of whom to pass to the beyond, last summer, was Hon. Chas. M. Osborn, one of the ablest members of our bar. Its object is to preserve the early traditions of the county's development; to impress upon our people the history of its settlement by those sturdy pioneers, and hold an annual festival to renew associations and conduct its affairs. In the felicitous language of Patrick Gregg, the first physician and surgeon to permanently locate in this county, and the first president of this society, in an address on Washington's birthday, at the association's first banquet, "In the early settlement of this county society, though sparse and widely scattered, was compact in intercourse; everybody knew every one and there existed a fraternal feeling rarely to be met with in more densely populated communities; soon the wave of emigration guided by Star of Empire rolled westward, wedging in between the old pioneers and diverging them more and more apart until they seldom met; and when they did it was like 'per chance a wandering bark doth sometimes meet a wandering sister on the main.' The proceedings of this evening augur a brighter future, give promise that at least annually hereafter the old settlers of Rock island county will have an opportunity to exchange congratulations and review the pleasant memories of days of Auld Lang Syne." The singing of that good old song by the entire assembly, generally led by former president A. M. Hubbard, now passed ninety-three summers, with sanctified spirit and deep feeling, may be heard as of yore closing, in each annual picnic.

EARLY HISTORY

It was in June, 1673, that Father Jacques Marquette and Louis Joliet with their missionary band of five others floated their frail craft over the rapids and thus were the first white persons to discover our county, and it is little wonder that they were in ecstasies over the promise of this locality, as they saw and contemplated its future. The early settlers who came by prairie schooner often with oxen, water craft, on foot, or horseback, to inhabit the territory of the Mississippi and Rock rivers hereabouts, were a sturdy yeomanry, much unlike most other early settlements, made by communities or colonies, as for instance Geneseo, by New Yorkers, and Weller, near Kewanee, by Yankees from Connecticut, Bishop Hill by Scandinavians, in the adjacent county of Henry; or the settlement of the great military tract just south and east of us between the Father of Waters and the Illinois river. Title to these latter lands were largely obtained on war bounty scrip; these settlers had been brought up under like environments. Our pioneers were more likened to the pathfinders that blazed the way to the locality of the old Indian village near the confluence of the above named streams, in pursuit of lands for the founding of American homes, to develop farms, towns, villages and cities. From nearly every state to the east and many from the south, a few from foreign climes, came in rapid succession after the land was opened for settlement.

TREATIES

It was shortly after the Louisiana purchase, that consisted of all the lands west of the Father of Waters for the United States, during Pres. Thomas Jefferson's administration, that William Henry Harrison, then governor of the territory of Indiana of which Illinois was a part and who afterward became president of the United States, made a treaty at St. Louis with representatives of the Fox and Sac Indian tribes by which fifty million acres of land were ceded by the Indians for a mere pittance. This included all north and west of the Illinois and Fox rivers, to the mouth of the Wisconsin near Prairie du Chien. Black Hawk was a native of the Indian village then of four thousand population, called Sinisee or Kabe Saukee (meaning Rock River Peninsula). No healthier or wholesomer place could be found anywhere than there. Of this the village of Sears is now a part. Chief Black Hawk repudiated this treaty and the tribesmen that signed this compact, contending that the northern and western limits of this grant was intended and represented to be at the mouth of Rock river and not the Wisconsin as written on the parchment. By the liberal use of fire-water this conscienceless bargain was consummated for the government, as have been too often charged by the untutored savages in their dealings with our officers in respect to their landed possessions and homes. The lands between the main channel of the Mississippi and Rock rivers west of Pleasant Valley it is said would have then satisfied Black Hawk and his people, but the settlers demanded rights to those lands by squatting thereon, although the government surveys were not made until 1829. These were the causes that largely brought on hostilities culminating in the Black Hawk war of 1831 and 1832.

As we view conditions now we cannot help but admire Black Hawk's business acumen and foresight. Why should not those who descended from a savage race have desired to hold their own fields, the resting place of their dead, and been willing to fight for their native homes; the same that now, in less than four score years, are supporting sixty thousand cultured people in affluence?

PICTURESQUENESS OF ROCK ISLAND COUNTY

The picturesqueness of this portion of our county is excelled by none in this valley. Here is seen the majesty of the Father of Waters coursing its way through the solid rocks that were cleft from their strata by ice, during the glacial period, for a distance of twenty miles, thus forming a more direct course over the rapids than its former channel by way of the Meredosia slough, and down Rock river valley, originally dividing near the upper part of Pleasant Valley at Carbon Cliff, forming an island south of the Tri-cities. No more attractive river may be found for hunting, fishing, boating, bathing, camping, developing power, or drinking purposes, its purity yet remaining unsullied. In the former courses of these magnificent stream branches, nature and the husbandmen have made to blossom many thousands of acres of alluvial swampy and boggy lands, as rich as the valley of the Nile. Between the present water courses and the bluffs, in an early day, were depressions, sloughs and lakes that are now about all reclaimed by immense ditches in these fertile bottoms, some extending for sixty miles along the Mississippi, forty miles along either side of the Rock, and ten miles on the Meredosia in this county, affording a superb variety of soils for agriculture.

The larger portion of the county is high table land originally well timbered, easily worked into material for buildings and fences, or, rolling prairies well watered, ideal for stock raising, giving our county a variety of soils in close proximity that make the raising of various crops, grasses, grains, vegetables and fruits easy. The early settlers on these lands usually sought a home near timber, for a windbreak, also because of the necessity for fuel, fencing and log houses. Running water for stock was looked for and where pure drinking water could be easily obtained from wells or springs. Some Rock Island prairie was utilized for agriculture, but it is not the best crop-producing ground or in the greatest demand now by any but scientific agriculturists. There was no modern machinery then as the steel plow did not come until John Deere, at Moline, made the shares and mold-boards from cast off saws from the lumber mills, in the late '40s; no mowing or harvesting machines; no corn planters or grain drills. This may give an idea of the troubles and hardships of the early farmers, not only here but everywhere. Circulating medium was mostly store pay-orders, for the goods necessary to get along with. A total crop failure has been unknown either to the Indian or Caucasian race hereabouts.

The finest gravel beds are found at the confluence of the Meredosia and Mississippi; while at Cordova, six miles southwest, where these water courses originally divided, may be found Niagara limestone under the bluffs that extend six miles further south to Port Byron, near to the surface; here merchantable white lime has been manufactured for seventy years; this strata of stone two miles further south at Rapids City dips under the soft coal measures, and a coal vein begins near the river and extends southwest across the county through Happy Hollow, Coal Town near Carbon Cliff (it was here the first discovery of marketable coal in the Northwest was made by Samuel Bowles in 1840), to Coal Valley and Sherrard, except across the early river channel of Pleasant Valley and Rock river bottom; some peat beds were here in the marshes. The high lands at Carbon Cliff possess clay of a superior quality for pottery ware, tile, fire and building brick, easy of access in abundance. On the island of Rock Island and southeast may be found Hamilton limestone that is commercially in great demand.

FORT ARMSTRONG

This site was the home of the untutored redmen that Black Hawk's followers prized so highly and looked with jealous eyes upon, when Fort Armstrong was built in 1816, from which date the white settlers began to encroach upon the Indian hunting grounds. Col. Geo. Davenport, an Indian trader, soon procured concessions of land from the Indians and the Government, and erected on the bank of the main channel, on this island, near the fort, a frame mansion where he lived until murdered by the "baudits of the prairie" July 4th, 1845. This old home was fast going to ruins when the Rock Island County Old Settler's Association restored it to nearly its former condition, in 1906, and now maintains the house and grounds upon Government property as a reminder of the earliest home development, marking for future time the first evidence of civilization hereabout. It may appear very strange to say that it was the thought of a stranger, Senator Ben. R. Tillman, of South Carolina, that suggested that it was an outrage to permit this old home to go to decay, while visiting the place in company with the writer and a delegation of local citizens, when on a lecturing tour at Moline. Our society was materially aided by the Misses Naomi L. and Catherine Davenport, largely contributing thereto. It was the birthplace of their father, George L. Davenport, the first white child born in the county, in 1817, and later of their nucle, Bailly Davenport, who was mayor of Rock Island.

FURTHER HISTORY

The county was organized from a part of Jo Daviess county by a referendum vote, in July, 1833, by the ballots of sixty-five citizens, at John Barrell's house, located near Hon. B. T. Cable's present residence in Rock Island. Soon the land holders under government patents began to plat and lay out ground for villages. Rapids City on the rapids had a waterpower site and was settled in 1833, plat filed in 1835; Farnhamsburg was settled in 1830 and also platted in July, 1835, by the county commissioner as Stephenson, now Rock Island; Hampton, its rival, was platted in 1834; Port Byron was settled in 1826, by Robert and Thomas Syms, who operated a wood-yard to supply steamboats, platted in 1836; Island City, now Rock Island Arsenal, in 1841, near the Moline lock; Sears, the same year; Cordova in 1837; Moline changed from Rock Island Mills in 1841, was platted in 1843; Lowell was platted in 1844 on Vandruff's Island; Illinois City was platted in 1843 as a boom town of great proportions extending to the river; Camden, now Milan, in 1843; Rockport, now Andalusia, in 1836; New Quebeck, near Foster, in 1837; Tippecanoe, a mile west of Rapids City, at the nearest point the river channel approaches to the mainland along this county, was platted in 1839, and died a "bornen"; Drury's Landing was platted in 1845. Those expectancies of cities were based on prospective water power and boat transportation facilities as a means to exchange commodities cheaply, with a soil for producing food stuffs nowhere surpassed. Here the early inhabitants worked in and out of season to get deepened the Mississippi channel for traffic by steamboats on the river from St. Louis to St. Paul, which, by recent acts of Congress, now assures a six-foot channel to be completed in the next decade, also, for a canal to connect the Great Lakes with these streams. This will soon be accomplished as the voters of Illinois authorized the spending of twenty million dollars to deepen the Desplaines river, thus making this connection to Chicago for the Hennepin Canal. It was in 1853 that Carbon Cliff, and Coal Valley in 1856, mining towns, as the names indicate, were started, and the Rock Island Railway came along to alter conditions, and since then our county has advanced by leaps and bounds, although no boom has ever penetrated this locality to thereby ruin it.

EAST MOLINE

The new city of East Moline and village of Silvis, make a compact urban population of villages and cities from Milan to Hampton and Carbon Cliff practically continuous from across Rock river around the bluff along the Mississippi back to Rock river. All are connected by an up-to-date street railway trolley system, propelled by electricity generated by the Moline water power, derived from a branch of the Mississippi river. The Bell Telephone company maintains exchanges in each of our three cities, caring for the talkativeness of its thousands of subscribers that are given unlimited service in this locality. The population of those cities and villages now number sixty thousand people, about six-sevenths of the whole county, an increase in the past decade of nearly thirty per cent, while the balance of the county has lost during the same period nearly fourteen per cent of its people as did every other county but ours, bordering on the river north from the mouth of the Illinois river in this heretofore mentioned ceded territory. These are the holdings that Black Hawk and his band were willing to battle for unto their death with our government to maintain as a heritage from their ancestors,—this they were so justly proud of.

SLAVERY

In the year 1829 a squatter entered upon land near where Forty-eighth street, Moline, intersects with the Mississippi, and built thereon two commodious log houses in which he kept seventy-five negro slaves. The ordinance passed by Congress in 1787, organizing the North West Territory specifically prohibited slavery and involuntary servitude and reads as follows: "There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes whereof the party shall be duly convicted." Notwithstanding the above seemingly clear fundamental law, the territory of Indiana, in 1807, passed an act concerning the introduction of negroes and mulattoes into this territory and continued by Illinois territory as its law: "It shall and may be lawful for any person, being the owner or possessor of any negroes or mulattoes of and above the age of fifteen years, and owing service or labor as slaves may bring them into this territory."

The constitution of the state of Illinois adopted in 1818 and approved by Congress, recognized this nefarious traffic, going so far as to permit even negro and mulatto children born in Illinois to remain in bondage until they were of legal age. In 1819 the first General Assembly of this state approved the above provision of our territorial law thus taken from Indiana, and our courts, in several opinions upheld property in human chattels, long after the state was organized. The above mentioned slave-driver found the atmosphere was made too warm for him and his property, by the early settlers; such they would not tolerate though labor was very scarce. Wisdom being the better part of valor, he decamped the next spring with his human chattels to the edification of our meager population.

Dr. John Emmerson, post surgeon at Fort Armstrong from 1834 to 1836, held Dred Scott, as a servant, at the barracks, later being transferred to Fort Snelling, then a part of the territory of Wisconsin. There Scott was married. Dr. Emmerson, in 1838, was assigned to the Jefferson Barracks and while returning, Eliza Scott was born before reaching the Missouri state line. The Scotts were sold at St. Louis to John A. F. Sanford, a citizen of New York who was haled into the local courts to liberate them. Later the controversy was aired in the United States Circuit Court, on writ of error; came to the Supreme Court, was reported in 19 Howard 691, where the able opinion of Chief Justice Roger Brooks Taney may be found holding against setting them free. This ruling was not received by the northern people with favor and stirred up discord throughout the land, and served to strikingly illustrate that courts are human agencies, largely swayed by individual feelings and associations, and that precedents are the guide posts, not coping with changing conditions, righteousness or simple justice.

TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION

Another provision of the ordinance of 1787, if carried out, would have dismembered Rock Island county, as the northern state line of the portion adjoining the Mississippi should be a line drawn west "through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan." Such line passes through the city of Moline, and by this the "upper end" of county would be in the state of Wisconsin, for which the territorial Legislature of Illinois, in January, 1818, petitioned to be the northern line, and the first bill introduced in Congress to establish the state of Illinois, April 7th, 1818, was so worded. By the efforts of a Pope, who was then territorial delegate in Congress from Illinois, the present northern line was established and our county became compact.

The county owes much to its early men and women with high moral principles. They were thoroughly honest, religious bigotry or racial clanishness was not tolerated by them. In the main they were industrious, of fair intellectual attainments, and they built fine churches, schools, homes, stores, shops, academies, colleges, hospitals and libraries. Clubs and fraternal societies are numerous. Public officials generally discharged their duties fearlessly and with intelligence, laws were scrupulously obeyed and public money judiciously expended.

Township organization was adopted in 1856 with fourteen townships and as many members of the county board. Now there are thirty-seven supervisors. This was a good educator for the citizens in the formative period, bringing the people close to the county government, but many now believe it has outlived its usefulness, and, like Moline and Rock Island, affairs should be directed by five commissioners, who shall devote their whole time; best efforts and energy, to the management of public affairs in order to obtain the best results in local self government.

OLD SETTLERS' ASSOCIATION'S MANY ACTIVITIES

The corner stone of the present splendid Court House was laid with proper dignity and ceremony by our Old Settlers' Association, October 1, 1896, Ben Goble, who located in what is now Moline in 1829, wielding the trowel. A marble tablet was erected on the inside west wall of the Court House, in 1899, on which are emblazoned in plain letters the name of the association's pioneers who located in this county previous to 1846, as a most enduring tribute to their worth, as a memorial by our association.

Each early autumn is held a re-union of the members and friends of the old settler's society, a veritable old style picnic, speaking, singing, instrumental music, story telling and visiting, with all catch-penny devices eliminated, and is looked forward to with much anticipation and thoroughly enjoyed. A chair is given each year to the oldest settler of the county present and much rivalry is displayed in this friendly contest and greatly enjoyed by the families and friends of the pioneers. To hold the office of president the person must have located in the county previous to 1846, his insignia of office being a gold headed cane on which is engraved the names of all the preceding presidents. The term is for one year. The present president, James A. Searle, of Zuma, located there on a farm with his parents in 1839. The secretary and treasurer, John H. Cleland, came to Edgington in 1840, also as a boy, and has kept its minutes for twenty years past. To summarize the officers of this association would be to name many of the prominent citizens of the county since its organization, suffice to say our association is composed of pioneers, all of whom came before 1846; old settlers, those who settled before 1864, and the descendants, and families of the pioneers and old settlers. The roll of membership consists of about 400 and unlike "the society 400," they meet as equals and enjoy a picnic dinner spread together, representative people of the county. Never has there been a schism or contention among its officers or members; they fully appreciate its benefits and strive to make the association a success. Long may it prosper is the will and wish of our citizens, whether they be new or old timers that enjoy the benefits that are innumerable from the effort of those who founded this county, its homes, its society, its institutions, and left an honorable heritage to those who have come after them to make their homes among the people that thus developed this community and county from a wilderness within the lifetime of many of its honored members.

SPEECH OF JAMES A. SEARLE

At an annual meeting of the Rock Island County Old Settlers' Association held on August 24, 1911, at the Watch Tower, a most interesting address was given by James A. Searle, which, as it deals with pioneer conditions in Rock Island county, is worthy a place in this article. Mr. Searle spoke as follows:

"The organization is fortunate in the time of our annual re-union as well as the place where we are wont to gather, these surroundings are historic. This point of eminence overlooks this splendid stream that I crossed at Cleveland's ferry in a prairie schooner, November 15, 1838, with my parents. They were soon housed in a log cabin stage relay station of my uncle's, Truman B. Gorton, located near Osborn along this stream, where was found fair running water, hardwood timber in plenty, and close by a splendid fertile prairie. With these environments, all that was necessary was to stir about and get American homes established as did those who came with an avowed purpose to stick. Many of the frontiersmen who squatted upon lands in those days were of a migratory disposition and kept constantly ahead of the real home-builders, the men and women who trudged from the East and South to make homes near the Father of Waters, so as to obtain the benefits of cheap water transportation for their products, and they builded better than they knew. My experience and knowledge of the early settlers who have at all times formed the nucleus of this association since it was organized over forty-five years ago, remind me that in many respects as now viewed, they were rugged and rough and uncouth, but they were a heroic, patriotic, conscientious, God-fearing people, ever ready to right a wrong or injury to themselves or fellow men. A high code of ethical honor pervaded those sturdy people. The latchstring was always on the outside, to furnish shelter to all wayfarers, and this confidence reposed in the stranger was rarely abused. Every neighbor was rated in the community, not as we bankers are prone to rate them now by their visible assets, but by the real character of each man or woman, and our judgment of their honesty was almost as unerring as are now business methods determined by our splendid financial institutions that are doing so much to build up the commerce of the country.

"Entertainments were of a varied order, from a horse race, barn and log raisings, to husking bees, fishing, hunting, and quilting bees, and violinists of a high order were numerous, your humble servant being such a disciple, and pleads guilty of tripping the light fantastic toe, the measures and time of the music being generally closely followed, though not professionally instructed as now.

"Early church organizations were numerous in each locality and the services were, I think, even better attended by those who generally came with ox teams and lumber wagons. These were truly meeting points where intellectuality predominated, and the Sunday school was an educator. The school system was of the subscription kind. The few text books used were good, and the goose quill was made into a very serviceable pen. Newspapers were scarce and brought the news quite tardily, but good books were plentiful and were read by a tallow dip near the open fireplace, in the long winter evenings, in almost all of the homes of the pioneers, who were ever ready to loan any book in their libraries, and in this way a circulating library was established of no mean proportions, the borrower invariably returning the book to the owner. In this way the pioneers became broad-minded and were placed in a position to grasp questions of a public nature. The pioneers traveled miles to hear campaign orators. Their convictions were more rigid than now.

"Farm work was laborious in field and home in early days. Well do I remember the wooden plow that stirred the virgin prairie, and caused the great natural grasses to die. Soon the cast-iron plow, then considered an advancement, came along with which to scratch the ground, propelled by the most strenuous exertions of the operator and the sturdy oxen. Our first steel plow was made from a cast-off saw brought from Grand Detour, invented by John Deere, as all know, who moved his shop to Moline in 1847, and this was a boon to farming and civilization. The seed corn was covered with a hoe, and the grass for hay mown with a scythe. The grain was threshed with flails, water was raised from wells with a sweep and fences built of rails split by hand. These difficulties have all been surmounted in our day. The inventive genius of the present generation has not a parallel."

CHAPTER XXVI

DESCRIPTION OF OUR PARK SYSTEM

By Christian F. Gaetjer

THE BEGINNING OF THE PARK SYSTEM—SPENCER SQUARE—GARNSEY SQUARE—COURT HOUSE SQUARE—LONG VIEW PARK—DENKMANN SQUARE—OTHER PARK IMPROVEMENTS—BOULEVARDING OF SEVENTH AVENUE—APPROPRIATIONS OF OTHER CITIES FOR PARK PURPOSES—PLEA FOR CONTINUANCE OF PARK IMPROVEMENT.

THE BEGINNING OF THE PARK SYSTEM

Previous to the year 1888 it can be said that there was no park system in the city of Rock Island nor was there in fact any tracts of land that could be fairly designated as city parks. In laying out Spencer & Chase's addition in 1836, a valuable block was retained on what is now Second avenue. This block was not subdivided into lots like the rest of the addition, and yet it was not treated as a public park. It was first occupied by a schoolhouse which was built in 1846. This was in the center of the square, while on one side was the First Methodist church, and on the other the Baptist church. In 1855 this land was purchased by the city of Rock Island, but the only improvements made at the time were an enclosing fence and a liberty pole, erected inside, together with a few trees. In 1870, the city removed the fence. Owing to the low grade of Second avenue during certain seasons of the year this square was flooded, but with the raising of the grade, in 1880, the trouble was obviated and the park was enjoyed by the people of the neighborhood.

SPENCER SQUARE.—The Citizen's Improvement Association took up the matter of improving this square, and in order to provide stone to pave the streets and sidewalks leading to it, actually opened up a quarry within the square. As there was much dissension relative to it, the city council created the office of park commissioner who was to serve without salary. The then mayor, Hon. William McConochie, appointed William Jackson, who served faithfully and well in carrying out his advanced ideas relative to a city beautiful. His first work was to lay out the square with cross and interior walks, following which he called upon the loyal citizens to donate suitable ornaments. They responded generously, Hon. Ben T. Cable and Mrs. Lucy Castleman presenting the beautiful fountain. In 1892, the magnificent granite statue of Black Hawk which attracts attention from every visitor, was presented by Otis J. Dimick, while others contributed for numerous improvements to the amount of $6,500. This square is undoubtedly the handsomest in the northwest. Some trouble was experienced relative to ownership of the square from the heirs of Jonah Case, but Judge Spencer supported the city in its claim to this property and when a suit was brought in the United States court, the case was decided in favor of Rock Island. The name first given it was Union Square, but it was later appropriately changed to that of Spencer Square. The improvement of this valuable property may well be said to mark the beginning of a park system for the city.

GARNSEY SQUARE, the park of the west end of the city, is in what is known as Chicago, or Lower Addition, to Rock Island. As first it was known as Franklin Square, but the name was changed in honor of Daniel G. Garnsey, one of the men who laid out the addition. The present improvements were made by the city council in 1881, while Messrs. Weyerhauser and Denkmann contributed the imposing fountain in the center. Other improvements were made through special donations, for the people of Rock Island take a pride in beautifying their city and maintaining its prestige as one of the most attractive places of its size in the world.

COURT HOUSE SQUARE is the property of the county. It was first named Stephenson Square, but later the present name was adopted as on it are located the court house, jail and sheriff's residence, and to those respectively holding the office of sheriff, is due the neat and refined appearance of the neighborhood in this central part of the city.

LONG VIEW PARK as its name implies, is sublimely located, overlooking the Mississippi river which winds away into the distance like a broad, silver ribbon leading to the far horizon. This park containing about forty acres was donated to the city of Rock Island by a party of men who succeeded to the ownership of a large portion of the real estate formerly the property of the late Hon. Bailey Davenport. The men mainly interested in the donation of this park were Frederick Weyerhauser, Morris Rosenfield, Charles H. Deere and Captain T. J. Robinson, who had the good of the city at heart. The park is located between Eighteenth street and Twelfth avenue and Seventeenth street and Fifteenth avenue. In 1905 Hon. George W. McCaskrin, then mayor, appointed a board of park commissioners with William Jackson at the head, the other members being Fred C. Denkmann, William H. Dart, Otto Huber and Ed B. McKown. All these gentlemen worked without salary, donating their time and substantial amounts of money. Finally they secured from the city council an annual appropriation for two years of $6,250, with the proviso that a like sum be raised by subscription. By these men, loyal to the city's needs, the work of securing the money was gladly undertaken, they heading the list very generously. In fact the amount collected was over $13,000, and permanent improvements were at once commenced. The park was formally dedicated to the public July 10, 1908, since which time as formerly it has been under the care and management of C. F. Gaetjer, the city park superintendent, who has, by assiduous attention, so beautified it that it is the favorite resort of thousands of citizens and visiting strangers. A little more work remains to be done to fully complete it according to the plan originally agreed upon. A very interesting feature of the deed conveying the land, dated August 30, 1897, is a provision forbidding the sale, barter, gift or use of intoxicating liquors on it. The roads leading to the park are either macadamized or paved, there are artificial lakes, cement walks, a waterfall, brook, a model public building, a pavilion and a rustic bridge. An exquisite memorial fountain was donated by the Misses Davenport in honor of their uncle, the Hon. Bailey Davenport, and attracts unusual admiration. Playgrounds, swings, slides and other forms of amusement have been provided for the children who with their parents enjoy the delights of this sylvan retreat. Even on the hottest day Long View Park is cool, perched as it is on an eminence overlooking the far distant landscape and river, and the beneficial effect its fresh breezes have upon those whose employment keeps them indoors except in the evening and on holiday occasions, is in itself a memorial to the donors and all connected with its development.

DENKMANN SQUARE was donated to the city by Fred Denkmann, a member of the park board. The grading and laying of the sidewalks of this square are now completed, and in time, when the sod and trees are fairly grown, it will become a favorite playground for the children and an ideal resort for their parents.

The city of Rock Island has purchased a tract of twenty-three acres of land at the east end of the city overlooking the Mississippi valley. The lack of funds has prevented any material improvement of this park at present, but many plans are being made looking towards extensive beautifying of it in the near future. For beauty of situation it is equal to, if not excelling that of Long View Park, and when it is properly developed, it will greatly add to the desirability of Rock Island in every way.

Another park improvement was begun by the city when it boulevarded what is known as Seventh avenue, laying out along it pretty grass plats with flowering shrubbery and flower beds of various varieties. The view along the avenue from west to east, or vice versa, passing Augstana College and the Denkmann Memorial Library, is particularly beautiful.

Much can be said in favor of the zeal and economy shown in the work done in the parks. With a scanty revenue, scarcely over $7,000 annually, the parks have been improved to an extent that rivals that of other cities with a much greater appropriation for park purposes. Davenport has an annual appropriation for parks of $45,000; Rockford one of $55,000; Peoria one of $90,000; Springfield one of $50,000. Bearing these figures in mind, the improvements already completed in the parks of Rock Island, are a subject of favorable comment from all who have any knowledge of the matter. In their liberal use of the parks the people have shown their appreciation of these municipal breathing places. Music has been provided for several years for the people visiting Long View Park by Mr. Charles Rosenfield, as a tribute to his mother, Mrs. Julia Rosenfield, who loved those beauty spots so liberally provided for men, women and children who desire and need the health and restfulness that they give. In view of the necessity for the full completion of all these retreats, it is to be hoped that there will always exist a public spirit which will urge a continuance of this good work, and a broadening of its scope in the years to come.

BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATIONS

By George H. Kingsbury

—THE MOLINE BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION—
 ACTIVITIES—MOLINE COMMERCIAL CLUB—OFFI-CERS—TRI-CITY MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION —OFFICERS—FREE LABOR BUREAU.

EARLY ORGANIZATIONS

Since Rock Island assumed the rank of a city there has been at nearly all times some sort of organization of business men formed for mutual protection and the upbuilding of the interests of the community. The present Business Men's Association of Rock Island is confined strictly to these lines. Its membership comprises business men of nearly every class and professional men and manufacturers as well. An important work both for the members and the city is being done. The Retail Merchants' Association had its origin in an association of grocers which was broadened into the Rock Island Merchants' Mutual Protective Association. The latter was formed May 23, 1896, with eighty members, C. J. Long being president; Charles Oswald, vice-president; William L. Ludolph, secretary; E. J. Sommers, treasurer and H. Krell, R. C. Benson and S. R. Wright, executive committee. The particular object as defined in the constitution was mutual protection through the enforcement of collection laws. The headquarters of this organization were in the Odd Fellows hall. At the expiration of about a year, the association had ceased to be effective, and a meeting for the purpose of reviving interest was held at Turner Hall, and six days later another meeting was held at which E. J. Sommers was chosen president and S. R. Wright secretary. During 1898, Beselin's Hall was the meeting place of the association.

The state organization was affiliated with during this year, but once more interest seemed to decline, and on January 30, 1899, another meeting was called, at Turner Hall, for the purpose of re-organization, and two days later, the Rock Island Retail Merchants' Association was born, with a charter membership of fifty-three, with George H. Kingsbury, president; George A. McDonald, vice-president; George Schneider, secretary; W. J. Pettel, director. The new association was a success from the start, and during the year increased the membership to 112. This association at once affiliated with the State Retail Merchants' Association, and delegates from here secured the annual meeting of that body for February 13, 14 and 15, 1900. During one day in July all business was suspended and merchants and friends went on a railroad excursion to Rockford, where the merchants of that city had made arrangements for our entertainment. The next two following years, we visited Joliet and Aurora in the same manner. On May 14, 1900, E. J. Burns was appointed rating book secretary, the first book was issued early in 1901, and the greatest benefits to the association have come from the use of the credit rating office. Through the work of the association, the merchants discontinued the giving of premiums and adopted the advertising agreement not to purchase tickets or make donations except for charity, or to advertise in programs or any other style of collective advertising except daily and weekly papers, unless it has the sanction of the advertising committee. This has saved our merchants more than the entire cost of membership.

In November, 1906, the name of the association was changed to the Rock Island Business Men's Association, our membership was not confined to retailers but was composed of all classes of business men. The scope of our work had broadened in that we were using our influence to secure factories, legislation and the city's general advancement, and it was thought proper to indicate all this in our name.

In 1910, immediately following the passage of the law by the legislature giving cities the right to adopt the commission form of government, the association took the initiative in a movement to have the new law adopted by our city, and was successful in having it passed by a large majority. In 1911, we decided that the association to do the work which was needed should adopt a sliding scale of dues for members to provide for necessary funds to carry on our work and it was not until July, 1912, that the scale was finally adopted, and went into effect August 1, 1912, it being as follows: Class A, $12 per year; Class B, $24; Class C, $36; Class D, $48; Class E, $60, and Class F, $120 per year. This allowed the proper expansion of the work and funds for new quarters which were taken at No. 513 Safety Building, with three office rooms, and one large meeting room. On May 15 a collection department for the collection of bad accounts was added as one of the features of the work, and this is proving to be of great value to the membership.

The roster of officers and term of office is as follows: President: George H. Kingsbury, 1899-1906; F. T. Myers, 1907-08; E. B. McKown, 1909-10; M. H. Sexton, 1911; H. A. Clevenstone, 1912-13. Vice presidents: G. A. McDonald, 1899-1900; W. J. Hess, 1901-03; J. M. Schaah, 1904-05; Fred Young, 1906-07; W. E. Bailey, 1908; H. A. Clevenstone, 1909-10; C. W. Horton, 1911; M. S. Heagy, 1912-13. Recording secretaries: George Schneider, 1899-02; E. B. Stone, 1903-04; R. W. Lamont, 1905-12. Rating secretaries: E. J. Burns, 1900-03; W. C. Manker, 1904-06; Albert Huber, 1906-09; Charles Goff, 1910-11; Miss Huber, 1911-12; George H. Kingsbury, 1912-13. Treasurers: W. J. Moeler, 1899-1900; E. B. McKown, 1901-07; F. J. Hodges, 1908; E. B. Kreiss, 1909-13.

In January, 1913, the offices of recording and rating secretary were combined.

BENEFITS

Among the benefits accruing to a member as the result of definite and united effort was the wiping out of the trading stamps evil, premiums, prizes and presents, chance contests and kindred propositions which cut into profits and compromised honesty. Fair dealing was emphasized with the trade, and good fellowship encouraged between merchants. As a result of this, the association advocated free bridges over Rock river, good roads leading out of the city, better train service into the city, supported measures proposed by the state association, and sent representatives to the legislature at Springfield in the interest of bills favorable to our business house. Today the association is looked upon as a leading factor in the promotion of better business methods in civic matters. Its membership is made up of the best men and firms of the city, and its counsel and influence is sought by promoters of greater Rock Island.

MOLINE RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION

By William Carstens

This association was primarily formed to combat the trading stamp and premium schemes. At that time there was not a store in the city which did not give premiums of some kind with goods bought and this evil was growing to such an extent that the life of many business houses was threatened thereby. Something had to be done to counteract this craze for premiums for it had reached such a point that, if an individual bought a dime's worth of crackers or a yard of ribbon, he expected a ticket on some premium. Hence the organization of this association.

On January 3, 1899 a meeting of the principal merchants was called at which it was agreed to organize the Moline Retail Merchants' Association and to discontinue the giving of trading stamps and premiums. This was followed by other meetings and further agreements were reached, abolishing many trade abuses, and a rating book was issued on a small scale. The membership dues to this association were twenty-five cents per month. As the membership was about sixty-five, it was found that this small scale of dues was not sufficient to accomplish very much, and the officers were handicapped by lack of time, their private business responsibilities engrossing them. This association, however, continued under above conditions until April 1, 1903, when, under the leadership of B. H. Quick as president and C. F. Dewend, as vice-president, a re-organization was accomplished. The monthly dues were placed at $1 and William Carstens was engaged as permanent secretary, it being agreed that he was to devote his entire time to the work of the association. He has remained with the association to the time of writing (1913), having taken charge of affairs April 1, 1903. Inside of ten days he had 121 signed applications for membership in the new organization. From then on, under his able management, the association has flourished. One of his duties was to compile a rate book. The ratings are always furnished by the individual members and each member is allowed only to give his own experience in his own business, not what he might have heard from anyone else, thereby avoiding misrepresentation. This new rating book with about 10,000 names and 50,000 ratings was distributed to the members about October 1, 1913. A rating book is of great benefit not alone to the merchants, but to the honest consumer, for the more bad accounts that are eliminated from the merchant's books, the more reasonable he can sell his goods. All bad accounts must be charged to expense, and expenses must be considered in making the selling price. The rating book is a further benefit to the consuming public because no matter where or to what city a man may move, if he is honest and has always paid his honest debts, he finds that credit will be extended to him if he is in need of it as this association is affiliated with both the state and national associations and interchange rating books with each other. A new constitution has been adopted, setting forth the name and object of this association as follows:

Section I. Article I. This association shall be known as the Moline Merchants' Association.

Article II. Section I. The object of this association shall be to advance the business interests of the city, to promote legislation that will be beneficial to all its members, to abate trade abuses and illegitimate practices, and to foster a friendly feeling and a spirit of cooperation and loyalty between the citizens and the different branches of trade, and lastly to publish annually a credit rating book and the daily reports of court proceedings.

Section II. No member of this association shall advertise in any program, directory, or other publication not authorized as legitimate advertising by the committee appointed by this association to determine such legitimacy in advertisements, and will not advertise or give donations for charity unless solicitor possesses a letter from the secretary recommending the same.

The above sections, especially the last one, have saved to the merchants many thousands of dollars, and a direct saving to each merchant and an indirect benefit to the honest public for the same reason as given before. Much good has also been done in creating good fellowship among the merchants. Merchants who used to pass each other without speaking are now on the best of terms and work hand in hand for the good of all. Other good work has been done in ways too numerous to mention in detail. The following leaders as presidents have piloted the association successfully through good and hard times.

Presidents: Patrick Mullane, 1899-1900; William Carstens, 1901; John Swanson, 1902; B. H. Quick, 1903; C. F. Dewend, 1904; John Swanson, 1905; W. A. Dierolf, 1906; C. S. Trevor, 1907; A. J. Kucheman, 1908; Theodore Weigandt, 1909; M. R. Carlson, 1910; R. J. Green, 1911; Fred Sundeen, 1912.

William Carstens ably assisted President Sundeen as secretary and manager.

THE MOLINE BUSINESS MEN'S ASSOCIATION

As the result of the efforts of Messrs. C. F. Dewend and C. Iver Josephson, a meeting was held at the city hall in Moline, September 13, 1898, at which over 100 representatives of the city's professional, business and manufacturing interests gathered and organized the Moline Business Men's Association, whose prime object is to further develop Moline into a Greater Moline, which includes East Moline and vicinity. The association is a member of the Upper Mississippi Improvement Association and of the National Board of Trade. It has been represented by large delegations at the annual meetings of these organizations. It held a street fair in 1899 which brought to the city a large number of visitors. In the same year they were the leaders in a celebration of the Fourth of July in a manner which up to that time was unprecedented in this locality. The association also had artesian water mains laid to the public fountains. It installed electric and other decorations at the time of holding convention and on other occasions, was foremost in inducing such conventions to meet at Moline, and was ready in defraying their expenses while here. It has located a number of new factories in the city through united effort, and through its persistent work a government appropriation of nearly $400,000 was made to furnish an adequate steamboat lock and harbor. This completed work was accepted by the government engineers in January, 1907. This latter improvement places Moline on an equality with the other river cities in the matter of water transportation for passengers and freight.

The association has also improved Riverside Park, which gives a beautiful recreation ground in the center of the city on the river front, as well as a steamboat landing. In 1907 the association carried to a successful completion the building of a modern theater at a cost of $75,000, the organization itself raising $10,000 of this sum by means of a seat sale and donations. Through the united efforts of directors and members together with the generous financial aid extended to its projects by the business interests of the city, this association is enabled to constantly move forward to the building up of a better and greater community.

In 1909 the Moline Business Men's Association merged with the Moline Club, which was organized about 1895. This action was taken with the understanding that a civic improvement commission composed of fifteen members of the club be maintained to carry forward the work undertaken by the Business Men's Association. This commission continued the work of the association until May 20, 1913, when a re-organization of the Moline Club took place, at which the constitution and by-laws were amended, and the name changed to the Moline Commercial Club. This did away with the civic improvement commission, and substituted six members of the club with the addition of six members of the Moline Retail Merchants' Association, and six members of the Manufacturers' Association, together with twelve other citizens. These were then organized into the Greater Moline Committee, the object of which is to increase the manufacturing and commercial interests of the city, thus bringing into realization a constantly greater and greater Moline.

The social functions of the Moline Commercial Club will be maintained as in the past. They are housed in handsome new quarters in the two upper floors of the Leedy building, corner of Fifth avenue and Sixteenth street where they have commodious social and reading rooms, one of the finest halls in the city, a beautiful dining room and large kitchen, all of which were specially designed for their use when the plans of the building were prepared.

The officers of the club are: President, W. H. Van Derveort; Secretary, F. A. Lind; Treasurer, Carl Lundberg.

TRI-CITY MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION

The Tri-City Manufacturers' Association was organized in 1900 with C. H. Deere of Moline as president, and E. F. Sleight, also of Moline, as secretary. Its object has been the protection and promotion of the best interests of the manufacturing industries of Moline, Rock Island and Davenport. While it is composed of the manufacturers of the three cities, its largest membership comes from Moline. This association exerted a potent influence in favor of the Interstate Commerce bill, and of reciprocity, while it strenuously opposed the Uniform Bill of Lading. In 1908 there were but ten members in this association, while in 1913 there are forty-five members, and they represent a capitalization of over $121,000,000; gives employment to over 20,000 people in the cities of Rock Island, Moline, East Moline, Davenport and Bettendorf; and distributes in wages over $12,000,000 annually. The head offices are at Moline, and the officers are:

William Butterworth, president, of Deere & Co.; G. A. Stevens, vice-president, representing Moline, president Moline Plow Company; James F. Lardner, vice-president, representing Rock Island, general manager Rock Island Plow Co.; J. W. Bettendorf, vice-president, representing Davenport & Bettendorf, president Bettendorf Steel Car Co.; Harry A. Jansen, secretary.

Governing Board: C. R. Stephens, C. E. White, George W. Mixter, W. C. Bennett, W. F. Van Dewort, C. F. Vincent, James F. Lardner, C. W. Lewis, J. Kastlin, Wilson McClelland, C. B. Lafferty.

A free labor bureau is maintained by the association at Moline, where men may apply for employment free of any cost to them.

GENERAL CHARACTER

To attempt any definite approach towards a complete history of the clubs and organizations of women in Rock Island county, would be akin to the task of enumerating the stars in the sky, or the leaves in a forest. The propensity for organization and the spirit of cooperation joined to an active philanthropic sense would inevitably lead to the formation of the numerous classes, clubs and societies one finds on every hand and renders the task an exceedingly difficult one.

MOLINE

Passing by the Woman's Christian Temperance league and the Woman's Library league of early seventies, whose titles sufficiently indicate their purpose, and the Woman's Suffrage Association organized here by Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, with a long array of church organizations, and the Ladies Aid societies of all the churches, which are often, if not always, the real motive power behind the minister, this article will touch only on the important points of the most prominent organizations.

THE FORTNIGHTLY

One of the most important clubs is the Fortnightly, organized about a quarter of a century ago for the purpose of self improvement. Of it and its aims, Mrs. Harry Ainsworth, a leading member writes: "It was always pre-eminently a study club, but it was also for a short time a member of the state and national federation of Women's clubs, and has brought here a number of lecturers and the Donald Robertson Players." Abbreviating all too much the fine showing given by Mrs. Ainsworth, it can be said that this club seems to have studied everything pertaining to the peoples of the earth, their cities, customs, and literature, and have made exhaustive researches into their productions and crafts, oriental rugs, lace and book making, the history and art of painting, the modern drama, the modern novel, punishments and reform. It has also done thoroughly the work it found to do. The Sevens, organized by Miss Julia Getterny, nearly twenty years ago, was the beginning, and was composed almost wholly of young women who, employed through the day as teachers, stenographers or book-keepers, devoted their evenings to study. It is safe to assume that no club has so changed the tone and standard of intellectual life in the group which makes up its membership, as has this club of earnest young women. It is now about two score years old and grows constantly in influence and numbers.

The Home Study Club has been doing good, hard study along the usual lines for many years. The membership is made up of older women and they have about twenty members.

The Study Department of the Woman's Club is another society devoted to the study of literature and kindred topics. It was organized about six years ago.

DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

The Daughters of the American Revolution, organized about eighteen years ago by Mrs. Charles H. Deere, is another organization which has largely influenced public thought in Moline in other lines, and through its publications, aroused interest throughout the state. It has given eighteen years to the study of American history, distributed prizes to students in the public schools for the best essay on patriotic subjects and presented portraits of Lincoln and Washington to the high school. Travelers sailing down the Mississippi river, or on one of the numerous railroads that pass through Moline, will notice on a small island about five miles above the city, a tall, granite monument commemorating the battle fought there, July, 1814, between Captain Campbell of the regular army with a handful of soldiers, against Black Hawk with 1,200 followers, who were in the employ of the British. This monument was suggested by a member of the Moline chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Able assistance and cooperation was secured and the state was induced to erect this appropriate memorial to the courage of an American hero.

THE WOMAN'S CLUB

The Woman's Club of Moline, the largest and most liberal organization ever founded, is most popular as representative of the whole people. Any woman is eligible to membership, and as the dues are only $1 per year, there is little wonder that so many able women have availed themselves of the opportunity to cooperate with kindred minds in the work of this organization. It is a matter of pride to Moline that it has the second largest club in the state, the one first in the list being that of the metropolis, Chicago. The Moline club was founded in 1903 by Mrs. Frank G. Allen. It has maintained a high standard of work, has brought to the city the most famous speakers and musicians of the day. The club has five departments, music, art and literature, civics, domestic economy and philanthropy. It has opened and furnished the Woman's Club Lunch and Rest Rooms, where employed young women can procure a hot noon-day lunch at nominal prices, and individual members have supplied the deficit when the enterprise ran behind financially. The fine morale of the club is shown in the spirit of harmony and unanimity with which this large number of women work together.

WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, since its beginning in 1884, has kept up a militant and progressive activity against intemperance. It has more than any other body of women, influenced the legislation of the state by placing on the statute books the law providing for scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of the state. This was the work of Mrs. Mary E. Metzgar of Moline and it was also through her efforts that the fine statue of Frances Willard was placed in Memorial Hall in Washington, she being the first woman to be thus honored in this country. Mrs. Simonson of Port Byron, wife of Hon. J. W. Simonson of that place, has kindly furnished the above information relative to the work of the Moline union.

THE KING'S DAUGHTERS

The King's Daughters of Moline, according to Mrs. A. T. Foster, are a potent and moving spirit of the religious life of the community. In 1896 this organization came into life with Mrs. Frank W. Gould of Moline as leader. No other organization of women has accomplished so much along purely philanthropic lines, but educational work has also been carried on since the beginning, for the prevention of tuberculosis. They have endowed a bed at the city hospital, and secured a department of Domestic Science in the Moline public schools. They have also instituted the first kindergarten in the city, and since 1903 they have maintained a visiting nurse for the needy. In order that the latter might be able to respond quickly to calls upon her, one of the 500 women composing this organization, gave for the use of the nurse, a fine electric coupe. The King's Daughters are daily growing in scope and usefulness.

ROCK ISLAND

Mrs. A. H. McCandless, a leading literary woman of Rock Island, made the following statement relative to the work done by the women's clubs in that city:

"You probably know, as I should have told you in the beginning, that ours is noticeably not a club city, and I fear that it will not make a strong showing. I have thought much about the reason why there are so few clubs here and I cannot solve it. It certainly is not for lack of culture and intellectual people, for Rock Island abounds in these. It just seems as though the club germ has never taken hold to a great extent. You see, I find myself inventing excuses instead of subject matter."

Notwithstanding the above statement, which may be accepted in a general way, she gives the names of several interesting clubs, literary and musical, a German club, the Kings' Daughters, who are doing good work, and Daughters of the American Revolution, who have already left an indelible impression of their existence in a fine monument which marks the site of old Fort Armstrong, one of the outposts of civilization in this locality for so many years. The monument was erected and paid for by the Rock Island chapter of this organization, and not by the state. While the passing years are changing into the slow-growing centuries, the traveler crossing the continent by either of the two great transcontinental routes that intersect at this point, the railway that thunders along its path from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the Mississippi, sweeping on from the land of northern pines to the groves of rustling palms, will see standing in simple and unobtrusive grandeur, this monument, the gift of Rock Island's women to their city and their state.

FRATERNAL AND BENEVOLENT ORGANIZATIONS, SOCIETIES AND ORDERS

GENERAL REMARKS

The student of Masonic history who approaches the subject with a true desire for knowledge and a sincere wish of getting down to facts, is at once struck with the multitude of conflicting theories and diverse conclusions which distinguish the efforts of the most celebrated of its chroniclers. Behind the dense cloud of legend there is somewhere, of course, the sunlight of fact, but to discern it one must equip himself with a strong lens and bring to his task an open and unprejudiced mind. He will find before him a labyrinthine maze out of which he must separate for himself fiction from fact, legend from history, truth from prejudice, and demonstration from speculation. Too often, though, he will discover his supposed telescope to be rather a kaleidoscope, presenting alluring pictures to his delighted gaze, which, however, with the next turn of the wrist, fall all out of place, leaving him to contemplate an entirely new perspective. It is an entertaining and instructive pastime, this search after the elusive sunlight, but in the limits of this article, the writers can hope to do little more than give the kaleidoscope a few turns, and report what may be seen therein. Of one thing we are sure—Masonry itself is a fact. It is a heritage that has been handed down from somewhere in the past, but whence it came and where it had its birth, is as impossible to determine as to trace the cradle of the storm or the impulse of a thought. "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth." To our mind this is expressive of Freemasonry, and the world has yet to produce one who can accurately fix its birthplace or establish beyond question its chronology.

The average Mason imagines that the institution of the craft dates from the building of King Solomon's temple. It is safe to presume that this opinion obtains in the majority of minds, both in and out of the fraternity. Unfortunately, however, this is only a tradition, and while much of the accepted knowledge of the present day has had nothing much more tangible for a starting point, yet the tracing of any existing institution to a purely traditional source is not a very satisfying task, and the result, at best, must be at least partly fable—and fable is not history. Notwithstanding, we may derive passing amusement, if not any essential benefit, from a brief glance at the solemn conclusions of those who have permitted their reverential yearning for antiquity to overcome their allegiance to historical accuracy. For instance: Preston, the distinguished English Mason, in 1772, published a work which he called "Illustrations of Masonry," wherein he dogmatically declared "that from the commencement of the world we may trace the foundation of Masonry." This statement might stand if we should regard Masonry only as a "principle" and not as a particular association of individuals, but when considering such an institution from a historical standpoint, it is not strictly honest to date its birth from the moment of its first conception as a "principle" in the mind of man. If this should be the test, any of the numerous fraternal organizations of the present day could trace its beginning to pre-historic times, for there has probably not been a period since the propagation of the human race began when somewhere, in someone's mind, there was not a recognition of the principle of universal brotherhood. But even more enthusiastic was the Rev. Geo. Oliver, one of the most brilliant and distinguished of English Masons (1782-1867) who, in commenting on Preston's statement above quoted, goes him one better and proclaims that "our science existed before the creation of this globe, and was diffused amidst the numerous systems with which the grand empyrean of universal space is furnished." To carry out this theory, and bring it down a little out of the clouds, Oliver has proved to himself that Moses was a grand master, Joshua a deputy, and Aboliab and Bezaleel, grand wardens of some Masonic grand lodge, and another historian has even counted Adam in as one of the craft. As if the real history, itself, were not sufficiently romantic!

We are most heartily in accord with the well known American writer, Dr. Mackey, who has remarked that "Freemasonry—the word so used meaning, without evasion or reservation, precisely what everybody supposes it to mean—can be invested with an antiquity sufficient for the pride of the most exacting admirer of the society," and it accordingly seems unnecessary to indulge in such fantastic excursions into primordial space in order to gratify one's worship for the antique.

COLLEGIA ARTIFICUM

Perhaps the most remarkable theory as to the real origin of Freemasonry is that which connects it with the Roman Colleges of Artificers, or the Collegia Artificum, the foundation of which is accredited to Numa, the second king of Rome. There are, indeed, many interesting points of correspondence which the Masonic student will readily discern, but again, in large measure, we here tread upon legendary ground, for Numa lived before history had become anything like an exact science. Nevertheless, there is undisputed record of the Collegia Artificum, whoever founded them, and also, a strong similarity between their general form and the more modern order of Freemasonry—strong enough, at any rate, to deserve passing mention.

There are many other theories, of course, and each has its adherents. It is quite apparent, however, that no matter whence we may trace the idea of the Masonic order, it was most probably the outgrowth of one or several societies of artisans, which first existed as a protective organization for the benefit of the craftsmen and to conserve the secrets of their peculiar trade or art, and afterwards, as labor conditions changed, evolved itself, or themselves, into a purely symbolic or "speculative" institution, wherefore we have the "speculative" Masonry of today. "The spirit of Freemasonry is doubtless of pre-historic origin, but its body cannot be traced, successfully, any farther back than the middle ages." With this brief statement as to its possible origin, we come to more penetrable skies and turn our consideration to the organized fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons as it is known to this generation.

FIRST GRAND LODGE

The first Grand Lodge of which there is any authentic record was formed in London on June 24, 1717, when the assembled lodges abandoned their "operative" charters and became purely "speculative" or symbolic in character. From that time it is comparatively easy to trace our chronology.

There is, of course, some interest, not to say some dispute, as to which is the oldest Masonic lodge in existence at the present time. So far as we are able to secure any data, this honor may be said to belong to Lodge No. 1 (Mary's Chapel), Edinburgh, Scotland. Traditionally, this lodge claims descent from the Masons brought from Strasburg in 1128 by David I. King of Scotland, to build Hollyrood Abbey, and it is said to have authenticated minutes dating back to July 31, 1599. These claims, albeit, are met by counter claims from Mother Kilwinning Lodge No. 0, also of Scotland, but it is declared that the latter lodge has no documentary proof anterior to December 20, 1642, which, if true, would seem to give the Edinburgh lodge a slight advantage, should documentary evidence alone be taken into consideration. Opposed to both of these are the claims of York Lodge of England, which contends that it was organized in 926, but the antiquity of the York organization is not universally allowed, and in fact, its claims are thought to rest mostly upon fiction. Of course, local lodges were in existence long before the Grand Lodge of England was formed in 1717, but as to which of these belongs the distinction of being "the oldest," there is really small cause for concern among Masons generally. The quarrel, if it may be so termed, is of special moment only to the particular lodges involved.

In the United States there are at present (1912) 14,017 lodges with 1,481,311 Masons. The first notice we have of Masonry in this country is in 1729, in which year one Daniel Cox was appointed Provincial Grand Master in New Jersey, receiving his commission from the then Duke of Norfolk, Grand Master of England. To our English consins we are, of course, indebted for the Masonic seed planted on this side of the Atlantic, and in no other country has Masonry shown the numerical growth that it has attained here. Masonically, America stands pre-eminent both in numbers and enthusiasm.

Historians seem to have been unable to find that any lodges were established by Grand Master Cox, and the first American lodge is probably the St. John's Grand Lodge, which was opened in Boston in 1733. Following the Revolutionary war, the American lodges then in existence naturally broke away from their allegiance to the Grand Lodge of England and since then each has maintained its own separate autonomy. As new territory was settled, Masonry pushed westward, until today each state has its own grand lodge, masonically supreme within its own jurisdiction.

FIRST MASONIC LODGE IN ILLINOIS

The first lodge of which there is any record in Illinois is the old Western Star Lodge No. 1, which was located at Kaskaskia, and received its warrant from the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania in 1805. This lodge, under the Pennsylvania warrant, was first known as No. 107, but took its new number, No. 1, on the formation of the first Grand Lodge of Illinois in 1822. There were nine lodges concerned in the organization of this grand lodge, one of which had received its warrant from Pennsylvania, one from Kentucky, one from Tennessee, one from Indiana, four from Missouri, and one not recorded. They were located at Kaskaskia, Shawneetown, Edwardsville, Upper Alton, Vandalia, Jonesboro, Covington, Brownsville and Albion. There were two other lodges in the state at the time, but they did not join in the formation of the Grand Lodge, or afterwards affiliate with it, namely: Templar Lodge at Belleville, and Sangamon Lodge at Springfield.

As mentioned, the first grand lodge in this state was formed in 1822, the brethren meeting at Vandalia on December 10 of that year and electing Shadrach Bond, of Western Star Lodge as the first grand master. Shadrach Bond was also the first governor of the new state of Illinois, being elected to that office in 1818 and serving his full four years, or until his successor was elected and inaugurated. It was, therefore, at the close of his term as governor that he participated in the formation of the first grand lodge of Illinois and became its first grand master. This grand lodge, however, was destined to enjoy but a brief existence, for it never met after 1827, going down under the bitter anti-Masonic persecution which almost disrupted the craft about that time. Thereafter, new Illinois lodges were established by warrants from the grand lodges of Missouri and adjoining jurisdictions, and this procedure continued until the reorganization of the Illinois Grand Lodge at Jacksonville on April 6, 1840. On that date, six lodges assembled, by their representatives, and organized the present grand lodge of Illinois. The places sending delegates were Quincy, Equality, Jacksonville, Springfield, Galena and Columbus. M. W. Bro. Abraham Jones was elected as the first grand master and was reelected in 1841 and 1842, since which time the honor has been passed from one to another of the distinguished members of the craft, until, including the present grand master, M. W. Bro. Delmar D. Darrah, the gavel of the grand lodge has been wielded by no less than forty-four different hands.

From six lodges in 1840, the present grand lodge has created new units during the seventy-two years of its existence, until it now (July 1, 1912) boasts a constituency of 807 lodges, with 115,125 members. When it is understood that the fraternity never solicits adherents, but that every novitiate must come of his own free will and accord, these figures are truly significant. No institution not possessing a direct appeal to the finer instincts of its votaries could achieve such a record under similar circumstances.

TRACING MASONIC HISTORY IN ROCK ISLAND COUNTY

In tracing the history of Masonry in Rock Island county, it is necessary to go a little back of the record of the constitution of the first lodge, namely, Trio Lodge No. 57 of Rock Island. We find, then, that in October of 1847 a dispensation was granted for the organization of a new lodge in Cambridge, Henry county, Ill., and that the jurisdiction of the new lodge was territorially quite extensive. The next nearest lodges were at Peru, La Salle county; Henderson, Knox county, and Monmouth, Warren county. In the fall of 1847 (October 5), the Grand Lodge granted a charter to Cambridge Lodge No. 49, and said charter conveyed authority for the lodge to meet alternately in Cambridge and Rock Island. The lodge did a great amount of work during the first seven months after receiving its charter, a total of twenty-one being made Master Masons, of whom sixteen were from Rock Island. On January 26, 1848, M. W. Bro. William Lavelly, then Grand Master, on the unanimous request of the lodge, granted it a dispensation to meet regularly in Rock Island. Naturally, however, this arrangement was soon found to be unsatisfactory, owing to the distance the Cambridge members were required to travel in order to attend meetings—a journey of upwards of thirty miles with no transportation except by wagon road. The result was that on May 18, 1848, the Rock Island county members, held a meeting in Rock Island for the purpose of taking steps to form a new lodge. There were present at this meeting seventeen Rock Island county members of Cambridge Lodge No. 49, who organized by electing William Vandever as chairman and S. N. Birge as secretary. The following resolution was adopted: "That it is expedient to form a new lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons from members of Cambridge Lodge No. 49, residing in Rock Island county."

ADOPTION OF NAME

When it came to selecting a name, there was a great diversity of opinion. Among the names proposed were Mississippi, Rock Island, Barrett, Buford, Illinois and Lavelly, but none could command a majority. Dr. James W. Brackett then proposed the name of "Trio," in honor of Rock Island, Moline and Camden Mills (now Milan), and the suggestion met with instant favor, the name being adopted unanimously. Bro. Harmon G. Reynolds, who afterwards became Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, submitted a code of by-laws, which were adopted and then a petition for a dispensation to work was addressed to the Grand Master, who promptly granted the desired authority. This dispensation was received and read at a meeting held on June 1, 1848, hence, Rock Island county Masonry, as an organization, dates from that occasion. The petition for the dispensation was signed by Brethren P. A. Whitaker, William Farris, Harmon G. Reynolds, Benjamin F. Barrett, E. R. Bean, S. N. Birge, William Vandever and John R. Corker. On June 8, 1848, the following brethren were elected to serve the lodge as its first officers:

Patrick A. Whitaker, worshipful master; William Farris, senior warden; Joshua H. Hatch, junior warden; Benjamin F. Barrett, treasurer; Harmon G. Reynolds, secretary; Rev. Henry Safford, chaplain; James G. Blythe, senior deacon; Robert Graham, junior deacon; William Vandever, senior steward; James Vaughn, junior steward; William Pettifer, tyler; F. B. Gilmore, master of ceremonies; John R. Corker, auditor.

After a satisfactory settlement had been effected with Cambridge Lodge No. 49, the dispensation permitting that lodge to hold its meetings in Rock Island was returned to the Grand Master and Cambridge Lodge retired from this county to Cambridge, Henry county, where it still meets and thrives. There are now nine lodges in Henry county.

At a meeting of Trio Lodge held on September 26, 1848, W. Bro. P. A. Whitaker, as representative to the coming Grand Lodge, was authorized to ask for a charter, which was granted by the Grand Lodge in session at Alton on October 3, 1848, under the name of Trio Lodge No. 57. On October 30, 1848, the lodge was constituted in due form by M. W. Bro. Nelson D. Morse, Past Grand Master, who also installed its first officers.

GROWTH OF FRATERNITY

Thus was formed the first lodge in Rock Island county, since which time nine other lodges have been constituted and are now in a most flourishing condition. The appended table may be of interest as showing the growth of the fraternity in this county during the last sixty-four years. There are now ten lodges in Rock Island county with a total membership of 1,406 on July 1, 1912, to wit:

No. 57—Trio, Rock Island; chartered October 3, 1848; membership July 1, 1912, 299.

No. 69—Eureka, Milan; chartered October 4, 1849; membership July 1, 1912, 65.

No. 319—Doric, Moline; chartered October 5, 1859; membership July 1, 1912, 334.

No. 436—Philo, Port Byron; chartered October 4, 1865; membership July 1, 1912, 69.

No. 516—Andalusia, Andalusia; chartered October 1, 1867; membership July 1, 1912, 75.

No. 543—Cordova, Cordova; chartered October 1, 1867; membership, July 1, 1912, 24.

No. 547—Valley, Coal Valley; chartered October 1, 1867; membership July 1, 1912, 58.

No. 658—Rock Island, Rock Island; chartered October 4, 1870; membership July 1, 1912, 283.

No. 679—Buffalo Prairie, Buffalo Prairie; chartered October 3, 1871; membership July 1, 1912, 98.

No. 898—Silvis, Silvis; chartered October 2, 1907; membership July 1, 1912, 101.

MASONIC INTEREST IN ROCK ISLAND

On October 17, 1912, under an Indian summer sky and with gorgeous pomp and ceremony, the Masons of Rock Island, comprising the four bodies above mentioned, laid the cornerstone of a magnificent new Masonic Temple to be erected at the corner of Eighteenth street and Fifth avenue. An "occasional Grand Lodge" was convened for this purpose, and the ceremonies were conducted under the personal direction of Grand Master Delmar D. Darrah of Bloomington. M. W. Brother Charles E. Whelan, past grand master of Wisconsin, was the right worshipful grand orator. These ceremonies were the culmination of years of earnest striving and united effort on the part of the fraternity in Rock Island, generously assisted by the members of the so-called "higher bodies" residing in the jurisdiction of which Rock Island is the center. This new temple when completed and furnished, will represent an outlay of $65,000 or $70,000, every penny of which will have been contributed by the Masons and their families. The building plans, as adopted, were the result of careful and extended study and will adequately meet the needs of the fraternity for some years to come. Rock Island Masons are justly proud of this achievement—proud because of the prosperity of the craft which it evidences, and proud of the facilities for more fully exemplifying the beauties of Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth which Masonry teaches. To Bro. H. E. Casteel, who directed the subscription campaign to its successful conclusion, the local Masons are particularly indebted, and all believe that the new home will stand as an enduring monument to the delightful spirit of helpfulness and co-operation which resulted in the realization of their dreams. It is expected that the temple will be ready for occupancy by July 1, 1913.

In addition to being the home of two lodges A. F. and A. M., Rock Island is also the location of Rock Island Chapter No. 18, Royal Arch Masons, Rock Island Council No. 20, Royal and Select Masters and Rock Island Commandery No. 18, Knights Templar, all of which have a large and growing membership.

The local commandery of Knights Templar has been signally honored in the election of two of its members, father and son, to the highest office within the gift of the order in the state, viz: R. E. Sir Henry C. Cleaveland and R. E. Sir Harry H. Cleaveland, Past Grand Commanders of Illinois, the former of whom is now deceased. There have been many members in the different Masonic bodies of Rock Island county who have risen to high eminence in the councils of the fraternity, but the records show only three who have been elevated to the distinction of presiding officer in any of the Grand Lodges, Chapters, Councils or Commanderies. These are the two Right Eminent brethren who have just been mentioned and M. W. Bro. Harmon G. Reynolds, who was Grand Master of the Grand Lodge in 1868 and 1869.

It would not be proper to close this account without a brief reference to the splendid growth and achievements of the so-called "ladies auxiliary" to Freemasonry, the order of the Eastern Star. This flourishing order has eight chapters in Rock Island county, namely: at Rock Island, Moline, Milan, Port Byron, Andalusia, Coal Valley, Buffalo Prairie and Silvis, and its noble work in behalf of charity and the unselfish devotion of its members to the teachings of the institution have made it a power for good in the community. A recently organized branch of the White Shrine of Jerusalem is also affording its pleasures to those who have ambitions for "higher degrees" under feminine auspices.

And so, the great principle of the brotherhood of man and the sisterhood of woman, whether its primal origin can ever be traced or not, is still exerting its mighty influence over the lives and welfare of the race, and Masonry, standing as the patriarch among the world-wide fraternities of the present day, may justly claim an enduring place in the historic procession of those influences which have consistently promoted the gospel of real fellowship and "conciliated true friendship among those who might otherwise have remained at a perpetual distance." Its future triumphs will surely grow and expand with its enlarging opportunities, and "so mote it be."

DESCRIPTION OF NEW MASONIC BUILDING

The beautiful Masonic building on the corner of Eighteenth street and Fifth avenue, Rock Island, covers 100 x 115 feet. The front is three stories in height, corresponding with two higher stories in the rear which contain the lodge rooms and banquet hall. On the first floor, opening off the large lobby, are two club rooms on the left. On the right is the office and a ladies' parlor. Directly opposite the entrance is the ball room 50 x 52 feet and a concert hall 35 x 38 feet. These two rooms can be thrown together making an uninterrupted ball room floor 85 feet in length. Men's and ladies' toilets and a check room are also on this floor. In the rear of the ball room is a large kitchen and a small dining room and a rear stairway. The main stairway opens up to the right in the lobby. Opening off of the landing of this stairs, halfway to the second floor, is the front half-story, 8-foot ceiling, just room enough for the armory and some reserve space for various purposes. There is a private stairway from the armory up to the lodge room above.

In the second story are two lodge rooms, the larger 50 x 64 feet, having a main stairway 19 x 42 feet and also a side stage all along the right hand side. This is cut off from the main room with drop curtains when not in use. When in use the view from the stage into the main room is cut off with a scrim curtain which permits a full view from the main room into the stage. In front of the lodge room are Tyler's room, smoking room, parlor, candidate's room, preparation room and six property rooms and toilets. There is on the second floor in addition to the above mentioned rooms, a small lodge room 33 x 50 feet with proper ante-rooms and a ladies' parlor and toilet. This parlor can be entered either from the public hall of the second story or from the Tyler's room. There is a vault in the office and also one on the second floor.

The exterior of the building is a yellow brick with a brown cast, is faced with stone about eight feet high and stone is used for trimming around the windows and for the cornices. Over the entrance is an overhanging copper marquee suspended on heavy chains. The style of architecture is distinctly modern, straight lines predominating both vertically and horizontally, giving the appearance of stability and simplicity. There is no finer Masonic building in this part of the state, or in any city of its size in the country, and it is a credit to the city as well as to the men of Trio Lodge No. 57, A. F. & A. M., Rock Island lodge, No. 658, A. F. & A. M., Rock Island Chapter No. 18, R. A. M. and Rock Island Commandery No. 18, K. T. who furnished the funds and guaranteed the interest and principal of the bonds issued for its erection.

PRINCIPLES OF THE ORDER

In the great and glorious vineyard of the confraternity of Freemasonry, is one little garden plot wherein are cultivated and nurtured the most beautiful flowers, the choicest blossoms of humanity, in and over which, wafted by the perfume laden zephyrs, floats a banner bearing the divine inscription "Love One Another." That sacred spot is called the Order of the Eastern Star. As the Star of Bethlehem shone bright and clear in the orient, so our Star in the East grows brilliant and brighter, shedding its soft rays over the trials and vicissitudes of life, guiding us as a beacon light, through the weal and woe of our earthly pilgrimage, to the new Jerusalem, that city not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

The Order of the Eastern Star is erected upon the principles of charity, truth and loving kindness. Its foundation is the rock of truth, its walls are of loving kindness, and its roof is of charity, broad enough and wide enough to cover and protect all mankind. It was invented by that grand old man and Master Mason, Rob Morris, and is known as "adoptive masonry." Our Order of the Eastern Star does not exist simply for its secrecy, for its greatest secret is no secret at all, but only the practice of doing good. Our secrecy imposes no obligation that would prevent or hinder our doing our duty to our church or to our God. We stand for virtue, truth and integrity of character. We stand for honor and all that encircles one's life with the halo of purity; for those jewels of the heart and attainments of the mind that constitute true and genuine womanhood and manhood.

FIRST GRAND CHAPTER IN ILLINOIS

The first Grand Chapter in the state of Illinois was formed in 1875 with twenty-two chartered chapters. Elizabeth Butler was the first worthy grand matron and D. G. Burr was the first worthy grand patron of the state. This first Grand Chapter met in Chicago. The oldest chapter in the state of Illinois is Miriam, No. 1, of Chicago. It was organized October 6, 1866, with thirty charter members. There are at present in the jurisdiction of the United States, 7,000 chapters with a membership of over 600,000. In the state of Illinois there are over 600 chapters with a membership of more than 66,000. (These figures are taken from reports to the last Grand Chapter, held in October, 1912.) There are in Rock Island county eight chapters with a membership of about 800. The first chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star to be organized in Rock Island county was Moline Chapter, No. 258. It was organized in 1893 with thirty-three charter members, about twenty-five of whom are still living. Mrs. Belle S. Morgan was the first worthy matron and is still an earnest and active worker in the chapter. She was honored by being appointed to the office of Grand Ruth in 1896 by the Worthy Grand Matron of Illinois, a position she filled with much credit to herself and Chapter and with honor to the Grand Chapter. Rock Island Chapter was the next one to be organized in the county. This chapter was also honored by having one of its officers, Mrs. Maria W. Kinyon, appointed to fill the office of Grand Electa in the Grand Chapter in 1898. She filled the office in a most praiseworthy manner.

A list of the different chapters of the Order of the Eastern Star in Rock Island county follows, with the membership at the close of the fiscal year. (1912.)

No. 258, Moline,	188 members.
No. 269, Rock Island	215 members.
No. 274, Coal Valley	63 members.
No. 326, Milan	39 members.
No. 456, Port Byron	40 members.
No. 516, Buffalo Prairie	92 members.
No. 617, Andalusia	73 members.
No. 626, Silvis	76 members.

The membership of the Order of the Eastern Star is composed of Master Masons in good standing, and their wives, daughters, mothers, widows and sisters. Its lessons are scriptural, its teachings moral, and its purposes beneficent. By the practice of the precepts of the Order, we cultivate a more trustful faith in God, a broader love of humanity, and a greater devotion to country, home and family. It teaches us the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.

THE WHITE SHRINE OF JERUSALEM

The Order of the White Shrine of Jerusalem is founded upon Christianity and events in the life of the Nazarene. Its emblems are the Star, the Shepherd's Crook, and the Cross, symbolical of the birth, life and death of our Savior, the Good Shepherd. Its motto is "In Hoc Signo Spes Mea," meaning, "In This Sign is My Hope."

The Order of the White Shrine of Jerusalem has been organized in this part of the state but recently. There is only one shrine of the Order in Rock Island county, in fact, it is the only one in several adjacent counties, as its jurisdiction covers Rock Island, Mercer and Henry counties and extends as far as Knox county, including also the nearby counties in Iowa, there being as yet no organization of the Order in that state. While it is not connected in any way with the Order of the Eastern Star, its membership is limited to members of that order. The highest governing body in the White Shrine of Jerusalem is the Supreme Shrine, composed of the different shrines throughout the various states comprising its jurisdiction. The Supreme Shrine meets annually.

VASHTI SHRINE OF ROCK ISLAND

Vashti Shrine No. 23, located at Rock Island, Ill., was instituted December 29, 1909, with 148 charter members. The first worthy high priestess was Mrs. Vashti A. Bollman, for whom the shrine was named in recognition of her untiring and zealous labors in bringing about its organization. At present it has a membership of 251, representing eighteen different chapters of the Order of the Eastern Star. It was instituted by Freeport Shrine, W. S. of J. The ceremony of initiation in the White Shrine is conducted only at semi-annual meetings, called ceremonials, when the degrees of the order are conferred upon a class of candidates. Its regular business meetings are held monthly. Vashti Shrine No. 23 has recently purchased a very fine set of robes for its officers, thus adding greatly to the impressiveness of the beautiful ritualistic work of the order.

The present worthy high priestess of Vashti Shrine, Mrs. Nellie S. Humphreys, of Atkinson, Henry county, Ill., was honored in the Order of the Eastern Star by having been elected to the office of associate grand conductress in the Grand Chapter of the state of Illinois at its session in October 1912. This means that in three more years, she will be elevated to the highest office in the order in the state, that of worthy grand matron. This is an honor and distinction that are duly appreciated by the members of both the orders of the Eastern Star and the White Shrine of Jerusalem in this county.

The mission of the White Shrine of Jerusalem is to spread the glad tidings of the coming of the King and point its members to a better and purer life. As the Star in the East sheds light and joy upon a darkened world, so the White Shrine of Jerusalem sheds light and instruction among its members, pointing the way to the Good Shepherd, who will lead his flock in green pastures and beside the still waters.

ASSOCIATION WITH MASONRY

The order of the Eastern Star is closely related to the Masonic fraternity, but is no part of that ancient institution. The wives, daughters, mothers, widows, sisters, half-sisters and adopted daughters of Master Masons in good standing, are eligible to membership with the Masonic brother.

The organization is growing rapidly and spreading wherever the Masonic lodge is found. Canada now has thirty-three chapters with a grand chapter at the head; Alaska has four; the Philippines have two; and there is one in Old Mexico. There are now more than 600,000 members of the Eastern Star, showing an annual increase of 6,000, with 400 new chapters formed this year. Illinois alone has over 66,000 members, which is an increase of 5,183 during the year which closed September 12, 1912, and there are 614 chapters in the state.

MOLINE CHAPTER, O. E. S.

The Moline Chapter O. E. S. was organized at Moline, Ill., December 29, 1893 in the Masonic hall on Third avenue and Seventeenth street. by Brother G. H. Wayne, Worthy Patron of Orion Chapter, acting as deputy grand patron, assisted by Sister Sophia Clark Scott of Mattoon, Ill., past grand matron and grand secretary, acting as deputy grand matron. Brother Conover of Rock Island acted as secretary and Sister Conover as grand conductress.

The following were charter members: Dr. J. W. Morgan (deceased), Mrs. Belle S. Morgan, Hugh H. Parks, Mrs. Hattie J. Parks, J. Boyd Knetzar, Mrs. Emma Knetzar, Leonard L. McCoy, Mrs. Alice L. The work was exemplified by the officers of Orion Chapter No. 93 with Mrs. Sophia C. Scott acting as worthy matron.

Moline chapter has grown from thirty-two members to about 200. When the Masons moved to the new Kerns building on Fifteenth street and Sixth avenue, the Eastern Star also rented the same hall, and holds its meetings on the first and third Monday nights of each month.

The following are past matrons: Mrs. Belle S. Morgan, 1894-95; Mrs. Mathilda Beatty, 1896-97; Mrs. Mary K. Entrikin, 1898-99; Mrs. Sena Anderson, 1900-01; Mrs. Louise Davis, 1902; Mrs. Ella Harris Edwards, 1903; Mrs. Mary G. OUTSIDE WORK OF CHAPTER

Moline chapter has exemplified the work at the institution of three new chapters. Brother H. H. Parks acting as deputy grand patron when Rock Island Chapter No. 269 was instituted in April, 1894, while Moline chapter was still a U. D. chapter, and Brother L. A. Vinton acted in a similar capacity at Colona, Ill., and at Rose Chapter, Silvas, Ill., and Mrs. Ella H. Edwards as deputy grand marshal when Silvis Chapter was instituted. Moline Chapter also exemplified the work when the Davenport, Ia., Chapter was reorganized. About one-half of the original charter members are still members and active in its work. We have three life members, John G. Beatty, Edward Harris and Mrs. Elizabeth Harris, to whom engraved certificates of membership were presented.

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS

The Modern Woodmen Society has its national headquarters in Rock Island, Ill., in which are employed some three hundred clerks. The society may fairly be considered as typical of the modern fraternal beneficiary system. The purpose of all of these orders is practically the same—to enable their members to cooperate fraternally; to furnish relief in the way of sickness and other benefits while living and pay substantial financial benefits to the dependents of deceased members. The Modern Woodmen Society differs only in the respect that, being one of the youngest of the beneficiary orders doing business in the United States, it has grown so rapidly that it now ranks as the leader of the fraternal system. It has 50 per cent more local lodges and members than any other fraternal order doing business in the United States, and more policy holders than any life insurance company. In looking back 100 years there were not, all told, over 3,200 members of secret societies in the United States, and 2,500 of these were Freemasons, the rest being of local secret patriotic societies, with a limited number of members in two or three old college fraternities. Today, about 50 per cent of the total male population between the ages of sixteen and seventy years, in the United States and Canada, is affiliated with the fraternal beneficiary societies alone, and possibly 10 per cent of the women of America are likewise allied with fraternal organizations.

OBJECTS OF THE ORDER

Fraternal beneficiary societies like the Modern Woodmen of America, however, can only trace their parentage back to 1868, when the original American society of this class, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, was organized by John Jordan Upchurch at Meadville, Penn. Aside from its enormous payments of death benefits, now aggregating, as the statement at the head of this article shows, some $94,122,350.93, the local lodge, or camps, as they are called, of the Modern Woodmen of America, constitute in themselves powerful agencies of fraternal helpfulness and charity. They are, in addition, social centers and they exert a powerful social influence wherever located, especially in the country districts. They are practically the only social centers at thousands of country cross-roads, and in the remote and lonely villages of the United States. In these camp halls the members of the society, with the members of their families, meet almost every week. During the winter seasons, thousands of these camps have lecture courses and other entertainments, tending to promote good fellowship and to bind the members and their families more closely together and to the society. During the summer months, out-of-door picnics and monster logrollings as they are called take the place of the winter entertainments.

FIRST LOCAL LODGE

The first local lodge or camp of the Modern Woodmen Society was organized at Lyons, Clinton county, Iowa, on January 5, 1883, with twenty-two charter members. In 1899, the society removed its national headquarters' offices from Fulton to Rock Island, Ill., where it occupies handsome steel and pressed brick offices owned by the society. Through these offices all the business of the society, conducted in forty-seven states and territories, is transacted.

GROWTH OF LIFE INSURANCE

The student of social and economic conditions in this country, cannot fail to be impressed by the fact that the life insurance business has grown to such importance that it is generally recognized as not only a good investment from a business standpoint, for the policy or benefit certificate holder, but is also almost a necessity. The progress of life insurance work is shown by the fact that a quarter of a century ago, there were not more than 1,500,000 policies and benefit certificates on lives insured, outstanding. Today, exclusive of industrial, accident and sick benefit forms of insurance, that number could be multiplied by ten and then would hardly equal the total held by those who have placed indemnity on their lives in that way. A quarter of a century ago the amount of insurance in force was but a little over $3,000,000,000; at the close of 1910, that sum had grown to be $25,000,000,000. It was in the year 1885 that the first state insurance department in this country was established. Now there are more than 200 level premium companies, more than 150 purely assessment associations, and in excess of 600 fraternal orders doing business in a strictly legal manner, under the regulation and control of the insurance departments of the various states.

HOME OF MODERN WOODMEN OF AMERICA

Life insurance concerns were originally organized and began operations in the eastern states. Since that time, however, the home offices of active, energetic and successful institutions of that kind are to be found in all parts of the country. For instance, here in Illinois, with its headquarters in Rock Island, is to be found the Modern Woodmen of America, the largest life insurance organization of its kind in the world. This insurance society at the close of 1910 had 1,129,805 benefit certificates in force, involving $1,786,098,000 of insurance. On the same date it had paid in death claims, since beginning business twenty-seven years ago, nearly $95,000,000. During the year 1910, it issued benefit certificates to 163,236 persons, with insurance amounting to over $254,000,000. The immense volume of business transacted at its headquarters, its tremendous growth, and small death rate, give it rank with the giant old line companies of the East, in business equipment, popularity and success. The record of this one society shows that the West is doing its part in life insurance work.

PAYMENT OF POLICIES

As a whole, the various insurance companies, societies and associations have paid to the beneficiaries of the insured, from the time of their respective beginnings, full seven billions of dollars. Much of this has gone to those who are poor, or are in moderate circumstances, and has enabled the widow often to provide herself with the comforts of life and to properly care for her children. The cost of this insurance has not been beyond the reach of those who carried it. It has been an investment that has made good; it has driven away poverty; it has lifted the mortgage from the home; it has given the mother an opportunity to educate her boys and girls and help to make them good and useful men and women. Life insurance has therefore become popular with the masses and it has come to stay. With the uncertainty of life, and the certainty of death, with poverty and distress facing thousands of homes, if the grim reaper should strike down the husband or father, the wise man will more and more throw around his life the protection which life insurance offers, for the reason that he knows that he should; that he can; and that it is his duty.

MEDICAL LIFE INSURANCE

It is, however, to be regretted that all men who need life insurance are not eligible for its benefits. Humanity is composed of the vigorous and the infirm, those whose environments are healthful and those whose lives are surrounded by unsanitary conditions. Heredity gives to some the tendency to long life and to others a predisposition to early death. Life insurance concerns are compelled to meet these conditions, and that they may be enabled to meet their current obligations, and also pay their death losses, a selection of risks is necessary, and with such selection Medical Life Insurance has to deal. How life insurance is based on life expectancy, and life expectancy is determined by mortality tables, and those tables apply to definite grades or classes of men, and therefore the life expectancy of applicants is determined by the respective classes to which they belong, and the selection of those classes requires knowledge of the physical status, heredity, habits, occupation, environments, etc., of the applicants.

With the medical department of an insurance company or society, therefore, rests entirely, its selection of risks, and to a great extent the perpetuity of the institution. All insurance organizations feel the invigorating influence of new blood brought in by the field men; the necessity of trained legal minds in its management; the power of organization and the push of the work in the hands of the executive; but in the end, when applicants are knocking at the doors of life insurance companies and societies, for admission, the solution of the problem as to which ones will be profitable risks, or, in other words, in what respective classes these applicants belong, and which of them will probably reach the expectancy of life, must rest with the trained medical men of those organizations. The medical selection of applicants has been one of evolution. Years ago, when life insurance was young, little attention was given to it. If a man wanted insurance and he appeared to be in good health, his request was granted. Even the age of the applicant in some of the first life organizations, cut no figure, as to cost; family history, past illnesses, the influence of environments, habits, and occupation, received little or no attention. The effect of this was that the death rate became heavy; the necessity of mortality tables which apportioned the cost, according to age and of a medical examination which would show whether the applicants were free from disease, or tendency thereto, became apparent.

As the years have come and gone, the selection of applicants from the medical standpoint has been of increasing value to life companies, societies and associations, as there has been a more intelligent discrimination in the applicants accepted. From the careless inspection of applicants in the early days of life insurance, medical selection now asks that they undergo rigid physical medical examination of all the vital bodily organs; that their surroundings be carefully inspected; that their habits of life be known, that all the material facts relating to family history be given.

With this information applicants can be more intelligently sifted and classified, and short-term deaths (policy or benefit certificate holders of less than five years) be materially reduced. The percentage of short-term deaths, in all insurance companies and societies having a satisfactory growth, has been heavy. A considerable percentage of this class of deaths of course, come from accident, which medical examination is powerless to prevent, but to the extent that careful medical selection has been pursued, a material reduction in percentages has followed. This is shown by the diagram giving the yearly percentage and reduction of deaths of this kind, in the Modern Woodmen of America from 1888 to 1910, inclusive. Accident and suicide have played their parts in the production of these short-term deaths, but notwithstanding that, the descending percentage line shows what medical selection has done in the direction of reduction.

In summation, it may be said that the medical part of life insurance work began in a crude and imperfect way. It has, as before stated, through a process of evolution, reached its present condition. In the consideration of life expectancy, which is the problem with which medical selection has to deal, it seeks to base its judgment as to the admission or rejection of applicants on reliable mortality experience, governing the classes of cases under consideration. Its desire is to get the truth; get the facts; and be impartially governed by them. Only in that way can inequity in medical selection be prevented; the number of early deaths reduced; a healthy growth maintained; and assistance to the stability and permanence of these institutions rendered.

In order that the reader, lay or otherwise, may gain an understanding of a society consisting of more than two and one half million members it is well to state briefly, some of the events which took place between its inception and final organization.

That the order originated in the first half of the Eighteenth century is evidenced from the pen of the celebrated Daniel De Foe, who, in the "Gentlemen's Magazine" for 1745, speaks of the Odd Fellows Lodge as "a place where very pleasant and recreative evenings are spent." Allusion to the Society of that early time in the "Keepsake" speaks of relief to its members on the "penny-a-week" plan, paid to its secretary on entering the lodge. History is, however, vague or silent in stating the specific aims, objects and teachings which seem to have characterized the society in later years. Strife and contention for the mastery among contemporary societies seem to have prevailed until the year 1809, when, the formation of the Manchester Unity took place, it being considered at that time the largest fraternal or beneficiary society in the world.

FOUNDER OF AMERICAN ODD FELLOWSHIP

Antedating the institution of the Manchester Unity, by a few years, Thomas Wildey, founder of American Odd Fellowship, who was born in London, England, January 15, 1782, on attaining his majority was initiated into an Odd Fellows Lodge. Immediately thereafter he distinguished himself as a man of wonderful zeal, integrity and administrative ability by instituting several lodges in and about London. Cheering and favorable reports from friends and brothers of the fraternity, led him to seek fame and fortune in favored lands beyond the sea. Possessing health, hope and an indomitable will he was sure of prosperity anywhere. Due to the fact that the animosities engendered by the late war had been successfully allayed by a revival of commercial relations and amity, he had good reason to look for and expect a full fruition of his ardent hopes, and accordingly in 1817, he emigrated to America. Arriving in Baltimore, Md., he at once took the initiative among a scattered membership of unorganized Odd Fellows, where, after eighteen months of discouraging yet ceaseless work, he decided to establish a lodge, and as it required five to institute same, he in conjunction with John Welch, inserted the following advertisement in the "Baltimore American," issue of March 27, 1819:

NOTICE TO ODD FELLOWS

"A few members of the Society of Odd Fellows will be glad to meet their brethren for the purpose of forming a Lodge, on Friday evening, 2d April, at the Seven Stars, Second street, at the hour of Seven P. M."

In proof of the value of advertising a company of brothers, who held informal meetings in response to the published notice, finally convened at the public house of Thomas Lupton, known as the "Seven Stars Inn" where they instituted under the charter laws of the State of Maryland, the first Lodge of American Odd Fellows.

ODD FELLOWSHIP

THE CRADLE OF PRACTICAL FRATERNALISM

Thomas Wildey, and five co-workers, on the night of April 26, 1819, at the Seven Stars Inn at Baltimore, Md., organized, instituted and caused to be chartered, Washington Lodge No. 1, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Thus was a new star added to the grand galaxy of constellations in the propaganda of man's betterment by the birth of a new and practical fraternity. The order thus started on its mission to fraternize the world was launched upon an unknown sea for the purpose of disseminating everywhere the peculiar yet ever impressive teachings of Friendship, Love and Truth. Many conjectured as to the safety of the voyage and its final haven. Man in his frailty had presented the Order to the world; hence, it was God's plan and problem awaiting man's solution.

RETROSPECTION

Little did that handful of men who founded the order ninety-four years ago conceive how well they were building. Phenomenal success has attended their handiwork from its inception to the present (1913). The recognition which Odd Fellowship has received in this and foreign lands where, for a brief season, royalty has laid aside both scepter and crown in order to pay homage to its sterling worth—has been a fitting and undying monument to its founders who builded so well in the long ago. In the rank and file of Odd Fellows can be found all classes and conditions of men, wealth and affluence, culture and refinement, the day laborer, the artisan and the mechanic, the merchant and professional man meet on the same level, acknowledging the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. Within the lodge room are: builders for time, for eternity, of friendship, of love and truth, of character, of wealth, of happiness, of homes—immortal builders.

Odd Fellows are good fellows, because they are odd fellows, for to be good Odd Fellows means good citizens. It means good fathers, good sons, good husbands, good lovers, good brothers, good neighbors and good friends.

DISSEMINATION OF THE CRAFT

Happy and ever content, we can find them exerting an elevating influence, and, as aggressive workers they can be found in the land of the midnight sun, in the temperate and tropical zones, and in the antarctic circle, where the Southern cross, by its strange phenomena, gracefully leans to and kisses the morning dawn. The secrecy of Odd Fellowship proves its grandeur. Its teachings demonstrate lasting stability and symmetrical proportions. Bound by indissoluble ties and intermingling by its teachings in the activities of every day life, its beauty can be best illustrated as follows: Far away in sunny southern Spain, on the southeast border of Portugal, in the Pyrenees Mountains, where the huntsman's rifle is heard, the shepherd watches his sheep and goats and the yeomen cultivate the soil in the upland plateau, each alike unmindful, that, underneath the earth's surface there rushes to the sea, a subterranean river called the Guadiana, save that here and there, through fissures and clefts in the rock-bound surface, fountains of water spring forth to sparkle in the noonday sun.

WEALTH AND NUMERICAL STRENGTH

The order of Odd Fellows as a collective body is neither rich nor poor. While it has accumulated and distributed millions, as later shown, its nearly one hundred years of history and experience is not measured by the possession of gold and silver or goods of tangible value, but by noble deeds. Its past has not been the result of, nor is its future dedicated to selfish aggrandizement, but to the care of the sick and aged, to the protection of the widow and the education of the orphan. Thus solidified, the society can challenge seemingly formidable aggression and successfully aid by philanthropic work, the betterment of home and society, the state and nation. In the initiatory and three degrees of the subordinate lodge, which typify Friendship, Love and Truth; the auxiliary or Rebekah degree, or in the higher branches of the society, viz: the Encampment or Cantons and Patriarchs Militant, which confer the Patriarchal, Golden Rule and Royal Purple degrees, are, like the Scarlet degree of the subordinate lodge, both spectacular and superbly grand, teaching, as they do, Christian belief and patriotism to our nation and its flag. In our country more than one million Odd Fellows of eligible age would stand willing and ready to draw the saber in favor of free institutions, the suppression of internal strife and our defense in case of foreign aggression. History records how, when Grant and Lee shook hands across the chasm of the civil strife and the enmities of the past were forgotten in the joy of returning peace, that thousands of Odd Fellows in the Union army clasped hands with their brothers in the Confederate army, thus cementing a friendship and loyalty to the flag of our nation that will never be broken.

HISTORY AND STATISTICS OF ROCK ISLAND COUNTY

The commencement of Odd Fellowship in the county dates back sixty-seven years. Rock Island Lodge No. 18, instituted July 4, and organized August 25, 1846, was the first lodge. It still survives with a strong and healthy membership, a grand past record and a bright future. The charter that hangs in the lodge room tells of the ravages of time, of things perishable and the inevitability of decay. Secured with great difficulty the charter list of members—all have long since completed their work and joined the Grand Lodge above—is herewith produced.

List of Charter Members.—Rock Island Lodge No. 18, I. O. O. F.: William Young, Ebenezer

S. Morey, Amos F. Cutter, C. D. Stewart and John H. Morton. Of the early days authentic record is not available, but it appears that Watch Tower Lodge No. 113, I. O. O. F.—date of organization not given—consolidated with Rock Island lodge No. 18, in July, 1860, and that Hecker Lodge No. 113—instituted subsequent to the closing of Watch Tower Lodge—also consolidated with Rock Island Lodge No. 18, January 4, 1892. Since the institution of Rock Island Lodge No. 18, it is quite difficult, if not impossible, to give the correct number of lodges instituted and closed out since 1846; suffice to say, that, at the present time, there are ten lodges in the county working under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, distributed as follows: Rock Island, 2; Moline, 3; Illinois City, 1; Port Byron, 1; Coal Valley, 1; Reynolds, 1; and East Moline, 1.

With a membership in the county approximating 2,000 at the close of 1912, its financial showing exhibits a very encouraging and progressive condition. Due to the incompleteness of annual reports since the Grand Lodge adjournment in November, nevertheless the statement for the year 1912 is passing true and is as follows:

ORDER OF REBEKAH, AN AUXILIARY OF ODD FELLOWS

Were it possible for the teachings of the church and influence of the lodge to be effectual in the elevation of mankind to ideal perfection, human laws would be superfluous and earth an Eden. Unfortunately however, man is far from being perfect, hence the agencies of church and lodge must continue to minister to his necessities.

While men are largely a negligible quantity in the secret halls of the Rebekah lodge, the sisters are nevertheless accomplishing a great work. As an auxiliary, working hand in hand with Odd Fellows, in recognition of their sterling worth, it is thought that a statement of what they are doing in Illinois will be of special interest to the lay member and public generally.

WORK OF THE ORPHANS' HOME AND OLD FOLKS' HOME OF ILLINOIS

Having presented the numerical and financial condition of the society, there still remains two of the many important things which commend Odd Fellowship, i. e., its two homes:

* There are two helpless periods in life—youth and old age, which are fittingly looked after and provided for by the society. In Lincoln, the cradle of youth is tenderly rocked, while the pillow is lovingly smoothed for the old age at Mattoon, two institutions that are the brightest jewels in the diadem of Odd Fellowship.

ORPHANS' HOME

"As haughtily and hastily we're passing by, will we heed for a moment the orphan's cry?"

At Lincoln, Ill., the society has ten buildings and 160 acres of land—fully stocked and equipped—where, under the management of a competent matron and corps of instructors in the English branches, agriculture, industrial and art courses, the orphans are tenderly, lovingly and affectionately provided for. At the present time 170 little girls and boys are being trained, from whose ranks many will go into good homes, as they do annually, properly equipped for the battle of life. The value of the home is nearly $200,000, primarily maintained by the subordinate lodges, while in later years it is annually becoming more and more self-supporting.

OLD FOLKS' HOME

Amid fertile fields and pastoral scenes of woodland and blooming prairies, a farm of 135 acres, with buildings and equipment, worth at least $150,000, near Mattoon, is located the Old Folks' Home.

Here 125 brothers and their wives, and sisters of Rebekah, are enjoying, at the sunset of life, blessings—made possible by the society. Here, on the open portico during summer days and twilight evenings, or gathered around the cheering hearth throughout the long winter months, the tired mind and wearied body, seeking rest and refuge from the turmoil and strife of life, may spend their declining days in peace and rest. Here hoary headed brothers and sisters can find an "Arcadia" or haven of rest. Thus, hand in hand, they accompany each other down the steep declivity of life to a golden sunset, knowing that Odd Fellows will minister to their every want and necessity until beckoned away to a home beyond the stars.

As they gather at eventide to sing in fraternal unison a song that will be carried over the hills and valleys, finding a sweet, responsive echo in all hearts, the song of Odd Fellows, the song of ages past and ages to come, "Home, Sweet Home," will not the results of such golden endeavor, fruit crowned by hallowed toil, be an inspiration to all?

Not alone in Illinois is this grand work being carried on. In the United States and Canada, fifty institutions of a like nature, conducted and maintained by Odd Fellows, are proving a boon to man in teaching and promoting the example of the lowly Nazarene.

MOTTO AND LINES

Odd Fellowship, whether taught in templed halls or practiced at large, is progressive. It is a philanthropic institution, conducted on business methods, appealing, as it does, to young men. Its purpose is, "We command you to visit the sick, relieve the distressed, bury the dead, care for the widow and educate the orphan." Its motto is: "Friendship, Love and Truth." It is non-sectarian and non-partisan.

The Odd Fellows, as a society, has long since passed the experimental stage. The outlook is better and brighter than ever before. Treasures, as yet untouched, in the years to come will develop greater resourcefulness. Grandeur and better lessons await inculcation. Complexities of life will be simplified and the truthfulness of life's mysteries will be clearly and fully comprehended as in the following lines:

FRIENDSHIP

"Tis Friendship that ties men together as brothers,
When one shares success with the failure of others,
And Heaven will bless them who cheerfully give Their time and their talent in helping men live.
What virtue this Friendship has gathered in store,
Will rest in the bosom of Love evermore,
And these with the emblem of Truth will adorn,
The life that plants roses where once was a thorn."

BENEVOLENT AND PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS

FIRST LODGE AT ROCK ISLAND—FIRST OFFICIALS AND PRESENT QUARTERS—FIRST ORGANIZATION

IN ILLINOIS—STATE CONVENTIONS.

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks is represented at Rock Island by Rock Island Lodge No. 980, which was instituted June 26, 1905, with about fifty-five members. B. F. Knox being the first exalted ruler. A hall and club rooms were fitted up in the Illinois Theatre building and the first officers were: B. Frank Knox, exalted ruler; J. W. Houser, esteemed leading knight; Robert Reynolds, esteemed loyal knight; J. C. Dunn, esteemed leading knight; Sam Kaufman, secretary; H. B. Simmon, treasurer; S. Mosenfelder, tyler; Sam Ryerson, esquire; William C. Totten, inner guard, and A. L. McDonald, chaplain. The first trustees were: Carl Helpenstell, E. J. Sommers, and John Ohlweiler. By 1907 new quarters became necessary and the handsome building the order now occupies near the foot of Eighteenth street, was especially constructed for it. The new home was dedicated January 31, 1908, following a parade which was headed by grand lodge officers and participated in by the lodges of the three cities of Rock Island, Moline and Davenport. The lodge and club rooms occupy the second and third floors, the first being used for business purposes, and are modern, handsomely furnished and complete in every way for an Elks' Home. The lodge now has nearly 500 members and a large waiting list. The present officers are: Samuel Ryerson, exalted ruler; Arthur H. Hanus, esteemed leading knight; William Roth, esteemed loyal knight; Glenwood E. Baker, esteemed lecturing knight; John J. Hasley, secretary; Lowry M. Casteel, treasurer; Harry T. Knox, tyler; George Stroehle, inner guard; Clarence N. Isaacson, esquire; Lee H. Kaupke, organist; W. F. Barth, chaplain; and H. W. Tremann, W. Louis Long and George G. Kuhns, trustees. The past exalted rulers are: B. F. Knox, J. W. Houser, J. C. Dunn, S. R. Davis, L. C. Lamphere, Robert R. Reynolds, and Arthur T. Huesing.

Moline Lodge No. 556, B. P. O. E., was instituted in 1903. The lodge rooms were first located in the Odd Fellows' hall at Third avenue and Sixteenth street, but later removal was made to club rooms on the second floor of the old postoffice building, which were occupied for about four years, at which time the lodge moved into its present commodious quarters on the third floor of the same building. The present officers of the lodge are: George H. Lingburg, exalted ruler; John H. Grillk, esteemed leading knight; W. C. Crowder, esteemed loyal knight; Carl A. Stoaeltig, esteemed lecturing knight; A. R. Ammerman, secretary; R. M. Johnson, treasurer; E. L. Ennis, tyler; M. R. Carlson, chaplain; J. W. Wallace, inner guard; and A. E. Fensterbusch, esquire.

The first lodge to be established in Illinois belonging to this order, was Chicago Lodge No. 4, which was organized October 15, 1876, in the city whose name it bears, and at that time it was the fourth founded in the United States. Now there are over 1,300 lodges of Elks in the United States, and sixty-four of these are in Illinois. The present state officers are: Dr. I. A. Lumpkin, president, Mattoon, No. 495; W. H.

Christian, Bondant.

MARY DENHARDT

Crum, vice-president, Springfield, No. 158; James A. Powers, secretary, Joliet, No. 296; and Sam Ryerson, treasurer, Rock Island, No. 980. The state executive committee is composed of the following members: Dr. A. R. DeCosta, Jr., chairman, Bloomington, No. 281; Arthur W. Johnson, Chicago, No. 4; M. W. Snell, Litchfield, No. 654; and F. L. Sharpe, Jacksonville, No. 682. The Tenth annual state convention of the Elks was held at Rock Island, June 3, 4 and 5, 1913, being attended by delegates from the sixty-four lodges of the state. The state convention of the order was held at Moline when Andrew Olson of Moline Lodge was third vice-president of the state association.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

ORGANIZATION OF LODGES—ST. GEORGE, MOLINE—ST. PAUL, ROCK ISLAND—RIVERSIDE, CORDOVA—ALBRECHT, PORT BYRON—MILAN, MILAN—CAMPBELL, WATERTOWN—PYTHIAN SISTERS—MEMBERSHIP AND RAPID GROWTH OF THE ORDER—PYTHIAN HOME—GRAND LODGE OFFICERS.

ORGANIZATION OF LODGES

The history of the Knights of Pythias in Rock Island county, which now has six lodges and a membership of 408, began with the organization of St. George Lodge No. 28, at Moline, April 6, 1872. The next to fall in line was St. Paul Lodge, No. 107, which was organized July 20, 1882, at Rock Island; then followed Riverside Lodge, No. 1429, organized at Cordova, February 23, 1886; Albrecht Lodge, No. 307, organized at Port Byron, September 21, 1891; Milan Lodge, No. 477, organized at Milan, June 29, 1894; Campbell Lodge, No. 671, organized at Watertown, October 7, 1905. While these lodges all have comfortable and commodious lodge rooms, and St. George, of Moline, has handsome club rooms, Albrecht Lodge, at Port Byron, is the only one which owns its building. At this writing there is no lodge of the Uniform Rank in the county, but a lodge of the dramatic order of the Knights of Khorassan is under consideration, and it will probably be organized in the very near future. Three times has the Grand Lodge met in Rock Island county, first at Rock Island, October 20, 1896, and again October 20, 1903. The third meeting was at Moline, October 15, 1907. These were great occasions in the local history of the order, and will be long remembered.

St. George Lodge of Moline has recently purchased a lot at Riverside cemetery, and erected a monument upon it, so that any member of the order without other place of burial may here find a last resting spot. The following are the present officers: C. F. Grantz, chancellor commander; David Engstrom, vice chancellor; Hjuahar Lindburg, prelate; Arvid Lundahl, master at arms; Charles Saunders, master of works; John D. Petrie, keeper of records; A. E. Danielson, master of finance; George Lundquist, master of the exchequer; Edward Bickler, inner guard; Roy Kelley, outer guard; and F. W. White, O. E. Owens and W. C. Crossman, trustees. A. E. Danielson is representative to the Grand Lodge and is also state deputy of district No. 19, to which Rock Island belongs. Frank Shaffer of Port Byron is the county deputy. The membership of this lodge is 193.

The officers of St. Paul Lodge, Rock Island, for the year 1913, are as follows: E. C. Reynolds, chancellor commander; Frank Bodell, vice chancellor; Frank O. Larson, prelate; Thomas Journey, master of works; S. R. Wright, keeper of records and seals; S. R. Wright, master of finance; Samuel Ryerson, master of the exchequer; William Lamont, master at arms; John Stroehle, inner guard; Thomas Journey, outside guard; and Frank O. Larson, William Lamont and John Stroehle, trustees. Samuel Ryerson is the representative to the Grand Lodge. The membership is sixty.

Albrecht Lodge of Port Byron, No. 307, is represented in the Grand Lodge by Frank Morgan, while Milan Lodge, No. 477, is represented in the Grand Lodge by Charles A. Brandenburg. The membership of the former is seventy-three, and of the latter twenty-seven. The officers of Milan Lodge for the year 1913 are: F. A. Miller, chancellor commander; Mearl McCullough, vice chancellor; Jerome W. Caldwell, prelate; Charles A. Dupew, master of works; Charles A. Hull, keeper of records and seals; William Brandenburg, master of finance; Charles A. Brandenburg, master of exchequer; Glen Fitzsimmons, master at arms; Bernard Bowman, inner guard; James Murphy, outside guard; and Glen Fitzsimmons, William Brandenburg and William O'Neal, trustees. Campbell Lodge, No. 671, of Watertown, is represented in the Grand Lodge by William J. Jones, and has thirty-six members.

The ladies' auxiliary, the Pythian Sisters, formerly the Rathbone Sisters, is represented in the county by three temples, St. George, situated at Moline, and one at Port Byron and another at Cordova. The officers of St. George Temple, Moline, for 1913 are: Mrs. Rose Moran, past chief; Mrs. Nettie Grantz, most excellent chief; Mrs. Anna Owens, senior; Mrs. Clara Lundt, junior; Mrs. Emma Holt, manager; Mrs. Jennie Renoe, mistress of finance; Mrs. Emma Keller, mistress of records and correspondence and deputy; Mrs. Ida Schofer, protector; Mrs. Jennie Boone, guard; and Mrs. Ella Wehrend and Mrs. Emma Holt, trustees. Port Byron Temple No. 108 was organized in 1905, with thirty charter members. St. George Temple was instituted May 1, 1900, by Mrs. Abbie McCall, with forty-nine charter members. Two conventions have been entertained by this temple, the first on October 25, 1907, and the second, June 19, 1913.

The membership of this order in Illinois is 56,000, and there are 528 lodges. During 1913 a great record was made, more than 1,200 new members being admitted and initiated in one class. During 1912 the Knights of Pythias expended $126,757.63 for relief. There is a Pythian Home at Decatur, Ill., the ground for which was donated by the lodges and citizens of Decatur, it comprising forty acres. The erection of the building was commenced in 1907, and the home was dedicated in 1909, its cost being $150,000, and it now contains sixteen adults and thirty-five children who are cared for at the expense of the Pythian lodges of Illinois.

The Pythian Grand Lodge officers of Illinois for 1913 are: Joseph M. Omo, Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago, grand chancellor; William K. Whitfield, Decatur, grand vice chancellor; Thomas Williamson, Edwardsville, grand prelate; Henry P. Caldwell, W. Madison street, Chicago, grand keeper of records and seals; Millard F. Dunlap, Jacksonville, grand master of exchequer; Augustus A. Partlow, Danville, grand master at arms; John J. Reeve, Jacksonville, grand inner guard; Walter C. Hayes, Belvidere, grand outer guard; and William D. Hadfield, Peoria, John F. Parsons, Joliet, and

Edward T. Guthrie, Mattoon, trustees. The supreme representatives for 1913 are: John J. Brown, Vandalia; William G. Edens, Chicago; Albert Watson, Mt. Vernon; Eugene E. Bone, Springfield; and John B. INCORPORATION

The Royal Neighbors of America is incorporated under the fraternal insurance laws of the state of Illinois, under date of March 21, 1893, at which time more than five hundred applicants for a charter succeeded in transforming a social organization, of some years standing, into a society with the protective features of beneficial insurance.

As a social organization its early history dates from December, 1888, when sixteen women met in Council Bluffs, Iowa, in the homes of the various promoters and formed themselves into a little club which was an auxiliary to Camp

No. 171 of the Modern Woodmen of America, its purpose being to assist socially and otherwise, the members of Camp No. 171. The society was known by the name of Woodmen Bees, but it later changed to its present name, and the colors adopted to represent the society were those of purple and white.

RECOGNITION AND ORIGINAL INCORPORATORS

This society was recognized the first time as an auxiliary to the Modern Woodmen of America at their head camp in Omaha, Neb. The ritual and constitution were prepared and approved at a meeting of the society, held January 2, 1890. The underlying principles of the society are faith, modesty, courage, unselfishness and endurance, and their motto is Ex Fide Fortis, which means firm by faith. As a social organization the incorporators of the society were: Miss Lillian Huff, Mrs. M. L. Kirkland, Mrs. M. B. Hayden, Mrs. S. Hennessey, Mrs. E. F. Belknap, Mrs. J. A. Swanson, Mrs. M. M. Filbert.

MEETINGS OF THE SUPREME CAMP

The first supreme camp meeting of the society was held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, on June 26, 1890, for the purpose of completing the organization, as there were as yet no local organizations. On July 3, 1890, this supreme camp met again and reorganized into the first local camp, which was given the name of "Lilly Camp No. 1," of Council Bluffs, Iowa. At a special meeting of the supreme camp, held April 7, 1891, a resolution was unanimously adopted, providing for the admission of men as members of the Royal Neighbors of America. The second annual meeting of the supreme camp was held at Omaha, Neb., January 4-5, 1893, when there were eighteen camps with 850 members represented. At this meeting it was decided to make the society more than a social and fraternal auxiliary of the Modern Woodmen of America by establishing a benefit or insurance department, and committees were appointed at the next supreme session. At the fourth supreme camp meeting, held in Peoria, Ill., January 3, 4 and 5, 1894, there were forty-five local camps with 1,567 members reported in good standing. After hearing the report of the committee on benefit plan, appointed at the Omaha meeting, the supreme camp decided that in order to complete this department it would be necessary for the society to reincorporate under the laws of the State of Illinois. The society had previously been organized as a social society under the laws of Iowa, on April 25, 1890. In order to incorporate under the laws of Illinois it was necessary that the supreme office be changed from Council Bluffs, Iowa, to some city in Illinois, and upon ballot the city of Peoria, Ill., was chosen, and later in 1908 it was changed to Rock Island, Ill.

The matter of putting into operation the insurance feature was left with the board of supreme managers, who appointed a beneficiary committee, which consisted of prominent members of the Modern Woodmen of America, namely, Maj. C. W. Hawes and directors J. G. Johnson and J. W. White, and under the supervision of these gentlemen, the Royal Neighbors of America, incorporated and established its benefit department substantially as it is to-day, a new charter being issued by the Illinois Insurance Department on March 21, 1895.

PRESENT MEMBERSHIP

This society ranks the highest in comparison with all fraternal beneficiary societies which insure women. Its membership, April 1, 1911, was 288,941, of which number 217,929 carry insurance, amounting to $231,330,250. During the year 1910 the increase in membership was 34,250, and the amount paid out in death claims during the same year was $1,047,874.35, the total amount paid out from the society's benefit fund on death claims since organization is $6,959,325.94.

The average number of assessments during the past two years has been ten annually, but at the supreme camp, held in Denver, Colo., the laws changed, making it necessary to collect at least twelve assessments annually. The rates of assessment in 1911 were the same as when the society was organized, and the amounts of insurance granted members who can pass a satisfactory medical examination range in amount from $250 to $2,000, the age limit being fifty years for $500; forty-five years for $1,000, and forty-one years for $1,500 and $2,000. Assessments are graded according to age of members at entry.

The society does business in forty states and provinces, in which there are more than 6,500 camps at the present time. The death rate is exceedingly low as great care is taken in medical selection. The death rate at the present time is 5.3 per thousand members, which is one-tenth of one person greater than in the previous year. The society has an extensive field force, whose services, together with the natural increase in the local camps increases the membership at the average rate of about 2,500 monthly. The society is officered entirely by women who have the privilege of seeking legal advice from good authority among the male members. The ritualistic work of the society is instructive and impressive. The business interests of the society are carried on under charge of the various officers.

WORK OF SUPREME RECORDER

The work of the supreme recorder, at Rock Island, Ill., is the most extensive, in which she is assisted by a corps of seventy-five clerks, whose hours are from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M. The account departments of the office are conducted on the card system, this being used wherever practicable, although in some instances bound records are an absolute necessity. The ease with which the work is done speaks well for the system by the present supreme recorder (1911), Myrtle E. Dade, who has had charge of the office for thirteen years as beneficiary recorder, and for three years as supreme recorder, and has seen the society develop to its present magnificent proportion during the sixteen years of its existence. To Mrs. Lina M. Collins, of St. Paul, Minn., much credit was due for the great increase in membership during the three years of her incumbency as supreme oracle. Owing to the election of new supreme officers at the Denver supreme camp, Mrs. Myra B. Enright, of Kansas City, Kan., became supreme oracle, early in July, 1911.

THE NORTH STAR BENEFIT ASSOCIATION

During the early part of 1899, Dr. E. A. Edlen, a practicing physician and surgeon of Moline, Ill., called some of the leading men in Moline and Rock Island together for the purpose of organizing a fraternal life insurance society which white persons could join without violating their religious scruples. A committee was selected to draft a constitution and by-laws containing the best features of existing societies and such new ones, as would insure the stability of the new society. Having secured a required membership, the committee called the members together for the purpose of organizing a non-secret and non-sectarian fraternal insurance association. This organization was perfected July 14, 1899, and was named The North Star Benefit Association. On July 18, 1899, the articles of incorporation were filed with and approved by the Insurance Department of Illinois. The first Grand Observatory was held in Moline, August 1, 1899, by delegates representing a membership of 525 men and women. It was a memorable day in fraternal insurance history, as this was the first non-secret and non-sectarian society of its kind in existence. The builders of this association may well be proud of their achievement, as the subsequent history of the society has demonstrated, for "they builded even better than they knew."

The first elected officers of the North Star Benefit Association were: J. L. Murphy, chief astronomer; Geo. W. Johnson, assistant chief astronomer; G. L. Peterson, chief recorder; F. A. Landee, chief treasurer; E. A. Edlen, chief medical director; Frank Hubenet, chief conductor. The board of directors was made up as follows: V. O. Peterson, Jas. F. Myers, Olof Sohlberg, M. O. Williamson, Ole O. Roe, Oscar Nelson, Chas. G. Carlson. All the above are able and representative men in the community who carefully nursed and guarded the interests of the infant association. The majority of these officers are still heading the association, indicating that the first choice was fortunate, and that these men have made good. There has been no mushroom growth in membership, but a steady increase in an excellently selected class of members. Today it counts 6,200 members in 106 local Observatories. The death rate has been low all through the history of the society, averaging $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per thousand, owing in great part to the careful selection of risks by the Medical Department, and 304 death and accident claims have been paid, amounting to \$293,290.45. The management of the association has ably and masterfully conducted the society's affairs and has well guarded its capital as evidenced by the proportionately great amount of money the society has in its various funds. One-third of all the money that members have paid into the Benefit Fund since the organization of the society remains as surplus.

The North Star Benefit Association's per capita Reserve Fund is one of the largest of any fraternal society in existence. Its combined available assets September 1, 1913, amounted to the sum of $170,000.00. The society so far has been licensed to do business only in Illinois, Iowa and Minnesota. The present corps of chief officers are: Jas. F. Myers, chief astronomer, Rock Island, Ill.; F. H. Burrell, assistant chief astronomer, Clinton, Ia.; G. L. Peterson, chief recorder, Moline, Ill.; Chas. A. Samuelson, chief treasurer, Sherrard, Ill.; E. A. Edlen, chief medical director, Moline, Ill.; J. A. Erickson, chief conductor, Joliet, Ill.

The members of the board of directors are: Chas. J. Searle, Rock Island, Ill.; Chas. G. Carlson, Moline, Ill.; M. O. Williamson, Galesburg, Ill.; C. R. Chindblom, Chicago, Ill.; G. W. Johnson, Moline, Ill.; John F. Johnston, DeKalb, Ill.; J. C. Coster, Muscatine, Ia.

CHAPTER XXX

MISCELLANEOUS

COAL AND COAL MINING

In that portion of Rock Island county lying west of Rock river the coal measures are found as outliers, overlaying and resting upon the Devonian and Silurian limestone, as far north as in the vicinity of Port Byron, where it terminates. The most northerly point where a workable bed of coal has been found on this side of the river is at Rapids City, where the seam is from four to five feet thick, and overlies the Niagara limestone, with only a few feet in thickness of shale and fire clay between. Two miles east of Hampton, where coal shafts have been sunk, are good seams from four to five feet thick. The Carbon Cliff mines were the first to be worked on the west side of Rock river. For many years extensive coal operations, in connection with an establishment for the manufacture of pottery and fire brick, were carried on there, under the management of W. S. Thomas, but the supply of coal became exhausted and mining was discontinued.

The triangular piece of elevated land east of the city of Rock Island, bounded by Pleasant Valley, Rock river and the Mississippi river, is a mass of coal measure materials resting upon a Devonian or upper Silurian formation of underlying limestone. All that part of the county south and east of the Mississippi and Rock river ranges of bluffs is underlaid by coal measures. In every part of the county these measures are covered with a deep deposit of drift clay. At Milan, Carbon Cliff, and east of the city of Rock Island this drift clay is from forty to seventy-five feet in thickness. South of Rock river the coal measures are more regular, and more extensively developed than in the northern part of the county.

The coal mining interest is an important branch of industry in Rock Island county. According to the inspector's report of 1876 there were twenty-six mines regularly operated in the county eight months of the year, and some twenty others occasionally worked. In these mines were employed an aggregate of 941 miners, the average for the whole time being 650. Six important mines were operated constantly. The total number of tons of coal mined for the year was 299,225; its value at the mines was \$597,917. The average value of coal at the mines was \$1.99 per ton. The amount of capital invested in the mines at that time was \$243,750. The capacity of the mines worked was 506,550 tons annually. The thickness of the coal seams varies from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to $5\frac{1}{2}$ feet, and they are reached at a depth of from 40 to 120 feet. The coal is raised at the principal mines by steam power.

In the fall of 1879 a strike for higher wages occurred among the coal miners at Hampton and Rapids City. It continued six weeks and on January 12, 1880, culminated in a riot at the Hampton mines in Happy Valley. A sheriff's posse was called out, several leaders were arrested and brought to Rock Island. After trial they were released and returned to their homes.

Rock Island county forms a part of the Second Coal Inspection District of the state of Illinois, the other counties in the district being Bureau, Henry, Knox, Mercer, Stark and Warren. In 1912 there were 275 working coal mines in the state, thirteen of these being situated in Rock Island county. These employed 157 men, and mined 72,246 tons of coal during the year.

PLANTING OF TOTEM POLE BY INDIANS

The following was written by Alfred Sanders, afterwards General Sanders, of Davenport, Ia., in July, 1845, soon after the murder of Colonel Davenport which occurred July 4 of that year, and appears in "Davenport Past and Present" published by Franc B. Wilkie in 1858:

"On last Friday afternoon we were witness to a strange and interesting ceremony performed by the Indians over the remains of Colonel Davenport, who was murdered at his residence on Rock Island on the 4th inst. Upon proceeding to the beautiful spot selected as his last resting place, in the rear of his mansion on Rock Island, we found the war chief and braves of the Fox Indians, then encamped in the vicinity of this place, reclining on the grass around his grave, at the head of which was planted a white cedar post some seven or eight feet in height. The ceremony began by two of the braves rising and walking to the post, upon which, with paint, they began to inscribe certain characters, while a third brave, armed with an emblematic war club, after drinking to the health of the deceased from a cup placed at the base of the post, walked three times round the grave, in an opposite direction to the course of the sun, at each revolution delivering a speech with sundry gestures, and emphatic motions in the direction of the northeast. When he had ceased he passed the club to another brave, who went through the same ceremony, passing but once round the grave, and so in succession with each one of the braves. This ceremony would appear pantomimic to one unacquainted with the habits or language of the Indians, but after a full interpretation of their proceedings they would be found in character with this traditionary people. In walking round the grave in a contrary direction to the course of the sun, they wished to convey the idea that the ceremony was an original one. In their speeches they informed the Great Spirit that Colonel Davenport was their friend, and they wished the Great Spirit to open the door to him, and to take charge of him. The enemies whom they had slain, they called upon to act in capacity of waiters to Colonel Davenport in spirit-land, they believing that they have unlimited power over those whom they have slain in battle. Their gestures toward the northeast were made in allusion to their great enemies, the Sioux, who live in that direction.

They recounted the deeds of battle, with the number they had slain, and taken prisoners. Upon the post were painted, in hieroglyphics, the number of the enemy they had slain, those taken prisoner, together with the tribe and station of the brave. For instance, the feats of Wari-co-shaw-she, the chief, were thus portrayed. Ten headless figures were painted, which signified that he had killed ten men. Four others were then added, one of them smaller than the others, signifying that he had taken four prisoners, one of whom was a child. A line was then run from one figure to another, terminating in a plume, signifying that all had been accomplished by a chief. A fox was then painted over the plume, which plainly told that the chief was of the Fox tribe of Indians. The characters were so expressive that if an Indian of any tribe whatsoever were to see them, he would at once understand them. Following the sign of Pau-tau-co-to, who thus proved himself a warrior of high degree, were placed twenty headless figures, being the number of Sioux he had slain.

"The ceremony of painting the post was followed by a feast, prepared for the occasion, which by them was certainly deemed the most agreeable part of the proceedings. Meat, vegetables and pies were served up in such profusion that many armsful of the fragments were carried off (it being a part of the ceremony which is religiously observed, that all victuals left upon such an occasion are to be taken to their homes). At a dog feast, which is frequently given by them, and to which white men are occasionally invited, the guest is either obliged to eat all that is placed before him, or hire some other person to do so, else it is considered a great breach of hospitality. With the feast terminated the exercises of the afternoon, which were not only interesting, but highly instructive to those who witnessed them."

This identical totem pole has been preserved and is now the property of the Rock Island County Historical Society. It was shown at the recent meeting of the Old Settlers of Rock Island County, held at Black Hawk's Watch Tower, September 4, 1913.

THE DUBUQUE RIOT

On July 29, 1869, what is known in Mississippi river history as "The Dubuque Riot" occurred, in which the steamboat Dubuque was seized while en route from Rock Island to Hampton, and four persons were killed. This boat was the property of the Northern Line Packet company, and ran from St. Louis to St. Paul, carrying a crew part white and part colored. On the day of the riot a number of raftsmen had boarded her at various ports, and at Davenport, on the eve of the tragedy, fully two hundred of them came on board with the intention of returning home, having completed their work of taking their rafts of lumber down the river. The boat was under the command of Capt. John Rhodes, with Daniel V. Dawley and Theodore Jones as clerks, and James Sweet as mate.

The riot started when Clerk Jones began collecting fares. As was the custom, he posted one of his colored crew at the stairway with instructions to let no one pass unless he had a ticket. The raftsmen resented this and one of their number attacked the colored man. Others of his race, four in number, were killed, the officers being unable to defend their men, although they did everything in their power to assist them. Captain Rhodes endeavored to maintain his authority, and kept his boat on its way, tactfully waiting until he could get word to the proper authorities so that the guilty parties might be arrested. As many of the colored crew and passengers as could get off, left the boat at Hampton and walked to Moline and Rock Island. The sheriff of Rock Island county was notified of the outrage from Port Byron Junction, now East Moline, and a posse of one hundred citizens, under command of Deputy Sheriff William Payne, now Senator Payne, with Officers Woods, Tompkins, Snyder and Murrin, started in pursuit of the boat on a special train over the Western Union road. After consultation, it was decided to capture the boat at the Clinton bridge. Among the men in the posse was the city marshal of Clinton, who, being at Rock Island when the posse was formed, joined it and gave Deputy Payne many valuable suggestions, and sent a dispatch to the authorities at Clinton to have a sufficient force at the landing to seize the Dubuque when she docked, and arrest the rioters. According to instructions the drawbridge was to be kept shut so that the boat might be captured in mid stream, but it swung open and the Dubuque docked, and Deputy Payne soon had his men so posted that the arrests were made without serious difficulty. Forty-four men were arrested and charged with murdering Moses Davis, William Armstead and two other colored men, all deck hands of the Dubuque. From the beginning the authorities recognized the fact that the ringleader of the gang was Simon Lynch, who had escaped at Hampton. He was not captured until March, 1870, when Deputy Payne traced him to Clarendon, Ark., and took him prisoner. The man confessed at once, but pleaded that he had been under the influence of liquor. His trial was held at the September term of the court, in 1870, and he was given ten years in the penitentiary, which he served. The other rioters who were convicted, some seven in number, received terms in the penitentiary varying from one to three years. One good effect of the riot was that it ended the control of the raftsmen over the boats, which had lasted for thirty years.

This riot excited widespread attention and much comment, accounts of it being published in London papers, an unusual thing in those days. The Northern Line Packet company paid all the expenses, thus relieving the county, and fulfilling its promises made at the time of the capture of the rioters. A most interesting and exhaustive account of this riot, written by one of the principals in the subsequent proceedings, Senator William Payne, was issued by the Rock Island Daily Union under date of August 1, 2 and 3, 1910. Did space permit this article to be quoted in full, it would add to the value of this work, but as it is, only a brief excerpt can be given.

BUILDING OF THE FORT

The Rock Island Arsenal which has a national importance, lies between the tri-cities of Rock Island and Moline in Illinois, and Davenport in Iowa, upon the island of Rock Island. The latter is located in the Mississippi river just opposite the upper portion of the city of Rock Island, and its area is about two and three-quarter miles long by three-fourths of a mile wide. It contains upward of 1,000 acres. The base of the island is of the Hamilton limestone group, and at the lower end this rocky outcrop forms an almost perpendicular wall to a considerable height above the swirling waters of the river beneath. This wall of solid rock gave the island its appropriate name and from it was taken the nomenclature of both the city of Rock Island and the county as well.

The story of the Island of Rock Island is one full of interest and romance. While it has been continuously in possession of the federal government since its purchase from the Indians in 1804, and the remainder of the time since used as a military reservation, there have been many attempts to wrest it from the government, and in a number of instances control has been retained by only a hairbreadth. For many years it was the cause of constant strife between the federal government and all manner of claimants, speculators and adventurers. In this contest many men whose names subsequently were made famous in the history of the nation, have taken part. Singularly enough, Jefferson Davis, at one time secretary of war of the United States and later president of the Confederate States of America, and leader of the secession movement in the South, was one of the best and most efficient friends the island ever had. It was due to his influence more than to that of any other one man that it was preserved as a federal military possession.

When early explorers passed by this attractive island in the Father of Waters, with its towering cliffs and exquisitely beautiful forest trees and luxuriant undergrowth, their attention was called to its advantages. This territory having been acquired by the government through a treaty with the Indians, it was soon decided by those in charge of frontier affairs that owing to the close proximity of warlike Indians, it would be expedient to build a fort in the vicinity for the purpose of holding the land and protecting the settlers. As the Island of Rock Island was the strategic point in all of the territory ceded by the treaty of 1804, it was decided that the proposed fort should be erected on it. In 1816 a force of regular soldiers under the command of Colonel William Lawrence came up the river and on May 10 landed on the island. The soldiers cut the logs for their storehouses for provisions and a bakehouse and erected the same, an oven being attached to the latter. Having thus provided for their welfare, the soldiers then proceeded to build the fort which was named Armstrong in honor of the then secretary of war under President Madison. The fort was located on the rocky promontory at the lower or western end of the island. The little fort was totally different from the imposing buildings which now dignify the government island. The lower half of the walls was of stone and the upper half of hewn logs, both procured on the island. The walls were built about a square, the sides of which were 400 feet in length. As was the custom in those days, a blockhouse was built at each of the four corners, and the walls were equipped with necessary embrasures for cannon and pierced with loopholes for musketry. This fort was 200 feet from the island end of the present Davenport bridge. Begun in the spring of 1816, it was completed in 1817. In addition to the blockhouses, a magazine, storehouse, barracks and officers' quarters were built within the enclosure, and protection against fire was supposed to be secured by the stone work in the lower half of the walls.

COMING OF COLONEL DAVENPORT

While the fort was a necessary preliminary for the development of the country, one of the most important features incident to its construction was the bringing into this region of Colonel George Davenport with the command in 1816, as contractor for the supplies for the troops, the army not then having, as now, an organized commissary department. A man of immense energy, foresight and determination, Colonel Davenport brought to bear upon the disturbed af-airs of his time and locality, a ripened experience and intimate knowledge of men and their requirements. Perhaps no other one man did so much to develop and advance the affairs of this section as he. On August 10 of that same year, Mrs. Davenport, accompanied by Mrs. Lewis, afterwards Mrs. Goldsmith, joined Colonel Davenport and it is admitted that they were the first American ladies to ascend the Mississippi river to Rock Island. Mrs. Davenport lived until 1847 when she passed away, aged seventy-two years, having seen many changes take place. Her companion and friend survived her many years, passing away when seventy-six years old. After the building of the fort, affairs continued to be very quiet. By some its erection was regarded as an unnecessary expense, for the Indians appeared friendly, and no serious trouble with them was anticipated. In 1823 the ordinary routine of the fort was pleasantly interrupted by the arrival of the steamer Virginia, which was laden with provisions for the garrison at Prairie du Chien. This is regarded as the first instance of the landing of a steamboat on the island.

CHANGES IN LOCAL AFFAIRS

As time passed the relations between the Fox and Sac Indians and the government became strained. Disputes relative to several treaties stirred up friction and in 1831, a council was held with the chiefs of the two tribes with a view to adjusting differences and the resumption of former conditions. About thirty chiefs met General Gaines who came for that purpose from Jefferson barracks, in the steamer Enterprise, accompanied by a force of regular soldiers. After much argument and many sessions within the fort, General Gaines decided that it was futile to expect that the Indians would consent to go peaceably to the proposed territory beyond the Mississippi river, for they would fight to the end rather than abandon their rich hunting grounds along the eastern banks of the mighty river. During the war which eventually ensued, Fort Armstrong was a place of refuge for the terrorized settlers, and if it had not been for an outbreak of cholera among the soldiers, it would have been the scene of the conclusion of a treaty between the conquered Sacs and Foxes on September 21, 1832, when General Winfield Scott of the regular army forced from them the strip of land known as the Black Hawk Purchase in Iowa, and an abandonment of all hope of retaining their ancestral lands in Illinois. As the fort was not in a sanitary condition for the council, it was held on the site afterwards occupied by the old Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad depot.

During the Black Hawk War, Lieut.-Col. Zachary Taylor, Abraham Lincoln, Jefferson Davis, and other men who later attained world-wide fame, came to Fort Armstrong. Several times the garrison was in danger of massacre, but escaped. Fort Armstrong was evacuated in 1836, but the government, recognizing its admirable position, retained the island as a military reservation, appointing various agents to guard the federal interests. General Street, soon after the troops had been withdrawn, established an Indian agency on the island, but this was removed in 1838, to Agency City, Ia., and General Street was succeeded by Colonel George Davenport. During the latter's energetic administration, the island became a depot for arms. In 1840, Captain Shoemaker was placed in charge and so continued until 1845, when, owing to Mexican disturbances, he was sent to the front, and Thomas Drum succeeded him. The latter dying in 1853, Sergeant Cummings of Fort Crawford was appointed, but he declined the honor, and Colonel J. B. Danforth, Jr., was offered the post on January 20, 1854. After three years, H. Y. Staymaker of Davenport succeeded him, and in May, 1861, T. J. Pickett was appointed, and continued at the head of affairs until the arsenal was established. In later years Fort Armstrong was partly destroyed by fire, and still later what remained was torn down by order of the government, which action is to be deplored as it would have made a historic monument of the beginnings of Rock Island county. The site of the old fort is now marked by a granite monument. The second, or so called new, house built by Colonel George Davenport on the island in 1832, has been restored and is a place of great interest to visitors. The chimney of the first house, built by him in 1816, is still standing.

PROPOSALS FOR ROCK ISLAND ARMORY AND ARSENAL

As early as 1839 the feasibility and necessity of establishing an arsenal on Rock Island was pressed by those who were in a position to judge wisely and conservatively. In the autumn of 1840, Major W. H. Bell of the ordnance department, made a special survey of the island, embodying his results in an exhaustive report to the war department, but no action was then taken upon it. In September, 1841, Congress passed an act providing for a thorough examination of the whole western country to select a suitable site for the establishment of a national armory, which resulted in a report favorable to Rock Island. In the end, however, Fort Massac, on the Ohio river, was chosen. Residents of Rock Island county became interested, and named a committee which addressed a strong plea in favor of Rock Island to President Tyler. This committee was composed of John Buford, Joseph Knox, Joseph B. Wells, John Morse and George Mixer. As a result, Quartermaster-General Jessup and Hon. A. C. Dodge recommended the island of Rock Island to the secretary of war as the proper site. In 1845 a commission was appointed by the president and that body made a favorable report upon the suitability of this location for the purpose named. Still later the subject was taken up again and strongly recommened. Secretary of War Jefferson Davis said in 1854:—

"The water power and easy communication by water and by rail concur with other circumstances in rendering Rock Island one of the most advantageous sites in the whole western country for an armory or arsenal of construction." The people of this section must give Mr. Davis credit for using his influence and official power all through the long controversy to preserve the Island of Rock Island for the use of the government. No decisive steps were taken, however, until the summer of 1861. In the then disturbed state of the country, the residents of Rock Island drew up a petition addressed to the senators and representatives in Congress. The committee having this matter in hand was composed of the following representative citizens: N. B. Buford, J. Wilson Drury, Ira O. Wilkinson, Ben Harper, Reuben Hatch, George Mixer, J. B. Danforth, Jr., and P. L. Cable. This petition asked Congress to establish a national armory and arsenal on the island, and recapitulated the special advantages of the site for such purposes.

Another committee drawn from the tri-cities, Rock Island, Moline and Davenport, was composed of the following men: Ira O. Wilkinson, N. B. Buford, H. C. Connelly, J. Wilson Drury and Baily Davenport of Rock Island; W. H. F. Gurley, George L. Davenport, and G. M. French of Davenport, and C. Atkinson and P. R. Reed of Moline. This committee memorialized Congress in a pamphlet, containing a map of the locality, upon the claims and advantages of Rock Island as the site for the proposed Western Arsenal and Armory. In this memorial it was set forth that a new arsenal and armory, for the manufacture, safe keeping and distribution of arms and munitions of war, was a pressing national necessity demanded alike by the then present wants and future requirements of the government, and that the prepondering growth of the Northwest, as well as the absence of any such establishment within its limits, indicated that such an armory should be located upon the upper Mississippi.

To quote directly from the memorial upon the desirability of Rock Island:—

"Believing that Rock Island in the State of Illinois, in the centrality and safety of its geographical position, the facilities it affords for transportation to and from other parts of the country, the cheapness and abundance of its motive power and the materials used in the manufacture of arms, in the supply and cheapness of labor and food, in the healthfulness of the site, and the possession and ownership thereof by the government free of cost or expense—enjoys advantages equal, of not superior, to those possessed by any other place in the Northwest for the location of such an establishment—your memorialists would respectfully ask your attention to a brief notice of these advantages." Following this eloquent peroration, are some ten or twelve pages in which the arguments are set forth forcefully and cogently. Included in this pamphlet are extracts from actions of the legislatures of the two specially interested states, Illinois and Iowa, as well as a certificate of the government agent in charge of the island.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS OF THE IOWA LEGISLATURE

"Be It Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Iowa,

"That the senators in Congress from this State be requested to use their utmost exertions to procure the establishment at the earliest possible time, by the Government of the United States, of an Arsenal and Armory, for the distribution of arms to the states of the northwest, on the Island of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to forward to each of the Senators and representatives in Congress a copy of these resolutions.

"Approved March 24, 1861."

Governor Yates and other officials of Illinois addressed an urgent letter to the Secretary of War regarding the necessity of establishing an armory on Rock Island.

CERTIFICATE FROM THE GOVERNMENT AGENT

"I, J. J. Pickett, Government Agent for the Island of Rock Island, hereby certify that the lands owned by the Government are free from claims of squatters, and that the only occupants thereon are eight in number who hold leases under and acknowledge themselves tenants of said Government, in which lease it is specifically agreed that the lessors are to vacate the premises in thirty days from the date of receiving notice requiring them to leave. T. J. Pickett, government agent, Rock Island, Ill., October 25, 1861." The result of a liberal distribution of copies of this pamphlet was an act of congress providing for the arsenal and armory and carrying an appropriation of $100,000 passed July 11, 1862. General C. P. Buckingham in a report to the secretary of war October 24, 1862, said: "The island is without doubt the best place for an armory."

OWNERSHIP OF LAND

Up to this time there had been persistent efforts on the part of many persons to acquire ownership or other rights on the island as pre-emptors, railroad constructors, manufacturers, water power promoters, tenants or plain squatters, but these efforts were vigorously opposed by the ordnance department and government officials generally. It was held that before the reservation for military purposes in 1825, the whole island had been withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the land department, had so continued and therefore was not open to settlement as were other government lands. Notwithstanding that this position was consistently maintained by the officials, two claims were acted upon by Congress, and through such action David B. Sears and George Davenport had their asserted title to land on the island confirmed. Regarding the latter claim Colonel Davenport in 1833 entered a plea with the war department stating that his son, George Davenport, had a trading post on the island, also a dwelling and other improvements, that he had been located there since 1816, and asking that he be allowed to acquire the fractional quarter section on which he lived under the preemption law at the regular price of $1.25 per acre. Under orders issued by the general land office, his claim could not be admitted, but on April 2, 1844, with the assistance of Senator Douglas, Judge Knox and Judge Drury, an act of Congress was passed which permitted him to acquire title, and the lands were held by him and his family until they were repurchased by the government in 1867, the price paid being $40,740.

Immediately after the troops were withdrawn from the island, in 1836, squatters took possession, hoping that in time their claims would be recognized, and they would be able to acquire ownership of the land. These squatters cleared and cultivated some of the land, used much of the timber, and sold logs and wood so recklessly that most of the original timber growth was destroyed. Finally, David J. Baker, a United States attorney, located at Kaskaskia, Ill., notified J. R. Poinsett, secretary of war, of the conditions existing on the island, and asked permission to eject the squatters. The matter was submitted to President Van Buren, who issued orders for their removal. This order, however, did not prove effectual either in removing the squatters or in stopping their depredations.

PROPOSED SALE OF LAND

In 1850, when Zachary Taylor was president of the United States, G. W. Crawford was secretary of war, and Jefferson Davis was chairman of the military affairs committee of the United States Senate, an effort was made to have the government sell the entire island to the highest bidder, those in favor of this action claiming that otherwise the squatters would eventually get it at prices netting the government only about $1,200, whereas if sold at auction it would bring at least $100,000. This scheme was promoted by a party of speculators in St. Louis and New York, and came very near being accomplished. An order was issued by the president through the secretary of war to sell the island, and Brig.-Gen. R. B. Mason was ordered to conduct the sale after it had been properly advertised. It was not, however, advertised in the region around about Rock Island, and the first intimation the people of this community had of the matter was contained in a "public sale" notice in the "Missouri Republican," published at St. Louis. When this discovery was made the people of Rock Island began action at once to prevent the proposed sale. Hon. E. D. Baker, then member of Congress from this district and Senators Stephen A. Douglas and James Shields were appealed to in an hurried effort to save the island. Senator Douglas at once took an active interest, and thoroughly investigated, informing himself in all matters pertaining to the subject. In the meanwhile General Mason had arrived on the island and was making preparations to conduct the sale according to his orders, when the efforts in Washington resulted in his receiving a telegram to suspend the sale until further notice. It is almost unnecessary to state that the sale was never held.

WATER POWER

This was a narrow escape for the island and proved beneficial in that it attracted the attention of prominent men connected with the government to the value of the island as a military reservation.

In 1837 the Illinois legislature by an act passed in both houses, authorized John W. Spence and David B. Sears to construct a dam across the south channel of the river opposite their lands. In 1839 the charter was extended and in 1841-2 this dam was built as authorized. Mr. Sears also built a dam to Benham's Island, a small island in the main channel just north of the island of Rock Island. The water power created by the building of the Sears dam near the head of the island under the charter of the State of Illinois, drew the attention of those desiring to engage in manufacturing to the upper end of the island, according to a report made to the quartermaster general March 8, 1854, by J. B. Davenport, then custodian of the island. The following industries had already been located, and were in operation: a saw-mill, by Spencer H. White, a saw-mill by Atkinson & Chamberlain, a sash and blind factory by Charles Atkinson, a large building 40x100 feet used by Pitts, Gilbert & Pitts for various manufacturing purposes, two shops by S. H. White, two shingle mills by S. H. White, two dry houses, one office and one stable by

Sven Dahlberg

Dimmock & Gould, together with quite a number of residences and other buildings, all of which were near the main dam. On the other side of the island, near the dam built out to Benham's island by Mr. Sears, were a steam planing mill, operated by Sears, Wood and Hunton, and three dwellings, while on Benham's island were Mr. Sears' mill, one dwelling and two warehouses, and it was there that the steamboats landed. At the time Mr. Danforth made his report there had been six shanties erected by the railroad company for their employes, who cut the timber from a strip 100 feet wide all the way across the island, and were then at work grading for the tracks and quarrying rock for the first bridge across the Mississippi, the site of which, a short distance above and east of the present structure, is shown by one of the stone piers which was recently repaired and suitably marked.

FURTHER LEGISLATION

In February, 1854, Senator Shields introduced a bill in the United States senate providing for the sale of the island and providing further that D. B. Sears be allowed to enter the lands occupied by him at the minimum price of government lands to the extent of seventy-three acres. It also provided that the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad be allowed a right of way 400 feet wide across the island. This measure at once started things again in the effort to save the island. A lively correspondence resulted in which Hon. A. C. Dodge, chairman of the committee in military affairs in the United States senate, and Jefferson Davis, secretary of war, took an active part. Secretary Davis' subsequent action prevented the passage of the bill, and he thus again became the saviour of the island to the government.

BUILDING OF ARMORY AND ARSENAL STARTED

In May, 1863, a commission composed of Major F. D. Callander, Major C. P. Kingsbury and Captain F. J. Treadwell was sent by the ordnance department for the purpose of locating the proposed building on Rock Island. In addition to doing this, the commission recommended in its report the establishment of magazines on the island, and selected the most desirable sites for that purpose. This report was adopted, Major Kingsbury being appointed the first commander in charge of the construction work. To the great satisfaction of those who had worked so hard to bring about a successful termination of these efforts, ground was broken September 3, 1863, for the government building on the lower end of the island. By August, 1865, the government decided to prepare plans for a combination armory and arsenal where small arms and other munitions of war could also be manufactured as well as prepared and stored. In this same year Major Kingsbury was succeeded by General T. J. Rodman who prepared the necessary plans. The government could not have made a better selection for this able general and scientific man was fitted by training, experience and natural ability for his great work. These plans, submitted to Congress during the session of 1865, met with instant approval, and an appropriation was made for the immediate commencement of the work.

General Rodman was succeeded in the command of the arsenal by General D. W. Flagler who carried out the plans which had been prepared by his predecessor, and who remained in charge until 1886, when Colonel T. G. Baylor became commandant. He was relieved in 1889 by Colonel J. M. Whittemore who remained in command until 1892 when General A. R. Bufington was detailed to the command. In 1897 he was succeeded by Captain Stanhope E. Blunt who became major, later lieutenant-colonel and still later colonel. In August, 1907 the command passed to Colonel S. E. Hobbs who died at his post April 12, 1911, and was buried in Chippanock cemetery, Rock Island with full military honors. He was succeeded by Lieutenant-Colonel George W. Burr, the present commandant, who was assigned to the command June 25, 1911.

CHICAGO & R. I. RAILROAD RIGHTS

Prior to the recognition by the government of the desirability of the Island of Rock Island as the proper site for the location of a permanent manufacturing depot, a portion of the island had been sold by special act of Congress to the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad. This road had placed its tracks across the island and built upon its banks the abutments for its bridges. In order to buy the interests of private parties, a commission composed of General J. M. Scofield, Selden M. Church and James Barnes was appointed to appraise the lands thus involved and these were finally purchased at a total cost of $221,035. On June 27, 1866, Congress approved an appropriation bill naming the sum necessary to purchase these rights and authorizing the relocation of the railroad bridge and providing for compensating the railroad company for changing its route across the island. Included in this act was provision for an appropriation sufficient to begin work on developing the water power. Under this act and others approved as necessary, the government co-operated with the railroad company in the construction of an iron bridge which served for general purposes until the construction of the present magnificent bridge, sharing the expense and securing a free wagon way in addition to the railroad tracks, the latter being elevated above the railway, making a double-decked bridge from the island to Davenport, Ia., on the west bank of the river.

NEED OF THE ARSENAL

The Civil war which broke out in 1861 emphasized the pressing need for a great arsenal for supplying our troops with war equipment and munitions, and the selection of this site for such an institution was due to its exceptional location with respect to transportation both by water and rail, and to an ample supply of materials, labor and cheap power. The arsenal passed its fiftieth anniversary on July 11, 1911, and its life is properly divided into two periods, first that of construction, and second that of manufacturing.

The period of construction covers that time during which the great quadrangle of shops with their outlying storehouses, quarters, barracks, hospital, boiler houses, power houses, etc. were built. This period extended from the establishment of the arsenal on to approximately the outbreak of the Spanish-American war in 1898. In the years preceding this time some manufacturing was done, but it was small in amount and the plant was of limited capacity. The manufacturing period really dates from the beginning of this war, when under the spur of necessity the plant was rapidly increased in capacity and the output was correspondingly multiplied. Output was the crying need of the hour, and every effort possible was made to satisfy the demand. Though the plant was largely increased at that time, the arrangement was not entirely satisfactory, so at the close of the war a well considered plan for steady and orderly development and expansion was laid down, and has since been followed. At that time, now over fifteen years ago, only two of the great shops were utilized for manufacturing purposes. By the subsequent development seven of these shops are now filled with machinery and are in regular use.

MAGNITUDE OF OPERATIONS

The magnitude of the operations of the arsenal may be better appreciated when we consider that for the past ten years the monthly payroll for labor alone has exceeded an average of $100,000 per month, and that the monthly outlay for purchase of raw material has also exceeded $100,000. When it is remembered that the greater part of this expenditure goes into the hands of merchants and other business men of the vicinity, the financial benefit of this great government industry to the community is apparent. Then again this expenditure is regularly made in carrying out a fixed governmental policy so that the community reaps a steady dividend from this institution year after year, irrespective of the condition of the weather or the crops. The total disbursements for labor alone during the more than fifty years of the arsenal's existence have been about $20,500,000, and of this a little over $12,500,000 have been paid out during the past decade. This total for labor includes only the payment made on the regular pay rolls, and does not include those made to contractors and others which in themselves are large. The total cost of the establishment, including realty, buildings, water power, machinery, etc., has been $11,702,053.24.

The arsenal is under the control of the ordnance department of the United States army and is under the command of an officer of that department who is detailed for the duty by the secretary of war. He is assisted by a staff of officers also of the ordnance department and a detachment of enlisted men belonging to the same branch of the service. The manufacturing work in the shops is in charge of these officers who are specially educated for their duties. The work itself is carried on by civilian employes of whom there are now 1,700. The shop force has the usual industrial organization, with foremen, master workmen, engineers, electricians, etc. The orders for manufacture are received from the war department in Washington, D. C. The material is manufactured and placed in storehouses ready to be issued to the army as needed under prescribed rules and regulations or on special order from the war department, as also to the national guard of the various states and to the military schools and colleges of the country. This is also the distributing point to all parts of the middle west for the product of other arsenals, and of private establishments which furnish the government with arms and munitions of war.

The civilian employes of the arsenal reside in the surrounding cities, a large proportion in Rock Island. They are selected men and are protected in the permanency of their employment by the civil service laws. Under government employment they have the benefits of large, clean, well ventilated and well heated shops, with all sanitary conveniences. They have an eight-hour day with Saturday half holiday, with pay in the summer months, and fifteen days vacation with pay each year. When disabled for more than fifteen days through injury received in the course of employment, they receive full pay for the time absent from work on account of such injuries. They are paid the highest prevailing rate of wages in the vicinity for similar work. There are six employes still actively engaged in work who entered the arsenal employment prior to 1870, three of these having begun in 1865. A large number have records of thirty to forty years of continuous service, and the larger proportion of employes have been working for ten years or more, or from the time the number of employes was so largely increased owing to the Spanish-American war. Such records of long and steady employment speak volumes for contentment with working conditions. These men are a splendid body of intelligent employes and they and their families are much respected in the neighborhoods in which they live. The majority of them own their homes.

There is stationed at the arsenal a detachment of 100 enlisted men of the ordnance department of the army who form the general guard police and fire protection at times when the civilian employes are not present. In addition there are about forty enlisted men in attendance on the saddler's school which is maintained at the arsenal. The men belonging to the cavalry branch of the army are sent to learn their duties in connection with the care and repair of the leather equipment used by the troops. The course of instruction requires eleven months and when it is completed students are returned to the commands to which they belong, and others are forwarded to take their places.

APPROPRIATE BUILDINGS

In September, 1863, Major C. P. Kingsbury, the first commandant, began the erection of a storehouse near the lower or western end of the island, topped with a tower and clock which continues to be a landmark for the surrounding country. When General Rodman was put in charge in 1865, he drew up plans which were carried out by his successor, General D. W. Flagler. The main shops, which are located almost in the center of the island, comprise ten stone buildings sixty feet wide, each constructed around three sides of a rectangular central court, with fronts, 210 feet, and wings, 300 feet long; eight of the shops being four stories in height, and the other two, one-story. Seven of the buildings are equipped with machinery and the other three are used for storage of finished product and stores. The buildings are of similar design and floor plan and are designated by letters. Looking from west to east, the shops on the south side of the main avenue are A, C, E, G and I, while those on the north side are B, D, F, H and K.

As a typical example of the massiveness of the arsenal shop buildings a few figures relative to material used in the construction of one of them can be given. Records show that in the building of shop A, cited as an example, the following was used: 30,115,800 pounds of rock, 3,132,800 pounds of brick, 2,199,646 pounds of iron, 1,331,500 pounds of lumber, 362,500 pounds of slate, 200,000 pounds of plaster, and 26,000 pounds of copper. All told the floor space of the shops reaches a total of 422,800 square feet. When we consider such figures we get an idea of an institution which has been planted upon a solid foundation. Shops B, D and F are armory shops, and are devoted exclusively to the manufacture of small arms. Here army rifles are turned out at the rate of 100 every working day. On the south side of the main avenue are the old arsenal shops. At present shop C is used as a carpenter, metal equipment, polishing and tin shop. In shop E are the blacksmithing department and foundry in which many of the cast iron and alloy castings used in the process of manufacture are turned out. Light and medium forging is done in the blacksmithing department, and there are here also large presses for pressed steel work. In fact the small arms plant and the shops of the southern row contain more than 2,400 machines of various kinds used in the work of the arsenal. General machine and field artillery work is done in shop G. These departments overflow into the basement of shop I. The drafting rooms are located in this building, as are also the leather and cloth departments, harness for field artillery, gun covers, tarpaulins, knapsacks and other equipment. In this department also is the saddlery school already mentioned. Shops H and K are used as storehouses and one of the most imposing of all the arsenal buildings is the storehouse building with the tower and clock, at the town end of the island near the great government bridge joining the island to the Iowa shore in Davenport. This was the first of the buildings erected and at that time it was intended that the other ones would be at the same part of the island, but the present site was later adopted. At first the commandant's quarters were used in connection with three other stone buildings, but early in the present century, a frame and later a brick and stone structure have been built along and at the eastern end of Terrace road. These being of more modern design, provide good housing for the officers and men.

HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER PLANT

During Colonel Blunt's administration, there was a great expansion in the manufacturing capacity of the arsenal, and over $1,200,000 worth of modern machinery was installed in the shops, the power transmission being changed from the wire rope of the water power to the modern hydro-electric plant of ample capacity for all requirements.

The main channel of the Mississippi river is between the island and the Iowa shore, while a narrower branch is between the island and the Illinois shore. Across the latter, a short distance above the shops, a masonry dam was constructed to utilize the rapids opposite and above the island. This gives a water power of ample capacity with a head of from seven and one-half to eleven feet according to the stage of the river, and three alternating generators of 1,650 kilowatt capacity operated by twenty turbines, have been installed to supply electric power. These have the necessary exciters, switchboards, etc. required. Housing this installation is a building that is not only useful, but ornamental as well, and of great interest to visitors. The present 3,000 horse power can easily be increased whenever necessary by utilizing penstocks on the dam not now occupied and installing the additional machinery which such action would necessitate. None of the navy yards or other arsenals have the advantages afforded by this liberal water supply and the power plant with its consequent facilities for manufacturing is one of the most distinguishing features of the Rock Island arsenal. The electric power is also used in the armory in operating the elevators in the shops, for heating, for providing lavatory conveniences, lighting purposes both for the buildings and grounds, operating the machinery in running the small trolley cars and for various other purposes.

ARSENAL MANUFACTURES

Practically every article which a soldier in the United States army, members of the state national guards, and students of military tactics in the colleges and universities receiving government aid, may need is made here. The arsenal manufactures in addition to the saddle in all its parts, beginning with the lumber used in the saddletree, the bridle, saddle bars, harness, rifle, halter, horse brush, uniform, scabbard, cartridge box, saber belt and numerous other similar articles known as cavalry and horse equipment, canteen, cup, meat can, knife, fork and spoon, the haversack, tents and other accoutrements of duck and other material and the bits, spurs, picket pin, etc., of metal. Many sets of artillery harness are annually manufactured and pack outfits for mountain artillery when it is necessary to carry guns and ammunition on the backs of pack animals.

The arsenal also manufactures field guns, carriages, limbers, caissons, battery wagons and their tools, implements, etc. All of the field artillery carriages manufactured at the arsenal are tested on the island, a special observation tower providing a river range for firing up the river of approximately 6,500 yards being provided. Wooden, paper and similar targets, steel silhouette frames and pasters used in target practice, as well as the insignia indicating the soldiers' classification in marksmanship and that on saddle cloths, rosettes on bridles and similar ornaments in jewelers' work, are all manufactured here.

ECONOMICAL PRODUCTION

An enviable record has been established by the arsenal for economical production. Many instances could be given where in competition with commercial firms, it has produced better material at a much less cost to the government. The manufacture of carriages for field guns and other vehicles and material for field artillery is one of its principal productions, but the capacity of the plant is such that it can produce about one-third of the total quantity needed by the government, the remainder being bought from contractors. Could it all be made here, a large saving in cost would be effected. The current sundry civil bill for 1913 carries an appropriation of $250,000 for the purpose of increasing the facilities for the manufacture of mobile artillery material and it is hoped that this amount will soon be available so that the arsenal may be able to supply the entire needs in this line of production. With the present capacity the actual cost value of the annual output is approximately $2,750,000.

MILITARY PRISON

In July, 1863, according to an order from the war department, Rock Island was made a military prison in which Confederate prisoners were confined, with Captain Charles A. Reynolds, assistant quartermaster of the United States army, in charge. He built a prison and barracks, and the first soldiers to report for duty as guards arrived November 2, 1863. Lieutenant-Colonel Schaffner arrived November 19, 1863, and took charge of the prison, and Colonel A. J. Johnson was appointed to assume charge of the prisoners.

On December 3, 1863, the first installment of prisoners arrived, having been captured at the battle of Lookout Mountain, and from that date until the close of the Civil war, many prisoners were kept under strong guard, the entire number confined here being 12,215. There were 1,960 deaths, about 500 of this number passing away from the effects of smallpox. They were buried on the island. The corner posts of the cemetery where these bodies repose are made of cannon taken from the Confederates, planted with their muzzles in the ground and strung around with chains. Within the little cemetery these graves of nearly 2,000 Confederate dead are well cared for, and each is marked by a simple headstone. Near the head of the island is a little Union soldiers' cemetery surrounded by a fence, and each resting place is marked by a headstone.

BRIDGES

The island is connected with Rock Island, Moline and Davenport by bridges which were built and are maintained by the government, and at which guards are constantly on duty. The present bridge leading to Davenport is the third to be erected and has provision for railway and general traffic. All left of the old one is now but a vine-covered pier about a quarter of a mile above the present structure. It was the first bridge to be built across the Mississippi river from its mouth to its source, and was erected by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company. The first train consisting of a locomotive and eight cars passed over it April 21, 1856, the road having been completed to Rock Island in 1854. On May 1, 1856 the first span east of the draw, 250 feet in length, was destroyed by fire, which was caused by the steamer Effie Afton striking one of the piers on which the span rested, the steamer catching fire and burning, the flames being communicated to the bridge. In the following month, during a severe wind storm, the draw span was lifted from its supports, and blown over on its side up river, so that it hung suspended with both ends in midair. This bridge, which stood about a third of a mile above the present one, was replaced by a new one which was built jointly by the government and the railway where the present bridge now stands, at the lower or western end of the island. This was completed in October, 1872, and was turned over to the care of the commandant of the arsenal in February, 1873. Its total length was 1,550 feet, divided into five spaces and a draw. Its cost was close to a million dollars. This structure served until the present steel bridge, built on the same pier during the winter of 1894-5 succeeded it. This is a double decked bridge with double railroad track above and a double wagon way and double foot way below. The trusses of this thoroughly modern bridge are calculated to carry a total moving load of 11,360 pounds per lineal foot. The draw space, which weighs approximately 2,500,000 pounds, is one of the heaviest ones ever built. The chain motion for moving the draw is a departure from the custom usually followed in bridge construction, and has proven very satisfactory. Beginning at the north end the first span is 260 feet long, the second, third and fourth are each 220 feet, the fifth 260, while the total length of the draw space is 368 feet, giving an open space for passage of vessels of 162 feet on each side of the draw pier. The approach upon the Davenport side is 200 feet in length, while on the end next the island it is 100 feet, making a total, including the approach spans of 1,848 feet. The cost, including repairs on the original piers, was $495,000. Ralph Modjeska, son of the famous actress, the late Madame Modjeska, was the chief engineer of this splendid structure, and the Phoenix Bridge Company were the builders of both bridges constructed on this site.

At the southwest limit of the island the government, in 1907, built a fine new steel bridge, connecting it with the Illinois shore in the city of Rock Island, the approach being at Third avenue and Twenty-fourth street. The southern end of this bridge forms a viaduct under which the railways entering the city pass. At the eastern end of the island is a bridge which, crossing the South branch, known as Sylvan Water, connects it with the city of Moline.

ATTRACTIVENESS OF THE ISLAND

A description of the island of Rock Island is not out of place for it is admittedly the most beautiful spot owned by the government, and used for military purposes, not excepting historic West Point. The island is a rocky cliff up which rise in gentle slopes, exquisitely green prairie lands to bluffs of considerable height, all forming an island near the center of the Father of Waters. The river at this point is clear, swift running and about three quarters of a mile in width. The buildings belonging to the armory have been constructed with the idea of adding to the beauty of the landscape, and the bridges to it blend harmoniously with the scenery. In fact the island with its 1,000 acres of ground, shaded with beautiful forest trees and having approximately twenty-one miles of fine roadways, constitutes a large park accessible to residents of the surrounding cities, of which privilege they fully avail themselves.

The future of the arsenal seems assured. The requirements of the national government and of the national guards of the states for material and equipment of the kind produced here are steadily increasing. With our constantly augmenting population and our greater participation in world politics, the necessity for a police force in the form of an army and navy of reasonable proportions, and of a reserve of citizen soldiery becomes more and more evident. Adequate provision for this force will call for more equipment each year, which will mean the continued activity of the arsenal.

During the Civil war, citizens of Rock Island county were to be found in at least 100 regiments raised from different portions of Illinois, Iowa and Kansas. Members of the Eighth Kansas Infantry lived in Rock Island county both before and after the war. Major General John Braford was the only citizen of the county to attain to this rank during the war. He opened the great battle of Gettysburg with his splendid cavalry command.

THE TWELFTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Company D of the Twelfth Illinois Infantry enlisted for three months, was the first body of soldiers to leave Rock Island county. The regiment was mustered into service in May, 1861, with William D. Williams as captain of Company D. He was later promoted to the rank of major. David Benson was then made captain of Company D and L. Dimick, Quincy McNeil and David Hakes were lieutenants. The captains for the three years' service were Robert H. Luckey (dismissed), John W. Fisher, Robert Kohler and Michael Guinty, while William F. Jobe, Theophilus McCommell, Charles M. Barry and Francis W. Stearns were lieutenants. Dr. Samuel C. Plummer was made surgeon of the regiment.

THIRTEENTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Company D of the Thirteenth Illinois Infantry was the next to enter the service in August, 1861. Quincy McNeil was the first captain of this company, but was later commissioned major in the Second Illinois Cavalry. James M. Beard-sley, while serving as captain of Company D, was promoted to the rank of major of the Thirteenth Regiment. The lieutenants of Company D were Albert T. Higby, George G. Knox, Elisha J. Beardsley, who was killed in action, and Matthew McCullough.

NINETEENTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

The next company to leave Rock Island county was Company H, of the Nineteenth Infantry, Captain Peachy Garriott (dismissed) commanding. The lieutenants were DeWitt C. Marshall, Alva Mausur, Rodney C. Johnson, John Dedrick and Willington Wood.

TWENTY-SEVENTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Napoleon B. Buford was the first colonel of the Twenty-seventh Illinois Infantry. Like his brother, John Buford, he was a graduate of West Point Military Academy. On August 15, 1862, he was made a brigadier-general, and was the only Rock Island county man to be so distinguished during the war. Dr. E. H. Bowman was surgeon of this regiment and David B. Sears was quartermaster.

THIRTY-SEVENTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Myron S. Barnes was made colonel of the Thirty-seventh Illinois Infantry, and after the war he became editor of a Rock Island journal. Herman Wolford was one of the majors of the regiment. Rock Island furnished two companies in this regiment, and of them the following men served as captains: John A. Jordan, Henry Curtis, Charles W. Hanes, Lorenzo B. Morey and William C. Wilson, while David L. Ash, Andrew B. Steele and William H. Bigelow were lieutenants in Company A. The commissioned officers of Company H were John B. Frick, Herman Wolford and George H. Merrill, captains, and Joseph Eaton (killed in action), William C. Wilson, Wills C. Merrill and Benjamin F. Parkhurst were lieutenants.

FORTY-THIRD ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Company E, from Rock Island county, formed a part of the Forty-third Illinois Infantry. John Peetz of this company was appointed adjutant of the regiment. John Tobien, Henry Kroeger and Charles Engle were captains, and John Peetz, John Oppendick and Gustav Wagenfucher were lieutenants. When John Peetz was commissioned captain of Company A. Gustav Wagenfucher was made adjutant. This regiment was mustered into the service in the fall of 1861.

FORTY-FIFTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Rock Island county contributed Company H, of the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry, Robert F. Reid being a member. He was later appointed sergeant-major, and still later was appointed adjutant. The captains were John B. Hawley, William B. Seymour and David O. Reid. Thomas C. Morris, William Waverling and Thomas M. Wallace were lieutenants.

FIFTY-FIRST ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Thomas T. Whitson, Charles B. Whitson and William H. Greenwood were captains, and Asmond L. Cole, Charles H. McHenry and Henry C. Frent were lieutenants.

FIFTY-EIGHTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

The captains of Company K, of the Fifty-eighth Illinois Infantry, were: Patrick Gregg, who was later promoted to be surgeon of the Twenty-third regiment, John Tobin and John W.

Gregg. The lieutenants were Thomas Malloy and John Clark (dismissed). In the consolidated regiment, the officers of Company K were: Jay N. Shelton, captain, and James F. M. Walters, Noyes B. Elliott and James F. Heck, lieutenants.

SIXTY-FIFTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Robert S. Montgomery was the captain of Company B, of the Sixty-fifth Illinois Infantry, furnished by Rock Island county. The lieutenants were James W. Ballard, Henry H. Jones and Hiram McHenry. This regiment was veteranized with Hiram McHenry and James Montgomery as captains of Companies H and C, and Robert Briggs and Cyrus B. Bristol as lieutenants in the consolidated regiment.

SIXTY-SIXTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

This regiment was known as the "Western Sharpshooters," and was organized by General Fremont at Benton Barracks, Mo., in the fall of 1861. Rock Island county had about thirty soldiers in Company C. Frazier Conklin and Frank A. Hartzell were captains from this county who served in this regiment.

SIXTY-NINTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

The Sixty-ninth Illinois Infantry was a three-months regiment that remained on duty during its period of service at Camp Douglas, Chicago, guarding the camp and prisoners of war. It was mustered into the service June 14, 1862, with Thomas J. Pickett as lieutenant-colonel and Ezra M. Beardsley as adjutant. Rock Island county furnished Company F, and the officers of it were: Frazer Wilson, captain, and Ezra B. Beardsley and George Schemehorn, lieutenants.

SEVENTY-FIRST ILLINOIS INFANTRY

The Seventy-first Illinois Infantry was also a three months regiment which did guard duty in Illinois and Kentucky during the term of service. It was mustered in on July 26, 1862. DeWitt C. Marshall was commissioned major. The officers of Company D, furnished by Rock Island county, were: Horatio G. Coyhendall, captain, and James L. Smedley and Charles C. Huntley, lieutenants.

EIGHTY-NINTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

William D. Williams was commissioned major of the Eighty-ninth Illinois Infantry. Company

F was sent from Rock Island county with William D. Williams as captain, he being later succeeded by Ebenezer T. Wells. The lieutenants of this company were: L. F. Dimick, James F. Copp and Charles Arenschield.

NINETY-THIRD ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Dr. Joseph Iluyett was the first surgeon of the Ninety-third Illinois Infantry. The captains of Company A, furnished by Rock Island county, were Lewis S. Ashbaugh and William M. Morris. Samuel F. McDonald and Jacob Adams (first sergeant) served as lieutenants.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SIXTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Rock Island county had five companies in the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Infantry. The field officers from our county were: Lucius W. Beal, colonel; Ezra M. Beardsley, lieutenant-colonel, and William W. Wilshire and John Morris, majors. The officers of Company B were: Henry D. Cline, Jacob L. Markle and Brooks B. Hamilton, captains, and John D. Mitchell, Isaac D. Cox and James H. Coffman, lieutenants. The officers of Company E were: Lucius W. Beal and Emory Hughes, captains; and Myron Pratt, Frederick S. Gates and David A. Philips, lieutenants. The officers of Company G were: Edwin H. Johnston, William H. Schriver and Gabriel Armstrong, captains; and James C. Fleming and Leonard Stockwell, lieutenants. The officers of Company H were: Thomas Martin and William J. Ransom, captains; and David E. Evans, William E. Edwards, Christian Koerber and John Haltz, lieutenants. The officers of Company I were: John Morris and Charles M. Knox, captains; and Joseph S. Kelley, Brooks R. Hamilton and Moses Bowen, lieutenants.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

The officers of Company K, furnished by Rock Island county to the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Illinois Infantry, were: Wolf H. Anderson, Albert Lamb and Charles Margraff, captains; and James Chapman and Lorenzo D. Hoover, lieutenants.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTIETH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Rock Island county contributed Company G to the One Hundred and Fortieth Illinois Infantry, and its officers were: John H. Williams, captain, and Edwin H. Daily and Edwin B. Knox (first sergeant) served as lieutenants. This was a 100-day regiment and was mustered in June 18, 1864.

FIFTY-EIGHTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY
(Consolidated)

Jay N. Skelton was the only captain of Company K in the consolidated Fifty-eighth Illinois Infantry. The lieutenants were: James F. M. Walters, Noyes B. Elliott and James F. Heck.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SECOND ILLINOIS
INFANTRY

The One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois Infantry was a 100-day regiment. The colonel was Thomas J. Pickett, while the captain was Luke E. Hemmingway, and Robert E. Baker was surgeon; Henry Harwood and George Schermerhorn were the lieutenants.

TWENTY-EIGHTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY
(Consolidated)

Thomas L. Daugherty was captain of Company I of the Twenty-eighth Illinois Infantry, and Charles S. Woods and Charles R. Reynolds were lieutenants.

ONE HUNDRED AND SECOND ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Company C had in it a number of men from Rock Island county, but no commissioned officers according to the record, except Lieutenant Byron Jordan.

FORTY-FOURTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

A record before me says that Company G of the Forty-fourth Illinois Infantry was from Rock Island county, with James W. Ballard, captain, and William Shaughnessy and Asa G. Darby, lieutenants. In the Third Adjutant-General's report of Illinois, 1861-66, page 316, Company G is printed: Captain Ballard's name does not appear there, nor do those of the lieutenants above quoted.

FOURTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY

George Dodge was captain of Company M of the Fourth Illinois Cavalry, and Samuel Allhouse and Edwin H. Daly were lieutenants.

NINTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY

Albert G. Brackett of Rock Island was the first colonel of the Ninth Illinois Cavalry, while Hiram F. Sickels and Henry B. Burgh were lieutenant-colonels. Joseph H. Knox was adjutant, and William C. Blackburn was battalion adjutant. Joseph W. Brackett was battalion quartermaster and commissary, while Dr. James W. Brackett was surgeon, and O. Windsor Briggs was chaplain. Henry B. Burgh, William C. Blackburn and Christopher C. Dack were captains in Company A, and William M. Benton, John H. Eberhardt, George P. Webster, David Hiller and Henry H. Castor were lieutenants. Joseph W. Brackett was a lieutenant in Company C of this same regiment.

FOURTEENTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY

Henry C. Connelly was major of the Fourteenth Illinois Cavalry, and the captains of Company L were Alvin Everts and Henry C. Connelly; Job L. Grace and William M. Moore were lieutenants.

SEVENTEENTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY

Benjamin Harding was captain of Company L, in the Seventeenth Illinois Cavalry.

OTHER REGIMENTS

Soldiers from Rock Island county were members of many other regiments. We have no complete record of the names of any of the officers who served outside of Illinois and for this reason it is impossible to estimate just how many Rock Island men participated in the Civil war.

Robert M. Graham was colonel of the Eighth Kansas Infantry, a portion of which went out from Moline. A full account of this famous regiment is given elsewhere. Graham Post, G. A. R., is named in honor of Colonel Graham.

THE BLACK HAWK WAR

In looking over the lists of the enlistments in the Black Hawk war from Illinois, I find but very few persons accredited to Rock Island county, and therefore I do not care to dwell at any great length on that war, especially as others have taken up the subject and shown the present generation what the Indians did and how they rebelled against abandoning this section of the country and giving it over to the white men. The history of Fort Armstrong and the movements of the troops on the Island of Rock Island, together with the battles between the whites and the Indians on Campbell's Island, are historical facts carefully treated of in the Life of Black Hawk and the adjutant-generals' reports of Illinois.

I find in Captain Thomas Carlins' Company of Spies, which belonged in the brigade of Brigadier-General Samuel Whiteside, which was organized at Carrollton, April 20, 1832, the names of John Reddish, Roswell H. Spencer, Luther Tunnell, William Tunnell, from Rock Island. In Captain Jacob Ebey's company, also in Whiteside's command, I find the name of John Graft from Rock Island. I also find that the company of Captain J. W. Kenney that was enrolled on May 20, 1832, and mustered out September 4, 1832, was all, with the exception of one man, credited to Rock Island county, as follows:

Captain, John W. Kenney, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832.

First Lieutenant, Joseph Danforth, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832.

Privates: Thomas Davis, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Manly Danforth, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Samuel Danforth, Rock Island county; enrolled July 1, 1832; Samuel Kenney, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Thomas Kenney, Adams county; enrolled June 12, 1832, on furlough; Gentry McGee, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Henry McNeal, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Neel McNeal, Rock Island county; enrolled July 1, 1832; James Maskal, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Martin Smith, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; William H. Sams, Rock Island county; enrolled July 1, 1832; Joel Thompson, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; William Thompson, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Ira Wells, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Eri Wells, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Asaph Wells, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Nelson Wells, Rock Island county; May 20, 1832; Rinnah Wells, Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Joel Wells, Sr., Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Joel Wells, Jr., Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832; Luke Wells, Sr., Rock Island county; enrolled May 20, 1832.

Many of these names are familiar to the old settlers, especially those of Joseph Danforth, Henry McNeal and the members of the Wells family, for there are numerous descendants of these men still residing in the county.

I also find that Roswell H. Spencer was a member of Captain Jacob Earley's company in June, 1832, and that Captain A. W. Snyder had in his mounted company Russell H. Spencer, John Wells and Lucius Wells, all from Rock Island county. These are all the names that I recognize as coming from Rock Island county of the men who served during the Black Hawk war, but doubtless there are many others.

THE MEXICAN WAR

It appears to be impossible to give correctly a list of the men of Rock Island county who served during the Mexican war. The reports now in existence are faulty, and do not give the place of enlistment. To get a perfect list would require years of effort, and even then omissions would be probable. It is sufficient to say that 50,000 men enlisted for that war from Illinois and Iowa and that Rock Island county sent its quota.

THE CIVIL WAR

In writing up the military history of Rock Island county, great difficulty is experienced because of the danger of omitting some of the names of the men sent to the front, for there was hardly a company raised in the state that did not have members from all over it. Therefore in making out a correct list of each company, I have tried to add only the members in the companies who were actual residents of Rock Island county. I have carefully given the history of the service of each company which had its headquarters in Rock Island county. If it were possible to secure a like accurate history of every company in each of the counties of Illinois, a complete history of the military operations of the state could thus be obtained. The history of the regiment is the history of each company complete, and the regimental record of each regiment is given where it is represented by one or more companies in the county. It is not possible in a work like this to give individual histories of all the soldiers that lived in the county, or enlisted in organizations of other counties. It is also impossible to give the record of our soldiers who enlisted from other states. These no doubt are treated of in works of a similar nature issued in those states. It is appropriate to say in this connection that Illinois furnished her full quota of men in the Civil war, all that were asked of her, with the exception of 4,896, and would have supplied them in another month, had not the Government stopped all enlistments on April 13, 1865. There were also thousands of men who left the state and went to other places to get bounties, for whom we receive no credit. Therefore it is but just to say that Illinois supplied the full quota of 231,488 men.

THE INDEPENDENT RANGERS

The first company Rock Island county started to raise was called the Independent Rangers, and the movement originated at Moline. A company of cavalry was raised from the counties of Rock Island, Mercer and Henry by Captain Robert H. Graham, who made Moline his headquarters. The company took passage on a boat from Rock Island for Quincy, Ill., where they arrived the following day, and were sent across the Mississippi river to Hannibal, Mo. Being supplied with some old guns, they were sent along the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad to guard its bridges and protect the property from the enemy. Within a few days, however, they were transferred to Leavenworth, Kas., where they were fully armed and equipped. From there they were sent back to Lexington, Mo., to act as a guard against bushwhackers and prevent the advance of Price's army. After skirmishing almost daily with the enemy, while on scout duty, for some time, the company was re-enforced by the Irish brigade under Colonel James Mulligan, and a small body of the Home Guards. These commands united in doing all they could to fortify themselves and to protect the people they were guarding, against the approaching army.

The battle of Lexington began on September 11, 1861, when about 3,000 men under General Harris advanced on that city. The First Illinois Cavalry, Graham's company of Rangers and the Thirteenth Missouri, were ordered out to stand them off. A sharp action resulted in the retreat of the enemy, who suffered severe losses. However, on September 18, Price's entire army, about 30,000 strong, surrounded Lexington, and after fifty-two hours of desperate fighting, when he had no water or ammunition left, Colonel Mulligan surrendered on the 20th, his force by that time having been reduced to less than 2,500 men. The officers were put on parole, while the men gave their oath not to take up arms again until they were exchanged as prisoners of war. They were escorted to the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad and sent to Quincy, Ill., and from there to St. Louis. There their officers joined them a week later, and they were paid off at that city the last of September and sent home to await their exchange. This not being effected, they were discharged in November. Captain Graham, with some of his officers and men, started at once to recruit other companies and two of these, raised in Rock Island county and in Henry and Mercer counties, became Companies H and I of the Eighth Kansas Volunteer Infantry, of which Captain Graham was made colonel. A history of this regiment is given later on in this article. The muster roll of the company called the Independent Rangers, does not show in the adjutant general's report of Illinois or Kansas, and I have been unable to find a survivor of it who could give me the full list of its members. Suffice to say that there was a full company and among its members were the following from the three counties mentioned above, Rock Island, Henry and Mercer:

Captain, Robert H. Graham; Moline.

First Lieutenant, Edgar P. Trego; Viola.

Second Lieutenant, Frank Curtis; Geneseo.

Sergeants: Henry Austin, Rock Island county; Samuel R. Stanley, Geneseo; Jerome W. Thomas, Geneseo; John M. Lappeus, Geneseo; Augustus Cox, Rock Island county; Washington Waugh, Viola; James Brooks, Rock Island county; W. W. Nye, Geneseo; Lucius Beal, Zuma; B. B. Joslyn, Rock Island county; Alexander Johnson, Moline; Christopher McDaniel, Rock Island county; Felix Schneider, Rock Island county; Francis H. Wells, Rock Island county; Christopher Hanson, Rock Island county; John Armpriest, Rock Island county; Kirk Vincent, Rock Island county; Robert Montgomery, Rock Island county.

Nearly every member of this company of 100 men re-enlisted in other commands after returning home, and many of them rose to higher rank, some becoming captains, others colonels and a few majors.

TWELFTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

(Three months' service)

Among the early regiments to be formed was the Twelfth Illinois Infantry, which was mustered into the service in April, 1861, and was mustered out August 1, 1861, having fulfilled the duty which was expected, which was to hold our line on the Ohio river until the troops for longer service were enlisted and armed.

Company D of this regiment was from Rock Island, and its members are listed as follows, with name and rank, date of enlistment, muster and remarks.

Captains: William D. Williams, Rock Island; e. April 25, 1861; mustered May 2, 1861; pro. major; m. o. August 1, 1861; David Benson, Rock Island; e. May 11, 1861; mustered May 2, 1861; m. o. Aug. 1, 1861.

First Lieutenants: David Benson, Rock Island; e. April 25, 1861; pro.; Dimick Laurtis, Rock Island; e. May 11, 1861; m. o. Aug. 1, 1861.

ELEVENTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Company K: William Hanifin, Moline; e. October 8, 1864; substitute recruit, transferred to Forty-sixth Illinois Infantry.

TWELFTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

(Three years' service)

The Twelfth Illinois Infantry was mustered into the United States service for three years, August 1, 1861, and sent to Cairo, Ill., from whence the troops were transferred to Paducah, Ky., and other places in that section of the country, until there was a movement against Columbus, Ky. This regiment participated in the campaign against Columbus and those which were made against Forts Henry and Donelson, and the battles at both places, being attached in these engagements to McArthur's brigade. The loss was nineteen killed, fifty-eight wounded and ten missing. This regiment was in the thickest of the battle of Shiloh during both days, and lost 109 killed and wounded and seven missing.

It did its part during the siege of Corinth, and was attached to General Oglesby's brigade. While held in reserve at the battle of Iuka, the regiment did not participate in the actual fighting. On October 3 and 4, 1862, the regiment was engaged in the second battle of Corinth, and as part of the second and sixth divisions faced nearly the entire force of the enemy. The losses were terrible, and the fighting desperate. The regiment was supporting Powell's battery when it was captured by the enemy by a charge, but was recaptured almost immediately, by the brigade of which the Twelfth was a part (the Fiftieth and Fifty-second Illinois). They drove the enemy from the works, captured a stand of colors as well as the battery and turned the guns of the latter on the enemy. It was at this place and time that General Dick Oglesby was wounded, and the regiment lost seventeen killed, eighty wounded and fifteen missing.

On January 16, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and left on the 18th for Camp Butler, Ill., on veteran furlough, leaving about ninety men behind that had not re-enlisted. The regiment returned to the front on March 18, 1864, arriving at Chattanooga in due time. From that point they entered upon the Atlanta campaign, and until the fall of the latter city, the regiment was actively engaged in all the movements of that army, being in the Second brigade, Second division, Sixteenth army corps, under General McPherson and General Logan, in the army of the Tennessee, under General William T. Sherman. Among other battles were those of Lays' Ferry, Rome Cross Roads, Dallas, Kennesaw, Nickajack Creek, battle of Atlanta on July 22, Bald Knob, Decatur, Ezra Church, Siege of Atlanta, Jonesboro and Lovejoy.

After the last named, the regiment returned to Atlanta, and the Second Division became the Fourth division of the Fifteenth army corps. General Hood gaining the rear of the Union troops on October 4, the division was sent by railroad back to Allatoona. This division joined with the one then at Rome, Ga., in repelling the enemy and keeping the opposing forces from capturing that post, where the Union forces had millions of dollars worth of rations for the army just then ready for the march to the sea. In the battle of Allatoona the regiment lost fifty-seven killed and wounded out of the 161 men then left in the regiment with guns. From these figures you can see what a loss a good fighting regiment sustained in a three years' service, as the 1,000 men were cut down to less than 200. Yet the history of this regiment is not materially different from that of nearly all of the regiments in active service for the whole period of enlistment.

On November 11, 1864, Sherman's army began its march to the sea, the Twelfth regiment starting from Rome arrived at Atlanta on the 15th, and had its share of the skirmishing and foraging until December 9, when they flanked a force of the enemy at the Ogeechee canal and captured a Blakesley gun of English manufacture. Until the 17th, the regiment was at different points about Savannah and Fort McAlister, but when the latter was captured, the regiment was part of the force detailed to take the prisoners to Hilton Head where they were turned over to the Union forces. The regiment returned to Savannah on January 10, 1865, and started out in pursuit of Johnston's army, entering Columbia, S. C., on the 17th, which was 177 miles from Savannah. On March 4, the regiment arrived at Cheraw, 164 miles from Columbia, and on March 12 were at Fayetteville, seventy-three miles further on. On March 24, the regiment entered Goldsboro, N. C., having in that time marched over 600 miles from Savannah. On April 21, General Johnston having surrendered, the regiment started from Raleigh, N. C., and marched 186 miles in six and one-half days and on May 24th, participated in the Grand Review at Washington. The regiment was mustered out of the service on July 10th, having been at Louisville from June 6, and were sent to Camp Butler, Ill., where they received their final pay and discharge July 18, 1865.

The following were members of the Twelfth Illinois Infantry regiment from Rock Island county, three years and veteran service, with rank, name, residence, date of enlistment and muster-out and remarks.

THIRTEENTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The Thirteenth Illinois Infantry was mustered into the service May 24, 1861 at Dixon, Ill., and was mostly raised from the northern and middle portions of the state; but a part of the field and staff and the greater portion of Company D was from Rock Island county. It was a well drilled command, and many of its privates rose to the rank of field officers later on in the war. On July 5th it passed through St. Louis on its way to Rolla, Mo., where it remained until the spring of 1862, engaged in guarding supply trains to and from General Lyon's army and suppressing guerilla bands in that part of Missouri. This regiment was a part of General Fremont's command that went to Springfield, Mo., in the fall of 1861 in pursuit of General Price, and was known as Fremont's Greyhounds, a name given them by General Fremont himself, the evening of the day this regiment joined his command at Bolivar, in splendid shape after a day's march of forty-two miles.

In 1862 the regiment joined General Curtis' army at Pea Ridge, 250 miles southwest of Rolla, and marched to Helena, Ark., on the Mississippi river. This same regiment was a portion of General Sherman's army when he attacked Chickasaw Bayou, and from that time on was a part of the notable Fifteenth army corps. Its loss at Chickasaw Bayou was 183 killed and wounded. It was engaged at Young's Point, Arkansas Post, and in the flank movement to a position below Vicksburg. It was also in the battles of that campaign embracing those of Grand Gulf and the capture of Jackson, and was on the right of the army during the Siege of Vicksburg. The Thirteenth participated in the assault on the enemy's lines on May 2nd, and suffered a severe loss. Vicksburg surrendering July 4, that same night this regiment started after General Joseph Johnston's army with General Sherman's command, marching all the way from Memphis to Chattanooga. There the regiment joined General Grant's army and was in the battle at that point with General Osterhaus's division, under General Hooker's command, and was on the left of Missionary Ridge when the enemy was driven from the center by the great charge of the army of the Cumberland, and the Thirteenth captured 2,500 prisoners, and followed the retreating army to Ringgold Gap where they had massed their batteries to protect their retreat. The Thirteenth regiment was in the line and held it close to the enemy's line commanded by General Patrick Cleburne. After their ammunition gave out, their position was maintained with bayonets until the Fourteenth army corps came to their relief, two hours later. The losses of the regiment in this engagement were sixty-seven. As the term of service of this regiment had so nearly expired, the men did not participate in the march to the sea, but left the advancing army and were sent home to Springfield, Ill., and mustered out, having served three years and two months to June 18, 1864. The following list contains the men in the Thirteenth from Rock Island county:

THE NINETEENTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

(Three years' service)

The Nineteenth Regiment of Illinois Infantry was one of the ten regiments that were ordered made up for the state service under the law of May 2, 1861, and companies of Chicago Zouaves, from which the regiment was afterwards formed, were the nucleus. They were mustered into the service of the state May 4, 1861, at Camp Yates, sent to Chicago, and on June 17 were sworn into the United States service for three years as the Nineteenth Illinois Infantry. The Chicago Highland Guards were organized as a part of this regiment as early as 1855, and the company tendered its services to the Government on January 14, 1861, three months before Fort Sumter was fired upon. It was accepted on April 21, and finally merged with the volunteers into the Nineteenth Regiment. The first service done in the state by this regiment was guard duty near Cairo, when its men were set to keep the enemy from over the border from recruiting, and stopping the Union transports loaded with supplies from below Cairo and up the adjacent rivers. These troublesome invaders were very numerous, especially in Missouri, and gave the Union troops just coming into the service much trouble.

The Nineteenth Regiment was first commanded by Colonel John B. Turchin, and when he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general, Joseph R. Scott succeeded him as colonel. Colonel Turchin had formerly been a colonel of staff in the Russian Guards, and so paid special attention to drilling and discipline with the result that within a short time, he, with the co-operation of the officers of the Ellsworth Zouaves, had the men well trained and ready for the field. This regiment afterwards became known as one of the best drilled in the service. It was sent to Quincy to join General Hurlburt on July 13, and the next day left on the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad to relieve the Twenty-first Illinois Infantry, under Colonel U. S. Grant. For the next two weeks the Nineteenth Regiment performed valuable service and worked against the open enemies and their sympathizers, and through their efforts the Union men in that part of the country began raising two companies. On July 27, as the regiment was needed elsewhere, it started for St. Louis, via boat, and joined a fleet bound for Bird's Point, opposite Cairo. From there the regiment went on to Norfolk, Mo., as it was supposed that a portion of General Pillow's army was advancing along the road to Ironton. The regiment went from Bird's Point on to Ironton, where it joined General Prentice. In his advance, it was in front, but not finding the enemy, the column stopped at Jackson, and the Nineteenth was sent to Fort Holt on the Kentucky shore, and then to Elicots' Mills, near Columbus, Ky. While here the regiment received orders and on September 16 left for Washington, D. C. On the 17th, having changed cars at Sandoval, the regiment proceeded in two trains over the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad towards Cincinnati. When forty-six miles east of Vincennes, Ind., the second train containing four companies and the regimental staff, broke through bridge No. 48, about 10 P. M., while crossing Beaver Creek between Shoals and Mitchell, Ind., and in that fearful wreck, twenty-four men, including Captain B. B. Howard, were killed instantly, and 105 men wounded and disabled. This terrible accident caused as large a loss as was sustained in almost any battle in which the regiment was engaged.

The Nineteenth Regiment was detained for a few days at Camp Dennison, when it received orders to proceed to Louisville, Ky., where it arrived on September 25; from there went on to Lebanon Junction, thirty-five miles south of Louisville, to go into camp. On October 22 the regiment went to Elizabethtown, Ky., and took possession of the printing office of the Elizabethtown Democrat, a Confederate sheet, owners of which fled at the approach of the Union forces. The regiment began issuing what they called the Zouave Gazette of the Nineteenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers. Colonel Turchin profited by this opportunity to publish articles on the skirmish drill, outpost duties, bugle signals and similar topics. He also prepared a brigade drill in pamphlet form which was afterwards distributed freely among the officers of his brigade. This was the first of its kind adapted to improved arms since Scott's Infantry Tactics.

While the regiment was at Elizabethtown, General Buell was put in command of the Army of Ohio, and he appointed Colonel Turchin of the Nineteenth to command the Eighth Brigade, Gen. O. M. Mitchell, commanding the Third Division, which was sent to Bacon Creek, there staying until February 10, 1862. The fall of Forts Henry and Donelson compelled Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston to evacuate Bowling Green, Ky., before which General Buell appeared at 3 P. M. on February 14, in advance of the brigade, and the Union forces secured a valuable point. Turchin's brigade was in advance of the Third Division, and the Nineteenth Regiment was in advance of the brigade. The railroad bridge was destroyed, and, as the enemy was fully occupied in removing stores from the other side of the river, General Turchin asked permission to move across the river below and occupy Bowling Green, which he received, and acting upon it that same evening, the Nineteenth was the first regiment to enter that former stronghold, where a large amount of the enemy's stores was captured.

General Buell moved with his wing of the army to join General Grant at Pittsburgh Landing, leaving Mitchell with his division to protect Nashville, Tenn., where he remained until March 18, 1862, engaged in repairing the railroads and bridges. When this work was completed he moved his command to Murfreesboro, then to Shelbyville, and thence on to Huntsville, Ala. The command then took the railroad between Decatur and Bridgeport, thus thoroughly breaking the direct connection between the enemy's army at Cornish, with the east and southeast of the Confederacy, and helping in forwarding the operations of the Union armies against Corinth. On April 9, Colonel Turchin, with the Fourth Ohio Cavalry and a section of the battery, surprised the people of Huntsville, capturing 170 prisoners, seventeen locomotives, 150 passenger and freight cars and a large amount of property of great value to the enemy. Two hours afterwards, Colonel Turchin, with two of his Nineteenth companies and the Twenty-fourth Illinois, moved on a train with a gun mounted on a flat-car in front of the locomotive towards Decatur, repairing bridges and culverts which the enemy's cavalry had tried to destroy. The following day the expedition reached the bridge across the Tennessee where fortifications built of bales of cotton were captured, and the trestlework, all tarred and on fire, was saved. The troops rapidly crossed the river, surprised and captured a camp of militia and took possession of Decatur. The balance of the Nineteenth Regiment, and the Eighteenth Ohio, were ordered to join Colonel Turchin at Decatur, and the movement was continued to Tusculum, within thirty-five miles of the enemy's fortifications of Corinth, and continued its valuable activities for several months longer. In the meanwhile, however, Colonel Turchin was ordered by General Buell under court martial for disorders committed by his regiment, but before the sentence of his dismissal from the army as colonel of the Nineteenth had been pronounced, he was commissioned brigadier-general by President Lincoln, and went to Chicago to await orders.

When the command had to concentrate at Nashville, the Nineteenth was the last regiment to come into the city, and it was there from September 5, 1862, until the Union line of battle was formed for the Stone river campaign, in December of that same year. After the battle of Perryville, General Rosecrans was given the command instead of General Buell, and the Army of the Ohio became the Army of the Cumberland, being reorganized. The Nineteenth Regiment was made the Second Brigade, Second Division, Fourteenth army corps, Negley's Division, Stanley's Division, with General George H. Thomas as corps commander for the balance of the service, until the re-organization after the battle of Chickamauga. On December 10, 1862, Negley's Division, including the Nineteenth, moved out of Nashville about eight miles, camping on the Franklin Pike, where they remained until the general movement of the army took place towards Murfreesboro, then occupied by the Confederate army under General Braxton Bragg. On the night of the 29th, the army approached the enemy's position, Negley's Division being in the center of the line, and on the morning of the 30th, the Nineteenth deployed as skirmishers, entered the cedars and soon attacked the enemy, driving him across the Wilkinson Pike into the woods. On the morning of the 31st, the division was ready to move, when disaster overtook McCook's corps, forming the right of the army, and Negley's right flank became exposed. The division partly changed flank and checked the advance of the enemy, but was overpowered and fell back to the edge of the cedars. Here it tried to make a stand but was forced back. The Nineteenth Regiment here proved its bravery and daring, performing an act of heroism which alone should make the name of this regiment a shining one in history. When Sheridan of the Twentieth corps, Second Division, was displaced by the enemy and formed on the right of Negley's, two brigades of Rosseau's Division were posted on the right of and in the rear of Sheridan, but when the latter's division, broken and out of ammunition, fell back, the enemy followed it closely and reached the intervening space between Rosseau and Negley. Thomas ordered Rosseau to fall back out of the cedars and form a temporary line on the open ground, in a depression to give a chance to the batteries, and Negley's Division to fall further back to the higher ground and form a permanent line there. At this critical time the Nineteenth Regiment, in order to check the enemy, remained in the cedars while the new line was being formed, but Colonel Scott boldly advanced and remained over half an hour against the enemy, pressing him in the front and flanks. This heroic action was accompanied by great sacrifice, and at one time he was entirely surrounded, but the regiment finally fought its way out, passing over many dead of both sides. Having accomplished what was designed, all engaged fell back to the position on higher ground, and the progress of the enemy was effectually checked, and the battle turned in favor of the Union forces. On January 2, 1863, Negley's Division was again sent to the left flank, expecting a heavy move in that direction, as the Union forces had two brigades across Stone river. The onward movement of the enemy came with a rush, and the two Union brigades had to flee, being greatly overpowered; but Negley's Division, without orders, the Nineteenth leading, rushed to the river and checked the enemy, driving them back across the river. Reforming on the opposite bank, the command charged a battery of the enemy and, eagerly followed by the other troops, captured four guns and a stand of colors, thus defeating General Bragg's plan of battle to break the Union left. In this brilliant movement the Nineteenth again played a most conspicuous part, but lost heavily in officers and men. The gallant Colonel Scott was dangerously wounded and afterwards died of his injuries, and Lieutenant-Colonel Raffen, a brave and efficient officer, assumed command of the regiment. He was one of the original Zouave officers. The loss at the battle of Stone River in the Nineteenth was one officer and thirteen men killed and seven officers and eighty-eight men wounded and missing.

Early in the spring of 1863, General Turchin was assigned the command of Stanley's Brigade, in which was included the Nineteenth Regiment; but he was soon placed in command of the Second Division of cavalry at General Rosecrans' and General Garfield's solicitation. He was sorry to leave his old command of the Nineteenth, for he loved its men and they nearly worshiped him. The writer, having known him since the war, appreciates how dearly he loved his regiment, and how glad he was to see them. He was always happy to meet them, and they greeted each other as only true-hearted soldiers can. General Turchin has gone to the other side and nearly all of his boys have joined him there, and in a short time the reveille on the other side will show that they are there to answer to their names.

During the Fullahoma campaign the Nineteenth did its full share of the duty, and on September 8, 1863, it crossed the Tennessee river in the Chickamauga campaign, being designed as an advance guard of General Thomas' corps. Crossing the Raccoon and Lookout Mountain, on September 10, the regiment descended by Stevens' Gap into McLamores Cove and moved across it to Dug Gap in Pigeon Mountain on the direct road to Lafayette, Ga., where Bragg's army was encamped at the time. At Davis' Crossroads, the regiment had a smart engagement on the 11th, and on the 18th it was on the Chickamauga at Owens' Ford and Crawfish Springs. On the 19th, it came on the field in the afternoon in time to catch the enemy's line between General Davis and Van Cleeves' Divisions and drove them back. The engagement was a short, sharp one, as the writer can testify, as he was present as a member of the Eighth Kansas Regiment, having enlisted from Rock Island county. In the second day's battle the Nineteenth again showed its staying qualities. On September 20, skirmishing began at daybreak. It had been General Thomas' intention to have Negley's Division on his left, but during the severe fighting of the day, the brigades became separated, and when Stanley's brigade reached the extreme left flank of Thomas' wing, it was just in time to meet the second assault of the enemy. Stanley's brigade checked the enemy's advance and captured many prisoners, among them being General Adams and staff, who surrendered to the Nineteenth. The enemy being re-inforced, the brigade fell back in order, taking all the prisoners and most of its wounded. The brigade was then ordered to the famous Horse Shoe ridge on the extreme right of the Union line, and here it did its full duty with other brave and patriotic commands. Here during the long hour between 2 and 3 P. M. all the assault of three divisions of Longstreet's corps, supported by Preston's and Hindman's Divisions, were repulsed with slaughter by our troops, not over 5,000 strong, but the bravest of the brave; but when the Hindman Division was ready to take the Union position in flank, and the men were ready to die, Steadman's Division arrived, and rolled back the enemy's onward wave of progress. Here the Nineteenth, like other regiments, fought until dark and then withdrew. The loss in this battle was very great. After the army returned to Chattanooga, it was reorganized, and the Nineteenth assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, Fourteenth Army Corps.

On November 23, 1863, the Nineteenth Regiment was on the line facing Missionary Ridge, and on the 25th they charged across the field towards the ridge and when they came to the rifle pits at the foot of the ridge they leaped over them and continued right on, starting to ascend the slope ahead of the others. When the Nineteenth reached the top, it was in good shape. After the pursuit of the enemy was over, the regiment returned to Chattanooga, where it remained with its brigade until February 22, 1864, at which time it went on a reconnoissance to Buzzard Roost Gap, and participated in the fight at that point. Then by special request, on May 3, the Nineteenth, with others of his old brigade, were placed under the command of General Turchin for the Atlanta campaign, as the First Brigade, Third Division, Fourteenth Army Corps. This command participated in the battles of Resaca and other military movements prior to reaching Ackworth, Ga., and from there, on June 8, started for Chicago, where it arrived on the 17th, and on July 9, 1864, it was mustered out of service. This regiment left Chicago with nearly 1,000 men on July 12, 1861, received a large number of recruits during its service, and was mustered out with less than 350 men. The following are the members of the regiment from Rock Island county and all of Company H, which came from Moline, the remainder being from Henry county.

THIRTY-SEVENTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

The Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, known as the Fremont Rifles, was organized by Col. Julius White, in August, 1861, and mustered into service September 8, 1861, at Camp Webb, Chicago, and left for St. Louis, 1,009 strong. Companies A and H were from Rock Island county, although in both companies were enlisted men from other counties bordering Rock Island. The officers were of Rock Island county. The regiment was armed with Springfield rifles, except the two flanking companies, which were armed with Colts seven-shooters, and all non-commissioned officers were also armed with Colts. In October, 1861, the regiment went to Booneville, Mo., and was with Fremont's army at the capture of Springfield, Mo., moving then to Cassville, and Sugar Creek. In March, 1862, it took part in the battle of Pea Ridge, fighting greatly superior numbers, and gaining a complete victory. Generals McCullough and McIntosh of the Confederate army were both killed in front of Colonel White's command, which included the Thirty-seventh and Fifty-ninth Illinois regiments and Davidson's Battery. For his good service Colonel White was made a brigadier-general of volunteers. Lieutenant-Colonel Barnes was promoted to colonel, Maj. John C. Black to lieutenant-colonel, and Captain Frisbee to major.

The Thirty-seventh was engaged in 1862 in Missouri with Indians and with Quantrell's and Coffee's bands of guerillas, and on one trip marched 100 miles and fought a battle in two days' time. In September, 1862, they started out after the enemy again, and after many skirmishes surprised the Confederates at Fayetteville, Ark., October 28, 1862, taking back prisoners to Osage Springs. Its activity continued until December when it went into camp at Camp Lyon, Mo. For its marching it was named the Illinois Grey Hounds, and by that name the regiment was known all over Missouri and Arkansas. When Colonel Barnes retired from the service, Lieut.-Col. John C. Black was made colonel, and in December, 1862, the regiment was ordered to the relief of General Blount besieged at Sugar Hill, Ark. Leaving all their baggage, the regiment marched to Prairie Grove, Ark., in three days, 112 miles and doubled-quickened it for the last ten miles, and came into the battle of Prairie Grove on the morning of the 7th, which lasted all day, and was one of the hottest battles of the war for the number engaged. Colonel Black, with his arm in a sling from an injury at Pea Ridge, commanded the regiment and here had his other arm shattered. After a flag of truce, that night the Confederates muffled their artillery wheels and fled in the darkness, and escaped. In the spring of 1863, the regiment had a battle at Chalk Bluffs, on the St. Francis river, and drove the enemy from the field with loss: then went to St. Louis and took boat to the vicinity of Vicksburg, and were assigned a position in the line of investment, and on the 4th of July marched into the city. They were in the battles of Yazoo City, Big Black, Port Hudson, and then went to New Orleans; on August 12, 1863, fought victoriously in the battle of Morgan's Bend; then moved to Brownsville, Tex., where it re-enlisted on February 28, 1864, when it received its furlough. It reassembled at Memphis, Tenn., April 30, 1864, and put in another active summer, under General Banks. On January 4, 1865, the regiment followed orders and went to New Orleans, to Fort Barancas, Fla., and to Pensacola. On March 13, 1865, Colonel Black was promoted to be brigadier-general of volunteers by brevet. On April 2, the regiment was in the siege and capture by storm of Fort Blakely, Ala., finding 1,200 prisoners and much property; from there went into Mobile; then up the river to Cahawba, Ala., where it released Union prisoners, who were terribly emaciated from starvation. They were put on board a transport and conveyed to Montgomery, Ala., and finally were sent to the North. The regiment was in Texas until May 15, when it was mustered out at Houston, and reached Springfield, Ill., May 31, 1866, where it received its pay and final muster out. It had marched and rode 17,846 miles, had eleven hard battles, and put in four years and ten months of service. The following members of the regiment were from Rock Island county:

FORTY-THIRD ILLINOIS INFANTRY

The Forty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry was organized at Camp Butler in September, 1861, by Colonel Julius Raith, and was mustered into the service of the United States by Captain Pitcher, U. S. A., October 12, 1861. It started for the South before it was fully organized, having but eight companies, and went to Benton Barracks, near St. Louis, Mo., where it was armed with old Harper's Ferry and English muskets which had been changed from flint locks to percussion locks. From November 3, 1861, to January 21, 1862, the regiment engaged in marching around the State of Missouri, and on the latter date two new companies were added, making ten companies, a full regiment, it then being armed with new Belgian rifles. On February 6, 1862, the regiment boarded the steamer Memphis, and with Birge's Sharpshooters was taken to Fort Henry, where it arrived on the 8th. On the 24th following, the regiment was assigned to the Third Brigade of McClernand's Division and marched to Fort Donelson, from whence it went to Savannah, where it arrived on March 12. On the 18th, the Forty-third, Seventeenth and Forty-fifth Illinois regiments marched to Pin Hook, but returned to Savannah on the following day, and on the 22nd moved by boat to Pittsburg Landing with other regiments of the brigade under Gen. L. F. Ross, of McClernand's Division, being assigned camp ground near and northeast of Shiloh Church. On the morning of Sunday, April 6, 1862, Colonel Raith, hearing the sounds of battle had the regiment assemble, tents taken down and wagons loaded, and the regiment then paraded on color line, Colonel Raith sending Lieutenant-Colonel Engleman to General McClernand to inform him of the approaching battle. The command of the brigade finally devolved on Colonel Raith of the Forty-third, and he found none of the other regiments prepared for action, while the staff officers of the brigade were a half mile away at brigade headquarters. Aside from his own mounted officers, he had no assistance in turning out the rest of the brigade. The Forty-ninth had only time to arm itself, the men commencing to fire where they stood in their camp. The Forty-third was the only regiment of the brigade that could support Waterhouse's Battery, and with it offered a stiff resistance to the enemy, leaving in its first position thirty-six of its number dead, while many more were wounded and carried to the rear for treatment. The Forty-third next took position on the Purdy Road with the rest of McClernand's Division, and here Colonel Raith, in command of the brigade, was mortally wounded, his death occurring on the 11th. This line giving way, the Forty-third was next assigned position by Captain Hammond, of Sherman's staff, in a compact line of troops facing the Purdy Road. This line also gave way and the Forty-third took a position with the Twentieth Illinois. All the other troops having disappeared from this line, the Forty-third fell back slowly to a position facing an open field to the west and immediately on the left of the Ninth Illinois. About 4:30, Grant, Sherman and McClernand came up and inspected the position of the Forty-third and soon sent troops from the direction of the river. These formed on the line held by the Forty-third, and next came the Forty-ninth on the right, also facing west, and then came a battery into the line, making a compact line clear to the river, this position being held until night. In every position held by the Forty-third it left its dead, and none but the wounded were in the missing.

The advance the next day was slow, and it was about 4:00 P. M. when what was left of the Forty-third again stacked arms in front of the camp. Out of a total of 500 men who went into action, it had lost 206, of whom forty-nine had been killed and left on the fields, and among these were Chaplain J. L. Walther, and Lieut. John Oppendick (of Moline). The regiment took part in the advance on Corinth in June and July, and put in all the rest of the year in pursuing Forest's command, with whom it had several good brushes and one pitched battle, near Salem. Along in the spring of 1863, the Forty-third had 200 men mounted for scout service, these engaging in numerous skirmishes and being successful in taking numerous prisoners and capturing many horses from the enemy. On May 31, 1863, the regiment went to Memphis by rail, there taking a boat up the Yazoo river, where a junction was effected with General Mower, and the Confederates were driven beyond Mechanicsville, on June 8; were at Haines' Bluff on July 12; at Big Black River on July 22; at Snyder's Bluff on July 29, and on August 6th were at Helena, Ark. On August 13, 1863, the regiment was assigned to the First Brigade, Second Division, Seventeenth Army Corps, General Steele commanding, and four days later left Helena, arriving at Clarendon, on the White river on the 22nd. Two days later the regiment crossed the river to Duvall's Bluff. From September, 1863, to March 13, 1864, the regiment was moving about Arkansas and Mississippi, and at length settled down in Little Rock for a time. That city was left March 23, 1864, the regiment going to Spoonville, Okla., and eventually came in contact with the Confederates in force at Prairie D'Ahu, whom they defeated and drove on to Clarendon on the 12th and 14th. On this march, the regiment lost one man taken prisoner, the only able-bodied man that was captured from the regiment during the service, by name David Wilver. The command reached Princeton on the 28th, and on April 30 about 20,000 Confederates attacked the rear of General Steele's forces on the Saline river bottoms, near Jenkins' Ferry, and after a bloody battle were repulsed with great loss. The Union loss was 700, while the Confederate loss was considerably larger. In this battle, the Second Kansas Colored Regiment, with the Forty-third Illinois and the Twenty-ninth Iowa, charged a Confederate battery of four guns, which they captured and dragged to the Union lines. The regiment arrived at Little Rock, May 3, 1864, and there remained until their enlistment of three years expired. Not quite three-fourths of the old men having re-enlisted as veterans, Colonel Engleman was discharged December 16, 1864, but succeeded in prevailing upon the state authorities to assign enough drafted men to the Forty-third, so that Lieutenant-Colonel Dengler could be commissioned colonel. The regiment remained at Little Rock until its muster out, November 30, 1865, then returning to Camp Butler for final pay and discharge, December 14, 1865. The members of the Forty-third Illinois

Infantry that came from Rock Island county were as follows:

FORTY-FIFTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Known as the "Lead Mine Regiment," the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry was organized by John E. Smith, of Galena, who was commissioned a colonel of volunteers July 23, 1861. It rendezvoused at Jo Daviess county fair grounds, near Galena, with short Enfield rifles, and November 22, 1861, was ordered to Camp Douglas, Chicago, where the full complement of ten companies was completed, and the regiment was mustered into the service and given its number on December 25, 1861. On January 12, 1862, the regiment went to Cairo, and was assigned to the First Brigade, commanded by W. H. L. Wallace, First Division, commanded by Gen. John A. McClernand. The next day it left with Grant's army for the Tennessee river, and two days later the first camp was made at Camp Halleck, four miles below Fort Henry, which they reached on the evening of the 6th. On the morning of the 13th the regiment took its position on the right of the line of battle at Fort Donelson, and in the afternoon was sent to the relief of the Fifty-ninth Illinois Infantry, engaged up close to the enemy's works, and there received its baptism of fire. Its loss was two killed and twenty-six wounded. On March 25th it was ordered to Pittsburg Landing, at the junction of the Purdy and Corinth roads, not far from Shiloh Church. On the morning of April 6th, when inspection had finished and arms stacked, and the breakfast call had just been made, the long roll called the men to their arms, and within three minutes the greater part of the regiment was ready to advance to the left and front, double-quick, to support Sherman. Going into battle with about 500 men, the Forty-fifth was at the front at Shiloh from the first, slept on its arms that night in the rain, and in the morning moved forward with the rest of the army. At night it stopped almost in its old camp of Sunday morning. The regiment lost twenty-six killed and 199 wounded and missing, some of the latter returning. At Corinth, August 31, the regiment did its share. Armstrong's Confederate cavalry raided in the Union lines and captured Company C, and after a sharp fight was driven away, the Union loss being three killed, thirteen wounded and forty-three taken prisoners.

In February, 1863, the Forty-fifth went with Grant's army on the Vicksburg campaign, and stopped at Lake Providence and Millikin's Bend, where volunteers were asked to run the batteries by transport and the whole regiment responded. Of the quota which composed the crew of the steamer "Anglo-Saxon," and took her safely through with a full cargo of commissary stores, the following composed the detail: Commander, Capt. L. B. Fisk, of Company E; pilots, Privates Charles Evans, Company D, and Joshua Kendall, Company K; engineers, Sergt. A. J. Esping, Company B, Charles Flint, Company G; firemen, Privates J. M. Primmer, Company F, William Tripp, Company G, and Johnny Paul, Company C. The regiment reached Bruinsburg, below Vicksburg, May 1, 1863, and on that same day started with Grant's army in the famous Vicksburg campaign, in which it participated during all of the battles as a part of Logan's Division. Parts of the regiment were located at the white house on the Jackson road, in front of the Confederate Fort Hill, regarded as the key to the whole Southern works, and participated in three separate charges, May 19th and 22nd and June 25th. A mine having been laid under Fort Hill, the match was applied and immediately after the explosion the Union troops rushed into the breach, the Forty-fifth having been chosen for this duty. The men were met by a murderous fire, and lost eighty-three officers and men killed and wounded, among the killed being Lieut.-Col. Melancthon Smith and Maj. Leander B. Fish, while Col. Jasper A. Maltby was wounded. Their gallantry in this bloody engagement won for the men of the Forty-fifth the distinction of entering the city after the final discharge and subsequently the regiment was detailed as provost guards of the city. From November 7, 1863, to February 3, 1864, it was in camp on the Black river, and took part in the Meridian Raid. On March 17th it left Vicksburg for a thirty-day veteran furlough, and on June 7, 1864, rejoined the division on the Atlanta Campaign, at Etowah Brigade, Ga. As a part of the Seventeenth Army Corps, it left Atlanta November 12th and arrived at Savannah December 12, 1864, reached Beaufort, S. C., by steamer the following day, and on the 14th was engaged in the attack on Pocotaligo, S. C., where it suffered a loss of eight men wounded. The march was continued January 30, 1865, through the Carolinas, via Orangeburg and the Sugar Loaf mountains, and it went into camp February 28th, after having walked over 300 miles in less than a month. From March 23rd the regiment was at Cheraw, Fayetteville, Bentonville and Goldsboro, and after having been in the wilderness for over fifty days reached the latter place. At Fayetteville, March 11th, the city surrendered to "Sherman's Bummers," a private (later quartermaster), William C. Taylor, receiving the surrender from the mayor. The march was resumed April 10, 1865, and the regiment went on to Raleigh and Greensborough, and back to Raleigh. The regiment received news of the close of the war at that place, and again took up its march May 1st, the Fifteenth and Seventeenth Corps making it a foot-race to Washington, D. C., which resulted in a tie, May 19, 1865. The Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry participated in the Grand Review May 23rd and 24th, arrived at Louisville, Ky., June 8th, and was mustered out of the service and arrived at Chicago July 15th for final pay and discharge, having marched 1750 miles from May 14, 1864, to May 19, 1865.

The members of the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry were as follows:

Robert F. Reid, commissioned adjutant of regiment July 9, 1865, but not mustered as such, was enlisted from Rock Island, Sept. 23, 1861, and appointed sergeant major, and detailed as acting adjutant, re-enlisted as a veteran with the regiment, and m. o. July 12, 1865.

FIFTIETH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

Private: James Finley Heck, Moline, Ill.; e. Feb. 26, 1864; dis. March 22, 1865, for disa.

FIFTY-FIRST ILLINOIS INFANTRY

The Fifty-first Illinois Infantry was organized at Camp Douglas, Chicago, Ill., December 24, 1861, by Col. Gilbert W. Cumming, and was sent to Cairo, Ill., February 14, 1862, into Kentucky on the 27th, and to Bertrand, Mo., March 4, Sykeston on the 7th, and to New Madrid, and on the 10th was assigned to General Paine's Division, Second Brigade, with the Twenty-second Illinois Infantry, the colonel of the Fifty-first commanding. On the 14th New Madrid was evacuated, and on April 7 the brigade moved against Island No. 10, the following day seeing the surrender of the Confederate General Mackall with 4,000 of his men. The command then returned to New Madrid and subsequently went to Osceola, Ark., to Hamburg Landing, on the Tennessee river, and on April 22, 1862, it was formed into Palmer's Illinois Brigade, in Paine's Division, and as such engaged in the battle of Farmington and the siege of Corinth. When the Confederate General Bragg went up into Kentucky, the divisions of Negley and Palmer were left at Nashville to hold that place, while the rest of Buell's command went to Louisville, and on November 6 the Fifty-first was engaged in repelling the attacks of the enemy, being for several days on half rations. On December 10, 1862, it was attached to Sheridan's Division, Third Brigade, Third Division, Fourteenth Army Corps, and subsequently participated in the battle of Stone River, where it lost fifty-seven men. In January, 1863, Sheridan's Division was designated as the Second Division of McCook's (Twentieth) Army Corps, and so remained until after the battle of Chickamauga, and took part in the advance and capture of Tullahoma, crossing the Tennessee river and marching over Sand and Lookout mountains, forty miles below that place. This movement forced Bragg to evacuate that place, and the Fifty-first then marched night and day, to McLamore's Cove, where it arrived September 18, 1863. The next day it went into the battle of Chickamauga, and during the next three days lost ninety men out of 209 engaged. On the 10th of October, the Twentieth and Twenty-first Corps were consolidated, and from that time were known as the Fourth Army Corps, so remaining until the close of the war. The Fifty-first was in the Third Brigade, Colonel Harker in command, Second Division, Gen. Phil Sheridan in command, Fourth Corps, Gen. Gordon Grauger in command. On November 23, 1863, the regiment was in the battle of Orchard Knob, where the regiment took part in the great charge of Missionary Ridge, where it lost thirty of its men out of the 150 engaged, there being left but a captain in command of the regiment. On November 28, 1863, the Fifty-first marched to the relief of General Burnside, at Knoxville, Tenn., following which it pursued General Longstreet's forces as far as Blain's Crossroads, and then returned towards Chattanooga. On February 10, 1864, the regiment mustered as veterans and started for Chicago, returning from their furlough in time to start on the Atlanta campaign, May 3, 1864. At Rocky Face Ridge, May 9, the regiment had two wounded; at Resaca, on the 14th, one killed and twenty wounded; at Dallas, May 25, twelve wounded, and June 15, thirteen killed and wounded. On June 27, at Kenesaw Mountain, in the charge on the works, the regiment lost fifty-eight killed and wounded; at Peach Tree Creek, five wounded. The regiment participated in the siege of Atlanta and the battles of Jonesboro and Lovejoy Station, and during the whole campaign lost three officers killed and four wounded, and 105 men killed and wounded. Twelve were wounded at Spring Hill, Tenn., November 29, 1864, when Hood's army was held in check while the Fourth and Twenty-third Corps passed on to Franklin. At that place on the succeeding day the Army of the Cumberland fought its first battle behind breastworks, and there the Confederates were literally mown down by the thousands, a blunder that caused General Hood to be blamed throughout the rest of his life. It is said that the Confederate dead were in such numbers that one could walk for nearly a mile on bodies without touching the ground, while the Union loss was comparatively slight, the Fifty-first sustaining the loss of one officer killed, twenty officers wounded, fifty-two men killed and wounded, and ninety-eight missing. The Southern troops in their eleven terrific charges lost eleven general officers. At Nashville, Tenn., the Fifty-first Illinois lost six men, and then pursued the Confederate army until it fled across the Tennessee river, then going to Huntsville, Ala. On March 31, it went to Greenville, Tenn., and on June 16 to Johnsonville, where it embarked for New Orleans July 28. It then embarked on transports for Texas, and arrived at Port Lavaca July 31. On August 1, 1864, it went into camp at Camp Placidor, Tex., and on October 15 arrived at Camp Butler, and was mustered out, paid and discharged. FIFTY-EIGHTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

This regiment was recruited at Camp Douglas, Chicago, and mustered into service on February 11, 1862, 887 strong, and was sent to Fort Donelson, being finally assigned to the Third Brigade, Third Division. The morning of the 14th, this regiment was under fire, being within 250 yards of the enemy's works. They continued in action until the fort surrendered, although suffering intensely without food or fire and with but few blankets. On March 29th, the regiment was sent by steamboat to Pittsburg Landing. Later the regiment participated in the battle of Shiloh and was captured. The prisoners were confined for seven months, when all that were left of the command were paroled. The few who escaped capture participated with their regiment in the battles of Corinth and Iuka, as well as in others of lesser importance. After the paroling of the rest of the regiment, the men did guard duty at Mound City, Ill. On January 21, 1864, the regiment was reorganized and sent to Vicksburg, where it was assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, and on February 3rd left Vicksburg for Meridian, Miss. This was the first regiment to cross the Big Black, the first to engage the enemy at Queen's Hill and the first to enter Meridian. During this expedition the men were again without rations for seventy hours, marched forty-seven miles and destroyed seven miles of railroad track. Returning to Vicksburg the regiment was sent on the Red River campaign, driving the enemy out of Simmsport, after which it went to Fort De Russey. The colors of the Fifty-eighth Regiment were the first to be planted on the works after a very hard fought battle. The regiment then went to Alexandria, thence to Grand Ecore and Pleasant Hill, and in a battle at the latter place the Fifty-eighth captured over 500 prisoners and recaptured a battery belonging to the First United States Artillery, which had been captured by the enemy. Although the enemy was signally defeated, the troops were ordered to retreat, and reaching Grand Ecore on the 12th, went into camp. This regiment was mustered out at Montgomery, Ala., April 1, 1866. The members of the Fifty-eighth from Rock Island county were as follows:

SIXTY-FIFTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

Company B of this regiment had headquarters at Edgington, Rock Island county, Ill., and was raised by Capt. Robert S. Montgomery, formerly a member of the Rock Island Rangers, captured by the enemy at Lexington, Mo., in the summer of 1861. While many of the men in this company came from Rock Island county, some were from Mercer county. This regiment was known as the Scotch regiment and was organized at Camp Douglas, Chicago, May 1, 1862, being the date of its mustering into the service. This regiment was under Colonel Miles at Harper's Ferry, and was surrendered by him to the Confederates. The soldiers were paroled, sent to Chicago and kept there until April, 1863, when they were exchanged and sent to Knoxville, Tenn. There they participated in the battle at Fort Saunders, helping to repulse Longstreet. In the early part of 1864, the regiment re-enlisted and went home 400 strong on a veterans' furlough, returning the regiment took part in the battle which took place between Lost Mountain and Kenesaw on June 15, 1864, and was also in the fighting of the 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th. Fifty men of this regiment, under General Cox, volunteered to cross and hold the bridge in face of infantry and artillery and breastworks, and were successful in doing this until the balance of the regiment had crossed and formed a line for the remainder of the brigade. July and August were filled with small battles and skirmishes, and then the regiment was sent to Atlanta, and crossed the railroad at Rough and Ready, south of the city. It took part in the battle of Jonesboro, Ga., and was then at Rome, Kingston, Resaca, Allatoona and Gaylesville, returning to Rome and Dalton and then going to Nashville. The next point to which they went was Pulaski, but were forced back to Columbia, losing three officers and fifty men killed and wounded. On November 30, the regiment engaged in the battle of Franklin and lost more than 200 in dead and wounded; but it captured the colors of the Fifteenth Mississippi Infantry. The Sixteenth also took part in the battle of Nashville and pursued the enemy as far as Clifton, where the regiment remained until January 15, 1865, when it took boat to Cincinnati, and thence went by rail to Washington, D. C., Annapolis, Md., and Wilmington, N. C., landing at Federal Point on February 7, then crossed Cape Fear river and flanked the enemy at Fort Anderson, following which it gave battle at Smithtown Creek, where it captured three pieces of artillery and 350 men. On March 6, 1865, removal was made to Kingston, and Company B, with four others, as sent to Chicago to be mustered out. The following soldiers were enlisted from Rock Island county:

SIXTY-SIXTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

This regiment was organized at Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Mo., during September and October, 1861, by General John C. Fremont, as the Western Sharpshooters, eight companies being collected, three of them from Illinois, and the regiment was mustered into service November 23, 1861, with John W. Bierge in command. Later B. S. Compton became colonel, and Bierge became lieutenant-colonel. It did duty in Missouri at first, and was then sent to Fort Donelson, where it was irresistible in picking off the gunners of the enemy. This regiment also participated in the battles of Shiloh, siege of Corinth and the battle of Corinth, and in the latter engagement were armed with Spencer's 16-shot revolving rifles which made them as formidable as an ordinary brigade of troops. This regiment was also in the many small engagements in the vicinity of Corinth. On April 20, 1862, a new company joined the regiment, and in November, 1862, the regiment became the Sixty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. During 1862-3 this regiment saw active service in skirmishes, and was at Pulaski in December, 1863, where members began re-enlisting in the western service. The majority had Henry rifles which they bought at their own expense, paying $43 each for them. From Pulaski the regiment went on to Nashville and Louisville, and after receiving at the latter place their four months' pay and $100 bounty left for a thirty-day furlough. Reassembling at Joliet, Ill., at the expiration of that period, they went to Pulaski and from there to Chattanooga and took part in the Atlanta campaign, having the honor of opening it by driving Wheeler's cavalry and a brigade of infantry out of and through the Snake Creek Gap, holding it and the hills of Resaca until night. This regiment was under fire 120 days during the Atlanta campaign, being in all of the noted battles from Chattanooga to Atlanta, and lost 225 men killed and wounded. On August 26, 1864, the non-veterans were mustered out. On July 22, the Sixty-sixth engaged in the battle of Atlanta, its colors showing sixty-five bullet holes through it. After in the fall of Atlanta, the regiment was sent to Rome, and on October 12th was again engaged, with Wheeler's cavalry and General Hood's forces. They then went back to Rome and on November 10th destroyed Forts Johnson and Stonewall Jackson and burned Rome. The next day this regiment with the others started on the march to the sea, during which campaign it bore its full part, and was kept in the front because of the proficiency of the men as sharpshooters. This regiment captured a fine Blakely gun and seven prisoners at Eden Crossroads, unaided, and again without assistance defeated the Ninety-eighth Georgia Militia.

On December 21st, the regiment marched into Savannah and were assigned to Oglethorpe barracks as an honor. Leaving Savannah on January 28, 1865, the regiment marched through the Carolinas, joined General Logan at Hickory Hill, was at Bentonville, Goldsboro and Raleigh, going to Washington for the Grand Review, from whence it went to Louisville where it was mustered out July 8, 1865, and was paid off at Camp Butler, Chicago, July 15, 1865. The command took part in forty-eight battles, and many skirmishes.

EIGHTY-NINTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The Eighty-ninth Illinois Infantry, known as the Railroad regiment, was organized by the railroad companies of Illinois at Chicago, Ill., in August, 1862, and Captain John Christopher, Sixteenth U. S. Infantry, was appointed colonel, and Charles T. Hotchkiss, lieutenant-colonel. It was mustered into the U. S. service August 27, 1862, and was ordered to Louisville, Ky., and was assigned to Third Brigade, Second Division, Army of Kentucky, under General Nelson. On October 1st it was assigned to Sixth Brigade, General Willich, Second Division, General Sill, in McCook's Corps, General Buell's Army, and after helping to drive the forces of Bragg out of Kentucky, went forward to Nashville, Tenn., in time to take part in the battle of Stone River or Murfreesboro, Tenn., where, by its gallant conduct, the men soon became classified among the old and tried soldiers. On January 7, 1863, Col. Christopher, who had never joined the regiment, resigned, and Captain William D. Williams of Company F of Rock Island was made major. Lieutenant-Colonel Hotchkiss was made full colonel, and Maj. Duncan J. Hall was made lieutenant-colonel. At Liberty Gap, Capt. Herbert M. Blake from Company K was mortally wounded. Chickamunga served to fix the seal of its devotion, for there fell Lieut.-Col. Duncan J. Hall, Captains Rice, Spink and Whiting, and Lieutenant Ellis, besides the scores of brave men who fought with noble heroism and who dared to "do and die" in defense of the old flag. Upon the reorganization of the Army of the Cumberland, at Chattanooga, after the battle of Chickamunga, the regiment was transferred with Willich's command to its new position in the First Brigade, Third Division, Fourth Army Corps. Heg's Brigade of Davis' Division, McCook's Twentieth Army Corps, was consolidated with this brigade and was called by the enemy Horn Brigade because the order for every movement was made by the bugle. As all the calls were Prussian calls, the enemy could not understand them. This was the only brigade in the regular army using these calls. At Missionary Ridge the regiment again encountered its foes, scaling the enemy's entrenchments and driving him away, and Capt. Henry L. Rowell of Company C and Lieut. E. O. Young, Company A, were killed in this engagement. Following this terrible battle, the regiment was sent to Knoxville, and early in April, 1864, it returned to the neighborhood of Chattanooga, from whence it started on the Atlanta campaign, and participated in the victories of Rocky Face, Resaca, Pickett's Mills, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, etc., and were in the siege of Atlanta. This regiment with others was detailed to cut off railroads, capture supplies and cut into the enemy's army, and eventually the city was captured. From Atlanta the regiment went to Jonesboro and next to Lovejoy Station, afterward rendering efficient service in repairing the damages to the railroad and on October 30, 1864, was sent to Pulaski, thence to Nashville, and later took part in the battles of Spring Hill, Columbia, Franklin and Nashville, and pursued Hood's forces into Alabama. The regiment remained at Huntsville, Ala., for a few weeks, going then into eastern Tennessee, and from Greenville drove the scattered forces of the enemy before it. The regiment with its brigade, after the surrender of General Lee, returned to Nashville, and there was mustered out June 10, 1865, and discharged at Camp Douglas, Chicago, June 24th. Its record of engagements follows:

NINETIETH ILLINOIS INFANTRY

First Assistant Surgeon: John B. Davison, Rock Island; e. Nov. 1, 1862; res. March 1, 1863.

NINETY-THIRD ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

This regiment was raised in different parts of the state and was organized at Chicago in September, 1862, by Colonel Holden Putnam, and mustered on October 13th, being 998 strong. It was ordered to Memphis, Tenn., November 9th, and from that city moved with General Grant's army to northern Mississippi, where it took part in the campaign, and the regiment then went to Yocona Creek, and thence to Memphis, via Lumpkin's Mills. From Memphis it went to Lafayette but returned to Ridgeway, where it remained during January and February, 1863. On March 3rd, the regiment embarked for Lake Providence, and from there moved down the Yazoo river on the Pass Expedition, landed at Moon Lake, near Greenwood, reconnoitered, returned to Helena, and moved to Millikin's Bend, and took part in the Vicksburg campaign. It marched via Bruinsburg, Port Gibson, Raymond, and Clinton, arriving at Jackson on May 14th. There the regiment was under fire and lost three killed and four wounded, and remained at Jackson until the 15th, when it marched towards Vicksburg, and on the 16th was engaged in the battle of Champion's Hill, and took part in the action of the Third Brigade, Seventh Division, Seventeenth Army Corps, to which it was attached, and although at first forced to retreat finally took a decided stand against the enemy, which in turn retreated to Black river bridge. The loss of the regiment during this furious fighting was one officer and thirty-seven men killed and six officers and 107 men wounded, while one officer and ten men were missing. Once more the advance was made on Vicksburg, and the regiment came within about three miles of the city on the 19th, and on the 22nd the Ninety-third assisted in assaulting the works on the left of Fort Fisher, losing ten or twelve men in killed and wounded. That same afternoon, this regiment was ordered to re-enforce General McClernand's command, with the result that five enlisted men were killed and one officer and forty-nine enlisted men were wounded. On June 22nd the regiment moved to the rear, and on July 4th was stationed at McCall's plantation. On July 13th, the regiment started for Jackson, and upon arrival moved on Vicksburg, leaving on September 12th for Helena, Ark., from whence it went back to Memphis. From there it went to Glendale, and thence to Chattanooga, via Iuka, Florence, Winchester and Bridgeport, Ala. Crossing the Tennessee river, the regiment threw up embankments which it occupied until the pontoon bridge was constructed, and then went forward and on the 25th was engaged at the north portion of Missionary Ridge, losing Colonel Putnam and nineteen men by death; one officer and forty-one men were wounded, and two officers and twenty-five men were missing. The regiment pursued the enemy to Grayson, but returned to Chattanooga, from whence it went to Bridgeport, thence to Larkinsville and Huntsville, then back to Chattanooga, and took part in the reconnaissance on February 12, 1864. The regiment was in the line of battle at Dalton, but returned to Huntsville afterward, then went to Stevenson, then by cars to Kingston. One mile north of Dalton the train collided with an up-train and one officer and thirty men were wounded. On July 2nd the regiment reached Etowah to guard crossings on the Etowah river, remained nearly two weeks, then moved to Resaca, and thence to Spring Place, returning later to Resaca, and still later to Allatoona. The Ninety-third was a part of the force of 2,100 men which so signally defeated General French's division of 7,000 men. The battle raged for three hours, when the enemy withdrew towards Dallas. During this engagement the regiment lost twenty-one killed, three officers and forty-nine men were wounded and ten men were missing. This battle was the one which inspired the well known hymn "Hold the Fort."

On November 12, 1864, the Ninety-third regiment started on the march to the sea via Atlanta, McDonough, Jackson, Planter's Factory, Hillsboro, Clinton, Gordon, Irwinton, Summerville and Eden, reaching Savannah December 10, 1864. It skirmished with the enemy at Ogeechee canal, losing one killed and two wounded, and on the 12th moved to Station I on the Gulf Railroad, marching into Savannah on December 21st, remaining there until January 19, 1865. It then began marching through the Carolinas, destroying one and one-half miles of railroad on its progress from Graham to Binnaker's bridge, and had a skirmish with the enemy at Bates' Ferry on the Congaree, then on to Columbia, S. C., to Goldsboro, N. C., and thence to Raleigh.

After the surrender of Johnston's army, the command went to Washington and took part in the Grand Review, and were mustered out at Louisville, Ky., June 23, 1865, being discharged at Chicago, July 7. During the term of service this regiment lost 446 men and one officer, and one officer and thirty-one men were accidentally wounded. The regiment marched 2,554 miles and traveled by water 2,296 miles and by railroad 1,237 miles, making a total of 6,087 miles. ONE HUNDRED AND SECOND ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The One Hundred and Second Illinois Volunteer Infantry was organized at Knoxville, Ill., in August, 1862, by Col. William McMurtry, and mustered in September 1 and 2, 1862. From Peoria, Ill., it reached Louisville, Ky., where it was assigned to Ward's Brigade, Dumont's Division, and sent southward to Gallatin, Tenn. Colonel Smith took 150 men from his regiment and moved towards Franklin to stop a movement upon the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and an engagement was had three miles out of Franklin with a band of bushwackers in which two men were lost and five wounded. After many other engagements with the guerillas, on June 1, 1863, the brigade was ordered to Laverne to assist in guarding the Nashville & Chattanooga Railroad, and the One Hundred and Second were sent to Stewart's creek, six miles south of this point, Colonel Smith being placed in command of the posts, having, in addition to his own regiment, a battalion of the Eighteenth Ohio and a section of the First Michigan Artillery. In the following August orders were received to mount five companies of the One Hundred and Second on horses, taken for that purpose from the disloyal citizens in that vicinity. They were equipped with Spencer's repeating rifles, and the regiment became noted for its marksmanship. Movement was made to Lebanon in November, and here Surgeon Stanway was severely wounded, but the winter until the last of February was spent at Laverne. When the regiment marched to Tullahoma, going on to Stevenson and finally camping in Wauhatchie Valley, Tenn. It was while the regiment was here that the five mounted companies gave up their horses, but retained their Spencer rifles. Here it was also assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division, Twentieth Army Corps, Brig.-Gen. W. T. Ward commanding. Entering upon the Atlanta campaign, this regiment was in battle at Resaca, losing three killed and nineteen wounded, the brigade capturing a battery. On May 25, the One Hundred and Second encountered the enemy at Burnt Hickory, and later at Big Shanty, at the latter point losing Colonel Smith and Captain McMannus. On July 20, the regiment was engaged at Peach Tree Creek, losing two killed and eleven wounded. The regiment entered Atlanta on September 16th and started on November 15th for Savannah, entering that city on November 15th, in January moving to Hardeeville, thence to Robertville, near Sisters' Ferry, arriving at Columbia, S. C., February 19. After engaging in the battle at Averysboro, they went to Goldsboro and then to Raleigh, where the army remained until Johnston's surrender. The command then went on to Washington and took part in the Grand Review, being mustered out of service June 6, 1865, and the men were discharged at Chicago, June 14. The following men of this regiment came from Rock Island county:

Principal Musician: Thomas Merryman, Richland Grove; e. Aug. 20, 1862; red. to r.; m. o. June 9, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

The above mentioned regiment was organized at Pontiac, Ill., in August, 1862, by Col. George P. Smith and was mustered into the service September 8th, and of this regiment one company was from Rock Island county. The regiment left Pontiac on September 22nd, with 927 officers and men, and reported at Louisville, Ky. On October 3rd it was sent in pursuit of Bragg's army to Crab Orchard and participated in the engagement at that point. On October 17th, the brigade was transferred to the Tenth Division, Brigadier-General R. S. Granger commanding, and was transferred to Bowling Green, Ky., and later to Mitchelville, Ky., where from the middle of December, 1862, to the first of June, 1863, the command guarded the railroad from Bowling Green to Gallatin, Tenn., and during that period there were frequent skirmishes with the enemy. This service was extra hazardous as the attacking parties were usually guerrilla bands acting without due authority and noted for their cruelty. From June 1st until August 22nd, the command garrisoned Fort Thomas at Gallatin which was threatened by John Morgan's command. General Morgan did approach within eight miles of the fort, but retreated. On August 22nd, the command took up the line of march for Nashville, Tenn., where it remained in garrison until February 24, 1864, when it was sent to the vicinity of Chattanooga, having in the meanwhile been made a portion of the First Brigade, First Division, Twentieth Army Corps. On May 3, 1864, this command left with General Sherman's army for Atlanta, and during this campaign took part in the battles of Resaca, Buzzard's Roost, Lost Mountain, Dallas, Peach Tree Creek and others of less importance in the vicinity of Atlanta. One of the positions occupied by this regiment was at the bomb proof works at the railroad crossing which was so near the enemy's fort that it was necessary to maintain a guard to protect the Union men from the sharpshooters on the other side. At the evacuation of Atlanta the regiment entered the city and from there went on with the army in the march to the sea, taking part in the subsequent campaign in the Carolinas, being in the battles of Averysboro and Bentonville. It was also in the Grand Review at Washington, from whence it went to Chicago and was discharged June 10, 1865. The members of this regiment from Rock Island county were:

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTIETH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

(One hundred days' service)

The One Hundred and Fortieth regiment of Illinois Infantry was organized at Camp Butler June 18, 1864, and mustered into the United States service on that date and on the same day left by rail for Cairo, thence by boat for Memphis. From Memphis it marched to Wolfe river, a distance of thirty miles east, and was there formed into divisions and placed at different points along the railroad between there and Holly Springs. It remained there about three months guarding the railroad, after which it moved to Memphis on guard duty until ordered to Camp Fry, Chicago, for muster out, which occurred October 29, 1864. After having given up their arms, the men were solicited by Adjutant-General Fuller to reorganize and march through Missouri in pursuit of General Price, which they did. This trip occupied about six weeks, when the regiment returned to Camp Fry, and was finally dismissed after serving about five months. As this finishes the list of members of the infantry regiments in the Civil war from Rock Island county, Ill., I will state that the One Hundred Fifty-first Infantry was organized at Quincy, Ill., and mustered into the U. S. service February 23, 1865, and was composed of companies from various parts of the state, recruited under the call of December 19, 1864. From Quincy, it proceeded to Springfield, Ill., received its arms and accoutrements and then left for Nashville, Murfreesboro, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Dalton, Ga., where it arrived February 13, 1865, and went on guard duty and scouting. The 151st, 147th Ill., 145th Indiana and 187th Ohio were brigaded and became the First Brigade, Second Separate Division, Army of the Cumberland. On April 23rd, Colonel Woodall was detailed to proceed under a flag of truce to Macon, Ga., to communicate with Major-General Wilson, and carry also terms offered to General War-ford, for his surrender together with that of his command. This mission he executed with credit and dispatch, and he was complimented by his commanding officer, Brig.-Gen. H. M. Judah, who had relieved Col. H. F. Sickles, and was at that time in command of the brigade. On May 2nd, ordered to proceed first to Resaca, Ga., then to Calhoun, and then to Kingston, the regiment arrived May 12th, after a most toilsome march, nevertheless marched into this town with the precision of regulars, and it was here it received the surrender of the Confederates under General Warford, 10,000 men being placed under parole. The regiments were then distributed around on the railroad and at Rome, guarding government property, the officers being in many cases appointed to good stations in Georgia, in the Freedmen's Bureau, and as provost marshals. Lieutenant-Colonel Snow, on General Steadman's staff, was detailed as Judge Advocate of a Military Commission, and served until ordered to join his regiment for muster out. The regiment saw no fighting except with guerrillas. It was mustered out at Columbus, Ga., January 24, 1866, and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge February 8, 1866. These last regiments in the field in 1864 and 1865 took the places of many thousand veteran soldiers who were sent to the front to end the war.

FOURTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY

In August, 1861, Judge J. Byle Dickey of Ottawa, Ill., was authorized by the secretary of war to raise and organize a regiment of cavalry and on September 26th the Fourth Illinois Cavalry was mustered into the service and sent to Springfield, Ill., where it was equipped and transferred to Cairo where it went into camp. Soon thereafter company A was detailed to act as an escort on General Grant's staff and remained with him until August, 1863, being in the advance in December, 1861, on Columbus, Ky. The whole regiment was kept in front or on the flank of the advancing army. At Fort Henry and Fort Donelson this regiment took an important part, only losing one man in the first engagement; was also engaged at Pittsburg Landing and Shiloh, leading the van in the raid on Purdy and the railroad at that point, and was instrumental in capturing a train and destroying several bridges as well as destroying a considerable amount of track. The Fourth was in the advance when the army moved against Corinth, and so continued until the explosion of ammunition proved that the city was evacuated. After entering Corinth, the regiment gradually worked west, reaching Memphis in August, 1862, from whence it went to Trenton where it remained until the movement down the line of that road and the Mississippi Central began. There it struck Generals Van Dorn and Price near Holly Springs, following them to the vicinity of Coffeeville where Lieutenant McCullough was killed. Falling back to Water Valley it proceeded to Bolivar where it remained about three weeks. This regiment then returned to headquarters at Collierville, but in August, 1863, was ordered from there to Vicksburg. The companies were there united and remained together until the expiration of the term of service. It was on duty all the time at Vicksburg and made forages far back and below to the Black River as far as

Harriet Gilbert

Natchez, being kept busy scouring the country on both sides of the river for wandering bands of the enemy. In the latter part of October, 1864, orders were received to have non-veterans proceed to Springfield, Ill., to be mustered out. When the regiment left Cairo in February, 1862, there were 1,100 men and when it returned in 1864, there were but 340 men, who were mustered out at Springfield in November, 1864.

After mustering out the non-veterans of the Fourth Regiment, the Twelfth and Fourth were consolidated, and with recruits made a regiment about equal to what the Fourth had been when it went into the field at first, and the regiment was called the Twelfth Consolidated Illinois Cavalry. NINTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY

The Ninth Illinois Volunteer Cavalry was organized at Camp Douglas, Chicago, in 1861, by Col. Albert G. Brackett, of Rock Island, and by November 30 was mustered into the three years' service. It left Chicago for Benton Barracks, February 16, 1862, then proceeded to Pilot Knob, and subsequently to Reeve's Station, on the Big Black river, being there assigned to the Third Brigade, General Steele's Division, serving in the southeastern district of Missouri. It later went to Jacksonport, Ark., and thence to Batesville, joining the Army of the Southwest, Major-General Curtis commanding. Skirmishes were engaged in at Cache river bridge and on the Augusta road, the former resulting in the loss of two men, and June 2, 1862, upon the approach of the Confederate gunboat Maurepas, the Ninth fell back two and one-half miles, when the vessel shelled the late camp with 64-pounders; but after it left returned to the camp. On June 12 the Confederates endeavored to capture a valuable train near the Waddell farm, five miles from Jacksonport, but were defeated by two companies of Missouri cavalry and four companies of the Ninth Illinois, the Confederate loss being twenty-eight men, while the Union troops lost thirteen. On June 27, 1862, a large force of the enemy attacked a Government train near Stewart's plantation, but were defeated with great loss, the Northern loss being two killed and thirty-one wounded, among these being Colonel Brackett, Major Wallis, Battalion Adjutant Blackburn and Captain Knight. One of the most famous marches of the Civil war then took place, the whole of Curtis' command marching to Helena, Ark., during which five men died of hardships. The regiment was assigned to Hovey's Division and received two small 12-pound howitzers, these later rendering excellent service, as was shown at the fight at LaGrange, Ark., where two companies repulsed the charge of two Texas regiments and killed over fifty of the enemy, while the Union loss was but slight. On November 8, 1862, a part of the regiment was in the force crossing the Mississippi, which succeeded in heading off Gen. Sterling Price, returning without loss. From Helena the command went to Duvall's Bluff, then to Memphis, had a battle at Coldwater, Miss.; went on to Salem and Granada, and moved to LaGrange, Tenn., August 26. On October 8 an attack was made on the enemy at Salem, Miss., and on the 13th another successful attack was made at Wyatt, Miss. On November 8th the command moved to Corinth, went thence to Colliersville; was assigned to the Sixteenth Army Corps; and in the battles at Saulsbury and Moscow, Tenn., was with Grierson and played an important part. In January, 1864, the regiment was in the Second Brigade, commanded by Col. Albert Brackett, Grierson's Division, Sixteenth Army Corps, and at Colliersville, with a detachment of Maj. Ira R. Gifford's troops, took part in a battle with Forrest's cavalry, which had attacked the Memphis & Charleston Railroad, and defeated the enemy. On February 11, 1864, under order of General Sherman, the regiment moved again forward, the Union force being commanded by Gen. William Sooy Smith, chief of the cavalry division of the Army of the Mississippi, with a view of overthrowing the cavalry under General Forrest. This attempt was unsuccessful, but a large quantity of Confederate supplies were destroyed and the force returned to Germantown, February 24, 1864. On March 16th following the regiment veteranized and the following day marched to Memphis, whence the men returned to Illinois on the usual furlough granted veterans.

Returning to Memphis April 27, 1864, the regiment shortly thereafter accompanied General Sturgis to Guntown, Miss., met with a severe check on June 10th and were forced to give way, the Ninth forming a part of the rear guard and losing five killed, twenty-three wounded and twelve captured, out of 160 men. Another expedition, under Gen. A. J. Smith, marched from Saulsbury to Pontotoc, where a fight took place July 11th, while another engagement was participated in near Tupelo, July 14th, where the Confederates were badly beaten. On July 15th a severe fight took place at Old Town Creek, and the expedition then returned to Memphis. During August the regiment had three fights, coming out victorious at Abbeville, Oxford and Hurricane Creek, and returned to Memphis September 4, 1864.

On the 30th of September the regiment marched to Clifton, pursuing the Confederates under General Wheeler, and then returned to Florence, where it met the advance of General Hood crossing the river to Nashville. The division to which the Ninth Illinois Cavalry was attached took part in some hard fighting at Shoal Creek, Ala., on November 9, 1864, and on the 19th crossed the river and two days later attacked the enemy near Lawrenceburg, Tenn., the Ninth being in the advance. Two divisions of the enemy appeared and the Ninth was obliged to recross the river. The next important engagement was at Campbellville, Tenn., November 24th, where, the ammunition giving out, the men fought hand to hand with clubbed guns.

The Ninth Illinois Cavalry took part in the fierce battle of Franklin, Tenn., on November 30, 1864, and this battle was described by Secretary Stanton as the bloodiest battle of the war, in proportion to the numbers engaged. I was there. My time was out that night, and I did not get into any part of the engagement except a skirmish between Spring Hill and Franklin; but I will say that it was the only time that the Fourth and the Twenty-third Army Corps ever had a chance to fight behind works, and a person could walk on dead Confederates from the bank of the Harpeth river, above town, to the bank of the same below town, and never be obliged to step on ground. This is the truth and can be substantiated by both Union and Confederate veterans at the present day. The Union works went around town in a semi-circle, and our brigade supported the fort and crossings of the river, while the rest met the enemy in front, and then we brought up the rear that night and the following morning moved to Nashville.

At the great battle of Nashville, December 15-16, 1864, the Ninth Illinois Cavalry belonged to the Second Brigade, Fifth Division, Cavalry Corps, and participated in a well-directed charge upon a redoubt occupied by the enemy, which it carried, taking 150 prisoners and capturing four pieces of artillery. It also participated in the chase which resulted in the destruction of Hood's army, skirmishing with portions of it at Brentwood, on the Franklin turnpike, near Franklin, and at Rutherford's Creek and Ross' farm. The Confederates were driven across the Tennessee river on the night of December 27th, and on account of impassable roads and the lack of supplies it was impossible to follow them further. General Thomas, in his order respecting these military movements, said: "Although short, the campaign has been brilliant in its achievements, and unsurpassed in its results by any other of this war, and is one of which all who participated therein may be justly proud." The command moved to Huntsville, Ala., Florence, Eastport and Gravelly Springs and there not being a sufficient number of horses to mount all the cavalry, Hatch's Division was deprived of its animals. The Ninth was dismounted and left at Eastport, February 9, 1865, but when horses were supplied it marched on to Iuka, Miss., June 23rd, and thence to Decatur, Ala., July 4th, going thence to Montgomery, Selma and Gainesville, Ala., and was mustered out at Selma, October 31, 1865, and received its final pay and discharge at Springfield, Ill. SIXTEENTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY

The Fourteenth Illinois Volunteer Cavalry was recruited and organized in the fall and winter of 1862, with headquarters at Peoria, Ill. On January 7, 1863, the First and Second Battalions were organized and February 6th the Third Battalion. In February and March, 1863, the regiment received its horses and equipment, placed under thorough discipline and drilled to tactics, started for the front March 28th and arrived April 17th at Glasgow, Mo., where it was brigaded. Two hours thereafter the brigade started to attack a Confederate force at Celynd, on the Cumberland river, marching day and night; struck the enemy on the 19th and captured the town, destroying great quantities of supplies. Glasgow was headquarters, and the regiment was almost constantly in the saddle, scouting. In June it pursued and attacked Colonel Hamilton's Confederate force near Turkey Neck Bend, driving the enemy into the mountains of Tennessee and capturing a number of prisoners, several pieces of artillery, 600 stands of arms, a wagon filled with supplies and the commander's papers. It pursued the Confederate raider, Gen. John Morgan, from July 4th until his capture, the expedition covering 2,100 miles, took part in many of the skirmishes and battles on this raid, including the battle of Buffington Island and the six days' pursuit thereafter, and in the capture of Morgan himself. On August 18th it started on the East Tennessee campaign, and reached Knoxville, September 1st, two days in advance of the main column, capturing the rear guard of the enemy and a large amount of stores, supplies and munitions of war. On September 9th, at the battle and taking of Cumberland Gap, it was active, and on the 18th pursued Colonel Carter's Confederate command as far as Bristol, killing and capturing many soldiers and securing the Confederate train with a large quantity of arms, ammunition and supplies. The next day it drove the enemy through Bristol into Virginia, continuing to be engaged on the 20th and 22nd. On October 11th occurred a severe engagement. During the siege of Knoxville the regiment operated outside, continually harrassing the Southern troops, and on December 19th, when attacked by a greatly superior force from Longstreet's command, retreated with such skill that it inflicted great loss upon the enemy, although it suffered severely itself. After the siege of Knoxville, the Fourteenth was closely in pursuit of Longstreet's forces, and on December 14th, at Bean Station, the cavalry alone had an engagement, the entire corps of the enemy attacking and losing 800 men, while another severe fight occurred the next day. On December 24th the cavalry was consolidated under General Sturgis, and under him a stiff engagement was fought at Dandridge. On January 30, 1864, the Fourteenth alone, out of a large number of regiments of the corps, was designated to fight "Thomas' Legion" of whites and Cherokees in North Carolina. On February 2nd, with brass pieces, after following an old Indian mountain trail, it surprised the enemy and killed or captured the greater part, being complimented therefor by General Grant in a despatch. On May 27th the reorganized forces of General Thomas attacked the Fourteenth, but were repulsed. On June 13, 1864, it started to join General Stoneman's command, organized for the Atlanta campaign, reaching the latter on the 19th. On July 27th it left Lost Mountain on the famous Macon Raid, reached the city on the 30th, and captured a large number of prisoners. At Sunshine Church, after a fierce battle with the enemy, General Stoneman decided to surrender his command, but Colonel Capron with the Fourteenth cut their way through the lines on August 3, 1864, when, supposing he had gone beyond the enemy, the colonel ordered a halt. Betrayed by a treacherous guide the Union men, who had been without sleep for seven days and nights, were surprised and were killed or captured, and those who escaped were hunted by soldiers, guerrillas and by citizens with bloodhounds. They came in singly and in squads for weeks, one party traveling 400 miles before reaching the Union lines. The First Battalion had been detached on this raid, leaving the command July 29th to make a flank and front movement. In sixty hours, night and day, it marched 160 miles, destroying four depots, 500 passenger and freight cars, forty engines, many miles of track, etc., and the great Oconee bridge, and several times marched near large bodies of the enemy. It returned in time to participate in the great disaster of the 3rd. After this raid the scattered fragments joined in the line of battle in front of Atlanta and had the honor of entering the city with the advance forces. On September 15th the regiment returned to Kentucky, where it was remounted and re-equipped, and November 8th went to Waynesboro to dispute Hood's advance. On the 29th, while guarding Duck River Fords, the command was cut off and surrounded, but cut its way out in a gallant charge. At Franklin it was on the Union left near the town, and Nashville found it on the right, this battle practically closing its activities. It was later stationed at Pulaski, Tenn., and the regiment was mustered out at Nashville July 31, 1865, after having marched over 10,000 miles, and its members returned to their homes. SEVENTEENTH ILLINOIS CAVALRY

The Seventeenth Illinois Cavalry was organized under special authority from the War Department, issued September 11, 1863, to Hon. John F. Farnsworth, and the rendezvous established at St. Charles, Kane county, Ill. The colonelcy of the regiment was offered to John L. Beverige, then major of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, who assumed the work of recruitment and organization November 15, 1863. Eight companies were mustered in January 22, 1864, and February 12, 1864, the regiment was completed by the addition of four companies. By the close of the following April, 650 horses had been brought in, and May 3, 1864, the regiment moved to report to Major-General Rosecrans, commanding the Department of Missouri, at Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis. There its equipment was completed and it removed to Alton, Ill., and relieved the Thirteenth Illinois Cavalry in guarding the military prison. Early in June, following, the First Battalion was ordered to St. Louis, the Second immediately following, and both were ordered at once to the North Missouri District. The First, with Lieut.-Col. Dennis J. Hynes commanding, proceeded to St. Louis, reporting to General Fisk, and the Second, Maj. Lucius C. Matlack commanding, was sent to Glasgow, Mo. From this period, for four months the three battalions were separated.

The First Battalion was attached to General

Fisk's staff, and the First Squadron, Companies A and B, under Maj. H. Hilliard, was ordered to Weston, Mo., nearly opposite Fort Leavenworth, Kas. The Second Squadron, Companies C and D, remained at St. Joseph, Captain Butts in command, the duties of the battalion being mainly escort and provost guard duty. This continued until September, 1864, when General Price invaded Missouri, and late in September the Second Squadron rejoined the regiment at Jefferson City, Mo., and took part in the defense of the city October 6th and 7th. The First Squadron remained in North Missouri during the winter and rejoined the regiment in June, 1865. Lieutenant-Colonel Hines and Major Hilliard had been ordered to the regiment in February and March preceding, while headquarters were at Pilot Knob, Mo. From July, 1864, for three months, Major Matlack occupied the post at Glasgow, Mo., with the Second Battalion, Companies E, F, G and H. The entire detachment was kept busy day and night in scouting, skirmishing and guarding the United States telegraph lines from hands of guerillas who were Southern sympathizers. Several small engagements took place, one near Allen, on the North Missouri road, in July, 1864, one near the Porsche Hills, and a third near Rocheport. The reported presence of the Confederate Colonel Thornton, with 1,500 men, induced an order from General Rosecrans through General Fisk for a movement from Glasgow northward and westward in search of Thornton, and Major Matlack moved with his force and others, traveling about 300 miles, but found them not. In September, 1864, the Second Battalion joined the regiment at Jefferson City. The Third Battalion remained at Alton, Ill., from July, 1864, until late in August, and then moved to Benton Barracks and was fully mounted. Early in September it was ordered to Glasgow, Mo., but was reordered to Rolla, Mo., and was joined by the Second Battalion, Col. John L. Beverige commanding. It reported to Gen. John McNeil at Rolla, September 19, 1864, and here commenced an active and vigorous campaign in which the movements of the regiment were a unit.

When all communications between Rolla and St. Louis were interrupted by Price's army and General Ewing's small force had retired from Pilot Knob after a brave resistance, Colonel Beverige, with the Seventeenth Illinois Cavalry, moved out September 28, and, driving a cavalry force which appeared near Cuba, reached Leesburg, thirty-three miles distant, the day following, and rescued General Ewing, with Colonel Fletcher (afterwards governor of Missouri) and their 700 men, from imminent peril of capture, covering their return to Rolla. Early in October the regiment moved from Rolla as a part of McNeil's Brigade, towards Jefferson City, and reached there in time to construct defenses and repeal the attack of Price, October 6th and 7th. The day following, General Pleasanton arrived from St. Louis, and organized the entire force of 4,000 as a cavalry division under General Sanborn, and Colonel Beverige was placed in command of the Second Brigade, the Seventeenth Illinois Cavalry, and the Third, Fifth and Ninth Missouri Cavalry. Major Matlack commanded the Seventeenth, which took part in the attack made on Price at Boonville, October 11th. At Independence, the Seventeenth was deployed on the left, in support of the Thirteenth Missouri Cavalry, when the rear guard of the enemy was attacked and their artillery captured, October 22, 1864, and at midnight of the same day the brigade left Independence for Hickman's Mills, twelve miles distant, where the enemy was intercepted, and the Seventeenth, forming a column of its own, executed a flank movement. They were about to attack, when orders called them back to support the main column in front. Two days after this, the division, now under General Pleasanton, captured Major-General Marmaduke, Brigadier-General Cabel, more than 1,000 prisoners and their arms, including ten cannon, at Mine Creek, Kas., after a march of seventy miles in twenty-four hours. The Seventeenth, with McNeil's Brigade, was hurried forward in pursuit of the fleeing enemy, and three times formed in line of battle, but not until the last did the Confederates stand their ground, in an open prairie in the vicinity of Fort Scott, Kas., October 25, 1864. Every man of the Seventeenth, which had been chosen as guide for the entire line, could see and be seen by the enemy. The lack of forage and the rapid marching had caused the loss of more than half the horses, and hundreds of miles were traveled by some of the Seventeenth on foot. The brigade was now thinned down to 1,500 men, but moved bravely up to attack a force of 15,000, and after a short, sharp engagement, an order came from Gen. Pleasanton for an attack all along the line. At the word for the charge the Seventeenth rushed forward, and the enemy drew back while still the center and right of the Union line were full a half mile in the rear. The Confederates, however, escaped over the Arkansas line, and following this the Union brigade marched to Springfield, Mo. Subsequently it proceeded south to Cassville, Mo., and thence to Rolla, arriving November 15, 1864. During forty-three days the Seventeenth had marched more than 1,000 miles and had lost 600 horses. In January, 1865, the regiment was ordered to Pilot Knob, Mo., and after being remounted was ordered to Cape Girardeau, Mo., in April. Colonel Beverige was now brevetted brigadier-general in command of sub-district No. 2, St. Louis District, with headquarters at Cape Girardeau, and Lieutenant-Colonel Hynes was placed in command of the regiment. During the latter part of April the Seventeenth accompanied commissioners from Department Headquarters with a flag of truce, and arranged terms and plans for the capitulation of the forces of Gen. Jeff Thompson. Subsequently the regiment occupied detached posts on the Kansas plains, and returned to be mustered out in November and December, 1865, at Fort Leavenworth, and was mustered out December 20th and 22nd. The last important work of this, the youngest cavalry regiment in the state, was that of a detachment accompanying a commissioner who went to Fort Smith to treat with the Indians at the great council held in September, 1865. The service of the regiment was wholly in the department of the Missouri, commanded respectively by Generals Rosecrans, Dodge and Pope. While the regiment was stationed at Pilot Knob, Major Matlack was ordered to St. Louis and assigned to duty as provost marshal. From Cape Girardeau, Colonel Beverige was ordered to Warrensburg and thence to Kansas City, and thence to Rolla, Mo. He closed out all the military in Missouri, south of the Missouri river, outside of St. Louis county, mustering out the Missouri troops, supervising the removal of military stores and subjecting the military to the civil authorities when the regiment was mustered out. Colonel Beverige, by order of the secretary of war, was detained in the service, and presided over a military commission in St. Louis, for the trial of Confederate offenders against property and persons of the United States. He was finally mustered out of the service February 6, 1866, having served over

EIGHTH KANSAS INFANTRY

(Reorganized)

The Eighth Kansas Infantry, on its reorganization, early in 1862, was made up of seven companies of Kansas men, one company from Missouri, and two companies from Illinois, the latter being H and I, raised in the counties of Rock Island, Mercer, Henry and Whiteside. These Illinois men were placed in this regiment for the following reasons: In the beginning of 1861, Robert H. Graham, proprietor of the Moline Independent, of Moline, was in Rock Island, and after the news of the firing upon Fort Sumter, wired the governor of Illinois for permission to raise a cavalry company. Upon receiving the governor's consent, he returned to Moline and soon filled his company and at the election held soon thereafter, he was elected captain. The company took boat at Rock Island, landed at Quincy, and proceeded to Leavenworth, Kas., were armed and equipped and sent to Lexington, Mo., which place was being threatened by the Confederates under Price and Van Dorn, and there scouted and held the town. Captain Graham there met Governor Robinson, of Kansas, who had been a schoolmate, and asked him to raise a regiment for him for what was to be an expedition to go to New Mexico. Believing that the Confederates would not return to Lexington, Mo., he returned to Illinois with a few of his men and started to raise two companies here. A few days after his departure Lexington was suddenly surrounded, and after its ammunition was used up, the Union force was compelled to surrender to twenty times its number. Captain Graham immediately went after his company, and meeting it on the road took his men to the parole camp at St. Louis, where he secured their exchange. With those who wished to remain with him, he formed the basis of two companies, which were fully recruited and started for Fort Leavenworth, December 3, 1861. There they were mustered into the service with other recruits from Illinois and Nebraska, and formed companies H and I, of the Eighth Kansas Infantry, Captain Graham being made colonel of the regiment. He had also raised two other companies at St. Louis, one of which was traded off, the other becoming Company K. The regiment joined the Army of the Cumberland, took part in the Buell and Bragg campaign, participated in the taking of Atlanta and the battles of Jonesboro and Lovejoy Station, and came back with the Fourth Corps, holding the front line of the Union army during the battle of Nashville, and was the first regiment over the works of Missionary Ridge. It was one of seven regiments of the heaviest losers in a single battle, and lost over sixty-one per cent of its entire enlistment of 1,081, in killed, wounded and missing, nearly all of the missing having been killed. Of Company H, nineteen men were mustered out of the service, and of Company I, twenty-six. Colonel Graham during his scouting at Lexington took a severe cold, which settled on his lungs, bringing on hemorrhages, and finally developing into quick consumption. On the road south he was taken from the boat at St. Louis, back to his father's home at Lima, N. Y., where he died November 11, 1862. The following members of the Eighth Kansas Infantry were from Illinois:

PROMINENT OFFICERS

Rock Island county has every reason to be proud of the records of her soldiers, and it is but fitting that a little more than passing mention should be made in this connection of some who attained to special distinction, particularly those who commenced their careers in the ranks, or with but humble commissions, and distinguished themselves by their gallantry and faithful and efficient service.

MAJ.-GEN. JOHN BUFORD, of Rock Island, entered the Military Academy at West Point, was commissioned brevet second lieutenant, second lieutenant, captain of Second Dragoons, major and assistant inspector-general in the regular army. He was commissioned brigadier-general of volunteers July 27, 1862, and assigned to the Cavalry Brigade, under General Pope; was afterwards assigned to the command of the separate Cavalry Brigade of the entire Army of the Potomac, and when the cavalry was organized into three divisions, was assigned to the First Division, in which were the Eighth and Twelfth Illinois and Second New York Cavalry. In the campaigns of 1863 he was almost constantly in the saddle, and at Gettysburg a portion of his command met the brunt of the first charge, and when the retreat came his men hung on the flank and rear of the enemy. A few days before his death he was ordered to the command of the cavalry of the Army of the Cumberland, but before reaching his command was prostrated by typhoid fever and died in the city of Washington, D. C., December 15, 1863. He had been commissioned major-general of volunteers to rank from July 4, 1863, or from the battle of Gettysburg.

SURG. E. H. BOWMAN. But few people have any idea of the responsible position held by the surgeon of a regiment, for he outranks the colonel in special cases of the care of the men, and it is his judgment that rules in the regiment when deciding if men are in condition to stay on duty or to remain with the company, or if it is advisable for them to be sent to the rear or to the ambulance. The surgeon invariably stands high in the esteem and affection of the men, who in all cases place the utmost confidence in him. On September 11, 1861, Dr. E. H. Bowman was commissioned and entered the service of the United States as surgeon of the Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry. On November 7, 1861, he was engaged in the battle of Belmont, Mo., and had charge of the Field Hospital, where he had the distinction of dressing the first wound of the battle and the last one that was dressed on the field, and subsequently obtained the privilege accorded no other regimental surgeon, that of taking all of his own wounded to his field hospital instead of to the General Hospital. He was engaged with the troops that co-operated with the gunboat fleet, under Commodore Foote, in March and April, 1862; was acting brigade surgeon at the capture of Union City, Tenn., March 31, 1862, and was in the advance on Corinth in April and May of that year. In September he was appointed as division surgeon of the First Division, Army of the Mississippi, participated in the forced march from Corinth to Nashville, and took part in the siege of Nashville. He served on the staff of General Palmer in the capture of Laverne, Tenn., and the attack on Nashville November 5, 1862. On the reorganization of the army under General Rosecrans, he was placed in the Third Division of the Twentieth Army Corps, under Gen. Phil Sheridan, and assigned to the position of brigade surgeon of the Third Brigade, and in that capacity was engaged in the battles of Stone River and Murfreesboro, Tenn. Throughout the latter battle he had the most advanced hospital on the field and was captured by the enemy at a temporary depot with his wounded colonel and about 100 wounded men, and was carried to Murfreesboro.

There, with his own hands, he made the coffins for and buried in the same grave General Sill and his own Colonel Harrington while the terrible artillery duel of Rosecrans and Bragg was in progress. He was placed in charge of a hospital of Union wounded at Murfreesboro, and was made commissary for them, took part in the move across the Tennessee river and on to the battlefield of Chickamauga, and had a field hospital at Crawfish Springs, which he did not leave until ordered to do so by General Sheridan. He went to Chattanooga and gathered into a hospital there 350 sick and wounded soldiers, and crossed to Clear Spring Valley, where he established another hospital and gathered 317 sick and wounded soldiers. He was soon ordered back to Chattanooga to organize another hospital, and made it possible to care for over 200 wounded soldiers that had remained on the battle-field during all this time. He was relieved of all hospital duty at Missionary Ridge and resumed his rank of brigade surgeon of the Third Brigade, and was with this command at the battle of that place and in the expedition to relieve Burnside. In March, 1864, he was promoted chief surgeon of the Second Division, Fourth Corps, and in this position took part in the battles of Rockyface Ridge, Resaca, Dallas, Mud Creek, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek and Atlanta. During this campaign 1,264 wounded men were cared for in his division hospital. He was mustered out of the service at Springfield, Ill., September 20, 1864.

SURG. SAMUEL C. PLUMMER was mustered into the United States service as surgeon of the Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, May 24, 1861, connected with the army of General Lyons. He took charge of all of the sick and wounded of that army and brought them to Rolla, with the wounded and sick members of the Thirteenth Regiment, then gathered transportation from the country and sent them to St. Louis. He was at Pea Ridge just after the battle, and on the march to Helena, Ark., took charge of the wounded of three regiments, and, in spite of bad water and poor conditions of all kinds, so well ministered to his men that they presented him with a gold watch in gratitude. He was a member of General Carr's staff, at Helena, as medical director of the Army of the Arkansas, and when the army was reorganized and his regiment transferred to the Army of the Tennessee, he was sent to General Sherman at Chickasaw Bayou and was made chief surgeon of the operating corps. He performed herculean labor day and night at that battle, and for forty hours was without food, and at the battle of Arkansas Post experienced like conditions. On the return of the army to Young's Point, he was assigned to duty on General Steele's staff, First Division, Fifteenth Army Corps, a position he filled through all the horrors of the battles about Vicksburg. On the return of the army from Jackson and Black River, he was temporarily assigned to duty on the staff of Maj.-Gen. W. T. Sherman, as medical director of the Army of the Tennessee. The following letters are self-explanatory:

"Headquarters of the Mil. Div. of the Mississippi.

"Nashville, Tenn., 2nd April, 1864.

"Understanding from Surg. Samuel C. Plummer of the Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry that his term of service is about expiring, I take this method of expressing to whom it may concern, my high appreciation of the professional service which he has rendered and the earnest desire that the army may continue to receive the benefit of his fidelity and skill. I consider him competent to fill any place which the Government may assign him in his department of duty.

"W. T. Sherman,
"Major-General Commanding."

"Headquarters, Seventeenth Army Corps,

"Huntsville, Ala., May 24, 1864.

"I am well acquainted with Doctor Plummer of Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He is a most skillful and attentive surgeon and has, I am satisfied, done most excellent service in the army. If possible, the Government ought to retain Doctor Plummer. His experience is most valuable and his great executive ability would fit him eminently to the charge of any of the large hospitals. Doctor Plummer served for some time on my staff and my knowledge of his ability is derived from personal observation.

"Frank P. Blair,
"Major-General Commanding, Seventeenth Army Corps."

When the Fifteenth Army Corps was ordered to re-enforce the Army of the Cumberland, Surgeon Plummer was reassigned to the position of surgeon-in-chief of the First Division of the Fifteenth Army Corps, and during this time accompanied his command to Memphis, Corinth and Lookout Mountain. After fighting Generals Forrest and Rody at Cherokee Station, Barton Station, Caney Creek and Tusculum, during which time there occurred seven days of fighting, the Fifteenth Corps became separated from its command and under General Hooker participated in the glorious battle of Lookout Mountain. Missionary Ridge followed and then Ringgold Gap, and when the division called the roll it was found that 600 men were missing, killed and wounded. It was not only during this time, but at all others, and under the most trying conditions that Doctor Plummer so faithfully performed his services and so sympathetically dealt with his patients that he won the love of every man in his command, and his division expressed their appreciation by presenting him with what is still thought to be the finest set of surgical instruments in the country. Surgeon Plummer has now joined his friends and comrades on "the other side," but there are many left who hold his memory dear.

DAVID B. SEARS, first lieutenant and quartermaster of the Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, one of the best known men of Rock Island county, an early settler of Moline, and proprietor of Sears' Flouring Mill, set aside his private interests at the outbreak of the Civil war and enlisted in the service of his country. On August 12, 1861, he became quartermaster of the Twenty-seventh Illinois Infantry, became brigade quartermaster July 9, 1862, and in the latter capacity served at Belmont, Island No. 10, Union City, Farmington, Laverne, Nashville, Stone River, Tullahoma, Chickamauga, Kenesaw Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Blaine's Crossroads and the Atlanta campaign. He was taken prisoner December 3, 1862, while in charge of a foraging party, and was exchanged and returned to duty March 16, 1863. He served with his regiment and on special duty until finally mustered out, September 22, 1864, at Springfield, Ill.

CAPT. PATRICK GREGG, of Company K, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and subsequently surgeon of the Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, was as well known as any man in Rock Island county. He raised a company in September, 1861, and after drilling at Camp Black Hawk, in Rock Island county, it was sent to Camp Douglas, Chicago, in November. There it was made Company K of the Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, December 31, 1861, and February 10, 1862, received marching orders to go to Cairo, Ill., subsequently moving to Forts Henry and Donelson, and arriving at the latter February 14, 1862. The company was actively engaged in the battle and taking of that stronghold, and succeeding this went to Shiloh. There, on April 6th, Captain Gregg, with General Prentiss and others, was taken prisoner and carried to Corinth, Memphis, Jacksonville, Selma and Talageda. He was confined at the last named place until the Confederates became alarmed and sent their prisoners back to Selma, at which time the number of prisoners at that point included sixty-four officers. Not long thereafter the Confederate Secretary of War proposed to parole three of this number to proceed to Washington and, if possible, secure the consent of the Federal Government to enter into a cartel for an exchange of prisoners. An election was accordingly held, and Major Stone (since Governor of Iowa) of the Fourteenth Iowa Infantry, Colonel Miller of St. Louis Mo., and Captain Gregg were chosen for the mission by the other officers imprisoned with them. They were allowed forty days in which to report to the Confederate authorities, and proceeded to Washington, but, not being signed, upon the expiration of their time they reported at Richmond, Va. The Confederate Secretary of War, knowing that the cartel was agreed upon, and only awaiting the signatures of the proper officers, permitted them to return to Washington and extended their paroles for that purpose. They had at that time with them $8,000 and two large boxes of clothing, and, because of his professional training, it was decided, that Captain Gregg should go south with these supplies, the others going to Washington. The captain found the prisoners in a cotton factory in Madison, Ga., and remained there with them until October of the same year, when they were sent to Libby prison for exchange, which was soon effected, the captain then returning to his home. On December 15, 1862, he was promoted to surgeon of the Twenty-third Regiment, known as Mulligan's Brigade, which he joined at New Creek, W. Va., and from this time was engaged in caring for the sick and wounded through the battles of Greenland Gap, Petersburg, Moorefield and Leetown. Surgeon Gregg was mustered out of the United States service with an honorable discharge, and with more than an honorable record.

It would be difficult to name, in a work of this kind, all of the men who have gone forth from Rock Island county and written their names imperishably upon the records of military fame. I have given the names of but a few, but the memory of the brave lads who gallantly defended their flag, taking desperate chances with only the reward in view of duty well done, will live down through the ages. Many belonged to the rank and file, who implicitly trusted and faithfully served such noted leaders as Maj. Henry C. Donnelly, whose review is given in detail in another part of this work; Marcus B. Osborne of the United States Navy, than whom no veteran of the war had better right to be proud of his record; Judge Searle, whose brilliant service was made brighter by the love of his men; Louis Buford, Patrick O'Meara, and countless others who on southern battlefields brought fame to the county of Rock Island.

No record of the military history of Rock Island county would be complete without mention of the families who contributed the greater part of their members to the cause of the Union. In this connection, Adam Ziegler of Coe township appeared before A. S. Coe, justice of the peace, and made the following statement: That seven of his sons enlisted in the armies of the Union, and served in the aggregate about twenty-one years. His sons, David R. and Charles F. Ziegler, enlisted in August, 1861, in Company D, Twelfth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served four years; his son, John Ziegler, enlisted in August, 1861, in Company D, Twelfth Illinois Infantry, and served four years; his sons, William H. and Solomon B. Ziegler, enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in August, 1862, and served three years each; his son, Benjamin Ziegler, enlisted in February, 1864, in company D, Twelfth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served one year and five months; and his son, Nehemiah R. Ziegler, enlisted in Company I, Second Iowa Cavalry, in September, 1864, and served eleven months. Four of these sons were under age when they enlisted, and served seven years and six months while under their majority. Solomon Ziegler enlisted in September, 1865, in the United States Regular Army.

Albert Guyer Sr and Wife

Another family of patriots who should be mentioned, in that all male members of the family went to the front, while the women remained at home and worked with equal zeal and patriotism, is that of Hartzell. Abraham Hartzell, at that time fifty-four years of age, enlisted in August, 1862, with three of his sons, in Company C, Sixty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. His son, then fourteen years of age, who was left at home, later enlisted in Company H, One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, as a musician, and the only son-in-law, A. L. Hess, also joined the Union forces, making every male member of the family a soldier under the Stars and Stripes. The father was promoted chaplain of his regiment September 10, 1862, and resigned June 21, 1865, and returned safely to his home, as did all members of his family, there also being six cousins in the Union army. It may be that there are families with as large, or larger, a showing as this, but it has not been my pleasure to have become acquainted with them.

MOLINE ZOUAVES

About the year 1874, a Civil war soldier, Henry Calentzky, with the help of comrades, organized a company of militia, which was the first military company organized after the Civil war. A year later the company was reorganized and entered the Fourteenth Battalion, Illinois National Guard, with Edward L. Currier, captain; Swan Dahlberg, first lieutenant; William Cole, second lieutenant, and Edward Kittilsen, first sergeant. After having several commanders, and securing no assistance or encouragement, the company was mustered out, and some of its officers and men entered Company F. The only member of the old Moline Zouaves now in the service is Brigadier-General Kittilsen, raised to his present rank through regular promotions in the Sixth Illinois National Guard, with which he served in Porto Rico during the Spanish-American war as lieutenant-colonel. He is one of the best posted men on military affairs in the National Guard.

THE SIXTH ILLINOIS NATIONAL GUARD

AND

THE SIXTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY

(Spanish-American War)

On the reorganization of the State Militia laws, in 1876 or 1877, a company of men was raised in Moline and another in Rock Island, the former Company B and the latter the Rodman Rifles, both being included in what was then the Fourteenth Battalion, Illinois National Guard. Upon the formation of the Sixth Regiment ten companies joined this regiment, which saw its first active service in the strikes of railroad men at East St. Louis and Chicago, and later did good work in the coal strike at Spring Valley. None of the members now with this regiment were with it at its organization, and those who still survive are far past military age, while four-fifths of the present members were not born when the organization was effected. At the call for troops, in April, 1898, for the Spanish-American war, the Sixth Illinois was one of the first to be mustered into the United States service, and on May 11, 1898, having been filled with recruits, the companies were sworn in. Ordered to Springfield April 26th, the regiment was mustered in for two years, leaving Springfield May 17th. It arrived at Camp Russell A. Alger, Va., May 20th, and remained until July 5th, then leaving for Charleston, S. C., where it arrived July 6th. Companies E, F and I embarked on board the U. S. S. Columbia, Company A on the U. S. S. Yale, July 8, 1898, and arrived at Santiago, Cuba, July 13, 1898, while Companies B, C, G, H, K and L, on the U. S. S. Rita, embarking July 10th, arrived July 15th, and Companies D and M, embarking on Transport No. 21, July 21st, arrived at Ponce, Porto Rico, July 27, 1898. The troops did not disembark in Cuba, but when to Siboney, July 16, 1898, thence to Guantanamo Bay, July 18th and 20th, were at Bagniri July 20th, returned to Guantanamo Bay July 21st, and sailed therefrom to Porto Rico, arriving at Guanica July 25th. On July 26th Company G was in action four miles from that point, and on July 30th the regiment marched from Youco to Tallabola, and thence to Ponce, August 1, 1898. They remained in camp at that point until August 9th, and marched four miles over the mountain on the following day. They then advanced to Adjuntas, marched therefrom to Utuado, returned to Adjuntas, and then went back to Ponce. On September 7, 1898, the regiment embarked on the U. S. S. Manitoba, and arrived at Weehawken, N. J., September 13, 1898, arriving at Springfield, Ill., September 16, 1898. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, November

After the return of the Sixth regiment from the Spanish-American war, the different companies of the regiment were again mustered into the service. Companies A and F of Rock Island and Moline, kept right on with their organization and are both in good shape and service today. The two companies of Naval Reserve from Moline and Rock Island furnished quite a large number during the Spanish-American war and have held up their organization until recently when one of the companies, falling below the required size, was disbanded, leaving but one company yet organized.

NATURAL ADVANTAGES

Six full and nine fractional sections set off from Edginton township, in 1859, formed a new township, the adopted name being that of the little town nestled at the north center, Andalusia.

The course of the Mississippi river is westerly, deflecting one mile south in the six miles that the river forms the north township boundary. About one and one-half miles wide at the east, the valley decreases to some twenty rods width at the west end. This valley lies well above the high water mark. The bluffs are easy ascending wooded hills and cultivated fields. The uplands are rolling prairies. Fancy Creek east, Coal Creek at the west, and other small streams provide drainage. The soil in the valley is black alluvium, slightly mixed with sand. The prairie soil is black alluvium of varying depth, from a few inches to three feet. On the ridges the soil is gray clay, mixed with the alluvium. Magnesian limestone of the finest quality, of the Salurian and Hamilton formation, is quarried near the hills. Sandstone, thirty feet and upward, in thickness, rests in the bluffs over the upper coal measures. The coal stratas are one and one-half and four feet extending from outcroppings to a depth of 300 feet. Overlying limestones and lower coal measures are four foot veins of fire clay. There are inexhaustible deposits of potter's clay, from which there has been manufactured the best grade of pottery ware.

The channel of the Mississippi river, one mile wide, is separated by a chain of islands; the main channel flowing north of the islands, they are within the township limits. Some of the islands are sometimes overflowed, although the summer cottages and club houses are seldom endangered from high water. Near Andalusia, a group of white sulphur and soda springs supply mineral waters of taste and healthful qualities unexcelled elsewhere. In the bluffs are never-failing springs of pure water. The shaded islands, the cool, secluded nooks, close to the water line, and in the bluffs, are ideal camping places. The wealth of fossils in the creeks and ravines interest the scientific geologist, and are objects of study for the amateur. Near the west boundary, in Buffalo Prairie township, is the promontory, known as Ball's Bluff. Tradition brings down the story of outlawry, and retribution on the hill top, and of an abiding ghost. The weird tales do not detract from the magnificent view to be obtained from the summit.

From Andalusia westward, was a favorite hunting and fishing resort for the Indians of early days. In the valley, extending east from Andalusia, to their village on Rock river, the Saes and Foxes had selected burying grounds. The occasional unusual formation of a tomb yet found may denote that the interred had been a person of distinction among the tribal associates. The Indians regretfully and resentfully abandoned the traditional camping grounds. Now the valleys, the bluffs, the uplands and broad prairies are dotted with farm houses, many of them provided with heating and lighting plants, and other accessories for convenience and comfort. The agricultural resources are corn, potatoes, other vegetables, fruits and small fruits. On portions of rough lands are carefully kept preserves of forest trees. The acreage valuation runs from $80 to $300.

FIRST SETTLERS

In 1827, Benjamin W. Clark brought his family from Indiana and Wabash county, Ill., to Fort Edwards (Warsaw). There George Davenport, the Indian trader, engaged Mr. Clark to cut and deliver wild hay at the island on which Davenport resided, now Rock Island Arsenal grounds. Mr. Clark brought his family to the island, and in 1828, built a log house on the bank of what is now known as Sylvan Slough, near the present government aqueduct located in the city of Rock Island. Later, he acquired a quarter section, a portion of which is contained in the present site of the village of Andalusia, and on it built another log house, near the mouth of the "West Creek." Bringing his household to it, in the fall of 1832, he had the distinction of being the first householder in the west part of the county. In 1832, his was the only house between that of Joshua Vandruff, on Vandruff's Island, in Rock river, below Black Hawk Watch Tower, and of Erastus Danson, at the "Upper Yellow Banks" (New Boston), distant from each other thirty-five miles. In 1834, three log cabins were erected, the first by Hackley Sams at the mineral springs; the second by John Vanatta on his land east of the village, and the third by Jonathan Mosher, east of Vanatta. James Robison also settled on land near the southwest township line. These farms were the first in cultivation below Rock river, the owners the vanguard of sturdy yeomanry who blazed the trail for the pioneers of the third and fourth decades of the nineteenth century.

PIONEERS

Alfred Bing, born in Virginia, in 1830, reported that he came to Andalusia on horseback in 1854, his young wife seated behind him. He was a school teacher, and died of a wound received at the battle of Corinth, in the Civil war, having been captain of Company C, Second Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

Edward H. Bowman, born in Pennsylvania, in 1816, located at Rock Island, in 1843, later coming to Andalusia. He was a physician, and served as surgeon of the Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry; later became brigade and division surgeon. After the war, he was agent for the Pawnee Indians, served as supervisor four terms, one term being chairman, and died in 1893.

Jonathan Buffam, born in Vermont in 1795, located in Andalusia in 1839, was a farmer, and died in 1848.

Seth Buffam came to Andalusia in 1854, was supervisor one term, and died in Nebraska.

John Buffam came to Andalusia in 1839, was first supervisor of the township, and served eight additional terms, and for three terms was chairman. He was a farmer, and died at Lake Park.

Benjamin W. Clark was the first settler in Andalusia township.

Warner L. Clark, born in Illinois in 1822, from 1836, until his death in 1911, was the oldest living settler of Iowa.

Joseph Eby, came to Buffalo Prairie township in 1842, and later to Andalusia, dying here.

B. F. Eby was postmaster of Andalusia, a veteran of Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Civil war.

John Eby long operated the old-time stage line between Rock Island and Aledo.

Axel F. Ekstrom, born in Sweden in 1824, came to Andalusia in the early fifties, and was an insurance agent and merchant, dying at Reynolds in 1903.

James Hill, born in England, was a pioneer mail carrier and for fifty years a resident of Andalusia. Hillsdale, this county was named after his father, James Hill, who came from England.

Robert Johnson, born in New York in 1813, located in Andalusia in 1852.

Samuel Kentworthy was born in England in 1812, came to Andalusia, built a flour-mill, was a supervisor, and died in 1881.

John T. Kenworthy, the first white child born in Andalusia, in 1846, was supervisor two terms, and now resides in Rock Island; lawyer.

Jonathan Mosher located in Andalusia in 1834, and died in 1849.

Lorenzo Parmenter came to this township in 1843, was a farmer and served as supervisor one term, dying in 1896.

Egbert E. Parmenter was states attorney, and died while serving as county judge.

Willard Parmenter, a farmer, resides where his father, Lorenzo, located in 1843.

James Robison came here in 1834, was a farmer and is now deceased. His son Matthew Robison, is a farmer, brought here in 1834, when two years old, and is the longest continuous resident of the county.

Daniel Roe came to Andalusia in 1849, was a boatman, and died in 1909.

B. J. Snell, a retired farmer, has long been a resident of Andalusia.

Jeremiah Simmons came to Andalusia in 1850, now deceased.

Andrew Simmons, a potter by trade, died in 1909, having served in Company D, Twelfth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Civil war.

Theodore Simmons, a mason, served in the same regiment as Andrew.

Zachariah Walton, came to Andalusia, in 1850, was a farmer, a mason and veteran of Company B, Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, died in 1900.

William Schuck came here during the forties, was a farmer, and is now deceased.

CLARK'S FERRY

This ferry was established by Benjamin W. Clark in 1833, and became the most important river crossing above St. Louis, attributable to the easy approaches and course of emigration. With the building of towns on opposite shores, Andalusia, Ill., and Buffalo, Iowa, the name Clark's Ferry, became obsolete. However, there has been a continuous ferry traffic since 1833. Mr. Clark piloted a flatboat with long sweeps and pike poles. Later boats were propelled by horse-power, by steam and nowadays by gasoline, the launch towing a barge upon occasion, when required. During the closed season, the river has to be crossed by other means.

ROCKPORT

Benjamin W. Clark removed to the opposite side of the river in 1836, after selling his Illinois claim to Colonel Stevenson, and Messrs. Hamilton and Whiteside, the men who laid out the town of Stephenson, now the city of Rock Island, and Rock Island City, part of the site now the village of Sears. They platted the purchase here, named the place Rockport, and sold lots to eastern capitalists, and either sold or gave away lots in the embryo city to Daniel Webster, John C. Calhoun and other men of national reputation. No enterprises, however, attracted population or enhanced valuations to remind lot owners of their holdings, and accumulating state taxes strangled the infant city.

THE OLD TOWN ANDALUSIA

About 1843, Napoleon B. Buford, Sr., of Rock Island, bought at tax sale, the site of Rockport. Mr. Buford built a warehouse, and established a store, although he did not reside here. In 1845, Mrs. Buford rechristened the village Andalusia, and it became the principal marketing place for the surrounding country. Warehouses and a flouring mill were erected and for the time vast quantities of grain, produce and flour were shipped by river steamers, and flour hauled by wagons to Rock Island, was shipped to Chicago. Taxes had accrued against much of the realty when, in 1865, a syndicate of residents formed the "Town Company," which donated several building lots to churches on perfection of congregational organization. The personnel of the company were: S. M. Boney, Rinnah Wells, John Buffum, Arthur Roberts, Maria Kenworthy, S. E. Roberts, William Freeman, David Conner, Henry Thompson, J. C. Bethuram and David Finley. After adjusting claims of title in dispute it cut off seven tiers of blocks, east and west from the survey of 1835, platted the central valley portion into fifty blocks, a full block containing ten lots, each 61 x 140 feet, with seven east and west streets and intermediate alleys, and seven streets running north and south. A bluff annex contains a thirty-three acre farm, several five and ten-acre lots, and the cemetery grounds.

GREENBUSH

In the palmy days of early Andalusia, a rival existed one mile west. Jabez Cobeldick, a resident, built a warehouse in the woods, on the river bank and called the place Cobeldick's Landing. There were two lumber yards. In a roughly built shanty, there in the early fifties, the children of Andalusia attended school. Of them, men of later prominence in business and professional life, mothers and grandmothers, tenderly beloved, went forth into the world. The place was named and is now known as Greenbush. A little further west stands a modern country schoolhouse. There are nearby farmhouses, but nothing remains of the cabins or warehouse to mark the spot of Cobeldick's Landing.

VILLAGE OF ANDALUSIA

Proceedings before the County court, April 21 to June 4, 1884, show the record of incorporation of the village under state law. William Smith, lumber merchant, was the first president of the board of village trustees; Jacob H. Britton, mason, the first village president under the later enacted law. The plat, drawn in 1865, certified by James W. Ballard, surveyor, was adopted by ordinance, July 11, 1887; signed by J. H. Britton, J. D. Walton, Edward Strohmer, Louis Hartman, T. Y. Moore, E. A. Glazier, village trustees; attested by R. E. Reede, village clerk, and was certified by George W. Gamble, county recorder. It is recorded on page 42, book 3, record of plats. The past may thus be compared with the present. Jonathan Buffam bought the land of John Vanatta, east of the village, and in 1841, erected a small log grist-mill on Fancy creek. After a few years, the mill was torn down. With the advent of railroads in the near east and southeast, the elevator supplanted Andalusia's warehouses, and they have disappeared. The flouring-mill was burned down. The enormous lumber trade was disintegrated. A decade of the twentieth century credits Andalusia with a population of 300 souls. The tide of emigration west and north by way of the widely known ferry; the mighty river bordered by the lovely valley; the gently rising hills, giving place within view to bold bluffs and commanding promontories; the whole of picturesque scenery unsurpassed anywhere, is sufficient to explain why our forefathers thought to found here a great city.

At present Andalusia has good business houses. The people are self-supporting and contented. The important industry is the manufacture from the clam shell of blanks which, at finishing plants elsewhere, are converted into the pearl button. The sawed, round blanks are of various sizes, according to the class of the shell. There are a number of small factories, in which the operators earn from $2 to $5 daily. Gathering clams gives profitable employment during the summer months. The clams are found in beds, and are gathered by specially constructed apparatus, cooked in large, iron-bottom pans, the clams removed, and the shells sold by ton weight. The cooked clams are carefully inspected. "Slugs" are commonplace, but there is an occasional finding of a pearl of value.

Andalusia is an important landing of the packet line between Rock Island and Burlington. The wharf landing is maintained by the Federal Government. A deep water gap between islands apposite Andalusia, connects the slough or south channel with the main channel. The slough is much used by light steamers. The nearest railroads are the southwest branch of the Rock Island lines, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, at Buffalo, on the opposite side of the river, and the Rock Island Southern at Black Hawk, five miles distant. Now and then, during the past forty years, a railroad has been built through this section, on paper. The trend of events marks the certainty of close railroad connection in the near future.

THE FIRST POSTOFFICE

The first postoffice was established at Andalusia, April 24, 1846, with Dr. Edward H. Bowman, postmaster, but the office was discontinued February 29, 1848. On May 4, 1848, with James, widely known as "Scotch" Taylor, postmaster, an office was established at his farmhouse, nearly six miles southeast of Andalusia, and named Pleasant Ridge, but March 5, 1850, this postoffice was moved to Andalusia, and given its present name, and Dr. Bowman again became postmaster. He was succeeded by Myron B. Clark, July 23, 1851. On September 30, 1851, the name was again changed to Pleasant Ridge, with James Taylor again postmaster. His successors remained in office until it was discontinued in 1877, by the establishment of the Taylor Ridge office at the railroad station of that name close by. The permanent Andalusia postoffice was established July 6, 1860, with Frank Eby, postmaster. The successive postmasters until 1912 have been:

F. M. Boney, Samuel Love, Gilman Parker, Asa Parker, B. A. Vanderveer, Samuel Goode, R. E. Reede, C. A. Hayes, J. H. Brookman, J. H. Ballard and C. L. Wenks.

Previous to the general extension of the postal order system, in 1890, Postmaster Reede had the postoffice established as a money order office. Since 1863, there has been one mail each way daily; first carried by the Rock Island and Aledo stage line; for forty years by carrier from Milan, eight miles east. Prior to 1863, Andalusia had mail twice a week from Pleasant Ridge office referred to, antecedent to that service sometimes once weekly. When in his 'teens in the forties, the late James Hill of Andalusia, carried mail on horseback, through bridle-paths, in timber and over prairies, from Rock Island to New Boston, Mercer county, en route delivering mail for a "neighborhood" of several miles in extent at a designated cabin-home or store, or at times to the teacher at the place he "kept school." The late Hon. John W. Spencer, of Rock Island, brought to Fort Armstrong, from Galena, Ill., the first news of the election of President Jackson, four months after the election.

SCHOOLS

In the middle forties, Darwin Cushman and his wife (a sister of the pioneer Lorenzo Parmenter) taught school and kept an accommodation postoffice in a cabin near the southwest township line. School was held in the cabin and in a log house near the river bank at Andalusia, and in other cabins east and west. Later, a small building was erected in the east end, and at Greenbush, west. Of these a white-haired attendant of the long ago declares: "They were so little that the teacher could stand in the middle of the room, and almost whack us all over the head with the ruler." There are three school districts now, two white buildings, surmounted with cupola and bell, cosily furnished, have supplanted the primitive structures. The village district has a graded school, which is a commodious building, beautifully located in a magnificent grove of old oaks, such as cannot be found very frequently now.

CHURCHES

The Methodist society began with an organized society in 1858, although for ten years before that, the people held house-to-house meetings. A small church building was erected in 1866, and for thirty years regular service was held in it. Never numbering over twenty, the class is now so diminished, that at present the church building is indefinitely closed.

With four original members, H. G. Thompson and wife, Cynthia Smith and M. M. Thompson, the United Brethren congregation was organized in 1864. The congregation increased to sixty members, then decreased until those remaining could not support a pastor, and the church building was sold and removed.

The Baptist congregation was organized with a class of twenty-five in 1867, and when the first public schoolhouse was erected in the village was bought and removed to a church lot, enlarging it to a moderate-sized structure. Though not large, the congregation maintains regular services on Sunday. The Ladies' Aid Society connected with the church, is a valued auxiliary. They have stated meetings, socials, maintain a bank account, and help in the church work.

The Methodist and United Brethren congregations had maintained Sunday-school classes. The one existing Sunday school is the Baptist. At the County Sunday School convention at Rock Island in 1908, this school was awarded a banner, the prize for the largest membership in proportion to population. The pioneers held Bible classes at their homes. In 1859, a Sunday school was organized at Andalusia by members of various denominations, and the name "Union Sunday School" adopted after a warning given by an earnest, Christian lady, Elizabeth, fondly called "Mother" Eby: "My friends," she said, "it will make no difference what name you give our Sunday school, but, my friends, you must sing from the Methodist hymn book."

SOCIETIES

The Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, No. 516, chartered October 1, 1867, with twelve charter members, has a present membership of sixty-seven. The lodge owns its hall building, a neat, two-story frame structure, nicely furnished. The Eastern Star, Chapter No. 617, organized August 15, 1908, with seventeen charter members, has a present membership of seventy. Meetings are held in the Masonic building.

Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 2886, organized April 15, 1895, with nineteen charter members, has now a membership of seventy-three beneficiary, and three social. Meets in the village hall.

Alfred Bing Post, No. 492, G. A. R., mustered January 10, 1885, with sixteen charter members, of whom twelve are now deceased, has only two remaining in the township, Theodore Simmons and the mustering officer, R. E. Reede. The post was disbanded in 1908.

THE ANDALUSIA MEMORIAL AND HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

The Grand Army Post had a continuing Memorial Committee; the permanent chairman, the authorized post historian, had compiled a memorial record in part containing lists of deceased soldiers accredited to Andalusia and neighborhoods. The post by-laws required that upon the disbandment of the post, the Memorial Record book should be in custody of a Citizen's Memorial Committee. The citizens' committee was chosen in 1904; and on August 15, with the veteran and the citizens' committee, the nucleus, the Memorial Association was organized. The aim and objects are as follows.

To promote good fellowship; veneration for home association, home neighborhoods; to encourage good citizenship, national patriotism. To compile records of all who served in the army, navy or marine corps of the United States in any national war. To compile genealogical records of past and present residents of the village and township. On each May 30th, to conduct appropriate exercises in honor of the nation's soldier dead. Not to over shadow, the memorial program, such exercises may include reminiscences of past events, of former residents of the community. May provide for other memorial exercises; for the observance of other national holidays. At discretion of the executive board, or order of the association, to encourage reminiscences may hold annual, biennial or quadriennial reunions, of residents and ex-residents. To encourage advancement of the public schools; enterprises pertaining to the welfare of Andalusia and the near communities. Auxiliary clubs or committees may be charged with the execution of objects designated. The annual meeting shall be each May 30th.

The management is vested in five directors, one elected annually, tenure five years; the directors annually choose one of their number chairman. The chairman, secretary and treasurer, constitute the executive board. The secretary, tenure ten years, is ex-officio a director. Residents and ex-residents are members. There are no dues. Voluntary contributions provide for expenditures. The reminiscient articles filed are the personal recollections of the authors; of incidents and events dating back thirty to near ninety years. The chronicles of social amenities interwoven with incidents of historical significance, are of great interest; are educational; assure "veneration for home association" by our descendants; thus the foundation of noble manhood, pure womanhood, good citizenship, national patriotism is laid.

IN MEMORIAM

"Grandma" Sarah, wife of Jonathan Buffum; "Mother" Elizabeth, wife of Joseph Eby; Mesdames Robison, Parmenter, Buffum, Bowman, Kenworthy, Walton, Wells, Thompson, Spencer, Jones, Shuck, Kane, Hill, Freeman, Vanderveer, Moore, Ballard, Boney, Ekstrom, Parker, Johnson, Gardner, Britton, it would take a page to name them all, the self-sacrificing wives and mothers, brave, noble, christian women. Their eulogies are in their abiding influence, the reverence for their memories. Mrs. Andrew J. Moore went to her sick husband, a soldier in Company B, Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in the Civil war. The company carried a flag presented by the ladies of Andalusia. Mrs. Moore took the flag from the staff and wore it as an underskirt beyond the lines when the regiment was captured at the surrender of Harper's Ferry. The tattered flag is in the Memorial Hall, in the courthouse, at Rock Island.

ROLL OF HONOR

During the Civil war, many young men of Andalusia and neighborhood, served in defense of the flag. Many of them did not return. Through fifty years the compelling answer, "Here," to the stern summons from the Grim Orderly has greatly lengthened the muster roll of Andalusia and neighborhood's battalions on the parade ground of eternity. An occasional name not of the immediate communities is, by request of a relative, added. The record below is of those killed in battle, dying of wounds, of disease; perished in prison pens, and who succumbed to infirmities since the war. For brevity, the date and cause of death is omitted:

War of 1812.—Ebenezer Roberts.

Florida and Indian wars.—Job Simmons, unassigned ranger.

Mexican War.—Elisha B. Reede, Sixteenth United States Infantry.

Civil War.—Illinois Infantry, Tenth Regiment, Company E, Thomas Miller; Twelfth Regiment, Company D, Andrew Simmons; Twenty-seventh Regiment, Surgeon Edward H. BLACK HAWK TOWNSHIP

LOCATION

A glance at the map of Rock Island county, discloses the fact that Black Hawk township lies along the south shore of Rock river. On the north is South Rock Island township; on the west Andalusia; on the south Bowling and East Coal Valley townships.

Originally, Black Hawk was named Camden, and embraced all of what is now South Rock Island township. H. J. Bruner was the first supervisor. At the September term of the board of supervisors, in 1857, the name was changed to the more appropriate one of Black Hawk. It is strange that this name was not chosen at first, for it is the one intimately connected with its early history, much more so than that of the one first chosen. While Black Hawk fought against the white people, those of today, calmly reviewing history from all sides, realize that he had some justice on his side. Rock Island county was his birthplace, and the home of his kindred, and he felt in duty bound to defend it, against the encroachments of the white people.

The topography of the township is of the character found for many miles along Rock river, being rich black bottom land for a half a mile or so along the stream, and then breaking into hills and bluffs, with various creeks seeking the lower levels of the river. The hills and valleys extend to the southern limits of the township, and were originally covered with forests, but now most of this timber has been cleared off, the land fenced, and occupied by prosperous and industrious farmers.

That part of the township north of Rock river, was detached in 1875, and added to Rock Island, but this proved to be unsatisfactory, for it was discovered at the first election for township officers, that the returns had to be officially canvassed at the nearest polling place outside of the city. In this case the polling place was a little schoolhouse some two miles in the country. This state of affairs created great dissatisfaction, both in the city and the territory so recently annexed, and in 1878, the new township of South Rock Island, was formed.

HISTORY

The history of Black Hawk township of course is the history of Rock Island county and that of Illinois. The original township was a sort of storm center for all this part of the country. Here it was that the Sacs and Fox Indians had their "capital" city containing at one time some 5,000 inhabitants. The village spread along the north shore of Rock river for several miles. The islands in the river were also occupied by their tepees, and on the hills, back from the watch tower, where the land has never been plowed, the old Indian corn hills are still plainly visible. This was an ideal location and satisfied the simple wants of the Red Men, furnishing hunting and fishing in abundance. The rich land, beautiful forests and magnificent scenery attracted others, outside the Indian tribes, for as early as 1830, the settlers began to encroach on the Indian possessions, and personal conflicts became numerous, and serious.

This condition of affairs in 1832, brought on the Black Hawk war. It is not possible in this division, to go fully into the details of the conflict, for they are taken up at length elsewhere in this work. Reference will be made to but several incidents. On one occasion General

Gaines, coming up Rock river on a steamboat with several cannon, shelled the bushes on Vandruff Island, one entire afternoon, although there was probably not an Indian on the island. On another occasion, the regular soldiers from Fort Armstrong, reenforced by a local company, were formed in battle array, and stormed the Indian village, which they found deserted. They kept right on in line of battle until they captured the crest of Black Hawk's tower. Here they placed several guns, and shelled the woods on Vandruff Island for the rest of the day, then marching back to their quarters. There appears to have been no one killed, or even wounded, and when we read of the hardships and dangers of the soldiers at this time, it makes an old soldier who "marched with Sherman" smile. However, it was not schoolboy play by any manner of means. The battle at Campbell's Island was a real fight, and the soldiers on the boats displayed as true courage as was ever shown on a battlefield. Let us not forget, either, the women and children in their lonely cabins, exposed to real or imaginary dangers from the Indians. They too, showed remarkable courage. It is a credit to Black Hawk that more defenseless people were not massacred. The Indian chief was a brave man, although not a great general. The fate of the Indians was inevitable, as the westward sweep of the whites was sure to drive them towards the setting sun. In the center of Spencer Square in the city of Rock Island, is a fine statue of Black Hawk, that shows him to have been a credit, physically, to his race.

OLD SETTLERS

The writer was personally acquainted with many of the old settlers of the township, and a number of them still survive, but others have long since gone to that happy land, from which no traveler ever returns. Some of these old friends and neighbors are gratefully remembered for hospitality and favors extended. They came here from Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, New York and other eastern states. They were an honest, kind-hearted people, generous to a fault. Hard times were experienced in those days, and their resources were taxed to the limit, to make ends meet. Rinnah Wells was the first man who settled in the township, coming here in 1828, and was soon followed by others. William Little told the writer that when the pre-emption papers to his land were filed, he had to walk to Galena to put them on record. Ben Goble and wife were the first people married in Black Hawk, or in the county for that matter. They now rest side by side in beautiful "Chippianock." Jacob Vandruff lived where the great Davis electric plant is now being erected.

Notable visitors paid the township the compliment of coming here. Captain Abraham Lincoln, with his company of state militia, camped in the township in 1832. No one at that time dreamed that the youthful, tall, Kentucky lad would ever be President of the United States, and be in command of a million soldiers.

In 1805, Lieutenant Pike, who later discovered Pike's Peak, visited the Indians at their village on Rock river, and presented them with a United States flag. When Rock Island city was boomed in the east, Daniel Webster and Caleb Cushing invested several thousand dollars in this paper town, but it is not likely that they ever saw their money again.

Milan is a town of considerable importance. It is situated at the junction of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, and the Cable branch of this road, the Rock Island Southern Railroad, a new electric line passes through the town. There is also a good prospect of an electric line to Galesburg in the near future. The Tri-City Railway connects the town with Rock Island, Davenport and Moline, at a 5-cent fare, with transfers and is a great benefit to the community.

Some of the early settlers of Milan were William Dickson, Frank Young, William Young, N. D. Bradley, Garry David, John Dickson, James Johnson, James Dickson, William Heflin, Ira L. Whitehead, F. M. Young, and Daniel Pinkley. Joshua Vandruff ran a ferry across Rock river for many years. It was at one time quite a milling center, and Camden Flour Mills produced flour that had a wide reputation and sale. James Johnson was the leading miller, and made a fortune in the business, but he unfortunately lost his money soon afterwards in speculations in Davenport and Chicago. H. P. Beatty succeeded Mr. Johnson in the milling trade, and he, too, was quite successful. In 1871, Mr. Johnson came back to Milan, bought his mill back, but did not prosper, as formerly and he finally failed. Wheat in this section had become a poor crop, on account of the ravages of chinch bugs, and farmers had almost stopped raising it, which fact proved disastrous to the milling business. In 1871, Holmes Hakes built the first paper mill, and organized the Milan Paper Company. A few years afterwards, he built the Rock Island Paper Mill, and a few years later, the National Paper Mill was built on the north shore, in Sears. All these mills were operated for a number of years, but owing to a lack of straw, and its high price, the business was never very profitable.

UTILIZATION OF WATER POWER

In 1867, David B. Sears secured a charter from the state to build a dam across the main channel of Rock river, and also in the cut-off between Vandruff and Carr islands. This right was granted on condition that a canal be dug around the dam to make the river navigable. Mr. Sears had just sold his property on Rock Island to the government for $147,000, and of course was abundantly able to put the project through. Gen. L. A. Grant, of Civil war fame, who was secretary of war in Harrison's administration (commissioned April 12, 1890, acted till December 15, 1893), became associated with him. During the summer of 1868, the main channel was coffered, and a wooden dam, rock filled, crescent shaped, was constructed in the dry river bed. At the same time, the great Sears mill was being built of stone, taken out of the river bottom. Much of the stone was cut and Joliet stone was used to a considerable extent. It was a fine building, and cost something like $60,000.

Vandruff Island and much other land had been bought by the Sears' interests, and real estate prices were soaring. "The Rock River Navigation Company and Water Power Company" was organized in 1870, with a capital stock of $500,000. O. M. Babcock of Chicago, a man of considerable ability, was engaged to promote the enterprise. He was a man of good address and wonderful persuasive powers. His object was to interest and induce manufacturing concerns to locate here. He was quite successful in getting a number interested in the locality, and was the main factor in securing the location of the "Rock Island Watch Company" on the south side of Vandruff Island.

In granting the charter, the state stipulated that as Rock river was a navigable stream, a canal was to be dug so that boats could pass up and down the river. The time allowed for digging this canal would expire in 1872, and it would require two or three years to do the work. Worse yet, there was no money in sight at this time, and to fail, would be to forfeit the charter. Mr. Babcock took the matter in hand, formed a company of Chicago business men, and induced them to pay $5,000 in cash, and $5,000 in stock for the privilege of digging the canal. This company was known as the "Rock River Navigation Co."

This canal was completed in the fall of 1871, at a cost of $42,000. This company placed several small steamboats and a number of barges on the river and brought coal down the river to Davenport for the next two years, at a loss of over $10,000. The canal soon went to destruction, and the last known of the Chicago business men, they were going through bankruptcy.

The big mill never was the success that was anticipated, although it was operated until it burned down in 1890. The watch company built a fine three-story structure, but when it was about ready for operation, it was discovered that the machinery that had been purchased from the Ann Arbor Company was not suitable for the making of watches. No watches were made, and the enterprise proved a dead loss. There have been many failures here in the manufacturing line, and fires have played a serious part in the destruction of property. There have been good causes for many of these failures, and their history should guard against similar ones in the future. Within the next year, there will be an abundance of cheap electric power, and there is no reason why many articles cannot be made here as cheaply as in any place in the country. All that is needed is the right kind of men, willing to work hard until success is assured. There is a bright future for Black Hawk township along manufacturing lines. We have the finest building sites, electric power, coal supplies, and unsurpassed shipping facilities. All kinds of building materials are here in abundance and cheap as to price. People can live here much more cheaply and better than in the cities. Surely these advantages will not much longer be overlooked.

THE HENNEPIN CANAL

The Hennepin Canal runs through the township, from east to west, and is a great engineering work. There are three locks in the township, and the canal enters the Mississippi river just below the mouth of Rock river. There is a depth of seven feet constantly maintained, and it is free to all boats. So far there is not much commerce on the canal, principally owing to a lack of suitable boats, and terminal facilities. As soon as a Chicago route is made practicable, there will no doubt be a fine commerce on the canal.

The water power is now owned and is being developed by S. S. Davis and associates. They are young men with abundant capital, and the energy and pluck to make their enterprise a great success. They have bought up all the land along the river to avoid possible suits for damages, and prevent future trouble. A fine concrete dam now spans the main channel of the river, and a similar one has been built in the cut-off between Carr and Vandruff islands. A good head of water is thus obtained much better than was secured by the old Sears dam.

The great Davis Electric Power plant is now nearing completion, and will be a credit to this whole community. The great power house is 300 feet in length, and is built entirely of concrete, black pressed brick, steel and glass, and is, of course, fireproof, as there is no wood in its construction. When this work is completed, it will generate electric power of 25,000 horsepower and perhaps much more, and will be one of the show places of the county.

Milan is a town of considerable commercial importance, as it is situated in a rich farming community, and is the gateway to Rock Island. It has a good farmer trade, and the merchants are nearly all quite prosperous. All classes of goods are handled, and as a center for agricultural implements, it is easily the most important place in the county. In the last few years, C. H. Dibbern & Son, in addition to their large hardware and implement trade, built up quite a business in lumber and shingles, having sold more than thirty car-loads in the past year.

Land in Black Hawk township has more than doubled in value in the last ten years, and town property is also looking up. The tendency is towards small farms, dairying and truck farming. The latter is rapidly superceding the production of standard crops. Shipping facilities here are excellent, as all the railroads make the Mississippi river rates to and from all points in the county. Most of the farmers market their products in Rock Island and Moline, as there is always a good market at those points for all that can be produced. Hogs and cattle are shipped by rail from Milan and Taylor Ridge.

There is some of the finest scenery here that can be found anywhere in the state. One looking south from the crest of Black Hawk's Watch Tower, can see almost all of the township, and a charming sight it is too. The beautiful islands covered by magnificent trees, the nine steel railroad and wagon bridges; the ribbon-like course of the different channels of the river; the chance passing of a railroad train, or a steamboat on the canal; the picturesque little town of Milan; the numerous farm houses, and great barns filled with hay and grain; the charming hills and forests in the dim distance, all go to form a picture that can never be forgotten. With all our opportunities so abundantly furnished, surely Black Hawk is a good township to come to, and not to move away from in order to follow some will-of-the-wisp in the far west. This is our home township, the best in the state.

BOWLING TOWNSHIP

BOUNDARIES—BACK TO THE FARM—ADVANTAGES—EARLY SETTLEMENTS—FIRST SCHOOLS—RELIGIOUS PRIVILEGES — FARMING CONDITIONS — TAYLOR RIDGE — MORAL FEATURES — WEALTH — SUPERVISORS.

BOUNDARIES

Bowling township is one of the original divisions of Rock Island county, and comprises all of congressional township 16 north, range 2 west. Its boundaries are as follows: Rural township on the east, Mercer county on the south, Edgington township on the west, and Black Hawk township on the north. The history of the development of agriculture reads like some fairy tale of old. The farmers all over the country, but especially those in the rich valley of the Mississippi river, have awakened to a realization of the true value of their land, and the dignity of their calling. No longer are they content to carry on their farming simply to get a living. They appreciate the fact that they are the real producers of the country, and that upon their success or failure depends the fate of the nation. Some years ago the whole tendency of the younger generation was towards the centers of civilization; now the cry "back to the farm" has become a mighty one; the tide has turned, and is bearing with it many who long for a chance to secure land from which they can earn not only a competence, but wealth as well. The golden color of the grains in harvest time is symbolic of their value today. However, those who seek land at present at a reasonable price will have to go much further west or northwest to find it, for certainly none is being sold in Rock Island county except at the very highest market figures. People do not throw away the chance of a lifetime.

Owing to its location, Rock Island county has centered the greater part of its manufacturing production in Rock Island city and Moline. The majority of the remainder of the county is devoted to agriculture, and the work is carried on under almost ideal agricultural conditions. Of course some factories are operated outside the cities, and the mining interests are heavy, but, as a whole, in the county outside the twin cities, farming has been found to be more profitable than any other occupation. The presence of Rock river, with its many tributaries, and the "Father of Waters" itself, with its other tributaries, make the entire county a river bottom, so that the soil is extremely rich, and as the climate is suited to the growing of all kinds of grains, many fruits, and every variety of vegetable, the shipments to outside markets are extremely heavy. It is from such sections as Bowling township that these shipments come, for the farmers here are remarkably progressive, well informed and willing to take advantage of the opportunities afforded.

Jno. A. Hennegan

FIRST SETTLEMENTS

The first settlement in Bowling township was made in 1838 by a Mr. Bowling, John Tyndall and Edmond Cropper, who all arrived about the same time. No other pioneers came until about 1841, when there was quite an influx of settlers, among them being James Clarke, David Clarke, John Clarke, John Johnston and Christopher Armstrong. Wellington Curtis and Henry McKnight arrived a little later. The settlements after this were many and when Bowling township was organized in 1857 there were a number of prosperous men within its confines. For the first few years there were no schools, but a philanthropist belonging to Rock Island county built a schoolhouse and presented it to Bowling township, and also built one at Preemption, in Mercer county, about the same time. His name should be preserved, for in all he built fifteen schoolhouses in Rock Island county. A Mr. Phillips was one of the first teachers. In this first school the age limit ran from four to twenty-one years, and sometimes there were eighty-five pupils enrolled, all of whom attended school at one time and were handled by one teacher. Many of the pupils never received any more educational advantages than those afforded by this little school, or ones similar to it, and yet they developed into substantial and prosperous men and women not only of Bowling township, but were a credit to every community in which they happened to locate. One of the pupils of this first school who became distinguished in after life was John Blakely, who moved to a farm near Sioux City, Ia., later becoming a member of the Iowa State Assembly, and still later state auditor, which office he still holds. Samuel Baily is another of the pupils of the first schoolhouse who has distinguished himself. He was born and reared in Bowling township, and after studying medicine and being graduated from a Chicago medical college, developed into one of the leading physicians of Mt. Ayr, Ia. As in the other townships of Rock Island county, there is a good school system in Bowling township. The teachers possess a thorough knowledge of their work and appreciate the responsibilities resting upon them.

The scattered settlers in the early days felt keenly the loss of their religious privileges, and very soon after the building of the first schoolhouse, began making arrangements to organize a church. The first religious services were held in this schoolhouse by the Rev. Mr. Taylor, a Methodist clergyman. This denomination is now represented in the western part of the township by the McConnell Methodist Episcopal chapel, the Rev. Alfred Dixon being the present pastor. The Presbyterians have a place of worship in the northern part of the township; while the Episcopalians worship in a church erected in 1855, their body having been organized in 1854. The Rev. William Dawson is the present rector. The camp grounds of the Rock Island district of the Methodist Episcopal church are located in Bowling township, and are well adapted for their purpose.

While farming conditions have been so greatly improved during the past couple of decades, the responsibilities of the farmer are still exceedingly heavy. His plans have to be carefully laid, and scientifically carried out to prevent loss. While he receives a much higher price for his produce, it is grown at a much higher cost. Many who have never cared to investigate conditions do not appreciate this latter fact, but it is a very important one in the farmer's life. In dairying alone the expenses have been many times multiplied. Not only are the herds under state inspection, but the barns have to be fitted according to sanitary regulations and the milk cared for in a way that would have seemed absurd to the pioneers, who, with the rest of the country, had never heard of germs or infection. Even the method of shipping is inspected, and the milk itself is subjected to rigid tests. The excessive competition, heavy railroad rates, expense of installing and maintaining costly farm machinery, all add to the burdens and responsibilities of this calling, so that the agriculturist of today has to be an experienced business man in addition to being an excellent farmer. Another feature of farm life that adds to the difficulties of an agriculturist is the lack of assistance in performing the necessary tasks. The farmer can utilize electricity, and to a certain extent so can his wife, but frequently upon her shoulders fall many of the heaviest burdens of the farm, because it is so often impossible to get anyone willing to do domestic labor. When housewives in the city are experiencing the same trouble, no surprise need be felt that their sisters in the rural districts get almost desperate. Still, modern invention is changing many things and in time it may be possible to do almost all kinds of domestic labor by air, steam, gasoline, electric or other power. Until then, the wives of the farmers deserve all the credit that can be accorded them. To them is due much of the remarkable improvement which is constantly taking place.

TAYLOR RIDGE

There is one village in the township which bears the name of Taylor Ridge. It was settled in 1876, when the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad was built. It has a population of 200.

It is a notable fact that while the people of Bowling township go through the form of electing a justice of the peace, it is difficult to get anyone to qualify for the office, as there is absolutely no business for him to transact. Not even a mortgage is recorded from year to year, and there is practically no litigation. There is no saloon in the township, nor has there been for the past forty-five years. Another fact of which the people of the township are very proud is that no application for divorce has ever been made by a resident of the township. Bowling township contains some of the finest and most valuable farms in the county. The valuations as reported by the assessor for 1913 were as follows: Improved land, 23,566 acres, assessed valuation $364,416; unimproved land, none; horses, 917, assessed valuation $66,717; cattle 2,318, assessed valuation $52,377; mules and asses 48, assessed valuation $3,402; sheep 323, assessed valuation $1,290; hogs 2,752, assessed valuation $20,496; carriages, wagons and automobiles 186, assessed valuation $14,691; watches and clocks 68, assessed valuation $519; sewing and knitting machines 60, assessed valuation $600; pianos and organs 48, assessed valuation $3,579.

The men who have served Bowling township on the Rock Island County Board of Supervisors, from 1857 to 1912, have been as follows:

T. W. Vincent, 1857; John C. Kelley, 1858; Elihu Rathbun, 1859-60; John Morris, 1861-2 (served two terms in the state legislature); Samuel L. Foster, 1863-4; John Clark, 1865-6; Samuel L. McConnell, 1880-1; John Clark, 1882-4; Hugh Walker, 1885-6; S. W. Heath, 1887; Thomas Armstrong, 1888-9; S. W. Heath, 1890-1; Foster Armstrong, 1892-3-4-5; James W. Betty, 1896-7; A. L. Freeburg, 1898-9-1900-1; Wm. H. Cropper, 1902-3; Foster Armstrong, 1904-5; David T. Little, 1906-7; John Lipton, 1908-9-10-11-12-13.

LOCATION

The name Buffalo Prairie was applied to the magnificent prairie extending from the Mississippi river south towards Edwards river. One-half of this territory lies within Rock Island county. Upon the organization of the township, the land in range 4, west, comprising one Congressional township, town 16, and four full and eleven fractional sections in town 17, was named Buffalo Prairie township. It is certainly one hundred years or more since the buffalo roamed over the township that bears the name. These herds were followed by the Indians who almost subsisted upon them. Strange, that with the passing of the race that once almost owed its existence to the animals, that they have become practically extinct. Now and then, in some park or reservation, one or two of these uncouth, shaggy beasts are found, but it will not be long before they will exist only in natural history volumes. Long as it has been since they were found in Rock Island county, evidences of their former presence are found in sections 21, 22, 23, 26, 27 and 28, in old grass and moss-covered paths leading to water. The buffalo and deer "licks" are notable in this locality.

Buffalo Prairie township is principally prairie land, although the fractional sections of town 17, have considerable timber land, bordering upon open areas of rolling land. The soil is a black alluvium of a depth from a few inches to several feet, the latter predominating. On the ridges, the soil is a gray clay, mixed with the alluvium. The principal streams are Copperas creek, which flows nearly parallel through the southern half of town 16, leaving the township in section 19; Big Run, commonly called Big Slough, which rises in the northeastern part of the township and enters the Mississippi river from fractional section 27. The township is bounded by the Mississippi river on the north, on the east by Edgington and Andalusia townships, on the south by Mercer county, and on the west by Drury township.

FIRST SETTLERS

The first settler was John Edgington, who came from Jefferson county, Ohio., and located on section 11, in 1834, and lived to become one of the old and substantial farmers of the township. Peter Carr came from Ohio, in 1835, settling on sections 11 and 12; in 1836, Daniel Wheaton located on section 13; Stephen Brayton on section 17; Marlin Tucker on section 28; Jacob Coleman on section 7; Daniel De Graff on section 31; and William Bruner on section 18, all arriving before 1838. The year 1839 brought Samuel Sloan and John Kistler.

The above mentioned were the pioneers who waded across bridgeless streams, through bottomless sloughs, to reach this lovely section of Illinois land. Their houses were log huts, covered with "shakes" riven from forest trees, but in these primitive homes, the people lived happily. The children were stowed away at night in the low, dark attics among the horns of the elk and deer, and through the chinks of the "shakes" they could count the twinkling stars, or be wet to the skin by the rain or snow as it fell. The chairs and bedsteads were hewn from the forest trees. The tables and bureaus were improvised from boxes in which they had brought their household goods to the new home. The trips to the nearest market, or mill, required more time than is now needed to cross the continent or the Atlantic ocean.

At present, thickly settled communities of intellectual people live in modern homes where once roamed the Indian, the buffalo, deer and other wild animals, including the wild cat, wild hog and turkey. The people of today are surrounded by schools, colleges, churches, thriving towns and cities. Calls are made and answered by telephone. A few muscular movements suffice to transact business with neighbors, or places far distant, which took the pioneers on arduous journeys from home. These trips involved hours and sometimes days and weeks on horseback, through impassable swamps, and they were forced to run the risk of attack from savage animals. To the average pioneer, a letter was a rarity, a newspaper an oddity. Now, letters, magazines, country and metropolitan dailies reach the people each day by rural mail delivery. In reviewing the advantages and blessings which are the lot of the people of Buffalo Prairie township today, as compared to those of the pioneer, the impression is strengthened that the early settlers were men of unusual force and character, and that their memories should be held in reverence, for they blazed their way through wilderness and plain to locate the homes that are now the property of their descendants.

All of the real pioneers have passed away, but there are still living, aged persons who came with their parents in childhood. The only person in Buffalo Prairie township, perhaps the only one in the four townships comprising the west end of Rock Island county, who came here in young manhood, is Valentine Fuhr. He was born in Germany in 1821, but has been a resident of the United States for eighty-one years, and of section 14, Buffalo Prairie township for seventy-one years, and is now quite feeble.

About 1842, Samuel Kenworthy and Joseph Eby erected a saw-mill on Copperas creek, on section 16. The mill was in use for some twenty-five years, but is now abandoned. Ben Snider, a young Pennsylvania-German, erected a grinding mill on Copperas creek, in section 1, during the early forties. The mill was run by water power, but was later removed to Edwards river, in Mercer county. John Phillips of Muscatine, Iowa, later constructed a small grinding-mill near the site of the first one, and it was operated by steam power. A portion of the foundation of this remains. Many of the present residents of the locality, some middle-aged, do not know that such a mill ever existed.

There is no railroad, or interurban line, within the township. However, there are more prosperous communities and well-equipped farms than in any other part of the county.

BUFFALO PRAIRIE CENTER

This village contains one store, a blacksmith shop, and is the meeting place of three societies. Another store and bank will soon be opened there.

ILLINOIS CITY

This village is located on the northwest one-fourth of section 7, Buffalo Prairie township, and northeast one-fourth of section 12, Drury township, and was platted in February and March, 1837. The plat was recorded in Deed Book A, page 631. Mississippi street, the center of one of the seven platted streets, running north and south, is the dividing line between Buffalo Prairie and Drury townships. The town lies south of the Mississippi river, two miles. Slightly northwest of the town, was the Illinois City landing, and a short distance above was Vanatta's Landing. In the long ago, when the river traffic was in its palmy state, a large business was transacted at these landings. Illinois City was noted for its potteries. Immense deposits of fine potter's clay rest in the neighborhood. The place now has one store and a postoffice. There is an Odd Fellows hall and one belonging to the Modern Woodmen of America. There is a schoolhouse, a church and a blacksmith shop.

Buffalo Prairie township was organized in 1857, when O. H. P. Moore was chosen supervisor. The constitution of 1848 provided that in counties not adopting township organization, the county business should be transacted by a county judge and two associate judges, the latter having nothing to do with the probate business. At the county election in 1853, John Kistler of Buffalo Prairie was elected associate judge, and held the office until April, 1857, when the system under which they acted was superceded by township organization. John Kistler also served one term as Representative in the Illinois Legislature.

Another resident who held an important county office, coming from Buffalo Prairie township, was William Drury, elected county sheriff in 1869. On March 20, 1835, occurred the birth of James Edgington. He was the first white child born in Buffalo Prairie township, and was a son of John and Susan Edgington. The first recorded death was that of Martin Fuhr, who passed away during the first ten years of the history of the township. A small school was taught by a Scotchman, about 1840, on the farm of John Edgington.

CHURCHES

At Brownsville, on fractional section 27, a small church building was erected about 1850, by the Methodist society. Many years ago, the building was abandoned, and removed. Brownsville is extinct. Where stood the church and three or four rough houses, stock feed on the rich pasture land belonging to the 1,600-acre farm of Hon. C. J. Searle of Rock Island.

Samuel Marple, a resident, donated the plot of land on which was erected the Union church at Buffalo Prairie Center, under the direction of trustees representing the Presbyterians, Methodists and "outsiders." The building was erected about 1871, and named the Buffalo Prairie Union church. It is used by the Presbyterians and Methodists.

The Methodist church at Illinois City was organized as a Mission church in 1854; was made a circuit church in 1857. The present church edifice was erected about 1860.

The German Lutheran church was erected about the year 1850, on section 14. This church building was used by all denominations, or by traveling preachers, who asked for its use. Some differences arose and the building was removed across the highway. Then another building was erected, on the site of the old church. The latter is given the name of the German Reformed church, but the differences which arose, have long since been forgotten. The German Lutherans control and services are held at stated intervals at one of the churches. The immediate neighborhood surrounding these churches, is filled with those of German descent, and is called Germany. Ladies' Aid Societies exist in connection with the churches at Buffalo Prairie Center and Illinois City.

The township contains seven school districts in town 16. and two in town 17. The school-houses are well-built structures, comfortably furnished. The standard is that high grade of efficiency demanded by communities of intellectual, progressive citizens.

Price, John G. Powell, B. G. Vanatta, D. C. Hessman, E. M. Bateman, A. J. Boney, William Ryan, Harman L. Lewis, Jesse Boney, Charles F. Creiger. Dan Ripley is present camp clerk.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES

The principal crop is corn. In 1911, fully 500,000 bushels of corn were raised within Buffalo Prairie township. But little wheat is grown, and only a moderate acreage of oats. Potatoes are successfully cultivated. There are many fine orchards, of apple, peach, pear and cherry, and much small fruit. However, the interest of the Buffalo Prairie township farmer is centered in corn culture and stock raising. An aggregate of fifteen carloads of cattle and hogs for each square mile, or a total exceeding five hundred carloads, is shipped annually to market from Buffalo Prairie township. Particular attention is given to fine horses. To Buffalo Prairie township is awarded the distinction of having raised "Alex," known for years as the fastest horse in the world. The late Daniel Hays bred and raised this speedy animal, whose record time was 2:03 1-4. The acreage valuations range from $75 to $250. The average rental is $6 per acre, but in some instances is much higher. Attention is given to growing alfalfa for forage and for fertilization purposes.

GEOLOGICAL RESOURCES

The geological resources are undeveloped. Hamilton limestone of stratification irregular, color bluish white, or brown upon recent fracture, is hard and tenacious. Outcroppings are noticeable near the Mississippi river. The Devonian limestones are in evidence at many places in the township. These are separated into three divisions, the upper, the middle and the lower, each being distinguished by peculiar characteristics. The uppermost division is a gray and brown limestone, rough and coarse-grained. The middle divisions are often many feet in thickness. The shaly limestones are underlaid by the third division, consisting of a fine-grained gray, or dove-colored, compact limestone. The sandstone of the coal outcrop at many places within the township, is colored and iron-stained. This stone extends along the bluff line of the Mississippi river, and outcrops at ridges throughout the township. At Big Run, in fractional town 17, is found an excellent and durable stone for heavy masonry. The creek is full of large blocks of it, on which the elements and sun seem to have no effect. However, in these days of concrete masonry, Buffalo Prairie has stone within convenient hauling distances to pave every highway in the township, and an overabundance for building purposes.

The coal measures resting upon the Devonian or upper Silurian formation of underlying limestone, are covered with the sandstone. Coal, in veins of three and four feet, underlies near the whole surface of the township. Occasionally drift coal is obtained at ravines. There are no mines, but tests reveal a good quality of coal at a depth of 250 to 300 feet. Among the stratas which compose the coal measures, as found in the ridges, is a deposit of fire clay, two to four feet in thickness. In the ridges and bluff in fractional town 17, there are inexhaustible deposits of potter's clay of fine quality, which have been mined and shipped to Milwaukee and Peoria for the manufacture of the finest grade of pottery ware.

The development of Buffalo Prairie township was sure and interesting. The pioneer came here from some more eastern state, or foreign land, and selecting the spot which best met his requirements, began to lay the foundation of a permanent home. Here amid the mighty forest, he cleared a space for the log shack in which the family lived until a better one could be provided. A rude shelter was also provided for the stock, and then began the clearing off of the fields. Many times the first crop or two off a field was grown around the stumps which were allowed to rot out simply because time could not be spared to grub them. Little by little, fields of grain took the place of the virgin forest, and a frame house replaced the log one. In time, a substantial red barn loomed beside the house, and neat fences divided the farm. An orchard was developed and bore fruit; a wind-mill drew water for the stock and household needs. Steek horses did the farm work and drew the family carry-all along the not any too well improved roads. Still later, electric motors took the place of other power, and automobiles brought with them the need for splendid roads. How much further these progressive farmers will go, only the future will develop. Suffice to say that they will keep abreast of other similar communities, and not only work for their personal benefit, but that of the people at large.

PUBLIC OFFICIALS

From 1833 to 1848, the residents of Buffalo Prairie township who served on the board of county commissioners, the body that controlled county affairs during that period, were:

Jacob Coleman, 1838-40; John Kistler, 1843-46; Samuel Sloan, 1846-48.

With township organization in 1857, the board of supervisors came into existence, superseding the rule of the county judge and his associates, which lasted from 1848 to 1857, and the men who represented Buffalo Prairie township upon it have been:

PRIMEVAL CONDITIONS

In looking back over the history of Rock Island county, the impression is made that the people who came here must have possessed courage out of the common, for when they entered this territory, Indians still laid claim to the most desirable of the land, and none of it had been placed under cultivation that could be utilized. Great forest trees reared their stately heads where now waving grain ripens under the harvest sun. Dense undergrowth interfered with the progress of the plow on the prairies, and the many water courses kept some of the land swampy. These pioneers of the country came here, but poorly supplied with even the common necessities of life, not always for lack of means, but because of the difficulty of transportation. Many of them came from homes of comfort in eastern states, while others had made the longer trip across the ocean from foreign shores, and were therefore utterly ignorant of customs and language. Today a tithe of the difficulties would turn settlers back, but then these hardships seemed but a stimulus towards greater effort, and as a result the various sections of Rock Island county have been developed into magnificent farming and manufacturing localities, and its people are numbered among the most prosperous in the state.

Canoe Creek township, one of the original townships of the county, comprises twelve sections of township 19, range 3 east, and a little less than three sections in township 18, range 3 east. The boundaries of Canoe Creek township are: Whiteside county on the east and north, Coe and Zuma townships on the west, while on the southwest, it narrows to a point on section 18, township 18, range 3 east, Rock river flowing between it and Whiteside county.

This township was settled in 1835, on the 26th day of August, when Jonas Carter, John M. Walker and Joseph Martin located in what was afterwards to be known as Canoe Creek township. They were the first white men to settle here. They made the trip with ox-teams from Wayne county, Ind. None of these sturdy pioneers survive. These men built the first houses in the township, constructing them of rough logs. Mr. Walker resided on the claim taken in 1835 until up to a few years ago, when he died. His deed was signed by President James K. Polk, and was never transferred until after his death.

The nearest market at that time was Chicago, to which point the settlers drove their stock and hauled their grain. There were no bridges and roads were almost impassable at certain times of the year. Mr. Walker cut and rafted down Rock river the timber used in making the first courthouse of Rock Island county. This building was torn down to give place to a new county building, and in the cornerstone was imbedded a box with curiosities of that time.

Wild game was plentiful, and deer could be seen quite often. As more settlers came here, they found a market for their hogs at Galena, Ill., about seventy-five miles north as the crow flies, and to it they took their grain to be ground. In those early days the millers used stone burrs, and the operation of grinding was so slow that a wag one time told the Galena miller that he bet he could eat the flour as fast as the mill ground it. The miller inquired of him for what length of time could he eat it as it came from the mill. The wag created a general laugh by replying that he would agree to eat it until he starved to death.

OTHER EARLY SETTLERS

Thomas Spencer was also one of the early settlers, while George Kendall located a claim in Canoe Creek township while employed in a saw-mill at Whitehall, Ill. Finding the work too hard, he left his claim, and worked at his trade at Whitehall until 1844, when he returned to his claim, with his bride. William and Daniel Leek came from New York in 1837, locating near Rock river, but later on, moved away. "Squire" Sargent came here about this same time, from Ohio, but not being able to make a success of farming, he sold his claim, a good one near Rock river, and returned to his old home. William and Beverly Beardsley were pioneers from New York, to locate here about 1837.

A saw-mill was built on Canoe creek, prior to 1844, and here George Kendall worked upon his return to that township, where he died in 1891. In 1848 he built the first frame house constructed in the township.

Byron Kendall was the first white child born in a frame house, but Louisa Carter, daughter of Joseph Carter, born in 1836, was the first white child born in the township.

The first death in the township was that of a child born to Samuel Sargent in 1838.

The first schoolhouse was built of logs on Canoe creek, and was taught in 1837 by a Mrs. Britton. There are excellent schools in Canoe Creek township at present, where the pupils are instructed carefully according to the latest ideas with regard to teaching.

* The writer quotes prices from a day book for 1847, kept by his father George Kendall.

"Pork hauled to Galena (dressed) 2½ cents per pound—half cash and half trade. Took five days to make the round trip." Corn was then 15 cents per bushel; barley 20 cents per bushel; lard 6 cents per pound; bacon 5 cents per pound; hindquarter of beef 3 cents per pound; potatoes 20 cents per bushel; honey 10 cents per pound; pumpkins $1 per load; white beans 50 cents per bushel.

CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS

The first religious services were held about 1837, in the homes of the various pioneers, Revs. Kirkpatrick, McMurtry and Worthington, being among those earnest, devoted souls who are numbered among the pioneer preachers of this locality.

The United Brethren organized a class in 1848, in a schoolhouse on the Walker farm, but in 1852, a frame church edifice was erected.

The Methodist Episcopal people formed a class in Canoe Creek township in 1849, and in 1859, the present church edifice was built. It is located about a mile southwest of Hillsdale, and there is a good congregation, and large Sunday school.

Without doubt Absalom Ennis and Mary Jane Walker were the first couple to be married, their wedding taking place in 1841.

HILLSDALE

In 1842 or 1843, the first postoffice of the township was established, Moses Hubbard being the postmaster. He kept the postoffice at his residence, but this was not continued very long. The second postoffice was at Hill's crossing, with James Hill as postmaster. About this crossing, James Hill laid out the village known as Hillsdale. It has a population of 150 people and two rural routes go from its postoffice. The Sterling branch of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad established a station here. It is the shipping point for the township, as well as for a portion of Zuma township.

The present township officers are:

Edward McMurphy, supervisor; J. F. Mill, assessor; Jesse Dillon, collector, J. W. Hudson, clerk; Dayton Camp and Peter Johnson, commissioners of highways.

Among those who have served as supervisors, still residing in the township are:

John A. Liphard, George McMurphy, Dayton Camp, J. S. Palmer, Byron Kendall.

J. F. Mill has been county committeeman for a number of years, and has held the office of assessor for six or seven terms.

INTELLIGENT AND PROGRESSIVE CITIZENSHIP

The present development of Canoe Creek township was commenced by the pioneers, but has been brought to its prime condition through the efforts of the men now living. They face entirely different conditions from those which confronted their fathers. The work of the supervisors has been hard, for they have been forced to inaugurate various improvements, which have taken the taxpayers' money, but which were needed to carry on the work of keeping Canoe Creek up to standard. The good roads, substantial school buildings, safe bridges, and other public improvements have been made sometimes in the face of strong opposition, and they stand to the credit, not only of the men who carried them to successful completion, but the township itself.

This is a strictly agricultural district, for here Illinois justifies its right to be classified as one of the greatest agricultural states in the Union. The rich land of the Rock and Mississippi river bottoms yields magnificent crops, and is placing the farmers of this section among the wealthy men of the country. This wealth is a natural increase, gained in a rational way along the oldest known avenue to prosperity. By tilling the land, tending their stock, these farmers, as did Isaac, Jacob and other biblical characters, have multiplied their holdings, and are entitled to the enjoyment of the comforts their industry can provide for them. The farmers of Canoe Creek township are very intelligent, and follow the experiments made by the Government, at their institutes.

Canoe Creek township has been represented on the Rock Island County Board of Supervisors by the following men from 1857 to 1912:

I. H. Marshall, 1857; George Kendall, 1858-9; Charles B. Marshall, 1863; James Hill, 1864-6; Stephen Odell, 1867; James Hill, 1868; Daniel Nicewanger, 1869; William A. Marshall, 1870; James Hill, 1871-2; E. P. Feaster, 1873-5; George W. McMurphy, 1876-7; D. M. Martin, 1878-80; John A. Liphardt, 1880-2; David M. Martin, 1882-6; Jasper Sell, 1886-9; S. W. Woodburn, 1889-93; Arthur Goodrich, 1893-4; George W. McMurphy, 1894-6; Byron Kendall, 1896-1902; W. D. Camp, 1902-04; Byron Kendall, 1904-6; R. S. Woodburn, 1906-08; J. S. Palmer, 1908-10; E. H. McMurphy, 1910-13.

COAL VALLEY TOWNSHIP

By Thomas J. Murphy

AREA—BOUNDARY AND NAME—PIONEER SETTLERS—FIRST WHITE CHILD BORN—FIRST SCHOOLS—VILLAGE OF COAL VALLEY—NATIONALITY OF SETTLERS—PATRIOTISM—PHYSICIANS—CHURCHES—FRATERNAL ORGANIZATIONS AND BUSINESS MEN—BOARD OF SUPERVISORS FROM 1857 TO 1913.

AREA, BOUNDARY AND NAME

Coal Valley township as it appears today, is not nearly as large as it was when organized, for then it contained all of Rural township, and almost six sections of Black Hawk township. There are now less than twelve sections in the township. It is bounded on the north by South Rural township, the east by Henry county, the south by Rural township, and on the west by Black Hawk township.

The name was given it on account of the rich deposit here of coal of good quality. The land is rough and broken, and although agriculture is carried on to some extent, the wealth of the township is in the coal fields. The mining activity is the leading industry of this locality.

PIONEER SETTLERS

William and Charles Bailey are generally recognized to have been the first settlers, but George E. Washburn came soon afterwards, and married soon after locating here, his probably being the first marriage in the new community. Other pioneers of Coal Valley township were: John M. Bellman, James Wood, who was a clerk in the store owned by Ben Harper; William Cramer, who taught school; Alex Eaton, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Schroeder, the former was the first shoemaker; Thomas Carns and wife, the former kept a meat market, also sold groceries; Frederick Weyerhauser and wife, he having the first lumber yard and is now one of the great lumber kings and many times a millionaire; William Murphy, wife and son Thomas came here in 1857, and Mr. Murphy helped to load on the cars the ties and iron for the first twelve miles of what is now the Rock Island & Peoria Railway; L. Williams kept the first hotel; David Rolands and Murty Connor were the first blacksmiths.

A son born to Charles Bailey and wife was the first white child born in the township.

In 1854, the first school in the township was held in a small house, the property of Thomas Lees, and a Mr. Doyle was the teacher. Thomas Lees, William Bailey, Charles Bailey, George E. Washburn, Frederick Fittell and A. Edwards were the men who were instrumental in having it established, as they desired to secure educational advantages for their children. The first district school was taught by A. M. Nichols.

The village of Coal Valley was laid out by the Coal Valley Mining Company in 1856. William Bailey and William Boyle became its first merchants that same year. Soon afterwards, M. F. Herrick opened a second store. The post-office was established in 1857, with Thomas T. Jones as postmaster, who was succeeded by George E. Washburn. Fred Weyerhauser, Dr. Thomas Martin and Fred Freeberg, D. H. Lyons and John Barton were among the early incumbents of the office. The present postmaster is Thomas J. Murphy, appointed by President McKinley, May 28, 1897.

The early settlers here were of Welsh birth or extraction. The Welsh are a mining people, and the prospect of work along their own lines attracted many to this locality. Later, other nationalities came in, but among the pioneers may be mentioned: English, a few Germans, a few Irish, and some Americans. In the early sixties there were some Swedes and a few Scotch. In 1861, when the Civil war broke out and the first call for troops for three months was made by President Lincoln, nineteen men enlisted in Company D, Twelfth Illinois Infantry Volunteers. During the summer and fall of 1861 many of those men and others enlisted for three years. In August, 1862, one entire company went into the service for three years in Company H, One Hundred Twenty-Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; their captain was Dr. Thos. Martin; first lieutenant, David E. Evans; second lieutenant, Christian Koerber; the writer of this, Thomas Murphy, served as a corporal in said company. There were other enlistments in various companies and regiments. William Murphy, Thomas Murphy's father, served in Company H, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry. There were, in all, about one hundred and fifty men went to the front from here.

The first physician was Dr. Williams, who taught the first school in addition to practicing his profession in the schoolhouse erected in 1857, but after three years moved away. He was followed by Dr. Thomas Martin. Other eminent physicians have been Drs. Crawford, Bonax, Gibson, Roseberry, Jacobs, DeWitt and Wallace, while among those in active practice now is Dr. William F. Myers.

CHURCHES

The Welsh Congregational church was the pioneer religious organization in Coal Valley. Its beginnings were in 1857, when the Rev. John L. Richards organized the church. There were fifteen charter members, and services were held at the residence of Mrs. Sarah Williams. A church edifice was erected in 1862, but on account of deaths and removals, the congregation has dwindled very considerably.

On January 11, 1866, the Baptists, under the guidance of Rev. T. M. Matthews, organized a church, with R. Benjamin and wife, D. Prosser and wife, H. Hill, D. Powell and wife and Mary Davis as its first members.

Twenty-nine Presbyterians organized a church in May, 1867. John Barton, Albert Owens, F. Freeburg, Hugh Caughy and Robert Lee were made trustees. A church edifice was built.

The Primitive Methodists organized their church in 1868. Giles Hudson, Joseph War-month, Robert Wilson, George Wilson and John Ranson, Sr., were among its first members. Their church was built in 1869.

The Methodist Episcopal church was built in 1869, but no regular services are held.

The Catholics have a mission here, having built a church in 1870.

The Swedes hold services in their own language upon stated occasions.

FRATERNAL ORGANIZATIONS AND BUSINESS MEN

Fraternal organizations are represented in the township, perhaps the strongest being Enterprise Lodge, No. 47, A. O. U. W., which was instituted February 21, 1877. The Masons and Odd Fellows, and the Woodmen and Fraternals have strong lodges here. The leading business men of Coal Valley at present are: Thos. R. Lees and G. B. Krapp, dealers in merchandise, agricultural implements, lumber, grain, hardware, sand, cement, etc.; R. L. Wilson, general store; John Buckley, groceries and notions; McGimpsey Bros., meat market; Joseph Somerson, restaurant and telephone office; Ansel Carlson, restaurant; Hugh R. Martin, general blacksmithing, well equipped for all kinds of work; J. J. Pryce & Sons, Pryce and Sievers, coal operators; Central Trust and Fuel Co., F. W. Young, manager, coal operators; and Chas. Latham, who came here recently, is a painter and also does paper hanging, and is a fine workman in both lines.

SUPERVISORS

Those who have served Coal Valley township as members of the board of supervisors from 1857 to the present day are:

AGRICULTURAL

Those who have studied economics realize that the most important communities in the country are those where agriculture is the leading industry, for from the farmer and his work comes the food supply of the world. No matter what inventive genius brings forth as a substitute, the health and very life of a nation depend upon the faithful tilling of the soil by those who are devoting their years to agricultural pursuits.

In the more congested communities, various commercial enterprises flourish, and necessarily so, but in proportion to population, the result of the farmer's labor far outclasses that of any other laborer, or producer.

Bearing these facts in mind, it is readily understandable why Coe township is so important a division of Rock Island county. Here the agriculturist reigns supreme. Valuable farms, carefully cultivated, for the most part by the owners of the property, prevail. There are no towns or villages within its confines, and its people, surrounded by the healthy, normal conditions of a rural life, spend their busy years profitably, and bring up their children to be good, honest, reliable men and women.

NAME AND BOUNDARY

Coe township once bore the name of Fremont, and was organized as a township under that name, but at the September meeting of the first board of supervisors, this was changed to Penn. Although, at the time, this seemed suitable and appropriate, for Coe township is entirely surrounded by other townships, is square in shape, thus suggesting a pen, on January 6, 1858, the name was once more changed to the present one in honor of its first supervisor, A. S. Coe. The township is bounded on the east by Canoe Creek township, on the south by Zuma township, on the west by Port Byron township, and on the north by Cordova township, and comprises all of township 19, range 2 east, being one of the few full townships of Rock Island county.

EARLIEST SETTLERS

John Walker was the first settler, arriving here in 1835, settling on section 36, where he spent the remainder of his life.

Charles W Jones and Wife

John Butcher arrived soon afterwards, choosing a farm on section 5. This continued to be his home until 1851, when, seized with the "gold fever," he started for California, and died on the way. He was unmarried. Burrall Butcher, a brother of John Butcher, brought his family here in 1836, locating on the same section as his brother, and there he died in 1846.

Samuel Allen, not being satisfied with his location on the present site of Port Byron, moved to Coe township, with his family, in 1837, but lived only a few months. Without doubt his death was the first one in the new territory.

Samuel Ennis arrived in Coe township about six weeks after Mr. Allen, coming here from Indiana, although he was a native of Ohio. His death occurred in 1860.

Henry Smith was doubtless the next settler, arriving here in 1837, and spending the remainder of his life on the homestead he secured two and one-half miles east of Port Byron.

The year 1837 brought several other settlers, among them being Henry M. Stockton of section 9, who later went to Iowa, where he died; and Isaac Hollister of section 20, who later moved to the vicinity of Port Byron. In 1838, Addison Philleo came to section 18, and died there many years ago.

The men were not the only ones who braved the dangers and privations of the wilderness, for Mrs. Charity Marshall, a widow, brought her nine children to the township, hoping to make a home for them. This brave lady made the trip from New Jersey, arriving here in 1838, and located on section 3. It is interesting to note that she continued to reside on this home until her death, and that all of her children grew to maturity, settling in the neighborhood, and that one of them gave up his life in defense of the country his mother had taught him to love.

As far as known, the child born to Mr. and Mrs. Burrall Butcher, soon after their arrival here, was the first white child to be born within the confines of Coe township.

Hiram Walker and Mary Ennis and David Allen and a Miss Remson were the first couples to be wed in this township.

CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS

There is no definite record of the first religious service, although, of course, it was held at the home of one or other of the new settlers. It is a remarkable, but gratifying fact that the majority of the people who settled Rock Island county were people of a deeply religious character, who longed for the consolation and privilege of religious instruction and worship. Methodists and United Presbyterians have two societies, and at one time the Christian church was well represented, but services are now discontinued on account of the removal of its members. The Methodist is the oldest body and both the Methodist and Baptist churches hold services every Sunday. Of course a number of the farmers of Coe township worship in adjoining towns and villages, especially in this era of good roads, and rapid locomotion.

It is generally recognized that the first school-house was built in the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of section 21, but there is no record of the name of the first teacher. From that primitive school, however, has sprung the present excellent school system. The pupils are comfortably housed in neat school buildings, and their studies are presided over by intelligent teachers, who keep themselves abreast of modern thought relative to the training of the young, and the comprehensive direction of maturing ideas, by reading and attendance on Normal Institutes.

SEVENTY-EIGHT YEARS OF PROGRESS

The advancement in land values has been remarkable, and fully equals the rise in other districts in the state. There is a good reason back of this, and it is not to be regarded as the result of speculative movements, but the natural increase due to intelligent treatment of the soil and modern improvement of the premises. The modern agriculturist of progressive ideas conducts his farm as a manufacturer his factory. From his fields he produces certain crops, knowing how to regulate them by scientific attention to the nourishment of the land, and rotation of seeds. He recognizes the fact that it is a poor policy to provide insufficient shelter for his stock and is proud that his residence compares favorably with city ones. It is easier to install electric power, than to hire additional labor for performing the tasks now done by the motor. All of these ideas have gained general recognition through the work of government experiments, and that of the Farmers' Institutes, and they have been readily adopted by the agriculturists, and in many cases improved upon, each man fitting them to his individual needs.

In short, Coe township is a community of happy, healthy, prosperous farmers and their families. These men own their homes, and are deeply interested in improving them from year to year, and in increasing the earning capacity of their acres. They are law-abiding citizens, interested in the religions and educational advancement of their locality, and can be depended upon to give their hearty support to those measures they feel will work out a betterment of conditions for the majority. They are the worthy descendants of the brave pioneers, who came here from more eastern states, as well as those fifteen or twenty German families who came across the ocean from the fatherland to find a new home in Coe township, and all reflect credit upon the teachings of parents long ago laid to a last rest after lives of unceasing toil and kindly, charitable living.

The men who have served Coe township on the board of supervisors of Rock Island county from 1857 until 1912, have been as follows:

A. S. Coe, 1857-60; Henry Sadoris, 1861; Thomas Simpson, 1862; John Wilcher, 1863; William C. Pearsall, 1864-5; Jacob H. Marshall, 1866-7; George Allen, 1868-70; A. F. Hollister, 1871; George Allen, 1872; Jesse F. Dailey, 1873-5; A. F. Hollister, 1879-81; L. S. Pearsall, 1882-5; J. S. Dailey, 1886-88; A. F. Hollister, 1889; J. S. Dailey, 1890-1; Simon Trent, 1892-5; S. L. Woodburn, 1896-97; Wm. H. Ashdown, 1898-03; Chas. Epper, 1904-7; Wm. McRoberts, 1908-13.

LOCATION AND INDUSTRIES

It is a matter of wonderment to many of those privileged to live in one or other of the beautifully located townships of Rock Island county why people go abroad to secure exquisite scenic effects, when right here in their own land are to be found such magnificent stretches of woodland and valley, with winding streams, in which are situated islands which for loveliness vie very favorably with those so extolled, that are to be found in the older world. Cordova township is one of the sections of Rock Island county thus favored by nature. It is in the extreme northwestern part, and is recognized as being one of the most beautiful with regard to scenery, along the Mississippi river. While there are many valuable farms within its confines, much of the surface is rough and broken which adds to the magnificence of the view.

The leading farm product of the township is corn, which is grown in large acreage, while stock is raised to a considerable extent, the agriculturists favoring high-grade quality. The most important industry, outside the agricultural interests, is the manufacture of lime, several large kilns being in operation in the vicinity of the village of Cordova.

BOUNDARIES AND EARLY SETTLERS

Cordova township is one of the original townships, and was organized in 1857. It is bounded on the north by the state of Iowa, by Whiteside county, Illinois on the east, Coe and Port Byron townships on the south, and on the west again by Iowa, the Mississippi river flowing between. This township was one of the earliest to receive permanent settlers. Here as elsewhere, travelers passed through, admired the location, and perhaps remained for a few weeks, but such as these, aside from bearing to the outside world a favorable report, had little or no influence upon the development. It was the men who came here with the definite purpose of founding homes, not only for themselves, but those to come after them, who made real history, and changed Cordova township from a beautifully scenic wilderness, to a settlement of thrifty and prosperous farmers, who, while admiring the view, realized the importance of tilling their land, and improving their farm property.

In 1836 Herdman East settled on land which is now covered by the village of Cordova, and as far as is known, was the pioneer of this locality. Within the next two years Nelson and Chauncey Tripp, William Kelly, Dudy Buck, Peter Beardsley, Abram G. Adams, William Armstrong, Jeremiah Rice, Robert and William Jenks, John Marshall, Dr. Thomas Baker, Beoni Haskins, A. Whiting, Ami and Guy W. Rathburn, Theodore and John Butcher followed him. William Marshall, Sr., and his family, Jerry I. Cool and family, Joseph R. Sexton and family and J. S. Phillips located near the village of Cordova during 1838. It is remarkable that so few early deaths are recorded in the annals of Cordova township, perhaps because of its salubrious situation, but the first is supposed to have been that of Benoni Haskins. He died in 1838, and his remains were laid to rest on the hill overlooking the village site. The second to die was probably Hugh Dailey, who passed away about 1839.

While a number of the pioneers came here with their families, some of them were unmarried, and naturally they sought wives among the girls whose fathers had brought them to the new home along the Mississippi river. Nathaniel Belcher and Joseph Mills belonged to this class of bachelors who married sisters from the Jenks family, and these are the first recorded weddings of Cordova township.

Dr. Thomas Baker, a man of considerable education, taught the first school in his own home, and one of his early successors was Fidelia Rathbun. This primitive school has grown into a fine graded one, under the charge of Prof. Otto Mairnknecht, with the intermediate grade presided over by Miss Eva Naylor, and Miss Mabel Rennie in charge of the primary department. All are excellent teachers, and their pupils compare favorably with those graduated from similar institutions anywhere in the country. There are other excellent schools in the township, which are maintained according to the standard of excellence raised by the Cordova school.

Cordova's first church was organized by the Baptist denomination, in 1843.

A branch of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad passes through Cordova township, from the northeast to southwest, its only station within the township being the village of Cordova.

VILLAGE OF CORDOVA.—In 1837, John Marshall and Dr. Thomas Baker realized the possibilities for a flourishing settlement, and laid out the present village of Cordova. Each erected a house, and Dr. Baker named the embryo village, Cordova, for which the township was later named. Two years later, in 1839, the government established a post office here, with John Marshall as postmaster. The post office was kept in Postmaster Marshall's own home, which was also used as a hotel, the first in the township. A ferry, crossing the Mississippi, was established and conducted by Israel Ather-ton, it being one of the old fashioned kind propelled by hand power. John Walker later established a steam ferry. It is generally conceded that William Marshall was the first merchant, as his store was established soon after the village was laid out. Brigham & Marshall erected the first grist-mill in 1853, and for many years ground the grain for the people of Cordova township.

On December 28, 1843, the Rev. J. N. Seeley, with sixteen faithful souls, anxious for the privileges and consolations of religious worship, organized the Baptist church of Cordova. Among these charter members were J. R. and Mahala Sexton, J. L. and Margaret Cool, A. S. and Mary A. Ege. They built a small edifice, in 1844, replacing it in 1858, by a better one, at a cost of $8,000. This still holds the congregation, the present membership being 150, and the Rev. George E. Gibbs is the pastor.

The Methodist congregation rebuilt their church in 1909, and in their affairs are in a flourishing condition. While the membership is not as large as that of the Baptist Church, the people are enthusiastic and devoted to their cause. The Rev. Harry Russel is the pastor at present, and he has reason to expect to increase his membership of fifty members.

A petition was filed for the incorporation of the village in 1867, the question being, however, voted down at the following election. In 1877, the question was again submitted and was successfully carried. The first board of trustees was elected in April of that same year, and during that month it was organized. This board was comprised of the following members: Daniel Zimmermann, President; Thomas Karr, J. B. Vandeburgh, W. D. Webster, A. Bolinger, F. A. Hall, trustees; Theodore Abbott, clerk.

Cordova village has three general stores, three groceries, two barber shops, two hotels, two lunch rooms, a blacksmith shop, an elevator, an implement house where coal is also handled, and a drug store. Dr. W. R. Freek is the only practicing physician of the village. This is the largest shipping point between Moline and Savanna, the farmers bringing their produce here. There is little manufacturing done in the vicinity, aside from lime, considerable of which is shipped from this point. Cordova village and its vicinity, are noted also as a summer resort, the river shore for miles north of the village being lined with cottages and club houses, some of the latter with a capacity of from thirty to forty guests. During the season as many as 300 people camp along the shore. The earliest fraternal organization in Cordova, was Cordova Lodge No. 543. A. F. & A. M., chartered October 1, 1867, with seventeen members. The first officers were: D. H. Mattice, W. M.; John K. Glascock, S. W.; Orville N. Whitford, J. W. The lodge is now in a prosperous condition. Burr Oak Camp No. 33, M. W. A., was organized in the spring of 1884, with sixty-two charter members. The first officers were: W. R. Freek, consul; C. A. Phillips, advisor; S. J. Whitford, banker; George B. Spoor, clerk. The camp has had a steady growth in prosperity. Other organizations having a fair membership are: Lodge No. 149, Knights of Pythias; Pythian Sisters, and Royal Neighbors.

The population of the township, including the village, in 1900, was 802; in 1911, 699. The population of the village, in 1900, was 411; in 1911, 324.

The Board of Supervisors had a representation from Cordova township from 1857, to 1913, inclusive as follows:

George Marshall, 1857; Jacob Hoke, 1858-59; James M. Cowles, 1860; Jacob Hoke, 1861; J. Q. Wynkoop, 1862-64; Jacob Hoke, 1865; J. L. Perkins, 1866-69; James E. Abbott, 1869; R. M. Grinnell, 1870-76; Jonathan Cool, Jr., 1877; Daniel Zimmerman, 1878-81; J. Hoke, 1882-84; Charles B. Fisk, 1885; Homer Metzger, 1886; Eugene B. Hoke, 1887-88; Jasper Forsyth, 1889-92; Homer C. Metzger, 1893-94; Charles George, 1895-1900; Edward Cool, 1901-02; Charles George, 1903-06; Edward Cool, 1907-13.

LARGEST TOWNSHIP

Drury township was organized in 1857 and was named in honor of the Drury family, the earliest pioneers of the township. It is situated in the extreme southwest corner of Rock Island county. It contains one full Congressional township and fractional parts of three others and is the largest township in the county.

Those townships bordering upon the river naturally were settled first because of their position, for the pioneers recognized the advantage of being within easy reach of this great highway of commerce. In the early days the Mississippi river, with its many tributaries, was even more important than it is today, owing to the fact that nearly all of the commerce of the country was carried on by means of it. The building and improvement of the mighty railroad systems have changed conditions materially, although land in the river front townships is still the most desirable.

Some time prior to 1837, Isaiah, Miles, Reynolds and Eli Drury settled in what was afterwards to be known as Drury township, named in honor of them. At this time the land was totally undeveloped; dense forest covered much of the acreage, and wild game multiplied undisturbed. These pioneers were experienced men, who knew how to make the most of their surroundings, and they at once began to build their log cabins, and lay plans for the erection of a mill to grind their grain, as well as one to saw their lumber. Soon after their arrival, others followed, among them being James, William and Drury Reynolds, J. A. Seiver, William Huff, Ithamar Reynolds, Anthony Rickertt, William Womacks, Solomon Simpson, Jeremiah Lequatte, Matthew Lequatte, I. B. Essex, James Essex, Benjamin Essex, I. V. Reed, Valentine Reed, John Ballard, John Harbaugh, James Mepherston, S. Prentiss, Henry Hampton, Charles Bead, William Peeney, Mr. Fox, William Hays, M. H. Johnson, John Boruff, Joseph Blair, Antoine Blair, and others. All of these men were married and had families, with the exception of one.

When these early settlers came to Drury township, they found conditions considerably different from those at present. The township now includes 30,225 acres of land and is bounded by the Mississippi river on the north and west, Mercer county on the south, and on the east Buffalo Prairie township. Of late years much of the swamp land has been redeemed by a proper system of drainage, and this acreage is remarkably rich. The other land which has been developed, is exceedingly fertile, and crops are uniformly large. The farms in this section are well cultivated, and the buildings of modern structure, and well kept.

DRURY'S LANDING

For a number of years, the site of the settlement of the Drury family was called Drury's Landing, and considerable business centered about it. The present city of Muscatine is about four miles below the old settlement. The energy of the Drury family resulted in the establishment of a general store, a post office, and the upbuilding of a large trade in grain and pork, and during the early days Drury's Landing was one of the principal trading points between St. Louis and Rock Island. As long as the country depended upon the Mississippi river for the carrying of its commerce, the landing was a stopping place for the steamers, but now the place is abandoned, and it only exists in the memory of the older settlers, as a commercial center. Back of it, a village named Richmond was laid out, five blocks long, by one wide, with a side street sixty feet wide, which began with the river.

Illinois City lies in both Drury and Buffalo Prairie townships. It is a nice residential place, but the railroads disturbed its commercial importance. Many retired farmers make their homes here.

Drury township at present has no post offices. The mail is all delivered by three free delivery mail routes, keeping the farming sections in close touch with current events.

As will be noticed by the names, the township was originally settled by Americans, but gradually the thrifty Germans, coming here from foreign shores, imbued with a desire to secure land, recognized the advantages of this section, and took up farms to such an extent that the prevailing nationality is now German-American. It is largely due to the enterprise and ability of these Germans that Drury township has reached its present position agriculturally, for they have known how to develop their land and bring forth the large crops so distinctive of this part of the county. They are law-abiding people, fond of their homes and proud of their community, and there is little criminal history relative to them.

The first school was held in a log cabin on Miles Drury's farm, and a little later another was kept in what was known as the "bull pen." It is remarkable what hardships these children of pioneer days were willing to undergo to secure even a modicum of knowledge. Long tramps through almost impassable roads, in weather so cold as to oftentimes freeze portions of their bodies, were but a part of the day's work to them, and once they reached the school house, the primitive conditions were such as no modern pupil could survive. Yet, in them, sitting on their slab benches, with faces burned by the roaring fires in the great fireplace, studying from books that were passed down from one member of the family to another until they were literally in shreds, these children laid a foundation that withstood the storms and stress of life, and upheld many a noble structure of learning erected upon it. They had within them the intense desire to learn that made all sacrifices as nothing.

Reynolds Drury was the first storekeeper of the township. He opened his little store at the landing that bore the name of his family, and as he was the only trader within a number of miles, did a large business. In return for the grain and pork of the settlers, he furnished them with the bare necessities of life. Probably weeks went by without the exchange of a single cent of money, for currency was scarce in those days. There was but little need of it, the merchant readily accepting produce in trade for his goods. To the Drury family is also due the establishment of several mills, Isaiah and Silas Drury building a grist-mill, a sawmill and a wool-carding machine, quite a novelty in those days, on Copperas creek, as early as 1837. To these mills, operated by water power, came the settlers for miles around, carrying their grain on horse-back, or in flat-boats, if they made the trip by water. Going to mill was a journey in those days, and often was used by fathers as a reward of merit, to be bestowed upon the best worker on the family farm.

The first physician of the township was kind Doctor Reynolds, whose generous sympathy and hearty good will are remembered by the older generation. His well-known figure was a welcome presence in many a sick chamber, and he never hesitated to journey forth in rain or snow, day or night, over the then almost impassable roads to succor those who were in need of his ministrations. His type of physician is gone. Perhaps the modern physician is a great improvement upon the old kind, but there are many who reposed a trust in the country doctor no twentieth century practitioner can command, for his word was absolute law, and in his hands reposed literally the keys to life or death.

CHURCHES

Miles Drury's barn held the first religious gatherings, presided over by a wandering preacher, who visited the township from time to time. Drury township has four churches. A Methodist church was organized at Pine Bluff in 1870, and a church building was built in 1872 on the northwest corner of section 9. The Baptist congregation was organized in 1871 and in 1872 the present building was erected. The Hazel Dell M. E. Church was built in 1903 in the center of section 25, and the German M. E. Church was organized in 1874 and the church building was erected in 1875. Each of these churches have prosperous Sunday schools, with preaching services either weekly or semi-monthly. Each church has an active ladies' aid society.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

About the year 1888, a stock company was formed to build a high bridge across the Mississippi river, connecting Drury township with the city of Muscatine. The city of Muscatine levied a tax of $53,000.00 as an appropriation. Stock to the amount of $52,000.00 was sold and the bridge was bonded for $60,000.00. The bridge was finished and open for travel on May 8th, 1891, at a cost of $167,000.00.

In 1893, a stock company was organized and a toll road built from the bluff to the high bridge at a cost of $33,000.00.

These improvements were a great boon to Drury township, as they afforded access to market any day in the year and in any kind of weather.

In 1907, the Drury Drainage District was organized and work was commenced on the levee in September of the same year. The Drury District comprises 5300 acres. Bonds to the amount of $85,500.00 were issued and sold at par to be paid in ten yearly payments. In 1909 there were about 425 acres of this land under cultivation. In the year 1911 there were about 3500 put under the plow. The land in these Illinois bottoms is of the richest kind, and since said district was formed this land has increased in value about six times.

Several farm houses and one schoolhouse have been built in the last two years. There is a great future in sight for these Illinois bottoms, which once were noted far and wide for their bay hay and good duck hunting.

Many delightful stories are told of the early days and the hardships so cheerfully endured. In speaking of them, these hardy pioneers seem to forget all that was disagreeable, and remember only the neighborliness, the hospitality and kindness of heart that seemed to make of all a great family to be treated as such.

As long as the organization of Drury township continues, the worthy pioneers in whose honor it is named, will be held in remembrance. Their work lives long after all that was earthly of them passed into oblivion. Good men, tried and true, it is fitting that so important a portion of this great county bear their name, and extol their hardiness and virtues, for they were the first white men to make homes within its boundaries. These men lived long enough to see material effects of their early struggles come to fruition. Today Drury township is a great agricultural region. Its stock compares favorably to that of any other township, its internal government is good; its schools are excellent, and taught by intelligent men and women who are giving up their lives to the instruction of the youth of this locality. Everyone here seems to be working towards a common end, the further betterment of Drury township.

EDGINGTON TOWNSHIP

By William F. Crawford

DESCRIPTION—ADVANTAGES—FIRST SETTLERS—FIRST SCHOOLHOUSE—FIRST MARRIAGE—VILLAGE OF EDGINGTON—CHURCHES — TAYLOR RIDGE — REYNOLDS—CHURCHES OF REYNOLDS—BUSINESS MEN—PATRIOTISM—SUPERVISORS.

DESCRIPTION

The pioneers of Edgington township found a beautifully undulating prairie, well drained especially towards the west, north and east. The prairie soil is black alluvium of great fertility, varying in depth from eight inches to three feet. In the northern part the land is more rolling, and is drained by ravines leading to the Mississippi river. In early days these hills were covered with a heavy growth of large trees, principally white oak. Few of these magnificent trees are now left, for the greater portion of this timber land has been cleared and is under cultivation at the present time. Where it has not been cleared, the land is covered with a fine growth of young timber and shrubs. The pasturage here offered is finer than the famous Blue Grass region of old Kentucky. Two creeks flow through Edgington township, Copperas, running nearly due west, and Mill, running east. The latter enters Rock river near Milan. Water can be obtained all over the township by digging wells from 40 to 125 feet in depth. These wells have a capacity of watering 100 head of cattle and 200 head of hogs. The stone deposit is scarce, but very fine sand is found on the old Dunlap holdings. All of the natural resources of the township are developed by the enterprising citizens, and the township is in a flourishing condition in every respect.

FIRST SETTLERS

The first settler of the township was James Robinson, who located here in 1833. His son, Matthew Robinson, is living. From him the writer gained some idea of the customs and privations of the pioneers. They hauled their wheat to Chicago with oxen. Mr. Robinson's father, James Robinson, went with several ox-teams, himself driving a span of horses. His load of wheat was exchanged for one of salt, which he divided with his neighbors who were unable to make the long trip. Incredible as it now seems, it took one month to make the round trip, when oxen were used.

Joseph Dunlap, Daniel Edgington and John Edgington all came in 1834. These earliest settlers located along the timber in order to be handy to the supply of fuel. Here they entered the land they had selected, and began developing it. All of them were from Ohio, where pioneer conditions had already been overcome. James Robinson built the first log house in the township, putting it up in the spring of 1834, and Mr. Dunlap built the second, erecting it in the timber. In this house, the Presbyterian church of Edgington was organized, in 1837. The year 1835, brought Uncle George Kell, Henry and Charles Eberhart, and in the fall, Charles, Moses and John Titterington arrived from Ohio. In the spring of 1836, B. McNutt brought his family to the little settlement, from Ohio, and William Snell arrived from Mississippi. In the fall of that same year, Daniel Montgomery, Alexander Hazlett and family, W. D. Hatton, Parley Laffin and family and Joseph Asquith, also settled here. These few formed the nucleus of the present Edgington township.

In 1838, the population was increased by the arrival of George Allen, Lorenzo Parmenter, Allen Parmenter, Seth Parmenter, H. H. Parks, A. J. Webster and Timothy Dutton. As late as 1850, lands in the southeastern part of the township were sold very cheap. James Taylor came about 1850, and with others settled on section 12. William Miller settled just over the line in Bowling township. These early settlers were often visited by Indians, who were friendly, and with whom they traded.

When Chicago was not used as a market, grain was hauled to Hendersonville, Knox county, a distance of forty-five miles, and the round trip took from one to three weeks according to the state of the road, and the motive power used, horses traveling much faster than oxen.

In 1839, John Crawford came from southern Indiana on horseback to look the country over. On his way, he was chased by a band of highwaymen, but they failed to catch him. Being pleased with the locality, the following year, he brought his family to Edgington township by steamboat. After he was settled, he used to hold a singing school. An amusing story is told of a young hunter, pursuing game on the bluffs overlooking the Mississippi river, hearing a steamboat whistle, took it for some wild animal, and fearing it, fled home. Several members of the Elliot family came in the forties, but the elder generation are all gone, although the name is well represented in the present one. The Robinsons, Davis family, Wakefields, Haseletts, Everetts came about the same time, in the early forties. J. Asquith came in the early forties from England, and a Mr. Snider from Switzerland.

The year 1850, found Edgington township fairly well settled. Some of the pioneers were from Ireland, among them being the Kelleys, McChans, Horns and McCartys and old Mr. Ramer, who so often called his fellowtownsmen to Fourth of July celebrations with his drum. Others were from Indiana, such as the Bakers, Ralls, Websters, Campbells, Singers, Fishers, Tylers, Dr. Tyler, Lloyd and W. B. Bruner, the Moores, Barnes and many others. The friend of the writer, J. L. Harris, came with his family in the fifties. His father's name was Thomas McLaughlin Harris. They, with Luther Criswell, Clay, Moses and Eldridge Moore and a Mr. Carpenter, came from Ohio.

The first schoolhouse was built in 1837, one and one-quarter miles north of Edgington village.

One of the first doctors was Doctor Tyler, who lived in the village of Edgington. Prior to that, it was necessary to go to Rock Island whenever a physician was needed. Following Dr. Tyler, Dr. Higgins settled in Edgington, and then Dr. Lyman. Another early physician was Dr. James Baman, who had a good practice, and gave a valued service. During the Civil war, he was assistant surgeon of the Ninety-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry. At present, Dr. Miller of the village of Edgington; Dr. Eckart of Taylor Ridge; Dr. Moore of the town of Reynolds; Drs. Figias and Eddy of Milan are the physicians of the township. Dr. C. A. Huell of Reynolds is the veterinary of the township.

The first mill of the township was built by that enterprising citizen, Joseph Dunlap, and so generous was he that those of the farmers who wished to do their own grinding, were welcome to the use of the mill without charge.

The first marriage was solemnized in 1836, when John P. Cooper and Mina Pace were united, by Daniel Edgington, Justice of the Peace.

The village of Edgington has two stores, operated by Titterington & Carpenter and Wm. Winks. Dr. Miller is the physician in this locality. The village is in the center of the township.

The first storekeeper was George D. Parmenter, who opened a general store in 1843, in his log house. Later, he built a larger house, continuing to use it for business purposes as well, until he put up what was known as the old red store. In it he carried on merchandising for some years, but eventually sold to Isaac Negus and E. Burrell. E. D. Cushman was the first postmaster, conducting the postoffice in his own house.

The early religious history is as follows. The Presbyterian church was built in Edgington village in 1837, and the first sermon preached in Edgington township, was delivered by the Rev. John Montgomery in the log house of Joseph Dunlap. This same clergyman often preached in the barn of this same man. At present the church has no pastor. The Methodist church was located one and three-quarter miles east of Edgington village. The earliest service of this church was held in 1836, in the house of Charles Eberhardt, north of Zion church, and the society often held meetings in Center schoolhouse, on section 16. At other times, the house of Joseph Dunlap was placed at their disposal. At present Zion church is for sale, the society having a church at Taylor Ridge. They bought the Baptist church of that place, the latter having moved to Reynolds.

There is a Catholic church in the village, that is well attended. Father Quinn of Rock Island being the priest in charge. The Methodist church here has a good congregation. The Rev. Mr. Thorp is the minister. The Baptists also are well represented. The people here are religiously inclined.

TAYLOR RIDGE

Taylor Ridge is on the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad. It was laid out on section 12 of this township and section 7 of Bowling township. The name was given in honor of James Taylor, who gave the right of way for the railroad, and donated $1,000 towards the building of the railroad. This road was completed to Taylor Ridge in September, 1876. The village was platted by J. L. Frankeberger, on land owned by Mr. Taylor. There are two stores in the village, owned by Ramsey and Hays Brothers; a lumber yard, one blacksmith shop, run by Ora Heath; two elevators, owned by H. Wayne and A. A. Farmer; a restaurant, operated by Mr. MacEntire; a hotel, the proprietor of which is Mr. Roberts, and two livery barns, owned by Bress Ball and Ben Brusel.

C. B. Larsson and Family

In addition to the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, the Rock Island & Southern Railroad runs through the place. An immense business is done in shipping grain and live stock, this being the market for the surrounding agricultural community. Taylor Ridge is a very beautiful little village, the streets and residences showing that the citizens take pleasure and pride in keeping them up to standard.

REYNOLDS

The village of Reynolds is the most pretentious of the communities of Edgington, for it is not only the market for the farmers of the surrounding country in Edgington township, but of Mercer county as well. The railroad to this place was completed October 6, 1876, and soon before this event took place, Wait & Walker had platted the present village, named in honor of E. P. Reynolds, the railroad contractor of Rock Island. The first building to be put up on the village plat was the depot, in which Rufus Walker sold merchandise. Later, he was succeeded by R. B. Olmstead, who in turn was succeeded by Montgomery Bros. Mr. Walker then repurchased the business, but disposed of it to Mr. Schoonmaker. Wait & Walker then became proprietors of this much-sold business, but after two years, disposed of it to a Mr. Miller. A. Crandall built a one-story frame structure and opened a store about the same time, handling drugs and other commodities. After some time, he sold to Wilford Pitman, who enlarged the stock so as to carry a general line of merchandise. The second drug store was opened by Hartley Smith, during that same year of the completion of the railroad. C. H. Dibbern conducted the first hardware business in the place, and also handled agricultural implements. Sterling Honeycutt built the first house in Reynolds.

The Commercial House was the first hotel and was built in 1876, by W. D. Goodner. After operating it for a time, he sold to John Boney, who later sold to G. F. Brayton. Clifton Stanley bought it in 1883. H. Webster was the first blacksmith, locating here in 1876. The first harnessmaker of Reynolds was Emil Helpenstel, who opened his shop for business in 1877. The first furniture dealer was M. Freytag, who conducted his store for many years in a building put up for him by S. Honeycutt. Joseph Flora came here in the spring of 1877, and began as a wagon-maker.

Dr. F. Stuart located here in 1877, and was the first physician of Reynolds. Dr. Ashbaugh was the second one of the profession to locate here, and Dr. James Cozad, who came here in 1882, was the third.

Wait & Walker were the first to buy grain, at first having no warehouses, loading directly on the train, but in 1877, they built a warehouse, and others followed. The grain trade here has always been good. A lumber yard was started here in 1876, by Rufus Walker.

The postoffice was established in the fall of 1876, R. B. Olmstead being the first postmaster. In two years, he resigned to be succeeded by William McLaughlin, and later by M. C. Crandall. The present postmaster is Mr. McConel, who was appointed by President Taft.

A son of Emil Helpenstel was born in the spring of 1877, and this was the first birth at Reynolds.

The first school of Reynolds was taught by Miss Jenny Kuhns, in the house of Weaver Kuhns, in 1877. Soon thereafter a brick school-house was built.

The Methodists organized a church society, in the fall of 1877, and soon thereafter plans were made for the erection of a place of worship. The first clergyman was V. C. Atherton, assisted alternately by the Rev. F. Doran. The present minister is the Reverend Thorp. The attendance is good, and the Sunday school in a flourishing condition. The Baptist church was organized in 1869, in Mercer county, as the Hamlet Baptist church, but as many of the members belonged in Edgington township, the church edifice was moved to Reynolds. The name of the church was changed at this same time. The cemetery lies outside of Reynolds, and is well laid out. Here rest many of the pioneers, as well as those who passed away later on, and the care of the living keeps beautiful the resting place of the dead.

Physician, L. C. Moore; veterinary, C. A. Hull; G. V. Pettit, editor Reynolds Press; R. P. Wait, banking; M. Schoonmaker, Farmers' State Bank; G. M. Davis & Son, hardware; Mr. Olson, in charge of Alexander Lumber Co.; C. N. Wayne, grain and coal; F. E. Miller, contractor and builder; R. L. Mallette, E. S. Baker, store; A. C. Haexter, general store; G. C. Geo. W. Fellows, restaurant; C. A. Johnson, restaurant; Chas Fischlueter, barber; Bruce Bradford, hotel and feed barn; J. H. Minter, livery; W. M. Saunders, jeweler; Watson & Watson, veterinary; N. A. Taylor, general weigher on stock scales.

It is not just to leave the history of Edgington township without mentioning the part this locality played during the Civil war. The men here were unusually patriotic, enlisting during the early part of the struggle, when old enough, and fighting through the weary years. Some never lived to come back, and many who did, carried, and still carry with them, reminders of the days when they put love of country above everything else. The cost of that war would not have been so great had it been possible to confine the loss of life to the battlefields. Unfortunately, few, if any of the soldiers came home uninjured. While some escaped being wounded, all suffered from the privations, forced marches, and strain of dangers endured, as the old veterans can testify. Patriotism is not dead in Edgington. Whenever an opportunity is given its people, they show that the same love of country and flag remain, and were another war to threaten the country, its sons would be among the first to respond to a call to arms.

The men who have served their township as members of the county board of supervisors from 1857 to the present date, have been as follows:

James Baker, 1857-60; J. W. Lloyd, 1861-3; William Wait, 1864-5; John G. Parmenter, 1866; William Wait, 1867; Daniel Edgington, 1868; William B. Bruner, 1869; James Baker, 1870; Abraham Crabbs, 1871; Cyrus Conkling, 1872; John G. Parmenter, 1873-4; Charles Titterington, 1875; James Taylor, 1877-81; J. W. Lloyd, 1882; James Taylor, 1883; M. Schoonmaker, 1884; James Cozad, 1885; Wm. S. Parks, 1886; M.

Schoonmaker, 1887; R. S. Montgomery, 1888; Jacob Wait, 1889; R. S. Montgomery, 1890; M. Schoonmaker, 1891-96; Wm. G. Davis, 1897-8; F. A. Wood, 1899-1906; R. P. Wait, 1907-08; James Venable, 1909-12; M. A. Titterington, 1913.

EARLIEST SETTLERS

While the Indians still held sway over the fertile lands embraced within Rock Island county, Martin Culver, in 1827, decided to risk the dangers incident to disturbing the supremacy of the Red Man, and settled in what was afterwards to become Hampton township. Like so many of the townships of Rock Island county, Hampton has the advantage of a long stretch of river front along the magnificent Mississippi. This of course had its influence in making Hampton one of the earliest settled townships of the county. It comprises a part of Township 17 and Township 18, Range 1 East. The Mississippi River and Port Byron township form its northern boundaries, Zuma township its eastern, Rock River its southern, and Moline township its western. It is six miles wide from Watertown on the west to the Zuma line on the east.

Soon after the location here of Mr. Culver, John Kinney and his two brothers settled here, probably early in 1828, in which year came Henry McNeal and he with Joel Thompson, entered land where Hampton now stands. Michael Bartlett, Asaph Wells and Joel Wells, Jr., came a little later. This section settled up very fast, owing to the natural advantages. By 1836, there were added to the settlers: J. B. Cox, Lucius Wells, John Y., Horace R., Eliphalel, William and Nelson Cook, George McMurphy, John Wells, E. F. Arenarius, Samuel Smith, Daniel W. Howard, Samuel Knight, Andrew and Elisha Deviney, John W. Cox, Francis Yost, Louis Dow, Asaph, Eri Merritt, Ira, Nelson and Daniel Wells, Joel Thompson, Ira Wells, Sr., Michael Bartlett, David Jamison, Wesley Bisant, J. W. Vansant, Samuel Bowles, William Porter, Erskine Wilson, Mrs. Wilshire and two sons William W. and George, and all were among those responsible for its further development.

The first female child born in Hampton township was Mary Ann McNeal, daughter of Henry McNeal, on October 5, 1832, and probably the first male child was George McNeal. The first death to be recorded against Hampton, was that of a lady on a trip from England to Galena. She died on board the steamer Josephine, just as the boat was making a landing, and her remains were interred in the township. Joel Wells and Mary McMurphy were united in marriage in 1835, by Justices of the Peace Lucius Wells, and this was the first wedding in Hampton township.

The Methodist denomination was the first to hold religious services in Hampton township. The Rev. John Kinney, a local minister of that church, held services for some time before Rock Island county was placed on a regular circuit, when Rev. B. H. Hanna was one of the first to be placed in charge on the circuit thus formed. For years, the services were held at the houses of different members, generally that of Lucius Wells, who was a man of considerable prominence in the early history of the township. A well educated man, he conducted the first school, held in a log cabin that had been used for dwelling purposes. He started his school in the winter of 1833-4. Elihu Wells was the first teacher under the present school law. Needless to say, that at present the schools of this locality compare very favorably to those in the other townships, for Hampton township is abreast of the times in this as in every other particular. The first school treasurer was Luther Edwards and the present one is Emil C. Henline. G. F. McNabney filled the office for sixteen consecutive years.

No other township in the county, save Rock Island, is as well supplied with railroads, for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad all run through it, and have their stations within its lines. These excellent facilities of transportation, naturally make Hampton a large shipping point, and encourage the people in their agricultural endeavors.

HAMPTON

This village is one of the important stations on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad. It had its beginning, with its surveying and platting, soon after the county was organized. Joel Thompson was its first business man, and was soon joined by A. P. Clapp, Dower & Hammond, Samuel and David Lambert, M. W. Wright and Francis Black. In 1837-8, the post office of Hampton was established, and Joel Thompson was made the first postmaster. The post office was named by the Post Office Department at Washington. The people here petitioned that the name Milan be given to their settlement, but as there was already a post office of that name, the request was refused. Francis Black was the second postmaster, Samuel Heagy the third, and L. F. Baker the fourth. The present incumbent of the office is John C. Hawkins.

The coal interests of Hampton township are very heavy. Among those who are now interested in the development and marketing of coal here are The C. E. Sikes Coal Co. and The Stoehr and Schadt Coal Co. Charles Ames mined and marketed the first coal in the township.

The Methodist church here was founded in 1842 or 1843, with eleven members, among them being: Harmon G. Reynolds, E. F. Arcularius and wife and Nancy Thompson. At first this class belonged to the Moline Circuit, then the one of Port Byron, but finally, in 1865, became important enough to warrant a separate organization. In 1870, this circuit was joined with that of Zuma, under the name of the Rock River Circuit. This lasted until 1874, when Hampton once more became independent. The present pastor is Rev. Geo. R. Carry.

The Congregationalists organized a class in 1853, through the efforts of the Rev. A. B. Hitchcock. There were fourteen members, among these earnest, faithful workers being: Elihu Barr and wife, Luther Pearsall and wife, and David Jennings and wife. Their church edifice was erected in 1856-7. There is also a Universalist church in the township. The religious spirit is strong in Hampton, and attendance upon its churches encouraging.

The fraternal representation here is excellent, Laurel Camp, No. 30, Modern Woodmen of America and The Mystic Workers of the World having many members. Their condition is excellent, and their members enthusiastic. William McDaniel Post No. 595 G. A. R. is still in existence.

The business houses represented in Hampton are as follows: John F. Altman, general store; Mrs. C. J. Fulschel, general store; Jackson & Hawkins, general store; S. A. Gray, jeweler; Mrs. C. J. Propst, drugs; Mrs. Alice Winndy, restaurant; Louis Altman, manufacturer of cement blocks and Gustav Hardu, blacksmith. It has a population of 348 and is a beautiful section for residential purposes.

RAPIDS CITY

This place was founded as early as 1833 by the Wells Brothers. They built and operated a grist-mill that formed the nucleus of the present Rapids City. These pioneers sold their mill to Ezra Blanchard, who subsequently disposed of it to a Mr. Barber. Another large grist-mill was also erected here early and was operated by Capt. A. A. Adams and later by his son, A. B. E. Adams. Still later, a saw-mill was built, although since torn down, and about these mills grew up a thriving community, and in 1838, a village was organized and laid out, which since then has grown until it is now an important shipping point on the Milwaukee and St. Paul line. A store was established before the village was laid out, by a Mr. Runkle, and Mr. Blanchard also sold merchandise while operating the grist-mill. Joseph Garnett was the first blacksmith, coming here in 1847. Henry S. Shurtleff established a grocery store in 1855, and subsequently enlarged his operations, conducting a general store.

The post office was established in 1857, with Henry S. Shurtleff as first postmaster. He was succeeded by L. J. Perkins, Dr. Samuel Gast being the third postmaster, John Hannegan, Peter McCarls and George J. Rowe succeeding him in the order given. The present postmaster is F. M. Mitchell, appointed by President McKinley.

The Catholic and Christian churches are all well represented here, Father Kneiry being in charge of the former.

The Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America both have well attended lodges, and for the population, a large membership.

BARSTOW

This village is on the Sterling branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and was built in 1869, on land belonging to Joel G. Franklin, and a post office was soon thereafter established, and named Franklin Crossing, in his honor. He was made the first postmaster, and thus continued until 1884, when he resigned, and William J. Swisher was appointed. The present postmaster is Andrew O'Brien, who is also supervisor of the village. When the name was changed to Barstow, the post office was so designated. While the post office, general store and a boarding house were built very early, the village itself did not commence until 1884. Growth after this was rapid. There is a large amount of transfer shipping done at this point, and some heavy interests are therefore centered here. The people are prosperous, and interested in keeping their improvements up with those of the other communities in the county. The Barstow Creamery is a leading business enterprise.

CABBON CLIFF

As its name indicates, this place, at one time, was a very important center for the coal mining activities of this part of the county. It is on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, and is now known far and wide for its tile works and pottery. Fire brick is also manufactured extensively. J. A. Hannegan conducts a general store and The Argillo Tile and Brick Works are located here.

The postmaster of the village is J. A. Hannegan. The population in 1910 was 366 and the present village officers are: William Mardis, president; Roy Carey, treasurer; Nick Krambeck, marshal; Richard O. Donnell, clerk; Nick Krambeck, street commissioner. The village trustees are: Frank Bay, L. Weltz, William Allison, Ed Frary, Emil Belowske.

WATERTOWN

This place was platted in 1857 by Henry McNeil, Alfred Sanders and Alonzo Nourse, and in the same year a store was established by Lucius Curtis, and the post office located, he becoming the first postmaster. He was succeeded by Henry McNeal and the present incumbent of the office is J. O. Giesler. The Baptists and Methodists both have churches and good memberships. Rev. Geo. Cady is pastor of the Methodist church.

During 1872-3 a railroad was built from Wattertown to the mines at Happy Hollow and over 100 cars of coal were mined and shipped daily. Later the company was incorporated under the name of the Hampton Coal Mining Company. On a small scale mining is still being done, principally in the south end of the township by the Stoehr & Schadt Coal Company. The Illinois Western Hospital is located here and the C. R. I. & P. R. R. shops. The first village trustees, after incorporation in 1905, were D. Y. Allsbrow, Henry C. McNeal, John Rah, Frank H. Lavey, Harry Nicholson and Eric Bowman. The present village officers are: Dr. J. H. Ellingsworth, President; Robert Uearsall, clerk; George Allsbrow, treasurer. Population in 1911 is 525.

SILVAS

This is a village of considerable importance, owing to the fact that it is centered about the general railroad shops of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad. Employment is given here to 2,000 men, many of whom live in Silvas and with their families form a flourishing community. The village was organized in 1906, and the first election for trustees took place January 12, 1907. R. Walsh, J. W. Pike, James Shannon, William Emmert, F. J. Ball and Herbert Love were elected.

Owing to its formation, Hampton township is not as largely agricultural as some of the other divisions of Rock Island county, but there are some excellent farms here. The farmers compare very favorable with those of other sections, and many of them combine mining or manufacturing with their agricultural activities. Hampton township is one of the wealthiest of the townships, outside Rock Island and Moline, owing to its heavy coal deposits and the quality of its clay formation, which invites the production of pottery and tile. Having the material right at hand, transportation of the raw product is saved, and the railroads offer such opportunities for shipping, that the production of those articles made from this peculiar kind of clay, is extremely large. By the census of 1910 the population of Hampton township was shown to be 5915.

Hampton township has been represented on the County Board of Supervisors by the following named members:

Lucius Wells, 1857-8; William B. Webster, 1859-61; Lucius Wells, 1862; William S. Thomas, 1863; L. F. Baker, 1864; Ira Crawford, 1865; A. D. Cox, 1866; W. B. Webster, 1867; Lucius Wells, 1868; William B. Webster, 1869; Ephraim Warren, 1870; George W. Henry, 1871; Joseph Albrecht, 1872; T. S. Silvas, 1873-4; Jeremiah Chamberlain, 1875-6; William B. Webster, 1877; Samuel Devinney, 1878; S. Silvas, 1879; Samuel D. Wainwright, 1880; Joseph Albrecht, 1881; G. R. Wells, 1882; Drury A. Weatherhead, 1883-4; Henry O. Norton, 1885; W. R. Carey, 1893-1908; A. O. Brien, 1909-13.

MILLING

The history of Moline township is so interwoven with that of the city of Moline, that the record of the one is almost that of the other, although the township existed before Moline was much more than a village about the mills which, from very early times, were built to take advantage of the waterpower. As early as 1838, that eminent jurist, Judge Spencer, with Hon. John Buford, became interested in this locality as a future home of milling interests. Their advocacy of this matter induced John W. Spencer, David B. Sears and Spencer H. White to build a dam in 1841. It was a crude affair of brush and stone, but was sufficient to operate the saw and flour mill they built on the Moline side of the river, just north of the present site of the Moline Plow Works. About this same period, these same men laid out a village to which they gave the name of Rock Island Mills, but its plat was never put on record.

PLATTING AND NAMING VILLAGE

The time was not yet ripe for the development of a village, but in 1843, these founders of what they hoped would become Rock Island Mills village, combined with Huntington Wells, Charles Atkinson, Joel Wells and D. B. Sears, and surveyed and had platted the original village of Moline. At that time the village, which was to develop into what was to be known as the "City of Mills" of the Middle West, and now as "The Plow City," had only the houses belonging to Charles F. Atkinson, Huntington Wells and David B. Sears, and Messrs. Benedict, White, Thomas G. Patterson, Hoskins, Jonathan and Joseph Huntton, Gideon M., Weir, Kinzie, Bell, Nazro Reynolds, and Benham, W. M. Huntington, Dr. H. F. Salter, John Corbin and Thomas Merriman.

There was some discussion over the name, some favoring Hesperia, which means "Star of the West," and others, Moline, which means "City of Mills." Considering the planned future of this village, the originators decided upon the name which even then fitted it exactly, and from then on it has been known as Moline.

As early as 1842, the mill put up by Messrs. Sears, Spencer and White was in good running order, and Jonathan Huntton was placed in charge. The first small store of the village was opened and operated by David B. Sears, in 1843, and it was soon succeeded by others of a more pretentious character. The first shoemaker was Joseph Huntton, who opened his shop for business in 1842. In 1844, George W. Bell located here and began tailoring. The first general store was that opened on Second avenue by Charles Atkinson, in 1845. In 1843, Cyrus Kinzie opened his blacksmith shop on the present site of the Deere Plow Factory. The manufacture of brick began in 1843, when Spencer H. White founded his brick yards. Huntington Wells looked after the needs of the traveling public in the first hotel of Moline, opening it in 1843. Addison Chamberlain conducted the first drug store, opening it in 1847.

The postoffice was established in 1844, David B. Sears being the first postmaster. The first schoolhouse was erected in 1843, and Joseph Jackman was the first teacher.

SUPERVISORS

The following men have represented Moline township on the Board of Supervisors from 1857 to 1913, inclusive:

SOUTH MOLINE TOWNSHIP

BOUNDARIES—TRUCK FARMING—SUPERVISORS.

BOUNDARIES

The first entry of land and settlement of the territory now included in the political township of South Moline was in 1835 and 1836, when the real pioneers came. By 1850 immigration had increased and the county generally began to fill up and by 1843, when Moline was laid out, this section had begun to attract attention, on account of its natural waterpower. The pioneers have all passed away, their farms have been subdivided as the towns have built up, the farms have changed from grain crop production to market gardening, while dairying has also become a general industry. The country in this section has become populous and prosperous.

South Moline township is numbered among the more recent divisions of Rock Island county, as it was organized in 1879, when it was separated from Moline city. It comprises a portion of Congressional township 17, range 1, west, and all of fractional township 18, north, range 1, west, not included in the city of Moline, with its northern boundary, Hampton township, with the Rock river running along between, while the town of South Rock Island forms its southern and western boundaries.

The early history of South Moline township is so interwoven with that of Moline township and Rock Island county, that it is difficult to divide them. It is essentially an agricultural district, truck gardening, dairying and fruit growing being the present leading industries, aside from the manufacturing activities located at East Moline and which are covered in detail in our chapter on "Manufactures." The ownership of small farms makes possible the development of land production on a very profitable scale. Almost prohibitive prices are demanded for land in this locality and very little is changing hands except when an estate is settled.

The supervisors who have represented South Moline township on the county board from 1879 to 1913, inclusive, were: Daniel Gordon, 1879; Samuel M. Ziegler, 1880; Daniel Gordon, 1881-3; C. P. Ryder, 1884-5; Jeremiah Chamberlain, 1886; Daniel Gordon, 1887; Daniel Gordon, 1888; James Hasson 1889-95; John H. Thornton, 1896-7; L. H. Jahns, 1898-1903; August Karstens, 1904-05; John Weckel, 1906-09; Zach Einfeldt, 1910-13.

FIRST PERMANENT SETTLER

In the spring of 1828, Robert and Thomas Syms came from Sangamon county, and were the first permanent settlers of what afterwards became Port Byron township, Rock Island county. They cut and delivered wood at Syms wood yard, where they sold it to the steam-boats that passed up and down the Mississippi river, from St. Louis and below, to the mines at Galena. At this time, Joe Daviess county was included with Rock Island county, and was occupied by the Sac and Fox Indians. Disagreements and attendant difficulties frequently arose between the settlers for various causes, and the knife and rifle were the common weapons in settling the disputes. The nearest jails were at Galena and Alton.

Archibald Allen came from New York to St. Clair county; thence to Fort Clark, and then settled at the head of the upper rapids and built a cabin, the first frame building between Quincy and Galena, on section 24. He traded with the Indians, buying skins and furs from them. In time, he was appointed supervisor of roads and constable. In 1833, he was appointed carrier of the United States mail, from Fort Armstrong on Rock Island, to Galena. He made the trip once a week, on foot, fording the streams and undergoing many privations. He was appointed postmaster and the postoffice, which was at his house, was called Canaan postoffice. Mr. Allen delivered mail to Stevenson, Canaan, Savannah and Galena. At this time there was but one house, that at Apple river, between Galena and Savannah, and none until he reached Canaan. Mr. Allen belonged to the military organization, called The Rangers.

Conrad Leek came here and his son was the first white child born in Port Byron township.

In 1831 and 1832, the people of this section had to flee to Fort Armstrong for protection from the Indians, and remained there during the Black Hawk war. Afterwards, the Indians continued to roam over the county, with their dogs, for several years, but gradually were removed.

In 1831 a son of George W. Harlen died, and that was the first death of the township.

In 1832, Edmund A. Philleo from Galena, was shot and killed by McKinney, who was condemned to be hung, but was pardoned by the governor.

The first sermon was preached in 1833, at the house of Mr. Allen, by the Rev. Asa McMurtry of the M. E. church, a minister on what was called Rock Island Mission. Mr. McMurtry soon afterwards formed the first class or society, and E. Corbin, living above the Marias d'Ogee was the leader. Mrs. Archibald Allen was a member of this class, and was the first white adult person who died in this township. Preaching was continued at irregular intervals. This same year, 1833, the first school was organized and taught by a man by the name of Banker.

The year, 1834, brought Walter Phillips, Geo. R. Allen, Harry M. Smith, Presley Quick and others. George R. Allen established a brick yard, and manufactured brick. Smith and Quick opened up farms. A shiftless man who refused to work and support his family, was held under the vagrant act, and was sold at auction for 12½ cents.

In 1835, Samuel Allen, William McKinney and Mr. Hathaway came. Samuel Allen kept boarders and travelers. Mrs. Allen (Aunt Candace) was a good cook, and widely famed for her meals. Samuel Allen kept the first grocery and many of his customers came from a distance to trade with him.

The government lands were surveyed and divided into sections and platted in 1835, and in 1836, Moses Bailey, Nathaniel Belcher, Rufus B. Chase, Jeremiah H. Lyford, A. N. Philleo and Miss Lucretia Philleo arrived in this township. Mr. Bailey built a shop and was the first blacksmith. R. B. Chase was the first stonemason, and plasterer. He began the manufacture of the celebrated Port Byron white lime from Niagara limestone, and continued in this business for many years. Nathaniel Belcher built the first frame building for store purposes, and also a tavern, known as the Port Byron House.

PORT BYRON

The postoffice was changed from Canaan to Port Byron, and Nathaniel Belcher was appointed postmaster. The town of Port Byron was laid out by Nathaniel Belcher, Samuel Allen and Patrick Gregg of Rock Island August 1, 1836. Jeremiah Hall Lyford, M. D., a graduate of Dartmouth College, was the first physician and druggist. The practice of this physician extended over a large territory, on both sides of the Mississippi river, even into Iowa territory. He had to go over trails, through swamps, and ford bridgeless rivers. His trips led him long distances, and often consumed several days. Intermittent and bilious fevers and malaria were the prevailing diseases. Quinine and calomel were the sheet anchors, the only unfailing remedies in general use. The more complicated cases, as well as all surgical cases were diagnosed, treated and operated upon by the attending physician and surgeon, recognizing the importance of the patient and himself being clean as circumstances would permit, but frequently in the only single living room.

Mr. J. Kelly

He was succeeded by his son, the first white child born in the village, Wm. H. Lyford, M. D., graduate of Rush Medical College, who practiced for forty years.

The first marriage was celebrated by John D. Allen to Miss Susan Rempsen.

The first election was held at the house of Samuel Allen, fifty-two votes being cast for Representative to Congress, and Representative to the Legislature. This precinct embraced the north part of the county of Rock Island, south to the town of Moline. Previous to this, the elections were held at Stevenson. On November 7, 1836, an election was held for the election of President of the United States, at the same place, forty votes being cast, eleven of them for the Democratic candidate Martin Van Buren.

In 1837, Warren Wilcox, Nathaniel Dorrance, Silas Marshall, Misses Harriet and Susan Dodge, George S. Moore, arrived in Port Byron. Mr. Wilcox was the first carpenter and joiner, and built many of the best houses here, for he was a master workman. Nathaniel Dorrance was actively engaged in building, and later with Tillotson C. Temple and Jacob Dickinson built a steam saw and grist mill. They cut lumber, bought and ground grain, shipping the flour to St. Louis. Miss Harriet Dodge taught the second school in a log cabin near the river. She became the wife of George S. Moore.

The township was covered with large trees. The prairie fires that burned over the entire region every fall killed animals and the small growth, leaving what were called barrens or oak openings. These fires lasted for several weeks, filling the air with smoke, and the period was called Indian summer.

The land sloping towards the river, was covered with beautiful wild flowers in the proper season, and presented a charming appearance. Wild game was found in abundance, including deer, squirrels, pigeons, quail, pheasants, etc. There were other wild creatures, such as wolves, badgers, coons, minks, muskrats, and wild cats. Wild bees were common, and honey plentiful.

Wild fruit was abundant, for there were crab apples, grapes, plums, blackberries, strawberries, nuts, etc. Corn, vegetables and other farm produce was grown easily and of good quality. At first there was little wheat or small grain raised because of the lack of mills to grind it, and no market. Peaches and apples were planted, and the early settlers believed this was an ideal climate for fruit raising.

Birds were, eagles, geese, ducks, prairie chickens, pheasants, quail, pigeons, wild turkeys, blackbirds, etc. Fish were, pike, pickerel, black and white bass, salmon, buffalo catfish, sunfish, redhorse, suckers, perch, sturgeon, eels, shad, etc.

MEN OF ENTERPRISE AT PORT HURON

During the forties and fifties, Rufus B. Chase continued to manufacture the Port Byron white lime, supplying the demand throughout a wide territory. Warren Wilcox and Robert Hilton, Isaac Hollister and Laurel Summers built the houses. George S. Moore was postmaster, and sold goods and bought and packed pork, bought grain and sold wood for the steamboats, doing a thriving business. Later, he took George E. Holmes as a partner, under the name of Moore & Holmes. Later, he built Moore's Hotel. Nathaniel Belcher built the Port Byron House, the only tavern within twenty miles, opening it in 1840, with Silas Marshall as the first landlord. George E. Holmes on his arrival in 1846, kept the tavern, which was on the Frick & Walker's stage route. This house was noted for its good cooking and cleanly appearance.

Bailey & Boyle, C. I. Williams, and Thomas J. Robinson sold goods before moving to Rock Island. Tillotson C. Temple, Brown and Devon also were merchants.

George W. Gates was active along mercantile lines, and manufactured lumber and flour. He later suffered a loss by fire, his mill being destroyed. A. J. Brown, the owner of the ferry, with William H. Devon, bought the store of Moore & Holmes, and established the first bank, now the State Bank of Port Byron. M. S. Denlinger, William C. Evans sold goods. William J. Sheppard built another mill, sawing lumber and grinding grain for customers, and also opened a coal bank on Rock river. David S. Metzgar and son were merchants and manufacturers of lime. Jesse Maxwell was a merchant and kept a hotel. Erastus E. Rogers practiced medicine, and established the Port Byron Bank.

Frederick S. Gates was a lumber dealer. George D. Moore and Lazarus Lowrey bought grain, sold coal and farm implements, and were steamboat agents. Henry Saddoris was the first wagon-maker, and was succeeded by E. H. Hunt. Moses Bailey was the first blacksmith, and was succeeded by Charles B. Marshall and Jacob Schaible. Moses L. Hobert was the first to open a hardware store, and tin shop and he was succeeded by his brother David, and son, Charles L. Hobert.

Drs. Wilson Fleming, J. W. Morgan, J. M. O. Bruner, William Black, O. S. Daily and William Johnson were physicians who practiced during the later years.

Daniel T. Barrett, and John W. Maxwell manufactured lime; Henry Merritt was the first undertaker, and was succeeded by A. H. Wendt & Son. Other changes have taken place, but the present dealers are: Lettingwell & Schafer, J. J. Huntley, Fred S. Moody, Frank Morgan, Schafer Bros., Edward McRoberts & Son, A. G. Brewster, Thomas McCall, E. E. Rogers & Son, Port Byron Bank, Port Byron Pharmacy, David Schaible, Charles L. Hobert and Frank Skelton.

CONCERNING SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES

Indians frequently visited the school taught by Miss Dodge, through curiosity, and had to be asked to go away, as the number of them peering in through the small window, excluded the light. The log cabins were built of logs, a story high, chinked and plastered with clay, and a fireplace and chimney, at the end of the building, were built of stone at the base, and sticks at the top, and covered with clay mud, both within and without. The roof was covered with clapboards, about three feet long, nailed to small logs placed lengthwise of the cabin. The floor was made of puncheons, or thick planks split out of logs with wedges. They were comfortable when a good fire was burning, but very cold without one. In 1843, a brick schoolhouse was constructed and paid for by subscription, with a fireplace in the west end, and a stove in the east end of the building. The teachers were all hired and paid by the parents who subscribed the necessary amount. Sunday school was held regularly every Sunday in this building, and singing and spelling schools, also lectures and the local entertainments of all kinds, for it was the only hall. In the evening, the room was lighted with candles.

The Methodist church was built in the early fifties, the Rev. Stephen Odell, and his son John, laying the brick, Warren Wilcox being the carpenter and joiner.

The Congregational church was built soon afterwards. The bell was presented to the society by the brother of Rev. Porter, who lived in Boston. The Rev. H. L. Bullen was the first pastor, and brought the first piano to town. Later, he was appointed to a professorship in Iowa college then at Davenport. Following this, he located there. The Rev. William A. Thompson was pastor for a number of years, but was drowned in the Marais d'Ogee slough, while crossing it during a storm, into Whiteside county to preach. Rev. Alma Harper came from Le Clair, Ia., in 1861, and being active, enthusiastic and untiring, gave satisfaction, and remained for many years. He was the founder and promoter of the Port Byron Academy, the first school year of which commenced September 12, 1881. Edward T. Harper, a son of Rev. Harper, was the first principal. The academic course covers three years, and is designed to give men and women a good education, and to develop as well noble, Christian characters. It is under the supervision of the Rock River Association of Congregational Churches. The academy owes its existence to Mr. Harper, and Nathaniel Dorrance, who through their energy and generosity, donated of their means and influence to its promotion. The faculty of Beloit College are interested in the academy, and aid in maintaining the standard of work and aims which have marked its own history.

Elders St. Claire, Hooper, Cruse and Worthington when on their itinerary over the northern part of the state were occasional visitors, being entertained by Dr. Jeremiah H. Lyford, in his home, a one-story, two-room cabin, in the thirties and forties. Rev. James was a missionary, making his home at James Searls, on Rock river, in the thirties. Before the marriage of John B. Hartzell to Miss Diviney, Rev. James went to Prophetstown, Whiteside county, to procure the license. John B. Hartzell, Harvey von Order, and Jeremiah L. Cox were local preachers. Elder Rutledge, a Baptist, living in Iowa held services here, officiated at marriages and conducted funerals frequently. Charles Beach was Sunday school superintendent for many years in Port Byron, living in Iowa. Camp meetings were in evidence every year, being held in the beautiful sugar maple groves, supplied with plenty of spring water. People came great distances with their families, camping in tents and improvised houses. These meetings resulted in the regeneration of their moral and religious lives, giving them an uplift for the benefit of all the community.

Pierce Barber built the first steamboat, naming it the Naiad, about 1844. It ran to Galena and Black River Falls. This boat, with engine and other machinery, was principally his own workmanship. A tannery was built at Miller's Creek, and hides were taken there to be made into leather. One year was required to complete the process of tanning. This leather was taken to the shoemakers, who made the shoes and boots for the family.

In early days, women did their washing on the banks of the river under shady trees. Water and wood was in abundance. Many owned a large wash kettle, under which a fire was built. When the washing was done, the clean clothing was hung on the crab apple, plum trees and grape vines. During the proper season, these trees and shrubs were covered with blossoms, whose beauty and fragrance were appreciated by every one traveling along the public highway.

The Marais d'Ogee slough, the outlet of the two great rivers, named by an early French explorer, is in a low depression, the boundary line between Rock Island county and Whiteside county, on the north, where in the olden time before the dyke was built, the water overflowed when the Mississippi river was at its highest, into Rock river, and when the latter was at its highest, the slough overflowed into the Mississippi river.

Port Byron was on the route of the Underground Railroad before the war. Dr. J. H. Lyford was one of those who assisted the slaves to escape from bondage to freedom, as they followed the North Star on the way to Canada, where they could become free and independent men.

Sometime during the sixties, the government constructed coffer dams around forty acres of water in the Mississippi river at Sycamore chain, near the Illinois shore. Men and teams were at work during the winter blasting and hauling away the rock, widening and improving the channel, so that sufficient depth and width was obtained free from obstructions that had previously been the terror of steamboat owners and shippers. Improvements have been made annually by chisel boats and dredges which cut away other obstructions, and wing dams built in what is known as the Upper Rapids.

Before the improvement the Steamer Bonaccord, a regular packet ran on a rock and sunk just below Sycamore. Being given up by the owners as lost, Jonas Barber, an old resident built a coffer dam around the opening in the hull, closed the rent temporarily, pumped the water out, and took her to Rock Island boatways where she was repaired, resuming her regular trips.

NEWSPAPER

The first issue of the Port Byron Globe made its appearance October 16, 1880, J. W. Simpson being editor and proprietor. It was an eight column, folio, neutral in politics.

On February 22, 1885, the paper was sold by its founder to Hess & Owen, and this firm continued until July 1, 1885, when G. A. Metzgar bought Mr. Hess' interest, the firm then becoming Metzgar & Owen. This firm continued for about six months, when Mr. Metzgar sold his interest to W. E. Owen, brother of the partner. The new firm continued for a short time, when W. D. Hall purchased the interest of W. E. Owen, and the firm of Owen & Hall was in existence until March 1, 1898, when Frank McMeekin purchased the interest of Mr. Owen, and the firm was changed to Hall & McMeekin. This last named firm continued to publish the paper and conduct the business for five years, when Thomas E. Caverly bought Mr. McMeekin's interest, and the name became Hall & Caverly. They continued the owners and publishers for a year and a half, when Mr. Hall purchased Mr. Caverly's interest, and has since that time been the sole proprietor. During the last few years, the business has been much improved, and the equipment added to, the paper being now printed and folded ready for delivery to the subscribers. On October 26, 1908, Mr. Hall purchased a home for his paper, made the necessary changes, moved into it, and occupied it ever since where it can be found, always ready to transact business.

BOUNDARIES

Rock Island township is bounded by the Mississippi river on the south and west, Moline township on the north, and South Rock Island township on the east. It is the smallest of all the townships in area, and largest with regard to population, while industrially and commercially, it ranks first.

FIRST WHITE SETTLERS

It is probable that the first white settlers of the township were George Davenport and Russel H. Spencer, who located here in the late twenties; many were here at the outbreak of the Black Hawk war in 1831. Among those who arrived prior to 1832 were Griffith Aubury, Archibald Allen, John L. Bain, John Barrel, Michael Bartlett, Edward Bruner, William T. Brasher, Henry Benson, Joseph Been, Leonard Bryant, Jonah H. Case, Loudon Case, Sr., Loudon Case, Jr., Charles H. Case, Horace Cook, B. W. Clark, Samuel Kinney, Thomas Kinney, Erastus Kent, Thomas Lovitt, Joseph McCoy, Henry McNeil, George V. Miller, Gentry McGee, Neel McNeil, James Maskal, Ames C. Noble, Judge Pence, Benjamin Pike, John Reddish, Thomas Syms, Robert Syms, Edward Corbin, William Carr, Martin Culver, Manly Danforth, Joseph Danforth, Thomas David, Russel Dance, George Davenport, Thomas Davidson, Isaiah Frith, Charles French, Russel Farnham, Thomas Gardiner, Benjamin Goble, Antoine Gouquy, John Graft, James Haskill, George W. Harlan, Uriah S. Hultz, Thomas Hubbard, Goodridge Hubbard, Cyrus Henderson, David B. Hail, William Henry, William Heans, M. S. Hulls, a Mr. Haney, Moses Johnson, John W. Kinney, William Sams, Martin W. Smith, Sevier Stringfield, Josiah Smart, H. Sampson, John W. Spencer, Roswell H. Spencer, William Thompson, Joel Thompson, Luther Tunnell, William Tunnell, Joshua Vandruff, Henry Vanruff, Samuel Vanruff, Benjamin Vanetta, Gorman Vanetta, Edward Verner, Levi Wells, George Wells, Joel Wells, Sr., Joel Wells, Jr., Huntington Wells, John Wells, Samuel Wells, Rinnah Wells, Asaph Wells, Eri Wells, Ira Wells, Nelson Wells, and Lucius Wells.

FARNHAMSBURG

The town of Farnhamsburg was the first in Rock Island township, and the first settlement on the east side of the river. Colonel Davenport built the first house, and Russel Farnham was his partner in trading with the Indians, which the two carried on so profitably. This house was erected in 1826, and was near the landing to the old fort, and was associated with the early history of the county, for in it was transacted the first county business and it was known as the "Court House" until removal was made to the permanent seat of justice. The first post office was established here. A village was laid out around this historic house, in what is now lower Rock Island. Some of the earlier buildings are still standing.

STEPHENSON

Stephenson was named in honor of Colonel Stephens, and was later made the city of Rock Island. In its early history, Judge Stone, Judge Brown, Joseph Knox, Joseph B. Wells, J. Wilson Drury, H. G. Reynolds, Joseph Conway, Miles Conway and a Mr. Cooper appear to have been prominent. Three stores were operated by John Meller, Lemuel Andrews and a Mr. Kauffman, Lee & Chamberlin, J. M. Frizzell and Messrs. Bond, Moore and Bently were other business men. The Rock Island House on Main street was operated by a Mr. Nancourt and his brothers. The Rev. Mr. Stewart held services in a little schoolhouse. With the changing of the name, in 1841, Stephenson passed out of existence. Additions had been made to the original plat of the village of Stephenson, as follows: Thomas and Well's Addition in 1836; Spencer and Case's Addition, in 1836; and the Chicago or Lower Addition, in 1836. Later additions have been made, so that the present city of Rock Island covers an area of over ten square miles.

It is interesting to note some of the names of Stephenson streets. Those running parallel with the river were Mississippi, Illinois, Orleans, Rock River and Moline avenue. Rather decorative names were given to the alleys, such as Cherry, Violet, Pink, Rose, Peach and Plum. When the present system of numbering the streets and avenues went into effect, some historic titles were lost. The following table shows the changes made:

First street became Pike and Pine; Second, St. Clair; Third, Monroe; Fourth, Carroll; Fifth, Huron; Sixth, Main; Seventh, Pearl; Eighth, Ontario; Ninth, Exchange; Tenth, Ohio; Eleventh, Swan; Twelfth, Otter; Thirteenth, Beaver and Short; Fourteenth, Deer and Stoddard; Fourteenth and one-half, Cutter; Fifteenth, Elk; Sixteenth Buffalo; Seventeenth, Eagle; Eighteenth, Washington; Nineteenth, Jefferson and Cherry; Twentieth, Madison; Twenty-first, Adams; Twenty-second, Dock; Twenty-third, Broadway; Twenty-fourth, Arsenal; Twenty-fifth, Davenport and Keokuk; Twenty-sixth, Stickney and Railroad; Twenty-seventh, Howard avenue; Twenty-eighth, Twenty-eighth; Twenty-ninth, Columbia and Twenty-ninth; Thirtieth, Elm; Thirty-first, Andrews; Thirty-second, Kimball and Thirty-second; Thirty-eighth, Robbins or College avenue; Forty-second, Sylvan and Walnut; Forty-third, Francis; Forty-fifth, Brooks.

In the avenues the changes were made as follows:

First avenue became Mississippi, Water and Front; Second, Illinois; Third, Orleans; Fourth, Rock River; Fifth, Moline, Highland and Canal; Sixth, Commercial, Commerce, Pleasant, Green, Cable, Grove and Sherman; Seventh, Toledo, Spencer and Second; Eighth, Barnard and Harper; Eighth and one-half, Clark; Ninth, Indian Boundary, Prospect, Ninth avenue in Edgewood Park; Ninth and one-half, Toledo and Union; Eleventh, Atkinson.

Lemuel Andrews built the first brick store in Rock Island, just east of the Court House, and it is still standing. He also, a little later on, put up a substantial brick residence, the site of this being now traversed by the railroad tracks. Still later, he put up the Cable mansion, and the first saw and grist mill, erecting the latter in 1841. Bailey and Boyle built the first boat yard, locating it near the present Arsenal bridge. These partners established themselves in a general store, opening up on the present site of the Mitchell and Lynde block. In 1849, H. A. Porter and Brother established the first book-store in Rock Island.

Mr. and Mrs. Butcher conducted a restaurant, where meals were served that are remembered with relish by the older settlers fortunate enough to have eaten them. Fred Ridenbaugh conducted what is known as the Empire Restaurant on Market Square. One of the earliest butchers was L. Buttrick, who opened his shop, in 1852, on Market Square.

Webber, Boyd and Co. established the first foundry and machine shop, in 1849, corner of Illinois and Broadway. In 1855, Lowry, Thomas and Co., proprietors of the Carbon Cliff Coal Mining Co., established their offices one door east of the foundry. Another foundry was established in 1853, by N. B. and T. J. Buford on Water street. In 1855, John Bulley operated a crockery shop and is familiarly remembered as the "bully man." Singularly enough, he was an Englishman. Lee & Williams also dealt in crockery, opening up for business in 1854. An early drug store was kept by C. H. Fahnestock.

A grocer of early times, was J. K. Bard, whose place was called the "Painted Barrels," because of a sign he had. Other grocers were Tom and Jesse Gray, David Bowen and W. B. Sargent. Robert Don, Charley Yates and Ernest Krell were early bakers. Prior to 1855, Warnock and Kelly established themselves as soap and candle manufacturers, and also dealt in soda.

Archie and Tom Shaw founded a pork packing business, in 1859, while three years before that, Joseph and Mayor Rosenfield began dealing in hides and leather.

Still other early business men were: H. L. Abbott, daguerreotype artist; Ainsworth & Lynde, merchants; Christopher Atkinson, brickmaker; William R. Ayres, painter; Hawes & Babcock, (Davis Hawes and George M. Babcock), quarrymen; Peter Fries wholesale liquor dealer; Bidison & Gilmore proprietors of a planing and corn mill; C. H. Leas proprietor with his son

T. Silas, of the first steam flouring mill; William W. Langdell, blacksmith and farmer; Hakes & Riggs, jewelers; Jacob Sailor, manufacturer of saddlery, harness and trunks; Sargent & Bollman, blacksmiths; Amos Stillman, County Surveyor; Henry Curtis, Jr., City Surveyor; W. L. Sweeney, wagon maker; Whitaker & Everts, merchants; Uridge Whiffen, painter and decorator; Peter L. Hlig, brewer; Charles B. Knox, undertaker; John Lusk, collector; Bill Kale and Charley Fisher, barbers; H. A. J. McDonald, carpenter and builder; A. J. Swanson, dealer in boots and shoes; John Harper and Alexander Steel, hardware merchants; Quincy McNeil, school teacher; C. S. Newberry & Brother, painters; Jacob Norris, furniture dealer; Childs & Baker, merchants; Elton C. Cropper, builder and carpenter; David L. Cunkle, millstone manufacturer; Fisk & Lee, brokers and insurance agents; Tim Babcock, wholesale grocer; W. Hurst, dealer in fruit and confectionery; Charles Jeanneret, jeweler; George D. Bromley, merchant; N. B. Buford, owner of the block bearing his name; and Bulkley and Pleasant, owners of a block bearing their name.

The early physicians were: Dr. Patrick Gregg, Dr. Brackett, Dr. Bulkley, Dr. Judd, Dr. Rathbun, Dr. W. F. Cady, Dr. Calvin Truesdale, Dr. S. C. Plummer and Dr. William A. Knox. The Rev. Asa McMurty was the first clergyman of the township, coming here in 1833, and about that time organizing a Methodist society.

All of these men aided in laying the foundation of the city's present prosperity, and although the majority have passed away, the effect of what they accomplished lives on, and will forever, for no action is ever lost in the immensity of eternity.

SOUTH ROCK ISLAND TOWNSHIP

By George H. Richmond

FORMATION OF TOWNSHIP—FIRST ELECTION OF OFFICERS—INDIANS—COUNCIL HOUSE—INDIAN BURIAL GROUND—BLACK HAWK'S WATCH TOWER—MANUFACTURE OF BRICK—GROWING OF FLOWERS AND VEGETABLES—DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER—TOWN OF SEARS—COMING OF SETTLERS—SUPERVISORS.

FORMATION OF TOWNSHIP

That portion of Rock Island township lying south of the limits of the city of Rock Island, and north of Rock river, was set aside as a separate township, to be known as South Rock Island township, by the county board, December 14, 1877, such action to take effect March 1, 1878. Much interesting history, however, leads up to this event, and there was much controversy before the division was made. Prior to 1873 all of the strip west of what is now Thirty-eighth street, belonged to Black Hawk township, while that to the east of this line belonged to Moline township. On December 12, 1873, the first of these divisions was annexed to Rock Island township by action of the county board, the vote being 9 ayes to 8 nays, one member being absent from the meeting. On December 16, 1875, a strip off the west end of Moline township, a half mile wide, extending from the Mississippi river on the north to Rock river on the south was detached and annexed to Rock Island township by a vote of 9 ayes to 7 nays, at a meeting of the county board, from which two members were absent. During the greater portion of the time from 1873 to 1877 the clerk of Rock Island township lived in what is now (1913) South Rock Island township, and had his office there, meetings being held in a schoolhouse which is now the South Rock Island town hall. For several of the latter years of this time, the ballot boxes of the various precincts of the city of Rock Island were, by order of the clerk, hauled to this old schoolhouse for the counting of the votes when elections for township officers occurred. As this involved a journey by team of a mile and a half to two miles, and the counting required from two to three days, the opposition was finally beaten down, and the new body politic came into being as before stated.

FIRST ELECTION OF OFFICERS

L. C. Lord, supervisor; J. C. Young, clerk; J. W. Graham, assessor; Roswell Richmond, collector; S. K. W. Field, David Sears; Thomas Campbell, commissioners of highways; O. J. Dimick, Parker Wineman, justices of the peace.

When the settlers first arrived in this county the Indians of the Sac and Fox tribes had a permanent village extending along the bluffs from Rock river to what is now Twenty-fourth street, Rock Island. Of the Sac Indians, Black Hawk was chief, while the Foxes were commanded by Keokuk, after whom the city of Keokuk, Ia., is named. What is now South Rock Island township was occupied principally by the Sacs. As near as can be ascertained, Black Hawk's summer home was located on the bluffs overlooking what is now the town of Sears, in this township, his winter home being further north at a point between what is now Eighteenth avenue and Aiken street, and east of Twelfth street. In this township was located the council house for the meetings of both tribes. It stood at a point which would now be south of the Rock Island Canning Company's plant, and west of the Rock Island and Peoria Railway tracks, in the valley close to Rock river. Here were held the scalp dances, and other ceremonial gatherings of the two tribes, as well as their council meetings. Their fields extended along the hillsides and in the valley. Their corn was cultivated by dropping it between the hills of the year before, then scraping the soil from these over it with mussel shells. Their crops were principally corn, beans and pumpkins. In the autumn when the crops were gathered and the tribes were ready to move to their hunting grounds, their grain and other food supplies which were to be left behind, were concealed or cached in holes in the ground in hazel thickets, the brush from which had been removed to be afterwards cunningly replaced when the caching had been done.

Their principal burial ground was west of the Watch Tower, and east of Twenty-fourth street, on the bluffs overlooking Rock river, their mode of sepulture being both under and on top of the ground, the latter frequently in trees.

BLACK HAWK'S WATCH TOWER

The place known as Black Hawk's Watch Tower, now a noted summer resort, is situated on top of a high bluff overlooking Rock river, and 200 feet above the valley. From here a wide view is obtained for many miles up and down both the Mississippi and Rock river valleys, with the hills of the Iowa shore in the distance, which is very beautiful. It gains its name from the supposition that here the great chief kept an outlook for his enemies.

Agriculturally, this township is very fertile, much of it being devoted to the raising of fruit and vegetables. Three-fourths of the vegetables consumed in the cities of Rock Island, Moline and Davenport, known as the tri-cities, with a population of over 100,000, are grown in this township. The next greatest industry is the manufacture of common and pressed brick, which was begun in the early thirties, and has supplied the great part of the brick used in the tri-cities ever since. Large quantities of the product have been shipped to outside markets. Another important industry is the growing of flowers and winter vegetables in hot houses, their being eight large plants of this kind within the township.

DEVELOPMENT OF WATER POWER

Here on Rock river was the first development of water power. On Vandruff's Island there was a grist-mill run by an undershot wheel, the water for which was supplied by a dam across the main channel. A sawmill was also connected with this plant. The mill was built in 1843. The next advance came when David B. Sears (for whom the village of Sears was named) bought land here in 1867, and built a series of four dams across the four different outlets of Rock river. He erected a grist-mill in 1868, on the north bank, about one hundred feet east of the present power plant house, but it was burned in 1888, and was never replaced. In 1874 a cotton mill and a paper mill were built, also on the north bank of Rock river. The paper mill was run for some years by a local company, after which it passed into the hands of the Grahams of Rockford, Ill., who operated it for many years. They had acquired the cotton mill some years before, but closed both plants in 1893.

In 1906 T. B. and S. S. Davis of Rock Island, having secured all water power rights at the lower rapids of Rock river, and being granted authority by Congress, commenced the rebuilding of the dams. Three dams were constructed, one 460 feet long, across the north or main channel of the river, just above the highway bridge at Sears; the second, 150 feet long, across the cut-off between Vandruff's Island and Carr's Island; and the third, 764 feet long, across the south branch, immediately below and adjoining the government dam at the head of Carr's Island. These dams are of solid concrete, and of ample strength to withstand the ice and floods to which they are subjected. One use of the dams is to maintain the level of water in the Hennepin canal, and they are so constructed as not to alter the level maintained by the government dams which were built over twenty years ago. A hydro-electric power station to utilize the water power developed, was then built at Sears. It is constructed according to the best engineering practice of the day, the foundations, penstock and draft tubes being of concrete, reinforced by steel of high tensile strength. The power house proper is built with a heavy steel skeleton with walls of pressed brick, and a concrete tile roof. No wood enters into its construction, even the door and window casing and sash being of steel. The present equipment consists of six main generating units, and one exciting unit. The power house, however, has ample space for the doubling of this equipment. A notable feature is that the main generators are of the vertical or umbrella type, each being directly connected to the turbine driving it, thus eliminating the noise and the greater part of the friction losses occurring in the common method of geared connections. The weight of the water wheel runner, the rotating part of the generator, the shaft connecting them, and the column of water operating the water wheel, is all carried by the roller bearing at the top of the generator, which is so nicely adjusted and mechanically perfect that a man of ordinary strength can easily revolve the generator and runner by hand. This was the first low head water power in the United States to use direct connected generators, therefore this installation has been of great interest to hydro-electric engineers throughout the country. Other noteworthy features include the tunnel under the generators for carrying wires which runs the full length of the building; the ingenious way of handling the head gates by means of an overhead traveling crane, and the trash rack constructed of bars, specially rolled, which offer the minimum amount of resistance to the passage of the water. This plant, supplying abundant power at cheap rates, should attract many new industries to this locality, and thus be of great benefit to the whole community.

SEARS

The village of Sears where this great plant is located is in this township, and was incorporated May 26, 1894. The first trustees were: C. H. Dibbern, John E. Breen, B. Patterson, J. McCarthy, J. F. Mead and E. D. Fisher.

The early settlers came mostly from the eastern states, and among those first locating in this township may be mentioned: Dr. Jonah Case and his wife Julia, William T. Brashar and his wife, Jane M. and Rinah Wells, who came here from Vermont. The first was a graduate of an eastern medical college, but did not enter professional life in his new home. He occasionally treated sick people, but only in an emergency, or as a matter of accommodation when practicing physicians were not available. These all drove through from the east in wagons in the autumn of 1828, passing the first winter near Jacksonville, Ill., completing their journey in the spring of 1829. They crossed Rock river on the ice on March 28, and lived in their wagons until houses could be built. Sarah J. Case, the daughter of Jonah F. and Julia Case, was the first white child born on the mainland of Rock Island county, having been born in 1830. William A. Brashar, son of William T. and Jane M. Brashar, who was born in 1831, was the first white boy born on the mainland of Rock Island county.

Soon after these first settlers came William Carr and his wife Eliza J., Thomas L. Drumm and his wife, Martha. Then there were the Mielman, Dalton and Hill families. Members of the latter family finally settled Hillsdale in the northeastern part of the county. Benjamin Goble and John A. Boyer and wife were among the pioneers as were William Dixon, who afterwards removed to Milan, and Marck C. Wilson, who was one of the early Baptist ministers. Other early settlers were: Adolph Dunlap, George M. Luken, both of whom married into the Carr family, Thomas Dougherty, John Gallagher, Thomas Campbell, who now (1913) represents this district in the State Legislature, came in the early forties, James Fitzpatrick, Joseph Ballinger, Jacob Bruchmann, Roswell Richmond, David B. Sears, J. C. Young, J. W. Graham, Philip Dingledein, the Scherers, William Sanderson, Charles Dibbern, Patrick Ganon and Michael McCarty.

The following have been supervisors of South Rock Island township; who were always ex-officio members of the county board: J. C. Lloyd, 1878; H. S. Case, 1879-80; Thomas Campbell, 1881-89; Henry G. Bostock, 1889 (resigned in October) Thomas Campbell, 1889, to complete term; George Lamont, 1890; H. S. Case, 1890-97;

Cornelius Donovan, 1897-1905; Emil Luchman, 1905-07; George H. Richmond, 1907-13.

RURAL TOWNSHIP

By R. D. McCreery

BOUNDARIES—EVIDENCES OF PROSPERITY—FIRST SETTLERS—FIRST MARRIAGE—FIRST BIRTH—FIRST SCHOOLHOUSE IN 1846—RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS—THE COUNTY ALMSHOUSE—COAL MINES—SUPERVISORS.

BOUNDARIES

The history of Rural township is interwoven with that of Coal Valley township, until the separation between the two, in 1871. The township comprises governmental township 16, north, range 1, west of the Fourth Principal Meridian. Its boundaries are as follows: by Black Hawk township and Coal Valley township on the north; on the east by Henry county; on the south by Mercer county and on the west by Bowling township. While it lacks some of the magnificent scenery of those more closely bordering on the Mississippi River, this township is better fitted for agricultural pursuits, and honestly bears its name. A trip through its peaceful confines proves that the modern agriculturist is a person to envy. The magnificent farms, with their broad fields, which in season are either yellowing with grain, or dotted with sleek stock; the comfortable white farm houses; the commodious red barns, built according to the latest approved sanitary regulations; the windmills or electric power plants which oftentimes furnish water supply for the house and barns, as well as stock; the well-kept fences, and neat premises, all indicate that the farmers not only know how to acquire property, but what is still more important, keep it in shape after securing it. Many of these farmers have elegantly furnished houses, and own automobiles, and almost all of them keep a comfortable amount of ready cash in the banks in the neighboring towns. It is such men as these who are the real bulwarks of Americanism.

FIRST SETTLERS

The first settlers of Rural township came principally from the eastern states, although in the southern part a number of Germans found congenial surroundings, and in the west and north, the Scotch and Irish have developed into the best kinds of American citizens. The pioneer of them all was Thomas Goodlow, who was accompanied by his brother, David, the former settling here in 1838, the latter coming back in 1839. These brothers erected the first house in the township, building it of course from logs, felled by their own hands. Soon thereafter, John Farlow came here from Preemption township, Mercer county, where he had been its first settler. Those who came prior to 1840 were: A. L. and A. N. Sayre, J. M. Wilson, J. A. Jordan and Daniel Valentine. Another early settler was a man known as "Wild Cat" Moore. This name was given him in 1842, when he killed a wild cat with his bare hands, without a weapon, holding a buffalo robe before him, and came out of the conflict without a scratch.

The first marriage recorded in Rural township, was that consummated between David Goodlow and Nancy Farlow. The first child born here was a son, born to John Farlow, in 1839. The first school in Rural township was taught in a private house by Seth Trego. The various farmers realizing the needs of their children, exerted themselves, and the first school edifice was put up in 1846. Those to whom the credit for this is due were: Captain J. A. Jordan, Albert N., Alonzo S. and M. Sayre, J. M. Wilson, Daniel Valentine and William Grist. A Mr. Chedd was placed in charge of the first school held in this building.

RELIGIOUS MOVEMENTS

After the people provided for the educational training of their children, they felt free to direct their efforts towards securing religious instruction for themselves. The first sermon here had been preached in 1839, by the Rev. Joseph Jones, but the first religious society was not organized until 1852, when the Homestead United Presbyterian Church was formed. The following became members at that time: David Campbell and wife, Francis Bailey and wife, Miss Jane Patterson, James Donon, Sr., and wife, James Donon, Jr., and wife, John Donon, Robert Bailey and wife and John McLain. Their first pastor was the Rev. William Oburn.

In 1858, the Associate and Associate Reformed Presbyterian churches, having united, this organization came under the jurisdiction of the United Presbytery of Monmouth, but later was transferred to that of Rock Island. In 1855, the congregation erected a church edifice, at a cost of $1,400, and in 1870, added a parsonage, at a cost of $1,100. A Sunday school was organized in 1856.

Beulah Presbyterian Church was organized August 22, 1854. The first service was held in the Bailey schoolhouse on section 2. The first church edifice was located on section 14, being erected in 1859, at a cost of $1,600. Among the original members of this organization were: Margaret and Elizabeth Gordon, James Farrar and wife, Henry Brown, Mary A. Edwards, Alexander and Maria Gordon, Francis Killing, Jane Killing and William F. Brown.

The Almshouse of Rock Island county, is located in Rural township, on section 3. There is a well improved farm connected with it, which is operated so as to make the almshouse partially self-supporting with regard to food supply.

When the writer came to Rural township, the country looked bare to him as compared to the East, but he was pleased with the general appearance and promise. At that time land was very cheap, ranging from $3.50 to $8.00 per acre. Many of the settlers lived in board shanties, and the most of these were unplastered. Produce was sold at a very low figure, and the writer remembers at one time hauling corn sixteen miles to Rock Island, and selling thirty bushels for ten cents per bushel. With the proceeds, he bought a $3 grindstone. This trade seemed the best he could make, and it left him without a cent in his pocket. He well remembers the money panic of 1857, when so many banks failed. During the Civil war, many of the producers being absent in the service of their country, prices revived, and produce brought more money.

Rural township, like Coal Valley township, has good coal mines, several being in operation. The largest ones are on sections 1, 3 and 33.

The population of Rural township in 1900, was 814; in 1910, 615. There are no villages within the limits of Rural township, although there is a small settlement known as Rural. There are no post offices, the mail being delivered by the government Rural Free Delivery system. While at present there are no railroads in the township, spurs are to be built in the near future to connect the mines with the main lines. A much used highway of the township is what is known as the Knoxville Road, running from northwest to southeast.

The members of the Board of Supervisors from Rural township from 1873 have been as follows; in 1889 the term of office being made two years:

Andrew Donaldson, 1873-4; Miles B. Wright, 1875-6; R. D. McCreery, 1877; Andrew Donaldson, 1878; A. L. Sayre, 1879; John A. Wilson, 1880-1; John A. Jordon, 1882; John Warlock, 1883; Stephen E. Goodlow, 1884-6; J. A. Wilson, 1887-96; J. M. Hutchison, 1897-98; J. M. Hutchison, 1899-00; J. M. Hutchison, 1901-02; J. M. Hutchison, 1903-04; Paul Wadsworth, 1905-06; Paul Wadsworth, 1907-08; Paul Wadsworth 1909-10; Paul Wadsworth, 1911-13.

AMBITION FOR HOMES

It is interesting to the student of history to follow the trend of civilization, noticing that the same impulses stir the human race today, as when the Babylonians revelled in luxury thousands of years ago. The desire for a permanent home dwells in the breast of every normal man and woman; when this dies out, the nation is doomed to destruction. One of the strongest holds this country has upon the progress of the world, is the opportunity it has always offered to those willing to work and save, to secure homes where, amid rural surroundings, they could accumulate a comfortable competency, and rear their young to useful, happy lives. Thus it is that in reviewing the history of any given section of the United States, from the foundation of the little colony in Virginia, in 1607, to the latest allotment of land in one or other of the newly-admitted western states, there is to be found the identical type that has gone to make up the country's greatness. Rock Island county has had its full number of the representatives of the type, good, earnest men and women, strong in their determination to wrest from fate what they believe is their share in life, and because of this, the county has reached its present position of dignified and honorable importance among the similar divisions of one of the mightiest states in the Union.

Not least among the sub-divisions of this one big division, is Zuma township, bounded on the north by Coe township, on the east by Canoe Creek township, on the south by Henry county, and on the west by Hampton township. It is a portion of township 18, 2 east range, and has Canoe creek and the Rock river to drain its surface, the first on the east, and the latter on the south.

EARLY SETTLEMENT AND ACTIVITIES

The beginning of Zuma township as a settlement was in 1835, when Hiram Walker, George Walker, Ira Wells, Nelson Wells, Josiah Carter and Perry Carter located here. These pioneers were followed in 1836, by D. N. Beal, while Phil Michaels, Benjamin Shank, John Studivan came in 1837. They were followed by others, until all the available government land that was considered, according to the views in those days, tillable, was taken up.

The first child to be born within the confines of the present Zuma township, was Mary A. Studivan, whose birth occurred December 25, 1836, a very acceptable Christmas present to her parents. The first male child born in the township was Lucius W. Beal, whose birth took place January 20, 1838.

The first marriage was that of Nelson Wells and Harriet Dow, who were united in 1838.

The first school was held some time during the first decade of the settlement's history, Mary Grant being the first teacher. The school was held in an old log church. As this was before the inauguration of the free school system, the school was what was called a subscription, each father paying so much for every child. From this primitive beginning, the present system was developed, and Zuma township will compare favorably with other townships with regard to excellent teachers, comfortable schoolhouses, course of study and ability of pupils. To indicate the remarkable advance made in educational matters during the past quarter of a century, comparison is invited to the following figures:

In 1885, number of pupils of school age, 208; frame schoolhouses, 7; highest wages paid teachers, $40; lowest wages paid teachers, $20; value of school property, $3,700.

In 1912, number of pupils of school age, 200; schoolhouses, 7; highest wages paid teachers, $50; lowest wages paid teachers, $25; value of school property, $6,125.

The first schoolhouse was built in 1855. The money to build it was raised by subscription. It was called the Oaks Grove school, and Christine Brandenberg was placed in charge of it. In 1856, the Syms school was built with funds raised by taxation. This latter school is now known as the Wake school.

CHURCHES

The first religious service in the township, of which there is definite record, was held in the house of John Sturdivan, the minister officiating being Rev. Philip Hanna of the Methodist Episcopal church. In 1847, what was known as the Protestant church was built at Rose Hill graveyard. In 1870, it was moved to Zuma Center, and was used by the Methodists. There are two religious societies now represented in the township.

In 1847 the United Brethren organized a class and in 1850 erected a church edifice at Rose Hill, and have a good congregation. The Rev. Herman Scott was the first preacher; Rev. J. H. Kerr being now in charge.

The Methodist Episcopal church has a house of worship at Zuma Center, which was erected in 1870. The society worships in it, has a large membership. Reverend Smith is now the minister.

Zuma township was organized in 1857, and since then it has steadily developed to its present condition of agricultural importance. As its population is comprised principally of farmers, the chief work of its people is the tilling of the soil. That they are successful, a trip through the township proves, for no other township excels Zuma township in the number and fertility of its farms, or the condition in which they are kept. Thousands of sleek cattle, horses and other varieties of stock graze in the pastures, and commodious barns to house them have been built according to the latest state laws regarding sanitation.

ZUMA CENTER.—In 1856, A. F. Russel laid out a town lot at what was called Zuma Center. A store, blacksmith shop and shoemaking shop were soon built, and a little village sprung up.

JOSLIN.—This village is located on the Sterling branch of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad. It was named for N. B. Joslin, its first postmaster, appointed in 1870. He had a store here, but sold out to Golden Brewster, Alexander Dunbar being appointed the second postmaster. Later, Mr. Brewster succeeded to the office of postmaster. The present incumbent of the office is F. J. Whiteside, appointed in 1911 by President Taft. The usual stores of a village are found here, with a blacksmith shop, and about the business center are clustered some comfortable houses. This point is used by neighboring farmers for shipping purposes, and there is a warehouse here.

Joslin has two prosperous general stores, one conducted by W. E. Donahay, and the other by Whiteside Bros., two farm machinery stores, one operated by Earl Donahay, and the other by Whiteside Bros.; a blacksmith shop run by John Becht, and a carpenter shop, run by J. C. Daily, a successful contractor and builder.

OSBORNE.—This village is located near Rock river, and not far from Cleveland crossing. It is also on the Sterling branch of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, and shipments are sent to Chicago from this point.

It is interesting to note that the first frame house in Zuma township was built by Ambrose Searle in 1838, prior to that all the houses having been constructed of logs. Hiram Walker built the first brick house, in 1853. The township was first called after the Walker family, but was later changed to Zuma. The first post-office was located in 1848, at Fairport, on Rock river, Truman Gorton being the first postmaster. The township now has postoffices at Joslin, with F. J. Whiteside, as postmaster; and Osborn, with C. Rasmussen as postmaster, and rural free delivery. Practically every house in the township is connected with the outside world by telephone.

Hon. William Payne represented the township in the State Assembly and Senate for ten years, and W. H. Whiteside is now serving a four-year term as county treasurer, so this township has furnished Rock Island county with several important officials.

An agricultural fair is held one mile north of Joslin annually. It began in 1894, and has been since continued. Premiums are given on farm products, live stock and on many other articles. The grounds are furnished with a race track, good exhibition buildings, and the association is in a flourishing condition. The annual fairs give the agriculturists an opportunity to meet each other, and they come from Rock Island, Whiteside and Henry counties.

In marked contrast to the early settlers who lived in log houses with scanty furnishings, and who were of necessity clad in rough clothes, and rode in springless wagons, are the present citizens of Zuma township. The pioneers had difficulty in making both ends meet. Real money was scarce, and a system of barter and exchange was carried on. About all of the money possessed by these early people, was used in paying taxes. Now the farmers live in fine brick and frame houses, heated by furnaces, and furnished with taste and according to the latest ideas on such subjects. They possess costly rugs, pianos, phonographs and ride about in carriages and automobiles. Almost every head of a family possesses a comfortable bank account, and a well improved farm, with substantial barns and other buildings.

The first officials of the township were: Rinnah, Wells, supervisor; J. L. Cox and B. B. Joslin, justices of the peace; Wesley Hanna, collector; D. N. Real, assessor; Gregory Brown, Nelson Wells and S. S. Knowlton, road commissioners; A. H. Mead, clerk; David Dailey, poor master; Ben Worley, pound master.

The officers for 1912 are:

L. Hanna, supervisor; A. L. Mead, justice of the peace; A. E. Wells, collector; W. Nold, assessor; George Olives, B. B. Osborn and Ed Noah, road commissioners; Alfred Mead, clerk; S. W. Mumma and D. Noah, constables; F. Whiteside, school trustee.

The Board of Supervisors for Zuma township from 1857 to 1912, have been as follows:

Rinnah Wells, 1857-8; Ambrose Searle, 1859; Wesley Hanna, 1860-61; Daniel Beal, 1862-63; A. F. Russel, 1864; Daniel N. Beal, 1865-6; B. B. Joslin, 1867-8; Samuel Wainwright, 1869-70; L. W. Beal, 1871; Madison Bowels, 1872-73; 77; Wesley Hanna, 1874-75; George C. Wake, 1876-77; Fred Osborne, 1880-81; John G. Osborn, 1882; I. S. Knowels, 1883; J. McEniry, 1884; John L. Noah, 1885-86; William Whiteside, 1887-89; Leslie Hanna, 1890-92; John C. Sweak, 1893-96; Wm. Filbert, 1897-98; Frederick J. Whiteside, 1899-00; Wm. Filbert, 1901-02; L. N. Dailey, 1903-06; Wm. Filbert, 1907-08; L. Hanna, 1909-13.

THE PART OF BIOGRAPHY IN GENERAL HISTORY—
CITIZENS OF ROCK ISLAND COUNTY AND OUTLINES OF PERSONAL HISTORY—PERSONAL SKETCHES
ARRANGED IN ENCYCLOPEDIC ORDER.

The verdict of mankind has awarded to the Muse of History the highest place among the Classic Nine. The extent of her office, however, appears to be, by many minds, but imperfectly understood. The task of the historian is comprehensive and exacting. True history reaches beyond the doing of court or camp, beyond the issue of battles or the effects of treaties, and records the trials and the triumphs, the failures and the successes of the men who make history. It is but an imperfect conception of the philosophy of events that fails to accord to portraiture and biography its rightful position as a part—and no unimportant part—of historic narrative. Behind and beneath the activities of outward life the motive power lies out of sight, just as the furnace fires that work the piston and keep the ponderous screw revolving down in the darkness of the hold. So, the impulsive power which shapes the course of communities may be found in the moulding influences which form its citizens.

It is no mere idle curiosity that prompts men to wish to learn the private, as well as the public, lives of their fellows. Rather is it true that such desire tends to prove universal brotherhood; and the interest in personality and biography is not confined to men of any particular caste or vocation.

The list of those, to whose lot it falls to play a conspicuous part in the great drama of life, is comparatively short; yet communities are made up of individuals, and the aggregate of achievements—no less than the sum total of human happiness—is made up of the deeds of those men and women whose primary aim, through life, is faithfully to perform the duty that comes nearest to hand. Individual influences upon human affairs will be considered potent or insignificant, according to the standpoint from which it is viewed. To him who, standing upon the seashore, notes the ebb and flow of the tides and listens to the sullen roar of the waves, as they break upon the beach in seething foam, seemingly chafing at their limitations, the ocean appears so vast as to need no tributaries. Yet, without the smallest rill that helps to swell the "Father of Waters," the mighty torrent of the Mississippi would be lessened, and the beneficent influence of the Gulf Stream diminished. Countless streams, currents and counter currents—sometimes mingling, sometimes counter-acting each other—collectively combine to give motion to the accumulated mass of waters. So is it—and so must it ever be—in the ocean of human action, which is formed by the blending and repulsion of currents of thought, of influence and of life, yet more numerous and more tortuous than those which form the "fountains of the deep." The acts and characters of men, like the several faces that compose a composite picture, are wrought together into a compact or heterogeneous whole. History is condensed biography; "Biography is History teaching by example."

It is both interesting and instructive to rise above the generalization of history and trace, in the personality and careers of the men from whom it sprang, the principles and influences, the impulses and ambitions, the labors, struggles and triumphs that engross their lives.

Here are recorded the careers and achievements of pioneers who, "when the fullness of time had come," came from widely separated sources, some from beyond the sea, impelled by divers motives, little conscious of the import of their acts, and but dimly anticipating the harvest which would spring from the sowing. They built their primitive homes, toiling for a present subsistence while laying the foundations of private fortunes and future advancement.

Most of these have passed away, but not before they beheld a development of business and population surpassing the wildest dreams of fancy or expectation. A few yet remain whose years have passed the allotted three-score and ten, and who love to recount, among the cherished memories of their lives, their reminiscences of early days.

[The following items of personal and family history, having been arranged in encyclopedic (or alphabetical) order as to names of the individual subjects, no special index to this part of the work will be found necessary.]

ABRAHAMS, Carl A., senior member of the firm of Abrahams & Porter, construction contractors of East Moline, is a man who has risen through sheer ability and steady persistence, and is now ranked among the responsible men in his line in Rock Island county. Mr. Abrahams was born at Morning Sun, Ia., in 1878, son of Peter J. and Louise Ann Abrahams, natives of Sweden. The father came to this country in 1868, but returned to his old home. In 1878, he once more made the trip. By trade, he was a mason, and became a successful contractor in that line.

Carl A. Abrahams had only eight months of schooling, for at the tender age of nine years, he began to be self-supporting. At that time, he began working as a water boy, and has gradually advanced himself. In 1899, he came to Moline, and in 1908, transferred his operations to East Moline, for he recognized the possibilities of this rapidly-growing community. On January 1, 1912, Mr. Abrahams formed a partnership with Burt N. Porter, under the firm name of the Abrahams-Porter Construction Company. The firm employs seventy men, and owns eight teams, and during their first year executed contracts to the amount of over $50,000.

In 1909, Mr. Abrahams married Margaret Pearl Drescher of Ely, Mo. Mr. and Mrs. Abrahams have one child, Margaret Alice. Mr. Abrahams is a Master Mason, fraternally. His religious home is in the Methodist church, of which he is a consistent member. Politically he is very liberal in his views. Being essentially a self-made man, Mr. Abrahams deserves more than ordinary credit for the success he is achieving.

ADAMS, David S., veteran of the Civil War, successful farmer and enterprising citizen, is now living retired after a life spent in useful endeavor. He was born in Berks county, Pa., July 23, 1835, a son of Anthony and Elizabeth (Schoppell) Adams, natives of Windsor, Berks county, Pa. The grandparents on both sides of the house came from Germany, settling in Pennsylvania. The parents of Mr. Adams died in that state, he losing his mother when only thirteen years old. His father married again, and Mr. Adams left home, going to Circleville, Ohio, where he worked as a brick and stone mason, continuing in Ohio until he attained his majority, when he came to Rock Island county, locating in Zuma township, there farming for different parties until his marriage. This took place in 1860, when he was united with Sarah Clark, born in Pickaway county, Ohio, daughter of James Clark, a native of Ireland. Mr. Adams rented a farm on the Rock river in Zuma township for a year, and then bought a little over eighty-two acres to which he has since added forty-five acres. In addition he owned ten acres of timber land in Henry county, but later disposed of that property. When he bought this farm, only forty acres were under cultivation, and the house was merely a small shed. No barns had been put up, so that all of the present excellent improvements have been made by him. The first year he put in thirty-three acres in corn which averaged eighty bushels to the acre, and for this he received 50 cents per bushel. This more than paid for his land. He now owns 133 acres, all of which is very valuable, and worth much more than he paid for it. Since the retirement of Mr. Adams in 1909, his son James C. has conducted his farm. This son is the eldest of the children, the others being: Samuel A., who is of Whiteside county; William M., who died at the age of twenty-six years; Laura, who became Mrs. Benjamin B. Osborn of Zuma township; and Mary, who became Mrs. Frank Tollby of Zuma township. Mrs. Adams died in November, 1884. In March, 1887, Mr. Adams married (second) Mary Schible, born in Port Byron, Ill., daughter of Jacob and Joanna (Dull) Schible of Germany; no issue.

In February, 1865, Mr. Adams enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until October, 1865, when he was honorably discharged and returned home. Mr. Adams has served as school trustee since 1900, and for twenty-one years was school director. He was road commissioner for one year, being elected to all these offices on the republican ticket. Mr. Adams received but few educational advantages, his schooling being limited to attendance on the district schools in Pennsylvania during his boyhood, but his natural keenness and willingness to work have served him, so that he has attained to a well-deserved prosperity, and holds the confidence and respect of his neighbors.

AHERN, Patrick (deceased), to whose faithful care for the past ten years, much of the beauty of Gurnsey Park was due, was born seventy-nine years ago, in Waterford, Ireland, being a son of James and Ellen (Foley) Ahern, both of whom were born, and passed away in Ireland. They had eight children: Thomas who died in Moline; Patrick; James, who also came to the United States, and five daughters who never left Ireland. Mr. Ahern had but few educational advantages, for his services were needed to help at home, but he went to school whenever possible. In 1864, he set sail from Liverpool, and after a voyage of twenty-five days, reached New York City. From there he started for more western points, remaining in Ohio three months, while he worked on the Atlantic and Southwestern Railroad. He then joined his brother Thomas, in Moline, and began steamboating on the Mississippi river, continuing this for three years. At the expiration of this time, he entered the plow shops of B. D. Buford, but left after several years, to follow various occupations, until he took charge of the park. He owned his beautiful residence at No. 426 Sixth street surrounded by well-kept grounds, the entire premises showing that someone lived there who took a pride in his holdings.

In 1868, Mr. Ahern was married in Rock Island to Sarah Dowling, born in County Kildare, Ireland, in 1834, daughter of Maurice and Mary (Moran) Dowling. Mrs. Ahern died February 24, 1910, firm in the faith of St. Joseph's Catholic church, of which she and her husband were members. He was a democrat, but liberal in his views. James and Mary Ellen, both at home, cheered their father for the loss of the mother, whose place can never be filled. She was a most estimable woman, whose life was devoted to her husband and family, and she was recognized as a charitable and kind neighbor, who was ever ready to assist those who needed her sympathy and help. Mr. Ahern died March 26, 1912, and his loss was deplored by all who knew this most estimable man.

AINSWORTH, Harry, son of Henry A. Ainsworth, whose history is given at length in this work, was born in Geneseo, Ill., May 9, 1862. Henry A. Ainsworth was born in Williamstown, Vt., September 28, 1833, and his wife, Sarah (Andrews) Ainsworth, was born in Ashland, Ohio. Her brother, Lorin Andrews, was president of Kenyon College, and was the first volunteer from the state of Ohio in the Civil war. He was colonel of the First Ohio regiment, contracted camp fever and died at the very beginning of the war.

The Ainsworth family moved to Moline in 1871, where Harry Ainsworth attended school; graduated from Oberlin College in 1884, and from the Harvard Law School in 1887. Mr. Ainsworth was admitted to the bar of the state of Illinois in 1887 but never practiced, entering instead into the firm of Williams, White & Company with his father, in which business he has been engaged ever since, and is at the present time manager and vice-president of this concern. Williams, White & Company are well known as manufacturers of heavy machinery, consisting of bulldozers, drop hammers, punches and shears, etc., their product being generally used both in this country and abroad.

Mr. Ainsworth was married May 26, 1889, to Stella A. Davidson of Elgin, Ill., born in that city April 29, 1862, daughter of Orlando and Caroline (Gifford) Davidson. Mrs. Ainsworth's grandfather on the maternal side, Mr. Gifford, was the founder of the city of Elgin, and the surveyor and promoter of the first state road west out of Chicago to Galena. Mr. and Mrs. Ainsworth have three daughters: Carolyn D., born December 26, 1891, who was married November 27, 1912, to Harry W. Getz, Jr.; Sarah A., the second daughter, born August 6, 1893; and Dorothy S., the third daughter, born March 12, 1895. Both the latter are attending Smith College. Mr. Ainsworth has not been prominent in politics or public business, except as a member of the Public Library Board, of which he was president for several years. Mrs. Ainsworth has been a member of the school board, and is active in church work and the various women's organizations. The family belong to the First Congregational church of Moline, Ill.

AINSWORTH, Henry A., president of Williams, White & Company, one of the largest concerns of its kind in Illinois, and a man whose capability to handle affairs of immense magnitude was long ago demonstrated, and is maintained by the growing trade of his business, is truly representative of the progressive spirit of his age. He resides on the bluff, west of Sixth street, Moline, owning this beautiful home as well as many other houses and various pieces of realty of great value in the city, for he had every confidence in its future, and has always been a heavy investor in its real estate. He was born at Williamstown, Vt., September 28, 1833, being a son of Calvin and Laura (Lynde) Ainsworth, the former born at Brookfield, Vt., the latter at Williamstown, Vt. In 1839, Calvin Ainsworth became interested in a general store with George Lynde, who died in 1846. Mr. Ainsworth then settled up the estate, and was succeeded by Charles Ainsworth, who later was president of the Dienock-Gould Company. Cornelius Lynde for many years was the judge of the Orange county (Vt.) circuit court. The family on the paternal and maternal sides, came of good English stock, its members having been prominent both in England and this country.

Henry A. Ainsworth attended the common schools at Williamstown and the West Randolph (Vt.) Academy, later going to Wetford (Vt.) Academy, then entered his father's store as clerk, taking pleasure during boyhood and young manhood in outdoor sports. In the fall of 1853, Mr. Ainsworth went to Geneseo, Ill., where he established himself in business, but sold his interests in the spring of 1862, and for three years afterward handled hardware and implements. Once more he disposed of his business at a profit, and for some time then looked after his farming interests, although he continued to reside in Geneseo. In the summer of 1870, he left there to come to Moline, when he entered his present concern, and in the summer of 1871 the present company was incorporated, with Mr. Williams as president; Mr. White, vice-president, and Mr. Ainsworth as secretary. A few years later Mr. Ainsworth bought nearly all the stock of Mr. Williams and Mr. White and was soon thereafter elected to the presidency of the company. His son, Harry Ainsworth, is secretary and manager.

In 1858, Mr. Ainsworth was married in Ashland, Ohio, to Sarah E. Andrews, who died in December, 1891, in a Chicago hospital, where she was under treatment, and is buried in Geneseo, in the family lot. She was the mother of four children: Harry; Laura, who died in infancy; Laura (II), who died when sixteen years old; and Mary, who lives with her father. On June 30, 1896, Mr. Ainsworth was married (second) to Sarah F. Anderson, then president of Rockford College. The family belong to the Congregational church.

Mr. Ainsworth is proud of the fact that his first presidential vote was cast for John C. Fremont, the first candidate of the republican party, and he has always supported its candidates ever since. His work in politics has been marked by the same sane, business-like ability that has characterized his career in other ways, and he is a power here. In 1872, he represented the First ward in the city council, just after Moline was made a city, when John Deere was mayor, and consequently took part in much of the organization work. He was on the state board of equalization in 1876, and in 1882, he was further honored by election to the state senate, and additionally, he served as president of the labor bureau, appointed by Governor Fifer. Mr. Ainsworth also assisted in the work of the library board, having been a director for many years, and has never been found lacking in public spirit. His fraternal affiliations are with the Masonic order. Recognized as one of the leading manufacturers of Rock Island, Mr. Ainsworth feels the responsibilities of his high position, and not only endeavors to advance his own concern, but to make it a factor in the growth of Moline. He is an open-hearted, generous, charitable man, a developer of resources, and possessed of great natural shrewdness and keenness of insight, which has enabled him to seize upon opportunity and turn it to his purpose.

ALBERTSON, Charles S.—Some of the families of Rock Island can boast of a long and honorable ancestry. For generations back, representatives of these families have been closely identified with the various public events of the country and those now living are justly proud of the record of the deeds of the dead. One of these families here is that of Albertson, and its record is as follows: Nicholas Albertson came to America from Amsterdam, Holland, but later went to England. There he married an English lady, and returning to America, settled down on Long Island. A son of his, Garrett Albertson, was a soldier in the French and Indian war, helping to capture Fort Duquesne, now Pittsburgh, Pa., from the French and Indians. For several years, he served as a soldier in the Continental army, during the Revolution, and again gave his services for a period of three months in the War of 1812. This loyal patriot died August 12, 1813, aged seventy-nine years, and was buried at the Union Meeting House near Hope, Warren county, N. J. Nicholas Albertson, son of Garrett, died January 2, 1853, aged eighty-nine years, and was buried near his father. Sampson H. Albertson, son of Nicholas, died November 2, 1858, aged fifty-eight years, and he too was interred at Union Meeting House cemetery.

Garrett Albertson, son of Sampson, was born October 28, 1826, in Warren county, N. J. He had a family of seven sons and one daughter, all of whom are living, as is the mother. During the Civil war, Garrett Albertson served for thirty-four months in Company F, Eighty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. By occupation, he is a farmer, and his home is at Halstead, Harvey county, Kan.

Charles S. Albertson, son of Garrett, and the one of whom we write in this sketch, is a blacksmith and carriage maker of Moline, now residing at No. 310 Twenty-second street. He was born at Peoria, April 27, 1855, and was brought up on the farm, being taught the blacksmith trade. He attended the public schools at Watertown, Ill., and remained at home until he was seventeen years old, when he went to Geneseo to work at blacksmithing, after which he attended the state normal school at Normal, Ill. Following his course at Normal he worked at his trade of blacksmithing in Normal and Peoria, Ill., Howard, S. Dak., and various places. In November, 1882, he came to Moline, and has been engaged here ever since, having built up a fine business, and won appreciation on account of his fair dealing and excellent work.

Mr. Albertson was married at Moline, June 5, 1883, to Sarah D. Williams, born in November 1857, at Quincy, Ill., a daughter of Newell and Fannie (Knight) Williams. Mr. Williams was a soldier in the Civil war, and by trade was a carpenter. In 1883, he left home, and since then his family have lost track of him. Mr. and Mrs. Albertson became the parents of two sons: Walter E., born July 5, 1884, graduated from the Moline high school in 1902, and is now in business in Rock Island; and George R., born January 1, 1887, was graduated from the Moline high school, 1904, and later attended and graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Iowa, of Iowa City, 1910. He was Doctor of Anatomy of his alma mater, and is now Doctor of Anatomy at Vermillion, S. Dak. He is married. This son belongs to Blue Lodge No. 4, A. F. & A. M. of Iowa City, and the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Albertson is himself a Mason, belonging to Doric Lodge 319, Moline; the Consistory in Quincy; Mystic Shrine of Peoria. He also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America of Moline; Sons of Veterans of Wellington Wood Camp, Royal Neighbors of America, and the Eastern Star. In religious faith he is a Congregationalist, while politically, he is a republican.

ALDRICH, Ellis D., senior member of the firm of Aldrich & Potter, proprietors of the Sheet Metal Works at East Moline, is one of the conservative business men of Rock Island county to whose knowledge of existing conditions and current demands, much of the success of his present enterprise is due. Mr. Aldrich was born in Henry County, Ill., in September, 1866, being a son of Henry and Mary (Richmond) Aldrich. The former had the distinction of being the first white child born in Henry county. The mother was born in Linden, Ill. Prior to his retirement to Rock Island in 1906, the father was a farmer of Henry county. His death occurred in the city mentioned, in January, 1910, and with his passing away, this section lost one of its reliable men.

Attending school in the winter, and working on the farm in the summer, Ellis D. Aldrich rounded out his boyhood days, and grew to be twenty-two years old. He was not satisfied to remain on the farm, so went to Geneseo, Ill., where he learned the sheet metal trade. Following this, he was in Iowa for a time, coming to East Moline in 1903, in which year he founded his present business. About 1908, he associated himself with Wyman F. Potter, and the present partnership of Aldrich & Potter was formed. They manufacture various kinds of articles from sheet metal, and their works are the only ones of this kind in East Moline.

On December 26, 1888, Mr. Aldrich was married to Grace Weader, born November 10, 1868, in Rock Island county. She is a daughter of S. L. and Martha (Young) Weader, both of whom were early settlers of Rock Island county. They have two children: Kenneth E., born May 29, 1892, in Geneseo, and Theo. H., born December 19, 1905, in East Moline. Mr. Aldrich is a member of the I. O. O. F. of East Moline, and socially is a member of the Commercial Club here. The family affiliates with the Congregational Church. In politics, Mr. Aldrich is independent. He is deeply interested in East Moline, and can always be counted to give a hearty support to any measures that he believes will advance this community, and improve existing conditions.

ALEXANDER, Edward C., a contracting painter and a man of more than ordinary ability in his line, who has worked up a good business, resides at No. 1608 Eighteenth street, South Heights. He was born in Marion, Iowa, May 31, 1851, a son of Alfred P. Alexander, who was born in Posey county, Ind., January 6, 1832. In 1849 Alfred P. Alexander came overland to Iowa, and worked at cabinetmaking in that state until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted, in 1861, in Company A, Twenty-sixth Iowa Volunteer Infantry. He had the distinction of being promoted through the various ranks until he was captain of his company at the time of his honorable discharge. Returning home he was made revenue assessor and collector of his district, and held that position for five years. He then became claim agent, and held that office until his death, which occurred April 26, 1903. In 1856 he married Rebecca Adeline Lanning, born in Posey county, Ind., January 6, 1839. She came to Iowa about the same time as her husband and died October 7, 1911. Edward C. Alexander was educated in the public schools of Davenport, Iowa, which he attended until fourteen years old. Following this he worked at whatever he could find to do until he was nineteen years old, when he began railroad work and painting. For nine years he was connected with several railroads during the winter and painted in the summer. Finally he devoted all his time to the latter occupation, with very gratifying results.

On May 10, 1880, Edward C. Alexander married Mary A. Wright, born at Madison, Wis., August 3, 1859, a daughter of Charles and Alice (Cronshaw) Wright, both of whom were born in Lancastershire, England, on December 19, 1829, and January 17, 1826, respectively. They came to America in 1853, settling in Canada, from whence they went to Madison, Wis. The father was a stone-cutter and contractor and erected the first building on Government Island, continuing in the employment of the Government for twenty-six years. He came to Rock Island county in 1868 and died here September 2, 1894. His wife passed away October 18, 1892. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs.

Alexander: Alfred W., on May 3, 1896; and Mary E., on June 23, 1899. Mrs. Alexander had the distinction of naming South Heights, the suburban addition to South Rock Island. She belongs to the Court of Honor, No. 523, of Rock Island. Mr. Alexander belongs to the Painters' Union, Local No. 181, of Rock Island. For many years he has been a firm supporter of republican principles and candidates. The family is well and favorably known throughout this county and in Iowa, and the individual members stand very high in the several communities in which they have settled.

ALLEN, Samuel E.—Experience has proven that many times it is more profitable to bring a small farm into a high state of cultivation, than to expend the same energy upon a larger portion of land. One of those who has gained a good living from a small farm, is Samuel E. Allen, of Port Byron township. He was born February 24, 1860, in Coe township. His father, Samuel D. Allen was born in New York state in 1816, but came to Rock Island county in 1842 buying 180 acres in Coe township. The following year he went back to New York for his family. On the property he had bought, he built a log cabin, which he later called a rail pen, and in it they lived while he cleared off and developed his land. As he could, he put up modern buildings, and brought his farm into a high state of fertility. By his first marriage he had thirteen children: Anna, Mary, Margaret, Ruth, Laura, Ellen, Lucina, Tillie, John, Abe, Stephen, Samuel and Martin. The last was killed during the Civil war. The mother of these children, whose maiden name was Margaret Bishop, died in 1862. Mr. Allen later married Martha Ann Nold, by whom he had eight children: Charles, Frank, Clarence, Elmer, Jessie, Ada and two who died in infancy. Mr. Allen died in 1905, aged eighty-nine years, and is buried in Port Byron cemetery.

Samuel E. Allen remained at home, attending the district schools, and working on the farm, until he was nineteen years old, when he began as a section hand on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, thus continuing for two years. He then began farming for himself, and now owns 24¾ acres of land. On this property he has erected all of the buildings with the exception of the main portion of his residence, and his premises show the effect of careful supervision.

On November 2, 1881, he was married by the Reverend Harper to Martha Kimball, daughter of Hugh and Malinda (Reynolds) Kimball. Mrs. Allen was born in Coe township, and there reared. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Allen: Flora, Wilber, Frank, Luther, Marie, Clara, the last two being at home. Flora is now Mrs. Tom Maxwell and lives at Port Byron. Wilber married Lizzie Stevens of Cordova, and has two children, Clyde and Bertha; Frank married Lizzie Hitts, lives in Cordova and has one child, Alton. Mr. Allen belongs to the Port Byron lodge of the Modern Woodmen of America, and at one time was advisor of it. He is one of the sound, reliable men of this part of the county, whose patient, consistent efforts have been generously rewarded, not only with material prosperity, but also with the confidence and respect of those with whom he is brought into contact.

ALLMENDINGER, Andrew Lewis.—The standing of every community is measured by the character of its leading business men, for unless they are responsible, the credit of the municipality and its people is impeached. Sound principles, thorough knowledge of conditions, and an intimate appreciation of supply relative to existing demand, are what make a successful business man of today. East Moline is particularly fortunate in having so many stalwart men of experience who are interested in the progress of the place as well as in their own advancement. One of these is Andrew Lewis Allmendinger, assistant manager of the Mueller Lumber Co. He was born at Ann Arbor, Mich., March 29, 1889, a son of Fred and Louise (Letsch) Allmendinger, both of whom although born in this country are of German descent. In 1895, they came to Rock Island county, the father easily finding work as he was a skilled carpenter.

Andrew Lewis Allmendinger was educated in the public schools of East Moline, and was accounted a bright pupil. Four years ago he was made assistant manager of the Mueller Lumber Co., and his efficient service ever since has proven the wisdom of his selection. Politically, he is a democrat. In religious faith, he is a member of the German Lutheran church. Fraternally, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and Masonic Order. Perhaps no young man here has the future of East Moline more deeply at heart than he, and his earnest co-operation can be relied upon whenever it is needed, to carry out plans for the betterment of existing affairs.

AMES, Edward Peer, D. D. S.—The profession of dental surgery has advanced to such an extent during the past several decades that the successful practitioner must be a close student in order to keep abreast of the times. It is a well-known fact that in order to keep our health we must keep our organs healthy, and in addition to this the teeth are the means of either enhancing or destroying personal attractiveness. Therefore, the dentist has come to be looked upon as an advisor no less than the physician. Dr. Edward Peer Ames, a well-known dental practitioner of Rock Island county, whose chosen field of practice is the city of Rock Island, where he has offices at No. 301 Best Building, was born January 7, 1878, at Windsor, Ill., a son of Truman E. and Dora (Hilsabeck) Ames.

Truman E. Ames was born at Herman, N. Y., January 1, 1850, and attended the State Normal school at Fallsburg, N. Y. In 1873 he came to Illinois, taking up his residence at Shelbyville, but eventually went to Michigan, where for four years he taught school. Returning to Rockford, Ill., he engaged in a law practice, but finally returned to Shelbyville, where he is now residing. For two terms he served as city attorney of Shelbyville, and he was then elected judge of the county court, serving two terms of four years each, and being elected to a third term, of which he served but two years, resigning to accept the office of judge of the circuit court, in which capacity he continued to serve for twelve years. He now has an extensive law practice at Shelbyville. He is a member of the Masons, having attained to the Knight Templar degree, and he is also connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Elks. In political matters he is a democrat, and his religious belief is that of the Methodist church. Mr. Ames was married to Dora Hilsabeck, who was born in Windsor, Ill., in 1861, and their only child was Edward Peer.

Edward Peer Ames was educated in the schools of Shelbyville, and after graduating from the Shelbyville high school at the age of seventeen years, entered the State Normal school at Potsdam, N. Y., which he attended one year. When he was twenty years old he entered the University of Indiana, from which he was graduated with the class of 1901, and he immediately entered upon the practice of his profession at Findley, Ill., but after four years there decided to go to Shelbyville. In the fall of 1908, Dr. Ames sold his practice at Shelbyville and located in Rock Island, where he has continued to practice ever since. Dr. Ames has spacious offices in the Best Building, fully equipped with the latest and most highly improved appliances for the successful treating of his patients, and during his residence here he has built up a large practice. He is a member of the Rock Island County and Illinois State Dental Societies. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Odd Fellows, the Red Men and the Elks, and in political matters is a Democrat. With his wife he attends the Catholic church.

On June 22, 1904, Dr. Ames was married by Father Mackin to Mary L. Mormoyle, who was born at Rock Island, February 28, 1882, daughter of P. B. and Margaret (Kelley) Mormoyle, natives of Ireland. Mrs. Ames was one of a family of nine children.

ANDERSON, Andrew.—Many of the men of Rock Island county have proven in their well-spent lives that it is not necessary for a man to have financial backing to succeed, provided he is willing to work and knows how to save from his earnings. One of those who have a right to call themselves self-made is Andrew Anderson. He was born in Stockholm, Sweden, May 2, 1856, a son of Andrew Christianson and Betsey Anderson. When he was twenty-four years old, he came to the United States with his wife and one child, and first settled in Wisconsin, but after five years came to Moline and secured employment in the plow shops. For six years he was thus engaged, then spent five years in the wagon works, finally buying eighty acres of section 33, Coe township, from Dave Scott. On this land he built the corn crib, hog houses and a part of the barn, the implement shed and re-built the fences. In addition to this, he operates 300 acres of rented land, and raises ninety-eight hogs, twenty-two head of cattle and fourteen head of horses, annually. Little by little, always saving something, and investing it wisely, he has accumulated his present valuable holdings.

In 1881, Mr. Anderson married Betsy Rossetop, daughter of Peter Rossetop, and they became the parents of nine children, eight of whom have been born in Rock Island county: Anna, Mrs. Oliver Smith of Moline; Edward, Leonard, Bessie, Hattie, Harry, Ivor, Wanletta and Winnie. While his educational advantages were limited, Mr. Anderson is a man who has always known how to make the best of what he had, and has learned much from observation. In farming, he has proven that he understands his business thoroughly, and on account of his skill, has become recognized as an authority on matters pertaining to agricultural affairs.

ANDERSON, Frank.—That farming pays well as a business, the agriculturists of Rock Island county are demonstrating in their everyday lives. Some of them have become very wealthy, all are making a good living, and few have failed. Still it takes hard work, constant thrift and a thorough knowledge of the business to make a success of farming. One of the men who is advancing rapidly as a prosperous farmer of the county is Frank Anderson of Coal Valley township, born in Sweden in 1865, a son of John and Clara (Space) Anderson. Frank Anderson attended school in Sweden, but learned English after coming to this country. He arrived here in 1884, and at once located in Coal Valley township, engaging in farming and mining. By 1900, he had saved sufficient money to enable him to buy sixty acres of land in the township. When he bought it, the land was covered with timber, but he now has it all under cultivation, and it is one of the best properties in the township. On it he has built a comfortable large house, and his barns and outbuildings are neat and well kept. He raises corn and stock, and is proud of what he has accomplished.

In 1886, Frank Anderson married Caroline Johnson, also a native of Sweden. She was his sweetheart in the old country, and when he had made a place for her, he sent her a ticket, and she made the long trip alone, coming direct to Coal Valley, where they were married. She is a daughter of Gustav F. and Sarah (Nelson) Johnson. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Anderson, namely: Annie S. who is deceased; Frank Oscar who is at home; Mary L. who died in infancy; Minnie Elizabeth; Carl J.; Fred Axill; Albert Edwin; Dena Matilda; and Hilda Amelia. They all belong to the Lutheran church. In politics, Mr. Anderson is a republican and is now serving as clerk of the school board of Coal Valley township. The success of Mr. Anderson is all the more remarkable from the fact that he came here a poor young man, ignorant of the language and customs. Like so many of his countrymen, however, he soon learned, and from the first he saved his money, investing it to good purpose, and now he is ranked among those who have accomplished much, and has gained in addition a firm position among the reliable men of his neighborhood.

ANDERSON, John A.—Thrift and industry count for much, especially in farming operations. The experienced farmer knows how to make his land produce the crops for which it is best fitted and he is also not afraid to work hard to bring about the results he desires. One of the men of Bowling township who has won well-merited success in his agricultural operations is John A. Anderson. He was born in Nykil, Sweden, December 24, 1870, a son of Samuel and Charlotte (Mongerson) Anderson, the former born September 27, 1828, and the latter April 10, 1837, both in Sweden. John A. Anderson came to the United States in 1890, and after a short time spent at Moline he went to Reynolds, and secured employment on a farm in its vicinity, remaining there for sixteen years. In 1905 he rented 225 acres in Bowling township, but in 1908 he bought eighty acres from Claus Mongerson in the same township, and began improving it. Since taking charge of this property he has made many changes, and his farm is numbered among one of the best in the township. While John A. Anderson has done so well here, his only brother, Carl, still lives in Sweden, as do two of his sisters: Hilda, wife of Oscar Hanson, and Tekla, wife of John Johnson. Another sister, Anna, married Claus Johnson, and they live at Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Anderson is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, McConnell's chapel. He votes the republican ticket and gives the candidates his earnest support. A hard-working man, all he owns has been obtained through much labor and many thrifty sacrifices, and his example is one that other young men might do well to follow. Had he wasted his time and money he would not today be the owner of a good farm and hold a high position in the esteem of his neighbors.

On July 3, 1912, John A. Anderson was married to Emma Bredberg, born at New Windsor, Henry county, Ill., a daughter of Peter Bredberg.

ANDERSON, John R.—Moline is the home of some very substantial concerns interested in the production of various iron and steel products. The proximity of the United States Arsenal, combined with the superior transportation facilities of this locality, make it an ideal place for industrial activities, as all manufactured articles can be readily marketed. One of these factories is the Moline Pattern Works, owned and operated by John R. Anderson, who is a business man of recognized stability. He was born in Sweden, September 15, 1869, a son of Andrew J. and Anna (Sarson) Anderson, natives of Sweden. The mother died there, but the father survives, although he has never left his native land.

John R. Anderson was educated in the public schools of Sweden, and brought up on a farm, his father being an agriculturist. In 1888, Mr. Anderson came to the United States, and for eight months was at Chicago. He then worked in a restaurant at Rockford, Ill., and did other work until January, 1892, when he went to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he was in a furniture factory. Returning to Rockford, he remained there until July, 1896, at which time he came to Moline, and did the carving on the woodwork on the court house, for the Moline Furniture Company who held the contract. In 1898, he began working for the Deere Manufacturing Co., but in 1901, he left this concern to engage with Williams, White & Co., but after a year, went to Iowa City, Ia. For two years he worked for the O. S. Kelly Western Manufacturing Co., and in 1904, returned to Moline, and started a shop at East Moline. By 1906, his business had grown sufficiently to warrant building on First and Third avenue, where he remained until February 19, 1910, when he moved to Fourth avenue, and was with the Vollmer Pattern Works until April, 1911, when he came to his present location at No. 134 Fourth avenue. His long experience has fitted him for the conduct of his present enterprise, which is in a flourishing condition. In political sentiment, Mr. Anderson is independent. He belongs to the Masonic order and is also an Odd Fellow. He is an athlete, and has always been fond of boxing and wrestling, and has participated in amateur bouts of both. Mr. Anderson has never married. Frank and pleasant, a skilled workman, and excellent business man, Mr. Anderson has many friends, and is liked by all who know him.

ANDERSON, John S., general concrete contractor, and a man who has been in business for himself for twelve years, during which time he has seen the appreciation of cement grow steadily, until he has come to specialize along this line, is one of the substantial men of Moline. He was born in Sweden, Kronoberg, Smalands Stenar, February 8, 1847, and came to the United States and Illinois in 1881, locating immediately in Moline. He was a son of Andreas Monson, a stone mason, who died in Sweden when his son was thirteen years old. The lad grew up in his native land, attending public school, and before leaving his old home, worked in a grocery store.

Arriving in Moline, John S. Anderson with the customary industry of his people, found immediate employment, not seeking to spare himself, but only trying to secure work that would provide for his needs and enable him to save something. As time went on, he changed his employers, always from choice, leaving behind him men who appreciated and admired his sterling honesty and sturdy helpfulness. When he went into business for himself in 1900, he had plenty to wish him well, and during the thirteen years that have elapsed, he has firmly established his reputation as a man in whom all trust may be placed. While developing into a thorough American, he has never forgotten his native land, and is a leader among those who come from Sweden to find a new home in Rock Island county.

In 1870 Mr. Anderson married Johanna Bearta Peterson prior to coming to the new world. Eight children have been born of this union: Alma, Anna, Josephine, Selma, and Emma. Ida, Alfred and Ellen are deceased. The family residence at No. 1013 Seventh avenue is a beautiful one, owned by Mr. Anderson. The family belong to the Swedish Mission tabernacle. Politically, Mr. Anderson has always been a republican.

ANDERSON, Otto Frederick.—For a period extending over more than thirty years, Otto Frederick Anderson has been identified with the banking interests of Rock Island county, and during the greater part of the time has occupied positions of high trust and responsibility. Since 1901 he has been cashier of the Moline Trust and Savings Bank, one of the soundest financial institutions in the county, and the services which he has rendered his community in various official capacities have been of a progressive character. While his capabilities have been recognized by his fellow-citizens by their placing him at the head of various movements, he has at all times displayed a commendable willingness to serve in the ranks and his public spirit has been demonstrated on numerous occasions. Otto Frederick Anderson is a native of Trehorna, Sweden, and was born July 1, 1866, a son of Alfred and Anna Greta (Johansdotter) Anderson. The father was born at Odeshog, Sweden, on May 11, 1826, and the mother at Heda, Sweden, on January 6, 1838. The family emigrated to the United States from Sweden on October 27, 1868, and coming to Moline, made here a permanent home, the father becoming engaged as a mechanic and millwright.

Otto F. Anderson passed his boyhood much as other lads of his day, in the small river town of Moline, as it was at that time. His home was located near the river, and he early showed himself exceptionally fond of fishing, swimming and boating. He acquired his early education in the public schools, but his father died when he was fifteen years of age, so he gave up his studies in order to assist in the family support. After leaving school, in 1881, he obtained employment in the plow factory, and after working as a machinist's assistant for something over a year entered the Davenport Business College. At the age of seventeen years he received his introduction to financial operations, when he entered the employ of the Moline National Bank in the capacity of messenger, and was later promoted to bookkeeper. When the Moline State Bank was organized, in 1891, Mr. Anderson was made teller thereof, and in 1900 was appointed acting cashier, a position which he filled until his appointment, in January, 1901, to the position of cashier. Since his election the deposits of the bank have grown from $500,000, to $3,000,000. In 1903 the name of the institution was changed to Moline Trust and Savings Bank, and it is now one of the leading banks of Rock Island county.

Formerly a republican, in 1912 Mr. Anderson joined the new progressive party, to which he is giving his loyal support. In 1893 he was elected city treasurer of Moline, and again in 1899, and for the third time in 1903, each time with increased majorities. In 1895 he became a member of the Public Library board, and was reappointed by different administrations in 1898, 1901 and 1904, and served as vice-president for one year and as president two years. He was president of the Moline Business Men's Association for two years, and during this time effected its consolidation with the Moline Club, of which he has been vice-president on three different occasions. He was president of the Civic Improvement Commission for one year, and was one of the originators of the Rural road, a public highway running from Moline south into Rural township, built by private subscription at a cost of more than $25,000. He was also one of the original members of the Greater Moline Committee, and has been one of its vice-presidents, and at all times has been active in the interest of enterprises promulgated for the public welfare and advancement. Mr. Anderson was master of Doric Lodge, A. F. & A. M., in 1900 and 1901, and is a member of Peoria Commandery and Mohammed Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Peoria, also belonging to Swedish Olive Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Moline, and King Philip Tribe, I. O. R. M. of this city. He was one of the organizers of the Voters' League of Moline, was one of the founders of the Rock Island County Historical Society, was one of the organizers of the Moline Homestead Loan Association, is a director of the Bethany Home Association, and a member of the Illinois Historical Society, the Hamilton Club of Chicago, and the Executive Council of the Illinois Bankers' Association. He faithfully attends the First Congregational church of Moline, and has been liberal in his support of its movements. Mr. Anderson owns a handsome residence at No. 1302 Fifteenth street, Moline, where his numerous friends always find a hearty welcome. He is fond of outdoor sports, such as fishing, hunting, golf and football, and, to use his own words, "trying to stay young and cheerful." His life has been one of signal usefulness, and, while advancing his own interests, he has found it possible to advance those of his community.

On December 16, 1891, Otto Frederick Anderson was married at Moline, to Miss Sena Nielsen, who was born at Moline, in 1872, a daughter of Lars Peter and Nellie (Nelson) Nielsen, natives of Denmark and Sweden respectively. Mr. Nielsen was one of the pioneer real estate dealers in the city of Moline and the owner of much valuable realty. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have one son, Frederick Nielsen, born at Moline, on December 4, 1903.

ANDERSON, Peter.—A fair share of the farmers of Rock Island county are of Swedish birth, and to this fact is largely due the remarkable agricultural supremacy of this section of the state, for the people of Sweden know how to work hard and bring their land into a high state of cultivation. One of these prosperous farmers is Peter Anderson, born in Sweden, November 12, 1849, a son of Andrew and Stendleso (Peterson) Johnson. According to the custom of Sweden, Mr. Anderson takes his father's first name with the son added. The mother was born in 1818 and died in 1899, while the father passed away in 1856, and neither came to America. The father was a farmer, and brought up his family to work in the fields, so from earliest boyhood, Peter Anderson has farmed.

Peter Anderson attended school until fourteen years old, when he left to begin work on the farm. In 1874, he came to the United States, landing at Philadelphia, from whence he went direct to Lincoln, Neb., but in 1875, came to Illinois, locating near Reynolds. For the past quarter of a century, he has been farming and bought his property in 1901. Since then he has built several structures, and made many improvements. His farm comprises 215 acres of as good land as can be found in the county.

On December 28, 1888, Peter Anderson was married to Johannah Granat, born in Sweden, November 14, 1846, coming to the United States in 1871, her parents not following until 1888. They lived with Mrs. Anderson until they died, the father passing away in 1892, and his wife in 1895. Mrs. Anderson has two brothers: Alfred and Frank, of Rock Island and Monmouth, Ill., respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson became the parents of children as follows: Albert, who is at home; Emily E., who is the wife of Claus Lawson of Mercer county, Ill.; David who is of Bowling township; Ellen, who is at home; Daniel and Hannah, who are both at home, and Joseph, twin of Daniel, who is deceased. There are two grandchildren, Alvin and Bernice Lawson, in the family. Mr. Anderson belongs to the Swedish Lutheran church of Swedana, Mercer county, Ill. In politics, he is a republican, and for one year acted as postmaster of Bowling township. He is a man whose earnest efforts have been amply rewarded, and he has the respect and confidence of his neighbors, having honestly gained them.

ANDERSON, Robert S.—The occupation of farming is a profitable one to those who know how to properly conduct their business, and who combine the various branches of the industry to the best advantage. Robert S. Anderson, who in addition to general farming carries on fruit culture as a side line, is one of the practical agriculturists of Hampton township, having been born in this township, October 11, 1873, a son of John and Josephine (Hanson) Anderson, natives of Sweden. John Anderson came to the United States in 1861 and located at Moline, Ill., where for a time after his marriage he was employed as a laborer. He then started farming in South Moline township, subsequently buying a tract of land in Hampton township, to which he added until he owned fifty-three acres. For some time he only farmed that portion of his land that had been cleared from timber, but he eventually brought the remainder under the plow and also developed an excellent fruit farm, operating it until his retirement in 1896, in which year he moved to Moline, and purchased a comfortable residence at Fourth avenue and Twenty-fifth street, where he and his wife now reside. They were the parents of the following children: Oscar, who lives at home; William, who died at the age of twenty-seven years; Robert S.; Selma, who married James Maxwell, of Hampton, Ill.; Spencer, who is residing at Rockford, Ill.; David, who died at the age of twenty-one years; and Olive, who lives with her parents.

Robert S. Anderson received his education in the Pleasant Valley district school, and at the age of seventeen years commenced working out summers, returning to the homestead during the winter months. At the age of twenty-five years he commenced renting the home farm, which he has successfully operated to the present time, having now thirty-three acres under cultivation, one-half of which he gives to raising apples, pears and small fruits, while the remaining half is devoted to general farming. His land is finely cared for and the farm presents an excellent appearance, being provided with substantial buildings, proper fencing and modern farm accessories.

On March 6, 1901, Robert S. Anderson was married to Miss Matilda Erdman, who was born November 16, 1879, in Geneseo, Henry county, Ill., a daughter of Charles and Matilda (Setzel) Erdman, natives of Germany. They were married at Geneseo, where Mr. Erdman was a laborer until 1880, in which year he moved to Colona, Ill., and in 1888 to Carbon Cliff, Ill., where he is employed in the pottery works. His wife died September 6, 1911. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Erdman were as follows: Clara, who married John Olson, of Moline; Mrs. Anderson; Amy, who married Len Poston, of Moline; William, who is residing at home; Matty, who married Edward Beardsley of Moline; Polly, who married Henry Strope of Andalusia, has one child, Vernon, born February 16, 1909; and Edna, Edith and Frederick, all of whom live at home. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have had two children: Harold, born February 14, 1903; and Geraldine, born June 2, 1909. In politics Mr. Anderson is a republican, and fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, at East Moline, while his wife is affiliated with Quackenbush Lodge No. 1714, Royal Neighbors, at Watertown, Ill.

ANDRIES, Ed., general contractor and thoroughly practical builder, of No. 516 Sixteenth avenue, Moline, has been engaged in this line for three years, giving employment to fourteen men, and carrying on as many as a dozen separate jobs at a time. He was born in Belgium, in 1884, son of Ed. and Natalie (DeNeve) Andries. The father was an extensive farmer and commission merchant of Belgium, who died in 1895. His wife died in 1892. During his lifetime, the father became a man of substance, and very prominent in Ruysselede, West Flanders, Belgium. The five children of the family were: Ed., Irma, Marie, Maurice and Bertha, all in Belgium except Ed. and Marie, the latter being in France. Growing up in his native land, Ed. Andries attended school, learned the carpenter trade, but not liking conditions, came to the United States in 1905, locating in Moline, where he worked for the Moline Furniture Company for some time. He then took a two years' trip to California, and on his return, established himself in his present business.

On October 29, 1908, Mr. Andries was married to Alida Heirbrandt, born in Astene, Belgium, but was brought to this country when nine years old. Mr. and Mrs. Andries are consistent members of the Catholic church. Mr. Andries is not interested in politics, but casts his vote for the man he thinks best suited for the office. He owns his beautiful, spacious home, and is in substantial circumstances. His ability and integrity have combined to gain for him a well-merited reputation for good, honest work, and he stands high in his community.

ANNAN, Lewis M., an extensive hardware dealer of Moline, is one of the progressive business men of Rock Island county. He was born at Emmitsburg, Md., June 23, 1873, son of Robert L. and Alice C. (Columbia) Annan, natives of the same place. The paternal grandparents, Andrew and Eliza (Mottet) Annan, were born in Maryland, being of Scotch ancestry. The maternal grandparents, Lewis and Alice (Rudersell) Columbia were also of Maryland birth. Robert L. Annan was a physician, who continued in active practice until his death, January 14, 1907, aged seventy-six years. His wife passed away many years ago, dying April 11, 1878, when thirty-six years old.

Lewis M. Annan is the third living child of his parents, and attended both public and private schools at Emmitsburg and college at New Windsor, Md., for two years, but on account of failing eyesight, was forced to abandon his collegiate career. In 1896, he came to Rock Island, where he was employed in the hardware store of J. W. Stewart. In February, 1906, he moved to Moline, to become a member of the firm of Froyd & Annan, which continued until April 15, 1911, when Mr. Annan sold his interest, and bought his present hardware business from C. C. Alsene. He carries a full stock of light and general hardware, and controls a good trade.

On January 8, 1903, Mr. Annan was married to Effie G. Emerson born at Conesville Ia., daughter of Charles and Sidney Emerson, natives of Ohio. They traveled in the early days from Ohio to Iowa in a covered wagon, and became prosperous farmers of that region. The father died in 1907, but his widow still survives, residing in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Annan have no children. He belongs to the First Congregational Church of Moline, and was a Deacon in it, having been elected in January, 1908, for a three-year term. He is a Mason, belonging to Doric Lodge, No. 319, and the Peoria Consistory. A good business man, solid and reliable in all his dealings. Mr. Annan has firmly established himself in the confidence of the people, and is regarded as one with whom it pays to deal.

ANTONY, Jacob, an energetic and industrious citizen of Rock Island, Ill., is well known in business circles and belongs to one of the oldest families in the city. He was born in Ostave, Germany, February 27, 1830, a son of Powell and Catherine Antony, the father born in 1802 and the mother in 1801. The parents came to America in 1852 and located in Rock Island. In Germany the father had followed farming and after coming to the United States followed general work. He died in 1873 at the age of sixty-eight years and the mother died in 1870 at the age of seventy-two years. One daughter came to America with them and she died September 26, 1909.

As a boy Jacob Antony attended the schools of his native country and later followed farming there. He came to America in 1851, settling in Rock Island, where his first employment was in a brick yard for Reynolds & Co., where he remained one year. He worked nine years for Weyerhaeuser & Denkmann, handling timber, and twenty-seven years for the Rock Island Plow Company, having his own team and doing hauling for them. For the last ten years he has been employed by the city. He has been successful financially and owns a beautiful home at No. 816 Third avenue, which is occupied by the family.

Mr. Antony was married April 5, 1855, to Gertrude Yost, a native of Germany, and children have been born of this union as follows: Mary, who is the wife of John Hoffman, of Rock Island; John, who works for the Rock Island Plow Company, married Emma Suess; Elizabeth, who is living at home, is forelady in the bindery department of the Augustana Book Concern; and Margaret and Peter, who are at home, the latter being employed in the Rock Island Plow Company factory. There are nine grandchildren and the following three great-grandchildren in the family: Geneva and Elmer Litters, and Ethelyn Kolhof, all of Rock Island. The family are members of St. Joseph's Catholic church and are actively identified with various movements for the welfare and improvement of the community. They have a wide circle of friends and are held in high respect.

APPELQUIST, Frederick.—It is a source of gratification to a man to see his life work amount to something, so that in his declining years he is able to retire comfortably and enjoy what his labors accumulated. One of the responsible men of Rock Island, who during many years of usefulness, laid the foundations of his present prosperity, was born August 16, 1842, in Smalands, Sweden, and since 1870, has made this city his home. He is a son of Carl P. and Mary Emma Appelquist, the former of whom was a blacksmith, who died in Sweden, as did his wife.

Frederick Appelquist is an example of a self-made man, for he only attended school two months in his life, as his parents were very poor, and the family had no advantages of any kind. Mr. Appelquist has traveled in seven different countries, Sweden, Norway, Germany, England, France, Canada and the United States, and so has picked up much information that has proven of great value to him. His first penny was given him by a man who passed by when the child was sitting in a tree trying to read. An uncle took him when he was eleven years old, and although he had to work hard, he was insufficiently fed, and had to go without shoes, and finally, when thirteen years old, he returned home, sick because of the ill-treatment he had received. During this time there was not a day he was not intoxicated, as during the two years one of his duties was to carry liquor from a distillery to men employed around the shops and he partook freely of this. Mr. Appelquist considers this a contradiction of the statement so often made that liquor stunts children. He is a fine appearing man, six feet tall, and weighs 198 pounds. For the next four years, he worked with his father, and learned the blacksmithing trade, and later that of a glass blower. He then gave his country a two-years' service as a soldier. Mr. Appelquist had charge of factories in different countries in a glass-blowing line, having become an expert in his work, but in June, 1869, he came to the United States. For a time, on account of the shops closing down, he had to saw wood for a living, and worked in different places. It is to be noticed, however, that when he could not get work at his trade, he did not hesitate to do whatever came to hand, no matter how hard it was, and this sets an example to the present generation, who are too liable to be idle unless given work of a special kind. In 1870, Mr. Appelquist came to Rock Island, which has since continued to be his home. Here he later embarked in a retail liquor business, and in 1889, built a large and handsome brick block at No. 1630 Third avenue, where he continued his business for six years. He then rented the place, and has since lived retired. For five years he was engaged in the same line in Orion, Ill. A republican in politics, he served on the board of supervisors, for one term. He belongs to the Lutheran church, and is a member of the Masons and Owls of Rock Island.

On April 9, 1872, Mr. Appelquist was married to Pauline Klylea, daughter of John Klylea, a cabinetmaker. Mr. and Mrs. Appelquist have had nine children: Oscar, Charles, Jerome, Mayme, Lulu, Edward, Hazel, John (deceased), and Clara. Mr. Appelquist has made his own living since he was seven years of age, and has always been industrious and hard working. He has succeeded in accumulating a comfortable fortune which enables him to spend his latter years in comfortable retirement.

ARCHER, Harvey J., one of the leading contractors and builders of Moline and Rock Island, was born in the latter city, July 25, 1880, son of Martin and Mary J. (Dacey) Archer. The father was born in Bureau county, Ill., and the mother at Macon, Ga. He was a contractor and builder for thirty-five years, but has been retired from active life for the past six years. He is well known in Rock Island county and has long been identified with its growth and progress.

Harvey J. Archer learned his trade after his school period, and since March, 1911, has been in business on his own account. He is a wide-awake and energetic young man who has built up a good trade in the two cities where he carries on the larger part of his business; has a fine commercial standing, as his father had before him, and is a member of the Carpenters' Union. He is well known in Rock Island, where he lived until recently, and received his early education in the public schools of that city, later spending three years in Rock Island Business College.

On August 4, 1909, Mr. Archer married Lena E. Norton, a native of Illinois, whose father was a college professor. Her mother is now living in Moline. Mrs. Archer was born September 9, 1882. Mr. Archer belongs to the M. W. A. of Rock Island, and politically is a republican. He is a member of the Catholic church. He intends to make Moline his permanent home and is located on Thirteenth avenue, that city. He is one of five children born to his parents, namely: William, Frank, Basil, Harvey J. and one daughter, Ida. The daughter is the wife of George Smith and lives on Twenty-fourth street, Rock Island.

ARCULARIUS, Edward Frederick (deceased.) The late Edward Frederick Arcularius was not only one of the pioneers of Hampton township, but was also one of Rock Island county's most representative men, about whose history clusters memories of many kindly deeds and acts which showed unusual business acumen and keen foresight. He was born in New York in 1803, and farmed for some years in his native state. About 1838, he came to Rock Island county, where he entered a farm of 160 acres in Hampton township. This remained his home until his death on October 22, 1887, when he was buried in Hampton cemetery. During his long residence in this community, he saw the prairie converted into rich farm land and prosperous cities. He built the first log house in this section of this township and built a fine brick residence in 1857. Even farming methods were revolutionized during his residence here, and he took great satisfaction in the onward progress on every side, for he was a man of broad views and comprehensive thought.

In 1853, Mr. Arcularius married Emily Axellson of Sweden, born February 11, 1823, and the following children were born to them: Hattie, lives in Moline; Ellen, lives in Davenport, Ia.; Margaret, lives in Arizona; Theressa, lives in Michigan, and Martin, lives in Moline, Ill. In religious faith Mr. Arcularius was a Methodist, and held firm to the creed of that denomination. He always voted the republican ticket from the time of the formation of that party. Mrs. Arcularius owns the home farm of 160 acres, which is known as the Far View Farm. It is now rented, and yields a good income. She is eighty-nine years old, and holds the affection of all who have the honor of her acquaintance. She remembers many interesting facts relative to the early life in Rock Island county, and tells them entertainingly. The family is one of the best known in this part of the state, and deservedly so, for its representatives have nobly borne their part in the development of the county.

ARMSTRONG, William.—Ireland has produced many excellent farmers, who have helped in developing different sections of the United States, and one of these sturdy sons of the Emerald Isle is William Armstrong, an agriculturist of Bowling township. He was born in Ireland, April 16, 1852, a son of Christ and Margaret (Brown) Armstrong, both of whom lived and died in Ireland, as farming people. They had eight children: Sarah, Elizabeth, Catherine, William, John, Christy, James and Margaret. In 1880, William Armstrong, who had grown up in Ireland, attending its public schools, and learning farming under his father, came to America, and locating in Rock Island county began making himself useful as one of its citizens. He hired out to Thomas Doonan as a hand, but in 1890 was able to begin farming for himself, renting 160 acres on section 33. By 1895, he had saved enough to buy this farm. He has made the improvements upon it, and is very proud of what he has accomplished, as he has every right to be. Not every man can come from another country and become the owner of a fine farm within fifteen years.

The marriage of William Armstrong took place February 13, 1890, when he was united with Frances Rennick, born in Ireland, July 28, 1855, a daughter of Arthur and Anna (Bryan) Rennick, natives of Ireland, where their lives were spent in farming. They had eight children: Sarah, Jane, Frank, Margaret, Mrs. Armstrong, Elinor, Dria T. and Harriet E. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson became the parents of six children: Harriet Anna, who married James Hanley, lives in Iowa, and was born February 28, 1891; Margaret Clementina was born March 16, 1892; Myrtle May was born May 5, 1894; Christopher A. was born January 2, 1896; Winifred E. was born January 24, 1898; and William James was born

Amariah H. Lyford

January 5, 1901. These children are all at home, and Miss Margaret and Miss Myrtle are efficient school teachers. In political faith, Mr. Armstrong is a republican, and served very capably and conscientiously as a school director of Bowling township for three years. He is an Orangeman, and belongs to the Episcopal church, having been reared in the faith of the Church of England. His uprightness of character and steadfastness of purpose have gained him the respect of his associates, and he is a well-known man throughout the county.

ARNHALT, Martin J., proprietor of the Chicago Home Bakery, at No. 708 First avenue, East Moline, is one of the best examples of what can be accomplished by a foreign-born man who comes to this country willing to work and save. Mr. Arnhalt was born in Austria, in 1863, being a son of Martin and Theressa (Kaulbrenner) Arnhalt. The father was a shoemaker but feeling that he could not make the progress there that he wished, brought his family to America when Martin J. was one year and three months old. They located in Dubuque county, Ia., where the father farmed for a year, and then went to Chickasaw county, Ia. Here Martin J. attended school held by the Catholic sisters until he was fourteen years old, at which time he began learning to be a blacksmith. He worked at this trade in North Washington for three years, and then traveled for a period. For three years he was engaged in saw-milling, following which he went to South Dakota, and became interested in a land business, being very successful in his endeavors. In 1910, he opened his present place of business at East Moline. His equipment is good and as he carries a fine line of bakery goods, his patronage is a large and rapidly increasing one. He has recently installed a new oven with a capacity of 300 loaves every thirty minutes, that keeps four men busy attending to it.

In 1889, Mr. Arnhalt married Anna Klotz, born in Hampton township, Rock Island county, daughter of John and Magdelane (Hammer) Klotz, the former of whom died in 1910, and is buried in East Moline cemetery. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Arnhalt: Andrew P., who was killed in 1907 when seventeen years old, at Riverview, Ill., by a freight train; Regina Magdelane, who is attending school; and Mary Eva, who is also attending school. Mr. Arnhalt belongs to the Catholic church of East Moline, and is the organist and choir leader. He belongs to the Catholic Order of Foresters of Des Plaines, Ill. Although a democrat, he is very liberal in his political views. Profiting by the example of his father, Mr. Arnhalt has made a success of his life. The father did not fail to take advantage of every opportunity, working hard to advance the interests of his children, and they early learned the value of industry and how to save their earnings. As a result today, Mr. Arnhalt belongs to the leading men of East Moline, and has every prospect of extending his fields of operations.

ARP, August H., M. D., one of the distinguished physicians and surgeons to whose ability and experience the city of Moline is indebted for much of its present sanitation, is a man who has left his mark on his times as surely as a citizen, as a professional man. He was born December 4, 1861, in Davenport, Iowa, a son of Christian M. and Catherine M. (Wessel) Arp. His father was a millwright by trade. When Dr. Arp was three and one-half years old he lost his father, and Mrs. Arp came to Moline to reside with her brother, Dr. P. H. Wessel, and Dr. Arp and his brother, Louis C. Arp, now deceased, were brought up during the formative period in an atmosphere that, without doubt, influenced the former's future career. At first, however, he studied law for a short period, after his graduation from the public schools of Moline, under the Hon. William A. Meese, but soon discovered that all his inclinations were in the direction of his uncle's profession, and he consequently abandoned one for the other. Subsequent events have proven the wisdom of his choice, for Dr. Arp is a born physician, and not only understands his work, but loves it. After studying with Dr. Wessel the young man entered the Iowa State University, from which he was graduated in 1882, with the distinction of being a member of the first class sent out from that institution after a three-years' course. From 1882 until 1888 Dr. Arp practiced medicine alone, at Moline, but in the latter year formed a partnership with his uncle, which pleasant connection continued until 1895, when it was dissolved, and Dr. Arp has continued alone.

The professional demands upon him are very heavy, for in addition to his own large practice he is the attending physician and surgeon of a number of large corporations, and medical examiner for various insurance companies and fraternal orders. From 1883 to 1888, he was city physician of Moline, and from 1892 to 1897 held the same responsible position. Dr. Arp was the first president and member of the hospital board, holding this position for eight years, and for four years has been on the Moline public library board. Mayor Andrew Olson appointed him health commissioner, and he served in that capacity with dignified capability, for four years, exerting himself to inaugurate many much needed reforms, which have remained in force. He is surgeon for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, surgeon for the Tri-City Railway and Power Company, chief surgeon for all the Deere plants and Moline Plow Company's plants and other industries of Rock Island county at Moline and East Moline, including the railway shops at Silvis. He is also a director of the State Savings Bank and Trust Company and the Commercial Savings Bank.

Dr. Arp was married at Rock Island, December 24, 1889, to Matilda Hardy, a daughter of Joseph and Charlotte Hardy. Mrs. Arp is a highly educated lady, having been graduated from the Rock Island High school, and in music from the tuition of Professor Kramer of Dayton, Iowa. Prior to her marriage, Mrs. Arp taught music for two years at Chicago. Dr. and Mrs. Arp have two children: A. Henry, born September 22, 1893, and Louis C., born February 10, 1896, who are attending medical colleges. Fraternally Dr. Arp belongs to the Elks, Modern Woodmen of America, Druids, Odd Fellows, Foresters, Tribe of Ben Hur, Royal Neighbors and is a charter member of King Philip's Tribe of Improved Order of Red Men. Dr. Arp is also affiliated with the following: Rock Island County Medical Society, Illinois State Medical Society, of which he was elected medical councillor for the term of three years from 1913, American Medical Association, Association of Railway Surgeons, Tri-State Medical Society, hospital staff of Moline City Hospital; is associate member of staff of St. Anthony's hospital of Rock Island, and consulting surgeon of the Western Insane Asylum of Watertown, Ill. In religious faith Dr. Arp is a Unitarian. Although a republican, Dr. Arp is not in sympathy with the corruption he feels is existing, and unless some check is placed upon it, will have to change his party. He owns the Arp building at 508 Fifteenth street and the properties at 1515 Sixth avenue, 1413 Sixth avenue, Moline, and Oak Hill farm, his residence being at Lone Oak, 718 Fifth avenue, Moline.

ASHDOWN, Charles Edward, a progressive farmer of Coe township, and a man widely and favorably known, is a son of Mark and Mary Ann (Real) Ashdown, and brother of William H. Ashdown, also of this township. He bought 155 acres of land situated on section 15, Coe township, on which he built three of the barns, and put things in good condition. He belongs to a family as follows: Edward, deceased; William H.; Charles E. and Ellen, Mrs. Luther Pearsall, of Port Byron township.

The first marriage of Mr. Ashdown took place in 1879, to Nellie Saddoris, daughter of Henry Saddoris, and they had five children: Lola, Mrs. Charles Simpson of Coe township; Fred also of Coe township; Goldie, Mrs. Edgar Walters of Zuma township, and Mark and Nancy. The second wife of Mr. Ashdown was Nora Banker, daughter of Henry and Sophia (Lip-part) Banker, born in Coe township. Mr. and Mrs. Ashdown have had one child, Florence.

Mr. Ashdown is a quiet, unassuming man, whose interest has been centered in his home and farming. However, when called upon, he has discharged the duties of several public offices very creditably, having been school director for eighteen years, and road commissioner for three years. He has many friends throughout Rock Island county, where his blameless life has been spent, and there are many who are under obligations to him, although he is not a man to talk about his good deeds.

ASHDOWN, Frank Levi.—Within recent years the progressive agriculturist has become convinced of the profit accruing from raising high-bred stock, and throughout Rock Island county are to be found farms where the best produce from registered stock only is bred. One of the best known stock men of this locality is Frank Levi Ashdown of Coe township, born here, September 3, 1878, son of William H. Ashdown. The father and son are in partnership in the stock-raising business, and the farm is the Ashdown homestead. They make a specialty of high-bred, short-horn cattle and Duroc-Jersey swine, owning eighteen full-blooded cows, twelve calves, and a bull named Red Goods, his mother was an imported cow, bought at Miles, Ia. At time of writing, this animal is a splendid two year-old, registered, as are the other stock. The Ashdowns have sold stock to purchasers in South Dakota. These stockmen make a point of having fifty spring pigs and the same number littered in the fall. The farm equipments are of the latest, improved variety, and the partners take justifiable pride in their place. As their stock is of the best quality they secure the highest market prices.

On September 19, 1895, Frank Levi Ashdown was married to Neva Woodward, daughter of Clay and Helen (Soddoris) Woodward. Mrs. Ashdown is also a native of Coe township. Mr. and Mrs. Ashdown have had three children: Doris Beryl, born July 15, 1906, William Curtis, born June 6, 1908 and Francis A., January 22, 1912. For some time, Mr. Ashdown belonged to the local Grange. He is now serving as school director, and is one of the most interested his district ever had. Deeply concerned in his work, proud of his results, and determined to keep his quality up to standard, Mr. Ashdown is easily one of the leading stockmen of his county, and proposes to enlarge his business in the near future.

ASHDOWN, George Edward.—The possibilities of an agricultural life are being more generally recognized by the young men of today, and many who a few years ago would have sought employment in the more congested centers of industry are content to develop fine farms, and live the independent life of an Illinois farmer. One of the typical progressive farmers of the twentieth century, who is following along the same lines as his father and grandfather, is George Edward Ashdown, of Coe township. He was born in this township, November 8, 1879, a son of William H. and Eva (Golden) Ashdown, and grandson of the pioneer Mark Ashdown, now deceased. Both the Ashdown and Golden families are numbered among the pioneer ones of Rock Island county, representatives of them are to be found in many walks of life, and all are a credit to their progenitors. George Edward Ashdown grew up in Coe township, where he received a district school education, and was taught farming in its every detail, so that when he began life for himself, he was well grounded in this line of work.

On December 23, 1903, George Edward Ashdown was married to Lula Alvira Adams, born

In Rapids City, Ill., a daughter of Thomas and Clara (Miller) Adams. Mr. and Mrs. Ashdown became the parents of two children: Judson L. G., born December 5, 1908, and Virgil G., born October 16, 1910. Mr. Ashdown belongs to the Port Byron Lodge of Modern Woodmen of America. Ever since he attained his majority, Mr. Ashdown has taken a deep interest in public affairs, and in 1910, was elected road commissioner, which office he is now filling, discharging the duties pertaining thereto with the same efficiency and conscientious attention to detail that marks his conduct of his private affairs. Enterprising, public-spirited and strictly honorable, Mr. Ashdown is fully sustaining the prestige of his name, and proving himself a true son of a worthy father and grandfather.

ASHDOWN, Mark (deceased).—The pioneers of Rock Island county laid sound foundations, and made ready for the later inevitable inrush of population, and for the development of the natural resources of this section of the state. But for them, their energy, foresight and willingness to endure all to achieve their ambition of securing a home for their sons coming after them, Rock Island county would still be but a prairie, partially covered with timber. One of the men who bore well his part in this mighty work, was the late Mark Ashdown, born in County Kent, England, June 13, 1831. His father came to America when Mark was eleven years of age, locating in Wayne county, N. Y. One year later the family returned to their native land, but in the fall of 1850, Mark Ashdown, with his brothers, returned to the United States and settled in Wayne county. Not being entirely suited with conditions there, however, he came to Illinois in 1855, locating in Canoe Creek township, Rock Island county. This continued to be his home until 1861, when he bought a farm in Coe township, and there resided for twenty years. Later, he moved to Port Byron which continued his home for seventeen years. Mr. Ashdown added to his possessions from time to time, being the owner of 500 acres at the time of his death, which occurred May 31, 1908, his burial being in Fairfield Cemetery.

While residing in Wayne county, N. Y., Mr. Ashdown was married, in 1852, to Mary Ann Beale, born in England in 1828, who came to the United States in 1850. The children of this marriage were: one who died in infancy; William H.; Charles E. and Ella, Mrs. L. S. Pearshall. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Ashdown was married to Theresa Sanford, who survives him, making her home in Port Byron. There are fifteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren in the family. Mr. Ashdown attended the Methodist church, although he was brought up in the Church of England. He served as road commissioner and as justice of the peace, and was a man of some prominence in his community. His sound common sense, and business ability were recognized and his advice was often sought. When he died, his locality lost a good citizen, and his family a kind and loving husband and father.

ASHDOWN, Richard B.—The Ashdown family is one of the old and responsible ones in Rock Island county. Members of it have become heavy landowners, and their taxes and public-spirited interest have materially aided in the development of good roads and the establishment of excellent schools. One of its representative members is Richard B. Ashdown, of Coe township, who was born in this township, February 8, 1884, a son of William H. Ashdown. Richard B. Ashdown attended the district schools and the Fort Byron academy, and was brought up to be a farmer. He is now pleasantly located on a fine property of 117½ acres on sections 17 and 20, Coe township, where he carries on general farming.

On January 30, 1907, Mr. Ashdown married Jennie Riewerts, daughter of John and Magaretha (Jensen) Riewerts. Mrs. Ashdown was born in Whiteside county, Ill., March 29, 1882. They have one child, Bernice Irene, who was born August 28, 1909. Mr. Ashdown is a member of the Northern Life Assurance Association. Both he and his wife belong to the Bethel Baptist church, and are active in its good work. Mr. Ashdown is quick to adopt new methods whose value have been proven by experiment, and is ambitious for the future, being regarded somewhat of an authority on agricultural matters. Their friends are many and they participate in the pleasant social life of the neighborhood.

ASHDOWN, William H.—Some men in following in the footsteps of their fathers, maintain the high standard of excellence raised by them and further the latter's enterprises. Such men are a credit to any community, and aid materially in its advancement. A man of this description, who belongs to one of the old pioneer families of this locality, is William H. Ashdown of Coe township, born in Wayne county, New York, December 7, 1854, a son of the late Mark Ashdown and his first wife Mary Ann (Beale) Ashdown. But an infant when his parents came to Rock Island county, Mr. Ashdown has spent nearly all of his life here, and knows no other home. He attended the district school, and was reared amid strictly agricultural surroundings. When he attained his majority, he began farming on his own account, and has carried on agricultural pursuits to such good effect that he is now the owner of 335 acres of rich farming land in Rock Island and Whiteside counties, although his residence is in Coe township, Rock Island county. He has put up all the buildings on this farm, his house being one of the first in the township and developed his property until it is one of the best in either county.

On December 7, 1875, Mr. Ashdown was united in marriage with Eva Golden, born in Coe township, January 2, 1855. She is a daughter of Amos and Theresa (Reading) Golden, the former of whom was born in Hopewell county, New Jersey, October 27, 1821, and died at his home in Coe township, July 5, 1910, aged eighty-nine years. His wife was also born in New Jersey, January 8, 1828, and died May 25, 1908, aged eighty years. They were married February 5, 1831, and came to Illinois in 1853, becoming early settlers of Coe township, where they owned 280 acres of land. They had four children: William R., Dr. L. A., Mrs. Ashdown, and C. J. of Coe township. They were members of the Cordova Baptist church. These two excellent people lived to celebrate their golden wedding in 1901. There are eleven grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren in the Golden family.

Mr. and Mrs. Ashdown became parents of seven children: Frank L.; George E.; Lydia A., Mrs. Henry Reiling; Richard B.; Ada, Mrs. Lewis Eipper; Rosa, Mrs. Albert Reiling, and L. G. at home. They also have twelve grandchildren. Always active in the republican party, Mr. Ashdown has been called upon to represent it in numerous offices, having been supervisor for six years; assessor for six years; commissioner of roads for many years and for four years he has served as director for the Farmers' Institute for the 14th Congressional District, much good having been accomplished by him in these different positions. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America. Understanding farming in every detail, he has been able to make a success of his work, but at the same time he has found time and opportunity to give his community the benefit of his judgment and businesslike administration of affairs, and Coe township owes him a heavy debt for his public-spirit and example of reliable methods of agriculture.

ASQUITH, Albert J., owner of the famous Clover Leaf Farm, on section 34, Edgington township, and one of the most prosperous farmers of this locality, is a man who is universally respected throughout Rock Island county. He was born on the home farm in this same township, June 26, 1867, a son of Joseph and Sarah Ann (Webster) Asquith, the former born in Yorkshire, England, November 14, 1819, a son of William Asquith. The latter emigrated to America, with his family, in 1838, landing in New Jersey, later going to Pennsylvania, where they spent three years, but from there came on to Rock Island county, making the trip overland in wagons. An incident of the trip which might have resulted fatally was the slipping of the horse led by Joseph Asquith. It fell upon the young man, bruising him severely. William Asquith was a shoemaker, but did not follow his trade after coming to the county, on account of illness which disabled him, and he died in the spring of 1838. His family by his first marriage was as follows: Joseph; Edwin who died at Hamlet, Ill.; Louisa who married W. D. Hatton, and died at Chicago, in the spring of 1911; Jane who married Edwin Fitz and died in Kansas. By his second marriage he had two children, namely: Theo G. of Harlan, Ia., who served in the One Hundred and Second Illinois Volunteer Infantry; and Thomas who is also a veteran of the Civil war. Joseph Asquith grew to manhood in England, being about nineteen years old when he came to the United States. He had but meagre educational advantages, his boyhood being spent working in his father's shoe shop. In the spring of 1841, he entered 120 acres in Edgington township, building on it a house, in which his family was reared. After coming to Rock Island county, he married Sarah Ann Webster, daughter of Mrs. Jane Webster. Mr. Asquith added to his first tract, with the assistance of his good wife, until he owned 240 acres. Later he retired to Reynolds, where he died in 1885, his wife having passed away in 1883. Both were active members of the Methodist church, of which Joseph Asquith was a class leader and exhorter, and through his efforts many were converted and brought into the church. In politics, he was a democrat. The children of these excellent parents were: Mrs. Sarah Ashbaugh who is of Denver, Colo.; William who died when small; Mrs. Hannah Young who died in the spring of 1902 in David City, Neb.; John who is of Williamsburg, Ia.; Mrs. Elizabeth Wait who is of Reynolds; Albert J.; and Arthur who is of Central City, Colo.

Albert J. Asquith attended the public schools of his township, and the Davenport business college, and was brought up on the farm. He was twelve years old when his father retired to Reynolds, and so had advantage of the schools there. When he was twenty-seven years old, he went to northern Iowa and bought eighty acres in Floyd county. This he operated for seven years, then sold, and buying a quarter section in Melbourne, Marshall county, Ia., lived on it six years. He then purchased his present farm, which is a very valuable one, and kept in prime condition. After he had lived in Iowa for a year, he returned home and married, on March 24, 1896, Angeline M. Smith, of Preemption, Mercer county, Ill., a daughter of George and Jane Smith. They have five children: Ruth E., Mabel, Louisa, Harry and Miriam. Mr. Asquith is a republican, and fraternally belongs to the Modern Woodmen. He and his family are consistent members of the Methodist church. He is an excellent farmer, experienced business man, and public-spirited citizen, who is always willing to work hard for the good of his community.

ATKINSON, Oloff.—Owing to the growth in population and business of Rock Island county, demand for reliable builders and contractors and for supplies for building operations, is constant and heavy. Consequently many of the most substantial men of this locality are engaged in meeting this demand, among them one of the best known being Oloff Atkinson, of No. 2414 Twelfth street, Rock Island. He was born in this city, in 1871, a son of William and Helen (Green) Atkinson, the former born in Kingston, Canada, in 1841, and the latter born in

C. A. Mees

Philadelphia, Pa., in 1844. In 1855, the father came to Rock Island county and engaged in manufacturing brick until his retirement in 1896. His wife died in 1909, but he is still living, although since 1896, has been retired from active business. He and his wife had ten children: Avis; Ruth, deceased; Oloff; Nellie, who died in infancy; Louise; Alice; William; Emmett; Ada, and Fred.

Oloff Atkinson attended the public schools in Rock Island, and was graduated from the high school there in 1888. For the next two years, he was engaged in the study of architecture at the State University, following which he entered into partnership with his father in street paving contracting. They were the first to hold a contract for this line of work in Rock Island, executing it in 1888. They carried on extensive jobs in other cities, but in 1893 abandoned paving to devote themselves to the manufacture of brick and to general building and contracting. The capacity of the brick yard is 2,000,000 brick annually, and the full output is sold each year.

In 1893, Mr. Atkinson was married to Edith McHugh, from Urbana, Ill. Two children have been born of this marriage: Faye and Marion. The Presbyterian church holds Mr. Atkinson's membership. He has always voted the republican ticket, and served very acceptably as assistant supervisor of Rock Island one term. He is now president of the board of directors of school district No 42. All the Masonic branches and the Modern Woodmen of America hold his membership. A man of energy and business acumen, Mr. Atkinson has risen steadily, and is now one of the leading men in his several lines in Rock Island county.

ATKINSON, Robert Richmond, one of the substantial men of Rock Island, is engaged in a general concrete contracting business, owning his factory at No. 727 Second street. He was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1873, a son of Jonathan and Harriet (Richmond) Atkinson. The parents came to the United States in 1880. Prior to making this change, the father had been an overseer of a silk mill in England. The death of Jonathan Atkinson occurred in Rock Island, to which he had moved, in 1897. His widow survives, and is making her home in Rock Island.

Until he was seven years old, Robert R. Atkinson lived in England, and had already gone to school for several years prior to the family migration. He continued attending school, a portion of the time in Dunkirk, N. Y., and then began working in the coal mines at Streator, Ill. When seventeen years old, he came to Rock Island, and worked at whatever he found to do, gradually bettering his condition, until 1907, he was able to embark in his present business. The quality of his work and the fidelity with which he discharges all the obligations of his contracts have won for him the confidence of those with whom he does business.

In 1897, Mr. Atkinson was united in marriage with Alberta Hussey, born in Indiana, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Dow) Hussey, both natives of Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson became the parents of the following children: Robert Leslie; Leo Lawrence, died in infancy; Glenn Russell; Irene Gertrude; Myrtle Iona; Violet Agnes and Everet Richmond. The family are all interested in the workings of the Salvation Army. Politically, Mr. Atkinson is a socialist, feeling sure that the various evils of this age can only be remedied by the universal adoption of the doctrines of sociology. He is an earnest, thoughtful man, who has worked his way up from humble surroundings and deserves great credit for what he has been able to accomplish. The family reside at No. 723 Second street.

AYERS, Walter LeRoy.—Perhaps no corporation rewards faithful service more generously, or gives more material evidence of its appreciation of natural ability combined with aptitude for special work, than the railroads of the country. There are many instances where men have worked their way upward from humble beginnings in the employ of these concerns, to those involving vast responsibilities and substantial salaries. One of these is that of Walter LeRoy Ayers, general foreman at the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad roundhouse at Rock Island, which position he has occupied since October, 1906, while for fourteen years prior to that date he had held various ones in its machine shops with the same company. He was born in Kewanee, Ill., October 11, 1869, a son of John F. and Martha (Holt) Ayers. The father was born in Vermont, but married in Massachusetts, his wife having been born in Haverhill, that state. By trade the father was a machinist, and when he came to Kewanee, Ill., he operated a grist-mill, later going into farming, near Greenfield, Ia., where his widow now resides. There he died about 1890, aged fifty-three years. Mrs. Martha Ayers died October 2, 1912. John F. Ayers and his wife had seven children: Charles, Lenna, Nettie, John, Elmer, Walter, Wilbur.

Walter LeRoy Ayers worked on the home farm near Greenfield, Ia., while attending the district schools, and when eighteen years old he began learning the machinist trade at Creston, Ia. For four years he worked as a journeyman at Desoto, Mo., Ft. Madison, Ia., and Beardstown, Ill., coming to Rock Island in 1891, when he entered the employ of the railroad which still engages his energies.

While residing in Desoto, Mo., he was married in 1890, to Fanny Beatrice Shaffstall of Creston, Ia., daughter of Solomon Shaffstall, now postmaster at Hopeville, Ia. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ayers: Walter, Cecil, Gladys, Vernon. Mr. Ayers belongs to Lodge No. 658, A. F. & A. M. of Rock Island, and Camp No. 29, Modern Woodmen, also of Rock Island. In politics, he is a republican. He is an earnest, steadfast, conscientious man, whose interests are centered in his work, and his advancement has been honestly earned.

BACHMAN, John (deceased).—Rock Island county shows some of the best regulated and most valuable farms in Illinois, and they have been made thus desirable through the industry and thrift of the owners, who realize the advantage of using modern machinery and methods in doing their work. One of the prominent farmers of Zuma township was the late John Bachman, who was born in Louisville, Ky., June 12, 1853, a son of Mathias and Catherine (Shroder) Bachman, the former of Bavaria and the latter of Hanover, Germany. At the age of twelve years, Mathias Bachman left his home in Germany and came to the United States, where he worked at farming until he was able to rent land from Daniel Boone, in Kentucky, and at Louisville, was married in 1852, to Catherine Shroder, who had come to Louisville at the age of thirty years. In 1855 they came to Rock Island county and started farming in South Rock Island township, where Mathias Bachman purchased 104 acres and there spent the rest of his life, passing away December 25, 1903, aged seventy-four years, while his widow lived on the homestead until her death in October, 1912. They had the following children: John; Mary, who married Andrew B. Anderson of West Liberty, Ia.; Frances, who married Henry Krohn of Moline, Ill.; Teresa and Josephine, living with their mother; Anna, a Catholic sister, in Texas; Frank, residing on the home place, and Sophia, who died at the age of twenty-one years. John Bachman resided with his parents until he was married, November 27, 1878, to Minnie Gumber, who was born in Hampton township, daughter of Nicholas and Christine (Linkie) Gumber, of Austria. After his marriage John Bachman rented a farm south of Milan for five years, and finally bought a sixty-acre tract in Hampton township, which he sold ten years later and purchased eighty-seven acres from his father-in-law, located in Zuma township. He also owned twenty acres in Hampton township, opposite the N. & S. R. R. The old buildings on the home place were removed and new, modern structures put in their place, and John Bachman was engaged in farming and stock raising, and was successful along both lines. He was a democrat in politics, and with his family attended the Catholic church of Rapids City. His death occurred June 29, 1913. Mr. and Mrs. Bachman had the following children: Julia, who married Roy Yost of Hampton township; Ida, who married John Buckey, of West Liberty, Ia., now lives at Pipestone, Minn., where she and her husband own their home; Joseph, who was married on April 2, 1913, to Miss Frances J. Wideman; Mathew, Mary, Anna, Alice, Nettie and John, who are all at home.

BAHRINGER, Frank F.—Of late years agriculturists have come to designate their farms by some name that is characteristic of the leading feature of it. This is a commendable custom, for not only does it enable all to distinguish the various properties, but adds to the value of the property. Frank F. Bahringer has recognized this and named his fine farm Sunny Slope Farm, and an inspection of it, shows why this title was selected. Mr. Bahringer was born February 9, 1869, near Preemptiou, Mercer county, Ill., being a son of C. F. and Rachel (Vanmeter) Bahringer. The father was born in Germany in 1844, and came to America in 1851, landing in New York City, from whence he came to Richland Grove township, Mercer county, Ill. Buying land there, he lived upon it until 1879, when he sold and came to Edgington township, and again invested in land. In 1894, he retired to the village of Reynolds where he is still living. He and his wife had children as follows: Lizzie, who married J. C. McConnell of Reynolds; Frank F.; Ella, who is deceased; Samuel E., who is a lumberman of Taylor Ridge; and Hester, who married Benjamin Mitchell, lives in Reynolds.

Mr. Bahringer attended the district schools, and grew up amid farming conditions, so naturally he adopted farming as his calling, working for others until he could rent some land for himself. In 1897, he was able to buy eighty acres of land, which is his present home. It is in a high state of cultivation, and he has made all the improvements himself, erecting a beautiful, modern nine-room house, supplied with modern conveniences, including gas. His barns and outbuildings are in excellent condition.

On December 27, 1893, Mr. Bahringer was married to Nora Gorman, daughter of William and Mary (Gilmore) Gorman, the former born in Ireland in 1839. The mother is of American birth, having been born in 1844. The father was a farmer, and grew up in this country, as he was only three years old when he was brought to the United States. He is deceased, but his widow survives, making her home in Aledo, Ill. They had children as follows: Lettie (deceased), Mrs. Bahringer, Nettie, Ida, Rosa, James, Leroy, Cresse, Mary, Pearl and William (deceased). Mr. and Mrs. Bahringer are members of the Presbyterian church. They belong to the Royal Neighbors, having joined ten years ago, and Mr. Bahringer also belongs to Camp No. 937, M. W. A., at Hamlet. Starting out in life a poor boy, Mr. Bahringer has made every dollar he possesses himself, and his success has come about through his untiring industry, thrift and good management.

BAILEY, Isaac J.—The life of the modern farmer is very different from that of the agriculturist of a few decades ago, for he has learned to take advantage of every improvement, and to make it assist him in his work. He understands the requirements and possibilities of his soil, and his success is the logical outcome of intelligent effort correctly directed. One of the prosperous farmers of this locality belonging to the above class is Isaac J. Bailey of Coal Valley township. He was born in Rural township, this county, in 1873, a son of William Bailey, the first superintendent of the county farm, serving from 1861 to 1881, and a brother of John C. Bailey, affectionately called "Uncle" by his friends. Isaac J. Bailey was educated in the district schools of Rural township, and grew up on a farm, learning the work in all its details. He now owns 200 acres of excellent land, which he is cultivating to good purpose. His house is a very comfortable one, and is surrounded by ample grounds.

In 1896, Mr. Bailey was married to Estella J. Bedford, who was also born in this locality. They have four children: Dale B., Wayne S., Bernice N. and Frances Elizabeth. Mr. Bailey is very proud of his children, as he has every reason to be, for they are a fine lot of sturdy little folks, and he provides ponies for their amusement. The older ones are attending school, and he and their mother have made many plans regarding the future of them all. For some years, Mr. Bailey served on the school board as a director, and is now president of it, giving its affairs a careful, conscientious attention. Fraternally, he is a Mason. The Presbyterian church holds his membership, and receives from him a loyal and liberal support. There are few men who stand higher in the township than Mr. Bailey, who is one of the finest examples of the best class of farmers Rock Island county possesses.

BAILEY, John C.—The Bailey family is the oldest in Rural township, and its members have more than done their part in the upbuilding of this locality. One of those best liked, who is affectionately called "Uncle John" is John C. Bailey, now living somewhat retired, but who for many years was a leading agriculturalist here. He was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1833, a son of Robert and Jane (Campbell) Bailey, both born in Ireland. They came to this country in 1849, locating in Rock Island, where the father worked as a stone mason, although he had been a farmer in Ireland. When the voyage to America was made, the following four children had been born: William who died in 1894, after having been the first superintendent of the Rock Island County Infirmary; James, who died in 1899; John C.; and Anna, wife of Marshal Harshaw, who is deceased.

John C. Bailey was fifteen years old when the family came to Rock Island, and had been brought up to work hard on the farm, while attending school. Being a strong lad, he obtained a position as porter at a hotel, receiving four dollars per month for his services. In 1851, the father bought land in Rural township, and they all moved there. Mr. Bailey now owns 176 acres of as fine land as can be found in the county, and on it has a beautiful residence. His son, Robert Bailey, now operates the farm.

In 1859, Mr. Bailey married Mary Harsha, born in Ohio. She died in 1871, having borne him children as follows: Robert J., James, Elizabeth and Mary. Mr. Bailey is a republican, having cast his first vote for John C. Fremont in 1856. He has been school director, road overseer, and township trustee and treasurer. He belongs to the United Presbyterian church, of which he is an Elder. He is one of the sound, reliable, conservative men of the township, whose influence has always been exerted towards moral uplift, and good government.

BAILEY, William E.—In the history of any community, it will be found that progress made in the expansion of realty values, has strongly influenced the growth of the place. Therefore, much credit must be accorded the men who devote their ability and time towards a proper and healthy development of this important branch of commercial life. One of the leading real estate men of Rock Island is William E. Bailey, of No. 1612 Eighteenth avenue. He was born in Warren, O., April 15, 1859, a son of Jacob C. and Catherine D. (Durst) Bailey, the former born in Pennsylvania in 1835, which state was also the birthplace of his wife. The father was a carpenter, learning the trade in young manhood, and following it all his life. He moved in childhood with his parents to Warren, O., and grew up on the farm. There, he met his wife who had been brought by her parents to the same neighborhood. In the spring of 1865, Mr. and Mrs. Bailey moved to Rock Island, where Mr. Bailey died June 15, 1911, at No. 1802 Seventeenth street, the present home of his widow. They had three children: Frank L., of California; W. E.; and May, widow of D. J. Kennedy of Rock Island. The family all belonged to the Methodist church.

William E. Bailey was reared at Rock Island, attending school here. He worked in a brick yard, for about two years, and then he worked with his father at the carpenter trade until he attained his majority. In 1880, he went to Norton county, Kas., taking up a claim of 160 acres, later buying his brother's claim, which adjoined his. Returning to Rock Island in the spring of 1883, he resumed work as a carpenter, developing into a contractor and builder in 1881, and continuing as such until 1901. In 1887, he traded his Kansas claims for lands adjoining Long View Park, at Rock Island, and sold this property several years later. In 1900, Mr. Bailey embarked in a general real estate business, and this grew so large, that in 1906, he disposed of his other interests so as to devote all of his time to it. Since 1900, he has laid out and developed twenty or more additions to Rock Island, and has his name on the city map oftener than any other man in the city. He owns considerable property located in various parts of Rock Island, designated as Bailey additions to the City of Rock Island.

William E. Bailey was married at Rock Island, Ill., in 1892, to Miss Alice Hanna, born at Davenport. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey have two children: Florence M. and Frank J. He is a republican, but has never sought public office, devoting himself to his own affairs. Fraternally, he is a Blue Lodge, Chapter, Commandery, Consistory and Shriner Mason. He also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and other fraternal insurance orders. Socially, he is a member of the Rock Island Club and the Rock Island Business Men's Association. One of the organizers of the Rock Island Real Estate Board, he is one of its able members. The Methodist church holds his membership. Able, progressive, public-spirited, Mr. Bailey has been a powerful influence at Rock Island, and not only has worked towards his own betterment, but that of the city as well.

BAILEY, William H. (deceased).—Rock Island county has large manufacturing, mercantile and professional interests, and advancement along various lines of business has been steady and rapid, but its greatest pride, perhaps, is its agricultural perfection, which has been built up by the steady, persistent efforts of men of progressive ideas and strength of purpose who have labored long to make the county's farms rank with those of the other Illinois counties. Such a man was the late William H. Bailey, who for many years was carrying on operations in the county, and whose excellence as a citizen was recognized by election to various township offices. Mr. Bailey was born in Henry county, Ill., April 6, 1847, a son of Charles K. Bailey, an Iowa farmer. William H. Bailey was educated in the common schools of Rock Island county, and his young manhood, until he was married, was spent with his sister in Henry county, Ill., his parents having died when he was still a lad. As a youth he was fond of all out-of-door sports, and was brought up to farming, which he made his life work. After his marriage, he located on a property in Colonna township, Henry county, for two years, and spent the next two years at Hampton, this county, but eventually moved to a Rock Island county tract, where he engaged in extensive agricultural pursuits, after which he located at Moline, Ill., and there his death occurred April 18, 1896, his burial taking place at Riverview cemetery. Mr. Bailey was always ready to assist in forwarding movements for the benefit of his community, and he found time from his private interests to serve his township as highway commissioner, and as clerk of Moline. He was a member of Stuart Camp of the Modern Woodmen, and Graham Post, G. A. R., while his widow is a member of the Relief Corps and the Court of Honor. Mr. Bailey was liberal in his religious views, while Mrs. Bailey is a member of the Second Methodist Episcopal church and is connected with the Epworth League and the Aid Society. For some years Mr. Bailey was a republican in his political views, but later he took the principles of the democratic party for his own.

On October 26, 1880, Mr. Bailey was united in marriage at Rapids City, Ill., by Rev. Frank Clark of the Port Byron Methodist church, to Mary Anna Trevor, who was born April 1, 1859, daughter of Richard H. and Mary (Acton) Trevor. The father of Mrs. Bailey, who was a veterinary surgeon, was born in Ireland, April 1, 1831, and died at Moline in September, 1902. Her mother was born at Nottingham, England, June 19, 1835, and is now living with her daughter in Moline, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Trevor had these children: James J., Mary A., Sarah B., Richard H., Clarence S., Alexander W., Frances R. and Harriet, all of whom are living. There are twenty grandsons and three granddaughters, and four great-grandchildren in the Trevor family. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Bailey are as follows: Richard R., born in Henry county, Ill., April 1, 1882, is single and residing at home with his mother; Francis W., born at Hampton, Rock Island county, November 7, 1884, is also single and resides with his sister in Henry county; Joseph A., born at Hampton, December 18, 1886, married Grace Moulton, by whom he has had three children, Joe, Frances and William, and is farming in Rock Island county; Mary A., born at Moline, Ill., February 5, 1889, married Bert Rodgers, a farmer of Henry county; and Don A., born at Moline January 17, 1892, is attending school at Normal.

BAIRD, Perry Franklin, of Rural township, owner of eighty-nine acres of as choice land as can be found in the county, was born in Blair county, Pa., in 1857, a son of David and Annie (McLain) Baird. The father served in a Pennsylvania regiment, as a soldier through the Civil war. There were thirteen children in his family, five of whom still survive. The father died in 1866, his widow surviving him until 1880. During his boyhood, Perry Franklin Baird received a limited education, and had to work hard from childhood. He came to Rural township, Rock Island county, in 1880, and secured work as a farm-hand. Sixteen years ago, he bought his first land in Rural township, and from time to time has improved it, having now a comfortable house and commodious barns, with suitable outbuildings. His land is very productive, and he raises banner crops.

In 1887, Perry Franklin Baird married Annie Kelley of Buffalo Prairie, a daughter of Michael and Bridget Kelly. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Baird: Bernie David who died at the age of four years; Mabel Agnes, and John M. who died October 31, 1891. In politics Mr. Baird is a republican, and has served as a school director, and road overseer for years, giving the people a fine administration. At present he is president of the Farmers' Mutual Telephone Company, and a man of importance in his community. Fraternally, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Odd Fellows and Royal Neighbors. Few men stand as high as he in the confidence and esteem of his neighbors, for they all agree that township affairs can be safely placed in the capable hands of this thrifty, prosperous, honorable farmer and public-spirited citizen.

BAKER, Leonard Fisk.—In every community there are certain men who have had the courage and foresight to settle early within its confines, confident that succeeding years will bring added population, and that a paying business life will be developed. One of the pioneers of Hampton township is Leonard Fisk Baker, born at Phillipston, Mass., December 5, 1824. His ancestors were among the Colonial settlers of Massachusetts, and there his father, Silas Baker, was born, April 5, 1756. Silas Baker married Abigail Hager, and both died in Massachusetts. Leonard Fisk Baker grew to manhood in his native state, attending the country schools, and Shelburn Falls academy, following which he taught school for several years. He compiled an atlas of Rhode Island, and sold it. In 1850, he came to Illinois, becoming clerk in a store at Hampton, owned by M. W. Wright, a cousin of the lady he later married. Returning to Massachusetts, a year or so later, he married Millie Wright Sawyer, daughter of Silas Sawyer. With his bride, the young man came back to Hampton by stage, via Chicago. He, with Henry F. Thomas, then embarked in a mercantile business at Hampton, but during the financial troubles of 1857, became involved so that he sold his business. He then entered the store of Francis Black as clerk, and later was made postmaster of Hampton, holding that office for seventeen years. The postoffice was located in the Black store. About 1880, Leonard Fisk Baker and Henry Clark began operating a general store, thus continuing until 1887. In that year Mr. Baker bought out his partner and took his son, Silas S., into the business, it being then conducted under the name of L. F. Baker & Son. For twenty years this partnership continued, but in 1907 it was sold and since then Mr. Baker has lived retired, although he still acts as a notary public, having held this office for thirty years. He is also agent for the Phoenix Fire Insurance Company. For several years he was a justice of the peace; for a number of years he was a trustee of the Congregational church, and held other church offices. Mr. Baker has been a school director for many years, and since the formation of the republican party, has given it his hearty and active support.

The children born to Leonard Fisk Baker and wife were: Myra and Hortense, who died in infancy; Agnes, who is Mrs. J. L. Wells of Chicago; Howard G., who is of Rock Island, married Minnie Greenwell; Marion, who died when twenty-four years old; and Silas S. Mrs. Baker died in 1887, and her memory is still tenderly cherished by her husband. It is impossible to give in so brief a notice the extent of the influence Leonard Fisk Baker has exerted since coming to Hampton township. Always a progressive man, and one who had the foresight to look into the future, he has been very ambitious for his community, and sought to advance it in every possible way. Occupying as he did for so many years, a leading position among its representative business men, and holding the office of postmaster during several successive administrations, he was a political power, and his influence was always exerted for the good and betterment of the place he had adopted as his home.

BAKER, Louis E.—Modern development and progress have practically eliminated wash day in the homes, and substituted cleansing in a scientifically conducted laundry. This change in methods has raised an insistent demand for high-grade work, and the conduct of a laundry has become a very important branch of industrial activity. One of the men who has successfully prosecuted this line of work is Louis E. Baker, conveniently located at No. 633 Seventeenth street, Rock Island. Mr. Baker was born at Rock Island in 1888, being a son of William P. and Margaret (Shenk) Baker, who are now living at No. 3115 Ninth avenue. These parents had seven children, all living: Ida who is the wife of Syrus Lyons; Etta who is the wife of William Shuck; Louis E.; Howard who married Ethel Graham; and George, Stella and Harold, all at home. Louis E. Baker was reared at Rock Island and attended the public schools and Augustana college, being graduated from the business department of that institution in 1905. Mr. Baker then engaged in a laundry business, and has continued in this lucrative line ever since. He established his present laundry November 1, 1910, developing it into one of the best in the city. It is thoroughly equipped with all modern machinery, and employment is given to from twelve to fifteen people. Collections are made and delivered by auto wagons. Mr. Baker owns his building, which is a large brick one, 20 x 140 feet. In 1909, Louis E. Baker married Bessie G. Weeda. They are Christian Scientists. Mr. Baker belongs to the Rock Island Club and the Rock Island Business Men's Association. Intending to make Rock Island his permanent home, Mr. Baker is naturally interested in its development, and does everything he can to aid in securing better civic conditions.

BAKER, Robert W.—Rock Island county is admirably situated for the growth and shipment of fruits and farm products, and some of the most representative men of this section are engaged in the business of supplying outside markets with these commodities. One of them is Robert W. Baker, who was born in Pennsylvania, November 25, 1849. He is a son of John R. Baker, who was born in 1811, in Pennsylvania, where he worked at his trade of moulder. In 1852 John R. Baker came to Illinois and bought 160 acres, in Mercer county, from the government for $1.25 per acre. There he resided until 1865, when he sold his Mercer county farm and moved to Rock Island county, and resided in Black Hawk township until his death, on June 15, 1876. The maiden name of his wife was Aithelia Hood, who was born in Pennsylvania, in 1818, coming of Scotch ancestry. Of their children three survive: Robert W.; Rachel, born in 1851, who lives with her brother; and Amanda, who is the wife of Henry Wright of Milan, Ill. Both daughters are members of the Methodist church, while the son belongs to the German Lutheran church.

Brought up on the farm, Robert W. Baker helped his father and attended school in his district, until he was sixteen years old. He then learned the carpenter trade, following it for twenty years. He was one of the earliest employed on the Hennepin canal, and was the first man to draw a check on that pay roll, on November 7, 1892, and after the canal was completed was a government surveyor in Dakota. On returning home he bought twenty-five acres one mile from Milan, where he has lived since 1892. In 1880 Mr. Baker made a trip to Leadville, Col., in a prairie schooner, and while in the West took a long trip on the Yellowstone river, and one of 1,000 miles on the Missouri river in a skiff.

Although a strong democrat in politics, Mr. Baker has never sought public office, his various business interests engrossing his attention. As a Mason, he belongs to Eureka Lodge No. 69 of Milan, and is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, and of the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 79, both of Milan. A hard-working, thrifty man, Mr. Baker has been frugal in his habits, and been able to make good investments, so his future is well provided for. His standing among his neighbors is excellent, and he can be rightly counted among the representative men of his section.

BAKER, Silas S.—Some of the most representative of the business men of Rock Island county are those who have been born here, for then their interests are all centered in their native place, and they are anxious to advance and to provide for its prosperous future. One of the leading business men and merchants of Reynolds belonging to this class is Silas S. Baker, second son and youngest child of the venerable and highly respected citizen, Leonard Fisk Baker, of Hampton, Ill. Silas S. Baker was born November 17, 1869, at Hampton, and grew up there, attending its excellent public schools, and receiving a good business training at the hands of his father. He had the additional advantage of two terms at the Port Byron academy. When he was eighteen years old, he left his studies to become a partner with his father, under the firm caption of L. F. Baker & Son. In 1907, he and his father disposed of their store, and he was engaged in several enterprises until April, 1910, when he came to Reynolds to take charge of the Farmers Store Company. When this company became insolvent in June, 1910, Mr. Baker bought the stock and good will, and is now continuing the business, having already established it on a firm basis, and won the confidence of its patrons because of his honorable methods.

Mr. Baker was married at Moline, November 17, 1898, to Lily Sims, born March 17, 1872, daughter of James and Sophia (Cain) Sims, of Washington, Pa., the Rev. John Robinson of the Methodist church performing the ceremony. Three daughters and one son were born of this union: Marion and Mildred, who died in infancy; Alice and Leonard W. Both Mr. and Mrs. Baker are consistent members of the Methodist church, to which they give a generous support. Mr. Baker is a Modern Woodman of America and Odd Fellow, and enjoys his fraternal associations. Like his father, he is a republican, but his business affairs have prevented his taking a very active part in politics. Live, enterprising, understanding every detail of his work, Mr. Baker is one of the most progressive young business men of this locality, and under his determined management, his store is rapidly taking its place among the reliable institutions of the county.

BAKER, Walter G. (deceased).—In the legal profession as elsewhere, the young man is the one who is occupying the positions of trust and responsibility, for it is recognized that in this strenuous age, the enthusiasm and vigor of mind and body of the men yet in the twenties, are desirable assets. The people of Rock Island county appreciate this, for they have distinguished some of their young men very signally, among them having been the late Walter G. Baker, who was one of the successful attorneys of East Moline. He was born at Morrison, Ill., August 28, 1882, a son of Anson and Anna (Pierce) Baker, born in Whiteside county, Ill. The father was a farmer, who died on his property in 1889, but his widow is now residing at Morrison, Ill. Their children were: Oliver, of South Dakota, and Walter G.

Walter G. Baker, after going through the public schools, when nineteen years old entered Lombard college at Galesburg, and after two years began attending the Chicago Law School, from which he graduated three years later, in September, 1906. Immediately thereafter, he located at Moline, and began in the law office of George W. Wood, Esq., this connection continuing until January, 1907, when it was severed, and Mr. Baker came to East Moline, where he engaged in a general practice. A staunch republican, Mr. Baker took an active part in politics, and was appointed assistant state's attorney of Rock Island county in 1907, serving one year. During 1909 and 1910, he was president of the East Moline Commercial Club. In April, 1910, he was elected city attorney of East Moline, and during 1909 and 1910, he was village attorney of Watertown. He was a member of Moline Lodge No. 934, I. O. O. F., and also belonged to Silvas Lodge No. 898, A. F. & A. M. On October 24, 1907, he married Lena Stocking, born at Morrison, Ill., daughter of L. T. and Kate (Guffin) Stocking, he a native of New York state, she of Whiteside county, Ill. Mr. Baker was one of the keen, well-balanced lawyers of this locality. Well read, quick to understand, sound of judgment, and possessed of a deep insight into human nature, Mr. Baker was remarkably successful, and had a brilliant future before him, both in his profession and politically, when he died November 14, 1911. His untimely demise was deeply mourned and his memory is held in tender remembrance.

BAKER, Willard.—The business interests of Rock Island are well represented by men of intelligent foresight and energetic action. Through their efforts the commercial life of this city is kept at a high standard, and outside capital is being constantly attracted. One of these men is Willard Baker, a contracting tinner, with residence at 319½ Nineteenth street. He was born in Castleton, Vt., July 31, 1843, a son of David C. and Betsy M. (Finel) Baker, natives of Orange county, N. Y. and Vermont. The father was a shoemaker who, in 1851, moved to Waukegon, Ill., and after two years there, to Big Rock, Scott county, Ia., where he died. The mother survived some years, dying at Euclaire, Wis., at the home of a son, Edward F. There were twelve children in the family: George W., Mrs. Cynthia A. Dean, who lives in Pomona, Cal.; Willard; Francis W., who lives in Iowa; Edward F., who lives in Euclaire, Wis.; Mrs. Olive E. Harvey, who also lives in Iowa; Daniel W., who lives in Franklin, Neb.; Mrs. Lucy I. Gale, who lives in the same place; James H., who was adopted by the Rev. S. Grant of Franklin; H. C. Babcock, a half-brother who lives in Idaho Falls, Idaho, and Henry C. and David C. who died several years ago. Three of the brothers participated in the Civil war, two enlisting from Davenport, in the Second Iowa Cavalry, and the other in the Fourth Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

Willard Baker spent his early days in Big Rock, Scott county, Ia., and enlisted from Davenport in Company C, Twentieth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Mark L. Thompson, and Col. William McE. Dye. He participated in many important battles, including those of Prairie Grove, Ark., Siege of Vicksburg, Forts Morgan and Blakeley, Ala., and others. He was mustered out at Mobile, Ala., July 8, 1865, and returned to Big Rock. Mr. Baker then went to Davenport where he entered the employ of the Cables, working in the office of their coal department. In 1867 he came to Rock Island in the same employ leaving them in 1871 to enter the employ of Fred Hass in the stove, tin and metal work business. He rose being in charge of the stove department, then the office, and finally was made general superintendent. Finally he formed a partnership with Fred Johns and W. L. Astor, known as Willard Baker & Co., later it was Baker and Housman, but after five years, formed a partnership with John Sessler and A. M. McNeal, under the name of Baker, McNeal and Sessler. Later the firm became Baker and Knox, then Baker and Bollman, after which Mr. Baker purchased his partner's interest and since then has conducted his business alone, giving employment to a number of men, and working up a fine trade, in sheet metal work.

On December 25, 1871, Mr. Baker was married in Rock Island to Miss Croza Drum, born on the Island of Rock Island, in 1852, a daughter of Thomas Drum, custodian of the Island for nine years, following the murder of Col. Davenport. Her uncle, Richard C. Drum, was Adjutant-General-in-Chief of the U. S. Army during the Civil War and for many years following. Her father was accidentally killed by a gun shot wound; her mother survived until 1902. Mrs. Baker died in 1900, leaving three children: Martha F., a trained nurse; Harry V. of North Topeka, Kas., employed by a large hardware concern; Paul D. of Moline, employed by the Central Union Telephone Co. There is one grandchild in the family. Mr. Baker is a member of August Wentz Post, No. 1, of Davenport, Ia., as well as of Rock Island Lodge, No. 658, A. F. and A. M.

BARTH, Charles, owner and proprietor of the Eagle Bakery, is a representative German-American of Rock Island, and one who is interested in whatever affects the welfare of his community. He is self-made, having come to America a poor boy and worked for others until he was able to establish a business of his own. He was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1862, a son of Christian and Philippina (Wommer) Barth. The father, a hotel-keeper, died in his native country in 1873, but the mother still resides in Bavaria. Their children were: William and Ferdinand who died in Bavaria; Caroline; Jacob and Adolph, who are living in Bavaria, the last-named being a farmer; Charles; Bertia, who died in Bavaria, and Katy, who lives in that country.

Charles Barth attended the public schools of his native country until he was fourteen years old, when he entered a bakery and learned his trade. In 1881 he came to the United States and located at Galena, Ill., where for a time he worked as a baker. He then went from Galena to Dubuque, Ia., and worked as foreman in a bakery for twenty-two years. In 1905 he came to Rock Island and bought his present shop, which he has since operated, his output being 4,000 loaves of bread per day, requiring five wagons for delivery. Employment is given to from twelve to fifteen men. Mr. Barth is a skilled workman himself and hires men of ability and experience. He owns the building containing his plant and also his residence, which is adjoining, at 1109 Third avenue.

In August, 1884, Charles Barth was united in marriage with Henrietta Graves, a native of Galena, whose parents are both deceased. Seven children have been born to this union: William, Otto, Louis, Herbert, Lintilda, Elsie and Carl. Mr. Barth is affiliated with the Order of Eagles, Modern Woodmen of America, and Independent Order of Foresters. He is a member of the Presbyterian church and is liberal in political belief.

BARTON, Lincoln Thomas, owner of 140 acres, is convinced that farming is the most desirable occupation, and that the soil of Drury township repays in heavy measure for the work expended upon its cultivation. His principal crop is corn, but hogs, chickens and horses are also among his products. Mr. Barton was born in Drury township, in 1862, a son of John and Eliza (Martin) Barton natives of England who came to the United States at an early day. They settled in Drury township, where the father farmed until death claimed him in 1871. He was a local preacher, and after working hard all week on his farm, ministered to his congregation on Sunday, doing all this for the love of the cause, never receiving a single cent of compensation for his labors. His wife passed away in 1878, having borne him two children: Lincoln Thomas, and Emma who died at the age of four years.

Lincoln Thomas Barton was brought up on the farm and attended district school. His parents died when he was young and he was practically raised by his half sister, Mary Blair, who is now deceased. Following this, he attended the Wilton Academy at Wilton, Ia., for a year, and then entered the Keokuk Medical College, from which he was graduated in April, 1904. Having obtained his degree, he practiced medicine for a year in Illinois City, but the call of the soil was too great, and he returned to it, and is proud of his success as an agriculturist. He also owns property at Illinois City. So satisfied is he with his present calling, that he proposes to continue in Rock Island county. His professional training has made him all the more able to cope with the every day problems of his farm and he is interested in them and local matters although as yet he has not had the time to go into public life. He is a republican and belongs to the Odd Fellows.

BARTZ, William A.—One of the well known citizens of Rock Island who during the time since he finished his educational training has been in the employ of but one company, is William A. Bartz of No. 231 Seventeenth street now serving in the capacity of agent for the United Express Company at Rock Island. Mr. Bartz was born October 30, 1879, at Lancaster, Ia., a son of Herman Bartz, a native of Germany. Herman Bartz was born February 13, 1846, and in his native country learned the trade of baker. He came to the United States when nineteen years of age, settling at Lancaster, Ia., where he remained for one year, and then located in Sigourney, Ia., establishing himself in a bakery business in which he continued during the years of his activity. He is now living retired. He married Mary Peters, also a native of Germany, where she was born in 1845, and they had the following children: Sophia, who is the wife of J. A. Brannan, a farmer of near Sigourney, Ia., Anna, who is the wife of Homer F. Pennington, a grocery merchant of that city; William A.; Millie, who died at the age of five years; and Frank, who is agent for the United States Express Company at Birmingham, Ala.

William A. Bartz went to school at Sigourney, and after graduation from the high school became an employee of the United States Express Company, in the interests of which he came to Rock Island, and remained four years. He then was transferred to Oskaloosa, Ia., but after two years there came again to Rock Island, where he has since remained. His faithfulness to his employers has been recognized in various substantial ways, and his genial and accommodating manner has won him many friends in this city.

On June 3, 1903, Mr. Bartz was married by the Rev. H. W. Reed of the Baptist church to Mae G. Kelley, who was born May 4, 1881, in Rock Island county, Ill., daughter of Austin and Lillian (Woods) Kelley, the former born in June, 1856, in Illinois, and the latter in Rock Island county, March 16, 1866. Mr. Kelley, formerly a druggist, is now deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Kelley there were born these children: Mae G.; Bertha, who married Jack Cornwall, agent Oregon Short Line, Sugar City, Idaho; Catherine, who married D. McDougal, secretary and superintendent of the Railroad Construction Company of Ashton, Ida.; Ethel, who married William Terry, a farmer at Edison, Nebr.; Blanche, who lives with Mr. and Mrs. Bartz; and a son who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Bartz have one child: Helen Viola, who was born April 3, 1905. Mr. Bartz is a republican in politics and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 26, and Trial Lodge No. 57 of the Masonic order. He attends the Baptist church.

BATTLES, George W. (deceased).—The real history of any community is written in the record of the lives of its leading men, whose deeds and influence develop conditions and make possible advancement in civilization. One of the men who had a strong influence for good in any community in which he resided, was the late George W. Battles, formerly of Rock Island, Ill. He was born in Morristown, N. Y., a son of a steamboat captain and owner of the steamboat Caroline. This former gentleman was educated in the public schools of Walpole, Mass., where he lived with his grandfather. When he was seventeen years old, he came west with a company of emigrants, and finally settled in Perry, Pike county, Ill. In the meanwhile his father had been plying between the towns along the Hudson in his steamboat, Caroline, but came west to find his lost son. Eventually, the father bought a farm at Perry, Ill., where he died. His wife bore the maiden name of Hannah Blackburn, and was born at Bradford, Yorkshire, England, came to America when three years of age, but lived at Walpole, Mass., at the time of her marriage. She was a daughter of an extensive cotton manufacturer in Walpole.

George W. Battles began his business career as a clerk in the store of his brother-in-law, Benjamin Lombard, of Henry, Ill., and later bought him out. Benjamin Lombard was the founder of the Lombard College at Galesburg.

Frank Mixer

III. Still later, he branched out, becoming a general merchant and grain dealer. Later, he operated a large dairy farm in Henry county for six years, and then, in 1876, he came to Rock Island, where with his brother, Morris, he went into the grocery business, but the last few years of his life he lived retired, dying January 2, 1900.

On October 24, 1852, Mr. Battles was married in Bureau county, Ill., to Ann Eliza Lake, daughter of Asa and Polly (Sedgwick) Lake. Mr. and Mrs. Battles became the parents of children as follows: Florence, Julia, Mary, Catherine, Emma, George William and James Sedgwick. After the death of Mr. Battles, Mrs. Battles married his brother, John Henry Battles, a veteran of the Civil war, who died December 8, 1907. Mrs. Battles is a member of the Women's Relief Corps, Ladies of the G. A. R., and the Foreign Missionary Society of the First Methodist church of Rock Island, of which she is a member. She is a lady very highly esteemed in Rock Island, and also in her old home in Henry county.

BAUER, Jacob (deceased).—Perhaps a man is not fully appreciated until he has passed from all earthly activity, when the power of his influence is felt. Then it is that his numerous kindly deeds crop up, and his family learn how many warm, personal friends he made during his stay on earth. This was the case when Jacob Bauer died, for he had been a man who lived uprightly, giving to each an honest deal, and attaching many to him because of his kindness of disposition. Mr. Bauer was born in Prussia, Germany, August 12, 1821, and when he came to America in 1857, he was thirty-six years old. He settled on Section 26, in Bowling township, this county, and worked hard to earn sufficient money for investment in land. In 1865, he was able to buy some heavy timberland acreage, and for years labored early and late clearing it off, the amount thus cleared being 160 acres. As he could, he built a house, barns and other necessary structures, putting in all of the present improvements, finally developing a good property. His death occurred August 7, 1908, on the homestead he had made for his wife and children, and he is buried in St. Joseph cemetery in Mercer county, Ill.

On October 8, 1868, Mr. Bauer was married to Mary McDonald, of Ireland, a daughter of Michael and Mary (Reilly) McDonald. Mrs. Bauer was born June 4, 1850, and was one of the following family: Patrick, Owen, Ellen, Bridget, Michael, James, Kate, Maggie and Mary. Mr. and Mrs. Bauer became the parents of five children, one of whom died in infancy, the others being: Eliza who was born September 3, 1869, married James Coyne, a farmer of Rock Island county; Emma J. who was born February 19, 1873, married Edward Daxon, a farmer of Bowling township; Mary Ellen who was born September 22, 1875; and Sadie A. who was born December 30, 1886. These last two reside on the homestead, where they practically carry on all the farming operations, raising fowls in addition to cultivating over sixty acres of land. There are four grandchildren in the family: Mary E. Daxon who was born August 12, 1904; Margaret Daxon who was born May 11, 1907; Elizabeth Coyne who was born February 21, 1897; and Bernard Daxon who was born November 27, 1912. Mr. Bauer was a consistent member of the Roman Catholic church, and lived according to the teachings of his religion. Steadfast, honorable, and hard-working, he rounded out a useful life, and dying left behind him a sorrowing widow and four daughters to mourn his loss.

BAUGHMAN, Benjamin Franklin, who for many years was in the employ of a railroad company, running out of Rock Island as a conductor on passenger trains, during which he established an excellent record and never had a serious accident, has now retired from active railroad work and is engaged at the United States Arsenal, being an employee of the small arms department. He was born February 22, 1844, in Franklin county, O., a son of Alfred and Hannah (Robbins) Baughman, the former born in 1822 and the latter in Ohio in 1824. They came to Davenport, Ia., March 10, 1848, where they remained until 1870 and then moved to Rock Island, where Mr. Baughman was engaged in farming and as a United States mail clerk until his death, October 12, 1890. Mrs. Baughman had died in 1863, and Mr. Baughman married again, his second wife passing away in 1888.

Benjamin Franklin Baughman was educated in the public schools of Davenport, Ia., and as a youth took up farming, an occupation which he followed until his enlistment, August 1, 1862, from Davenport, in Company D, Twentieth Iowa Volunteer Infantry. The company was mustered at Clinton, Ia., and was sent to Jefferson Barracks, thence to Springfield and eventually to Raleigh, Mo. The first engagement occurred at Hollow Springs, Mo., and they then marched 120 miles to Prairie Grove, where an all-day fight occurred. The next engagement was at Little Rock, Ark., and they were then sent back to Prairie Grove and eventually participated in the battle of Pilot Knob. They were in the siege of Vicksburg, being there at the time of the surrender; went to Jackson, Miss., for a short time and later returned to Vicksburg, when they went down the river in boats to Camp Champ de Mars, New Orleans, where they remained in camp for several months. They accompanied Banks on his Red River expedition, but returned to Carlton in time to take part in a short skirmish, then went up the Rio Grande river, where they went into camp for two months. In the fall of 1863 they went to Mustang Island, Tex., marching about 100 miles, and remained there six months, being engaged in guarding the pass at Point Isabelle, and were in garrison at Mobile, Ala., for six months. They took part in the siege of Fort Morgan, Spanish Fort and Fort Blakesley, the battle which was fought after the war was over and in which several thousand men were killed. Mr. Baughman was mustered out of the service at Clinton, Ia., August 12, 1865, with a record for bravery and faithfulness to duty that no man would need be ashamed of. During his enlistment he fought in Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida; was transported by steamboat 6,350 miles; by steamship, 2,400 miles; by rail, 1,300 miles, and marched 2,400 miles. He secured employment in the manufacture of curtains, at which he was employed for six months, and then became a brakeman on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, and after one year was promoted to conductor, under Superintendent A. Kimball. He continued as conductor for this line for thirty years, and has had numerous experiences while running both freight and passenger trains, although he has never had a serious accident. He has never been sick in his life, due, no doubt, to his good habits. Mr. Baughman also had contracts with the government for the delivering of mail from the trains to the officials for two years, had charge of the Crystal Ice Company for one year and the baggage rooms of the Rock Island Junction Railroad for a like period, and in 1887 became an inspector in the Rock Island Arsenal, where he is now employed. He owns a beautiful home at No. 2501 Eighth and one-half avenue, and is considered one of the well-to-do residents of his community. He is a republican in politics, and has served as councilman of his ward. He is a member of Damien Lodge No. 10, Knights of Pythias, of Davenport, of the Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 243, of Rock Island, and of the Presbyterian church.

In 1867 Mr. Baughman was married to Lovina Wertz, who was born January 7, 1846, in Westmoreland, O., daughter of Christopher Wertz. The parents of Mrs. Baughman came originally from Westmoreland county, Pa., and in 1847 traveled overland from the Ohio homestead to Mt. Joy, Scioto county, where the parents died. Five of their seven children still survive: Liza J., who married W. G. Cunningham, residing at Blair, Neb.; Sophia, who married John Leslie, living at Rock Island; Lucinda, who married John Davidson, is deceased; Mary L., who married a Mr. Williams, residing in Chicago, Ill.; and Lovina, who married Mr. Baughman. Mrs. Baughman's great-grandfather was a soldier during the War of 1812, in which he lost a limb.

Mr. and Mrs. Baughman have had two children: O. W., born April 9, 1869, an inspector at the United States Arsenal, living in Rock Island; and Oliver M., an employe of the Rock Island Railroad for twenty-five years. The four grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Baughman are: Fayette M., born September 15, 1896; Ralph, born June 5, 1907; Franklin D., born September 13, 1893; and Irene F., born October 9, 1896.

BEAL, Albert M., M. D., who, in many lines, is one of the stable and representative citizens of Moline, a leader in his profession, prominent in public affairs and concerned in numerous important business undertakings, was born in Zuma township, Rock Island county, Ill., October 31, 1853, and is a son of Daniel N. and Betsey (Spencer) Beal. Daniel Beal was born at Peacham, Vt., a son of Samuel and Rachel (Wells) Beal, and was left an orphan when five years old. He found a home with strangers and was reared on a farm, alternating his labors thereon by attending the common schools. At the age of nineteen years he left his adopted home to fight the battles of life for himself, directing his steps westward. For a time he was engaged in driving horses on the Erie canal to Buffalo, subsequently taking a steamboat there and after reaching Detroit, Mich., walked to Rock Island county, Ill., the trip consuming about two weeks. For some two years following he worked for different employers and then purchased 160 acres of land on section 18, Zuma township, which he improved and to which he added 108 acres, making a total of 268 acres. He also acquired property in South Moline and in the course of years became recognized as one of the county's most substantial men. Politically, he was a republican, and while not a man who sought office, never shirked a duty imposed upon him by the people of the township in which he lived and served with credit in the following offices: for twelve years as assessor; for four years as supervisor; two years as school trustee, and three years as road commissioner. As mentioned above he was born in New England, on February 5, 1815, he reached Rock Island county in 1834 and on September 18, 1836, was married to Betsey Spencer, also born in Vermont, January 1, 1817, and four children were born to the above union: Lucius W., January 20, 1838; Samuel S., January 2, 1843; Albert Milton; and Eunice C., November 5, 1858. Albert Milton Beal spent his boyhood days upon his father's farm and besides attending the district schools he was also a student in the schools of Port Byron and Rock Island. At the early age of seventeen years he began teaching at what is now Barstow and later entered the Western college of Iowa. When his preparatory studies were completed he was graduated with the class of 1876, taking the degree of B. A. During the following year he was principal of the schools of Hampton, Ill. In 1879 he received the degree of M. A. from his alma mater, which, in that year, was removed to Toledo, Ia., and at that time Dr. Beal received a call to its chair of physics and chemistry, which he accepted and held that position for twelve years. Previously, however, he had read law and was admitted to the bar in 1879. From 1876 until 1879 he had additional responsibilities as assistant to the president of the Moline Water Company. In 1890 he decided to fit himself for the practice of medicine and began to attend a regular course of lectures in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Des Moines, Ia., at the same time being engaged in giving lectures on chemistry. During 1891-2 he served as president of Western college with the understanding that he was still to carry on his chosen studies, and in 1894 he was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons and immediately began practice at Toledo, Ia., a few months later, in December, coming to Moline, where he has continued.

Dr. Beal is a member of the Illinois and Iowa Central District Medical Association, and of the Illinois State Medical Association, and was the first president of the Rock Island Medical Society that was recognized by law. Dr. Beal has many other interests. He is president of the Mechanics and Merchants Bank of Moline; is vice-president of the Root Vandervort Engineering Company, and is president of the Moline board of education, of which body he has been a member for thirteen years. He has always been an ardent republican, casting his first vote for Rutherford B. Hayes for president. While a resident of Toledo, Ia., he served three consecutive terms as mayor, resigning upon his removal to Des Moines, and was the first clerk of South Moline township, Rock Island county.

At Andalusia, Ill., Dr. Beal was married, October 31, 1876, to Miss Etta Thompson, of that place, who died November 11, 1880. She was a daughter of Henry S. and Mary (Buffum) Thompson. One daughter survived her, Mamie, who was born at Moline, October 18, 1878, and is a graduate of the Toledo, Ia., high school. Dr. Beal was married (second) January 1, 1884, to Miss Carrie E. Middlekauff, who was born in Ogle county, Ill., a daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (Jones) Middlekauff. Dr. and Mrs. Beal have had five children, namely: Etta Grace, born at Toledo, February 15, 1885; Daniel, born August 21, 1886; Althea, born October 15, 1888; Albert Milton, born at Toledo and died at the age of one year, March 19, 1892, at Des Moines; and Walter Hubert, born September 12, 1894. At the age of sixteen years, Dr. Beal became a member of the United Brethren church and at Toledo served as superintendent of the Sunday school. Some time after coming to Moline he identified himself with the First Congregational church. Fraternally, he is connected by membership with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America.

BEALER, Gusta.—Some of the most progressive farmers of Rock Island county belong to the younger generation. These young agriculturists are taking advantage of all the improved appliances, and advanced methods to carry on their work, with very gratifying results. One of those who has been attaining more than ordinary success in his undertakings is Gusta Bealer, located two and one-half miles from Milan. He was born in Youngstown, O., October 19, 1886, a son of Frank F. and Margaret (Muers) Bealer, natives of Germany, the father having been born there in 1854, and the mother in 1850. By trade the father is a stonemason, and is now a contractor along his special line. He came to Rock Island in 1893, from Cedar Valley, Ia. Frank F. Bealer and wife had the following family: Charles, who is of Rock Island; George, who is on a farm in Iowa; Edward, who is of Rock Island; Frank, who is of Rock Island; Floyd, who lives on his father's farm; Katherine, who married Gus Kabe, lives in East Moline, and Alice, who married Charles Olson, lives in Rock Island. Gusta Bealer grew up at Rock Island, where he was educated. He has always worked on a farm, and as soon as he had sufficient money, invested in forty acres of his own. He manages the 258-acre farm belonging to Thomas and Samuel Davis, and has done so for four years. The property has materially increased in value since coming under his charge, and he is recognized as one of the best farmers in this section.

Mr. Bealer was married at Reynolds, Ill., on January 16, 1909, to Miss Stella Cooper, daughter of Eben and Rosa Cooper, natives of Illinois. Mrs. Bealer was born March 3, 1887.

Mr. and Mrs. Bealer are Presbyterians. Politically he is a republican, but has never entered public life. He is an industrious, thrifty young man who has the confidence of his associates, and the respect of his neighborhood.

BEAN, William Henry.—The fact that a man is able to retire and live on his property, is ample proof that his earlier years were not frittered away in useless endeavor. A number of the most substantial men of Rock Island county are those who are now living retired from business activities, and among them is William Henry Bean, of No. 1201 Third avenue. He was born February 10, 1842, in St. Louis, son of John L. and Marilla (Smith) Bean. The family came to Rock Island when William H. Bean was two months old, and he grew up here. John L. Bean was a man of considerable prominence in Rock Island. A carpenter and builder, he completed many contracts in the city and county, and at one time operated a sash and door factory. He served as alderman several times, and in other offices. His death occurred in March, 1900, when he was eighty-six years old. His wife passed away in 1898, aged eighty years. They had four children, of whom William Henry Bean was the second in order of birth.

William Henry Bean grew into a useful manhood, receiving his education at the excellent schools of Rock Island, including both the grammar and high school grades, and later went to the seminary here, being graduated from all with credit to himself. On August 8, 1862, he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered in at Chicago. The regiment was attached to the Army of the Tennessee, and participated in the siege of Vicksburg, after which they went with General Steele to Arkansas, marching all the way. Here they were stationed until the close of the war. Mr. Bean was honorably discharged at Pine Bluff, Ark., July 12, 1865, and returned to Rock Island. Following this, he clerked in hardware stores and clerked in a lumber office until 1875, when he embarked in a grocery business, conducting it very successfully until 1908, when he sold his interests, and is now living retired.

Mr. Bean was married in Tampa county, Ia., to Sarah Slessor, daughter of William Harvey and Catherine (Mess) Slessor. Mrs. Bean was born on the Isle of Mau in a lighthouse, but was brought with eight other children of the family to the United States, when fifteen years old, in 1866. They spent three months at Alliance, Ohio, and then came to Rock Island. The family later went to Tama county, Iowa, where the father purchased a farm. Mr. Slessor was employed by the British government as lighthouse keeper for twenty-three years. He and his wife had five sons and four daughters, and Mrs. Bean was the third in order of birth. Mr. and Mrs. Bean have no children, but by a former marriage with Archibald Cameron, Mrs. Bean had two children: John William and Archibald C. Cameron. The elder is on a farm, and the younger, in Kansas City, Mo. Mr. Bean is a member of the Old Settlers' Association, which his father served as president for two years. Mr. Bean is a member of the John Buford Post, No. 243, G. A. R., and is interested in meeting old comrades, with whom he served faithfully as a soldier, demonstrating his loyalty to the country, and he has never abated his love for it and all it represents.

BEARDSLEY, James M., senior member of the wholesale liquor firm of Beardsley & Bailey Company, of No. 217 Eighteenth street, is one of the substantial business men of Rock Island. He was born in Mercer county, Ill., in 1843, a son of Elisha and Caroline (Marvin) Beardsley. Mr. Beardsley was two years old when the family came to Moline, but eight years later removal was made to Illinois City, the father making these several changes as he engaged with various milling firms. When Mr. Beardsley was fourteen years old, settlement was made in Rock Island. The father was prominent politically, holding the offices of deputy sheriff and surveyor of both Mercer and Rock Island counties. He and his wife had eight children, two of whom still survive—James M. Beardsley and Mrs. A. N. Roberts. The father, born in 1795, died in 1882, and the mother, born in 1800, died in 1869.

James M. Beardsley attended school in the several localities in which his parents lived, finishing his educational training in Rock Island. He worked on a farm, and in various ways made himself useful until 1862, when he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served until the close of the conflict. In 1864, he was taken prisoner, and was confined in Libby Prison until hostilities were over. Prior to being taken a prisoner, he was with General Sherman on his march to the sea, and was twice wounded. Returning to Rock Island, he was engaged in manufacturing brooms with his father until 1875, when he entered the revenue service as gauger and deputy revenue collector, thus continuing until 1885. He then embarked in the wholesale liquor business, and is now president of his company, George E. Bailey being vice-president, and C. L. Beardsley, secretary and treasurer, although he has practically retired, his son, C. L. Beardsley, having charge.

In 1865, Mr. Beardsley married Hannah Haley, a native of this community, and five children have been born to them: Irving, who is deceased; Lydia C., who is deceased; Laura, who is the wife of A. A. McNeill; Henry M., who is secretary and treasurer of the Pells Brewing & Ice Co., of Trinidad, Colo.; and Calvin L., who is secretary and treasurer of the B. & B. company. Politically, Mr. Beardsley has always been a republican. Fraternally, he is a Mason, and he is connected with the G. A. R. The family residence is at No. 1108 First avenue. Mr. Beardsley stands very high in his community, and is a man who has always displayed an unusual amount of public spirit whenever the welfare of the city that has been his home for so many years, has been in question.

BECK, John.—Clear View Farm, owned by John Beck, is a property that commands an admirable view of the surrounding country in Rural township, and comprises 240 acres of rich land well suited for raising corn, wheat, oats and for grazing purposes, as the proprietor is proving each year. Mr. Beck was born at Oswego, Ill., in 1854, a son of Gottlieb and Dora (Crokenberger) Beck, both natives of Germany. In 1847, Gottlieb Beck came to the United States, and for eight years worked in Pennsylvania and New York, on farms. In 1855, he came as far west as Mercer county, Ill., where he continued farming. He had married in New York state prior to coming west. The death of this excellent man occurred in Black Hawk township, in January, 1902, he having lived retired for some years prior to this event. His wife died in March, 1896. They had seven children: Mary who is the wife of Anton Weigle of Black Hawk township; Eliza and Caroline who died in infancy; Rose who is the wife of David Dady; Lizzie who was the wife of Magnus Huber, died in 1904; John; and Gottlieb. John Beck was reared on his father's homestead, and received but a limited amount of schooling, but he has always been an observing man, and learned much from experience. He remained at home with his father until he was twenty-seven years old, when he was married, and bought his present property. Under his fostering care it has been developed into the best farm in this locality. His residence is a beautiful one, and his barns and outbuildings are admirably suited for their several purposes.

On January 12, 1881, Mr. Beck was married to Louisa Schnider, who came alone from Wertenburg, Germany, to Henry county, Ill., Mr. Beck meeting her at Davenport, Ia. They have had five children: John William who married May Wilson, is now farming on his own account; Elizabeth who is at home; Ernest who married Effie Long, is also farming for himself; Walter who is at home with his father; and Lillian who is a school teacher in Rural township. Mr. Beck is a democrat, and has been road commissioner. In religious faith he is a Presbyterian. Few men are better farmers than Mr. Beck, who can point with pride to what he is accomplishing. His success in life is really due, though, to his persistent hard work and thrifty habits, and while he has prospered, he has also established his reputation for honorable dealing and upright living, and has many friends throughout the county.

BECKER, Charles Frederick.—Many of the farmers of Rock Island county have found it more profitable to cultivate small tracts of land, than to extend their efforts over a larger territory. There are a number of finely developed farms, ranging from thirty to fifty acres, that grow large crops, every inch of the land being made to yield an income. One of these, comprising forty-three acres, is owned by Charles Frederick Becker of Drury township. He was born in Duncane township, Mercer county, Ill., February 14, 1879, being a son of William and Amelia (Krueger) Becker, both of whom were born in Germany. William Becker came to the United States in young manhood, and married in Rock Island county.

Charles Frederick Becker grew up in Rock Island county, and was one year old when his parents came to Drury township, where he attended school and had as teachers Maud Powell, Fannie Powell and Miss Anderson. He was reared on the farm, and had duties to perform from childhood. On December 9, 1908, he was married to Alvina Josephine Seidler, of Buffalo Prairie township, the Rev. Carwell of Wrayville, this county, officiating. She is a daughter of William and Hannah (Mewes) Seidler. For two years following his marriage, Mr. Becker operated the Seidler farm, and then purchased his present property, which he has very considerably improved. He and his wife are the parents of three children: Lucy Amelia, born December 7, 1909; Hazel Della, born April 8, 1911, and Carl William, born September 8, 1912. They are members of the Hazel Dell Methodist church. In politics, Mr. Becker is a republican. He is a hard-working young man who is bending every energy to make his property one of the best in the township, and he and his wife have many friends here whom they have gained through their kindness of heart and neighborly qualities.

BECKER, Henry L.—In few lines of business has there been greater advancement within the last few years than in the sale of mineral water. Much of the activity in this direction has resulted from the agitation of the pure food question in its various phases. Henry L. Becker, distributing agent for the Waukesha Springs water in Rock Island and vicinity, has succeeded well in this enterprise. He was born in Hanover, Germany, June 23, 1866, son of Frederick and Charlotte Becker. His parents died in Germany, where their entire lives were spent. The father was a merchant.

Henry L. Becker was educated in Germany and remained there until coming to the United States in 1889. He located first at Kansas City, Mo., and there received an appointment in the United States Army, serving two years in the West. He was then appointed to an official position in the commissary department, in the regular army, and served at the Rock Island Arsenal until the fall of 1909, and proved a faithful and conscientious soldier and officer. During the fall of 1909 he became agent for the Waukesha Imperial Springs Company, and has an extensive patronage. He is enterprising and industrious, and has the requisite business sagacity and ability to insure his continued success. He is a republican in political belief and belongs to the German Lutheran Church.

In October, 1902, Mr. Becker was united in marriage with Anna D. Kellerstrass, a native of Rock Island, daughter of Frederick and Margaret Kellerstrass, he born in Rock Island and she in Bavaria, Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Becker have three children: Margaret, Henry and Anna. The family have a large number of friends in Rock Island and take their part in the life of the city. He is interested in the progress and welfare of the city and community and is well informed on local affairs and issues. In November, 1912, Mr. Becker purchased 120 feet front on Sixteenth Street adjoining his former location at Sixteenth street and First avenue and has built thereon a model bottling plant, which was still further extended in the spring of 1913.

BECKER, William.—Among the German-Americans who have been successful at farming in Rock Island county is William Becker, who came here a poor young man, and through his industry and energy has won an honorable position in his community. He was born in Prussia, November 7, 1845, a son of Charles M. and Charlotte Becker, who died in Germany. The father was a shepherd. Charles M. Becker and wife had the following children: Mrs. Minnie Kutzbaugh, who died in Germany; William; Charles, who came to the United States, located at Muscatine, Ia., and married Christina Long; Austina, who is Mrs. Gus Hank, of Muscatine; and Christian and Ricka, both of whom are in Germany.

William Becker attended school in his native country until he was fourteen years of age, at which time he was confirmed in the Lutheran church. His work was teaming before 1869 when he sailed from Bremen for New York, and reached there safely after seven weeks on the ocean. He remained two years in that city, finding employment at gardening and other occupations. His cousin, Charles Pepperman, had come with him from Germany, and they had enough money to bring them to Illinois, but were robbed and they found it necessary to work to earn money for their fare farther westward. Being unable to find enough work in New York they accompanied four other men to Philadelphia, making the trip on foot, following the railroad, but found no better conditions in that city, and they returned to New York over the same route, and during this time slept out-of-doors. Mr. Becker finally reached his objective point, which was Illinois City, Ill., and soon found employment in working for farmers in Drury township, Rock Island county. He was married in February, 1875, by Rev. V. Kern, of Muscatine, Ia., to Miss Amelia Krueger, daughter of Charles and Wilhelmina (Redder) Krueger, a sketch of whom appears in this work. Children as follows have been born to Mr. Becker and wife: Annie, who is deceased, married John Frieburg and they had three children: William, Minnie and Annie; Charles, a sketch of whom appears in this work; Minnie, who married John Weggen, of Muscatine, Ia., and they have three children: Walter, Cora and Elmer; William, who is a resident of Muscatine, married Minnie Kepping, and they have one child, Ella; Henry, who died at the age of nineteen years; and Louis E. and Edward, who are at home. Mrs. Becker was born September 23, 1852, in Prussia, and was sixteen years of age when she came to the United States, having been educated in Germany.

After marriage Mr. Becker came to his present farm of 150 acres, on section 25, Drury township, and erected his comfortable residence in 1901. He is known as one of the substantial and reliable citizens of his community, interested in the general welfare and ready to do his share to promote any worthy movement. He is a member of the German Lutheran church, and in politics is a republican. This is a representative family and stands well in the neighborhood where its members have lived so many years.

BEEDING, George.—Farming, the oldest calling in the world, is also one of the most remunerative, and men who devote their lives to it show good sense, and an appreciation of its possibilities. One of the progressive farmers of Rock Island county who has a fine farm of eighty acres is George Beeding of Buffalo Prairie township. He was born March 27, 1853, a son of Matthew and Martha (Wells) Beeding. The former was born February 20, 1827, in North Carolina, while the latter was born in Indiana in 1824. The father came to Illinois at a time when there was but one log building in Rock Island. He was a farmer and developed some valuable land before his death in 1895. His wife was brought to Henderson county, Ill., in 1828. She died December 12, 1890. Their children were: John of Anderson county, Kas.; George; Frank; Wallace; James, deceased; Bell, wife of William Habert of Kansas. George Beeding was educated in the public schools of Rock Island county, attending there until he was nineteen years old. He then worked for his father on the farm until his marriage. This event occurred, December 13, 1882, when he was united with Jennie C. Stearns, daughter of Blackman Stearns, born in Pennsylvania, October 2, 1812. He married a Miss Kimball, who was born April 5, 1814. These parents came to Illinois when there was but one house between Rock Island and Milan. After a year or two in Rock Island, they moved to a farm southwest of Edgington, where they resided until Mr. Stearns died, on January 1, 1870. His widow survived him until October 29, 1901, when she too passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Stearns had the following children: Clarissa O., deceased; Lucinda C., Mrs. John Gregg; Otis S., deceased; Jasper M., of West Liberty; Caroline, deceased; Mrs. Beeding and Helena. Mr. and Mrs. Beeding have a daughter, Della, born June 28, 1885, wife of David Ripley, a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Ripley have a son, George Lyfe Ripley, born March 23, 1911. George Beeding is a member of the Presbyterian church, and in politics, is a democrat. He is an experienced farmer, a public-spirited citizen, and a man who has the welfare of his community at heart.

BEHRENDT, Charles.—Agricultural conditions in Rock Island county are superior to those found in some other parts of the state, and have been made so by the intelligent, painstaking labors of its farmers, men who have profited by the mistakes of others, and who have brought to their work a conscientious regard for labor well done. Charles Behrendt, who is engaged in cultivating the soil in Zuma township, in partnership with his brother Fred, is a man of this class, who was born February 13, 1871, in Prussia, Germany, a son of Fred and Mary (Hackrack) Behrendt. The father was born January 2, 1829, and as a young man served three years in the German army, participating in the battles of Bardenbin and Schleswig-Holstein. He was married in the Fatherland in 1854, and in the fall of 1872 he came to the United States, settling in Rock Island county, Ill., and living on rented farms for six years. He then purchased an eighty-acre tract of land in Coe township, but one year later sold that land and rented in the same township for three years. Following this he purchased 142 acres in Zuma township, later purchased eighty in the same township, where he continued to farm until his death, August 20, 1897. Another tract of 210 acres in Canoe Creek township, formerly owned by him, is now being operated by his son William. The following children were born to Fred and Mary (Hackrack) Behrendt: Dora, who married August Wilkin of Hampton township; Minnie, who married Christ Bartsch of Coe township; Anna, who married Herman Schoonecker of Hampton township; Frederick William, who is of Zuma township; Charles; and Anna. The mother of the foregoing children died November 24, 1909.

On March 20, 1901, Charles Behrendt was married to Miss Sophia Johnson, of Coe township, daughter of John R. and Catherine (Nahlstedt) Johnson, the former of Oldenburg and the latter of Holstein, Germany. One son, Alvin, Jr., was born to this marriage on October 14, 1903. Mr. Behrendt and his brother Frederick are engaged in general farming and raise fine Durham cattle. Both are democrats in political matters, and Frederick has served three years as road commissioner of his township.

BENDLE, Joseph Henry, M. D.—The modern physician meets many problems and fights disease in manner unknown to the medical man of half a century ago. Positive cures and methods of prevention have been discovered, and the physician today, directs his patients into a proper way of living, as well as cures their ailments. One of the skilled members of this learned profession in Rock Island county, is Dr. Joseph Henry Bendle of Illinois City. He was born May 31, 1855, at Menasha, Wis., a son of Leonard and Catherine (Thomas) Bendle, natives of France and Wales, respectively. The father was born in 1831, and the mother in 1832, and they came to America in 1850, both with their parents, the father's family settling in Ohio, and the mother's in Wisconsin. They married in Wisconsin in 1854, and in 1869 came to Rock Island county. The father was a potter by trade, and settling at Illinois City, became one of the developers of the potteries at that place. He and his wife were the parents of six children: Joseph Henry; David of Minnesota; Sarah Tecita, Mrs. Duffield, deceased; Abbie, Mrs. Brunner; Anna, Mrs. Seavers of Minnesota; and Leonard of Rock Island county. The father of this family died August 15, 1911, and is buried in the Illinois City cemetery, where the mother was laid to rest after her death on December 29, 1873.

Dr. Bendle came to Rock Island county with his parents, and attended neighboring schools. For eight years after leaving school he worked at the potteries, and then began the study of medicine, being graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Keokuk, Ia., in 1886. Coming back to Rock Island county, he entered into active practice at Illinois City. He also owns thirty acres of fine farm land in Drury township, and is a man of substance and a very successful physician.

The first marriage of Dr. Bendle occurred in 1866 to Miss Ancis McMullen of Illinois City, and they had a daughter, Eva May, and also an adopted daughter, Jessie, born May 22, 1895. The first Mrs. Bendle died April 15, 1902, and she is buried in Illinois City cemetery. In 1903, Dr. Bendle married (second) Mrs. Josie Wylie of Illinois City, who passed away August 17, 1904, and is buried in the Reynolds cemetery. In 1905, Dr. Bendle married (third) Mrs. Lyde Fisher, and they have two children: Herbert, born July 24, 1907; and Mary, born December 22, 1909. Politically Dr. Bendle is a progressive. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and the Modern Woodmen of America. For nine years, he served very acceptably as treasurer of Buffalo Prairie township, and was supervisor of Drury township two years. Twice, Dr. Bendle has been honored by appointment as postmaster of Illinois City, and is one of the most representative men of his locality. He is a genial man whose personality aids him in his practice, for people not only depend upon him, but they make him their friend, and have faith in his ability to give them the best care and advice to be secured.

BENDT, Emil H., a well known and prosperous citizen of South Rock Island, Ill., who has been engaged in gardening here for a number of years, was born in Hamburg, Germany, June 25, 1879, and is a son of Henry and Margaret (Berflesen) Bendt, the former born February 25, 1852, and the latter in 1857, both in Germany. Henry Bendt learned the trade of cooper in young manhood, but on coming to the United States engaged in gardening, purchasing the property that is now owned by his son, in 1903. He continued to reside here until 1910, at which time he sold his land and returned to Germany, where he intends to spend the remainder of his life. He and his wife had the following children: Otto, who resides in South Rock Island and has been in the employ of Weyerhaeuser & Denkmann for seventeen years; Emil H.; Henry, Jr., who resides in Germany; Margaret, who married George Cox of Rock Island; and Lula, the wife of Louis Selharst, of that city.

Emil H. Bendt was two and one-half years of age when brought to this country, and he received his education in the public schools. For eighteen years he was employed in the sawmills of Weyerhaeuser & Denkmann; was then employed by the Rock Island Plow Company for three years, and spent one year in street car work and a like period in the watch tower. He then purchased the four-acre tract of land on which he is now operating, and he finds a ready market for the produce which he raises. He is a member of the Lutheran church, is a democrat in his political views, and is popular fraternally as a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Camp No. 2637, South Rock Island.

On November 27, 1903, he was married to Helena Pewe, daughter of George and Anna Pewe, who came to the United States in 1883 from Germany. George Pewe was a cabinet-maker by trade and on first coming to this country worked in the sawmills of Weyerhaeuser & Denkmann, but after spending sixteen years in the service of that company, he engaged in the dairy business, in which he is still active. He is the owner of two valuable city properties. He is a republican in politics, and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church, to which Mr. and Mrs. Bendt also belong. The latter have five children: Helena, Pearl, George, Emil and Viola.

BENNETT, Robert J., President of the Bennett Organ Company, of Moline, Ill., is an experienced and practical organ builder and from boyhood has been interested in this line of manufacture. He was born at Boston, Mass., in 1865, and received his elementary education in the public schools of that city. Later he entered the Boston School of Technology. The parents of Mr. Bennett were Charles and Martha (Landrie) Bennett, the former of whom was born in the city of Paris, France. His marriage took place in 1852 and ten years later he came with his family to America and settled at Boston, Mass., where he followed the trade of stone mason. Of his seven children, Robert J. was the youngest born, the others being: Lizzie, who is now Mrs. Christy White, living at Kendal Green, Mass.; Catherine, Mrs. DeYoung, who lives now at Bramtree, Mass.; Anna, who is the wife of A. J. Whiticker, lives at Bogota, Colombia, South America; Eliza, who is the wife of E. La Haise, lives at Boston, Mass.; Martha, who is the wife of E. J. Bennett, lives in Nova Scotia; Marcelina, who is the widow of E. Roch, lives at North Adams, Mass.

Robert J. Bennett continued to attend the School of Technology for a long time, although, on account of his work in an organ factory during the day time, he had only his evenings to give to study, in this way paying for tuition which he felt certain would assist him in his future life work. For eleven years he continued in the Boston organ factory and during this time mastered every detail of organ building and was perfectly competent to take charge of the Chicago factory of Lyon & Healy, when the position of superintendent was offered him. After five years there he was made manager of the pipe organ department and remained in that capacity until 1902, when he came to Moline, Rock Island county and here identified himself with the pipe organ factory which now bears his name and which stands the fifth largest factory in the United States for the manufacturing of pipe organs. Mr. Bennett became manager of what was then known as the Marshall-Bennett Co., and in the same year the company moved into the new and commodious factory that had been erected within the boundaries of the city of Rock Island. In the early part of 1908, Octavius Marshall retired from active business and the name was then changed by the board of directors to the Bennett Organ Company. When Mr. Bennett became manager in 1902, he brought an experience of many years of organ building during which he developed the pneumatic organ construction system which is the exclusive property of this company.

Mr. Bennett was married in 1880 to Miss Mary E. Macgrath, and they have three children: Albert F., who is a student in college at Denver, Colo.; and Irene and Ruth, both of whom are students at Moline.

Perhaps no institution in Rock Island county carries the name of the county or exploits its importance over a wider field than does the Bennett Organ Company, the products of which are sold all over the United States and in some foreign countries. These instruments have the approval of musicians all over the world and a signed statement by Clarence Eddy, certainly an authority on organs, declares that one of the Bennett organs was as fine an organ as any he had ever used in America.

BENTLEY, William M.—If workers in every line of endeavor would only look forward and save their earnings so as to be independent when declining years suggest the retirement that is their due, there would be more people possessing a competency than there are. Perhaps no other class of men are so thrifty with regard to providing for their old age as the farmers, and it is seldom that one of them is found without sufficient income to provide for him after his years of activity are past, so that the most desirable citizens of Rock Island county are those thus prosperous. One of the men now living retired after years of steadfast labor, is William M. Bentley, of Andalusia township. He was born in New York state, April 11, 1841, a son of John and Lucinda (Voltenburg) Bentley. The father was born in Massachusetts, and the mother in New York state. They came to Illinois, locating at Freeport, in 1846, and there the father died in 1903, after years of farming operations. The mother also passed away in that city, in 1890. In 1864, responding to the need of his country, John Bentley enlisted in the Ninety-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, as did William M. Bentley and another son. The latter served with his father until the close of the war. The children in this family were: Hiram, Nelson, Chauncy, Owen and William M., Elmira, who is deceased, Cordelia and Emma.

William M. Bentley remained at home with his father, attending the schools of Freeport, until his enlistment for service during the Civil war. Like so many loyal young men of his time, he could not remain at home when war was declared, so enlisted in 1861 in Company B, Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Crane of Freeport, for one year. Later he re-enlisted in the Forty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until the end of the conflict. He had a sunstroke, and was confined in a hospital for two months because of its effects, but then returned to his company, participating in the battle of Shiloh, and later in a forced march of two days without food or water through Georgia. He also took part in the battle of Corinth and many other engagements. Mr. Bentley received his honorable discharge at Chicago, in 1866, and returned to the home of his parents in Illinois.

On June 10, 1870, William M. Bentley was married to Alice Reed, born at La Crosse, Wis., November 15, 1842. Her parents, both of whom are deceased, were of English descent. Mr. and Mrs. Bentley became the parents of two children: Nelson and May, both living at Davenport, Ia. In 1908, Mr. Bentley retired from active work, and now owns a residence, with four acres around it that he enjoys cultivating as a pastime. He is one of the honored veterans of the county, and an excellent citizen who has honestly earned the prosperity that is his.

BERG, Anton T.—Before Moline attained to its present importance, contracting and building did not occupy the position among paying lines of work they now do, but with the remarkable growth and development that has come to it, the men identified with those trades affected have prospered greatly. One of those thus fortunate is Anton T. Berg. He was born in Rockford, Ill., August 9, 1868, son of John A. Peterson and Johanna (Johanson) Berg, natives of Sweden, who came to Rockford in 1868, and a year later, to Moline. The father was a stone mason, and obtained work at the Arsenal and in building the water-power dam. In 1870 he started in a general contracting business, and executed contracts for the erection of many of the leading buildings of Moline, including the school buildings, the Methodist, Lutheran, Swedish Baptist and Unitarian churches of Moline and the new structure belonging to the Augustana College group. His death occurred July 31, 1909, when he was seventy-one years old. His widow lives at No. 1203 Seventh avenue, Moline.

Anton T. Berg, the second in a family of nine children born to his parents, attended school at Moline, and learned his trade with his father, assisting him until 1902, when he began contracting in concrete, doing a general contracting business in mason work. His office is in the basement of the old homestead, where he now resides. On December 28, 1892, Mr. Berg was married to Mary Charlotte Kraemer, born in Germany, a daughter of Herman and Hermina (Guslof) Kraemer, who came to America, settling in Geneseo, in 1880. Mr. Kraemer is now in the employ of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad. Mr. and Mrs. Berg became the parents of six children: Fred, Clarence, Mahel, Alfred and Marie who are living; Herbert Arthur, who died in infancy. Mrs. Berg died October 4, 1909, and her remains were laid to rest in Riverside cemetery, Moline. Mr. Berg belongs to the Swedish Lutheran church. Fraternally, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, No. 38, of Moline and the Odd Fellows, No. 133, of the same city. His success has been largely due to his understanding of his work and his determination to give honest service and fair treatment.

BERGESON, August, general building contractor with office and residence at No. 1615 Fourteenth street, Rock Island, is one of the many men who have been instrumental in making the city what it is today from an architectural standpoint. He was born in Sweden, in 1870, a son of Bergie and Betsie (Bergeson) Bergeson. The father was a farmer in Sweden, continuing thus until his death in 1890. In 1894, the widow came to this country to join her children, who had already made the trip. There were four of them: Lottie, who died in Moline in 1898; Amel, who was a farmer of Iowa; August; and John, who is a blacksmith of Moline.

August Bergeson was twelve years old when coming from his native land he located at Rock Island. For three years, he attended the public schools here, and then began working on a farm in Black Hawk township, where he remained for four years. Coming to Moline, he learned the carpenter trade, and when he had completed his apprenticeship he came to Rock Island, where he worked at the trade he had learned. In 1907, he felt justified in embarking in a general building and contracting business, and continues it, having met with a fair measure of success, last year having built eighteen houses. He built his own residence, and it is a model of comfort and convenience. During the season, he gives employment to fifteen men.

In 1893, Mr. Bergeson married Laura Shiffer, born in Pennsylvania, who came in childhood to Rock Island with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Bergeson have had three children: Florence, Fred and Boyd. Fraternally, Mr. Bergeson belongs to the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America, Elks, Eagles and Turners. The Christian church holds his membership. His vote is always cast for the candidates of the republican party, but he has not been active politically. It is just such men as he, substantial, reliable, living up faithfully to their contracts, who make up the great whole of the population of any community and give it standing among sister cities.

BERGLAND, Victor A., osteopathic physician. He who belongs to the Osteopathic school must needs have a profound knowledge of the human mechanism, the diagnosis of diseases coming under his observation being made largely through the sense of touch, which is developed to its highest perfection. As the fingers of the blind are trained to read the letters of the alphabet through several thicknesses of cloth, so the fingers of the osteopath, passed over the surface of the body, seldom fail to detect the slightest disarrangement of the human mechanism. The osteopath takes the position that when all obstructions to the proper direction of the life-giving and healing energies that are resident in the body are detected and corrected by a thorough knowledge of anatomy and physiology, nature fast regains her equilibrium of health and strength. One of the supporters of this school of healing who, although he has been located in Rock Island for but ten years, has effected some wonderful cures, is Dr. Victor A. Bergland, located at No. 1721½ Second avenue. Dr. Bergland was born February 7, 1872, at Galva, Henry county, Ill., a son of Jonas and Helen (Peterson) Bergland.

Jonas Bergland was born in Sweden, in 1844, and came to the United States as a young man, settling in Rock Island county, Ill., where he was engaged in farming until the time of his death, in 1878. He married Helen Peterson, who was born in Sweden, April 15, 1840, and they had four sons, as follows: Jonas E., a farmer near Galva; Albert E., an attorney of that city; Victor A.; and Fred E., who is engaged in farming at Galva.

Victor A. Berglund received his preliminary education in the public schools of Galva, and after taking a business course at Galesburg, entered the College of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo., which was established by Dr. A. T. Still, the founder of Osteopathy, under the laws of that state. He was graduated January 30, 1902, beginning practice during the same year, and on May 1, 1902, he came to Rock Island, where he has since followed his profession, building up a large practice. Dr. Berglund has passed through all of the Masonic bodies up to the thirty-third degree, and he is also a member of Rock Island Lodge, No. 980, B. P. O. E., and the National and State Osteopathic associations. In political matters he is a democrat, and his religious connection is with the Presbyterian church.

BERGLUND, Carl A., general contractor and builder, was born in Sweden in 1867, son of Carl and Sophia (Johnson) Berglund. The father was a cabinetmaker in Sweden, and when he came here in 1868, found immediate employment with the Deere Company, continuing with this concern until his death, which occurred in 1877. His widow survives, making her home in Moline. There were six children in the family: Carolina, widow of A. P. Lundquist; Emma, wife of A. H. Randahl; Lottie, wife of C. F. Runberg; Carl A.; Gust; and Frederick. The last died from disability incurred during the Spanish-American War.

Carl A. Berglund was one year old when the family left Sweden, and grew up in Moline, attending the public schools, following which he learned the carpenter trade. All of his mature life has been spent in endeavor along this line, with very satisfactory results. His business is a large one, and is constantly growing as a result of his energy and excellence of workmanship. In 1892, Mr. Berglund married Emma Carlson, born in Illinois, although her parents were among the pioneers of South Dakota, where her marriage was consummated. Mr. Berglund having met her during a six-year residence in that state as a contractor. Mr. and Mrs. Berglund have had five children: George, Clarence, Herbert, Eunice and Lawrence, all at home. The family belong to the Swedish Lutheran church, and give it a liberal support. Fraternally, Mr. Berglund belongs to the Odd Fellows, Eagles, Modern Woodmen of America, the Court of Honor, and the German Turners. While a republican, he is very liberal in his political views. Mr. Berglund owns the family residence at No. 149 Fifth avenue. He is proud of the fact that he only received twenty-five cents per day when he was first employed in the Deere works, for it proves what a man can accomplish, provided he is not afraid of hard work, and is willing to save a portion of his earnings. Mr. Berglund stands very high in the community to which he has given almost all of his life.

BERGSTEDT, Carl, is a prominent business man of Moline and has been engaged in several lines of industry but mainly has been a carpenter and contractor. He is an able mechanic and maintains a high standard of excellence in his work; has good taste and a proper sense of proportion, and these are invaluable to him in planning his operations. Mr. Bergstedt is a native of Vermland, Sweden, born in December, 1870, son of C. M. and Johanna (Magnusson) Bergstedt, who came to America in 1896. From the first they made Moline their home until 1904 when they moved to South Bend, Ind., where the father died in 1910. The mother now lives in Chicago.

After receiving his education in his native country, Carl Bergstedt engaged in farming, and later, for four years worked as a log forder. He came to the United States in 1892 and located at Moline, Ill. In this city he worked in a foundry for some time and also at the trade of carpenter, and found he had a preference for the latter line of work, and soon became an expert workman. Believing there was a good field for operation in Moline, he began contracting for himself, in 1909, and has since that time erected many of the finest residences and business blocks in Moline and East Moline. In this way he has gained valuable advertising and a reputation for high-class work, which are the best of assets in his business prospects. He has identified himself with the best class of citizens. In politics he is a republican. He belongs to the Swedish Baptist church and has been one of its deacons since 1908.

Mr. Bergstedt was married in November, 1899, to Alice C. Ebbeson, a native of Rock Island, Ill., daughter of John and Anna (Floyd) Ebbeson, natives of Denmark and Sweden. The parents came to America in the early 70's and became prominent residents of Rock Island county, where the family has many friends. Mr. and Mrs. Bergstedt have three children: Russell, born August 30, 1900; Alice Dorothy, born in May, 1904; and Carolyn, born February 5, 1912. Mr. Bergstedt is well known in Swedish-American circles and is deservedly popular. Although entirely dependent on his own efforts, he has, through industry, become independent while yet practically a young man.

BERTELSEN, John H. (deceased), founder and president of John Bertelsen & Sons, sheet metal workers, contractors for conductor pipes, valleys, gutters, slate, tile, metal roofing, hot air furnaces and metal ceilings, located at 523 Twenty-second street, Rock Island, was one of the old business men of this city. Although he was president of his company, he left the active management of the concern to his sons, J. William and Edward L., the former being the general manager. Mr. Bertelsen was born in Kappeln, Germany, July 18, 1853, and died at Rock Island, January 7, 1913. He and his wife came to the United States in 1883, bringing with them their five daughters and his father Haus, settling at Rock Island, where he established the business in which he was engaged during the balance of his life and which is now carried on by his sons, J. William and Edward L. The family born to him and his wife was as follows: Bertha who is the wife of William H. Effandt of Moline; Clara who is the wife of G. A. Keil, who is with Swift & Company, Chicago; Laura who is the wife of Oscar Larson of Moline; Alma who is the wife of William A. Pressner of Rock Island; Rosa who is the wife of John Mordhorst of Moline; John who died October 26, 1904; J. William; Edward L.; Henrietta and Marie. The family adhere to the Lutheran church. They are all very liberal in politics.

J. William Bertelsen was born at Rock Island, where he was reared, and sent to the public schools and Brown's Business College. As soon as he had completed his education, he began working with his father, and soon mastered his present business. Since his father's partial retirement, he has been in charge of affairs, his brother being an able assistant manager. J. William Bertelsen belongs to the Rock Island Turner's Society, and is also a member of the Elks. A live, progressive young man, he has pushed his company forward, and in the special line they have been following, that of installing hot air furnaces, they are doing an immense business.

BESTIAN, Henry C., owner of Maple Lawn Farm, a valuable property of 108 acres, in Bowling township, six and one-half miles from Milan, is one of the prosperous German-Americans of Rock Island county, and a man widely and favorably known. He was born in Germany, December 24, 1864, a son of August and Augusta (Klott) Bestian, farming people who both died in Germany. They had fourteen children, of whom Henry C. was the seventh in order of birth. The latter was educated in the public schools of his native place, and assisted his father on the home farm. In 1881, he came to the United States, landing at New York city, and came direct to Milan from that city. He had only three cents in his pocket when he arrived here, but to the ambitious, industrious young man that was not a serious matter, for he found immediate employment on the Welsh farm at twelve dollars per month. Later he worked in a store, remaining at Milan for nine years. Following this, he bought his present property and he has developed it into a valuable farm.

On September 20, 1888, Mr. Bestian was married in Buffalo Prairie township to Mary Kadel of that township, daughter of Andrew and Catherine (Rettegg) Kadel. Mr. and Mrs. Bestian have had children as follows: Ida who married Claus H. Franck, has two children,—Walter and Maria; Millie; Freeman; Clara; Vera; Henry Jr.; George who died at the age of twelve years, and three who died in infancy.

Mr. Bestian is a democrat. He and his family belong to the Lutheran church, and are liberal supporters of it. Always willing to work, and able to practice the strictest economy, Mr. Bestian has succeeded beyond his hopes. Coming here thirty years ago, with little or no knowledge of the language and customs, it is really remarkable what he has been able to do, and his neighbors and associates accord him unlimited praise for his industry and thrift.

BINGMAN, Jacob F., a veteran of the Civil war, and a man whose record both as a soldier and private citizen is above reproach, belongs to an old and representative family. He was born in Morgan county, O., June 21, 1839, a son of Joshua and Deborah (Rodgers) Bingman, natives of Ohio, where the mother died in 1864, and the father in 1867.

Jacob J. Bingman learned the engineering trade, after his school days, and was employed on a steamboat for a year, then began farming, thus continuing until he enlisted in Company H, Seventeenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in 1861, and took part in the engagement at Crab Orchard, Ken., and from there was sent to Nashville, Tenn., where he was taken sick and had to return home. Following his return from the army, Mr. Bingman engaged in farming until 1874, when he sold and came to Illinois. Here he rented land until 1892, when he bought 140 acres in Bowling and Black Hawk townships, Rock Island county, operating it until 1910, when he rented the farm to his son and retired from active life.

On October 12, 1864, Mr. Bingman was married to Mary Alexander, by Justice Davis of Stockport, O., she being a daughter of Richard and Mary (Brabham) Alexander. The family belonged originally to Virginia, but came to Ohio in 1852, and there the father engaged in farming. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Bingman are: Mary, wife of John Scarr, a farmer; Milton, on the home place, married Fannie M. Edgar; Freeman, a farmer of South Dakota, married Tillie Mader, children—Mildred, Gladys and Freeman; Alexander, a farmer of Rock Island county, married Jennie Adams, children—Susie, May, Ruth, Gusta, Atlas and John; and Estella, deceased, who married Harry Withereil, issue, one child, George L. In August, 1913, Mr. Bingman purchased an acre of land, on what is known as Rodman Heights, South Rock Island, and built a residence, to which the family removed in the Fall. Mr. Bingman is a republican. Mrs. Bingman is a member of the Presbyterian church, and is an active church worker. The Bingman family is well and favorably known in this section, and Mr. and Mrs. Bingman are often called on to welcome their many friends at their hospitable home.

BINGMAN, Sandy A.—Bowling township has some of the most successful and progressive farmers of Rock Island county. These men understand thoroughly the work of tilling the soil, and how to obtain the best results from their land. One of these representative twentieth century farmers is Sandy Bingman, of section 24. He was born in Henry county, Ill., June 30, 1877, a son of Jacob and Mary Bingman, farming people of Rock Island county. They came here in 1886, and bought their present farm in 1891. Their children are: Bell Scarr, who is of this county; Estella Witherall, who died in 1903; William, who lives on the homestead assisting his father; and Sandy A. Sandy A. Bingman was brought here in 1886, and received his education in this county, growing up to the healthy life of a farmer's boy. He was married August 12, 1896, to Jennie Adams, daughter of Robert and Mary Adams, the former born in Ireland, and the latter in Germany. Robert Adams and his wife came to America when very young. He is a butcher. Mr. and Mrs. Bingman have the following children: Susie, who was born December 29, 1897; Clifford, who was born February 2, 1898, died when seven weeks old; Mae, who was born in 1901; Ruth, born in 1903; Gusta, who was born in 1905; and Atlas, who was born May 7, 1910.

Sandy A. Bingman bought 120 acres of land in Mercer county in 1907, and held it until 1909, when he bought his present farm of about 100 acres. He has a comfortable residence, and his improvements are excellent. In politics, he is a republican, and was made postmaster of Bowling township in 1902, discharging the duties of that office faithfully and in a capable manner. He is a man widely and favorably known, and is deserving of much credit for he is essentially a self-made man.

BIRKENFELD, Bernard.—The man who devotes himself to the erection of first-class residences and business blocks in any community, lays it under obligation, for nothing so advances its air of prosperity, or signalizes its advancement as modern buildings. One of the men who has been thus identified with the growth and development of Rock Island is Bernard Birkenfeld, now living retired at No. 2811 Sixth avenue, but who for fifteen years was one of the most active business men of this thriving city. He was born August 1, 1838, in Prussia, Germany, a son of William Birkenfeld, forest inspector in the employ of the German government. The wife and mother died when Bernard was a child, and the lad grew up without her loving care. He attended school until fourteen years old, when he began to learn the upholstering trade.

Having learned and begun working at it, Mr. Birkenfeld married, in his native place, Mary Hultmacher, born in Hanover, Germany. The young couple sailed from Bremen in 1866, arriving in New York City in due time. From there they went to Louisville, Ky., where Mr. Birkenfeld worked at his trade, but was not satisfied, so came on to Chicago. Unfortunately he and his wife had not much more than well established themselves, when the city was visited by the terrible fire of 1871, and Mr. and Mrs. Birkenfeld lost everything they had. For a time they tried to re-establish themselves at Chicago, but finally left, and arrived at Rock Island in 1875, and for four years he worked at his trade, until he was able to go into business for himself. As he saved up money, he began to build houses, and now owns seven, which yield him a comfortable income in addition to his other property. Both he and his wife are members of the German Catholic church. Since coming to this country, he has been a democrat. Mr. and Mrs. Birkenfeld have no issue. Mrs. Birkenfeld was born in 1842, in Germany, being a daughter of Herman and Katrina Hultmacher. Mr. and Mrs. Birkenfeld are people of kindly disposition, whose charities are many, although not widely known. They have a wide circle of friends, and are beloved by many who know and appreciate their excellent qualities.

BISANT, Oscar M., chief of police of Moline, Ill., and one of the most effective officials this department has ever had, resides at No. 2613 Sixth avenue. He was born at Carbon Cliff, Rock Island county, Ill., March 20, 1852, being a son of Wesley and Frances R. (Taylor) Bisant, the former born in Zanesville, O., February 29, 1812, and the latter at Alton, Ill., October 24, 1825. Wesley Bisant settled in Hampton township, Rock Island county, Ill., in the spring of 1835. He was married to Frances R. Taylor, of South Moline township, October 22, 1843.

Mr. Bisant was educated in the common schools, growing up in Hampton, Ill., and living there until 1888, engaged in farming. In that year he moved to Moline, and for four years served as deputy sheriff. In 1893, he was appointed on the Moline Police Department, serving as desk sergeant until 1906, when he was made chief of police, which position he still holds.

In 1872, he was united in marriage to Emma L. Adams of Hampton, Ill., and they have two living children: Oscar Morton, born in 1879, and Edna Claire, born July 4, 1884. Mr. Bisant is a member of the Elks, No. 556, of Moline, Ill.; is senior member of its board of trustees, and also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, having been connected with the latter organization since 1884.

BISCHOFF, August H., manager of the Deere Dairy Farm of Moline, whose business ability and capability to handle the large affairs of his concern is only equaled by his rating as a citizen. Mr. Bischoff was born in Sweden, April 12, 1870, son of John Lindblom, a farmer. He attended the public schools until he was fifteen years old, when, in 1885, his parents came to America, first locating at Davenport, Ia. The good mother died a week after their arrival, of homesickness, at Ottawa, Ill. The father found employment in the Davenport saw mills, and lost his life in them two years later, through an accident. Thus, when only thirteen years old, August H. Lindblom was left alone in a strange land. He found a good friend in the person of William Bischoff of Hampton Bluffs, Ill., for whom he worked, receiving his board in return, as well as an opportunity to attend school. He so endeared himself to Mr. Bischoff and his family, that in 1889, Mr. Bischoff adopted him, and the lad changed his name to that of his adopted parents. He remained with them, working on the farm, until he was twenty-two years old, when he left to come to Moline to accept a position with H. G. Paddock, then county surveyor, continuing with him for four years. He then engaged as general office man with the Adams Express Company, and remained with them for another four years. The company always placed implicit trust in Mr. Bischoff, at one time leaving him in charge of $121,000 over night. Leaving this company, he entered the Watertown, Ill., hospital as attendant of wards, and during the eight years he was connected with this institution, was promoted until he was assistant supervisor, when he left to return to Moline. August H. Bischoff then established the real estate firm of Bischoff & Donehoo, which continued in existence until the spring of 1911, when Mr. Bischoff accepted the position of manager of the Deere Dairy Farm, known as one of the finest of its kind. Still later he was made superintendent of the Deere Experiment Farm. Much of the completeness of the Deere Dairy Farm is due to Mr. Bischoff. There is a herd of pure bred Guernsey milch cows on the farm, which breed is noted for its pure quality of milk. The entire equipment throughout is perfect, no expense having been spared to render the farm the best in the country. In speaking of the Deere Farm, P. S. Monnier, state dairy inspector, said: "I doubt if there is a more sanitary or better maintained farm in the state." August H. Bischoff was united in marriage in 1910, with Anna Swanson, and they have one son, Donald L. Mr. Bischoff affiliates with the Baptist church. Politically, he has voted the republican ticket. His life reads like some romance, but its reality would never have been made possible if he had not possessed sterling qualities which won for him friends and opened up opportunities of which he was never slow to take advantage.

BISHOP, John H.—Many men of Rock Island county have been keen enough to realize their opportunities and to embark in lines of business that are benefited by present day demands. One of these representative citizens of the county thus engaged, is John H. Bishop, button manufacturer of Andalusia. He was born in Jo Daviess county, Ill., July 9, 1861, being a son of John and Anna (Templi) Bishop, both natives of Pittsburg, Pa. In the early thirties these parents with three children left their home, going down the Ohio river, and up the Mississippi river to Jo Daviess county, where they bought 160 acres of land, paying $1.25 per acre for it, and were pioneers of that region. In 1870 Mr. Bishop went to Kansas and spent three years, but came back to Missouri. He remained a short period in St. Genevieve and then returned to Jo Daviess county, where five years were passed. His last change was made when he moved to Davenport, Ia., where he died in 1888. He lost his wife at St. Genevieve, Mo. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: Catherine, Mary, Peter, Elizabeth, Michael, Lavina, Jake, Sarah, Susan, and Henrietta, twin sister of John H. They were members of the United Brethren church, and in politics, Mr. Bishop was a republican.

John H. Bishop was educated in the schools of his native county, and was reared to be a farmer. Until 1909, he worked for others as a farm laborer, but two years ago, established his present enterprise, which has prospered beyond his most sanguine hopes. Mr. Bishop was married in Rock Island, in 1883, to Isabelle Hobart of Buffalo Prairie township, daughter of Gilmore and Sarah J. Hobart. Mr. and Mrs. Bishop have three children: Elvira, who deceased; John A. and Clarence J., who with their father. Fraternally, Mr. Bishop belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, as do his sons. They are republicans, but too much absorbed with business cares to enter public life. Conscientious, hardworking, an excellent manager, Mr. Bishop has been able to establish and build up a fine business, and to place it upon a sound foundation so that each year will give him a healthy increase in volume.

BLACK, Samuel A., a well known resident of Rock Island, Ill., who is now spending his declining years in quiet retirement after a long life devoted to agricultural pursuits, was born August 28, 1840, in Washington county, Pa., a son of William and Mary (Brown) Black. William Black was born in Ireland, and came to the United States as a young man, settling in Washington county, Pa., where he followed the trades of brick mason and miller. In 1853 he moved to Washington county, Ia., and from that time until his death, in 1885, he devoted his attention to farming. Mrs. Black, who was born in Washington county, Pa., survived her husband but a few years. Of their family of twelve children, only four now survive: Mrs. Margaret Pike, living in Iowa; Samuel A.; David, living in Omaha, Nebr.; and George, living at Mound City, Mo.

Samuel A. Black worked on a farm during his boyhood days, securing his education in the common schools of Pennsylvania and Iowa, and from the latter state he enlisted August 9, 1862, in Company C, Nineteenth Iowa Volunteers, under Captain Gray and Colonel Crabb, and served three years, being mustered out of the service at Camp McClellan. He participated in various battles, including the engagements at Prairie Grove, Ark., the Siege of Vicksburg and Mobile, and many other minor battles, and although a brave and faithful soldier never was wounded nor taken prisoner. After completing his services to his country he returned to Washington county, Ia., where he was engaged in farming until 1887, and in that year went to Nebraska, which state was his home for nine years. During the three years following he was engaged in farming in Kansas, from whence he went to Omaha, Nebr., and after a short residence there came to Rock Island, Ill., where he since lived in quiet retirement, owning a good home at No. 324 Fifteenth Street, and receiving a pension from the government. He is a member of the John Buford Post, No. 243, Grand Army of the Republic, and is also connected with the United Presbyterian church, while his politics are those of the republican party, he having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln.

On September 29, 1869, Mr. Black was married to Alice Abraham, who was born in November, 1851, daughter of William and Nancy Virginia (Sanders) Abraham, the former born in Jefferson county, O., April 6, 1820, and the latter in Virginia, October 1, 1826. They were early residents of Washington county, Ia., where Mr. Abraham entered land from the government and farmed until some time prior to his death when he went to Kansas, and there was living in 1895, when his death occurred. Mrs. Abraham died in Washington county, Ia., in 1862. They had seven children, of whom six are living: William N., who is a retired farmer of Jefferson county, Ia.; Mrs. Ella Morgan, who is of Keokuk county, Ia.; E. K., who is a resident State of Oregon; J. F., who is a merchant of Keokuk, county, Ia.; V. S., who is a merchant of Forest Grove, Ore.; and Mrs. Alice Black, who is of Rock Island. To Mr. and Mrs. Black there have been born six children, of whom three are now living: F. W. of Sedalia, Mo., who is connected with the American Express Company; W. V., who is a farmer of Oregon; and Alice, who is the wife of R. C. Vance.

BLACKWELL, Robert, proprietor and owner of what is, perhaps, one of the best equipped livery barns in Rock Island county, is one of the representative and reliable business men and valued citizens of the city of Moline. Mr. Blackwell was born in Derbyshire, England, in 1856, a son of Joshua Gregory and Anna (Maller) Blackwell. In the spring of 1870, when fourteen years of age, he accompanied his father and three brothers to America and they came to Moline, Ill., where they were joined one year later by the rest of the family. Fifteen children were born to the parents of Mr. Blackwell, as follows: Mary, who still lives in Derbyshire; Mrs. Margaret Graham, who lives at Davenport, Ia.; James, Jane and William, all of whom are deceased; Frank and Samuel, both of whom live at Moline; Lavinia, Jennie, Clara and Hannah, all of whom are deceased; John, who lives at Buffalo, Ia.; Anna, who is deceased; Mrs. Florence Hanland, who lives at Davenport, Ia.; and Robert.

On account of his father's restricted means and the necessity of providing for an unusually large family, Robert Blackwell had few early advantages, being obliged to shorten his school period in order to perform self-supporting work. Even then he displayed a love and an understanding of horses and was of assistance to his father, who was a horse dealer, and thus he drifted into the business of buying and selling horses. He studied the points of the business and became an excellent judge of horses and through a natural shrewdness combined with knowledge, had acquired an excellent team of horses for himself by the time he was sixteen years of age. In this way he founded his present business, one that is a leader in its line in this section, although, before he reached his present state of financial independence, he had to overcome many obstacles and keep a steady purpose in view. Mr. Blackwell may justly be called a self-made man. He pays taxes on property valued at $50,000 and all his investments are well placed.

In 1882 Mr. Blackwell was married to Miss Martha Jane Robison, and two children were born: John and Edith, both of whom reside at Moline. In 1891 he was married (second) to Miss Cassie Hunter, and they have had three children: Ethel, Robert, Jr., and Warren, all living at home. Mr. Blackwell and family reside at Nos. 412½-414½ Fourteenth street, Moline.

BLAISDELL, James (deceased), who passed away at his home in Rock Island, June 4, 1897, was prominently identified with various interests in that city where he was regarded as an upright and public-spirited citizen. He was born at Ossipee, N. H., January 19, 1835, a son of James Wason Blaisdell, born 1806, died 1886, and Mercy (Hanson) Blaisdell, born 1801 and died 1876. James Blaisdell was a grandson of Ebenezer Blaisdell (died 1813), and great-grandson of Isaac Blaisdell, born 1738, died 1791. The latter served as a soldier in the American Revolution, while his son, Ebenezer, was a soldier during the War of 1812. Mercy (Hanson) Blaisdell came of Quaker stock, and was a school teacher prior to her marriage. She and her husband moved to Rochester, N. H., when their son James was a child, and there Mr. Blaisdell conducted a shoe store for many years. Both these parents are deceased.

James Blaisdell grew to manhood in Rochester where he received his educational training. A man of genius, able to turn his hand to different lines of work, he grew up skilled in many ways. On August 10, 1862, Mr. Blaisdell enlisted at Rochester, in Company H, Ninth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, being given the rank of second lieutenant, and was commissioned first lieutenant January 1, 1863, and captain March 1 of that same year. After serving two years, he lost the end of a finger which was taken away by a bullet on a battle field.

On September 29, 1863, Mr. Blaisdell was married to Miss Helen Sampson and they came west April 15, 1865. After residing at Davenport, Ia., for eighteen months, they came to Rock Island which continued the home of Mr. Blaisdell until his death. For several years he was foreman of the woolen mills here, but in 1870, became a member of the firm of Galt, Blaisdell & Smith which was engaged in the manufacture of baby carriages and toys. This firm was incorporated as the Rock Island Baby Carriage Works, and was carried on very successfully for a number of years, but after two fires and large losses from bad debts, the affairs were wound up. Almost before Captain Blaisdell had completed this, he was appointed street commissioner, in 1891, and served for two years, when he was made one of the civil guards at the Arsenal. Several years prior to his death, he bought the present home of the family at No. 2535 Eighth and One-half avenue, which stands on a part of the Rodman tract, and is an attractive residence property. Having been reared in the Congregational faith, Mr. Blaisdell attended service with that denomination. In politics he was a republican, while fraternally he was a Modern Woodman of America, and also belonged to the A. O. U. W.

Mr. and Mrs. Blaisdell had the following children: Harriet S. who was born March 12, 1866, died at the age of two years; Helen S. who was born November 29, 1868, married Albert D. Martin of Moline, issue—Ralph D., who was born May 10, 1893, Frank M. who was born April 13, 1895, Paul K. who was born October 12, 1900, and Harold J. who was born August 5, 1904; John C. the third child of Mr. and Mrs. Blaisdell, who was born May 31, 1874, lives in Rock Island, and married Marcella A. Marron, issue—Marcel M., who was born October 1, 1906, and Helen H. who was born August 10, 1910; Charles H. who was born in 1880, died at the age of two years; and Edna L. who was born February 1, 1883, married May 6, 1911, Howard G. McKeekin, a stationary engineer of Rock Island.

Mrs. Blaisdell was born in Grant Falls, N. H., May 9, 1843, one of four children born to Luther and Mary E. (Leighton) Sampson, born 1808, died 1868. Luther Sampson, born 1808, died 1884, was a direct descendant of John Alden, born 1599, died 1687, and Priscilla (Mullens) Alden who came to America on the Mayflower in 1620. His grandmother, Deborah (Bradford) Sampson, born November 18, 1732, was a great-granddaughter of Governor Wm. Bradford (born 1588, died 1657), second governor of the Colonies. His aunt Deborah Sampson was one of the heroines of the Revolutionary war, and was the only woman to draw a pension for services as a soldier from the United States government. Her husband, Benjamin Garnett drew the pension until he died. She was born in Plympton, Mass., in 1760, and died at Sharon, Mass., in 1827. Mary (Leighton) Sampson, mother of Mrs. Blaisdell, also came of excellent stock. Her grandfather Gideon Leighton, born 1731, served in the Revolutionary war, while his son, Stephen, was in the French and Indian war. Mrs. Sampson traced back to the family founded in the Colonies by Thomas Leighton, born in 1604, who came to America in 1632. Mrs. Blaisdell was educated at Saco,

Me., and Rochester, N. H., where her girlhood was spent. Her father was a farmer, and a most excellent man. By his first wife, the mother of Mrs. Blaisdell, he had the following children: John C. who was first lieutenant of Company E, Ninth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, was killed in the battle of Petersburg July 30, 1864; Luther B. who is now a resident of Rochester, N. H., served as second and first lieutenant and captain of Company K, Eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and spent six weeks at Libby prison; Andrew Leighton who died in 1875, served one year during the Civil war in the United States Navy on the battleship "Mohican;" and Mrs. Blaisdell. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Sampson married (second) Philander Garnett.

BLAKSLEE, George C., who conducts an attractive and well appointed photograph studio on Third avenue, Rock Island, Ill., has been engaged in this line of work for nearly twenty-five years and has taken several prizes in state contests, especially in the line of natural photography. He is prominently identified with the Young Men's Christian Association, in whose interests he has been a faithful worker for many years, and in this connection he has formed many warm friendships in various parts of the United States. Mr. Blakslee was born at Harpersville N. Y., in July, 1861, a son of Judson T. and Celia M. (Severson) Blakslee. The father was a farmer until 1864, then removed to Binghamton, N. Y., where he engaged in contracting and continued in this occupation until 1878. The mother was the daughter of a Methodist minister.

After graduating from the high school at Binghamton, N. Y., Mr. Blakslee became general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Schenectady, and during the few years served as secretary of that order at Binghamton and Auburn, N. Y., then at Rock Island and at Chicago, Ill., successively, in the order named, each change being a promotion. In 1889 he engaged in business as a photographer, but retains his interest in the organization of which he served as secretary of various branches for a period of sixteen years, and he is now president of the Y. M. C. A. of Rock Island, and has contributed very largely to its success in the city. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, has been a teacher in the Sunday school several years, and served four years as president of its Young People's Association. A republican in principle, Mr. Blakslee votes independent of party in local affairs. He is an enterprising and fair-dealing business man, is highly respected by all who know him, is enthusiastic in the promotion of any worthy cause in which he is interested and he has the ability to interest others in good work.

Mr. Blakslee was married at Rock Island in 1894 to Miss Ella A. Blakesley, daughter of Capt. A. M. and Mary (Avery) Blakesley. Her father served as a captain during the Civil war. They have four children: Helen, Marion, Alphenn and Eloise. The family reside at No. 502 Twenty-third street. Mr. Blakslee has traveled extensively in the United States and Europe and in 1891 visited Egypt and the Holy Land.

BLANCHARD, Charles.—Drury township is a section of Rock Island county particularly well adapted to agricultural purposes, and that the farmers here have realized upon its possibilities, the almost countless fine farms testify. One of those who has borne an important part in the development of agricultural interests here is Charles Blanchard, owner of 164 acres of rich land on sections 1 and 2. He was born in Illinois City, December 25, 1856, being a son of Theo and Margaret Jane (Morehead) Blanchard. The grandfather on the paternal side died in New Jersey where the father was born. The latter was a blacksmith by trade, and came to Moline in young manhood and worked at his trade in that city until after the Civil war, and also established and conducted a blacksmith shop in Illinois City. He died in Drury township. During the Civil war, he served in the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. The four children survive their parents, and are Marshall, of Colorado; Charles, Alexander and Frank, all of Drury township.

Charles Blanchard grew to manhood in Illinois City, and vicinity, and attended the White Oak school. When fourteen years old, he left school, having been left an orphan the year before, and commenced supporting himself, by working in a harvest field in Marshall county, Ia. He worked for others until he was twenty-five years old, when he married, and began farming his present place, then owned by his father-in-law. In a year he moved to another farm, and made several changes before he bought the Ballard homestead from the heirs. The property is a good one and he has improved it very materially, making it a valuable farm.

On October 25, 1880, he was married to Miss Charlotte Ballard, daughter of Jesse and Phoebe Ballard, and they became the parents of the following children: Della, Mrs. Ben Stropes of Muscatine county, Ia.; Marshall, a carpenter, living at home; Allen, who married Lena Mueller; and Jesse, Avis, Norris, Leonard and Eunice, residing at home. For the past four years Mr. Blanchard has been an Odd Fellow, and he also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. In politics, he is a republican. Always hard working, Mr. Blanchard has steadily forged ahead, being a good manager, and is now one of the representative farmers of his township.

BLANKENBURG, Gustave.—To those whose privilege it has been to assist in the building up of any community, opportunity has been given to erect monuments more lasting than any that could be made for them by the art of the stone or marble cutter and which prove vastly more useful to the section in which they have spent the years of their activity. Gustave Blankenburg, a well-known contractor of Rock Island, has for thirteen years been engaged in contracting and building in this city, and while here has erected some of the largest buildings and handsomest residences of the place. He is of German nativity, having been born at Berlin, Germany, January 3, 1873, a son of Gustave and Augusta (Spörlader) Blankenburg, natives of the Fatherland. The parents of Mr. Blankenburg were married at Berlin, January 24, 1869, and the family came to the United States in 1882, settling at Rock Island, where the father, who had been a banker in the old country and after coming to America a contractor, died in 1884, at the age of thirty-five years. Gustave Blankenburg commenced his education in the schools of Germany, and he was a mere lad when the family came to America, where he finished his educational training. In young manhood he learned the trade of a carpenter, and this he has made his life work. He has engaged extensively in contracting and building and has not confined his activities to Rock Island, having erected buildings throughout the county. His offices are located at No. 1816½ Third avenue and his residence is at 822 Twenty-ninth street. At this time he is one of the best known men in his line in the county. He is a member of the Odd Fellows, the Eagles, the Modern Woodmen and the Woodmen of the World, while his religious connection is with the German Lutheran church.

Gustave Blankenburg was married at Muscatine, Ia., to Ida M. Crabtree, who was born October 18, 1878, at Pine Bluffs, Rock Island county, Ill., the daughter of J. E. and Anna (Steckman) Crabtree. A sketch of Mrs. Blankenburg, who has become one of the leading real estate dealers of Illinois, will be found on another page of this work.

BLANKENBURG, Mrs. Ida M.—During the past several decades the real estate business in Rock Island county, Ill., has grown to astounding proportions; fortunes have been made during the phenomenal growth of this section of the state, and the development of this line of business here has brought forth some of the keenest, most far-sighted men of the day, but it has remained for a woman, Mrs. Ida M. Blankenburg, of Rock Island, to become the largest real estate dealer in the county. In these days, when the rights of women are being so justly, ardently and steadfastly advocated by many of our leading men and women, and just as ardently opposed by others, Mrs. Blankenburg is an interesting example of what can be accomplished by a woman in the business world, and her success should be a strong argument in favor of those who do not believe that woman's sphere is limited to the home.

Mrs. Blankenburg was born October 18, 1878, at Pine Bluffs, Rock Island county, Ill., a daughter of J. E. and Anna (Steckman) Crabtree, the former of whom was born at Bedford, Va., January 18, 1834, and the latter in Wheeling,

John D. McAdams Sr.

Ann E. McAdams

W. Va., August 15, 1840. Mr. Crabtree's mother was born in London, England, and was a daughter of Lord Seursingele. Mr. Crabtree was a plantation owner in Virginia, but about the time of the Civil war he removed to Pine Bluffs, Ill., and there resided until his death, which occurred December 25, 1910, while his widow survives him. They were the parents of these children: Elizabeth Brown; William; Marguerite Anson; Edward, of Pine Bluffs; George W., deceased; Sarah Hobart; Mary E., deceased; Joseph; and Ida M.

Mrs. Blankenburg was educated in the public schools of Pine Bluffs, Muscatine (Ia.) High School, the State Normal School, the Muscatine Business College, and the Practical College (a Chicago real estate college), from which she received diplomas. For two years she engaged in school teaching, but finally decided that she was particularly fitted for a business life and subsequently engaged in real estate transactions. So rapidly did her business grow that she was soon looked upon as one of the leading dealers in the county, and during the past five years she has done a very extensive business in real estate. Her offices are located at No. 18 Safety building, Rock Island.

On June 24, 1896, she was married to Gustave Blankenburg, at Muscatine, Ia., a sketch of Mr. Blankenburg being found on another page in this work, and to them there have been born four children: Ernest, Otis, Curtis and Lucille. Mrs. Blankenburg has been a member of the First Methodist Church since she has been eleven years of age, and in spite of her numerous domestic duties and the vast amount of business she has to handle, she still finds time to devote to anything of an educational, charitable or social character. Although her duties of a business nature are very extensive and claim a great deal of her attention, she is an excellent housewife, as will be attested by those who have visited her comfortable home, drawn there by the genial, pleasant, sociable nature of their hostess.

BLASCHKE, William.—It is always gratifying to true citizens of this republic to note the readiness of many men, born under foreign flags, to become loyal and patriotic supporters of the United States Government when they adopt the country as their home. This can never be misconstrued as an act displaying lack of fidelity to their native land, for which they must ever hold the warmest affection, but it is evidence that they are men who recognize their duty as citizens in common with the native-born of the republic, and do not hesitate to perform it. William Blaschke, a well-known citizen of South Rock Island township, was born in Silesia, Germany, July 3, 1862, and is a son of William and Johanna (Fehst) Blaschke. The father was a dyer by trade and spent his life in the Fatherland, where he died at the age of eighty-six years, his wife having passed away when fifty-two years of age. They had three children: Augusta, who still resides in Germany; William; and Gustave, who came to the United States in 1892 and died in Rock Island.

William Blaschke went to school in his native country until he was fourteen years of age, and then learned the cleaning and dyeing business. He served in the German army from 1884 until 1887 and in 1888 came to the United States, and landed at New York, from Hamburg, on the steamship Wieland. For six years he was engaged in the dyeing business in Chicago, and during that time, in 1892, he was there married to Anna Bohn, who died in 1893. In 1895 Mr. Blaschke came to Rock Island and invested his capital in a cleaning and dyeing establishment, at No. 1412 Fourth avenue. He was successful from the start and bought several other properties, but on account of failing health and a desire to live an outdoor life, he rented his business to his son-in-law, John Krambek, and purchased his present place of business, a truck farm of two and one-half acres, on which he erected his present pretty residence in the fall of 1907. He is liberal in his political views. Fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen.

On September 19, 1898, Mr. Blaschke was married (second) to Margaret Schmellau, who was born in Germany, September 22, 1863, daughter of Hans and Catherine Schmellau, both of whom died in Germany, where Mr. Schmellau was a contractor. Mrs. Blaschke came to the United States in 1881, landing at New York, from which city she came direct to Rock Island, where she was married to Mr. Blaschke as above stated.

BLASER, Albert L.—Farming has been raised to the dignity of a profession in these days of twentieth-century progressiveness, and the agriculturists of Rock Island county take foremost rank among those of their class in the state. One of the most prosperous of the young farmers of Coal Valley township is Albert L. Blaser. He was born at Milan, Rock Island county, in 1872, being a son of David and Anna (Hofer) Blaser. Both parents were natives of Switzerland, where the father was born in 1827. He died in Milan, December 31, 1895. The mother survived him, but also died at Milan and was buried beside her husband. In 1869 David Blaser came to America and located in Rock Island county, where he purchased a farm and engaged in raising corn, hay and potatoes. He and his wife had the following family: Lizzie, who married Fred Engel; Fred, who died in 1879; John and Charley, both of whom live at Milan; Mary, who died at the age of nine years; and Godfrey, who is an engineer at Tacoma, Wash. All these children were born in Switzerland. The youngest of the family, Albert L., was born at Milan.

Albert L. Blaser was reared on the farm and attended the district schools. He has always been engaged in farming, and now owns 102 acres which he operates in addition to eighty acres which he rents. This land is devoted to the raising of corn, hay and potatoes. Mr. Blaser recently erected a substantial residence which was planned along modern lines and supplied with modern conveniences. His barns and other outbuildings are in fine condition, and his premises show the care that is exercised by the owner.

In 1902 Albert L. Blaser married Ola May Adams, who died in September, 1908, having borne him three children: Albert A., Theodore William and Chester David. On October 25, 1911, Albert L. Blaser married (second) Miss Helen Louise Daxon of Milan, Ill. One daughter, Mary Elizabeth, was born of this marriage. Mr. Blaser belongs to Coal Valley Lodge No. 547, A. F. & A. M., of which he is now worshipful master, Eastern Star Valley Chapter No. 274, of which he is now sentinel, and he also belongs to the Knights of Pythias, having passed through all the chairs of that fraternity. The Presbyterian church of Coal Valley holds his membership, and he is secretary and treasurer of it and he is the president of the Christian Endeavor Society at Coal Valley and a member and corresponding secretary of the Coal Valley Y. M. C. A. Mrs. Blaser also belongs to this church. Mr. Blaser is a young man of unblemished character, whose efforts along the line of moral uplift have met with gratifying success and he is a recognized factor for good in the community where he has spent his life.

BLASER, Frederick (deceased).—Reliable, conscientious and hard-working, the Germans who come here from their native land make the very best kind of citizens, and their efforts in behalf of good government have assisted very materially in bringing about the present conditions especially in Rock Island county. One of these substantial German-Americans was the late Frederick Blaser of Andalusia, who was a butcher, cheese maker and farmer at different periods of his life. He was born in Germany, October 8, 1837, and came to the United States in 1882. He had grown up in his native land, there receiving a good public school education; served his term in the army, and was a brave soldier. In 1862, he married Elizabeth Sheppard, born in 1842, and during the remainder of his life she proved his faithful helpmate. The children born to him and his wife were: Rosette, born September 10, 1863, lives at Milan and is married; H. Vonack, born February 28, 1865; John, born in May, 1866, died in infancy; Frederick, born August, 1867; Mary, born February 5, 1870, married Fred Hlofer and lives at Rock Island; Elizabeth, born April 15, 1872, died in infancy; Sophia, born July 29, 1874, is at home with her mother; Lizzie and Lydia, twins, born April 4, 1878; Albert, born May 8, 1880, and Ernest, born May 10, 1883.

Upon arriving in Rock Island county, Mr. Blaser lived two years in Black Hawk township, and then moved to Bowling township, where he spent eight years. Then buying the present home of his widow in Andalusia township, he continued to reside on this property from 1890 until his death, which occurred May 7, 1907. He operated his farm and carried on a dairy business, being successful in all his operations.

Albert Blaser, who is in charge of the homestead, rented it for two years prior to his father's death. He was educated in Andalusia township, and is one of the thriving young farmers of this locality. The property, known as Mount Pleasant Farm, is one mile south of Andalusia, and is exceedingly valuable, comprising eighty acres of rich farm land. The family are Lutherans in religious faith.

Frederick Blaser was an excellent type of the sturdy German-American always made so welcome in new communities, and his township lost an excellent citizen, and his family a good provider and loving husband and father when he was taken away.

BLEUER, Charles, who occupies the position of night chief of the police force of the city of Rock Island, is prominent as a member of the police department, in which he has held various positions, and has won an honorable record in this connection, and is well known throughout the city as a musician, having been playing in an orchestra more or less ever since he was ten years of age. He is a native of Rock Island, born February 18, 1865, a son of John and Anna Bleuer. He and his brothers all are accomplished musicians. He plays several instruments with skill and has been much sought on account of his talent.

Charles Bleuer was educated in the public schools, which he attended until he was seventeen years old, then followed various occupations for a few years; worked in a brick yard, later in the hay fields and at other farm work. He then learned the trade of bookbinder, with William Dawn, and followed this occupation until 1909. In 1888 he purchased a bindery and engaged in business for himself, carrying it on on Second avenue, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, for one year. He then removed to Moline and spent about five years there, after which he returned to Rock Island and for ten years was engaged in the printing business, with others. After selling his interests to his partners he engaged in a bill-posting business, also playing in an orchestra. In December, 1910, he was appointed desk sergeant, and later was promoted to his present position. He has performed his duties with faithfulness and ability, and has the city's best interests at heart. Being a native son of Rock Island county, he has a large number of friends here, by whom he is held in respect and esteem. In fraternal life he is well connected, being affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Court of Honor.

In 1888 Mr. Bleuer was united in marriage with Marian M. Barth, daughter of John and Margaret Barth, and four children have blessed their union, all at home: Charles H., Gertrude, Arthur A. and Marian.

BLEUER, Frank, a member of a family that has long been prominent and respected at Rock Island, is a native of the city, born here January 31, 1862, a son of John and Annie (Deiter) Bleuer, the former born in 1820. Both parents were natives of Switzerland, where some of their children were born. The family came to the United States in 1856, sailing from Havre and landing at New York city. After spending two years at Tonawanda, N. Y., they came to Rock Island, where they settled permanently. The father was an accomplished musician, and in company with his ten musical sons organized a band and orchestra, which gained a wide reputation in Illinois and neighboring states and were much in demand at various entertainments. The father had followed the trade of carpenter and cabinetmaker in his native country and continued to work thus after coming to the United States. He also manufactured fine violins and was master of several instruments. His death occurred on November 9, 1890, and his widow died on December 20, 1902. He was a member of the Reformed church and the family were prominent in many worthy movements for the progress and welfare of their community. There were two daughters and ten sons in the family, namely: John, a sketch of whom also appears in this work; Jacob who is of Chicago; Elizabeth, who is Mrs. Phil Bladel; Nicholas, who is deceased; William, who is of Rock Island; Mary Karmey, who is of the same city; Frank, whose name stands at the head of this sketch; Charles, Edward, Benjamin, Albert and Henry, all of whom reside at Rock Island.

Frank Bleuer was reared in the old home near the Turner school, on what is now Fourth avenue, and attended the German parochial school and later the public schools. From the age of twelve years he spent his vacations with his father learning the trade of a carpenter, and also learned that of a machinist. After becoming proficient as a carpenter he engaged in business on his own account. For the past twelve years he has been in business as a contractor and has executed many important contracts. His standing in the business circles of the city is recognized and he is known as a man of energy and public spirit, a worthy representative of an old and valued family. He is a Lutheran in religious faith, a democrat politically, while his fraternal affiliations are with the Modern Woodmen of America and the Moose. Frank Bleuer owns a comfortable home at No. 1222 Seventh avenue, which he erected himself. On July 11, 1883, Frank Bleuer was united in marriage at Rock Island with Lucy Wehling, of this same city, and they have two children: Frank H., who was born December 23, 1885, married May 8, 1906, Laura Gramnez, and they have three children,—Glen, Louis and Caroline; and Carrie, who is Mrs. John A. Sidel, of Rock Island.

BLEUER, John, who has built up an extensive business in Rock Island, Ill., as carpenter and contractor, is a member of one of the old families here, well known for their talent in music. Mr. Bleuer was born December 14, 1846, in Switzerland, where his ancestors had lived for several generations, son of John and Annie (Dhaler) Bleuer, the father born in 1820 and the mother in 1826. In 1854 the family emigrated to America, sailing from Havre to New York City. They lived in Tonawanda, N. Y., for two years, then came to Rock Island and located on Seventh avenue between Eleventh and Twelfth streets. The father had followed his trade of cabinet maker and carpenter in his native country and continued in the same line of work after coming to the United States. He was noted as a musician and established Bleuer's band and orchestra, his ten sons (who were all accomplished musicians) playing in both organizations. The father was master of several instruments and manufactured violins himself. His band and orchestra were in much demand and they traveled to various cities to perform in entertainments. The father died November 9, 1890, and the mother December 20, 1896. They were parents of ten sons and two daughters, namely: John; Jacob, of Chicago; Elizabeth, Mrs. Philip Bladel; Nicholas, deceased; William, of Rock Island; Mary, Mrs. Curme, of Rock Island; Frank; Charles; Edward, Benjamin, Albert and Henry, all of Rock Island. The father was a member of the Reformed Church.

John Bleuer was eight years of age when he came to America with his parents and attended the public schools of Rock Island until he was fourteen years of age, later studying in private schools. He was set to work to learn the trade of carpenter when he was barely large enough to be able to handle a plane, and worked for his father until his marriage, when he was taken into partnership, this arrangement continuing until the father retired from active life. Later he left his trade and devoted several years to his music, of which he was very fond, being an artist in his line, but he again took up carpenter work and now has built up an extensive business as contractor and builder. He has a reputation for first-class work and upright business dealings and has a good standing in the community.

Mr. Bleuer was married in Rock Island, October 24, 1867 by Rev. Mennicke, to Christina Scheopf, who was born in Bavaria, Germany, in 1850, and came to America in childhood. Mrs. Bleuer's parents were George and Elizabeth (Baumgartle) Scheopf, both born in Helmbrecht, Bavaria, Germany, where they were married, and came to America in 1852. They remained in Chicago for one year and then started for Rock Island by way of St. Louis, where they took the boat for Rock Island, but at Montrose, while assisting in transfer of baggage, Mr. Scheopf was drowned and the mother came on to Rock Island with her two daughters. Mrs. Bleuer was second of three daughters—the others being Mrs. Katherine Koch of Seattle, Wash.; and Mrs. Caroline Kramer of Rock Island, the last named born after her father's death. She is a member of the Lutheran church, but Mr. Bleuer is not a member of any church although he gives his support to various movements for the welfare and progress of his city and county. He is a democrat in politics. He and his wife have had children as follows: David A., a sketch of whom also appears in this work; Frederick, of Sears; Robert, of Muskogee, Okla.; Carrie, wife of John Kaiser, of Rock Island; Theodore, at home; and Clarence of Muskogee, Okla. Mr. Bleuer belongs to a large and highly respected family, whose members have long been identified with the best interests of Rock Island and vicinity.

BLIESENER, Willis John, owner of the general machine works at Nos. 108-112 East Seventeenth street, Rock Island, and manufacturer of hand and foot power tool grinders, is one of the live, energetic men of this city, whose foresight and mechanical ability have placed him in the foremost ranks in his line. He was born in Henderson county, Ill., in 1876, a son of August and Minnie (Gaede) Bliesener, both born in Germany, and now living in Warsaw, Ill., where the father operates a flour-mill. He is one of the leading men of the place, and is now serving in the city council. Fraternally, he is prominent with the Odd Fellows. In addition to other interests, he is vice-president of the Building & Loan Association at that place.

Willis John Bliesener attended school at Warsaw, and the Gem City Business College of Quincy, Ill. Following this, he worked for his father in the mill as engineer, and also for the electric plant, always having had an inclination towards machinery. Going to Joliet, he worked for the Bates Engine Works for eighteen months. In 1905 he was selected to take charge of the Angledile Computing Scale Co., then having an experimental factory located in Chicago. This factory being destroyed by fire, they opened in large quarters at Elkhart, Ind., where he held the position of general foreman until opening his own shop in Rock Island. In 1909, he came to Rock Island and opened his present shop, where he does all kinds of repairing. His plant is equipped with all the latest machinery for his line of work and he controls a large amount of business because of the quality of his output.

In 1901, Mr. Bliesener was married to Augusta Ehle. One son, Carl Willis, was born to this marriage, in 1908. Mr. Bliesener is an Odd Fellow, being at the present time noble grand of Rock Island Lodge No. 18, and senior warden of Rock Island Encampment No. 12. In politics he is a progressive democrat. It has always been the aim of Mr. Bliesener to do the best work possible, and his business patrons recognize his conscientiousness.

BLOOM, Carl L.—Rock Island offers such exceptional advantages for all kinds of industrial activities, that solid business men are investing largely here, and their foresight is being justified every day of the year. One of the substantial young business men of this part of the state is Carl L. Bloom, assistant manager of the Rock Island Metal Foundry. He was born at Rock Island, September 14, 1882, a son of Carl J. and Johanna (Olson) Bloom, natives of Sweden. His father was a stone cutter by trade, who came to the United States when twenty-two years old, while his wife was only fourteen when she arrived in this country. They were married at Rock Island, later moving to Moline, where Mr. Bloom died, but his widow survives, making her home in the latter city.

Carl L. Bloom was educated in the Moline public schools and worked on a farm until he began railroading on the Rock Island Railroad at the age of nineteen years. For the following eight years he spent the greater portion of his time in this line of work, and during that period learned telegraphy. In 1906, he and his brother formed a partnership to establish the Rock Island Metal Foundry which has been built up to its present large proportions through the enterprise of the two young men.

Mr. Bloom was married at Lorain, O., October 17, 1910, to Clara J. Henrikson, born at Moline, October 11, 1884, daughter of Axel and Emma (Bloomburg) Henrikson, the former of whom died, but the latter survives, making her home at Moline. Mr. Bloom has been very successful, and now owns a one-half interest in the plant as well as property at Fortieth street and Ninth avenue. He and his brother invested $1,500 in their plant, but now value it at $25,000. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow. In his religious views, he is very liberal, believing that each person should be allowed freedom of conscience. Not caring to confine himself to any one party, he casts his vote for the man he deems best suited for the office. Mr. Bloom is an excellent example of the live, progressive young business man of today, who not only understands what he is doing, but is not afraid to go forward, and to advocate advancement in everything.

BLOOM, Charles A., who came to Rock Island county in 1881, has since been a resident of Moline, where he has built up a flourishing business as contractor in the line of paper-hanging and papering. He is well known in business and fraternal circles and is held in confidence and esteem by his fellow citizens. He was born in Sweden, February 17, 1861, a son of Anderson and Christina (Jacobson) Bloom, natives of that country. He received his education in Sweden and there began learning his trade, which he continued after coming to America. After emigrating he spent some months in the southern states before coming to Rock Island county and was employed by others until 1901, becoming proficient in house painting and general paper-hanging, and in that year embarked in business for himself in Moline. Here he has since continued, for three years being located at No. 1327 Sixth avenue, and he now has a shop adjoining his residence. He employs three men as an average number, but in busy seasons has several more, and works hard himself. He has established a reputation in business circles for reliability and probity, and is recognized as a public-spirited citizen, interested in the advancement of the community and giving his influence towards worthy objects and measures. He belongs to the order of the North Star and to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in the latter has held several offices.

Mr. Bloom was married in 1888, at Moline, to Miss Emma L. Carlson, daughter of John Carlson. Four children have been born of this union: Edwin L., Lillie, Axel F. and Alvin J. Mr. Bloom and his wife have a pleasant home in Moline and have many friends in the city.

BLOOM, Hugo J.—This is the age of the young man, as is proven by the placing in authority of so many who have not much more than left their twenties. These men would not have been given such positions of trust and responsibility if they had not earned them, and proven their ability to handle successfully the affairs certain to demand their time and attention. One of the rising young men of Rock Island county is Hugo J. Bloom, manager of the Rock Island Metal Foundry. He was born at Moline, May 27, 1880, a son of Carl J. and Johanna (Olson) Bloom, natives of Sweden. Carl J. Bloom came to the United States when twenty-two years old, while his wife came here when fourteen years old. Locating at Moline, Mr. Bloom worked as a stonecutter, and was there married. His life was rounded out in that city, where he died in 1887. His widow survives, making her home at Moline, where she has spent so many years.

Hugo J. Bloom was brought up at Moline, attending the excellent public schools there, and when fourteen years old entered the employ of the Moline Brass Works. Here he remained until 1904, when he entered the Moline Scale Factory, spending three years there, and in 1907 he became manager and owner together with his brother Carl L. Bloom, who is assistant manager of the Rock Island Metal Foundry, and has continued to occupy that important position ever since. His success has been remarkable, for starting four years ago with a capital of $1,500, he is now easily worth $25,000. He also owns his house and lot at No. 514 Forty-first street.

Mr. Bloom was married at Moline, November 13, 1901, to Wilhelmina Warner, born at Paxton, Ill., July 2, 1888, a daughter of August and Anna Warner, natives of Sweden. After their marriage, they left Sweden and came to the United States, arriving here in 1868. The father was a carpenter, working at his trade until his death in 1903. His widow survives, living at Rock Island. Mr. and Mrs. Bloom have one daughter, Beulah Viola, who was born May 26, 1906. In religious faith, Mr. Bloom is very liberal. He is independent in politics. Fraternally, he belongs to the Maccabees and the Brass Foundrymen's Association. Live, energetic, ambitious, able to wrest success from each day's accomplishments, Mr. Bloom is one of the representative young business men of this locality whose future is very bright.

BLOOMQUIST, Peter (deceased).—There is something very solid and reliable about the people born in Sweden that appeals to those brought into contact with them. There are no better citizens in the United States today than those of Swedish birth and many of the most responsible and prosperous men of Rock Island county who have helped to make this locality what it is today, came from this country of the far north, although some of the best of them have passed away. To this class belonged the late Peter Bloomquist, who for many years was one of the leading tailors of Rock Island. He was born in Sweden, December 4, 1837. Both of his parents died in Sweden, where they spent their lives.

Peter Bloomquist was educated in Sweden, and was taught the trade of tailoring, coming to the United States in 1865, landing at New York City. From there he went to Moline and thence came to Rock Island. While still living in Sweden, Mr. Bloomquist married, in 1863, Mary Johnson, and they had children as follows: Annie, Mrs. William Laughlin of Rock Island, now deceased; Sophia, Mrs. Oliver Beck, deceased; Frank of Rock Island; Mitchell of Danville, Ill.; Emma of Rock Island, and John of Livingston, Idaho. Mrs. Bloomquist was born in Sweden, September 9, 1844, a daughter of John Johnson who died in Sweden.

Peter Bloomquist established himself in business as a tailor and thus continued until his death. In addition to his residence, Mr. Bloomquist helped to build a number of other houses, which he sold. He was reared in the Lutheran church. Honest, hard-working, kind in deed and word, Mr. Bloomquist lived a Christian life and dying left behind an untarnished name, and a memory which is tenderly cherished. While not aspiring to public life, he exerted a strong influence among his circle of friends and business associates, and made the world better for his having lived in it.

BLYTHE, Charles M., (deceased).—Rock Island not only has a number of substantial men in its commercial and business life, but has had them ever since the now flourishing city was but a western village along the Mississippi river. It is due to that fact that the village became a city, for without progressive business men, no place can grow. One of the men no longer here, who bore his part in the general advancement, was the late Charles M. Blythe. He was born in this city, in 1843, being a son of James G. Blythe.

James G. Blythe was born on the Atlantic Ocean, while his parents were voyaging to the United States, and lived to be nearly one hundred years old, dying in Rock Island in 1903. He was among the very first settlers of Rock Island, and bought land from the Indians, the tract extending from the river to Third avenue, and east to Eighteenth street. For many years he operated a blacksmith's shop on the present site of the Trumann butcher shop, on Third avenue and Seventeenth street, and also built and conducted the old Commercial Hotel, which was visited by all travelers of any importance who passed through Rock Island. He was a son of Samuel G. Blythe, a Scotch-Irishman, a farmer and school teacher who located in New York State, but later moved to Virginia, where he died. He left four sons: David, James, G. John, and Samuel. The maiden name of his wife was Rebecca Hamilton, who was born in Rock Island. Charles M. Blythe was their only child.

Charles M. Blythe attended school at Rock Island, and college at Davenport, and later learned to be a printer. In 1865, he enlisted under Captain Dock in Company A, Ninth Illinois Cavalry, but was soon thereafter discharged at Selma, Ala., although not before he had the misfortune to be a prisoner of war. After his discharge, he returned to Rock Island, and worked for his father in the Commercial Hotel, but later became bookkeeper for a leading steamboat company, remaining with this concern until his death, which occurred in 1902.

In February, 1889, Mr. Blythe was married in Rock Island to Catherine Gibbons, born in Cleveland, O., who came to Rock Island when twenty-three years old, a daughter of John and Bridget (McDermott) Gibbons. Her father, John Gibbons, died in Nebraska, and her mother died in Henry county, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Blythe had three children: James, born in Rock Island, May 22, 1890, was educated here, and for the past three years has been engaged in a general advertising business; David, who is a traveling salesman, and Winnifred, who is inspector at Young & McComb's Department store, lives at home. Mr. Blythe belonged to the United Presbyterian church. In politics he was a republican. During his many years spent in Rock Island, Mr. Blythe was a public-spirited citizen, one who was interested in all matters purposing to uplift the community.

BOETJE, Fred H.—Germany has furnished a large bulk of the desirable immigration we have received, and its people have always been warmly welcomed, for we need their labor, their industry, thrift and skill. Coming here they enter into American institutions and adopt American ways, building up thriving lines of business and becoming the best kind of citizens. One of these worthy and thrifty German-Americans of Rock Island is Fred H. Boetje, residing at No. 921 Fifth avenue, this city, now retired, but formerly actively engaged in the manufacture of prepared mustard. He was born in Hanover, Germany, November 1, 1840, a son of Henry and Mary Boetje, natives of Germany, where the mother was born in 1813. They spent their lives in Germany, the father dying fifty years ago, the mother thirty-five years ago. The father was a farmer and manufacturer of wooden shoes. Fred H. Boetje had one brother, John, but came to America alone.

Educated in the public schools of Germany, Fred H. Boetje grew up, working for his father until he was twenty-four years old. In 1869, he sailed from London, England, and landed at New York City after a voyage of seven days. From there he came on to Davenport, Iowa, but after a year located at Rock Island, which has continued his home ever since. For twenty years he was actively engaged in the manufacture of high-grade mustard, but in 1911, he sold to his son, Fred, who is now conducting the business along the same lines as his father. Mr. Boetje was also interested in lumber and saw-mill work, and being thrifty is now possessed of considerable means.

In March, 1876, Mr. Boetje was married to Mary Bartel, who had four brothers, who make their home with Mr. and Mrs. Boetje. The latter have had four children: Mary, who is the wife of Jacob Rettich, a professional man at Cincinnati, Ohio; Rose, who is the wife of Fred Paulson, a farmer; Fred H.; and William, who is a toolmaker of Rock Island. There are nine grandchildren in the family. The entire connection are desirable citizens, and are highly regarded through the county. The product manufactured for so long by Mr. Boetje, and now being placed on the market by his son, is of a superior quality, that sells upon its merits.

Fred H. Boetje was born at Rock Island, May 24, 1883, and obtained his education in the public schools. Upon leaving school he entered the employ of William H. Bean, Rock Island, in the retail grocery business. He remained in his employ six years, when he entered the employ of Fred J. Hodges in the same line of business. Here he remained three years, when he formed a partnership with Herman L. Seighartner, in the same line, under the firm name of Seighartner & Boetje. This was conducted successfully for seven years, but being ambitious for a wider field, Mr. Boetje, in 1911, sold his interest, and taking over his father's business, entered the manufacturing field. He is steadily extending the trade already established, and it will be only a short time until his factory will have to be enlarged. When Mr. Boetje was in the grocery business he was secretary for two years of the Retail Grocery Clerks' Union, and later became secretary, and then president of the Retail Grocers' Association of Rock Island, holding the latter position for three years.

Mr. Boetje was married June 16, 1908, to Miss Josephine B. Hassler, daughter of Charles C. and Eliza (Baird) Hassler, of Bloomington, Ill. Two children have been born of this union: a son and a daughter.

BOGUE, John (deceased).—It is not only those who come before the public as heroes in some great stress of circumstances who influence the welfare of the community. Greater by far is the influence wielded by the men whose sober, industrious lives never take them outside the ordinary walks of endeavor. Rock Island has many such men, and has had them in the past, which accounts for the city's present supremacy.

One of the substantial citizens of this class was the late John Bogue, a carpenter and cabinetmaker, who located in the city in 1864. He was born at Putnam, N. Y., June 2, 1824, son of John and Isabella Bogue, both natives of Jedburgh, Scotland, the former born in July, 1794, and died in 1836. The father was a weaver by trade, who came to America with his wife the year of their marriage. They joined the Scotch settlement at Putnam, N. Y., where both passed away. Their children were: Margaret, who became Mrs. William Robinson, and died in Wabash, Ind.; Isabella, who became Mrs. Thomas Knight and died in Whitehall, N. Y.; John; Peter, who died in Omaha in 1910; and Andrew, who died in infancy.

John Bogue attended the common schools of his native place, being reared to farm pursuits. He learned the trades of a cabinetmaker and carpenter prior to his marriage, and after that event resided at Putnam until 1864, when he came to Rock Island, which continued to be his home until his demise, January 15, 1899. The republican party had his support. He was a member of the United Presbyterian church, of which Mrs. Bogue is the only pioneer member living here.

Mr. Bogue was married October 17, 1849, at Putnam, to Martha Goodrich, daughter of William H. and Mary Ann (Palmer) Goodrich. Mrs. Bogue was born January 9, 1834, near Rutland, Vt., but was taken to Putnam in childhood by her parents. When she was nine years old, her mother died. She is a descendant of Lord Stanley of the Isle of Man. Her paternal grandfather was in the Revolutionary war, and his brother died on a prison ship while on the way to England. Mr. and Mrs. Bogue had children as follows: John Palmer, who married Fannie Gliem of Davenport; Mary, who married Christian Keller of Rock Island; Margaret, who is the widow of James B. Sanborn; Jessie J., who lives at home; Fred, who died when ten years old, and William, when one and one-half years. The Bogue family is well and favorably known throughout Rock Island county, and although it is some time since the death of Mr. Bogue, he is kindly remembered by those who knew him and appreciated his real worth.

BOLLES, William H., of Rock Island, a prominent business man of the city, is descended from some of the oldest families of New England. He was born at Lexington, Ky., August 13, 1867, son of Lemuel and Sarah (Bosworth) Bolles, the father a native of Connecticut and of Irish descent. The parents were married at Marietta, O., and the father died at Covington, Ky., the mother being now a resident of Norwood, O. She is of English descent. Five children were born in the family. After attending the public schools of Cincinnati, O., William Bolles found employment as a messenger boy for the Western Union Telegraph Company. Later he learned the trade of machinist, which he followed many years, becoming an expert mechanic. He worked at various places and finally became an employe of the gun carriage department at the arsenal at Rock Island, working there three years. Later he engaged in business on his own account, at 1812 Third avenue, later removing to 2626 Fifth avenue, then to 2412 Third avenue and finally to the northwest corner of Third avenue and Twenty-second street, where he now operates a garage, auto and tire repair works, and a vulcanizing plant. He is independent in politics and in religious faith a Presbyterian. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and socially of the Rock Island Club. He is held in respect and esteem in these various circles as a man of stability and worth.

On September 18, 1895, William Bolles was united in marriage with Elsie Transue, daughter of James I. and Elizabeth (Weir) Transue, and children as follows were born of this union: Adelaide, William, and three who are deceased.

BOLLMAN, William J. (deceased).—The prosperity of any community is not entirely due to the leaders, but those whose lives are spent in carrying out each day's duties faithfully and well. Without the great middle class, which forms the very backbone of the nation, this country would not now be at the very apex of its glory, but tottering to its decay. Those upon whom rests the very fate of any nation are the ones who till the soil, bringing barren acres under cultivation and producing banner crops from the soil. One of the men who spent his useful life in this kind of work, and was always devoted to his home and family, was the late William J. Bollman, well known for years in Rural township. William J. Bollman was born in Rural township, in 1848, and died here in 1893, his remains being tenderly laid to rest in Beulah cemetery. He was a son of Michael and Rachel (Leonard) Bollman, farming people. In 1875, William J. Bollman was united in marriage with Anna Ferguson, and they had six children, namely: one who died in infancy; Virginia M., who died at the age of twenty-one years; Frank L.; Ira T.; Clyde C.; and Benjamin H. After the death of Mr. Bollman, his widow continued to operate the farm until her two youngest children, Benjamin H. and Clyde C., took charge. They are energetic young men who understand their business thoroughly, and they have the confidence of all with whom they do business. In politics, William J. Bollman was a republican, but never sought public office. Fraternally, he was a Mason, and enjoyed his connections with his lodge. He died firm in the faith of the United Presbyterian church, of which he had long been a faithful member. Conscientious, an experienced business man and excellent farmer, Mr. Bollman made a success of his work, and left behind him an honest name and fair competency, and his children are endeavoring to live up to the high standard he set.

BONEY, Armstrong J.—The name of Armstrong J. Boney has figured prominently in the history of commercial and agricultural interests in Buffalo Prairie township, and the spirit of enterprise which has actuated him in all that he has undertaken has gained him a gratifying measure of prosperity. At the present time he is the proprietor of a general store at Buffalo Prairie, doing a large amount of business, and is recognized as a public-spirited citizen who has the welfare of his community and its people at heart. He was born in Armstrong county, Pa., October 16, 1855, a son of John S. and Melissa (Kistler) Boney. His parents, farming people of Armstrong county, left the Keystone state in 1853 and came to Rock Island, Ill., where the father carried on agricultural pursuits until his retirement. He now lives with his children, being eighty-eight years of age. Mrs. Boney died in 1898, and was laid to rest in the Buffalo Prairie cemetery. Their five children were as follows: Armstrong J.; Martha; Rachel; Mary, who is the wife of Albert Asperly, of the state of Washington; and John K., who is a farmer of Mercer county, Ill.

Armstrong J. Boney was six weeks old when he was brought by his parents to Rock Island county and here he secured his education in the public schools. At the age of twenty years he began farming on his own account by renting a piece of land, and in 1879 bought a tract. To this he has since added from time to time until he now owns 160 acres, located in Mercer county. He is the owner of the building and land where he has his store. By honorable dealing, enterprise and inherent ability he has developed an excellent business, and is now numbered among the substantial men of his community.

Armstrong J. Boney was married in 1878 to Miss Jane Marple, a member of an old Rock Island family, and they have four children, namely: John Lawrence, born in 1879, who died November 20, 1910; Elizabeth; Jesse, who is at home, married Nettie Wakeland; and Martha Jane. Mr. Boney is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, in which he has passed all the chairs. A democrat in politics, he has not been an office-seeker, but for ten years capably discharged the duties pertaining to the office of a school director. He is satisfied that Buffalo Prairie promises great future development, and intends to continue to make his home in the vicinity in which he has lived so long.

BONEY, Thompson.—To experienced and successful agriculturists like Thompson Boney, who resides on his valuable farm of eighty acres, on section 29, Buffalo Prairie township, the urgings of land agents to workers in offices, mill and factory to turn farmer and thereby become independent, seem more or less foolish and misleading. No one knows better than men like Mr. Boney that farming is a profession and that to become successful along this line, a man has to be trained for it. It offers blessings in plenty but they have to be earned through knowledge gained by experience. Mr. Boney comes of an agricultural family and was born in East Franklin township, Armstrong county, Pa., October 10, 1841, a son of Joseph and Rachel (McKim) Boney; a grandson of John and Eunice (Doty) Boney, and a great-grandson of Joseph Boney, the last named having come to America from England prior to the Revolutionary war, in which he took part.

Grandfather John Boney spent his life in Armstrong county, Pa., where he followed an agricultural life. His children were: Joseph, William, John, James and several daughters. The eldest son, Joseph Boney, was born in Armstrong county, May 16, 1796. His entire life was given to the pursuits of agriculture. In the fall of 1855 he came with his family to Rock Island county, Ill., and in the following spring he settled on the farm in Buffalo Prairie township which his son now owns. Here he died February 28, 1872, a man respected by all who knew him. He was married in Armstrong county, to Rachel McKim, who was born there November 23, 1803, and died in Illinois, September 5, 1884. They were devout Christians, being members of the Episcopal church. They had the following children born to them: Samuel, who was born March 23, 1824, died at Andalusia, Ill., June 5, 1886, and married Nancy Kadoo; John, who was born in 1826, married Malissa Kistler and they live in Buffalo Prairie township; William, who died December 24, 1882, in Missouri, married Eliza Irvin; Joseph, who died in Illinois, married Lavinia Ives; James A., who died in 1881, at Aledo, Ill., married Sarah Upperly; Francis M., who was born in 1835, resides at Fulford, Colo., married Emma De Witt; Thompson; Eunice, who is the wife of Noah Bowser, lives at Muscatine, Ia.; Ann, who died in Armstrong county, Pa., was the wife of James Drake; Margaret, who died when aged twenty-three years; Rachel, who was born in 1845, is the wife of Thomas Fisher and they live at Muscatine, Ia.; Eliza Jane, who is the widow of Silas B. Myers, lives at Aledo, Ill.; and several daughters who died in infancy.

Thompson Boney was fourteen years of age when he accompanied his parents to Rock Island county, where he completed his education. He was trained to agricultural pursuits from boyhood and took charge of the home farm as manager when he was married, being at that time about twenty-eight years old. Later he purchased the homestead, which then contained 160 acres, and carried on extensive farming operations for a number of years, subsequently selling eighty acres of the place to his son, Ira S. Boney.

On December 7, 1869, Thompson Boney was married (first) to Miss Lucinda Myers, a daughter of Jacob Myers, of Armstrong county, Pa. She died May 29, 1888, at the age of forty-one years a consistent member of the Presbyterian church. They had six children, namely: Nellie, who was born September 14, 1870, married John Sarah B. McAdam.

Pence and they live in this township; Joseph M., who was born April 8, 1874, married (first) Cassie Elliott and (second) Carrie Vickers; Ira S., who was born June 28, 1878, married Laura Gillette; Roy W., who was born February 22, 1883, lives in Mercer county Ill., married Carrie English; Jennie R., who was born November 24, 1872, died June 20, 1880; and Nola Ann, who was born February 27, 1888, died in infancy. On January 4, 1894, Mr. Boney married (second) Miss Adah Jane Hellam, who was born in Armstrong county, Pa., October 25, 1862, a daughter of George and Eliza (Bowser) Hellam. Her father was born in 1826, in the same county, and died on his homestead there in 1902. Her mother was born November 1, 1833, and died June 3, 1908. They had ten children, Mrs. Boney being the seventh in order of birth, the others as follows: Mary, born in 1854, married Alexander Shay; Conrad, born in 1855, lives in Missouri; Jacob, born in 1856, lives in Pennsylvania; Nancy, born in 1858, married Thomas Ross, and they live at DuBois, Pa.; Rachel, born in 1859, married Mark Vause and they live at Pittsburgh, Pa.; Catherine, born in 1860, married William Dickey and they live in Pennsylvania; William, born in 1864, lives at Worthington, Pa.; James H., born in 1867, lives at Ford City, Pa.; and George Curtis, born in 1869, still resides on the old homestead in Armstrong county, Pa. To the second marriage of Mr. Boney a daughter, Eliza Helen, was born October 9, 1895. Mr. Boney and family belong to the Presbyterian church, in which he has been an elder for the past twenty-five years. Politically, he is a staunch democrat, while fraternally he belongs to the Masonic order.

BONHAM, Josiah, who formerly combined a livery business with his work for the government as mail carrier, is one of the substantial citizens of Moline, and a veteran of the Civil war. Mr. Bonham was born near Moorefield, Belmont county, Ohio, May 4, 1839, son of Mahlon and Hetty (Wickersham) Bonham, the former a native of Virginia, and the latter of Ohio. The father was a farmer, who died in Morgan county, Ohio, in 1856, the mother passing away in the same locality about 1848.

The paternal ancestors were among the first settlers of Virginia, traces of them being found in its earliest history. It is supposed that representatives of the Bonham family served in the Revolution and the Mexican war, and it is a well-known fact that they have always been active in matters pertaining to the advancement of their several localities.

Josiah Bonham lived in Rennersville, Morgan county, Ohio, until he was twelve years old, when the family removed to Delaware county, Ind., where he attended school during the winter months. He was brought up on the farm and given all the advantages his parents could afford. In 1857, he came to Neponset, Bureau county, Ill., remaining there until 1871, except the time spent in the Civil war. Leaving Neponset, he came to Moline, where he first established an express and later a livery business. Several years ago Mr. Bonham disposed of his livery. For three years he was engaged by the Government handling mail between the depots and postoffice, but is now living retired.

On August 26, 1861, Mr. Bonham enlisted in Company I, Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at Neponset, and was not mustered out until about two months after his three years' service had expired, the last of October, 1864. He was on detached service in charge of supply and forage trains for about two years, and also with the hospital or ambulance train nearly six months of that period. He was in the train that was captured at Laverne, Tenn., near Nashville, Tenn. Mr. Bonham was an adept at catching the mules belonging to the enemy. He was with Quartermaster D. B. Sears when captured on the Hardee farm near Nashville, but escaped by the merest accident.

Mr. Bonham was married (first) to Margaret Bennett, of Muncie, Ind., daughter of Timothy and Betsy (Russell) Bennett. By this marriage he had the following children: Dora, who was born in 1866; and Charles Walter, who was born in 1868. Mrs. Bonham died in 1872. Mr. Bonham married (second) Lydia R. Thornton, by whom he had the following family: Burton Milton, who was born in 1880; and Gertrude, who was born in 1883. The second Mrs. Bonham died in 1885. Mr. Bonham was married (third) to Hannah Allgren, of Moline, but born in Sweden and came to America when nine years old.

All his life, Mr. Bonham has believed in the principles advocated by the republican party, and has voted its ticket upon every occasion. For twenty-six years he has served as constable, being elected on the republican ticket. His interest in his community is strong, and he can be counted upon to give it his hearty support. The R. H. Graham Post, G. A. R., of Moline, has in him an enthusiastic member. As a soldier and citizen, Mr. Bonham has proven that love of country comes first with him, for he has never allowed personal consideration to weigh against what he has believed to be his duty towards his government, and he is justly regarded as one of the most representative men of Moline.

BONNEN, Albert T.—It is not only the older men who are devoting themselves to agricultural pursuits, as the younger generation has been made to see that it is from the land that the greatest profits are to be secured, provided the soil is properly tilled. New ideas are being constantly advanced along such lines, and the rural communities of Rock Island county are developing in a remarkable degree. One of the prosperous young farmers of Buffalo Prairie township is Albert Bonnen, owner of 120 acres of valuable land. He was born in Prussia, Germany, June 17, 1867, a son of Martin and Anna (Rosen) Bonnen, both of whom died in Germany. Two of their children reside in Rock Island county, namely: Albert, and Anna, the latter being the wife of John Nitz, a farmer. Albert Bonnen was educated in the common schools of his native land, attending them until he was fourteen years old. He then began working among the farmers, and broke land with oxen. In 1882, he came to the United States, landing at New York city, from whence he went to Stark county, Ind., and he spent twelve months working for farmers. He then went to Benton county, Ind., where he worked for three years, then coming to Rock Island county, where he spent the next fifteen or sixteen years in a factory. In 1902, he bought eighty acres of his present farm, which he has cultivated ever since, and now has a fine property, well improved. Later he added the adjoining forty acres. On August 14, 1885, Mr. Bonnen was married to Elitabeth Hinke, a daughter of August and Augusta Hinke, natives of Germany, both of whom survive, making their home in this county, the father being a stonemason by trade. Mr. and Mrs. Bonnen became the parents of children as follows: Freda, who is the wife of George Kane, a farmer of Iowa; and Lorraine, who is with his parents. Mr. and Mrs. Bonnen are members of the German Lutheran church. Politically, Mr. Bonnen is a republican, while fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 29, of Rock Island. He has been very successful, but has attained to his present prosperity through untiring labor and thrifty economy, and has every reason to be proud of his achievements.

BOPP, Enos W., owner of 280 acres of valuable Drury township land, and one of the successful farmers and representative citizens of Rock Island county, has fairly earned his high standing in this community. He was born in Crawford county, Pa., April 28, 1859, and is a son of Anton Joseph and Magdeline (Long) Bopp, natives of Germany. They were married in their native land, but came to this country, settling in Pennsylvania, where the father first dug ore, but later became a farmer. In 1860, the family moved to Muscatine, Ia., where he continued his agricultural operations until his death, which occurred when his son, Enos W., was eight years old. The mother died in 1898. They had twelve children, five of whom are living, and all residing in Nebraska, except Mr. Bopp: John, Philip, Frank, Anton and Enos W.

Enos W. Bopp was brought up on the farm in Iowa, where he attended the district schools, working during the summers for his father. At the age of twenty-one years, he left the farm in Iowa, and came to Drury township, where he rented property for a time, but as soon as possible, he bought eighty acres, and added to it from time to time until he now owns 280 acres, which his son is operating for him.

On January 11, 1881, Mr. Bopp was married to Martha Cook, of Muscatine, Ia., and they became the parents of seven children: Henry, who married Dora Dinig, one son, Leo J.; Mary, who is the wife of Cline Hessman, three children: Elda G., Elma C., and Gertrude M.; and Frank, Margaret, Fern, Priscilla and Gerald, all at home. The family are all Catholics. The democratic party has had Mr. Bopp's support since he cast his first vote, and for six years, he served faithfully as school director and is now road commissioner. He is essentially a self-made man, whose progress was made in spite of obstacles, and who, in the semi-retirement he is now enjoying, can reflect with pleasure upon what he has accomplished, the esteem in which he is held, and upon the fine family he possesses.

BORG, Charles W., senior member of the well-known firm of Borg & Beck, is recognized as one of the most substantial and capable business men of Rock Island, and an excellent type of the successful men from Sweden, who have made such rapid progress in their adopted land. Mr. Borg was born in Sweden, May 7, 1861, a son of Carl A. and Maria (Gustavson) Borg, farming people. They came to the United States in 1888, locating at Burlington, Iowa, where the father died July 3, 1889, but his widow survives and is making her home with her son Charles, having attained to the age of seventy-nine years.

Charles W. Borg was educated in the public schools of Sweden, brought up on a farm, and taught the trade of cabinetmaking. Coming to the United States in 1881, he worked for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Burlington, Iowa, later moving to Rockford, Ill., where he was superintendent of a furniture factory for a year. Then coming to Moline, he became superintendent of a furniture factory there and held that position for three years. He then entered the employ of Deere & Mansur Company and from 1894 to March 1, 1903, he was in their pattern department. At that date he left to open a factory of his own, and manufactures the following patented articles: Borg automatic tongue shaping machine, Borg automatic shaping planer, a porch column machine, stave machine, automatic wheel sanding machine, Borg automatic stave trimming and grooving machine, Borg plow share joining machine, buggy bow dressing machine, Borg automatic combined singletree, hooking and boring machine, and others of a similar nature, the patents of which are all owned by Mr. Borg. They are all peculiarly well adapted for the several purposes for which they are designed and are sold over a wide field.

Mr. Borg was married at Burlington, Iowa, August 11, 1884, to Amelia Larson, born in Sweden, in 1865, daughter of Nels Larson of Sweden, who was a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Borg became the parents of four children: Carl, who was born in October, 1886, at Burlington, Iowa, died in November, 1895, at Rock Island, Ill.; George W., who was born at the same place, October 24, 1887, married Florence M. Wadsworth, December 1, 1900; Esther V., who was born at Moline, April 24, 1894, is now attending college; Grace H., who was born at Rock Island, December 11, 1897, is also attending college.

George W. is office manager for his father. He went one year to the Augustana business college, and specialized at the Augustana academy.

Mr. Borg belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. He is independent in his religious and political views. Genius like that displayed by Mr. Borg is not often found, and it is gratifying that in this case it has been recognized before he has passed away from this life. So many inventors are not honored until after death. Honorable, upright, an excellent business man, Mr. Borg possesses more than the usual equipment for securing gratifying results, and with the able assistance of his son, he has his products placed in a desirable market, and his house firmly established.

BORNHOEFT, Louis, chief of police of East Moline, and the most efficient official this locality has ever possessed, is a man of strength of character and resourceful capability. He was born in Holstein, Germany, in 1863, a son of Louis and Magdalena (Kelting) Bornhoeft. The father was a trader in Germany, where he passed a long and useful life, dying in 1878. His widow survived him until 1883. Neither left their native land.

Louis Bornhoeft grew up in his native land where he attended the public schools and was taught butchering. When he came to Moline direct from Germany in 1880, he opened a butcher shop, operating it until he went to St. Louis to engage in the same line. Later he was a cowboy in Texas for two and one-half years.

In 1886, Mr. Bornhoeft was married to Marguerite Kasch, also born in Germany. They have had five children: Theodore, Louis, Freda, De Linda and Stephen. In religious faith, he is a Lutheran, and fraternally he belongs to the Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America. An independent voter, he did not attach himself to any party. He showed his courage and fearlessness upon so many occasions that in 1906, he was made a patrolman of East Moline. The year following he was placed in charge of the police department, for it was recognized that he was the one man who could handle the situation. When he assumed charge, the village was much in need of stern discipline, and Chief Bornhoeft made his authority recognized and respected. His four patrolmen were given definite and prohibitive orders, which he saw were rigidly enforced, and today East Moline is as peaceful a community as can be found in Rock Island county. In addition to having charge of the police department, Chief Bornhoeft is also fire chief, and has that department of public administration in a high state of efficiency. No other man has done so much for his community as Mr. Bornhoeft, who never stops to consider personal convenience when public matters are in question, and for these and other reasons, he is really the leader of East Moline.

BORUFF, Samuel Harvey, owner of 280 acres of choice farming land in Drury township, carries on general farming and specializes on raising hogs for the market, his place being known for this reason as the Woodrow Stock Farm. Mr. Boruff was born on this farm, June 5, 1869, a son of John and Mary (Doty) Boruff, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio respectively. Mr. Boruff was married (first) to a Miss McGreer, and they became one of the pioneer families of Rock Island county, homesteading eighty acres of land in Drury township from the government, which property forms a portion of the present estate of Samuel Harvey Boruff. By his first marriage, Mr. Boruff had three children: William of Mercer county; Jackson of Iowa; and Aleck of Illinois. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Boruff married Mary Doty, and they had one child, Samuel Harvey Boruff. The father farmed his property until his death which occurred in 1904, his widow surviving him, making her home with her son. A strong democrat, the father was a leading politician of his day, and well known throughout Rock Island county.

Growing up on the homestead, Samuel Harvey Boruff learned to love the farm, and has devoted himself to agricultural pursuits. His educational training was received in the district school of his neighborhood. His farm is one of the best in the township, as it not only is highly cultivated, but the improvements are many and modern. His residence is a model one, and his barns commodious and scientifically constructed, while his equipment comprises all the latest improved machinery and appliances.

In 1891, Mr. Boruff married Maggie Kennedy, born Sept., 1865, also born in Drury township. They have two children: Charles, born Aug. 6, 1892, and Boyd, born Sept. 18, 1897, both at home. While voting the democratic ticket on national and state affairs, in local matters, he is very liberal. For nine years, he has been an efficient member of the school board, and is a man whose word is as good as another's bond, and who is recognized as an authority upon all subjects pertaining to agricultural improvements.

BOSOLD, Richard Theodore.—Maple Grove Farm, a beautiful tract of 100 acres has been brought to its present high state of development through the efforts of the owner, Richard Theodore Bosold, one of the leading farmers in Rural township. He was born in Ohio, in 1853, a son of John and Mary (Helfinhein) Bosold, both natives of Germany. They came to this country before their marriage on the same sailing vessel, and were married in Ohio. The father was at first a coal miner, but in 1865 he brought his family to Rock Island county, settling in Rural township, where he farmed until his death, in 1875. His wife died in 1888. They had eleven children, five of whom survive: Edward of Iowa, Richard Theodore, Mary, Amelia and George.

Richard Theodore Bosold was reared on the farm, and attended school in the winter months, assisting his father in the summer. In 1899, he bought the farm he now owns, making all the improvements upon the place, which is recognized as one of the best kept in the township. He takes pride in his home and surroundings, and his premises show this fact because of their neatness.

On Feb. 22, 1887, Mr. Bosold was married by Father Nierman of R. I. St. Mary's church, to Mary Sheehan, of Rock Island county, born Oct. 1, 1867. They became the parents of six children as follows: George Elmer, born Nov. 25, 1887; John Edward, Sept. 2, 1889; Thomas Cleveland, Nov. 8, 1891; Joseph Richard, Aug. 31, 1898; Helen Mary, Aug. 7, 1902, and Grace Genevieve, Dec. 16, 1909; and two died in infancy.

While he is a democrat with regard to national matters, in local affairs, Mr. Bosold is very liberal, preferring to cast his vote for the man rather than be bound by party ties. He has been a school director for nine years, and road overseer for seven years. Fraternally, he is a Modern Woodman. His religious connections are with the Catholic Church. Hard-working, reliable and thrifty, Mr. Bosold has made the best of every opportunity, and in all of his endeavors has been ably aided by his excellent wife.

BOULTON, Fred Wright.—Milan controls a large trade because of its location with regard to a contiguous rich farming section and its merchants recognizing this, handle a good quality of goods, and offer them at prices consistent with the volume of their business. One of those engaged in profitable merchandising here is Fred Wright Boulton, dealer in harness, whips, robes and similar goods, on Third street. He was born in Chattris, England, April 10, 1857, being a son of James and Ann (Wright) Boulton, natives of England, the father born there October 29, 1826, and the mother August 25, 1825. By trade the father was a shoemaker, and followed it all his life. The mother survives, making her home in England, being now eighty-eight years old.

Fred W. Boulton came to America in 1882, and located in Rock Island, where he followed the harness-making trade, having learned it in England, beginning his apprenticeship when fourteen years old. Mr. Boulton worked for different firms until 1893, when he established himself in business at Milan, and has built up a large and profitable enterprise. He is a well educated man, having attended the excellent English public schools.

In 1882 Mr. Boulton married Miss Anna Whetstone, a native of England, daughter of James Whetstone. She died January 7, 1885, the mother of four children: Flora, Mrs. Howard Hodge, of Detroit, Mich.; Emma, of Davenport, Ia.; Mabel, of California, and Plummer of Rock Island. In November, 1906, Mr. Boulton married Mrs. Helen Brown, daughter of J. C. Tarry. Mr. Tarry was born in New York, and his wife in Indiana. By trade he was a blacksmith, and had the honor of being a playmate, in boyhood, of the illustrious Abraham Lincoln.

Mrs. Boulton was first married to George E. Brown of Rock Island, who was born at Utica, N. Y., July 17, 1850, and came to Illinois when sixteen years old. For years he was in the insurance business. He died June 9, 1899.

Mr. Boulton is affiliated with the following lodges: Masonic, Knights of Pythias, Red Men, Modern Woodmen of America, Court of Honor, Mystic Workers and Eastern Star, and has occupied chairs in the Red Men, Court of Honor and Mystic Workers, and has also served as clerk in the Modern Woodmen of America. He has held political office, having been mayor for one term and councilman two terms. Mr. and Mrs. Boulton have a pleasant home, where they welcome their many friends with a generous hospitality. They are people of refinement, who appreciate the higher things of life.

BOWES, James.—Stock raising is a very important branch of agricultural life, and those who carry it on intelligently reap large profits. One of those thus engaged is James Bowes, owner of 320 acres of fine land on section 23, Edgington township. He was born in county Fermanshagh, Ireland, Oct. 19, 1836, a son of Robert and Jane (Adams) Bowes, farming people. The father came to the United States in 1845, and his family followed him a year later. The trips were made via New Orleans, and thence up the Mississippi River to Illinois. The father entered 162 acres in Bowling township, Rock Island county, which is now owned by his nephew, Edward Bowes. For some years prior to his death, the father lived retired at Reynolds, having turned the farm over to his son, Thomas Bowes. He was eighty years old when he died. Both he and his wife were Methodists, and he voted with the republican party. Their children were: Eliza, James, Sarah Ann, Robert, who died in Missouri; Jane; Thomas, who was the only one born in the United States, died at Reynolds; and Frank, who was killed at Champion's Hill in the Civil war.

James Bowes received but a limited education, and was put to work when very young to help support the large family. Although only nine years old when the family came here, he began doing almost the work of a man on the farm his father secured. After his marriage, Mr. Bowes located on eighty acres in Bowling township, which his father bought for him. Two years later, he sold that and moved to his present farm, on which he has made all the improvements, building the house, barn and other farm structures. Although not in active life for some years, he exercises a general supervision over his property.

On April 18, 1861, Mr. Bowes was married in Rock Island, to Sarah Jane Johnston, whose people lived in the same vicinity as Mr. Bowes' family. She is a daughter of Joseph Johnston, and he and his wife, with her brothers and sisters all remained in Ireland, but Mrs. Bowes came over here in young womanhood. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bowes:

Samuel McCall and wife

Jane, Mrs. George Vanatta of Missonri; Frank, at home; Sophia, who died August 28, 1912, was buried in Reynolds cemetery; Henrietta, Mrs. Frank Badham, living in the vicinity of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Adeline, Mrs. Chas. Crabs; James, of Cameron Ill.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Paul Carpenter; Lillian, Mrs. Henry D. Sparks, whose husband is president of a college at Shelbyville, Ill. Mr. Bowes has been a republican since he became a voter. He and his family are members of the Methodist church. He has always been a good manager, a hard worker and economical in his habits. When he earned money he knew how to invest it, and his success in life is well merited, for he is certainly a self-made man.

BOWES, Thomas (deceased).—The life of a good man teaches many lessons to the rising generation. His industry and thrift urge to similar habits, while his kindly deeds of charity and public-spirited manner of dealing with local issues set an example not easily forgotten. One of the men whose useful life was spent as a farmer, was the late Thomas Bowes, born in Mercer county, Ill., November 5, 1847, a son of Robert and Jane (Adams) Bowes. A sketch of these excellent parents is given elsewhere in this work. Thomas Bowes grew to manhood in the neighborhood of Preemption and Reynolds, Ill., receiving a common school education, which was supplemented by a course at a commercial college. He worked for his father until his marriage, in 1869, and continued to live at home for the following year, when he located on a farm adjoining the homestead in Bowling township. This he operated until he retired to the family residence at Reynolds, where he passed away, in February, 1902, dying firm in the faith of the Methodist church, of which he was a consistent member. In politics, he was a republican.

On February 11, 1869, Mr. Bowes married Cassie A. Ball, born near Yellow Springs, Greene county, O. She came in girlhood, a daughter of Preston Nicholas and Mary (Beal) Ball, to Rock Island county with her two brothers. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Bowes were as follows: Thomas Edgar who married Lizzie Hicks, has issue,—Leota Marie and Rolland Edgar, and they all reside on the homestead; Lennie Warner who died in infancy; and Dottie Alma who is also deceased. During the time he lived in Bowling township, Mr. Bowes took an active part in local matters, although he never desired office. He brought up his son to the same calling as the one he followed all of his active life, and left behind him not only a valuable property, but also a good name and reputation for unblemished honor. Such a man is a credit to any community, and his loss is not easily forgotten.

BOYER, John A. (deceased).—Among the men whose early labors contributed to the development of Rock Island county, Ill., as a farming community, none are more deserving of mention than the late John A. Boyer, who came to this county in 1836 and spent the active years of his life here in agricultural pursuits. Born near Louisville, Ky., in October, 1809, a son of Jacob Boyer, he received an ordinary education in the public schools of his native state and Indiana, and was reared to become a tiller of the soil.

Mr. Boyer, on his arrival in Rock Island county, in 1836, spent some time as a resident of the city of Rock Island, where he served in the capacity of court bailiff, but after his marriage purchased a small tract of land on section 1, township 17, range 2 west, now in South Rock Island, and added to it until he had eighty acres. He subsequently bought forty acres in section 12, Black Hawk township, and there erected a small home, which is still standing, one of the land-marks of the township. This property was covered by a heavy growth of timber, but this was cleared off by Mr. Boyer and his adopted son, Thomas Campbell, who had been taken and reared by him from the time he was a nine-year-old orphan lad. There Mr. Boyer and Mr. Campbell continued to reside together for forty years, harvesting crops and each year improving the land and adding to its stock and equipment. In 1886 Mr. Boyer and his family made a pleasure trip to the South, but on the return journey, at St. Louis, Mrs. Boyer sickened and died, her body being brought back to the old home place for burial in Chippewa cemetery. Mr. Boyer went on a trip to California in 1891, and there his death occurred in that year, he being brought back to rest at the side of his wife.

Mr. Boyer was one of Black Hawk township's good and reliable citizens, faithful to his friends, honest in his business transactions, and public-spirited in fulfilling the duties of citizenship. Originally a republican, he later transferred his allegiance to the democratic party, and continued to give his support thereto up to the time of his death. He served efficiently as supervisor of Black Hawk township for two terms, and also as deputy sheriff. His fraternal connection was with the Masons, while his religious faith was that of the Baptist church, which he attended consistently and supported liberally, being one of its deacons.

Mr. Boyer was married in Rock Island, Ill., to Mrs. Zerniah (Phillips) Robbins, who was born in Connecticut in 1806. They had no children, but lavished all their love and care upon their adopted son, who will ever cherish them in loving memory.

BRACKER, Diedrich H.—While there are a number of magnificent farms in Canoe Creek township, that one known as Rose Lawn Farm is one of the finest in every respect. It comprises 407 acres, 312 of which are on section 7, and contains a beautiful residence and three commodious barns. This farm is the property of Diedrich H. Bracker, one of the most enterprising farmers of Rock Island county. He was born in Germany, in 1846, being a son of Detlef and Margaret (Lunenburg) Bracker, both of whom passed away in Germany. They had ten children, several of whom are still living. These parents were excellent people, who did their full duty to their children, and rounded out useful, Christian lives.

In 1867, Diedrich H. Bracker came to the United States in search of a new home, where he could work out his ideas. At first he lived at Davenport, Ia., working by the day, but later came to Rock Island county, buying eighty acres in Coe township, and after he had improved it, he sold the property at a profit. In 1882, he purchased 256 acres in Canoe Creek township, to which he has added more land from time to time. Among other improvements on this farm is a well equipped blacksmith shop, which he knows how to operate, for he is a blacksmith by trade.

The marriage of Mr. Bracker occurred in 1869, when he was united with Elizabeth Hamberg, born at Moline, Ill. They have five children: Herman who is at home; Catherine who is a music teacher of Chicago; Margaret who is also of Chicago; Emil who was married in 1912, is now an appreciated teacher in the State University of Agriculture at Corvallis, Ore.; and Mabel who is at home. In politics, Mr. Bracker is a republican, and has served faithfully and well as road commissioner and for twenty-one years as a school director. The Lutheran church holds his membership. In reviewing the life of a man like Mr. Bracker it is well to pause a moment and reflect what indomitable courage and unflinching honesty of purpose it required for a man strange to the language and ways of this country, to come here and succeed as he has. Mr. Bracker's life is a strong confirmation of the fact that "honesty is the best policy" in the end, even though it sometimes does appear that dishonest captains of industry flourish. He has friends all over the county, who appreciate him, and are only too glad to have him accept nomination to office. Probably he could have any one within their gift, if he were willing to assume its duties.

BRADFORD, Eli, M. D.—The conscientious physician of today is kept fully busy in attending to the requirements of his patients, and keeping abreast of modern research, and scientific discovery. The medical men of Rock Island are as a class far above the average, and one who stands out for his ability and devotion to his work, is Eli Bradford. He was born at Hamlet, Mercer county, Ill., November 19, 1861, a son of William W. and Maria P. (Stevens) Bradford. The father was born in Switzerland county, Ind., in 1832, but came to Mercer county, Ill., in 1855, settling on a farm near Hamlet. The following year, he returned to his old home, where he was married to Miss Maria P. Stevens, and brought his young bride back to the home he had made for her. There they lived until a family of five boys were all practically grown to manhood's estate, when they moved to Rock Island, coming here in 1893. The father died here in 1897, but the widow survives, making her home at Rock Island.

Dr. Bradford attended the district school until fourteen years old, when he entered Jackson academy at Jackson, Mich., and from there went to the Chicago Homeopathic Medical College of Chicago, from which he was graduated in 1886. As a young physician, he then moved to Wayne, Neb., where he practiced for six years. In the summer of 1892, Dr. Bradford, who had married in the interval, with his wife and son, came to Rock Island, locating at almost the same street number as his present home, No. 602 Eighteenth street, near to the business center, yet in the quiet of pleasant residential surroundings. For twenty years he has been engaged in a general practice, and during this time has endeared himself, not only to those to whom he has ministered, but others who are proud to be numbered among his friends.

On December 27, 1886, Dr. Bradford was married to Miss Mary I. Vannata, of Reynolds, Ill., daughter of Thomas and Sarah A. (Rebbins) Vannata. Her father was one of the early settlers of Rock Island county, coming with his parents from Pennsylvania in 1832, settling on the banks of the Mississippi river, where his father conducted a trading post. As a boy, he was well acquainted with Black Hawk and other notable Indian chiefs of this region. One son, Glen T., has been born to Dr. and Mrs. Bradford. Dr. Bradford has traveled extensively with his family, throughout the United States, and is planning to visit Old Mexico in the near future. The family belong to the First Methodist church, rendering very efficient assistance in all its good work. Politically, Dr. Bradford is a republican, but has never cared to enter public life. He has never mixed outside business with his profession, so he is not connected with great business interests, although always ready to lend his aid in promoting worthy improvements. He feels that if a physician performs his full duty to his patients, he has enough to do to keep him busy. Possessed of a winning personality, genial in manner and helpful by disposition, Dr. Bradford is a man who is a friend to his patients, as well as a physician, and helps them just that much more.

BRAYTON, Stephen, a substantial retired farmer still owning 280 acres, and merchant, one of the old settlers of Rock Island county, and a man widely known and universally respected, served as a soldier in the Civil war, and is entitled to every consideration from his neighbors in Illinois City where he now lives. He was born November 24, 1836, on the old homestead on Copperas Creek, Buffalo Prairie township, a son of Stephen and Catherine (Coleman) Brayton, who had children as follows: Mary Jane, Joseph, Stephen, William, Coleman, Gideon, Martha A., Russell, Lucy A., Elizabeth and John. The father was born in Canada, being a son of Gideon F. Brayton. His wife bore the maiden name of Brayton. The great-grandfather on the paternal side was of Scotch birth, but settled in Canada. The grandfather, Gideon Brayton, came to Rock Island county at an early day, and died at Rockford, Ill., as did his wife. He was a farmer all his life. Stephen Brayton was ten years old when brought from Canada to Michigan, and from there the family went to Ohio, thence to Indiana, and finally came to Illinois. He married near La Porte, Ind., and later he and his wife went to Iowa, locating near Fairport, but finally came to Buffalo Prairie township, taking up 160 acres of land in 1836. Here they became prominent, and the father served as constable, and both took an active part in the Baptist church.

Stephen Brayton, Jr., attended school in the old log house, which was furnished with slab benches and a huge fireplace in which were burned big logs. He was reared as any farmer boy of his time, working hard and appreciated his educational advantages. Until his majority he worked for his father, with the exception of the time he served in the army. On September 10, 1861, he enlisted for three years, in Company H, Forty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Holly and Colonel John E. Smith. He served until the siege of Vicksburg, June 26, 1863, when his right arm was shot below the elbow, necessitating three amputations to the elbow. Gangrene set in, and he spent three months at the hospital at Memphis, and three more at the St. Louis hospital, being then discharged and came back home. During the time he was at the front he saw some hard fighting, being in the three-day fight before Fort Donelson; two days at Shiloh; in the battles of Corinth, Meden Station, La Grange, Holly Springs, Jackson, Miss., and Champion's Hill, from whence they marched on to Vicksburg, where he suffered so severely. Returning home, he attended a soldiers' college held at Fulton, Ill., and later went to Iowa, where he began working as a house painter. Still later he went into a hardware business with his brother, G. F., at Minburn, Ia., they later establishing themselves in the same line at Persia, Ia. Returning to Rock Island county, Mr. Brayton bought the old homestead in Buffalo Prairie township, and operated it for ten years, when he retired to Illinois City. He belongs to the W. J. Wylie Post of Illinois City, and has served as its commander upon two occasions. In religious faith, he is a Methodist. Politically, he is a staunch republican. Honest, steadfast, always striving to do what he believes to be his full duty, Mr. Brayton has struggled through some heavy discouragements, and is now one of the responsible, reliable men of his community.

BREADON, Thomas.—Ireland has given us some of our best citizens, for the sons of the Emerald Isle are to be found among our most distinguished statesmen and learned professional men, as well as among the industrious laboring class. One of those proud of his Irish birth, who is now residing in Rock Island county, is Thomas Breadon, a retired farmer of Reynolds. He was born in Ireland, January 12, 1840, a son of Thomas and Mary (Foster) Breadon, who lived and died in Ireland. Their family consisted of seven children.

Owing to lack of means, Thomas Breadon received but meagre educational advantages, but learned to work on the home farm, and was taught to be honest and to respect the rights of others. When he was thirty-five years old on June 12, 1879, he was married by Rev. Moffet, of the Aughadruman Church, of County Fermagh, Ireland, to Miss Mary Jane Wiggins, born June 7, 1855, a sketch of whose family is found elsewhere in this work. One year after marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Breadon came to the United States, landing in New York, from whence they came to Preemption, Mercer county, Ill., and spent three years in that neighborhood. Mr. Breadon working for a farmer. He then engaged with another farmer for a year, but by that time was so homesick that he returned to Ireland. After a few months, he came back to the United States and for two years worked in and about Preemption. He then rented fifty acres near Reynolds for a year and following this, he rented a large farm from William Johnston, and at the end of two years, rented 300 acres from another man. By this time he was able to buy 120 acres in Bowling township, and operated it sixteen years, when having by that time gained enough to retire upon, he settled in Reynolds which has continued to be his home.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Breadon were: Georgie, born on the Atlantic Ocean and named after the ship, February 29, 1880, was married June 17, 1903, to Albert Johnson and they have three children, Ruth, Olive and Helen; Margaret, Mrs. Bruce Taylor of Kansas, born at Preemption, Ill., and is a twin to Clara, June 24, 1882, has three daughters, Mary, Ruth and Dorothy; Thomas J., who died when three years old, was born August 2, 1890, died October 5, 1893, buried at Preemption Ill.; Clara B., Mrs. Christian Doonan of Bowling township, was married February 20, 1907, and has two sons: Emery and Marriion. Mr. Breadon is an Episcopalian, and his wife is a Methodist. In politics he is a republican. Since retiring from active life, Mr. Breadon has interested himself in civic matters, although he has never desired public office, and has sought through his vote and influence to secure better government and much-needed reforms. Mrs. Breadon is a member of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society and the Royal Neighbors. He is a member of the Orangemen.

BROQUIST, John Ludwig.—Agricultural supremacy is maintained only through the untiring efforts of those engaged in tilling the soil, and their following of the best methods of handling their acres. Within recent years mighty strides have been made forward in this line of work, in Rock Island county, and one who is developing a magnificent property is John Ludwig Broquist of Coe township. He was born in Sweden, June 23, 1860, son of Bankt Johan Broquist. In 1869, the father came to Moline, going thence to Port Byron where he worked for others for a time. His wife and family joined him in 1870, and he bought ten acres of land of section 21, Coe township, but after a year sold it to a Mr. Peterson. He then bought thirteen acres north of his first purchase, now owned by Peter Engdah. Still later he moved back to Port Byron, and lived there until his death in a train accident, when on his way to church, November 24, 1907, when he was seventy-seven years old. He married Lena Stava Johnson, and they had eight children: Albertene, Mrs. Victor Johnson; John L.; Oliver; Josephine, Mrs. Victor Carlson of Port Byron; Jennie, at home; Carl Pardon, on the old George Allen place next to that owned by William McRoberts in Coe township; one who died in Sweden; and Julia, who died in this country, and is buried in Pleasant Point Cemetery.

John Ludwig Broquist was educated at the Greenwood school and has always followed farming. In 1904, he bought seventy acres from D. H. Weidemann, on section 33, Coe township. He rebuilt the house and many of the fences, putting everything in excellent repair. He feeds the grain he raises, carrying about thirty-five hogs, eleven head of cattle and five head of horses.

In 1887, he was married to Augusta Wilhelmina Bergendahl, daughter of Gustav and Amanda (Anderson) Bergendahl, and they have had three children: Myrtle Lavina, a teacher, residing at home; Lillian Josephine died April 15, 1909, and is buried in Oak Grove Cemetery, Port Byron; and Lindof Wendall, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Broquist are sound, reliable people who have many friends throughout the county. Mr. Broquist belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America of Port Byron, and enjoys his fraternal association and lives up to his promises.

BROTMAN, Michael.—It has come to be a recognized fact that the best results are attained by letting contracts to experts in the various branches of the building trades, and this has made the business of contracting an important one. One of the contracting painters and paper hangers of Rock Island is Michael Brotman, whose reliability is unquestioned, and who has worked himself up to his present position through ability and conscientious performance of his obligations. He was born in Russia, in 1876, son of Jacob and Fanny (Coodiwisky) Brotman, both natives of Russia. They came to this country from England in 1907, and are now residing in Chicago, where he still works at his trade as a painter. Their children were: Leo, Michael, Jack, Ike and Sarah.

Michael Brotman attended school in Russia, and learned his trade there. Later the family moved to England, where he worked for a time at London, but in 1906, he came to Michigan, and from there to Chicago. In 1907, he arrived at Rock Island, and established himself in business at No. 39 Seventeenth street. His ability was at once recognized, and he has built up a very large business. Taking a pride in his work, he will not allow any done except in first-class style, and he is numbered among the leaders in his line in the county. In 1911, Mr. Brotman purchased a commodious building at No. 639 Seventeenth street, where he removed and put in a full line of paints, brushes, wall paper, etc.

In 1895, Mr. Brotman married Paula Schenofsky, while still residing in Russia. They have six children: Isaac, who is working with his father; Barney, who is a singer; Rosa, who is at home, and Aba, Alexander and Bessie, who are also at home. Mr. Brotman attends the Hebrew synagogue. Fraternally, he belongs to the K. O. J. lodge. In his life work, Mr. Brotman illustrates forcibly the fact that men are taught their trades much more thoroughly in the older centers of civilization than in this country. He understands every detail of his work, and brings to bear upon it a trained artistic perception that adds to the character of it, and to his reputation as a decorator.

BROWN, Gregory (deceased).—In the life of the late Gregory Brown, whose death occurred July 22, 1899, the youth of the present generation may find much worthy of emulation, for his career was one that serves as a striking example of what a man may accomplish through the force of his own industry and perseverance. Mr. Brown was born in Rome, N. Y., August 15, 1824, a son of Chauncey and Electa Lucinda (Talcott) Brown, of Oneida county, N. Y. Mr. Brown first came to Illinois in 1845 to visit an uncle Talcott, and while in the stage coach on this journey was deputized to assist in the capture of the murderers of Colonel Davenport. He returned to New York after a few months, but in 1847 again came to Illinois, purchasing 160 acres running a mile along Rock River in Zuma township. This land had been improved to some extent, and he stayed here one year, putting it under cultivation, when he again returned to New York and was there married, August 15, 1849, to Miss Antoinette (Marie) Brewster, who was born at Verona, Oneida county, N. Y., August 20, 1830, daughter of Justin and Sarah Ann (Hull) Brewster, the former born in Connecticut and the latter in Rhode Island, and granddaughter of Comfort and Parthina (Gay) Brewster, descended from a Puritan family, and John and Mercy Ann (Knowles) Hull, natives of Rhode Island. After his marriage Mr. Brown returned by way of railroad to Buffalo, N. Y., thence by lake boats to Chicago, by canal to Peru, and there hired a rig to drive his wife to the little log cabin of two rooms. From time to time as the years went by Mr. Brown added to his acreage and at one time owned 700 acres, all of which have been sold but 136 acres, which Mrs. Brown is operating with hired help. Mr. Brown bought and sold many farms in this part of the state, and was prominent as a public official, serving for many years as school treasurer. In 1870 he built a fine two-story frame house on the banks of Rock River, it being the largest and finest of any in the township at that time. Mr. Brown was affiliated with the Congregational church, although he helped all denominations. He was a member of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association. Mr. and Mrs. Brown had the following children: Chauncey J., who was born June 3, 1850, died March 24, 1902; Winfield Scott, who resides in Henry county, Ill.; Clara A., who lives with her mother; Sarah A., who married George Osborn of Rock Island; Antoinette M., who is at home; Albert L., who was born February 21, 1863, died July 10, 1898; Electa L., who married Benjamin F. Brooks, of Spring Hill, Whiteside county, Ill.; Julia Minerva, who married Golden Brewster, of Port Byron, Ill.; Luther M., who was born November 17, 1868, died May 24, 1904; and John H., who is of Zuma township.

BROWN, John Hull, who is engaged in farming, dairying and stock raising in Zuma township, is one of the representatives of an old and honored family, and was born in this township, September 13, 1872, a son of Gregory and Antoinette M. Brown. John Hull Brown was one of nine children born to his parents and he lived on the home place until his marriage, December 19, 1895, to Miss Jessie Bull, who was born June 7, 1875, in Buffalo Prairie township, Rock Island county, a daughter of H. J. and Samantha (Brown) Bull, the former a native of Elkhart, Ind., and the latter of Ohio. Mrs. Brown's grandparents were Stephen and Mary (Sullivan) Bull, the former of New York and the latter of Ireland, and Alex and Catherine (Menephey) Brown, the former of Virginia and the latter of New York. All of the grandparents came to Rock Island county in 1853, settling on farms in Buffalo Prairie township, where the grandparents on the maternal side engaged in farming until 1872, and then moved to Iowa, where both died, the paternal grandparents having gone to that state a year previous. Mrs. Brown's parents were married in Rock Island county and moved to Iowa, but returned to this county and later moved to Missouri. After four years they again came back to Rock Island county, where the father died February 19, 1905, while his widow still survives and makes her home in Silvis. After his marriage, John H. Brown rented a farm from his father, but after two years went to Crawford county, Mo., where he purchased 120 acres of land, but at the time of his brother's death, ten months later, he returned to assist his father on the home place, working there until the latter's death, when he commenced working for the estate, and in 1901 he bought his present tract of fifty-three acres in Zuma township from the estate of his brother Albert L. Brown. He has erected all of his own buildings and has made numerous improvements, now having one of the finest farms of its size in the township. He also rents land from his mother and sisters, and raises a good grade of cattle and horses and Poland-China hogs. He is a member of the United Brethren church, affiliates fraternally with Joslin Camp No. 1719, Modern Woodmen of America, and in political matters is independent, serving as school director since 1900. He and his wife have had the following children: Gregory Walter, born October 4, 1896; Horace Jasper, born December 27, 1897; Alice Julia, born May 16, 1900; Earl Albert, born June 26, 1903; and Ruth Mildred, born May 6, 1908.

BROWN, William R.—In every town and village of Rock Island county are certain men who have retired from active life, having earned years of ease because of their successful ventures in the business world. Such a man is William R. Brown of Milan, Ill. He was born here, September 17, 1860, being a son of William H. Brown, born February 18, 1836, in Pennsylvania. His wife, born in Maryland, April 13, 1819, was married first, December 8, 1839, to Emanuel Crowell. They came to Illinois in 1854, and were married December 7, 1859. They located in Rock Island county. By trade he was a carpenter and he helped to erect a number of the buildings in the vicinity of Milan, where he made his home the greater part of the time after coming to the county. He had three brothers who came west with him: Alexander R., Jasper N., and Robert A., the latter being a Methodist minister once, of Dwight, Ill. The mother died September 7, 1890, in Milan, while the father died December 10, 1908, aged seventy-two years, twenty-nine months, twenty-two days. These parents were of Scotch and German ancestry, respectively.

While William R. Brown is the only child born to his parents, he has two half-sisters, Mrs. Carrie Puterbaugh of Peru, Ind., and another, Mrs. Angeline Grove of Denver, Colo. For twenty-eight years, Mr. Brown conducted a livery and feed business in Milan, but retired from the livery business in 1908, and from the feed stable, June 20, 1911. At present he is living retired. He still owns the livery barn, and has other city property. He belongs to the Methodist church, having been brought up in it, as his parents were also members of this denomination. Mr. Brown has never married. He is a sound, reliable, substantial man, whose name is known all over the county, and who commands universal confidence and respect. He was tax collector for three years and has been town clerk for ten years.

BRUMBAUGH, John H., has lived in Rock Island county for more than thirty-five years and for several years past has been engaged in business on his own account, mainly in Moline. He was born in Holmes county, Ohio, April 1, 1850, a son of Calvin and Agnes (Pinkerton) Brumbaugh, natives of Maryland and Pennsylvania, respectively. When he was seven years old his parents moved to Wapello county, Ia., and there he attended the public schools. Later he learned the trade of wagonmaker and blacksmith, to which he has since given the most of his attention. In 1876 he came to Moline and for some six years was employed by the Moline Plow Company, becoming a foreman there. In 1882 he embarked in business for himself and has since built up an excellent line of patronage; is prepared to do horseshoeing, wagonmaking, and also wagon painting, and has established a reputation for skill and high-class workmanship. Mr. Brumbaugh stands well with his business associates. He has belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America for the past twenty years.

Mr. Brumbaugh was married in Iowa, July 20, 1871, to Anna F. Littler, a daughter of George and Mary Littler. Three children have been born of this union: Arthur R., George L., and Vera C. The last named is the wife of Carl Lundburg, of Moline; George is private secretary to Wm. Butterworth; and Arthur is foreman in the Mitchell Automobile Works at Racine, Wis.

BRUNER, Hulbert Parks.—There are few callings which make such liberal returns for effort expended as farming, and yet it cannot be entered blindly, without training, if success is expected. The modern farmer must be just as carefully trained as any other business man, and those who are the most prosperous are the ones whose early years were spent amid rural surroundings. One of the enterprising agriculturists of Rock Island county is Hulbert Parks Bruner of Andalusia township, owner of 130 acres of sections 31 and 32. He was born in Edgington township, on the old Bruner homestead, October 26, 1857, a son of William and Harriet (Brandenburg) Bruner, and grandson of Solomon Bruner. The latter was born in Pennsylvania of Dutch parentage. He married a Miss Fahnstock, and they moved to Rising Sun, Ind. Later, they came to Rock Island county, settling at Edgington Center, where he became the owner of eighty acres of land. Returning to Indiana on a visit, Solomon Bruner died, his wife passing away in Rock Island county. William Bruner farmed until he was sixty years old, then retiring and going to reside in Rock Island, where he held the office of bailiff. Still later, he returned to his homestead to reside with his son, and there died. His wife passed away in a hospital at Moline. Their children were: Emma, who is Mrs. John Earhart of Rock Island; Frank who is a Methodist preacher of Chicago; Albert M., who is of Rock Island; Eliza, who is Mrs. Lemuel Taylor of Rock Island; H. P.; Oscar L., who has been sheriff of this county, and one who died in infancy.

Hulbert Parks Bruner spent fifty years on the Bruner homestead, growing up on it, and attending the district school that was located on his farm. When sixteen years old, he left school, although he had been doing a man's work before that, planting corn when only eight years old. When fourteen, he was able to follow the binder, and kept up with grown men. In 1908, he came to his present place, upon which he has already made some very desirable improvements, now having one of the best farms in the township. On November 8, 1879, Hulbert Parks Bruner married Amanda Young, daughter of Joshlin O. and Margaret (St. Clair) Young. Mr. and Mrs. Bruner have had the following family: Albert L., who lives at Rock Island City, married Mae Wood and has one child, Marie; Anna Ethel, who is a teacher in Carbon Cliff school; and Cleo, who is attending school. Mr. Bruner is a republican, and has served twenty years as a school director, and also as tax collector. He is a Methodist in religious faith, and endeavors to live out in his life the creed he so earnestly professes. Few men are better liked than he, and he holds the full confidence of all who know him.

BRUSSEL, Frank N.—Many of the farmers of Rock Island county have beautiful homes, set amid exquisite surroundings, and supplied with all modern conveniences enjoyed by city people. They take a pride in their premises, and are constantly adding to their improvements. One of the representatives of this class is Frank N. Brussel, who has been farming in this county for nineteen years. He was born January 28, 1878, in Muscatine county, Ia., a son of Charles and Rosa (Ticmone) Brussel. They came to America in 1867, landing in New York, from whence they went direct to Davenport, Ia., but twenty-three years ago they moved to Rock Island county. The father passed away here April 27, 1900, having been killed in an accident. His widow survives, living at Sherrard, Ill., aged sixty-three years. The children of these parents were: Sylvester of Taylor Ridge, who is a dealer in cement; Charles, who is of Taylor Ridge; Mary, who is the wife of Fred Hartman, a farmer of Andalusia, Ill.; Frank N.; Joseph, who is living west of Taylor Ridge; John, who is a teamster of Milan, Ill.; Rosa, who is the wife of Clyde Snyder, living one mile west of Taylor Ridge; Ida, twin sister of Rosa, who is the wife of John Boyman of Sherrard, Ill.; Edward, who is of Sherrard; George and Benjamin, who are of the same place as Edward. Frank N. Brussel was educated in Rock Island county, and brought up on a farm. On March 7, 1910, he bought his present fine property, called Pleasant View, which is admittedly the most beautifully located of any farm in Bowling township. It is on an elevation less than one-half mile from Taylor Ridge, from which may be obtained a splendid view of the surrounding country. His house is a two and one-half story frame structure, supplied with hot and cold water and other modern conveniences. The barn is in excellent condition, and all the surroundings bespeak a careful management and good business sense. The orchard is a fine one, and yields bountifully. Mr. Brussel was married February 28, 1910, to Miss Mary Downer, daughter of Willard and Gildy Downer of Cedar county, Ia. The marriage took place in Macon county, Mo., and the young couple came the following month to their new home. They have earned the confidence and respect of their neighbors, and are leaders socially among the younger set in Bowling township.

BRUSSO, Frank C., owner of eighty acres of well-cultivated land on section 29, Andalusia township, is one of the progressive farmers of Rock Island county. He was born at Davenport, Ia., October 8, 1857, a son of Charles and Annie Wilhelmina Christine (Glich) Brusso. The paternal grandfather was a French soldier, under Napoleon, and was in the historic march to Moscow. Charles Brusso, the father, was born in Berlin, August 4, 1818, and was a hostler for a large distiller abroad, and later was made a ganger. The mother was a native of Schwait-on-the-Oder, born in 1822. They emigrated to the United States with their one child, having lost one in Germany, arriving in New York via the old sailing vessel Black Petro, a two-masted ship, after having been six weeks on the ocean. They lived in Troy, N. Y., in Ohio, and Indiana before they settled in Davenport, Ia., where the father died, July 26, 1909. The mother died in Andalusia in 1900. She belonged to the German Lutheran church, but the father was not connected with any religious sect. In politics he was a republican. Their children were: Augusta, who died in Davenport; Ida, Mrs. David Reddig, who died in Rock Island; Fred, of Sacramento, Cal., who married Sarah Ann Strickman; Robert, of Carbon Cliff, Ill., who married Roxie Ann Strickman; Frank C.; Emma, Mrs. William Seger, who lives at Randolph, Neb.; and Charles, who is a steamboat captain, lives at Andalusia, Ill.

Frank C. Brusso grew to manhood in Andalusia, Ill., and had the privilege of going to school to Emma Clark, Julia Hausman, Hattie Eby and Walter Ayres. When he was fifteen years old, he left school to go to work away from home, although from the time he was nine years old he had been doing a man's work for his father. For a year he was employed by William Richards in Andalusia township, receiving only his board and clothes for his labor. On account of the death of this employer, his plans were changed, and for eight or nine years he worked among various farmers, and on steamboats as assistant engineer, running between Alma, Minn., and the mouth of the White river. Following his marriage in 1880, he settled in Andalusia, there remaining until March, 1891, when he bought and moved on his present farm. That same year he built a new house and made other improvements, and in the fall of 1911 constructed a silo on his property. All of his operations are carried on according to modern methods.

On May 22, 1880, Mr. Brusso married Christina Amelia Johnson, born August 6, 1858, in Sweden, who came to America when fifteen years old, to join her parents who had come to Henry county, Ill. Her education was received in Sweden. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Brusso were: Annie, who died at the age of twenty-four years; Charles C., who is a stationary engineer at Carbon Cliff; James, who lives at Moline; and Fred, Edward and Arthur at home. Two children died in infancy. Mr. Brusso is a republican and has held several of the township offices, including those of school director and highway commissioner. Both he and his son Charles are Masons, belonging to the lodge at Andalusia, and another son has just taken the first degree. Having had a long and varied experience, Mr. Brusso has a broad outlook on life, and while he does not belong to any church, is a good Christian man, who gives everyone his due, and lives up to his principles. His wife is a Lutheran.

BUCKLEY, VIRGIL M., a well known and highly respected citizen of Rock Island county, operating the old Benjamin Ray Davis farm, was born February 19, 1871, and is a son of William Henry and Hannah Elizabeth (Harry) Buckley. William Henry Buckley was born in Pennsylvania in 1824 and after he finished his school period worked on a canal boat until he came west to what is now Muscatine, Ia., where he remained for a short time and then crossed the river to Buffalo township, Rock Island county, Ill. He bought forty acres in Drury township, to which he later added eighty acres, and this remained his home until death, February 22, 1875. He married Hannah Elizabeth Harry, who was born in Franklin county, Pa., and died November 19, 1896. They had the following children: John Allen, who lives in Nebraska; William Henry, who lives at West Liberty, Ia.; Mary, deceased, who was buried on what was known as the Hecker farm, in Drury township; Joseph Hamawalt, who lives at Colfax, Ia.; James Finley, who died at the age of three years and was buried in the cemetery where the ashes of the parents rest; George E., who lives at West Liberty, Ia.; and Richard More and Virgil M., the former of West Liberty, Ia., and the latter of Rock Island county. The above family was reared in the Baptist church.

Virgil M. Buckley was married February 12, 1901, to Miss Atlanta Davis, and they have one son, Ray, who was born December 8, 1901. Benjamin Ray Davis, father of Mrs. Buckley, was born in Vermillion county, Ill., in 1835, a son of John Wesley and Mary (Lamb) Davis, the former of whom was a native of Tennessee and the latter of Indiana, and they were married in the latter state and in 1833 moved to Vermillion county. Four years later they moved to Fulton county, Ill., where they lived for sixteen years, where the mother died in 1844 and was laid to rest one and one-half miles northeast of Fairview. The father then moved to Knox county, Ill., where he died in 1858, his remains being taken back and laid by the side of his wife. To them had been born nine children: Lyday, wife of William Cutbrell, both of whom are now deceased; Joseph J., who is deceased; Benjamin Ray; Elizabeth, who was the wife of Charles Parker, both dying in Iowa; Rachel Ann, who was Mrs. Thomas Brown, is deceased; Lavina

Ellen, who was the wife of Green Parker, both deceased; and Mary, who is Mrs. Lewis Kline, residing at Abington, Ill. Benjamin Ray Davis had but meagre school advantages. At the age of twelve years he hired out to farmers in Fulton county and continued to work on farms until he was twenty years of age, when he went to northern Iowa and Minnesota. When he first located at Chickasaw, Ia., people had to travel a distance of 130 miles through the wilderness to reach a settlement where provisions could be obtained, and in 1855 he remembers traveling for seventy miles across the prairie without seeing a house of any kind. In 1857 he settled in Howard county, Ia., and on the first of October of that year was married to Lydia Sigler. They continued to live in Saratoga township, Howard county, until 1862, when they left there and came to Rock Island county and for a short time lived near Illinois City. Mr. Davis then moved on a farm adjoining the one he purchased two years later and which is still his home. In 1865 he bought his first fifty-three acres which were covered with timber and underbrush, it having been but recently laid out and no improvements having been made. He built a log cabin just across the road from his present handsome residence and kept on making improvements and later added another forty acres, it being situated on section 24, but this second purchase he sold and continues to live on the original tract situated on section 19. It is now a valuable property. To Mr. and Mrs. Davis six children were born as follows: Mary C., who resides at home; Lizzie, who is the wife of Thomas J. Nolle, lives in Mercer county, Ill.; Ancil J., who is a resident of Wilton, Ia.; Sarah J., who is the wife of Henry Noble, of Mercer county; Lovina, who is deceased, was the wife of William Gale, of DeWitt county, Ill.; and Atlanta, who is the wife of Virgil M. Buckley, and they reside on the home farm. During the Civil war, Mr. Davis was in the service for one year, a member of Company I, Twenty-eighth Illinois Infantry, enlisting at Moline in 1865 and being discharged exactly one year later, on March 5, 1866, at Brownsville, Tex. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Davis and wife are members of the Baptist church. In politics he is a republican.

BUDELIER, Gustav.—Of late years farming has paid so well that many of the agriculturalists are able to retire early and live in ease the remainder of their days, secure in the enjoyment of the comforts their industry has provided, they round out a useful life, and set an example of thrifty independence. One of these prosperous retired farmers, residing at No. 1920 Seventeenth street, South Rock Island, is Gustav Budelier, born in Baden, Germany, November 12, 1849, son of Frank J. and Katharine (Schreiber) Budelier. The father was born July 19, 1820, and the mother February 15, 1828, both in Germany. The father after following farming in his native land until 1875, came to America, and bought a farm in Mercer county, Ill., which continued to be his home until he moved to Rock Island and here died in 1895.

Until he was seventeen years old, Gustav Budelier attended school in Germany. When eighteen years old, he came to America, landing in New York. He at once came west to Tiskilwa, Bureau county, Ill., where he worked on his uncle's farm two years, after which he worked on a farm in Mercer county for two years, then rented for four years, when he bought a farm, living on it until 1904. He then came to Rock Island, and buying his present home, has since lived retired.

On March 15, 1877, Mr. Budelier was married to Mary F. Bantle, by whom he had five children: Winnie, who is the wife of William Carroll a farmer of Iowa; John, who married Mabel Harrison, is a farmer in Iowa; Grace, who lives at Chicago; Julia, who married William J. Spence, lives in Cleveland, Ohio; and Lillian, who died March 31, 1912. Mrs. Budelier died, and on January 8, 1891, Mr. Budelier was married to Miss Mary Mader, daughter of Eberhardt Mader and his wife Hannah (Brasner) Mader, both of whom were born in Germany, but now reside at Rock Island. Mrs. Budelier was born May 24, 1870. Mr. and Mrs. Budelier are the parents of three children: Clarence, Harry and Carl, all at home. Mr. Budelier was reared a Catholic. In politics, he is a staunch republican. Having always done what he believed to be his full duty, he has been amply rewarded, and enjoys not only a material prosperity, but also the confidence and respect of his associates.

BULL, Allen R. (deceased).—For many years one of the old residents of Rock Island county, and for years a leading farmer of Buffalo township, the late Allen R. Bull was a man of prominence in his community, and dying left behind him not only a family to mourn his loss, but a host of warm, devoted friends and business associates. He was born in Monroe county, N. Y., October 18, 1832, a son of Samuel and Irena (Baker) Bull, who passed away in New York state. Allen R. Bull attended the common schools, and early learned to farm. He came to Buffalo Prairie township about 1868, having stopped a short time in Indiana, and settling on the homestead of his widow, passed there forty-three useful, blameless years, dying November 13, 1910. In politics he was a republican.

In 1864, Mr. Bull was married in Allegheny county, N. Y., to Mary A. Baker, daughter of Horace and Saphronia (Wells) Baker. Mrs. Bull's paternal grandfather was an old settler in the town of Jay, Essex county, N. Y. He married Marshie Southmoyd and they died in Riga, Monroe county, N. Y. Her father, Horace Baker, was born in Jay, Essex county, N. Y., and all his life was a farmer, and died on the farm that had been his home for forty years. His wife, also a native of the same place as her husband died on this farm. They had the following children: Newton A., who died in Livington county, N. Y.; Harriet, Mrs. Caleb Southmoyd, who died in McGregor, Ia.; Erastus, who died in Rochester, N. Y.; Arthur, who died in Genesee county, N. Y., October 3, 1860; Mrs. Bull, who was born in Genesee county, N. Y., February 4, 1838, was educated in the public schools and an academy; Horace, who is in Colorado; Maria, Mrs. William Cleveland, a distant relative of former President Cleveland, who lives in Nebraska; and John, who died in Cedar Rapids, Ia.

BULL, Newton A.—The progressive spirit of the age is nowhere shown more markedly than in the agricultural districts. The methods of the modern farmers differ so materially from those of even a quarter of a century ago, that the business of farming has been revolutionized, and this line of endeavor has been placed on its proper footing of importance. One of the progressive farmers of Rock Island county is Newton A. Bull, owner of 100 acres of section 23, Buffalo Prairie township. He is a son of Allen R. and Mary A. (Baker) Bull, and grandson of Samuel Bull, a farmer of New York, who died in that state. Allen R. Bull was born October 18, 1832, and educated in the common schools of his neighborhood, following farming all his life. He was married in New York state, and about 1860, came to Rock Island county, settling in Buffalo Prairie township, where he became the owner of 220 acres, and here he died in 1910. He did not belong to any religious organization. In political faith he was a republican. His widow still resides on the home farm. The children of these parents were: Amos, who is deceased; Arthur, who resides in Buffalo Prairie township; Ethan, who is deceased; Newton A.; Ole, who resides in Buffalo Prairie township; and Allen Day, who resides in Iowa.

Newton A. Bull grew to manhood on the home farm, attending the Kimball public school, having among other teachers, E. L. Marston, Maggie Miller, Mary Miller and Nora Johnston. On March 1, 1899, he was married to Jennie Kane, daughter of John and Evelyn (Shuch) Kane of Andalusia. Mr. and Mrs. Bull are the parents of six children: John, Evelyn, Ruth, Allen, Mary and Glenn. Mrs. Bull is a Baptist, and active in the good work of that denomination.

For a year following his marriage, Mr. Bull remained at home, and then bought his present farm, upon which he located. It is one of the best developed places in the township, and he takes great pride in its appearance. Mr. Bull is a republican in political faith, but as yet has had no time to go into public life. Energetic, thrifty, a good manager and skillful farmer, he is correctly numbered among the leading farmers of his locality.

BURKETT, Jacob.—Retirement before old age creeps over one is sensible, because during long years of steadfast endeavor, a man earns the right to a period of rest while he is still young enough to enjoy himself. This has been proven to be the most desirable course by many of the most intelligent farmers of Rock Island county, among them being Jacob Burkett of Andalusia, Ill. He was born at Wheeling, W. Va., July 27, 1833, a son of William and Anna (Fowler) Burkett, natives of Bedford county, Pa., and Ohio, respectively, the mother having been born in 1795. There were six children in their family, but Jacob is the sole survivor. He was educated in the public schools of the places in which he lived, and worked hard all his life.

In 1857, Jacob Burkett came to Illinois, locating on a farm in Drury township. This remained his home for about twelve years, when he moved to Vernon, Ia., and operated a ferry boat for twelve years, running between Bentonport and Vernon, and carried on a teaming business. Returning to Illinois he settled down at Andalusia twenty-one years ago. During the Civil war, Jacob Burkett showed that his loyalty was of the right quality, by enlisting in 1863 for service in Company A, Ninth Iowa Cavalry. His captain was John G. Reed. His term of service continued until November, 1865, and he had charge of the mess wagons. The strain of lifting and hauling the supplies injured him, and he was discharged on account of his disability, at Davenport, Ia. After his return home, he resumed his farming, as did so many of the Boys in Blue of that period.

Jacob Burkett was married April 3, 1857, to Elizabeth Steckman, a daughter of John and Hetty Steckman, natives of Ireland and Pennsylvania, respectively. The father died in 1838, but the mother survived until December, 1876. The following are the living children of Mr. and Mrs. Burkett: John H., born in 1859, is flagman for the Rock Island Railroad; and Annie, born April 12, 1871. A republican, Mr. Burkett has served as a school director of Drury township. His daughter, who is a graduate of Wilton academy, also took a course at the Brown's Business College of Rock Island, and has taught school in both Iowa and Illinois. She belongs to the White Shrine of Jerusalem, Eastern Star, and Women's Relief Corps of Rock Island. Jacob Burkett belongs to Buford Post, G. A. R., of Rock Island, and two years ago became a Mason. During the many years Mr. Burkett lived in Drury township, he proved himself an excellent farmer and good neighbor, and his interest in Andalusia since his location here has been very pronounced. He and his wife are much beloved in their locality, for there are many who remember countless deeds of kindness and words of sympathy freely bestowed. It is such as they who form the great backbone of the nation, and enable it to maintain its position as a nation of homes.

BURT, Frederick Malachi.—The city of Rock Island is a center for many industries and activities and numbers among its successful business and professional men, a large number who have reached positions of responsibility through unusual proficiency in certain lines. As official stenographer and assistant secretary to the head clery of the Modern Woodmen of America, Frederick Malachi Burt fills a position of unusual prominence in a fraternal organization that has a membership of thousands of representative citizens who have aims and ambitions tending to advance and elevate humanity. Mr. Burt was born at Oswego, now St. Pauls, Kansas, November 3, 1874, and is a son of Hugh D. and Louise (Toepfer) Burt.

Hugh D. Burt was born near Ottumwa, Iowa, in February, 1840, and died at Rock Island, Ill., March 23, 1906. On June 1, 1861, at St. Louis, Mo., he enlisted for service in the Civil War, in the army of the Mississippi valley, and was a member of Company F, Seventh Missouri Volunteer Infantry, under Capt. Thomas Russell, took part in four regular battles and in the forty days' siege of Vicksburg, and was honorably discharged at St. Louis, Mo., June 14, 1864. He followed the business of flour and grist milling at Oswego and Osage Mission, Kans., up to 1877, and afterward at Nauvoo, Ill., Franklin, Iowa, and Fulton, Ill., until 1897, when he retired to Rock Island. He married Louise Toepfer, who was born at St. Louis, Mo., in April, 1845, and who is still a resident of Rock Island. They had eight children, five sons and three daughters, all but one of whom survive.

Frederick M. Burt was the fourth born in his parents' family. He first attended the parochial schools of the Roman Catholic church at Nauvoo, Ill., and later Fort Madison, Iowa, and was graduated from the high school at Fulton, Ill., in the class of 1892. From the age of fifteen years to eighteen he was employed in running a stationary engine in his father's mill at Fulton, Ill. In the same city he was employed by A. D. Mitchell, a grocer there, for two years, but he found the long hours in the grocery business left him little opportunity for either study or recreation, while the future showed little chance for advancement. Therefore he learned shorthand and completed the course in May, 1896, at the Northern Illinois college, Fulton, Ill., and in June of that year accepted his first position, that being in a real estate office in Chicago. Later he was employed in a board of trade office and still later in a commission house on South Water street, Chicago. On January 2, 1900, Mr. Burt entered the employ of the Modern Woodmen of America, which maintains its head office at Rock Island, Ill., as stenographer and in April, 1900, was appointed chief of the prohibited occupations department and official reporter. He still occupies the latter position and since July 18, 1911, has been assistant secretary to the head clerk.

On May 19, 1900, Mr. Burt was married to Miss C. Ellen Wentzel, at Rock Island, Ill., a daughter of Ephraim and Caroline Wentzel. They were natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. Wentzel being a veteran of the Civil war. In politics Mr. Burt is a democrat. In fraternal relationship he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, the Mystic Workers of the World and Knights of Columbus. In the latter organization he has been financial secretary, grand knight and P. G. K., with Allover Council No. 658, at Rock Island., and is now serving as a district deputy. Mr. Burt is a member of the Roman Catholic church.

BURTCHAELL, Thomas A.—The introduction of electrical appliances that are for use in both house and factory, has made necessary the special study of electricity. There are a number of men, skilled in their line, who devote their time and energy to the handling of contracts for the placing of those appliances, worked by electric power. One of these contractors is Thomas A. Burtchaell of No. 2014 Fifth avenue, Moline. He was born in New Jersey, in 1866, and resided there until he attained his majority, at which time he was employed by the People's Power Company as general contractor, continuing with this concern until he embarked in business for himself in 1902, as an electrical contractor. He employs twelve men, and does a large amount of business, as he is recognized as an expert in his line.

On December 5, 1894, Mr. Burtchaell was married to Clara Eliza Aswege, born in Moline, daughter of John and Lizzie (Weber) Aswege, natives of Germany, he born in Hanover, and she in Prussia. They came to the United States separately, and were married in Franklin Grove, Ill. By trade and occupation Mr. Aswege was a blacksmith and worked as such for the Moline Scale Company, but died April 22, 1901. His widow still lives in Moline. Mr. and Mrs. Burtchaell have three children: Frances E., John A. and Lucile Dorcas. Mr. Burtchaell is a member of the Episcopal church. In politics, he is a republican, and served two years as alderman from the Fourth Ward. He is both a Knight Templar and 32d degree Mason, and is very prominent in Masonic circles. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias and to the Odd Fellows. A man of prominence in his business, popular socially, Mr. Burtchaell has become one of the best known men of Moline, and enjoys in marked degree the confidence and respect of all who know him.

CAMBLIN, David W.—The pioneers of Illinois were brave, intrepid men, who, fearing nothing, made their way into almost unknown wilds, and conquered not only the savage Indians and wild animals, but reduced the land to cultivation, and developed towns and cities. A vast debt is due them, and their names are kept in honored remembrance not only in the hearts of their descendants, but also in just such records as the present one.

One of the men who comes of one of these good old pioneer families, is David W. Camblin of Rock Island, a retired carpenter. He was born in Ria township, Knox county, Ill., July 18, 1849, being a son of Thomas and Lydia (Jones) Camblin, the former born in Monongahela county, W. Va., May 19, 1818, and the latter born in the same place in 1819. The father was a cooper early in life, but later became a farmer. He first settled in Knox county, upon coming to Illinois, but later moved to Mercer county, where he became one of the influential men. He was progressive in his ideas, and introduced many new methods in his farming. Among other things, he was the first to plant a hedge fence, or buy a corn planter in the entire county. For twenty-one years he administered the law as a justice of the peace, and was assessor for three years. In 1895, he went west, settling at Elm Creek, Buffalo county, Neb., where he passed away in 1899.

David W. Camblin was educated in the country schools of Mercer county, and when twenty years old began learning the machinist's trade, but after three years' work at it, he resumed farming, and later learned to be a carpenter. Since the fall of 1911, he has lived retired at Rock Island. Mr. Camblin has always done what he believed to be his full duty, and is highly respected by all who know him.

While residing in Mercer county, Mr. Camblin was married to Miss Kate DeBerisford, ward of David Wilson. Her father, Mr. Robert DeBerisford, was a native of France, and her mother was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Corson of Milan, Ill. Mrs. Camblin's father was one of the engineers who planned the first bridge across Rock river, which was in those days thought to be too swift to bridge. It was while perfecting the detail of this bridge that a girder struck and killed Mr. DeBerisford, leaving to mourn him his bride of a few months. Later, their child was placed in the hands of Mr. and Mrs. David Wilson, who were influential people of Mercer county. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Camblin, three of whom survive: Sylvester, who married Ethlyn Dump-prope, is a carpenter and contractor, with two children, Earl and Tessie; Ivan lives at home and follows the carpenter trade, being a foreman; and Miss Mary resides with her parents at Rock Island. Those dead are: Wilson, who was born August 17, 1880, was killed by a train, June 25, 1899; and Walter, who was born August 12, 1885, died at the age of eleven months.

CAMERON, Earl, chief engineer of the Moline & Rock Island Manufacturing Company, one of the most expert men in his profession in this part of the state, and a very valued member of the official force of his company, was born at Rock Island, February 6, 1876. He is a son of Allen W., also born at Rock Island, April 3, 1849, and Nettie (Goff) Cameron, born at Springfield, Ohio, in 1854. The father was a ship carpenter, whose business took him to Beardstown, Ohio, for a year, but he returned to Rock Island. Later he went to La Clair county, Iowa, but after four years, returned again to Rock Island, which has continued to be his home. Both he and his son were born in the same house.

Earl Cameron was educated in the public schools of La Clair, and Rock Island, following which he took a course in engineering with the American Correspondence School. He worked on several farms in Iowa, but his ambition was for a mechanical life. His first position as an engineer was on a Mississippi river boat, where for a year he had charge of an engine. He then operated the engine on the ferry boat for three years, and in the fall of 1898, came with the Peoples Power Company, as fireman. Within three months, he was made assistant engineer, and continued as such for four years, when he was placed in charge as chief engineer. He has more than ten engineers and helpers under him, and his position is one entailing grave responsibility, but he is equal to the demands made upon him, as his daily work proves.

On September 17, 1901, Mr. Cameron was married at Rock Island to Olga Swanson, born at Rock Island, July 31, 1881, daughter of Gustave and Anna Swanson, both of whom died in this city. Mr. Swanson was a carpenter. Mr. and Mrs. Cameron have had one child—Arthur Paul, born in Rock Island, May 23, 1903, now attending school. He is a very bright little fellow, who promises to develop into a fine man. Mr. Cameron is liberal in his religious views. Politically he is a republican, but his public service is confined for the present to casting his vote for the candidates of his party. The family reside in a pleasant home at No. 4526 Seventh avenue, Rock Island. Through earnest endeavor, backed by natural ability, Mr. Cameron has risen to his present position of trust. Not only do his heads rely upon his judgment, but those in his charge know that in him they have a friend, and one who will guard their rights.

CAMP, William Dayton, of Sunny Slope Farm, and one of the most prosperous farmers of Canoe Creek township, has long been recognized as a leader in agricultural matters. He was born at Port Byron, Ill., May 30, 1865, a son of James and Mary (Wise-Wilson) Camp, both natives of Pennsylvania. James Camp was married first in Coe township to Miss Rowe, who had no children. They took a wedding trip with oxen across to Oregon, where for three years he worked as a blacksmith, and while on the trip they slept out on the Rocky Mountains. The first husband of Mary Wise was a Mr. Wilson, whom she married in Ohio, living there until after his death, and her second marriage. She had a son by her first marriage, Emmett W. Wilson of Idaho. The parents of W. D. Camp married at Ashland, O., and came to Port Byron in a buggy, drawn by one horse. Here he conducted a blacksmith shop until the fall of 1863, when he bought a farm, upon which he lived until his death on July 22, 1913, although in 1899, he moved to Hillsdale, but returned to the farm three years later. The following family was born to him and his wife: Elsworth E., of Grand Rapids, Wis.; Lula M., widow of Worthington Cain; William D.; Carrie, Mrs. William W. Cain of Coe township; and James E., at home.

William Dayton Camp resided with his parents until he was twenty-five years old, when he moved to LaPorte, Col., and worked for nearly a year. He then returned home and worked for his father until his marriage, after which he lived four years in Coe township. For the next four years he rented land and then moved to his father's homestead, which he rents. He also owns forty acres, adjoining the homestead. Mr. Camp is also a director of the Crescent Telephone Company, in which he has seven associates as members of the board.

On April 16, 1891, Mr. Camp was married to Sarah Elizabeth Genung, born in Coe township, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Dunmire) Genung, natives of New York state and Pennsylvania, respectively. They were quite young when they came to Coe township, where they resided until death claimed them, the father dying on November 24, 1891, and the mother on December 24, 1906. Mr. and Mrs. Camp became the parents of children as follows: Mildred, who was born December 15, 1892, and was married March 26, 1913, to J. W. Lafferty, and they reside at Lafayette, Ill., where he is a barber; Glenn, who was born June 3, 1894; Grace, who was born September 21, 1896; Vernon, who was born February 12, 1899; and Helen, who was born February 25, 1901. Like their father, they attended school in Enterprise district. Mr. Camp belongs to the United Brethren church, of which he is a trustee and steward. He is a republican, and served capably as supervisor for two years, and as road commissioner since 1907. Fraternally, he belongs to the Hillsdale lodge, Modern Woodmen of America, and the Mystic Workers of the same place. He is a man who is progressive in his ideas, and is interested in the advancement of his community. While he was on the board of supervisors he expended the public moneys economically and wisely, and inaugurated several much-needed improvements.

CAMPANA, Frank, senior member of the firm of F. Campana & Company, wholesale dealers in fruits, importers of Italian goods, who make a specialty of ice cream, is one of the men responsible for the wide-spread appreciation of Italian delicacies, which is steadily growing in Rock Island. With the introduction of this class of goods, has come a demand for them so that the business of importing and handling has become an important one. Mr. Campana was born in Italy in 1865, and his parents were both natives of the same country. The father was a fisher for the fish which are made into fancy sardines, and exported to this country from Italy. Although he has reached the remarkable age of ninety-five years, the father is yet living, residing in his native country. His wife died in 1905.

Frank Campana was brought up in his native land, and worked with his father until he came to this country in 1885, at which time he located in Cleveland, and went into the fruit business. In 1888, he returned to Italy, and married Antonia Pusedair, returning to Cleveland with his bride. In 1889, they came to Rock Island, where Mr. Campana opened a store at 223 Seventeenth street where every facility is afforded for the proper conduct of the rapidly increasing business. Ten children have been born of this marriage: Frank; Jennie; George; August; John, deceased; Francis, deceased; Marie; Tony; Charlie; and Anna. Mr. Campana is very liberal in his political views. A Catholic, he belongs to the parish of the Sacred Heart. The business is all in the family, as the company of the firm consists of his sons. Hard-working, thrifty, Mr. Campana has made a success of his enterprise, and is numbered among the substantial men of Rock Island county.

CAMPBELL, Hon. Thomas. — Rock Island county has sent a number of intelligent, capable, honorable men to the state assembly, where they have labored long and earnestly to secure the passage of measures calculated to prove beneficial to the people of the state, but among them all none have stood higher than the Hon. Thomas Campbell of South Rock Island. Mr. Campbell was born in Ireland, January 9, 1842, being a son of John and Margaret (McQuoid) Campbell, the former born in Ireland in 1806, and the latter in the same country in 1816. These parents had four children: Mary, wife of Robert Rutherford of Ross, Ia., was born April 9, 1840; Thomas; Margaret, born December 3, 1844, died March 8, 1871; and Robert, born January 17, 1848, died April 27, 1911. The father came to the United States in 1850, landing at New Orleans, La., where his wife was stricken down with ship fever. They came up the Mississippi river as far as St. Louis, where she was taken to a hospital, there dying, April 22, of that year. The bereaved husband came on to Rock Island county, and hired out as a day laborer, placing his children on a farm in this county.

Thomas Campbell was sent to live with a pioneer family, named Boyer, of Black Hawk township, this county, and attended the public schools there until he was twenty years old. He then enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for service during the Civil war, and was sent to Chicago, where he was accidentally shot in the knee, and subsequently lost his leg because of this. Returning to Rock Island county, Mr. Campbell resumed his farming, and has spent his life at this kind of work. For years he has lived in the same place, formerly known as Black Hawk, now South Rock Island, and is attached to the place because of many intimate associations.

On September 7, 1864, he was married to Miss Mary J. Carson, born January 10, 1843, in Marion county, Ind., a daughter of John and Mary (Johnston) Carson, the former born in Virginia, June 22, 1810, and the latter in the same state, July 5, 1813. Mr. and Mrs. Carson had children as follows: Sarah A., wife of Louis W. Padgett of Denver, Colo.; Eliza, wife of Hezekiah Ohaver, of Oklahoma; Catherine, wife of S. F. McDonald, of California, and Mrs. Campbell. Seven children compose the family of Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, being as follows: John T., born June 30, 1865, married Maggie James of South Rock Island; Ada B., born October 19, 1866, died July 18, 1909; Samuel W., born August 24, 1868, married Emma Churchill of Rock Island; Charles C., born November 20, 1869, married Anna Edwards of Rock Island; Mary A., born August 28, 1872, married Thomas Gallagher of Mercer county, Ill.; Albert H., born August 10, 1876, died February 19, 1904; and William R., born August 22, 1877, married Minnie Mathey of South Rock Island.

Mrs. Mrs. Roberts and Family

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell belong to the First Baptist church of Rock Island. Casting his first presidential vote for Mr. Lincoln during his second campaign, Mr. Campbell has continued to be prominent politically, serving as a member of the school board for eighteen years, supervisor for eight years, and county treasurer for four years. Always a staunch republican, he was honored by election to the lower house of the state assembly six years ago, and has been elected four times to the same office. Mr. Campbell is one of the best known men in this district, and is recognized as a statesman of high ability, and unblemished honor, whose efforts have been public-spirited in the truest sense of the word. There has never been a bill that he believed would prove beneficial to his people, brought up before the house, that has not received his hearty support, and he has always fought against those savoring of chicanery or double-dealing. During his eight years of public service, he has served on a number of committees, and given the best of his powers to decide the matters of moment brought before them. He was instrumental in organizing the Farmers' Institute of Rock Island county, and was president of it for four years, being the second man to hold the office. He has been one of the commanders of the John Buford Post, G. A. R., as well as one of its enthusiastic members, and is a charter member of the C. W. Hawes Camp No. 1550, Modern Woodmen of America. A veteran of the Civil war, he has been able to give intelligent support to measures relating to men of his own class, and has always shown sympathy and kindly interest in forwarding their rights, and providing for the support of those whose infirmities incurred in the service of their country, prevent them from taking care of themselves.

CAMPBELL, William, one of the old and honored residents of Rock Island county, Ill., who is engaged in farming operations near Sears, was born December 26, 1844, in Franklin, Pa., a son of William and Sarah (Hill) Campbell, natives of Scotland and Ireland, respectively. The father of Mr. Campbell, who was a lumberman by occupation, came to this country at an early day and settled in Pennsylvania, where he followed his chosen line of work for a number of years, he meeting an accidental death in 1847, after which Mrs. Campbell removed to Wisconsin. There were five sons in the family, and of these four are living: William; Alexander, a resident of Leclair, Rock Island county; and James and John, residents of the southern part of Illinois.

William Campbell spent his school days in Pennsylvania and Wisconsin, and as a youth engaged in agricultural operations in the latter state until 1863, in which year he went to Dubuque, Ia., and enlisted in Company E, Seventh Iowa Cavalry, serving with that regiment until the close of the war, when he was mustered out at Leavenworth, Kans., and later received his honorable discharge at Dubuque. He participated in a number of hard-fought battles, and always showed himself a brave and faithful soldier. At the close of the war, Mr. Campbell went to Indian Territory, where he remained for three years, and at the end of that period came to Rock Island county, where he has since continued to reside. He owns a fine home and six acres of land, and his farming operations have been uniformly successful. Mr. Campbell is a member of Rock Island Post, No. 243, of the Grand Army of the Republic.

On September 1, 1871, Mr. Campbell was married at Milan, Ill., to Mary E. Ailes, who was born in Ohio, September 9, 1848, daughter of Isaac and Jennie (Henderson) Ailes, farming people of Ohio who came to Mercer county, Ill., at an early period and continued farming there until their deaths. Mr. Campbell is one of the public-spirited men of Rock Island county, and he takes a keen interest in the political events of the day, but he has never cared to hold public office, preferring to give all of his time and attention to his farming interests. He is a republican. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have had six children: Jennie, who is the wife of John Kay; Ida, who is the wife of Stephen Legrand; Cora, who is the wife of Wm. S. Pate; George N.; Mamie, who is the wife of Jessie Moonly; and William, who died in infancy.

CANAGA, Jacob, an honored veteran of the Civil war, whose life since that mighty struggle has been one of ceaseless endeavor, for he has labored against disability incurred while fighting for his country, is one of the old residents of Moline, having lived here for nearly thirty years. He is now employed as a flagman on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, and is also acting as city constable. Mr. Canaga was born in Carrollton city, Carroll county, O., May 5, 1844, a son of Jacob and Sarah (Fisher) Canaga. The father was born in Newmarket, Harrison county, O., and the mother in Pittsburgh, Pa. The family moved to Nebraska about 1857, and there the father farmed, although prior to that was a millwright. In their old age, the parents were carefully tended by their devoted children, until death claimed them. The father belonged first to the Know Nothing party, and later to the republican party, and he and his wife were devout Methodists. The paternal grandparents were born in Alsace-Lorraine when it still belonged to France, and were quiet, law-abiding people.

Jacob Canaga grew up in Newmarket, where he attended school, and was trained in industrious, studious, temperate habits. He attended public school until going to Nebraska, when he helped on the family farm. On August 12, 1862, Mr. Canaga responded to the call of his country, and enlisted as a first class seaman on board the United States flagship Benton, of Admiral Porter's iron-clad fleet of the Mississippi, and remained until his discharge, August 20, 1863. This was the first boat that passed the Vicksburg batteries, and it was continuously under fire for forty-nine days and nights, until the surrender of Vicksburg. Mr. Canaga was in the move up to Haines' Bluff, up the Yazoo river, and in all the engagements of that campaign, as well as in the Duvall's Bluff engagement, the Red river expedition to Fort Duress, and others, always giving a faithful and loyal service.

On returning to Washington county, Neb., Mr. Canaga learned the trade of carriage painting, and followed this calling for some time. He was elected constable and later deputy sheriff, and was conscientious in the performance of his duties. About August 1, 1882, he came to Moline, where he was engaged in carriage painting, sometimes alone, and at other periods associated with partners, but in 1906 he suffered from a stroke of paralysis which crippled his right shoulder, and since then he has been employed as a flagman at railroad crossings. His political views have made him a republican, and he is now serving, and has been for some years, as city constable. Mr. Canaga also belongs to the R. H. Graham Post, G. A. R., No. 312, of which he is now (1913) senior vice-commander.

On December 22, 1885, Mr. Canaga was married at Cambridge, Henry county, Ill., to Marguerite Boylen, born June 6, 1862, daughter of Cornelius and Anna Boylen, natives of County Monahan, Ireland. Mrs. Canaga left her native county of Monahan, when sixteen or seventeen years old, about 1878, and came to Moline to reside with her brothers John and Thomas Boylen. They sent her to the Moline public schools until she had completed her education. Mr. and Mrs. Canaga have no issue. Both are highly respected residents of Moline, where Mr. Canaga's worth is appreciated. They reside in a comfortable home at No. 1622 Fourth avenue. Mr. Canaga has been compelled to make his own way in the world, for he was given no financial assistance, and his educational training in his youth was interrupted on account of the necessity of earning his own living. His war record does him credit, as does that of his career as a private citizen.

CANNAM, John Samuel, owner of a magnificent property, consisting of two farms, one of 160 acres on section 4, and the other of 40 acres on sections 4 and 9, Buffalo Prairie township, is one of the pioneers of this county and a representative farmer who has worked for what he owns, and is a man highly respected by all who know him. He was born on the old Dr. Hewett farm in Black Hawk township, February 12, 1861, being a son of Burman Cannam, born in Yorkshire, England, October 11, 1828, who came to the United States to join his son and wife. He died between Taylor Ridge and Milan in Black Hawk township, after having become quite prominent in the locality and filled various offices. Burman Cannam worked at whatever he could find to do. When he was twenty-one years old, he married Mary Ann Cannam, and immediately thereafter sailed for the United States, landing in New York city, and there remained for a time, his three oldest children being born in that city. He then came to Rock Island county, and farmed in Black Hawk township for several years, but later went to Milan, and was constable there for six years, as well as deputy sheriff under Sheriff William Payne. He died at the home of his son, John Samuel Cannam, March 10, 1906, his wife having died September 8, 1892. Both were consistent members of the Methodist church. In politics he was a republican. Their children were: William, of Rock Island county, married Emma Williams; Rebecca, Mrs. R. B. Taylor of Rock Island; Eliza, Mrs. Willis Benn of Rock Island; Rosella, Mrs. James Rohan, deceased; Emma, died in infancy; and John Samuel.

John Samuel Cannam grew up in Black Hawk township, living there until seventeen years old, and attended the district school. At that time, his parents moved to the farm now owned by Mr. Cannam. Among his early teachers were Phoebe Muse, Miss Owens and Miss Ferris. His school days ended when he was sixteen, and he then shouldered the responsibilities of life. About this time he began driving a team to and from the mill, and always was a reliable, trustworthy boy. His mother had a restaurant in Milan, and he helped her, as well as his father. When only a lad, he took charge of the farm, and has developed it to a remarkable degree.

On July 3, 1883, he married Angeline Stine Thomas, daughter of Isaac and Ann Rebecca Thomas, both of whom are deceased, the mother dying when Mrs. Cannam was only three years old, and her father when she was fourteen. In 1898, Mr. Cannam bought his present farm, on which was a small house built of logs, which he replaced with a modern residence. The out-buildings have been all replaced, and all the improvements are of the most modern kind. When the family located here, a good deal of the property was covered with timber, and Mr. Cannam and his father used to burn brush until 11 o'clock at night.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Cannam are: William Samuel, born in the old log house, October 25, 1885, was educated in the public schools, having for his teachers, Ida Cannam, Mary Snell, Harry Kennedy and Delia White; belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and was a collector for three years. Mary Ann, born November 9, 1887, married Lewis A. Fuhr, and they have one son, John William; Emma Elmlra, born December 15, 1889, married Clayton Brubaker, one child, Nellie A.; and Lillian Isabelle, born April 8, 1897. Mr. Cannam is a republican. Although not an office-seeker he has served as a school director. Fraternally, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and takes an interest in that organization. He is an industrious, thrifty man whose present success is due to his good management and untiring work.

CAREY, William R. (deceased).—During the past decade the village of Carbon Cliff, Ill., has grown rapidly in importance as an industrial center, has increased in population to a considerable extent and has featured its growth and development by adding to its large buildings and extending its area into the surrounding country, and these conditions have been brought about by the active and progressive work of its real estate men, who have always proven themselves wide awake and up-to-date in forwarding the interests of their community. William R. Carey, who engaged in the real estate and insurance business here for over ten years, and also assisted in the building up of this section by his work as a mason contractor, was born at Sugar Tree Creek, near Monmouth, Ill., March 24, 1847, and is a son of Richard and Nancy (Edwards) Carey, the former a native of Schuylar county, N. Y., and the latter of Albany county, that state, his grandparents being Moses Edwards and his wife, of Massachusetts and Connecticut, respectively. Grandfather Carey died when Richard Carey was still a lad, and the latter was brought up in the home of Rockwell Manning. He became a driver on the Erie Canal, and in 1846 came to near Monmouth, Ill., having been married in New York. Later he moved to Henderson county, Ill., where he owned a fine farm, but eventually he moved to Port Byron township, Rock Island county, where he rented land until his death, after which his widow came to live with her son, William R., and continued to live with him until she died. Three children were born to Richard and Nancy Carey, namely: William R.; Leonard H., of St. Paul, Minn.; and N. F. of Carbon Cliff.

William R. Carey attended the common schools of his native locality, and at the age of fifteen years went to live with David Rider, in Henderson county. On May 3, 1863, he enlisted in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving in the Army of the Tennessee for six months, when he received his honorable discharge. A few months later he re-enlisted in the Ninth Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, at Chicago, serving at Eastport, Miss., until receiving his discharge in November, 1865, after which he returned to his parents' home at Watertown, where he followed farming and brickmaking, and in March, 1869, moved to Carbon Cliff, where he engaged in moulding and brickmaking, later purchasing the Murphy farm, which he operated for three years. Selling out, he returned to Carbon Cliff and started moulding and manufacturing brick, but in 1898 became a salesman on the road. Severing his connections in this line in 1901, he entered the real estate and insurance field and also engaged in brick contracting.

Mr. Carey is a republican in politics, and served twenty years as school director, as highway commissioner three years and as justice of the peace for fourteen years, and served in 1890 as supervisor, and again from 1893 until 1908, fifteen continuous years of which time he was chairman of the board. He was a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Carbon Cliff, and of Graham Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at Moline.

In November, 1867, Mr. Carey was married to Martha C. Fullerton, daughter of Hugh Fullerton, a native of Pennsylvania, and five children were born to this union: Alice and Birdie, who are deceased; Minnie, who is the wife of F. J. Ball, of Silvis, Ill.; Milton, who is of Silvis; and Charles H., who resides at home.

CARLSON, Bengt Johan.—The frugality and industry of the Swedish people are proverbial, and it is because of these homely virtues that so many of them succeed after coming to a strange land. They appear to be afraid of nothing in the way of work, and to be able to save from their wages, no matter how small they are. There are few exceptions to this rule, and Bengt Johan Carlson is not one of them, for he has always been hard-working and thrifty. He was born in Sweden, May 10, 1862 a son of Carl Johan and Neta Christina (Nelson) Carlson, both natives of Sweden and farming people. The paternal grandfather was Bengt Johan and Ingerburg Carlson. The maternal grandfather was Nels Christianson Nelson, a brewer and distiller. All died in Sweden. The father of Bengt Johan Carlson, was born in 1827, and his wife in 1826. Their children were: Johanna, who is of Sweden; Nels Jac, who died in Andalusia in 1910; Johan, who is of Andalusia; Anna Christina, who is Mrs. Carl Nelson of Taylor Ridge; Bengt J., and Amelia, Mrs. Charles Oleson, who died in Chicago in 1906.

Bengt Johan Carlson began attending school when six years old, and continued for ten years, and was confirmed when sixteen years old. The first dollar he earned was paid to him for piling up peat. In this way he began the struggle of life, and his sister Amelia worked with him. They were then ten and eight years old, respectively, and it took a long time to earn a dollar, two days and a half, and they gave their money to their mother. Later, he worked as a farm hand and chore boy for wealthy people, and all the time had before him the determination to come to the United States. In 1883, he sailed from Sweden for New York, landing in that city with two cents in his pocket, and owing $50 for his passage money. Coming direct to Moline, he made his way from this city to Andalusia where his brother was living, and almost at once secured work at Taylor Ridge grubbing out timber for $10 per acre. This was terribly hard work, but he kept at it until he secured other employment. His wages advanced from time to time until he was receiving $24 per month. By this time he had saved up enough money to go farming for himself, renting land in conjunction with his brother Johan. During 1894, 1895 and 1896, Mr. Carlson rented the Dodge farm in the same township. During the latter year, he returned to Sweden, and spent a year, and upon his return, he rented out his services by the month to farmers, receiving $35 per month. He then rented the Charles Titterington farm for two years. Following this he rented the Mose Titterington farm, until in 1906, he bought his present 160-acre improved farm.

Mr. Carlson was married in 1898, in Edgington township to Flora Etta Roberts, daughter of Moses and Sarah Jane (Weyerling) Roberts. Mr. and Mrs. Carlson are the parents of children as follows: Aaron V., who was born June 14, 1900; Sarah Amanda Christine, who was born October 29, 1903; Alice, who was born February 11, 1905; Ben Harrison, who was born July 22, 1908; Nels Frank, who was born November 8, 1909; and Don, who was born June 13, 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Carlson are members of the German Lutheran church. He is a staunch republican, and fraternally belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 404, of Edgington, and the Andalusia Blue Lodge No. 516, A. F. & A. M. The Carlsons are numbered among the most responsible people in the township, and they have many friends here where they have established themselves so firmly.

CARLSON, Charles A.—As in the regular army, the battles are not won by the officers, but by the rank and file, so among the men enlisted in the industrial army, those who do a full day's work with hands and brains, are the ones who accomplish the most. One of the men who has been both a private in the industrial ranks and a leader of his associates, is Charles A. Carlson, foreman of the wood department of the Wilson Moline Buggy Co. Mr. Carlson was born in Sweden, April 29, 1859, a son of John and Sophia (Samuelson) Carlson, both of Sweden. The father died when Charles A. Carlson was but a child, having been a farmer all his life. His mother died about the same time, and Mr. Carlson knows but little of either of them. Having heard of the possibilities of the United States, he came here all alone, on one of the boats of the White Star line.

When he arrived at Moline, he found that although he had passed through the graded schools in his own land, he still had much to learn, and so while working in the daytime, he studied at the night schools, learning English and other branches best suited to his needs. He had learned the woodworking trade in his native land and followed it at New Haven, Conn., and St. Louis, Mo., but finally settled at Moline. For a short time he worked for Deere & Mansur Co., but then entered the employ of his present firm, and so able did he prove himself, that in 1901, he was placed in charge of his department. His career since then justifies the faith his employers placed in him.

Mr. Carlson was married at Moline, September 21, 1885, to Lina Nygren, who died in 1893, and was buried in the Moline cemetery. Three children were born of this marriage: Anna, Ellen and Arthur. In 1895, Mr. Carlson married (second) Helma Molander, born in Sweden, who came to the United States with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Carlson have one daughter—Alice. The young people are all living at home. Mr. Carlson owns his residence at No. 2329 Eleventh street, Moline, and the adjoining lot. He is liberal in his religious faith. Politically, he is a republican. He belongs to the Red Men and Mystic Workers of the World, both of Moline. Sound and reliable, Mr. Carlson is a faithful worker and knows how to control his men, while sympathizing with them. He takes a deep interest in his home, and is beloved by his family, while among his associates he is recognized as a good citizen and skilled workman.

CARLSON, Frank E., manufacturer of cement blocks, and one of the substantial business men of Moline, whose interest in his city is deep-seated and expressed in practical ways, has a plant conveniently located at the corner of Twenty-fourth street and Third avenue. He was born in Sweden, in 1863, a son of Carl and Kerstine (Steg) Carlson. The father was a farmer in Sweden, but died in 1870. Growing up in Sweden, Mr. Carlson attended school, and learned the shoemaking trade, working at it in Sweden, and for four years in Denmark. In 1887, he came to the United States, and locating at Galesburg, worked on the railroad, and in different shops for six years. In 1894, he came to Moline, and was engaged along different lines until the spring of 1912, when he bought the Moline Cement Block Company's works, of which he is now sole proprietor. He manufactures all shape and sizes of cement blocks, and the quality is such as to give entire satisfaction. Mr. Carlson has built and sold three houses, making a good profit on each. He was also associated with a number of the factories here, doing teaming, and has a wide circle of business acquaintances.

In 1889, Mr. Carlson married Anna Anderson, in Galesburg. She is a native of Sweden. They have five children: Carl Edward, deceased; Jennie Antonia, Albert, Henry and Chester. The family belong to the Swedish Lutheran church, and are valued factors in its religious life. Mr. Carlson belongs to the I. O. S., and is a Moose. He is very liberal in his political views, voting for the man he deems best fitted for the office, rather than binding himself to any one party. Energetic, hard-working, a man of good business ability, Mr. Carlson has steadily forged ahead, and has well merited the success which has come to him.

C. W. Morris and wife

CARLSON, Henning O.—Moline is one of the most progressive cities in this part of the state, and is constantly inaugurating some new project calculated to prove beneficial to the people of the community. Especially has this been true under the aggressive administration of Mayor Carlson, who is ably assisted in some of his plans by his brother, Henning O. Carlson, now market master of the fine new city market of Moline, opened June 1, 1912. Mr. Carlson is a native of Moline, and has grown up within its confines. His educational training was received in its public schools, and he feels a warm love for its institutions. Possessing as he does a very pleasing personality, and considerable tact, Mr. Carlson is eminently fitted for his somewhat difficult position, for it is his business to oversee the entire market, and see that everything is satisfactory for all. He speaks English and Swedish and understands Belgian, and can converse with most of the exhibitors in their own language. For these and other considerations, he was deemed the best man for the place by the commissioners, who already feel satisfied with their choice.

After leaving school, Mr. Carlson worked for the Wilson Buggy Company for three years, and then for the Republic Iron & Steele Company for ten years, and for six years of that time was shipping foreman. Fraternally, he is an Odd Fellow, and for two years served his order as financial secretary. He also belongs to the Eagles. He is a democrat, but very liberal in his political views, preferring to choose his man for the office in question.

CARLSON, Hon. Martin R., mayor of Moline, and one of the most progressive young men of Rock Island county, is giving his city a business administration, conducting civic affairs as he would a private enterprise, with the result that never before have matters been in so healthy a condition as during his first two years in office. There is in course of construction, through his efforts, a new city hall, improvements carried on at the waterworks and a distribution system on a bond issue of $164,000 sanctioned by the voters a year after he took office, and through his efforts the Rock Island Railway will spend approximately $200,000 for a new station and site, with the proper surroundings. The dangerous Twenty-third Street railway crossing has been eliminated by diverting the street car over another route; the Bell Telephone Company litigation has been adjudicated by a new ordinance; over $300,000 of paving, sewer and watermains and sidewalks were completed in 1912, and numerous other matters have been satisfactorily accomplished, and the prospects look bright for more than the above amount of improvements for 1913.

Martin R. Carlson is a native of Moline, having been born here May 2, 1877, a son of Gustaf F. and Mathilda Carlson, the former born in Sweden, September 18, 1840, and the latter of the same country, born April 11, 1844. Both parents are living and were married in Moline, and have six children living: George E., Albert G., Martin R., Henning O., Jennie L., and Phoebe. George, Albert and Phoebe are married. Martin R. Carlson was educated in the public schools of Moline, and after finishing the grammar room at the age of fourteen, he started to work for his brother, Albert G. Carlson, handling newspapers and magazines. In 1894, they extended the business under the name of Carlson Brothers, with books, stationery, office supplies, office fixtures, etc. He remained in this line of work until his duties as mayor forced him to withdraw from taking active part in the business, although he still retains his interest.

On April 6, 1909, he was elected a member of the board of supervisors, and during the two years he held this office, he was on the finance committee, where he showed rare good common sense in economical ideas in handling of public moneys, being instrumental, through this committee, in liquidating $20,000 of the county's indebtedness on which interest had been paid for many years. On April 4, 1911, he was elected mayor, being the first under the new commission form of government, and the only mayor to have been born and reared in the city. All his life has been spent in Moline, and he is keenly alive to its needs and possibilities, and a firm believer in all public improvements for the city, also a strong booster for improved country highways. Mr. Carlson belongs to the Masonic fraternity; Moline Lodge of Elks, No. 556; Redmen, King Philip Lodge, No. 94; Swedish Olive Lodge of Odd Fellows, No. 583; Moline Council of Royal Arcanum, No. 2009; Modern Woodmen of America, Camp 33; North Star Observatory No. 1, and the Moline Club. In politics he is a republican.

Mayor Carlson is an excellent example of the thrifty, progressive young men of Moline who are devoting themselves to the improvement of their city and placing it among the thriving centers of the Middle West. His rise is a brilliant one for a man still in the early thirties, but the possibilities of his future are still brighter, for his constituents will not be content to have him remain where he is, but will insist that he represent them in higher offices, for they appreciate and recognize his sterling integrity and ability.

CARLSON, Nels J. (deceased).—Death is ever terrible to those who are left behind, even when the person taken has rounded out a long and useful life, but when he is still in the flush of strong manhood, the loss seems doubly hard to bear. The late Nels J. Carlson was one of the model men of his neighborhood, and was gaining a name for himself as a careful, capable and trustworthy farmer, of Andalusia township, when he was claimed by death. Mr. Carlson was born in Sweden, April 30, 1854, being a son of Bengt Johan Carlson.

Nels J. Carlson received a common school education, and learned farming in his native land. In 1876, he came to the United States, landing at New York city, from whence he came to Rock Island county, obtaining work among the farmers in Hampton township. He then went to Moline, securing employment with the house carpenters, and partially learned the trade, but preferred farm labor. Going to Andalusia township, he went on the farm of Mr. Gribbens, continuing there for fifteen years. Having saved up sufficient money, he bought forty acres in Andalusia township, upon which he died, December 11, 1910, and his remains were laid to rest in Andalusia cemetery. He belonged to the Swedish Lutheran church, and was faithful in his devotion to it.

On December 22, 1891, Mr. Carlson was married to Ida B. Josephson of Moline, daughter of Joseph and Johanna B. (Poulsdotter) Josephson. Mrs. Carlson was born September 26, 1872, in Halland, Sweden, and came to the United States when seventeen years old, landing at New York city, from whence she traveled direct to Moline. Mr. and Mrs. Carlson became the parents of children as follows: Nellie J., married Albert Blaser, of Andalusia township; Ida C.; Nels Joseph; Charles S.; Lillie B. and John. Cut off before he had time to finish what he planned to execute, Mr. Carlson left behind him a comfortable home for his widow and children, and an unblemished name that always stood for all that was good and true. His friends joined his family in mourning his loss, and his place will not be easily filled.

CARLSON, Pehr John.—The rise in importance of industrial unions and their allied associations, has inaugurated new duties for responsible men. The generality of working men cannot find time or opportunity to represent their interests properly, so it is necessary for them to have someone who can and will. One of the men who has risen high in this respect is Pehr John Carlson of Rock Island, who is the head of the Central Mississippi Valley Conference Board of Carpenters. He was born in Sweden, in 1869, a son of C. G. and Sophia Carlson, both of whom survive, making their home in Sweden. Owing to a lack of opportunity for advancement, while attending school, at the age of twelve years, Mr. Carlson left his education to take care of itself, and began learning to be a carpenter. On March 1, 1899, he came to the United States, Moline, Ill., being his objective point. There he became an employe in the Moline Plow Works, and worked at his trade until 1903, when he was elected business agent for the Tri-Cities Carpenters' Union, this continuing until 1911, when he was placed in his present high office. His duties are to promote the interests of the carpenters and wood workers under his charge.

In 1899, Mr. Carlson married Augusta Nelson, born in Sweden. They have one child, Helen. The family residence is at No. 1320, Thirty-eighth street, Rock Island. Mr. Carlson belongs to the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America, and Eagles, as well as the Carpenters' Union. A Socialist in politics, he lives his belief in his life, and looks forward to the time when all will hold similar doctrines. He owns his home, and aims to make Rock Island his permanent residence; although the calls of his party may take him elsewhere, for he has already gained considerable prominence as a leader of men, and his future is very bright. A capable, conscientious man, he accomplishes much good, and is respected by his followers.

CARLSON, Victor.—It is not always the man who owns the largest farm who is the most successful. Many times it is he who brings a smaller estate to a high state of cultivation, and produces from it banner crops, who can be justly termed prosperous. This is a case where quality is worth more than quantity. One of the men whose agricultural attempts have met with marked success is Victor Carlson of Port Byron township. He was born in Jonkoping Lane, Sweden, November 20, 1868, a son of Peter and Caroline (Anderson) Carlson. Until he was fifteen years old, Mr. Carlson attended school in his native land, and after the family came to America, in 1883, he had the advantage of a few months' schooling. Peter Carlson lived first in Oregon, where he went before the family came to this country, but soon thereafter moved to Rock Island county, where he bought land in Coe township. The good mother died in 1895, aged fifty-six years, but the father survives, and makes his home with his son. Until 1910, Victor Carlson rented a farm in Coe township, but in that year he moved to his farm of thirty-nine and one-half acres one mile north of the village of Port Byron, which he had bought in 1903. He has put in all the improvements, including a comfortable seven-room house, and necessary outbuildings. On March 14, 1895, Victor Carlson was married to Josephine Broquist, born in Coe township, January 3, 1872. There is no issue of this marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Carlson belong to the Swedish Lutheran church, and for six years he has been one of the trustees, and is now a deacon of that body. In 1911, he was elected road commissioner of Port Byron township, and is inaugurating some much needed improvements, but at the same time is giving the people a sound, safe administration of their affairs. It is such men as Mr. Carlson who form the backbone of any country, and upon the success or failure of their work depends its prosperity.

CARLTON, Benjamin Gorton (deceased).—The lives of some men are a constant reminder of faithfulness and steadfast probity. While they may never attain to high rank in political or business life, when they die they leave behind them memories that are a source of solace to their families, and an inspiration to their associates. Such a man was the late Benjamin G. Carlton, of Rock Island, who all his life did the duty which lay nearest, and never willingly defrauded a single person. He was born in Troy, N. Y., May 20, 1826, a son of Alva and Eluzia (Gorton) Carlton. The maternal grandfather, Benjamin Gorton, was a Revolutionary soldier and served as one of the paymasters of the Colonial army. Alva Carlton died in New York state, leaving three sons, George, Benjamin and William B., and his widow. The little family came to Rock Island when Benjamin G. Carlton was eighteen years old, and from then until his death, this city continued to be his home.

Receiving but a meagre education, Benjamin G. Carlton learned the trade of blacksmithing, after coming to Rock Island, and followed this trade for many years. He was a bank janitor for ten years, and then secured employment at the arsenal, where he worked until his death, May 24, 1896. He was a consistent member of the Methodist church, and fraternally was a Mason.

His first wife bore the maiden name of Catherine Tipton, and died in 1856. His second wife was Miss Anna Buckley, born in Pennsylvania on a farm, July 20, 1836, daughter of Patrick and Anna Buckley. The mother dying when Mrs. Carlton was a child, her father gave her a stepmother by marrying Margaret Doran. He then came west with his family, in 1854, settling at Ottawa, Ill. He was in the Seminole war and the Mexican war and gave three months' service during the Civil war as a member of the Thirtieth Illinois Infantry, and afterward joined Company K, Fifty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He was made first lieutenant and later promoted to captain. He died while home on a furlough, of typhoid fever. His first enlistment was in the first three months' call for volunteers. His children by first marriage were: John, who died at Dubuque, Ia., served as an enrolling officer during the Civil war; Mary, who died in infancy; Mrs. Carlton; and Daniel of Colorado, a Civil war veteran, who was in Andersonville prison. By his second marriage his children were: James, who enlisted in the Civil war when seventeen years old, died in a Soldiers' Home; Mary, who is Mrs. Peter Murphy, deceased; Margaret, who was Mrs. Wulroncy is now deceased; and Patrick, who died in Galena. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Carlton were: Benjamin, who died in infancy; Eluzia, who is deceased, married John Zimmerman; Esther; and Mrs. Frederick Young. Mrs. Carlton is a member of St. Joseph's Catholic church, and is a most estimable lady.

CARNEY, Thomas J.—The arsenal at Rock Island engages the services of some of the best workmen in the country, who are glad of the steady employment offered by the government, and give it their best efforts. One of the men thus engaged, is Thomas J. Carney, a moulder, residing at No. 725 Fourteen and One Half street, this city. He was born at Rock Island, May 17, 1862, a son of John and Julia (Cass) Carney. The father was born in England about 1830, and when only five weeks old was taken to Ireland, his parents locating in County Kilkenny, where he grew to manhood. In 1852, he sailed from Liverpool to New York City, on the sailing vessel Munroe, and after five weeks and three days, port was reached. He spent two years in New York state, working at Buffalo, where he found employment in a general line, and then engaged with the arsenal. He worked on the original arsenal building, and continued in the service of the government for nineteen years. Still later, he became a helper in the Rock Island Plow Shops, thus continuing for twenty-two years, and then retired. In 1857, he married at Rock Island, his wife having been born in County Kilkenny, Ireland. She died April 3, 1905, having been a good and faithful wife and mother. Thomas J. Carney was the only child of these parents.

Mr. Carney attended public and parochial schools at Rock Island, leaving them when he was sixteen years old. At seventeen years, he began learning the moulder's trade, and has followed it all his life, and on May 20, 1880, he became connected with the moulding department of the arsenal, and has continued with it ever since.

In 1887, he was married to Mary O'Connell of Joslin, Rock Island county, daughter of Maurice and Margaret (Buckley) O'Connell, born August 10, 1865. Mr. O'Connell was born in Limerick, Ireland, September 22, 1820, being a son of James and Mary O'Connell, farming people. There were twelve children in the O'Connell family: James, William, Mary, Cornelius, Matthias, Elizabeth, John, Maurice, Ellen, Daniel, Thomas and Edward. Mr. and Mrs. Carney have had four children: Julia, who died at the age of seven years; John M., who is at home; James, who is deceased; and Bessie, who died in childhood. The family all belong to St. Joseph's Catholic church. In politics, Mr. Carney is a democrat, but is liberal in his views. He belongs to Camp No. 1550, Modern Woodmen of America, which he joined twenty-one years ago. Mr. Carney is a faithful workman, whose knowledge of his trade is expert, and he deserves the competency he has accumulated through his industry and thrifty habits.

CARPENTER, Fred M.—The farmer of today realizes that success cannot be gained by those who ruin their land by excessive cropping, taking everything out of it, and putting nothing back. Such is destructive farming, instead of constructive, which latter method lies at the bottom of all progressive agriculture. One of the men of this county carrying on extensive farming operations along the most advanced lines, is Fred M. Carpenter who operates 1,000 acres and handles a large amount of stock. His homestead contains 206 acres; he rents another farm of 400 acres; owns a third farm of 228 acres, the latter in Buffalo Prairie township, and, in the fall of 1911, sold 108 acres, which he owned in Edginton township. He was born on his home farm, September 19, 1883, being a son of Henry B. and Sarah (Deboard) Carpenter, the former born in Pennsylvania, from whence he was brought to Illinois in childhood. Henry B. Carpenter was a son of Caleb Carpenter, a pioneer of Rock Island county, who entered the tract now owned by his grandson, Fred M. Caleb Carpenter died on this farm, and it descended to Henry B. Carpenter, who had grown up on it, receiving but a limited education. Henry B. Carpenter and his wife had six children: Caleb of Edgington township; Fred M.; Charles, of Rock Island; Clara, who married David Butcher, and lives at Colorado Springs; Milo, who is associated with Fred M.; and Margaret and Blanche, at home.

Fred M. Carpenter attended the district schools until he was eighteen years old, and was reared on the home farm. In January, 1909, he married Lois M. Marston of Mercer county, daughter of Freeman and Emily Marston. Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter have three children: Mildred, Margaret and Charles. For the past five years, Mr. Carpenter has been engaged in farming, and has been eminently successful in all his operations. He is not connected with any religious denomination. Politically, he is a republican, and adheres loyally to his party. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the order of Elks, enjoying his fraternal relations. It is such men as Mr. Carpenter who have made farming a definite business, raising it from a mere livelihood to its present place in the industrial life of the country.

CARPENTER, William H.—A prosperous business man can credit his success to one or all of three excellent attributes—energy, system and practical knowledge, and all three have been combined in the efforts of William H. Carpenter, a substantial resident of Rock Island, Ill., whose name is well known to the coal trade. Beginning life with no advantages except those to be gained by a common school education, he brought to bear upon his life work his natural business ability, progressive ideas and persistency of effort, and, as a result, is now the proprietor of an excellent business which assures him a comfortable competency. Mr. Carpenter is a native of Rochester, N. Y., born April 10, 1841, a son of David and Almira (Bronson) Carpenter. David Carpenter was born in New York City, October 16, 1811, and was married at Rochester, N. Y., to Almira Bronson, who was born in Auburn, that state, April 4, 1812. In 1854 the family came West to Michigan, where the remainder of Mr. Carpenter's life was spent, he being employed as a mechanic. To Mr. and Mrs. David Carpenter there were born six children: William H., Sarah J., Ruby L., Emeline A., Phoebe J., Adeline R.

William H. Carpenter was thirteen years of age when the family moved to Michigan, and there he completed the education which he had started in the common schools of New York. February 10, 1862, at Colon, St. Joseph county, Mich., Mr. Carpenter enlisted in Company A, Fifteenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry. He was in engagements at Pittsburg landing, second battle of Corinth, Miss., Haines' Bluff, Black river, Jackson. After the fall of Jackson, Miss.,

he was detailed to the commissary department of the Fifteenth Army Corps, serving at Black river, Memphis, Scottsborough, Huntsville, Ala., and in the entire Atlanta campaign. During the last three months of service he was in office of quartermaster of the military division of Mississippi at Nashville, Tenn. Was mustered out at Detroit, Mich., March 13, 1865, by reason of expiration of term of service. He came to Illinois in 1865, and became a commercial traveler, an occupation which he followed for upwards of thirty years, then turning his attention to the coal business, being for several years engaged in that line at Moline, Ill. After disposing of his coal business, he spent two years at Los Angeles, Cal., and then returned to Galesburg, Ill., where he remained four years, and then came back to Moline, where he was for one year, and then engaged in a coal business at Rock Island. He now has offices at No. 123 Twentieth street, and commands a large trade throughout the city. Mr. Carpenter is a useful and constructive citizen, attends strictly to business and his advice and co-operation are sought in all the enterprises with which he is identified. For a number of years he was school director of South Moline township, but he has never sought public preferment. He was formerly an Odd Fellow, and is now a member of Rock Island Lodge, No. 658; A. F. & A. M., and the John Buford Post, No. 243, G. A. R., of Rock Island.

Mr. Carpenter was married to Electa M. Adams, who was born in New York state, August 12, 1839, and to this union there have been born four children: William A., born January 1, 1866, and George H., born September 1, 1878, and two who died in infancy.

CARSTENS, George.—Rock Island county is indebted to the German Empire for many of her most loyal and substantial farmer citizens, prominent among whom in South Rock Island township is George Carstens. He was born in Holstein, Germany, July 7, 1833, and is a son of Hans and Margaret (Todo) Carstens, natives of the Fatherland, where both died, the father in 1856 and the mother in 1847.

George Carstens received his education in the schools of his native country, and served for two years in the Danish army prior to coming to the United States, landing at New York, May 14, 1868. In 1882, after fourteen years spent in farming in Cook county, Ill., he came to Rock Island and conducted a butcher business for four months, and then became engaged in the dairy business, which he continued from 1882 until 1891. He then went to Chicago for two and one-half years, but eventually returned to Rock Island to take charge of a large tract of land in South Rock Island, of which he has been the steward for nineteen years, its owner, Henry Curtis, being now deceased, while Mr. Carstens manages the property for the estate. On taking charge of the land, Mr. Carstens purchased four lots in South Rock Island, where he is now comfortably located.

Mr. Carstens was married in Germany, November 27, 1859, to Miss Katherine Peters, who was born July 6, 1838, the daughter of Hans and Margaret (Fauchs) Peters, natives of Germany, who came to the United States in 1869, during which same year the father died, but his widow survived him a number of years, passing away in 1887. Mr. Carstens is a democrat in politics, and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. He is fraternally connected with the German Benevolent Society of Rock Island. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Carstens, namely: Hans William, who lives in Moline; Margaret, who is the wife of Charles Croeger; Lena, who married George Wilkinson of Chicago; and Henry, who resides in Searstown, Ill. Mr. Carstens has nine grandchildren.

Francis F. Milman & Family

CASTEEL, Herbert Eugene.—The development of any community can be measured by the progress made in its banking institutions. As the people advance in commercial importance, so does the demand of the better class for sound financial houses with which to establish business relations. Rock Island has long been the home of some of the best banks in this part of the state, and the scene of the activities of some of the most expert financiers of the country. One of the institutions which merits all the confidence placed in it, is the Rock Island National Bank, with its sister institution, the Central Trust and Savings Bank, both of which have as an executive head, Herbert Eugene Casteel.

Mr. Casteel was born at Davenport, Ia., March 15, 1860, a son of Appleton and Elizabeth (Gardner) Casteel, the latter born at Chesterfield, O., October 29, 1829. The father was a merchant who moved to Davenport, Ia., on July 4, 1855. He left home for the west, planning to prospect for gold, but died at Salt Lake, Utah, in 1871. What education Herbert Eugene Casteel obtained, was gained in the public schools of Davenport, but when he was only thirteen years old, he went to Port Byron, and two years later secured employment with the Port Byron Lumber Company. Prior to this, however, he had earned many a penny working before and after school and on Saturdays, and thus early began to realize the value of a dollar, and how hard it was to earn one. Having given the lumber company a faithful service as bookkeeper for two and one-half years, he went to Rapids City, in 1875, there to work for Taylor Williams, holding the same kind of a position and for the same length of time. At the termination of this association, Mr. Casteel joined John Shafer in establishing a mercantile business in Port Byron, and was successful in this undertaking. He was also connected with a drug store for a year. When he dissolved partnership with Mr. Shafer, he accepted the position of assistant superintendent of the coal mines owned by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad at Perry, Ia., holding it until 1884, when he again entered the mercantile field.

Mr. Casteel served as assistant county treasurer under John Shafer, and was secretary for Major C. W. Hawes of the Modern Woodmen of America. In 1893, he went to South Dakota, to become cashier of the Parkston State Bank, remaining in that position until 1898, when he became cashier of the Rock Island National Bank. In 1899, Mr. Casteel organized the Central Trust & Savings Bank of Rock Island, and was made its cashier. In May, 1902, he was elected president of the Rock Island National and the Central Trust & Savings Banks, and has remained as the executive head of both ever since. A cautious and careful conservatism has been exerted by Mr. Casteel in the management of his banks, and he has rendered both stockholders and depositors alike most excellent service, combining as he does, rare executive powers with so wise and truthful an administration as to produce a sound and reliable condition in the affairs of the institutions under his charge.

Mr. Casteel was married at Port Byron, Ill., December 22, 1881, to Miss Emma S. Lowry. Mr. and Mrs. Casteel became the parents of two children: Lowry M. and Evangeline Gardner. Politically, Mr. Casteel is a republican although formerly a democrat. In addition to the large financial interests which engross him, Mr. Casteel is active in the work of the Associated Charities, Bethany Home for Homeless Children and the Y. M. C. A., and was chairman and manager of the successful campaign for raising $125,000 for the new Y. M. C. A. building. Fraternally, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America; Rock Island Lodge, No. 930, B. P. O. E.; Philo Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Rock Island Chapter, No. 18, R. A. M.; Rock Island Commandry, No. 18, K. T.; Oriental Consistory of Chicago, and Kaaba Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Davenport. After three years' unsuccessful effort of the Masonic bodies to raise funds for a Masonic building, the project was placed in the hands of Mr. Casteel, who in a seven-day campaign raised $60,000 for a new Masonic Temple.

Mr. Casteel, more than any other one man, was responsible for the promotion and erection of a new club house costing $80,000, the home of the leading commercial organization, the Rock Island Club, of which he was president.

CEWE, Jacob.—Experience teaches the agriculturalist the crops best suited for his land, and the modern farmer who succeeds has learned to adapt his business to the conditions surrounding him. In this way banner crops are produced, and in Rock Island county, where conditions are so favorable for transportation, the rural communities are in a flourishing condition. One of the prosperous farmers here is Jacob Cewe of Hampton township, owner of the Cedar Grove farm. He is a son of John and Christina (Wildermuth) Cewe, natives of Germany. The father was brought to this country when six years old, and as settlement was made immediately in Hampton township, he was one of the pioneers of this locality. Jacob Cewe now resides on his father's early home. Nine children were born to the parents, eight of whom survive: Mary, Helen, Christina, Rose, Catherine, Jacob, Maggie, Daisy and Minnie. The kind father passed away in 1876, his widow surviving him until 1909.

Jacob Cewe was reared on the homestead, attending the district school, and all his life has been spent in agricultural pursuits. He raises corn, oats and potatoes, and has made a success of all his undertakings. In 1897, he married Amanda Salow, and they have seven children: Pearl, John, Helen, Leon, Floyd, Grace and Irene. In politics, he is a republican and served for two terms as school director. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Having always been engaged in farming, Mr. Cewe has learned all the details of his work, and has long been recognized as an authority on such matters. He and his wife have many warm friends throughout Rock Island county to whom they dispense a generous hospitality whenever their home is visited.

CHANDLER, Joseph H. (deceased), who was a resident of South Rock Island for more than thirty-five years, and served as a guard at the Rock Island bridge, being one of the well known men of the city, died December 2, 1912. Joseph H. Chandler was born at Prince Edward's Island, British Columbia, 400 miles east of Newfoundland and 600 miles from Boston, Mass., April 20, 1838, a son of George and Mary Ann (Carford) Chandler, natives of County Suffolk England, the former of whom died in 1857 and the latter about twenty years later. They were the parents of two children, namely: Joseph H. and Mary Ann.

Joseph H. Chandler secured his education in the schools of his native place, and also was a student in the common schools at Boston, Mass., whence his parents had removed when he was still a youth. Later he worked on his father's farm in Illinois, this city becoming the family home, after many changes in residence in 1875. Mr. Chandler was a veteran of the Civil War, having served throughout that struggle and made a record of which no man would need be ashamed. For some years he was a guard at the Rock Island bridge, and despite his advanced years, proved himself an able and efficient employee. He was a popular member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and also was a comrade of the Grand Army of the Republic.

In November, 1865, Joseph H. Chandler was united in marriage in Iroquois county, Ill., to Martha J. Nor, who was born March 9, 1845, in Cornwall, England, from whence she came when but nine years of age, and to this union there were born four children, as follows: George Henry, Mrs. Mary E. Ottley, Edward Paul, and Mrs. Jennie B. Stately. Mr. Chandler was the owner of a comfortable home at Twelfth and Aiken streets, in South Rock Island. His death was deplored by his many friends who miss his sympathetic presence and genial words of kindly interest.

CHANEY, Edward P., foreman of the pattern department of Williams White & Co., of Moline, has attained to his present responsible position with one of the largest corporations west of Chicago, through sheer ability and persistent industry. In all of his efforts he has put the interests of his employers first, and this faithfulness has met with a just reward. Mr. Chaney was born in Montreal, Canada, August 22, 1858, a son of Edward P. and Margaret (Varner) Chaney, natives of Portland, Me., and Montreal, Canada, respectively. The father was a millwright, who came to Mercer county in 1869, locating there on a farm. After a year, he moved to Moline, but still later he went west, and all trace was lost of him. His wife still resides in Moline. She is of Scotch-Irish descent, while her husband came of English-Scotch descent. Two of the uncles on the paternal side and two on the maternal side served in the Civil war, and one suffered imprisonment in Libby and Andersonville prisons.

Edward P. Chaney was reared in Moline, attending its public schools. He learned the carpenter trade, then following it for three years, and then became a pattern maker with Deere & Co., remaining in the employ of that company for eight years. Following this, he was with Bernard & Leas Co. for three years, and then with the Moline Elevator Co. for one year. In 1887, he entered Williams White & Co., as a pattern maker, and in February, 1901, his fitness for the position caused him to be made foreman of the pattern department, which position he still holds to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Chaney was married at Rock Island, December 14, 1882, to Jessie Downs, born at Boston, Mass., in 1861, a daughter of George F. and Mary (Rice) Downs, all of Boston. Mr. Downs came to Rock Island county with General Rodman as superintendent of construction on the arsenal, continuing in that position until the death of General Rodman. Both Mr. and Mrs. Downs died at Moline. Mrs. Chaney died also at Moline, in February, 1901, and her remains were interred in the Rock Island cemetery. She bore her husband three children: Jessie H., who married Charles Whaley, a fireman on the Rock Island railroad, lives at Des Moines, Ia., issue—Vernon; Ruby M., who lives with her father; Raymond E., who is attending the high school.

Mr. Chaney is a republican and served for two years as supervisor, and for four years was a member of the city council, from the Seventh Ward. He belongs to the Moline lodge of Modern Woodmen of America. In religious faith, he is very liberal. He owns his pleasant home at No. 2338 Fifth avenue, Moline, which is presided over by his daughter, a charming young lady. Mr. Chaney is a man of marked strength of character, whose forceful purpose and determined action have often served in holding in check some of his associates when public matters were at issue. Both as a private citizen and representative of the people, Mr. Chaney has demonstrated his true worth, and he is one of the most representative men of his ward.

CHURCH, Charles H.—In these days, it seems almost impossible that mere lads have been allowed to endure the hardships and expose themselves to the dangers of warfare as they were in the Civil war, but then the present generation has no comprehension of the fiery patriotism that engulfed the country, changing school boys into grown men within a few weeks. One of those who in his boyhood proved his loyalty and bravery in this manner is Charles H. Church, now a motorman for the Tri-City Street Railway Co., residing at No. 1300 Thirtieth street, Rock Island. He was born in Watertown, Jefferson county, Wis., March 15, 1848, a son of Avery and Nancy A. (Smith) Church, the father being a native of Norway. Avery Church was a scout and interpreter during the Black Hawk war and lived for many years in Jefferson county, Wis., having located there upon coming to America. Later, he moved to Koskonong Creek, Wis., where he died in 1853. His widow died in Athens, Mich. The family is related to William Carleton, the famous author. There were three sons and two daughters in the Church family: Charles H.; Calvin C., who is living in Idaho; George W., who is deceased, enlisted in the Fourth Wisconsin Mounted Infantry, while Calvin was in the Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being wounded at the battle of Stone River. George remained south after the war and when last heard from was in Bayou Sara, La.

The early days of Charles H. Church were spent in Jefferson and Rock counties, Wis., where he was educated. At the age of thirteen years, he joined his mother in St. Joseph county, Mich., where he remained until he enlisted, when only fifteen years old, in Company I, Eleventh Michigan Cavalry, under Captain W. H. George and Colonel S. B. Brown, who was later made Brigadier-General. Mr. Church served until the close of the war, being discharged July 16, 1865, at Pulaski, Tenn. He participated in many battles, among them being Saltville, Va., Marion, Va., Mt. Sterling and Cynthiana, Ky., as well as skirmishes. He was slightly wounded in the leg and taken prisoner at Lebanon, Va., and was detained seven and one-half months in Libby prison, where he suffered the terrible hardships all imprisoned there were forced to undergo. After his discharge, he returned to Michigan, but in 1868, Mr. Church was enlisted on the Island at Rock Island, and served three years. He then took up railroad work on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, continuing in their employ for twenty-two years. He also worked on the Hennepin canal for the United States government for ten years, and since then he has been connected with the Tri-City Street Railway Co.

On April 23, 1873, Mr. Church was married in Rock Island to Annie Hobbs, born in East Davenport, in November, 1856, daughter of George and Anna (Booth) Hobbs, natives of England. They were early settlers of Davenport, and lived at that city for fifty years, the father dying there. His widow died in 1907, at the home of Mr. Church. There were eight children in the Hobbs family, those living being: Mrs. Jeunie Wilson of Los Angeles, Cal.; Oliver Hobbs of Davenport, and Mrs. Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Church have had three sons and one daughter: Thomas C., living near Portland, Ore.; Grant W. and Lee, twins, at home; and Minnie, deceased. Mr. Church belongs to John Buford Post, No. 243, G. A. R. He joined Rock Island Lodge, No. 18, I. O. O. F., in September, 1871, and has held all the offices in it; is a member of the M. W. A., No. 29, and several other fraternal organizations, being popular in all. He owns his home in which they have lived for twenty-four years.

CLARKE, Clarence C., one of the enterprising and prosperous farmers of Bowling township, is a man whose energies have been intelligently directed along legitimate lines to the ultimate betterment of his material condition. He was born in the township where he now lives, May 2, 1867, being a son of John and Eliza Jane (Lipton) Clarke, natives of Ireland, born June 21, 1832, and June 2, 1841, respectively. John Clarke came to America in 1841, settling in Bowling township, where he bought land on section 35, and there spent the remainder of his life, dying June 18, 1903. His widow survived him a year, passing away May 12, 1904.

Until he was seventeen years old, Mr. Clarke attended the public schools of Rock Island county, and then began working on the farm. In 1906, he secured his present farm of 320 acres, and has developed it into a fine property, specializing in raising high-grade horses and cattle. On February 7, 1894, Mr. Clarke was married to Miss Alvina Smith by Rev. M. M. McCrieght of the Methodist Episcopal church, at Preemption. She was born December 11, 1867, a daughter of George and Jane (Wadsworth) Smith, both of whom were pioneers of Mercer county. Mr. and Mrs. Clarke became the parents of three children: Mary C., who was born October 24, 1897; Harriet E., who was born August 11, 1899; and Luella E., who was born April 20, 1902. Mr. Clarke is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. The Methodist church has long held his membership, and received his generous support. His wife is also a member of it. For eighteen years Mr. Clarke has served acceptably and honorably as township treasurer of the school, and rendered his district able assistance. He is not only a successful farmer and excellent business man, but a good citizen, and one who has many friends throughout this part of the county.

CLARKE, John M.—Gradually the nation is awakening to the important part played by the farmers in the economical and industrial life of the country. Without them and their labor, the nation would be without food, and therefore, upon their capacity and willingness to labor, depends the very life of all the people. One of the prosperous farmers of Rock Island county who belongs to the younger generation of this class, is John W. Clarke of Bowling township. He was born in this township, February 10, 1874, being a son of David and Alice (Blakely) Clarke, the former born in Ireland, September 22, 1822, and the latter in the same country, in 1834. The father came to America with his parents, at an early date, settlement being made in Bowling township, and all were farming people.

John W. Clarke was educated in the public schools of Rock Island county, and Cornell college, attending until he attained his majority. He then returned home and was employed by his brother James for ten years. In 1905, he bought 160 acres of land in Bowling township and began farming for himself. From the start he has improved his property and now has one of the best farms in this locality. He understands his work thoroughly, and adopts new methods whenever he is convinced that they will operate satisfactorily.

On March 13, 1909, Mr. Clarke was married to Sadie Seyler, daughter of Dr. James and Loretta (Crisswell) Seyler, early settlers of Rock Island county. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, Melvin Seyler Clarke, January 13, 1910, and Loretta Alice, October 23, 1911. Mr. Clarke was reared in the faith of the Episcopal church. He is a live, energetic, capable young man who is well known and universally liked throughout the county.

CLELAND, John H.—A justice of the peace of Rock Island during the past ten years, a resident of Rock Island county since 1842, secretary of the Old Settlers' Association and veteran of the Civil war, is probably one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Rock Island. Born in humble circumstances, and handicapped in early life by a lack of educational advantages, he set an example for the youthful generation to emulate by working his way steadily upward, year after year, and making a place for himself among the prominent citizens of his day. Judge Cleland was born November 10, 1832, in Wayne county, O., a son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Herdman) Cleland, the former of County Down, and the latter of Belfast, Ireland. It is supposed that the parents of Judge Cleland were married in Cincinnati, O. The father was a well-known Presbyterian preacher during the early days, coming to Rock Island in 1842 and being the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, the first church building being erected during his pastorate. In 1847 he removed to a farm in Edgington township, Rock Island county, where he assumed charge of the Edgington congregation, and there his death occurred, as did also that of his wife.

John H. Cleland was ten years of age when the family came to Rock Island, and as the schools were primitive, poorly furnished and poorly taught, he secured the greater part of his tuition from his father. During the summer months he worked on the home farm, and in July, 1862, during the Civil war, he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for three years, and was honorably discharged at the end of the war, having been part of the time engaged in detached duty, although he saw much hard fighting and participated in a number of hard-fought engagements, including the siege of Vicksburg and the battle of Little Rock. Returning to Rock Island he engaged in various business enterprises, and was elected to numerous offices within the gift of the people, and ten years ago was chosen for the office of justice of the peace, in which capacity he has served with ability to the present time. He is a popular comrade of John Buford Post No. 243, Grand Army of the Republic; is secretary and treasurer of the Rock Island Old Settlers' Association, which position he has held for the past twenty years. With his wife he attends the Central Presbyterian church of Rock Island.

Judge Cleland was married at Edgington, Rock Island county, Ill., to Cassandra Edgington, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Duulap) Edgington, the former of whom came to Edgington in 1835 and entered one and one-half sections of land in the town which was afterwards given his name. Five children have been born to Judge and Mrs. Cleland, namely: Samuel L., Mary E., David J., Edward B., and John, the last two named being deceased.

CLELAND, Samuel D., a representative resident of Rock Island and honored veteran of the Civil war, is well known here as he has made this city his home for many years. He was born at Reading, O., January 29, 1842, a son of Rev. Samuel and Eleanor B. (Castner) Cleland, who came to Rock Island in the year of his birth. Reared on a farm, he received his early education in the public schools of Edgington, this county, and studied for college at Millersburg, Ill., under the supervision of Prof. W. H. Gest during the winter of 1860.

On September 3, 1861, Mr. Cleland enlisted as private in Company A, Ninth Illinois Cavalry, for service in defense of his country, was promoted to rank of sergeant, later to that of lieutenant in the Sixty-first United States Colored Infantry. He participated in the campaigns through Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and made a record of which he and his family may well be proud. After the close of the war he taught school for a time, and then married. Following his marriage he engaged in farming until he embarked in a grocery business, which he carried on for two years. For the next seven years he sold monuments for his brother John, but for the past thirty years he has been a traveling salesman for the Rock Island Stove Company. Possessing an expert knowledge of his line of goods, he is a valued employe of this large company. He has traveled through the states of Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri, but during this time has resided at Rock Island.

On January 27, 1867, Samuel D. Cleland married Sallenda E. Fisher, a daughter of William and Fannie Fisher of Edgington, Ill. Mrs. Cleland died at Rock Island, October 11, 1902, sincerely mourned by her family, having been a Christian lady of high character, devoted to her family. She had borne her husband three children, namely: Fanny, who is assistant librarian of the Rock Island public library; Paul, who is on a farm in Wisconsin; and Blanche, who is the wife of Cyrus D. McLane of Rock Island. Mr. Cleland is a member of Buford Post No. 243, G. A. R., of Rock Island, and for the past twenty-seven years has belonged to Broadway Presbyterian church, of which he is an elder.

CLENDENIN, General William, was born at Lyndon, Whiteside county, Ill., April 12, 1845, and in 1858 accompanied the family to Morrison, Ill., where his education was secured. In his nineteenth year he enlisted in Company B, 140th Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in which he served as first sergeant until the following September, when he was advanced to the rank of sergeant major, and at the mustering out of the 140th Regiment, he re-entered the service in Company A, 108th Regiment, United States Colored Troops, where he was serving as first lieutenant when the regiment was mustered out, January 1, 1866. His connection with the Illinois National Guard began August 24, 1877, when he was elected second lieutenant of Company B, Fourth Regiment, and when this company became a part of the Fourteenth Battalion, January 4, 1878, he was advanced to first lieutenant, and November 27, of the same year, was promoted to the rank of captain. On May 30, 1879, he was made major of the Fourteenth Battalion and in July, 1880, was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and commanded the Fourteenth Battalion. Upon the reorganization of the National Guard in 1882, he was elected colonel of the Sixth Regiment, May 17, 1882, and was twice re-elected to the command of the same regiment, serving as such until December 28, 1892, when he was promoted by Governor Fifer to the rank of brigadier-general and assigned to the command of the Third Brigade, Illinois National Guard. He was removed by Governor Altgelt, March 28, 1893, for political reasons.

In April, 1898, when the troops were assembled to be enlisted in the United States service, he was appointed Inspector General of the Illinois National Guard with rank of colonel by Governor Tanner. During the month of May, he organized a provisional regiment, subject to future call by the President of the United States for more troops in case the war continued and the men were needed. His regiment, had it been called out, would have been the Seventeenth Illinois United States Volunteer Infantry. On May 15, 1899, he was again appointed brigadier-general, which position he held until his resignation from that office, June 6, 1903, when he was placed on the retired list.

General Clendenin held every commissioned office in the service of the Illinois National Guard, from second lieutenant to brigadier-general, without a single break, and had in his possession ten commissions from the governors of Illinois. This record is unparalleled in the history of the Illinois National Guard, and it was highly gratifying to his numerous friends and acquaintances to see his loyalty to his state and country vindicated by the new honors voluntarily thrust upon him by Governor John R. Tanner, and was a vindication of his military record and was felt to be a rebuke to the official who had peremptorily demanded his resignation in order to throw the office to a political favorite. General Clendenin was elected an Original Companion, of the First Class, of the Loyal Legion of the United States, through the Commandery of the State of Illinois, April 4, 1901. He became a resident of Moline, in 1872, and there his death occurred March 11, 1908, at which time he was in the Government revenue service, serving as deputy collector for the Peoria District, to which position he was appointed in 1901.

On April 16, 1867, General Clendenin was married to Rachel Gridley, daughter of J. G. Gridley, a pioneer citizen of Morrison, Ill., and to them were born three children: Robert G., of Colfax, Wash.; Frank J., of East Moline; and Mrs. Mabel C. Peterson, of Moline. Mrs. Clendenin died October 15, 1877. About three years later he was married (second) to Laura E. Frye, of Morrison, Ill., who died in 1904. Several years thereafter, the General was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary I. Bunker, of Galesburg, Ill., who survives him.

CLENDENIN, Frank J., postmaster at East Moline, Ill., and a man who has been identified with matters of a business and public nature in the city for a number of years, is also prominent in military circles of the state, and has upheld the military reputation of the family established by his father, the late General William Clendenin. Mr. Clendenin was born September 18, 1870, at Morrison, Ill., and was educated in the public schools of Moline. For a number of years he was engaged in the drug business with his father, but in 1899, bought the latter's interest. In 1903 he located in East Moline, where he conducted a drug store until 1911, when he sold out. For eighteen months he served as city clerk but resigned in 1906, when he was appointed Postmaster, and he again received the appointment in 1910. He has always been active in the ranks of the republican party.

Frank J. Clendenin first joined the Illinois National Guard, and was promoted through the ranks of corporal, sergeant and major of the Sixth Regiment, and second lieutenant of Company F, Sixth Regiment to the position of captain of that company, holding that rank at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. The regiment was mobilized at Springfield and went to Camp Alger, Washington, from whence it was sent to Porto Rico, serving two months and returning home in September, and was mustered out November 25, 1898. Later he was made adjutant of the Third Brigade, Illinois National Guard, retiring with the rank of lieutenant-colonel in 1903. He is a member of the Spanish-American War Veterans and the Sons of Veterans, and also holds membership in the Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Odd Fellows. At the organization of the East Moline Commercial Club, he was elected secretary, an office which he held until January, 1911, when he became president, serving two years.

In 1902, Mr. Clendenin was united in marriage with Miss Lillie M. Piper, of Moline, and they have two children, L. Ruth and Earl Foster. Mrs. Clendenin is a daughter of L. B. and Anna Piper. Mr. Piper has been a resident of Moline for more than half a century, having been connected with the Moline Plow Company for nearly twenty-five years.

CLINE, Caleb W., is a man whose success in life is the result of good management and hard work, for he belongs to that class called self-made. After spending some years in a variety of occupations, he finally became convinced that he was well fitted by inclination and natural ability to be a carpenter, and after becoming expert in his trade, his business sense suggested he would find it profitable to engage in contracting on his own account. He has built up one of the best enterprises of the kind in Rock Island county, has a high reputation for the quality of the work he turns out and has good standing in business circles. He was born in Greene county, Ohio, in May, 1869, a son of W. M. and Elizabeth (Shaner) Cline, also natives of that state. The father was a farmer by occupation and in 1880 moved to the vicinity of Decatur, Ind., where he and his wife still live on a farm, although he has practically retired from active life. They had children as follows: Ida, Mrs. James Martz, died at Decatur; Curtis, of Decatur; Caleb W.; and Lora, Mrs. Clarence Baxter, of Fort Wayne.

As a boy, Caleb W. Cline helped with the work on his father's farm and attended local schools. After reaching his majority he worked two years in a brick yard and later took up carpenter work in Decatur. In September, 1899, he came to Moline, worked as journeyman carpenter for four years, since which time he has been a contractor on his own account. He employs an average of from twelve to fifteen men and his office is located in his home at No. 1822 Sixteenth street, Moline, which handsome city residence, with modern conveniences and appliances, he erected in 1908. He is a member of the Christian church, and in politics is a republican. He is an intelligent and well meaning man, one who is always ready to help to advance movements for the general welfare. He has erected several fine buildings in Moline and Rock Island, which are the best advertisement he could have of the quality of his work.

On November 5, 1895, Mr. Cline was married to Edith Cherysolmes, born at Belmore, O., daughter of Lorenzo and Esther (Ginther) Cherysolmes. Mrs. Cherysolmes died when her daughter Edith was born, so the latter never knew a mother's love and care. The father later married Mary Walters and now lives retired from active life, at Decatur, Ind., being eighty-two years of age. Two children were born to Mr. Cline and wife: Herman, born December 20, 1896; and Naomi, born May 18, 1907, who died the same day.

COBURN, John H., an enterprising contractor and builder of Moline, Ill., who has for several years past been operating in Rock Island, Moline and Davenport, has incidentally furnished work for a number of men in connection with his business. He was born at Walcott, Iowa, July 10, 1868, son of John and Catherine (McCuddin) Coburn, natives of Ireland, who came to America in childhood. The father, who was employed on a Mississippi river steamboat between St. Paul and New Orleans, came to Rock Island in the fall of 1856 and in 1864 moved to Scott county, Iowa. In that year he left his employment on the river and later entered the employ of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company, as track foreman between Walcott and Grinnell, making his home in the former place until 1896. He died November 18, 1908, at the age of seventy-four years, eight months, and his widow resides with her son, John H. Coburn. Their children were: Robert J., of Chicago; John H., Matthew B., of Lost Nation, Iowa; Jennie M., Mrs. Ed Woodruff, of Davenport; James P., of Whiteside county, Ill.; and George F., of Carroll county, Ill.

From the age of fifteen years to that of seventeen, John H. Coburn worked with his father during the summer months on the railroad, then for four years taught school in Scott county. For some time he traveled for the Van Houten Cocoa Company, but in 1896 severed his connections with them and came to Moline, since then engaging in his present enterprise. He has erected many buildings in the three cities above designated, and at times employs as many as thirty men. He stands well in business circles and has established a good reputation for the quality of his work.

Fraternally Mr. Coburn is a member of Leo Council K. C. No. 716, of which he is a charter member. He belongs to St. Mary's Catholic church. He is a democrat in politics and for several years was a member of the county central committee, representing the First Precinct of the Seventh Ward; also has served as judge of elections, and as a delegate to the state conventions. He is unmarried. He is well known in the vicinity of his present home, having completed his education in the high school at Davenport, and has many friends in various circles. Ambitious and industrious he is constantly building up his business, at the same time keeping abreast of the times and evincing a commendable interest in the affairs of the community and county.

COE, Albert Sheridan (deceased), born in Monroe county, N. Y., October 1, 1817, moved with the rest of his father's family to Sterling, Ill., in 1838, and in 1840, settled near Port Byron, Rock Island county. There he established a large and profitable fruit farm and nursery, operating both until his death, on October 17, 1869. Besides holding various township and county offices, he served as a representative in the Illinois state assembly in 1869. On February 11, 1846, he married (first) Arethesa Barnett, of Sterling, Ill., born October 20, 1825, died in Coe township, December 17, 1851. On February 27, 1856, Albert Sheridan Coe married (second) Lucy C. Hollister, born at Granville, N. Y., November 28, 1832, a daughter of Edmund and Emma Louisa (Hall) Hollister. The children by the first marriage were: George B., who was born September 24, 1847, a graduate of the Iowa College of Grinnell, Ia., became a lawyer, and died at Aberdeen, S. D., November 25, 1889; and Florence E., who was born March 18, 1850, is of Sterling, Ill. The children by the second marriage were: Grace C., who was born December 31, 1856, died September 8, 1858; Albert Sheridan, who was born September 21, 1858, died September 28, 1860; Edmund Hollister, who was born September 3, 1860, succeeded to his father's homestead in Coe township, and has the family bible which belonged to his great-great-grandfather, Simeon Coe; Howard Marcus, who was born March 3, 1863, died March 29, 1866; Emma L., who was born April 18, 1865, was graduated from the Illinois College at Jacksonville, and married W. H. Whigman, an attorney and professor of the Chicago Law School; and Simeon Frederick, who was born October 30, 1867, now resides with his widowed mother on the old Hollister estate, where also lives her sister Miss Emma L. Hollister. The Hollister family is also an old one in Rock Island county. The first member of it to settle here was Isaac Hollister, a native of Glastonbury, Conn., who was born February 2, 1796, and married Martha DeWolf, a native of Conway, Mass. In the spring of 1833, he came to Illinois, settling at Port Byron, this county, where he died October 14, 1885. He took up government land, building himself a home in the wilderness, first being in Coe township, but later in Port Byron township. The brother of Isaac, Edmund, came here in 1837, and made this locality his home until his death. Edmund Hollister married Emma Louisa Hall, a native of Whitehall, N. Y., born April 12, 1807. Edmund Hollister died December 19, 1890, having had the following children: Lucy C., Emma L., Albert F., Edmund N., and Isaac F., the last two being veterans of the Civil war.

COIN, Nick J.—One of the prosperous firms of Rock Island is that operating under the name of Coin Bros. and Kerr, wholesale and retail dealers in and manufacturers of candy and ice cream. The business is conveniently located at No. 329 Twentieth street, and was organized October 28, 1909, by Nick J. and Angelus Coin. In 1911, Mr. Kerr was admitted to partnership. The Coin Bros. have another store at No. 2736 Fifth avenue.

Nick J. Coin was born in Achouria, Greece, where his father still makes his home, working as a carpenter. The excellent mother died there in December, 1911. Among the children of these parents were: Christ, who is a captain in the Grecian army; George, who is a teacher in the schools of Athens; Nick J.; and Angelus, who was also born in Achouria, Greece. Nick J. Coin married Jennie Ryan of Davenport, Ia., and they have two children: John and William.

The young men of the above mentioned firm have developed their business from small beginnings to its present prosperous condition, and are recognized as leaders in their line. They are industrious, hard-working and thrifty, and hold the confidence of all with whom they do business. Their products are uniformly good, and have a wide popularity.

COLBERG, William Fredrick, owner of 380 acres of valuable farming land in Drury township is one of the leading agriculturists of this part of Rock Island county, and no one stands higher in the estimation of the people here. His property is known as the Bay View Farm, and on it he carries on general farming, specializing on corn, of which he raises 300 acres. He was born at Illinois City, December 5, 1869, a son of William F. and Wilhelmina (Fuhlman) Colberg, both natives of Germany, who came to this country in 1869, settling at Muscatine, Ia., but later came to the vicinity of Illinois City, where the father worked by the day for a year. He had been a carpenter in Germany, but desired to farm, so rented property, and operated it for himself. In 1880, he bought 175 acres of land in Mercer county, Ill., where he remained until his death, July 11, 1911. His widow survived him until May 19, 1912. Although he died a rich man, the father commenced life here under adverse circumstances, for his money gave out when he reached Chicago, and he made the rest of the journey on borrowed money. Ten children were born to him and his wife: Agnes, who is the wife of Herman Nochow; William F.; Albert; Max; Lucas; Hulda, who is the wife of David Laird of Kansas; Louisa, who is the wife of David Schrader; Alma, who is the wife of George Dodson, died at the age of twenty-one years; Otto, who died in infancy; and Ernest.

William Fredrick Colberg was educated in the neighborhood schools, and has spent his life in agricultural work. In 1893, he secured his first 160 acres of land, and has been adding to his holdings ever since. On September 2, 1896, he married Mattie E. Otto, born at Ann Arbor, Mich., who was reared in Wisconsin, a daughter of Julius and Martha (Weide) Otto, the former having been a miller in Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Colberg became the parents of two children: Arleigh William and Velma Ardis, both of whom are at home. The Methodist church holds the membership of Mr. Colberg and wife. He is a republican, and has served as a school director since he was twenty-one years old. He also served on the river commission for three years, and was on the drainage committee of Copperas creek and the river. He is a self-made man. Living at home, he gave his father his wages until he was twenty-one years old, when he started out for himself, his possessions consisting of a team of horses with wagon and harness and one hundred dollars in money. He used the latter to buy household effects. From this small beginning, he has accumulated all that he now owns, and is justly accounted one of the most progressive men of his neighborhood.

COLBURN, Jewett Z. (deceased).—The semi-centennial of the outbreak of the Civil war was recently celebrated in various ways throughout the country the soldiers of the ranks helped to save. Unfortunately some of the bravest were not able to live through the battles of everyday life to participate in this anniversary, but their memories are cherished and will be as long as the flag they saved from dishonor waves above the heads of Americans. One of the honored veterans of Rock Island county who have already answered to that last roll call, is the late Jewett Z. Colburn, for many years a representative citizen of the city of Rock Island. He was born in Lowell, Vt., March 21, 1844, a son of Ziba and Mary (Peasley) (Craft) Colburn. The Colburn family was an old one in New England, and for several generations the members of it were content to stay in the east, but Ziba Colburn and his wife decided to risk their fortunes in what was then the far west, and came to Rock Island in 1856. For a year or two after their arrival here, the father worked at whatever offered, and then secured a position as boss carpenter with the Rock Island Railroad, holding it for many years. His death occurred when he was seventy-six years old, he passing away firm in the faith of the Methodist church, of which both he and his wife were members. In addition to Jewett Colburn, these parents had one other son, George.

Jewett Colburn attended school at Lowell and in Rock Island, and learned to be a locomotive engineer when only nineteen years old. For the following thirty-five years he was one of the Rock Island Railroad's most reliable engineers. During the Civil war, he served in Company G, Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, as a brave and loyal soldier. Upon receiving his discharge, he returned to Rock Island to resume his duties as engineer.

On September 4, 1866, he was married at Rock Island, to Mary A. Wilson, daughter of Mark C. and Delilah (Foor) Wilson. Mrs. Colburn was but a baby when brought from Bedford, Penn., to Rock Island, so that almost her entire life has been spent here. Her father was a wheelwright by trade, who died in Rock Island. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Colburn were: Mary Estella, who is the wife of Harry C. Spaulding of Rock Island; Will W., who is of the same place, married Minnie Alter; Carrie E., who married Peter C. Simmon of Rock Island; and Charles Arthur, who is at home. Mr. Colburn died October 29, 1897, a staunch member of the Methodist church, which he had aided substantially for years. He belonged to John Buford Post, No. 343, G. A. R., and was buried with military honors, his old comrades attending him to his last resting place, and each succeeding year do him honor upon the day set aside in memory of those who sacrificed their lives, whether on the battlefield, or later on in life, for the cause they loved so well.

COLE, Thomas E., who stands high in public esteem as a representative business man of Andalusia, has won this public approval through his enterprise and honorable business methods. He is proprietor of The Thomas E. Cole Lumber Company, having purchased the same in 1902, which was formerly known as the Ira H. Buffum Lumber Company. Thomas E. Cole was born on a farm in Buffalo Prairie township, December 27, 1863, and is a son of George W. and Anna P. (Martin) Cole. George W. Cole was born in Venango county, Pa. When only thirteen years of age he left the parental roof and afterward made his own way in the world unassisted, for a time drifting as a homeless boy is forced to do, from one place to another. He engaged in various kinds of work and at one time drove mules along the tow-path on the Erie canal. He was a young man when he reached Rock Island county and after locating in Buffalo Prairie township remained there during the rest of his life, acquiring property, becoming a respected citizen and at death leaving an honorable name to his children. He died on his own farm in Buffalo Prairie township, July 11, 1878, and his burial was at Illinois City. In politics he was a staunch democrat. He married Anna P. Martin, who died May 20, 1900. They had two children: Vanle, who is the wife of J. S. Mills residing at Mason City, Ia.; and Thomas E., who is of Andalusia township. The parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal church. The father was identified with the Masonic fraternity.

Thomas E. Cole attended the schools of Buffalo Prairie township through boyhood and from the age of ten years performed farm tasks and assumed charge of his widowed mother when he lost his father at the age of fourteen years. In 1884 he purchased the home farm of 420 acres and continued to operate it until he sold in the spring of 1911. In 1902 he embarked in his present business, one that he has developed along normal lines and which is a recognized commercial factor of the town. On March 4, 1885, Thomas E. Cole was married to Miss Elsie L. Tittermayton, who was born on her father's farm in Edgington township, April 11, 1863. She is a daughter of James M. and Nancy Jane (Bell) Tittermayton. Her father was born in Ohio and was one year old when his father, John Tittermayton, a weaver by trade, moved to Rock Island county. Mr. and Mrs. Cole have children as follows: Lorenz J., born January 22, 1886; Florence May, born July 16, 1889; Alpha Lila, born August 18, 1891; James Foy, born September 5, 1893; Helen Gertrude, born November 9, 1895; D. Ruth, born October 20, 1897; Orpha Day, born October 12, 1900; Nina Emma, born June 18, 1905; and George M., the only one of the family deceased. He was born November 1, 1887, and died September 4, 1888. Politically Mr. Cole is a democrat and fraternally he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a man of liberal mind and benevolent impulses and may always be counted on to do his share in promoting worthy public enterprises and in sustaining accredited charities.

CONDON, Clement C., D. D. S., who has been engaged in the practice of dental surgery at Rock Island, since 1903, has become one of the leading members of his profession in this county, and through his conscientious and reliable work and his thorough knowledge of the diseases of the teeth has succeeded in building up a large practice. Dr. Condon was born March 18, 1865, in Rock Island, Ill., a son of John and Catherine (Bradshaw) Condon. John Condon was born in County Cork, Ireland, February 1, 1830, and came to LaSalle, Ill., after coming to this country. Here he was married to Catherine Bradshaw, who was born in Limerick, Ireland, and came with her parents to the United States when nineteen years old. They had a family of children as follows: John, who is residing in Davenport, Iowa; James, who is living in Kansas City, Mo.; Stephen, who is located at Rock Island; Clement C.; Catherine, who is the widow of George Wright of Rock Island; and Mary, who died young. He then entered Augustana college, where he spent two and one-half years, when he became a student in the Baltimore College of Dentistry, from which he received his diploma. Dr. Condon came to Rock Island in 1903, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession, meeting with deserved success from the start. His well-appointed offices are situated at No. 1901½ Second avenue, and he has a beautiful home at No. 1601 Twenty-first street. He is connected with the Knights of Columbus and the Elks, and is a member of the State Dental Society. With his wife he is a communicant of St. Joseph's Catholic parish. His political views are those of the republican party. On June 29, 1910, Dr. Condon was united in marriage at the Villa DeChantel, by Rev. Father Lockney, to Catherine G. Erwin, who was born in Germantown, Ky., in 1877, the second youngest of the seven children of the late Thomas Erwin.

CONNELLY, Bernard Drury, a leading attorney of Rock Island, Ill., and twice president of the Rock Island County Bar Association, is junior member of the well known law firm of Connelly & Connelly, and since 1894 has been prominent in public matters in this city. Mr. Connelly was born at Rock Island, October 19, 1866, a son of Maj. H. C. Connelly.

Bernard Drury Connelly was graduated from the Rock Island high school at the age of seventeen years, and in the fall of 1883 entered the Iowa State University, from which institution he was graduated in June, 1887, with the degree of A. B. He was admitted to practice at Topeka, Kans., in 1891, and was associated with the law firm of Dauthitt, Jones & Mason, of that city, for several years, but in January, 1894, he returned to the city of his nativity and formed a partnership with his father, under the firm name of Connelly & Connelly, an association which has continued to the present time. Mr. Connelly carries on a general practice, and has represented a number of the large corporations, his practice taking him into the Supreme Court and the United States Court of Appeals. From 1906 until 1908 he was master in chancery of the Circuit Court of Rock Island county. He is a member of Illinois State Bar Association, a director in the State Bank of Rock Island, and director and solicitor of The Rock Island Mutual Building, Loan and Savings Association, and a member of the Rock Island Club. He is also director of the Rock Island Public Library. Mr. Connelly is a republican in his political views, and he has been an active worker in the ranks of the party, giving of both his time and means in public speech work and private influence, but he has never sought public office for himself. He holds membership in the Illinois Sons of the American Revolution. In May, 1910, Mr. Connelly was awarded the Carnegie (bronze) Hero medal for rescuing Miss Charlotte Chamberlain from drowning in the Mississippi river, opposite Le Claire, Iowa, in June, 1906.

On December 22, 1903, Mr. Connelly was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Chamberlin, the daughter of Charles Robert and Anna (Hull) Chamberlin, the former having been cashier of the State Bank of Rock Island for forty-five years. One son, Bernard Chamberlin, has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Connelly. The family home is at No. 724 Nineteenth street.

CONNELLY, Major Henry Clay.—The life of this eminent soldier, editor and lawyer has been passed in the city of Rock Island since the year 1855, and during this time he has been intimately associated with the professional and public interests of the city. Major Connelly was born at Petersburg, Pa., December 22, 1831, and is a son of James Connelly, promoter and contractor on the great National Road, and Marie (Hugus) Connelly, both branches of the mother's family being of Huguenot extraction. Major Connelly's grandparents were Bernard Connelly, a native of County Antrim, Ireland, who settled in Philadelphia, Pa., about the year 1800, and his wife, Elizabeth (Eggleston) Connelly, of English birth, who was the first, and for many years the only, member of the Church of England in Somerset county, Pa. Major Connelly's great-grandparents were Captain Peter and Rosa (Bonnet) Ankeny, the former of whom guarded with his command the western frontier of Pennsylvania during the Revolutionary war, while the latter was a member of the historical French family of Bonnet.

Henry Clay Connelly secured his education at the Somerset (Pa.) academy, and received his introduction to journalism in the office of the Somerset Visitor, where he became an expert printer. In 1852 he became editor of the Beaver Star, at Beaver, Pa., and continued as such until 1854, in the following year coming to Rock Island to become editor of the Daily Islander and Argus, a capacity in which he acted until 1859. In the meantime he had been assiduously prosecuting his law studies, and was admitted to the bar of Rock Island county January 23, 1860, and at once entered upon the practice of his chosen profession. The young lawyer was not long engaged in following his vocation, however, for the outbreak of the Civil war turned his attention to the needs of his country, and in 1862, while it was being organized, he served four months as adjutant of the Fourteenth Illinois Cavalry, at Peoria. He was commissioned lieutenant, then captain, and finally major of this regiment, being elected to the last-named by a vote of the officers of the regiment over six captains whose commissions were of prior date. The colonel of the Fourteenth, in his request to Governor Oglesby to issue the commission, referred to the gallant conduct of Major Connelly on the field of battle on different occasions. He was in the great Morgan raid, and was personally present when Gen. John H. Morgan was captured in Ohio; participated in the siege of Knoxville and the capture of Cumberland Gap, and was in most of the engagements in Eastern Tennessee under General Burnside. On February 2, 1864, he took part in the Cherokee Indian fight near Quallatown, N. C., and had with him a part of the battery he was commanding, and although the work required to take the guns over the high mountains and through the deep ravines was herculean, many of the Indians were killed, and the guns and prisoners returned to the camp successfully. Major Connelly took part in the Atlanta campaign, and was not far from General McPherson when that gallant soldier was killed in front of Atlanta. In the fall of 1864 he confronted Generals Hood and Forrest with his command on the Tennessee river; was with the rear guard from the river to Columbia, Tenn., both day and night, and took an active and important part in the cavalry fights on Duck river and in the battles of Franklin and Nashville.

At the close of his long and gallant service, Major Connelly returned to private life, and again took up the practice of law, and in 1869 was elected city attorney of Rock Island, an office in which he served until 1871. In the Steamer Dubuque riot case, in which raftsmen killed and drowned six negroes of the boat's crew while the vessel was passing between Rock Island and Hampton, June 29, 1869, Major Connelly defended Michael Lynch, who received a sentence of ten years in the penitentiary, although public opinion had been strongly in favor of the death penalty. Much other important and complicated litigation has been in Major Connelly's able care, and at all times he has shown himself one of the most astute, learned and thorough legists of the Rock Island county bar. For some years he has been engaged in practice in partnership with his son, Bernard D. Connelly, under the firm style of Connelly & Connelly. The high esteem in which he is held by his professional brethren was evidenced on his seventieth birthday, when he was presented with a richly-carved, gold mounted cane by the Rock Island County Bar Association.

While the greater part of his attention has been centered in his legal practice, Major Connelly has been by no means inactive in public matters or indifferent to the duties of citizenship. He is the last surviving member of the Committee of Ten who went to Washington, D. C., from Davenport, Rock Island and Moline in the fall of 1861 to secure, by act of Congress, the location of the great United States arsenal on the Island of Rock Island. He was tendered the position of postmaster of Rock Island while Mr. Buchanan was president, but being a strong supporter of Senator Douglas he declined to accept the place. He was appointed to that position by President Johnson, but never served therein, as a republican United States senate refused to confirm his appointment. Until the election of President McKinley, he acted with the democratic party, but since that time has been a supporter of republican principles and candidates. For several years he was president of the board of education of Rock Island. Under the act of congress he was one of the incorporators of the street railway company crossing the Island between Davenport and the city of Rock Island, and after the death of Bailey Davenport was made president of the Rock Island and Milan Street Railway Company. Major Connelly has been prominent in Grand Army circles, having been the first commander of General John Buford Post, of Rock Island, and also served for some years as president of Rock Island County Sons of the American Revolution. In his religious affiliations he is a Presbyterian.

During his long and active career, he has been brought into contact with many famous men, and is today one of the few living individuals who personally met the Indian Chief Black Hawk during his lifetime. The great statesman, Henry Clay, after whom Major Connelly is named, passed through the town of Petersburg, Pa., on his way to Washington, D. C., about the year 1837, and the major, then a small child, was taken by his father to see Mr. Clay, who placed the lad on his knee, patted him on the head and presented him with a twenty-five cent "shinplaster." While at Washington, in December, 1861, Major Connelly attended President Lincoln's first reception in the White House, and was presented to the president by Colonel Lamont, as Doctor Connelly, from Rock Island. Mr. Lincoln warmly grasped the major's hand, and, throwing his left arm over his guest's shoulder, remarked: "God bless you, Doctor. I am always glad to meet my friends from Illinois." Major Connelly is possessed of no mean literary talent, and has contributed on numerous occasions to the press. In the Rock Island Daily Union, of Sunday, June 30, 1910, appeared the first installment of "Personal Recollections of Civil War Incidents," written by him, the incidents appearing successively every Sunday for fourteen numbers, and subsequently reprinted in the Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society.

On May 12, 1857, Major Connelly was married at Rock Island, Ill., to Miss Adelaide McCall, daughter of Clark and Hannah (Hanford) McCall, of Allegany county, N. Y. Four children born to this union now survive, as follows: Clark H., born in 1858, and Alvin H., born in 1861, both of whom are in the lumber business at Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. Mahel McGavren, the wife of Dr. C. W. McGavren, of Pasadena, Cal.; and Bernard D., born in 1866, who is his father's law partner in the firm of Connelly & Connelly.

COOK, James B.—The progressive, intelligent farmers of the entire country have every reason to be elated over the stand which was taken by President Taft when chief executive with reference to the agriculturists. He recognized the importance and dignity of farm work, and endeavored to instill into city people the necessity for more of the American people turning their attention towards the farm. One of the young men of Rock Island county who has conclusively proven what can be accomplished along these lines is James B. Cook, of Bowling township. Mr. Cook was born in Davenport, Iowa, October 4, 1869, being a son of Archibald and Frances (Moore) Cook, the former of whom was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1839. He learned the trade of ship joiner, and followed it for many years, working in shipyards in his native land. In 1862, he came to the United States, and direct from New York city to Rock Island, where he worked for a time at wagon-making. He was also at Davenport, Milan and Preemption, engaged in the same line, and died at the latter place in 1906, and was buried in the cemetery there. He was reared in the Presbyterian faith, and in politics was a democrat. For twenty years he acted as notary public at Preemption. His wife died at Galesburg, in 1890, while on a visit there to a sister. Mr. and Mrs. Cook had children as follows: James B., Jennie, wife of John C. Reed a Methodist preacher at Tacoma, Wash.; Nellie, wife of Judson Shafer of Ogden, Utah; Alexander of Rock Island county, and Glen of Bau-croft, Ida.

James B. Cook attended school a portion of each year for twelve years, and when seventeen years old, took first prize for penmanship, in a Mercer county school, but he has learned more from reading and private study. As he grew to manhood at Preemption, Ill., he began making butter, and received from $40 to $45 per month for his services. By saving his money, he secured a start in life. He then began working out for $300 per year, spending three years with a Mr. Armstrong. For eight years he worked for three men, and then rented 160 acres from William and James Moffitt, of section 19, Bowling township, where he has lived for the past thirteen years.

On December 19, 1894, Mr. Cook was married to Miss Lylia Clarke of Bowling township, a daughter of William Clarke. Mr. and Mrs. Cook have these children: Clarke, Warren, Mary, Vivian and Benjamin. A staunch republican, Mr. Cook has rendered yeoman service to his party, and served as tax collector for two years. He was a member of the Methodist church, and active in its good work. Alive to all topics of interest, devoted to his work, and anxious to make as much progress in every way as possible, Mr. Cook is one of the best types of the energetic young Illinois farmer of today, that can be found in this part of the state.

COOPER, Charles Jesse, a manufacturer of Moline, and one of the distinguished veterans of the Civil war, has a military record which is an honor to him, his regiment and the country which he served. Mr. Cooper was born in Beloit, Wis., January 19, 1843, a son of Samuel Beach and Amanda (Bicknell) Cooper. The father was a contractor and builder who moved from Canaan, Essex county, Vt., to Beloit, Wis., in 1838. Charles Jesse Cooper grew up in Beloit, and alternated attendance at school with work on the farm, residing at home until his enlistment on August 11, 1862, in Captain Hodgson's Company I, Twenty-second Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, but was transferred and mustered in at Racine, Wis., as hospital steward of the regiment. This regiment was ordered direct to Cincinnati, then to Covington, and marched from there to Frankfort, Lexington, Nicholasville and Danville, Ky., chasing after General Morgan and other Confederate leaders, spending the greater part of the winter at the last two named places. In February, 1863, the regiment marched to Louisville, Ky., took transports and reached Nashville, Tenn., the latter part of the month, and camped a few days. They then marched to Franklin and went into camp, but in a day or two were again marching. The brigade, under Colonel John Coburn, was ordered south on March 4, and attacked Van Doran's forces, which retreated. The regiment followed on the 5th, and fought nearly all day, with the result that it suffered a defeat and nearly all were taken prisoners, but some escaped, including the lieutenant-colonel and Mr. Cooper. The regiment was ordered back to Brentwood to guard the railroad bridges. On March 25, 1863, it was surrounded by General Forrest's forces, about 6,000 strong, and all captured. They were then marched around the Union forces at Franklin to Tullahoma, where General Bragg with his whole army was in camp. The prisoners were ordered to his headquarters, and made to deposit their knapsacks, haversacks, canteens, blankets and overcoats. These prisoners were then sent by train to Columbia, from there to Chattanooga, thence to Knoxville, and then to Lynchburg, Va., finally landing in Libby prison. At about eight A. M. the next morning the prisoners were taken out, and sent by train to City Point and exchanged on parole. Mr. Cooper was a prisoner for sixteen days, when he was taken, with the rest of his regiment, to Annapolis and rehabilitated, whence he was sent to St. Louis, where the regiment was re-organized. Mr. Cooper was taken sick, with all the indications of smallpox, which finally proved to be the effect of a polypus in his nose. This affected his eyes and general health to such an extent that he was discharged, July 1, 1863. The following Christmas Eve, the polypus, which proved to be a double one, was removed, and his general health improved to such an extent, that he re-enlisted August 13, 1864, in Company A, Fortieth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and was stationed at Carondelet, guarding ordnance until December, when the regiment was ordered to Nashville. They took part in the battle of Nashville, under General A. J. Smith; followed Hood to Pittsburg Landing; were there some weeks, part of the time subsisting on shelled corn. They then took transports down the Tennessee to Paducah, Cairo, Memphis, Vicksburg and New Orleans, stopping at the above mentioned places from a day to one or two weeks. They camped about two weeks on the old Jackson battle field at New Orleans and then marched to Lake Ponchartrain, taking transports there through the Gulf to Dauphin Island, where they remained about ten days. From there they took transports and ascended Fish river for some distance, landing and marching to the rear of Spanish Fort, where they commenced a regular siege of it, which lasted thirteen days, when the Confederate forces surrendered. The following morning, the regiment was ordered to Fort Blakely, a few miles up the bay, which had been attacked by the Union forces under General Steele. Mr. Cooper remembers well that they could distinctly hear the battle raging when they started, but it soon died out, and when they arrived about noon, they found that the fort had surrendered. The regiment was then ordered to march to Montgomery, Ala., and during the march, they heard the news of the fall of Richmond, and upon their arrival at Montgomery, the distressing news of the assassination of President Lincoln. The regiment remained at Montgomery for some time, but finally took transports for Selma; from there took the train for Tombigbee river, and then headed for Vicksburg by boat; from that city, they took the transport "Olive Branch" for St. Louis, and were mustered out August 8, 1865.

After leaving the army, Mr. Cooper went west, crossing the plains, arriving at Canon City, Col., in January, 1866. He spent three years in Kansas at different places, but coming back, located at Milwaukee, Wis. Still later, he went to Beloit, where he spent a year, and then settled in 1870 on a claim on the Osage Indian Reservation in Kansas. Selling out, he went to Chicago, which remained his home for eighteen years, he being engaged in a saddlery hardware business during that period. In 1888, he came to Moline, which has been his place of residence ever since, his home now being at No. 1616 Sixth avenue. He belongs to R. H. Graham Post, G. A. R., of Moline. The Episcopal church holds his membership, and he votes the progressive ticket.

Mr. Cooper was married at Chicago, January 3, 1883, to Evelyn Thomas, daughter of Trumbull Thomas, who settled in Delavan, Wis., in 1836. No issue.

COOPER, Herbert W.—The building up of vast industrial institutions, and the successful conduct of their multiple affairs, require sound judgment, a thorough understanding of existing conditions, and natural ability. Herbert W. Cooper, president of the H. W. Cooper Sad-Hardware Manufacturing Company of Moline, is one of the sound business men of Rock Island county, whose integrity and farsightedness have contributed largely to the success of his concern. Mr. Cooper was born at Beloit, Wis., May 7, 1845, a son of Samuel B. and Amanda (Bicknell) Cooper, natives of Vermont and Rhode Island, respectively. Samuel B. Cooper was a contractor and builder, who went to Beloit, Wis., in 1838. Prior to leaving Vermont, he served as sheriff and justice of the peace, and held the latter office for sixteen years in Rock county, Wis. He was one of the pioneer builders of that section, and did much of the building in his vicinity, including churches as well as private residences. In 1871, he went to Wells River, Vt., where he died in 1875. His wife died at Beloit, Wis., in August, 1870, and is there buried.

Herbert W. Cooper was educated in the public schools of Beloit, and took a two years' course in Beloit college. Leaving school, he clerked for Benjamin Young in the same city, who was in the sad-hardware business, and when it was moved to Milwaukee, Mr. Cooper went with the concern, remaining with them until the fall of 1868, when he returned to Beloit. There he entered the hardware house of Moore & McCloskey, continuing with it nearly two years. When the partners sold to G. H. Stocking, Mr. Cooper remained with the new proprietor until George E. Mueller.

August, 1870, when he went to Chicago. There he engaged with Grant & McLain, but after the Chicago fire he went with Smith & Duncan. In two years he left them to work for Squires Bros., of Chicago. In February, 1879, he went to Fargo, N. D., to go into the sad-hardware business for himself, there continuing until October, 1881, when he sold his store to Bristol & Sweet, and with his brother established the C. J. Cooper Company of Chicago. The firm continued there until June, 1888, when removal was made to Moline. Mr. Cooper bought out his brother's interest, and from January 24, 1890, to June 29, 1907, operated the concern as a private enterprise. In the latter year, he formed a stock company known as the H. W. Cooper Sad-Hardware Manufacturing Company, of which he has since been president.

During the Civil war, Mr. Cooper gave his services to his country, enlisting at Beloit, Wis., May 12, 1864, in Company B, Fortieth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Merritt Allen, and Colonel Ray, and was sent to Memphis, Tenn., and attached to General Hurlbert's brigade. Although once attacked by General Forrest, Mr. Cooper's command saw but little hard fighting, being occupied with guard duty. While home on a furlough, he was stricken with a severe case of typhoid fever, but aside from that suffered no injuries from his service, and was mustered out with his company at Madison, Wis., September 4, 1864, receiving his full pay.

Mr. Cooper was married at Beloit, Wis., January 11, 1888, to Clara B. Mills, born in that city, July 24, 1857, a daughter of Judge R. H. and Harriet (North) Mills. R. H. Mills was a judge in Connecticut. His wife, born September 28, 1818, died July 18, 1911, having attained to the venerable age of ninety-three years. Mrs. Cooper died at Moline, November 7, 1910, and is interred in the cemetery at Beloit. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper became the parents of children as follows: Harriet, born March 9, 1889, is at home; Herbert, Jr., born February 8, 1890, is at home; Roger S. died in infancy; Cara A., born March 12, 1894; Clarissa B., born April 20, 1897, and Alan M., born June 14, 1901. Mr. Cooper is a progressive; has been on the school board many years, and for several years was its president. He belongs to the G. A. R., and the Congregational church holds his membership, and receives his generous support. Mr. Cooper is one of the most representative of Rock Island county's men, and his public spirit and business enterprise have resulted favorably for the development and advancement of this locality, as well as for the extension of its industrial interests.

CORBIN, Clark.—Silvis is the home of some of the men of Rock Island county who have retired from the activities of life, finding here the advantages of city living, combined with country privileges. One of those who have shown wisdom in the selection of a permanent home here is Clark Corbin, born on the family homestead located on the present site of the Rock Island Railroad shops, February 26, 1853, a son of John G. Corbin. The latter was born in Indiana, and came to Rock Island county in 1853, buying land, and died here about 1904. He married Polly Brooks, daughter of Asahel and Betsey (Meirs) Brooks, who died about 1884; and they had fifteen children, many of whom died in infancy, only three now living: James, of Watertown; Clark and William, of Silvis.

Clark Corbin was educated in the district schools of his neighborhood, and inclining towards a mercantile life, operated a general store at Carbon Cliff for twenty-two years. He sold his property, and for four years lived there retired, then left to move to Silvis, coming here in 1906. Here he built a beautiful home, at No. 202 Thirteenth street, and has given material aid in the development of the place. He has served as a member of the board of education of Silvis, and while living at Carbon Cliff served on the board of education, for many years railroad agent and express agent, and was postmaster.

On December 16, 1874, Mr. Corbin was married to Amanda Cook, who died within a year, and is interred at Carbon Cliff. On February 28, 1877, Mr. Corbin married Laura Beckwith, daughter of Chauncey I. and Ann (Densmore) Beckwith. Mr. and Mrs. Beckwith settled in Rock Island in 1859. Mrs. Corbin was born in Dunkirk, N. Y., January 4, 1854. Mr. and Mrs. Corbin became the parents of three children: Florence, Henry and Clara. Florence, born December 16, 1877, married J. A. Wilson and lives in Moline; Henry, born May 22, 1879, married Susan Nelson and lives in Moline, where he is the principal of the Manual Training school, located in the Manual Arts building; while Clara, born December 11, 1881, married W. A. Warman and lives in Chicago. Mr. Corbin is a man of prominence in Silvis, and is known all over Rock Island county, where for years he was one of the leading business men. His reputation for honesty and business integrity has always been sustained, and no man stands higher in public opinion than he.

CORKEN, Daniel H., after a long and useful career in connection with some of the best-known concerns of Rock Island county, is living retired at Rock Island. He was born at Baltimore, Md., in 1851, a son of John and Julia (Maloney) Corken, natives of County Cork, and County Limerick, Ireland, respectively. They were married in Ireland, in 1850, and coming to the United States soon thereafter, settled in Baltimore, remaining there until 1856, when they came to Rock Island. Here, the father was engaged in railroad. The death of this excellent man took place over fifteen years ago, and his remains are interred in Calvary cemetery. They had eight children, of whom Daniel H. Corken is the eldest.

Daniel H. Corken attended the public schools, first going to one held in what afterwards became the old cracker factory. Later, he was sent to a Catholic school. Following this he learned the baker's trade. In 1862, he delivered bread to the soldiers on the Island, being at that time an apprentice to the baker's trade. Not being satisfied with this, he learned to be a moulder, and after completing his apprenticeship he took charge of the foundry of Babcock, Fleming & Brady, of Rock Island, being at that time the youngest foundry foreman in the United States. These connections continued until 1872, when he entered the employ of the government on the Island as a moulder, and was one of two to establish the foundry there. Until 1885, he continued to work in this connection, but in that year left to take charge of the Rock Island Plow Company's foundry, continuing with that concern for twenty-five years, retiring in 1910.

On April 13, 1874, Daniel H. Corken was married to Mary E. Buckley, of Syracuse, N. Y., born in 1853, whose family came to Illinois in 1861, locating on a farm in Canoe Creek township. She was a daughter of John and Julia (Barry) Buckley. Mrs. Buckley died in August, 1911, but Mr. Buckley survives. Mr. and Mrs. Corken had the following children: Harry D., who was born January 23, 1875, died April 1, 1901, was a moulder with his father until his demise; John B., who was born May 12, 1877, attended the public and parochial schools, then took a position in the office of the Rock Island Plow Company, after which he was made stamp clerk in the Rock Island Postoffice, is still in the employ of the government, is clerk of the Modern Woodmen of America, No. 1550, and on June 6, 1898, married May MacLachern, issue,—Daniel J., James H., Elizabeth and Joseph; Edward E., who was born August 9, 1880, was graduated from Augustana College, is secretary of the Gas, Power & Electric Company of Peoria, and married in 1901, Minnie Artell of Peoria, issue,—Harry D., Dorothy and Cecelia; Stephen F., who was born May 29, 1882, is agent for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad at Prairie Du Chien, Wis., and married in 1904, Sarah Taylor of La Crosse, Wis., issue,—Frances S., Helen M., and Gregory; Charles B., who was born in March, 1884, is auditor of the Modern Woodmen of America, and married in 1904, Anna Kennedy, issue,—Leo Bert.

Daniel H. Corken is a democrat, served as alderman for eight years, and has the distinction of having been one of the best councilmen the city ever knew. The Catholic church has in him an active and faithful member. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, Knights of Columbus and the Western Catholic Union, having been president and secretary of the latter. In 1906, he and his wife took a trip to Europe, visiting eight different countries, and enjoying the new experiences incident to it. He and his wife reside in their beautiful home at No. 1431 Seventh avenue. They enjoy the universal respect of all who know them, and are counted among the leading people of Rock Island county.

CORKEN, John B.—The United States Government demands that its employes be men of thoroughness, accuracy and efficiency, well trained in their calling, honest, sober and industrious, and men upon whom the utmost reliance can be placed. This applies in all lines, but more especially so in the war department, in which are employed only those whose work and character warrants the most implicit confidence. John B. Corken, an employe of the United States engineer's office of the war department, at Rock Island, Ill., has proven himself worthy of the trust placed in him. He is a native of this city, having been born in Rock Island, May 12, 1877, a son of Daniel and Mary (Buckley) Corken, the former a native of Baltimore, Md., and the latter of Syracuse, N. Y. The parents of Mr. Corken were married in Rock Island, at St. Joseph's church, and have spent practically all their lives here, Mr. Corken, Sr., having for a number of years been employed as a foundry foreman, but now living retired.

John B. Corken received an excellent common school education, and in early youth demonstrated an adaptability for work of a clerical nature and a fondness for figures. He has spent all of his life in Rock Island, and his first employment was as a clerk; later he was employed as stamp clerk in the Rock Island postoffice, having sold the first stamp in the original building on the site of present postoffice in 1896, it having been remodeled in 1912. He remained a number of years in this department of the government service. He subsequently entered the employ of the civil engineer's office of the war department, where he has now served many years. Mr. Corken is a member of Allenez Council, No. 658, Knights of Columbus, of Rock Island, and he is also connected with Camp No. 1550, Modern Woodmen of America, of which he is secretary, succeeding his two brothers in that position, the office having been filled by the three brothers in succession for over twenty years. His religious belief is that of the Catholic church.

Mr. Corken was married at St. Joseph's Catholic church, where his parents had been united years before, June 14, 1898, to Anna Maria McElherne, who was born February 5, 1877, in Rock Island, daughter of J. C. McElherne, a United States civil engineer, and to this union there have been born four children, namely: Daniel, James, Joseph and Elizabeth. Mr. Corken is an owner of residence property in the city.

CORNWALL, George Lincoln (deceased).—Every line of endeavor is well represented at Rock Island, for this city is a commercial center of magnitude, and its men realize the possibilities it offers. One of the prosperous workers of this community who recognized its opportunities, was George Lincoln Cornwall, a plow-fitter, of No. 1518 Twenty-fourth avenue. He was born in Iowa, June 25, 1846, a son of George W. and Araminta (Crawford) Cornwall. The paternal grandfather came from England to Canada, where he bought land among the Thousand Islands. The father was born in Canada, and there grew up, becoming a carriage maker. Later on in life, he came to Iowa. In that state, George Lincoln Cornwall grew to manhood, attending the public schools of his district until fourteen years of age. His early surroundings were similar to any boy reared in a small town, and he was taught habits of industry and thrift. Leaving school, he began working on a farm, but later came to Moline, where he engaged in business, and he also worked on government land. His death occurred at St. Louis, Mo., July 2, 1890, while on his way to Eureka Springs where it was hoped his health would be benefited, and his remains interred in Riverside cemetery.

His war record was particularly interesting, for he enlisted at Lansing, Ia., in Company B, Twenty-seventh Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into the United States service, at Camp Franklin, Dubuque, Ia., as a private, October 3, 1862, for three years. The regiment was sent to Minnesota to fight the Indians, and finally to Cairo, Ill. On the road Mr. Cornwall was taken sick, and sent to Memphis, Tenn., and then to Mound City, Ill., where he was discharged for disability, in February, 1863. On July 7, 1863, having recovered his health, he re-enlisted in Company H, Seventh Iowa Cavalry, as a corporal, and was made sergeant on October 6, 1864. He participated in the following engagements: White Stone Hill, Dak., September 3 to 5, 1863; Tahkahskutah, Dak., July 28, 1864; Mauvais Tenes or Bad Lands, August 8, 1864; Little Blue, August 12, 1864; Julesburg, January 7, 1865; Mud Springs, I. T., February 8, 1865; Rush Creek, February 9, 1865; Horse Creek, Dak., June 12, 1865; Cow Creek, Kans., July 14, 1865; and was finally discharged with his company at Leavenworth, Kans., May 17, 1866.

On June 25, 1879, Mr. Cornwall was united in marriage with Alice Mary Crawford, born in southern Illinois, August 20, 1851, a daughter of Andrew Jackson and Laura (Farrar) Crawford, both of whom died in Iowa. The father was a school teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Cornwall became the parents of a daughter, Hazel, born in Moline July 21, 1881. She died on September 30, 1897, when sixteen years old, and is buried in Riverside cemetery. Mr. Cornwall belonged to Doric Lodge, No. 319, A. F. & A. M. He was liberal in his religious views, and cordially supported the Methodist church of which his wife is a member. In politics, he was a republican. Few men loved their homes more than he, and he enjoyed nothing better than an evening spent with his loved ones, reading one or other of his books, of which he had a fine collection, especially those relating to historical subjects. During life, he accumulated considerable property, including the home where his widow resides.

Open-hearted, generous, charitable, he was a man who made hosts of friends, and he kept them throughout his blameless life. They joined his widow in mourning his loss, when death claimed this good citizen and made empty a place that can never be filled.

CORYN, Edward.—Public improvements are the outcome of intelligent and concerted effort on the part of progressive citizens who recognize the debt a community owes to its people, and thus endeavor to discharge it in a way that will benefit the majority. One of the men closely identified with much of the development of Moline, is Edward Coryn, whose life history is filled with personal endeavor, and public-spirited results. He was born at Lootenhutle, East Flanders, Belgium, November 2, 1857, second son of Leonard and Johanna (Schotteman) Coryn. The family migration to the United States occurred in 1881, and settlement was made at Moline, where a decade thereafter the parents died, the father in 1891 and the mother in 1908.

Growing up in a family that was unusually intelligent, Edward Coryn was well educated, and is proficient in the Flemish, French and English languages. Until coming to Moline, he assisted on the family farm, but on his arrival here, he obtained employment in a saw-mill and also in a private family, and applied himself to learning the language and customs of his new home. In 1892 he had made such progress that he formed a co-partnership with Charles A. Rank, and conducted a retail grocery until April, 1906, when the firm sold the business to two employees. Since then Mr. Coryn has devoted himself to his larger holdings, for he is associated with a number of the important concerns of Moline, among them being the Model Printing Co., the Moline Gazette Publishing Co., of which two corporations he is president, and he is also a director and second vice president of the Moline Trust and Savings Bank, a part owner in the Reliance Building and in Lundt & Co.'s department store. In 1896, Mr. Coryn was elected alderman from the Sixth ward, and for eight years he represented his people in the city council, serving during that period on some of the most important committees. Having been brought before the public as a man of progressive ideas, the people were well pleased when he was appointed by Mayor Skinner as a member of the Public Library board, and chairman of its executive committee, which he holds up to the present time. Much of the success of this important public institution is due to his intelligent services, and untiring efforts. Realizing the difficulties under which those from distant shores labor upon coming here, Mr. Coryn has always been eager to give the strangers the benefit of his experience, and organized in 1890, the Belgian Working Men's Union, serving as their first president. He also organized the Belgian-American Club, and the National Belgian-American Alliance, and was elected the first president of both of these organizations.

Faternally he is associated with several orders, and is active in them.

On November 8, 1900, Edward Coryn was united in marriage with Miss Marie Cecelia De Voghelaere, a daughter of one of his former teachers. The marriage was celebrated while he was on a visit to his old home in Belgium. Mr. and Mrs. Coryn are consistent members of the Catholic church, and belong to Sacred Heart parish, of Moline.

COULTER, William J., who is a representative business man of Rock Island, where his interests have been in the line of manufacturing for some years, was born on a farm in Jefferson county, N. Y., June 2, 1860, and is a son of Alexander and Mary (Hess) Coulter, and a grandson of Andrew and Margaret (Powell) Coulter. The grandparents of Mr. Coulter were natives of Scotland and Ireland, respectively, and in 1822 they were among the earliest settlers to locate in Washington and Oswego counties, N. Y. Andrew Coulter was a drummer boy in the War of 1812 and was with Commodore Perry on Lake Champlain.

Alexander Coulter was born in Washington county, N. Y., August 15, 1822, and two years afterward his parents moved to Oswego county, where he was reared. About 1858 he was married to Mary Hess, who was born in Canada, in 1839, a daughter of Thomas S. and Sarah (Payne) Hess, natives of Ireland, who located in Jefferson county, N. Y., in 1855. At the time of marriage Alexander Coulter and wife settled on a farm in Jefferson county, from which they removed in 1863, to near Peoria, Ill., where Mr. Coulter rented a farm. In 1871 he moved to Milan, Rock Island county, Ill., where he went into the teaming and hauling business. After the death of his wife, in August, 1878, he made his home mainly with his son, William J., where his death occurred December 25, 1903. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, while his wife belonged to the Episcopal church. They were parents of six children, one of whom died in infancy. William J. was the first born and three others are living, namely: James P., a resident of Orion, Ill.; Margaret, wife of P. C. Cheney, of Rock Island county; and Alexander, residing near Milan, Ill.

William J. Coulter obtained his education in the public schools of Milan, Ill. In September, 1872, he went to work in a cotton mill as a carder and continued to work there until June, 1878, when he went on his uncle's farm and worked for George Weiss for three years. In 1880 he returned to mill work, entering the flour mill of D. B. Sear's Sons, as packer and continued here for seven years. Failing health again sent him out on a farm, where he worked by the month until 1894 and then rented a part of the farm on which he had been employed and in 1897 purchased it, an excellent tract of eighty acres, situated in Bowling township, Rock Island county, on which he remained until 1901, when he secured a satisfactory tenant and in 1903 sold the farm. In 1901 Mr. Coulter moved to Rock Island and in August of that year opened the Rock Island Cotton Mills on Third avenue, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets, and engaged in manufacturing mattresses and cotton batting until the spring of 1903, when the factory was destroyed by fire. Mr. Coulter then organized the Rock Island Cotton Mattress Company, with a capital stock of $10,000, giving employment to thirty hands and prior to the sale of the company in 1908 he was vice president and superintendent and afterward he continued in the latter office for one more year. In September, 1910, he opened in his present business as mattress manufacturer at No. 902 Third avenue, where he has his well equipped factory and is doing a large business.

On May 31, 1882, Mr. Coulter was married to Miss Minnie G. Davis, who was born at Coal Valley, Rock Island county, Ill., July 19, 1866, a daughter of Thomas J. and Elizabeth (Grizel) Davis. The parents of Mrs. Coulter are natives of Wales and Kentucky, respectively. They were married in Kentucky and came to Rock Island county in 1862, locating on a farm in Coal Valley where they subsequently died, the mother in 1882, aged forty-seven years, and the father in 1894, aged sixty-eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Coulter have had two children, the one survivor being Joseph W., who was born in February, 1895. Politically, Mr. Coulter is a republican but has never accepted any public office. He is a Mason and belongs also to the Knights of Pythias, the M. W. of A. and the Court of Honor.

COWLEY, John (deceased).—In the death of John Cowley, which occurred January 11, 1907, Rock Island county lost one of its representative men, and one who, at different times, engaged in various lines of endeavor, establishing business interests which have continued to prosper to this day. Mr. Cowley was a native of the Isle of Man, where he was born October 19, 1832, a son of Robert and Margaret (Quale) Cowley, natives of that place, where they married. The father came to America in 1856, his son having preceded him here by three years, and continued to reside in this country until the time of his death. John Cowley was seven years old when he left the place of his nativity, and the balance of his education was secured in the schools of Liverpool, which city he left in 1853, to come to the United States.

Mr. Cowley had learned the trade of a baker, and being exceptionally good at his work, found no trouble in securing employment. He first engaged in work in Rock Island county, on the Island, but was later engineer of the old flour mill. Later still, he followed his trade in Moline for some time, when he left for Chicago. After spending a short period in that metropolis, he bought 200 acres in Zuma township, and for over a quarter of a century, following 1863, when he moved upon it, he resided on the farm. In 1889, he came to Moline once more, and for a while was in business with his sons, then retired, and spent his last days in his fine home at Sixteenth street and Sixth avenue, formerly having lived on Twenty-fifth street.

Mr. Cowley enlisted February 21, 1865, near the close of the Civil war, at Portland, Ill., in Company A, One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, receiving his honorable discharge, September 20, 1865. He was a republican in his political belief, although he did not care for political preferment, still when he felt he could serve his township, he did so, and was school director and supervisor for years. The Methodist church had in him a faithful member, and he was steward of it at the time of his death. Mr. Cowley belonged to several small societies, and was chaplain of R. H. Graham Post, G. A. R., when he died.

On November 21, 1863, Mr. Cowley was married at Moline to Mrs. Emma (Moody) Rathburn. Mrs. Cowley was born in Lincolnshire, England, February 2, 1839, daughter of George and Mary (Gill) Moody, both of Lincolnshire, England. Mr. Moody came to Rock Island county in 1853, and his wife in 1856. They settled in Zuma township, where the father died in 1877, his wife having passed away in 1863. Mr. Moody was a Republican and a Methodist, and a most excellent man. Of the nine children in the Moody family, seven of them came to America, three boys and four girls. John W. Moody of Port Byron went into Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served from August 9, 1862, to July 12, 1865. Thomas Moody went into Company E, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry and served from February 8, 1865, to September 5, 1865. Charles Moody was too young for acceptance, or he would have served his country as did his brothers. The oldest daughter, Jane Moody, married James Rathburn, who was a member of Company G, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

Mrs. Cowley was educated in a private school in England, and learned how to keep house in all the details of the work, from her mother. Her first husband, George Rathburn, was a farmer, and when the Civil war broke out, he enlisted at Cordova, this county, where he was living at that time, in Company E, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and died at the end of his first year of service, at Haines' Bluff, Miss., July 20, 1863. He had two brothers in the service. By her first marriage Mrs. Cowley had two children: Ernest A. Rathburn of Oakland, Cal., born July 16, 1859; and Charles L. Rathburn of Davenport, Ia., born January 6, 1861. By her second marriage, Mrs. Cowley has had three children; John Edwin, born March 16, 1868, proprietor of a meat market in Moline; Jesse Albert, born May 15, 1870, a merchant of Moline, but formerly a farmer on an extensive scale; and Bertha J., born December 25, 1873, married Oliver North of Moline.

Mrs. Cowley owns her residence at No. 526 Sixteenth street, and another at No. 2522 Sixth avenue, Moline, living in the former. She belongs to R. H. Graham Woman's Relief Corps, and to the Methodist Church, both of this city.

COX, Jason J.—The requirements of any community are exacting and varied, and all lines of human endeavor are represented in one way or another, especially at Moline. One of the men who is actively engaged in advancing his own interests and at the same time promoting the general welfare of the city, is Jason J. Cox, manager of the Moline City Express Company, of No. 1402-4 Fourth avenue, Moline. Mr. Cox was born in Hampton township, this county, in 1857, a son of Joseph B. and Ann (Williamson) Cox, natives of Indiana and Kentucky, who were married in Indiana, and came to Rock Island county in 1836, becoming pioneers of Hampton township. The father farmed there until his death in 1888, and his remains are buried in that township, his wife passing away in 1887. They had nine children: Mary E., who is deceased; Williamson M., who is living retired in Nebraska; Augustus D., who is deceased; Washington R., who is deceased; Osborn M., who is living at Denver; Emma E., who is living at Denver; Hill K., who is living at Sears; Cassius C., who is living in Arizona; and Jason J.

Growing up on his father's farm, Jason J. Cox attended the district schools, continuing in an agricultural life until 1890, when he came to Rock Island, and worked in the shops until 1897, when he embarked in an express business. This he continued alone, until 1904, when the present company was incorporated, with the following officers: C. A. Johnson, president; Hettie A. Cox, vice-president, and J. J. Cox, secretary and treasurer. This company employs six men, and has in use twelve horses. It is the oldest transfer and express business in the city.

In June, 1879, Mr. Cox was married to Hettie Arcularius, born in Hampton township, daughter of Edward F. and Emily (Axelson) Arcularius, the former deceased, the latter living. The Arcularius family came from New York state and Edward F. settled in Pike county, Ill., in 1832 and later came to Hampton township Rock Island county which was his home until his death. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Cox: Margaret Blanche, who is the wife of C. A. Johnson; Hettie A., who is deceased; and Frederick B., who is working with his father. The last named young man married Gertrude M. Asher, and they have a son—Robert Burdette. Miss Asher was a daughter of Mrs. May (Noble) Asher. The Methodist church holds the membership of the family. Mr. Cox is an Odd Fellow, and belongs to the Court of Honor, as does his son. Mr. Cox has always been a republican, and served as school director for one term while living in Hampton township. He lives at No. 2603 Twelfth avenue, while his son resides in Watertown. Both father and son are well known throughout Rock Island county, and are men of sterling integrity, and uprightness of purpose, who stand high in their several communities.

COYNE, Joseph William.—The census returns give staggering statistics regarding the immense amount of money represented by the great crops of the country. The produce of the farm far exceeds in value the product of all the other lines of endeavor and shows conclusively the importance of the farmer in relation to the general prosperity of the country. One of the men who has proven that farming is a profitable line of endeavor is Joseph William Coyne of section 29, Coe township. He was born at Alton, Ill., December 18, 1856, a son of James and Bridget (Moore) Coyne. The father was a stationary engineer and died at Alton, but his widow came here with her two children, Joseph William and Christopher, the latter now a druggist of Moline. They settled at Port Byron, where the two boys grew up and were educated. The mother married (second) Patrick Brennen, and they had two children: Charles and William. She died in 1899, her remains being interred in the cemetery at Rapids City.

Joseph William Coyne bought his farm in 1892, forty acres of it from Henry Ashdown, and the remaining eighty acres from William Adams. He has put in all of the improvements on the place, including a comfortable house, barns and necessary outbuildings, and many fences, but the hedges were planted when he secured the property. He feeds the most of his grain, raising about thirty-five head of hogs, ten cows and five horses. Mr. Coyne has had considerable experience outside his farm, as for seven years he was a section hand on the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, and for about six years, he mined at Rapids City.

In 1881 Mr. Coyne was married to Christina Gamble, a daughter of Nicholas and Christina (Linke) Gamble, born at Rapids City. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Coyne: James, who is at Port Byron; Mary, who died when eight years old and is buried in Rapids City; Charles, who is at home; Rose, Mrs. Frank Hill, who lives at Port Byron; Bertha, who is Mrs. Earl Donohue of Joslin, Ill.; Joseph and Frances both of whom are at home, and an unnamed infant, deceased. All his life Mr. Coyne has been a hard-working man, the result of his industry and thrift are to be observed on every side. His farm is in fine condition, his premises neat and his stock in a state that commands good prices because of their excellent quality.

COYNE, William, Sr.—When a man has devoted himself faithfully and successfully to his chosen work for the better part of his life, he has earned the right to spend his declining years in comfort and ease. One of the most prosperous of the retired residents of Milan, Ill., is William Coyne, Sr. He was born June 11, 1823, in Ireland, son of Thomas and Martha E. (Brown) Coyne. Mr. Coyne came to America in 1845, landing in New Orleans, having sailed from Liverpool and been eighteen weeks on the water. A storm delayed the ship and made the always long voyage just that much longer. Mr. Coyne was only eighteen years old when he arrived in this country and his first employment was obtained in a brick yard. He worked for thirteen dollars per month, but after a year came to Rock Island, where he was engaged to carry the mail to and from the boats. After two years, he met with an accident and for a year was unable to work. Later, he bought eighty acres of land in Bowling township, but returning to Rock Island, entered a transfer business, continuing it for eighteen months. Once more he went to Bowling township, and farmed until 1907, when he retired to the vicinity of Milan where he has 240 acres of land. His son Edward is operating the farm.

In 1858, Mr. Coyne was married (first) to Elizabeth McKee, daughter of George McKee, who came to America in 1846, becoming a farmer of Rock Island county. Mrs. Coyne died eighteen months after marriage, leaving a son, who only lived a year. Later, Mr. Coyne married (second) Margaret Morrison of Rock Island, daughter of James and Elizabeth Morrison, farming people. Eight children were born of this marriage: William, who lives in Rural township; Alexander, who lives in Bowling township; James who lives in Black Hawk township; Edward, who is on the old homestead; Francis, who lives in Rock Island; Elizabeth, who married William Scarr, lives in Bowling township; Lydia, who married James Galbraith, lives in Rock Island; Julia, who married John McAfee. There are twelve grandchildren in the family. Mrs. Coyne died in 1889. In 1901, June 3, Mr. Coyne married (third) Elizabeth Foster, now deceased, of Mercer county, Ill., daughter of William and Bessie Foster. In political faith, Mr. Coyne is a republican, and is staunch in his support of his party. He is an earnest, honorable man, whose business connections have won for him the confidence and respect of all with whom he has been brought in contact.

COZAD, James, M. D. (deceased), was born near Mercer, Mercer county, Pa., July 9, 1836, and when ten years of age came West with his father, settling in Lee county, Ia. After his father's death, in 1850, he moved to Whiteside county, Illinois. Here he studied medicine until the outbreak of the Civil war, also engaging in school teaching. He enlisted in Company F, Ninety-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Soon after enlisting he was appointed hospital steward of the regiment, and participated in many important battles, being with General Sherman on his famous march from Atlanta to the sea. He was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., as assistant surgeon and received his final discharge at Chicago, July 5, 1865. He graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in January, 1866, and during that same year settled in Andalusia, Ill., where he practiced medicine in the surrounding country and on the Iowa side of the Mississippi until December, 1882, at which time he removed to Reynolds, Illinois, and there resided until his death. He was a republican in politics and was supervisor from Andalusia and Edgington townships. Fraternally, he was connected with Preemption Lodge, A. F. & A. M., No. 775; Reynolds Camp No. 199, M. W. A.; and Reynolds Post, G. A. R. At the time of his death, which occurred August 14, 1897, he was one of the oldest practicing physicians in the county.

Dr. Cozad was married at Fulton, Ill., December 11, 1867, to Miss Martha Mitchell, who was born in Whiteside county, Ill., daughter of David Mitchell, the first treasurer of Whiteside county, and to this union there were born six children, as follows: Mrs. J. W. Keezel, of Garnett, Kans.; Mrs. F. L. Bash, of Hanford, Wash.; J. M. and H. W. of Rock Island, Ill.; L. E. of Oklahoma City, Okla.; and Ruth, deceased.

COZAD, James Mitchell, a representative citizen of Rock Island, Ill., was born at Andalusia, Ill., January 24, 1871, a son of James and Martha (Mitchell) Cozad. He received his education in the public schools and at Leander Clark College, Toledo, Ia., after graduation from which he started teaching school in Rock Island and Mercer counties, continuing in this profession for ten years, at the end of which time he became connected with the Modern Woodmen of America and has since been located at the head office as auditor. Mr. Cozad is a property owner in Rock Island, and his residence is situated at No. 1445 Fourteenth street. In political matters he is a republican, and at the present time is serving as a member of the Rock Island Library Board.

On October 4, 1905, Mr. Cozad was united in marriage with Miss Rose Caulfield, a graduate of Mercy Hospital Training School for Nurses, Davenport, Ia., and to them there were born two daughters, Ruth, January 28, 1909, and Dorothy, October 30, 1911.

CRABTREE, John E. (deceased), who was honored as a veteran of the Civil war, died at his home in Drury township December 24, 1910, having been a resident of Rock Island county from youth. Most of his active years were spent in farming, in which he met with a fair degree of success. He was a native of Virginia, born in February, 1834, a son of William and Elizabeth (Swingel) Crabtree, also natives of that state. When he was a small child his parents located in Indiana, but when he was about eight years old his parents came to Rock Island county, the father being a farmer, who died at Illinois City, this same county. John E. Crabtree received a common school education in Rock Island county, and was employed in various occupations until enlisting in Company A, Ninth Illinois Cavalry, in which he served until he was injured by a fall, and was later discharged. He later re-enlisted and served until the close of the war. Returning home, he engaged in farming. About 1856 Mr. Crabtree married Miss Anna Jane Steckman, a daughter of John and Hettie (Burkett) Steckman. She was born in Virginia, but when she was eight years old her parents took her to Mt. Vernon, Ia., and about a year later to Drury township, Rock Island county. John Steckman and wife were natives of Bedford county, Pa., and he died when Mrs. Crabtree was an infant. His widow later married Andrew Walker. Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Crabtree: John Williams, who is of Dubuque, Iowa; Elizabeth A., who is Mrs. William Brown of Bloomfield, Iowa; Mary H., who died in infancy; Margaret Helen; Edward, who is at home; George W. A., who died at the age of three years; Sarah C., who is Mrs. John Hobart of Rock Island; Joseph Abraham Lincoln, who is at home; and Ida May, who is Mrs. G. Blankenburg of Rock Island. The death of John E. Crabtree was regretted not only by his immediate family, but by all who knew him and appreciated his admirable qualities, and he is deeply mourned by them.

CRAIG, Thomas S., head farmer and dairyman of the Watertown State Hospital, and a man of wide experience full of educational value, and possessed by high motives of philanthropy, was born in Macomb, Ill., July 24, 1867, son of William and Rachel Craig. The father was born in Ohio. He was a farmer and tailor, working until his death, which occurred in Macomb, Ill., in 1894. The mother passed away November 24, 1911, at the same place. They had seven children, five of whom are living, the others having died in infancy: Lila, who is the wife of John Sticklan; Lola; Joseph; Thomas S.; and Frank, who married Hattie McCann.

Thomas S. Craig was reared in Macomb on the farm, and attended the district schools. When he was twenty-five years old, he was appointed superintendent of the McDonough county poor farm, holding this position for five years. He then embarked in a butchering business in the city of Macomb, but after a few years, entered the employ of the Watertown State Hospital as attendant and carpenter. However, his fitness for his present office was recognized, and eight years ago he was placed in charge of the farm of 593 acres of land pertaining to the hospital. This farm is operated for the purpose of providing the foodstuffs for the hospital, as well as a source of revenue to it, and horses, cows and other stock are bred and raised here.

On April 19, 1893, Mr. Craig was married to Olive M. Sherbine, born in Colchester, Ill., a daughter of David B. and Mary A. (Pierson) Sherbine, the former being born in Pennsylvania, but died in Illinois, in 1906. His widow survives, and makes her home in Macomb. Nine children were born in the Sherbine family: William, who married Anna Johnson; Elizabeth, who married Henry Barrett; Edward, who married Nancy Miller; Nettie, who married Oliver

Smith; Olive M.; Abram, who married Nina Kincaid; Nellie, who married Elva Dennis; Frank, who married Maggie Miller; and Fannie, who married Walter Fuhr.

Mr. Craig is an Odd Fellow, Knight of Pythias, Mason, and Mystic Worker of the World. In politics, he is a republican, and served as school trustee, road commissioner and deputy sheriff of McDonough county, and in the latter office in Rock Island county. He is now building a store in Watertown, the first one of stone in that place. Eminently fitted for the duties of his responsible position, Mr. Craig is giving entire satisfaction to the state board, and making money for the state out of the farm.

CRANDALL, Henry J., owner and proprietor of the Crandall Express & Transfer Company of Moline, Ill., has within the last few years built up an extensive enterprise. He embarked in business August 28, 1904, at that time having but two conveyances, and he now has ten double wagons and a large moving van. He opened up his business at No. 1410 Fourth avenue, and is now located at No. 1706 Third avenue, with his barns at No. 114 Eighteenth street. He has a warehouse 30x100 feet and employs nine men. This business was started by Mr. Crandall alone and he has built it up to its present flourishing condition and proportions by his individual effort and energy and has reason to be gratified by the results.

Mr. Crandall was born in Bureau county, Ill., September 19, 1868, and when he was eleven years of age his parents took him to Humboldt, Neb., and there he finished his education in the common and high school. After leaving school he became a brakeman on a railroad and finally became a conductor, in which capacity he worked more than six years. While acting as yardmaster at Trenton, Mo., he lost his left hand an inch and a half above the wrist. As soon as he was able after this accident he took charge of the government railroad on the Illinois and Mississippi canal but later resigned to engage in a transfer business at Tiskilwa, Ill., where he remained about eight years, then sold out his establishment, with the exception of two teams, and came to Moline, where he has since been located.

Mr. Crandall is a member of the I. O. O. F., Lodge No. 133; of Tri-City Encampment, of the same order; Woodman Camp No. 193, of Tiskilwa, and of the Mystic Workers, being transferred from Tiskilwa. He was married in October, 1892, to Bessie Shipley, daughter of J. L. and Bertha (Ritchie) Shipley, who was a native of Buffalo, Ia. They have no children.

Mr. Crandall is a son of John H. and Julia (Bowman) Crandall, the only one living of their four children. His father died in 1890 and his mother in 1911. He is the only one of the family to come to Rock Island county and here has won the confidence of those with whom he has dealt and is held in general esteem, as a man of upright character and a public-spirited citizen.

CRAWFORD, Hon. William F.—Prominent among the men of Rock Island county, Ill., who have risen to positions of honor and trust and are highly esteemed by their fellow-citizens, is Hon. William F. Crawford, whose record as a citizen and a public official is beyond reproach. Mr. Crawford, who is the owner of a fine tract of farming property of 320 acres, but who at this time is making his home in Iowa, was born July 17, 1835, in Clark county, Ind., and is a son of John and Mary (Bottorff) Crawford.

The father of Mr. Crawford was born in the north of Ireland, November 15, 1810. He was three years of age when he accompanied his parents in their emigration to the United States, his father being a native of Erin and the mother of Scotland. The grandfather, William Crawford, brought his son up to habits of sobriety, industry and thrift, and reared him in the faith of the Presbyterian church, one of the grandfather's sons being a minister of that faith. John Crawford learned the cooper's trade, which he followed in conjunction with farming throughout his life. Mr. Crawford also taught a singing school, and was prominent in the Presbyterian church, in which he served as deacon. He was married April 21, 1821, to Mary Bottorff, who was born in Clark county, Ind., of Holland parentage. He died in middle life, and his widow was again married.

William F. Crawford was granted few educational advantages, as his father died when he was seven years of age, and he secured employment in a brickyard at twenty-five cents per day, this precluding any idea of attendance at school for any lengthy period. By the time he was twelve years of age he was earning twelve dollars per month on a farm during the summer months, and in the winters was paid fifty cents per cord for chopping wood. He had the opportunity to attend West Point, through the influence of the congressman of his district, but his uncles objected and he remained at home, and when he was eighteen years of age his stepfather died and he was again called upon to contribute to his mother's support. This untaught youth, however, has become one of the most substantial men of the community in which he lived so long; there is an example worthy of emulation. He was twenty-six years of age when he entered the Union army, in August, 1861, and, to use his own modest words, "followed a soldier's life, taking the usual chances and facing the usual hardships for thirty-seven months," but during this time he did not follow the habits of so many of the boys in using tobacco and liquor. He has been a total abstainer, and has not cared to allow himself to be identified with those who waste their time. To use his own words again: "I have no use for a loafer." His industrious life will bear up this latter statement, as his probity will show that he has kept himself clean physically. Early in life he joined the Methodist church, and he has since faithfully lived up to its teachings, having held a number of offices therein, including that of Sunday school superintendent, which he filled conscientiously for a period covering twenty-one years. He cast his first vote for Fremont, and in addition to holding numerous township offices he spent four years each in the lower and upper houses of the state legislature of Illinois, serving as a member of many important committees and characterizing his activities with those traits of sterling endeavor, energetic and progressive ideas and general ability that made him so successful in his agricultural efforts. During the years that followed his first ballot, he was faithful in his support of republican principles, but in 1912 cast his vote for Woodrow Wilson, whom he deemed best fitted at that time to assist the country's advancement. As a soldier, he served as second sergeant of Company A, Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and subsequently was commissary sergeant, and throughout his service showed himself brave and valiant, and capable of discharging every duty entrusted to his care. His stock raising ventures were as extensive as those which he devoted to his general farming activities, and his products of both kinds ever found a ready market. At this time he is living a somewhat retired life at the home of his son, in Davenport, Ia.

At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Crawford was married to Miss Mary Pearce, daughter of Elisba Pearce, who died in March, 1904. The children born to this union were: William, born in May, 1857, who is deceased; Alice, born in November, 1858, who married a Mr. Imley, of Olympia, Wash.; John E., born in November, 1860, a Chicago attorney; Newton L., born in 1863, a resident of Davenport, Ia., with whom the father now makes his home; Charles A., born in 1866; and Lawrence P., born in 1869, a resident of La Salle, Ill., and one child deceased, Mary F., in infancy. Of this family, Charles A. was educated in the public schools, and in a Chicago business college, and is now an elder in the Presbyterian church. He was married December 22, 1897, to Miss Hattie Taylor. In June, 1905, Mr. Crawford was married (second) to Miss Mary B. Baird, daughter of the late John Baird, and brother of two Presbyterian ministers, one of whom is a missionary to Korea.

CREEDON, John J., treasurer and superintendent of the factory of the H. W. Cooper Sad Hardware Manufacturing Co., at Moline, is one of the most progressive business men of this locality, and one who has worked his way up through sheer ability and persistent industry. He was born in Cook county, Ill., August 9, 1863, a son of Patrick and Catherine (Leo) Creedon, natives of Ireland. The father came to the United States in 1848, settling at Chicago, where he became a special policeman. There he died July 7, 1871, the mother surviving him until March 27, 1911, when she passed away in the same city, both being interred in one of the cemeteries there.

John J. Creedon grew up in Chicago, attending its public schools, and his first work was obtained in a soap factory. After six months, he went into a Chicago grocery store and following that, was employed in a stone quarry. Then for a short time he was in Lamb & King's self-raising buckwheat flour plant. Mr. Creedon then worked in the roundhouse of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, but leaving this corporation, he entered the employ of the C. J. Cooper Sad Hardware Manufacturing plant, remaining with the concern when the present name was adopted, and going with it to Moline, when that removal was made. For fifteen years, he was foreman of the works, and was then made superintendent, and in 1906, was also elected treasurer and has been a director from its incorporation. He owns stock in the concern, and is largely responsible for the quality of the product, and the prosperity of the company.

Mr. Creedon was married at Chicago, February 2, 1888, to Margaret Frey, born in Milwaukee, Wis., November 3, 1866, daughter of Frank and Margaret (Wink) Frey, natives of Germany. One child, James, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Creedon, on June 5, 1890, but died in November of that same year. Mr. Creedon is an independent in politics. He belongs to St. Mary's parish, being a devout Roman Catholic. He is insured in the National Union Insurance Co. The family residence at No. 345 Third street, is owned by Mr. Creedon, and he also owns property at No. 222 Railroad avenue. All his life, Mr. Creedon has been a hard worker, and his success has not come through any special advantages, but because of his willingness to do his full duty, and determination to show progress with every day. In addition to his material prosperity, Mr. Creedon has firmly established himself as a man of sound principles, and unflinching honesty, among his business associates, and is justly recognized as one of the leading men of Moline.

CRISWELL, James R., now living retired in the village of Milan, has been identified with the agricultural interests of Rock Island county for a long period, and now, in the evening of his life, he can look back without regret over many years filled with honest endeavor and useful service to his country and his county. He was born in Clarion county, Pa., March 12, 1841, a son of Matthew and Sarah M. (Whitehill) Criswell, natives of the Keystone State. Matthew Criswell, who was a boat-builder in Pennsylvania and also carried on lumbering, came to Rock Island county, Ill., in 1856, settling on a farm in Bowling township and later purchased two eighty-acre tracts of land, his death occurring here in 1893. He and his wife had eight children, of whom four are living, as follows: Loretta, the wife of James Seyler, M. D., of Mercer county; Melissa, the wife of Isaac S. Middleton, of Pennsylvania; Matthew, M. D., of Mercer county; and James R.

James R. Criswell was educated in the public schools of Rock Island county, and was employed on his father's farm until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he served three years, participating in a number of hard-fought battles, and making a record for bravery and faithful service of which any man might well be proud. He is now a popular comrade of Buford Post, G. A. R. On his return from the war he again took up farming on the home place, and on March 12, 1873, was married to Miss Margaret J. McEntire, a daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Elliott) McEntire, natives of Ireland. Mr. McEntire was born July 13, 1823, and died in 1891, and his wife was born June 15, 1830, and passed away September 16, 1897. They had nine children, as follows: Robert, William John, Clelland, Lawson, Joseph and Samuel, are all married and living in Rock Island county; Emily, who resides at Peoria, Ill.; Florence, who is the wife of Walter Bradshaw, lives at Peoria; and Margaret J., who is Mrs. Criswell. Mr. and Mrs. Criswell have had seven children: William J., born February 17, 1877, a carpenter of Moline; Emery, born July 9, 1875, died December 3, 1881; Elizabeth, born February 17, 1874, died in infancy; Theresa M., born September 27, 1880, is the wife of William B. Walters, and is residing at Rock Island; Joseph, born February 26, 1883, is married and is residing at Milan; Arthur L., born June 14, 1885, is married and has his home at Iowa Falls, Ia.; and Raymond, born October 19, 1894. There are two grandchildren: Herschel, born April 10, 1908; and Walter, born March 16, 1908. In 1893 Mr. Criswell gave up active agricultural pursuits and moved to Milan, buying his present comfortable cottage, which has been his home for eighteen years. He is highly esteemed by his fellow-townsmen and has numerous friends among the early settlers of the county, as has also his estimable wife, who is a member of the Ladies Relief Corps of Rock Island.

CROCKETT, William Keene.—The fertile land of Rock Island county is well adapted for scientific farming, and one who has made a success of his ventures is William Keene Crockett, who owns and cultivates 440 acres of land in Coal Valley township, his property being known as Long View Stock Farm. He was born in Kentucky, near Georgetown, February 10, 1856, a son of Coloned William David and Eliza (Ware) Crockett, both natives of Kentucky. The mother died in her native state and the father came to Rock Island county in 1868. He was a specialist in breeding and training trotting horses and was sent to England by a stock company to buy horses of this breed for use in America. He continued in the business of handling fancy horses until his death, which occurred in Waukegan, Ill.

William Keene Crockett attended the schools of Rock Island and then took a business course in Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College at Davenport, Ia. He raises corn, oats and wheat, and specializes in fancy trotting horses and Chester-White hogs. Mr. Crockett was the owner of "Star Hambletonian," which died six years ago. His success has been marked for he understands every detail of his business, having been reared in it by his father.

On October 11, 1881, Mr. Crockett married Mrs. Emma Glen, of Springfield, who was born April 19, 1863, and died May 13, 1892, being buried in Indian Point cemetery in Menard county, Ill. They had three children: Clare W., who was born July 29, 1882, died April 5, 1901, and is buried in Riverside cemetery; Phil T., who was born May 2, 1884, married Ethel Babcock and lives in a beautiful home near his father; and William B., who was born July 28, 1886, is at home with his father.

In political faith Mr. Crockett is a democrat, and has served for twenty-seven years as a school director, being interested in securing good schools and the best of teachers for his district. For many years he has been a member of the Christian church of Rock Island and carries out in his life the creed he professes.

CROOKS, William A., M. D.—This is the age of specialization, and in no line is this more clearly shown than that of the profession of medicine. Physicians and surgeons are coming to realize the necessity of devoting themselves to the scientific study of special diseases in order to handle them to the best advantage. Progress is constantly being made in methods of treatment and surgical operations, and a number of diseases once admitted to be incurable, have yielded to the advance of science. One of the men who is recognized as an honor to his profession is Dr. William A. Crooks of Watertown, Ill., superintendent of Watertown State Hospital. He was born in Lockport, Ill., August 24, 1872, being a son of Andrew D. and Kate (Hawley) Crooks, natives of Scotland and New York state, respectively. Andrew D. Crooks came to Illinois in 1858, becoming a merchant, banker and part owner of a milling company. In 1879, he went to Vermillion, Kans., where he continued his operations as a merchant, there dying December 26, 1910. His widow survives, making her home in Kansas.

When he was seventeen years old, William A. Crooks, having finished a common public school course, entered the employ of N. K. Fairbanks at Chicago, as clerk, thus continuing for six years, when he entered the Hahnemann Medical College, from which he was graduated in March 1899. For a year following, he was an interne in Hahnemann Hospital. In January, 1900, he was made assistant superintendent of the Watertown State Hospital, thus continuing until August, 1909, when he became acting superintendent, and on March 21, 1910, was made superintendent of the Watertown State Hospital, which responsible position he still fills.

In March, 1904, Dr. Crooks married Kate Blanford, born in Illinois, daughter of James R. and Mary Blanford, natives of Indiana. Dr. and Mrs. Crooks belong to the Congregational Church. In politics, he is a republican. He is a Knight Templar, belonging to the Rock Island lodge. A skilled physician, earnest and faithful in his work, Dr. Crooks has gained a well-deserved eminence in his profession, and ranks among the foremost representatives of his school of medicine in Rock Island county.

CROSBY, Horace M.—Long experience along any lines makes for perfection, and in nothing is this more true than in those connected with agricultural pursuits. The farmers of Rock Island county go about their work in a systematic way, taking advantage of every aid modern invention and experiment afford. One of these progressive tillers of the soil is Horace M. Crosby, of Cordova township, born in this township on section 5, March 23, 1854, a son of Isaac B. and Elizabeth (Marshall) Crosby, natives of New Hampshire and New Jersey, respectively. Isaac B. Crosby was born in 1819, and was twenty-two years old when he came in 1841 to Cordova township. His wife had been brought here by her parents, in 1837. The marriage of Isaac B. Crosby and his wife took place in this township and they settled down in the vicinity of the property now owned by Horace N. Crosby. At first they lived on rented land, but later bought 133 acres, erecting upon it the present brick house, to which they made additions. They also bought more land, until they owned 1,000 acres in Cordova township, Isaac B. Crosby becoming one of the largest land-owners in this locality. His death occurred November 29, 1873, his widow surviving him until November 17, 1903. There were ten children in the family of these parents, of whom Horace M. was the fourth in order of birth, and he was three years old when the family went to Albany, Ill., but three years later, return was made to the homestead. Horace M. Crosby attended the district schools, and grew up on the farm amid healthy, normal conditions. After attaining to manhood estate, Mr. Crosby, in company with a brother, went to Labette county, Kas., where for four years the two were engaged in raising horses and mules. Returning home at the expiration of that period, Horace M. Crosby rented a farm from his mother until her death, and then bought the homestead, comprising at that time 130 acres, and here he has carried on his operations, devoting himself to general farming.

On June 4, 1890, Horace M. Crosby was married to Mary Lamb, born in Hampton township, a daughter of Benjamin and Rachel Ann (Cook) Lamb, natives of Vermont and Rock Island, respectively. The families on both sides were numbered among the pioneers here. Mr. and Mrs. Crosby became the parents of one son, Harry A., born September 12, 1893. Mrs. Crosby died March 8, 1911, rounding out a useful, beautiful, Christian life, and leaving behind her many friends who sincerely mourned her loss. Horace M. Crosby is a Baptist in religious faith. For years he has been an active factor in the republican party in his township, serving two terms as road commissioner, and for twenty-one successive years as a school director. A sound, reliable man, whose opinion has weight with his neighbors. Mr. Crosby is recognized as one of the most representative of the modern farmers of this part of the state.

CROSSLEY, Henry Stanley.—More than average ability is required in order for a man to be a leader of others. He must understand all classes, be in sympathy with them, and have keen judgment and unerring insight into motives. When these qualities are combined with civic honor of a high degree, and an appreciation of good citizenship, then a community prospers under the leadership of such a man. Henry Stanley Crossley is such a leader in politics in East Moline, and has discharged the duties of the several offices he has been called upon to fill, with dignified capability. He was born at Wilmington, O., March 5, 1875, a son of William T. and Hattie (Munn) Crossley. On the paternal side the family came from Scotland, and on the maternal side from England. Henry Stanley Crossley grew up in Ohio, attending school at Lebanon, and being graduated from its high school. He learned the machinist trade and worked at it for two and one-half years, when he became a carriage trimmer. This latter trade he followed for sixteen years and for seven years of that period was foreman of the trimming department of the Moline Auto Company. A strong republican, he was made president of the board of education of East Moline, and is now serving in his second term. He belongs to the Masonic order of East Moline, and the order of Odd Fellows of the same place, now going through the various chairs. His religious views make him a Baptist.

In 1889, Henry D. Crossley was married to Anna Schildwachter, a daughter of August and Rosena (Pipper) Schildwachter. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Crossley; Melvin Forest, and Orville Ivan. Although still a young man, Mr. Crossley has already accomplished much, and his future is particularly bright, for the people have confidence in him and know that he will serve them honestly and faithfully.

CROUCH, Joel F., formerly an enterprising farmer of Andalusia township, Rock Island county, is a representative of the best interests of his county and is well known in various local circles. He was born at Barstow, Ill., June 20, 1878, and is a son of John T. and Charlotte (Edwards) Crouch, both of whom are deceased. The father was left an orphan in childhood and came to Rock Island county at the age of thirteen years, located near Rapids City. He lived there for twenty years, then removed to Barstow, where he spent the rest of his life, passing away in 1896. His widow died in 1897. Besides Joel F. their children were as follows: Mary, who became Mrs. Wandschneider; Martha, who is the wife of Edward Albertson; George, who lives at Rapids City; Charlotte, who is the wife of George Merrill, lives in Kansas;

John, who is deceased; and Frank, who lives on the old homestead. Joel F. was the youngest child and received his education in the public schools. At present Mr. Crouch resides at Searstown, Ill.

Mr. Crouch was married March 2, 1898, to Miss Amelia M. Dennhardt, daughter of Andrew and Mary (Fidler) Dennhardt, who were natives of Germany and came to the United States in 1858 or 1859, and located near Huntoon, Ill. The parents both survive. Mrs. Crouch is a member of the Lutheran church and active in its good work. Mr. Crouch is a republican in politics and fraternally belongs to the M. W. A. He and his wife have children as follows: Ralph, Raymond, Hazel and Bernice.

CROWDER, J. Lee.—The financial interests of every community are of so important a nature that they cannot be too carefully conserved, and it is necessary that they be in the hands of men of long experience and high standing in whom the people of the community can place the most implicit confidence. The banking institution of J. Lee Crowder, known as the Bank of Silvis, one of the solid, substantial houses of Rock Island county, located at Silvis, Ill., where it has the field to itself, was established in 1907, at which time Mr. Crowder bought the interests of A. B. Cox. The bank is now operated in connection with a general store, where are handled dry goods, shoes, notions, etc., and the citizens of Silvis practically control the deposits, which aggregate upwards of $15,000.

J. Lee Crowder was born in Mount Vernon, Ill., April 18, 1853, and was educated in the district schools. He was reared on a farm until he was eighteen years of age, when his parents died, leaving him about $250, which he has since increased to $25,000. After graduating from the high school, he learned the trade of machinist in the shops of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, where he later became foreman, having charge of two divisions, and then went into the fire insurance business at Mount Vernon, following that for ten years and being the only man there that followed that business exclusively. Seeking to increase the scope of his activities he purchased the leading transfer line, which he conducted in connection with the leading hotel, but after five years of constant work his health gave out and he sold his interests and spent the next year in recuperating. At this time he came to Silvis, where in addition to his store and bank, he conducts the agency for the Newark, N. J., Insurance Company, and serves as a notary public and justice of the peace, being elected to the last named position in 1910. For forty years he has been an official member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and is at present treasurer of the Silvis church of that denomination. He became an Odd Fellow in 1877, and has passed the chairs and represented his lodge in the Grand Lodge, and still holds membership in Mt. Vernon Lodge No. 13, the next to the oldest lodge in the state. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen and the Court of Honor.

Mr. Crowder was married in Belleville, Ill., to Lucy West, daughter of B. H. and Maria (Hill) West, a sister of Wm. Hill, president of the First National Bank of Decatur, Ill. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Crowder: Harry I.; Edwin L.; Howard J.; Herbert N.; Addie, who married H. R. Cox, living in Bridgeport, Ill.; Katie, Olive and Lena.

CRUBAUGH, John (deceased).—No history of Rock Island county would be complete without extended mention of the late John Crubaugh, who for many years took so important a part in the commercial and social life of Rock Island, placing his mark upon its advancement in every way, and aiding very materially in its growth and development. He was born in Columbiana county, O., May 9, 1826, a son of George Crubaugh. The latter was born in Washington county, Pa., of German extraction, while his wife, Elizabeth (Aterholt) Crubaugh, was born in Maryland, her parents having also been of German birth. After marriage, Mr. and Mrs. George Crubaugh moved to Ohio, becoming early settlers of that state. By trade, the father was a blacksmith, but farmed the greater part of his useful life, dying when only fifty-six years old, his widow surviving him until she was seventy years of age. They were consistent members of the Lutheran church. John Crubaugh was the eldest of their seven children.

Until he was fourteen years old, John Crubaugh remained on the homestead, attending the district school. Completing his educational course, he began to take care of himself by serving a two years' apprenticeship learning the trades of painting and chairmaking, during which time he received his board for his services. At the expiration of his apprenticeship, he received a twenty-five dollar suit of clothes and a bible. Being an ambitious youth, however, he was not content with his prospects, and in 1850, turned his attention to public work, becoming a railroad contractor, and later a noted bridge builder. Some of the largest bridges across the Mississippi and Missouri rivers were built by him, and although he has passed away, they endure as lasting monuments to his faithfulness and skill. Among the best known of these bridges were: across the Missouri river at Bismarck; at Sioux City and Omaha; and across the Mississippi river at St. Paul and in Louisiana. He also built all the bridges on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, and did a large amount of railroad construction work in Ohio and Pennsylvania, holding large contracts at the time of his retirement in 1890. From 1866 until his death, August 13, 1904, Mr. Crubaugh made Rock Island his home, and was associated with a number of enterprises here, among them being the Rock Island Buggy Company, of which he was president, and the Rock Island Savings Bank, of which he was vice-president and a director.

H. & S. Jonhson and Wife

In 1861, Mr. Crubaugh married Sarah Ann Poole, born at Steubenville, Jefferson county, O., a daughter of Samuel and Mary (Devore) Poole, natives of Maryland and Virginia, respectively. A son and daughter were born to Mr. and Mrs. Crubaugh. The latter is now Mrs. Charles McHugh, her husband being proprietor of the Hotel Lexington of Chicago, and the Montrose of Cedar Rapids, and one of the leading hotel men of this part of the country. They have one child. At the time of his marriage, he was proprietor of the Harper House of Rock Island. The son was married in November, 1888, to Mary Esther Quane of Mankato, Minn., and they live with Mrs. Crubaugh at No. 901 Third avenue, the son attending to his mother's large realty holdings left her by her husband. Mr. Crubaugh was a Mason, being admitted to membership in Rock Island Lodge No. 658, in 1888. He was made a Knight Templar in Everts Camp, in June of the same year, and held a number of the important offices in both the chapter and commandery. During the latter part of Mr. Crubaugh's life, he and his wife traveled extensively all over the United States, and in other ways enjoyed their wealth and leisure as only people of cultivation and education are able to do.

CUE, Edward.—The records of the lives of many of the people of Rock Island county show stirring adventures and bravery of action both in times of war and peace. Many there are who are living within the confines of this county proud of their honorable ancestry, and the part their forebears bore in the advancement of civilization. One of the men belonging to this class, whose business activities have ended, and who has consequently more leisure to spend in occupations dear to his heart, is Edward Cue, living retired at No. 570 Michigan avenue, South Rock Island. He was born in Lake county, Ill., August 6, 1841, being a son of Edward Cue, born in Ireland in 1795. His wife lived to be ninety-one years old. The father left England when eleven years old on an English man-of-war, and continued in the service until he attained his majority. He then came to this country and was a clerk in a wholesale drug house of New York city, remaining thus engaged until he left for Chicago, in 1834. This second largest city of the country was then but a village, and Mr. Cue might easily have bought land that now would be well within the city limits, for the price he paid for a farm twenty-two miles outside it, and lived on this farm until his death. He and his wife had the following children: William; Nellie who is the wife of Peter Bartholamew of Chicago; James; Henry who is deceased; Elijah who is a farmer and stock buyer of Illinois, and Edward.

Edward Cue was educated in Illinois, attending the public schools until he was fifteen years old. He earned his first dollar in the timber at Stony Creek, Mich., having engaged to work there for twenty-six dollars per month, and continued at that kind of work for a number of years. Leaving there, he went to Greene county, Ia., and worked on a farm for fourteen years, when he moved to Pocahontas county, Ia., and after four years, came to Rock Island, arriving here in 1894. He then located on a farm, operating it for six years. Returning to Rock Island, he began brick work, and continued in this line for eight years, or until his retirement.

On December 25, 1874, Mr. Cue was married to Jennie Lynch, daughter of Hugh and Jane Lynch, natives of Ireland. Mr. Lynch died sixty-two years ago, and his wife about forty years since. He was a merchant for many years. Mrs. Cue, born December 11, 1849, is the only survivor of her parents' family. Mr. and Mrs. Cue became the parents of six children: Glen E., born May 12, 1876; Frank J., born April 17, 1878; Nellie Naomi, born December 14, 1879; James B., born March 31, 1881; Edwin O., born April 16, 1883; and Henry M., born April 15, 1888. Mr. Cue owns his home, which is valued at $1,500, as well as other property. He belongs to St. Joseph's Catholic church. In politics, he is a democrat. Fraternally, he is a member of the Rock Island Lodge No. 1197, of the Owls.

CUNNINGHAM, Jeremiah.—Some of the most representative citizens of Rock Island, after years devoted to other lines of endeavor, have turned their attention towards fruit growing and gardening and one of these is Jeremiah Cunningham of No. 1451 Richmond street, who since 1910 has been living on his five-acre fruit farm. He was born in Newark, N. J., January 11, 1849, a son of James and Sarah (O'Connor) Cunningham, the former born in 1828, and the latter in 1830. The parents crossed overland, in a prairie schooner, to Iowa, where they died, having had children as follows: Jeremiah; James of Chicago; Paul of Chicago; Thomas of Davenport, Ia., who was killed, while a member of the fire department of that city, in 1905; Mary of Kiowa, Kans., and Sarah, Margaret, Bridget, Rosa and Elizabeth, all of Davenport, Ia.

Jeremiah Cunningham first lived at DeWitt, Ia., after coming west, but soon removed to Davenport, Ia., which remained his home until 1892, when he came to Rock Island. He learned to be a locomotive engineer, and for forty-two years was in the employ of the Rock Island Railroad Company. Prior to that he had worked in the woolen mills of Davenport. In 1910, he retired from the railroad, and since then has been engaged in working his little farm.

On June 7, 1875, Mr. Cunningham was married to Mary Skelly of Davenport, Ia., daughter of John and Elizabeth Skelly, who came to this country from Pennsylvania about the same time as the parents of Mr. Cunningham. Mr. Skelly and family settled in Davenport, where he worked in the flouring mills, but he and his wife are both deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham have had children as follows: John, who lives in Rock Island, is a locomotive engineer for the Rock Island Railroad Company; James, who is employed in the Rock Island Concrete Works; Frederick, who is storekeeper for the John Deering Co. of Moline; Harry, who is bookkeeper for a business house of Rock Island; Edward, who is a machinist, lives in Rock Island; Elizabeth, who belongs to the Sisters of Mercy, of the Davenport Hospital; and Sarah, who lives at home. Harry and Hazel Cunningham are grandchildren. Mr. Cunningham belongs to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. He has been a hard working man all his life, and the comfort he now enjoys is but the just reward of faithfulness and thrift.

CURTIS, Corinth P., formerly a railroad engineer and now a government employe, resides at No. 802 Fifth avenue, Moline, and is one of the substantial men of Rock Island county. He was born at Warren, Warren county, Pa., October 13, 1844, a son of William and Margaret (Patterson) Curtis, the former born in Warren county and the latter born at Meadville, Pa., in 1822. The father died in Moline in 1859 and the mother died in February, 1909, at Crescent City, Fla., both being buried in Moline. Two great-grandfathers of Corinth P. Curtis were Revolutionary soldiers. William Curtis and wife came from Pennsylvania to Rock Island, Ill., in May, 1845, and soon afterward engaged in manufacturing. After spending two or three months in Rock Island he came to Moline, where he resided from the fall of 1845 until his death. He and his wife had five children: Corinth P. is the eldest; Mrs. Jane A. Emery; John, married and living in Ridgeway, Elk county, Penn.; Charles H., unmarried, of Crescent City, Fla.; Nellie L. Venham. After the death of Mr. Curtis his widow married Marvel H. White and they had one son, Kirk M. of Crescent City, Fla.

Corinth P. Curtis received a common school education and early began learning the trade of machinist, but was interrupted in this by his enlistment, which took place June 9, 1862, in Company K One Hundred Twenty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Wolf H. Anderson. This regiment was sent to Louisville, Ky., and went with Buell's army after Bragg, participating in the battle of Perryville in Gordon Granger's Division, and followed Bragg to Cumberland Gap, and returned to Bowling Green, Ky. The brigade was detached and assigned to the duty of guarding the railroad between Bowling Green and Nashville, later was consolidated at Nashville and sent to the front at Chattanooga. They participated in the battles of Lookout Mountain, Resaca, Snake Creek Gap, Dallas, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek and Atlanta. They took part in the Atlanta campaign and went with Sherman to the sea, taking part in many skirmishes, and after a battle at Savannah crossed with Sherman into South Carolina, fought in the battles of Bentonville and Averysborough, N. C., passed through Richmond, and went into camp at Price's Mill, nine miles from Washington. They took part in the Grand Review, were mustered out in Washington and received final pay and discharge at Chicago, Ill., in July, 1865. Mr. Curtis is an honored member of Graham Post G. A. R., of Moline. He had proved his mettle as a soldier and had passed through many dangers and adventures. He was captured by John Morgan in the winter of 1863, but while on his way to the dreaded Andersonville Prison was retaken by his comrades, thus escaping incarceration in that place, where he might have met the death that was the fate of so many brave soldiers, through lack of proper food and ill treatment.

After the war Mr. Curtis returned home and continued work as machinist. Later he went to Galesburg and for fifteen years worked in the employ of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, being promoted to the position of engineer and running on all the lines of that road. In 1891 he returned to Moline and worked at his trade of machinist for Williams, White & Company, with whom he remained until 1905, when he accepted his present position as guard at the bridge that leads to the island. He is liberal in religious views and in politics has always been a republican. He is a representative of that class of men who risked their lives in the service of their country, and in their declining years with comrades enjoy living over the days of stirring events whose importance is not fully appreciated by the present generation because they have not passed through them.

Mr. Curtis was married at Moline May 8, 1867, to Marie A. Barker, daughter of Luther H. and Martha (Cook) Barker, natives of Massachusetts. She was born in Pittsfield, Mass., September 2, 1845, one of two children born to her parents, the other being a son, Charles. Mrs. Curtis died November 19, 1882. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Curtis, Luther B., born in Moline November 17, 1878, and Fannie E., also born in Moline, who died at the age of one year. Luther B. married Rosalee Price, who was born at Palatka, Fla., and they have one daughter, Ruth Marie.

CUSHMAN, Clement, who is now living retired at Sears, Ill., was for many years engaged in farming in Rock Island county, and is known as one of the substantial citizens of this section. He was born in Munson, Me., August 8, 1840, and is a son of Clement and Augusta J. (Barrett) Cushman, natives of that state. The father of Mr. Cushman was for a long time engaged in the lumber business in Maine, but in 1841 removed to Lorain county, O., where he lived until coming to Illinois in 1847. He settled in Henry county, where he followed farming until 1852, in which year he came to Rock Island county. One year was also spent in Cedar county, Ia., but the family eventually returned to Rock Island county and here the death of the father occurred. He was a captain in the state militia in Ohio. There were eight sons and three daughters in the Cushman family, and three of the sons besides Clement were soldiers during the Civil war.

Clement Cushman was educated in the schools of Rock Island county, and during his boyhood days worked on the home farm. On September 1, 1861, Mr. Cushman enlisted in Company C, Ninth Illinois Cavalry, and was discharged October 31, 1865, in Selma, Ala. He took part in many battles, acting as orderly on the staff of General Hatch, and participated among other services, in the Nashville campaign. After the close of the war he settled in Hampton, Ill., but a few years later removed to Moline, and from that time to the present he has been a resident of Rock Island county, where he followed farming and teaming for a long period. He located in Sears in 1891, and here owns an excellent property. Mr. Cushman is a member of John Buford Post No. 243, Grand Army of the Republic. His political views are those of the republican party, and his religious belief that of the Baptist church.

On August 14, 1863, while on a furlough, Mr. Cushman was married at Hampton, Ill., to Eliza Stephenson, who was born in Indiana August 14, 1841. Of the seven children born to this union, five are now living: Sheridan E., a locomotive engineer of Springfield; Clyde, an assistant civil engineer of Rock Island; Ralph, a stationary engineer of Rock Island; Elmer, at home; and Lola, who is the wife of Byron Barrett, living in Wisconsin. The other two were: Mrs. Pearl May Treickler, who died Jan. 11, 1910; and Harry, who died in 1894, aged two years.

CUSTER, Henry P. (deceased), formerly a substantial citizen living retired at No. 1917 Sixth avenue, Rock Island, for many years connected with railroad interests in that city, was a veteran of the great Civil war, in which he took an active part. Mr. Custer was born February 25, 1837, near Norristown, Montgomery county, Pa., a son of William and Mariah (Johnson) Custer. William Custer was born in Marion township, Montgomery county, Pa., in 1807, and there followed the occupation of boot and shoemaker. In 1856 he removed to Rocksborough, Pa., where he remained one year, and then came to Illinois, settling in Wethersfield, Henry county, where he established himself in the same business. In 1886 he retired from active life and took up his residence at Rock Island, where the remainder of his life was spent. His death occurred in 1892, his wife having passed away two years previous to that time. There were nine children in their family: Benjamin Franklin, Anna Gertrude and Frank J., who all died in infancy; William Amos, who is living in Florida; Henry P.; George W., who died in 1866; Thomas M., who died in 1868 at Santa Fe, N. M.; Capt. Bethel M., who served in the regular army and died at Danville, N. Y.; and Mary Ann, who was the wife of Robert Moffett, died at Shenandoah, Ia.

Henry P. Custer was educated in the schools of Swedesburg, Pa., and the Fremont Catholic Seminary at Norristown, Pa., studying under Prof. Samuel Aaron for one year. His first work was in the boot and shoe business, which he followed for three years and in 1860 he came to Illinois, and settled at Kewanee, where he became a clerk in a grocery store. Two years later he became a clerk for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and in the fall of 1871 he went to Texas, where he served as a government employe in the quartermaster's department at Fort Davis, near El Paso. After eight months, however, he returned to Kewanee, and again took up his railroad position, and in 1879 was transferred to Rock Island, and he ended his service as chief clerk in 1900, in which year he retired. Mr. Custer was a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and was connected with the Grand Army of the Republic. He built his late residence in 1895. In his political views he was a democrat, and his religious belief was that of the Episcopal church.

Mr. Custer enlisted in 1861 at Kewanee, Ill., in Company A, Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He was one of the party that spiked the guns at Island No. 10 and among his many battles were Farmington, Stone River, Tullahoma, Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge. He reenlisted in the same regiment in the spring of 1864 and took part in the Atlanta campaign, also participating in the battles of Buzzard's Roost, Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, and in January, 1866, was mustered out at Camp Butler. He was a brave and faithful soldier, and was always ready to do his duty cheerfully and willingly.

In April, 1867, Mr. Custer was married by the Reverend Thompson, in the Episcopal church at Kewanee to Mary Emily Church, born at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1843, daughter of Captain Elijah S. and Charlotte (Moxon) Church. Captain Church was born in 1818. He was captain of Company A, Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry to which Mr. Custer belonged. He was taken prisoner at Farmington and confined for seven months in prison at Macon, Ga., after which he rejoined his command, but on account of poor health, due to prison life, was obliged to resign. Captain Church took up his residence at Neponset, Ill., but died in St. Louis at his daughter's home in 1901. Mrs. Church was born in London, England, in 1817 and died in 1909. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Custer, namely: Gertrude, who is the wife of Joseph Burrows; Charlotte, who is of Denver; J. Milnor, who is living at Rock Island; and Grace W., who is living with her mother. Mr. Custer died November 4, 1912.

DAHLBERG, Swen.—No nation has produced more honest, reliable and industrious people in proportion to population than Sweden, and these sturdy men and women are cordially welcomed whenever they see fit to come to the United States, for here their worth is appreciated. One of the men who has lived up to this reputation is Swen Dahlberg of No. 2341 Fifth avenue, Moline, a millwright who followed his trade and that of saw-milling for thirty-five years, finally retiring on account of failing health. During the Civil war he served his country as a soldier, and is now one of the veterans of Rock Island county.

Sven Dahlberg was born at Christianstadt, Sweden, July 9, 1844, a son of Peter and Ingar (Nordling) Dahlberg. Peter Dahlberg, a blacksmith by occupation, was born at Christianstadt, Sweden, August 5, 1805, and died in Sweden at the age of fifty-seven years, on May 18, 1862. His wife was born at Andarum, Sweden, December 17, 1815, and came to this country in 1866, settling at Red Wing, Minn., where her sons had prepared a home, living there until the time of her death, June 24, 1893. The family consisted of two sons: John C. Pfeiffer, a half brother to Mr. Dahlberg, who lives at Red Wing, Minn., and Sven; and three daughters: Ellen, now Mrs. Andrew Anderson of Borestad, Sweden; Anna, Mrs. Andrew Parsons, deceased; and Christine, Mrs. Carl Youngquist, of Red Wing, Minn.

Sven Dahlberg grew up in Sweden, attending a military school and learning the trade of cabinetmaking. Coming from a family where all the male members on both sides had given full military service to either Germany or Sweden, his great-grandfather having been a general in the German army, it was but natural that he should enlist during the Civil war. Coming to the United States he arrived at St. Paul, Minn., September 5, 1864, and enlisted, as soon as he left the boat, in Company D, Third Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, as a private, remaining in the service until the close of the war, being honorably discharged in September, 1865. His brother was also a soldier in the Civil war, serving four years and three months in the same company as he. When the first state militia was organized at Moline, Mr. Dahlberg was made a sergeant, afterwards becoming first lieutenant of his company, and did most of the drilling of the company during the seven years he was a member of it.

Mr. Dahlberg has been twice married, first at Rock Island, October 27, 1870, to Mary Ann Squires of Tonawanda, N. Y., who died March 5, 1881. There were four children of this marriage: Oscar L., born October 29, 1871, who following in his father's footsteps enlisted during the Spanish-American war, April 26, 1898, in Company F, Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, was honorably discharged at the close of the war; Ellen, born June 22, 1873, who died in infancy; Benjamin J., born September 28, 1875, who died in infancy; John C., born September 11, 1877, who is now living in Louisiana, is superintendent of a sawmill near New Orleans. On May 14, 1882, Mr. Dahlberg was married (second) to Mary G. Nelson at Red Wing, Minn. Mrs. Dahlberg is the daughter of Johannes and Greta (Simmons) Nelson, and was born May 21, 1848, in Linköping, Sweden, coming to the United States with her parents and brothers in 1851, and settling at Moline, Ill., thence removing to Red Wing, Minn., in 1854. Her father was born in Sweden on May 26, 1798, and died at Red Wing, December 14, 1883. Her mother also was born in Sweden January 2, 1806, and died at Red Wing, March 10, 1866. She had two brothers, Charles Nelson, deceased, and Peter I.

Johnson, now of Red Wing, Minn. Mr. Johnson was also a soldier during the Civil war, serving for three years in Company D, Tenth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry. By this second marriage, Mr. Dahlberg had the following children: Melkert Nelson, a carpenter, born July 11, 1883; Mary Grace, born January 26, 1885, now Mrs. Earl H. Eiteman of Fort Worth, Tex.; Benjamin Clarence, a woodworker, born August 18, 1886; and Alice Lillian, an optometrist, born June 28, 1888. With the exception of Mrs. Eiteman, these children are living at home.

A strong republican, Mr. Dahlberg served as one of the supervisors of Moline township for four years. He is an Odd Fellow, a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and of Graham Post, G. A. R., of Moline. Although he was brought up a Lutheran, Mr. Dahlberg is not affiliated with any church. He owns his homestead at No. 2341 Fifth avenue, Moline, where he now resides. A good citizen, as he was a loyal soldier, he has always done his full duty in every walk of life. In fact, he is a man upon whom full dependence can be placed under all conditions.

DAHN, Carl C.—Some of the most beautiful as well as productive farms in Rock Island county have been named for some distinguishing characteristic. The Maple Grove Farm owned by Carl C. Dahn is a striking instance of this, as it takes its name from its luxuriant growth of maple trees, and it is one of the best in the county. It is south of Taylor Ridge, and comprises seventy-five acres, and during the three years it has been in the possession of Mr. Dahn, it has been materially improved. Mr. Dahn was born in Germany, March 14, 1866, being a son of Christ and Mary (Korahl) Dahn, the former born July 10, 1836, and died in 1885, while the latter was born in 1836, and lived until 1907. The father came to America in 1882, landing at New York city, from whence he came direct to Rock Island, and died in this city. His children were: Carl C.; John, who lives in Mercer county, Ill., is a farmer; Fred, who lives in Rock Island county, is also a farmer; and Wilhelmina, who married Charles Mullman, deceased, married (second) Walter Kane of Bowling township.

On October 22, 1889, Carl C. Dahn married (first) Beulah Kerr, a daughter of Joseph Kerr, born in southern Virginia. The father died in 1905, his wife having passed away in 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Dahn became the parents of two children, namely: Henrietta, who was born in 1890, married John Mullman; and Mertle, who was born in 1893, married Otto Kane, and both daughters are graduates of the country schools. Mrs. Dahn died in 1893, rounding out a beautiful life as a devoted wife and mother. Carl C. Dahn married (second) Mary Rohr of Rock Island. Carl C. Dahn is a member of the German Lutheran church of Rock Island. He belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America for twenty-three years and he belongs to the Court of

Robert W. Olmsted

Honor. One of the sound, substantial men of this locality, his success in life is well deserved.

DANCE, George, operating 200 acres of desirable Drury township farming land, is correctly numbered among the prosperous agriculturalists of Rock Island county. He was born in the township April 18, 1867, a son of Henry and Ann (Kepping) Dance, both natives of Pennsylvania. They came to Illinois during the early sixties, and the father farmed for eighteen years in the vicinity of Illinois City, from whence they went to Iowa, and from there to Colorado, where he continued his agricultural operations until his death in 1899, survived by the mother until 1906. They had ten children, nine of whom are living.

George Dance attended school in Illinois City, and in the intervals helped his father on the farm. He remained at home until of age, and then went to Colorado, where he rented land and cultivated it until 1899, when he came back as far as Iowa, and for seven years continued farming. In 1906, he took charge of the farm he now occupies, known as the William Grossklaus farm, where he has since remained, raising corn as a principal crop, producing about 4,000 bushels in 1912, which he fed to cattle and horses for market. His success has been assured because of his practical knowledge of farming, and he takes a deep interest in his work.

In 1892, Mr. Dance was united in marriage with Ella Robinson, and two children were born to them: Fred, born in January, 1894 and Lavina, born in 1896. In 1909, Mr. Dance married Mrs. Stella Sprague, who was born in Iowa. Mrs. Dance had two children by a former marriage, Thomas and Mildred. Mr. Dance is very liberal in politics, preferring to vote for the man he believes is best suited to his ideas of civic morality, than to tie himself down to party lines and follow the direction of others.

DANIELSON, Amil E.—There was a time at Moline, Ill., when a day's search would be required to find natives of Sweden among its citizenship, but that period has long since passed and among the leading and representative men, in every line, in this rich and prospering city, will be found either native born Swedes or their immediate descendants. The race possesses those sturdy qualities which result in advancement. Amil E. Danielson, who, in partnership with William E. Furgie, is in the undertaking business at No. 1212 Fifth avenue, Moline, was born at New Windsor, Henry county, Ill., July 7, 1876, and is a son of D. A. and Ida C. (Swanson) Danielson.

D. A. Danielson was seven years old when he was brought from Sweden to America, his parents settling for a year at Jamestown, N. Y., and then came as far west as Andover, Henry county, Ill., where the father subsequently died, after which the mother of D. A. Danielson and her six children, came to Rock Island county.

The youth was thrown on his own resources, after one day of school attendance, when twelve years old. He worked until he earned money enough to buy a horse-power threshing machine and this he operated for some five years and then secured employment under the Government as a teamster on the Island and hauled a great amount of the rock that was used in the construction of the present buildings. He moved then to New Windsor, Ill., and engaged in farming there until 1899, when he came to Moline, where he was interested in the grocery trade from 1900 to 1904. His death occurred January 15, 1912. He married Ida C. Swanson, who was also born in Sweden, and they had a family of five children, namely: Edward George, of Girard, Ill.; Albert N., deceased; Amil E.; Mrs. Ella Lipton, of Chicago; and Arthur E., of Oatman, Ariz.

Amil E. Danielson obtained a district school education and in 1899 came to Moline and took a course in a business college, afterward embarking in the grocery business. In 1901 his father became his partner in the grocery, and continued until 1903, when Amil E. Danielson went on the road for a year selling coal for the Ohio & Pennsylvania Coal and Fuel Company. After returning to Moline he worked for one year in a local grocery house. In 1905 he bought the undertaking business of Mr. Esterdahl in partnership with Mr. Fogelstrom, which continued until 1908, since when he has been associated with William E. Furgie. Mr. Danielson has been very active politically and is identified with the progressive party. For several years he has served as ward committeeman, has been judge of elections ever since coming here and is chairman for the city central committee.

On October 31, 1912, Mr. Danielson was married to Miss Anna M. Granquist of Moline, Ill. He is identified prominently with a number of fraternal orders, belonging to the Knights of Pythias, the Elks, the Red Men, the Odd Fellows, Eagles and Moose, the M. W. A. and the Pythian Sisters. In the Knights of Pythias he has passed all the chairs, has been county deputy for four years and has been elected to serve in his second term as state deputy, and was representative to the Grand Lodge at Rockford, Ill., in 1912, and is also local deputy for the Order of the Moose. Mr. Danielson has served as a trustee of Grace Lutheran church of Rock Island and as president of the Tri-City Lutheran League.

DANNER, John Leonard.—Agricultural methods have changed very materially during the past decade or two and interurban service, telephonic connections, automobiles and the consequent betterment of roads on account of the latter, have brought the farmers much closer together, as well as placed them in touch with the centers of business activity so that the man today who devotes himself to the cultivation of his land is more independent than any other worker in the world. One of the men whose hospitable home is always open is John Leonard Danner, owner of eighty-five acres of fine land in Buffalo Prairie township, and of two other farms in Drury township, one of 140 acres on sections 14 and 15 and the other of forty acres on section 13.

John L. Danner was born in Muscatine, Ia., October 13, 1858, being a son of John L. and Margaret (Braunworth) Danner. The father was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, on October 23, 1823, and his wife in the same place December 25, 1829. They came to the United States at different times. By trade the father was a shoemaker, and came to Rock Island county in 1868, after which he engaged in farming, in Drury township. There he died on March 15, 1899, his widow surviving him until September 29, 1906. They were members of the German Methodist church, and he held several offices in it, including that of local preacher. In politics, he was a republican. The children born to these parents were: John Leonard; William, who is of Pharr, Texas, moved there recently; Charles, died in Drury township January 20, 1904, having married Annie Seidler; Mary, Mrs. August Krueger of Drury township, and Edward, born in 1873, who died April 3, 1881, at the age of nine years.

John Danner was educated in the schools of Muscatine, and the White Oak school in Rock Island county. When twenty years old, he left school, and worked for his father until twenty-six years old. On November 13, 1884, he married Caroline Wetekam, daughter of Christian Wetekam. Mrs. Danner was born in Fuerstenthum, Wakdeh, Germany, April 15, 1865, and came to the United States when seventeen years old. She died December 13, 1911, and was buried at Illinois City. They had four children: Lewis of Drury township, married Philippa Fuhr; John, a farmer of Drury township, married Lulu Morehead; and Rosa and Harry, at home. Following his marriage, Mr. Danner rented the home farm for a period, then bought one of his father's farms of 140 acres in Drury township, which he still owns. In 1902, he bought and located on his present farm, which is one of the best in Buffalo Prairie township, with thoroughly modern improvements. He is a member of the German Methodist church. Politically he is a republican. Hardworking, thrifty and a good manager, he has prospered greatly, and at the same time raised and maintained a high standard of honorable living.

DANNER, William.—Drury township is essentially an agricultural district, all of its wealth being centered in its magnificent farms, developed by the prosperous men who own these properties. One of the most successful of them is William Danner, owner of 174 acres of as good land as can be found in Rock Island county. He carries on general farming, raising some cattle, hogs and horses. He was born at Muscatine, Iowa, in 1863, a son of John L. and Margaret (Braunworth) Danner, both natives of Germany, who came to this country when thirty years old, settling at Muscatine, Iowa, where the father worked at his trade as shoemaker. In 1872 he bought the farm on which his son William now lives, owning at one time 300 acres of land, and farmed it until 1892, when he retired, moving to Illinois City, and there he died in 1904. His widow died in 1906. They had five children, namely: John L.; William; Mary, who is the wife of Gus Krueger; and Charles and Edward, both of whom are deceased. Brought up amid agricultural surroundings, there is no wonder that William Danner turned his attention to farming and associated lines. His fine farm affords him ample opportunity for his work, and he specializes on breeding horses, owning several valuable stud horses. His success has been remarkable, and he ranks among the foremost men in his line in Rock Island county.

In 1891 Mr. Danner married Mary Furst of Andalusia. They have had eight children: Emma, Minnie, Nellie, Willie, Edward, Joseph, Charles and Ernest, all living with their parents. The German Methodist church holds his membership and receives his generous support. In politics he has always been a republican, but has never sought office. Reliable, hardworking and thrifty, Mr. Danner has made his way in the world, and is an influential factor in his community.

DARLING, Loren.—The demand for carefully trained experts in every line, increases with the expansion of business, and the men who are capable of directing their fellow workers, and maintaining the standard of excellence required under existing pure food laws, are always sure of receiving recognition. One of the efficient men whose energy and ability has been directed towards the furtherance of the interests of the Rock Island Canning Company of Sears, Ill., is Loren Darling, superintendent of the works. He was born in East Aurora, N. Y., in 1881, and is the son of William and Cornelia (Richardson) Darling, both of whom are living in Sycamore, Ill. There were four children in the family: Loren, Blanche, Marguerette and one who died in infancy.

Growing up in New York state, Mr. Darling attended school. He then learned the business of canning at New York, and developed into an expert in his line. In 1903, he came west and took charge of the plant located at Sycamore, Ill. In 1909, he came to Sears, Ill., to manage the canning factory owned and operated by the Rock Island Canning Co. which he has brought to a high state of perfection. The company which owns the Sears factory, also owns the one at Sycamore and it was a compliment to Mr. Darling's ability to have been selected manager of the plant at Sears. His home is near the works, so he keeps in constant touch with affairs, and his life is centered in the business to which he is devoting the best years of his manhood.

In 1909, Mr. Darling married Mame Smith, of LeRoy, N. Y. They have four children: Gard-well, Grace, Dorothy and Marjorie. Mrs. Darling is a Catholic, and the children have been baptized into her church. Mr. Darling is one of the most desirable citizens of Sears, and no man has done more towards advancing its interests than he, for he has made successful one of its leading industries.

DASSO, Henry (deceased).—The family of Henry Dasso have occupied their present home in Rock Island, for a period of forty years. Mr. Dasso was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, in October, 1837, of German parents, both of whom died many years ago. The father was a slate worker by trade, and while working on a roof in his native country accidentally fell and died from his injuries. The mother came to America, where several children had preceded her, and died at the home of her son Henry in Rock Island in 1876. There were two sons in the family and one of them, Fred, died while on the way to America.

Henry Dasso was reared in Germany, where he received a common school education. After he was old enough he started out in life for himself, prospered to some degree, and was married in 1865 in his native country. In 1871, he came to America, bringing with him his wife and their children—two sons and one daughter. They also had two children born in America. After landing in New York they came direct to Rock Island, where he found employment and made a permanent residence. He with his family were devout and active members of the German Lutheran church and the family has always had a good standing in the city.

Mr. Dasso was married in Germany to Miss Frederica Mauss Gest, daughter of Carl and Caroline Gest, who came to America in 1870. Mr. and Mrs. Gest first settled at Cleveland, O., but after a short residence in that city came to Rock Island, where they spent their remaining years, the father dying at the age of eighty-eight and the mother when aged ninety-two years. They had two sons and three daughters, all of whom survive save one. Mrs. Dasso is the oldest and the others are: Fred Gest, and Mrs. Johanna Schroder, of Rock Island; and Mrs. Minnie Runge, of Davenport. Five children were born to Mr. Dasso and wife, four of whom now survive: Charles, of Rock Island, is the oldest; Lena, wife of James Dixon, of Rock Island; Henry, of South Rock Island; Miss Amelia, living with her mother. Charles has seven children, namely: Fred, the oldest, married Miss Lena Seibert, of South Rock Island, and they have three children—Blanche, Clara and Helen; Freda, wife of Hubert Just; Henry, Joseph, Edward, William and Mabel. James Dixon and wife have one child, Harry, of Rock Island. Henry has five children: Hannah, Lena, Rosie, Fred and Henry. The family is a representative one and respected by all who know its members. Mr. Dasso died May 2, 1895, deeply mourned by his family and many friends. His widow has lived in the house she now occupies since 1871 and is well known in her part of Rock Island. She owns this property, which is located at No. 825 Fifth street, besides other desirable city realty.

DAVIS, Samuel Rhodes, of the correspondence department of the Modern Woodmen of America, is one of the representative men of Rock Island, and one who has been largely instrumental in advancing the interests of that order. He was born at Grinnell, Ia., March 17, 1874, a son of Willis and Sarah O. (Carmichael) Davis, the former, born in Pennsylvania, in 1840, died in February, 1908; and the latter, born in New York state, still surviving, lives at Grinnell. The father was an accountant, who moved at a very early day to Iowa, and was for many years a resident of Grinnell. When the Civil war opened, Willis Davis enlisted as a private in a company organized at Muscatine, Ia., during the early part of that great struggle, and served five years, rising to the rank of first lieutenant. At the time of his death he was a member of the local post, G. A. R., of Grinnell.

Samuel R. Davis was educated in the public schools of Grinnell, being graduated therefrom May 27, 1891. He learned the printing trade and followed it for thirteen years with the exception of some time spent as a newspaper reporter. On May 18, 1897, Mr. Davis came to Rock Island, which has continued to be his home. In 1903, he accepted a position as auditor in the office of the Modern Woodmen of America, and since April, 1910, has assisted in conducting the voluminous correspondence between the head of that Society and the local lodges and members. Following the example of his father, Mr. Davis has also given his country the benefit of his services, enlisting in Company K, Iowa National Guards, October 28, 1890, from which he was honorably discharged, December 23, 1895. On May 15, 1906, he was commissioned lieutenant, J. G., Rock Island Division, Illinois Naval Reserves, and on June 5, 1908 was commissioned lieutenant commanding, but, for business reasons, resigned in October, 1910.

On January 27, 1898, Mr. Davis was married to Margaret Jane Potts, born March 4, 1876, in Coal Valley, Ill., only daughter of Henry and Anna Potts, natives of England, who came to America in 1868, locating in Rock Island, where they have since remained. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have one son, Harry Willis Davis, born January 4, 1899. Fraternally, Mr. Davis belongs to Trio Lodge No. 57, A. F. & A. M., which he joined April 24, 1902, serving it as master in 1907; to Rock Island Lodge No. 980, B. P. O. E., which he joined July 7, 1905, and served as exalted ruler in 1908; and to the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 26. He was captain of the famous "Camp 26 drill team" for ten years, taking part in many national contests. At the present time he holds a commission as colonel on the staff of Major-General John H. Mitchell, commanding M. W. A. Foresters. He also belongs to the Court of Honor, the Modern Brotherhood of America and the Knights of the Maccabees, and holds an honorary withdrawal card from the Tri-City Typographical Union No. 107 in which, while a member, he held many offices of trust. As a business man, his services in his present position are highly valued and fully appreciated by those with whom he is associated. Mr. Davis owns a beautiful suburban home overlooking the Rock and Mississippi rivers, near the picturesque Black Hawk Watch Tower, adjacent to the village of Sears.

DAVIS, Thomas Bodley and Samuel Sharpe.—The history of these two men would mean almost the entire history of the public utilities in Rock Island county. A number of the business men of this county have shown superior intelligence, persistent effort and sound judgment, as is shown by their careers of usefulness to their communities, but none more than these two men.

Thomas B. Davis was born in Maysville, Kentucky, January 29, 1856, and Samuel S. Davis was born in Covington, Kentucky, February 1, 1858, sons of John B. and Anna E. (Sharpe) Davis. The paternal grandfather, Thomas Bodley Davis, was a native of Pennsylvania, but came of Scotch-Irish ancestry. In young manhood he went to Kentucky, and found employment as captain of a steamboat plying the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. When only thirty-four years of age, he died at New Orleans, of yellow fever, while on one of his trips to that city. The maternal grandfather was Samuel K. Sharpe, who practiced medicine in Kentucky, his native state, nearly all his life, but in 1875 came to Rock Island, where he died in 1890, aged ninety years. His wife had passed away nine years before, aged seventy-six years. John Burgess Davis, the father, was also an owner and captain of river boats. For over forty years he ran boats on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and did much pioneering. In 1859 he took the only boat that was ever taken from the Mississippi river up the Minnesota into the Red River of the North. When his country needed his services he enlisted in its defense and rose to be major of the Second Minnesota Regiment, participating in the battles of Mill Springs, Corinth, Tallahoma, Chickamauga and others. While fighting under General Thomas at Chickamauga, he was wounded and returned to his home. After the war, Major Davis ran a line of steamers from Memphis, Tenn., up White river, in Arkansas, to its headwaters. The family resided at Augusta, Arkansas, but later removed to Memphis, Tenn. In 1873 he took charge of the steamer Montana, improving the upper Mississippi river under the United States Engineer Corps, and removed, with his family, to Rock Island in 1874. In 1877 he took a contract from the United States Government for carrying the material for building Forts Keough and Custer, on the Yellowstone and Little Big Horn rivers in Montana, from Bismarck, North Dakota, which was then the terminus of the Northern Pacific Railway. Twelve steamboats were taken up the Missouri river from the Mississippi for this purpose. These were the first boats to ascend these rivers. In 1883 he engaged with the Hudson Bay Fur Company, and transported supplies and furs on the Saskatchewan river in Canada for several years. He carried troops for the Canadian Government, during the Riel Rebellion in 1885, on the south branch of the Saskatchewan river, this being the first time steamers ascended this river. He retired in 1889, and his death occurred the following year. His widow survived him. He was a Mason, a Presbyterian, politically a Democrat, and in every walk of life was an earnest, reliable and responsible man.

Thomas B. Davis graduated from the Memphis High School in 1874. Samuel S. Davis went on the river with his father in 1873, and attended the Rock Island High School during the Winter terms. When he returned to Rock Island, after the completion of the contract on the Yellowstone river in 1877, he was in the employ of the local steamer agent, J. H. Langley, and on January 1, 1878, he entered the employ of Thomas Yates, at Moline, as manager of a plumbing and steamfitting business, Thomas B. Davis having entered the employ of Mr. Yates, at Rock Island, in 1875. In 1879-80, the brothers invented and manufactured some valuable steam appliances, and were also engaged in the coal business on First avenue, Rock Island. Upon the death of Thomas Yates, February 1, 1881, the brothers, with Jacob Riley, bought the plumbing business in Rock Island and Moline, and formed a partnership under the name of Davis & Company. The following year the two brothers became the sole proprietors of the business, which they continued until January 12, 1892, when the Davis Company was incorporated. In 1883 they took a contract for laying the water-mains in the city of Moline, and, as the city did not have the means to build the waterworks, Davis Brothers organized the Moline Water Works Company, built the plant complete, and supplied the city with water from January 1, 1884, to July, 1886, when the city purchased and began operating the plant. February 9, 1884, the brothers started a fifty-light U. S. Arc Dynamo in the waterworks building, and lighted the stores in Moline, and The Merchants Electric Light Company was organized for this purpose. In 1885 they built the Davis Block in Moline, organized the Merchants Electric Light Company of Rock Island, and built a plant on Nineteenth street from which the stores in Rock Island were lighted. In 1886 new dynamos were bought, and, with the one from the Moline waterworks, were placed in the basement of the Davis Block, and the first electric street lights in Moline, eighty in number, were started May 1. In 1887 the Peoples Light & Fuel Manufacturing Company of Moline was organized, and the Moline Gas & Coke Company and the Merchants Electric Light Company, with their various properties, were taken over by it. In 1888 a twenty-five year contract was made with the Moline Water Power Company, a plant was built at the foot of Fourth street in Moline; on March 10th the dynamos from the Rock Island Merchants Electric Light plant were placed in this building, and the first electric lights were run from Moline to Rock Island by water power on this date. The Peoples Light Company of Davenport, Iowa, was organized, and on April 18, 1888, the first electric lights were run in Davenport from the Moline Water Power plant. The first alternating current dynamo (U. S.) was started June 3, in this plant, later being exchanged for a Westinghouse Alternator, which was installed and started August 18, 1889. The electric current for the first electric street car in Rock Island county was furnished from this plant, the car starting on Fifteenth street, Moline, October 17, 1889. The United States Arsenal water power dam was washed out May 11, 1888, and on November 26, 1888, the temporary dam was completed so that the water power could again be used. In April, 1889, the city of Moline took over the Street Lighting plant, which it operated until 1893, when they sold back to the company and re-contracted for one hundred and twenty street lights. In 1890 ordinances were granted by the cities of Rock Island and Moline for fuel gas mains, and a ten-inch main was laid between the two cities. A contract was taken for lighting the streets of Rock Island with electricity and the lights were started from the Moline plant January 6, 1891. February 26, 1892, the electric station in Moline was entirely destroyed by fire. In 1893 the Peoples Power Company was organized, and the Rock Island County Brush Electric Light Company, the Rock Island Gas Light & Coke Company and the Peoples Light & Fuel Manufacturing Company were taken over by it. In 1894 a large gas plant was built at the foot of Fourth street, Moline, adjoining the electric plant, and the old Moline and Rock Island gas plants were abandoned. In 1898 the Davenport & Rock Island Street Railway Company was taken over by local capital, and the small lines in Davenport and Moline were also bought. The wing dam connected with the water power in Moline was also built the same year by the Davis Company, under contract with the United States Government. The brothers became stockholders in the Moline Water Power Company and directed its affairs, and for several years the work of deepening the tail races and Sylvan Slough, connecting them with the Mississippi river at Rock Island, was done by them. About this time, 1898, they bought the water power at Sears, Illinois, in Rock river, which had lain dormant for over twenty years, and made plans for its development. Permits were secured from the United States Government and three modern concrete dams were built, a modern power house constructed, water wheels and generators installed, and the plant was started February 14, 1912. This was the first lowhead development using direct connected units. The gas, electric light and traction companies, which the Davis Company had been instrumental in developing and perfecting in Rock Island and Moline, were sold to an Eastern syndicate in 1906, the Davis Brothers retaining their water power interests. In 1908 they became active directors and officers in the Rock Island Plow Company, and the entire plant has been modernized and its business developed and greatly increased.

Thomas B. Davis served two terms as president of the Illinois State Master Plumbers' Association, and two terms as president of the Illinois State Steamfitters' Association, 1896-7. Samuel S. Davis served as president of the Illinois Electric Association in 1903. Fraternally they are members of Trio Lodge A. F. & A. M., Barrett Chapter R. A. M. and Rock Island Commandery, K. T. They are also members of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias.

On January 17, 1889, Thomas B. Davis was married to Apollonia Denkmann, daughter of Frederick C. A. and Catherine (Bladel) Denkmann, and they have four children, Anna D., Helen A., Thomas Bodley, Jr., and Susanne A. They are members of the Broadway Presbyterian church.

On September 21, 1892, Samuel S. Davis was married to Apollonia Weyerhaeuser, daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth S. (Bladel) Weyerhaeuser, and have one son, Edwin W. The family are members of the Broadway Presbyterian church.

As business men the Davis brothers have made enviable reputations. Their ability to carry forward to successful completion any enterprise in which they are interested is unquestioned, and while their business ventures have been entirely confined to Rock Island county, and almost solely in connection with machinery and the employment of men, they are at all times interested in everything calculated to advance and build up their adopted city and county.

DAVIS, William J., general manager of D. M. Sechler Implement & Carriage Co., one of the best examples of the energetic business man of Rock Island county, and one whose executive ability and progressive spirit are proverbial, was born in Richland Center, Wis., December 25, 1865. He is a son of Richard W. and Eveline E. (Starkey) Davis, the former born in Ohio, October 27, 1822, and the latter in Marion county, Ind., November 26, 1827. The father was a farmer who went to Indiana, and later to Richland county, Wis., where he remained until 1894, when he left to spend four years in Kansas. From there he went to Mansfield, Mo., and after four years came to Moline. In 1903, he left for Kansas City, and there he had the misfortune to lose his wife, April 2, 1907. Mr. Davis then went to Richland Center, Wis., on a visit, and there passed away August 22, 1907.

William J. Davis was educated in the Richland Center public schools, and was brought up on a farm. Always fond of music, he has developed his talent, which he inherits, his entire family being musical. Leaving school, Mr. Davis went to Kansas where he worked on land he had purchased in Law county. He then went to Ellis county and did farm work and herded cattle for two years. Coming to Moline, he engaged with the D. M. Sechler Carriage Co., and within two months was made foreman of the yard gang, and in three months was made receiving clerk. After two years, he was promoted to be time keeper, holding that position for six years, and during the latter three years he also had charge of the bicycle department. His ability was then further recognized by his appointment as purchasing agent, and he still attends to that part of the business. On July 6, 1903, he was elected to the office of assistant secretary and a director, and December 18, 1906, was elected carriage department manager and general manager on March 7, 1907.

Mr. Davis was married at Moline, Ill., September 26, 1894, by the Reverend Grafton of the Christian Church of Rock Island, to Louise Klattenhoff, born in Zuma township, daughter of Henry and Margaret (Mahlsteit) Klattenhoff. Mr. Klattenhoff is a dry goods merchant of Moline, and he and his wife are German. A son, William Sechler Davis, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Davis on January 1, 1904. Mr. Davis owns his home at No. 422 Fourth avenue, Moline, and is in comfortable circumstances, and a man of prominence, having been on the library board one term. A Mason, he belongs to Moline Blue Lodge, Rock Island Chapter and Commandery, and Davenport Shrine. Mrs. Davis belongs to the Eastern Star. Mr. Davis carries insurance in the Mutual Benefit of Newark, N. J., Bankers Life Insurance Co., and the Knights and Ladies of Security and the Connecticut Commercial Travelers Mutual Accident Association. While Mr. Davis is liberal in his religious views, he gives a cordial support to the Lutheran Church to which his wife belongs. A man of untiring energy, and faithful persistence, Mr. Davis has risen steadily, and to him is due much of the success of the great concern whose affairs he administers so ably. His interests are centered in his business so that he has no time for politics, but he desires good government, and the advancement of the community in which he resides.

DAXON, Daniel D.—Throughout the various towns and cities of Rock Island county are to be found retired farmers who have settled down near the scene of their former labors, where they can enjoy the fruit of their work, and still not be too far removed from the old-time friends. Such a man is Daniel D. Daxon, of Milan, Ill. He was born in County Clare, Ireland, September 20, 1849, and has all of the good qualities of the sons of the Emerald Isle, which have made them such desirable citizens throughout the world. He is a son of William and Malinda (Power) Daxon, natives of County Clare and County Tipperary, Ireland. The parents came to America in 1849, bringing with them their seven sons and two daughters, and located in Rock Island county, on a farm in Bowling township, where the father entered about 600 acres from the government. Here he engaged in farming, thus continuing the remainder of his life, dying in the sixties, and was buried in Riverside Cemetery, at Moline, Ill. His wife died previously, in 1866. Of this large family, but two sons and one daughter survived until 1912: Edward of Rock Island; Daniel D., of Milan; and Mrs. Mary Anna Hines, wife of John Hines, retired. Four brothers served in the Civil war, Edward, John, Pierce and Farrell D. Edward was in the Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; John was in the First Missouri Light Artillery; Pierce was in an Illinois regiment, while Daniel D. was a soldier in the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The early days of Daniel D. Daxon were spent on the farm, where he alternated working and attending district school. He enlisted from Bowling township, in Company I. One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, participating in the Siege of Vicksburg and other important engagements, being mustered out July 12, 1865, at Pine Bluff, Ark., and discharged at Springfield, August 1, 1865. He returned home to resume his farm work, thus continuing until 1895, when he retired and moved to Milan, which has since been his home.

Mr. Daxon was married in Freeburg, Ill., in November, 1875, to Louise (Hutchinson) La Grande, born at Old Point, Va., daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Rooney) Hutchinson, the latter of whom came to Rock Island county, and died at the home of Mr. Daxon. Mrs. Daxon died in 1885, no issue. In 1888, Mr. Daxon was married (second) in Rock Island, to Mrs. Augusta (Krueger) Oakley, born in Germany, July 9, 1838. She has one sister, Louisa, now Mrs. Hildegard Toll of Chicago. Her parents never left Germany. No issue to this marriage. She had one daughter, Phoebe, now Mrs. Frank McConnell of Bowling township who has three children: Sela, Sidney and Elizabeth. Mr. Daxon owns his home in Milan, also a large farm in Bowling township. He has always been a republican, and served on the town board of Milan for two years. He belongs to John Buford Post No. 243, G. A. R. The Methodist church holds his membership, and he gives it a loyal support.

The old veterans of our country are held in deserved honor, for they risked life and limb to save the Union at a time when such help was needed and was bravely given by the young men like Mr. Daxon and his brothers. Mr. Daxon is a good representative of the class from which those boys in blue were recruited. Having served his country honorably as a soldier, he returned and has served it equally well as a private citizen, and is now numbered among the substantial residents of Rock Island county.

DAXON, Edward (deceased).—Now that the country has passed its fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of the great Civil war, particular attention is being called to the veterans who made this country what it is. Without "the boys in the trenches" the Union would not have survived, and the flag that now so proudly waves over American soil, would have been trodden underfoot. One of those honored veterans of Rock Island county who recently entered the Army of Eternity is the late Edward P. Daxon, a retired farmer, who resided at No. 2946 Eleventh and One-half avenue, Rock Island. He was born in County Clare, Ireland, November 18, 1832, a son of William and Belle (Power) Daxon, natives of Ireland. William Daxon was a farmer who believing that his family would receive more advantages in America, came here in 1849, settling in Rock Island county, entering land from the government, to the amount of 600 acres, which he operated, continuing to farm in the county until his demise. Both he and his wife died in Rock Island county. The children now living are: Daniel D. of Milan; and Mary A. Hynes.

Edward Daxon helped his father on the farm, until his enlistment for service in the Civil War, in Company B, Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He served nearly four years, and participated in fifteen battles, the first being at Harper's Ferry, Va. He was also at Knoxville, Tenn., and with General Sherman in his remarkable campaigns in the southeastern part of the country. During the battle of Nashville, he was wounded, and was taken prisoner at Harper's Ferry, Va., but after a short time was paroled and exchanged. From being color guard, he was made first corporal and acting first sergeant. Being a responsible man, he was made ward master in the hospital during the time he was there, so that when he was mustered out at Springfield, in August, 1865, he had a record of which any soldier might well be proud. Returning to Rock Island, he resumed his farming, thus continuing until 1905, when he located in the city, buying his recent home. He sold his farm in Bowling township, and was in very comfortable circumstances. His death occurred July 12, 1912, and interment was made in Calvary cemetery.

Mr. Daxon was married at Rock Island, in April, 1872, to Delia Hynes, born in County Galway, Ireland, daughter of James and Margaret Hynes, who came to America as early as 1853. James Hynes was a farmer of Rock Island county for many years, dying within its confines. The only child of Mr. and Mrs. Daxon, Edward V., resides on a farm purchased from his father. He has two children, Mary and Margaret, who were the pride of their grandfather's heart. Mr. Daxon belonged to the church of the Sacred Heart, being a devout Catholic. In politics, he was a republican. Having always done what he verily believed to be his duty, Mr. Daxon looked back with pleasure over the years that he had passed, and ahead to the peaceful ending of a career that was always unselfish. In his death his community lost a good citizen.

DE CAIGNY, Julius, owner of the East Moline Bottling Works, one of the thriving industries of this city, is a young man whose rise in the business world has been rapid, and his success well merited. This business was established in 1909, at Sixth street and Twenty-first avenue, and all kinds of soft drinks are produced, which for quality and flavor are unsurpassed. Mr. De Caigny was born in Belgium in 1884, but came to this country May 9, 1905. He had been educated in his native land, and taught the shoemaking trade. Upon his arrival in this country, he came direct to Moline, where he found employment as a laborer. Later, he worked at his trade, all the while saving his money. In 1908, he saw an opening in East Moline, so came here to become manager of a store. For a year, he held this responsible position, and then opened his present works.

On November 11, 1909, Mr. De Caigny married Alma Loncke, also born in Belgium. They have two children, Leona and Alphonse. The family belong to St. Mary's parish of East Moline, being strong Catholics. Fraternally, Mr. De Caigny belongs to the Eagles. He always casts his vote for the man he believes best suited for the office in question, and is interested in civic improvement. His rise has been the outcome of hard work, patient endeavor, and steady saving. He has never failed to do his full duty as he saw it, and is a credit to himself, his adopted country, and the land from which he sprung.

DEERE, Charles.—The American plow and the name of Deere are synonymous in the public mind. Neither widespread commercialism inspired by the plow, nor its constant development toward perfection by other hands and minds has effaced the intimacy between the inventor and his invention. There is no such sympathy between Fulton and the steamboat, Morse and the telegraph or others among the pioneers of practical ideas. The living force of most inventors has been in the ideas they have given to the world, but the perfection of these ideas has been carried forward by others. The living force of the Deere invention is the Deere plow and the Deere industry and the faithful association of the inventor with every phase of the development of his invention. The Deere plow was the product of the genius of John Deere, the father; the Deere industry was the triumph of business acumen akin to talent of Charles Henry Deere, the son. The Deere plow and the Deere industry have ever been foremost in setting a standard for agriculture and manufacture, both in perfection of the implement and the magnitude of the industry. Seldom has history brought into such close relation such a remarkable combination of practical genius and business capacity in father and son. They were true pioneers of American products in the markets of the world and they made the name of Deere a household term in every nation of the globe.

Charles H. Deere was a typical American in a day and age conspicuous for individual achievement. The times called for men to develop the natural resources of the young undeveloped nation. Men consecrated their lives to organizing vast industrial activities. Charles Deere was representative of the highest type of these producers of the enormous wealth of the nation. His life was consecrated to exploiting the utility of that which his father had created. The plow not only became the most potent forerunner of civilization, but the originator of the commercial wealth of the nation.

As a boy, when his mind was forming, Charles Deere caught the all-absorbing enthusiasm and zeal of the father. He was John Deere's companion in driving about the country in the vicinity of Grand Detour, Illinois, to test the primitive plows the father had built for the pioneers. He held the plow and followed the furrow and caught the first and faint realization of the scope of agriculture as a national resource and of the business of farming.

Charles Deere was brought a babe in arms by his mother in 1838 from the family home in Hancock, Addison county, Vermont, where Charles was born March 28, 1837. John Deere had preceded the family by several months to the west. In the simple home at Grand Detour, now a somewhat deserted village near Dixon, Illinois, the son tasted the privations of the pioneer, lived the humble life of the settler, mingled with the Indians and was given the meager advantages of the country school. He was brought a boy of eleven, to the new home in Moline when John Deere, in 1848, was prompted to move from Grand Detour by reason of the natural advantages of coal, water power and transportation for his modest industry. His common school education was continued in Moline and he attended commercial schools at Davenport and Galesburg, finishing his education at Bell's commercial school in Chicago.

When he first became identified with the Deere Plow Works in 1853, the son was put at bookkeeping. His marked ability at mastering detail, brought him more intimately into the industry and he turned to salesman. He became proficient in every phase of plow-making and demonstrating, even as a boy in actual apprenticeship as an artisan. Driving horses was a natural talent, and he became the company's most expert representative in handling the walking plow, being especially successful in introducing it into new territory. In later years he never swerved from his devotion to his first love—the walking plow—and even to the last year of his life Mr. Deere's greatest delight was to spend often as much as a half day in the experimental field holding a walking plow to the furrow.

Building a factory in those days before the War was a slow and laborious process with no banks and no railroads. The Deere plows were left with the merchant on commission and were delivered by wagon after trips often several hundred miles long. Collections were made on subsequent trips, the dealer receiving a dollar as commission on each sale. The panic of 1857 caught the Deere industry in the midst of an outlay for additions, and the burden of the storm rested heavily on the struggling concern. Pluck and determination carried it through, and every creditor was paid in full.

At the outbreak of the Civil war the company's selling force consisted of George W. Vinton, Alvah Mansur and Charles Deere. The younger Deere's adventurous spirit prompted him to follow a regiment organized in Moline as far as Palmyra, Missouri, but his military ardor was cooled after a week spent in camp and his unsuccessful effort to be mustered in. He was one of the active young men of the town thereafter in securing and forming new regiments of volunteers for service. He was inspired by a warm patriotism and in 1898 contributed with liberal hand to the support of those left behind by the volunteers of the Spanish-American war.

Charles Deere became a partner with his father and his brother-in-law in the Deere factory in 1858. Ten years later—in 1868—the corporation of Deere and Company was formed and Charles Deere became vice-president and general manager. The practical worth of the Deere plow had been demonstrated. The manufacture of the young industry had reached an annual output of 100,000 plows. The problem before father and son was to organize to meet the great market before them. There came to the son—now a mature business man—the awakening to the responsibility before him, and thenceforth his life was consecrated to the great work given him to perform. During the eighteen years that intervened between the organization of the corporation and the death of John Deere in 1886, the individuality of the son became more and more individuality of the concern. He became president of Deere and Company and all auxiliaries at his father's death.

His work ever beckoned him on—on. He could scarcely have dreamed of the ultimate fruit of his talent, but his success lay in building his industry with such a master touch that it was ever prepared to respond to the quickening influence of a larger market. From selling directly to the dealer, a system of branch stores—which later became branch houses—grew under his direction, till at the time of his death any one of the fifteen or more at Omaha, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Winnipeg, San Francisco and other centers represented a volume of business worthy of the undivided attention of a business genius. He and his father originated the policy of making each branch house the center of diversified line of farm implements, thereby bringing the name of Deere more intimately into every phase of the business of farming. His great structure comprehended the entire field of agriculture. The Deere and Mansur Company was started in 1877 to manufacture corn planters. The John Deere Buggy Company of St. Louis, the Fort Smith Wagon Company, the Velie Saddlery Company, the Union Malleable Iron Company all became cogs in the almost perfect business machine which he constructed. Mr. Deere was a profound believer in the future of his country; he displayed rare foresight in forecasting the possibilities of its resources and he organized his industry to develop them. At the close of the nineteenth century he caught the first glow of the golden age in American manufacturing and he set about to rebuild his plow factory to meet it. At the time of his death he had only just completed the reconstruction. Death allowed him no time in which to journey along to old age in moderate retirement. His three score years and ten were meted out to him almost to a day.

There was nothing hap-hazard about the success of the Deere industry. Its implements were built for the specific work they were to perform. The temper of the iron, climatic conditions, the needs of the agriculturist were met before the implement was sent from the factory. A healthful invigorating life permeated every detail. Everything which bore the name of Deere represented real value conservatively estimated. Under the direction of such a master mind it was but natural that a distinctively Deere sentiment should sway the industry. Did Mr. Deere specialize it was in his judgment of men and his mastery of detail. He possessed an insight akin to instinct in the selection of men of large calibre as his aids in working out his great structure. They carried on down through their departments a spirit of personal responsibility and consequence and pride in doing one's best. "Deere stands by his men" came to be a sentiment that established a mutual bond of sympathy, inspiring wonderful loyalty to the name of Deere. The fundamental principle was to provide the best and the public would be quick to appreciate.

The honor due his father as inventor of the plow was respected with uncommon reverence and devotion. Every branch house but two bore the name of John Deere. The bust of John Deere was the distinguishing characteristic of the advertising of the parent plant and its immediate auxiliaries. Was he swayed by pride, it was in the name of Deere and in the father whose genius had given the name such immortal luster. Personal glory over his achievement was utterly foreign to his nature.

The scope of his life work made Mr. Deere of necessity a man of large public usefulness. It drew him into the very vortex of the industrial and political life of the nation. The individuality of his concern in large measure became the individuality of the community in which he lived. Deere and Company, the Deere and Mansur Company, and the Union Malleable Iron Company,—his trinity of industries—gave employment to 3,500 men during the latter years of his life. His capital at one time or another was invested in practically every manufactory in Moline. He recognized the strategic advantages of the locality as a manufacturing center and substantiated his faith in its future by liberal investment in every phase of the business life of the city, notably erecting many of its most substantial structures aside from its factories. He popularized Moline by the success of his own enterprises and became its leader and financial power in establishing its commercial solidity. His capital was identified with the People's Power Company, the Moline Water Power Company, and the street car lines, public utilities that have had potent influence in the growth of the community. His personal influence was conspicuous toward making Rock Island Arsenal the chief workshop of the government and toward making the Mississippi river and the Hennepin canal practical high-ways of commerce. He was the first to be sought when a new enterprise was projected, and its fate many times rested on his attitude toward it. His first question was of the men to be identified with it. Outside of Moline his investments aside from his factories were in every known avenue of public enterprise.

There is no estimating the scope of Mr. Deere's contribution to the material prosperity and progress of the world. His factories and allied industries, his distributing branches, gave employment to thousands and furnished means of livelihood to other thousands, to say nothing of the countless thousands who have profited through the utility of the Deere plow and allied implements. The volume of business of his great business structure in the year of his death is estimated to have been $25,000,000. Such usefulness to humanity is not generally dignified with the name of philanthropy, but men who have been such factors in providing the opportunity to others to help themselves must be real philanthropists in a large appreciation of the term.

His closest friends scarcely realized the extent of his national prominence and influence. A sincere republican, he was a factor in the highest councils of his party. He stood consistently for those policies which would build up the nation. He was a counsellor of statesmen, for had he not intimate knowledge of the farm and factory, the wage-earner of national resources, all of them the most serious considerations of the lawmaker? He was accorded appointments of honor as national convention delegate, national elector in the Benjamin Harrison campaigns, president of the state board of labor statistics under Governors Ogelsby and Cullom, trustee of De Kalb Normal School, commissioner to the Vienna Exposition in 1873 and to the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893 in Chicago. But only once did he take up public work for personal reasons, and that in the interest of the development of deep waterways, a cause which lay close to the heart of one with such large conception of the world's wealth. He was appointed by Governor Deneen in 1907 to be commissioner of the Illinois and Michigan canal in appreciation of his influence in promoting the question of national waterways before the congress and of drawing attention to the waterways of Illinois.

This strong, silent man, who abounded in action and in splendid achievement, was supremely indifferent to personal prominence or power. A man of the world in its largest sense, he was swayed by the simplest tastes. He found his recreation and delight in things which money cannot buy—in his home, in the woods and hills and water, in flowers, in the progress of the crops, in reverencing the memories of the sturdy pioneers, especially of the middle west. Did he have a weakness it was for fine horses. He was a plain man of the people wherever he went, democratic in nature, dignified, reserved—a gentleman of the old school, courtly, considerate, deferential, who shunned ostentation to the degree of abhorrence. His benevolences were wholly impersonal, offhand, from the pocket, his identity often being completely hidden. He was quickly responsive to children and he would strike up a sort of quiet good fellowship with them as he passed them from day to day along the street. He gave most liberally to encourage talent and ambition of children in limited circumstances, and when once his sympathies were enlisted he never forgot. He idolized his own grandchildren.

Mr. Deere was married September 16, 1862, to Mary L. Dickinson of Chicago. To them were born two children: Anna C. Deere, August 20, 1864, who became the wife of William Dwight Wiman and who died June 1, 1906, in Santa Barbara, California; Katherine M. Deere, born in October, 1866, wife of William Butterworth. Mr. Deere died October 29, 1907.

DEERE, John (deceased).—No citizen in Rock Island county, or throughout the country, was probably more widely known than John Deere, of Moline. He was born at Middlebury, Vt., February 7, 1803, and died May 17, 1886. The reading, writing and little arithmetic obtained preparatory to his entering Middlebury college, which he attended a few months, stimulated the inborn inclination for active practical work and his career began, which for unconquerable energy, determined will, and self-made success, has few equals, if any superiors. Becoming tired of the schoolroom, he hired himself to a tanner to grind bark, and the pair of shoes and suit of clothes purchased with the wages were the first information the mother had of John's doings. At the age of seventeen, he became an apprentice to Captain Benjamin Lawrence, and began learning the blacksmith trade. He faithfully worked out his engagement of four years, and was then employed in the shop of William Wells and Ira Allen, to construct iron wagons, buggies and stagecoaches. A year later, he was at Burlington, Vt., and did the entire wrought-iron work on the saw and linseed oil mill built at Colchester Falls, Vt. This indicates the mechanical ability of the young man; for it must be remembered that work which is now done by machinery, in those days must depend upon the skill and strength of the common blacksmith. In 1827 Mr. Deere went to Vergennes, Vt., and entered into partnership with John McVene, to do general blacksmithing. On January 28, 1827, he was married to Demarius Lamb, who became his faithful companion and helper for thirty-eight years. When she met Mr. Deere, she had just returned from the Emma Willard school at Troy, N. Y. Of their nine children, only one survives, she being Jeannette Deere Chapman. After the death of his first wife, John Deere married (second) her sister, Lucinda Lamb.

A change was made in 1829 to Leicester, Vt., where a shop twenty-five by thirty-five feet was built, which was destroyed six months after by fire. It was rebuilt, only to be again burned. A third one was built, in which business was carried in till 1831, when the family moved to Hancock, Vt., where Mr. Deere followed his trade, adding to his general work the business of making forks and hoes. Energy and diligence were bringing in sure but small returns, but the rumors of larger openings and richer rewards in the "Great West" induced Mr. Deere to sell out his business, leave his family at Hancock, and come to Chicago. The town was small, unpromising, and planted in a swamp. Strong inducements were urged that he should remain and shoe horses and repair coaches, but he rejected them and came to Grand de Tour, on Rock river. Here a shop was opened, and to the general work was added the building of breaking-plows. Mr. Deere soon began to see that his iron plows with wooden mold-board could not be made to do good work in the prairie soil; with difficulty they entered the ground, clogged up and failed to scour. Then began experiments and improvements which finally resulted in the present perfect steel plow. With characteristic energy and will, the battle was pushed till success came. There was a demand for a good plow, and such a plow must be made. The first one which did satisfactory work was made in this way: Wrought-iron land-slide and standard steel share and moldboard cut from a sawmill saw, and beam and handle of white oak rails. In 1838 two of these plows were made, with which the farmers were much pleased, and did unusually good work for those days. That same year John Deere built a dwelling house, eighteen by twenty-four feet, and brought his wife and five children from the east. It was not as now a few hours' ride in a moving parlor, but a weary journey of six weeks by stage, canal and lumber wagon. Settled in his little home, and often shaking with ague, work was still pushed, and in 1839, ten plows were built, the entire iron-work of a new saw and flouring mill being done, with no help except an inexperienced man as blower and striker. In 1840 a second anvil was put in the shop, and a workman employed, and forty plows made. The following year seventy-five plows were built, and trade extended many miles in all directions. In 1842 100 plows were made. The following year a partnership was formed with Major Andrews, a brick shop two stories high was built, a horse power put in to turn a grindstone, a small foundry established, and 400 plows made. Steadily and rapidly the business grew till in 1846 the product was 1,000 plows. The difficulty of obtaining steel of the proper dimensions and quality was a great obstacle. Finally Mr. Deere wrote to Nailor & Company of New York, hardware dealers, explaining the demand of the growing agricultural states of the west for a good steel plow, and stating the size, thickness and quality of the steel plates he wanted. The reply was that no such steel could be had, but they would send to England and have rollers made for the purpose. An order was sent, the steel cast in England, and shipped to Illinois. Not only was this instance of enterprise and determination shown, but the practical foresight of Mr. Deere saw that this location was not advantageous for a growing business. Coal, iron and steel must be hauled by teams from La Salle, a distance of forty miles, and plows taken long distances to market, in the same slow and expensive way. He, therefore, sold his interests to Mr. Andrews and came to Moline in 1847. Here was good waterpower, coal in abundance, within three to five miles, and cheap river navigation. A partnership was formed with Mr. R. M. Tate and John M. Gould; shops were built and work commenced, resulting the first year in seven hundred plows. About this time the first shipment of steel from England came to hand. Fifty plows were made and sent to different parts of the country where the soil was most difficult to work. They proved successful, the trade enlarged, new machinery was added, the shops enlarged, till the annual product was ten thousand plows. Mr. Deere then bought out the company. In 1858, Mr. Deere took his son, Charles H., into the business as partner, and the business was conducted under the name of Deere & Company till 1868, when it was incorporated under the general laws of the state, with John Deere as president.

This business is John Deere's monument on the business side of life. It is the result of quick foresight, practical energy, great executive ability, and an almost resistless will, which were marked characteristics of the man. It is conceded that he was the originator of the steel plow. There was then, not only no steel plows in America, but no steel manufactured to make them up. The influence of this improvement in plows cannot be easily estimated. The name of John Deere is at this time a familiar one throughout the world, and the Deere plows are now shipped to China, Japan, and in fact, all over the world. They have been awarded medals at almost numberless exhibitions, and were awarded the same way at the Vienna exposition of 1873. The principle upon which Mr. Deere conducted the business, and the principle which is still observed, was well expressed by a gentleman long acquainted with the establishment—"Bound to make this plow better than the last." In personal appearance, Mr. Deere was large, well proportioned, strongly built, and had been blessed with strength capable of almost unlimited endurance. In his better days he would stand at his anvil from five in the morning till nine at night, building plows, shoeing horses, etc. His features were strong, and of lines of great power and endurance, his face was open, frank, and his address hearty, genial, bespeaking that he was a man of a tender, social nature and noble character. His feelings were near the surface, and he was singularly sensitive to pathos, whether it be that of sorrow or joy, his sympathy quickly responded to the calls of trouble and misfortune, and he rejoiced in the prosperity of all about him. Absorbed in business, he did not have the desire nor time for office and public trusts, which at times sought his service. He was, however, always in sympathy with public interests, and gave liberally of his means to advance them. He was a republican in politics from the organization of that party. An active member of the Congregational church, he was a generous contributor to local and foreign objects of benevolence. The religious, moral and educational interests of society had in him a friend and patron. He was a large stockholder in the First National Bank of Moline, and was its second president. Once elected mayor of the city, he was also one of the directors of the free public library.

DEISENROTH, Anton, is one of those patriotic German-Americans whose love of liberty was so strong that he bravely fought for the maintenance of the government of the country he had adopted. He is an honored old veteran of the Civil War, and a substantial citizen of Rock Island, born in Germany March 21, 1839. His parents died in Germany, the father forty years ago, and the mother ten years prior to that. In 1857, Mr. Deisenroth came to the United States, landing at New Orleans, whence he came direct to Rock Island. Having been fifty-six days on the voyage, he was glad to reach his destination. He learned the barber's trade after coming to this country, prior to that having assisted his father in farming. His first location at Rock Island was on West Seventeenth street, and later he changed, but continued in this same line of work until his retirement in 1905.

On May 24, 1861, Mr. Deisenroth enlisted in Company D, Thirteenth Illinois Infantry, serving three years, and receiving his honorable discharge on June 15, 1864. During the three years he was in service he was a brave soldier and participated in several hard-fought battles. These engagements were: Chickasaw Bayou, December 27, 28 and 29, 1862; Arkansas Post, January 11, 1863; Jackson, Miss., May 14, 1863; Siege of Vicksburg, May 17, 1863; Tuscumbia, October 27, 1863; Lookout Mountain, November 24, 1863; Missionary Ridge, November 25, 1863, and Ringgold Gap, Ga., November 27, 1863. Following his discharge, at Camp Butler, Springfield, he came back to Rock Island, where he resumed his work at his trade.

On November 20, 1864, Mr. Deisenroth was married to Ursula Stroehle, born in Austria, December 28, 1845. Her father came to America in 1850, and returning to Austria two years later, brought his family back with him to this country. He located at Rock Island where he worked at his trade of stone masonry, and also played in a band, being a skilled musician. He died here October 1, 1865, but his wife died in Austria while he was absent on his first trip. Mrs. Deisenroth has two brothers: Joseph of Rock Island and George of California.

Mr. and Mrs. Deisenroth are the parents of children as follows: Leo, who is assistant clerk at the court house, was born September 12, 1869; George B., who is a barber operating his father's old shop, was born July 15, 1879; Clara M., Anna E. and Ada B., who are all at home. There are three grandchildren in the family: Myra A. Schlemmer, Harold A. Downs, and Dorothy C. Deisenroth. Since his retirement, Mr. Deisenroth has employed his leisure in interesting himself in civic affairs and looking after his property. He has always been a hard worker, and deserves the comfort he is now enjoying.

DEISENROTH, William, a retired farmer residing in Rock Island, Ill., is a representative German-American citizen and has made his own way in life from early youth. He is honored and respected as a veteran of the Civil war and has been a resident of Rock Island county for over sixty years. He was born January 8, 1832, in Fulda, Saxony, a son of William and Rena Deisenroth, both also natives of Germany. The parents were farmers and both spent their entire lives in Germany. Of their three daughters and five sons two sons now survive, William and Henry, both of Rock Island.

As a boy William Deisenroth worked on his father's farm and attended the public school, and in 1848, when about sixteen years of age, came to America, spending eight weeks on the voyage. He landed at New Orleans and came up the Mississippi river to Rock Island, finding employment on a farm near by. He was engaged in farming at the beginning of the Civil war and enlisted from Coal Valley, which was then his home, in Company H, One Hundred Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving his enlistment of three years and taking part in many important battles. Among the notable engagements in which he participated were the siege of Vicksburg and the battle of Shiloh. He was never wounded and was mustered out at Springfield in 1865. Returning to Rock Island county, he continued farming and became the owner of a valuable farm, where he was successful in his operations, and many years ago was able to retire from active life. He has since lived in the city of Rock Island, where he owns a beautiful home and other desirable property. He has lived in Rock Island the past forty years.

Mr. Deisenroth was married in Rock Island in 1871 to Miss Rena Rienhardt, who was born in Germany, and whose parents spent their entire lives there. Mrs. Deisenroth died in 1908, having been a devoted wife and mother. She left two sons, both of them residents of Rock Island, Henry and Leo, both employed by the Rock Island Plow Company. Mr. Deisenroth is a member of the German Catholic church and is affiliated with John Buford Post, No. 243, G. A. R. He resides at No. 1122 Tenth avenue.

DeJAEGER, Benjamin, who for fifteen years has been a member of the Police Department of Moline, Ill., and during the last ten years has been serving in the capacity of desk sergeant, is peculiarly fitted to serve as an official of his native city. He was born at Moline, June 25, 1871, a son of Bruno and Paulina (VerHecka) DeJaeger, natives of Belgium, where the father was born May 6, 1830. Bruno DeJaeger came to the United States in 1857, and was here married to Paulina VerHecka, who had preceded him to this country by three years. Locating in Moline, Ill., Mr. DeJaeger spent the remainder of his life in nursery gardening, and died April 27, 1893. He had five children, namely: Emma S., Francis, Benjamin, Mary Louisa and John B.

Benjamin DeJaeger attended the parochial school of St. Mary's and the common schools, passing through the ninth grade, and as a young man learned the trade of moulder. Fifteen years ago he joined the police department, and within five years had advanced to the position of desk sergeant, in which capacity he is now serving. A man of large physique and powerful build, and a good judge of human nature, he makes an ideal official, and is held in esteem by his superiors and is popular with his fellow officers. He has been prominent in fraternal circles, being a charter member of the Knights of Columbus, and holding the various offices up to the rank of Grand Knight of Leo Council, No. 716, in that order, and also belongs to the Elks, the Improved Order of Red Men and the Modern Woodmen of America. His religious connection is with St. Mary's Catholic Church.

On February 26, 1907, Mr. DeJaeger was married at Moline, in St. Mary's Catholic church, to Amanda M. Zornig, who was born in Moline, Ill., March 14, 1876. The family residence is situated at No. 1525 Seventh street, where the many warm friends and wide circle of acquaintances of the Sergeant and his wife always find a hearty welcome.

DENHARDT, Christian.—The farming element is very strong in Hampton township, Rock Island county, for this is essentially a farming locality, both soil and climate making it a good place for general agriculture. Christian Denhardt, one of the well-known citizens of Hampton township, is a skilled farmer of his locality, and was born in Prussia, Germany, January 18, 1844, a son of Andrew and Mary (Straw) Denhardt, who, in 1860, left the Fatherland on a sailing vessel, which was nine weeks on the ocean before making port at New Orleans. From that city the little group of emigrants took passage up the Mississippi River to Hampton, and in June, 1860, the Denhardts joined a brother of Christian Denhardt, who was located on Hampton Bluff. Christian Denhardt and his brother Andrew started farming on rented land and continued until March 8, 1865, when Christian enlisted for service in the Civil war in the Ninth Illinois Cavalry and was sent to Camp Butler, Chicago, went thence to Cairo, Ill., and later saw service through some sections of the South, and received his discharge at Springfield, Ill., in November, 1865, and then returned to Hampton.

John Mc Douglass and Wife

Christian Denhardt was married June 22, 1866, to Mary Lorence, who was born in Prussia, Germany, daughter of Christian and Mary (Solwig) Lorence, who came to Hampton township in 1857, by the way of New Orleans, thence to Bloomington by team, and on to Rock Island by railroad.

Christian Denhardt and his wife had the following children: Christian H., who resides on the farm with his father; Edward, living in Brighton, Col.; Henry, of East Moline, Ill.; Mary, who married Frank Deem of Henry county, Ill.; Anna, who married Christ Messer of Iowa; and Lydia, who married John St. Clair, of Colona, Henry county. The mother died January 25, 1906, in the faith of the German Lutheran church, to which Mr. Denhardt also belongs.

After his marriage, Mr. Denhardt purchased a farm of ninety-two acres, and he now owns 100 acres on section 25, and sixty acres on section 36. On first locating here, Mr. Denhardt's property was all timber land except fifteen acres that had been cleared, but he now has all of it in a high state of cultivation, and has erected handsome, substantial buildings, making his property one of the most valuable of its size in the township. He is a republican in his political views, and has served as drainage commissioner for three years.

Christian H. Denhardt, son of Christian Denhardt, was born April 17, 1867, in Hampton township, Rock Island county, Ill., and on October 29, 1890, was married to Clara Gildenpfennig, also a native of Hampton township. Her parents, Christian and Dorothea (Klebe) Gildenpfennig, natives of Prussia, Germany, came to Hampton township in 1857, and for five years rented land, after which Mr. Gildenpfennig bought a farm on the bluff at Hampton, of which he still owns ten acres. He purchased his present farm in Zuma township, a tract of 180 acres, in 1881, and here he has carried on agricultural pursuits to the present time. His wife died on this farm in October, 1882, the mother of the following children: Anna, who married Emil Schadt, deceased, of Rock Island; Emma, who married Irvil Wiley, of Hampton township; Bertha, who married William Frels, of Zuma township; Henry, residing in Hampton township; Minnie, who died at the age of eighteen months; Christian, of Hampton township; Clara, who married Christian Denhardt; August, residing on the home farm; Lena, who married Frank Wiley, of East Moline; Steward, a farmer of Rock Island county; Dorothea, who married Gustaf Miller, of Zuma township; Herminda, who married William Miller, of Nebraska; and Ida, who married William Klebe, of Waco, Neb.

After his marriage, Christian H. Denhardt took up his residence in Rock Island, where he was employed by the Rock Island Lumber Company as a wood turner, and after seven and one-half years entered the service of the W. N. Roberts Sash and Blind Company of Davenport, Ia., with which concern he was connected six months. Returning to Illinois, he was for three and one-half years employed by the Moline Furniture Works, and then sold his property in Rock Island and returned to the home farm, where for one year he was in partnership with his father, at which time his father sold his personal property, and Christian H. conducted the farm for five years and then purchased 120 acres on sections 24 and 25, Hampton township, on which he resided for two years. He then rented this land to his brother-in-law and returned to the home farm, on which he has continued to reside to the present time. Mr. and Mrs. Denhardt have had five children: Ada Anna, Leona Herminda, Verna Ida, Robert C. F., and Loyal Marvin. The family is connected with the Lutheran church, and fraternally Mr. Denhardt is a member of the Modern Woodmen Camp No. 247, of Carbon Cliff, Ill. In politics he is a republican, and in 1909 was elected for a term of three years to the office of drainage commissioner, and has since been re-elected.

DENNHARDT, Henry A.—The building trades have received added impetus of late years in this section because of the development of various outlying districts, brought about by the establishment here of numerous large factories and other industrial concerns. One of the men who has profited by this activity is Henry A. Dennhardt, plastering contractor of East Moline. He was born in Rock Island county, in 1880, a son of Christ and Mary (Lawrence) Dennhardt. Henry A. Dennhardt was educated in the public schools of Barstow, Ill., learned his trade of plastering with Frank Seve, and was engaged in every branch of his line of work. In 1910, he began contracting for plastering at East Moline, and has been more than ordinarily successful. In the busy season he employs fifteen men. At present he is the leading contractor in his line in this locality, and his field of operation is a wide one.

On July 10, 1904, Henry A. Dennhardt married Josie Wood, a daughter of Addison A. and Lucy (Brayman) Wood. Mr. Dennhardt belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. For one year he served as deputy sheriff, and was a special detective for the Rock Island Railroad for two and a half years. In religious faith he is a German Lutheran. All his life he has striven to do what he believed to be his full duty, and has been rewarded with marked success along the several lines in which he has been engaged. Conscientious, faithful, skilled, he gives satisfaction and his services are sought by those purposing building along first-class lines, and East Moline has no more reliable or public-spirited citizen.

DESAULNIERS, Charles L., a prominent business man of Moline, belongs to one of the oldest families in America, his emigrant ancestor having come from France to Canada in 1632 and secured land there from the French government. This ancestor left a family which became prominent in the locality where he had settled and took an important part in the forward movements of the day. Charles L. Desaulniers was born at Montpelier, Vt., June 1, 1861, a son of Calixte and Mary (Campbell) Desaulniers, the former born at Three Rivers, Quebec, Canada, and the latter born at Montpelier, Vt. Calixte Desaulniers lived with his parents on a farm in Quebec, Canada, until he was twenty years of age, when he went to Vermont and embarked in a tanning business at Montpelier. He was there married in 1859 and still makes that city his home, being now eighty-one years of age, his wife having died in 1895. They were parents of eight children.

At the age of sixteen years, having completed a grammar school course, Charles D. Desaulniers began learning the trade of a printer at Montpelier, Vt., in the newspaper office of the Argus and Patriot, one of the oldest journals in New England. He remained with that establishment until he came to Moline, Ill., arriving here May 30, 1883. He worked for J. H. Porter of Moline for two years, and when the firm incorporated its business Mr. Desaulniers became secretary and foreman. In March, 1896, being then superintendent, he resigned his position and sold his interest in the concern. The following month (April) he embarked in a business of his own on Library street, and from the start his progress was rapid.

In 1904 he bought the J. W. Warr Publishing Co. plant and a little later acquired the Moline Electrotyping Company, the enlarged concern then occupying the entire Schuler building on Third avenue, for a period of three years. The increased business necessitated more room, however, and Mr. Desaulniers secured a two-story building adjoining his plant which he occupied until 1908, when the concern was moved to the present commodious and convenient quarters, at the corner of Seventeenth street and Third avenue, where it occupies a three story and basement building 100 by 150 feet. The officers and directors of the company are among the most prominent business men of Moline, who have a high standing in the community. The company turns out a good class of work and maintains a high standard, which fact has become widely recognized.

On September 7, 1887, Mr. Desaulniers was united in marriage with Nelly Oakley, born at Geneseo, Ill., a daughter of Henry P. and Hanna (Carlson) Oakley, natives of Sweden. One daughter, Frances, who is at home, has been born of this marriage. Mr. Desaulniers is an active member of Christ Episcopal church and has served it as junior warden since 1893. For sixteen years he was treasurer of the church, resigning this position December 15, 1911. He is ready to promote all measures for the general welfare and in politics is a republican. Fraternally, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, North Star, and B. P. O. E. No. 556, of Moline, and socially to the Moline and Rock Island Arsenal Golf Clubs.

DE SCHINCKEL, Leo.—The firm of DeSchinckel & Hancq is well known to the building trade as manufacturers of cement blocks, sidewalks and foundations, special attention being given to concrete work. The plant is located at No. 931 Fourteenth avenue, Rock Island, and the firm has been in existence since 1910. The firm own their property, consisting of their plant and grounds comprising three lots. Here they manufacture everything used in concrete work, and they also execute concrete contracts in a highly satisfactory manner.

Leo DeSchinckel, the business manager was born in Belgium February 10, 1882. His parents are both living in their native country of Belgium. The father is a translator, and brought up his seven children to be ambitious. Four of them have come to the United States. Leo DeSchinckel arrived here in 1907, locating at once in Rock Island, and was connected with his present line of work prior to forming the partnership above referred to.

Henry Hancq, who has charge of the outside business of the firm, is also a native of Belgium, but was brought to America when a small boy. He is married, and he and his wife have three children. They reside near the concrete plant.

The development of this business is another proof of what can be accomplished through practical knowledge and natural ability. The partners both realize the importance of maintaining a high standard of efficiency, and their firm name stands for honesty and high grade work in every particular.

DeSMET, Peter (deceased).—In the death of Peter DeSmet, which occurred August 1, 1910, Illinois lost one of her representative men, and one who had been known as a sterling citizen and progressive business man. During the eight years that he had spent his energy in Rock Island, Mr. DeSmet made many friends through his honesty of character and many other admirable qualities, and his loss was keenly felt by a large number of acquaintances.

Peter DeSmet was born in Caprycke, Belgium, August 8, 1856, and did not come to the United States until 1891. He felt that there were more opportunities for him to display his business ability here, and he first settled in Moline, Ill., but soon changed his residence to Rock Island. After a short period, he entered the mercantile field, and for eight years was rated among the sound, substantial business men of the city, continuing so up to the time of his death. Mr. DeSmet is survived by four sisters and a brother in Belgium, a brother in Brooklyn, Ia., and his widow and seven children, the latter of whom are: Mrs. Edward Verbiest and Mrs. Carl Minnie, of Rock Island; Mrs. C. DeMink, of Moline; Mrs. John Welliver, of Rock Island, and David, Leo and Emil, all of Rock Island. Raymond died at the age of four weeks, in Belgium, and Augustine died in Moline when five months old. The funeral services of Mr. DeSmet were conducted by the Rev. Father Geyer at St. Mary's German Catholic church, and St. Mary's cemetery was the place of interment.

On April 10, 1879, Mr. DeSmet was united in marriage in Belgium, with Miss Mathilda Stimbacker, who survives her husband and resides at No. 2229 Fourth avenue, Rock Island. Honest in all of his business undertakings, kindly and charitable to his neighbors and always among the leaders in movements that he felt would be of benefit to his adopted city, Mr. DeSmet will long be remembered by those with whom he came into contact in any walk of life.

DEVINNEY, John.—After a man has lived in one locality for more than seventy years, his neighbors will have had a chance to form an opinion as to his character, and the high esteem in which John Devinney of Hampton township is held is evidence of his popularity. He was born in section 10, Hampton township, Rock Island county, Ill., September 13, 1837, a son of Andrew and Edwith (Wainwright) Devinney, the former born in Indiana county, Pa., and the latter in Derbyshire, England, from whence she came to Pennsylvania with her parents. Andrew and Edwith Devinney were married in Pennsylvania, and in 1833 came to the present site of the town of Hampton, entering 160 acres of land in the heavy timber, where Mr. Devinney built a log cabin and partly erected a sawmill, and was here engaged in the lumber business, supplying Moline, Rock Island and Davenport with hard wood. He died on the home place, when well advanced in years, his wife also passing away here. In addition to the Hampton township property, Andrew Devinney was the owner of 160 acres of Mississippi River bottoms land. Three children were born to him and his wife: Mary Ann, deceased, who was Mrs. Nick Wildemuth; Samuel, who died in 1906; and John.

John Devinney has always lived on the home farm with the exception of one year spent on the bottoms farm, and since his father's death he has been the owner of the old homestead. At the age of sixteen years he started to work in the Hampton grist mill and after fifteen years he became superintendent of the Hampton Coal Mining Company, having charge of the engines, hoisting machinery, etc., and continued to act in that capacity for twelve years. Since that time he has given his attention to the farm, although he has also served as agent for a harvesting machinery company. He has owned three farms in different counties in Iowa, but has disposed of all his property except eighty acres in Jasper county, Ia., and 300 acres in Hampton township, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation. In February, 1858, Mr. Devinney was married to Fannie F. Cook, who was born in Hampton township, a daughter of Horace and Harriet (Mears) Cook, the former a native of Connecticut and the latter of Vermont, who came to Hampton township at an early day and died on the farm that they had settled. Mr. and Mrs. Devinney have had the following children: Hattie, who married John Searle, born in January, 1859, and died in November, 1908; Mary, Mrs. Seager, who was born in February, 1860, died in October, 1903; Georgiana, who was born in January, 1863, died in 1873; Andrew H., who was born March 20, 1865, died in infancy; Samuel, who was born December 1, 1866, of Jasper county, Ia.; George, who was born April 12, 1870, of Hampton township; John, who was born November 21, 1872, of Hampton Ill.; Fannie A., who was born May 6, 1875, is Mrs. Theodore Hennis, of East Moline; Albert, who was born July 19, 1877, of Hampton township; and Horace A., who was born April 27, 1879, is residing at home. Mr. Devinney is independent in politics. He is a Mason of Port Byron, Ill., belonging to Philo Lodge No. 420, and the Eastern Star, of which his wife is also a member, and both are consistent attendants of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which Mr. Devinney has been a trustee.

DEXTER, Simon.—The pioneers of Rock Island were a sturdy lot who builded for the future and the result of their efforts has lived long after all that was mortal of them was consigned to the dust from whence they came. One of the families well known in county history is that bearing the name of Dexter. A prosperous representative of the Dexters is Simon Dexter of South Rock Island, now living on a portion of the family homestead. He was born at Davenport, Ia., October 5, 1869, a son of Simon and Elizabeth (Enama) Dexter, both of whom are deceased, the father dying at the age of sixty-seven years, and the mother at the age of sixty-six years. They came to America at a very early day, locating first at Davenport, Ia., where they went into a dairy business. They then came to Illinois, and for fifteen to sixteen years were engaged in farming. They then went back to Davenport, but eventually returned to Rock Island to resume their dairy business, continuing it up to their death.

Simon Dexter, Jr., was educated in the Rock Island public schools, and worked for his father until he went into business for himself, over fifteen years ago, by buying a small tract of land. He is a farmer and gardener, and in addition to the property he bought, he is living on a portion of the old homestead. He has a brother, Andrew Dexter, who is a farmer of Iowa.

Simon Dexter was married at Rock Island, May 6, 1898, to Jessie Ferguson, born December 14, 1877, a daughter of William and Julia Ferguson, natives of Ohio, where the mother was born October 26, 1853. They came to Illinois in 1861, locating in Rock Island county, where they went into the gardening business. Mr. and Mrs. Dexter are the parents of one son: Arnold L., born January 11, 1900. They are consistent members of the Christian church. In politics, Mr. Dexter is a republican but has never sought public office. He is a solid, reliable, hard-working man, whose interests are centered in his home and business, and he holds the respect of those with whom he is associated.

DHUYVETTER, August.—Agriculture has been carried to a well-defined development in Rock Island county, where the farmers intelligently take advantage of climatic conditions and excellent transportation facilities. The resultant conditions are beyond question desirable, and they place this county in foremost rank among the prosperous divisions of the mighty commonwealth of Illinois. One of the farmers who had borne his part in securing such beneficent results was August Dhuyvetter, who owned 160 acres of fine land in Rural township. He was born in Belgium, December 18, 1836, being a son of John and Amelia (Rogge) Dhuyvetter. The father came to this country in 1855, bringing his family with him, and they all came to Rock Island county, locating on rented land, but later he bought a farm of 240 acres in Rural township, on which he died in 1889. The family consisted of: Rosa, wife of August Verstret; Pelagea, wife of I. Decook; Mary, wife of John Benard; and August. All were brought up in the Catholic faith, and belong to that church.

August Dhuyvetter attended school in Belgium, and worked on a farm until he was seventeen years old, when the family exodus to America occurred. In 1871, he was married in Rock Island to Louise Erickson, born in Sweden, but brought to this country when eighteen years old. Her father died in Iowa and her mother in Illinois. After marriage Mr. Dhuyvetter lived with his father for two years, then bought his present property. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Dhuyvetter were: Mary, who died at the age of four years; August, who died at the age of twenty years; John, who is helping his father; James, who is farming in Rural township; George, who died at the age of six years; William, who died at the age of sixteen months; and Annie, who died at the age of twenty-four years. Mr. Dhuyvetter was a self-made man in every respect. He attained to material prosperity and enjoyed the full confidence of his neighbors and business associates, who knew he was a man whose word was as good as his written bond. In politics, he was a democrat. His death occurred September 17, 1913.

DIBBERN, Charles H.—The commercial importance of Rock Island county, combined with its relation with contiguous territory, gives it a supremacy in almost every line of endeavor, and places the merchants of all its communities upon a high plane. One of the leading business men of Milan, this county, is Charles H. Dibbern, hardware and implement dealer, whose residence is at Sears. He was born at Kiel, Holstein, Germany, October 15, 1840, a son of Claus H. and Christina (Paulsen) Dibbern, the former born in Germany, and the latter was born in the same place, in 1811, and died in this country, in 1848. The family came to America in June 1847, buying 160 acres on the present site of Oakdale cemetery, Davenport, Ia. There they went through all the pioneer hardships of that time, including much sickness and death. The severest blow was the death of the dear mother, which occurred in August of the year following the arrival of the little family. Following this, the father farmed for some years in Iowa, and struggled against the lowest prices for his produce, such as six to eight cents per bushel for potatoes; twenty to twenty-five cents per bushel for wheat, and other crops in proportion. In 1851, the family settled in Moline, then a straggling village, where the three boys found employment in some of the factories. The following year, Charles Dibbern worked a short time for John Deere, whom he saw personally beating out ploughshares. In 1855, a brother, Henry F. Dibbern learned the millwright trade and helped to build a saw-mill near Minneapolis, in what was then Minnesota territory. He enlisted in 1862, in the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and died of wounds, near Kenesaw Mountain, June, 16, 1864.

Charles H. Dibbern was seven years old when the family landed in Davenport, having made the trip via New Orleans, as there were no railroads west from Chicago. The times out there on the Iowa farm were fearfully hard, but he possesses a cheerful disposition, and remembers some of the good times he had in Duck Creek, where he learned to swim. While learning, he was nearly drowned, but as he escaped, considers that but a part of the game.

He entered the Moline high school in 1857, where he continued, studying in the winters and working on farms in the summers, until 1861, when in April he left school, and engaged with a farmer, near Geneseo, Ill. The latter was from Memphis, Tenn., and was a southern sympathizer, and the patriotic lad was constantly annoyed by the partisan praise of the south, and ridicule of President Lincoln and the northern cause. After working hard all day, he often walked to town after dark to secure a paper giving the latest news of the struggle in which he was so interested. At last he felt he could remain away from the front no longer, and enlisted at Rock Island, September 11, 1861. He entered Birges Sharpshooters, an independent regiment, organized by John C. Fremont at Benton Barracks, St. Louis, Mo. This regiment was soon fully equipped and some two months were spent in organizing and drilling. From there, they were sent to Centralia, in Northern Missouri, a section then boiling with treason. Bushwhacking companies were sent in all directions and did much to save Missouri to the Union. About February 1, 1862, the regiment joined General Grant's command, and participated in the campaign against Fort Donelson, being the first to enter the fort after the white flag was raised on that memorable February morning. At this time the regiment was known as the Fourteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, but later were made the Sixty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. During the battle of Shiloh, this regiment was on the extreme right, protecting it against a flank movement that might have been disastrous to our army. Mr. Dibbern was with his regiment continuously through the advance on Corinth, battle of Corinth, Atlanta Campaign and battle of Atlanta. During the winter of 1863-4, he was on recruiting service, and was successful in enlisting twelve men to fill up the depleted ranks of the regiment. During this period, he joined the Loyal Legion, and later, when it was organized, became a member of Graham Post No. 312, Grand Army of the Republic, these two being the only organizations with which he has been connected.

When he returned home from his three years of service, he felt himself handicapped by his lack of education, and so took a commercial course in the Davenport business college. This he completed in May, 1865, and then became bookkeeper for the milling firm of D. B. Sears & Sons, for which he worked for six years, removing with it to his present home at Sears. In 1868. In 1871 he started in the hardware business at Milan and carries a full line of hardware and agricultural implements. This concern has been conducted for the past twenty years under the firm style of C. H. Dibbern & Son.

Mr. Dibbern was married in Moline, Ill., on February 2, 1865, to Margaret J. Davis, born at St. Clairsville, O., February 3d, 1843, daughter of William Davis. Mr. Davis served in the Sixteenth Illinois Cavalry, and was captured. Confined in the infamous Andersonville prison, he died there, and his grave is number 4,150. Mr. and Mrs. Dibbern have one son, Henry S. Dibbern, born November 7, 1865. They adopted a daughter, Nellie, a child five years old, and reared her as their own. The son is now general manager of the firm of C. H. Dibbern & Son, and for twenty years has been a junior member of the house. His business operations have been very successful in character. The marriage of this son occurred in 1891, when he was united with Jessie Heath. They have two children: Margaret, born August 25, 1896; and Dorothy, born January 29, 1900. Nellie Dibbern married on March 26, 1903, Hiram Clevestine. They have two daughters, Elizabeth, born November 6, 1905 and Helen Alberta born June 15th, 1912. While Mr. Dibbern does not belong to any church, he has very strong religious convictions. He voted for Abraham Lincoln in 1864, and has been a republican ever since. No man stands any higher in public esteem than he, and his success has been gained through earnest and honorable endeavor.

DICKMAN, August, owner of ninety acres of fertile farm land in Drury township, stands high among his neighbors as an agriculturist for he is a man who understands his work thoroughly, and on his property, known as the Rolling Valley Farm, he carries on general farming, and raises cattle, hogs and horses. He was born in Germany, son of Charlie and Mena (Rentz) Dickman, natives of Germany, who sailed from their native land in 1862, and coming direct from New York city, where they landed, they located in Rock Island county, buying land in Drury township. There were eleven children in the family: William, and two who are deceased; Mary, Mrs. Matthew Stewart; an unnamed child, deceased; August; Christiana, Mrs. Fred Mewes of Drury township; Malinda; Mrs. Pat McKillip; John, deceased; Caroline, Mrs. William Pietsch, of Drury township, and Gusta, deceased. The father of this family died in 1896, and the mother in 1902.

While assisting his father on the farm, August Dickman attended the neighborhood school, and remained at home until he was twenty-two years old. Mr. Dickman remembers many interesting facts relative to the earlier history of the township, and has in his possession two relics of the old mill which once stood near his farm, consisting of the millstones which ground the grain he took to the mill in his boyhood. One he uses as a platform for his front gate, and the other is used for the same purpose at the back.

In 1878, Mr. Dickman married Honor Matthews, born in Cornwall, England, daughter of Edward and Honor (Edwards) Matthews, and granddaughter of Matthew Edwards, who participated in the battle of Trafalgar. The father was a farmer in England, who went to Australia to prospect for gold, and was drowned. The mother went to join her children in Australia. These children were: William, George, Lizzie and Mary Jane, all of whom probably are still living there now. Mrs. Dickman came to the United States as a young woman, and made her home among the farmers in Drury township until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Dickman have one son—Charles William, born December 26, 1883, at home with his parents. Mr. Dickman is a man of substance, and his hard work and thrifty habits in the past are being rewarded by his present prosperity.

DICKSON, William.—A number of the residents of Rock Island county have been born within its limits, and their interests are centered here, so that they take more than ordinary pride in its advancement and moral uplift. One of the men who are native sons of the county, is William Dickson, now retired, born in Milan, January 15, 1856, a son of James and Ruth Ann (Kelly) Dickson, the former born March 17, 1805, and the latter, March 28, 1814. These people came to Rock Island county about 1834, and Mr. Dickson was the first to build a dam across Rock river, he doing so to get the power for his flour mills, of which he built two. He was also in a stone business, and about 1858, bought a half section of land one mile south of Milan. In 1872, he retired from farming, moving to Milan, where he resided until his death, in 1893. The children of James and Ruth Ann Dickson were: James K. of Rock Island; Georgiana, wife of Wilson Matthews of Rock Island county; William and David, deceased.

William Dickson was educated in the public schools of Black Hawk township, attending school until he was fifteen years of age. He then went to Nebraska, but soon thereafter returned; three years later, he went to Dakota and there took up a homestead, and remained upon it until he proved it up. Again he came back to Milan, but in a short time went to Omaha, Neb., where he lived for seven years, and then moved to Salt Lake City. After a year spent there, he traveled to California, and enjoyed a pleasant visit, then returned to Omaha and from that city went to Florida, where he erected a hotel. In 1891, he again returned to Milan, which has continued to be his home. He inherited a nine-acre garden within the city limits, and built on it his comfortable residence about 1905, and still owns the old homestead.

On November 21, 1905, Mr. Dickson was married to Mrs. Edith W. (Gotohet) Brandenburg, widow of Charles H. Brandenburg, a painter, born in Muscatine, Ia. Mrs. Dickson was born in Cleveland, O., October 22, 1855, daughter of Joseph and Betsy (Barnes) Gotohet, the former born in Cambridge, England, September 12, 1827. The latter was born February 26, 1837, in the same place as her husband, and died November 5, 1910. These parents lived in Cleveland, O., for ten years prior to moving to Rock Island county, where they resided for nearly half a century. After a youth and young manhood spent in traveling, Mr. Dickson has settled down to the enjoyments of a pleasant home. He feels that his wide and varied experiences fit him for a better understanding of matters, and add greatly to his enjoyment of life.

DIEROLF, Edward, proprietor of the Edward Dierolf Ice Cream Company, and one of the substantial, progressive business men of Rock Island, has made a record for himself in furnishing his patrons with a pure product that is both wholesome and palatable. He guarantees pure ice cream made fresh each day, and also handles milk and cream at wholesale and retail. This business has been developed by Mr. Dierolf from small beginnings. When he was twenty-one years old, he commenced delivering milk with a one-horse wagon, and as the number of his patrons increased, added to his equipment until he now is a leader in his special lines.

he erected the present residence in 1903., August 16, 1873. His father, Gottlieb Dierolf, was born in Germany, in 1822, and died May 30, 1905. While a young man, he came to the United States, settling in Rock Island, and lived on the present site of Mr. Dierolf's home for fifty years. His first business connection here was with Weyerhaeuser & Denkmann, but for the last twelve years of his life he was a truck farmer. Enlisting in an Illinois regiment during the Civil war, he was sent to the front, but the struggle was over before his regiment reached the seat of war. His wife, Mary Dierolf, came from Germany to the United States in girlhood, and still survives, residing in South Rock Island. Mr. and Mrs. Gottlieb Dierolf had children as follows: William, of Colorado; and Louisa, Katy, Henry, Lizzie, Louis and Edward.

Edward Dierolf attended the excellent Rock Island public schools for six years, but as his services were required on the truck farm, he was put to work when still not much more than a child. As soon as he attained his majority, he began working for himself, as before stated, with very gratifying results. Mr. Dierolf was married in Rock Island in 1895 to Margaret Auty, daughter of Florian Auty. Mr. and Mrs. Dierolf have five children: Dorothy, Carl, Edna, Arthur and Kenneth. He belongs to no religious organization. In politics, he is very liberal, voting for principles rather than party. His success has been due to his capacity for hard work, his executive ability, and pleasant, genial manner, which last has aided him immensely in securing and retaining desirable customers.

DIEROLF, Louis.—Today it is not a question how much land a farmer owns, but how highly it is cultivated and how much does it yield that determines his prosperity. In former years when land was cheap and poorly nurtured, it was necessary for a farmer to possess many acres in order to eke out a bare existence; now, because of great knowledge, improved machinery, and excellent transportation facilities, the scientific agriculturist prefers to make a little land produce to its full capacity. A number of the farmers of South Rock Island have demonstrated the truth of the foregoing, and among them is Louis Dierolf, truck farmer, and owner of fifteen acres of as rich land as can be found in Rock Island County. He was born in Rock Island, October 26, 1870, being a son of Gottlieb and Dorothy Dierolf, a sketch of whom is given elsewhere in this work.

Louis Dierolf was educated in the excellent schools of Rock Island, his first teacher, remembered with kindly affection, was Miss Osborn. When only fifteen years old, Mr. Dierolf left school to begin the struggle of life for himself, and from then on he has devoted himself to truck farming. Thirteen years ago, he bought his present property, locating upon it, and beginning a system of improvement that still continues. His produce finds a ready market because of its exceptionable quality.

On September 25, 1895, Mr. Dierolf was married in Rock Island to Miss Eva Luckenbihl, born in the city, in 1877, a daughter of Samuel and Barbara (Ingle) Luckenbihl. Mr. and Mrs. Dierolf became the parents of the following children: Earl Lloyd, born in May, 1896; Elsie, born January 7, 1898; Louis, born October 14, 1902, and Raymond R., born January 30, 1907. Mr. Dierolf belongs to no church, and is liberal in his political views, being more concerned as to the merit of a candidate than about party lines. Fraternally, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and is interested in the work of his lodge. Always hard-working, thrifty, having a solid knowledge of his work, Mr. Dierolf has met with a success that is gratifying, and stands among the representative agriculturalist of Rock Island county.

DONAHOO, Josiah E.—The occupation of stock breeding is a profitable one if carried on in a scientific manner, and as it is so closely allied with the business of farming, the two are conducted together by many of the leading agriculturists of Rock Island county. Josiah E. Donahoo, one of the successful stockmen of Zuma township, was born July 3, 1862, in Zuma township, a son of John and Elizabeth E. (Sheppard) Donahoo, natives of Belmont county, Ohio, where the former was born May 3, 1823, and the latter September 29, 1827. Mr. Donahoo's grandparents were Justus Donahoo, who married a Miss McFadden of the same state, and Nathan and Eliza (Clark) Sheppard, also of Ohio. Mr. Sheppard brought his family to Coe township in 1852, securing a section of unimproved land, on which he died a few years later, while his widow survived him until March, 1894, and passed away in Canoe Creek township.

The parents of Mr. Donahoo were married in Belmont County, Ohio, May 18, 1844, and there John Donahoo was the proprietor of a wagon-making establishment and also assisted his father-in-law to operate a sawmill. In 1850 the family came to Illinois and secured 100 acres of timber and prairie land in Zuma township, and kept adding to it from time to time until there were 240 acres in the home farm, seventy-five acres in Zuma township and the balance in Coe township. In 1888 the parents retired from farm activities and went to Moline, where Mrs. Donahoo died March 4, 1905, after which Mr. Donahoo went to live with his son Josiah E., at whose home he died June 4, 1906. The children born to these worthy people were: William J., of California; Edward C., of Coe township; Amos W., of Moline, Ill.; Josiah E.; James A., of Moline; Mary L., Mrs. W. C. Loptien, of Moline; Amos W., of Moline, Ill.; Louella, Mrs. Charles Wake, of Moline; Josiah E.; Elma J., Mrs. Milton Coder, of Hampton; and Frances C. and Eliza J.; the last two died in infancy.

Josiah E. Donahoo received his education in the district schools of Zuma township and the public and high schools of Sterling, Ill. He has always resided on the home farm, and as a young man he rented the 240-acre tract from his father, and after the parents' death he and his brother, Amos W., purchased the property from the heirs of the estate. Mr. Donahoo is now sole owner of the land and handles two carloads of stock annually, also doing general farming to some extent in the line of raising hay and grain.

On December 28, 1887, Mr. Donahoo was married to Miss Minnie M. Reynolds, who was born in Coe township, a daughter of Joseph M. and Sarah A. (Simpson) Reynolds, the former born October 15, 1823, at West Newton, Pa., and the latter November 15, 1836, near Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland county, Pa. They were married April 5, 1860, in Pennsylvania, and soon thereafter came to Coe township, Rock Island county, Ill., where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Reynolds passing away December 23, 1894, and her husband April 11, 1896. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds had these children: a son who died in infancy; Eliza J., who married A. W. Donahoo; and Minnie M., who is the wife of Josiah E. Donahoo. Mr. and Mrs. Donahoo are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, of which he has been a trustee since 1888 and steward since 1909. Since 1904 he has served as a school director and as trustee of the Port Byron academy. In his political views he is a republican.

DONDANVILLE, Martin Sherman, M. D.—The physician of today has to be a man of education, carefully trained in his profession, and experienced in handling hospital cases. Because of the exacting requirements, his training is a long one, and he has more actual experience, before he enters upon his career, than the physicians of half a century ago gained in a lifetime of practice. One of the leading physicians of Rock Island county is Dr. Martin Sherman Dondanville, of Moline. He was born in La Salle county, Ill., in 1878, a son of Wallace and Elizabeth (Sherman) Dondanville, the former born in France in 1842, and the latter in La Salle county, Ill., in 1850. They were married in La Salle county, in 1868, and had eight children: Edward, born in 1870; Caroline, born in 1872; Mary, born in 1875, married J. H. Meyer; Martin, born in 1878; Anna, born in 1881; Leona, wife of Lester Kerns, born in 1884; Leo, born in 1890, and Lawrence, born in 1892.

Martin Sherman Dondanville was educated in several institutions, attending Niagara University, N. Y., for one year; St. Mary's College, Kans., for three years; Rush Medical College, Chicago, for three years and the University of Chicago for one year. He then spent fourteen months at St. Joseph's Hospital, Chicago. In 1905, he came to Moline and entered into a general practice. His skill and training has resulted in his building up a large private practice, and he is also examining physician for the Knights of Columbus, North Star, Royal Neighbors, the Modern Woodmen of America, belonging to all these fraternal organizations. He also belongs to the Elks, No. 556 of Moline, and the Moline Club. Professionally he is identified with the Rock Island County Medical Society, the Illinois State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and the Iowa-Illinois Central District Medical Society. He is a member of St. Mary's Catholic Church.

A scholar, Dr. Dondanville keeps abreast of modern research, and is one of the most progressive physicians of this city, where he has made his home for the past six years.

DONNEL, John W., a well known and highly esteemed resident of Rock Island living at 1107 Third Avenue, who for a number of years was foreman of the Rock Island Canning factory, was born February 4, 1837, in Chillicothe, O., a son of Jonathan and Sarah (Downes) Donnel, natives of Pennsylvania. Jonathan Donnel removed from Pennsylvania to Ohio at an early time, settling in Chillicothe, later going to the northern part of Ohio, near Bloomfield, Seneca county, where he remained until 1849. In this year, during the gold rush, he traveled overland to California, where he prospected for gold, and there met his death at the hands of another prospector. There were three sons and a daughter in this family: John W.; Mrs. Ann C. Cnberly; J. M., who is now surveying in Cripple Creek, Col., served three years in the Civil War; and I. N., who enlisted in the Seventh Kansas Volunteers and served nearly four years, and is now deceased.

As a boy Mr. Donnel learned the trade of millwright with his father, and he followed that occupation until 1861. When the Civil War broke out, he enlisted April 21, 1861, in Company D, Twelfth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, for three months, and after his service expired he went to Iowa and re-enlisted at Clinton, July 1, 1862, in Company F, Eighteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, under Captain William H. Evans. He took part in the first battle of Bull Run, Newtonia, Mo., Pea Ridge, and Fayetteville, Ark., and on January 8, 1863, he was wounded below the knee at Springfield, Mo., being discharged on account of disability, February 19 of that year. He then went to Pella, Ia., and for about five years worked on a farm, but eventually took up the trade of miller and worked as such in Iowa, Missouri and Kansas. In 1893, Mr. Donnel came to Rock Island and became foreman of the Rock Island Canning factory, a position which he held until the fall of 1912, when he retired. He is a member of John Buford Post of Rock Island Lodge No. 243, Grand Army of the Republic.

On November 26, 1864, Mr. Donnel was married near Pella, Ia., to Adelaide Adams, who was born in Ohio, September 2, 1847, daughter of farming people, both of whom died at Adell, Ia. To Mr. and Mrs. Donnel the following children have been born: Albert, who is of Spokane, Wash.; Alice who is living at Ottumwa, Ia.; Frank, who is living at home; Mrs. Eva Walker, who keeps house for her father; Maude, who is the wife of Henry Carsten, living in Sears, Ill.; Lotus, who married W. H. Starkey, of Rock Island; and Milton, who is living in Rock Island. Mr. Donnel is the owner of some valuable property in Sears, Ill. Mrs. Donnel died December 8, 1907. Mr. Donnel is a republican, his first vote having been cast for Lincoln, and he has always been actively interested in the success of his party. He held the offices of member and president of the village board of Sears.

DONOHOO, Charles E., M. D.—The medical profession of Rock Island county is represented by some of the most skilled and learned men of this calling to be found in the state. They have devoted themselves, their time, energy and lives to the preservation of public health, and the alleviation of human ills. There is no easy task, nor is it always as remunerative as it ought to be considering their high standing and undoubted great work, and yet they cheerfully accept the disadvantages, make the countless sacrifices asked of them, content in well doing. One of these representative physicians and surgeons of this section is Charles E. Donohoo of East Moline. He was born in Rock Island county, April 16, 1880, being a son of Edward O. and Elmira (Wainwright) Donohoo, both born in Rock Island county. The father was a farmer, and is still living retired at Hillsdale, Ill.

Dr. Donohoo attended the public schools of his district, and when nineteen years old began the study of medicine, entering Keokuk medical college, from which he was graduated in 1903. Immediately thereafter, he began a general practice at Hillsdale, Ill., where he remained seven years, moving to East Moline in May, 1910. Believing in the value of professional organizations, he belongs to the Rock Island Medical Society and the Illinois State Medical Society. Socially, he is a member of the Commercial Club of East Moline, and much interested in various movements for the improvement of the city. Politically, he is a republican, and in religious faith, he is a Methodist.

In 1901, he was married to Elsa Orr, born in Hillsdale, Ill., April 13, 1881, daughter of William and Frances (Hutchinson) Orr, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. Mr. Orr is a carpenter by trade. One child was born to Dr. and Mrs. Donohoo, on March 28, 1903. Dr. Donohoo's ability was recently recognized by his appointment to the office of health commissioner, and he is ably discharging the duties of his office with the same efficiency that marks his private practice. His training has been very rigid, and he is a capable man, who comprehends the gravity of his responsibilities and the power of his calling.

DOONAN, Robert R.—Farming has become one of the best paying kinds of business, and the agriculturist of today not only makes money but he is the most independent worker in the country. One of the substantial farmers of Rock Island county, who is proving the truth of the above statements, is Robert R. Doonan, owner of 120 acres of rich land in Edgington township. He was born in Ireland May 22, 1853, a son of James and Margaret (Boyle) Doonan, natives of the same county, who died there. They had nine children: John, of Oklahoma; James, of Mercer county, Ill.; Mary Jane, Mrs. Sam Wadsworth, who is deceased; Robert R.; Eliza, who is Mrs. Charles Hess of Shelby county, Ill.; Margaret, Mrs. Robert Maywood of Scotland, who is deceased; Ella, Mrs. Miller, who is of Shelby county, Ill.; Anna, who is deceased; and Sarah, who married and lives in Klondike, Ill. Robert R. Doonan was educated in the common schools of his district, and was brought up to work on the farm. In 1881 he came to the United States, landing at New York City, from whence he came to Reynolds, Ill., there joining his brother and they went to Mercer county, Ill. After two years, Robert R. Doonan worked in a mill, then locating in Bowling township, rented land for three years. He then worked for Samuel Johnston in Preemption township, Mercer county, for two years, when he came to Edgington township. He bought his present farm seventeen years ago, and has improved it very materially, becoming one of the prosperous farmers of this part of the county.

In May, 1889, Robert R. Doonan was married to Eliza Johnston, born in Mercer county, Ill., daughter of John and Jane Johnston. Mrs. Doonan died in November, 1907, having been a faithful member of the Episcopal church, and very active in its good work. Mr. Doonan belongs to the same church. They had two children born to them, namely: Ernest, July 19, 1890, and Robert Fay, June 8, 1894. In politics Mr. Doonan is a republican, but he has been so engrossed in his farming that he has had no time for public life. He is an Orangeman and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America.

DOONAN, William H., owner of 472½ acres of rich farm land which he is operating under the pleasant name of Shadeland, is one of the progressive agriculturalists of Rock Island county. He was born in Ireland, April 17, 1856, a son of Robert and Margaret (Lytle) Doonan, both born in Ireland. They were farming people who came to the United States in 1857. Landing at New York, they came direct to Rock Island county and settled in Bowling township, where they rented land for the first few years, then bought 260 acres in Preemption township, Mercer county. There the father died in 1870, aged fifty-six years. The mother afterward married Robert I. Johnston, and died in 1903 in Bowling township, Rock Island county, aged seventy-four years. Both parents of William H. Doonan were reared in the Church of England and upon coming here united with the Episcopal church. The father was a republican in politics. The children born to them were: Thomas, now of Walnut, Ia.; Robert, of Great Bend, Kas.; John, who died in Kansas; Margaret Jane, who died when fourteen years old; Mary, now Mrs. James Irwin of Oklahoma City; Sophia, Mrs. John H. Johnston, died in Oklahoma City; and William H.

William H. Doonan was little more than one year old when his parents came to the United States, and he grew to manhood in Illinois, attending school in Mercer county, and working for his father. He remembers well when he plowed with the old-fashioned shovel plow, drawn by one horse. In 1880, Mr. Doonan married Lizzie Splan, and then bought eighty acres of the Hazlett farm in Edgington township. He lived there but a year, during which time his first wife died, after which he bought his present property. In 1887, he was married to Christiana Montgomery, born in March, 1859, a daughter of William G. and Sarah (Linn) Montgomery. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Doonan are: Violet, who was born July 11, 1889, is Mrs. Lewis Modeer of this township, who has one son, William Lee, born September 11, 1909; Elmer J., who was born March 29, 1890; and Robert E., who was born January 2, 1893, both of whom live at home. The family belong to the Presbyterian church at Edgington. In politics, Mr. Doonan is a republican, and has served very acceptably as road commissioner and school director and has been active in securing educational advantages for the children of his township. He is a live, energetic man, public spirited and progressive, who, while interested in his own affairs, still finds time to do his duty as a citizen.

DORAN, John William, D. D. S.—The successful dental practitioner of today must needs have an extended medical training including a knowledge of diseases the effects of which may reach the teeth, and of the connection between the welfare of the teeth and the general system, as well as the ability to discern latent oral diseases and calculate the effects of operations. He must also be efficient in mechanical science, in the construction and manufacture of artificial substitutes for lost teeth, it being a very delicate work to give artificial teeth a perfectly natural appearance in shape and color. All this takes much observation and study, and one of Rock Island's practitioners who has become successful through his thorough knowledge of his profession is John William Doran, D. D. S., who has made this city his field of endeavor since 1906. Dr. Doran was born at Wilton, Ia., a son of Capt. Felix W. and Mary (Paterson) Doran.

Felix W. Doran was born in County Wexford, Ireland, in 1826, and came to the United States with his parents when a child, locating at Pittsburg, Pa., later coming to Muscatine, Ia. He was a tall man, with a well-knit frame, and reticent in conversation but full of knowledge and lovable in disposition. Under the worthy and efficient supervision of the Rev. Father Laurent, he opened a Catholic school on the gallery of St. Matthias church, and in the performance of his duties as an instructor soon proved himself zealous, painstaking, industrious and capable. While every pupil was treated with just consideration, there were four in his classes who were especially dear to the heart of the kind preceptor. Three of these passed away years before his death, and but one had the sad privilege of attending the last rites of his beloved schoolmaster on September 26, 1910. The others were Michael B. Lynch, who died years ago in Colorado; George N. Arnold, who died some years ago in Muscatine, and "Kitty" McCrow, whose death occurred on the Pacific Coast.

Soon after the outbreak of the Civil War, Prof. Doran, with other American citizens of Irish birth, began the formation of a distinctly Irish-American company, the members signing the roll of muster in the old Butler block on East Second street, Muscatine. They were mustered in shortly afterwards, at Camp Strong, on Muscatine Island, at about the present site of the Roach and Musser factory, and at the election of officers, F. W. Doran was unanimously chosen captain, with W. C. Kennedy and Patrick F. Anson as first and second lieutenants. The company was mustered in as Company E ("O'Connor Guards"), Thirty-fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry under the command of Col. S. G. Hill, who lost his life while leading a gallant charge at the battle of Nashville, Tenn. This regiment served in Gen. A. J. Smith's Corps, and participated in the Red River Expedition under Banks; took part in the Siege of Vicksburg under Grant; fought bravely at Tupelo; chased Sterling Price in and out of Missouri; won laurels at Spanish Fort, near Mobile, Ala., and was famed throughout the war as one of the bravest, hardest-fighting regiments in the Union army. Captain Doran throughout his service proved himself as efficient as a soldier in times of war as he had been as an educator during times of peace, and he was beloved by his men and esteemed by his superior officers. In 1871 he was married to Miss Mary Paterson, and to this union there were born the following children: Edward, who is deceased; Dr. John W.; Mrs. Henry Angerer, who is a resident of Wilton, Ia.; Felix; James; George, Anna and Mayme, who are residing at home; and Grattan, who lives at Sterling, Ill.

John William Doran received his educational training at Norton academy, after which he spent one year at the Iowa state university. In 1902 he was graduated from the Chicago Dental College, and during the same year entered upon the practice of his profession at Wilton, Ia., remaining there until 1906, when he came to Rock Island. He has built up a large and lucrative practice and has well appointed offices conveniently situated at No. 1716½ Second avenue. Dr. Doran is a member of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church, and he is connected with the Knights of Columbus. He is independent in his political views.

DORST, GUST GEORGE.—The effort required to successfully operate a modern Illinois farm is not appreciated by those outside an agricultural district. Constant endeavor, combined with intelligent management and strict economy, are forces that are constantly called upon. That there are many who appreciate this, the excellent condition of the farms throughout Rock Island county demonstrates, and one who has been particularly prosperous is Gust George Dorst, of Cordova township, proprietor of Cedar Grove Farm. Mr. Dorst was born in the village of Cordova, January 29, 1867, being a son of Conrad and Sarah (Pike) Dorst, natives of Germany and Liverpool, England, respectively. The father came to the United States in 1853, and in 1857, he came to the village of Cordova, where he worked as a shoemaker for nine years. He then bought land in the township of that name, operating it until his death, in 1904. His wife passed away in 1892, and both are buried at Cordova. The father enlisted in Company A, Fourteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, for service during the Civil war, and served for three years. Two children were born to these parents: Gust George, and Amelia, who is living with her brother.

Gust George Dorst was reared on the homestead, attending the district schools, and when his father died, he took charge of the property of eighty acres in Cordova township, and his wife owns the adjoining forty acres. Since then he has made many improvements on the land and developed it into a fine farm, on which he raises rye, corn and stock, specializing on Jersey Red hogs.

On January 29, 1896, Mr. Dorst was married to Julia R. Guinn, born in Coe township. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Dorst: Harry who died at the age of nine months; Myrtle who died at the age of two and one-half years; George who died at the age of three years, and Olive Amelia. In political faith, Mr. Dorst is a republican, and he has served capably as collector for four years. Fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen of America of Cordova. The family belong to the Baptist church, and are active in its good work. Mr. Dorst possesses many of the excellent characteristics of his German ancestors, combined with others distinctive of this country, and they have all been utilized in his development, and been devoted to the betterment of his community.

DOUGHERTY, Thomas H.—Truck farming has been so developed that it is a line of agriculture that is paying large returns upon the investment of time and money. A number of the practical men of South Rock Island are recognizing this fact and acting upon it, so that those engaged in this line are among the substantial residents of the county. One of those who are becoming wealthy as the owner of a truck farm is Thomas H. Dougherty, born on Ninth street and Fourth avenue, Rock Island, December 20, 1850, a son of Thomas Dougherty, born in County Donegal, Ireland, in 1812. The latter came to the United States in young manhood, and learned the carpenter trade in St. Louis. He helped to build the Planter's Hotel, being foreman of construction on that edifice. There he married Martha Gallagher of his native place and in 1850, they moved to Rock Island, and Mr. Dougherty embarked in a grocery business with his brother-in-law, John Gallagher. Later he sold his interest, and began farming on the place now owned by his son, and here he died in 1887, aged eighty-two years. His wife came to the United States, locating in St. Louis, and died when eighty-two years old, in South Rock Island. Thomas H., and his sister Mary J., who lives with him, were the only children in the family.

The first school Thomas H. Dougherty attended was taught by a man who boarded with his parents, and the last one was taught by Henry Upton, a brother of General Upton. When he was eighteen, Mr. Dougherty left school, and in 1877, he went to Montana to be with his uncle on a ranch. For the next sixteen years, he remained in the West, being in Montana, Idaho and other states, then returned to South Rock Island where he has thirty-six acres of well cultivated land. The house was built in 1856 and Thomas Dougherty laid the foundation. Mr. Dougherty is not married. Once he was a republican, but later became a political supporter of Hon. William J. Bryan. He is a good farmer and conscientious citizen, one who believes in securing good government, and in giving everyone a fair chance. He and his sister are very highly esteemed in their neighborhood.

DOWNEY, Wilson Porter, owner of 211 acres of rich farming land which he operates according to strictly scientific methods, reaping thereby a very substantial profit, has appropriately named his property the Pearl Valley Stock Farm. This is the largest stock farm in the township, and Mr. Downey handles more stock than any other man in the county. He was born in Mercer County, Ill., a son of Andrew and Elizabeth (Wilson) Downey. The parents were born in Ireland, but came to this country when young, locating in Millersburg, Ill., where they farmed and raised stock until the father died. They were the parents of eleven children, four of whom survive.

Growing up as he did amid rural surroundings, Wilson Porter Downey learned farming while attending school. When he attained his majority, he left the homestead and going to Nebraska followed agricultural pursuits there for a period of eleven years. He then came back to Mercer County, where he continued to farm, branching out into buying cattle. In 1905, he purchased his present magnificent property, and carries on an immense stock business. Mr. Downey buys cattle throughout both Illinois and Iowa, shipping to Chicago, and carries on hand an average of 200 hogs, in addition to his other stock. As he buys so heavily, and at any time, the farmers are glad to deal with him, as they are often able to tide over a temporary financial strain through his assistance, while his honorable methods commend him to all.

In 1904, Mr. Downey was united in marriage with Caroline Kranz, born in Rock Island County. They have three children: Nola, Helen and Wilson P. Politically he is a Democrat, but hitherto his business cares have prevented him from taking an active part in public matters. An excellent business man, upright and honorable, Mr. Downey stands very high in his community, and justly considered as being one of the best types of the progressive agriculturists of Rock Island County.

DRALLE, Gust (deceased).—The remarkable development of East Moline has resulted in the location there of some of the most energetic business men in every line of endeavor, for they appreciate the opportunities awaiting those first on the ground. One of the men who did a fine business as a general contractor and builder was Gust Dralle. He was born at Geneseo, Ill., in 1882, a son of Carl and Dora (Schmoll) Dralle, the former born at Hamlin, Germany, and the latter at Helsen, Germany. The parents came to this country in 1879, locating at Geneseo, Ill., where they found a home and plenty of work. The father was a cabinetmaker, but after several years, branched out into a contracting and building business, and is still engaged in that line. Their children were as follows: Gust, Herman and Carl, who are in a contracting business; and Anna, who is the wife of Matthew Rink, a farmer of Henry county, Ill. Gust Dralle was reared at Geneseo, where he attended the German and public schools, perfecting himself in German. After leaving school, he worked for his father as a carpenter until 1904, when he came to East Moline and became an assistant to his brother Carl. The two formed a partnership, which lasted two years, when Gust Dralle bought out his brother. He built many of the finest residences in East Moline, as well as some of the substantial business blocks, having located at East Moline before it had entered upon its present era of prosperity, for he had faith in its future, and his predictions regarding its advancement have come true. In politics, he was independent. He had been assistant chief of the fire department, and he was a member of the Commercial Club from its organization. Enterprising and thoroughly modern in his work and ideas, Mr. Dralle belonged to that class of young men who form the real bulwark of true Americanism. His untimely death July 24, 1912, was a distinct loss to his community and his memory is cherished by those who knew and appreciated him.

DRURY, Judge John W. (deceased).—A list of the early citizens of Rock Island would be decidedly incomplete did it not contain the name of Judge John W. Drury, who as early as 1856 was judge of the circuit court and presided over an extensive district. In later years he became widely known as a legist, and with the rising property values of a growing community accumulated a large fortune in realty. Judge Drury was born at Rhinebeck, N. Y., in 1813, and was a member of a large family of children, all of whom he survived. After attaining a legal education in his native East, in 1836 Judge Drury took passage on a vessel at Pittsburgh, and came down the Ohio and up the Mississippi river. On the trip West he met and became acquainted with General Harding, and both left the boat at Oquawka and traveled across the country to Monmouth, where General Harding located, becoming in time a wealthy and influential citizen. Judge Drury continued to Rock Island and here put out his shingle and solicited the legal business of the early residents. At that time the old town of Stephenson, as Rock Island was then known, was an exceedingly quiet point, the only excitement being occasioned by the arrival of a tramp boat, which would give the people a topic to discuss. Black Hawk and his braves had left the locality, crossing over into the territory of Iowa, and were never to return as occupants of Illinois soil. It was not the young lawyer's idea, however, to live as a drone. Soon after coming he showed his progressive spirit by commencing to speculate in real estate upon a small scale, for while his confidence in the community was marked, his capital was somewhat limited. His first investment was in a lot in the Chicago, or Lower, Addition to Rock Island, for which he paid five dollars, and after holding it for some time he disposed of it for double its cost. Thus early he made a profit on his transaction, and it was said of him in after life that he invariably made a gain on his real estate dealings. Later, he had an eighty-acre tract about a mile from the river, on the bluff, near what is now the site of Eighteenth avenue, in disposing of which he gave an excellent illustration of the methods which were to later make him one of the largest realty holders of his day. A citizen called upon him at his office and inquired the price of the land. "Eight dollars an acre," was Mr. Drury's reply. The caller declared that the price was exorbitant and left, but returned on the following day and again asked the price. "Ten dollars today, for each acre," said Mr. Drury, and the deal was closed that way. This same land has been selling readily of late years for $1,000 an acre, which gives an excellent idea as to the increase in values in this section during the past half a century. At one time Judge Drury was the owner of the ten acres known as the Rodman property, lying east of Doctor Gregg's Addition, which he had purchased for $400. About a quarter of a century ago, including improvements, the property sold for $22,000, and the land is now covered with beautiful homes.

About the year 1856, John W. Drury was elected judge of the circuit court, and presided over a large district of several counties. His tastes were rural, and while administering justice in his courts he was also engaged in operating a 400-acre farm lying on Rock river, above

Milan. At the close of his judicial term he formed a law partnership with John P. Cook, of Davenport, which continued for some years. He was engaged in a great deal of important litigation, being attorney of the southwestern branch of the Rock Island railroad system for some years, a position to which he was appointed by President Tracy. This branch ran to Kansas City, and Judge Drury's connection therewith caused him to move to Chicago, that city being his home until the time of his retirement, in 1894, when he returned to his farm on the Rock river. After the death of his devoted wife he went back to the home of his youth, in Rhinebeck, N. Y., and was there tenderly cared for during his declining years by his nieces, his death occurring in 1899, when he was eighty-six years of age. He was one of the very few of his contemporary lawyers of Rock Island county who accumulated a large fortune. His estate was administered by Maj. Henry C. Connelly, and his means were distributed among his nieces and nephews, of Rhinebeck and New York City.

Judge Drury was a personal friend of Senator Stephen A. Douglas, and at his request accepted the office of state elector in 1856, making speeches throughout Illinois. In all the senator's aspirations Judge Drury proved a firm and faithful friend, and was especially active in the Charleston convention of 1860, to which he was a delegate. A man of the utmost integrity and probity of character, he was esteemed by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, and the news of his death came as a distinct shock to those who had lived and labored with him for so many years.

DUNBAR, Alonzo (deceased).—The agricultural interests of Rock Island county are in the hands of skilled farmers, the majority of whom have made the cultivation of the soil their life work. Born on farms and taught from childhood the work of a farmer, they are ably fitted to carry on their operations and get the best possible results from their labors. The late Alonzo Dunbar, a well-known Rock Island county agriculturist, carrying on operations in Zuma township, was one of this class, born May 27, 1850, in Trumbull county, Ohio, a son of Alexander and Elizabeth (Miller) Dunbar, natives of Trumbull and Mahoning counties, Ohio, respectively. They came to Illinois in 1854, settling on rented land in Zuma township for two years, at the end of which time Alexander Dunbar purchased twenty-four acres of land southeast of Joslin. After improving this tract he sold it and purchased eighty acres adjoining, where he died in the spring of 1909. His widow, who is now eighty-two years of age, lives with a daughter, Mrs. Marion Walker, of Zuma township.

Alonzo Dunbar was the eldest of a family of thirteen children, and he remained on the home farm until he was twenty-one years of age, at which time he started working out among the farmers. He was married February 27, 1873, by Rev. Garrotsen, to Miss Bessie E. Whiteside. She was born in Zuma township, October 9, 1853, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Robinson) Whiteside, natives of England. After his marriage Mr. Dunbar rented land for two or three years, and then purchased 120 acres, since which time he has added forty acres to it, later adding ten acres, and in 1904 he purchased 276 acres in Zuma township, one and one-half miles southwest of the home farm, and here he has carried on general farming and stock raising. He is known as a skilled farmer and good neighbor and is a public-spirited citizen. He is a Republican in his political belief, and he has served as school director for six years, road commissioner for a like period, has been township assessor two terms and tax collector one term. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren church of Joslin. They have had the following children: Eugene, of Zuma township; Elizabeth, who married Elmer Young of Port Byron, Ill.; Marcia, who is deceased; Clara, Raymond and Lucy, at home; Nellie, who married John D. Allen of Coe Township; and Charles and Sarah, residing at home. Mr. Dunbar died August 1, 1912, and is buried in the Meade Cemetery in Zuma township.

MRS. LIZZIE REED

DUNLAP, Benjamin C.—The number of men in South Rock Island who are taking advantage of the opportunities there offered for gardening, is increasing, and the agricultural standard of Rock Island county is therefore being constantly raised. One of the representative men of this class is Benjamin C. Dunlap, born in Rock Island, October 29, 1858, a son of Adolphus and Elizabeth (Carr) Dunlap. The father was born at Steubenville, O., and the mother at Marietta in the same state. By trade, the father was a gunsmith, but later took up farming. He came to Illinois in 1835, locating in Edgington township, this county, but after several years, came to Rock Island. Still later, he bought land in South Rock Island, and there he died in 1889, his widow surviving him until 1904. The children born to these parents were: Sophia M. Forgey, of Kansas; Joseph, at Edgington; Peter C. of Woodston, Kas.; Sarah, on the old homestead; Elizabeth, wife of Cornelius Graham of South Rock Island; Rebecca, wife of John Graham of South Rock Island, deceased; Mary Schroeder, deceased; Adolphus, a farmer of Edgington township; and Benjamin C.

Benjamin C. Dunlap was educated in the public schools of Rock Island, and when twenty years old, he began working for his father on the farm. In addition to farming, he learned the carpenter trade, and worked at it for four years, then embarking in a dairy business. After six years endeavor along this line, he began contracting and building, but after ten years, he began gardeuing, and since 1901 has devoted all his energies to this work, owning sixteen acres of the old homestead.

On February 4, 1885, Mr. Dunlap was married to Miss Matilda Foster of Mercer county, Ill., daughter of Robert and Bessie Foster, natives of Ireland, who came here about 1855, locating in Mercer county on a farm. They took up land from the government amounting to 120 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Dunlap became the parents of three children: Walter, Grace May, and Raymond, all at home. Miss Grace May is employed at the Modern Woodman of America building in the mailing department. In politics, Mr. Dunlap is a republican. Always hard-working, he has never shirked whatever he believed to be his duty, and is a good citizen and public-spirited man.

DUNN, Charles O'Malley (deceased).—All of the heroes of the Civil War did not die upon the battlefield, or in Southern prisons, but lived to pass away later on after having distinguished themselves as private citizens, or worked out a quiet destiny. Many found it difficult to resume the duties of everyday life after the excitement of battle and the strain of long marches, but those who succeeded in after life deserve all the more credit for their efforts in that they were hard to accomplish. One of the veterans of the Civil War, now deceased, was the late Charles O'Malley Dunn, formerly an expert stone cutter and highly respected citizen of Rock Island. He was born in Queen's County, Ireland, in 1840, and died in his home at Rock Island, No. 2705 Five and One-half avenue. He was a son of Owen and Catherine Dunn, who died in Ireland, having been farming people all their lives. Their children were: Margaret of New York City, married a Mr. Mooney, who was killed in the riots in that city during the Civil War; John located in New York state upon coming to America; James also located in New York state; Mrs. Peel located in the same state; and Charles.

Charles O'Malley Dunn lost his mother when he was a small boy, and was reared by his sister Margaret, who assumed charge of the family affairs. He received the usual education given Irish boys of that day, and made the most of his opportunities. His sister Margaret went to New York where she was married, later sending for Charles to join her and husband. While living with them, he learned the trade of stone cutting with his brother-in-law, but later came to Illinois, where he obtained work on the state penitentiary at Joliet. Still later, he went south, working in different states at his trade, but on account of pending war, he returned first to New York City, and then to Joliet, from whence he enlisted in 1862, as a musician in the Ninetieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, First Brigade, serving until the close of the war. Being mustered out, he once more returned to Joliet.

On November 23, 1865, the young hero was married to Catherine McCowliff, and for two years they lived at Joliet, but in 1867, came to Rock Island. Here Mr. Dunn secured employment on the arsenal buildings, and remained in the service of the government until September, 1890, when he died. He was a consistent member of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church. For years he belonged to the Stone Cutters' Union. In politics, he was a republican. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Dunn were, James, who is chief clerk of the United States engineer's office at Rock Island, married Pauline Owens, two children, Francis and Virginia; William, who is connected with the Moran Electric Company of Rock Island, resides at home; and Catherine, who married Clyde Brewin. All his life, Mr. Dunn was a man who did his full duty, and when he was called away by death, he left a competency behind upon which his widow lives comfortably. Honest, faithful, painstaking, a good workman and loyal citizen, Mr. Dunn rounded out his days, and made the world better for his having lived in it.

DUMBECK, Victor H.—Coincident with the development of any community, is the settlement in it of men whose instinct and foresight lead them to select it as a place of residence and scene of business operations. To such men is due much of the resultant prosperity, for it is their money and energy that make possible advancement. When Silvas, Ill., was opened, Victor H. Dumbeck came to it, and since then has devoted himself towards establishing its prestige as a flourishing settlement. He has been and is now postmaster, and was the leading druggist of the place until two years ago, when he sold the drug store to give his full time to the postoffice. Mr. Dumbeck was born September 29, 1856, in Marion county, Mo., a son of Godmar D. and Mary (Dresher) Dumbeck, natives of France and Missouri, respectively. The paternal grandfather was exiled on account of political disturbances, and came to America. Victor H. Dumbeck attended primary schools in Davenport and Rock Island, and then spent two years in Europe. He then began working as a clerk with Charles A. Benser, druggist, of Rock Island, but in 1873 went to Ottawa, Ill., and in 1877 to Peoria, where he established himself as a druggist, thus continuing for eight and one-half years. Selling, he went to Chicago, where he was in business for twenty years. Leaving that city, he came to East Moline, and then when Silvas was opened up in October, 1904, he came here, was made postmaster, and soon was recognized as one of the leading men of the town. He bought property, established his drug store, and has backed every measure of public interest that he felt would be of general benefit.

In 1883, Mr. Dumbeck was made a Mason at Peoria, and is now connected with Temple Lodge No. 46. For several years he was judge of election of Hampton township, and is one of the leading business men of this locality. He is a sound, reliable, substantial man, whose probity and public-spirit have won him general confidence and esteem.

DUSENBERY, John H.—The pioneers of Rock Island county came here with the express purpose of founding homes, and not in search of great wealth or for political advancement. For this reason so many of their descendants are to be found here. The early settlers, with a farseeing realization of future values, entered large tracts from the government, and then improved the land, so that when their children and children's children came after them, they had valuable farms to operate. One of the families connected with this early history of the county is that bearing the name of Dusenbery, of which John H. Dusenbery is a worthy member. The latter was born near Illinois City, August 18, 1873, a son of James and Amanda (Morrow) Dusenbery. James Dusenbery was born in Illinois in 1841, and died in 1904, while his wife died in 1883. Their children were: William and James, who are of Illinois City; Emma, who married Charles Ferdman; Isabella, who married Edward Huber, lives at Illinois City; Maggie; May, who married William Scedawe, lives at Illinois City, and John H. The grandparents came from some one of the eastern states, being among the early settlers of the county. The grandfather took up land in Buffalo Prairie township, and lived on it until his death, twenty years ago. During the Civil War, James Dusenbery enlisted in Company A, Ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, at Davenport, Ia., and served for three years, receiving his discharge at Springfield, Ill. After returning home he took up farming in Drury township.

John H. Dusenbery was educated in the public schools of the county, and worked for his father until seventeen years old. He then worked for various parties for about sixteen years. Following this he rented the Erickson place, comprising eighty acres, and owns twenty acres in Buffalo Prairie township, which is a portion of the land entered from the government by his paternal grandfather so many years ago. John H. Dusenbery was married February 26, 1901, to Bessie Stanley, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Morrow) Stanley, natives of Illinois, born in 1853 and 1855, respectively, who live at Reynolds, the father being a blacksmith. The children of the Stanley family are: Clifton, of Rock Island; Florence, at home; William, of Reynolds, and Mrs. Dusenbery. Mr. and Dusenbery have had children as follows: Ralph, born in 1903; Harold, born in 1907; Lois, born in 1909, and an infant. Although not a member of any religious denomination, John H. Dusenbery was reared in the Methodist faith. Politically, he is a republican. He is an honorable, hard-working man, a good citizen, and one who is devoted to his home and family.

ECKER, Peter (deceased).—After a man has passed from this sphere of activity his real character comes to light, and his deeds good or bad are revealed. No man can die and leave behind him, as did the late Peter Ecker, a reputation for sterling honesty, uprightness of purpose and kindness of nature, without having during life possessed these qualities in marked degree. During a long and useful life in Rock Island he did his duty as a man and citizen and is tenderly remembered by those fortunate enough to have known him. He was born in Prussia, Germany, September 13, 1825, being a son of John M. and Margaret Ecker. The father was a farmer who lived out his life in Germany, as did his wife, and they had children as follows: Simon, Matilda, Gertrude and Peter, all deceased.

Peter Ecker attended school until he was fourteen years of age, and then began learning the carpenter trade. This he followed in various parts of his country until he decided to leave for America, and sailed for it in 1848, via Rotterdam, with New York City his destination. During the long voyage, he and a young lady by the name of Miss Minnie Ritter became convinced that life apart would not be endurable, and they were married after landing in New York City, August 9, 1849. Mrs. Ecker celebrated her twentieth birthday on the voyage. They remained in New York City until 1856, when removal was made to Rock Island, where they speedily became substantial residents. Mr. Ecker followed his trade until his death January 29, 1890, at the family home, No. 1713 Fourth avenue.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Ecker were: Mrs. Caroline Beck, who is deceased; Emma, who is the wife of Emil Beck of Rock Island, bore him four children, Clara, Alfred P., Millie and William Beck; William, who married Rosa Wright, and died in Rock Island; Philippine (deceased), who became the wife of Charles Kray, and bore him three children, Minnie (Mrs. T. M. DeKay), Hattie and Florence; Mrs. W. H. Littig; and Henry, who married Susan Clench, was drowned in the Missouri river, July 24, 1909, leaving two children, Nancy and Dorothy.

Mrs. Ecker was born in Hessen-Darmstadt, Germany, September 23, 1828, and was given a liberal education. She is a daughter of Christian and Gottlieb (Roemer) Ritter. He brought his family to America in 1847, settling in New York City, where he died, being buried in Greenwood cemetery. He was the father of four children: Catherine (Mrs. Chas. Pfoh), Frederick, Mrs. Ecker and Charles. Mrs. Ecker is a woman of remarkable vitality and energy, who although eighty-four years old, carries on her domestic duties as skilfully and rapidly as one of her own daughters. She possesses a remarkable memory, and her mind is stored with interesting and valuable recollections of the past, so that her fund of information regarding the early days of Rock Island is remarkable. She was a devoted wife and mother and brought up a family that does her honor.

ECKHARDT, P., M. D.—Medical science is today making almost hourly advancement, and some of the mightiest minds of the profession are engaged in specializing operations and observations for not only the cure, but also the prevention of disease. Tireless in their theoretic experiments, these great men of science have unclosed marvelous remedies which are being announced to the waiting world. All of this, while it benefits mankind, renders the training for a physician still more strenuous, so that those engaged in the practice of this profession have to be men of more than ordinary intelligence. One of those who through years of faithful service has built up a large practice and endeared himself to countless patients is Dr. Peter Eckhardt of Taylor Ridge. He was born on a farm in Buffalo Prairie township, July 4, 1859, a son of Ferdinand and Barbara (Rebold) Eckhardt. The father was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, in 1825, and was a government forester and game warden, noted for being an expert shot. He came with his wife and one daughter to the United States in 1852. They landed at New York city, from whence they went to Cincinnati, O., and then came to Rock Island county. For some time the father worked in Buffalo Prairie township, later renting a farm in Mercer county, Ill. He finally bought a farm in Henry county, but when he sold it, he moved back to Buffalo Prairie township, and bought the Streckfus farm of 190 acres on which he formerly labored. There he died in 1902. During life he was a Lutheran. A republican, he was called upon to hold office upon numerous occasions. He and his wife had the following children: Lizzie, who is Mrs. Robert Crampton of Bowling township; William, who is a resident of Milan; Casper, who is a resident of Buffalo Prairie township, married Sarah Fuhr; George, who is a resident of Chicago, married Louise Hoffman; Dr. Eckhardt; John, who is on the home farm, married Edna Kodel; Anna, who was Mrs. Michael Garber, is deceased; Gertrude, who is Mrs. William Elliott, of Buffalo Prairie township; and Bertha, who is Mrs. Louis Saulpaugh of Moline.

Dr. Eckhardt attended the district schools until he was fourteen years old, and took one term at the German Lutheran Church school. He worked on the farm for his father, and thus continued until he rented a farm and operated it, carefully saving his money so he could carry out his ambition to become a physician, and for two and a half years attended the Geneseo Normal school. In 1890, he and his brother John bought the home farm, Dr. Eckhardt paying $300 and his brother $40, all the money they had. They operated the farm together until 1892, when Dr. Eckhardt began his medical studies, by entering Rush Medical College, graduating therefrom in 1896, after a four-years' course, and commenced practicing at Taylor Ridge in December of that same year. He belongs to the Rock Island County Medical Society and the Illinois State Medical Society. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Court or Honor.

On August 22, 1892, Dr. Eckhardt married Mary Saulpaugh, of Black Hawk township, a daughter of the late Lewis Salpaugh who was a railroad contractor. Dr. and Mrs. Eckhardt have had three children: Morris D.; Arthur E. and Roger S. Dr. Eckhardt is widely known throughout the county and is recognized as a conscientious, able and sympathetic physician, whose kindly heart responds to many calls for which he knows he will receive no remuneration. Socially, he and his wife stand very high, and they have many warm, personal friends wherever known.

ED, Gust, who is a prosperous contractor and builder at Moline, Ill., has been a resident of the United States for forty years but his birth took place in another land, one that has contributed largely to the best citizenship of this one. He was born in Kronoberg's Lane, Sweden, December 1, 1850, and is a son of Gustave and Ellen (Ney) Ed. The parents of Mr. Ed. as well as their parents, were born in Sweden. The father, Gustave Ed. owned a farm on which members of his family still live. He was a soldier in Sweden's army until he was retired, with a pension. He married Ellen Ney and ten children were born to them, eight sons and two daughters, all of whom reached maturity and six of the sons and one of the daughters came to America. Magnus, the oldest child, came to America in 1890 and while working at his trade of stone mason, made his home with his brother Gust for three years and then returned to his family in Sweden. The next son, Nels Ed, came to America in the spring of 1870 and located at Moline and was employed in the Deere plow factory. He died in 1880. Christine, who is now Mrs. Johnson, came to America in 1880 and lives in Moline. Gust Ed was the sixth born in the family and he came to this country in 1872. Andrew Ed, came to America in September, 1877, and until 1881 worked in different industries at Moline and then moved to Winona, Minn., where he still resides. John E. Ed, the ninth child, came to the United States and located at Moline in May, 1889, a plasterer by trade and he worked for his brother Gust until his death, December, 3, 1904. Otto E., the youngest of the family, came to America in April, 1893. He was a stone mason by trade and worked for his brother Gust until 1909, when he began a contracting business of his own at Moline.

Gust Ed remained at home on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years of age, when he put into execution plans he had long been considering, that of coming to America in which country he believed industrial opportunities might be better than in his own congested land. He safely reached Moline and immediately entered the band of laborers that earned their living by mixing mortar and carrying the hod, in the meanwhile coming to a decision as to what line of work he would take up as a permanency. During the winter seasons, as a reliable and industrious young man, he easily found work in the plow factory and in the summer time he learned practically the trades of bricklayer, plasterer and stone mason and so thoroughly, that in 1880, he was ready to embark in contracting and building. At first, he did not attempt any large buildings but those he completed were substantial and satisfactory to their owners and by 1884, he began taking contracts for the erection of the vehicle and plow factory buildings and built the entire plant of the Deere and Manseur Implement Company, with the exception of one building. Mr. Ed also built the main building for the Velle Carriage Factory at Moline. The concrete people are greatly indebted to him, for he was the first contractor here to do concrete work, about 1905 beginning reinforced concrete building. In 1907 he put up a reinforced concrete factory building at Davenport, which was the first exclusively concrete building ever erected there. He has been unusually successful in his undertakings and has proven himself a shrewd and far seeing business man, and one who, by thorough knowledge and honest treatment of patrons, has won the confidence and support of his fellow citizens. Since its organization, he has been a director and a stockholder in the Moline Furniture Works.

Mr. Ed was married in August, 1873, to Miss Helen C. Anderson, who was born in his native place in Sweden, December 8, 1850, a daughter of Andrew and Johanna (Anderson) Anderson. Mrs. Ed came alone to America, arriving July 5, 1873, in Moline. To Mr. and Mrs. Ed the following children were born: one that died in infancy; Gustave A., born June 8, 1875, died July 26, 1909; Jennie A. born March 8, 1877; Ida C., born December 18, 1878; Ernest R., born January 20, 1881, resides on 12th Avenue, Moline; Joseph E., born August 9, 1883, resides on 16th Avenue, Moline; Hulda M., born May 22, 1885, died January 1, 1904; Esther E., born March 9, 1887; Levi E., born March 22, 1889; Gilbert T., born May 25, 1891, all the surviving sons being in business with their father, with the exception of Joseph E., who went into business for himself on March 1, 1912, as a dealer in builder's supplies. In politics, Mr. Ed and his sons are republicans and he has served as alderman for two years and his son, Gustave A., was an alderman and supervisor at Moline for a number of years before his death. Mr. Ed and family are members of the Swedish Mission Church.

ED, John (deceased).—The late John Ed was known as a substantial business man and public-spirited citizen of Moline, his home for many years before his death. He was a typical Swedish-American, representative of the class that has done so much in the developing of Rock Island county and this part of the state of Illinois. He was born in Smoland, Sweden, September 28, 1859, son of Carl and Ellen Ed, and was reared and educated in Sweden. He attended the public schools and later followed fishing and hunting, while a young man. However, in the thought of bettering his position, in April, 1889, he came to America, and went directly to Rock Island county, where he worked as a mason and plasterer, eventually becoming a member of the firm of the Gust Ed Contracting Company, of which his brother was the organizer and president. This connection continued until the death of John Ed which occurred December 3, 1904, and he was buried in Moline cemetery. He had helped materially to build up a prosperous business, and like his brother, had a high reputation for integrity and fair dealing.

John Ed was married February 19, 1890, in Moline, to Miss Eva Bloom, a native of Sweden, born in 1862, daughter of Peter Olaf and Marie Anderson. She and Mr. Ed had been engaged to marry before he left Sweden, and she had come to America during the same year, locating first in Minnesota. Her parents were Peter and Mary (Anderson) Bloom. To Mr. and Mrs. Ed three children were born, namely: Carl, who is a clerk in Rock Island, and has begun to attract attention as a cartoonist; and Olga and Edna, both of whom are at home.

Mr. Ed was a member of the I. O. S., a Swedish society, and of the Plasterers' Union. He was a member of the Swedish Lutheran church and was identified with its good work. He had friends in various circles who felt his loss, and was most sadly mourned by his family and relatives, who knew and appreciated his many good qualities.

ED, Otto E., has been identified with Rock Island county for nearly twenty years, and during that time has helped erect many public and private buildings. He was born in Smolan, Sweden, April 26, 1866, a son of Gustof and Eling Parsons Ny, natives of that country. He was educated in his native country and when fifteen years old entered the Swedish army, serving seven years. He came to America in 1893, and on April 5 he came direct to Rock Island and there began working for his brother, Gust Ed, continuing thus until the Ed Construction Company was organized, after which he worked for this company as foreman for eighteen years. In the spring of 1908 he began contracting on his own account and now has a growing business. He erected a store for Charles Hogberg at the corner of Twelfth street and Seventeenth avenue, Moline; two cement block stores at East Moline for the Delaney & DeClerk Company; a large residence at Silvis, and is constantly taking other contracts, being ready for any work in his line.

Mr. Ed is well known in business circles and is regarded with confidence. He is a member of a Swedish society, of the North Star, the Eagles, and various clubs, and also belongs to the Home Forum and the Modern Woodmen of America, being connected with the latter for eight years. For the past seventeen years he has been a member of the masons' union.

Otto E. Ed was married in Sweden, to Jennie Anderson, daughter of Andrew and Avie (Johnson) Anderson, and seven children have been born to them. Gustof Hlof, who died in Sweden; Augusta Matheria, who lives at home; Carl John and Albert Gernard, who live at home; Hilda Maria Elizabeth, who is a student in the public schools; Esther, who is deceased; and Gustof Clifford, who is at home. Mr. Ed is a public-spirited and desirable citizen who takes an active interest in the affairs of his community.

EDGINGTON, John.—The name of Edgington is a well known one throughout Rock Island county. It is the name of one of the county's earliest pioneer families. It is also the name of one of the county's most prosperous little villages, named in honor of one of the founders of that family, John Edgington, the subject of our sketch, a man who in his long lifetime spent in this county, lived to see it grow from a waste of prairie and wilderness into a wonderfully fertile farming community, dotted here and there with busy little villages and cities devoted to manufacture and commercial enterprise.

John Edgington was born July 4, 1809, at Steubenville, O., and died in March, 1896, at the home of his son, James Edgington, at Reynolds, in this county. He received his education in the common schools of Steubenville, his birthplace, and in his young manhood followed the occupation of trading and merchandising in Steubenville. In July, 1834, he made a trip on horseback from Steubenville to Rock Island seeking farm land, and stopping at a point in this county decided to permanently settle here. He took up a farm in what afterwards became Edgington Precinct, this being named after him. This precinct was afterwards divided into Edgington and Buffalo Prairie townships, Mr. Edgington's farm being located in the latter township.

On February 17, 1834, previous to settling in Rock Island county, Mr. Edgington was married to Miss Susan Crabbs, a young lady of Steubenville, and to the wilds of what was then an unsettled frontier, he brought his young wife. Nine children were born of this union, their eldest child, James, being the first white child born in Rock Island county south of Rock river. Their other children were: Sarah; William, who died in infancy; Jane, now Mrs. Rufus Walker; Casandra; Margeret, wife of C. E. Dodge; Drusilla, wife of S. H. Parvin, and Harriet, wife of Fred Titterington. All of the children are now deceased, with the exception of Mrs. Walker and Mrs. Dodge. To her children Mrs. Edgington often recounted her experiences when she came to Rock Island county a bride. For the first six months after coming here, she never saw another white woman, and she was in constant fear of the Indians who then roamed over the country. They took a great fancy to her first born son, James, the first white baby they had ever seen, and the young mother received frequent and urgent offers to trade a papoose for the white baby. This added to her fears, for she was in constant terror lest the Indians' great desire to possess her offspring might lead them to make a forcible exchange at some time when her husband was absent. Mrs. Edgington died at the home of Mrs. Rufus Walker, in Reynolds, in October, 1886.

But to return to our account of Mr. Edgington. He cleared and cultivated his farm in Buffalo Prairie, where he made his home until 1894, when he sold his farm and moved to Reynolds to make his home with his son, James, where, as has been stated, he lived until his death two years later. He lived the busy life of a farmer, but found time to take an interest and an active part in all that pertained to the advancement of the county. He was justice of the peace and school director for more than thirty years. He served as supervisor from his township for several terms and served as a juror at the first term of court ever held in this county. He was a hospitable and genial man and there was always a place at his table and hearth fire for the stranger and wayfaring man of those times who was seeking a home.

In religious faith Mr. Edgington was a Presbyterian and he helped to build the first church of that denomination that was built below Rock river in this county. He also helped hew the logs and erect the first schoolhouse built in the lower end of the county. It was located about an eighth of a mile east of his residence. The school was supported for several years by private subscription and if there was any deficit in the amount necessary to carry on the work of education, Mr. Edgington was always prompt in making up the balance himself. In politics Mr. Edgington was always a staunch democrat and with his party he was a firm adherent until the silver question became their paramount issue. Then, not agreeing with the majority of his party upon this question, he cast his vote for William McKinley, but it cost him a hard struggle to do so. During his lifetime he accumulated a considerable competence and the farm that he owned became enhanced in value as the years went by until it, in itself, became worth a very considerable fortune. He was a man of great public spirit, a man beloved and esteemed by those who knew him, and his long and busy life was crowned with success.

EGE, Andrew D.—The history of very many farmers show a gradual progressing from farm hand to proprietor of excellent properties. It would not be possible for these men to rise as they do if they were not possessed of a determination to succeed and a willingness to work and save. One of the men who owns a good farm in Cordova township who has risen in just this manner is Andrew D. Ege, born in Mercer county, N. J., October 30, 1848, a son of Asa S. and Ellen (Riley) Ege, of Mercer county, N. J. The father was a carpenter, but later in life became a farmer, and he and his wife died in their native state.

Andrew D. Ege was educated in the common schools of Mercer county, N. J., and came to Rock Island county when nineteen years old. He worked by the month on farms for four years, by which time he had saved enough to stock a rented farm and for twenty-seven years afterward he rented land. In 1900 he bought seventy-five acres which he operates, and now has a fine home. On September 28, 1872, he married Adeline Ege, born in Cordova township, this county, daughter of Andrew S. and Mary Ann (Marshall) Ege, both born in New Jersey, where they married, and in 1839, came to Cordova township, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew D. Ege have one son, John Frank, born March 6, 1876. He married Catherine Brunner, a native of Cordova township, and they live at Oshkosh, Wis.

Mr. Ege is a consistent member of the Baptist church, of which he has been a deacon for several years, and a trustee for many years. He is a republican, and for seventeen years was commissioner of highways, and for sixteen years was treasurer of the township. For one term he was trustee of the Cordova Public Library. Always conscientious whether acting in a private or public capacity, Mr. Ege is one of the upright, Christian men of his locality, and his true worth is fully recognized.

EICHELSDOERFER, Lilly M.—This is decidedly an age for women, for never before in the history of the world have members of the gentler sex developed as they are today. They are entering into business life, assuming the responsibilities of all the learned professions and carrying on successfully and ably the work hitherto assumed to belong to man alone. One of the best instances of the wide awake, enterprising and eminently successful women of today who are making their mark in the business world, is Miss Lilly Eichelsdoerfer of Rock Island. She was born at Grand Rapids, Mich., January 5, 1890, a daughter of William and Lilly Eichelsdoerfer. The father had come from his native Mannheim, Germany, at an early age, and settling at Fort Wayne, Ind., learned the printing trade. Later he went to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he established the first German newspaper in the state, publishing it until his death at the age of forty-five years. This paper is still in existence, although he passed away in 1895. William Eichelsdoerfer was married at Fort Wayne, Ind., to Lilly Rosenthal, born in that city, who died February 18, 1911. Their children were: Emma, who is Mrs. M. Andersch of Grand Rapids; Daisy, who is the wife of Dr. J. W. Doran of Rock Island; William, who is a farmer of Rock Island county; Albert, who is a farmer of South Dakota; Theodore P., who is associated in business with Miss Lilly, the latter being the youngest in the family.

Miss Eichelsdoerfer was graduated from St. Joseph's school at Rock Island and also from the high school of that same city, and immediately thereafter, in 1908, became associated with her brother in the Regalia Manufacturing Company, of which she is treasurer, which concern is the successor of the American Regalia Company and A. F. Eichelsdoerfer & Company, her brother being president and general manager. With her brother she is a stockholder in the Streckfus Steamboat Company, and is also interested in a fine farm of 160 acres in Scott county, Ia.

Miss Eicheldoerfer's grasp of business is firm and comprehensive, and she understands every detail of her work. Keen and aggressive in her methods, prompt to see and act upon any legitimate business opportunity, she has borne her part in the development of her company, and her ability is recognized by all with whom she is associated.

EICHELSDOERFER, Theodore P.—Until a list of the various industries flourishing in Rock Island is scanned, the ordinary person has but little realization of the immensity of the business interests centered here, or their wide diversity of purpose. One of the large manufacturing plants of the city that occupies a conspicuous position among those of its kind, is the Regalia Manufacturing Company, successor to the American Regalia Company and A. F. Eicheldoerfer & Company, at whose head is Theodore P. Eichelsdoerfer. Mr. Eichelsdoerfer was born at Grand Rapids, Mich., February 6, 1885, a son of William and Lilly Eichelsdoerfer. The former was editor of the first German newspaper published in Michigan, and this organ is still in existence, being issued at Grand Rapids. There he died in 1895, aged forty-five years. A native of Mannheim, Germany, he had come to America in young manhood, locating first at Fort Wayne, Ind., where he learned the trade of a printer in a job printing office, after which he went to Grand Rapids. He was married at Fort Wayne, to Lilly Rosenthal, a native of that city, who died February 18, 1911, having been the mother of the following children: Emma; Mrs. M. Andersch, of Grand Rapids; Daisy, wife of Dr. J. W. Doran of Rock Island; William, a farmer of Rock Island county; Albert, a farmer of South Dakota; Theodore P.; and Lilly, who is associated in business with her brother, Theodore P.

Theodore P. Eichelsdoerfer lived in Grand Rapids until fourteen years old. His mother had purchased the interest of the Armstrong Walcott Regalia Company of Grand Rapids, and moved her business to Rock Island in 1900. Here the youth completed his education, being graduated from the high school. Following this, when twenty-one years old, he went to South Dakota, and took up a homestead in the Cheyenne Indian Reservation, remaining there one and one-half years, after which he returned to Rock Island, and became a partner in the business of which he is now president and general manager. The factory is conveniently located at No. 1517-23 Second avenue. In addition to his city business interests, Mr. Eichelsdoerfer is the owner of 160 acres of fine farming land in Scott county, Ia., and is also a stockholder in the Streckfus Steamboat Company. St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church holds his membership. Fraternally, he belongs to the Knights of Columbus, the Elks, and the Modern Woodmen of America. He is one of the enterprising young business men of Rock Island, and his present success only outlines what he hopes to achieve in the future. He is an independent voter but is very certain to be found among those exercising the privilege for the general welfare.

EINFELDT, Christian, who for more than twenty years was well known in the coal trade of Rock Island county, is now living in quiet retirement at No. 1512 Fourth avenue, having ceased business activities over nineteen years ago. He is a native of Germany, born January 11, 1834, a son of Hans and Lizzie (Geoger) Einfeldt, the former born in 1793 and the latter in 1799, both in Germany. Christian Einfeldt has a brother, Harry, who is in the grocery business in Germany, and a sister, Mrs. Lizzie Smook. There were nine children in the family, and five of the boys served in the German army.

Christian Einfeldt attended the public schools in Germany, after leaving which he learned the shoemaking trade and followed it for five years, when he took up hack driving as an occupation. After following this for ten years, in 1865 he came to America, landing at New York City, and coming thence direct to Moline, Ill., where for two years he worked in the plow factory. In 1867 he moved to Rock Island, where for two years he was a coachman, and he then entered the coal business, in which he continued for twenty-three years. He was very successful in his operations and amassed a competency that enabled him to retire from business activities, but retained the ownership of a valuable farm and a handsome residence at Rock Island.

On June 11, 1867, Mr. Einfeldt was married at Rock Island, to Anna Horns, who was born November 14, 1842, a daughter of Conrad and Anna (Storm) Horns, who lived and died in Germany. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Einfeldt: Lucy Sayfelt, of Big Island; John, a farmer near Andalusia; Nina, wife of James Bocktako of Rock Island; Anne, the wife of Frank S. Payne, in the lunch business at McCarty, Ia.; Marie, wife of Julius Hoss, a carpenter of Rock Island; and Amelia, the wife of Will H. Breed, time clerk at the Moline Plow factory. Mr. Einfeldt has had twelve grandchildren, of whom eleven are still living.

EINFELDT, Zacharias.—Economists claim that the only men worth considering are those who have developed their characters and fortunes without outside assistance. Experience seems to prove that it is such men as these who are self-reliant and purposeful and can be depended upon in any crisis that may come to the country or community. One of the men who certainly belongs in the self-made class is Zacharias Einfeldt of East Moline. He was born in Holstein, Germany, November 8, 1845, a son of Christian and Maria (Schlottfeldt) Einfeldt. The father died about 1905, and the mother in 1862. While he went to school in Germany, Zacharias Einfeldt had no knowledge of the English language when he came here and not only had to make his own way, but learn to speak the language. His success has been remarkable, and while he has attained material success, he has made and kept many warm, personal friends. Zacharias Einfeldt came to the United States in 1865, and settled at Moline, living there for one week, when he moved to South Moline township. He worked on the farm that he now owns for ten years, being employed by a Mr. Butler, and then bought 170 acres in 1880, but sold all of it except twenty acres to the East Moline Land Company.

On April 14, 1881, Zacharias Einfeldt was married to Nannie Henry, who died March 12, 1908, having borne him two children: Howard and Elizabeth Grace. She is buried in Riverside cemetery. He belongs to the German Lutheran church, and contributes liberally towards its support. A strong republican, Zacharias Einfeldt served twelve years as road commissioner, fifteen years as a school trustee and director. In 1910, he was elected supervisor of South Moline township, and re-elected in 1912. In addition to his other interests, he is a stockholder and director in the Manufacturers' State Bank of East Moline. He has been influential in the up-building of the city from its beginning. An honest and efficient official, experienced business man and public-spirited citizen, Mr. Einfeldt has made good use of his success, and his industrious life and sturdy thriftiness sets an example for the rising generation to follow.

EITEMAN, Wilford L., assistant superintendent of Williams & White Company, one of the most representative of the skilled workmen of Rock Island county and a man of superior training and ability, whose upward progress has been attended by persistent effort and conscientious attention to duty, was born in Sterling, Ill., March 12, 1872, a son of John S. and Clara (Drum) Eiteman, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania, February 28, 1844. The father was a carpenter who came to Whiteside county, Ill., when a boy, learning his trade there. He remained in that county until 1874, when he moved to Jefferson, Ia., returning to Whiteside county in 1878. This remained his home until 1898, when he came to Moline, where his death occurred January 13, 1911. Both he and his wife were excellent people, and their son received a careful rearing.

Wilford L. Eiteman attended the public schools of Rock Falls, Ill., and took a commercial course at the Sterling Business College. A portion of the time, he lived with his grandfather. Upon leaving school he learned carriage painting and then worked at the machinist trade with the Keystone Manufacturing Company, at Rock Falls, remaining with that concern for four years. Leaving, he came to Moline, where he entered the employ of the Williams & White Company. After a short time, he began working for the government at the arsenal, continuing from January, 1894, until March, 1898. Returning to the Williams & White Co., he was made foreman of the tool department, September 1, 1898, and thus continued until 1907, when he left to go on an Oklahoma farm. Spending a year there, he came back, and was inspector for his old concern at Rock Island, and in 1910, was made assistant superintendent, which position he still holds, to the general satisfaction of all concerned.

On May 10, 1898, he was married at Morrison, Ill., by the Rev. Leavitt, of the Universalist church, to Elida G. Palmer, daughter of David and Dorothy (Coonley) Palmer, the former being yard foreman for Potter & Johnson Lumber Co. of Morrison, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Eiteman became the parents of three children: Palmer, who died in infancy; Wilford J., who was born February 13, 1902, at Rock Island; and Dorothy, who was born on May 6, 1906, at the same place.

Mr. Eiteman owns his comfortable home at 901 Forty-third street, Rock Island. He belongs to the Odd Fellows, and Manufacturers Lodge No. 485 of Moline. His family and he belong to the United Presbyterian church. In politics, he is an independent. Through all this record, one thing stands out with distinctive clearness, and that is Mr. Eiteman's willingness to work, and his thoroughness of action. Such a man is always bound to rise, and although he now holds a very responsible position, with 300 men under him, he will go higher, and wherever he may be found in the future, it is certain that he will give of the best in him to the work in hand.

ELMER, Carl H.—Every branch of the building trade receives added impetus from the increase in building operations that has been felt during the past few years in Rock Island county. One of the lines that has profited by this increase in business is the handling of wall paper and paint, and a progressive dealer in these staple commodities is Carl H. Elmer of No. 809 Fifteenth street. He was born in Sweden, in 1869, a son of Anton and Johanna Elmer, both natives of Sweden. The father was a harness-maker, and died in his native land in 1886, having had six children: Otto, Alfreda, Augusta, Carl H., Gustave, and Emil.

In 1887, Mr. Elmer came to the United States, locating first at Osage City, Kas., where he worked in a coal mine. From there, he went to Topeka, Kas., and thence to Burlington, Ia., where he worked at his trade of painting, having acquired a practical knowledge of it in his native land. In 1890, he came to Moline to continue working at his trade until he branched out into his present business in 1898. Mr. Elmer carries a full line of wall paper, paints and moulding, and shows the latest designs as well as the standard conventional ones in wall papers. He also takes contracts for papering and painting.

In 1892, Mr. Elmer married Lizzie Brunstrom, also born in Sweden. They have six living children: Margaret, Hermon, Hazel, Helen,

David L. Ripley and grandson Wilbur L. —

Catherine and Howard. Another child, Mildred, died young. Although Mr. Elmer had been educated in Sweden he attended school in Kansas for a time in order to gain a better knowledge of the English language. He belongs to the Swedish Odd Fellows, the Eagles and Modern Woodmen of America. Since casting his first vote, Mr. Elmer has been a republican. He resides at No. 735 Fourteenth street, where he has a pleasant home. A live, progressive, hard-working man, Mr. Elmer has succeeded in his undertakings, and at the same time gained the confidence and respect of all who know him.

ELMSTEDT, John N.—The mercantile interests of Rock Island were carefully conserved during the earlier days by men whose training fitted them for that line of business, and through their efforts the present commercial importance of the city was established. One of those whose name is associated with the mercantile business in bygone days is John N. Elmstedt, now retired. He was born in the country, near Elmho Socken, Sweden, September 23, 1837, being a son of Nelse and Eling (Nelsdotar) Elmstedt, the former born in Longsjö, Sweden, and the latter in Elmbo Socken, Sweden. The father was a farmer, and both he and his wife died sixty years ago. They had ten children, of whom John N. was the youngest. A sister, Johanna, came to the United States with John N., and they had been preceded by a brother Johannes. Another brother, Carl, came later, as did a sister, Mary, both of whom brought their families with them.

John N. Elmstedt was twenty-one years old when he came to the new world, landing at Quebec, Canada, in 1858, from whence he came to Holton, Ill., via Montreal and Chicago. For two years, he farmed in the vicinity of Dixon, Ill., and in 1860, moved to Moline, where he entered a sash factory, and worked until the fall of 1861. He then enlisted in Company C, Forty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, participating in the battle of Shiloh and many skirmishes. In 1863, he was transferred to Little Rock, Ark., arsenal, where he was made quartermaster, thus continuing until the close of the war. He then returned to Moline. Establishing himself in business as a variety dry goods merchant, he continued in that line until he enlarged to handle clothing, and built up a large trade. His comfortable home is at No. 822 Fifteen and One-half street, Moline, where he is enjoying a well-earned ease, retired from business worries.

Mr. Elmstedt was married at Moline to Caroline Chilberg, born at Burlington, Iowa. After three years she died, leaving two children, Vashly and Carl. On October 24, 1872, he married at Swedena, Mercer county, Ill., Caroline W. Carlson, and they have had these children: Amos, who was drowned, Nemo, Leo, Mrs. Lillie May Brown, Carl and Earl. Mr. Elmstedt belongs to the John Graham Post, G. A. R., and is interested in post matters. He is an honest, reliable man, whose life has been spent in hard work, and whose present prosperity has been faithfully earned.

ELLINGSWORTH, Joseph H., M. D.—Every profession has its prominent men, some made such by long membership, and others by their proficiency in their calling. Joseph H. Ellingsworth, M. D., of Watertown, is conspicuous among the physicians of Rock Island county, not so much by the length of time that he has devoted to his calling, as he has been a doctor for but a few years, as by the eminent success he has already made of his work. Dr. Ellingsworth was born March 21, 1878, in Colona, Henry county, Ill., a son of Josephus S. and Mary (Stokes) Ellingsworth, the former a native of Maryland and the latter of Betendorf, Iowa, and grandson of William Ellingsworth and Young Stokes, all born in the United States. Dr. Ellingsworth's parents were married in Henry county, Ill., after which they settled on a farm at Colona, but since 1907 they have lived in retirement at Geneseo, Ill. Mrs. Ellingsworth had been formerly married to Newton Hanna, and had two children: Mrs. Mand Applegarth, of Spokane, Wash., and Newton. By her marriage with Mr. Ellingsworth she had the following children: Yonng, who is of Geneseo, Ill.; Robert, who died at the age of five years; Joseph H.; James G., who is of Colona, Ill.; and Archie, who is living at home.

Joseph H. Ellingsworth attended the public schools of Cleveland, Ill., and at the age of twenty years engaged in farming. Five years later, deciding to enter the medical profession, he took a preparatory course at Chicago, and then entered Bennett Medical college, of that city, from which he was graduated May 7, 1907. On August 27 of the same year he entered into practice at Watertown, where he has since continued as a physician and surgeon. He is a member of the county, state and national medical associations, and of the Modern Woodmen of America, and is connected with the republican party, on whose ticket he was elected to the office of president of the Watertown board in the spring of 1910.

Dr. Ellingsworth was married in January, 1898, to Miss Hulda May Evans, who was born in Henry county, Ill., a daughter of Frank and Sabina (Spaid) Evans. Mrs. Evans, who is a native of Pennsylvania, is now a widow and makes her home with Dr. and Mrs. Ellingsworth.

ELLIOTT, Alfred D.—The farmers of Rock Island county are particularly fortunate in that this section is peculiarly well adapted for agricultural purposes, and that the soil responds readily and generously to developing processes. One of the men who has achieved more than a fair measure of success along lines connected with tilling the land is Alfred D. Elliott, owner of 158 acres of as choice acreage as can be found in the county, his property being known as Mapleton Farm. He was born on the homestead of his father in Buffalo Prairie township, this county, January 7, 1880, a son of Nelson G. and Mary (Castor) Elliott, both of whom continue to reside on their farm. They had nine children as follows: William of Buffalo Prairie township; Florence, Mrs. Daniel Hyatt of South Millersburg, Ill.; Sadie, Mrs. Sherman Murdock of Laurel, Ia.; Josephine, Mrs. Edward Kelley of Edgington township; Ella, Mrs. George Kistler of Buffalo Prairie township; Mayme, Mrs. Frank Close of Deep River, Ia.; Alfred D.; Olive, Mrs. Ithmer Lamb of Letts, Ia.; and Luman, at home.

Alfred D. Elliott attended the schools of his township until he was twenty years of age, and worked on the farm until 1900, when he bought 200 acres, on which he moved. This property was located south of Edgington, but he sold it in the spring of 1910, to purchase his present farm, which then contained 198 acres. He later sold forty acres, and has brought the remainder into a high state of development.

On December 9, 1903, Mr. Elliott was married by the Reverend Shepherd of the Hazel-Dell Church at Illinois City to Florence Fisher of Buffalo Prairie, born November 2, 1880, daughter of Thomas Fisher, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Elliott have three children—Louis born November 18, 1905; Cameron, March 21, 1906, and Ernest, September 16, 1911. Mrs. Elliott is a Methodist, but Mr. Elliott is not connected with any religious organization. In political faith, he is a democrat, but his business affairs have prevented him entering public life. Energetic, a good manager and excellent farmer, Mr. Elliott has been very successful, and has also gained the full confidence and respect of his neighbors and associates.

ELLIOTT, William.—The fundamental principles of farming as set forth in modern methods, show that efficiency and profit go hand in hand, and that agriculture is one of the best paying callings in the world. Among the farmers of Rock Island county who have proven this beyond any possibility of a doubt, is William Elliott, owner of 100 acres of rich land in Buffalo Prairie township. He was born on a farm in this same township, February 8, 1865, being a son of Nelson G. and Mary (Castor) Elliott, for years prominent in the agricultural history of the county. William Elliott grew up on the home farm, amid strictly rural surroundings, and was early taught the lessons of industry and thrift which have proven of such value to him during life. He attended the district schools from the time he was ten years old, until he was eighteen. Following this, he worked for his father until attaining his majority, when he entered into partnership with his father for the purpose of operating the farm thus continuing for thirteen years, when in the spring of 1898, he bought the farm on which he now resides upon which he has made many very important improvements, putting the place in fine condition.

On January 26, 1892, William Elliott married Gertrude Eckhart, daughter of Ferdinand and Barbara Eckhart, and they have children as follows: Florence Velva, Lorenzo Henry, Ferdinand Eckhart, Rufus Nelson and Ruth Mary (twins), and Blanch Wilma. Mr. Elliott is a Blue Lodge Mason, and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. Politically, he is a staunch democrat. He belongs to no religious denomination, being liberal in his views. Hard-working, thrifty, understanding his business and making his land yield a good profit, Mr. Elliott is an excellent example of what a farmer can accomplish, for he started out in life with no possession aside from a span of horses given him by his father.

ELLIOTT, William Wilshier, who for many years was a veterinary surgeon widely known because of his skill, but now an extensive farmer, owns 330 acres of land in sections 19, 20, 17, 29 and 30 Edgington township. He was born November 15, 1849, on the old Elliott farm in Edgington township, a son of Sherman O. and Harriet (Davis) Elliott, the latter being a daughter of Joseph Davis. Sherman O. Elliott was born in Alleghany county, N. Y., but came west in the fall of 1849, making the trip overland in wagons. He took up sixty-four acres in Edgington township, this county, later adding eighty acres upon three separate occasions, and became a very successful farmer. Both he and his wife died here, firm in the faith of the Baptist Church. Their children were: Sarah, Mrs. Walter Lewis of Andalusia; Permelia, Mrs. Alonzo Moshur of Coffeyville, Miss., a widow; Malissa, Mrs. Bradley Johnson, of Edgington; Delilah, who lives on the home farm; Mrs. Frank Walker, who died in Iowa; Jerome, a farmer in Buffalo Prairie township; William W., and Addie, who married Greeley Young and lives in South Dakota.

William Wilshier Elliott attended the district schools, two and three-quarter miles away from his home, until he was fifteen years old. When he was twenty-two, he traveled through different states as far west as Nebraska, enjoying the outdoor life he led during that time, but then returned and helped his father in operating the farm for two years, when he married, and bought 120 acres, the house to which he brought his bride still standing. His new home is a modern two and one-half story structure, and was built in 1903. Having a natural taste for veterinary work, Mr. Elliott gradually extended his successful treatment of his own stock to that of his neighbors, until he had a large practice, embracing several counties, but of late years has practically retired. For fourteen years he handled farm realty extensively, being very successful in this line, and with his other interests, he had also operated his farm and developed it into one of the best in the county.

In 1873, on November 16, Mr. Elliott was married by Reverend Broodgood to Sarah A. Brhubacker, daughter of John and Hannah (Johnson) Brhubacker, who has been a devoted, faithful, helpful wife. Mr. Elliott frankly admits that a good percentage of his success is due to the industry and frugality of his wife. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Elliott are: Guy Hamilton of Edgington, married Emma Fuhr, three children: Arvis S., Sorin A. and Anna M.; Mattie, Mrs. Ed. Hartman of Edgington; one daughter, Mirian L.; Lottie, Mrs. Marion Pearson of Edgington, one daughter, Sarah E.; Lodessa, Mrs. William Wait of Edgington, one daughter, Naoma E., and Glen, a student at college.

Mr. Elliott is a democrat. While he does not belong to any religious organization, his wife and children are members of the Baptist church, and he contributes liberally towards its support. Perhaps no man in the county has traveled more extensively than Mr. Elliott, for he has not only been in all the states of the Union, but to Old Mexico and to the Cataline Islands, where he went on a fishing excursion. In all of these travels, he has come up with many adventures of which he tells in a highly entertaining way. A good conversationalist, Mr. Elliott knows how to present solid arguments in support of his principles, and still has tact enough not to offend, retaining his friends of whom he has hosts. He well remembers seeing deer and wild turkeys on his father's farm, in his boyhood.

ELLMAN, George.—The Russian who comes to America seeking a refuge from the oppression so heavily felt in his own country gives to us what we need, his labor, economic endowments of industry, thrift and skill, and in return we afford him an opportunity to develop and bring up his children as American citizens. It is remarkable what hardships these earnest men and women endure to secure the freedom for which they crave, and gratifying that they so soon assimilate the influences of their new surroundings. One of the striking illustrations of this is to be found in the person of George Ellman, officer of the Rock Island County Humane Society, with office at No. 637 Seventeenth street. George Ellman was born in Akkerman, near Odessa, Russia, January 17, 1859, a son of Ephraim and Bathsheba Ellman, also natives of Odessa, where the father became a merchant. There were three sons in the family: George, David, who is still in Russia; and Moses, who lives at Chicago. George Ellman was educated in his native land, being a student until he was eighteen years of age, when he became a clerk and thus continued until he was twenty-two years old, when he was drafted into the Russian army, serving from November, 1880, to September, 1885, and was sent 600 miles from home, the majority of the time being in the commissary department. In July, 1886, he left Russia for the United States, resolved to get away from the oppression which he felt was retarding him, landing in New York City, September 17, 1886. The struggles of this brave man after his arrival in a strange country cannot be given in full, but they were pitiful, animated though they were by a never-dying determination to succeed. In the spring of 1887, he managed to make his way to Chicago, securing employment there as a laborer at seven and one-half dollars a week. So efficient was he, that his weekly stipend was soon increased to twelve dollars. Following this he worked with a commission house at fifteen dollars a week for eighteen months, as street car conductor for five years, and by this time, having saved up $400, he opened a little store in Janesville, Wis., but within three years lost his entire capital. Not discouraged, he came to Rock Island, and was subsequently engaged as motorman for the Tri-City Railroad for eighteen months, when he was appointed to the police force of Davenport, Ia., and while there was made a humane officer for Scott county, Ia. So efficient did he prove himself that he was made Secretary and Treasurer of the Tri-city Social Service Club, which position he held until his removal to Rock Island, Ill. He also is the representative of the Jewish Immigrants' Information Bureau of Galveston, Texas, and of the Industrial Removal office of New York. In November, 1911, he was called to Memphis, Tenn., to accept the position of Superintendent of the Federated Jewish Charities, which position he still holds in connection with his work as representative of the Galveston Bureau (of Texas) and the Removal Office (of New York). His ability and energies are directed along humanitarian and charitable lines, and a few, outside of those benefited, realize how much good he really accomplishes.

Mr. Ellman belongs to the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Brith Abraham, the I. O. B. B., and several other fraternal organizations. On August 11, 1897, Mr. Ellman was married to Anna Schreiberman. They have had three children, an infant (deceased), Mark and Sadie B.

ENDTER, Amalius J.—It is almost impossible to overestimate the powerful influence exerted in any community by the contractors and builders. The whole character of a town or city is affected by the work of this large body of men, and to their credit be it said that the majority of them are able, conscientious and honorable, living up to the terms of their contracts, and striving to execute work that will place their locality among the leading ones of the state. One of the men who has endeavored to be worthy of the responsibilities of his calling and succeeded in his endeavors, is Amalius Endter, a general contractor of No. 715 Forty-second street, Rock Island. He was born in Germany in 1861, a son of Johannas and Gottlobine (Klafel) Endter, both of whom were born in Germany. The father worked for the government, was a forester in his native land, where the mother died in 1882. They had eight children, three of whom survive.

Amalius J. Endter attended school and learned the carpenter trade, beginning his apprenticeship at the age of fourteen years. When he was twenty years old, he entered the German army, where he served as musician for three years.

In 1892, he was attracted to the United States on account of the work promised in the erection of the World's Fair buildings, and landing at Chicago, was one of those employed in the construction of the White City. In 1906, he came to Rock Island county, locating at Silvas, where he worked as a contractor until his removal to Rock Island. In addition to his other interests, he is operating a skating rink, the only one at Rock Island. During his busy years, he has never neglected his music.

In 1885, Mr. Endter was married to Augusta Blass, also of Germany. They have had five children: Mollita, died in Germany; Ella; Waldemar; Lilly and Elmer. The family are Christian Scientists. Mr. Endter is independent in politics, preferring to vote for the man he deems best suited for the office, rather than to confine himself to party platforms. Enthusiastic regarding Rock Island's future, he purposes to make this city his permanent home and can be confidently counted upon to do all within his power to aid in its further development.

ENGDAHL, Peter Adolf.—The farmers of Rock Island county understand how to make their land yield an excellent income from every foot, and because of this, the agriculturists here rank among the most prosperous in the state. One of the best examples of the thrifty, successful farmers of Illinois, is Peter Adolf Engdahl of section 29, Coe township. He was born in Sweden, October 26, 1853. He came to America with his mother, in 1870, the father having come here the year previously.

The first location was in Moline, but later removal was made to Henry county, Ill., but after a year the family returned to Rock Island county and settled at Port Byron. The father worked in the lime kiln for seven years, and then with his sons bought twenty-six and two-thirds acres of unimproved land. They built their house and put up other buildings. Peter himself put up all the fences except the hedge along the road, and set out thirty different kinds of apple trees; twelve kinds of cherry trees; thirty peach trees, old and young, and twenty pear trees. The father passed away on this property, in 1894, being seventy-nine years old, the mother having died in April, 1890, and they are buried in the cemetery at Port Byron. They had four children: John of Coe township; Peter; Charles and Andrew, the last of whom was killed in an explosion in Franklin, King county, Wash., in 1894. There were thirty-seven others who were also victims in this terrible accident in a coal mine. At the time, he was overseer of 400 men. He was born in 1858 and thus was thirty-six years old, and left three children, Irvin, Oliver and Andrew. They reside in Moline, Irvin working for the Moline Plow Company, where he has been employed for three years, Oliver working for his cousin, in Port Byron township; and Andrew was adopted by an aunt.

Peter Adolf Engdahl was married September 20, 1902, to Mrs. Amanda (Dahlhiner) Weistedt, widow of Oscar Weistedt—one child. Mrs.

Engdahl had a son, Hugo, by her former marriage and he is a clerk in the office of Deere & Company. Mrs. Engdahl was born in Sweden, but came to Moline when fifteen years old, and lived there until her second marriage.

The farm now comprises 100 acres, and is valued at $125 per acre. Mr. Engdahl has expended about $2,000 in building a windmill, sinking wells, putting up two barns and a double corn crib, and he is now constructing a fine, new house. Every foot of his land is under cultivation. He raises about thirty head of hogs, twelve cows and six horses, specializing on poultry, having 200 fowls. Both he and his wife are extremely industrious and take great pride in their property. They have brought it to a state of productiveness seldom found, and have every reason to be proud of it, and what they have accomplished. Both have many friends throughout the county.

ENGELBRECHT, Fred S.—Among the many important interests of Rock Island county, manufacturing claims attention and an immense amount of capital is invested. At Sears, Ill., is situated the Black Hawk Clay Manufacturing plant, which is amply financed and which has been profitably operated ever since it was started in 1907. The output of this plant is vitrified and pressed brick and the market covers a wide territory, including the Dakotas, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and employment is afforded sixty men. The plant is situated on the bank of the Rock River and occupies twenty acres, and is modern in all its equipments, having ten kilns, with a capacity of 5,000,000 bricks a year. In addition to this the company has purchased two other plants at Lehigh, Iowa, known as the Lehigh Manufacturing Company. At Lehigh they manufacture hollow blocks, silo blocks and stiff mud brick. In addition to making brick, the plant at Sears sells a great deal of moulding sand for foundry use. A large part of the prosperity which has visited the Black Hawk Clay Manufacturing Company, undoubtedly must be attributed to Fred S. Engelbrecht, who, for six years, has been superintendent of the plant. He, with other members of his family, is interested as a stockholder, while one brother, Charles S., is general manager and also vice-president of the company.

Fred S. Engelbrecht was born near Cassell, Germany, in 1864, and is a son of Henry and Mary (Livingston) Engelbrecht. Both parents were born in Germany and the father died there in 1872. In 1876, the mother and five children came to the United States and located in Iowa City, Iowa. With one exception, Henry, the second born, who died at the age of thirty-eight years, all survive, namely: Simon, who is located in the Black Hills; Lizzie, who is the wife of C. Shermer, living in the Black Hills; Charles S.; August, who is an instructor in Wadborough College, Waverly, Iowa; and Fred. Mr. Engelbrecht attended the public schools of Iowa City, Iowa, and afterward learned the carpenter trade. In the fall of 1885, Mr. Engelbrecht left Iowa

Sarah Jane Ryley

City, Iowa, and went to the Black Hills, S. D., and began contracting. He built the first house at Buffalo Gap on the completion of the railroad to that point. He homesteaded a claim in Custer county, and engaged extensively in the stock business, but during the time he was on the ranch continued building operations, having had contracts for many of the leading buildings at Hot Springs, S. D., among them being the Soldiers' Home of South Dakota. In 1893 he drove across country to Minneapolis, Minn., and there engaged in contracting until coming to Rock Island county. He continued to give attention to carpenter work until 1906, when he started in the brick business.

In 1892 Mr. Engelbrecht married Miss Clara Hiney, who was born at Iowa City, Iowa, and they have two children: Adell and Carl. In his political affiliation, Mr. Engelbrecht is a republican, and has been active in the affairs of the town, serving five years as a trustee of Sears. Fraternally he belongs to the B. P. O. E.

ENGSTROM, John Peter.—Were it not for the efforts of the progressive business men of East Moline, its present activity would never have been possible. These men recognized the natural advantages here, combined with the exceptional transportation facilities, and established various concerns that have brought new capital into the place, and added very materially to its population. One of the men who has thus demonstrated his public spirit is John Peter Engstrom, secretary of the East Moline Sash and Door Works. He was born in Sweden in 1859, being a son of John and Elizabeth (Rosenkrantz) Engstrom, both of whom were born in Sweden. The father was a moulder by trade, who died in Sweden in 1883, but his widow survives, making her home in her native land. These parents had eleven children, seven of whom survive: John Peter, Anna of Seattle, Wash., Augusta of Sweden, Elricka and Emma, also of Sweden, and Christina Victoria, wife of E. C. Rand, hotelkeeper in the vicinity of Seattle, Wash.

John Peter Engstrom was educated in Sweden, but not being satisfied with the outlook there, in 1879 came to the United States and located in Wisconsin, where for a year he attended school in order to make himself familiar with the new language. Following this, he went to work on the railroad, being made foreman of tracks, and thus continued for eighteen months. He then went to Minneapolis, where he worked as a cabinetmaker for two years, and then was made foreman of a sash and door works in that city, continuing in that responsible position for nine years. Mr. Engstrom then was placed in charge of the Rock Island Wood Works, and conducted them for nine years. In 1907, he came to East Moline, to become one of the promoters of the East Moline Sash and Door Works, his long experience along this line making him a valuable official of the company.

In 1886, Mr. Engstrom was married to Elizabeth Anderson, the ceremony taking place in Wisconsin, to which state Mrs. Engstrom was brought when two months old by her parents, natives of Sweden. The father is deceased, but Mrs. Anderson makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Engstrom. Three children have been born to them: Edith, wife of J. Parks of Rock Island; Marie Victoria, and Frances Valdemor. Mr. Engstrom is very liberal in his political views. Fraternally he is a Modern Woodman of America, belonging to the Rock Island camp, and his religious affiliations are with the Swedish society of Rock Island. Having devoted himself to his work with steadfastness all his life, Mr. Engstrom has been very successful, and his onward progress has been marked with signal triumphs in a business way, while he has always won and retained the confidence of his associates.

ERICKSON, Meigs.—Sweden has given some of its best men to this country, who, upon coming here, have gone to work to establish themselves and achieve an honorable success. They are not afraid to work, nor are they above saving thriftily from their earnings, and as a result it is very seldom that a son of Sweden ever has to ask for assistance from anyone, nor are they to be found with any frequency among the criminal classes. One of the honored farmers of Rock Island county is Meigs Erickson, born in Sweden January 29, 1865, a son of Oliver and Katherine (Olson) Erickson, the former of whom died in 1890, but the latter survives, and although eighty-two years old, lives in Sweden. Her mother lived to be ninety-seven years old. Meigs Erickson came to America in 1883, landing at Halifax, from whence he went to Baltimore, Md., and from thence to Riddlesburgh, Pa. From there he made his way to Wisconsin and worked in the woods for six months. For some years following this he worked on farms for various parties until sixteen years ago he began operating for himself, renting for seven years. By this time he had enough saved up to buy eighty acres of land, known as the Cherry Blossom farm, three and one-half miles northwest of Reynolds. In addition to this Meigs Erickson has a beautiful home at Reynolds, surrounded by a fine orchard of three acres.

In 1895 Meigs Erickson was married to Clara Blakely, a daughter of James and Isabel Blakely, natives of Ireland, both of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Erickson have a son, Marion A., born November 22, 1898, who is attending high school at Reynolds. Mr. Erickson belongs to the Episcopal church. He is a republican, and has been elected a school director for six years. Fraternally he belongs to Reynolds Camp, No. 199, Modern Woodmen of America, having joined it fourteen years ago. Mr. Erickson has not attained to his present prosperous condition by any sudden steps, but each year found him better off, a little more being added to the sum he was hoarding with a view of investing in a farm. Steady work, and thrifty saving, combined with natural ability are responsible for his growth and development.

ERICKSON, Oscar Lewis, who is one of the energetic and prosperous young business men of Moline, was born in this city, in his present home, situated at No. 1308 Sixth avenue, January 25, 1886, a son of John and Christine (Hanson) Erickson. The parents of Mr. Erickson came to America from Sweden in 1879, and were married at Moline in 1880. John Erickson, the father, was a carpenter and worked for a railroad company before coming to the United States, and afterward, for twenty-four years, was identified with the firm of Barnard & Lear as a millwright. Two years after his marriage, Mr. Erickson bought his home on Sixth avenue, where he and family have ever since resided, his wife dying here, September 7, 1907, having been born in 1858, her husband six years earlier. He retired from active labor in 1905, and afterward made a visit to Sweden, where he spent about six months. Mr. Erickson votes with the democratic party but has never taken any very active part in public affairs. His family consisted of the following children: Edwin M., who was born September 3, 1881, lives at Moline and works as a machinist in the Rock Island Arsenal; Oscar L.; Hugo E., who was born July 8, 1888, is a steamfitter by trade and is in the employ of his brother, as is also the next brother, Fred B., who was born October 31, 1890, and is a plumber by trade; and Harry F., who was born October 9, 1892, is a window trimmer by trade. John Erickson is in very comfortable circumstances and owns several valuable residence properties besides his home. Three of his sons are married: Edwin M., Oscar L. and Hugo E. Edwin M. was married December 27, 1911, to Helen M. Edlandt, a native of Moline, and they live at No. 1301 Sixth avenue. Hugo E. was married January 31, 1912, to Agnes E. Simonson, of Moline, and they reside at No. 542 Twentieth avenue, Moline.

Oscar L. Erickson was a student through boyhood in the public schools of Moline and subsequently was graduated from the Gustus school of business, now Brown's business college, in 1903, after which, for four months he was book-keeper for the Fones & Erickson Coal Company, when he took charge of the business for Mrs. Fones and conducted it for three months. In the spring of 1904 he went to work as an apprentice in the plumbing business and in March, 1907, took the state examination as a journeyman plumber and worked as such until May 30, 1908, when he passed the plumber's examination and established himself in business at No. 516 Thirteenth street, as a plumber and heating contractor.

On July 15, 1909, Mr. Erickson was married to Miss Anna Schmidt, who was born at Moline, October 2, 1883, a daughter of William and Doris (Wiese) Schmidt, natives of Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Erickson have one son, John W., who was born March 7, 1910, a bright and interesting child in whom the grandfather takes great pleasure.

EVANS, George W., (deceased), who was an extensive contractor of Rock Island, was a native of Illinois, born at Milan, in Rock Island county, July 2, 1861, a son of Jacob and Ruan Clementina (Hollister) Evans, and died at Rock Island, April 13, 1913. Jacob Evans was born in Crawford county, Pa., February 2, 1826. He was a cooper and tanner by trade and after coming to Illinois, in 1851, settled first at Rock Island but soon afterward located a claim of 160 acres in Black Hawk township. During the time he lived on his claim he was visited by domestic trouble, his wife and two children dying there. Later he rented a farm near Milan and lived on it until 1862, when he sold out all his possessions and on August 5, of that year, enrolled as a member of Company A, Ninety-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, as a private. He took part in the hard service that his regiment saw, including the battle of Champion's Hill. At the charge at Vicksburg, May 22, 1863, he was shot through the thigh, and at the battle of Altoona Pass, Ga., October 5, 1864, while acting as a sharpshooter, he was struck in the back by a bullet, which passed first through a bale of cotton, behind which he was loading his gun. The cotton which the ball carried could never be removed and was the cause of untold suffering from palsy, for thirteen years before his death. He was honorably discharged June 2, 1865, at Washington, D. C., and later became a valued member of John Buford Post No. 243 Department of Illinois, G. A. R.

On returning from the army he went to work for a Mr. Skinner in a saw mill located on the present site of the Rock Island round house, and continued there as a river man for a number of years. When the mill was bought by the Rock Island Lumber Company, he went with the mill crew and worked at the same business until 1885 when he was transferred to the office where he remained for two years when he retired, at all times having been highly respected by his employers. Practically he was an invalid for thirteen years before his death and the government recognized his claim and paid a pension of $72 a month. When he died in June, 1899, there passed away one of the heroes of the great Civil War, just as much a hero as if he had perished on the field of battle. He married Ruan Clementina Hollister, who was born in Iowa, December 17, 1838, at Milan, Ill., May 25, 1854, who died in February, 1896. They were members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Of their five children one is living, William M., who was born in 1856 and is a resident of Des Moines, Ia.

George W. Evans attended the public schools at Rock Island until he was fourteen years old, and then went to work under his father in the saw mill, although, from the age of twelve years he had worked as a lath cutter, during vacations. He continued to work in the same mill and at the same work until 1895 and so expert had he become that he held the championship along the Mississippi river as lath cutter on a single machine, his remarkable record being 44,000 lath in one day, this being 7,000 above any other cutter. He then went into the retail dairy business in which he continued until 1903, milking on an average twenty-five cows. In the above year he embarked in the street grading and landscape gardening business as a contractor, and in 1910 he included cement work with his other lines. Mr. Evans became one of the substantial citizens here, having purchased his first residence as far back as 1887 and later owned four and also had four vacant properties. While he took an active interest in the affairs of the Republican party, he never desired any political recognition.

On June 28, 1883, Mr. Evans was married to Miss Emma A. Pahl, who was born at Moline, Ill., February 2, 1864, and is a daughter of Fred and Johannab (Sanders) Pahl. They came to America from Germany in 1857, landing at Moline, where he followed his trade, that of a baker, and during the Civil War he was Government baker at Rock Island. Before coming to America he conducted a large bakery but never went into the business for himself in the United States. For twenty-five years prior to his death he had been employed as fireman for the Rock Island Lumber Company. He was born November 11, 1820, and died January 11, 1900, while his wife, born in 1830 died December 26, 1900. They had six sons and four daughters living at time of death, thirty-three grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren.

Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Evans: William F., who was born March 12, 1884, lives at home; Maude E., who was born July 19, 1886, is the widow of Gustave Eng, who died November 2, 1913, she lives at home; May Amelia, who was born January 8, 1888, is the wife of Emil Holtzer and they reside at No. 1301 Twenty-four-and-one-half street; George W., Jr., who was born June 13, 1890, lives at home; Frances C., who was born February 14, 1892 lives at No. 714 Thirteenth Avenue and is the wife of John Cramer; and Herman J., born December 3, 1893. Henry Pahl, born March 1, 1897, and Zola U., born January 26, 1902, all live at home. The sons worked with their father and George W., Jr., has developed great talent as a landscape gardener. Wm. F., George W. and Henry are continuing the business for their mother. George W. Evans, Sr., died April 13, 1913.

EVANS, Josephus.—Because of the faith the early settlers of East Moline had in this community, it has been developed into a flourishing industrial center, and many have flocked to it because of the many advantages offered. However, except for the work of the ones who came first, none of the present prosperity would have been possible. One of the men who has been before the public because of his efficiency as an official is Josephus Evans. He was born in South Moline township, in 1853, a son of James and Mary (Holloway) Evans, natives of Maryland. The parents came to this locality, settling in South Moline, in 1852, becoming pioneers of this section. Here the father died in 1881, and his widow survived him until 1889, when she too passed away. The father developed a farm in the township, and was a man of prominence here. Josephus Evans grew up in South Moline township, and often killed deer on the present site of East Moline. He attended the district schools in Hampton township, and worked on the farm to assist his father, for there was a family of seven children, all of whom are still living. After finishing school, he worked for Bailey Davenport, and then for others until his marriage. That event occurred June 4, 1890, when he was united with Mabel Jones of Colona township. Her parents are now living retired at Colona. In 1905, Josephus Evans brought his family to East Moline, where he owns a nice home. Here he and his wife with their four children, Elmira Bessie, James William, Harry Sherman and Mabel Grace, live comfortably. In politics he is a republican, and he has served as a school director and road overseer in Hampton township for several years. At present he is health and street commissioner of East Moline, and is giving excellent service in both offices. Fraternally, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a man well liked by all who know him, and stands high in his community.

EVERS, Magnus.—Rock Island has its fair quota of old veterans of the Civil war, whose brave service receives a generous meed of appreciation from all those who realize that they rendered their country help in the hour of dire need. The ranks of these old soldiers are thinning, and the time is not so far distant when there will be none here to respond to the roll call, but fortunately, as yet, all have not enlisted in the Army of Eternity, and among those still left to Rock Island county is Magnus Evers of Moline. He was born in Holstein, Germany, August 4, 1834, a son of Hans and Lena Evers, both natives of Germany. The father was a hard-working man, and brought up his children to be useful citizens, not afraid of doing whatever lay at hand.

Magnus Evers was educated in Germany, and worked on a farm. He came to America in 1857, locating first at Rock Island, but later coming to Moline, settled here in 1879. When the country had need of him, he enlisted in defense of his adopted land, in Company E, Twenty-sixth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, which belonged to the First Brigade, First Division, Fifteenth Army Corps. He was in the battles and skirmishes from the organization of the Army of the Tennessee until the close of the war, and under the command of the great leaders connected with it, and this fact tells the story without many more words. During the siege of Vicksburg, Magnus Evers was lying in line of battle one day, and a battery close behind his company began firing over them, at so close a range that they were not allowed to rise up. He had the drum of his right ear broken, and the left ear very badly damaged so that he is now almost totally deaf. He was also wounded several times, and has upward of fifteen wounds on his body. Owing to these injuries, he has gone through life badly crippled, but is now in fairly good health. Still a good soldier, he enjoys nothing better than relating about the engagements around Chickasaw Bayou, Miss.; Arkansas Post; Siege of Vicksburg; Jackson, Raymond, Look-out Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Ringgold, Resaca, Atlanta, Savannah, Columbia, S. C., Bentonville, and others, concluding with the great march down Pennsylvania avenue in Washington, D. C., and the return home.

On August 6, 1865, he was married in Iowa, to Mrs. Bertha (Stoltenburg) Schnechloff, born in Germany, November 9, 1832, who came to the United States in 1852, traveling from Germany to Davenport, Iowa, alone. Mrs. Evers had two children by a former marriage, Christian and John. Mr. and Mrs. Evers have three children: Louisa, Vina, and William. Mr. Evers belongs to the G. A. R. Post and the Odd Fellows, No. 133, and on November 4, 1911, he celebrated the thirty-seventh anniversary of his joining this order. Both he and his excellent wife are liberal in their religious views, and very charitable to those in need of sympathy or material assistance.

In politics Mr. Evers is a republican, and has always been interested in public matters, taking a part in them as any good citizen should. He and his wife own the home at No. 1326 Fourteenth street, where they live with their sons. Mr. Evers is now retired from the activities of business life, after a long and useful career devoted to hard work. He is one of the most highly esteemed men of his neighborhood, and has honestly earned his prestige both as a soldier and private citizen. When it is considered all he went through during his service and the disability which has followed him since his discharge, it is remarkable that he has been able to accomplish what he has, and that he is so cheerful over his sufferings.

EWART, John, one of the highly esteemed residents of Carbon Cliff, Ill., has been identified with the agricultural interests of Hampton township for many years, during which time he has taken a prominent part in the progress and development of Rock Island county. Mr. Ewart was born November 30, 1847, in Tuscarawas county, O., a son of James B. and Abigail (Babb) Ewart. James B. Ewart was born in County Derry, Ireland, in 1801, and in 1811 came to Summit county, O., with his father, Joseph Ewart. He was married in Summit county to Abigail Babb, who was born in Reading, Pa., a daughter of George Babb. They later moved to Tuscarawas county, O., where both died.

1864, in the One Hundred and Sixty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and he remained a soldier until June, 1865, when he received his honorable discharge after participating in a number of important engagements, including the Shenandoah campaign under great leaders, and, to use his own words, "being in trouble about every day." After his return from the army, with an excellent record for brave and faithful service, he went back to Ohio, and worked on farms in the vicinity of his home until 1888, at which time he came to Carbon Cliff, Ill., and for twelve years afterward turned stoneware and fired kilns in the Archilla Works. He then moved to a farm of forty-six and one-half acres, situated within the corporation, and five years later sold thirteen acres of this, but subsequently added twenty-six acres, making a profit on the deal of $105, and on this land built his present modern two-story house in 1905.

On March 20, 1871, John Ewart was married to Catherine E. Organ, who was born in Indiana county, Pa., August 23, 1849, daughter of John and Margaret (Silvis) Organ, natives of the same county. In 1850, the parents of Mrs. Ewart came to Government Island, in the Mississippi, via the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, but later moved to Watertown, Rock Island county, where Mr. Organ rented a farm for several years, then went to near Cedar Falls, Ia., from there to Marshall county, Ill., and thence to North Dakota, where both he and his wife died. Since their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Ewart have lived at Carbon Cliff. Three children have been born to them: Fleming B., residing at Fresno, Cal.; P. Wesley, living at Ponderay, Ida., and Mary H., who married Grego Neubauch, on July 2, 1913. The family belongs to the Methodist church. In political sentiment Mr. Ewart is a republican.

EXNER, Joseph, is a well-known resident of Rock Island, where the greater portion of his life has been spent. He was born at Rock Island November 7, 1861, a son of Sebastian and Barbara (Shaffer) Exner. The father was an instrument maker, who came from New York to Rock Island after his marriage. He died in 1890 at the age of eighty-six years and the mother died August 19, 1886, at the age of seventy-two years. They had nine children, of whom four now survive: Charles; Frances, who is the wife of Christ Baumgardner, of Moline; Laura, who is the wife of J. H. Litlen, engaged in a grocery business, and overseer of the poor; and Joseph.

Joseph Exner attended the public schools of Rock Island and after leaving school learned the trade of a cigar-maker, which he followed for four or five years. He then went to work for the Buford Plow Company, now the Rock Island Plow Company, with whom he remained four years, when he entered the employ of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company, and was brakeman for a year and a half. Following this he worked for four years in the paint department of the Moline Wagon Works and from 1895 to 1900 was employed in the fire department, and for two years of this period was a captain. For the next three years he operated a steam drill for the S. S. Davis Company and then began working at the Arsenal, where he has since been employed. For the first three years at the Arsenal he was assigned to the machine shops, but for the past four years he has been working as fireman in the boiler room. He has a comfortable home at No. 712 Fourteen and One-half street, which he purchased in 1899. Mr. Exner is a member of St. Marius church. He is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 309, and with the Order of Owls, No. 1897, having belonged to the former organization for the past nineteen years. In politics he is a democrat.

J. S. Roberts and Wife

On October 10, 1882, Mr. Exner was united in marriage at Rock Island, with Adelia Donohue, a daughter of John and Adelia (Sullivan) Donohue, born January 26, 1863. Her parents came to America fifty or sixty years ago and were married at New York. Mr. Donohue was twice married, his first wife (mother of Mrs. Exner) dying December 25, 1866. Seven children were born of the first marriage, of whom the only ones now surviving are: Mrs. Exner and Johanna, wife of James Canel. By his second marriage Mr. Donohue had four children: Thomas, Michael, Ellen, wife of Philip Kelly, and Edward. Mr. and Mrs. Exner have had children as follows: Maud A., who is the wife of Swan Laverne, of Rock Island; Grace May, who is the wife of Joseph Lumberg, a molder and core-maker for the Moline Plow Company; Edna E., who is the wife of Francis S. Taliaferro, of Rock Island; and Hazel, Ruth M., Dewey M. and Joseph Edward, all of whom are at home. There are three grandchildren in the family: Mildred A. Laverne, Vivian Lumberg and Robert J. Taliaferro.

EYSTER, George Longhead, M. D., one of the leading practitioners of Rock Island county, was born at Chambersburg, Pa., May 14, 1853, the second child of Rev. William F. and Lucretia (Gibson) Eyster. His father was a native of Pennsylvania and his mother of Vermont. The father's family were of German origin, the Eysters being among the first settlers of Pennsylvania. Dr. Eyster's father was a clergyman of the Lutheran church, and was also engaged in the various phases of the educational work of that great institution, being for some years president of the Hagerstown female seminary, a Lutheran school located at Hagerstown, Md. In 1876, he came to Rock Island, where he occupied for ten years the chair of English literature in Augustana college. Later he removed to Crete, Neb., where he entered on a life of retirement. He is now (1913) more than ninety-one years of age, still retaining his former mental and physical strength. The mother died in 1903 at the age of seventy-eight.

Dr. Eyster did not come west with his family; but, after completing his preliminary education in the schools of his native state, he entered Pennsylvania college, from which he was graduated with the class of 1871. He then entered the medical school of the University of Pennsylvania, being graduated at the end of three years. He then removed to Crete, Neb., where he commenced the practice of his profession; but he moved to Rock Island the year following, in 1878, and has since made that city his home. Dr. Eyster's skill as a physician and surgeon earned recognition early in his professional life, and, as the years have passed, his practice and his circle of friends has steadily increased. He is a member of the St. Anthony's hospital, was county physician of Rock Island county, and was health commissioner of the city of Rock Island for six years. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the American Public Health Association, the Illinois State Medical Society, the Iowa and Illinois Central District Medical Association, the Western Surgical Society, the Clinical Congress of Surgeons of North America, and the Rock Island Medical Society, and has served as secretary of the district society for about twenty years and has been president of this organization as well as of the county medical society. In 1911, he was appointed post surgeon of the Rock Island United States Arsenal, a position which he still holds.

On February 17, 1876, Dr. Eyster was united in marriage to Miss Fannie P. Wright, a daughter of John K. Wright of Philadelphia. Both Dr. and Mrs. Eyster are prominent in the social circles of the Tri-cities, and frequently entertain delightfully in their beautiful home. The family have travelled extensively both in Europe and America. In politics Dr. Eyster has always been a republican, and though lacking both time and inclination to enter political life, he has held several important appointive offices, as mentioned above. Fraternally, he is a Mason, a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America, and of the Sigma Chi college fraternity. For two terms he has been president of the Rock Island Commercial Club.

FAIR, Grant, who is one of the prominent citizens of East Moline, has had the city's well being at heart ever since becoming a resident and has spared no effort to further the causes which have awakened his interest. He is a man of hearty endeavor and true purpose in life, and his fellow citizens recognized this in selecting him to fill the office of alderman from the Second Ward. He is popular among the best circles of the city and has a nice home here. He was born at Logansport, Cass county, Ind., in 1871, son of Parker A. and Amanda (Rhinehart) Fair, the father a native of Pennsylvania, and the mother of Indiana. Parker Fair is one of the old pioneers of Cass county, where he now lives, retired. The mother died in 1873. They were parents of four children: David and Grant, surviving; Letta and Riley, dying in infancy.

was a gardener, and finished his education in Logansport. In young manhood he learned the trade of painter, which he followed in various towns, and finally became foreman of the paint department of the largest carriage manufactory at Paxton, Ill. From there he went to Columbia City, Ind., where he held a similar position, and later took charge of a shop at Freeport, Ill. He has held the position of foreman of the painting department of the Moline Auto Company since 1907, and has demonstrated his fitness and ability to fill so important and responsible a post. He has made many friends in various circles in East Moline and is regarded as one of the city's public-spirited and substantial citizens.

On March 12, 1896, Mr. Fair was united in marriage with Daisy E. Packard, a native of Indiana, daughter of William and Delilah Packard, whose home is at Logansport, Ind., where they have lived for many years. Mr. Packard has retired from active life. Mr. and Mrs. Fair have one son, Murray Elwood, born March 14, 1901, at Paxton, Ill. Mr. Fair is affiliated with the K. P., the Odd Fellows, Eagles, Rebeccas and M. W. A., and in national politics is a republican. He was elected to the office of alderman in 1910 and re-elected in 1912, and is now (1913) acting mayor of East Moline.

FEASTER, William B.—The more intelligent of the agriculturists of Rock Island county are recognizing that there is more profit in raising the crops for which their land is suited than to trust to mere chance for selection of products. Stock raising combined with farming is profitable, and many are thus engaged, among them being William B. Feaster, owner of Walnut Grove Farm, of 140 acres, in Canoe Creek township. On this he raises corn and wheat, hogs and cattle, specializing on Poland-China hogs. He was born in the township, November 24, 1863, a son of William and Sarah B. (Marshall) Feaster, and grew up here, attending the district schools and receiving the usual training of a farmer's son. In 1892, he bought his first farm in this township, and has devoted his life to agricultural interests. The farm is one of the most pleasantly located in the township, and Mr. Feaster's fostering care has developed it very materially. He has put in all the improvements, and they have been planned and executed according to modern ideas. Few men stand any higher in the regard and confidence of the people of this locality, and he has friends wherever he is known.

On March 29, 1892, he married Jennie Wreath, a native of Rock Island county, and they have nine children: Zella L., Anna L., Madge, Howard, Paul, Bernice, Mary, Ruth and Kenneth. Mr. Feaster is a democrat, while fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and Mystic Workers, having been banker of the latter organization for one year.

FELDMAN, Frederick William August.—Frederick William August Feldman, whose beautiful property of 205 acres lies in Drury township, has spent time and money on the improvement of his property and it not only well repays him for his efforts, but in appearance deserves the name he has given it, Fairview Farm. He was born near Minden, Prussia, Germany, and is a son of Henry F. and Louisa (Kordis) Feldman. Henry F. Feldman and wife had three sons and five daughters born to them, namely: an infant; Sophia, now Mrs. August Kranz, lives in Drury township; Caroline, now Mrs. William Bakey, lives in Webster county, Iowa; Anna, Mrs. John Burkhart, lives at Muscatine, Iowa; Frederick W. A.; Henry, born in 1855, died in 1856, while the family was making the voyage of ten weeks and four days, and was buried at sea; Edward Henry lives in Drury township; and two daughters died in infancy.

In 1856 Henry F. Feldman and family reached New Orleans, La., came up the Mississippi river to St. Louis, and spent the first winter there, in the spring of 1857 coming on up the river to Muscatine, Iowa, where Mr. Feldman worked for two years in the Bennett flour mill. In the spring of 1859 he moved his family to Rock Island county and rented a farm in Drury township, which he cultivated for nine years and then bought his first forty acres, being able to pay for only a part of it at that time but through hard work and close economy not only cleared off that indebtedness but added another forty acres. His death occurred October 16, 1878, and his burial was in the Reynolds cemetery, by the side of his wife, who passed away on January 22 of the same year.

Frederick W. A. Feldman accompanied his parents to the United States and helped his father until his own marriage, when he took charge of the homestead, which was afterward willed to him by his father. Subsequently he sold that property and bought the one which he has developed into one of the finest places in the county and here he carried on general agriculture.

Mr. Feldman was married May 4, 1878, to Miss Frederika Caroline Kleist, a daughter of Christian and Christina (Louisko) Kleist of Germany-Prussia. Christian Kleist was born July 25, 1820, and died January 31, 1875. His wife was born January 3, 1825, and died October 16, 1895. They came to the United States in 1857, landing in New York harbor. From there they came to Muscatine, Iowa, and in the following spring came across the river and settled in Rock Island county. The father worked first on the farm of Silas Drury, in Drury township and afterward bought fifty-three acres from his employer. At that time it was a brush-patch, but Mr. Kleist went to work with a will and after he had built a log cabin for shelter, cleared off his land. Later he erected a neat frame house and converted the log house into a barn. Just before death he added sixty acres more to his first farm, then owning 113 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Kleist became the parents of nine children: Charles, born April 4, 1849, lives at Muscatine; Minnie, Mrs. William Krueger, born in 1851, lives in Drury township;

Gusta, Mrs. Fred Newes, born in August, 1854, died in February, 1879, and was buried in the Reynolds cemetery; Frederika Caroline, Mrs. Frederick Feldman, was born October 21, 1856; Emma died in infancy; Lewis still lives on the old homestead; Daniel lives in Drury township; Emma Caroline, Mrs. Ed. Feldman, lives in Drury township; and William is deceased.

Three sons and three daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Feldman; Edward Henry, the eldest was born January 17, 1880, and up to the time of his marriage worked at home with his father and then rented a farm for five years before purchasing eighty acres in Drury township. He is a successful farmer and prominent citizen of his township, and has served two terms as collector. On February 20, 1907, he was married to Nora Pearl Bowser, a daughter of John B. and Minnie (Spitznogle) Bowser, the father a native of Illinois, and the mother of Iowa. Mrs. Edward H. Feldman is the third in their family of six children, and was born January 18, 1885, and has brothers and sisters as follows: Mrs. Susie May Vibber, Noah Lorenzo, Rayfield B., Bella Irene, and Mattie Loretta. Edward H. Feldman and wife have three sons: Harry Edwin, born in 1908, Arthur Burnett, born in 1909; and Walter William, born in 1912. The other children of Frederick August William Feldman's family are as follows: Louise Marie was born February 16, 1884, and married G. M. Stewart of Drury township; Abbie Caroline, born January 22, 1886, is the wife of Willis Thirtyacre of Drury township, and they have one son, Paul Maynard; Elmer Daniel, born October 24, 1887; Sadie Sophia, born July 1, 1889, married N. L. Bowser of Drury township; and Frederick Henry, born June 20, 1891. The family belongs to the German Methodist church. In politics Mr. Feldman is a republican and for five years he has served as a school trustee and for nine years as a school director.

FERRIS, William.—Some of the most representative men of Rock Island county are those whose active life work is finished, and who are now enjoying the results of years of honest and earnest endeavor. One of these retired business men of Barstow is William Ferris. He was born in Gloucestershire, England, in February, 1843, being a son of John and Sarah (Belbury) Ferris, both of whom died in England. When only fifteen years of age, Mr. Ferris left home and began working in a coal mine, continuing to live in England until 1875, when he came to the United States. He first lived in La Salle, Ill., where he worked in the coal mines for a year, then left for Rapid City, Rock Island county, there continuing his mining for five years. He next went to Coal Creek, Ind.; thence to Linton, Ind., and after a few years moved back to Rapid City, all this time being engaged in coal mining. He continued to work in the coal mines in various parts of Hampton township until 1895, when he came to Barstow, built a restaurant and operated it until the spring of 1905, when he sold to his son-in-law, John Henderson, who continues to conduct it. Mr. Ferris then retired, having bought him a handsome residence.

On November 3, 1871, he was married in England to Eliza Packer, born in the same county as her husband, daughter of Daniel and Eliza (Baldwin) Packer, both of whom lived and died in England. Mr. and Mrs. Ferris became the parents of children as follows: Anna, who became Mrs. John Henderson; Bertha, who became Mrs. Frank Youngquist; Joseph, who is a telephone lineman; Thomas, who lives in Moline; Fannie, who became Mrs. Loren Grant of Watertown, Ill., and five who died in infancy. Mr. Ferris belongs to the Baptist church, and is a firm supporter of its creed. Politically he is a socialist and has served as constable. He is an earnest, steadfast man who has worked out for himself many of the social problems and believes that through the doctrines of the party he supports will true happiness and betterment of humanity be attained. Few men are more honest in their beliefs than he, and he expresses himself very logically and clearly on such subjects.

FIEBIG, Carl.—The ownership of 100 acres of rich farm land in Rock Island county means material prosperity, for this soil pays large dividends upon money invested and labor put forth. The farmers of this section are numbered among the most prosperous in the state, and one who has well-earned all he owns is Carl Fiebig, of section 30, Andalusia township. He was born in Rock Island, March 7, 1876, being a son of Charles and Mary (Otto) Fiebig, natives of Germany, who married in their own country prior to coming to America. They settled in Rock Island, where the father worked as an expert machinist. The following children were born in this family: Emma, who is at home; Carl; Frank, who is of Sears, this county, married Cora Tenegus; and Otto, who is at home.

Carl Fiebig went to school in Rock Island, and among his early teachers were Miss Freeman, Mary Carter, Nora Witherspoon and other well known educators. When he was sixteen years old, Mr. Fiebig left school, and entered his father's machine shop, where he began learning the machinist trade, but after a year, was employed driving the mail wagons in Rock Island, thus continuing for five years. At this time, his father bought the farm now owned by Mr. Fiebig and gave it to him, and he has put on almost all the improvements, including the beautiful residence, built in 1908.

On April 4, 1900, Mr. Fiebig was married to Emma S. Schultz by Rev. C. O. McCullough. She was a daughter of Jacob and Tina (Mungerson) Schultz. Mrs. Schultz died in January, 1911, but her husband survives, living in Davenport, where he is a cement contractor. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fiebig: Alta Lillie, Frederick William, Mabel Marie and Ada May. Mr. Fiebig is a member of the Christian church, and in politics he is a republican. He is a sound, reliable, enterprising young man, who thoroughly understands his work, and takes a pride in it and his premises.

FIRST, Frank H., M. D.—Surgery was already an art when medicine proper was but a phase of superstition, and notices of it can be found as early as the ancient Egyptians, who, as have been found represented on obelisk and in temple, practiced incisions, scarifications, probably even amputation, long before the date of the Ebers papyrus, 3500 B. C. Preserved in museums may be seen surgical instruments contemporary with votive offerings of the remotest Egyptian epoch, lancets, tweezers, catheters, iron rods and other instruments. The ancient Jews, no doubt, gained their knowledge of surgery from the Egyptians, and it has also been found that surgery enjoyed high esteem among the Indians in very remote times. "A physician who is no surgeon," so ran their proverb, "is like a bird with but one wing." Six centuries B. C. we find the Chinese performed surgical operations, and Japanese surgery also dates back to an early period. Down through the ages has come the art of surgery, gaining in efficiency during each century, demonstrating in each decade the wonderful cures it has been able to effect, developing men of phenomenal minds and unthought-of achievements and establishing itself more and more firmly through the years as one of the cardinal necessities of mankind. Illinois has furnished to the country some of its leading surgeons, men who have demonstrated that they could be placed with any body of men the world over and hold their own in the practice of their profession; and one of the state's practitioners who has already gained a reputation in his chosen field of endeavor is Frank H. First of Rock Island, Ill. Dr. First was born November 1, 1871, at Princeton, Ill., a son of Henry C. and Ellen (Pienkosvsky) First.

Henry C. First was born in Germany, July 7, 1841, and was but six years of age when his parents brought him to America, the family settling in Moline, Ill., where he attended the public schools until he was fifteen years of age. He then entered Chicago University, but left his studies to enlist as a soldier during the Civil war, and served for two years in the Union army. After receiving his discharge, he returned to his college, from which he was duly graduated, becoming a minister of the Baptist church, and he has continued as such to the present time. He was married to Ellen Pienkosvsky, who was born at Burt, N. Y., in 1846, and they had two children, namely: Georgia and Frank H.

Frank H. First attended the public schools of Illinois, and later entered Shurtleff College at Alton, from which he was graduated with the degree of A. M., in 1894. He then took up the study of medicine at Rush Medical College and in 1897 began the practice of his profession, which he has continued to the present time with much success. He belongs to the county, state and national medical societies, and the Iowa and Illinois Central District Medical Association, of which he was secretary for six years, from 1900 until 1906, vice-president in 1908, president in 1909. He is examining physician for the Prudential and Travelers Insurance companies, and the Missouri State, Columbia National, Hartford, North Western, Mutual, Merchants, Preferred Accident and Bankers Life Insurance companies. His fraternal connections are with the lodge, chapter and commandery of the Masonic order. In politics a republican, Dr. First was a member of the board of health for two years. With his wife he attends the Baptist church.

On October 3, 1899, Dr. First was united in marriage with Miss Carrie Bailey, who was born December 22, 1873, at Cardova, Ill., daughter of James B. and Mary (Cool) Bailey, natives of Illinois.

FIRST, Henry C., general manager of the Wilson Moline Buggy Co., is one of the most progressive of Moline's business men, and a public-spirited citizen, who has the city's best interests at heart. He was born in Moline, November 9, 1869, and inherits many of the sterling qualities of his German-born parents James and Lena (Thiersen) First. His father was a wagonmaker, who came to the United States in 1850, locating in Moline, where he went to work in a blacksmith shop near the site of his present residence. Later he founded the Moline Wagon Co., which still later became First & Rosenfield. This firm adopted the present caption upon its incorporation. In 1880, James First began operating a flour mill located near the Deere & Co.'s plow plant, on Water and First streets. He also organized a spring wagon company in Moline, and still later went to Milan, where he established wagon shops. Both he and his wife are still living, residing at No. 1827 Third avenue.

Henry C. First attended the public schools of Moline and early commenced working in his father's wagon factory. Later he entered the employ of the J. H. Wilson Co., and later still was connected with the new corporation, the Wilson Moline Buggy Co. After a year in the shops, he was taken into the office, and rose from office boy at ten dollars per month, to be bookkeeper, and finally general manager, and under his efficient care, the affairs of the company are in excellent condition.

Mr. First was married in Davenport, Ia., September 22, 1898, to Laura M. Coss, born in Rock Island, May 30, 1880, daughter of Fred C. and Jannie (Lingle) Coss, the former being one of the pioneer shoe dealers of Rock Island, now living retired in Davenport. In addition to his other interests, Mr. First is a stockholder in the Wilson Moline Buggy Co., and vice-president and stockholder in the Wright Carriage Body Co. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and the order of Elks, and is an enthusiastic Mason. Politically, he is a republican, but his absorbing business affairs give him no time for public life. Possessed of splendid executive ability, Mr. First has been able to place his concern among the leaders in its line in this part of the country, and has made it a sound, reliable, trustworthy institution.

FIRST, Louis C.—The First family is one of the representative ones in Rock Island county, and like many others whose members are accounted as being among the best citizens of this part of the state, its founder here was of German birth. One of those bearing this honored name is Louis C. First, foreman of the blacksmith shop of the Wilson Moline Buggy Company of Moline, living at No. 2124 Fifth avenue. He is a son of James and Lena (Thieson) First, born in Germany. The father was a wagonmaker, who came to the United States in 1850, and coming to Moline, went into a blacksmith shop near the site of his present home. Later he built a little shop on the present location of the Moline Wagon Company, which he founded, under the name of First & Rodenfield. This firm was later incorporated under the caption of the Moline Wagon Company. In 1880, he embarked in a flour-mill business, his plant being located near Deere & Company's plant, conducting it under the firm name of Waters & First. After several years, he organized a wagon factory in Moline, then went to Milan, to organize a wagon shop there, conducting it for eight years. This energetic man then went into a lumber business in Moline, which he continues to conduct, both he and his wife surviving, making their home at No. 1827 Third avenue.

Louis C. First attended the public schools of Moline, and began working in a blacksmith shop for his father at Milan. After three years, he went with the Moline Wagon Company, being with the latter company five years, when he entered the employ of the Sechler Carriage Company, and remained with this concern for two years. He was then offered the position of foreman of the blacksmith shop of the Wilson Moline Buggy Company, in the fall of 1894, and accepting it, has occupied it ever since.

Mr. First was married in Geneseo, Ill., October 31, 1895, to Anna H. Kimball, born there, November 18, 1872, a daughter of Charles and Clara (Sundberg) Kimball, a carriage woodworker, who died in Geneseo, his widow surviving him and living in Moline. Mr. and Mrs. First became the parents of children as follows: Harry, who was born in Moline, August 4, 1896, is now attending high school, and Lilah, who was born in Moline in January, 1898, died in January, 1901, and is interred in Riverside cemetery. Mr. First is an active republican, and served as ward committeeman from the second precinct of the fourth ward. He belongs to the Red Men, and to the North Western Mutual Life Insurance Company of Milwaukee, Wis. Mrs. First belongs to the Lutheran church, but Mr. First is liberal in his religious convictions. He is a broad-gauged man, who believes in allowing everyone freedom of opinion, and his liberal views and kindness of disposition have materially aided him in handling the men under his charge. He is liked by them, as well as by his employers, who appreciate his care for their interests, and he is an excellent representative not only of his family, but his community.

FISHER, Gus.—In order to meet successfully any large demands, a man must possess a knowledge of his special line of endeavor, and an appreciation of the laws governing supply and the requirements which make possible the extension and maintenance of business. Rock Island is the center of an immense trade in almost every line, and consequently all industries connected with its upbuilding and development, are very important. Gus Fisher, recognizing this fact, has built up a large trade in cement contracting. He was born in Sweden, in 1872, a son of Swan and Mary (Fisherström) Fisher. Coming to the United States, in 1893, Mr. Fisher worked along different lines until 1901, when he located at Rock Island, and began as a cement contractor, branching out until he now controls a steady and reliable trade. During the years he has been engaged in the cement business here Mr. Fisher has executed some very important contracts, among them being the concrete work of the Arsenal bridge in 1907. He had full charge of this work, and executed it to the entire satisfaction of all parties concerned. Understanding every detail of this important branch of the building trades, Mr. Fisher has come to occupy a responsible place among other leaders in his line of endeavor, and is counted among the thoroughly representative men of Rock Island county.

In 1897, Mr. Fisher married Ada Peterson, born in Sweden, who came to this country alone. They have two children, Clarence and Gustave. In religious belief he is a Lutheran. Fraternally he belongs to the Independent Order of Svithiod. In politics, he is a republican. The family reside at No. 914 Third avenue, Rock Island.

FITZPATRICK, Frank R.—If every section of the country was as productive as the land in and about South Rock Island, the farmers would be the wealthiest people in the United States. Still, there is no doubt but that much of this prosperity is due to the intelligent efforts put forth by the agriculturists themselves, and among them none is more progressive than Frank R. Fitzpatrick, gardener and truck and fruit farmer of this locality. He was born on the place he now owns, February 16, 1868, a son of James and Catherine (Reunch) Fitzpatrick, both natives of Ireland, who came to the United States when quite young, the father being twenty years old, and the mother fourteen years old. For three years after coming here, the father lived in New York City, and then came to Rock Island county, engaging in farming in South Rock Island. The parents met and were married in this section. Mr. Fitzpatrick died here in 1893, aged seventy-three years, while his widow survived him until 1903, when she too passed away, aged seventy-one years. In religious faith, the father was a Catholic, and the mother an Episcopalian, and in politics the father was a democrat. Their children were: John, a furniture dealer of Springfield, Ill.; and Frank R.

Frank R. Fitzpatrick was educated in the public schools here and in the Duncan business college of Davenport. When he was twenty-one years old, he began learning the carpenter trade, and worked at it for eight years, when he bought the home place which he has operated ever since.

On April 6, 1894, Frank R. Fitzpatrick was married at Muscatine, Iowa, to Lulu Neeley of Illinois City, Ill. They have had five children: James, Walter, Frank, Miller and Hartley. In politics, Mr. Fitzpatrick is a republican, but although he belongs to no religious organization, fraternally he is a member of Camp No. 3627, Modern Woodmen of America. Possessing many of the excellent qualities of his parents, Mr. Fitzpatrick has made many friends, and is highly regarded by all who know him.

FLAHERTY, James.—During the past half a century farming methods have been revolutionized and the older agriculturalists have seen many changes effected. They have also seen some failures as well as successes, and from their own experiences and those of others have been able to adopt the best ways of working. One of those who belongs to the older generation here in Rock Island county is James Flaherty, owner of thirty-two acres of stock and fruit farm land, of section 30, Edgington township, which has been his home since 1862. He was born in County Galway, Ireland, in 1850, a son of Edward and Honora (Corbett) Flaherty. The paternal grandfather was James Flaherty and he married a Miss O'Malley, and the maternal grandmother was a Miss French, sister to Lord French of Killmore. These grandparents all died in Ireland. The father emigrated to the United States in 1853, his family following him in 1856. He landed at New Orleans, from whence he went to Cincinnati, O., and there did general labor, until coming to Rock Island county in 1862. He then began farming on the place now owned by his son, and there died, February 9, 1877, his wife also being deceased. Their children were: Margaret, Mrs. Miles Joyce, deceased; Mary, Mrs. John Kelley of Buffalo Prairie township; James; John of Council Bluffs, Ia.

James Flaherty was four years old when the family landed in America, and was brought up on his home place, receiving a good common education in the Monitor school. Until he was of age, he worked for his father, and then took charge of the farm, which he has operated ever since. In November, 1876, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Dailey of Rock Island, a daughter of Patrick Dailey. Mr. and Mrs. Flaherty have had children as follows: Mary, Mrs. C. H. Ross of Rock Island; Margaret; Edward; Barnard, deceased; John; Kate, deceased; and Emmet. They are all members of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic church of Edgington, and helped to build the present edifice, having been among its first members. In politics, Mr. Flaherty is a democrat. He is a splendid type of the reliable men of his land, to whose ability and genius this country owes so much.

FLINDT, Frederick Henrich (deceased).—In enumerating the work and deeds of the pioneers, many forget one thing and that is the fact that the strenuous life they were forced to lead, carried off many of them in the very prime of life before they were able to enjoy the fruit of their labors. The tombstones in any old graveyard testify to this, inasmuch as nearly half of the older ones record the deaths of both men and women who ought under ordinary conditions to have nearly doubled their years. This only increases the debt present civilization owes to these sturdy forerunners of advancement, and makes necessary a record of their lives in a work of this nature. One of these martyrs to early conditions was the late Frederick Henrich Flindt, born in Holstein, Germany, March 19, 1843, who died in Coe township, in 1874, when only thirty-one years old.

Mr. Flindt grew up in his native land, there being educated in the public schools. Two years before he came to the United States, on December 15, 1866, he was married to Anna Mehrens, daughter of Claus and Mary (Linderman) Mehrens. Mrs. Flindt was born in Holstein, Germany, November 9, 1846. She was a loyal and devoted wife, who bore with her husband all the hardships of the new life into which they entered when, in 1868, they set sail for New York on a steamship. From New York they came direct to Rock Island county, and bought forty acres of woodland in Coe township. This land had to be cleared and a frame house and commodious barn and outbuildings were erected. While the husband was at work on these improvements, death removed him, and the faithful wife struggled on by herself, although later on assisted by her son Claus, who had been born in 1867. He lives with her, and is now operating the home farm. Claus Flindt was educated in the district schools and is one of the substantial young men of Coe township. The children were all reared in the German Lutheran church. Mr. Flindt's remains were tenderly laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Davenport, and his funeral was largely attended by those who wished to pay last honors to his memory and proffer their sympathy to his bereaved widow.

FLYNN, Dan Joseph, one of the business men of Rock Island, proprietor of The Quad, at No. 207 Seventeenth street and the Alley Inn at No. 1819 Second avenue, was born at Sterling, Ill., in 1876, a son of David and Cecille (Mee) Flynn. The father was born in Ireland in 1847, and came to this country when small, locating at New York, where he remained a short time, then came to Sterling, Ill. His wife came from County Galway, Ireland, and was a trained nurse before her marriage. Before his retirement, the father was a stone-quarry worker, and was employed at railroad grading as well throughout Illinois and Wisconsin. Both he and his wife are living at Sterling. They had seven children: Michael, who is superintendent of the bridge building and construction of the North-Western Railroad offices in Chicago; William, who is a horseman of Sterling; John, who is foreman of the building and bridge division of the Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad; Mary, who is the wife of Walter Morris, a gasfitter of Chicago, who handles all kinds of gas fixtures; and Patrick, who died when nine months old from the effects of an accident in which he was scalded by boiling tea.

Dan J. Flynn was reared at Sterling, where he attended the public schools, and took a course in mechanical drawing at the Sterling business college. He then learned the machinist trade in that same city, working at the different factories for seven years. For the next year, he worked for the DeKalb Iron Works, and then went to Chicago, where he spent a year, and following that, he went to Milwaukee. In 1903, he came to Davenport, Iowa, where he worked at the arsenal, and also in the city for two years. In 1905, he opened a first-class cafe, but selling it, went into the vending machine business, under the name of Winters & Flynn, but later, disposed of his interest to his partner. In 1907, he once more embarked in a cafe and buffet business at Davenport. Later, he went on the road for the Tossetti Brewery of Chicago. Leaving the road, he once more opened a buffet in Davenport, and also was interested in a wholesale liquor business. In 1909, he came to Rock Island and opened The Quad, which he continues to operate. In 1910, he bought a buffet, cafe and hotel, known as the Alley Inn, which he conducts.

In 1908 Mr. Flynn married Irene Anderson of Moline, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto F. Anderson of Moline. Mrs. Flynn was a dress-maker previous to her marriage and employed by her mother, who operates a dress-making school, at Moline, Ill. Mrs. Flynn was born in 1886 at Varna, Ill. One child, Richard Leon Flynn, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Flynn, May 5, 1908. Mr. Flynn is a Catholic. He is very liberal in politics. The Eagles, Owls and Moose hold his membership, and he belongs to the Illinois Liquor Dealers' Association, and also that of Iowa, and the Machinists' Union. In addition to his retail stores, he does a large wholesale business. Mr. Flynn owns property in Sterling and Decatur, Ill., and did own a beautiful residence at Davenport, Iowa, which he recently sold.

FORD, William R. (deceased).—Modern business, in its keen competition, demands excellence along every line, the time having gone by when mediocre men and half-way methods would be tolerated by the great corporations that carry on the commercial affairs of the country. Particularly is this true in the great lumber industry, and when a man becomes an acknowledged expert along this line it means that he has had natural qualifications for the same and has taken advantage of every experience. The late William R. Ford, formerly expert inspector of lumber for the Moline Plow Company, at Moline, Ill., was so connected with this concern from October, 1903, to his death, and for almost thirty years was identified with some branch of the lumber business. He was born in Clinton county, Ill., February 12, 1856, and was a son of Daniel and Nancy M. (Dunn) Ford. The father and mother were both born at Bowling Green, the former in 1819 and the latter in 1826. The father was a carpenter by trade but after coming to Clinton county, Ill., when twenty years of age, combined farming with carpentering and spent the rest of his life on his own place. He was accidentally killed by the fall of a scaffold in 1858. His burial was in Wheatfield township, Clinton county. His widow survived until 1878.

William R. Ford was reared on the home farm and attended the country schools. For four years he herded cattle on Beaver Prairie, for John Galliger, and then worked on the farm until twenty-one years old, when he went to Carlyle, in his native county, and there learned the blacksmith trade. Mr. Ford then went to Carmi, Ill., where he was employed in a saw mill for eleven years and for ten years more was in a lumber yard. In October, 1903, he came to Moline to accept a responsible position with the Moline Plow Company. As lumber inspector he visited Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee and Arkansas, personally inspecting great timber tracts from which the company purchased its supplies. He was a republican in politics and while residing at Carmi served in a number of important city offices, being mayor for one term, alderman for three terms, supervisor for one term, and a member of the school board for nine years and during a part of the time was president of this body.

Mr. Ford was married the first time on March 3, 1875, in Clinton county, Ill., to Miss Harriet Huckaberry, a daughter of Greenberry and Betsey (Norman) Huckaberry. The father, who is now deceased, was a farmer all his life. Mrs. Huckaberry lives at Carlyle, Ill. Six children were born to the above marriage, namely: Daniel W., who was born in Clinton county, October 3, 1877, lives at Moline, married Clara Stang, and they have three children—Eva, Edith and Clara Belle; George A. who was born at Carmi, Ill., October 12, 1881, is connected with the Mann Wagon Works, at Stoughton, Wis., married Josephine Lynch; Maud, who was born at Carmi, September 6, 1884, lives at home; and William A., who was born at Carmi, March 16, 1892, works in the wood department of the Moline Plow Works, while two children, Annie and Gertrude, died in infancy. Mr. Ford was married (second) at Wessen, Miss., June 12, 1910, to Miss Alice Reed, who was born there in June, 1873. Mr. Ford was a member of the Spencer Memorial Methodist church at Rock Island. He belonged to Camp 38, M. W. A., Court of Honor 100 of Moline, in which he held all the offices, including chancellor of the court. William R. Ford died September 13, 1912, leaving his widow

FORSYTH, Dexter J., a prosperous farmer and thrifty business man, is one of the representative men of Cordova township, Rock Island county, Ill., where his birth occurred, November 4, 1865. He is a son of Jasper and Josephine (Rathburn) Forsyth, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. They came to Cordova township, when young, settling on a farm Jasper Forsyth bought here, but four years later they moved to Eagle, Neb. On this journey he drove thirteen head of cattle and four horses. There he bought 160 acres of land, living on it a year, then, on account of bad health, returned as far east as Princeton, Ia. His father owned a farm in that vicinity, and he lived on it three years, then bought another farm in Cordova township, which continued the family home until 1901. Then Mr. Forsyth moved to Cordova, where he lived retired until his death, September 9, 1911. He served as postmaster nine years, was supervisor of the township two terms, and road commissioner three terms. His widow lives in her home at Cordova, Ill. The children were: Dexter J.; John, of Alberta, Canada; Luther, of Moline, Ill.; Millie, now Mrs. James Grinn, and William, of Cordova township.

Dexter J. Forsyth was educated in the common schools, and remained with his parents until he was twenty-two years old, when he married and then rented the home farm for two years, afterward rented the farm he now owns, later buying it, and adding to it until he now has 160 acres of fine farming land. He bought a steam threshing engine in 1886, which was the first used in this section, and has since operated it. He was also the first farmer to put in use a hay baler. Since 1910, Mr. Forsyth has been an agent of the International Harvester Company, and since 1906 has been agent for the Red Jacket Pump Company. One of the organizers of the Cordova Telephone Company, he served three years as its president, and is now serving a two-year term, having been elected in 1912, and since 1909 he has been a director.

On May 16, 1888, Mr. Forsyth was married to Electa Hull, born in Cordova township, December 28, 1868, daughter of Silas and Sophronia (Williams) Hull, natives of Mercer county, Pa., and Orleans county, N. Y., respectively. They married in Jo Daviess county, Ill. Mr. Hull died in Medford, Oregon, in 1894. Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth became the parents of children as follows: Laura, Mrs. Henry Eisenhauer, of Coe township; Benjamin, of Moline, who was married October 1, 1913, to Miss Amy Opdyke of Cordova; Daisy, Earl, Mae, Ruth, Allen, Lois and Mary, at home. Mrs. Forsyth is a member of the Baptist church. These are among the very best people of Cordova township, and stand for what is highest in rural life. Successful in every sense of the word, they can feel that they have honestly earned their prosperity, and FOSTER, Alfred Thomas, postmaster of Moline, was born at Galena, Ill., July 31, 1873, a son of Thomas and Mary Lisa (Hempstead) Foster, the former born at Carlisle, Pa., October 17, 1817; and the latter, at Galena, Ill., April 6, 1837. The father was a merchant.

Alfred Thomas Foster was educated in the public schools at Galena, and in Parsons' College at Fairfield, Iowa, and following his graduation from the latter institution with the degree of Bachelor of Science, he settled in Moline, September 15, 1894. For a few months he was employed as reporter for the Republican-Journal, and from early in 1895, until receiving his appointment as postmaster, he was connected with the editorial department of the Moline Dispatch, retiring April 1, 1910, to enter the postoffice. Mr. Foster was appointed March 15, 1910, by President Taft as postmaster of Moline. Politically, he is a republican.

On September 11, 1898, Mr. Foster was married at Moline, to Louise I. King, daughter of Cassius M. and Mary (Newell) King. One daughter, Mary Hempstead Foster, was born to this marriage, September 24, 1899. The family home is at No. 1812 Sixth Avenue, Moline. Fraternally, Mr. Foster belongs to Doric Lodge, A. F. & A. M. No. 319, Moline; Moline Lodge No. 556, B. P. O. E.; King Philip Tribe No. 94, Improved Order of Red Men. His newspaper connections led him to associate himself with the Press Club of Chicago and the Tri-City Press Club, and he served one term as president of the latter organization. Socially, he belongs to the Hamilton Club, Chicago, and the Moline Club of Moline, and has been president of the latter two terms, also vice-president and director.

FOSTER, George (deceased).—After having made an enviable record as a man of progress, conscientious effort and capability, the late George Foster passed away from earthly activities, leaving behind a family and many warm, personal friends to mourn his loss. He was born in Lancashire, England, December 10, 1825, a son of John and Ann (Sutcliffe) Foster, both born in England, in the county of Yorkshire. He was educated in the common schools of his native place, and grew to manhood there.

On February 13, 1848, Mr. Foster was married to Eliza Gaunt of Yorkshire, near the sea, born January 18, 1826. The next year George Foster, his parents, two younger brothers, and his young wife, came to America, via Cincinnati, thence down the Ohio river and up the Mississippi river to Andalusia, Rock Island county, Ill., where they bought a 160-acre farm. Later, George Foster bought an eighty-acre farm in Mercer county, Ill., where they lived about four years. They then came back to their original farm in Rock Island county, but after several years the entire family moved to the city of Rock Island. Mr. Foster then established himself in a marble working business, but later was associated with Mr. Coffman. Mr. Foster's death occurred September 21, 1899, when he was seventy-four years old, after a life of useful endeavor, filled with kindly acts and generous thoughts. For many years Mr. Foster resided at No. 722 Twenty-fourth street, Rock Island, where his widow now lives. Both Mr. and Mrs. Foster were baptized in the Church of England, where Mrs. Foster's uncle was a curate in the established church, but after coming to this country they attended the Methodist church and joined that body. Upon locating in Rock Island, they connected themselves with the First Methodist church of this city, and were active in its good works. For many years Mr. Foster had charge of the church property. Mr. Foster was a member of the Masonic order, belonging to the Rock Island Commandery, K. T.

Mrs. Foster is over eighty-seven years old and can talk entertainingly of the early days here. She recalls when the family soap was all made at home; when the women spun and wove flax and wool for clothing, and knit all the stockings, for in those days there were no handy ten-cent stores to supply the needs of the settlers. She is a daughter of Joshua and Ann (Hinsliff) Gaunt. A maternal uncle of Mrs. Foster's was one of King George IV.'s Life Guards. Mr. and Mrs. Foster had no issue, but were generously interested in many a child who owed much to their quiet charity, which consisted in giving without letting the world know of their benefactions.

FOWLER, Frank Leonard.—Buffalo Prairie township has more than its share of responsible, reliable farmers who understand their business and make every inch of their land yield a good profit. For this reason the township is in a prosperous condition and it ranks high among the divisions of Rock Island county. One of the agriculturists who belongs to the above mentioned class is Frank Leonard Fowler of section 6, born in the township September 25, 1870, a son of John Bennett and Margaret (Briggs) Fowler. Until he was nineteen years old Mr. Fowler spent his time attending the public schools and working on his father's farm. His first teacher was Gustav Davis, and he remembers him kindly. When he reached his twentieth year he began working among the farmers, although he spent a good deal of time at home, assisting his mother. In 1892 he was married at Muscatine, Iowa, to Minnie Armstrong, daughter of Dr. W. W. and Mary (Hubbard) Armstrong. For the first year after marriage Mr. Fowler lived on the home farm and then for two years rented a ranch in Buffalo Prairie township. Following this he worked two other farms, until 1909, when he bought his present property of forty-three acres. His life has been spent at farm work and he understands it thoroughly. His money is invested here and he is interested in developing not only his individual property, but his township as well. Since he cast his first vote he has been a democrat and has served as constable three years. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. Although brought up in the Methodist faith he is not connected with any church organization. A live, progressive, young man, he is imbued with modern ideas, and is working out some of them on his farm with remarkable success. His belief in the continued prosperity of this section of the state is very strong and he is willing to do his full part to justify his faith.

FOWLER, James P., whose fine grain and stock farm is located in Drury township, Rock Island county, was born on this farm June 3, 1862, a son of Daniel and Mary Ann (James) Fowler. Daniel Fowler was born at Leeds, England, September 24, 1816, and died in Drury township, Rock Island county, May 29, 1894. He was married September 11, 1836, at Lady Lane church, Leeds, England, to Mary Ann James, who was born in Yorkshire, England, May 1, 1817, and died September 19, 1888, and both she and husband rest in St. Mary's Catholic church cemetery at Muscatine, Ia. Seven children were born to them in England and four after arriving in America, which country they reached in 1853. Mr. Fowler found work at his trade of machinist at Walker's Mills, near Philadelphia, Pa., and he and his family lived there for one year and then moved to Davenport, Iowa, and one year afterward came to Rock Island county. Here Daniel Fowler bought 160 acres of land on section 27, in Drury township, and moved his family on this farm. Later he bought eighty additional acres in section 34, after making all the improvements on the other tract and clearing all but four acres. The children born to Daniel and Mary Ann Fowler were as follows: Joseph, who was born September 3, 1837, died aged one year, and was buried in England; Johanna, who was born August 22, 1839, became Mrs. Richard Stanley, died February 14, 1875, and was buried in the Illinois City cemetery; John, who was born September 3, 1842, died in England, in 1843; Thomas J., who was born April 14, 1844, lives in Drury township; Joseph John, who was born July 19, 1846, died November 25, 1911, and is buried in Altavista cemetery, Daviess county, Mo.; Mary Elizabeth, who was born March 18, 1849, is now Mrs. John McDevitt, and lives at Red Oak, Iowa; Victoria Louise, who was born June 3, 1852, died October 17, 1867, and her burial was at Muscatine, Iowa; Frances Sarah, who was born June 25, 1859, died October 19, 1867; James P.; Daniel, who lives at Davenport, Iowa; and Catherine Martha, who was born May 6, 1864, lives in Drury township.

James P. Fowler obtained a district school education and afterward worked for his father on the home farm. After the latter's death he bought 120 acres of the homestead which he devotes to general farming and stock raising, buying and selling cattle and hogs and raising fine cattle, making a specialty of the Polled Angus black cattle. In politics Mr. Fowler is a republican and is serving in his second year as supervisor. He is identified with the Masonic fraternity.

FOWLER, John B.—Early settlements were made in Rock Island county because of its location with relation to the Mississippi river. In pioneer days, when railroads had not yet bisected the country, the water courses were the highways of commerce, and of course the Mississippi was chief among them all. While many located along the river front here, much of the land further back remained undeveloped for years, and it fell to the lot of the sturdy agriculturists who came a little later on to bring it under the plow. One of the men counted among the early settlers here is John B. Fowler of Buffalo Prairie township. He was born in Kentucky, June 10, 1837, a son of Charles and Nancy Fowler, also natives of Kentucky. The father was a carpenter by trade, who moved to New Berlin, Ill., in 1837, when John B. was six weeks old. In 1848 the father went to Muscatine, Iowa, but died at Walton, Ill., when seventy-nine years old. After the death of his first wife he married Nancy Palmer. By his first marriage he had the following children: William H., who died young; Amanda, who also died young; Becky, who is Mrs. Robert Lindsay; James; and John B. By his second marriage he had one son, Charles, who is now of Colorado.

John B. Fowler was educated in the common schools of Muscatine. He grew up on the home farm and has always been engaged in agricultural pursuits. In conjunction with his farming he has been an extensive wood chopper, furnishing a large amount of cord wood. His property shows the result of years of hard work and is very valuable. John B. Fowler was married at Illinois City, Ill., to Margaret Ann Briggs, a daughter of Oscar and Sarah Ann (Kreler) Briggs. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler became the parents of children as follows: John, who is of Henry county, Ill.; Charles, who is of Muscatine, Iowa; Becky Ann, who is of Greene county, Iowa, married John Snively; William, who is of Henry county, Ill.; Frank, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work; and Teat of Muscatine county, Iowa. John B. Fowler has been a resident of his present farm for half a century. For many years he has been a consistent member of the Methodist church. In politics he is a democrat. Always hard-working, thrifty and a good manager, he has accumulated a valuable property, and at the same time endeared himself to his associates and family.

FRANCE, William A., one of the pioneers of Rock Island county, has been a resident here since he was fourteen years of age, and has participated in many of the remarkable changes that have taken place in this section of the state. At present he is one of the honored residents of Illinois City, which has been his home since 1896. He was born in Louisville, Stark county, O., May 30, 1834, being a son of Louis France. The latter was born in Baltimore, Md., and was six years old when war was declared for the second time with England. His father was a soldier in the War of 1812, fighting in defense of Baltimore. The grandfather was named Peter France, and his wife was named Elizabeth. They went to Pennsylvania, and thence to Stark county, O., and there he died an old man. While living in Baltimore, Peter France was a hotel keeper.

Louis France was a young man when he went to Stark county, O., and there he married Julia Landon. By trade the father was a carpenter, and he moved to Rock Island county in 1848, thinking to find better opportunities here. He rented land for three years in Buffalo Prairie township, and then bought 120 acres of school land, but later sold it, and moved to another tract in the same township. In 1860, he moved to Missouri and from Missouri to Kansas, then going back to Missouri he remained a short time and settled near Atlantis, Ia., where he died, his wife having died in Missouri, several years before. Their children were: William A.; Edward, who is deceased; Mary Jane, who married Harvey Howard, died in Illinois City; Louis, who moved to the state of Washington; Amanda, who married Hiram Allen, died in Missouri; Henry Harrison who served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil war, was taken prisoner at Bull Run, and is now an inmate of a soldiers' home at Quincy, Ill.; Miranda, who married Samuel Hitt, died in Chicago; Melissa, who married Jacob Templeman of Iowa; James Harter, who is of Colorado, and John Wesley, who is of St. Louis.

William A. France attended school in Portage county, O., having been but six years old when his father moved to that locality, and he was thirteen years old when the family arrived in Rock Island county, so he continued his studies in Buffalo Prairie township, going to the log schoolhouse. His first teacher here was a Mrs. Crabb. As a boy he began helping his father, and thus continued until his marriage. This occurred December 9, 1858, when he was united by Squire Edgington, to Emma Bruner, daughter of John and Ann Rex (Bockius) Bruner. For a few years after his marriage, Mr. France rented land, but then bought eighty acres in Buffalo Prairie township, and continued to purchase land until he owned 480 acres. Since then he has divided his land up among his children, retaining but forty acres for himself, and in 1896, retired to Illinois City. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., and in politics he is a republican, having served as school director for six years. Mrs. France is a member of a family as follows: Mrs. France; Almira and Salina, who were twins, the former marrying Gideon Brayton of Iowa, and the latter marrying George Duffield, died in Illinois City; Samuel who went into the army, and died in a hospital in Tennessee, and Windom Bruner who lives in Oregon. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. France were: John, who is a merchant of Illinois City, married Nellie Cobb, issue: Raymond and Wafton; Wyndham, who is of Buffalo Prairie township, married Ida Vanatta, issue: Laura and Lulu; Mary Isabella, who is a stenographer living at Omaha, Neb.; Charles Samuel, who married Jennie Reed, lives in Wilton, Ia., issue: Nellie, Emma and Walter; and Elmer, who married Dora Ellsworth, lives in Buffalo Prairie township, issue: Mary M., deceased, and Willie.

When Mr. France came to this locality Rock Island county presented an entirely different appearance from what it does today. Pioneer conditions prevailed, and few of any of the modern improvements were to be found. Each one of those pioneers bore his part in the remarkable advancement. Mr. France worked very hard developing his land, and making it valuable, and thereby raising the standard of agriculture in his section. As he has always been public-spirited, he took an interest in securing various improvements, and in his declining years can look back with pleasure and pride on the achievements of his years of endeavor.

FRANCIS, Louis G., proprietor of the fruit and candy store at No. 1610 Second avenue, Rock Island, is one of the enterprising business men of the city. Perhaps there is no man in his special line who so thoroughly understands his business as Mr. Francis, and this in a measure accounts for the popularity of the Rock Island Candy Kitchen, as he calls his establishment. Mr. Francis was born in Damascus, Syria. In 1906, he came to the United States, and going to La Salle, Ill., he worked as a laborer for a time, until he accumulated sufficient to start in business for himself. Mr. Francis is a son of John and Jennie Francis, the former, who was a farmer, died in 1903, in Syria, but the latter is still living. They had five children: Moses, who is a traveling salesman, lives at Rock Island; Louis; Rose, Jimmie and Ada, who are all living in Syria. Moses married, in 1903, Mary Michael, also of Syria, but their four children are deceased. Understanding silks thoroughly, Moses Francis is interested in imported goods in this line, and is agent for several well-known foreign houses.

Louis Francis manufactures candies, and bundles candies, fruits and ice cream. His establishment is a large one, and as his products are of the best, he enjoys a large and growing trade. In religious faith, he is a Catholic. Politically he is very liberal, believing in voting rather for the best man, than tying down to party creed. What Mr. Francis has, he has earned himself, and when it is remembered that he has been in this country only six years, his success becomes remarkable. In addition to being a good business man, Mr. Francis is an excellent citizen, and takes pride in his city and adopted country, where he has already accomplished so much.

FRANKLIN, Leslie E.—It is a noticeable fact that the agriculturists of any section who have the best farms are those who take the most pride in the prosperity of their community and the most active part in the upbuilding and development of the section in which they reside, and this is true of the farmers of Rock Island county. One of these representative farmers is Leslie E. Franklin, who owns and operates a fine tract of land in Hampton township. Mr. Franklin was born on the farm on which he now lives, October 17, 1851, and is a son of Joel G. and Betsie Phadelia (Edwards) Franklin, natives of Vermont, and grandson of Philip and Addie Franklin, of near Brattleboro, Vt., and Luther Edwards, the latter of whom came to Hampton township in 1839.

Joel G. Franklin, who was one of the earliest settlers of Hampton township, came here as early as 1838, and secured 160 acres of land on section 26, on which he continued to carry on agricultural pursuits until his death, developing an excellent property and becoming one of the prominent farmers of his community. He had the following children: Mary, who married William Golden; Addie, who married Benjamin Golden, died in 1909; Sanford, who died in Kansas in 1908; Rose, who married I. M. Spencer of Osceola, Ill.; Leslie E.; and Albert, who met death by drowning in infancy.

Leslie E. Franklin attended the public schools of Hampton township until he was twelve years of age, and then began to assume his share of duties on the home farm on which he has always resided. He was married in January, 1879, to Louisa Brandt, who was born in Magdeburg, Germany, daughter of Henry Brandt, coming to this country at the age of six years with her father and stepmother. After his marriage, Mr. Franklin took up his residence on his present farm, which he secured from his father, and here he has continued to be engaged in general farming and stock raising to the present time. He is wide awake to the advantages of having the latest farming machinery and appliances for carrying on his operations, and his land is a model of neatness, and he has been well rewarded for the labor and pains he has spent in bringing it to its present high state of cultivation. In addition, he is the owner of forty acres of timberland located in the western part of the township. In political matters Mr. Franklin is a republican and he takes a keen interest in public matters, but has never cared for public office. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin have had the following children: Alida and Philip, who reside at home; Fannie, who married Edward Clark of Rock Island; Lester, who met death by drowning when fourteen months of age; and Millie, Ada, Mary, Julia and Freedom, who are all living at home.

FREDERICK, Andrew (deceased), formerly foreman of the Rock Island Lumber Yards, and one of the substantial men of this city, resided at No. 1126 Nineteenth street, Rock Island, where his widow still lives. He was born in Eppwreith, Baiern, Germany, January 30, 1835, being a son of Claus Frederick, mayor of his city. The father died in Germany as did his wife, neither ever leaving that country. There were two sons and one daughter in their family. Andrew Frederick came to America in 1856, landing at New York City, from whence he came direct to Rock Island, feeling that here he could find better opportunities. In 1876, he embarked in a grocery business, but later went into the employ of the Weyerhaeusers as foreman in their saw mill. Still later he entered the employ of the Rock Island Lumber Company, and worked his way up to the position of foreman, which was one of considerable responsibility.

During the Civil war, Mr. Frederick proved himself one of the loyal, brave lovers of liberty who, of German birth, did so much to help to save the integrity of their adopted country. He enlisted in Co. H, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from Rock Island, in 1862, and was promoted until he held the rank of sergeant when he was honorably discharged in 1865.

On October 20, 1874, he was married to Fredericka Gall, born April 27, 1852, in Wittenburg, Germany, daughter of Fritz and Willemina Gall, the former born April 26, 1828, and the latter in the same year. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick had children as follows: Wilhemina, who was born October 17, 1876; William, who was born December 16, 1878; and Mary, who was born September 13, 1886; two died in infancy. Wilhemina and Andrew Casper. The living children have all been educated in the public schools of the city. Mr. Frederick belonged to the Presbyterian church. In politics he was a republican, but never sought public office. Fraternally, he was an Odd Fellow. A veteran of the Civil war, a hard-working man, never shirking any duty, but trying to carry out his idea of good citizenship. Mr. Frederick was a man whom all honored, and who retained friendships which lasted his lifetime. While working in the lumber yard, Mr. Frederick was injured by an accident, some lumber dropping upon his head, and while he lived for about three years after that, his injuries finally resulted in his death, May 5, 1887.

FREEBURG, Abraham L.—Agricultural conditions have improved so materially during the past few years that the farmer of today is a man to be envied, especially if he owns some of the rich land of Rock Island county. One of those who is profitably engaged in tilling the soil here is Abraham L. Freeburg of sections 22 and 23, Bowling township. He was born at Dubuque, Ia., December 15, 1853, a son of William and Isabella (Foster) Freeburg. The father was a native of Holland who came to America in 1845 or 1846. His family was as follows: Abraham L.; Mary E., who is the wife of Atlas Tindal, a farmer; and Miss Jennie, who lives with her brother Abraham. Abraham L. Freeburg was educated in the schools of Bowling township, afterwards taking a business course in the commercial college of Rock Island. He then returned to the farm. On October 17, 1894, he married Ida Barrett, born in Maine, March 24, 1856, and they have one son, William D., born January 30, 1898. Her father was born July 22, 1824, and died July 19, 1913, and her mother born in February, 1826, died October 29, 1861. Mr. Barrett came to Rock Island county in 1864, and located at Port Byron where he lived until 1911. Mr. and Mrs. Freeburg belong to the Methodist church. He is independent in politics, and has served as school trustee for fifteen years, and township clerk for seven years, supervisor for four years, for nine years has been highway commissioner, and for six years has been a justice of the peace. He is a life member of the Farmers' National Congress. For the past three years, he has been vice-president of the Farmers' Bank of Reynolds, Ill.

Abraham L. Freeburg owns 240 acres of fine land in the township, and his residence is one of the best in this locality. He has been very prominent in township affairs since he cast his first vote, and has rewarded his constituents by giving them an honest, careful and conscientious administration of public affairs. Perhaps no man in Bowling township is more universally respected, and surely none is better known.

FREEK, William Robert, M. D.—The medical profession has many able representatives in Rock Island county, who have won the confidence and respect of the people here by their dignified capability. One of those long connected with the practice of medicine in this locality is Dr. William Robert Freek of Cordova. He was born at Albany, Ill., September 10, 1854, a son of Nicholas and Mary (Routledge) Freek, both natives of England. They came to Toronto, Canada when young, and were married in that city. The father was a brick maker by trade, and seeking a new field, came to Albany, Ill., in the spring of 1854. This continued to be his home until his death, which occurred on August 19, 1899. His widow survived him until 1905, when she died, aged eighty-nine years.

Dr. Freek went through the common schools of Albany, and having decided upon a medical career, entered Rush Medical College of Chicago, from which he was graduated February 21, 1877. Following this he practiced at Albany for two years and then on September 8, 1879, he came to Cordova, which has since continued his home. He is the only physician in the village, and his practice extends all over the township. In 1880 he established a drug store to meet the existing demand, and has carried it on ever since in conjunction with his practice.

In June, 1885, Dr. Freek was married to Laura Johnston, born January 10, 1864, in Cordova, daughter of William K. and Rosalette (Blanding) Johnston. She died July 2, 1886; no issue. On October 2, 1892, Dr. Freek was married (second) to Bessie Marshall by Rev.

Francis A. Smith.

Dr. Taylor, of Rock Island. She was born at Cordova August 22, 1863, daughter of George and Eliza J. (McCall) Marshall, natives of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, respectively. Dr. and Mrs. Freek have two children: Mary Isola and George Marshall. He is secretary of the Cordova public library, having held that office since 1880, and was president of the village board four years and elected again in spring of 1913 as president of the board for two years. Dr. Freek is a member of the board of education and is one of its most active factors; was worshipful master for many years of Cordova Lodge No. 543, A. F. & A. M., and is a charter member of the Modern Woodmen of America, being the oldest past counsel in Rock Island county. Dr. Freek also belongs to the Royal Neighbors, Mystic Workers and Riverside Lodge No. 149, Knights of Pythias. Deeply engrossed in his profession, Dr. Freek keeps abreast of modern discoveries and ideas, and his ready sympathy as well as his skill have won for him friends throughout the entire county.

FREEMAN, August.—A notable example of what a man can accomplish through steadfast endeavor, coupled with a willingness to work, and unflinching honesty of purpose, is offered in the life history of August Freeman, now living retired at No. 806 Third avenue, Rock Island. He was born in Sweden, February 4, 1850, a son of Andreas Fardig and Johanna (Anderson) Freeman. The father was a soldier in the Swedish army all his life. August Freeman lived in his native land until eighteen years old, attending public school, and assisting his mother, when his parents paid his fare to the United States. They could do nothing more to assist him, and he had reached Castle Garden, New York, without a cent in his pocket. Several farm boy acquaintances assisted him by loaning him one dollar for food, and six dollars to help pay his fare to Altoona, Knox county, Ill. Arriving there, he found employment with farmers until 1872, when he came to Rock Island and entered the glass factory, later worked in a saw-mill, and still later in the Rock Island Plow Works, remaining with this concern for thirty years, giving it a faithful and capable service. At the expiration of this period he was injured in an accident, and has since lived retired.

In 1874, Mr. Freeman married Kerstin Malmberg, daughter of Barnet and Inga (Manson) Malmberg. Mrs. Freeman was born in Sweden, and came alone to the United States in 1871 to join her brother who had located in Moline some time before. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman have had these children: Oscar, who died when two years old; Arthur, who died when twelve days old; and Nellie Amella, who died when two years old; Jennie, who is Mrs. Axel Danielson; Wilhelmina, who is Mrs. Dr. C. B. Lewis of St. Cloud, Minn.; Oscar (II); Annette, who is Mrs. Alfred Nelson; Nellie, who is at home, a piano teacher; Edward, who works in the Rock Island Plow Company; Walter A., who is a fireman of Rock Island; and Elmer, who works for the Rock Island Plow Company. Mr. Freeman is a charter member of the Modern Woodmen of America, having joined it twenty-five years ago. He is a man of much determination of character, and holds the respect and confidence of all who know him.

FREEMAN, John Stanley, general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Moline, is one of the earnest promoters of moral uplift in Rock Island county, and a man possessed of more than ordinary suitability for the work in which he is now engaged. Mr. Freeman was born July 18, 1869, in Henry county, Ill., a son of James C. and Lucretia (Daniels) Freeman, the former born in Cambridge, England, and the latter in Utica, N. Y. James C. Freeman was a farmer, and brought up his sons to be honest men like himself, inculcating by precept and example the value of good habits. He settled in Henry county, near Orion, Ill., in 1851.

Amid rural surroundings, John Stanley Freeman grew up, attending the common schools of his neighborhood. As a boy, he had a decided taste for railroad work, and learned telegraphy when only twelve years old, being known as the youngest telegraph operator in the United States, who was placed on a pay roll. For fifteen years he followed railroading as operator, bill clerk, cashier, claim clerk and chief clerk in the division freight offices of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. He then decided that there was an opportunity for a larger life investment in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association, and entered upon it at Centralia, Ill. After a year there he was in Rock Island five years, Monmouth one year, and Moline nine years. During the nine years he has been general secretary of the Moline branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, a new $150,000 building has been erected. The Methodist church holds Mr. Freeman's membership.

On November 24, 1893, Mr. Freeman was married at Rock Island, to Grace Mattison Sturgeon, born at Rock Island, April 4, 1871. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman have an adopted son, John Edwin Freeman. The family residence is at No. 1707 Twelfth avenue, Moline. The good accomplished by Mr. Freeman cannot be over-estimated. A man of high moral character, he sets an excellent example and at the same time his sympathies are so broad, his understanding of human nature so profound, that he is able to wield an influence over the lives of those with whom he is brought into contact, that is never forgotten. He is also a business man of more than average ability and the affairs in his charge receive expert handling.

FRELS, Fred.—The pursuits and positions that have occupied the attention of Fred Frels designate him not only as one of the most proficient farmers of Hampton township, but also as one whose executive abilities entitle him to equally high rank among the strong and useful men of his day and locality. He was born March 12, 1862, in Hampton township, Rock Island county, Ill., and is a son of Fred and Margaret (Wiegand) Frels. The father of Mr. Frels came to Hampton township from Germany as a lad of twelve years and began to work as a farm hand, continuing as such until his marriage, when he rented land in this township, where he died some time prior to 1866. His widow and son Fred moved to Henry county, where she was later married to Gerhardt Addicks, and the latter died in 1904. Mrs. Addicks continued to reside in Geneseo and died there October 29, 1911, at the age of sixty-five years.

Fred Frels, who was the only child of his parents, left home at the age of twenty-one years, prior to his mother's second marriage, and attended Wesleyan University, Mt. Pleasant, Ia., after which he taught school for one year in Hampton District No. 7. On February 2, 1887, he was married to Miss Anna Dennhardt, who was born in Hampton township, August 3, 1868, a daughter of Andrew and Mary (Feidler) Dennhardt, and granddaughter of Andrew and Dora Dennhardt and Henry and Dora (Jacobs) Feidler, all natives of Germany and early settlers of Hampton township. Andrew Dennhardt, the father of Mrs. Frels, was a soldier during the Civil war, and he and his wife now live in Hampton township. After his marriage, Mr. Frels rented a farm near Geneseo, in Edford township, Henry county, and seven years later purchased 140 acres of land there, on which he continued to carry on farming for eight years. His present excellent property was purchased by him at this time, and consists of 200 acres of well-cultivated land lying in Sections 28 and 33, Hampton township. In addition to carrying on general farming, he raises horses, cattle and hogs, and ranks among the skillful farmers and stock raisers of his district. He is a republican in politics, and has found time to serve in various official positions, having been road commissioner of Hampton township since 1908, and treasurer from 1909 to 1912 in addition to serving for one year as road commissioner while in Henry county. His wife, who attended the district schools, is a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. and Mrs. Frels have had the following children: Henrietta Marie, who married Charles Eakins, of Moline, Ill., and they have one child, Margaret Anna Marie; Lillian, who died in infancy; and Elmer Fred, Estella May and Lucile Louisa, who live at home.

FRELS, Fred William.—Farming is a good business, especially when carried on in Rock Island county, and a number of the most advanced men in this locality appreciate this fact, and have devoted their lives along agricultural lines. One of the enterprising young farmers belonging to this class in Zuma township is Fred William Frels who was born in Edford township, Henry county, Ill., August 23, 1877, a son of Henry and Elizabeth Frels, he born in Hampton township, Rock Island county, and she in Germany. The grandfather, also Henry Frels, was an early settler of Hampton township, who came here from Germany. After their marriage, the parents of Fred William Frels lived in Henry county for a few years, but returning to Hampton township, he bought the family homestead, where he and his wife are now residing. Their children were as follows: Emma, Fred W., Clara, Lydia, Amanda, and Harry, the latter still being at home. Fred William Frels remained at home until his marriage, when he rented land in Zuma township, and a year later moved to a farm in Whiteside county, Ill. Later he bought the farm of S. Williams in Zuma township, selling it at a profit. Now he is renting the farm owned by John Crompton in Zuma township. He devotes this to general farming, specializing on raising Duroc-Jersey hogs. Mr. Frels was given more education advantages than fall to the lot of most farmer boys, for he went to the Oak Ridge district school and Port Byron Academy, and made good use of his opportunities.

On November 3, 1903, Mr. Frels was married to Mandy Parmore, born at Coal City, Ia. They have one son, Arthur, born April 3, 1906. Mr. Frels belongs to the German Lutheran church, and gives it his hearty support. An excellent farmer, and experienced business man, Mr. Frels is making his work pay him a good profit, and is numbered among the progressive young men of Zuma township.

FRELS, John William.—The Frels family is one of the reliable ones of Rock Island county, and was founded here by a German-born citizen, who developed into one of the county's most honored and prosperous men. Mr. Frels has always been associated with the agricultural interests here, as have the most of his family, and is now one of the successful farmers of Zuma township. He was born in Hampton township June 22, 1856, being a son of Henry and Catherine (Mantler) Frels, the former born in Oldenburg, Germany. When he was fourteen years old Henry Frels became a sailor, and after several voyages left the sea and came to Hampton township at the age of nineteen years. He worked among the farmers until he had enough money to buy land in Hampton township, and on it built a home, cleared off the timber and developed a valuable property. He died about 1880, and his wife about 1860. They had eight children. After the death of his first wife, Henry Frels married a Mrs. Garnet.

John William Frels resided at home until his marriage, when he bought land in Hampton township, but later sold to buy land in Henry county. Here he lived for fourteen years, but selling, returned to his old home and bought his present property, comprising 176 acres in Zuma township, on sections 15 and 16. Here he carries on general farming and stock raising and has been very successful in all his undertakings. His education was received in the public and German schools of Hampton township. On June 22, 1879, Mr. Frels married Bertha Goldenpfenning, born in Hampton township. Their children are: Walter, who is on the home farm, married on June 29, 1904, Bertha Coffin, daughter of George and Ida (Davis) Coffin, issue, Gladys Geneva, who was born May 11, 1909; Ida, who is at home; Edna, who is a school teacher, and Viola, who is at home. Mr. Frels belongs to the Lutheran church, and is interested in its good work. Always industrious and thrifty, Mr. Frels has accumulated a desirable property, and his honesty and kindliness of disposition have gained him the friendship and respect of his neighbors.

FREY, Peter, a prominent city official of Rock Island, Ill., who for many years was engaged in the grocery business in this city, has for some time been a member of the Rock Island fire department, of which he is now serving as assistant chief. Mr. Frey was born August 31, 1852, in Memphis, Tenn., a son of Peter and Katherine (Hoffman) Frey, natives of Germany, where the father was born in 1813 and the mother in 1824. They were married at New Orleans, La., and were the parents of four children, namely Peter, William, Charles and Katherine, of whom the first two were born at Memphis, Tenn., and the last two at Rock Island. Peter Frey, the father, was a cabinetmaker by occupation, and followed that trade for many years at Rock Island, where he was well and favorably known.

Peter Frey was educated in the common schools of Rock Island, whence the family had removed when he was a small boy, and later took a course in the Bryant & Stratton business college at Davenport, Ia. He then entered the employ of W. C. Wadsworth, who conducted a wholesale dry goods establishment, but in 1872, after four years with Mr. Wadsworth, decided to engage in business on his own account, and subsequently established himself in the grocery business at Rock Island, where he had a successful business career covering twenty-one or twenty-two years. He eventually sold out his business interests and joined the city fire department, with which he has been connected to the present time, having risen to the position of assistant chief. Mr. Frey became a member of the Rodman Rifles when that company of local militia was first organized, and remained with the organization for six years. His fraternal connection is with Camp No. 29, Modern Woodmen of America. He has always been ready to do his full duty as a citizen, and for one year served Rock Island as tax collector.

On September 28, 1878, Mr. Frey was united in marriage at Rock Island to Louisa Range, who was born the same day of the month as Mr. Frey, but five years later, August 31, 1857, in Rock Island, and to this union there were born two children: Louis who was born in 1879; and Amelia who was born in 1881 is now the wife of George Andrews.

FREYTAG, Charles F., M. D., one of the successful young members of the medical profession in Illinois, whose chosen field of practice has been the city of Rock Island for the past four years, was born April 17, 1882, in Reynolds, Ill., a son of Fred and Mary (Schmidt) Freytag.

Fred Freytag was born in Reudsburg, Germany, in 1840, and came to America in 1866, settling in Rock Island, where he engaged in business as a harnessmaker. Later he embarked in a furniture business with a partner, the firm name being Freytag and Dollinger, a connection which continued for a long period. In 1880, Mr. Freytag removed to Reynolds, Ill., and he continued to carry on the same line of business until his death in 1889. He was a member of the Workmen, an order which flourished during the early days, and was also connected with the Home Forum. Politically a democrat, he took an active part in public matters, and for fifteen years served as president of the Reynolds School Board. Mr. Freytag was married to Mary Schmidt, who was born December 25, 1851, in Columbus, O., and she survives her husband and makes her home with Dr. Freytag. To Fred and Mary Freytag there were born the following children: one who died in infancy; Philip, who succeeded his father in business; Amel G., who is serving as station agent at Reynolds; Marie C., who is the wife of Hugh C. Wheaton, of Long Mount, Col.; Charles F., and Henry, who died at the age of sixteen years.

Charles F. Freytag was educated at Reynolds, graduating from the high school there, spent one year in Augustana College at Rock Island, two years at the University of Chicago, and four years at Rush Medical College. He then spent two years in the Presbyterian Hospital in Chicago and two years as Lieutenant Surgeon of the Naval Reserves, and in 1907 came to Rock Island, where he has since been in active and successful practice. Dr. Freytag is surgeon for the C. B. & Q. R. R., and medical examiner for the Modern Woodmen, the Royal Neighbors and the Maccabees, and the Illinois, Northern, Peoria and Missouri State Life Insurance Companies. He is a member of the Rock Island Medical Society, Rock Island Lodge No. 658 of Masons, Modern Woodmen No. 309, and Royal Neighbors No. 101. His politics are those of the Republican party, and his religious belief that of the German Lutheran Church. Dr. Freytag's well appointed offices are located at No. 301-303 Best Building.

On November 25, 1911, Dr. Freytag was married to Miss Martha Marion Beatty of Avening, Ontario, Canada.

FRIEBERG, John, owner of 208 acres of magnificent farming land in Drury township, and a man who is widely and favorably known all over Rock Island county, is one of the leading agriculturalists of this locality. He was born in Germany, in 1866, a son of Helmuth and Sophia Frieberg, who lived and died in Germany, where the father was a laborer. In 1887, Mr. Frieberg came to the United States, and first located at Muscatine, Ia., where he worked in a saw-mill for eight or ten years, when he came to Drury township and embarked in farming. He raises corn, oats and barley, hogs, horses and cattle, doing general farming. Thoroughly understanding his business, he has made his work yield him a good profit.

In 1905, Mr. Frieberg was united in marriage with Mrs. Anna (Seidler) Danner, born in Rock Island, widow of Charles Danner. She had three children by her first marriage: Leonard, Albert and Josephine. Mr. Frieberg had been previously married to Anna Becker, and by her had three children: Willie, Minnie and Annabell. Mr. and Mrs. Frieberg have had two children: Pearl and Elfrieda, the latter dying in childhood. The Methodist church claims Mr. Frieberg's membership and receives a liberal support from him, for he believes in its faith and good works. Very liberal in politics, he prefers to cast his vote for the man he deems best fitted for office, rather than to tie himself down to party lines. Although he received a good education in his native land, Mr. Frieberg had to learn English after coming here, so that his progress is all the more commendable. He is essentially a self-made man, and is a credit to himself and his community.

FRIES, Peter (deceased).—Not a few of the men who have added to the business fame and prosperity of Rock Island, have been natives of Germany and in the late Peter Fries an example may be found of the persistent and hopeful business pioneer who came to the United States in youth and brought with him the sturdy virtues for which the Fatherland is justly noted. He was born on the family estate, on the River Main, in Bavaria, Germany, May 4, 1822, and died at Rock Island, July 20, 1902. His father was Johann and his mother Gertrude (Brand) Fries, the latter being a resident of Reistenhansen, at the time of her marriage. Johann Fries was the owner of Gushof, the family estate which had descended from father to son for many generations, its location being near Stadt Prozelten.

Peter Fries was the youngest born of eight children and after completing his education gave his father assistance in the care of the estate until he became of age, when he sold his interest to his eldest brother, having long cherished an ambition to seek his fortune in America. In 1849 he reached the United States and located at Altoona, Pa., where he embarked in the tanning business, but lacking experience in the same, he did not meet with success and then removed to Henry, Ill., in 1850, and there entered into the leather business. He remained at Henry for two years and then sold and came west to Davenport, Iowa, and there engaged in the manufacture of vinegar. This business he continued until 1854, when he removed to Rock Island, Ill., where he went into the business of distilling and rectifying liquors, which business he continued until the time of his death. As he prospered at Rock Island he invested his surplus capital in city real estate and identified himself with a number of the financial institutions of the city, and was one of the founders of the Rock Island National Bank and of the People's National Bank, being on the directing boards and up to the time of his death was vice-president of the latter. In politics he was a democrat, always, however, reserving the right to vote for such men or measures as best met his judgment. In religion he was a Catholic.

On August 5, 1852, Mr. Fries was married at Henry, Ill., to Miss Theresa Dauber, who survives him. To them the following children were born: Anna, who married first the late Henry Schmidt, of St. Louis, Mo., and is now Mrs. James Connor of Rock Island; and a son who died in infancy. Mr. Fries was a man of great force of character, yet was modest and unassuming. Personally he was admired and beloved, possessing the genial manner and friendly spirit that invites warm feeling, while in business and political life men found him an honorable and upright man to be associated with. His death was a distinct loss to Rock Island.

FUHR, George P.—Some men are born with a natural turn for mechanics, and while their vocation may lead them to devote the most of their energy in another direction, they cannot lose interest in those things pertaining to mechanical matters. This is the case with George P. Fuhr, who, although one of the prosperous farmers of Buffalo Prairie township, is deeply interested in various mechanical contrivances which he has invented. He was born on a portion of the property he now owns, November 6, 1861, a son of Philip and Margaret Barbara (Houck) Fuhr. The father was born in Germany, but was brought to the United States by his parents when five years old. All his life he was a farmer, and died in Buffalo Prairie township November 21, 1905, when he was eighty years old. His wife died in 1874, aged forty-two years. Their children were: Henry, who is of this same township; Mary, Mrs. Christ Kuler, who is of South Rock Island; Sarah A., who is Mrs. Cass Eckhardt of this same township; John, who is of Drury township; Lizzie, who is married, is of this same township; George P.; Virginia, who is married, is of this same township; Maggie, who died in 1887, aged eighteen years; and Susie, who is Mrs. Herman Siegler of Fairfield, Ia.

George P. Fuhr was educated in the German and English schools of this county, and worked at home, remaining with his father. He now owns 140 acres of fine land, 100 of which was the old homestead, and forty acres are on section 1. George P. Fuhr was married to Mary Walker of Drury township, a daughter of the late Peter Walker. After marriage, Mr. Fuhr located on his present farm, and replaced the old buildings with new ones, making many other improvements upon the place, until he now has one of the best in this part of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Fuhr became the parents of children as follows: Edward, born September 10, 1892, a farmer residing near Taylor Ridge; Laura May, born June 16, 1895; and Philip, born October 1, 1899. These young people have many friends in the neighborhood, as have their parents. Mr. Fuhr belongs to the German Lutheran church. He believes in voting independently, instead of tying himself down with party interests. A live business man, progressive farmer, and good citizen, Mr. Fuhr is well known throughout Rock Island county, and is numbered among the successful agriculturalists of the day.

FUHR, Philip.—One of the distinctive features of Rock Island county is the high state of development of the numerous farms within its confines. This desirable condition has not been brought about without hard work and thrifty management, so that a large degree of credit must be given those who brought matters to so successful a termination. One of the progressive farmers of this locality is Philip Fuhr, owner of 400 acres on sections 2, 11 and 12, Buffalo Prairie township. He was born on the Fuhr homestead in this township, November 16, 1850, a son of the late Valentine Fuhr and his wife, Margaret (Nickel) Fuhr, old settlers of this region. A sketch of Valentine Fuhr is to be found elsewhere in this work.

Philip Fuhr attended the district schools from the time he was six years old until he was sixteen, and among his early teachers were Charles Hardy and Charles E. Dodge. Many of those who have become prominent in the world to-day were his schoolmates, and he remembers those days with affection. Fond of his books, he was always up with his classes, and learned rapidly. He started to work on the home farm as soon as he was old enough to handle a plow, and continued in his father's employ until his marriage. This event took place March 19, 1875, when he was united with Margaret Ann Fehrer. He then located on a rented farm in Buffalo Prairie township, later buying it. This property comprised eighty acres, and he operated it for nineteen years. Then he sold, buying 160 acres in Edgington township, on which he moved, and lived there until 1905, or a period of ten years. At this time he sold, moving to his present farm. His house is a comfortable brick structure, being one of the first brick houses built in this locality. It is about fifty-eight years old, but in excellent condition, the red brick having been fired on the place. There are nine rooms, and the cellar extends under all of it.

The first Mrs. Fuhr died in Buffalo Prairie township, in 1882, firm in the faith of the Lutheran church, of which she was a devout member. She bore her husband two children: Valentine, of Washington, Ia., who married Ida Smith, has four children; and Emma, Mrs. Guy Elliott of Edgington township. In February, 1884, Mr. Fuhr was married to Mrs. Annie (Drost) Daniels, of Rock Island, daughter of Simon Drost. Mr. and Mrs. Fuhr became the parents of the following children: Ernest of Buffalo Prairie township, married Mamie Jane Taylor; Minnie, Mrs. Elmer Schutter of Buffalo Prairie; Catherine, a graduate of the Reynolds high school, has been a teacher in the county schools for four years; Philipena, Mrs. Louise Danner, of Drury township; Lillian Margaret, who married C. E. Kistler; and Henry and Marcella, both at home. Mr. Fuhr is a man widely known and universally esteemed. He has been a good farmer and understands every detail of his work. An excellent manager, he has invested his money profitably, and is now wealthy as a result of his industry and thrift. There are twelve grandchildren in the family.

FUHR, Valentine (deceased).—The pioneers of Rock Island county belonged to a type of Americans not now so numerous, who believed in securing homes through hard work and thrifty habits. They were too proud to accept anything unless they had worked for it, and wrested their land from the clutches of the wilderness. One of those thus distinctive of what is best in our country was Valentine Fuhr, a former old settler of Rock Island county, who owned 120 acres on section 14, and 160 acres on section 2, of Buffalo Prairie township. He was born in Baden, Germany, December 14, 1821, being a son of John and Eva Fuhr. His parents came to America in 1830, landing in New York after a tiresome voyage of sixty days on a sailing vessel that had but four deck hands to operate it. For five years they lived in New York state, five miles from Buffalo, then sold, and taking a boat to Cleveland, O., went from there by team to Akron, and then into Portage county, where five years more were spent. There the father died, and Valentine Fuhr and the uncle, for whom he was named, came to Illinois about 1840. Mr. Fuhr took up eighty acres of government land, and after a year went back to Ohio for his mother, brothers and sisters, and returning, went to work all the harder to develop his farm. He paid $1.25 per acre for it, later adding forty acres, and on it built his house. As Buffalo Prairie township advanced, he was called upon to hold different offices, and was road commissioner several years and pathmaster many years.

In 1845 Mr. Fuhr was married to Margaret Nickel, born in Baden, Germany, who came to America in girlhood. Mr. and Mrs. Fuhr became the parents of children as follows: Philip, of this township, who married Margaret Fehrer, and after her death, Annie Dorst; August, also of this township, who married Margaret Spilling; John, of this township, who married first, Bertha Hartman and second, Emma Roddy; Valentine, who lives in Mercer county; and George, formerly of this township, but now of Minnesota. Mr. Fuhr was a member of the German Lutheran church, towards which he contributed liberally. He was a democrat in political faith. Energetic, hard-working, thrifty, Mr. Fuhr added to his holdings until he became a wealthy man. While becoming materially prosperous, he never failed to live up to the teachings of his childhood and was noted as a man whose spoken word was as good as his written promise. He died May 15, 1912, and his remains are interred in the Lutheran cemetery.

FULSCHER, Michael Henry, a well-known resident of East Moline, has built up a good business there and is otherwise interested as he owns a comfortable home in the city. He is an expert cigar manufacturer and has popularized several fine brands which have won wide local notice. Mr. Fulscher was born in Germany in 1859, a son of Marks and Frederika (Rasmussen) Fulscher. The parents brought their four children to America in 1868 and located at Davenport, Iowa, where the father followed the stone mason's trade, becoming a contractor on his own account and won a high reputation in this line. He died in 1906 and his widow survived him about a year, both being buried at Davenport. Their children were: Johannes, who is a grocer of Davenport, Ia.; Dora, who is the wife of L. Heller, of Nebraska; Michael Henry, and Claus, who died at Hampton, Ill., in 1908, was a cigar-maker and had worked at his trade there.

Before coming to the United States Michael Henry Fulscher attended school in Germany for four years, but his education was completed at Davenport. He learned the trade of cigar maker very young, so that in 1907, when he came to East Moline he was able to start a factory of his own. His best known brands are the "Crown" and the "O. K." on which he has built up a large trade in the vicinity and has a good standing in business circles. He is a member of the cigar-makers' union and has many friends in it and the community. His first comfortable nine-room house he sold in 1913 and built on First avenue, East Moline, a fine modern residence.

In 1880, while in New York City, Mr. Fulscher was united in marriage with Emily Lemare, who died in 1897, having borne children as follows: Albert, who died at the age of two years; Mabel, who is the wife of A. Fries, of Davenport; Edward, who married Maud Day, is a cigar-maker by trade, being a resident of Joliet, Ill.; Frank, who married Elizabeth Vick, lives in East Moline; Robert, who is a cement-block manufacturer, lives in East Moline; and Leona, who is the wife of Roy Stephenson. In 1898, Mr. Fulscher was married (second) to Christina Remily, and five children were born to them: Mary, Alfred, Marks, Donovan and Michael.

FURGIE, William Edward, junior member of the undertaking and embalming firm of Damlson & Furgie, is one of the substantial men of Moline, one who stands high in his chosen profession, and one who has made many warm personal friends during his business career, for he possesses many characteristics that appeal to those who require his services in times of deepest sorrow. Mr. Furgie was born June 25, 1879, near Macomb, Ill., son of William and Maggie (Riley) Furgie, the former a native of New York City, and the latter of Joliet, Ill. The father came to Illinois in boyhood, his family settling in McDonough county, and here he grew up, becoming a machine worker. Eventually he engaged with Williams & White Company, where he is still employed. He and his wife were married on Christmas Day, 1876, and three children were born to them: Musetta, Mrs. William Kruse of Independence, Mo.; William Edward; and Arlon, deceased, who passed away at the age of eleven years.

William Edward Furgie received his educational training in Macomb, and while still attending school, worked in the evening, on Saturdays, and in vacation in a grocery store. When he finished school, he put in all his time working for the grocer for two years, and then entered a general mercantile store. In 1901, he began working for McCabe's store in Rock Island, but after a year, left to come to Moline, where he engaged with Forsberg & Talty. This connection continued until 1908, when he formed a partnership with his present associate. The firm have established a reputation for skillfulness and dignified conduct of all the sad rites pertaining to the business entrusted to their capable hands, and are numbered among the most reliable undertakers of Rock Island County.

Mr. Furgie is essentially a self made man, and is proud of the fact that he worked at one time for as low a wage as fifty or sixty cents per day, carrying brick moulds, for which he received twelve and one-half cents per thousand. In religious matters he is a Catholic. He liberally contributes towards the Knights of Columbus, and also belongs to the Mystic Workers of the World, the Red Men, being a charter member of that order at Macomb, and to the Maccabees. For one year, he held the office of lecturer in the Knights of Columbus, and for the past two years, has been commander of the Maccabees. Politically he is very liberal, preferring to cast his vote for the man he deems best fitted for the office, rather than to tie himself down to party lines.

GAETJER, Christian Frederick.—The visitor to Rock Island is at once struck by the beauty of the park system of the city, and the apparent amount of effort and care that must be expended to keep these beautiful parks in order and it is hard to realize that just a few short years ago, the lovely lawns with their shaded paths, trimmed hedges, well-pruned trees and wealth of flowers, ferns and palms, were anything but the garden spots which are now a delight to the eye. To one man, may be given the greater part of the credit for Rock Island's excellent park system, Christian Frederick Gaetjer, who also holds the position of game warden of Rock Island county. Mr. Gaetjer was born in Hamburg, Germany, in 1851, a son of Christian and Margaret (Beiroth Heide) Gaetjer, the former a native of Hamburg and the latter of Holstein, Germany. Mr. Gaetjer's parents never left Germany, where the father was a tanner by trade and served in the German army during the War of 1849.

Christian Frederick Gaetjer enlisted in the Prussian army July 16, 1870, becoming a member of the cavalry service, and during that year participated in a number of battles in the Franco-Prussian War. After hostilities had ceased, in the following year, he did not receive his discharge, but like thousands of others was held as indemnity, and tiring of this, he made his escape by cutting the military trimmings, including his epaulets, from his uniform and boarding a vessel at Haverdergra for America. Landing at New York, he made his way to Pittsburgh, where he had a friend who was employed in laying concrete walks, and he secured like employment, although still clad in his military uniform. He worked three months, and then went to Coal Valley, Ill., in 1872, being employed by Weyerhaeuser & Denkmann in the lumber business for two years. He then became agent for the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, attending to clerical work and also handling lime, sand, etc., his duties here being various. In 1905, he was appointed superintendent of parks of Rock Island by Mayor George W. McCaskrin, and in company with other gentlemen raised $14,000 by private subscription. The land for the park was donated by Frederick Weyerhaeuser, Morris Rosenfield, Charles H. Deere and Capt. T. J. Robinson, and the city appropriated an additional $14,000, permanent improvements being at once begun under the guidance of Mr. Gaetjer, who has brought the park systems up to a high standard and is advancing them steadily. Mr. Gaetjer lives on the south side of the city, at Twelfth and Aiken streets, and owns valuable property in Rock Island. He is a member of the Blue Lodge No. 658, A. F. & A. M., in which he has held various offices, Chapter No. 18 R. A. M., Rock Island Commandery No. 18, and Kaaba Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Davenport, Ia. For thirty-five years, he has been a republican in his political views. On April 14, 1883, Mr. Gaetjer was married at Rock Island, Ill., to Julia Stoltenberg, who was born December 13, 1862, in Davenport, Ia., and they have had two children: Cora and Ardo.

GAMBLE, George W.—The men who are now holding office in Rock Island, are of a superior character, the whole tendency of this district being towards superiority in every respect. This county is setting an example in purity of government, and advocacy of moral uplift, that other sections will do well to follow. George W. Gamble, circuit clerk, is one of the representative men of Rock Island county and a conscientious and efficient official. He was born in Allegheny county, Pa., December 18, 1848, son of John and Isabella Gamble, natives of England and the North of Ireland, respectively. The father was a farmer who came to America with his parents in childhood and his wife did likewise. They were married in Allegheny county, Pa., and about 1852, moved to Mercer county Pa., where they resided until death claimed them. The father passed away in 1875, aged sixty years; his wife dying in 1893, aged seventy years. They had ten children, of whom George W. Gamble was third in order of birth.

Growing up in Mercer county, Pa., Mr. Gamble attended school, and worked on the farm. In 1865, he began learning the printer's trade in Greenville, Pa., and worked at it until 1873. In that year, he moved to Moline, and opened up a grocery. Four years later, he entered the freight office of the Rock Island Railroad as bill clerk, and rose steadily until in 1884 he was appointed deputy circuit clerk of Rock Island county. For four years, he discharged the duties pertaining to this office, and in 1888, was elected circuit clerk of Rock Island county, on the republican ticket, since which time he has been re-elected to the same office every four years, and in November, 1912, was elected for the seventh consecutive term. His long occupancy of the office makes him thoroughly conversant with every detail pertaining thereto.

On October 15, 1874, Mr. Gamble was married at Adrian, Mich., to Hulda A. Lutton, born in Anglaize county, O., daughter of Peter Lutton, native of Scotland. Mr. Lutton was a physician who received his medical training in his native land. Mr. and Mrs. Gamble have a family as follows: Margaret A., now Mrs. W. H. Driggs, of Moline; Etta Gertrude, now Mrs. A. B. Du Von of Rock Island; and Ruth Edna, now Mrs. W. T. Nicholson of Moline.

Fraternally, Mr. Gamble belongs to the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Court of Honor. The First Congregational Church of Moline holds his membership, and for three years he was one of its deacons. All his life he has been a republican. Mr. Gamble is a modest, quiet, unassuming man, fond of his home and family.

GAMBREL, Phebe P., widow of Eli Gambrel is one of the property owners of Drury township, living on her fifty-three acre farm in this locality. Mrs. Gambrel, whose maiden name was Ripley, is a daughter of Stephen and Maria (Griswold) Ripley. They came west from Ohio, and settled at Red Oak, Clarion county, Ia., in 1849, living there until 1860, when they moved to Rock Island county, locating in Drury township. They had eight children: Atlanta, who was born June 30, 1838, married Noah Gibson, lives near Preston, Ia.; David, who is living in Drury township; Phebe; Sanford, who was born March 10, 1844, died in 1845, and was buried in Ohio; Cynthia, who was born in 1851, died in 1853, and was buried in Floyd county, Ia.; Henry Clay, who was born February 12, 1848, lives in Iowa; Roxy, who was born July 7, 1846, married Jeremiah Le Quatte of Belle Plains, Ia.; Noah, who was born March 18, 1854, lives in Illinois. Sanford died in infancy, and Cynthia from the effect of a fall from the wagon while the family were moving from Red Oak, Ia., to Floyd county, Ia. She fell from the front of the wagon drawn by an ox team, and the wagon ran over her, killing her almost instantly. She was three years old at the time. Mrs. Roxy Le Quatte lost her life through an explosion of gasoline in her stove, April 27, 1912, at Belle Plaine, Ia.

Mrs. Gambrel was born on a farm in Ohio, December 4, 1841, and in 1849, came to Rock Island county. She was married in 1861, to William Le Quatte, in Muscatine, Ia. He enlisted for service in the Civil war, in 1865, in Company 1, Twenty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and died at Mobile, Ala., in September of that same year from the effects of measles contracted in the service. After his death, his widow lived on the farm with her son Frank, who married Nettie Drury, who is deceased having left one son, Ernest. She continued there with him until her marriage by Rev. E. J. Odell of Drury township on January 26, 1873, to Eli Gambrel, of Drury township. Mr. Gambrel was born in Indiana, and came to Rock Island county in 1868, and until his marriage, worked on a farm with his brother. After marriage, he took charge of his wife's 160-acre farm, and operated it very successfully. Mr. and Mrs. Gambrel had one daughter, Hattie who married John Robinson, has one child, Nellie May, and lives with her mother. Mr. Gambrel died in Drury township, December 30, 1891 and is laid to rest in Reynolds cemetery. Mrs. Gambrel is a lady who has many warm, personal friends throughout Rock Island county, and is highly regarded here, both on her own account, and because of the respect rendered the memory of Mr. Gambrel.

GANNON, Patrick (deceased).—It is remarkable that so many of the substantial men of Rock Island county are of foreign birth, men who have come here seeking a new field in which to work out their life problems, and to their credit be it said, not many fail in their endeavors. Ireland has sent some of its best representatives here, and among them was the late Patrick Gannon of South Rock Island, born in West Maid, Ireland, September 29, 1830, a son of John and Catherine (Casey) Gannon. These parents came to America in 1847, via New York City. From there they went to Buffalo, and there the father died in 1849.

After coming to America, Patrick Gannon spent four years in Michigan cutting logs in winter, and in the summer working in the saw mills. In 1853, he came to Rock Island, and began steamboating on the Mississippi river, and for twelve or fourteen years was a fireman. Still later, he was engaged in erecting mills, but in 1870 located in South Rock Island, where he bought a truck farm of fourteen acres. This he devoted to raising stock on a small scale, although he lived practically retired for some years prior to his demise. Mr. Gannon grew up in Ireland as did other Irish lads, attending subscription schools, and helping his father on the little farm. He was given no special advantages, but was taught to work hard, and this was the secret of his success. All through his various experiences, he was never afraid of hard work, and through it reached a comfortable competency for his declining years.

In July, 1857, Mr. Gannon was married in Rock Island to Anna Lee, a native of Ireland, who came here in 1855 from Cleveland, O. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gannon: Jane, who died in 1859; and Anna, born November 5, 1861, who lives at home.

Mr. Gannon died April 12, 1912, mourned by a large circle of friends. He is survived by his daughter, Miss Anna Gannon, who occupies the home which he left, the wife and mother having passed away some years ago.

GARDNER, John H.—Federal appointees not only have to be men of exceptional ability along different lines, but they are required to live up to certain requirements, and to give the government the best of themselves. John H. Gardner, cloth cutter at the Rock Island Arsenal, resides at No. 421 Seventh street, Rock Island, where he is one of the city's well known citizens. He was born in Philadelphia, across the street from the old tree William Penn stood beneath while signing his famous treaty with the Indians, on September 14, 1844. His parents were John K. and Margaret (Sivel) Gardner, natives of Philadelphia and Maryland. John K. Gardner was weighmaster at the United States mint at Philadelphia, holding that position for many years, spending his life in his native city. He and his wife had five sons and one daughter, two of the sons enlisting for service during the Civil War, but of them all, John H. Gardner is the only survivor. The great-grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier, and the grandfather a soldier of the Mexican War.

John H. Gardner attended school in boyhood, later learning to be a butcher, and still later, the trade of umbrella making, following both callings at Philadelphia prior to his migration to Illinois, which occurred in 1869. In that year, Mr. Gardner came to Rock Island and served five years as a soldier at the arsenal, then being made cloth cutter in the harness-making department, which position he has held for forty-three years. His enlistment took place April 21, 1869, from the Frankfort Arsenal, at Philadelphia, he being transferred to Rock Island. He is a member of G. A. R. Post, No. 243, of which he is past commander, and has now been officer of the day for four years, as well as guard and color bearer. He is a member of Uca Lodge, No. 608, I. O. O. F., Rock Island Encampment, No. 12, and Canton Star, No. 8. He, his wife and family, all belong to Memorial Christian church. Mr. Gardner has a pleasant home at No. 421 Seventh street, and is one of the most faithful men in the service of the government.

In May, 1876, Mr. Gardner was first married at Rock Island to Johanna Cochran, born at Baltimore, Md., of Irish born parents. They left Ireland to settle in Maryland, from whence they came to Rock Island at a very early day, here dying. Mrs. Gardner died having borne her husband four children, two of whom survive: Thomas R. of Taylor Ridge, and Margaret, wife of Oscar Lerley of Davenport. On April 30, 1890, Mr. Gardner married (second) Mrs. Emma McCormick, born in Dayton, Ohio, January 29, 1856, daughter of Howell and Winnifred Thomas, the former born in Wales, from whence he came to Pittsburgh at an early day, and met his future wife, a native of that city. Marrying, they lived in that city for many years, but finally moved to Dayton, Ohio, and thence to Rock Island, where the parents eventually died. They had eight daughters and four sons, of whom four sons and three daughters survive. Mrs. Gardner's first marriage took place at Cambridge, Ill., in 1880, to Nathan McCormick, a soldier who enlisted at Philadelphia. They had two children: Nathaniel and Pearl, the latter being the wife of William Cameron of Rock Island, but the former died in 1886. Mr. and Mrs. Gardner have had two children, Earl and Robert. There are five living grandchildren in the family.

GARDNER, Winfield Scott.—Rounding out a useful life, not marked by any stirring events, but filled with good deeds and duties faithfully performed, Winfield Scott Gardner commands the confidence and respect of his neighbors, and the love and veneration of his family. He was born in Covington, Ky., March 15, 1850, a son of Louis W. and Electa R. (Richmond) Gardner, the former born in 1812, and died in 1868, while the latter was born in Vincennes, Ind., in 1817, and died in 1861. The father was a brick maker by trade, and four years prior to his death he retired from active life. The following children were born to him and his wife: Mrs. Mary Roose, who lives in Indiana; Winfield Scott, and James O., who is foreman of a brick yard in Texas. Winfield Scott Gardner attended school until he was fourteen years old, when he left to begin working. He learned brickmaking, and has followed that trade in conjunction with farming all of his life. In 1866, he came to Rock Island county, and in 1902, he bought his present comfortable home at No. 2133 Seventeenth street, Rock Island. Mr. Gardner has three children: Richmond J., born in 1873, lives in St. Paul, Minn., being in a restaurant business; Arthur E., a painter, lives in South Heights; and Herbert V. is employed by the Empire Coal and Ice Co. of Rock Island, and lives at home.

Reared in the Methodist faith, Mr. Gardner attends the church of that denomination, and gives it a liberal support. In political faith, he is a republican, and is deeply interested in current events. In 1893, he became a Mason, and his sons, Richmond J. and Arthur E., also belong to this order. All his life Mr. Gardner has striven to do his full duty as he saw it, and the comfort he now enjoys has been honestly and hardily earned.

GAULT, John S.—Earnest endeavor intelligently directed along one or other of the many lines of activity open to the people of Illinois, will result in prosperous conditions, and permit retirement during the downward passage of life's hill. One of the men who is now enjoying the peace and quiet of a retired life is John S. Gault of Moline, residing at No. 1415 Twenty-fourth street. He was born July 22, 1846, being a native son of Moline. His father was Samuel Gault and his mother Martha J. (McDermot) Gault. They were married at Louisville, Ky., in 1842. The father was born in Pennsylvania July 16, 1815, and died at Moline, Ill., in 1890. The mother was born in 1826 and died at Moline in 1894. The family on both sides came from eastern states.

John S. Gault was brought up at Moline. Like so many of the gallant young men of Rock Island county, Mr. Gault served his country during the Civil War, and a record of his deeds and achievements is to be found in the military history of this volume. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic, and enjoys extremely meeting his old comrades. The history of Mr. Gault's company is an interesting one, although space forbids giving it in full in this connection. The company was known as Company H, One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under the command of Colonel Pickett and Captain Luke E. Hemenway. The regiment was mustered in for one hundred days' service. The company was a Moline company, and nearly every man in it was from Rock Island county.

Recognized as a man of iron nerve, Mr. Gault proved his right to this reputation during his exciting adventures in the gold fields. In 1898, he went to the Klondike with a party of twenty-five men from the vicinity of Galesburg. They built a boat at St. Michaels, and went 700 miles up the Yukon river, and then up the Koyukuk river to Arte Arche. From there they prospected for 150 miles to the north, and were forced to thaw the ground with great fires, so they could dig for the precious metal. After suffering many hardships and enduring countless privations, Mr. Gault returned home November 17, 1907. During the time he was gone, he did some placer mining at Nome. One of the difficulties encountered was the exorbitant price charged for everything from civilized regions, coal averaging $75 per ton and all else in proportion. Prior to his northern trip, Mr. Gault had spent ten years in Goldfield, Colo., and was a seasoned prospector.

His religious affiliations are with the Methodist church. He is a republican and has always taken an active part in politics, although not an office seeker. Mr. Gault and his sister Sarah, who was born April 13, 1844, live in the old home place. She was married to James Robinson, but he died December 23, 1895. Both Mr. Gault and his sister stand very high in their community, where they have hosts of friends who appreciate them. He owns the home and other property, his many adventures having yielded him sufficient of this world's goods to provide for his wants throughout the remainder of his life.

GAUNT, Arthur M.—The majority of the best farmers of Rock Island county are those who have spent their lives in agricultural work. Having centered their interests and efforts on this calling, they have produced gratifying results, and raised the standard of their neighborhood. One of the progressive farmers of this locality is Arthur M. Gaunt of Edgington township. He was born near Edgington, November 8, 1885, a son of John Mathias and Hannah M. (Johnson) Gaunt, and grandson of the late John H. Gaunt. The latter was born September 2, 1828, at Newton Moor, Cheshire, England, and died in Reynolds, April 12, 1911, aged eighty-two years. He came to Rock Island, in November, 1851, and in the following month was married to Miss Mary A. Brooks. They had five children: Mrs. Mary Ann Johnson of Peoria, Mrs. Eva Jones deceased; Joshua F., of Koshkonong, Mo., and Jonathan and Mathias, of Reynolds. Sixty years ago, he settled on a farm in the vicinity of Edgington, later moving into Mercer county, but he returned to Rock Island county, where he rounded out his useful life. His first wife died in 1899, and that same year he married Mrs. Cyrena Wade of Orion, who survives him. In religious faith, he was a Methodist, and he died firm in its faith. His son, John Mathias was born in Mercer county, Ill., in 1860, and his wife was born in the same year in Rock Island county. Their children were as follows: Ethel D., deceased; Pearl E., deceased, and Arthur M. The two daughters are buried in Reynolds cemetery.

Arthur M. Gaunt was brought up in Edgington township, and there educated, attending the high school of Reynolds. He also took a course at Brown's Business College, Davenport, Ia., from which he was graduated August 13, 1908. He began farming on the homestead, operating 160 acres, which he has in a high state of cultivation.

On March 4, 1908, Mr. Gaunt was married by Rev. T. R. Johnston of Edgington to Emma Doonan Hogan, daughter of John and Etta (Johnston) Hogan of Mercer county, Ill., natives of this state. The mother died in 1887, but the father survives, aged fifty-five years. He is in a livery business at Aledo. Mr. and Mrs. Hogan had the following family: Mrs. Mary Lewis, Mrs. Margaret Rush, James and Mrs. Gaunt, who, from two years of age was reared by Mr. and Mrs. William Doonan. He now resides with Mrs. Gaunt, Mrs. Doonan having died June 27, 1907, and was buried in Reynolds cemetery. Wm. Doonan and wife had three children of their own: Mary J., who married Sam Moffitt of Bowling township; Thomas M., and Ethelinda who died at the age of four years. Mrs. A. M. Gaunt graduated from the Reynolds High School in the class of 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Gaunt have one son, Orville W., born July 4, 1909. Mr. Gaunt is a Freemason, belonging to the lodge at Buffalo Prairie. For the past few years, he has been pathmaster of the township, an office formerly held by his father, who was also a school director. Self-reliant, energetic, an excellent farmer and good business man, Mr. Gaunt is numbered among the representative men of his locality.

GAUNT, E. Jonathan, now living retired from the exacting demands of an agricultural life, in the beautiful town of Reynolds, is one of the typical farmers of this county. He was born in Mercer county, Ill., September 20, 1857, a son of John H. and Mary (Brooks) Gaunt, the former born September 2, 1828, and the latter August 28, 1818. They were English people, who came to the United States in 1851, landing at New Orleans, whence they came up the Mississippi river to Mercer county, locating in Hamlet township, where the father bought eighty acres of land. For sixteen years he lived upon it, and then moved to Rock Island county, where he bought 160 acres, then known as the old Foster farm, and here a grandson now resides. His death occurred April 12, 1911, his wife passing away May 14, 1898. The children numbered five, and were: Mary A., who is the wife of Abraham Johnston of Peoria, Ill.; J. F., who is of Missouri; Mathias, who is police magistrate of Reynolds, Ill.; E. Jonathan; and Eva M., who married C. W. Jones, now deceased. E. Jonathan Gaunt was educated in the public schools of Rock Island county. After attaining to maturity he bought seventy-two acres in Mercer county and lived there until two years ago, when he rented that property known as Pleasant View farm, and came to Reynolds, where his wife owns nineteen acres, it having been her father's home until his death. He was married on December 30, 1880, to Sarah A. Johnson, daughter of James P. and Margaret (Bredin) Johnson, natives of Ireland. James P. Johnson was born February 2, 1828, and was educated to be a school teacher, but later studied law. Coming to America he first located in Pennsylvania, but came to Rock Island county fifty-two years ago, and settled in Bowling township, where his wife, born June 9, 1830, died on February 13, 1903, his death occurring March 17, 1906. He was a justice of the peace in Bowling township and also served as assessor, collector and supervisor. Mrs. Gaunt, their only child, was born in Pennsylvania November 3, 1857. Her grandfather, Robert Bredin, was a surgeon during the Civil war. Mr. and Mrs. Gaunt have no children. Mr. Gaunt belongs to the Methodist church, of which he is a trustee, he and his wife having sung in the choir for twenty-five years. Mr. Gaunt is a most excellent man, and one who holds the confidence and friendship of all who know him.

GEIGER, Joseph.—The skill of the manufacturer has resulted in the creation of a large demand for domestic cigars, consumers realizing that those produced at home have all of the flavor of the imported article, and can be procured at a much lower price. The largest cigar factory in Rock Island county is that owned by Joseph Geiger, at No. 831 Fourth avenue, Rock Island. Mr. Geiger gives steady employment to twenty-eight people, and produces 1,250,000 cigars annually. His specialty is a five cent cigar, J. Geiger's Leader, although he also produces a fine ten cent cigar, the Corinus. His product is sold principally in Rock Island county.

Mr. Geiger was born at New Orleans in 1859, a son of Reinhart Geiger, born in Germany, who came to the United States in 1854. He and his wife had six children: Joseph; Sophie, Mrs. Joseph Burkhart; August of Rock Island; Reinhart, also of Rock Island; John of California; and Frank of Denver. After Mr. Geiger's birth, the family moved to New York City and later to La Salle and Ottawa, Ill., coming to Rock Island when he was ten years old. As Joseph Geiger began working at an early age in a cigar factory here he had but little opportunity to study, his schooling being limited to three terms at public and parochial schools. By the time he was sixteen years old, he had learned the trade of cigar making. Later, he went to Chicago, and then to Milwaukee. In the latter place he was married, in December, 1882, to Margaret Ruth. That same month, they came to Rock Island, and he began manufacturing cigars in the corner of a living room on Sixteenth street, between Third and Fourth avenue. His stock consisted of five dollars worth of tobacco. He bought in these small quantities, and made his cigars alone. So excellent was his quality, that within eight months, he had to employ a helper, and in two years, he rented his first store room at No. 801 Third avenue, where he gave employment to four men. In 1886 he moved to No. 1312 Third avenue, when he gave employment to eight men, and he remained in that location until 1891, when he came to his present factory, and here he has built up his immense business.

Mr. and Mrs. Geiger have had the following children: Joseph, Frank, Emma and Elizabeth, deceased; Della and Albert at home; Minnie, Mrs. George Aster of Rock Island; and Walter, Frank, Margaret and Lillian, living at home. Mr. Geiger belongs to the Roman Catholic church. Politically, he is a democrat, and in 1890, was elected alderman from the third ward of Rock Island. He belongs to the Knights of Columbus, Modern Woodmen of America, Elks, Eagles and Rock Island Maennerchor. Singing Society, of which he is now president. He has held offices in the other orders. An excellent business man, and public-spirited citizen, Mr. Geiger has many friends and is a recognized factor in the commercial life of Rock Island county.

GEORGE, Charles.—Agricultural operations can now be carried on along modern lines to a much greater extent than was possible in olden days. New appliances and scientific methods make possible the cultivation of large tracts, and the reaping of immense harvests. One of the men whose holdings aggregate 500 acres is Charles George of Cordova township, proprietor of the Lawndale farm. He was born at Boston, Mass., in 1841, January 17, a son of Captain Austin Moody and Sophronia (Batchelor) George, the former having gained his title through serving as commander of a company of Home Guards in Boston. In 1861 the family came west and located on a farm in Whiteside county, Ill., where Captain George died in 1889, his wife dying soon after their arrival. Their children were as follows: Daniel, deceased; Charles; James, deceased; Austin and King, both deceased; and Sophronia. Captain George later married Caroline Stowell and they had the following family: Martha and Mary (twins), DeWitt, Frank and Etta.

Charles George was reared on the home farm, attending the district schools until sixteen years old, when he began working on the river as cook, being promoted until he held the position of pilot. He spent eleven years on the river and left to become commissary man for the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, thus continuing for a quarter of a century. At this time he located on his farm, which is the finest in Cordova township. Mr. George has made many improvements, building a beautiful house, commodious barns and necessary outbuildings. He takes great pride in keeping his premises in prime condition, and carrying on his work expeditiously and economically.

On December 25, 1865, Mr. George married Martha M. Rice, born in Cordova township, daughter of Curtis and Elizabeth (Earl) Rice, numbered among the earliest settlers of Rock Island county. Mr. and Mrs. Rice had the following children: Mrs. George; Mary, who is the widow of King George; Maud, wife of Charles Kitchen; Ida, who died in infancy; Lydia, who died when four years old. Mr. Rice married (second) Victoria Adams and had children as follows: Verna, Ruby, and one who died in infancy. The second Mrs. Rice is also deceased. Mr. and Mrs. George became the parents of seven children: Maud, who is the wife of P. T. Harvey; May, who died young; King, who died when nine years old; Earl B., who married Margaret Drinnen; and Ralph C., who married Eva Hanson. Mr. George is a very active republican and has done yeoman service as supervisor for twelve years, school director for many years and as a private citizen at all times. He belongs to the Masons of Albany, and the Knights of Pythias of the same place. In addition to his other interests, Mr. George is president of the State Bank of Albany, having held that office for the past seven years. His sound, conservative policies, and good business judgment make him a fit man to be in charge of other people's money, and he gives to the administration of his bank the same conscientious care that has placed him in the position he now occupies among the prosperous men of Rock Island county.

GEORGI, Gottlieb.—Were this gentleman asked to define the secret of success in life, from his own standpoint and experience, his reply no doubt would be that it is hard work, and availing oneself of fair opportunities. To him is peculiarly applicable the well-worn maxim, that "nothing succeeds like success." Mr. Georgi, who is now the owner of a fine farm in South Rock Island, was born in Sacker, Germany, December 7, 1853, a son of Daniel and Pauline (Herman) Georgi, both of whom died in the Fatherland, where Daniel Georgi was a miner. Gottlieb Georgi attended the public schools of his native land until he was fourteen years of age, and after completing his education he began to learn the cigar maker's trade, which, however, he has never followed. He came to the United States in 1861, landing at New York and coming thence west to Iowa, after which, two years later, he made his way to Rock Island, where he was first employed in the saw-mills of Weyerhaeuser & Denkmann. After spending five years in the service of this company, he came to South Rock Island, where he rented twelve acres of land, but two years later removed to Sears, Ill., and remained twelve or thirteen years. In 1902 he purchased his present farm of seven acres, later adding seven acres more, and this property is now valued at $15,000. In addition, he owns a valuable farm in Kansas. Mr. Georgi is a strong republican, and the family has always been connected with the German Methodist church.

On November 30, 1878, he was married (first) to Miss Anna Daudenhahn, who was born in Germany, August 7, 1852, and died February 7, 1904, daughter of Christian and Christina Daudenhahn, both of whom died in Germany. On January 23, 1906, Mr. Georgi was married (second) to Miss Minna Georgi, who was born March 4, 1864, in Germany, and came to the United States in 1906. Mr. Georgi has five children: Helen, who married Alfred Tonner, a gardener of South Rock Island; Minna, who is the wife of Hans Hahn, of South Rock Island; Ernest, Hannah and Walter, who are living with their father. Mr. Georgi has two grandchildren.

GERKEN, John Behrends.—Lifelong experience in any one line gives thoroughness of action and profitable results as is proven every day by many of the prosperous farmers of Rock Island county. One of them who has been particularly successful in his work is John Behrends Gerken of Coe township. He was born in the north of Germany, March 26, 1855. After receiving a public school education during which time he was taught farming in all its details, Mr. Gerken engaged in farming in his native land. In 1883 he came to the United States and settled in Rock Island county. For two years thereafter he worked for farmers in Zuma township, and then bought 100 acres on sections 15 and 22, Coe township. When he purchased the land there were no improvements upon it, but since then he has built the house, barns and other outbuildings, set out an orchard of 100 trees and put up all the fences except a hedge which was on the place. He feeds all his grain to the sixty hogs of Poland-China breed, twenty-six head of cattle and seven head of horses he raises annually, and he takes a pride in the quality of his product.

On October 15, 1887, Mr. Gerken was married to Dorothy Kehannes, born in Saxony, Germany, who came with her parents, Fred and Elizabeth (Schultz) Knoskemund, to the United States in 1881. Mr. and Mrs. Gerken have become the parents of children as follows: Louisa; Ernest, who married Myra Richard, has one son, Glenn E.; Dena; Alma; Bernhard; Lillie; and Fannie. They belong to the German Lutheran church, and are active in forwarding its good work. Having always been a hard worker, Mr. Gerken has never had much time to devote to public matters, but is in favor of good government and reasonable improvements and is one of the solid, conservative citizens of the township in which he has lived so long. In 1906 Mr. Gerken made an enjoyable trip of three months' length to Germany, where he visited his old home and other points of interest.

GIBSON, John.—In these days of progressive ideas and specialization, no man is content to only partly understand his chosen calling, but endeavors to become an expert along some certain line. A man who made himself well known for the quality of his work and the honesty of his methods is John Gibson, expert horseshoer, who formerly conducted a shop at No. 316 Seventeenth street, Rock Island. He was born in Ireland, in 1856, and had the misfortune to lose his father when only four and one-half years old. His father, John Gibson, was a famous jockey in Ireland and left four small children when he was taken away, John being the second in order of birth, and eldest son. The father came to the United States where he married Sarah Grant and they later returned to Ireland where John Gibson was born, following which the family again came to the United States, the father dying a few years later. As the mother was left in poor circumstances her children received but a limited education. When old enough John Gibson worked at whatever he could find to do until fourteen years old, when he began learning horse shoeing in Rock Island following this line of work all over the country. When he was fifteen years of old, he went to Chicago, and worked in the horseshoeing shop of John Redmond, who was perhaps one of the greatest horseshoers of his time in this country, following which he worked in various shops for two years. For many years, he was associated with M. E. McHenry, the noted horseman. Coming to Rock Island, he has made it his headquarters ever since, although leaving it for periods of differing lengths. For twenty-five years, however, he was in business here for himself, and was the leader in his line. In 1911 Mr. Gibson sold his horseshoeing business in Rock Island, since which time he has taken a position on the road which now occupies his entire time.

Mr. Gibson was married in Rock Island in 1890 to Mary Fearon, daughter of John Fearon, a miner who was killed in the Black Hills. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson have had the following children: Mary, Stella, Sarah, Anna, Rose, Irene, Margaret, William, Seraphia, James, Vivian and three who are deceased. Mr. Gibson is a member of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. Politically he is an independent, preferring to support the man rather than the party. He is a sound, reliable, industrious man, whose aim through life has been to do his full duty, and wrong no one.

GILBERT, Edward.—The time is coming when few if any of the sons of farmers will be willing to leave their rural surroundings and homes of comfort and plenty, for the restricted life of a city. The farmer's worth is being recognized, and attention is being constantly called to the possibilities of his life. One of the prosperous men of Port Byron township who has succeeded beyond the ordinary is Edward Gilbert, born in England, May 6, 1848, a son of Edward Dean and Eleanora Gilbert. Mr. Gilbert was reared in his native county of Kent on the estate of Lord Cornwallis. His mother was left a widow when he was seven years old, and he remained with her until twenty-three years old. He then came to America, and settling in Rock Island county, Ill., bought forty acres in Port Byron township, to which he later added sixty-one and one-half acres adjoining. He has put in all of the improvements, and has one of the valuable farms in this part of the country.

In 1871, Edward Gilbert was united in marriage with Harriet Pettitt, born in County Kent, England, July 18, 1853, daughter of Albert and Amy Ann (Honeysett) Pettitt. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert: Louis, who is of Coe township; William, who is of Port Byron; Mary Ann, Mrs. John Onnen, who died in February, 1908, and is buried in Fairfield cemetery, leaving two children, Altja and Genevive; Edward, who is in Idaho; Nellie, who is Mrs. Bert Sodoris; Fred, who is on the home place; Frank, who is of Coe township; and two who died in infancy. Mrs. Gilbert died April 11, 1907, and her remains were interred in Fairfield cemetery. She early joined the Congregational church to which her husband also belongs, and was one of the most active of its workers during life. In the history of the church and her home district, no name stands forth more eloquently as an epitome of the gentle, kindly, tender virtues associated with the devoted Christian wife and mother. Not only was she the leading spirit in the home left desolated without her, but there was never any sickness or trouble in the neighborhood where her sympathy and intelligent help was not present. Carrying out in her everyday life, the creed she professed, Mrs. Gilbert gently led her loved ones with her, and set an example of beautiful living and Christian piety.

GILBERT, Fred.—In farming as in other lines, the young man of today is showing that his energy and promptness to take up new methods are resulting in successful transactions. Some of the most prosperous of our farmers of today are those who have not yet passed the thirtieth milestone. Profiting by the example and experience of the older generation, and eagerly following government research, they have made mighty advancement in their work, and are producing the banner crops of the world. One of these progressive young men is Fred Gilbert, now operating the home farm in Port Byron township. He was born on this farm, July 28, 1886, and has spent his life in this line of work. His education was secured in Port Byron township, and for some time he has been superintending the home farm of 101 1/3 acres in the southeast corner of section 13.

On February 16, 1907, Fred Gilbert was married to Grace Griffin, a daughter of William and Mary (Pomeroy) Griffin. Fred Gilbert carries on general farming. He is not a member of any church or fraternal society, devoting himself to his home. One of the prosperous young men of the county, his interest is centered in his farm work.

GILBERT, James, one of the honored veterans of the Civil war, and a man widely known and universally respected, is one of the fruit farmers of Buffalo Prairie township. He has lived in Rock Island county forty-eight years and in this township thirty-two years, so is entitled to consideration as one of the old residents. Mr. Gilbert was born in Henderson county, Ill., near Oquawka, on a farm, July 3, 1839, being a son of John and Amanda (Gilbert) Gilbert. The grandparents on both sides died in Pennsylvania, where the father was born. He moved to Henderson county, Ill., and served in the Black Hawk war, returning afterwards to his farm in that county, where he died. His widow later married George Lafferty. James Gilbert was one of three children born to his parents, they being: James; John, who died in Red Oak, Ia.; and Lottie, Mrs. William Hovey, who died in Illinois. The mother had one child, Charles, by her second marriage.

James Gilbert attended the public schools of his neighborhood, and remained with his parents until thirteen years old, when he began working to support himself. He was in different parts of Illinois and Iowa until his enlistment for service in the Civil war, in Company C. Ninety-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for one year. He was taken prisoner by Morgan in Kentucky, but being paroled, made his way into Indiana, and then home, where he resumed his farm work. Finally he came to Rock Island county and began working for Sim Roberts of Buffalo Prairie township, and later for Joseph Lloyd of Edgington. Still later he worked two years for Daniel Edgington. After marriage Mr. Gilbert was a farmer for Matthew Robison in Andalusia township for a year, when he bought and located on his present farm, twenty acres of which he has set out to fruit, and now has a very fine property.

In 1868 Mr. Gilbert was married in Rock Island county to Anna Mary McNutt, daughter of William and Sarah Jane (Stephenson) McNutt, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. Mrs. Gilbert died January 8, 1911. She was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church, and a most excellent lady of true Christian character, devoted to her husband and children, and an elevating factor in the neighborhood. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert: Cassie May, Mrs. John Henry, of Henderson county, Illinois, has one child, Raymond; and William Guy, of Edgington, who married Mayme Morehead, has two children, Zelma and Gus. Mr. Gilbert has always been a democrat, but his private affairs have occupied too much of his time for him to enter public life. He is a sound, reliable man, and stands high in the estimation of his associates.

GILBERT, Lewis, was born in Coe township, December 17, 1874. He was brought up here, and educated in a private school in Port Byron township. His life has been spent in agricultural pursuits. In 1904, he bought his present property of 119 acres, on the west side of section 9, and carries on general farming and stock raising. He has improved his farm in every way, first rebuilding his house, putting up a new granary, and in the early part of 1913 erecting a substantial residence of eight rooms on forty acres his wife had purchased a short time previously in the vicinity of his 119 acre-farm which he still owns. He has also rebuilt all of his fences, now having them in prime condition. His entire premises show that a careful man is in charge of things.

On November 14, 1901, Mr. Gilbert was married to Elsie V. Simpson, daughter of Jesse Simpson. She was born in Coe township, and here brought up and educated. Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert have one child, Jessie May, born July 17, 1908. In the Methodist church, Mr. Gilbert has always been very active, for in addition to being a consistent member of it, he has served as trustee, and is now steward. Energetic, alive to anything likely to prove beneficial to his farm work, or to the township at large, Mr. Gilbert is one of the representatives of the best class of farmers in this part of the state.

GILBERT, Noah L., assistant superintendent of the Peoples Power Co. of Moline and Rock Island, and one of the best men in his line of work in Rock Island county, is universally respected, his life proving as it does that merit and skill meet due reward. He was born in Walworth county, Wis., August 23, 1873, a son of Edward and Caroline (Gonyauh) Gilbert, natives of Canada. The father was a farmer, who came to the United States about 1861, settling in Wisconsin, where he died. His widow survives, making her home on a farm in Iowa. The ancestors on both sides came originally from France.

Noah L. Gilbert attended the country schools in Wisconsin, but as his educational advantages were limited, he learned the most of what he knows through experience. Brought up on a farm, he engaged in farm pursuits until he attained his majority, when he left home, and coming to Hebron, Ill., worked at carpentering for two years. He then embarked in an oil business, selling that commodity at wholesale and retail for two years, but owing to cutting of prices by the Standard Oil Co., he was forced to dispose of his business. He enlisted, April 28, 1898 in Company G, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for service during the Spanish-American War. He was sent to Porto Rico, and participated in two skirmishes, and was mustered out January 14, 1899. Returning home, he went to Clinton, Ia., where for five years he was connected with the gas plant, leaving to go to Davenport, Ia., to enter the employ of the Peoples Light Co., there. After five years of faithful service, he was transferred to the Moline plant, February 1, 1908. He had been superintendent of the Davenport plant, as well as head of the Davenport Gas and Electric Co.

On November 17, 1903, he was married in Davenport, Ia., to Frances Shoeman, born in St. Louis, March 17, 1875, daughter of Fred and Hedwig (Botefuhr) Shoeman, natives of Germany, who died many years ago. Mrs. Gilbert's father was a brewer of Davenport, and died in that city. Mr. Gilbert is liberal in his religious views, being perfectly willing to allow to others perfect freedom of thought. A republican, he votes his party ticket, and fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and enjoys his association with it. He belongs to the Tri-City Railway Light Co.'s Association. Alert, quick to grasp a point, faithful in the discharge of his duties, and well posted on all matters pertaining to his company's interests, Mr. Gilbert is almost invaluable, both as an employe of a big corporation, and also as a loyal, true-hearted citizen.

GILES, William Francis, general paper and paint contractor and decorator, with headquarters at No. 514 Fifteenth street, Moline, has been numbered among the substantial business men in this line since 1903. He was born in Rock Island county, near Moline, in 1859, a son of William and Mary (Conway) Giles. The father was born on a farm in North Carolina. He and his wife came to Rock Island county in 1845, and for a time he teamed in the city of Rock Island. Later, he purchased a farm on the Coaltown road, near Moline, locating on it in 1853, and there remained until his retirement, when he settled at Moline. He served as deputy sheriff, being in office when Colonel Davenport was murdered, and brought one of the murderers through on the stage for trial, there being no railroads at that time. The death of this efficient official and good citizen occurred in 1898, and his widow died in 1909, both being buried at Moline. They had six children: Chris D., who served in the Union Army, during the Civil war was shot by a bush-whacker; Lusada, who died in 1909; Wesley, who is a carpenter of Moline; John, who is a confectioner of Moline; Margaret, who is the wife of O. E. Shealey, a farmer; and William Francis.

William Francis Giles was reared on the paternal farm, and sent to the district schools until he was fifteen years old, when he came to Moline, and worked for seven years in the meat market owned by the Lovejoys. In 1881, he moved to Geneseo, where he bought and sold stock until returning to Moline, in 1903, he went into his present business, which has proved very profitable. In addition to executing contracts for builders, he takes contracts himself.

In 1884, Mr. Giles married Belle Slattery of St. Louis, and they have had five children: Hazel; Bessie, who is the wife of Harvey Goff of Moline; Warren, who is in business with his father; Mary; Helen. The family belong to the Episcopal church. Fraternally, he is a Mason. In his political ideas, he has always been a republican. The family reside in their beautiful home at No. 2720 Fifteenth street. Always a man of efficient capacity, Mr. Giles has made good use of his opportunities, and stands high in his community, as did his father before him.

GILLETT, Franklin Pierce, owner of 160 acres of as fine land as can be found in Drury township, at one time had 309 acres, and has always been recognized as a leading agriculturist of his place. He was born on his farm, July 23, 1854, a son of Sidney and Jane (McNutt) Gillett. The father was born in New Haven, Conn., where the family had long been established. When he was four years old, his father took him to Ohio, where he lived until after he attained his majority, when he went to Indiana, and farmed until 1836. In that year he came west, settling on the Iowa side of the Mississippi river, and conducted a wood yard. Later, he located in the German settlement of Edginton township, where he spent four years. He then bought the property now owned by his son, Franklin Pierce, and farmed it until his death in 1875. His wife survived him until 1885. They had four children, three of whom survive: John, who died very young; Nancy, who is the widow of Matterson Rutherford; Laura, who married (first) W. Leach, and (second) Charles DeGraff; and Franklin Pierce.

Franklin Pierce Gillett was reared on the farm he now owns, and with the exception of five years spent in Kansas, has passed his life upon it. He attended the schools of his neighborhood, and when old enough, took up his father's work of farming. He is a man who has always been progressive in his methods, and has introduced a number of innovations in his neighborhood. Few men have made more of a success of their agricultural labors than he, and he has every reason to be proud of what he has accomplished.

In 1877, Mr. Gillett married Winifred Hayes, born in Illinois, daughter of James Hayes who came to this county in the sixties. Mr. and Mrs. Gillett are the parents of six children: Bessie, who is the wife of Carl Blankenberg; Laura, who is the wife of Ira Boney; James LeRoy, who is a farmer, residing near his father; Agnes, who is the wife of Floyd Ricketts; Alice, who is a bookkeeper; and Nola, who is at home. Mr. Gillett is a consistent member of the Baptist church. Politically, he is a republican, and has been supervisor two terms, township clerk six years, school director for many years, and has also been assessor and collector several terms. The people of his locality recognize his ability, and feel that they need his good common sense and business experience in the conduct of public affairs, and so are always urging him to accept office.

GILLETT, James Leroy, owner of 106 acres of fertile Drury township land, is making a success of general farming, and specializing in dealing in White-faced cattle, registered stock. His experiments along this line make him believe there is more money in the stock business than any other, and he intends to devote himself to it in the near future. He was born in Drury township, in 1885, a son of Frank P. and Winifred (Hayes) Gillett, the former of whom was born in this township, in 1854, son of Sidney and Jane (McNutt) Gillett. The family is an old one in the history of the country, and was founded here in 1836, by Sidney Gillett. Frank P. Gillett married Winifred Hayes in 1877, she being a daughter of James Hayes who came to Rock Island county in the sixties. Mr. and Mrs. Gillett became the parents of six children: Bessie, Laura, James L., Agnes, Alice and Nola. He is one of the prosperous farmers of Drury township, and a man widely known and universally respected.

James Leroy Gillett attended the school of his neighborhood, and helped his father on the farm, remaining at home until 1906, when he began farming on shares, continuing thus until 1911. In February of the latter year, he bought his present farm, and since then has put up a handsome residence and commodious barn. On February 22, 1911, James Leroy Gillett married Caroline Freymouth, born in Drury township, a daughter of George Freymouth, also a successful farmer of this township. Mr. and Mrs. Gillett are the parents of one daughter, Gertrude. Mr. Gillett is a republican, and belongs to the German Methodist church. He has appropriately named his farm Fairview, because of the beautiful vista disclosed from its sunny slopes. An excellent business man, and one well known, especially among stock dealers, Mr. Gillett is forging ahead rapidly, and has a very fair future before him.

GILSON, Wood G.—The number of reliable laundries at Moline, is increasing, and the quality of the work turned out, is growing in proportion. The people realize that in these days when it is so difficult to secure competent servants, that it is easier and cheaper to place the family laundry with some responsible concern and thus do away with all the old time horrors of washing day. One of the concerns is the Family Laundry at No. 1701 Fifteenth street, owned and operated by Wood G. Gilson. Mr. Gilson is a son of Andrew S. and Ella (Crowder) Gilson, natives of Connecticut and Rock Island county, respectively. The father came to Rock Island county, and there married, and he and his wife became the parents of three children: an infant who died and Wood G., and Bert, both of whom are residing in Moline.

After receiving an educational training in the public schools of Moline, Mr. Gilson worked in the Electric Laundry of Moline, where he learned the business thoroughly, and saving his money, was able to start his own laundry in 1909. He specializes in family laundry, and his equipment is a thoroughly modern one for handling this class of work. His trade shows a steady and healthy increase annually, and the prosperity that is already his is but a fair measure of what he is likely to secure in the future.

On June 29, 1905, Mr. Gilson was married to Dora Stamp, a native of Moline. They have two children: Lola and Richard Andrew. Mr. Gilson is an excellent example of the progressive, aggressive young business man of Rock Island county, to whom so much is due for the commercial and material advancement of this locality.

GINGLES, Monroe.—To those who are engaged in the contracting and building business there is given the opportunity of erecting monuments to their memory far better than any that could be set up by their admiring fellow men in after years, for the structures which they build will bear the mark of their workmanship and if the work be well done it will speak for itself. Monroe Gingles, who has been engaged in the contracting and building business at South Rock Island for a number of years, has a handsome residence at Eleventh and Reasher streets. He was born at New Boston, Ill., September 7, 1850, a son of Andrew and Adelia (Adams) Gingles. Andrew Gingles was born in Pennsylvania, and came to Illinois when a young man, locating at New Boston, where he was engaged in contracting and building and also operated a planing mill for six years. He then moved to Mercer county, and came to Rock Island in 1862, where he continued to engage at his trade until the time of his death, in 1900, while his widow still survives and has attained the age of seventy-six years. Their children were as follows: Monroe; Nora, who is the wife of Frank Gopp, living in Rock Island; Della who is the wife of George Eckhart, also of this city; Alma who married William Hill, of Nebraska; and Velma who married Andrew Johnson, of Rock Island.

Monroe Gingles learned the trade of carpenter with his father, with whom he was associated for some years, and he has assisted in building many of the largest buildings and most valuable residences in the city. The old family home was on Ninth street, but Mr. Gingles now resides on Eleventh street, where he intends to spend the remainder of his life. Mr. Gingles was married October 23, 1873, to Margaret A. Cameron, daughter of Joseph and Lucinda Cameron, natives of Pennsylvania who came to this state when twenty-one years of age and were married the following year. Joseph Cameron was a ship carpenter by trade and also was captain of the ferry boat for twenty years, but retired from active pursuits about twenty-four years prior to his death which occurred November 11, 1909, his wife having passed away November 10, 1880. Mrs. Gingles was born at Rock Island on what was then known as Broadway, now Twenty-third street. Mr. and Mrs. Gingles have had three children: Follis Jay, born October 7, 1874, employed at the John Derr Plow Works, Moline; Edna May, born September 10, 1886, the wife of John G. Schuelermann; and William Rhea, born February 27, 1881, a contractor and builder. Mr. Gingles has nine grandchildren.

GLAZER, Charles Wilfred.—Stock raising and farming are profitable occupations and ones which develop the best in a man for they require not only intimate knowledge but patient endeavor and thrifty management. One of those possessing these qualifications is Charles Wilfred Glazer, owner of the Lester McDonald farm of section 36, Buffalo Prairie township. Mr. Glazer was born in Andalusia village, September 18, 1881, being a son of Edgar and Mary (Brandenburger) Glazer. The father is a farmer of Edgington township, but his wife is now deceased. Their children were: William, who died at the age of five years; Clyde, who is of South Dakota; Clara, who is Mrs. Ole Bull of Buffalo Prairie township; Rex, who is a farmer of Edgington township, married Carrie Pearson; Otto, who is a farmer of Edgington township, married Blanche Roth; Blanche, who is Mrs. Press Ball of Edgington township; Richard; Edith, who is Mrs. Fred Hofstetter of Edgington; Bertha; and two who died in infancy.

Mr. Glazer first attended the Andalusia common schools, but after he was seven or eight years old, he went to school near Nichols, Ia., where his father had moved. They soon returned to Rock Island county, and Mr. Glazer attended the Green Bush school, being taught by Annie and Lottie Bromley. During all this time, however, he had his share of the farm chores, and when only ten years old was made to plow. So well did he do this work, that his father hired him out to various farmers at fifty cents per day. For some years Mr. Glazer continued to work for others, then commenced farming for himself on twenty acres belonging to his father-in-law. This was in the vicinity of Andalusia, but later he came to Buffalo Prairie township, and renting fifty acres, operated it for two years. By this time, he had saved sufficient money to purchase his present property, on which he is specializing in stock raising.

On October 1, 1903, Mr. Glazer married Belle Amelia Kane, daughter of John and Eveline (Shuck) Kane. Mr. and Mrs. Glazer have had children as follows: Lyle, who was born October 26, 1903; Lloyd, who was born January 10, 1905; and Maria, who was born March 1, 1908. Mr. Glazier is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He belongs to no religious organization. In politics, he is a staunch republican, but his private affairs have absorbed so much of his time hitherto, that he has not entered into politics.

GLENN, John (deceased).—The Army of Eternity has claimed some of the most valiant soldiers who survived the privations and dangers of the Civil war. Those who have gone from this life, however, are not forgotten, for their record as loyal, brave patriots remains, and will be handed down through succeeding generations. One of the men who gave his country a courageous service when it had need of him, was the late John Glenn, for many years closely associated with the agricultural interests of Henry county. He was born in Henry county, Ill., November 12, 1842, a son of James and Nancy (Kincaid) Glenn, born in Ohio and Illinois, respectively. The father was a farmer, and was foreman of the Henry Clay farm in Kentucky. He went to Virginia, back to Ohio, later to Kentucky, and finally came to Henry county, Ill., where he died. John Glenn was educated in the country schools of Henry county, later going to the Davenport Business College for a commercial course. He was brought up on a farm and taught to work on it, so that his agricultural operations were successful. His useful life was spent in Henry county, where he passed away August 3, 1883, and his remains were interred in the beautiful Glenwood cemetery.

Mr. Glenn enlisted for service during the Civil war in Company G, One Hundred and Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at Colona, Henry county, Ill., May 29, 1864, with Captain John H. Williams, of Company G, from Rock Island. The company was nearly all from Rock Island county, and Rock Island city was its headquarters. For these reasons this company was called a Rock Island company and belonged to a hundred day regiment. After the members of the company had served their hundred days, they turned over their arms and were mustered out. They were then asked to reorganize, take arms, and march through Missouri in pursuit of the Confederate General Price, which they did, being finally dismissed after serving about five months. Their enlistment was filled by service about Memphis, Tenn., and Holly Springs, Miss.

On December 31, 1865, Mr. Glenn was married in Henry county to Susan Reynolds, born April 13, 1846, daughter of Nazro and Sarah (Bennett) Reynolds, natives of Vermont and Connecticut, respectively. Mrs. Reynolds passed away at Rock Island in 1855, but her husband survived her until 1892, when he died at Moline. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn had two children: Record R., born November 28, 1866, resides in his beautiful home at No. 2404 Fifteenth street, Moline; and Nellie, born January 24, 1869, married Clarence S. Trevor. Record R. married Mrs. Lina (Lees) Glenn, the widow of a cousin. In addition to the family residence at No. 2408 Fifteenth street, Moline, where Mrs. Susan Glenn now lives, John Glenn owned 264 acres of farming land in Henry county. Both children of John Glenn are devoted to the memory of their father. He was an Odd Fellow, and while he did not belong to any religious organization, he was interested in the Methodist church, to which the family belong. In politics he was a republican and held some township offices. He was a man who ordered his life according to the Golden Rule, and tried to give to each man a square deal. Although it is many years since this most excellent man was called to his last reward, he having died August 3, 1883, his influence remains and has had its effect upon the lives of his children, and in the advancement of his community, where, as a private citizen, and public official, he labored with high motives to do what he believed to be his full duty towards his fellows.

GOLDEN, Mary Bennett, who is well known to the traveling public as the hostess of the leading hotel of Barstow, belongs to one of Illinois' old and honored families. She was born in Henry county, Ill., a daughter of Sterling and Elizabeth (Washburn) Bennett, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Connecticut, and granddaughter of Thomas and Phoebe (Smiley) Bennett, of Pennsylvania, and Nathan and Eliza Washburn, of Connecticut. In 1836 the family drove overland to Henry county, Ill., entering wild land, and there the grandfather died in 1877 and the grandmother in 1904, at the age of ninety-seven years. Sterling Bennett was born in 1831, and came to Green River, Henry county, at the age of twenty-six years, the remainder of his life being spent in that locality in agricultural pursuits. His wife died in 1880. Their children were: Olive, who is deceased; Mary; Winfield S., who is of Winslow, Ariz.; William, who is deceased; Frank, who is of Henry county; and Herbert, who is of Silvis. Mary Bennett resided with her parents until her marriage, on January 19, 1886, to Frank Golden, who was born at Barstow, Ill., April 21, 1860, a son of William and Mary (Franklin) Golden, the former a native of New York and the latter of Hampton township, Rock Island county. Frank Golden's father was born in 1835, and his mother in 1840. His grandfather on the paternal side was Thomas Golden, a New York blacksmith, and his maternal grandparents were Joel and Betsie Fadelia (Edwards) Franklin, natives of Vermont. All were early settlers of Hampton township.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Golden moved to Barstow, where Mr. Golden has been engaged in farming to the present time. He erected the first hotel to be built at Barstow, in connection with which there is a well-equipped livery. Mr. Golden is a democrat in politics, and fraternally is connected with the Modern Woodmen of Carbon Cliff. He and Mrs. Golden are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. They have these children: Bessie M., who married O. W. Best of Milwaukee; June, who married Ralph Georgie of Anderson, Ind.; and Glenn, who is residing at Pratt, Kans.

GOLDEN, William Andrew.—The self-made man receives his due meed of appreciation in this country, where industry and thrift are encouraged. There is more merit in making a place for oneself, than to inherit wealth. One of the men who not only found time to provide for himself and family, but to also serve his country during the Civil war is William Andrew Golden, an iron moulder, residing at No. 2304 Seventh avenue, Moline. He was born at Waterloo, County Shefford, Canada East, October 15, 1837, a son of William Rufus and Chloe (Newton) Golden. The father came from Southampton, England, to Waterloo, Canada East, in young manhood. During a terrible storm, the father had both legs frozen so badly as to necessitate amputation below the knees, and as he was thus crippled, he could give little or no assistance to his son. Here he married Chloe Newton, who died when William Andrew Golden was an infant, and the father later married her sister, Sarah. The family moved to Lodi, O., in 1843. There the father died in 1853, from the after effects of his injuries. His widow died later on, at Battle Creek, Mich. Wm. A. Golden came to Rockford, Ill., in 1855. Owing to his youth at the time of the father's death, Mr. Golden learned little of his father's family, and has no records of it.

William Andrew Golden attended school for a year in Canada, and was six years old at the time of the family removal to Lodi, where he continued his education in the common schools until he was fifteen years old, when he began learning the iron moulder's trade. Coming to Rockford, Ill., in 1855, he was living there when the Civil war broke out, and he enlisted at St. Charles, Ill., in Company E, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was mustered out in September 6, 1862. He was a member of the regimental band, during his second year being with the Division Headquarters' band, when he was made bugler in Battery A, First Illinois Light Artillery. During his service, he was in the battle and skirmishes of his regiment, with the exception of the famous march to the sea, as he was forced to remain with the battery which did not go. His regiment belonged to the Fifteenth Army Corps, Second Division, and Mr. Golden was ranked as corporal of his company. He was mustered out of service June 19, 1865.

Mr. Golden was married at Elgin, Ill., to Lois Swartout, in September 1862, and she died at Winona, Minn., in 1867, aged thirty years. The second marriage of Mr. Golden took place in 1870, at Rockford, Ill., to Kate M. Hollenbeck, who died in Moline, May 29, 1906, aged sixty-six years. By his first marriage, Mr. Golden had one child, Willie L., who died in his eighth year. By his second marriage he had three children: Daisy G., now Mrs. Fred A. Hummer of Kansas City, Mo.; Nina M., now Mrs. Elmer E. Morgan of Los Angeles, Cal.; and Bertie, who died in infancy in Rockford. Mr. Golden is a member of the First Methodist Church of Moline, of which he is steward and treasurer. A Mason, he belongs to Doric Lodge No. 319, A. F. & A. M. of Moline. He is a charter member of R. H. Graham Post No. 312 G. A. R. of Moline. Since the organization of the republican party, he has been a republican, although he has never sought public office. However, Mr. Golden in May 1910 was appointed Overseer of the Poor for Moline by the county board of supervisors and in May, 1912, was appointed Adult Probation Officer by the Judges of the Circuit Court of the 14th District and is now ably filling those positions. Although a hard worker all his life, he has enjoyed good health, and feels that his many warm, personal friends are among his blessings.

GOODMAN, Daniel (deceased).—In the death of Daniel Goodman, Rock Island lost one of its best business men, and his family a loving and tender husband and father. Mr. Goodman was connected with several lines of activity, being a cabinetmaker, saw filer, undertaker and dealer in butchers' supplies and tools. For forty years he was a resident of Rock Island and during that time not only built up large interests, but took a pride in the advancement of the city. He was born in Columbia county, Pa., May 23, 1840, being a son of Daniel Goodman, a native of Pennsylvania. The father wove bed spreads, carpets and similar goods, and attained considerable local repute as a weaver and died in his native state.

Daniel Goodman was one of twelve children, and was given a common school education and taught cabinetmaking and undertaking. As was the custom in early days, he worked at first for his board and clothes. On June 15, 1861, feeling that his country had need of his services, he enlisted in Company I, Seventh Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and was discharged at Philadelphia, March 13, 1865. Except when a prisoner, he never missed a roll call, and had a splendid record as a soldier. Mr.

Goodman had the misfortune to be captured only twenty days before his term of enlistment expired and spent ten terrible months in Andersonville and Florence prisons, coming out at the close of the war, a physical wreck. Until his health had been partially restored, he remained with a sister in Philadelphia, then hoping that change of climate would benefit him, came as far west as Muscatine, Ia. There he worked as a carpenter, and after several changes in residence, finally arrived in Rock Island, in 1869. Here he obtained employment on the construction work on the Harper House. Gradually he worked himself into the confidence of the people, and soon was contracting for interior work, some of which is yet to be found in the best buildings in the city. In 1873, he began saw filing and handling butchers supplies, and was in this line at the time of his death. He was an expert in the business, and butchers as far west as the state of Washington, sent to him to file their saws and supply them with their necessary tools. His undertaking business was an outgrowth of his cabinetmaking, and his services along this line were deeply appreciated. Mr. Goodman was a beautiful penman, and wrote sentimental poetry for his own pleasure. His tastes led him to love books, paintings and anything of a refined nature. His death occurred January 11, 1910, and his loss was felt wherever he was known. While not connected with any religious denomination, he leaned towards the Presbyterian faith. In politics he was a republican.

Mr. Goodman was married in Rock Island, August 22, 1871, to Miss Charlotte Gabrio of Pennsylvania, daughter of Francis and Rebecca (Whaetknecht) Gabrio. Mr. and Mrs. Goodman settled on the site of Mrs. Goodman's present home, No. 1405 Seventh avenue as soon as they were married. The one son of Mr. and Mrs. Goodman, Jesse S., died in childhood. Mrs. Goodman was born in Pennsylvania, April 8, 1839, and educated in the public schools of her state. Her father was born in Montreal, Canada, coming of French extraction. He was a blacksmith by trade, and died in Pennsylvania in 1894. His wife was born in Columbia county, Pa., and died in Carbon county, the same state. Mr. Gabrio served in the Mexican war and for four years in the Civil war, and had four sons serving in the latter conflict.

GORDON, Daniel, who, during a long and varied life has seen many changes and participated in stirring events, is one of the old residents of Moline, and one of the most highly respected men of Rock Island county. He was born in Wayne county, Michigan, February 7, 1822, being a son of Amos and Amy (Bucklin) Gordon, the former born in Hopkinton, N. H., and the latter in New York state. The grandparents, Amos and Anna (George) Gordon, were born in New Hampshire, and the grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier. He was a son of Abner Alexander Gordon, a Scotchman, who came to New England in 1651 and settled in Exeter, N. H. He was the first representative of Daniel Gordon's branch of that family to come to America. In 1835, the father of Daniel Gordon with his family came west, intending to locate in Chicago, but instead located on a claim at Prophetstown, Whiteside county, Ill. However, conditions did not suit him and he moved to Henry county, Ill., where he farmed and ran a saw mill until May, 1843, when he moved to Moline. There, until 1856, he worked in a saw-mill, but in that year moved to a piece of wild land bought previously by his son, Daniel, in South Moline township. There he passed away, and three of his eight children now survive him: Daniel; Harriet, Mrs. Purviance of Geneseo, Ill., and Henrietta, Mrs. Decimus Cossum, a widow living with her brother Daniel.

Daniel Gordon attended the public schools at Geneseo, and then studied surveying, following that calling for forty years in different states, especially in Rock Island county. Here he also did a large amount of survey work, notably in connection with the dam from Rock Island to the arsenal, he being superintendent of construction, in 1859. In 1850, he bought forty acres in South Moline, one mile from Moline, a portion of which is included within the present city limits. From time to time he added to his holdings until he owned 100 acres, nearly all of which he sold and it is now being disposed of for city residence lots. Mr. Gordon has been very prominent politically, having filled all the township offices, and for twenty-three years was surveyor of the county. He was the first town clerk of the city of Moline, and served a second term. He was also a justice of the peace nine years, assessor of Moline before it became a city, was supervisor of Moline township four terms, being the first man to hold the office after the organization of the township, and was also township trustee and highway commissioner. In every way he served his community with dignified capability, and has been a model citizen in every sense of the word. The republican party has always received his hearty and loyal support. In religious faith, he is a Congregationalist.

During the many years Mr. Gordon has made Rock Island his home, this county has developed in a remarkable manner. Always an important center on account of the river trade, after the location of the railroads, it sprung into prominence, and many large industries were born within its confines. As a public official, civil engineer, surveyor and agriculturist, Mr. Gordon has done much more than his share of the work of development, and takes a praiseworthy pride in the results of his public spirit.

GORHAM, Adam Joshua, owner of 380 acres of as fine land as can be found in Rock Island county, is one of the progressive agriculturalists of Drury township, having honestly earned his standing through earnest endeavor and neighborly kindness. He carries on general farming, specializing on corn culture, with satisfactory results. He was born in this township in 1857, a son of John and Mary (Stickrad) Gorham, both deceased, who had two children, Adam J. and Henry William.

Adam Joshua Gorham was reared to an agricultural life, and worked on neighboring farms in the township while attending the district schools. Twenty-eight years ago, he bought one and one-half acres of land and that was the beginning of his present magnificent property. All the many improvements on this land have been made by him and among them are his handsome residence and commodious barn, which is one of the best in the township, being constructed of native lumber. He takes great pride in his property, and has every reason to do so, for he is essentially a self-made man, having been left an orphan at an early age, and forced to shift for himself.

In 1880, Adam Joshua Gorham married Rachael Hayes, of Buffalo Prairie township. They have had six children: Martha, who is the wife of William Van Dolah; Clara, who is the wife of William Christian; John and Doris, both of whom are at home; Nettie, who died in childhood; and Ollie, who is at home. In political faith, Mr. Gorham is a republican. Hard-working, thrifty and an excellent business man, Mr. Gorham has forged his way steadily onward and upward, until he is numbered among the prosperous men of his community.

GOTTSCH, August M., owner of ninety acres of rich farm land in South Rock Island, is one of the most prosperous of Rock Island county's farmers, for coal has been discovered upon his property and six mines are in operation at present. The output is large, and the product superior in quality. Mr. Gottsch was born in Holstein, Germany, January 1, 1865, being a son of Otto and Doris (Niessen) Gottsch, the former now living in Rock Island, but the latter died in Germany when August M. was three years old. The father married again, his second wife being Lottie Poppy. The children in the father's family were: Lena, who died in Germany; August M.; Henry, who died in Germany, and one in infancy.

August M. Gottsch attended school until he was fifteen years old, when he was brought to the United States by his maternal grandmother, Mrs. Doris Niessen. They landed in New York harbor and came direct to Rock Island, where the father had come a short time before. August M. was the only survivor of the little family the father had left behind him upon coming to America to make a home for them. The lad went to work for his father, later working in a glass factory for three winters, still later he began being a business man on his own account. He had bought fifteen acres of land, a portion of his present farm, and located on it; set out his land to fruit, and later went into dairying. Adding to his land, he gradually accumulated acres until they amounted to ninety in number. A year ago coal was discovered, and since then his every effort has been directed towards the mining of it.

When twenty-four years old, Mr. Gottsch was married to Miss Minnie Gottsch, born February 15, 1868, daughter of Detloff Gottsch, who died in Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Gottsch have had four children: Dora, born August 8, 1893; Augusta, born November 19, 1897; and two deceased, Lena and William. They are Lutherans, and he is a democrat in politics. Hard-working and thrifty, Mr. Gottsch is deserving of the success which has come to him, and he is well liked throughout Rock Island county, where he is widely known.

GOULD, George Melvin, locksmith and general repairer of Moline, is a man whose upward progress in life has been marked by years of strenuous endeavor, coupled with sterling honesty of action, and integrity of purpose. Such a combination is sure to win out in the long run, and the history of this man's endeavors proves the above to be true. George Melvin Gould was born in Moline, January 6, 1863, a son of Melvin A. and Lucretia Maria (Taylor) Gould, the former born at Richmond, N. Y., September 7, 1832, and the latter at Groton, Mass., August 30, 1833. Melvin A. Gould was a surveyor, civil engineer and general contractor, who came from New York state about 1850, locating first at Marengo, Ill., where he taught school for a time. Later, he was in the United States mail service on the Chicago & Galena Union Railroad, now the Northwestern Railroad, thus continuing until he came to Moline, on July 28, 1853. Here he followed several lines of activity until his enlistment in Company H, Nineteenth Illinois Infantry, June 10, 1861, for service during the Civil war, and was mustered out October 8, 1862, on account of disability. Melvin A. Gould then engaged in surveying and civil engineering and was elected surveyor of the county in 1865. He planned and laid out the first water works of Moline, was city engineer of Moline for several years; also superintended the construction of the Rock Island & St. Louis Railroad, now the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, from Rock River to Macomb, Ill. When death claimed him, February 1, 1907, he was still county surveyor. He was married December 1, 1856, to Miss Lucretia M. Taylor, and they had seven sons and one daughter. Mrs. Gould came with her parents in the early fifties, from Groton, Mass., to Moline where she lived until her death, June 1, 1907. Mr. Gould was a member of R. H. Graham Post, G. A. R., and was instrumental in securing the soldiers' lot and monument in Riverside Cemetery, Moline. The "Gould" family, as the name was spelled originally, came from English and Scotch stock. Ancestors came to the Colonies early in the sixteenth century, settling in the New England states and New York state. Records show that five of the name served in the Revolutionary War. Luther Gould, grandfather of Melvin Gould, married Betsy Hyde. Allen Gould, father of Melvin A. Gould, married twice. He was born in Vermont, November 21, 1798, being the eldest son of his father. The second wife of Allen Gould was Olive A. Spencer, who was born November 5, 1811, and died January 15, 1846, while her husband, Allen Gould, died December 8, 1863. Melvin A. Gould was their third child.

George Melvin Gould was educated in the schools of Moline. He enlisted in Company F, Sixth Regiment, Illinois National Guards, September 4, 1891; was appointed corporal in 1892; sergeant, June 12, 1893; first sergeant, March 26, 1894; elected first lieutenant, April 12, 1897; served as first lieutenant of Company F, Sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Spanish-American War, going to Porto Rico with his regiment. After being mustered out he went back into the militia, in which he continued until April 12, 1910, when he resigned his commission.

A republican, Mr. Gould was elected supervisor from Moline, April 7, 1906, for a term of two years. He belongs to the National Association of Stationary Engineers, and served that body as treasurer, being elected December 2, 1902; of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, of which he was elected trustee on April 9, 1907; and of the Sons of Veterans, of which he was elected commander, May 29, 1909.

On November 3, 1884, George Melvin Gould was married at Chicago to Maggie L. Cline, born at Racine, Wis., February 11, 1864. She died December 4, 1890. He was married (second) to Emma Fabian, at Rock Island, August 30, 1892. She was born at Rock Island, October 29, 1865. In addition to his business interests, Mr. Gould owns his residence at No. 1615 Second avenue, Moline.

GOULD, Judge John M. (deceased).—Financier, eminent jurist, and public-spirited citizen, the late Judge John M. Gould moulded public opinion, and welded together many large business interests, building up a mighty superstructure of municipal supremacy in Moline. The history of this City of Mills might have been written very differently if it had not been for the integrity, foresight and successful activities of Judge Gould, who lived to be over ninety years old. Years but added dignity to his achievements, and brought honors upon his distinguished head. He came on the paternal side from stock that bore its part in forming the country, as he did personally in relation to Moline. The American ancestor of the Gould family, Zacheus Gould, settled in what is now Massachusetts, in 1834, and from then on the family has been one that displayed pioneer tendencies and the ability to work out the destinies of many.

John M. Gould was born at Piermont, N. H., February 24, 1822, a son of Amos and Nancy (Bartlett) Gould. On his mother's side the family was a noted one, for she was a daughter of Nathaniel Bartlett, a soldier in the Revolution, and a worthy and good man. The parents of Judge Gould came to Illinois in 1858, the father living until 1864, and the mother until 1884. After attending the public schools, Judge Gould went to academies at Canaan and Lyme, in his native state, and then came west to Grand Detour, Ill. Within three years after his arrival, his worth was recognized, as he was admitted to partnership by the merchant he had been serving as clerk. In 1848, however, not being satisfied with the outlook there, he sold, and removing to Moline, entered upon what was to be a remarkable period in his own life and that of the city. He became a member of the firm of Deere, Tate & Gould, with Mr. Gould as financial manager. After four years, this connection was severed, and Mr. Gould with Dewitt C. Dimock began manufacturing woodenware. Their mill was built on the island, but removed to the mainland in 1867, in compliance with a request from the government. To their original plant the firm added a lumber-mill in 1868, and organized as a company, with Mr. Dimock as president, and Mr. Gould as vice-president. When Mr. Dimock died in 1886, Mr. Gould became the executive head.

In 1848, at the beginning of his career in Moline, Judge Gould had sufficient faith in the future of the city to assist in the organization of a bank, under the name of Gould, Dimock & Company, which eventually, in 1863, became the First National Bank of Moline, with Judge Gould as its cashier. After four years' service as cashier, he was elected president and served as such for thirty-seven consecutive years. He was also associated with the Moline Water Power Company, the St. Louis, Rock Island & Chicago Railroad Company, serving as treasurer of this road for one year, and was instrumental in securing direct telegraph connections for Moline, and organized the Moline City Hospital.

The first marriage of Judge Gould occurred August 13, 1848, when he was united with Alice Moulton, daughter of William Moulton. She died a few weeks after marriage. On August 9, 1850, Judge Gould married Hannah M. Dimock, born in Connecticut, sister of Mr. Dimock who was later associated so closely with Judge Gould in several undertakings. Five children were born of this union: Alice May and John, who died in infancy; Frank W., who died in 1908; Fred G.; and Grace Eliza, wife of S. M. Hill, who now lives in Cleburne, Tex.

Although early in life Judge Gould was a democrat, he became a republican because of his position relative to slavery. He served as county judge for one term in 1853, soon after his location in Moline. For sixteen years he was a member of the State Board of Charities, and for thirty-three years Moline township had him as its treasurer. The First Baptist church of Moline benefited from Mr. Gould's benefactions, but he never joined any religious organization. The years were kind to this essentially representative man of Moline. Leading a clean, upright, honorable life, Judge Gould passed many milestones, and in spite of his manifold exertions, was in excellent health for one of his age up to the time of his death, October 10, 1912, when he was stricken with apoplexy and died at the home of Earl Altz, No. 831 Fifteenth street, Moline. He was buried in Riverside cemetery on October 13, 1912, from his late residence, No. 2007 Seventh avenue, where of late years he had lived retired.

GRAHAM, Cornelius.—The growing of fruit and vegetables for the market has become a very profitable line of business, and many intelligent men of Rock Island and other counties in such states as Illinois, are directing their energies to it. One of the men who has proven the truth of his theories regarding this work, is Cornelius Graham, a farmer and fruit grower, whose highly developed six-acre tract is held at a remarkably high price. He was born in Oswego county, N. Y., March 9, 1846, being a son of James Henry and Clara (Whitney) Graham, natives of England and New York state. The father was a physician and surgeon, who came to America, settling in Oswego county, N. Y., where he engaged in practice, thus continuing until his death, at the age of sixty-five years. There were five daughters and three sons of his family: Henry who is of Oswego, N. Y.; Susan, who is deceased; Jane, who is the wife of John Aldrich of Oswego, N. Y.; Ella, who is the wife of F. H. Whitney, a banker of Atlanta; Clarice, who is the wife of Orville Whitney, deceased; Mary, who is the wife of William Swetland of New York state; and Walter, who is of the state of Washington. The paternal grandfather served as a surgeon on board a man of war of the British navy.

Cornelius Graham was educated in his native county, and after finishing his studies, began farming. When the Civil War broke out, he enlisted on August 2, 1862, in Company E, One Hundred and Tenth New York Volunteer Infantry, under Captain Nichols and Colonel Charles Hamilton, serving three years. He was mustered out at Albany, N. Y., having participated in numerous battles, among them being those of Freesport and Fort Hudson, and during all this time was neither wounded nor taken prisoner. Returning home at the close of his military service, Mr. Graham resumed his farming, but later came to Iowa, settling on a farm, which he bought in Cass county, making it his home for ten years. Being then attracted to Rock Island, he came to this county, where he bought six acres of land in the suburbs of the city, and has since operated a splendid fruit farm.

Mr. Graham was married in Rock Island, Ill., January 23, 1879, to Elizabeth Dunlap, born there, July 12, 1850, a daughter of Adolphus and Elizabeth (Carr) Dunlap, the former born in Pennsylvania, and the latter in Ohio. Mr. Dunlap was a gunsmith and carried on a business of this nature in Rock Island to which he moved at an early day, entering land from the government, as did his father. Later in life, he engaged in farming, and both he and his wife died well-to-do, in South Rock Island. They had ten children, seven of whom survive: Sophia, who is the wife of James Torgey of Arkansas; Sarah, who is at home; Peter, who is of Kansas; Joseph, who is deceased; Mrs. Graham; Rebecca, who is the wife of John W. Graham of South Heights; Mary, who is the widow of William Schraeder, and Adolphus. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Graham, three of whom survive: Walter and Samuel, who are both deceased; Arthur A., who is of Hamilton, married Marie Assey, issue, Kenneth A.; Minnie M. and Maude E., who are both at home.

Mr. Graham has been town clerk of Rock Island, and was postmaster of Anita, Ia., for seven years. He is a member of the Rock Island Post G. A. R. No. 243. In religious matters, he and his wife are Presbyterians. He comes of good New York and English stock, while his wife's parents were Pennsylvanians, and both are proud of their families and glad to hand down such sturdy traits of character to their own children, as have been shown in both the Graham and Dunlap sides of the house.

GRAHAM, John W. (deceased).—One of the men now deceased, who was instrumental in securing the development of the brick industry of South Rock Island township, was John W. Graham. He was born in Lawrence county, Pa., August 20, 1837, a son of Mayberry and Mary (Smith) Graham, and the fifth born of their eight children. Mayberry Graham was a teacher who, seeking better opportunities, came to Rock Island county with his family, in 1854, but passed away that same year. John W. Graham received his educational training in Pennsylvania, and there learned his trade of brick making. His entire life was spent in this line of work, although later on in life he developed into a manufacturer of brick.

At the outbreak of the Civil war, he enlisted for service in Company H, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, September 5, 1861, under Captain H. Wolfertze. Enlisting as a private, he won, through promotion, the rank of corporal, his company operating with the Army of the Frontier. Mr. Graham was wounded at the battle of Pea Ridge by a rifle ball in the thigh. He also participated in the battle of Prairie Grove and the Siege of Vicksburg. Following the latter he was sent to Texas, having at the expiration of his term of service re-enlisted in the same company and regiment, and participated in the Gulf campaign and the battle of Fort Blakely, which was the last important engagement in that part of the country. His discharge was dated May 5, 1866, as he served nearly five years, and was mustered out at Houston, Tex.

Returning to Rock Island, Mr. Graham resumed his former business cares which his service as a soldier had interrupted, and became one of the leading producers of brick in his township. He with his family, resided in South Rock Island where he owned a home place of three acres on which was a commodious residence and his brick kiln. In addition he owned twenty-five acres in the same township. Politically he was affiliated with the national greenback party. His death occurred January 12, 1909.

On January 28, 1873, Mr. Graham was married at Rock Island to Miss Rebecca Dunlap, a daughter of Adolphus Dunlap, born in Edgington township, April 9, 1852, and brought to Rock Island in 1854. She was reared and educated in Rock Island, attending its public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Graham had children as follows: Clara and Carrie (twins) who were born November 29, 1874, the latter dying December 2 of the same year; Ella, who was born July 9, 1876; John W., Jr., who was born December 20, 1879; Estelle, born February 6, 1882; Carroll D., born May 13, 1885, and died May 27, 1887; Myrtle, born November 17, 1887; Ethel, born October 25, 1889; and Pearl V., born September 27, 1894.

GRAVES, Alson P.—The railroads of Rock Island not only increase the prestige of the city commercially, but they give employment of differing kinds to many of the most substantial men of the community. One of those whose life has been practically spent in the service of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Companies, although now retired, is Alson P. Graves of No. 1600 Eleventh avenue. He was born in Geauga county, Ohio, September 5, 1835, a son of Nelson and Elvira (Dodge) Graves. The father was a native of New York, while the mother was born in Connecticut. For many years the father was a western reserve dairyman.

On January 2, 1866, Mr. Graves came to Rock Island county to open a station at Cordova, and a month later he went to Port Byron. In 1869 he came to the city of Rock Island. For many years he was freighthouse foreman. In 1880 he was transferred to yardmaster, and after two years he was made baggage agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific roads, and gave these companies efficient and faithful service. He is now one of the oldest railroad men living in Rock Island.

At Painesville, Lake county, Ohio, on July 4, 1856, Mr. Graves was married to Sylvia C. Dudley of Austinburg, Ohio, daughter of John and Lydia (Vanaulston) Dudley. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Graves left Ohio. Four children were born to them: Frank A., Burt E., Cora Belle, who died at the age of four years; and Ada May, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Graves have eight grandchildren and four great-grandchildren, and it is a matter of pride with them that during their lives they have always been treated with the utmost kindness and consideration by both their children and grandchildren.

In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Graves are Methodists. He is a Select Knight of America, being one of the charter members of that order. It is Mr. Graves' pride that he had the honor of casting his first presidential vote for Abraham Lincoln, the first time he was the candidate of the party he helped to found, and he has voted the republican ticket ever since. His family were Whigs. In looking back upon the past Mr. Graves is inclined to think that in nothing is there more change than that of education. When he was a lad he went to school in a log house in Auburn, Geauga county, Ohio, and lacked every modern advantage. Now he can see how highly favored the child of today is, and can only hope that those who enjoy these advantages will profit by them as did he and his associates of the log schoolhouse days, from their educational training.

GREEN, Thomas, one of the old and honored residents of Rock Island, who despite the fact that he has reached the age when most men would be willing to lay aside all activities and retire for the remainder of their years, is still hale and hearty and conscientiously fulfills his duties every day as guard at the Bridge, is a native of Ireland, having been born in County Cavan, June 2, 1837, a son of John and Alice (Mogran) Green, natives of the Emerald Isle. The parents brought their children, Peter, John, Thomas and Elizabeth, to the United States in 1838, Thomas then being but nine months old, and settled first in the Eastern States, gradually drifting West until they located in Illinois.

Thomas Green received a good common school education, being reared by his sister, who came with her family to Rock Island in 1854, after the death of the mother in New York state, and the major portion of his life has been spent here, he engaging in various occupations. In the discharge of his duties as guard at the bridge Mr. Green has proved himself faithful and efficient. He has seen a great number of changes take place in Rock Island during the more than half a century he has resided here, and has noted the little town grow into a thriving city and one of the industrial centers of the state. Mr. Green is a member of Sacred Heart parish of the Roman Catholic church, and he is connected with the Western Catholic Union, at Rock Island. In political matters he has always been a democrat, and has been staunch in his support of the principles of that party.

In October, 1874, Mr. Green was married at St Joseph's church, in Rock Island, to Mary Daley, who was born in Moline, Ill., in 1851, and to them there have been born four children, namely: James, Daniel, Alice and Elizabeth. The family home is situated at No. 825 Twenty-fourth street.

GREIM, George Frank, contractor and builder at Moline, is a man whose conscientious adherence to the terms of his contracts, and efficiency of execution, have won for him the reputation of being one of the best men in his line in this county, has been in business for himself for three years, and is conveniently located at No. 902 Nineteenth avenue. He was born in Moline, in 1881, son of Edward and Amelia (Schmidt) Greim. The father was a German by birth, and a cooper by trade, who came to America when twenty years old. Landing at Quebec, Canada, he worked his way to St. Louis, and then to Rock Island, and thence to Moline, where he lived until his death on May 1, 1904. During his active life he operated the first flour and feed store in Moline and later ran a truck farm but retired about five years before his death. His widow still makes her home in Moline, living in the residence built twenty-two years ago at No. 924 Nineteenth avenue. There were eight children in the family of whom seven are living.

George Frank Greim was reared in Moline where he attended the public schools later taking a course in the Davenport Business College. Until he was seventeen years old, he worked on a truck farm owned by his father, and then engaged with the Cooper Saddlery Company, continuing with this concern for seven years, the last five being shipping clerk. At the expiration of this period, he bought an interest in the Moline Foundry Company, but sold it in 1908, to devote himself exclusively to contracting, specializing on shingling and remodeling, being the youngest contractor in the city at that time.

In 1907, Mr. Greim was united in marriage with Lillie Goedecke, born in Rock Island and they have one child, Genevieve Cecelia. The family residence is at No 902 Nineteenth avenue, and is owned by Mr. Greim. Politically, he is a republican. In his life, he has demonstrated what can be accomplished through persistent effort, intelligently directed.

GROGEN, John.—A large proportion of the successful men of today are found to be those who have had humble beginnings, and who have worked their way to the top through sheer perseverance, strict honesty and the ability to adjust themselves to whatever position they found themselves in, thus insuring themselves a comfortable old age and a competency to leave to their children. John Grogen, now living retired in Rock Island, who is one of the city's self-made men, was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1849, a son of Michael and Catherine (McMahon) Grogen, natives of the Emerald Isle, where both died, the father having spent his life in agricultural pursuits.

John Grogen was twenty-one years of age when he came to America, and as a youth he had attended the schools of his native country. After locating in the United States, he desired to better himself in an educational way and entered the Catholic school at Rock Island. After leaving this institution he went to work as a section hand on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, but shortly thereafter took charge of the railroad work at the United States Arsenal, on the Island, where he remained for one year. Subsequently he went to Carbon Cliff, Ill., where he had the contract for the grading work in the building of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad tracks, and after completing this work he was engaged in building the flour mill of Ellis & Company in Rock Island. For some time he was in the employ of Runalds & Company, who were the grading contractors for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, and he subsequently secured a position in the blacksmith shop of this railroad, but finally engaged in business on his own account, in Rock Island, in which he continued until his retirement in November, 1910. Mr. Grogen is a faithful member of St. Joseph's Catholic church. He is a republican in his political views, but he has never cared for public office.

On May 1, 1867, at Jessup, Iowa, Mr. Grogen was married to Mary Ann Cunningham, who was born in Blackhawk county, Iowa, the daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Meany) Cunningham, natives of County Clare, Ireland. Mrs. Grogen died March 2, 1910, having been the mother of nine children, of whom four are dead, the survivors being: Margaret E., who lives at home; George F., a government employe at the Arsenal; Lenora, a dressmaker, residing at home; Celia, who married April 18, 1906, Chris J. Danielson, and has one daughter, Beulah Vera, born February 11, 1907; and John Edward, a professional ball player, now playing in the Western League.

GROH, William Henry.—The German-American element is very strong in Rock Island county, to which fact may be attributed much of its present prosperity, for those who come from the Fatherland are earnest, conscientious, hard-working men and women anxious to secure homes, and they bring up their children to habits of industry and thrift. One of the men who is proud of his German descent is William Henry Groh, of Coe township. He was born in Port Byron, January 6, 1867, but was brought to this township when six weeks old, his father buying sixty acres of the present farm in 1867. Mr. Groh is a son of Frederick and Phillipena (Schafer) Groh, married in Pennsylvania. The father came to Port Byron in 1864 from Pennsylvania where he first located after leaving Germany. He died on the homestead, in 1881, aged fifty-five years, and is buried in Port Byron cemetery. His widow survived him till 1908, dying at the age of seventy-three years. He and his wife had four children: Mary, Mrs. William Haines, lives in Iowa; Louise, Mrs. Andrew Gambler, lives in Minnesota; Lizzie, Mrs. Albert Heeren lives in Coe township; and William Henry.

William Henry Groh was educated in the schools of Coe township, and lives on the homestead, to which he has added until he now owns 172 acres. All of the improvements have been put in by him and his father, and the property is very valuable. He has always followed farming, and is a recognized authority upon agricultural subjects. For a year, he served as tax collector, and for fifteen continuous years was school director. Mr. Groh is a Mason, and has filled all offices in the local lodge, except that of master. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and at present is a trustee of his camp at Port Byron.

On March 4, 1891, Mr. Groh was married to Jessie Sadoris, daughter of Henry and Nancy (Trent) Sadoris. Mr. and Mrs. Groh have four children: Verna, who was born May 9, 1892, was a teacher, and now the wife of Charles Armstrong of Nelson, Neb.; Viola, who was born Oct. 16, 1893, is at home; Nellie, who was born June 20, 1896, is a Rock Island county teacher; and Harold, who was born January 6, 1905, is a student in the district school. The family stand high in the community, and Mr. Groh is recognized as an excellent farmer, thorough business man and good neighbor, who can be counted upon to forward all measures he deems will be of general benefit to the township.

GROSS, Joseph J.—Some of the most progressive of the business men of Rock Island belong to the younger generation, to whose enthusiasm and energetic efforts the city owes much of its present enviable condition. One of those who can always be counted upon for solid support in civic matters, is Joseph J. Gross, proprietor of a large plumbing and heating business his own industry has built up. He was born at the family homestead on Sixth avenue, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, this city, March 30, 1871, being a son of Aloysius M. and Matilda (Schultz) Gross. The father was born in Alsace Lorraine, and his father brought him to America when he was but five years old, locating first at LeClaire, but later removal was made to Rock Island. Aloysius Gross was educated in a German school, held in an old barn, and as he grew old enough, he learned tin and coppersmithing, becoming a sheet metal worker. Later he embarked in business for himself, thus continuing until 1898, when he moved to Galveston, Tex., from which he makes trips to various parts of the country. His wife still resides in Rock Island. Their children were: Joseph J.; George, of Davenport, Iowa; Emma, Mrs. Charles Emke, of Rock Island; Lena, Mrs. E. Scheible, of Rock Island; Louis, of Rock Island; Philip, also of Rock Island; and Tillie, wife of Ed Carlson, who also lives in Rock Island.

Joseph J. Gross began attending school when eight years old, and pleasantly recalls Miss Refine, Miss Wilson and Miss Olson as some of his teachers. When seventeen years old, he left school. He had already embarked in a little business of his own, raising rabbits, pigeons, chickens and similar pets, which he sold in the neighborhood and always ambitious and willing to work, he engaged in various lines of endeavor. These included house raising, and rock quarrying and he slated the roof of the Young Men's Christian Association building. When nineteen, he began learning the trade of plumbing and heating, continuing to work for others until 1908, when he established his present business. He has also built and sold several houses, and owns his comfortable home at No. 3113 Tenth avenue.

Mr. Cross was married in this city, May 19, 1894, to Miss Frony Gumber, daughter of Peter and Kate Gumber of Rock Island. One of the reasons for Mr. Gross' success is that he has never hesitated to do whatever lay to his hand. He also kept looking for chances to better himself, and when opportunity arrived, was able to grasp it. While building up his own fortunes, he has also given due attention to public matters.

GUINN, Robert James.—The rich soil of Rock Island county responds readily to cultivation, but in these days of modern ideas it is necessary for a farmer to conduct his operations scientifically if he wants to reap large profits. One of the progressive agriculturalists of this region is Robert James Guinn, owner of eighty acres of land in Cordova township. He was born in Coe township, December 20, 1869, being a son of James and Rebekah (Crossier) Guinn, both natives of Ireland. Mr. Guinn was reared on the farm, and educated in the schools of his district. When twenty-two years old, he began working for himself as a farmer, on the place he now owns.

When he was twenty-six years old, Mr. Guinn married Millie Forsythe of Cordova township. They have had six children: Bessie, John, Jessie, Charles, who died in infancy, and Floyd and Josephine. In politics Mr. Guinn is a republican in national matters, but with regard to local affairs, is very liberal, preferring to vote for the man rather than the party. He has served as school director for nine years, road overseer for ten years, and for the past five years had charge of the lines of a telephone company, having recently resigned. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias, both of the village of Cordova. During his useful life, Mr. Guinn has always tried to do his full duty, and the success which has certainly attended him, has been honestly earned. He has many friends throughout the county, and holds the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

GUINTY, Daniel (deceased), was born in Ireland, in 1823, a son of poor but honest parents, farming people, who brought their family to America to give them a better chance. They settled on a farm in La Salle county, Ill., where they rounded out their lives, dying there. Their children were as follows: Daniel; Dennis, who is a veteran of the Civil war; Michael, who lives in Butler county, Kans.; Ellen, who is deceased; Ann, who is of La Salle county; and Josephine, who is deceased. Daniel Guinty was but a lad of sixteen years when brought to this country. While residing in La Salle county, Mr. Guinty was married in 1846 to Marcella Dooner, born in Ireland in 1826. She was brought to America when still a girl, by her parents Michael and Mary (Farrell) Dooner, also of Ireland. Mrs. Guinty is a devout member of the Roman Catholic church, belonging to the Sacred Heart parish. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Guinty came by wagon to Rock Island where Mr. Guinty did teaming for awhile. Afterward he went to Henry county and rented land for four years and then bought land on which they lived for forty-three years. Following this he moved to Moline and remained for one year and then came to Rock Island where Mr. Guinty died the following year. He had accumulated a large amount of farm land, owning at time of death 480 acres in Henry and Rock Island counties, and about a section of land in Phelps county, Neb., as well as city property in Moline and Rock Island.

Mr. and Mrs. Guinty became the parents of ten children as follows: Mrs. Mary McCarty, John, Mrs. Ellen Callahan, James, Daniel, Mrs. Emma McHugh (deceased), Mrs. Josephine McHugh, Maude, Mrs. Margaret Foley, and Mrs. Alice Boenitz. Mr. Guinty passed away September 18, 1899, having lived a useful life, and left behind him many warm, personal friends to mourn his loss.

GULDENPFENNIG, Christian.—Rock Island county is noted for the excellence of its farms, as well as for the public spirit and enterprise of the agriculturists who till them, and one of these successful farmers, an old and honored resident of Zuma township, where he owns a well cultivated tract of 185 acres, is Christian Guldenpfennig. He is a native of Prussia, Germany, and was born July 10, 1836, a son of John Henry Guldenpfennig, who died in the Fatherland.

Christian Guldenpfennig was educated in the schools of his native country, and when he had attained his majority came to the United States, first locating at Hampton, Ill., where during the first winter he was employed at chopping wood. He started farming during the summer months, and after his marriage lived at Zuma Center for one winter, when he rented a farm in Hampton township. Later, in partnership with Louis Reiling, he bought eighty acres of land, and after improving that property sold it to his son, Henry, and in 1880 bought the 185-acre tract which he is now operating. Mr. Guldenpfennig is one of the self-made men of his community. Coming here as a young man, with no means and little knowledge of the language, he has won his way to success through his own industry, and his reputation for strict honesty and integrity has made him highly esteemed by his fellow townsmen. He is a democrat in political matters, and has served in the capacity of road commissioner. With his family, he attends the Lutheran church.

In October, 1858, Mr. Guldenpfennig was married to Dorothea Klebe, who was born in Prussia, Germany, a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Saring) Klebe, who came to the United States at the same time as Mr. Guldenpfennig. The following children have been born to this union: Henry; Christian, who is living in Hampton township; August, who is on the old home place; Anna, who is the widow of Emil Saadt, of Rock Island; Emma, who married Irvil Wiley, of South Moline township; Bertha, who married William Frahl, of Zuma township; Clara, who married Christian Denhardt, of Hampton township; Dora, who married Gustaf Miller, of Zuma township; Lillian, who married Frank Wiley, keeper of the Rock Island county poor farm; Minnie, who married William Miller, of South Dakota; and Ida, who married William Klebe, of Seward county, Nebr. The mother of the foregoing children died in October, 1880.

GUMBER, Anthony.—As long as there is any growth in a community, its contractors and all associated in forwarding the building interests are important factors in its industrial life. East Moline has grown very rapidly within the past few years, so that those whose business interests center about its expansion find ready employment here for hands and brains. One of the best known firms of contractors is that operating under the name of Gumber Bros. Anthony Gumber, one of the members of this firm, was born in Rock Island county, June 15, 1879, a son of Peter and Katherine (Matthew) Gumber, natives of Germany, who came to America at an early date. Their children were: Joseph, Paul, John, Michael, Peter, Anthony, Mary and Fanny.

Until he was twelve years old, Anthony Gumber attended school in Rock Island county, but at that tender age he began working, and continued along various lines until he became a contractor of East Moline. In 1908, he and his brother formed a partnership, under the style of Gumber Bros., which has since continued. Owing to their connections, and their relations with labor, they are able to carry out their contracts according to specifications with regard to quality and quantity of materials, and time limit, and are the leading men in their line in the city. Mr. Gumber has devoted himself to his business, and so has had but little time for outside matters, but he is interested in the further development of the city, and can be counted upon to render assistance in any movement which he deems expedient for all.

GUYER, Albert, Sr., a successful agriculturist and proprietor of Pleasant View Farm, is a native of Switzerland, where he was born March 15, 1859, a son of John and Magdalena (Roman) Guyer, also natives of that country, where they spent their entire lives. They had children as follows: John, Jacob, Henry, Albert, Rudolph, Bertha and Anna. Albert Guyer was educated in the public schools of his native country, spending his boyhood on his father's farm. He came to the United States in 1882, having a ticket which gave him passage through to San Francisco, and after landing at New York he went on to that city. For one year he remained in the vicinity of San Francisco, working in a gold mine, but then came to Rock Island county and for three years worked for William Crawford of Edgington township. At the end of that time he located on his present farm of 296 acres of desirable land in Andalusia township, on which he has made many improvements. In addition he owns 160 acres of land in partnership with Will Baker, at Gibson, Iowa, and two lots at Rock Island in partnership with Albert Hofer.

On February 7, 1887, Albert Guyer married (first) Miss Anna Furst, the Rev. Mennekee of Rock Island performing the ceremony. She was a daughter of Jack and Mary Julia (Mitchell) Furst, and died December 4, 1893, leaving two children: Anna, born November 13, 1887, wife of William Baker, of Gibson, Iowa, and Eliza, born February 9, 1889, wife of Frank Venable. Mr. Guyer was married (second) on December 11, 1894, the Rev. Mennekee officiating, to Miss Hannah Winkler, born July 17, 1869, near Hamburg, Germany, a daughter of Carl Winkler of Wheatland, Iowa, who came to America May 30, 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Guyer became the parents of two children: Albert, born September 9, 1895, and Glen, born April 1, 1898. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, and is affiliated with the Masonic order, his wife being a member of the Eastern Star. A republican, he has been a school director and has acted as road commissioner for a number of years. Mr. Guyer is interested in various measures promulgated for securing the welfare and improvement of his community, and is deservedly held in high esteem by all with whom he is associated.

GUYER, Edward H., a representative citizen and well-known attorney of Rock Island, who has been practicing before the Illinois bar since 1879, was born in Rock Island October 30, 1853, a son of Samuel S. and Annette (Holmes) Guyer. Samuel S. Guyer was born at Lewistown, Pa., and settled at Rock Island in 1845, where he was later admitted to the bar. He was sheriff of Rock Island county for two terms and subsequently became judge of the county court of Rock Island county, and was one of the principals in the Rock Island and Peoria Railway Company and Coal Valley Mining Company. Mr. Guyer's mother was born at Lunenburg, Vt., and was a daughter of Judge George E. Holmes, of Port Byron, judge of the Rock Island county probate court. Edward H. Guyer received his preliminary education in the schools of Rock Island, later received the degrees of bachelor of arts and bachelor of laws from Michigan university and spent two years at Heidelberg university, Germany. In 1879, he was admitted to the bar, and since that time has been actively engaged in a large law practice. He organized and managed the Rock Island Mutual Building Loan and Savings Association for twenty-seven years, has been president of the Chippianock Cemetery Association for twenty-five years, and is a director in the State Bank of Rock Island and in the Manufacturers State Bank of East Moline. He has been prominent in various movements having for their object the advancement of this section of the county, platting fourteen additions to Rock Island and Moline and the townsite of East Moline, as well as promoting the Rock Island and Milan street railway. He was responsible for the extension and equipment of the Moline Central street railway with electricity, the first in the state with modern electric equipment. Mr. Guyer is independent in his political convictions, although up to 1906 he had voted with the republican party. He served one term as alderman from the Seventh Ward. He was identified with the movement to secure street pavement; was one of a committee of three that secured the removal of the headquarters of the Modern Woodmen of America to Rock Island; and took initial steps to secure the small firearms plant at Rock Island Arsenal, securing with a representative from Moline and one from Davenport the first appropriation from congress. Mr. Guyer is a member of the Rock Island Club, of which he was president for one year. In addition to his home at No. 728 Twenty-first street and other property in Rock Island, he owns real estate at Moline, one-third townsite of East Moline, and farm lands in Missouri and Nebraska.

On October 18, 1886, Edward H. Guyer was married at New York city to Constance Kimball, born at Paris, Me., September 2, 1856, a daughter of General William K. and Frances (Rawson) Kimball. General Kimball was a lawyer by profession, was United States marshal of Maine and fought during the Civil war, serving as provost marshal under General Butler at the time of his occupation of New Orleans. To Mr. and Mrs. Guyer there have been born two children: Alice E., on November 2, 1888; and Edward R., on March 21, 1891.

HAALK, Gustav.—German-Americans are numbered among the most substantial people this country possesses, and they retain with their love of the Fatherland, devotion to that of their adoption. Untiringly industrious, unremittingly thrifty, and honest without blemish, these sons of Germany are desirable citizens wherever found. One of the most representative of this class in Rock Island county, is Gustav Haalk, of No. 612 Second street, Rock Island, now living retired. He was born in Holstein, Germany, April 12, 1850, being a son of Rieman and Weepka (Martius) Haalk, both natives of Germany. The father, a farmer, never came to America, living and dying in Germany, but his widow came here in 1880, dying in Rock Island in 1882, survived by three sons and three daughters, who are still living.

Gustav Haalk was educated in the thorough German way, and was taught farming scientifically. On November 17, 1881, he landed in New York City, coming thence to Rock Island, where he obtained work in a glass factory. After three years he entered the employ of the Weyerhaeuser & Denkmann Company, remaining with this concern for seventeen years. Following this, he engaged with the Twin City Rendering Company, and worked for it for nine years, after which he retired. While still residing in Germany, Mr. Haalk was married, May 21, 1877, to Augusta Henschin, born in Holstein, Germany, February 28, 1857. Her parents never came to this country, although her father attained to ninety-two years. There were twenty-one children in his family, the greater portion of whom are still living, some in Germany, some in Australia and some in South America. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Haalk: Emma, who was born in Germany, is the wife of Thomas Kehoe, of Rock Island—two sons, Joseph and Charles; Mary, William and Fred, who are all at home. The family have occupied their beautiful home for twenty-seven years. It is owned by Mr. Haalk, as well as other Rock Island realty. The entire family belong to the German Lutheran church. They are solid, reliable people, who have many friends throughout the county. Mr. Haalk has never cared to mix up in public affairs, preferring to do his duty as a private citizen, and keep out of public life.

HABERLAH, Christian.—The pioneers of Rock Island county endured many hardships which they remember with interest, softened by the passage of years. There are a number still living within its confines who remember well when Indians were still to be found, and animals of many varieties to be found in the prairie states, roamed unhindered in the woods. Now everything has changed, and those who went through the exciting days of pioneer times, feel that the consciousness that they accomplished so much, makes up for what they suffered. One of these typical pioneers is Christian Haberlah, now residing at No. 526 Fifteenth street, Rock Island. He was born in Brunswick, Germany, April 10, 1827, a son of Henry and Elizabeth Haberlah. These parents came to America in 1846, landing at New Orleans, on December 15th, the trip consuming eight weeks and two days. Coming north from New Orleans, they reached St. Louis, in January, 1847, and they lived in the country adjacent to this city for three years. They then moved to what was then called Columbia Bottoms, where the father bought thirty acres of land, and lived on this farm until his death, which occurred in 1853. In 1855 Christian Haberlah came to Rock Island, locating in the same block where his present home is located. He is the only one of his family that survives, the others having been, Henry, Louis and Christiana.

While still residing in Missouri, Mr. Haberlah was married to Elizabeth Black, who died in 1898. In 1899, he was married (second) in Rock Island to Catherine Smidt, who died in 1906. Mr. Haberlah's business experiences have been varied. After receiving a good common school education in the German public schools, he worked on a farm until leaving his native land. After coming here, he learned the cooper trade, and followed it profitably until 1876. He belonged to the volunteer fire department in Rock Island from 1857 to 1867, and was also constable in Rock Island for three years. At another period he was street commissioner, and has always been a staunch republican. In 1870 and 1872 he represented the second ward in the city council, and has been an efficient man in whatever office he has been called upon to fill. It is a matter of pride with him that he cast his vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1860, as well as in 1864. The old days have passed away. No longer do Indians come into the stores to trade, nor do the carpenters of today journey up the Mississippi river to Wisconsin points and bring back with them the lumber needed for their work, as did Mr. Haberlah. He rejoices in the changes, and yet in his heart lingers a love of the olden days, and a feeling that after all they were the best, for then neighbors had time to know each other, and form friendships nothing ever severed.

HAEFELE, William G.—Rock Island county presents many opportunities for the live, energetic man not afraid of hard work, and the progressive citizens of this section have not been slow about taking advantage of them. One of those who has attained to more than ordinary success is William G. Haeefe, butcher and farmer of Reynolds. He was born in Wittenburg, Germany, October 14, 1847, a son of Henry and Christina (Green) Haeefe, born in 1801 and 1805, respectively. They came to America in 1852, landing in New Orleans, from whence they went to Indiana, where they remained until 1866. Then removal was made to Illinois, and the father bought a farm three miles west of Mendota, Ill. He died at Sublette, Ill., July 10, 1867, his widow surviving him until 1882. Their children were: Charles of Indiana; Jacob, a blacksmith of Missouri; Frederick, a minister of the Lutheran church; William G.; August, a Methodist minister at Ottawa, Ill.; Christina, Mrs. Peter Richards, living retired at Mendota.

William G. Haeefe grew up much as any farmer boy, working at home until his marriage, February 12, 1880, to Nettie Wait, by Rev. T. R. Johnson, of Edgington. She is a daughter of William and Lucinda (Gray) Wait of Indiana, farming people and pioneers, now both deceased. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Haeefe were: Charles, born March 12, 1881; Wilfred, born March 30, 1882, was a salesman at the Chicago stock yards, died Sept. 28, 1886; Pluma V., born September 19, 1886, now principal of the Hampton school; Cora is deceased; Ruth, born December 24, 1892, is a student at Miami University of Oxford, Ohio; Alfred R., born January 8, 1893, is at home. Mr. Haeefe is a member of the Methodist church of Reynolds, as is his wife. In politics he is independent, reserving his right to vote without regard to party ties. A Mason, he belongs to the Knights Templar of Rock

Geo. Schmidt & wife

Island, Blue Lodge at Preemption, Chapter at Aledo, and to the Court of Honor. His wife is a member of the Eastern Star. Having the interest of his community at heart, Mr. Haeefe has always worked for its development, and his efforts have received recognition by his election to a position on the village board, for six years.

In 1883, Mr. Haeefe began butchering, and has continued at this line of business up to December 9, 1911. He owns a fine fruit farm, raising fruit and poultry, making a specialty of fancy Plymouth Rock chickens. He has owned this property for eighteen years, and has put out trees of all varieties of fruit, and his progressive views regarding its conduct have made the Haeefe Fruit Farm well known for its excellence of product.

HAGER, George.—The automobile has ceased to be only a luxury, and is fast becoming a necessity. With the almost universal use of motor cars has come the demand for their expert care, and a place of safety to store them when not in use. Thus it is that many men of foresight have opened garages in various sections and some of them also act as agent for machines of known repute. Such a man is George Hager, whose garage at 208 Sixteenth street, Moline, is a well-known one. He is agent for the "Velie" car, and does all kinds of automobile repairing expertly and expeditiously. His is the largest garage in Moline, and employment is constantly given to six men.

George Hager was born at Moline, a son of Jacob and Emma (Cooper) Hager, natives of Germany and New York, respectively. The father was brought to this country when eight years old, and for thirty-five years, he has been a resident of Moline. By trade, he is a metal worker. He and his wife reside at Fifteenth street and Thirtieth avenue. Growing up at Moline, Mr. Hager was here educated. In 1905, he began working for himself in a sheet metal business, but in 1909, he abandoned it for his present enterprise. A man of unusual business ability, he has made a success of his undertaking, and is rated high commercially.

On December 27, 1905, George Hager married Louise Runge, daughter of William and Josephine (Peters) Runge, natives of Germany. The mother died at Moline, December 12, 1904, but the father survives. Fraternally, Mr. Hager is an Eagle. He is very liberal in his political views. His business claims all of his time, but he is interested in the advancement of the city, and is accounted a good citizen.

HAGER, Jacob.—Not only are inventors astonishing the world in big things, but their brains and technical knowledge are being put to practical use in perfecting smaller details, which in themselves oftentimes revolutionize processes of manufacture. Jacob Hager, after years of patient experimenting, extending over a period of two decades, has succeeded in producing an aluminum solder which is the only successful preparation of its kind on the market. It is being used with splendid results in the larger factories of Moline, as well as in Mr. Hager's own works, and in 1912, he gave a demonstration of it before the convention of sheet metal workers at St. Louis, to which he had been sent as a delegate. Mr. Hager is a worker in iron, steel and tin roofing, galvanized iron, copper and tin, manufactures furnaces and his aluminum solder.

Mr. Hager was born in France, in 1848, a son of August Hager. The father was a coppersmith in his native land, which he left to come to America in 1852. Landing at New York, he remained in that city for a time, then went on to Cleveland, where he worked at his trade. Later, he was in a real estate business in Wisconsin, and from that state went to Nebraska, where he started a town on the Platte river but that body of water rising, all of his holdings were washed away. His death occurred in Nebraska in 1909. His wife passed away in 1884. There were five children in the family: Jacob, Margaret, Charles, Frank and Fred, the last two being deceased.

Eight years old, when his parents came to this country, Mr. Hager attended school in various places, and while in Wisconsin went to school in a log building, about 100 feet long, that had but three panes of glass in it. He learned his trade with his father, and became expert in it. In 1871, he came to Moline, and built the first shaving pipe blower to be erected in the Tri-Cities. It was put up in Davenport in 1873. Since then, he has progressed until he now has a fine business at No. 516 Fourteenth street, Moline. The family residence is at Fifteenth street and Thirtieth avenue, the same city.

In 1884, Mr. Hager married Emma Ferris, and they have had five daughters and four sons: Emma, Ida, Marie, Hattie, Lizzie (deceased), Neil, George, Bert, William and Jake. Fraternally, he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. Although he has voted the republican ticket since attaining his majority, he is very liberal in his political views. A man of ability and mechanical genius, Mr. Hager has already rendered humanity a big service, and is likely to live to see the day when his product is used in every establishment requiring such a commodity.

HAKES, Capt. George, who is well known to the people of Rock Island county, where he was engaged in business for a number of years, has a still wider circle of acquaintances, having operated steamboats on many of the great waterways of the United States and during the summer seasons, since 1898, has been engaged as chief engineer on vessels navigating the rough waters of the Yukon river, Alaska. His life has been one of more or less adventure and while all of his undertakings have been entered into as business propositions, their outcome could never have been so successful had he not been a man of iron nerve and great courage.

George Hakes was born at Liberty, Mo., October 10, 1844, the eldest child of Holmes and Almeda (Riggs) Hakes, the former of whom was a native of New York and the latter of Kentucky. In 1848 the father brought his family to Rock Island and here engaged in the jewelry business and at the same time conducted a small nursery. Later he became the owner of valuable coal lands at Coal Valley, Ill., and was one of the originators of the Rock Island & Peoria R. R. Later he sold his coal and railroad interests to P. L. Cable of Rock Island, Ill. In 1864, he, with S. S. Guyer of Rock Island, purchased a paper mill that had just been built at Rock Island. Later he bought Mr. Guyer's interest in the paper mill and after operating the mill for two or three years shut it down and had it dismantled and removed to Milan, Ill., and rebuilt to run by water power instead of steam power, having previously bought a half interest in the water power at Milan from D. B. Sears. Later he removed to California, where he died in 1900. The mother removed to Nebraska, and in 1908, died at the home of a sister.

In the Rock Island public schools George Hakes secured his education and his first work was done as an employe in the engine room of the Rock Island-Davenport ferry boat Davenport, in 1859, where he remained one season. In the spring of 1864 he shipped on the steamer Moses McClelland as stoker in the engine room. In the autumn of that year he entered into partnership with A. K. Philleo, of Rock Island, in the grocery business, but sold out to his partner in 1865, and then took an interest, with his father, in the Rock Island paper mill. Later when this business was sold Captain Hakes bought a half interest in a water-power flour mill at Milan, Rock Island county, with his uncle, William T. Riggs, under the firm name of Riggs and Hakes. In 1869 he sold his interest in the mill to his uncle. In 1872 he again entered the business of paper manufacturing at Milan, with his father, and they built a new mill, but it was burned in 1882, and Captain Hakes then returned to steamboating. He accepted a position as assistant engineer on the Rock Island-Davenport ferry and remained for two seasons, becoming a graduated engineer during this time.

In 1885 Captain Hakes engaged with the McDonald Brothers as engineer on their rafting steamers and after three years with them became chief engineer for Knapp, Stoutt & Co., at Reeds Landing, Minn., on their line of boats, towing lumber from the mouth of the Chippewa river to St. Louis, Mo. After two seasons there he engaged as chief engineer with Capt. Samuel Van Sant in the towing of logs and lumber from the foot of Lake Pepin to Davenport. After two seasons he took a position, in 1893, with Capt. John Streckfus, as chief engineer of the Verne Swain, running from Rock Island to Clinton, Iowa, and remained in this position for three years. In 1897 he went as chief engineer with Capt. A. J. Whitney on several of his boats engaged in government work and in the winter of that year ran out of New Orleans as chief engineer on the steamer Onachita, carrying cotton between Monroe, La., and that port. In the next year he signed a contract with the Rock Island-Alaska Mining Company. Two river steamers, Rock Island No. 1 and Rock Island No. 2 were built at Seattle, Wash., Captain Hakes becoming chief engineer on the latter, each steamer carrying a complete crew. They left Seattle in tow of the sea-going tug New England bound for St. Michael, Alaska, where they arrived June 10, 1898, after a very rough passage of about thirty days. Early in July the two boats, heavily loaded, started on their long trip of 1,600 miles up the Yukon river to Dawson, where the Rock Island No. 1 arrived in about three weeks, the sister vessel stopping at Forty Mile. Captain Hakes transferred to the Rock Island No. 2, bringing her back to St. Michael as chief engineer. There the boat was loaded with Northern Commercial Company freight for Andrefsky, about 200 miles up the Yukon, where the boat laid up for the winter. In the summer of 1900 Captain Hakes took charge as chief engineer, of the steamer Oil City for the Standard Oil Company, making the trip from Russian Mission to Dawson and return to St. Michael, where he joined the Alaska Commercial Company's forces as chief engineer of the steamer Leah. He returned with her to Dawson, then went back to St. Michael, which closed the season. Here he remained during the winter of 1900 and 1901, having charge of the machine shops of the North American Transportation and Trading Company. In the spring of 1901 he became chief engineer of their steamer T. C. Powers. He operated this boat during the season, laying up at St. Michael in the fall, when he "came out," as it is called in that far north-land, and returned to New Orleans. There he became chief engineer of the America for the same company by whom he had formerly been employed.

In the spring of 1892 Captain Hakes returned to St. Michael and again shipped as chief engineer of the T. C. Powers, operating the boat during the season and laid by for the winter a short distance above Dawson, again returning to New Orleans, where his berth as chief engineer on the America awaited him. Returning to Alaska in the spring of 1903 he was transferred to the steamer Sarah owned by the same company that owned the Leah. After completing the season running as usual between Dawson and St. Michael, the boat was laid up at Dawson and once more he returned to New Orleans. He continued to thus alternate until 1910. In 1898 he took out master's papers and has run as captain for several seasons on the lower rivers. He is still connected with the same companies and with almost youthful enthusiasm is preparing to once more go to the Far North and take his same vessel up and down the yellow Yukon.

HALL, Warren Douglass.—The power of the press has never been more clearly demonstrated than it is today, when the newspapers of the country practically control public opinion. The editors of these organs shoulder a great responsibility when they assume charge of a sheet destined to go into the homes of thousands, and especially is this true of the newspapers that circulate in the rural communities. Warren Douglass Hall, mayor of Port Byron, Ill., and editor and proprietor of the Port Byron Weekly Globe, an independent newspaper, is a journalist of long standing and marked ability, and a man who is strong in his opinion and principles and ready to stand up for what he considers right. Mr. Hall was born in Jonesville, Hillsdale county, Mich., October 7, 1863, and is a son of Henry and Orinda L. (Cleveland) Hall, the former of County Kent, England, and the latter of New York state.

The parents of Mr. Hall were married in Monroe county, N. Y., and came to Illinois several years after the arrival here of their son, and here spent the remainder of their lives, being buried in Riverside cemetery. Six children were born to them, as follows: William T., a painter of Moline; Alfred T., employed with Deere & Company, in Moline; Celia, who married G. G. Twomley, of Anderson, Ind.; Warren Douglass; Anna, who married Lucius Teed of Hanover, Jackson county, Mich.; and Mary E., who died at the age of sixteen years and is buried in Riverside cemetery. John A., another brother, enlisted in the Union army and died of measles at Corinth, Miss., his name being inscribed on the Soldiers' Monument at Riverside, although his remains were never brought back here.

Warren Douglass Hall received his education in the public and high schools of Jonesville, Mich., and worked on his father's farm until he was sixteen years of age, and at the age of seventeen years located in Moline, Ill., where for one summer he was employed in a sawmill. During that winter he began his newspaper experiences in the office of the Moline Dispatch, where he learned the trade of printer, and when that newspaper was sold and the proprietor purchased the Moline Republican, Mr. Hall accompanied him to the new sheet. He worked there for two years, at which time one of the proprietors of the Port Byron Globe wrote to Mr. Hall's employer asking him for a competent man, and young Hall was sent to fill the position, but after one year returned to Moline, and became a reporter for the Dispatch. One year later, associated with two other newspaper men, he started a campaign paper called the Evening Chimes, but after about two years it was sold to the Dispatch and the plant moved to Davenport, where Mr. Hall and a partner started the Davenport Republican, and this was continued for about three years, when it was discontinued and Mr. Hall took a position as compositor on the Davenport Democrat, which he held for about four years. For one year he was employed by the Rock Island Union, in the same capacity, and at the end of that time came to Port Byron and became employed on the Globe for two years, when he purchased a one-third interest, and later a one-half interest, and he is now the sole proprietor, owning his own building and a fine equipment, including a gasoline engine, folder, modern press, and up-to-date accessories. This publication is the only weekly paper in the county to own its own home and has a circulation of 1,625. In addition, Mr. Hall is the owner of the Hillsdale Post, a Rock Island county publication with a circulation of about 500, and does all kinds of job printing work. Not afraid of work, and of a mechanical turn of mind, Mr. Hall finds his duties in connection with the printing business of a very congenial nature and takes pleasure in their performance—a condition which, in connection with integrity and high moral character, lies at the basis of true success. Coming here in 1890, Mr. Hall has won the thorough confidence of the citizens of Port Byron, who have signified their approval by electing him to various positions of honor and trust. He has served as a member of the board of trustees for two terms, and as clerk of the board for two terms, and at the last election was returned the winner in the mayoralty election. As chief executive of Port Byron he has always had the best interests of the community at heart and has strengthened himself materially in the esteem of his townsmen. In 1910 Mayor Hall was nominated on the Democratic ticket for the office of county clerk, but as the county is overwhelmingly Republican, he met with defeat, although he ran far ahead of his ticket. For eight years he served as justice of the peace in Port Byron. He is a member of the Tri-City Press Club, and fraternally is connected with the Knights of Pythias, having passed all of the chairs to the Grand Lodge, and was elected Keeper of Records and Seal, which he has held continuously. He was one of the organizers of the Knights of Pythias here and is a charter member of the Court of Honor. As may be inferred from his fraternal relations, he mixes easily with society and enjoys the acquaintance of a large circle of friends.

On May 5, 1886, Mr. Hall was married at Port Byron to Miss Ida S. Maxwell, daughter of Jesse and Ann (McCall) Maxwell, who was born in Zuma township. Three children have been born to them: Mahel M., a student in the academy; and Orissa Lucille and Warren Maxwell, attending the public schools.

HAMMER, John C.—One of the agreeable features of South Rock Island is the location here of little farms of four and five acres, the land of which has been developed remarkably, until it yields astonishing crops, usually of small fruits or fancy vegetables. One of the thrifty German-Americans living in this locality is John C. Hammer, born in Bavaria, Germany, October 29, 1844, a son of Andrew and Justena (Beck) Hammer, the former born March 16, 1803, died in 1879, aged seventy-six years; while the latter survived until 1888, when she too passed away, aged eighty-four years. In 1854, Andrew Hammer came to America, landing at New York city, from whence he came to Rock Island. By trade he was a potter, but after coming to this city he conducted a pottery for a few years, then bought a small farm of eleven acres and resided on it until his death, June 10, 1879.

John G. Hammer learned the cooper trade, and for four years conducted a cooper shop, when in 1869 he bought land on Forty-second and Forty-third streets. In 1889, he bought fifty acres on Thirty-eighth street, South Rock Island, where he built a home. Mr. Hammer was married in Rock Island, June 6, 1867, to Mina Mary Munk, youngest daughter of David and Christina B. (Yareson) Munk, born in 1848. Her parents came from Wurtemberg, Germany, to America in the early forties, locating in Iowa, where her father was a teamster. He was killed by a team running away when Mrs. Hammer was only two years old. Mr. and Mrs. Hammer have had children as follows: Margaret, wife of George Schrer, a farmer of South Moline; Amelia, living at home; Andrew, farming the home place; Barbara, wife of George Stroschl of Rock Island; Mary, wife of Fred Brant, living at Prospect Park, Moline; John F., married Miss Amanda E. Verme, in December, 1910, and they have one child, Wallace; Drucilla, married Frank Kroeger, and lives on a farm near Davenport. John F. Hammer died September 9, 1912, at the age of twenty-seven years, and five weeks later the son, Wallace died. All of the family belong to Grace Lutheran church of Rock Island. In politics, Mr. Hammer is a republican but all his life he has devoted himself to his business affairs and not taken an active part in politics, but served as Road Commissioner of his township for nine years.

In 1910 Mr. Hammer bought fifty additional acres, south of his former location and built his present home.

HAMMERQUIST, A. L., in active business in Moline and vicinity in the line of contracting, is one of the older business men of Rock Island county. He was born in Motala, Ostergatlen, Sweden, November 28, 1848, son of Jonas P. and Caroline (Thurston) Hammerquist. He learned the trades of plastering, bricklaying and stone cutting, remaining in his native country until he was about twenty years of age, and then sought the larger opportunities he believed were offered in America, and left his home, locating in Rockford, Ill., in May, 1869. He came to Rock Island the following year and later to Moline, his home since. He has been engaged in contracting for the past thirty years, being one of the oldest business men in this line, and is a leader in this respect in his part of the state. He has contracted for many residences which have been erected in Moline, the number which he has built in the county being counted by thousands. He has shown good business judgment in the manner in which they have been constructed and has built up a reputation for high business ability and integrity.

Mr. Hammerquist was married in Moline in 1874, to Miss Anna Lundquist, who died in the spring of 1904, having been a good wife and mother. She bore her husband six children, as follows: Nestor, who died at the age of three years; Julia, who died when three months old; Esther, who died when thirty years of age; Anna, who is Mrs. Fredericks, of British Columbia; Agnes, who is Mrs. Herbert Wood, of Rock Island, and Eunice, who is Mrs. George Bumbeck of Wyoming. Mrs. Hammerquist is buried in Moline, where she had formed many friendships. Mr. Hammerquist is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Moline.

Mr. Hammerquist's parents came to Moline. The father came to the United States at the same time as his son and the mother in the fall of that year. The father died in 1901, at the age of eighty years, the mother still being a resident of Moline and having reached the age of ninety-one years. Jonas P. Hammerquist and wife had children as follows: Adolph Ludwig; Julia, who died in infancy; Vendla Adela, who is the wife of Frank Anderson of Moline, and Carl Oscar, who is an electrician and lives in Moline.

HAMMOND, William (deceased).—To work hard and faithfully throughout a long and useful life and to leave behind many memories of kindly words and deeds, is not to have lived in vain. The immigrant coming to this country during the early days in the history of Rock Island county encountered many more difficulties than those to be found today, but these never discouraged William Hammond, for many years one of the prosperous and honored agriculturists of Edgington township, for he expected to work hard for what he obtained and was thankful for the opportunity to make a home for himself and his dear ones. He was born in Switzerland in 1799 and died in Edgington township in 1866. He was a son of William Hammoud, who had four children: William, George, James and Matilda. William Hammond was given but a meagre education. Upon coming to Rock Island county he settled in Edgington township, where he entered 160 acres of wild land, and from it developed a fine farm.

William Hammond was married in Indiana to Phoebe Sutton, daughter of Elijah and Parmelia (Robison) Sutton. Mrs. Hammond died on the home farm December 3, 1898. They had four children: Dorothy, Mrs. Albert Hatch, of Smith county, Kas.; Jonathan, (deceased), who was of Sears, married Julia Cunningham; and Phoebe, who owns the home place. Mr. Hammond was a consistent member of the Methodist church, and took an active part in it as long as he lived. Politically he was a staunch democrat. A man of high moral character and lofty standards of living, he required others to do what was right and brought up his children in the fear of the Lord. Throughout his life he was never known to shun hard work or neglect a duty, and when he died he left behind him a warm appreciation of his worth and a deep feeling of loss that time alone dissipated. Both he and his wife are buried in Reynolds cemetery.

HAMPTON, Alem Hull (deceased).—The Hampton family has been represented in America for many generations, being of English descent. Members of the family have participated in every war that has taken place in this country, beginning with the Revolutionary war, and have been public-spirited and useful citizens wherever they have settled. Alem H. Hampton was born at Milton, Northumberland county, Pa., May 4, 1843, his ancestors having come there from England and Scotland, first settling in the New England states, also in Virginia, and other southern states. He was a son of Russell Park and Sarah F. (Marr) Hampton, who spent the greater part of their lives at Fort Madison, Iowa. They had ten children, of whom only five sons grew to manhood, namely: Theodore; John Vanlue; Alem Hull; Eli Wellever; Alexander Brown.

Alem Hull Hampton was educated in the public schools and Fort Madison academy of Fort Madison, Iowa, and spent his youth at Fort Madison. At the age of eighteen years he enlisted in Company E, Nineteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, for service during the Civil war, being promoted to rank of first sergeant. He served three years, being enrolled on the 14th day of August, and was mustered out at Mobile, Ala., July 10, 1865. At the close of the war he worked in the Government river service and served seventeen years with the Rock Island Plow Company, and the last eighteen years was employed in the United States postoffice service. Mr. Hampton, coming to Rock Island in 1871, lived here until his death April 18, 1912. He was married in 1871 at Davenport, Iowa, to Augusta Heiland, a native of Germany, a daughter of Henry and Dr. Adelaide Heiland, who came to America in 1853, settling at Chicago, Ill. Children as follows were born of this union: Clara Burgh, who is at home; Russell Park, who is deceased, was color sergeant in the Sixth Illinois Regiment during the Spanish-American war; and Harriette May and Orville Brown, who are at home. The family have always made Rock Island their home, and now reside at No. 1627 Twelfth avenue. Mr. Hampton was a prominent member of John Buford Post, No. 243, G. A. R., and also of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was well known in political circles, having served several years as a member of the city council, and was highly regarded for his public spirit and upright character. At his death he was buried in Chippianock cemetery, interment taking place on April 20, 1912.

HANNAH, Andrew, a retired stone mason and bricklayer of Rock Island county, is now residing at No. 404 Nineteenth street, Moline. He was born in Canada, between two ports of the Great Lakes, August 2, 1832, being a son of James and Anna (Miller) Hannah. The father died when fifty-nine years old, about forty years ago, while his wife was about forty-five years old at death. Both were natives of Scotland, but were married in Canada. They had ten children: Elizabeth Shaw, who is deceased; Andrew, who is deceased; James, who is deceased; Margaret (Mrs. Dr. Hoover of Pennsylvania); Mary Platt; Jane Sharp, who is deceased; Henrietta Cresler; Isaac; and two who died in infancy.

Andrew Hannah attended the common schools in Ohio and Iowa, and leaving there, learned the trade of stone mason, working at it and bricklaying for fifty years. The family moved to Janesville, Ohio, when he was two years old, but after ten years, they came to Rock Island, arriving here in 1844. In September, 1852, Mr. Hannah enlisted in Company F, Twenty first Iowa Infantry, and served bravely and loyally, participating in the following engagements: Port Gibson, Raymond, Champion's Hill, Siege of Vicksburg, and Jackson, Miss. While on the way to Mobile, Ala., he was captured, March 24, 1865, and after being taken to Mobile was sent to the prison at Meridian, Miss., where he was held until taken to Vicksburg, where he was in parole camp. Later he was exchanged, taken up the Mississippi river to Benton Barracks, Mo., and was discharged at Clinton, Iowa, in June, 1865. After the Siege of Vicksburg Mr. Hannah was granted a furlough to go to his home, but when he went to take the boat found it so heavily loaded he could not go on it, which proved most fortunate, as it was blown up after starting its trip, and about 1,500 killed. He succeeded in getting away the following day. For a year following the Civil war, Mr. Hannah lived at Colesburg, Delaware county, Iowa, and about 1867, came to Rock Island, where he lived until 1872, when he came to Moline which has since been his home. He has not been regularly engaged at his trade since 1910, although he still continues to do occasional work along that line, even if he is eighty-one years old, and the oldest man living in Moline who lays brick and stone.

Mr. Hannah belongs to the G. A. R., R. H. Graham Post 212 of Moline, and is active in the affairs of his post. The Second Methodist church claims his membership. He has always been a republican, and has served as tax collector twice.

On August 2, 1860, he was married in Dubuque county, Iowa, to Anna McGinnis, their children being: Alice, who is deceased; James, who was born in 1862; Joseph and Charles. Mrs. Hannah died in Rock Island in 1870. On October 23, 1872, Mr. Hannah was married (second) in Rock Island county to Mary Vanmeter, and their children were: Francis, who died when three years old; John, who is deceased; William; Forest; Henrietta, who is deceased; and Florence. James married Mary Bowden, and William married a Miss Washburn. A loyal citizen, faithful workman, and devoted family man, Mr. Hannah has lived an upright, honorable life, and is entitled to the rest and comfort he is now enjoying.

HANSEN, Hans.—Although one of the smaller kingdoms of Europe, Denmark has been noted for its sturdy independence and the rugged honesty of its people. Reared amid strengthening surroundings, taught from early childhood to work hard and honestly, these people develop into magnificent men and women, and are welcomed wherever they care to go to seek new homes. This has been true in Rock Island county where their worth is appreciated. One of the farmers of this locality who is proud of his Danish birth is Hans Hansen of Cordova township, born in Denmark, January 17, 1859. When twenty years old, he decided to seek his fortune in the United States, so came here in 1879. At first he worked at Clinton, Iowa, but in 1893, went to Garden Plains, Whiteside county, Ill., and spent a year on a farm. Following that, he came to Cordova township, and having carefully saved his earnings, bought eighty acres here, which was partly improved. He at once began making other improvements, and now has one of the best properties in the township.

While living at Clinton, Iowa, Mr. Hansen was married, June 31, 1882, to Catherine Carstensen, born in Holstein, Germany, but came to Clinton in young womanhood. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen have had children as follows: Anna, who is Mrs. E. B. Hunt of DeKalb, Ill.; Hans, who is of Cordova township; Eva, who is Mrs. Ralph George of Cordova township; Walter, who is at home; Mollie, who is Mrs. Homer Miller of Cordova township; Fred, who is of Clinton, Iowa; Charles, Noah and Mary, who are at home; and two who died in infancy. Mr. Hansen is a Lutheran. In politics he is a republican, and has been highway commissioner since 1909. Fraternally he belongs to Camp No. 33, Modern Woodmen of America, of Cordova. Although he had been educated in Denmark, Mr. Hansen had to learn the English language after his arrival, and it is remarkable how much he has accomplished. Coming here, not knowing the language or customs, a poor boy, he has become prosperous through hard, unremitting work and thrifty saving, and he has not only been successful in a worldly sense, but he has gained a reputation for uprightness and honesty of purpose that accords well with his religious faith.

HANSEN, Herman, contractor and builder, of Rock Island, is one of the men who have aided materially in the establishing of the present high standard of architectural beauty which characterizes this city's buildings. He was born in Rock Island, in 1873, a son of Christian and Anna Hansen. The father was born in Denmark, the mother in Germany, and both are now residing at No. 835 Twenty-second street, this city. The father was connected with the Rock Island Lumber Co. for twenty years, but is now retired. Herman Hansen was brought up in Rock Island and given a good public school education. After leaving school, he learned the carpenter trade, and until 1910, he followed it, but then branched out as a contractor and builder, and already his contracts show that such a move was justified. He is a reliable man, who lives up to the terms of his contracts, and people have confidence in him and his word.

In 1897, he married Louise Strate, born in Rock Island. They have two children: Dorothy and Charlotte. The Presbyterian church holds his membership. Fraternally, he is a Mason, Maccabee, Modern Woodman of America, and Eagle. Politically, he is a republican. He takes a pride in the fact that his father was one of the pioneers of the county, and is interested in his part in assisting in the further development here. No man can develop fully who has not proper civic pride, and because he possess this virtue in marked degree, Mr. Hansen bears his part in all measures he believes will work out for the ultimate good of all.

HARPER, Stuart (deceased).—The city of Rock Island sustained a severe loss when Stuart Harper died suddenly at the home of his sister, April 3, 1910, at Denver, Colo., where he was visiting, after a period of pleasure traveling. He was well known to hotelmen at Rock Island, as he was for years one of the proprietors of the Harper House, and he was also interested in other lines of business activity, having been for a number of years connected with the Velie Carriage Company, of Moline. Stuart Harper, who was but thirty-eight years of age at the time of his death, was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Ben Harper, pioneers of Rock Island, and he was born in Rock Island county. The Harper House was built by his father, and from his youth Stuart Harper was connected with the hotel. Just prior to giving up his residence in Rock Island, Mr. Harper had been identified with the Velie Carriage Company, a large manufacturing concern of Moline, and feeling that he had earned a vacation after many years of strenuous business activity, he decided to take a pleasure trip, accompanied by his wife, who was with him at the time of his death, and who survives him. The funeral was held on the Thursday following his death, at the home of Mrs. S. H. Velie of Moline, and the many warm personal friends of Mr. and Mrs. Harper attended the last sad obsequies. Interment was made in the Harper family lot at Chippinock cemetery. Striving always to forward movements along the line of progress, doing his duty as a citizen and working for those measures which he felt would bring about good government, Stuart Harper was one of the men who are bound to make their influence felt in whatever community they find themselves, and he will long be remembered not only as an upright business man and representative citizen, but as a kind and charitable friend.

HARRIS, George Thomas, of an old and well known Rock Island county family, was born at Marston, Ill., January 14, 1864, a son of Jacob

L. and Ann Eliza (McGrew) Harris, and a grandson of Thomas and Jane (Findlay) Harris. His great-grandfather, Jacob Harris, came to America from the northern part of Ireland. He eventually located in St. Joseph county, Ind., and Harris township in that county was named in his honor. The early history of the family is given at some length in connection with the sketch of Jacob L. Harris, which also appears in this work.
