NAPERVILLE, a city of Du Page County on the west branch of the Du Page River and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 30 miles west-southwest of Chicago, and 9 miles east of Aurora. It has three banks, a weekly newspaper, stone quarries, couch factory, and nine churches; is also the seat of the Northwestern College, an institution founded in 1861 by the Evangelical Association; the college now has a normal school department. Population (1890), 2,216; (1900), 2,629.

NAPLES, a town of Scott County, on the Illinois River and the Hannibal and Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, 21 miles west of Jacksonville. Population (1890), 452; (1900), 398.

NASHVILLE, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Washington County, on the Centralia & Chester and the Louisville & Nashville Railways; is 120 miles south of Springfield and 50 miles east by south from St. Louis. It stands in a coal-producing and rich agricultural region. There are two coal mines within the corporate limits, and two large flouring mills do a considerable business. There are numerous churches, public schools, including a high school, a State bank, and four weekly papers. Population (1880), 2,222; (1890), 2,084; (1900), 2,184.

NAUVOO, a city in Hancock County, at the head of the Lower Rapids on the Mississippi, between Fort Madison and Keokuk, Iowa. It was founded by the Mormons in 1840, and its early growth was rapid. After the expulsion of the "Saints" in 1846, it was settled by a colony of French Icarians, who introduced the culture of grapes on a large scale. They were a sort of communistic order, but their experiment did not prove a success, and in a few years they gave place to another class, the majority of the population now being of German extraction. The chief industries are agriculture and horticulture. Large quantities of grapes and strawberries are raised and shipped, and considerable native wine is produced. Population (1880), 1,402; (1890), 1,208; (per census 1900), 1,321. (See also Mormons.)

NAVIGABLE STREAMS (by Statute). Following the example of the French explorers, who chiefly followed the water-ways in their early explorations, the early permanent settlers of Illinois, not only settled, to a great extent, on the principal streams, but later took especial pains to maintain their navigable character by statute. This was, of course, partly due to the absence of improved highways, but also to the belief that, as the country developed, the streams would become extremely valuable, if not indispensable, especially in the transportation of heavy commodities. Accordingly, for the first quarter century after the organization of the State Government, one of the questions receiving the attention of the Legislature, at almost every session, was the enactment of laws affirming the navigability of certain streams now regarded as of little importance, or utterly insignificant, as channels of transportation. Legislation of this character began with the first General Assembly (1819), and continued, at intervals, with reference to one or two of the more important interior rivers of the State, as late as 1867. Besides the Illinois and Wabash, still recognized as navigable streams, the following were made the subject of legislation of this character: Beaucoup Creek, a branch of the Big Muddy, in Perry and Jackson Counties (law of 1819); Big Bay, a tributary of the Ohio in Pope County (Acts of 1833); Big Muddy, to the junction of the East and West Forks in Jefferson County (1835), with various subsequent amendments; Big Vermilion, declared navigable (1831); Bon Pas, a branch of the Wabash, between Wabash and Edwards Counties (1831); Cache River, to main fork in Johnson County (1819); Des Plaines, declared navigable (1839); Embarras (1831), with various subsequent acts in reference to improvement; Fox River, declared navigable to the Wisconsin line (1840), and Fox River Navigation Company, incorporated (1855); Kankakee and Iroquois Navigation & Manufacturing Company, incorporated (1847), with various changes and amendments (1851-65); Kaskaskia (or Okaw), declared navigable to a point in Fayette County north of Vandalia (1819), with various modifying acts (1823-67); Macoupin Creek, to Carrollton and Alton road (1837); Piasa, declared navigable in Jersey and Madison Counties (1861); Rock River Navigation Company, incorporated (1841), with subsequent acts (1845-67); Sangamon River, declared navigable to Third Principal Meridian—east line of Sangamon County—(1822), and the North Fork of same to Champaign County (1845); Suy-Carty (a bayou of the Mississippi), declared navigable in Pike and Adams Counties (1859); Spoon River, navigable to Cameron's mill in Fulton County (1835), with various modifying acts (1845-53); Little Wabash Navigation Company, incorporated and river declared navigable to McCawley's bridge—probably in Clay County—(1826), with various subsequent acts making appropriations for its improvement; Skillet Fork (a branch of the Little Wabash), declared navigable to Slocum's Mill in Marion County (1837), and to Ridgway Mills (1846). Other acts passed at various times declared a number of unimportant streams navigable, including Big Creek in Fulton County, Crooked Creek in Schuyler County, Lusk's Creek in Pope County, McKee's Creek in Pike County, Seven Mile Creek in Ogle County, besides a number of others of similar character.

NEALE, THOMAS M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Fauquier County, Va., 1796; while yet a child removed with his parents to Bowling Green, Ky., and became a common soldier in the War of 1812; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1824, and began the practice of law; served as Colonel of a regiment raised in Sangamon and Morgan Counties for the Winnebago War (1827), and afterwards as Surveyor of Sangamon County, appointing Abraham Lincoln as his deputy. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, for a number of years, at Springfield. Died, August 7, 1840.

NEECE, William H., ex-Congressman, was born, Feb. 26, 1831, in what is now a part of Logan County, Ill., but which was then within the limits of Sangamon; was reared on a farm and attended the public schools in McDonough County; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1858, and has been ever since engaged in practice. His political career began in 1861, when he was chosen a member of the City Council of Macomb. In 1864 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1869, a member of the Constitutional Convention. In 1871 he was again elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1878, to the State Senate. From 1883 to 1887 he represented the Eleventh Illinois District in Congress, as a Democrat, but was defeated for re-election in 1890 by William H. Gest, Republican.

NEGROES. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

NEOGA, a village of Cumberland County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 20 miles southwest of Charleston; has a bank, two newspapers, some manufactories, and ships grain, hay, fruit and live-stock. Pop. (1890), 829; (1900), 1,126.

NEPONSET, a village and station on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in Bureau County, 4 miles southwest of Mendota. Population (1880), 652; (1890), 542; (1900), 516.

NEW ALBANY & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

NEW ATHENS, a village of St. Clair County, on the St. Louis & Cairo "Short Line" (now Illinois Central) Railroad, at the crossing of the Kaskaskia River, 31 miles southeast of St. Louis; has one newspaper and considerable grain trade. Population (1880), 603; (1890), 624; (1900), 856.

NEW BERLIN, a village of Sangamon County, on the Wabash Railway, 17 miles west of Springfield. Population (1880), 403; (1900), 533.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Newberry, an early business man of Chicago, who left half of his estate (aggregating over $2,000,000) for the purpose. The property bequeathed was largely in real estate, which has since greatly increased in value. The library was established in temporary quarters in 1887, and the first section of a permanent building was opened in the autumn of 1893. By that time there had been accumulated about 160,000 books and pamphlets. A collection of nearly fifty portraits—chiefly of eminent Americans, including many citizens of Chicago—was presented to the library by G. P. A. Healy, a distinguished artist, since deceased. The site of the building occupies an entire block, and the original design contemplates a handsome front on each of the four streets, with a large rectangular court in the center. The section already completed is massive and imposing, and its interior is admirably adapted to the purposes of a library, and at the same time rich and beautiful. When completed, the building will have a capacity for four to six million volumes.

NEWBERRY, Walter C., ex-Congressman, was born at Sangerfield, Oneida County, N. Y., Dec. 23, 1835. Early in the Civil War he enlisted as a private, and rose, step by step, to a colonelcy, and was mustered out as Brevet Brigadier-General. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Fourth Illinois District in the Fifty-second Congress (1891-93). His home is in Chicago.

NEWBERRY, Walter L., merchant, banker and philanthropist, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Sept. 18, 1804, descended from English ancestry. He was President Jackson's personal appointee to the United States Military Academy at West Point, but was prevented from taking the examination by sickness. Subsequently he embarked in business at Buffalo, N. Y., going to Detroit in 1828, and settling at Chicago in 1833. After engaging in general merchandising for several years, he turned his attention to banking, in which he accumulated a large fortune. He was a prominent and influential citizen, serving several terms as President of the Board of Education, and being, for six years, the President of the Chicago Historical Society. He died at sea, Nov. 6, 1868, leaving a large estate, one-half of which he devoted, by will, to the founding of a free reference library in Chicago. (See Newberry Library.)

NEW BOSTON, a city of Mercer County, on the Mississippi River, at the western terminns of the Galva and New Boston Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. Population (1890), 445; (1900), 703.

NEW BRIGHTON, a village of St. Clair County and suburb of East St. Louis. Population (1890), 868.

NEW BURNSIDE, a village of Johnson County, on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 53 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1880), 650; (1890), 596; (1900), 468.

NEW DOUGLAS, a village in Madison County, on the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad; in farming and fruit-growing region; has coal mine, flour mill and newspaper. Population (1900), 469.

NEWELL, John, Railway President, was born at West Newbury, Mass., March 31, 1830, being directly descended from "Pilgrim" stock. At the age of 16 he entered the employment of the Cheshire Railroad in New Hampshire. Eighteen months later he was appointed an assistant engineer on the Vermont Central Railroad, and placed in charge of the construction of a 10-mile section of the line. His promotion was rapid, and, in 1850, he accepted a responsible position on the Champlain & St. Lawrence Railroad. From 1850 to 1856 he was engaged in making surveys for roads in Kentucky and New York, and, during the latter year, held the position of engineer of the Cairo City Company, of Cairo, Ill. In 1857 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, as Division Engineer, where his remarkable success attracted the attention of the owners of the old Winona & St. Peter Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern system), who tendered him the presidency. This he accepted, but, in 1864, was made President of the Cleveland & Toledo Railroad. Four years later, he accepted the position of General Superintendent and Chief Engineer of the New York Central Railroad, but resigned, in 1869, to become Vice-President of the Illinois Central Railroad. In 1871 he was elevated to the presidency, but retired in September, 1874, to accept the position of General Manager of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad, of which he was elected President, in May, 1883, and continued in office until the time of his death, which occurred at Youngstown, Ohio, August 25, 1894.

NEWHALL, (Dr.) Horatio, early physician and newspaper publisher, came from St. Louis, Mo., to Galena, Ill., in 1827, and engaged in mining and smelting, but abandoned this business, the following year, for the practice of his profession; soon afterward became interested in the publication of "The Miners' Journal," and still later in "The Galena Advertiser," with which Hooper Warren and Dr. Philleo were associated.

In 1830 he became a Surgeon in the United States Army, and was stationed at Fort Winnebago, but retired from the service, in 1832, and returned to Galena. When the Black Hawk War broke out he volunteered his services, and, by order of General Scott, was placed in charge of a military hospital at Galena, of which he had control until the close of the war. The difficulties of the position were increased by the appearance of the Asiatic cholera among the troops, but he seems to have discharged his duties with satisfaction to the military authorities. He enjoyed a wide reputation for professional ability, and had an extensive practice. Died, Sept. 19, 1870.

NEWMAN, a village of Douglas County, on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway, 52 miles east of Decatur; has a bank, a newspaper, canning factory, broom factory, electric lights, and large trade in agricultural products and livestock. Population (1890), 990; (1900), 1,166.

NEWSPAPERS, EARLY. The first newspaper published in the Northwest Territory, of which the present State of Illinois, at the time, composed a part, was "The Centinel of the Northwest Territory," established at Cincinnati by William Maxwell, the first issue appearing in November, 1793. This was also the first newspaper published west of the Allegheny Mountains. In 1796 it was sold to Edmund Freeman and assumed the name of "Freeman's Journal." Nathaniel Willis (grandfather of N. P. Willis, the poet) established "The Scioto Gazette," at Chillicothe, in 1796. "The Western Spy and Hamilton Gazette" was the third paper in Northwest Territory (also within the limits of Ohio), founded in 1799. Willis's paper became the organ of the Territorial Government on the removal of the capital to Chillicothe, in 1800.

The first newspaper in Indiana Territory (then including Illinois) was established by Elihu Stout at Vincennes, beginning publication, July 4, 1804. It took the name of "The Western Sun and General Advertiser," but is now known as "The Western Sun," having had a continuous existence for ninety-five years.

The first newspaper published in Illinois Territory was "The Illinois Herald," but, owing to the absence of early files and other specific records, the date of its establishment has been involved in some doubt. Its founder was Matthew Duncan (a brother of Joseph Duncan, who was afterwards a member of Congress and Governor of the State from 1834 to 1838), and its place of publication Kaskaskia, at that time the Territorial capital. Duncan, who was a native of Kentucky, brought a press and a primitive printer's outfit with him from that State. Gov. John Reynolds, who came as a boy to the "Illinois Country" in 1800, while it was still a part of the "Northwest Territory," in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," has fixed the date of the first issue of this paper in 1809, the same year in which Illinois was severed from Indiana Territory and placed under a separate Territorial Government. There is good reason, however, for believing that the Governor was mistaken in this statement. If Duncan brought his press to Illinois in 1809—which is probable—it does not seem to have been employed at once in the publication of a newspaper, as Hooper Warren (the founder of the third paper established in Illinois) says it "was for years only used for the public printing." The earliest issue of "The Illinois Herald" known to be in existence, is No. 32 of Vol. II, and bears date, April 18, 1816. Calculating from these data, if the paper was issued continuously from its establishment, the date of the first issue would have been Sept. 6, 1814. Corroborative evidence of this is found in the fact that "The Missouri Gazette," the original of the old "Missouri Republican" (now "The St. Louis Republic"), which was established in 1808, makes no mention of the Kaskaskia paper before 1814, although communication between Kaskaskia and St. Louis was most intimate, and these two were, for several years, the only papers published west of Vincennes, Ind.

In August, 1817, "The Herald" was sold to Daniel P. Cook and Robert Blackwell, and the name of the paper was changed to "The Illinois Intelligencer." Cook—who had previously been Auditor of Public Accounts for the Territory, and afterwards became a Territorial Circuit Judge, the first Attorney-General under the new State Government, and, for eight years, served as the only Representative in Congress from Illinois—for a time officiated as editor of "The Intelligencer," while Blackwell (who had succeeded to the Auditorship) had charge of the publication. The size of the paper, which had been four pages of three wide columns to the page, was increased, by the new publishers, to four columns to the page. On the removal of the State capital to Vandalia, in 1820, "The Intelligencer" was removed thither also, and continued under its later name, afterwards becoming, after a change of management, an opponent of the scheme for the calling of a State Convention to revise the State Constitution with a view to making Illinois a slave State. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

The second paper established on Illinois soil was "The Shawnee Chief," which began publication at Shawneetown, Sept. 5, 1818, with Henry Eddy—who afterwards became a prominent lawyer of Southern Illinois—as its editor. The name of "The Chief" was soon afterwards changed to "The Illinois Emigrant," and some years later, became "The Shawneetown Gazette." Among others who were associated with the Shawneetown paper, in early days, was James Hall, afterwards a Circuit Judge and State Treasurer, and, without doubt, the most prolific and popular writer of his day in Illinois. Later, he established "The Illinois Magazine" at Vandalia, subsequently removed to Cincinnati, and issued under the name of "The Western Monthly Magazine." He was also a frequent contributor to other magazines of that period, and author of several volumes, including "Legends of the West" and "Border Tales." During the contest over the slavery question, in 1823-24, "The Gazette" rendered valuable service to the anti-slavery party by the publication of articles in opposition to the Convention scheme, from the pen of Morris Birkbeck and others.

The third Illinois paper—and, in 1823-24, the strongest and most influential opponent of the scheme for establishing slavery in Illinois—was "The Edwardsville Spectator," which began publication at Edwardsville, Madison County, May 23, 1819. Hooper Warren was the publisher and responsible editor, though he received valuable aid from the pens of Governor Coles, George Churchill, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, Morris Birkbeck and others. (See Warren, Hooper.) Warren sold "The Spectator" to Rev. Thomas Lippincott in 1825, and was afterwards associated with papers at Springfield, Galena, Chicago and elsewhere.

The agitation of the slavery question (in part, at least) led to the establishment of two new papers in 1822. The first of these was "The Republican Advocate," which began publication at Kaskaskia, in April of that year, under the management of Elias Kent Kane, then an aspirant to the United States Senatorship. After his election to that office in 1824, "The Advocate" passed into the hands of Robert K. Fleming, who, after a period of suspension, established "The Kaskaskia Recorder," but, a year or two later, removed to Vandalia. "The Star of the West" was established at Edwardsville, as an opponent of Warren's "Spectator," the first issue making its appearance, Sept. 14, 1822, with Theophilus W. Smith, afterwards a Justice of the Supreme Court, as its reputed editor. A few months later it passed into new hands, and, in August, 1823, assumed the name of "The Illinois Republican." Both "The Republican Advocate" and "The Illinois Republican" were zealous organs of the pro-slavery party.

With the settlement of the slavery question in Illinois, by the election of 1824, Illinois journalism may be said to have entered upon a new era. At the close of this first period there were only five papers published in the State—all established within a period of ten years; and one of these ("The Illinois Republicau," at Edwardsville) promptly ceased publication on the settlement of the slavery question in opposition to the views which it had advocated. The next period of fifteen years (1825-40) was prolific in the establishment of new newspaper ventures, as might be expected from the rapid increase of the State in population, and the development in the art of printing during the same period. "The Western Sun," established at Belleville (according to one report, in December, 1825, and according to another, in the winter of 1827-28) by Dr. Joseph Green, appears to have been the first paper published in St. Clair County. This was followed by "The Pioneer," begun, April 25, 1829, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, with the indomitable Dr. John M. Peck, author of "Peck's Gazetteer," as its editor. It was removed in 1836 to Upper Alton, when it took the name of "The Western Pioneer and Baptist Banner." Previous to this, however, Hooper Warren, having come into possession of the material upon which he had printed "The Edwardsville Spectator," removed it to Springfield, and, in the winter of 1826-27, began the publication of the first paper at the present State capital, which he named "The Sangamo Gazette." It had but a brief existence. During 1830, George Forquer, then Attorney-General of the State, in conjunction with his half-brother, Thomas Ford (afterwards Governor), was engaged in the publication of a paper called "The Courier," at Springfield, which was continued only a short time. The earliest paper north of Springfield appears to have been "The Hennepin Journal," which began publication, Sept. 15, 1827. "The Sangamo Journal"—now "The Illinois State Journal," and the oldest paper of continuous existence in the State—was established at Springfield by Simeon and Josiah Francis (cousins from Connecticut), the first issue bearing date, Nov. 10, 1831. Before the close of the same year James G. Edwards, afterwards the founder of "The Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye," began the publication of "The Illinois Patriot" at Jacksonville. Another paper, established the same year, was "The Gazette" at Vandalia, then the State capital. (See Forquer, George; Ford, Thomas; Francis, Simeon.)

At this early date the development of the lead mines about Galena had made that place a center of great business activity. On July 8, 1828, James Jones commenced the issue of "The Miners' Journal," the first paper at Galena. Jones died of cholera in 1833, and his paper passed into other hands. July 20, 1829, "The Galena Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald" began publication, with Drs. Horatio Newhall and Addison Philleo as editors, and Hooper Warren as publisher, but appears to have been discontinued before the expiration of its first year. "The Galenian" was established as a Democratic paper by Philleo, in May, 1832, but ceased publication in September, 1836. "The Northwestern Gazette and Galena Advertiser," founded in November, 1834, by Loring and Bartlett (the last named afterwards one of the founders of "The Quincy Whig"), has had a continuous existence, being now known as "The Galena Advertiser." Benjamin Mills, one of the most brilliant lawyers of his time, was editor of this paper during a part of the first year of its publication.

Robert K. Fleming, who has already been mentioned as the successor of Elias Kent Kane in the publication of "The Republican Advocate," at Kaskaskia, later published a paper for a short time at Vandalia, but, in 1827, removed his establishment to Edwardsville, where he began the publication of "The Corrector." The latter was continued a little over a year, when it was suspended. He then resumed the publication of "The Recorder" at Kaskaskia. In December, 1833, he removed to Belleville and began the publication of "The St. Clair Gazette," which afterwards passed, through various changes of owners, under the names of "The St. Clair Mercury" and "Representative and Gazette." This was succeeded, in 1839, by "The Belleville Advocate," which has been published continuously to the present time.

Samuel S. Brooks (the father of Austin Brooks, afterwards of "The Quincy Herald") at different times published papers at various points in the State. His first enterprise was "The Crisis" at Edwardsville, which he changed to "The Illinois Advocate," and, at the close of his first year, sold out to Judge John York Sawyer, who united it with "The Western Plowboy," which he had established a few months previous. "The Advocate" was removed to Vandalia, and, on the death of the owner (who had been appointed State Printer), was consolidated with "The Illinois Register," which had been established in 1836. The new paper took the name of "The Illinois Register and People's Advocate," in 1839 was removed to Springfield, and is now known as "The Illinois State Register."

Other papers established between 1830 and 1840 include: "The Vandalia Whig" (1831); "The Alton Spectator," the first paper published in Alton (January, 1834); "The Chicago Democrat," by John Calhoun (Nov. 26, 1833); "The Beardstown Chronicle and Illinois Bounty Land Advertiser," by Francis A. Arenz (July 29, 1833); "The Alton American" (1833); "The White County News," at Carmi (1833); "The Danville Enquirer" (1833); "The Illinois Champion," at Peoria (1834); "The Mount Carmel Sentinel and Wabash Advocate" (1834); "The Illinois State Gazette and Jacksonville News," at Jacksonville (1835); "The Illinois Argus and Bounty Land Register," at Quincy (1835); "The Rushville Journal and Military Tract Advertiser" (1835); "The Alton Telegraph" (1836); "The Alton Observer" (1836); "The Carthaginian," at Carthage (1836); "The Bloomington Observer" (1837); "The Backwoodsman," founded by Prof. John Russell, at Grafton, and the first paper published in Greene County (1837); "The Quincy Whig" (1838); "The Illinois Statesman," at Paris, Edgar County (1838); "The Peoria Register" (1838). The second paper to be established in Chicago was "The Chicago American," whose initial number was issued, June 8, 1835, with Thomas O. Davis as proprietor and editor. In July, 1837, it passed into the hands of William Stuart & Co., and, on April 9, 1839, its publishers began the issue of the first daily ever published in Chicago. "The Chicago Express" succeeded "The American" in 1842, and, in 1844, became the forerunner of "The Chicago Journal." The third Chicago paper was "The Commercial Advertiser," founded by Hooper Warren, in 1836. It lived only about a year. Zebina Eastman, who was afterwards associated with Warren, and became one of the most influential journalistic opponents of slavery, arrived in the State in 1839, and, in the latter part of that year, was associated with the celebrated Abolitionist, Benjamin Lundy, in the preliminary steps for the issue of "The Genius of Universal Emancipation," projected by Lundy at Lowell, in La Salle County. Lundy's untimely death, in August, 1839, however, prevented him from seeing the consummation of his plan, although Eastman lived to carry it out in part. A paper whose career, although extending only a little over one year, marked an era in Illinois journalism, was "The Alton Observer," its history closing with the assassination of its editor, Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, on the night of Nov. 8, 1837, while unsuccessfully attempting to protect his press from destruction, for the fourth time, by a pro-slavery mob. Humiliating as was this crime to every law-abiding Illinoisan, it undoubtedly strengthened the cause of free speech and assisted in hastening the downfall of the institution in whose behalf it was committed.

That the development in the field of journalism, within the past sixty years, has more than kept pace with the growth in population, is shown by the fact that there is not a county in the State without its newspaper, while every town of a few hundred population has either one or more. According to statistics for 1898, there were 605 cities and towns in the State having periodical publications of some sort, making a total of 1,709, of which 174 were issued daily, 34 semi-weekly, 1,205 weekly, 28 semi-monthly, 238 monthly, and the remainder at various periods ranging from tri-weekly to eight times a year.

NEWTON, the county-seat of Jasper County, situated on the Embarras River, at the intersection of subsidiary lines of the Illinois Central Railroad from Peoria and Effingham; is an incorporated city, was settled in 1828, and made the county-seat in 1836. Agriculture, coal-mining and dairy farming are the principal pursuits in the surrounding region. The city has water-power, which is utilized to some extent in manufacturing, but most of its factories are operated by steam. Among these establishments are flour and saw mills, and grain elevators. There are a half-dozen churches, a good public school system, including parochial school and high school, besides two banks and three weekly papers. Population (1890), 1,428; (1900), 1,630.

NEW YORK, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY (Nickel Plate), a line 522.47 miles in length, of which (1898) only 9.96 miles are operated in Illinois. It owns no track in Illinois, but uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad (9.96 miles in length), of which it has financial control, to enter the city of Chicago. The total capitalization of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis, in 1898, is $50,222,568, of which $19,425,000 is in bonds.—(HISTORY.) The New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad was incorporated under the laws of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois in 1881, construction begun immediately, and the road put in operation in 1882. In 1885 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1887, and reorganized by the consolidation of various eastern lines with the Fort Wayne & Illinois Railroad, forming the line under its present name. The road between Buffalo, N. Y., and the west line of Indiana is owned by the Company, but, for its line in Illinois, it uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad, of which it is the lessee, as well as the owner of its capital stock. The main line of the "Nickel Plate" is controlled by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway, which owns more than half of both the preferred and common stock.

NIANTIC, a town in Macon County, on the Wabash Railway, 27 miles east of Springfield. Agriculture is the leading industry. The town has three elevators, three churches, school, coal mine, a newspaper and a bank. Pop. (1900), 654.

NICOLAY, John George, author, was born in Essingen, Bavaria, Feb. 26, 1832; at 6 years of age was brought to the United States, lived for a time in Cincinnati, attending the public schools there, and then came to Illinois; at 16 entered the office of "The Pike County Free Press" at Pittsfield, and, while still in his minority, became editor and proprietor of the paper. In 1857 he became Assistant Secretary of State under O. M. Hatch, the first Republican Secretary, but during Mr. Lincoln's candidacy for President, in 1860, aided him as private secretary, also acting as a correspondent of "The St. Louis Democrat." After the election he was formally selected by Mr. Lincoln as his private secretary, accompanying him to Washington and remaining until Mr. Lincoln's assassination. In 1865 he was appointed United States Consul at Paris, remaining until 1869; on his return for some time edited "The Chicago Republican"; was also Marshal of the United States Supreme Court in Washington from 1872 to 1887. Mr. Nicolay is author, in collaboration with John Hay, of "Abraham Lincoln: A History," first published serially in "The Century Magazine," and later issued in ten volumes; of "The Outbreak of the Rebellion" in "Campaigns of the Civil War," besides numerous magazine articles. He lives in Washington, D. C.

NICOLET, Jean, early French explorer, came from Cherbourg, France, in 1618, and, for several years, lived among the Algonquins, whose language he learned and for whom he acted as interpreter. On July 4, 1634, he discovered Lake Michigan, then called the "Lake of the Illinois," and visited the Chippewas, Menominees and Winnebagoes, in the region about Green Bay, among whom he was received kindly. From the Mascoutins, on the Fox River (of Wisconsin), he learned of the Illinois Indians, some of whose northern villages he also visited. He subsequently returned to Quebec, where he was drowned, in October, 1642. He was probably the first Caucasian to visit Wisconsin and Illinois.

NILES, Nathaniel, lawyer, editor and soldier, born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1817; attended an academy at Albany, from 1830 to '34, was licensed to practice law and removed west in 1837, residing successively at Delphi and Frankfort, Ind., and at Owensburg, Ky., until 1842, when he settled in Belleville, Ill. In 1846 he was commissioned a First Lieutenant in the Second Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Colonel Bissell's) for the Mexican War, but, after the battle of Buena Vista, was promoted by General Wool to the captaincy of an independent company of Texas foot. He was elected Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives at the session of 1849, and the same year was chosen County Judge of St. Clair County, serving until 1861. With the exception of brief periods from 1851 to '59, he was editor and part owner of "The Belleville Advocate," a paper originally Democratic, but which became Republican on the organization of the Republican party. In 1861 he was appointed Colonel of the Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but the completion of its organization having been delayed, he resigned, and, the following year, was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirtieth, serving until May, 1864, when he resigned—in March, 1865, receiving the compliment of a brevet Brigadier-Generalship. During the winter of 1862-63 he was in command at Memphis, but later took part in the Vicksburg campaign, and in the campaigns on Red River and Bayou Teche. After the war he served as Representative in the General Assembly from St. Clair County (1865-66); as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; on the Commission for building the State Penitentiary at Joliet, and as Commissioner (by appointment of Governor Oglesby) for locating the Soldiers' Orphans' Home. His later years have been spent chiefly in the practice of his profession, with occasional excursions into journalism. Originally an anti-slavery Democrat, he became one of the founders of the Republican party in Southern Illinois.

NIXON, William Penn, journalist, Collector of Customs, was born in Wayne County, Ind., of North Carolina and Quaker ancestry, early in 1832. In 1853 he graduated from Farmers' (now Belmont) College, near Cincinnati, Ohio. After devoting two years to teaching, he entered the law department of the University of Pennsylvania (1855), graduating in 1859. For nine years thereafter he practiced law at Cincinnati, during which period he was thrice elected to the Ohio Legislature. In 1868 he embarked in journalism, he and his older brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, with a few friends, founding "The Cincinnati Chronicle." A few years later "The Times" was purchased, and the two papers were consolidated under the name of "The Times-Chronicle." In May, 1872, having disposed of his interests in Cincinnati, he assumed the business management of "The Chicago Inter Ocean," then a new venture and struggling for a foothold. In 1875 he and his brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, secured a controlling interest in the paper, when the former assumed the position of editor-in-chief, which he continued to occupy until 1897, when he was appointed Collector of Customs for the City of Chicago—a position which he now holds.

NOKOMIS, a city of Montgomery County, on the "Big Four" main line and "Frisco" Railroads, 81 miles east by north from St. Louis and 52 miles west of Mattoon; in important grain-growing and hay-producing section; has waterworks, electric lights, three flour mills, two machine shops, wagon factory, creamery, seven churches, high school, two banks and three papers; is noted for shipments of poultry, butter and eggs. Population (1890), 1,305; (1900), 1,371.

NORMAL, a city in McLean County, 2 miles north of Bloomington and 124 southwest of Chicago; at intersecting point of the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads. It lies in a rich coal and agricultural region, and has extensive fruit-tree nurseries, two canning factories, one bank, hospital, and four periodicals. It is the seat of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, founded in 1869, and the Illinois State Normal University, founded in 1857; has city and rural mail delivery. Pop. (1890), 3,459; (1900), 3,795.

NORMAL UNIVERSITIES. (See Southern Illinois Normal University; State Normal University.)

NORTH ALTON, a village of Madison County and suburb of the city of Alton. Population (1880), 838; (1890), 762; (1900), 904.

NORTHCOTT, William A., Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Murfreesboro, Tenn., Jan. 28, 1854—the son of Gen. R. S. Northcott, whose loyalty to the Union, at the beginning of the Rebellion, compelled him to leave his Southern home and seek safety for himself and family in the North. He went to West Virginia, was commissioned Colonel of a regiment and served through the war, being for some nine months a prisoner in Libby Prison. After acquiring his literary education in the public schools, the younger Northcott spent some time in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., after which he was engaged in teaching. Meanwhile, he was preparing for the practice of law and was admitted to the bar in 1877, two years later coming to Greenville, Bond County, Ill., which has since been his home. In 1880, by appointment of President Hayes, he served as Supervisor of the Census for the Seventh District; in 1882 was elected State's Attorney for Bond County and re-elected successively in '84 and '88; in 1890 was appointed on the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, and, by selection of the Board, delivered the annual address to the graduating class of that year. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Congress for the Eighteenth District, but was defeated in the general landslide of that year. In 1896 he was more fortunate, being elected Lieutenant-Governor by the vote of the State, receiving a plurality of over 137,000 over his Democratic opponent.

NORTH PEORIA, formerly a suburban village in Peoria County, 2 miles north of the city of Peoria; annexed to the city of Peoria in 1900.

NORTHERN BOUNDARY QUESTION, THE. The Ordinance of 1787, making the first specific provision, by Congress, for the government of the country lying northwest of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi (known as the Northwest Territory), provided, among other things (Art. V., Ordinance 1787), that "there shall be formed in the said Territory not less than three nor more than five States." It then proceeds to fix the boundaries of the proposed States, on the assumption that there shall be three in number, adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, however, and it is further understood and declared, that the boundaries of these three States shall be subject so far to be altered that, if Congress shall hereafter find it expedient, they shall have authority to form one or two States in that part of the said Territory which lies north of an east and west line drawn through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan." On the basis of this provision it has been claimed that the northern boundaries of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio should have been on the exact latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan, and that the failure to establish this boundary was a violation of the Ordinance, inasmuch as the fourteenth section of the preamble thereto declares that "the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States and the people and States in the said Territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent."—In the limited state of geographical knowledge, existing at the time of the adoption of the Ordinance, there seems to have been considerable difference of opinion as to the latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan. The map of Mitchell (1755) had placed it on the parallel of 42° 20', while that of Thomas Hutchins (1778) fixed it at 41° 37'. It was officially established by Government survey, in 1835, at 41° 37' 07.9". As a matter of fact, the northern boundary of neither of the three States named was finally fixed on the line mentioned in the proviso above quoted from the Ordinance—that of Ohio, where it meets the shore of Lake Erie, being a little north of 41° 44'; that of Indiana at 41° 46' (some 10 miles north of the southern bend of the lake), and that of Illinois at 42° 30'—about 61 miles north of the same line. The boundary line between Ohio and Michigan was settled after a bitter controversy, on the admission of the latter State into the Union, in 1837, in the acceptance by her of certain conditions proposed by Congress. These included the annexation to Michigan of what is known as the "Upper Peninsula," lying between Lakes Michigan and Superior, in lieu of a strip averaging six miles on her southern border, which she demanded from Ohio.—The establishment of the northern boundary of Illinois, in 1818, upon the line which now exists, is universally conceded to have been due to the action of Judge Nathaniel Pope, then the Delegate in Congress from Illinois Territory. While it was then acquiesced in without question, it has since been the subject of considerable controversy and has been followed by almost incalculable results. The "enabling act," as originally introduced early in 1818, empowering the people of Illinois Territory to form a State Government, fixed the northern boundary of the proposed State at 41° 39', then the supposed latitude of the southern extremity of Lake Michigan. While the act was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Pope offered an amendment advancing the northern boundary to 42° 30'. The object of his amendment (as he explained) was to gain for the new State a coast line on Lake Michigan, bringing it into political and commercial relations with the States east of it—Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York—thus “affording additional security to the perpetuity of the Union.” He argued that the location of the State between the Mississippi, Wabash and Ohio Rivers—all flowing to the south—would bring it in intimate communication with the Southern States, and that, in the event of an attempted disruption of the Union, it was important that it should be identified with the commerce of the Lakes, instead of being left entirely to the waters of the south-flowing rivers. “Thus,” said he, “a rival interest would be created to check the wish for a Western or Southern Confederacy. Her interests would thus be balanced and her inclinations turned to the North.” He recognized Illinois as already “the key to the West,” and he evidently foresaw that the time might come when it would be the Keystone of the Union. While this evinced wonderful foresight, scarcely less convincing was his argument that, in time, a commercial emporium would grow up upon Lake Michigan, which would demand an outlet by means of a canal to the Illinois River—a work which was realized in the completion of the Illinois & Michigan Canal thirty years later, but which would scarcely have been accomplished had the State been practically cut off from the Lake and its chief emporium left to grow up in another commonwealth, or not at all. Judge Pope’s amendment was accepted without division, and, in this form, a few days later, the bill became a law.—The almost superhuman sagacity exhibited in Judge Pope’s argument, has been repeatedly illustrated in the commercial and political history of the State since, but never more significantly than in the commanding position which Illinois occupied during the late Civil War, with one of its citizens in the Presidential chair and another leading its 250,000 citizen soldiery and the armies of the Union in battling for the perpetuity of the Republic—a position which more than fulfilled every prediction made for it.—The territory affected by this settlement of the northern boundary, includes all that part of the State north of the northern line of La Salle County, and embraces the greater portion of the fourteen counties of Cook, Dupage, Kane, Lake, McHenry, Boone, DeKalb, Lee, Ogle, Winnebago, Stephenson, Jo Daviess, Carroll and Whiteside, with portions of Kendall, Will and Rock Island—estimated at 8,500 square miles, or more than one-seventh of the present area of the State. It has been argued that this territory belonged to the State of Wisconsin under the provisions of the Ordinance of 1787, and there were repeated attempts made, on the part of the Wisconsin Legislature and its Territorial Governor (Doty), between 1839 and 1843, to induce the people of these counties to recognize this claim. These were, in a few instances, partially successful, although no official notice was taken of them by the authorities of Illinois. The reply made to the Wisconsin claim by Governor Ford—who wrote his “History of Illinois” when the subject was fresh in the public mind—was that, while the Ordinance of 1787 gave Congress power to organize a State north of the parallel running through the southern bend of Lake Michigan, “there is nothing in the Ordinance requiring such additional State to be organized of the territory north of that line.” In other words, that, when Congress, in 1818, authorized the organization of an additional State north of and in (i. e., within) the line named, it did not violate the Ordinance of 1787, but acted in accordance with it—in practically assuming that the new State “need not necessarily include the whole of the region north of that line.” The question was set at rest by Wisconsin herself in the action of her Constitutional Convention of 1847-48, in framing her first constitution, in form recognizing the northern boundary of Illinois as fixed by the enabling act of 1818.

NORTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, created by Act of the Legislature, approved, April 16, 1869. The Commissioners appointed by Governor Palmer to fix its location consisted of August Adams, B. F. Shaw, W. R. Brown, M. L. Joslyn, D. S. Hammond and William Adams. After considering many offers and examining numerous sites, the Commissioners finally selected the Chisholm farm, consisting of about 155 acres, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Elgin, on the west side of Fox River, and overlooking that stream, as a site—this having been tendered as a donation by the citizens of Elgin. Plans were adopted in the latter part of 1869, the system of construction chosen conforming, in the main, to that of the United States Hospital for the Insane at Washington, D. C. By January, 1872, the north wing and rear building were so far advanced as to permit the reception of sixty patients. The center building was ready for occupancy in April, 1873, and the south wing before the end of the following year. The total expenditures previous to 1876 had exceeded \$637,000, and since that date liberal appropriations have been made for additions, repairs and improvements, including the addition of between 300 and 400 acres to the lands connected with the institution. The first Board of Trustees consisted of Charles N. Holden, Oliver Everett and Henry W. Sherman, with Dr. E. A. Kilbourne as the first Superintendent, and Dr. Richard A. Dewey (afterwards Superintendent of the Eastern Hospital at Kankakee) as his Assistant. Dr. Kilbourne remained at the head of the institution until his death, Feb. 27, 1890, covering a period of nineteen years. Dr. Kilbourne was succeeded by Dr. Henry J. Brooks, and he, by Dr. Loewy, in June, 1893, and the latter by Dr. John B. Hamilton (former Supervising Surgeon of the United States Marine Hospital Service) in 1897. Dr. Hamilton died in December, 1898. (See Hamilton, John B.) The total value of State property, June 30, 1894, was \$882,745.66, of which \$701,330 was in land and buildings. Under the terms of the law establishing the hospital, provision is made for the care therein of the incurably insane, so that it is both a hospital and an asylum. The whole number of patients under treatment, for the two years preceding June 30, 1894, was 1,797, the number of inmates, on Dec. 1, 1897, 1,054, and the average daily attendance for treatment, for the year 1896, 1,296. The following counties comprise the district dependent upon the Elgin Hospital: Boone, Carroll, Cook, DeKalb, Jo Daviess, Kane, Kendall, Lake, Stephenson, Whiteside and Winnebago.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution, incorporated in 1884, at Dixon, Lee County, Ill., for the purpose of giving instruction in branches related to the art of teaching. Its last report claims a total of 1,639 pupils, of whom 885 were men and 744 women, receiving instruction from thirty-six teachers. The total value of property was estimated at more than $200,000, of which $160,000 was in real estate and $45,000 in apparatus. Attendance on the institution has been affected by the establishment, under act of the Legislature of 1895, of the Northern State Normal School at DeKalb (which see).

NORTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, an institution for the confinement of criminals of the State, located at Joliet, Will County. The site was purchased by the State in 1857, and comprises some seventy-two acres. Its erection was found necessary because of the inadequacy of the first penitentiary, at Alton. (See Alton Penitentiary.) The original plan contemplated a cell-house containing 1,000 cells, which, it was thought, would meet the public necessities for many years to come. Its estimated cost was $550,000; but, within ten years, there had been expended upon the institution the sum of $934,000, and its capacity was taxed to the utmost. Subsequent enlargements have increased the cost to over $1,600,000, but by 1877, the institution had become so overcrowded that the erection of another State penal institution became positively necessary. (See Southern Penitentiary.) The prison has always been conducted on "the Auburn system," which contemplates associate labor in silence, silent meals in a common refectory, and (as nearly as practicable) isolation at night. The system of labor has varied at different times, the "lessee system," the "contract system" and the "State account plan" being successively in force. (See Convict Labor.) The whole number of convicts in the institution, at the date of the official report of 1895, was 1,566. The total assets of the institution, Sept. 30, 1894, were reported at $2,121,308.86, of which $1,644,601.11 was in real estate.

NORTH & SOUTH RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway.)

NORTHERN STATE NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution for the education of teachers of the common schools, authorized to be established by act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1895. The act made an appropriation of $50,000 for the erection of buildings and other improvements. The institution was located at DeKalb, DeKalb County, in the spring of 1896, and the erection of buildings commenced soon after—Isaac F. Ellwood, of DeKalb, contributing $20,000 in cash, and J. F. Glidden, a site of sixty-seven acres of land. Up to Dec. 1, 1897, the appropriations and contributions, in land and money, aggregated $175,000. The school was expected to be ready for the reception of pupils in the latter part of 1899, and, it is estimated, will accommodate 1,000 students.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY. The name formerly applied to that portion of the United States north and west of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The claim of the Government to the land had been acquired partly through conquest, by the expedition of Col. George Rogers Clark (which see), under the auspices of the State of Virginia in 1778; partly through treaties with the Indians, and partly through cessions from those of the original States laying claim thereto. The first plan for the government of this vast region was devised and formulated by Thomas Jefferson, in his proposed Ordinance of 1784, which failed of ultimate passage. But three years later a broader scheme was evolved, and the famous Ordinance of 1787, with its clause prohibiting the extension of slavery beyond the Ohio River, passed the Continental Congress. This act has been sometimes termed "The American Magna Charta," because of its engrafting upon the organic law the principles of human freedom and equal rights. The plan for the establishment of a distinctive territorial civil government in a new Territory—the first of its kind in the new republic—was felt to be a tentative step, and too much power was not granted to the residents. All the officers were appointive, and each official was required to be a land-owner. The elective franchise (but only for members of the General Assembly) could first be exercised only after the population had reached 5,000. Even then, every elector must own fifty acres of land, and every Representative, 200 acres. More liberal provisions, however, were subsequently incorporated by amendment, in 1809. The first civil government in the Northwest Territory was established by act of the Virginia Legislature, in the organization of all the country west of the Ohio under the name "Illinois County," of which the Governor was authorized to appoint a "County Lieutenant" or "Commandant-in-Chief." The first "Commandant" appointed was Col. John Todd, of Kentucky, though he continued to discharge the duties for only a short period, being killed in the battle of Blue Licks, in 1782. After that the Illinois Country was almost without the semblance of an organized civil government, until 1788, when Gen. Arthur St. Clair was appointed the first Governor of Northwest Territory, under the Ordinance of 1787, serving until the separation of this region into the Territories of Ohio and Indiana in 1800, when William Henry Harrison became the Governor of the latter, embracing all that portion of the original Northwest Territory except the State of Ohio. During St. Clair's administration (1790) that part of the present State of Illinois between the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers on the west, and a line extending north from about the site of old Fort Massac, on the Ohio, to the mouth of the Mackinaw River, in the present county of Tazewell, on the east, was erected into a county under the name of St. Clair, with three county-seats, viz.: Cahokia, Kaskaskia and Prairie du Rocher. (See St. Clair County.) Between 1830 and 1834 the name Northwest Territory was applied to an unorganized region, embracing the present State of Wisconsin, attached to Michigan Territory for governmental purposes. (See Illinois County; St. Clair, Arthur; and Todd, John.)

NORTHWESTERN COLLEGE, located at Naperville, Du Page County, and founded in 1865, under the auspices of the Evangelical Association. It maintains business, preparatory and collegiate departments, besides a theological school. In 1898 it had a faculty of nineteen professors and assistants, with some 360 students, less than one-third of the latter being females, though both sexes are admitted to the college on an equal footing. The institution owns property to the value of $207,000, including an endowment of $85,000.

NORTHWESTERN GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway.)

NORTHWESTERN NORMAL, located at Geneseo, Henry County, Ill., incorporated in 1884; in 1894 had a faculty of twelve teachers with 171 pupils, of whom ninety were male and eighty-one female.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, an important educational institution, established at Evanston, in Cook County, in 1851. In 1898 it reported 2,599 students (1,980 male and 619 female), and a faculty of 234 instructors. It embraces the following departments, all of which confer degrees: A College of Liberal Arts; two Medical Schools (one for women exclusively); a Law School; a School of Pharmacy and a Dental College. The Garrett Biblical Institute, at which no degrees are conferred, constitutes the theological department of the University. The charter of the institution requires a majority of the Trustees to be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the University is the largest and wealthiest of the schools controlled by that denomination. The College of Liberal Arts and the Garrett Biblical Institute are at Evanston; the other departments (all professional) are located in Chicago. In the academic department (Liberal Arts School), provision is made for both graduate and post-graduate courses. The Medical School was formerly known as the Chicago Medical College, and its Law Department was originally the Union College of Law, both of which have been absorbed by the University, as have also its schools of dentistry and pharmacy, which were formerly independent institutions. The property owned by the University is valued at $4,870,000, of which $1,100,000 is real estate, and $2,250,000 in endowment funds. Its income from fees paid by students in 1898 was $215,288, and total receipts from all sources, $482,389. Co-education of the sexes prevails in the College of Liberal Arts. Dr. Henry Wade Rogers is President.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY MEDICAL SCHOOL, located in Chicago; was organized in 1859 as Medical School of the Lind (now Lake Forest) University. Three annual terms, of five months each, at first constituted a course, although attendance at two only was compulsory. The institution first opened in temporary quarters, Oct. 9, 1859, with thirteen professors and thirty-three students. By 1863 more ample accommodations were needed, and the Trustees of the Lind University being unable to provide a building, one was erected by the faculty. In 1864 the University relinquished all claim to the institution, which was thereupon incorporated as the Chicago Medical College. In 1868 the length of the annual terms was increased to six months, and additional requirements were imposed on candidates for both matriculation and graduation. The same year, the college building was sold, and the erection of a new and more commodious edifice, on the grounds of the Mercy Hospital, was commenced. This was completed in 1870, and the college became the medical department of the Northwestern University. The number of professorships had been increased to eighteen, and that of undergraduates to 107. Since that date new laboratory and clinical buildings have been erected, and the growth of the institution has been steady and substantial. Mercy and St. Luke's Hospital, and the South Side Free Dispensary afford resources for clinical instruction. The teaching faculty, as constituted in 1898, consists of about fifty instructors, including professors, lecturers, demonstrators, and assistants.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY WOMAN'S MEDICAL SCHOOL, an institution for the professional education of women, located in Chicago. Its first corporate name was the "Woman's Hospital Medical College of Chicago," and it was in close connection with the Chicago Hospital for Women and Children. Later, it severed its connection with the hospital and took the name of the "Woman's Medical College of Chicago." Co-education of the sexes, in medicine and surgery, was experimentally tried from 1868 to 1870, but the experiment proved repugnant to the male students, who unanimously signed a protest against the continuance of the system. The result was the establishment of a separate school for women in 1870, with a faculty of sixteen professors. The requirements for graduation were fixed at four years of medical study, including three annual graded college terms of six months each. The first term opened in the autumn of 1870, with an attendance of twenty students. The original location of the school was in the "North Division" of Chicago, in temporary quarters. After the fire of 1871 a removal was effected to the "West Division," where (in 1878-79) a modest, but well arranged building was erected. A larger structure was built in 1884, and, in 1891, the institution became a part of the Northwestern University. The college, in all its departments, is organized along the lines of the best medical schools of the country. In 1896 there were twenty-four professorships, all capably filled, and among the faculty are some of the best known specialists in the country.

NORTON, Jesse O., lawyer, Congressman and Judge, was born at Bennington, Vt., April 25, 1812, and graduated from Williams College in 1835. He settled at Joliet in 1839, and soon became prominent in the affairs of Will County. His first public office was that of City Attorney, after which he served as County Judge (1846-50). Meanwhile, he was chosen a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1850 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1852, to Congress, as a Whig. His vigorous opposition to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise resulted in his re-election as a Representative in 1854. At the expiration of his second term (1857) he was chosen Judge of the eleventh circuit, to fill the unexpired term of Judge Randall, resigned. He was once more elected to Congress in 1862, but disagreed with his party as to the legal status of the States lately in rebellion. President Johnson appointed him United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, which office he filled until 1869. Immediately upon his retirement he began private practice at Chicago, where he died, August 3, 1875.

NORWOOD PARK, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad (Wisconsin Division), 11 miles northwest of Chicago. Incorporated in City of Chicago, 1893.

NOYES, George Clement, clergyman, was born at Landaff, N. H., August 4, 1833, brought by his parents to Pike County, Ill., in 1844, and, at the age of 16, determined to devote his life to the ministry; in 1851, entered Illinois College at Jacksonville, graduating with first honors in the class of 1855. In the following autumn he entered Union Theological Seminary in New York, and, having graduated in 1858, was ordained the same year, and installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Laporte, Ind. Here he remained ten years, when he accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Evanston, Ill., then a small organization which developed, during the twenty years of his pastorate, into one of the strongest and most influential churches in Evanston. For a number of years Dr. Noyes was an editorial writer and weekly correspondent of "The New York Evangelist," over the signature of "Clement." He was also, for several years, an active and very efficient member of the Board of Trustees of Knox College. The liberal bent of his mind was illustrated in the fact that he acted as counsel for Prof. David Swing, during the celebrated trial of the latter for heresy before the Chicago Presbytery—his argument on that occasion winning encomiums from all classes of people. His death took place at Evanston, Jan. 14, 1889, as the result of an attack of pneumonia, and was deeply deplored, not only by his own church and denomination, but by the whole community. Some two weeks after it occurred a union meeting was held in one of the churches at Evanston, at which addresses in commemoration of his services were delivered by some dozen ministers of that village and of Chicago, while various social and literary organizations and the press bore testimony to his high character. He was a member of the Literary Society of Chicago, and, during the last year of his life, served as its President. Dr. Noyes was married, in 1858, to a daughter of David A. Smith, Esq., an honored citizen and able lawyer of Jacksonville.

OAKLAND, a city of Coles County on the Vandavia Line and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad, 15 miles northeast of Charleston; is in grain center and broom-corn belt; the town has two banks and one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 995; (1900), 1,198.

OAK PARK, a village of Cook County, and popular residence suburb of Chicago, 9 miles west of the initial station of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, on which it is located; is also upon the line of the Wisconsin Central Railroad. The place has numerous churches, prosperous schools, a public library, telegraph and express offices, banks and two local papers. Population (1880), 1,888; (1890), 4,771.

OBERTLY, John H., journalist and Civil Service Commissioner, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1837; spent part of his boyhood in Allegheny County, Pa., but, in 1853, began learning the printer's trade in the office of "The Wooster (Ohio) Republican," completing it at Memphis, Tenn., and becoming a journeyman printer in 1857. He worked in various offices, including the Wooster paper, where he also began the study of law, but, in 1860, became part proprietor of "The Bulletin" job office at Memphis, in which he had been employed as an apprentice, and, later, as foreman. Having been notified to leave Memphis on account of his Union principles after the beginning of the Civil War, he returned to Wooster, Ohio, and conducted various papers there during the next four years, but, in 1865, came to Cairo, Ill., where he served for a time as foreman of "The Cairo Democrat," three years later establishing "The Cairo Bulletin." Although the latter paper was burned out a few months later, it was immediately re-established. In 1872 he was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1877, was appointed by Governor Cullom the Democratic member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, serving four years, meanwhile (in 1880) being the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State. Other positions held by him included Mayor of the city of Cairo (1869); President of the National Typographical Union at Chicago (1865), and at Memphis (1866); delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore (1872), and Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee (1882-84). After retiring from the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, he united in founding "The Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin," of which he was editor some three years. During President Cleveland's administration he was appointed a member of the Civil Service Commission, being later transferred to the Commissionership of Indian Affairs. He was subsequently connected in an editorial capacity with "The Washington Post," "The Richmond (Va.) State," "The Concord (N. H.) People and Patriot" and "The Washington Times." While engaged in an attempt to reorganize "The People and Patriot," he died at Concord, N. H., April 15, 1899.

ODD FELLOWS. "Western Star" Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Alton, June 11, 1836. In 1838 the Grand Lodge of Illinois was instituted at the same place, and reorganized, at Springfield, in 1842. S. C. Pierce was the first Grand Master, and Samuel L. Miller, Grand Secretary. Wildey Encampment, No. 1, was organized at Alton in 1838, and the Grand Encampment, at Peoria, in 1850, with Charles H. Constable Grand Patriarch. In 1850 the subordinate branches of the Order numbered seventy-six, with 3,291 members, and $25,392.87 revenue. In 1895 the Lodges numbered 838, the membership 50,544, with $475,252.18 revenue, of which $135,018.40 was expended for relief. The Encampment branch, in 1895, embraced 179 organizations with a membership of 6,812 and $23,865.25 revenue, of which $6,781.40 was paid out for relief. The Rebekah branch, for the same year, comprised 422 Lodges, with 22,000 members and $43,215.65 revenue, of which $3,122.79 was for relief. The total sum distributed for relief by the several organizations (1895) was $144,972.59. The Order was especially liberal in its benefactions to the sufferers by the Chicago fire of 1871, an appeal to its members calling forth a generous response throughout the United States. (See Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home.)

ODD FELLOWS' ORPHANS' HOME, a benevolent institution, incorporated in 1889, erected at Lincoln, Ill., under the auspices of the Daughters of Rebekah (see Odd Fellows), and dedicated August 19, 1892. The building is four stories in height, has a capacity for the accommodation of fifty children, and cost $36,524.76, exclusive of forty acres of land valued at $8,000.

ODELL, a village of Livingston County, and station on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 82 miles south-southwest of Chicago. It is in a grain and stock-raising region. Population (1880), 908; (1890), 800; (1900), 1,000.

ODIN, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railways, 244 miles south by west from Chicago; in fruit belt; has coal-mine, two fruit evaporators, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,180.

O'FALLON, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 18 miles east of St. Louis; has interurban railway, electric lights, water-works, factories, coal-mine, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,267.

OGDEN, William Butler, capitalist and Railway President, born at Walton, N. Y., June 15, 1805. He was a member of the New York Legislature in 1834, and, the following year, removed to Chicago, where he established a land and trust agency. He took an active part in the various enterprises centering around Chicago, and, on the incorporation of the city, was elected its first Mayor. He was prominently identified with the construction of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad, and, in 1847, became its President. While visiting Europe in 1853, he made a careful study of the canals of Holland, which convinced him of the desirability of widening and deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal and of constructing a ship canal across the southern peninsula of Michigan. In 1855 he became President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railroad, and effected its consolidation with the Galena & Chicago Union. Out of this consolidation sprang the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, of which he was elected President. In 1850 he presided over the National Pacific Railroad Convention, and, upon the formation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, he became its President. He was largely connected with the inception of the Northern Pacific line, in the success of which he was a firm believer. He also controlled various other interests of public importance, among them the great lumbering establishments at Peshtigo, Wis., and, at the time of his death, was the owner of what was probably the largest plant of that description in the world. His benefactions were numerous, among the recipients being the Rush Medical College, of which he was President; the Theological Seminary of the Northwest, the Chicago Historical Society, the Academy of Sciences, the University of Chicago, the Astronomical Society, and many other educational and benevolent institutions and organizations in the Northwest. Died, in New York City, August 3, 1877. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railroad.)

OGLE, Joseph, pioneer, was born in Virginia in 1741, came to Illinois in 1785, settling in the American Bottom within the present County of Monroe, but afterwards removed to St. Clair County, about the site of the present town of O'Fallon, 8 miles north of Belleville; was selected by his neighbors to serve as Captain in their skirmishes with the Indians. Died, at his home in St. Clair County, in February, 1821. Captain Ogle had the reputation of being the earliest convert to Methodism in Illinois. Ogle County, in Northern Illinois, was named in his honor — Jacob (Ogle), son of the preceding, also a native of Virginia, was born about 1772, came to Illinois with his father in 1785, and was a "Ranger" in the War of 1812. He served as a Representative from St. Clair County in the Third General Assembly (1822), and again in the Seventh (1830), in the former being an opponent of the pro-slavery convention scheme. Beyond two terms in the Legislature he seems to have held no public office except that of Justice of the Peace. Like his father, he was a zealous Methodist and highly respected. Died, in 1844, aged 72 years.

OGLE COUNTY, next to the "northern tier" of counties of the State and originally a part of Jo Daviess. It was separately organized in 1837, and Lee County was carved from its territory in 1839. In 1900 its area was 780 square miles, and its population 29,129. Before the Black Hawk War immigration was slow, and life primitive. Peoria was the nearest food market. New grain was "ground" on a grater, and old pounded with an extemporized pestle in a wooden mortar. Rock River flows across the county from northeast to southwest. A little oak timber grows along its banks, but, generally speaking, the surface is undulating prairie, with soil of a rich loam. Sandstone is in ample supply, and all the limestones abound. An extensive peat-bed has been discovered on the Killbuck Creek. Oregon, the county-seat, has fine water-power. The other principal towns are Rochelle, Polo, Forreston and Mount Morris.

OGLESBY, Richard James, Governor and United States Senator, was born in Oldham County, Ky., July 25, 1824; left an orphan at the age of 8 years; in 1836 accompanied an uncle to Decatur, Ill., where, until 1844, he worked at farming, carpentering and rope-making, devoting his leisure hours to the study of law. In 1845 he was admitted to the bar and began practice at Sullivan, in Moultrie County. In 1846 he was commissioned a Lieutenant in the Fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's regiment), and served through the Mexican War, taking part in the siege of Vera Cruz and the battle of Cerro Gordo. In 1847 he pursued a course of study at the Louisville Law School, graduating in 1848. He was a "forty-niner" in California, but returned to Decatur in 1851. In 1858 he made an unsuccessful campaign for Congress in the Decatur District. In 1860 he was elected to the State Senate, but early in 1861 resigned his seat to accept the colonelcy of the Eighth Illinois Volunteers. Through gallantry (notably at Forts Henry and Donelson and at Corinth) he rose to be Major-General, being severely wounded in the last-named battle. He resigned his commission on account of disability, in May, 1864, and the following November was elected Governor, as a Republican. In 1872 he was re-elected Governor, but, two weeks after his inauguration, resigned to accept a seat in the United States Senate, to which he was elected by the Legislature of 1873. In 1884 he was elected Governor for the third time—being the only man in the history of the State who (up to the present time—1899) has been thus honored. After the expiration of his last term as Governor, he devoted his attention to his private affairs at his home at Elkhart, in Logan County, where he died, April 24, 1899, deeply mourned by personal and political friends in all parts of the Union, who admired his strict integrity and sterling patriotism.

OHIO, INDIANA & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Peoria & Eastern Railroad.)

OHIO RIVER, an affluent of the Mississippi, formed by the union of the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, at Pittsburg, Pa. At this point it becomes a navigable stream about 400 yards wide, with an elevation of about 700 feet above sea-level. The beauty of the scenery along its banks secured for it, from the early French explorers (of whom La Salle was one), the name of "La Belle Riviere." Its general course is to the southwest, but with many sinuosities, forming the southern boundary of the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and the western and northern boundary of West Virginia and Kentucky, until it enters the Mississippi at Cairo, in latitude 37° N., and about 1,200 miles above the mouth of the latter stream. The area which it drains is computed to be 214,000 square miles. Its mouth is 268 feet above the level of the sea. The current is remarkably gentle and uniform, except near Louisville, where there is a descent of twenty-two feet within two miles, which is evaded by means of a canal around the falls. Large steamboats can navigate its whole length, except in low stages of water and when closed by ice in winter. Its largest affluents are the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Kentucky, the Great Kanawha and the Green Rivers, from the south, and the Wabash, the Miami, Scioto and Muskingum from the north. The principal cities on its banks are Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, New Albany, Madison and Cairo. It is crossed by bridges at Wheeling, Cincinnati and Cairo. The surface of the Ohio is subject to a variation of forty-two to fifty-one feet between high and low water. Its length is 975 miles, and its width varies from 400 to 1,000 yards. (See Inundations, Remarkable.)

OHIO & MISSISSIPPI RAILWAY. (See Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad.)

OLNEY, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Richland County, 31 miles west of Vincennes, Ind., and 117 miles east of St. Louis, Mo., at the junction of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Peoria Division of the Illinois Central and the Ohio River Division of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad; is in the center of the fruit belt and an important shipping point for farm produce and live-stock; has flour mills, a furniture factory and railroad repair shops, banks, a public library, churches and five newspapers, one issuing daily and another semi-weekly editions. Population (1890), 3,831; (1900), 4,260.

OMELVENY, John, pioneer and head of a numerous family which became prominent in Southern Illinois; was a native of Ireland who came to America about 1798 or 1799. After residing in Kentucky a few years, he removed to Illinois, locating in what afterwards became Pope County, whither his oldest son, Samuel, had preceded him about 1797 or 1798. The latter for a time followed the occupation of flat-boating, carrying produce to New Orleans. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818 from Pope County, being the colleague of Hamlet Ferguson. A year later he removed to Randolph County, where he served as a member of the County Court, but, in 1820-22, we find him a member of the Second General Assembly from Union County, having successfully contested the seat of Samuel Alexander, who had received the certificate of election. He died in 1828.—Edward (Omenveny), another member of this family, and grandson of the elder John Omenveny, represented Monroe County in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), and was Presidential Elector in 1852, but died sometime during the Civil War.—Harvey K. S. (Omenveny), the fifth son of William Omenveny and grandson of John, was born in Todd County, Ky., in 1823, came to Southern Illinois, in 1852, and engaged in the practice of law, being for a time the partner of Senator Thomas E. Merritt, at Salem. Early in 1858 he was elected a Justice of the Circuit Court to succeed Judge Breese, who had been promoted to the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1861. He gained considerable notoriety by his intense hostility to the policy of the Government during the Civil War, was a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and was named as a member of the Peace Commission proposed to be appointed by the General Assembly, in 1863, to secure terms of peace with the Southern Confederacy. He was also a leading spirit in the peace meeting held at Peoria, in August, 1863. In 1869 Mr. Omenveny removed to Los Angeles, Cal., which has since been his home, and where he has carried on a lucrative law practice.

ONARGA, a town in Iroquois County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 85 miles south by west from Chicago, and 43 miles north by east from Champaign. It is a manufacturing town, flour, wagons, wire-fencing, stoves and tile being among the products. It has a bank, eight churches, a graded school, a commercial college, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 1,061; (1890), 994; (1900), 1,270.

ONEIDA, a city in Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles northeast of Galesburg; has wagon, pump and furniture factories, two banks, electric lights, several churches, a graded school, and a weekly paper. The surrounding country is rich prairie, where coal is mined about twenty feet below the surface. Pop. (1890), 699; (1900), 785.

OQUAWKA, the county-seat of Henderson County, situated on the Mississippi River, about 15 miles above Burlington, Iowa, and 32 miles west of Galesburg. It is in a farming region, but has some manufactories. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank and three newspapers. Population (1900), 1,010.

ORDINANCE OF 1787. This is the name given to the first organic act, passed by Congress, for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio River, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The first step in this direction was taken in the appointment, by Congress, on March 1, 1784, of a committee, of which Thomas Jefferson was Chairman, to prepare a plan for the temporary government of the region which had been acquired, by the capture of Kaskaskia, by Col. George Rogers Clark, nearly six years previous. The necessity for some step of this sort had grown all the more urgent, in consequence of the recognition of the right of the United States to this region by the Treaty of Paris of 1783, and the surrender, by Virginia, of the title she had maintained thereto on account of Clark's conquest under her auspices—a right which she had exercised by furnishing whatever semblance of government so far existed northwest of the Ohio. The report submitted from Jefferson's committee proposed the division of the Territory into seven States, to which was added the proviso that, after the year 1800, "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of said States, otherwise than in punishment of crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted." This report failed of adoption, however, Congress contenting itself with the passage of a resolution providing for future organization of this territory into States by the people—the measures necessary for temporary government being left to future Congressional action. While the postponement, in the resolution as introduced by Jefferson, of the inhibition of slavery to the year 1800, has been criticised, its introduction was significant, as coming from a representative from a slave State, and being the first proposition in Congress looking to restriction, of any character, on the subject of slavery. Congress having taken no further step under the resolution adopted in 1784, the condition of the country (thus left practically without a responsible government, while increasing in population) became constantly more deplorable. An appeal from the people about Kaskaskia for some better form of government, in 1786, aided by the influence of the newly organized "Ohio Company," who desired to encourage emigration to the lands which they were planning to secure from the General Government, at last brought about the desired result, in the passage of the famous "Ordinance," on the 13th day of July, 1787. While making provision for a mode of temporary self-government by the people, its most striking features are to be found in the six "articles"—a sort of "Bill of Rights"—with which the document closes. These assert: (1) the right of freedom of worship and religious opinion; (2) the right to the benefit of habeas corpus and trial by jury; to proportionate representation, and to protection in liberty and property; (3) that "religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged"; (4) that the States, formed within the territory referred to, "shall forever remain a part of this confederacy of the United States of America, subject to the Articles of Confederation and to such alterations therein as shall be constitutionally made"; (5) prescribe the boundaries of the States to be formed therein and the conditions of their admission into the Union; and (6—and most significant of all) repeat the prohibition regarding the introduction of slavery into the Northwest Territory, as proposed by Jefferson, but without any qualification as to time. There has been considerable controversy regarding the authorship of this portion of the Ordinance, into which it is not necessary to enter here. While it has been characterized as a second and advanced Declaration of Independence—and probably no single act of Congress was ever fraught with more important and far-reaching results—it seems remarkable that a majority of the States supporting it and securing its adoption, were then, and long continued to be, slave States.

OREGON, the county-seat of Ogle County, situated on Rock River and the Minneapolis Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 100 miles west from Chicago. The surrounding region is agricultural; the town has water power and manufactures flour, pianos, steel tanks, street sprinklers, and iron castings. It has two banks, water-works supplied by flowing artesian wells, cereal mill, and two weekly newspapers; has also obtained some repute as a summer resort. Pop. (1880), 1,088; (1890), 1,566; (1900), 1,577.

ORION, a village of Henry County, at the intersection of the Rock Island Division of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 19 miles southeast of Rock Island. Pop. (1890), 624; (1900), 584.

OSBORN, William Henry, Railway President, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 21, 1820. After receiving a high school education in his native town, he entered the counting room of the East India house of Peele, Hubbell & Co.; was subsequently sent to represent the firm at Manila, finally engaging in business on his own account, during which he traveled extensively in Europe. Returning to the United States in 1853, he took up his residence in New York, and, having married the daughter of Jonathan Sturges, one of the original incorporators and promoters of the Illinois Central Railroad, he soon after became associated with that enterprise. In August, 1854, he was chosen a Director of the Company, and, on Dec. 1, 1855, became its third President, serving in the latter position nearly ten years (until July 11, 1865), and, as a Director, until 1877—in all, twenty-two years. After retiring from his connection with the Illinois Central Railroad, Mr. Osborn gave his attention largely to enterprises of an educational and benevolent character in aid of the unfortunate classes in the State of New York.

OSBORN, Thomas O., soldier and diplomatist, was born in Licking County, Ohio, August 11, 1832; graduated from the Ohio University at Athens, in 1854; studied law at Crawfordsville, Ind., with Gen. Lew Wallace, was admitted to the bar and began practice in Chicago. Early in the war for the Union he joined the "Yates Phalanx," which, after some delay on account of the quota being full, was mustered into the service, in August, 1861, as the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, the subject of this sketch being commissioned its Lieutenant-Colonel. His promotion to the colonelcy soon followed, the regiment being sent east to guard the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, where it met the celebrated Stonewall Jackson, and took part in many important engagements, including the battles of Winchester, Bermuda Hundreds, and Drury's Bluff, besides the sieges of Charleston and Petersburg. At Bermuda Hundreds Colonel Osborn was severely wounded, losing the use of his right arm. He bore a conspicuous part in the operations about Richmond which resulted in the capture of the rebel capital, his services being recognized by promotion to the brevet rank of Major-General. At the close of the war he returned to the practice of law in Chicago, but, in 1874, was appointed Consul-General and Minister-Resident to the Argentine Republic, remaining in that position until June, 1885, when he resigned, resuming his residence in Chicago.

OSWEGO, a village in Kendall County, on the Aurora and Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 6 miles south of Aurora. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 618.

OTTAWA, the county-seat and principal city of La Salle County, being incorporated as a village in 1838, and, as a city, in 1853. It is located at the confluence of the Illinois and Fox Rivers and on the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is the intersecting point of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway and the Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, 98 miles east of Rock Island and 83 miles west-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region abounds in coal. Sand of a superior quality for the manufacture of glass is found in the vicinity and the place has extensive glass works. Other manufactured products are brick, drain-tile, sewer-pipe, tile-roofing, pottery, pianos, organs, cigars, wagons and carriages, agricultural implements, hay carriers, hay presses, sash, doors, blinds, cabinet work, saddlery and harness and pumps. The city has some handsome public buildings including the Appellate (formerly Supreme) Court House for the Northern Division. It also has several public parks, one of which (South Park) contains a medicinal spring. There are a dozen churches and numerous public school buildings, including a high school. The city is lighted by gas and electricity, has electric street railways, good sewerage, and water-works supplied from over 150 artesian wells and numerous natural springs. It has one private and two national banks, five libraries, and eight weekly newspapers (three German), of which four issue daily editions. Pop. (1890), 9,985; (1900), 10,588.

OTTAWA, CHICAGO & FOX RIVER VALLEY RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

OUTAGAMIES, a name given, by the French, to the Indian tribe known as the Foxes. (See Sacs and Foxes.)

OWEN, Thomas J. V., early legislator and Indian Agent, was born in Kentucky, April 5, 1801; came to Illinois at an early day, and, in 1830, was elected to the Seventh General Assembly from Randolph County; the following year was appointed Indian Agent at Chicago, as successor to Dr. Alexander Wolcott, who had died in the latter part of 1830. Mr. Owen served as Indian Agent until 1833; was a member of the first Board of Town Trustees of the village of Chicago, Commissioner of School Lands, and one of the Government Commissioners who conducted the treaty with the Pottawatomie and other tribes of Indians at Chicago, in September, 1833. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 15, 1835.

PADDOCK, Gaius, pioneer, a native of Massachusetts, was born in 1758; at the age of 17 he entered the Colonial Army, serving until the close of the Revolutionary War, and being in Washington's command at the crossing of the Delaware. After the war he removed to Vermont; but, in 1815, went to Cincinnati, and, a year later, to St. Charles, Mo. Then, after having spent about a year at St. Louis, in 1818 he located in Madison County, Ill., at a point afterwards known as "Paddock's Grove," and which became one of the most prosperous agricultural sections of Southern Illinois. Died, in 1831.

PAINE, (Gen.) Eleazer A., soldier, was born in Parkman, Geauga County, Ohio, Sept. 10, 1815; graduated at West Point Military Academy, in 1839, and was assigned to the First Infantry, serving in the Florida War (1839-40), but resigned, Oct. 11, 1840. He then studied law and practiced at Painesville, Ohio, (1843-48), and at Monmouth, Ill., (1848-61), meanwhile serving in the lower branch of the Eighteenth General Assembly (1852-53). Before leaving Ohio, he had been Deputy United States Marshal and Lieutenant-Colonel of the State Militia, and, in Illinois, became Brigadier-General of Militia (1845-48). He was appointed Colonel of the Ninth Illinois in April, 1861, and served through the war, being promoted Brigadier-General in September, 1861. The first duty performed by his regiment, after this date, was the occupation of Paducah, Ky., where he was in command. Later, it took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, the battles of Shiloh, New Madrid and Corinth, and also in the various engagements in Northern Georgia and in the "march to the sea." From November, 1862, to May, 1864, General Paine was guarding railroad lines in Central Tennessee, and, during a part of 1864, in command of the Western District of Kentucky. He resigned, April 5, 1865, and died in Jersey City, Dec. 16, 1882. A sturdy Union man, he performed his duty as a soldier with great zeal and efficiency.

PALATINE, a village of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 26 miles northwest from Chicago. There are flour and planing mills here; dairying and farming are leading industries of the surrounding country. Population (1880), 731; (1890), 891; (1900), 1,020.

PALESTINE, a town in Crawford County, about 2 miles from the Wabash River, 7 miles east of Robinson, and 35 miles southwest of Terre Haute, on the Illinois Central Railway; has five churches, a graded school, a bank, weekly newspaper, flour mill, cold storage plant, canning factory, garment factory, and municipal light and power plant. Pop. (1890), 732; (1900), 979.

PALMER, Frank W., journalist, ex-Congressman and Public Printer, was born at Manchester, Dearborn County, Ind., Oct. 11, 1827; learned the printer's trade at Jamestown, N. Y., afterwards edited "The Jamestown Journal," and served two terms in the New York Legislature; in 1858 removed to Dubuque, Iowa, and edited "The Dubuque Times," was elected to Congress in 1860, and again in 1868 and 1872, meanwhile having purchased "The Des Moines Register," which he edited for several years. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and became editor of "The Inter Ocean," remaining two years; in 1877 was appointed Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving eight years. Shortly after the accession of President Harrison, in 1889, he was appointed Public Printer, continuing in office until the accession of President Cleveland in 1893, when he returned to newspaper work, but resumed his old place at the head of the Government Printing Bureau after the inauguration of President McKinley in 1897.

PALMER, John McAnley, lawyer, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Scott County, Ky., Sept. 13, 1817; removed with his father to Madison County, Ill., in 1831, and, four years later, entered Shurtleff College, at Upper Alton, as a student; later taught and studied law, being admitted to the bar in 1839. In 1843 he was elected Probate Judge of Maconpin County, also served in the State Constitutional Convention of 1847; after discharging the duties of Probate and County Judge, was elected to the State Senate, to fill a vacancy, in 1852, and re-elected in 1854, as an Anti-Nebraska Democrat, casting his vote for Lyman Trumbull for United States Senator in 1855, but resigned his seat in 1856; was President of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in the latter year, and appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia; was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress in 1859, and chosen a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket in 1860; served as a member of the National Peace Conference of 1861; entered the army as Colonel of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; was promoted Brigadier General, in November, 1861, taking part in the campaign in Tennessee up to Chickamauga, assuming the command of the Fourteenth Army Corps with the rank of Major-General, but was relieved at his own request before Atlanta. In 1865 he was assigned, by President Lincoln, to command of the Military Department of Kentucky, but, in September, 1866, retired from the service, and, in 1867, became a citizen of Springfield. The following year he was elected Governor, as a Republican, but, in 1872, supported Horace Greeley for President, and has since co-operated with the Democratic party. He was three times the unsuccessful candidate of his party for United States Senator, and was their nominee for Governor in 1888, but defeated. In 1890 he was nominated for United States Senator by the Democratic State Convention and elected in joint session of the Legislature, March 11, 1891, receiving on the 154th ballot 101 Democratic and two Farmers' Mutual Alliance votes. He became an important factor in the campaign of 1896 as candidate of the "Sound Money" Democracy for President, although receiving no electoral votes, proving his devotion to principle. His last years were occupied in preparation of a volume of personal recollections, which was completed, under the title of "The Story of an Earnest Life," a few weeks before his death, which occurred at his home in Springfield, September 25, 1900.

PALMER, Potter, merchant and capitalist, was born in Albany County, N. Y., in 1825; received an English education and became a junior clerk in a country store at Durham, Greene County, in that State, three years later being placed in charge of the business, and finally engaging in business on his own account. Coming to Chicago in 1852, he embarked in the dry-goods business on Lake Street, establishing the house which afterwards became Field, Leiter & Co. (now Marshall Field & Co.), from which he retired, in 1865, with the basis of an ample fortune, which has since been immensely increased by fortunate operations in real estate. Mr. Palmer was Second Vice-President of the first Board of Local Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition in 1891.—Mrs. Bertha M. Honore (Palmer), wife of the preceding, is the daughter of H. H.

Honore, formerly a prominent real-estate owner and operator of Chicago. She is a native of Louisville, Ky., where her girlhood was chiefly spent, though she was educated at a convent near Baltimore, Md. Later she came with her family to Chicago, and, in 1870, was married to Potter Palmer. Mrs. Palmer has been a recognized leader in many social and benevolent movements, but won the highest praise by her ability and administrative skill, exhibited as President of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

PALMYRA, a village of Macoupin County, on the Springfield Division of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul Railway, 33 miles southwest from Springfield; has some local manufactories, a bank and a newspaper. Population (1900), 813.

PANA, an important railway center and principal city of Christian County, situated in the southeastern part of the County, and at the intersecting point of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Illinois Central and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads, 35 miles south by west from Decatur, and 42 miles southeast of Springfield. It is an important shipping-point for grain and has two elevators. Its mechanical establishments include two flouring mills, a foundry, two machine shops and two planing mills. The surrounding region is rich in coal, which is extensively mined. Pana has banks, several churches, graded schools, and three papers issuing daily and weekly editions. Population (1890), 5,077; (1900), 5,530.

PARKS, Gavion D. A., lawyer, was born at Bristol, Ontario County, N. Y., Sept. 17, 1817; went to New York City in 1838, where he completed his legal studies and was admitted to the bar, removing to Lockport, Ill., in 1842. Here he successively edited a paper, served as Master in Chancery and in an engineering corps on the Illinois & Michigan Canal; was elected County Judge in 1849, removed to Joliet, and, for a time, acted as an attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Michigan Central and the Chicago & Alton Railroads; was also a Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; was elected Representative in 1852, became a Republican and served on the first Republican State Central Committee (1856); the same year was elected to the State Senate, and was a Commissioner of the State Penitentiary in 1864. In 1872 Mr. Parks joined in the Liberal-Republican movement, was defeated for Congress, and afterwards acted with the Democratic party. Died, Dec. 28, 1895.

PARKS, Lawson A., journalist, was born at Mecklenburg, N. C., April 15, 1813; learned the printing trade at Charlotte, in that State; came to St. Louis in 1833, and, in 1836, assisted in establishing "The Alton Telegraph," but sold his interest a few years later. Then, having officiated as pastor of Presbyterian churches for some years, in 1854 he again became associated with "The Telegraph," acting as its editor. Died at Alton, March 31, 1875.

PARK RIDGE, a suburban village on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 13 miles northwest of Chicago. Population (1880), 457; (1890), 987; (1900), 1,340.

PARTRIDGE, Charles Addison, journalist and Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic, was born in Westford, Chittenden County, Vt., Dec. 8, 1843; came with his parents to Lake County, Ill., in 1844, and spent his boyhood on a farm, receiving his education in the district school, with four terms in a high school at Burlington, Wis. At 16 he taught a winter district school near his boyhood home, and at 18 enlisted in what became Company C of the Ninety-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, being mustered into the service as Eighth Corporal at Rockford. His regiment becoming attached to the Army of the Cumberland, he participated with it in the battles of Chickamauga and the Atlanta campaign, as well as those of Franklin and Nashville, and has taken a just pride in the fact that he never fell out on the march, took medicine from a doctor or was absent from his regiment during its term of service, except for four months while recovering from a gun-shot wound received at Chickamauga. He was promoted successively to Sergeant, Sergeant-Major, and commissioned Second Lieutenant of his old company, of which his father was First Lieutenant for six months and until forced to resign on account of impaired health. Receiving his final discharge, June 28, 1865, he returned to the farm, where he remained until 1869, in the meantime being married to Miss Jennie E. Earle, in 1866, and teaching school one winter. In 1869 he was elected County Treasurer of Lake County on the Republican ticket, and re-elected in 1871; in January of the latter year, purchased an interest in "The Waukegan Gazette," with which he remained associated some fifteen years, at first as the partner of Rev. A. K. Fox, and later of his younger brother, H. E. Partridge. In 1877 he was appointed, by President Hayes, Postmaster at Waukegan, serving four years; in 1886 was elected to the Legislature, serving (by successive elections) as Representative in the Thirty-fifth, Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies, being frequently called upon to occupy the Speaker's chair, and, especially during the long Senatorial contest of 1891, being recognized as a leader of the Republican minority. In 1888 he was called to the service of the Republican State Central Committee (of which he had previously been a member), as assistant to the veteran Secretary, the late Daniel Shepard, remaining until the death of his chief, when he succeeded to the secretaryship. During the Presidential campaign of 1892 he was associated with the late William J. Campbell, then the Illinois member of the Republican National Committee, and was entrusted by him with many important and confidential missions. Without solicitation on his part, in 1894 he was again called to assume the secretaryship of the Republican State Central Committee, and bore a conspicuous and influential part in winning the brilliant success achieved by the party in the campaign of that year. From 1893 to 1895 he served as Mayor of Waukegan; in 1896 became Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois—a position which he held in 1889 under Commander James S. Martin, and to which he has been re-appointed by successive Department Commanders up to the present time. Mr. Partridge's service in the various public positions held by him, has given him an acquaintance extending to every county in the State.

PATOKA, a village of Marion County, on the Western branch of the Illinois Central Railway, 15 miles south of Vandalia. There are flour and saw mills here; the surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 640.

PATTERSON, Robert Wilson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born in Blount County, Tenn., Jan. 21, 1814; came to Bond County, Ill., with his parents in 1822, his father dying two years later; at 18 had had only nine months' schooling, but graduated at Illinois College in 1837; spent a year at Lane Theological Seminary, another as tutor in Illinois College, and then, after two years more at Lane Seminary and preaching in Chicago and at Monroe, Mich., in 1842 established the Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, of which he remained the pastor over thirty years. In 1850 he received a call to the chair of Didactic Theology at Lane Seminary, as successor to Dr. Lyman Beecher, but it was declined, as was a similar call ten years later. Resigning his pastorate in 1873, he was, for several years, Professor of Christian Evidences and Ethics in the Theological Seminary of the Northwest; in 1876-78 served as President of Lake Forest University (of which he was one of the founders), and, in 1880-83, as lecturer in Lane Theological Seminary. He received the degree of D.D. from Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1854, that of LL.D. from Lake Forest University, and was Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly (N. S.) at Wilmington, Del., in 1859. Died, at Evanston, Ill., Feb. 24, 1894.

PAVEY, Charles W., soldier and ex-State Auditor, was born in Highland County, Ohio, Nov. 8, 1835; removed to Illinois in 1859, settling in the vicinity of Mount Vernon, and, for a time, followed the occupation of a farmer and stock-raiser. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Eightieth Illinois Volunteers for the Civil War, and became First Lieutenant of Company E. He was severely wounded at the battle of Sand Mountain, and, having been captured, was confined in Libby Prison, at Salisbury, N. C., and at Danville, Va., for a period of nearly two years, enduring great hardship and suffering. Having been exchanged, he served to the close of the war as Assistant Inspector-General on the Staff of General Rousseau, in Tennessee. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880, which nominated General Garfield for the Presidency, and was one of the famous "306" who stood by General Grant in that struggle. In 1882 he was appointed by President Arthur Collector of Internal Revenue for the Southern District, and, in 1888, was nominated and elected State Auditor on the Republican ticket, but was defeated for re-election in the "land-slide" of 1892. General Pavey has been prominent in "G. A. R." councils, and held the position of Junior Vice-Commander for the Department of Illinois in 1878, and that of Senior Vice-Commander in 1879. He also served as Brigadier-General of the National Guard, for Southern Illinois, during the railroad strike of 1877. In 1897 he received from President McKinley the appointment of Special Agent of the Treasury Department. His home is at Mount Vernon, Jefferson County.

PAWNEE, a village of Sangamon County, at the eastern terminus of the Auburn & Pawnee Railroad, 19 miles south of Springfield. The town has a bank and a weekly paper. Population (1900), 595; (1903, est.), 1,000.

PAWNEE RAILROAD, a short line in Sangamon County, extending from Pawnee to Auburn (9 miles), where it forms a junction with the Chicago & Alton Railroad. The company was organized and procured a charter in December, 1888, and the road completed the following year. The cost was $101,774. Capital stock authorized, $100,000; funded debt (1895), $50,000.

PAW PAW, a village of Lee County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 8 miles northwest of Earlville. The town is in a farming region, but has a bank and one weekly paper. Population (1890), 635; (1900), 765.

PAXTON, the county-seat of Ford County, is situated at the intersection of the Chicago Division of the Illinois Central and the Lake Erie & Western Railroads, 103 miles south by west from Chicago, and 49 miles east of Bloomington. It contains a court house, two schools, water-works, electric light and water-heating system, two banks, nine churches, and one daily newspaper. It is an important shipping-point for the farm products of the surrounding territory, which is a rich agricultural region. Besides brick and tile works and flour mills, factories for the manufacture of carriages, buggies, hardware, cigars, brooms, and plows are located here. Pop. (1890), 2,187; (1900), 3,036.

PAYSON, a village in Adams County, 15 miles southeast of Quincy; the nearest railroad station being Fall Creek, on the Quincy and Louisiana Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has one newspaper. Population (1900), 465.

PAYSON, Lewis E., lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Providence, R. I., Sept. 17, 1840; came to Illinois at the age of 12, and, after passing through the common schools, attended Lombard University, at Galesburg, for two years. He was admitted to the bar at Ottawa in 1862, and, in 1865, took up his residence at Pontiac. From 1869 to 1873 he was Judge of the Livingston County Court, and, from 1881 to 1891, represented his District in Congress, being elected as a Republican, but, in 1890, was defeated by his Democratic opponent, Herman W. Snow. Since retiring from Congress he has practiced his profession in Washington, D. C.

PEABODY, Selin Hobart, educator, was born in Rockingham County, Vt., August 20, 1829; after reaching 13 years of age, spent a year in a Boston Latin School, then engaged in various occupations, including teaching, until 1848, when he entered the University of Vermont, graduating third in his class in 1852; was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Engineering in the Polytechnic College at Philadelphia, in 1854, remaining three years, when he spent five years in Wisconsin, the last three as Superintendent of Schools at Racine. From 1865 to 1871 he was teacher of physical science in Chicago High School, also conducting night schools for working men; in 1871 became Professor of Physics and Engineering in Massachusetts Agricultural College, but returned to the Chicago High School in 1874; in 1876 took charge of the Chicago Academy of Sciences, and, in 1878, entered the Illinois Industrial University (now University of Illinois), at Champaign, first as Professor of Mechanical Engineering, in 1880 becoming President, but resigning in 1891. During the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, Professor Peabody was Chief of the Department of Liberal Arts, and, on the expiration of his service there, assumed the position of Curator of the newly organized Chicago Academy of Sciences, from which he retired some two years later.

PEARL, a village of Pike County, on the Kansas City branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 14 miles west of Roodhouse. Population (1890), 928; (1900), 722.

PEARSON, Isaac N., ex-Secretary of State, was born at Centreville, Pa., July 27, 1842; removed to Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., in 1858, and has ever since resided there. In 1872 he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1876. Later he engaged in real-estate and banking business. He was a member of the lower house in the Thirty-third, and of the Senate in the Thirty-fifth, General Assembly, but before the expiration of his term in the latter, was elected Secretary of State, on the Republican ticket, in 1888. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated, although, next to Governor Fifer, he received the largest vote cast for any candidate for a political office on the Republican State ticket.

PEARSON, John M., ex-Railway and Warehouse Commissioner, born at Newburyport, Mass., in 1832—the son of a ship-carpenter; was educated in his native State and came to Illinois in 1849, locating at the city of Alton, where he was afterwards engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements. In 1873 he was appointed a member of the first Railway and Warehouse Commission, serving four years; in 1878 was elected Representative in the Thirty-first General Assembly from Madison County, and was re-elected, successively, in 1880 and '82. He was appointed a member of the first Board of Live-Stock Commissioners in 1885, serving until 1893, for a considerable portion of the time as President of the Board. Mr. Pearson is a life-long Republican and prominent member of the Masonic fraternity. His present home is at Godfrey.

PEARSONS, Daniel K., M.D., real-estate operator and capitalist, was born at Bradfordton, Vt., April 14, 1820; began teaching at 16 years of age, and, at 21, entered Dartmouth College, taking a two years' course. He then studied medicine, and, after practicing a short time in his native State, removed to Chicopee, Mass., where he remained from 1843 to 1857. The latter year he came to Ogle County, Ill., and began operating in real estate, finally adding to this a loan business for Eastern parties, but discontinued this line in 1877. He owns extensive tracts of timber lands in Michigan, is a Director in the Chicago City Railway Company and American Exchange Bank, besides being interested in other financial institutions. He has been one of the most liberal supporters of the Chicago Historical Society, and a princely contributor to various benevolent and educational institutions, his gifts to colleges, in different parts of the country, aggregating over a million dollars.

PECATONICA, a town in Pecatonica Township, Winnebago County, on the Pecatonica River. It is on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, midway between Freeport and Rockford, being 14 miles from each. It contains a carriage factory, machine shop, condensed milk factory, a bank, six churches, a graded school, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,059; (1900), 1,045.

PECATONICA RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which rise in Iowa County, Wis. They unite a little north of the Illinois State line, whence the river runs southeast to Freeport, then east and northeast, until it enters Rock River at Rockton. From the headwaters of either branch to the mouth of the river is about 50 miles.

PECK, Ebenezer, early lawyer, was born in Portland, Maine, May 22, 1805; received an academical education, studied law and was admitted to the bar in Canada in 1827. He was twice elected to the Provincial Parliament and made King's Counsel in 1833; came to Illinois in 1835, settling in Chicago; served in the State Senate (1838-40), and in the House (1840-42 and 1858-60); was also Clerk of the Supreme Court (1841-45), Reporter of Supreme Court decisions (1849-63), and member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Mr. Peck was an intimate personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, by whom he was appointed a member of the Court of Claims, at Washington, serving until 1875. Died, May 25, 1881.

PECK, Ferdinand Wythe, lawyer and financier, was born in Chicago, July 15, 1848—the son of Philip F. W. Peck, a pioneer and early merchant of the metropolis of Illinois; was educated in the public schools, the Chicago University and Union College of Law, graduating from both of the last named institutions, and being admitted to the bar in 1869. For a time he engaged in practice, but his father having died in 1871, the responsibility of caring for a large estate devolved upon him and has since occupied his time, though he has given much attention to the amelioration of the condition of the poor of his native city, and works of practical benevolence and public interest. He is one of the founders of the Illinois Humane Society, has been President and a member of the Board of Control of the Chicago Athenæum, member of the Board of Education, President of the Chicago Union League, and was an influential factor in securing the success of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in 1893, serving as First Vice-President of the Chicago Board of Directors, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and member of the Board of Reference and Control. Of late years, Mr. Peck has been connected with several important building enterprises of a semi-public character, which have added to the reputation of Chicago, including the Auditorium, Stock Exchange Building and others in which he is a leading stockholder, and in the erection of which he has been a chief promoter. In 1898 he was appointed, by President McKinley, the United States Commissioner to the International Exposition at Paris of 1900, as successor to the late Maj. M. P. Handy, and the success which has followed his discharge of the duties of that position, has demonstrated the fitness of his selection.

PECK, George R., railway attorney, born in Steuben County, N. Y., in 1843; was early taken to Wisconsin, where he assisted in clearing his father's farm; at 16 became a country school-teacher to aid in freeing the same farm from debt; enlisted at 19 in the First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, later becoming a Captain in the Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry, with which he joined in "Sherman's March to the Sea." Returning home at the close of the war, he began the study of law at Janesville, spending six years there as a student, Clerk of the Circuit Court and in practice. From there he went to Kansas and, between 1871 and '74, practiced his profession at Independence, when he was appointed by President Grant United States District Attorney for the Kansas District, but resigned this position, in 1879, to return to general practice. In 1881 he became General Solicitor of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, removing to Chicago in 1893. In 1895 he resigned his position with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad to accept a similar position with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, which (1898) he still holds. Mr. Peck is recognized as one of the most gifted orators in the West, and, in 1897, was chosen to deliver the principal address at the unveiling of the Logan equestrian statue in Lake Front Park, Chicago; has also officiated as orator on a number of other important public occasions, always acquitting himself with distinction.

PECK, John Mason, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 31, 1789; removed to Greene County, N. Y., in 1811, where he united with the Baptist Church, the same year entering on pastoral work, while prosecuting his studies and supporting himself by teaching. In 1814 he became pastor of a church at Amenia, N. Y., and, in 1817, was sent west as a missionary, arriving in St. Louis in the latter part of the same year. During the next nine years he traveled extensively through Missouri and Illinois, as an itinerant preacher and teacher, finally locating at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, where, in 1826, he established the Rock Spring Seminary for the education of teachers and ministers. Out of this grew Shurtleff College, founded at Upper Alton in 1835, in securing the endowment of which Dr. Peck traveled many thousands of miles and collected $20,000, and of which he served as Trustee for many years. Up to 1843 he devoted much time to aiding in the establishment of a theological institution at Covington, Ky., and, for two years following, was Corresponding Secretary and Financial Agent of the American Baptist Publication Society, with headquarters in Philadelphia. Returning to the West, he served as pastor of several important churches in Missouri, Illinois and Kentucky. A man of indomitable will, unflagging industry and thoroughly upright in conduct, for a period of a quarter of a century, in the early history of the State, probably no man exerted a larger influence for good and the advancement of the cause of education, among the pioneer citizens of all classes, than Dr. Peck. Though giving his attention so constantly to preaching and teaching, he found time to write much, not only for the various publications with which he was, from time to time, connected, but also for other periodicals, besides publishing "A Guide for Emigrants" (1831), of which a new edition appeared in 1836, and a "Gazetteer of Illinois" (Jacksonville, 1834, and Boston, 1837), which continue to be valued for the information they contain of the condition of the country at that time. He was an industrious collector of historical records in the form of newspapers and pamphlets, which were unfortunately destroyed by fire a few years before his death. In 1852 he received the degree of D.D. from Harvard University. Died, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, March 15, 1858.

PECK, Philip F. W., pioneer merchant, was born in Providence, R. I., in 1809, the son of a wholesale merchant who had lost his fortune by indorsing for a friend. After some years spent in a mercantile house in New York, he came to Chicago on a prospecting tour, in 1830; the following year brought a stock of goods to the embryo emporium of the Northwest—then a small backwoods hamlet—and, by trade and fortunate investments in real estate, laid the foundation of what afterwards became a large fortune. He died, Oct. 23, 1871, as the result of an accident occurring about the time of the great fire of two weeks previous, from which he was a heavy sufferer pecuniarily. Three of his sons, Walter L., Clarence I. and Ferdinand W. Peck, are among Chicago's most substantial citizens.

PEKIN, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Tazewell County, and an important railway center, located on the Illinois River, 10 miles south of Peoria and 56 miles north of Springfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the chief occupations in the surrounding country, but the city itself is an important grain market with large general shipping interests. It has several distilleries, besides grain elevators, malt-houses, brick and tile works, lumber yards, planing mills, marble works, plow and wagon works, and a factory for corn products. Its banking facilities are adequate, and its religious and educational advantages are excellent. The city has a public library, park, steam-heating plant, three daily and four weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 6,347; (1900), 8,420.

PELL, Gilbert T., Representative in the Third Illinois General Assembly (1822) from Edwards County, and an opponent of the resolution for a State Convention adopted by the Legislature at that session, designed to open the door for the admission of slavery. Mr. Pell was a son-in-law of Morris Birkbeck, who was one of the leaders in opposition to the Convention scheme, and very naturally sympathized with his father-in-law. He was elected to the Legislature for a second term, in 1828, but subsequently left the State, dying elsewhere, when his widow removed to Australia.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. As to operations of this corporation in Illinois, see Calumet River; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago; South Chicago & Southern, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways. The whole number of miles owned, leased and operated by the Pennsylvania System, in 1898, was 1,987.21, of which only 61.34 miles were in Illinois. It owns, however, a controlling interest in the stock of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway (which see).

PEORIA, the second largest city of the State and the county-seat of Peoria County, is 160 miles southwest of Chicago, and at the foot of an expansion of the Illinois River known as Peoria Lake. The site of the town occupies an elevated plateau, having a water frontage of four miles and extending back to a bluff, which rises 200 feet above the river level and about 120 feet above the highest point of the main site. It was settled in 1778 or '79, although, as generally believed, the French missionaries had a station there in 1711. There was certainly a settlement there as early as 1725, when Renault received a grant of lands at Pimiteoui, facing the lake then bearing the same name as the village. From that date until 1812, the place was continuously occupied as a French village, and is said to have been the most important point for trading in the Mississippi Valley. The original village was situated about a mile and a half above the foot of the lake; but later, the present site was occupied, at first receiving the name of "La Ville de Maillet," from a French Canadian who resided in Peoria, from 1765 to 1801 (the time of his death), and who commanded a company of volunteers in the Revolutionary War. The population of the old town removed to the new site, and the present name was given to the place by American settlers, from the Peoria Indians, who were the occupants of the country when it was first discovered, but who had followed their cognate tribes of the Illinois family to Cahokia and Kaskaskia, about a century before American occupation of this region. In 1812 the town is estimated to have contained about seventy dwellings, with a population of between 200 and 300, made up largely of French traders, hunters and voyageurs, with a considerable admixture of half-breeds and Indians, and a few Americans. Among the latter were Thomas Forsyth, Indian Agent and confidential adviser of Governor Edwards; Michael La Croix, son-in-law of Julian Dubuque, founder of the city of Dubuque; Antoine Le Claire, founder of Davenport, and for whom Le Claire, Iowa, is named; William Arundel, afterwards Recorder of St. Clair County, and Isaac Darnielle, the second lawyer in Illinois.—In November, 1812, about half the town was burned, by order of Capt. Thomas E. Craig, who had been directed, by Governor Edwards, to proceed up the river in boats with materials to build a fort at Peoria. At the same time, the Governor himself was at the head of a force marching against Black Partridge's village, which he destroyed. Edwards had no communication with Craig, who appears to have acted solely on his own responsibility. That the latter's action was utterly unjustifiable, there can now be little doubt. He alleged, by way of excuse, that his boats had been fired upon from the shore, at night, by Indians or others, who were harbored by the citizens. The testimony of the French, however, is to the effect that it was an unprovoked and cowardly assault, instigated by wine which the soldiers had stolen from the cellars of the inhabitants. The bulk of those who remained after the fire were taken by Craig to a point below Alton and put ashore. This occurred in the beginning of winter, and the people, being left in a destitute condition, were subjected to great suffering. A Congressional investigation followed, and the French, having satisfactorily established the fact that they were not hostile, were restored to their possessions.—In 1813 a fort, designed for permanent occupancy, was erected and named Fort Clark, in honor of Col. George Rogers Clark. It had one (if not two) block-houses, with magazines and quarters for officers and men. It was finally evacuated in 1818, and was soon afterwards burned by the Indians. Although a trading-post had been maintained here, at intervals, after the affair of 1812, there was no attempt made to rebuild the town until 1819, when Americans began to arrive.—In 1824 a post of the American Fur Company was established here by John Hamlin, the company having already had, for five years, a station at Wesley City, three miles farther down the river. Hamlin also traded in pork and other products, and was the first to introduce keel-boats on the Illinois River. By transferring his cargo to lighter draft boats, when necessary, he made the trip from Peoria to Chicago entirely by water, going from the Des Plaines to Mud Lake, and thence to the South Branch of the Chicago River, without unloading. In 1834 the town had but seven frame houses and twenty-one log cabins. It was incorporated as a town in 1835 (Rudolphus Ronse being the first President), and, as the City of Peoria, ten years later (Wm. Hale being the first Mayor).—Peoria is an important railway and business center, eleven railroad lines concentrating here. It presents many attractive features, such as handsome residences, fine views of river, bluff and valley scenery, with an elaborate system of parks and drives. An excellent school system is liberally supported, and its public buildings (national, county and city) are fine and costly. Its churches are elegant and well attended, the leading denominations being Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, Protestant and Reformed Episcopal, Lutheran, Evangelical and Roman Catholic. It is the seat of Bradley Polytechnic Institute, a young and flourishing scientific school affiliated with the University of Chicago, and richly endowed through the munificence of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, who devotes her whole estate, of at least a million dollars, to this object. Right Rev. John L. Spaulding, Bishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of Peoria, is erecting a handsome and costly building for the Spaulding Institute, a school for the higher education of young men.—At Bartonville, a suburb of Peoria, on an elevation commanding a magnificent view of the Illinois River valley for many miles, the State has located an asylum for the incurable insane. It is now in process of erection, and is intended to be one of the most complete of its kind in the world. Peoria lies in a corn and coal region, is noted for the number and extent of its distilleries, and, in 1890, ranked eighth among the grain markets of the country. It also has an extensive commerce with Chicago, St. Louis and other important cities; was credited, by the census of 1890, with 554 manufacturing establishments, representing 90 different branches of industry, with a capital of $15,072,567 and an estimated annual product of $55,504,523. Its leading industries are the manufacture of distilled and malt liquors, agricultural implements, glucose and machine-shop products. Its contributions to the internal revenue of the country are second only to those of the New York district. Population (1870), 22,849; (1880), 29,259; (1890), 41,024; (1900), 56,100.

PEORIA COUNTY, originally a part of Fulton County, but cut off in 1825. It took its name from the Peoria Indians, who occupied that region when it was first discovered. As first organized, it included the present counties of Jo Daviess and Cook, with many others in the northern part of the State. At that time there were less than 1,500 inhabitants in the entire region; and John Hamlin, a Justice of the Peace, on his return from Green Bay (whither he had accompanied William S. Hamilton, a son of Alexander Hamilton, with a drove of cattle for the fort there), solemnized, at Chicago, the marriage of Alexander Wolcott, then Indian Agent, with a daughter of John Kinzie. The original Peoria County has been subdivided into thirty counties, among them being some of the largest and richest in the State. The first county officer was Norman Hyde, who was elected Judge of the Probate Court by the Legislature in January, 1825. His commission from Governor Coles was dated on the eighteenth of that month, but he did not qualify until June 4, following, when he took the oath of office before John Dixon, Circuit Clerk, who founded the city that bears his name. Meanwhile, Mr. Hyde had been appointed the first Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, and served in that capacity until entering upon his duties as Probate Judge. The first election of county officers was held, March 7, 1825, at the house of William Eads. Nathan Dillon, Joseph Smith, and William Holland were chosen Commissioners; Samuel Fulton Sheriff, and William Phillips Coroner. The first County Treasurer was Aaron Hawley, and the first general election of officers took place in 1826. The first court house was a log cabin, and the first term of the Circuit Court began Nov. 14, 1825, John York Sawyer sitting on the bench, with John Dixon, Clerk; Samuel Fulton, Sheriff; and John Twiney, the Attorney-General, present. Peoria County is, at present, one of the wealthiest and most populous counties in the State. Its soil is fertile and its manufactures numerous, especially at Peoria, the county-seat and principal city (which see). The area of the county is 615 square miles, and its population (1880), 55,353; (1890), 70,378; (1900), 88,608.

PEORIA LAKE, an expansion of the Illinois River, forming the eastern boundary of Peoria County, which it separates from the counties of Woodford and Tazewell. It is about 20 miles long and 2½ miles broad at the widest part.

PEORIA, ATLANTA & DECATUR RAILROAD. (See Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad.)

PEORIA, DECATUR & EVANSVILLE RAILWAY. The total length of this line, extending from Peoria, Ill., to Evansville, Ind., is 330.87 miles, all owned by the company, of which 273 miles are in Illinois. It extends from Pekin, southeast to Grayville, on the Wabash River—is single track, unballasted, and of standard gauge. Between Pekin and Peoria the company uses the tracks of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway, of which it is one-fourth owner. Between Hervey City and Midland Junction it has trackage privileges over the line owned jointly by the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville and the Terre Haute & Peoria Companies (7.5 miles). Between Midland Junction and Decatur (2.4 miles) the tracks of the Illinois Central are used, the two lines having terminal facilities at Decatur in common. The rails are of fifty-two and sixty-pound steel.—

(HISTORY.) The main line of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway is the result of the consolidation of several lines built under separate charters. (1) The Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1867, built in 1869-71, and operated the latter year, was leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway, but sold to representatives of the bond-holders, on account of default on interest, in 1876, and reorganized as the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway. (2) The Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, (projected from Decatur to Mattoon), was incorporated in 1871, completed from Mattoon to Hervey City, in 1872, and, the same year, consolidated with the Chicago & Great Southern; in January, 1874, the Decatur line passed into the hands of a receiver, and, in 1877, having been sold under foreclosure, was reorganized as the Decatur, Mattoon & Southern Railroad. In 1879 it was placed in the hands of trustees, but the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway having acquired a controlling interest during the same year, the two lines were consolidated under the name of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company. (3) The Grayville & Mattoon Railroad, chartered in 1857, was consolidated in 1872 with the Mount Vernon & Grayville Railroad (projected), the new corporation taking the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern (already mentioned). In 1872 the latter corporation was consolidated with the Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, under the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern Railway. Both consolidations, however, were set aside by decree of the United States District Court, in 1876, and the partially graded road and franchises of the Grayville & Mattoon lines sold, under foreclosure, to the contractors for the construction; 20 miles of the line from Olney to Newton, were completed during the month of September of that year, and the entire line, from Grayville to Mattoon, in 1878. In 1880 this line was sold, under decree of foreclosure, to the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company, which had already acquired the Decatur & Mattoon Division—thus placing the entire line, from Peoria to Grayville, in the hands of one corporation. A line under the name of the Evansville & Peoria Railroad, chartered in Indiana in 1880, was consolidated, the same year, with the Illinois corporation under the name of the latter, and completed from Grayville to Evansville in 1882. (4) The Chicago & Ohio River Railroad—chartered, in 1869, as the Danville, Olney & Ohio River Railroad—was constructed, as a narrow-gauge line, from Kansas to West Liberty, in 1878-81; in the latter year was changed to standard gauge and completed, in 1883, from Sidell to Olney (86 miles). The same year it went into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, in February, 1886, and reorganized, in May following, as the Chicago & Ohio River Railroad; was consolidated with the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway, in 1893, and used as the Chicago Division of that line. The property and franchises of the entire line passed into the hands of receivers in 1894, and are still (1898) under their management.

PEORIA, PEKIN & JACKSONVILLE RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEORIA & BUREAU VALLEY RAILROAD, a short line, 46.7 miles in length, operated by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, extending from Peoria to Bureau Junction, Ill. It was incorporated, Feb. 12, 1853, completed the following year, and leased to the Rock Island in perpetuity, April 14, 1854, the annual rental being $125,000. The par value of the capital stock is $1,500,000. Annual dividends of 8 per cent are guaranteed, payable semi-annually. (See Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway.)

PEORIA & EASTERN RAILROAD. Of this line the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company is the lessee. Its total length is 350½ miles, 132 of which lie in Illinois—123 being owned by the Company. That portion within this State extends east from Pekin to the Indiana State line, in addition to which the Company has trackage facilities over the line of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway (9 miles) to Peoria. The gauge is standard. The track is single, laid with sixty and sixty-seven-pound steel rails and ballasted almost wholly with gravel. The capital stock is $10,000,000. In 1895 it had a bonded debt of $13,603,000 and a floating debt of $1,261,130, making a total capitalization of $24,864,130.—(HISTORY.) The original of this corporation was the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington & Pekin Railroad, which was consolidated, in July, 1869, with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville & Danville Railroad—the new corporation taking the name of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western—and was opened to Pekin the same year. In 1874 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1879, and reorganized as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railway Company. The next change occurred in 1881, when it was consolidated with an Ohio corporation (the Ohio, Indiana & Pacific Railroad), again undergoing a slight change of name in its reorganization as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railroad Company. In 1886 it again got into financial straits, was placed in charge of a receiver and sold to a reorganization committee, and, in January, 1887, took the name of the Ohio, Indiana & Western Railway Company. The final reorganization, under its present name, took place in February, 1890, when it was leased to the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which it is operated. (See Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway.)

PEORIA & HANNIBAL RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & OQUAWKA RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & PEKIN UNION RAILWAY. A line connecting the cities of Peoria and Pekin, which are only 8 miles apart. It was chartered in 1880, and acquired, by purchase, the tracks of the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville and the Peoria & Springfield Railroads, between the two cities named in its title, giving it control of two lines, which are used by nearly all the railroads entering both cities from the east side of the Illinois River. The mileage, including both divisions, is 18.14 miles, second tracks and sidings increasing the total to nearly 60 miles. The track is of standard gauge, about two-thirds being laid with steel rails. The total cost of construction was $4,350,987. Its total capitalization (1898) was $4,177,763, including $1,000,000 in stock, and a funded debt of $2,904,000. The capital stock is held in equal amounts (each 2,500 shares) by the Wabash, the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Peoria & Eastern companies, with 1,000 shares by the Lake Erie & Western. Terminal charges and annual rentals are also paid by the Terre Haute & Peoria and the Iowa Central Railways.

PEORIA & SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEOTONE, a village of Will County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 41 miles south-southwest from Chicago; has some manufactures, a bank and a newspaper. The surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 717; (1900), 1,003.

PERCY, a village of Randolph County, at the intersection of the Wabash, Chesapeake & Western and the Mobile & Ohio Railways. Population (1890), 360; (1900), 660.

PERROT, Nicholas, a French explorer, who visited the valley of the Fox River (of Wisconsin) and the country around the great lakes, at various times between 1670 and 1690. He was present, as a guide and interpreter, at the celebrated conference held at Sault Ste. Marie, in 1671, which was attended by fifteen Frenchmen and representatives from seventeen Indian tribes, and at which the Sieur de Lussan took formal possession of Lakes Huron and Superior, with the surrounding region and "all the country southward to the sea," in the name of Louis XIV. of France. Perrot was the first to discover lead in the West, and, for several years, was Commandant in the Green Bay district. As a chronicler he was intelligent, interesting and accurate. His writings were not published until 1864, but have always been highly prized as authority.

PERRY, a town of Pike County; has a bank and a newspaper. Population (1880), 770; (1890), 705; (1900), 642.

PERRY COUNTY, lies in the southwest quarter of the State, with an area of 440 square miles and a population (1900) of 19,830. It was organized as a county in 1827, and named for Com. Oliver H. Perry. The general surface is rolling, although flat prairies occupy a considerable portion, interspersed with "post-oak flats." Limestone is found in the southern, and sandstone in the northern, sections, but the chief mineral wealth of the county is coal, which is abundant, and, at several points, easily mined, some of it being of a superior quality. Salt is manufactured, to some extent, and the chief agricultural output is wheat. Pinckneyville, the county-seat, has a central position and a population of about 1,300. Duquoin is the largest city. Beaucoup Creek is the principal stream, and the county is crossed by several lines of railroad.

PERU, a city in La Salle County, at the head of navigation on the Illinois River, which is here spanned by a handsome bridge. It is distant 100 miles southwest from Chicago, and the same distance north-northeast from Springfield. It is connected by street cars with La Salle, one mile distant, which is the terminus of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is situated in a rich coal-mining region, is an important trade center, and has several manufacturing establishments, including zinc smelting works, rolling mills, nickeloid factory, metal novelty works, gas engine factory, tile works, plow, scale and patent-pump factories, foundries and machine shops, flour and saw mills, clock factory, etc. Two national banks, with a combined capital of $200,000, are located at Peru, and one daily and one weekly paper. Population (1870), 3,650; (1880), 4,682; (1890), 5,550; (1900), 6,863.

PESOTUM, a village in Champaign County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 5 miles south of Tolono. Population (1890), 575.

PETERSBURG, a city of Menard County, and the county-seat, on the Sangamon River, at the intersection Chicago & Alton with the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railway; 23 miles northwest of Springfield and 28 miles northeast of Jacksonville. The town was surveyed and platted by Abraham Lincoln in 1837, and is the seat of the "Old Salem" Chautauqua. It has machine shops, two banks, two weekly papers and nine churches. The manufactures include woolen goods, brick and drain-tile, bed-springs, mattresses, and canned goods. Pop. (1890), 2,342, (1900), 2,807.

PETERS, Onslow, lawyer and jurist, was born in Massachusetts, graduated at Brown University, and was admitted to the bar and practiced law in his native State until 1837, when he settled at Peoria, Ill. He served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, was elected to the bench of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit in 1853, and re-elected in 1855. Died, Feb. 28, 1856.

PHILLIPS, David L., journalist and politician, was born where the town of Mariou, Williamson County, Ill., now stands, Oct. 28, 1823; came to St. Clair County in childhood, his father settling near Belleville; began teaching at an early age, and, when about 18, joined the Baptist Church, and, after a brief course with the distinguished Dr. Peck, at his Rock Spring Seminary, two years later entered the ministry, serving churches in Washington and other Southern Illinois counties, finally taking charge of a church at Jonesboro. Though originally a Democrat, his advanced views on slavery led to a disagreement with his church, and he withdrew; then accepted a position as paymaster in the construction department of the Illinois Central Railroad, finally being transferred to that of Land Agent for the Southern section, in this capacity visiting different parts of the State from one end of the main line to the other. About 1854 he became associated with the management of "The Jonesboro Gazette," a Democratic paper, which, during his connection with it (some two years), he made an earnest opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. At the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention (which see), held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, he was appointed a member of their State Central Committee, and, as such, joined in the call for the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in May following, where he served as Vice-President for his District, and was nominated for Presidential Elector on the Fremont ticket. Two years later (1858) he was the unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress in the Southern District, being defeated by John A. Logan; was again in the State Convention of 1860, and a delegate to the National Convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln for President the first time; was appointed by Mr. Lincoln United States Marshal for the Southern District in 1861, and re-appointed in 1865, but resigned after Andrew Johnson's defection in 1866. During 1862 Mr. Phillips became part proprietor of "The State Journal" at Springfield, retaining this relation until 1878, at intervals performing editorial service; also took a prominent part in organizing and equipping the One Hundred and Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (sometimes called the "Phillips Regiment"), and, in 1865, was one of the committee of citizens sent to escort the remains of President Lincoln to Springfield. He joined in the Liberal Republican movement at Cincinnati in 1872, but, in 1876, was in line with his former party associates, and served in that year as an unsuccessful candidate for Congress, in the Springfield District, in opposition to William M. Springer, early the following year receiving the appointment of Postmaster for the city of Springfield from President Hayes. Died, at Springfield, June 19, 1880.

PHILLIPS, George S., author, was born at Peterborough, England, in January, 1816; graduated at Cambridge, and came to the United States, engaging in journalism. In 1845 he returned to England, and, for a time, was editor of "The Leeds Times," still later being Principal of the People's College at Huddersfield. Returning to the United States, he came to Cook County, and, about 1866-68, was a writer of sketches over the nom de plume of "January Searle" for "The Chicago Republican"—later was literary editor of "The New York Sun" for several years. His mind becoming impaired, he was placed in an asylum at Trenton, N. J., finally dying at Morristown, N. J., Jan. 14, 1889. Mr. Phillips was the author of several volumes, chiefly sketches of travel and biography.

PHILLIPS, Jesse J., lawyer, soldier and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., May 22, 1837. Shortly after graduating from the Hillsboro Academy, he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. In 1861 he organized a company of volunteers, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was attached to the Ninth Illinois Infantry. Captain Phillips was successively advanced to the rank of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; resigned on account of disability, in August, 1864, but was brevetted Brigadier-General at the close of the war. His military record was exceptionally brilliant. He was wounded three times at Shiloh, and was personally thanked and complimented by Generals Grant and Oglesby for gallantry and efficient service. At the termination of the struggle he returned to Hillsboro and engaged in practice. In 1866, and again in 1868, he was the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but was both times defeated. In 1879 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1885. In 1890 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Fourth District, and, in 1893, was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice John M. Scholfield, his term expiring in 1897, when he was re-elected to succeed himself. Judge Phillips' present term will expire in 1906.

PHILLIPS, Joseph, early jurist, was born in Tennessee, received a classical and legal education, and served as a Captain in the War of 1812; in 1816 was appointed Secretary of Illinois Territory, serving until the admission of Illinois as a State, when he became the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, serving until July, 1822, when he resigned, being succeeded on the bench by John Reynolds, afterwards Governor. In 1822 he was a candidate for Governor in the interest of the advocates of a pro-slavery amendment of the State Constitution, but was defeated by Edward Coles, the leader of the anti-slavery party. (See Coles, Edward, and Slavery and Slave Laws.) He appears from the "Edwards Papers" to have been in Illinois as late as 1832, but is said eventually to have returned to Tennessee. The date of his death is unknown.

PIANKESHAW, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. Their name, like those of their brethren, underwent many mutations of orthography, the tribe being referred to, variously, as the "Pou-an-ke-kialis," the "Pi-an-gie-shaws," the "Pi-an-qui-shaws," and the "Py-an-ke-shaws." They were less numerous than the Weas, their numerical strength ranking lowest among the bands of the Miamis. At the time La Salle planted his colony around Starved Rock, their warriors numbered 150. Subsequent to the dispersion of this colony they (alone of the Miamis) occupied portions of the present territory of Illinois, having villages on the Vermilion and Wabash Rivers. Their earliest inclinations toward the whites were friendly, the French traders having intermarried with women of the tribe soon after the advent of the first explorers. Col. George Rogers Clark experienced little difficulty in securing their allegiance to the new government which he proclaimed. In the sanguinary raids (usually followed by reprisals), which marked Western history during the years immediately succeeding the Revolution, the Piankeshaws took no part; yet the outrages, perpetrated upon peaceable colonists, had so stirred the settlers' blood, that all Indians were included in the general thirst for vengeance, and each was unceremoniously dispatched as soon as seen. The Piankeshaws appealed to Washington for protection, and the President issued a special proclamation in their behalf. After the cession of the last remnant of the Miami territory to the United States, the tribe was removed to a Kansas reservation, and its last remnant finally found a home in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Weas.)

"PIASA BIRD," LEGEND OF THE. When the French explorers first descended the Upper Mississippi River, they found some remarkable figures depicted upon the face of the bluff, just above the site of the present city of Alton, which excited their wonder and continued to attract interest long after the country was occupied by the whites. The account given of the discovery by Marquette, who descended the river from the mouth of the Wisconsin, in June, 1673, is as follows: "As we coasted along" (after passing the mouth of the Illinois) "rocks frightful for their height and length, we saw two monsters painted on one of the rocks, which startled us at first, and upon which the boldest Indian dare not gaze long. They are as large as a calf, with horns on the head like a deer, a frightful look, red eyes, bearded like a tiger, the face somewhat like a man's, the body covered with scales, and the tail so long that it twice makes the turn of the body, passing over the head and down between the legs, ending at last in a fish's tail. Green, red and black are the colors employed. On the whole, these two monsters are so well painted that we could not believe any Indian to have been the designer, as good painters in France would find it hard to do as well. Besides this, they are painted so high upon the rock that it is hard to get conveniently at them to paint them." As the Indians could give no account of the origin of these figures, but had their terror even more excited at the sight of them than Marquette himself, they are supposed to have been the work of some prehistoric race occupying the country long before the arrival of the aborigines whom Marquette and his companions found in Illinois. There was a tradition that the figures were intended to represent a creature, part beast and part bird, which destroyed immense numbers of the inhabitants by swooping down upon them from its abode upon the rocks. At last a chief is said to have offered himself a victim for his people, and when the monster made its appearance, twenty of his warriors, concealed near by, discharged their arrows at it, killing it just before it reached its prey. In this manner the life of the chief was saved and his people were preserved from further depredations; and it was to commemorate this event that the figure of the bird was painted on the face of the cliff on whose summit the chief stood. This story, told in a paper by Mr. John Russell, a pioneer author of Illinois, obtained wide circulation in this country and in Europe, about the close of the first quarter of the present century, as the genuine "Legend of the Piasa Bird." It is said, however, that Mr. Russell, who was a popular writer of fiction, acknowledged that it was drawn largely from his imagination. Many prehistoric relics and human remains are said, by the late William McAdams, the antiquarian of Alton, to have been found in caves in the vicinity, and it seems a well authenticated fact that the Indians, when passing the spot, were accustomed to discharge their arrows—and, later, their firearms—at the figure on the face of the cliff. Traces of this celebrated pictograph were visible as late as 1840 to 1845, but have since been entirely quarried away.

PIATT COUNTY, organized in 1841, consisting of parts of Macon and Dewitt Counties. Its area is 440 square miles: population (1900), 17,706. The first Commissioners were John Hughes, W. Bailey and E. Peck. John Piatt, after whose family the county was named, was the first Sheriff. The North Fork of the Sangamon River flows centrally through the county from northeast to southwest, and several lines of railroad afford transportation for its products. Its resources and the occupation of the people are almost wholly agricultural, the surface being level prairie and the soil fertile. Monticello, the county-seat, has a population of about 1,700. Other leading towns are Cerro Gordo (939) and Bement (1,129).

PICKETT, Thomas Johnson, journalist, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 17, 1821; spent six years (1830-36) in St. Louis, when his family removed to Peoria; learned the printer's trade in the latter city, and, in 1840, began the publication of "The Peoria News," then sold out and established "The Republican" (afterwards "The Transcript"); was a member of the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, serving on the Committee on Resolutions, and being appointed on the State Central Committee, which called the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington, in May following, and was there appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia, which nominated General Fremont for President. Later, he published papers at Pekin and Rock Island, at the latter place being one of the first to name Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency; was elected State Senator in 1860, and, in 1862, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Sixty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, being transferred, as Colonel, to the One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois (100-days' men), and serving at Camp Douglas during the "Conspiracy" excitement. After the war, Colonel Pickett removed to Paducah, Ky., published a paper there called "The Federal Union," was appointed Postmaster, and, later, Clerk of the United States District Court, and was the Republican nominee for Congress, in that District, in 1874. Removing to Nebraska in 1879, he at different times conducted several papers in that State, residing for the most part at Lincoln. Died, at Ashland, Neb., Dec. 24, 1891.

PIERSON, David, pioneer banker, was born at Cazenovia, N. Y., July 9, 1806; at the age of 13 removed west with his parents, arriving at St. Louis, June 3, 1820. The family soon after settled near Collinsville, Madison County, Ill., where the father having died, they removed to the vicinity of Carrollton, Greene County, in 1821. Here they opened a farm, but, in 1827, Mr. Pierson went to the lead mines at Galena, where he remained a year, then returning to Carrollton. In 1834, having sold his farm, he began merchandising, still later being engaged in the pork and grain trade at Alton. In 1854 he added the banking business to his dry-goods trade at Carrollton, also engaged in milling, and, in 1862-63, erected a woolen factory, which was destroyed by an incendiary fire in 1872. Originally an anti-slavery Clay Whig, Mr. Pierson became a Republican on the organization of that party in 1856, served for a time as Collector of Internal Revenue, was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Philadelphia in 1872, and a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor in 1876. Of high integrity and unswerving patriotism, Mr. Pierson was generous in his benefactions, being one of the most liberal contributors to the establishment of the Langston School for the Education of Freedmen at Holly Springs, Miss., soon after the war. He died at Carrollton, May 8, 1891.—Ornan (Pierson), a son of the subject of this sketch, was a member of the Thirty-second General Assembly (1881) from Greene County, and is present cashier of the Greene County National Bank at Carrollton.

PIGGOTT, Isaac N., early politician, was born about 1792; served as an itinerant Methodist preacher in Missouri and Illinois, between 1819 and 1824, but finally located southwest of Jerseyville and obtained a license to run a ferry between Grafton and Alton; in 1828 ran as a candidate for the State Senate against Thomas Carlin (afterwards Governor); removed to St. Louis in 1858, and died there in 1874.

PIKE COUNTY, situated in the western portion of the State, lying between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, having an area of 795 square miles—named in honor of the explorer, Capt. Zebulon Pike. The first American settlers came about 1820, and, in 1821, the county was organized, at first embracing all the country north and west of the Illinois River, including the present county of Cook. Out of this territory were finally organized about one fourth of the counties of the State. Coles' Grove (now Gilead, in Calhoun County) was the first county-seat, but the seat of justice was removed, in 1824, to Atlas, and to Pittsfield in 1833. The surface is undulating, in some portions is hilly, and diversified with prairies and hardwood timber. Live-stock, cereals and hay are the staple products, while coal and Niagara limestone are found in abundance. Population (1890), 31,000; (1900), 31,595.

PILLSBURY, Nathaniel Joy, lawyer and judge, was born in York County, Maine, Oct. 21, 1834; in 1855 removed to Illinois, and, in 1858, began farming in Livingston County. He began the study of law in 1863, and, after admission to the bar, commenced practice at Pontiac. He represented La Salle and Livingston Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1873, was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit. He was re-elected in 1879 and again in 1885. He was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court in 1877, and again in 1879 and '85. He was severely wounded by a shot received from strikers on the line of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, near Chicago, in 1886, resulting in his being permanently disabled physically, in consequence of which he declined a re-election to the bench in 1891.

PINCKNEVILLE, a city and the county-seat of Perry County, situated at the intersection of the Paducah Division Illinois Central and the Wabash, Chester & Western Railways, 10 miles west-northwest of Duquoin. Coal-mining is carried on in the immediate vicinity, and flour, carriages, plows and dressed lumber are among the manufactured products. Pinckneyville has two banks—one of which is national—two weekly newspapers, seven churches, a graded and a high school. Population (1880), 964; (1890), 1,298; (1900), 2,357.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD, one of the Pennsylvania Company's lines, operating 1,403 miles of road, of which 1,090 miles are owned and the remainder leased—length of line in Illinois, 28 miles. The Company is the outgrowth of a consolidation, in 1890, of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway with the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg, the Cincinnati & Richmond and the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroads. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company controls the entire line through ownership of stock. Capital stock outstanding, in 1898. $47,791,601; funded debt, $48,433,000; floating debt, $2,214,703—total capital $98,500,584.—(HISTORY.) The Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg Railroad, embracing the Illinois division of this line, was made up of various corporations organized under the laws of Illinois and Indiana. One of its component parts was the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway, organized, in 1865, by consolidation of the Galena & Illinois River Railroad (chartered in 1857), the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway of Indiana, the Cincinnati & Chicago Air-Line (organized 1860), and the Cincinnati, Logansport & Chicago Railway. In 1869, the consolidated line was leased to the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company, and operated under the name of the Columbus, Chicago & Indiana Central between Bradford, Ohio, and Chicago, from 1869 until its consolidation, under the present name, in 1890. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILWAY. The total length of this line is nearly 470 miles, but only a little over 16 miles are within Illinois. It was operated by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company as lessee. The entire capitalization in 1898 was $52,549,990; and the earnings in Illinois, $472,228.—(HISTORY.) The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway is the result of the consolidation, August 1, 1856, of the Ohio & Pennsylvania, the Ohio & Indiana and the Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad Companies, under the name of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1859; was sold under foreclosure in 1861; reorganized under its present title, in 1862, and leased to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, for 999 years, from July 1, 1869. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSFIELD, the county-seat of Pike County, situated on the Hannibal & Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, about 40 miles southeast of Quincy, and about the same distance south of west from Jacksonville. Its public buildings include a handsome court house and graded and high school buildings. The city has an electric light plant, city water-works, a flour mill, a National and a State bank, nine churches, and four weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 2,295; (1900), 2,293.

PLAINFIELD, a village of Will County, on the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and an interurban electric line, 8 miles northwest of Joliet; is in a dairying section; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 852; (1900), 920.

PLANO, a city in Kendall County, situated near the Fox River, and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 14 miles west-southwest of Aurora. There are manufactories of agricultural implements and bedsteads. The city has banks, several churches, graded and high schools, bank, five churches, college and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,825; (1900), 1,634; (1903, est.), 2,250.

PLEASANT PLAINS, a village of Sangamon County, on Springfield Division Baltimore & Ohio S. W. Railroad, 16 miles northwest of Springfield; in rich farming region; has coal-shaft, bank, five churches, college and two newspapers. Population (1890), 518; (1900), 575.

PLEASANTS, George Washington, jurist, was born in Harrodsburg, Ky., Nov. 24, 1823; received a classical education at Williams College, Mass., graduating in 1842; studied law in New York City, and was admitted to the bar at Rochester, N. Y., in 1845, establishing himself in practice at Williamstown, Mass., where he remained until 1849. In 1851 he removed to Washington, D. C., and, after residing there two years, came to Illinois, locating at Rock Island, which has since been his home. In 1861 he was elected, as a Republican, to the State Constitutional Convention which met at Springfield in January following, and, in 1867, was chosen Judge for the Sixth (now Tenth) Judicial Circuit, having served by successive re-elections until June, 1897, retiring at the close of his fifth term—a record for length of service seldom paralleled in the judicial history of the State. The last twenty years of this period were spent on the Appellate bench. For several years past Judge Pleasants has been a sufferer from failing eyesight, but has been faithful in attendance on his judicial duties. As a judicial officer and a man, his reputation stands among the highest.

PLUMB, Ralph, soldier and ex-Congressman, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., March 29, 1816. After leaving school he became a merchant's clerk, and was himself a merchant for eighteen years. From New York he removed to Ohio, where he was elected a member of the Legislature in 1855, later coming to Illinois. During the Civil War he served four years in the Union army as Captain and Quartermaster, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at its close. He made his home at Streator, where he was elected Mayor (1881-1883). There he engaged in coal-mining and has been connected with several important enterprises. From 1885 to 1889 he represented the Eighth Illinois District in Congress, after which he retired to private life.

PLYMOUTH, a village of Hancock County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 41 miles northeast of Quincy; is trade center of rich farming district; has two banks, electric lights, water-works, and one paper. Pop. (1900), 854.

POINTE DE SAIBLE, Jean Baptiste, a negro and Indian-trader, reputed to have been the first settler on the present site of the city of Chicago. He is said to have been a native of San Domingo, but is described by his contemporaries as "well educated and handsome," though dissipated. He appears to have been at the present site of Chicago as early as 1794, his house being located on the north side near the junction of the North and South branches of the Chicago River, where he carried on a considerable trade with the Indians. About 1796 he is said to have sold out to a French trader named Le Mai, and joined a countryman of his, named Glamorgan, at Peoria, where he died soon after. Glamorgan, who was the reputed owner of a large Spanish land-grant in the vicinity of St. Louis, is said to have been associated with Point de Saible in trade among the Peorias, before the latter came to Chicago.

POLO, a city in Ogle County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern Railways, 23 miles south of Freeport and 12 miles north of Dixon. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture and stock-raising, and Polo is a shipping point for large quantities of cattle and hogs. Agricultural implements (including harvesters) and buggies are manufactured here. The city has banks, one weekly and one semi-weekly paper, seven churches, a graded public and high school, and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,728; (1900), 1,869.

PONTIAC, an Ottawa chief, born on the Ottawa River, in Canada, about 1720. While yet a young man he became the principal Chief of the allied Ottawas, Ojibways and Pottawatomies. He was always a firm ally of the French, to whose interests he was devotedly attached, defending them at Detroit against an attack of the Northern tribes, and (it is generally believed) leading the Ottawas in the defeat of Braddock. He reluctantly acquiesced in the issue of the French and Indian War, although at first strongly disposed to dispute the progress of Major Rogers, the British officer sent to take possession of the western forts. In 1762 he dispatched emissaries to a large number of tribes, whom he desired to unite in a league for the extermination of the English. His proposals were favorably received, and thus was organized what is commonly spoken of as the "Conspiracy of Pontiac." He himself undertook to lead an assault upon Detroit. The garrison, however, was apprised of his intention, and made preparations accordingly. Pontiac thereupon laid siege to the fort, but was unable to prevent the ingress of provisions, the Canadian settlers furnishing supplies to both besieged and besiegers with absolute impartiality. Finally a boat-load of ammunition and supplies was landed at Detroit from Lake Erie, and the English made an unsuccessful sortie on July 31, 1763. After a desultory warfare, lasting for nearly three months, the Indians withdrew into Indiana, where Pontiac tried in vain to organize another movement. Although Detroit had not been taken, the Indians captured Forts Sandusky, St. Joseph, Miami, Oniatanon, LeBoeuf and Venango, besides the posts of Mackinaw and Presque Isle. The garrisons at all these points were massacred and innumerable outrages perpetrated elsewhere. Additional British troops were sent west, and the Indians finally brought under control. Pontiac was present at Oswego when a treaty was signed with Sir William Johnson, but remained implacable. His end was tragic. Broken in heart, but still proud in spirit and relentless in purpose, he applied to the former (and last) French Governor of Illinois, the younger St. Ange, who was then at St. Louis, for co-operation and support in another raid against the British. Being refused aid or countenance, according to a story long popularly received, he returned to the vicinity of Cahokia, where, in 1769, he was murdered by a Kaskaskia Indian in consideration of a barrel of liquor. N. Matson, author of several volumes bearing on early history in Illinois, citing Col. Joseph N. Bourassa, an educated half-breed of Kansas, as authority for his statement, asserts that the Indian killed at Cahokia was an impostor, and that the true Pontiac was assassinated by Kineboo, the Head Chief of the Illinois, in a council held on the Des Plaines River, near the present site of Joliet. So well convinced, it is said, was Pierre Chouteau, the St. Louis Indian trader, of the truth of this last story, that he caused a monument, which he had erected over the grave of the false Pontiac, to be removed. Out of the murder of Pontiac, whether occurring at Cahokia or Joliet, it is generally agreed, resulted the extermination of the Illinois and the tragedy of "Starved Rock." (See Starved Rock.)

PONTIAC, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Livingston County. It stands on the bank of the Vermillion River, and is also a point of intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads. It is 33 miles north-northeast from Bloomington and 93 miles south-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture, stock-raising and coal-mining. Pontiac has four banks and four weekly newspapers (two issuing daily editions), numerous churches and good schools. Various kinds of manufacturing are conducted, among the principal establishments being flouring mills, three shoe factories, straw paper and candy factories and a foundry. The State Reformatory for Juvenile Offenders is located here. Pop. (1890), 2,784; (1900), 4,266.

POOL, Orval, merchant and banker, was born in Union County, Ky., near Shawneetown, Ill., Feb. 17, 1809, but lived in Shawneetown from seven years of age; in boyhood learned the saddler's trade, but, in 1843, engaged in the dry-goods business, J. McKee Peoples and Thomas S. Ridgway becoming his partners in 1846. In 1850 he retired from the dry-goods trade and became an extensive dealer in produce, pork and tobacco. In 1871 he established the Gallatin County National Bank, of which he was the first President. Died, June 30, 1871.

POOLE, William Frederick, bibliographer, librarian and historical writer, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 24, 1821, graduated from Yale College in 1849, and, at the close of his sophomore year, was appointed assistant librarian of his college society, which owned a library of 10,000 volumes. Here he prepared and published the first edition of his now famous "Index to Periodical Literature." A second and enlarged addition was published in 1853, and secured for its author wide fame, in both America and Europe. In 1852 he was made Librarian of the Boston Mercantile Library, and, from 1856 to 1869, had charge of the Boston Athenæum, then one of the largest libraries in the United States, which he relinquished to engage in expert library work. He organized libraries in several New England cities and towns, at the United States Naval Academy, and the Cincinnati Public Library, finally becoming Librarian of the latter institution. In October, 1873, he assumed charge of the Chicago Public Library, then being organized, and, in 1887, became Librarian of the Newberry Library, organizing this institution and remaining at its head until his death, which occurred, March 1, 1894. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the Northwestern University in 1882. Dr. Poole took a prominent part in the organization of library associations, and was one of the Vice-Presidents of the International Conference of Librarians, held in London in 1871. His advice was much sought in relation to library architecture and management. He wrote much on topics connected with his profession and on historical subjects, frequently contributing to "The North American Review." In 1874-75 he edited a literary paper at Chicago, called "The Owl," and was later a constant contributor to "The Dial." He was President of the American Historical Society and member of State Historical Societies and of other kindred associations.

POPE, Nathaniel, first Territorial Secretary of Illinois, Delegate in Congress and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., in 1774; graduated with high honor from Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky., read law with his brother, Senator John Pope, and, in 1804, emigrated to New Orleans, later living, for a time, at Ste. Genevieve, Mo. In 1808 he became a resident of Kaskaskia and, the next year, was appointed the first Territorial Secretary of Illinois. His native judgment was strong and profound and his intellect quick and far-reaching, while both were thoroughly trained and disciplined by study. In 1816 he was elected a Territorial Delegate to Congress, and proved himself, not only devoted to the interests of his constituents, but also a shrewd tactician. He was largely instrumental in securing the passage of the act authorizing the formation of a State government, and it was mainly through his efforts that the northern boundary of Illinois was fixed at lat. 42° 30' north, instead of the southern bend of Lake Michigan. Upon the admission of Illinois into the Union, he was made United States Judge of the District, which then embraced the entire State. This office he filled with dignity, impartiality and acceptability until his death, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lucretia Yeatman, in St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 23, 1850. Pope County was named in his honor.—Gen. John (Pope), son of the preceding, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 16, 1822; graduated at the United States Military Academy, 1842, and appointed brevet Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers; served in Florida (1842-44), on the northeast boundary survey, and in the Mexican War (1846-47), being promoted First Lieutenant for bravery at Monterey and Captain at Buena Vista. In 1849 he conducted an exploring expedition in Minnesota, was in charge of topographical engineering service in New Mexico (1851-53), and of the survey of a route for the Union Pacific Railway (1853-59), meanwhile experimenting on the feasibility of artesian wells on the "Staked Plains" in Northwestern Texas. He was a zealous friend of Abraham Lincoln in the political campaign of 1860, and was court-martialed for criticising the policy of President Buchanan, in a paper read before a literary society in Cincinnati, the proceedings being finally dropped on the recommendation of the (then) Secretary of War, Joseph Holt. In 1861 he was one of the officers detailed by the War Department to conduct Mr. Lincoln to the capital, and, in May following, was made Brigadier-General of Volunteers and assigned to command in Missouri, where he performed valuable service in protecting railroad communications and driving out guerrillas, gaining an important victory over Sterling Price at Blackwater, in December of that year; in 1862 had command of the land forces co-operating with Admiral Foote, in the expedition against New Madrid and Island No. 10, resulting in the capture of that stronghold with 6,500 prisoners, 125 cannon and 7,000 small arms, thereby winning a Major-General's commission. Later, having participated in the operations against Corinth, he was transferred to command of the Army of Virginia, and soon after commissioned Brigadier-General in the regular army. Here, being forced to meet a greatly superior force under General Lee, he was subjected to reverses which led to his falling back on Washington and a request to be relieved of his command. For failure to give him proper support, Gen. Fitzjohn Porter was tried by court-martial, and, having been convicted, was cashiered and declared forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States Government—although this verdict was finally set aside and Porter restored to the army as Colonel, by act of Congress, in August, 1886. General Pope's subsequent service was performed chiefly against the Indians in the Northwest, until 1865, when he took command of the military division of Missouri, and, in June following, of the Department of the Missouri, including all the Northwestern States and Territories, from which he was relieved early in 1866. Later, he held command, under the Reconstruction Acts, in Georgia, Alabama and Florida (1867-68); the Department of the Lakes (1868-70); Department of the Missouri (1870-84); and Department of the Pacific, from 1884 to his retirement, March 16, 1886. General Pope published "Explorations from the Red River to the Rio Grande" and "Campaigns in Virginia" (1863). Died, at Sandusky, Ohio, Sept 23, 1892.

POPE COUNTY, lies on the southern border of the State, and contains an area of about 360 square miles—named in honor of Judge Nathaniel Pope. It was erected in 1816 (two years before the admission of Illinois as a State) from parts of Gallatin and Johnson Counties. The county-seat was first located at Sandsville, but later changed to Golconda. Robert Lacy, Benoni Lee and Thomas Ferguson were the first Commissioners; Hamlet Ferguson was chosen Sheriff; John Scott, Recorder; Thomas C. Browne, Prosecuting-Attorney, and Samuel Omelveney, Treasurer. The highest land in Southern Illinois is in the north-eastern part of this county, reaching an elevation of 1,046 feet. The bluffs along the Ohio River are bold in outline, and the ridges are surmounted by a thick growth of timber, notably oak and hickory. Portions of the bottom lands are submerged, at times, during a part of the year and are covered with cypress timber. The remains of Indian mounds and fortifications are found, and some interesting relics have been exhumed. Sandstone is quarried in abundance, and coal is found here and there. Mineral springs (with copperas as the chief ingredient) are numerous. Iron is found in limited quantities, among the rocks toward the south, while spar and kaolin clay are found in the north. The chief agricultural products are potatoes, corn and tobacco. Population (1890), 14,016; (1900), 13,585.

PORT BYRON, a village of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 16 miles above Rock Island; has lime kilns, grain elevator, two banks, academy, public schools, and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 732. The (Illinois) Western Hospital for the Insane is located at Watertown, twelve miles below Port Byron.

PORTER, (Rev.) Jeremiah, pioneer clergyman, was born at Hadley, Mass., in 1804; graduated from Williams College in 1825, and studied theology at both Andover and Princeton seminaries, graduating from the latter in 1831. The same year he made the (then) long and perilous journey to Fort Brady, a military post at the Sault Ste. Marie, where he began his work as a missionary. In 1833 he came to Chicago, where he remained for two years, organizing the First Presbyterian Church of Chicago, with a membership of twenty-six persons. Afterwards he had pastoral charge of churches at Peoria and Farmington. While in Chicago he was married to Miss Eliza Chappell, one of the earliest teachers in Chicago. From 1840 to '58 he was located at Green Bay, Wis., accepting a call from a Chicago Church in the year last named. In 1861 he was commissioned Chaplain in the volunteer service by Governor Yates, and mustered out in 1865. The next five years were divided between labors at Brownsville, Tex., in the service of the Sanitary Commission, and a pastorate at Prairie du Chien. In 1870 he was commissioned Chaplain in the regular army, remaining in the service (with occasional leaves of absence) until 1882, when he was retired from active service on account of advanced age. His closing years were spent at the homes of his children in Detroit and Beloit; died at the latter city, July 25, 1893, at the age of 89 years.

POSEY, (Gen.) Thomas, Continental and Revolutionary soldier, was born in Virginia, July 9, 1750; in 1774 took part in Lord Dunmore's expedition against the Indians, and, later, in various engagements of the Revolutionary War, being part of the time under the immediate command of Washington; was with General Wayne in the assault on Stony Point and present at Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown; also served, after the war, with Wayne as a Brigadier-General in the Northwest Territory. Removing to Kentucky, he served in the State Senate, for a time being presiding officer and acting Lieutenant-Governor; later (1812), was elected United States Senator from Louisiana, and, from 1813 to '16, served as Territorial Governor of Indiana. Died, at the home of his son-in-law, Joseph M. Street, at Shawneetown, Ill., March 18, 1818, where he lies buried. At the time of his death General Posey was serving as Indian Agent.

POST, Joel S., lawyer and soldier of the Mexican War; was born in Ontario (now Wayne) County, N. Y., April 27, 1816; in 1828 removed with his father to Washtenaw County, Mich., remaining there until 1839, when he came to Macon County, Ill. The following year, he commenced the study of law with Judge Charles Emmerson, of Decatur, and was admitted to the bar in 1841. In 1846 he enlisted in the Mexican War, and served as Quartermaster of the Fourth Regiment (Col. E. D. Baker's); in 1856 was elected to the State Senate, and, at the following session, was a leading supporter of the measures which resulted in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington. Capt. Post's later years were spent at Decatur, where he died, June 7, 1886.

POST, Philip Sidney, soldier and Congressman, was born at Florida, Orange County, N. Y., March 19, 1833; at the age of 22 graduated from Union College, studied law at Poughkeepsie Law School, and, removing to Illinois, was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Fifty-ninth Illinois Volunteers. He was a gallant, fearless soldier, and was repeatedly promoted for bravery and meritorious service, until he attained the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. He participated in many important battles and was severely wounded at Pea Ridge and Nashville. In 1865 he was in command in Western Texas. After the close of the war he entered the diplomatic service, being appointed Consul-General to Austria-Hungary in 1874, but resigned in 1879, and returned to his home in Galesburg. From 1882 to 1886 he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, and, during 1886, was Commander of the Department of Illinois, G. A. R. He was elected to Congress from the Tenth District on the Republican ticket in 1886, serving continuously by re-election until his death, which occurred in Washington, Jan. 6, 1895.

POST, Truman Marcellus, D.D., clergyman, was born at Middlebury, Vt., June 3, 1810; graduated at Middlebury College in 1829, was Principal of Castleton Academy for a year, and a tutor at Middlebury two years, meanwhile studying law. After a winter spent in Washington, listening to the orators of the time in Congress and before the Supreme Court, including Clay, Webster, Wirt and their contemporaries, he went west in 1833, first visiting St. Louis, but finally settling at Jacksonville, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar, but soon after accepted the Professorship of Classical Languages in Illinois College, and later that of History; then began the study of theology, was ordained in 1840, and assumed the pastorate of the Congregational Church in Jacksonville. In 1847 he was called to the pastorate of the Third Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, and, in 1851, to the First Congregational Church, of which the former furnished the nucleus. For a year or two after removing to St. Louis, he continued his lectures on history at Illinois College for a short period each year; also held the professorship of Ancient and Modern History in Washington University, in St. Louis; in 1873-75 was Southworth lecturer on Congregationalism in Andover Theological Seminary and, for several years, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Chicago Theological Seminary. His splendid diction and his noble style of oratory caused him to be much sought after as a public lecturer or platform speaker at college commencements, while his purity of life and refinement of character attracted to him all with whom he came in personal contact. He received the degree of D.D. from Middlebury College in 1855; was a frequent contributor to "The Biblical Repository" and other religious publications, and, besides numerous addresses, sermons and pamphlets, he was the author of a volume entitled "The Skeptical Era in Modern History" (New York, 1856). He resigned his pastorate in January, 1882, but continued to be a frequent speaker, either in the pulpit or on the lecture platform, nearly to the period of his death, which occurred in St. Louis, Dec. 31, 1886. For a quarter of a century he was one of the Trustees of Monticello Female Seminary, at Godfrey, Ill., being, for a considerable portion of the time, President of the Board.

POTTAWATOMIES, THE, an Indian tribe, one of the three subdivisions of the Ojibwas (or Ojibbeways), who, in turn, constituted a numerous family of the Algonquins. The other branches were the Ottawa and the Chippewas. The latter, however, retained the family name, and hence some writers have regarded the "Ojibbeways" and the "Chippewas" as essentially identical. This interchanging of names has been a prolific source of error. Inherently, the distinction was analogous to that existing between genus and species, although a confusion of nomenclature has naturally resulted in errors more or less serious. These three tribes early separated, the Pottawatomies going south from Green Bay along the western shore of Lake Michigan. The meaning of the name is, "we are making a fire," and the word is a translation into the Pottawatomie language of the name first given to the tribe by the Miamis. These Indians were tall, fierce and haughty, and the tribe was divided into four branches, or clans, called by names which signify, respectively, the golden carp, the tortoise, the crab and the frog. According to the "Jesuit Relations," the Pottawatomies were first met by the French, on the north of Lake Huron, in 1639-40. More than a quarter of a century later (1666) Father Allouez speaks of them as dwellers on the shores of Lake Michigan. The same Father described them as idolatrous and polygamous, yet as possessing a rude civility and as being kindly disposed toward the French. This friendship continued unbroken until the expulsion of the latter from the Northwest. About 1678 they spread southward from Green Bay to the head of Lake Michigan, a portion of the tribe settling in Illinois as far south as the Kankakee and Illinois Rivers, crowding the Winnebagoes and the Sacs and Foxes on the west, and advancing, on the east, into the country of the Miamis as far as the Wabash and the Maumee. They fought on the side of the French in the French and Indian War, and later took part in the conspiracy of Pontiac to capture and reduce the British posts, and were so influenced by Tecumseh and the Prophet that a considerable number of their warriors fought against General Harrison at Tippecanoe. During the War of 1812 they actively supported the British. They were also prominent at the Chicago massacre. Schoolcraft says of them, "They were foremost at all treaties where lands were to be ceded, clamoring for the lion's share of all presents and annuities, particularly where these last were the price paid for the sale of other lands than their own." The Pottawatomies were parties to the treaties at Chicago in 1832 and 1833, and were among the last of the tribes to remove beyond the Mississippi, their final emigration not taking place until 1838. In 1846 the scattered fragments of this tribe coalesced with those of the Chippewas and Ottawas, and formed the Pottawatomie nation. They ceded all their lands, wherever located, to the United States, for $850,000, agreeing to accept 576,000 acres in Kansas in lieu of $87,000 of this amount. Through the rapacity and trespasses of white settlers, this reservation was soon dismembered, and the lands passed into other hands. In 1867, under an enabling act of Congress, 1,400 of the nation (then estimated at 2,500) became citizens. Their present location is in the southeastern part of Oklahoma.

POWELL, John Wesley, Ph.D., LL.D., geologist and anthropologist, was born at Mount Morris, N. Y., March 24, 1834, the son of a Methodist itinerant preacher, passing his early life at various places in Ohio, Wisconsin and Illinois; studied for a time in Illinois College (Jacksonville), and subsequently in Wheaton College, but, in 1854, began a special course at Oberlin, Ohio, teaching at intervals in public schools. Having a predilection for the natural sciences, he spent much time in making collections, which he placed in various Illinois institutions. Entering the army in 1861 as a private of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, he later became a Captain of the Second Illinois Artillery, being finally promoted Major. He lost his right arm at the battle of Shiloh, but returned to his regiment as soon as sufficiently recovered, and continued in active service to the close of the war. In 1865 he became Professor of Geology and Curator of the Museum in Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, but resigned to accept a similar position in the State Normal University. In 1867 he began his greatest work in connection with science by leading a class of pupils to the mountains of Colorado for the study of geology, which he followed, a year later, by a more thorough survey of the cañon of the Colorado River than had ever before been attempted. This led to provision by Congress, in 1870, for a topographical and geological survey of the Colorado and its tributaries, which was appropriately placed under his direction. Later, he was placed in charge of the Bureau of Ethnology in connection with the Smithsonian Institute, and, again in 1881, was assigned to the directorship of the United States Geological Survey, later becoming Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, in connection with the Smithsonian Institute in Washington City, where (1899) he still remains. In 1886 Major Powell received the degree of Ph.D. from Heidelberg University, and that of LL.D. from Harvard the same year. He is also a member of the leading scientific associations of the country, while his reports and addresses fill numerous volumes issued by the Government.

POWELL, William Henry, soldier and manufacturer, was born in South Wales, May 10, 1825; came to America in 1830, was educated in the common schools of Tennessee, and (1856-61) was manager of a manufacturing company at Iron-ton, Ohio; in 1861, became Captain of a West Virginia cavalry company, and was advanced through the grades of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded while leading a charge at Wytheville, Va., left on the field, captured and confined in Libby Prison six months. After exchange he led a cavalry division in the Army of the Shenandoah; was made Brigadier-General in October, 1864; after the war settled in West Virginia, and was a Republican Presidential Elector in 1868. He is now at the head of a nail mill and foundry in Belleville, and was Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois during 1895-96.

PRAIRIE CITY, a village in McDonough County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 23 miles southwest from Galesburg and 17 miles northeast of Macomb; has a carriage factory, flour mill, elevators, lumber and stock yards, a nursery, a bank, four churches and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 812; (1900), 818.

PRAIRIE DU POST, (in English, Bridge Prairie), an early French settlement, one mile south of Cahokia. It was commenced about 1760, located on the banks of a creek, on which was the first mill, operated by water-power, in that section, having been erected by missionaries from St. Sulpice, in 1754. In 1765 the village contained fourteen families. In 1844 it was inundated and nearly destroyed.

PRAIRIE du ROCHER, (in English, Prairie of the Rock), an early French village in what is now Monroe County, which began to spring up near Fort Chartres (see Fort Chartres), and by 1722 had grown to be a considerable settlement. It stood at the foot of the Mississippi bluffs, about four miles northeast of the fort. Like other French villages in Illinois, it had its church and priest, its common field and commons. Many of the houses were picturesque cottages built of limestone. The ancient village is now extinct; yet, near the outlet of a creek which runs through the bluff, may be seen the vestiges of a water mill, said to have been erected by the Jesuits during the days of French occupation.

PRENTICE, William S., Methodist Episcopal clergyman, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., in 1819; licensed as a Methodist preacher in 1849, and filled pastorates at Paris, Danville, Carlinville, Springfield, Jacksonville and other places—the latter part of his life, serving as Presiding Elder; was a delegate to the General Conference of 1860, and regularly re-elected from 1872 to the end of his life. During the latter part of his life his home was in Springfield. Died, June 28, 1887.

PRENTISS, Benjamin Mayberry, soldier, was born at Belleville, Wood County, Va., Nov. 23, 1819; in 1835 accompanied his parents to Missouri, and, in 1841, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he learned a trade, afterwards embarking in the commission business. In 1844-45 he was Lieutenant of a company sent against the Mormons at Nauvoo, later serving as Captain of Volunteers in the Mexican War. In 1860 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress; at the outbreak of the Civil War tendered his services to Governor Yates, and was commissioned Colonel of the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, was almost immediately promoted to Brigadier-General and placed in command at Cairo, so continuing until relieved by General Grant, in September, 1861. At the battle of Shiloh, in April following, he was captured with most of his command, after a most vigorous fight with a superior rebel force, but, in 1862, was exchanged and brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. He was a member of the court-martial that tried Gen. Fitzjohn Porter, and, as commander at Helena, Ark., defeated the Confederate Generals Holmes and Price on July 3, 1863. He resigned his commission, Oct. 28, 1863. In 1869 he was appointed by President Grant Pension Agent at Quincy, serving four years. At present (1898) General Prentiss' residence is at Bethany, Mo., where he served as Postmaster, during the administration of President Benjamin Harrison, and was reappointed by President McKinley. Died Feb. 8, 1901.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS. (See Elections.)

PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL, located at Chicago, was organized in 1883 by a number of wealthy and liberal Presbyterians, "for the purpose of affording medical and surgical aid to sick and disabled persons, and to provide them, while inmates of the hospital, with the ministrations of the gospel, agreeably to the doctrines and forms of the Presbyterian Church." Rush Medical College offered a portion of its ground as a site (see Rush Medical College), and through generous subscriptions, a well-planned building was erected, capable of accommodating about 250 patients. A corridor connects the college and hospital buildings. The medical staff comprises eighteen of Chicago's best known physicians and surgeons.

PRESBYTERIANS, THE. The first Presbyterian society in Illinois was organized by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky, in 1816, at Sharon, White County. Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith, also Presbyterians, had visited the State in 1814, as representatives of the Massachusetts Missionary Society, but had formed no society. The members of the Sharon church were almost all immigrants from the South, and were largely of Scotch-Irish extraction. Two other churches were established in 1819—one at Shoal Creek, Bond County, and the other at Edwardsville. In 1825 there were but three Presbyterian ministers in Illinois—Revs. Stephen Bliss, John Brich and B. F. Spilman. Ten years later there were 80 churches, with a membership of 2,500 and 60 ministers. In 1880 the number of churches had increased to 487; but, in 1890, (as shown by the United States census) there were less. In the latter year there were 405 ministers and 52,945 members. The Synod of Illinois is the highest ecclesiastical court of the denomination in the State, and, under its jurisdiction, the church maintains two seminaries; one (the McCormick) at Chicago, and the other (the Blackburn University) at Carlinville. The organ of the denomination is "The Interior," founded by Cyrus H. McCormick, and published weekly at Chicago, with William C. Gray as editor. The Illinois Synod embraced within its jurisdiction (1895) eleven Presbyteries, to which were attached 483 churches, 464 ministers and a membership of 63,247. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRICKETT, Abraham, pioneer merchant, was born near Lexington, Ky., came to Madison County, Ill., in 1808; was employed for a time in the drug business in St. Louis, then opened a store at Edwardsville, where, in 1813, he received from the first County Court of Madison County, a license to retail merchandise. In 1818, he served as one of the three Delegates from Madison County to the Convention which framed the first State Constitution, and, the same year, was elected a Representative in the First General Assembly; was also Postmaster of the town of Edwardsville for a number of years. In 1825 he removed to Adams County and laid out an addition to the city of Quincy; was also engaged there in trade with the Indians. In 1836, while engaged on a Government contract for the removal of snags and other obstructions to the navigation of Red River, he died at Natchitoches, La. —George W. (Prickett) a son of the preceding, and afterwards a citizen of Chicago, is said to have been the first white child born in Edwardsville.—Isaac (Prickett), a brother of Abraham, came to St. Louis in 1815 and to Edwardsville in 1818, where he was engaged in mercantile business with his brother and, later, on his own account. He held the offices of Postmaster, Public Administrator, Quartermaster-General of State Militia, Inspector of the State Penitentiary, and, from 1838 to '42, was Receiver of Public Moneys at Edwardsville, dying in 1844.

PRICKETT, David, pioneer lawyer, was born in Franklin County, Ga., Sept. 21, 1800; in early childhood was taken by his parents to Kentucky and from there to Edwardsville, Ill. He graduated from Transylvania University, and, in 1821, began the practice of law; was the first Supreme Court Reporter of Illinois, Judge of the Madison County Probate Court, Representative in the General Assembly (1826-28), Aid-de-Camp to General Whiteside in the Black Hawk War, State's Attorney for Springfield Judicial Circuit (1837), Treasurer of the Board of Canal Commissioners (1840), Director of the State Bank of Illinois (1842), Clerk of the House of Representatives for ten sessions and Assistant Clerk of the same at the time of his death, March 1, 1847.

PRINCE, David, physician and surgeon, was born in Brooklyn, Windham County, Conn., June 21, 1816; removed with his parents to Canandaigua, N. Y., and was educated in the academy there; began the study of medicine in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, finishing at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, where he was associated, for a year and a half, with the celebrated surgeon, Dr. Muzzy. In 1843 he came to Jacksonville, Ill., and, for two years, was Professor of Anatomy in the Medical Department of Illinois College; later, spent five years practicing in St. Louis, and lecturing on surgery in the St. Louis Medical College, when, returning to Jacksonville in 1852, he established himself in practice there, devoting special attention to surgery, in which he had already won a wide reputation. During the latter part of the Civil War he served, for fourteen months, as Brigade Surgeon in the Army of the Potomac, and, on the capture of a portion of his brigade, voluntarily surrendered himself that he might attend the captives of his command in Libby Prison. After the close of the war he was employed for some months, by the Sanitary Commission, in writing a medical history of the war. He visited Europe twice, first in 1881 as a delegate to the International Medical Congress in London, and again as a member of the Copenhagen Congress of 1884—at each visit making careful inspection of the hospitals in London, Paris, and Berlin. About 1867 he established a Sanitarium in Jacksonville for the treatment of surgical cases and chronic diseases, to which he gave the closing years of his life. Thoroughly devoted to his profession, liberal, public-spirited and sagacious in the adoption of new methods, he stood in the front rank of his profession, and his death was mourned by large numbers who had received the benefit of his ministrations without money and without price. He was member of a number of leading professional associations, besides local literary and social organizations. Died, at Jacksonville, Dec. 19, 1889.

PRINCE, Edward, lawyer, was born at West Bloomfield, Ontario County, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1832; attended school at Payson, Ill., and Illinois College, Jacksonville, graduating from the latter in 1852; studied law at Quincy, and after admission to the bar in 1853, began dealing in real estate. In 1861 he offered his services to Governor Yates, was made Captain and Drill-master of cavalry and, a few months later, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventh Illinois Cavalry, taking part, as second in command, in the celebrated "Grierson raid" through Mississippi. In 1863, serving until discharged with the rank of Colonel of his regiment, in 1864. After the war he gave considerable attention to engineering and the construction of a system of water-works for the city of Quincy, where he now resides.

PRINCE, George W., lawyer and Congressman, born in Tazewell County, Ill., March 4, 1854; was educated in the public schools and at Knox College, graduating from the latter in 1878. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1880; was elected City Attorney of Galesburg the following year; served as chairman of the Knox County Republican Central Committee in 1884, and, in 1888, was elected Representative in the General Assembly and re-elected two years later. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Attorney-General of the State of Illinois, but was defeated with the rest of the State ticket; at a special election, held in April, 1895, he was chosen Representative in Congress from the Tenth District to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Col. Philip Sidney Post, which had occurred in January preceding. In common with a majority of his colleagues, Mr. Prince was re-elected in 1896, receiving a plurality of nearly 16,000 votes, and was elected for a third term in November, 1898.

PRINCETON, a city and the county-seat of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 22 miles west-southwest of Mendota, and 104 miles west-southwest of Chicago; has a court house, gas-works, electric lights, graded and high schools, numerous churches, three newspapers and several banks. Coal is mined five miles east, and the manufactures include flour, carriages and farm implements. Pop. (1890), 3,396; (1900), 4,023. Princeton is populated with one of the most intelligent and progressive communities in the State. It was the home of Owen Lovejoy during the greater part of his life in Illinois.

PRINCETON & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railway.)

PRINCEVILLE, a village of Peoria County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and the Rock Island & Peoria Railways, 22 miles northwest of Peoria; is a trade center for a prosperous agricultural region. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 735.

PROPHETSTOWN, a town in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Fulton Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 45 miles northwest of Mendota; has some manufactures, three banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 694; (1900), 1,143.

PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION. (See Minority Representation.)

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH. The pioneer Episcopal clergyman in this State was the Rt. Rev. Philander Chase, who was made Bishop of Illinois in 1835, and was the founder of Jubilee College. (See Chase, Rev. Philander.) The State at present is organized under the provincial system, the province comprising the dioceses of Chicago, Quincy and Springfield. At its head (1898) is the Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Bishop of Chicago. Rev. George F. Seymour of Springfield is Bishop of the Springfield Diocese, with C. R. Hale, Coadjutor at Cairo, and Rev. Alexander Burgess, Bishop of the Quincy Diocese, with residence at Peoria. The numerical strength of the church in Illinois is not great, although between 1880 and 1890 its membership was almost doubled. In 1840 there were but eighteen parishes, with thirteen clergymen and a membership of 267. By 1880 the number of parishes had increased to 89, there being 127 ministers and 9,842 communicants. The United States Census of 1890 showed the following figures: Parishes, 197; clergymen, 150, membership, 18,609. Total contributions (1890) for general church and mission work, $373,798. The chief educational institution of the denomination in the West is the Western Theological Seminary at Chicago. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRYOR, Joseph Everett, pioneer and early steamboat captain, was born in Virginia, August 10, 1787—the son of a non-commissioned officer of the Revolution, who emigrated to Kentucky about 1790 and settled near Louisville, which was then a fort with some twenty log cabins. In 1813 the son located where Golconda, Pope County, now stands, and early in life adopted the calling of a boatman, which he pursued some forty years. At this time he held a commission as a "Falls Pilot," and piloted the first steamer that ascended the Ohio River from New Orleans. During his long service no accident happened to any steamer for which he was responsible, although the Mississippi then bristled with snags. He owned and commanded the steamer Telegraph, which was sunk, in 1835, by collision with the Duke of Orleans on the Mississippi, but, owing to his presence of mind and the good discipline of his crew, no lives were lost. The salient features of his character were a boundless benevolence manifested to others, and his dauntless courage, displayed not only in the face of dangers met in his career as a boatman, but in his encounters with robbers who then infested portions of Southern Illinois. He had a reputation as a skillful pilot and popular commander not excelled by any of his contemporaries. He died, at his home in Pope County, Oct. 5 1851, leaving one daughter, now Mrs. Cornelia P. Bozman, of Cairo, Ill.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, SUPERINTENDENTS OF. (See Superintendents of Public Instruction.)

PUGH, Isaac C., soldier, was born in Christian County, Ky., Nov. 23, 1805; came to Illinois, in 1821, with his father, who first settled in Shelby County, but, in 1829, removed to Macon County, where the subject of this sketch resided until his death, at Decatur, Nov. 14, 1874. General Pugh served in three wars—first in the Black Hawk War of 1832; then, with the rank of Captain and Field Officer in the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) in the war with Mexico, and, during the Civil War, entering upon the latter as Colonel of the Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in September, 1861, and being mustered out with the rank of full Brigadier-General in August, 1864, when his regiment was consolidated with the Fifty-third. He took part with his regiment in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the operations around Vicksburg, being wounded at the latter. In the year of his retirement from the army (1864) he was elected a Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly, and, the following year, was chosen County-Clerk of Macon County, serving four years.

PUGH, Jonathan H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Bath County, Ky., came to Bond County, Ill., finally locating at Springfield in 1823, and being the second lawyer to establish himself in practice in that city. He served in the Third, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh General Assemblies, and was defeated for Congress by Joseph Duncan (afterwards Governor), in 1831. Died, in 1833. Mr. Pugh is described by his contemporaries as a man of brilliant parts, an able lawyer and a great wit.

PULASKI COUNTY, an extreme southern county and one of the smallest in the State, bordering on the Ohio River and having an area of 190 square miles and a population (1900), of 14,554. It was cut off from Alexander County in 1843, and named in honor of a Polish patriot who had aided the Americans during the Revolution. The soil is generally rich, and the surface varied with much low land along the Cache and the Ohio Rivers. Wheat, corn and fruit are the principal crops, while considerable timber is cut upon the bottom lands. Mound City is the county-seat and was conceded a population, by the census of 1890, of 2,550. Only the lowest, barren portion of the carboniferous formation extends under the soil, the coal measures being absent. Traces of iron have been found and sulphur and copperas springs abound.

PULLMAN, a former suburb (now a part of the South Division) of the city of Chicago, 13.8 miles south of the initial station of the Illinois Central Railroad. The Pullman Palace Car Company began the erection of buildings here in 1880, and, on the 1st of January, 1881, the first family settled in the future manufacturing city. Within the next few years, it became the center of the largest manufacturing establishments in the country, including the Pullman Car Works, the Allen Paper Car Wheel Works and extensive steel forging works, employing thousands of mechanics. Large numbers of sleeping and dining cars, besides ordinary passenger coaches and freight cars, were manufactured here every year, not only for use on the railroads of the United States, but for foreign countries as well. The town was named for the late George M. Pullman, the founder of the car-works, and was regarded as a model city, made up of comfortable homes erected by the Palace Car Company for the use of its employés. It was well supplied with school-houses, and churches, and a public library was established there and opened to the public in 1883. The town was annexed to the city of Chicago in 1890.

PULLMAN, George Mortimer, founder of the Pullman Palace Car Company, was born at Brocton, N. Y., March 3, 1831, enjoyed ordinary educational advantages in his boyhood and, at fourteen years of age, obtained employment as a clerk, but a year later joined his brother in the cabinet-making business at Albion. His father, who was a house-builder and house-mover, having died in 1853, young Pullman assumed the responsibility of caring for the family and, having secured a contract for raising a number of buildings along the Erie Canal, made necessary by the enlargement of that thoroughfare, in this way acquired some capital and experience which was most valuable to him in after years. Coming to Chicago in 1859, when the work of raising the grade of the streets in the business portion of the city had been in progress for a year or two, he found a new field for the exercise of his inventive skill, achieving some marvelous transformations in a number of the principal business blocks in that part of the city. As early as 1858, Mr. Pullman had had his attention turned to devising some means for increasing the comforts of night-travel upon railways, and, in 1859, he remodeled two old day-coaches into a species of sleeping-cars, which were used upon the Alton Road. From 1860 to 1863 he spent in Colorado devoting his engineering skill to mining; but returning to Chicago the latter year, entered upon his great work of developing the idea of the sleeping-car into practical reality. The first car was completed and received the name of the "Pioneer." This car constituted a part of the funeral train which took the remains of Abraham Lincoln to Springfield, Ill., after his assassination in April, 1865. The development of the "Pullman palace sleeping-car," the invention of the dining-car, and of vestibule trains, and the building up of the great industrial town which bears his name, and is now a part of the city of Chicago, constituted a work of gradual development which resulted in some of the most remarkable achievements in the history of the nineteenth century, both in a business sense and in promoting the comfort and safety of the traveling public, as well as in bettering the conditions of workingmen. He lived to see the results of his inventive genius and manufacturing skill in use upon the principal railroads of the United States and introduced upon a number of important lines in Europe also. Mr. Pullman was identified with a number of other enterprises more or less closely related to the transportation business, but the Pullman Palace Car Company was the one with which he was most closely connected, and by which he will be longest remembered. He was also associated with some of the leading educational and benevolent enterprises about the city of Chicago, to which he contributed in a liberal manner during his life and in his will. His death occurred suddenly, from heart disease, at his home in Chicago, Oct. 19, 1897.

PURPLE, Norman H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Litchfield County, Conn., read law and was admitted to the bar in Tioga County, Pa., settled at Peoria, Ill., in 1836, and the following year was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for the Ninth Judicial District, which then embraced the greater portion of the State east of Peoria. In 1844 he was a Presidential Elector, and, in 1845, Governor Ford appointed him a Justice of the Supreme Court, vice Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., who had resigned. As required by law, he at the same time served as Circuit Judge, his district embracing all the counties west of Peoria, and his home being at Quincy. After the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 he returned to Peoria and resumed practice. He compiled the Illinois Statutes relating to real property, and, in 1857, made a compilation of the general laws, generally known to the legal profession as the "Purple Statutes." He subsequently undertook to compile and arrange the laws passed from 1857 to '63, and was engaged on this work when overtaken by death, at Chicago, Aug. 9, 1863. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, during the last ten years of his life, prominent at the Chicago bar.

PUTERBAUGH, Sabin D., judge and author, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1834; at 8 years of age removed with his parents to Tazewell County, Ill.; settled in Pekin in 1853, where he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the rebellion he was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Major of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, and took part in numerous engagements in Western Tennessee and Mississippi, including the battles of Shiloh and Corinth. Resigning his commission in 1862, he took up his residence at Peoria, where he resumed practice and began the preparation of his first legal work—"Common Law Pleading and Practice." In 1864 he formed a partnership with Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, which continued until 1867, when Mr. Puterbaugh was elected Circuit Court Judge. He retired from the bench in 1873 to resume private practice and pursue his work as an author. His first work, having already run through three editions, was followed by "Puterbaugh's Chancery Pleading and Practice," the first edition of which appeared in 1874, and "Michigan Chancery Practice," which appeared in 1881. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Died, Sept. 25, 1892. Leslie D. (Puterbaugh), a son of Judge Puterbaugh, is Judge of the Circuit Court of the Peoria Circuit.

PUTNAM COUNTY, the smallest county in the State, both as to area and population, containing only 170 square miles; population (1900), 4,746. It lies near the center of the north half of the State, and was named in honor of Gen. Israel Putnam. The first American to erect a cabin within its limits was Gurdon S. Hubbard, who was in business there, as a fur-trader, as early as 1825, but afterwards became a prominent citizen of Chicago. The county was created by act of the Legislature in 1825, although a local government was not organized until some years later. Since that date, Bureau, Marshall and Stark Counties have been erected therefrom. It is crossed and drained by the Illinois River. The surface is moderately undulating and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief staple, although wheat and oats are extensively cultivated. Coal is mined and exported. Hennepin is the county-seat.

QUINCY, the principal city of Western Illinois, and the county seat of Adams County. It was founded in 1822—the late Gov. John Wood erecting the first log-cabin there—and was incorporated in 1839. The site is naturally one of the most beautiful in the State, the principal part of the city being built on a limestone bluff having an elevation of 125 to 150 feet, and overlooking the Mississippi for a long distance. Its location is 112 miles west of Springfield and 264 miles southwest of Chicago. Besides being a principal shipping point for the river trade north of St. Louis, it is the converging point of several important railway lines, including the Wabash, four branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City, giving east and west, as well as north and south, connections. At the present time (1904) several important lines, or extensions of railroads already constructed, are in contemplation, which, when completed, will add largely to the commercial importance of the city. The city is regularly laid out, the streets intersecting each other at right angles, and being lighted with gas and electricity. Water is obtained from the Mississippi. There are several electric railway lines, four public parks, a fine railway bridge across the Mississippi, to which a wagon bridge has been added within the past two years; two fine railway depots, and several elegant public buildings, including a handsome county court-house, a Government building for the use of the Post-office and the United States District Court. The Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home is located here, embracing a large group of cottages occupied by veterans of the Civil War, besides hospital and administration buildings for the use of the officers. The city has more than thirty churches, three libraries (one free-public and two college), with excellent schools and other educational advantages. Among the higher institutions of learning are the Chaddock College (Methodist Episcopal) and the St. Francis Solanus College (Roman Catholic). There are two or three national banks, a State bank with a capital of $300,000, beside two private banks, four or five daily papers, with several weekly and one or two monthly publications. Its advantages as a shipping point by river and railroad have made it one of the most important manufacturing centers west of Chicago. The census of 1890 showed a total of 374 manufacturing establishments, having an aggregate capital of $6,187,845, employing 5,058 persons, and turning out an annual product valued at $10,160,492. The cost of material used was $5,597,990, and the wages paid $2,383,571. The number of different industries reported aggregated seventy-six, the more important being foundries, carriage and wagon factories, agricultural implement works, cigar and tobacco factories, flour-mills, breweries, brick-yards, lime works, saddle and harness shops, paper mills, furniture factories, organ works, and artificial-ice factories. Population (1880), 27,268; (1890), 31,494; (1900), 36,252.

RAAB, Henry, ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born in Wetzlar, Rhenish Prussia, June 20, 1837; learned the trade of a currier with his father and came to the United States in 1853, finally locating at Belleville, Ill., where, in 1857, he became a teacher in the public schools; in 1873 was made Superintendent of schools for that city, and, in 1882, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction on the Democratic ticket, declined a renomination in 1886; was nominated a second time in 1890, and re-elected, but defeated by S. M. Inglis in 1894. In the administration of his office, Professor Raab showed a commendable freedom from partisanship. After retiring from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed a position in connection with the public schools of Belleville.

RADISSON, Pierre Esprit, an early French traveler and trader, who is said to have reached the Upper Mississippi on his third voyage to the West in 1658-59. The period of his explorations extended from 1652 to 1684, of which he prepared a narrative which was published by the Prince Society of Boston in 1885, under the title of "Radisson's Voyages." He and his brother-in-law, Medard Chouart, first conceived the idea of planting a settlement at Hudson's Bay. (See Chouart, Medard.)

RAILROAD AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION, a Board of three Commissioners, appointed by the executive (by and with the advice and consent of the Senate), under authority of an act approved, April 13, 1871, for the enforcement of the provisions of the Constitution and laws in relation to railroads and warehouses. The Commission's powers are partly judicial, partly executive. The following is a summary of its powers and duties: To establish a schedule of maximum rates, equitable to shipper and carrier alike; to require yearly reports from railroads and warehouses; to hear and pass upon complaints of extortion and unjust discrimination, and (if necessary) enforce prosecutions therefor; to secure the safe condition of railway road-beds, bridges and trestles; to hear and decide all manner of complaints relative to intersections and to protect grade-crossings; to insure the adoption of a safe interlocking system, to be approved by the Commission; to enforce proper rules for the inspection and registration of grain throughout the State. The principal offices of the Commission are at the State capital, where monthly sessions are held. For the purpose of properly conducting the grain inspection department, monthly meetings are also held at Chicago, where the offices of a Grain Inspector, appointed by the Board, are located. Here all business relating to this department is discussed and necessary special meetings are held. The inspection department has no revenue outside of fees, but the latter are ample for its maintenance. Fees for inspection on arrival ("inspection in") are twenty-five cents per car-load, ten cents per wagon-load, and forty cents per 1,000 bushels from canal-boat or vessels. For inspection from store ("inspected out") the fees are fifty cents per 1,000 bushels to vessels; thirty-five cents per car-load, and ten cents per wagon-load to teams. While there are never wanting some cases of friction between the transportation companies and warehousemen on the one hand, and the Commission on the other, there can be no question that the formation of the latter has been of great value to the receivers, shippers, forwarders and tax-payers of the State generally. Similar regulations in regard to the inspection of grain in warehouses, at East St. Louis and Peoria, are also in force. The first Board, created under the act of 1871, consisted of Gustavus Koerner, Richard P. Morgan and David S. Hammond, holding office until 1873. Other Boards have been as follows: 1873-77—Henry D. Cook (deceased 1873, and succeeded by James Steele); David A. Brown and John M. Pearson; 1877-83—William M. Smith, George M. Bogue and John H. Oberly (retired 1881 and succeeded by William H. Robinson); 1883-85—Wm. N. Brainard, E. C. Lewis and Charles T. Stratton; 1885-89—John I. Rinaker, Benjamin F. Marsh and Wm. T. Johnson (retired in 1887 and succeeded by Jason Rogers); 1889-93—John R. Wheeler, Isaac N. Phillips and W. S. Crim (succeeded, 1891, by John R. Tanner); 1893-97—W. S. Cantrell, Thomas F. Gahan and Charles F. Lape (succeeded, 1895, by George W. Fithian); 1897-99—Cicero J. Lindley, Charles S. Rannels and James E. Bidwell. (See also Grain Inspection.)

RAILROADS (IN GENERAL). The existing railroad system of Illinois had its inception in the mania for internal improvement which swept over the country in 1836-37, the basis of the plan adopted in Illinois (as in the Eastern States) being that the State should construct, maintain, own and operate an elaborate system. Lines were to be constructed from Cairo to Galena, from Alton to Mount Carmel, from Peoria to Warsaw, from Alton to the Central Railroad, from Belleville to Mount Carmel, from Bloomington to Mackinaw Town, and from Meredosia to Springfield. The experiment proved extremely unfortunate to the financial interests of the State, and laid the foundation of an immense debt under which it staggered for many years. The Northern Cross Railroad, extending from Meredosia to Springfield, was the only one so far completed as to be in operation. It was sold, in 1847, to Nicholas H. Ridgely, of Springfield for $21,100, he being the highest bidder. This line formed a nucleus of the existing Wabash system. The first road to be operated by private parties (outside of a primitive tramway in St. Clair County, designed for the transportation of coal to St. Louis) was the Galena & Chicago Union, chartered in 1836. This was the second line completed in the State, and the first to run from Chicago. The subsequent development of the railway system of Illinois was at first gradual, then steady and finally rapid. A succinct description of the various lines now in operation in the State may be found under appropriate headings. At present Illinois leads all the States of the Union in the extent of railways in operation, the total mileage (1897) of main track being 10,785.43—or 19 miles for each 100 square miles of territory and 25 miles for each 10,000 inhabitants—estimating the population (1898) at four and a quarter millions. Every one of the 102 counties of the State is traversed by at least one railroad except three—Calhoun, Hardin and Pope. The entire capitalization of the 111 companies doing business in the State in 1896, (including capital stock, funded debt and current liabilities), was $2,669,164,142—equal to $67,556 per mile. In 1894, fifteen owned and ten leased lines paid dividends of from four to eight per cent on common, and from four to ten per cent on preferred, stock—the total amount thus paid aggregating $25,321,752. The total earnings and income, in Illinois, of all lines operated in the State, aggregated $77,508,537, while the total expenditure within the State was $71,463,367. Of the 58,263,860 tons of freight carried, 11,611,798 were of agricultural products and 17,179,366 mineral products. The number of passengers (earning revenue) carried during the year, was 83,281,655. The total number of railroad employes (of all classes) was 61,200. The entire amount of taxes paid by railroad companies for the year was $3,846,379. From 1836, when the first special charter was granted for the construction of a railroad in Illinois, until 1869—after which all corporations of this character came under the general incorporation laws of the State in accordance with the Constitution of 1870—293 special charters for the construction of railroads were granted by the Legislature, besides numerous amendments of charters already in existence. (For the history of important individual lines see each road under its corporate name.)

RALSTON, Virgil Young, editor and soldier, was born, July 16, 1828, at Vanceburg, Ky.; was a student in Illinois College one year (1846-47), after which he studied law in Quincy and practiced for a time; also resided some time in California; 1855-57 was one of the editors of "The Quincy Whig," and represented that paper in the Editorial Convention at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) In 1861, he was commissioned a Captain in the Sixteenth Illinois Volunteers, but soon resigned on account of ill-health; later, enlisted in an Iowa regiment, but died in hospital at St. Louis, from wounds and exposure, April 19, 1864.

RAMSAY, Rufus N., State Treasurer, was born on a farm in Clinton County, Ill., May 20, 1838; received a collegiate education at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, and at Indiana State University; studied law with ex-Gov. A. C. French, and was admitted to the bar in 1865, but soon abandoned the law for banking, in which he was engaged both at Lebanon and Carlyle, limiting his business to the latter place about 1890. He served one term (from 1865) as County Clerk, and two terms (1889 and '91) as Representative in the General Assembly, and, in 1892, was nominated as a Democrat and elected State Treasurer. Died in office, at Carlyle, Nov. 11, 1894.

RAMSEY, a village of Fayette County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 12 miles north of Vandalia; the district is agricultural; has one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 598; (1900), 747.

RANDOLPH COUNTY, lies in the southwest section of the State, and borders on the Mississippi River; area 560 square miles; named for Beverly Randolph. It was set off from St. Clair County in 1795, being the second county organized in the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois. From the earliest period of Illinois history, Randolph County has been a pivotal point. In the autumn of 1700 a French and Indian settlement was established at Kaskaskia, which subsequently became the center of French influence in the Mississippi Valley. In 1722 Prairie du Rocher was founded by the French. It was in Randolph County that Fort Chartres was built, in 1720, and it was here that Col. George Rogers Clark's expedition for the seizure of the "Illinois Country" met with success in the capture of Kaskaskia. American immigration began with the close of the Revolutionary War. Among the early settlers were the Cranes (Ichabod and George), Gen. John Edgar, the Dodge family, the Morrisons, and John Rice Jones. Toward the close of the century came Shadrach Bond (afterwards the first Governor of the State) with his uncle of the same name, and the Menards (Pierre and Hippolyte), the first of whom subsequently became Lieutenant-Governor. (See Bond, Shadrach; Menard, Pierre.) In outline, Randolph County is triangular, while its surface is diversified. Timber and building stone are abundant, and coal underlies a considerable area. Chester, the county-seat, a city of 3,000 inhabitants, is a place of considerable trade and the seat of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary. The county is crossed by several railroad lines, and transportation facilities are excellent. Population (1890), 25,049; (1900), 28,001.

RANSOM, (Gen.) Thomas Edward Greenfield, soldier, was born at Norwich, Vt., Nov. 29, 1834; educated at Norwich University, an institution under charge of his father, who was later an officer of the Mexican War and killed at Chapultepec. Having learned civil engineering, he entered on his profession at Peru, Ill., in 1851; in 1855 became a member of the real-estate firm of A. J. Galloway & Co., Chicago, soon after removing to Fayette County, where he acted as agent of the Illinois Central Railroad. Under the first call for volunteers, in April, 1861, he organized a company, which having been incorporated in the Eleventh Illinois, he was elected Major, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, in this capacity having command of his regiment at Fort Donelson, where he was severely wounded and won deserved promotion to a colonelcy, as successor to Gen. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards killed at Shiloh. Here Colonel Ransom again distinguished himself by his bravery, and though again wounded while leading his regiment, remained in command through the day. His service was recognized by promotion as Brigadier-General. He bore a prominent part in the siege of Vicksburg and in the Red River campaign, and, later, commanded the Seventh Army Corps in the operations about Atlanta, but finally fell a victim to disease and his numerous wounds, dying in Chicago, Oct. 29, 1864, having previously received the brevet rank of Major-General. General Ransom was confessedly one of the most brilliant officers contributed by Illinois to the War for the Union, and was pronounced, by both Grant and Sherman, one of the ablest volunteer generals in their commands.

RANTOUL, a city in Champaign County, at the junction of the main line of the Illinois Central Railroad, with its West Lebanon and Leroy branch, 14 miles north-northeast of Champaign and 114 miles south by west of Chicago. It has a national bank, seven churches, opera house, graded school, two weekly papers, machine shops, flouring and flax mills, tile factories, and many handsome residences. Pop. (1900), 1,207.

RASLE, Sebastian, a Jesuit missionary, born in France, in 1658; at his own request was attached to the French missions in Canada in 1689, and, about 1691 or '92, was sent to the Illinois Country, where he labored for two years, traveling much and making a careful study of the Indian dialects. He left many manuscripts descriptive of his journeyings and of the mode of life and character of the aborigines. From Illinois he was transferred to Norridgewock, Maine, where he prepared a dictionary of the Abenaki language in three volumes, which is now preserved in the library of Harvard College. His influence over his Indian parishioners was great, and his use of it, during the French and Indian War, so incensed the English colonists in Massachusetts that the Governor set a price upon his head. On August 12, 1724, he was slain, with seven Indian chiefs who were seeking to aid his escape, during a night attack upon Norridgewock by a force of English soldiers from Fort Richmond, his mutilated body being interred the next day by the Indians. In 1833, the citizens of Norridgewock erected a monument to his memory on the spot where he fell.

RASTER, Herman, journalist, was born in Germany in 1828; entered journalism and came to America in 1851, being employed on German papers in Buffalo and New York City; in 1867 accepted the position of editor-in-chief of "The Chicago Staats Zeitung," which he continued to fill until June, 1890, when he went to Europe for the benefit of his health, dying at Dresden, July 24, 1891. While employed on papers in this country during the Civil War, he acted as the American correspondent of papers at Berlin, Bremen, Vienna, and other cities of Central Europe. He served as delegate to both State and National Conventions of the Republican party, and, in 1869, received from President Grant the appointment of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District, but, during the later years of his life, coöperated with the Democratic party.

RAUCH, John Henry, physician and sanitary expert, born in Lebanon, Pa., Sept. 4, 1828, and graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, in 1849. The following year he removed to Iowa, settling at Burlington. He was an active member of the Iowa State Medical Society, and, in 1851, prepared and published a "Report on the Medical and Economic Botany of Iowa," and, later, made a collection of ichthyologic remains of the Upper Mississippi and Missouri for Professor Agassiz. From 1857 to 1860 he filled the chair of Materia Medica and Medical Botany at Rush Medical College, Chicago, occupying the same position in 1859 in the Chicago College of Pharmacy, of which he was one of the organizers. During the Civil War he served, until 1864, as Assistant Medical Director, first in the Army of the Potomac, and later in Louisiana, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at the close of the struggle. Returning to Chicago, he aided in reorganizing the city's health service, and, in 1867, was appointed a member of the new Board of Health and Sanitary Inspector, serving until 1876. The latter year he was chosen President of the American Public Health Association, and, in 1877, a member of the newly created State Board of Health of Illinois, and elected its first President. Later, he became Secretary, and continued in that office during his connection with the Board. In 1878-79 he devoted much attention to the yellow-fever epidemic, and was instrumental in the formation of the Sanitary Council of the Mississippi, and in securing the adoption of a system of river inspection by the National Board of Health. He was a member of many scientific bodies, and the author of numerous monographs and printed addresses, chiefly in the domain of sanitary science and preventive medicine. Among them may be noticed "Intramural Interments and Their Influence on Health and Epidemics," "Sanitary Problems of Chicago," "Prevention of Asiatic Cholera in North America," and a series of reports as Secretary of the State Board of Health. Died, at Lebanon, Pa., March 24, 1894.

RAUM, (Gen.) Green Berry, soldier and author, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Dec. 3, 1829, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1853, but, three years later, removed with his family to Kansas. His Free-State proclivities rendering him obnoxious to the pro-slavery party there, he returned to Illinois in 1857, settling at Harrisburg, Saline County. Early in the Civil War he was commissioned a Major in the Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, was subsequently promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, and, later, advanced to a Brigadier-Generalship, resigning his commission at the close of the war (May 6, 1865). He was with Rosecrans in the Mississippi campaign of 1862, took a conspicuous part in the battle of Corinth, participated in the siege of Vicksburg and was wounded at Missionary Ridge. He also rendered valuable service during the Atlanta campaign, keeping lines of communication open, re-enforcing Resaca and repulsing an attack by General Hood. He was with Sherman in the "March to the Sea," and with Hancock, in the Shenandoah Valley, when the war closed. In 1866 General Raum became President of the projected Cairo & Vincennes Railroad, an enterprise of which he had been an active promoter. He was elected to Congress in 1866 from the Southern Illinois District (then the Thirteenth), serving one term, and the same year presided over the Republican State Convention, as he did again in 1876 and in 1880—was also a delegate to the National Conventions at Cincinnati and Chicago the last two years just mentioned. From August 2, 1876, to May 31, 1883, General Raum served as Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, in that time having superintended the collection of $800,000,000 of revenue, and the disbursement of $39,000,000. After retiring from the Commissionership, he resumed the practice of law in Washington. In 1889 he was appointed Commissioner of Pensions, remaining to the close of President Harrison's administration, when he removed to Chicago and again engaged in practice. During the various political campaigns of the past thirty years, his services have been in frequent request as a campaign speaker, and he has canvassed a number of States in the interest of the Republican party. Besides his official reports, he is author of "The Existing Conflict Between Republican Government and Southern Oligarchy" (Washington, 1884), and a number of magazine articles.

RAUM, John, pioneer and early legislator, was born in Hummelstown, Pa., July 14, 1793, and died at Golconda, Ill., March 14, 1869. Having received a liberal education in his native State, the subject of this sketch settled at Shawneetown, Ill., in 1823, but removed to Golconda, Pope County, in 1826. He had previously served three years in the War of 1812, as First Lieutenant of the Sixteenth Infantry, and, while a resident of Illinois, served in the Black Hawk War of 1832 as Brigade Major. He was also elected Senator from the District composed of Pope and Johnson Counties in the Eighth General Assembly (1833), as successor to Samuel Alexander, who had resigned. The following year he was appointed Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pope County, and was also elected Clerk of the County Court the same year, holding both offices for many years, and retaining the County Clerkship up to his death, a period of thirty-five years. He was married March 22, 1827, to Juliet C. Field, and was father of Brig.-Gen. Green B. Raum, and Maj. John M. Raum, both of whom served in the volunteer army from Illinois during the Civil War.

RAWLINS, John Aaron, soldier, Secretary of War, was born at East Galena, Feb. 13, 1831, the son of a small farmer, who was also a charcoal-burner. The son, after irregular attendance on the district schools and a year passed at Mount Morris Academy, began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar at Galena in 1854, and at once began practice. In 1857 he was elected City Attorney of Galena, and nominated on the Douglas electoral ticket in 1860. At the outbreak of the Civil War he favored, and publicly advocated, coercive measures, and it is said that it was partly through his influence that General Grant early tendered his services to the Government. He served on the staff of the latter from the time General Grant was given command of a brigade until the close of the war, most of the time being its chief, and rising in rank, step by step, until, in 1863, he became a Brigadier-General, and, in 1865, a Major-General. His long service on the staff of General Grant indicates the estimation in which he was held by his chief. Promptly on the assumption of the Presidency by General Grant, in March, 1869, he was appointed Secretary of War, but consumption had already obtained a hold upon his constitution, and he survived only six months, dying in office, Sept. 6, 1869.

RAY, Charles H., journalist, was born at Norwich, Chenango County, N. Y., March 12, 1821; came west in 1843, studied medicine and began practice at Muscatine, Iowa, afterwards locating in Tazewell County, Ill., also being associated, for a time, with the publication of a temperance paper at Springfield. In 1847 he removed to Galena, soon after becoming editor of "The Galena Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper, with which he remained until 1854. He took strong ground against the Kansas-Nebraska Bill, and, at the session of the Legislature of 1855, served as Secretary of the Senate, also acting as correspondent of "The New York Tribune"; a few months later became associated with Joseph Medill and John C. Vaughan in the purchase and management of "The Chicago Tribune," Dr. Ray assuming the position of editor-in-chief. Dr. Ray was one of the most trenchant and powerful writers ever connected with the Illinois press, and his articles exerted a wide influence during the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which he was an influential factor. He was a member of the Convention of Anti-Nebraska editors held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, and served as Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) At the State Republican Convention held at Bloomington, in May following, he was appointed a member of the State Central Committee for that year; was also Canal Trustee by appointment of Governor Bissell, serving from 1857 to 1861. In November, 1863, he severed his connection with "The Tribune" and engaged in oil speculations in Canada which proved financially disastrous. In 1865 he returned to the paper as an editorial writer, remaining only for a short time. In 1868 he assumed the management of "The Chicago Evening Post," with which he remained identified until his death, Sept. 23, 1870.

RAY, Lyman Beecher, ex-Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Crittenden County, Vt., August 17, 1831; removed to Illinois in 1852, and has since been engaged in mercantile business in this State. After filling several local offices he was elected to represent Grundy County in the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872), and, ten years later, was chosen State Senator, serving from 1883 to 1887, and being one of the recognized party leaders on the floor. In 1888, he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket, his term expiring in 1893. His home is at Morris, Grundy County.

RAY, William H., Congressman, was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1812; grew to manhood in his native State, receiving a limited education; in 1834 removed to Rushville, Ill., engaging in business as a merchant and, later, as a banker; was a member of the first State Board of Equalization (1867-69), and, in 1872, was elected to Congress as a Republican, representing his District from 1873 to 1875. Died, Jan. 25, 1881.

RAYMOND, a village of Montgomery County, on the St. Louis Division of the Wabash Railway, 50 miles southwest of Decatur; has electric lights, some manufactures and a weekly paper. Considerable coal is mined here and grain and fruit grown in the surrounding country. Population (1880), 543; (1890), 811; (1900), 906.

RAYMOND, (Rev.) Miner, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in New York City, August 29, 1811, being descended from a family of Huguenots (known by the name of "Raimonde"), who were expelled from France on account of their religion. In his youth he learned the trade of a shoemaker with his father, at Rensselaerville, N. Y. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of 17, later taking a course in the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., where he afterwards became a teacher. In 1838 he joined the New England Conference and, three years later, began pastoral work at Worcester, subsequently occupying pulpits in Boston and Westfield. In 1848, on the resignation of Dr. Robert Allyn (afterwards President of McKendree College and of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale), Dr. Raymond succeeded to the principalship of the Academy at Wilbraham, remaining there until 1864, when he was elected to the chair of systematic theology in the Garrett Biblical Institute at Evanston, Ill., his connection with the latter institution continuing until 1895, when he resigned. For some three years of this period he served as pastor of the First Methodist Church at Evanston. His death occurred, Nov. 25, 1897.

REAVIS, Logan Uriah, journalist, was born in the Sangamon Bottom, Mason County, Ill., March 26, 1831; in 1855 entered the office of "The Beardstown Gazette," later purchased an interest in the paper and continued its publication under the name of "The Central Illinoian," until 1857, when he sold out and went to Nebraska. Returning, in 1860, he repurchased his old paper and conducted it until 1866, when he sold out for the last time. The remainder of his life was devoted chiefly to advocating the removal of the National Capital to St. Louis, which he did by lectures and the publication of pamphlets and books on the subject; also published a "Life of Horace Greeley," another of General Harney, and two or three other volumes. Died in St. Louis, April 25, 1889.

RECTOR, the name of a prominent and influential family who lived at Kaskaskia in Territorial days. According to Governor Reynolds, who has left the most detailed account of them in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," they consisted of nine brothers and four daughters, all of whom were born in Fauquier County, Va., some of them emigrating to Ohio, while others came to Illinois, arriving at Kaskaskia in 1806. Reynolds describes them as passionate and impulsive, but possessed of a high standard of integrity and a chivalrous and patriotic spirit.—William, the oldest brother, and regarded as the head of the family, became a Deputy Surveyor soon after coming to Illinois, and took part in the Indian campaigns between 1812 and 1814. In 1816 he was appointed Surveyor-General of Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas, and afterwards removed to St. Louis.—Stephen, another of the brothers, was a Lieutenant in Captain Moore's Company of Rangers in the War of 1812, while Charles commanded one of the two regiments organized by Governor Edwards, in 1812, for the expedition against the Indians at the head of Peoria Lake.—Nelson, still another brother, served in the same expedition on the staff of Governor Edwards. Stephen, already mentioned, was a member of the expedition sent to strengthen Prairie du Chien in 1814, and showed great courage in a fight with the Indians at Rock Island. During the same year Nelson Rector and Captain Samuel Whiteside joined Col. Zachary Taylor (afterwards President) in an expedition on the Upper Mississippi, in which they came in conflict with the British and Indians at Rock Island, in which Captain Rector again displayed the courage so characteristic of his family. On the 1st of March, 1814, while in charge of a surveying party on Saline Creek, in Gallatin County, according to Reynolds, Nelson was ambushed by the Indians and, though severely wounded, was carried away by his horse, and recovered.—Elias, another member of the family, was Governor Edwards' first Adjutant-General, serving a few months in 1809, when he gave place to Robert Morrison, but was reappointed in 1810, serving for more than three years.—Thomas, one of the younger members, had a duel with Joshua Barton on "Bloody Island," sometime between 1812 and 1814, in which he killed his antagonist. (See Duels.) A portion of this historic family drifted into Arkansas, where they became prominent, one of their descendants serving as Governor of that State during the Civil War period.

RED BUTE, a city in Randolph County, on the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, some 37 miles south-southeast of St. Louis, and 21 miles south of Belleville; has a carriage factory and two flouring mills, electric lights, a hospital, two banks, five churches, a graded school and a weekly newspaper. Pop (1890), 1,176; (1900), 1,169.

REEVES, Owen T., lawyer and jurist, was born in Ross County, Ohio, Dec. 18, 1829; graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, in 1850, afterwards serving as a tutor in that institution and as Principal of a High School at Chillicothe. In 1854 he came to Bloomington, Ill., and, as a member of the School Board, assisted in reorganizing the school system of that city; also has served continuously, for over 40 years, as one of the Trustees of the Illinois Wesleyan University, being a part of the time President of the Board. In the meantime, he had begun the practice of law, served as City Attorney and member of the Board of Supervisors. July 1, 1862, he enlisted in the Seventieth Illinois Volunteers (a 100-days' emergency regiment), was elected Colonel and mustered out, with his command, in October, 1862. Colonel Reeves was subsequently connected with the construction of the Lafayette, Bloomington & Mississippi Railroad (now a part of the Illinois Central), and was also one of the founders of the Law Department of the Wesleyan University. In 1877 he was elected to the Circuit bench, serving continuously, by repeated re-elections, until 1891—during the latter part of his incumbency being upon the Appellate bench.

REEVES, Walter, Member of Congress and lawyer, was born near Brownsville, Pa., Sept. 25, 1848; removed to Illinois at 8 years of age and was reared on a farm; later became a teacher and lawyer, following his profession at Streator; in 1894 he was nominated by the Republicans of the Eleventh District for Congress, as successor to the Hon. Thomas J. Henderson, and was elected, receiving a majority over three competitors. Mr. Reeves was re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898.

REFORMATORY, ILLINOIS STATE, a prison for the incarceration of male offenders under 21 years of age, who are believed to be susceptible of reformation. It is the successor of the "State Reform School," which was created by act of the Legislature of 1867, but not opened for the admission of inmates until 1871. It is located at Pontiac. The number of inmates, in 1872, was 165, which was increased to 324 in 1890. The results, while moderately successful, were not altogether satisfactory. The appropriations made for construction, maintenance, etc., were not upon a scale adequate to accomplish what was desired, and, in 1891, a radical change was effected. Previous to that date the limit, as to age, was 16 years. The law establishing the present reformatory provides for a system of indeterminate sentences, and a release upon parole, of inmates who, in the opinion of the Board of Managers, may be safely granted conditional liberation. The inmates are divided into two classes. (1) those between the ages of 10 and 16, and (2) those between 16 and 21. The Board of Managers is composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be of the same party, their term of office to be for ten years. The course of treatment is educational (intellectually, morally and industrially), schools being conducted, trades taught, and the inmates constantly impressed with the conviction that, only through genuine and unmistakable evidence of improvement, can they regain their freedom. The reformatory influence of the institution may be best inferred from the results of one year's operation. Of 146 inmates paroled, 15 violated their parole and became fugitives, 6 were returned to the Reformatory, 1 died, and 124 remained in employment and regularly reporting. Among the industries carried on are painting and glazing, masonry and plastering, gardening, knitting, chair-caning, broom-making, carpentering, tailoring and blacksmithing. The grounds of the Reformatory contain a vein of excellent coal, which it is proposed to mine, utilizing the clay, thus obtained, in the manufacture of brick, which can be employed in the construction of additional needed buildings. The average number of inmates is about 800, and the crimes for which they are sentenced range, in gravity, from simple assault, or petit larceny, to the most serious offenses known to the criminal code, with the exception of homicide. The number of inmates, at the beginning of the year 1895, was 812. An institution of a similar character, for the confinement of juvenile female offenders, was established under an act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1893, and located at Geneva, Kane County. (See Home for Juvenile Female Offenders.)

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS. The State constitution contains the familiar guaranty of absolute freedom of conscience. The chief denominations have grown in like ratio with the population, as may be seen from figures given below. The earliest Christian services held were conducted by Catholic missionaries, who attested the sincerity of their convictions (in many instances) by the sacrifice of their lives, either through violence or exposure. The aborigines, however, were not easily Christianized; and, shortly after the cession of Illinois by France to Great Britain, the Catholic missions, being generally withdrawn, ceased to exert much influence upon the red men, although the French, who remained in the ceded territory, continued to adhere to their ancient faith. (See Early Missionaries.) One of the first Protestant sects to hold service in Illinois, was the Methodist Episcopal; Rev. Joseph Lillard coming to Illinois in 1793, and Rev. Hosea Riggs settling in the American Bottom in 1796. (For history of Methodism in Illinois, see Methodist Episcopal Church.) The pioneer Protestant preacher, however, was a Baptist—Elder James Smith—who came to New Design in 1787. Revs. David Badgley and Joseph Chance followed him in 1796, and the first denominational association was formed in 1807. (As to inception and growth of this denomination in Illinois, see also Baptists.) In 1814 the Massachusetts Missionary Society sent two missionaries to Illinois—Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith. Two years later (1816), the First Presbyterian Church was organized at Sharon, by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky. (See also Presbyterians.) The Congregationalists began to arrive with the tide of immigration that set in from the Eastern States, early in the '30's. Four churches were organized in 1833, and the subsequent growth of the denomination in the State, if gradual, has been steady. (See Congregationalists.) About the same time came the Disciples of Christ (sometimes called, from their founder, "Campbellites"). They encouraged free discussion, were liberal and warm hearted, and did not require belief in any particular creed as a condition of membership. The sect grew rapidly in numerical strength. (See Disciples of Christ.) The Protestant Episcopalians obtained their first foothold in Illinois, in 1835, when Rev. Philander Chase (afterward consecrated Bishop) immigrated to the State from the East. (See Protestant Episcopal Church.) The Lutherans in Illinois are chiefly of German or Scandinavian birth or descent, as may be inferred from the fact that, out of sixty-four churches in Chicago under care of the Missouri Synod, only four use the English language. They are the only Protestant sect maintaining (whenever possible) a system of parochial schools. (See Lutherans.) There are twenty-six other religious bodies in the State, exclusive of the Jews, who have twelve synagogues and nine rabbis. According to the census statistics of 1890, these twenty-six sects, with their numerical strength, number of buildings, ministers, etc., are as follows: Anti-Mission Baptists, 2,800 members, 78 churches and 63 ministers; Church of God, 1,200 members, 39 churches, 34 ministers; Dunkards, 121,000 members, 155 churches, 83 ministers; Friends ("Quakers") 2,655 members, 25 churches; Free Methodists, 1,805 members, 38 churches, 84 ministers; Free-Will Baptists, 4,694 members, 107 churches, 72 ministers; Evangelical Association, 15,904 members, 143 churches, 152 ministers; Cumberland Presbyterians, 11,804 members, 198 churches, 149 ministers; Methodist Episcopal (South) 3,927 members, 34 churches, 33 ministers; Moravians, 720 members, 3 churches, 3 ministers; New Jerusalem Church (Swedenborgians), 662 members, 14 churches, 8 ministers; Primitive Methodist, 230 members, 2 churches, 2 ministers; Protestant Methodist, 5,000 members, 91 churches, 106 ministers; Reformed Church in United States, 4,100 members, 34 churches, 19 ministers; Reformed Church of America, 2,200 members, 24 churches, 23 ministers; Reformed Episcopalians, 2,150 members, 13 churches, 11 ministers; Reformed Presbyterians, 1,400 members, 7 churches, 6 ministers; Salvation Army, 1,980 members; Second Adventists, 4,500 members, 64 churches, 35 ministers; Seventh Day Baptists, 320 members, 7 churches, 11 ministers; Universalists, 3,160 members, 45 churches, 37 ministers; Unitarians, 1,225 members, 19 churches, 14 ministers; United Evangelical, 30,000 members, 129 churches, 108 ministers; United Brethren, 16,500 members, 275 churches, 260 ministers; United Presbyterians, 11,250 members, 203 churches, 199 ministers; Wesleyan Methodists, 1,100 members, 16 churches, 33 ministers. (See various Churches under their proper names; also Roman Catholic Church.)

REND, William Patrick, soldier, capitalist, and coal-operator, was born in County Leitrim, Ireland, Feb. 10, 1840, brought to Lowell, Mass., in boyhood, and graduated from the high school there at 17; taught for a time near New York City and later in Maryland, where he began a course of classical study. The Civil War coming on, he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, serving most of the time as a non-commissioned officer, and participating in the battles of the second Bull Run, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. After the war he came to Chicago and secured employment in a railway surveyor's office, later acting as foreman of the Northwestern freight depot, and finally embarking in the coal business, which was conducted with such success that he became the owner of some of the most valuable mining properties in the country. Meanwhile he has taken a deep interest in the welfare of miners and other classes of laborers, and has sought to promote arbitration and conciliation between employers and employed, as a means of averting disastrous strikes. He was especially active during the long strike of 1897, in efforts to bring about an understanding between the miners and the operators. For several years he held a commission as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Illinois National Guard until compelled, by the demands of his private business, to tender his resignation.

REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

REYNOLDS, John, Justice of Supreme Court and fourth Governor of Illinois, was born of Irish ancestry, in Montgomery County, Pa., Feb. 26, 1789, and brought by his parents to Kaskaskia, Ill., in 1800, spending the first nine years of his life in Illinois on a farm. After receiving a common school education, and a two years' course of study in a college at Knoxville, Tenn., he studied law and began practice. In 1812-13 he served as a scout in the campaigns against the Indians, winning for himself the title, in after life, of "The Old Ranger." Afterwards he removed to Cahokia, where he began the practice of law, and, in 1818, became Associate Justice of the first Supreme Court of the new State. Retiring from the bench in 1825, he served two terms in the Legislature, and was elected Governor in 1830, in 1832 personally commanding the State volunteers called for service in the Black Hawk War. Two weeks before the expiration of his term (1834), he resigned to accept a seat in Congress, to which he had been elected as the successor of Charles Slade, who had died in office, and was again elected in 1838, always as a Democrat. He also served as Representative in the Fifteenth General Assembly, and again in the Eighteenth (1852-54), being chosen Speaker of the latter. In 1858 he was the administration (or Buchanan) Democratic candidate for State Superintendent of Public Instruction, as opposed to the Republican and regular (or Douglas) Democratic candidates. For some years he edited a daily paper called "The Eagle," which was published at Belleville. While Governor Reynolds acquired some reputation as a "classical scholar," from the time spent in a Tennessee College at that early day, this was not sustained by either his colloquial or written style. He was an ardent champion of slavery, and, in the early days of the Rebellion, gained unfavorable notoriety in consequence of a letter written to Jefferson Davis expressing sympathy with the cause of "secession." Nevertheless, in spite of intense prejudice and bitter partisanship on some questions, he possessed many amiable qualities, as shown by his devotion to temperance, and his popularity among persons of opposite political opinions. Although at times crude in style, and not always reliable in his statement of historical facts and events, Governor Reynolds has rendered a valuable service to posterity by his writings relating to the early history of the State, especially those connected with his own times. His best known works are: "Pioneer History of Illinois" (Belleville, 1848); "A Glance at the Crystal Palace, and Sketches of Travel" (1854); and "My Life and Times" (1855). His death occurred at Belleville, May 8, 1865.

REYNOLDS, John Parker, Secretary and President of State Board of Agriculture, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, March 1, 1820, and graduated from the Miami University at the age of 18. In 1840 he graduated from the Cincinnati Law School, and soon afterward began practice. He removed to Illinois in 1854, settling first in Winnebago County, later, successively in Marion County, in Springfield and in Chicago. From 1860 to 1870 he was Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, and, upon the creation of the State Board of Agriculture in 1871, was elected its President, filling that position until 1888, when he resigned. He has also occupied numerous other posts of honor and of trust of a public or semi-public character, having been President of the Illinois State Sanitary Commission during the War of the Rebellion, a Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1867, Chief Grain Inspector from 1878 to 1882, and Secretary of the Inter-State Industrial Exposition Company of Chicago, from the date of its organization (1873) until its final dissolution. His most important public service, in recent years, was rendered as Director-in-Chief of the Illinois-exhibit in the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

REYNOLDS, Joseph Smith, soldier and legislator, was born at New Lenox, Ill., Dec. 3, 1839; at 17 years of age went to Chicago, was educated in the high school there, within a month after graduation enlisting as a private in the Sixty-fourth Illinois Volunteers. From the ranks he rose to a colonelcy through the gradations of Second-Lieutenant and Captain, and, in July, 1865, was brevetted Brigadier-General. He was a gallant soldier, and was thrice wounded. On his return home after nearly four years' service, he entered the law department of the Chicago University, graduating therefrom and beginning practice in 1866. General Reynolds has been prominent in public life, having served as a member of both branches of the General Assembly, and having been a State Commissioner to the Vienna Exposition of 1873. He is a member of the G. A. R., and, in 1875, was elected Senior Vice-Commander of the order for the United States.

REYNOLDS, William Morton, clergyman, was born in Fayette County, Pa., March 4, 1812; after graduating at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1832, was connected with various institutions in that State, as well as President of Capital University at Columbus, Ohio; then, coming to Illinois, was President of the Illinois State University at Springfield, 1857-60, after which he became Principal of a female seminary in Chicago. Previously a Lutheran, he took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1864, and served several parishes until his death. In his early life he founded, and, for a time, conducted several religious publications at Gettysburg, Pa., besides issuing a number of printed addresses and other published works. Died at Oak Park, near Chicago, Sept. 5, 1876.

RHOADS, (Col.) Franklin Lawrence, soldier and steamboat captain, was born in Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 11, 1824; brought to Pekin, Tazewell County, Ill., in 1836, where he learned the printer's trade, and, on the breaking out of the Mexican War, enlisted, serving to the close. Returning home he engaged in the river trade, and, for fifteen years, commanded steamboats on the Illinois, Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. In April, 1861, he was commissioned Captain of a company of three months' men attached to the Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, soon after being promoted to the colonelcy, as successor to Col. Richard J. Oglesby, who had been promoted Brigadier-General. After serving through the spring campaign of 1862 in Western Kentucky and Tennessee, he was compelled by rapidly declining health to resign, when he located in Shawneetown, retiring in 1874 to his farm near that city. During the latter years of his life he was a confirmed invalid, dying at Shawneetown, Jan. 6, 1879.

RHOADS, Joshua, M.D., A.M., physician and educator, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 14, 1806; studied medicine and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania with the degree of M.D., also receiving the degree of A.M., from Princeton; after several years spent in practice as a physician, and as Principal in some of the public schools of Philadelphia, in 1839 he was elected Principal of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind, and, in 1850, took charge of the State Institution for the Blind at Jacksonville, Ill., then in its infancy. Here he remained until 1874, when he retired. Died, February 1, 1876.

RICE, Edward Y., lawyer and jurist, born in Logan County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1820, was educated in the common schools and at Shurtleff College, after which he read law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to practice, in 1845, at Hillsboro; in 1847 was elected County Recorder of Montgomery County, and, in 1848, to the Sixteenth General Assembly, serving one term. Later he was elected County Judge of Montgomery County, was Master in Chancery from 1853 to 1857, and the latter year was elected Judge of the Eighteenth Circuit, being re-elected in 1861 and again in 1867. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, at the election of the latter year, was chosen Representative in the Forty-second Congress as a Democrat. Died, April 16, 1883.

RICE, John B., theatrical manager, Mayor of Chicago, and Congressman, was born at Easton, Md., in 1809. By profession he was an actor, and, coming to Chicago in 1847, built and opened there the first theater. In 1857 he retired from the stage, and, in 1865, was elected Mayor of Chicago, the city of his adoption, and re-elected in 1867. He was also prominent in the early stages of the Civil War in the measures taken to raise troops in Chicago. In 1872 he was elected to the Forty-third Congress as a Republican, but, before the expiration of his term, died, at Norfolk, Va., on Dec. 6, 1874. At a special election to fill the vacancy, Bernard G. Caulfield was chosen to succeed him.

RICHARDSON, William A., lawyer and politician, born in Fayette County, Ky., Oct. 11, 1811, was educated at Transylvania University, came to the bar at 19, and settled in Schuyler County, Ill., becoming State's Attorney in 1835; was elected to the lower branch of the Legislature in 1836, to the Senate in 1838, and to the House again in 1844, from Adams County—the latter year being also chosen Presidential Elector on the Polk and Dallas ticket, and, at the succeeding session of the General Assembly, serving as Speaker of the House. He entered the Mexican War as Captain, and won a Majority through gallantry at Buena Vista. From 1847 to 1856 (when he resigned to become a candidate for Governor), he was a Democratic Representative in Congress from the Quincy District; re-entered Congress in 1861, and, in 1863, was chosen United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Stephen A. Douglas. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention of 1868, but after that retired to private life, acting, for a short time, as editor of "The Quincy Herald." Died, at Quincy, Dec. 27, 1875.

RICHLAND COUNTY, situated in the southeast quarter of the State, and has an area of 361 square miles. It was organized from Edwards County in 1841. Among the early pioneers may be mentioned the Evans brothers. Thaddeus Morehouse, Hugh Calhoun and son, Thomas Gardner, James Parker, Cornelius De Long, James Gilmore and Elijah Nelson. In 1820 there were but thirty families in the district. The first frame houses—the Nelson and Morehouse homesteads—were built in 1821, and, some years later, James Laws erected the first brick house. The pioneers traded at Vincennes, but, in 1825, a store was opened at Stringtown by Jacob May; and the same year the first school was opened at Watertown, taught by Isaac Chauncey. The first church was erected by the Baptists in 1822, and services were conducted by William Martin, a Kentuckian. For a long time the mails were carried on horseback by Louis and James Beard, but, in 1824, Mills and Whetsell established a line of four-horse stages. The principal road, known as the "trace road," leading from Louisville to Cahokia, followed a buffalo and Indian trail about where the main street of Olney now is. Olney was selected as the county-seat upon the organization of the county, and a Mr. Lilly built the first house there. The chief branches of industry followed by the inhabitants are agriculture and fruit-growing. Population (1880), 15,545; (1890), 15,019; (1900), 16,391.

RIDGE FARM, a village of Vermillion County, at junction of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 174 miles northeast of St. Louis; has electric light plant, planing mill, elevators, bank and two papers. Pop. (1900), 933; (1904), 1,300.

RIDGELY, a manufacturing and mining suburb of the city of Springfield. An extensive rolling mill is located there, and there are several coal-shafts in the vicinity. Population (1900), 1,169.

RIDGELY, Charles, manufacturer and capitalist, born in Springfield, Ill., Jan. 17, 1836; was educated in private schools and at Illinois College; after leaving college spent some time as a clerk in his father's bank at Springfield, finally becoming a member of the firm and successively Cashier and Vice-President. In 1870 he was Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but later has affiliated with the Republican party. About 1872 he became identified with the Springfield Iron Company, of which he has been President for many years; has also been President of the Consolidated Coal Company of St. Louis and, for some time, was a Director of the Wabash Railroad. Mr. Ridgely is also one of the Trustees of Illinois College.

RIDGELY, Nicholas H., early banker, was born in Baltimore, Md., April 27, 1800; after leaving school was engaged, for a time, in the dry-goods trade, but, in 1829, came to St. Louis to assume a clerkship in the branch of the United States Bank just organized there. In 1835 a branch of the State Bank of Illinois was established at Springfield, and Mr. Ridgely became its cashier, and, when it went into liquidation, was appointed one of the trustees to wind up its affairs. He subsequently became President of the Clark's Exchange Bank in that city, but this having gone into liquidation a few years later, he went into the private banking business as head of the "Ridgely Bank," which, in 1866, became the "Ridgely National Bank," one of the strongest financial institutions in the State outside of Chicago. After the collapse of the internal improvement scheme, Mr. Ridgely became one of the purchasers of the "Northern Cross Railroad" (now that part of the Wabash system extending from the Illinois river to Springfield), when it was sold by the State in 1847, paying therefor $21,100. He was also one of the Springfield bankers to tender a loan to the State at the beginning of the war in 1861. He was one of the builders and principal owner of the Springfield gas-light system. His business career was an eminently successful one, leaving an estate at his death, Jan. 31, 1888, valued at over $2,000,000.

RIDGWAY, a village of Gallatin County, on the Shawneetown Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 12 miles northwest of Shawneetown; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 523; (1900), 839; (1903, est.), 1,000.

RIDGWAY, Thomas S., merchant, banker and politician, was born at Carmi, Ill., August 30, 1826. His father having died when he was but 4 years old and his mother when he was 14, his education was largely acquired through contact with the world, apart from such as he received from his mother and during a year's attendance at a private school. When he was 6 years of age the family removed to Shawneetown, where he ever afterwards made his home. In 1845 he embarked in business as a merchant, and the firm of Peeples & Ridgway soon became one of the most prominent in Southern Illinois. In 1865 the partners closed out their business and organized the first National Bank of Shawneetown, of which, after the death of Mr. Peeples in 1875, Mr. Ridgway was President. He was one of the projectors of the Springfield & Illinois South-eastern Railway, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern system, and, from 1867 to 1874, served as its President. He was an ardent and active Republican, and served as a delegate to every State and National Convention of his party from 1868 to 1896. In 1874 he was elected State Treasurer, the candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction on the same ticket being defeated. In 1876 and 1880 he was an unsuccessful candidate for his party's nomination for Governor. Three times he consented to lead the forlorn hope of the Republicans as a candidate for Congress from an impregnable Democratic stronghold. For several years he was a Director of the McCormick Theological Seminary, at Chicago, and, for nineteen years, was a Trustee of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale, resigning in 1893. Died, at Shawneetown, Nov. 17, 1897.

RIGGS, James M., ex-Congressman, was born in Scott County, Ill., April 17, 1839, where he received a common school education, supplemented by a partial collegiate course. He is a practicing lawyer of Winchester. In 1864 he was elected Sheriff, serving two years. In 1871-72 he represented Scott County in the lower house of the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, and was State's Attorney from 1872 to 1876. In 1882, and again in 1884, he was the successful Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twelfth Illinois District.

RIGGS, Scott, pioneer, was born in North Carolina about 1790; removed to Crawford County, Ill., early in 1815, and represented that county in the First General Assembly (1818-20). In 1825 he removed to Scott County, where he continued to reside until his death, Feb. 24, 1872.

RINAKER, John I., lawyer and Congressman, born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 18, 1830. Left an orphan at an early age, he came to Illinois in 1836, and, for several years, lived on farms in Sangamon and Morgan Counties; was educated at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, graduating from the latter in 1851; in 1852 began reading law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to the bar in 1854. In August, 1862, he recruited the One Hundred and Twenty-second Illinois Volunteers, of which he was commissioned Colonel. Four months later he was wounded in battle, but served with his regiment through the war, and was brevetted Brigadier-General at its close. Returning from the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Carlinville. Since 1858 he has been an active Republican; has twice (1872 and '76) served his party as a Presidential Elector—the latter year for the State-at-large—and, in 1874, accepted a nomination for Congress against William R. Morrison, largely reducing the normal Democratic majority. At the State Republican Convention of 1880 he was a prominent, but unsuccessful, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. In 1894 he made the race as the Republican candidate for Congress in the Sixteenth District and, although his opponent was awarded the certificate of election, on a bare majority of 60 votes on the face of the returns, a re-count, ordered by the Fifty-fourth Congress, showed a majority for General Rinaker, and he was seated near the close of the first session. He was a candidate for re-election in 1896, but defeated in a strongly Democratic District.

RIPLEY, Edward Payson, Railway President, was born in Dorchester (now a part of Boston), Mass., Oct. 30, 1845, being related, on his mother's side, to the distinguished author, Dr. Edward Payson. After receiving his education in the high school of his native place, at the age of 17 he entered upon a commercial life, as clerk in a wholesale dry-goods establishment in Boston. About the time he became of age, he entered into the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad as a clerk in the freight department in the Boston office, but, a few years later, assumed a responsible position in connection with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line, finally becoming General Agent for the business of that road east of Buffalo, though retaining his headquarters at Boston. In 1878 he removed to Chicago to accept the position of General Freight Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System, with which he remained twelve years, serving successively as General Traffic Manager and General Manager, until June 1, 1890, when he resigned to become Third Vice-President of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul line. This relation was continued until Jan. 1, 1896, when Mr. Ripley accepted the Presidency of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, which (1899) he now holds. Mr. Ripley was a prominent factor in securing the location of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and, in April, 1891, was chosen one of the Directors of the Exposition, serving on the Executive Committee and the Committee of Ways and Means and Transportation, being Chairman of the latter.

RIVERSIDE, a suburban town on the Des Plaines River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 11 miles west of Chicago; has handsome parks, several churches, a bank, two local papers and numerous fine residences. Population (1890), 1,000; (1900), 1,551.

RIVERTON, a village in Clear Creek Township, Sangamon County, at the crossing of the Wabash Railroad over the Sangamon River, 6½ miles east-northeast of Springfield. It has four churches, a nursery, and two coal mines. Population (1880), 705; (1890), 1,127; (1900), 1,511; (1903, est.), about 2,000.

RIVES, John Cook, early banker and journalist, was born in Franklin County, Va., May 24, 1795; in 1806 removed to Kentucky, where he grew up under care of an uncle, Samuel Casey. He received a good education and was a man of high character and attractive manners. In his early manhood he came to Illinois, and was connected, for a time, with the Branch State Bank at Edwardsville, but, about 1824, removed to Shawneetown and held a position in the bank there; also studied law and was admitted to practice. Finally, having accepted a clerkship in the Fourth Auditor's Office in Washington, he removed to that city, and, in 1830, became associated with Francis P. Blair, Sr., in the establishment of "The Congressional Globe" (the predecessor of "The Congressional Record"), of which he finally became sole proprietor, so remaining until 1864. Like his partner, Blair, although a native of Virginia and a life-long Democrat, he was intensely loyal, and contributed liberally of his means for the equipment of soldiers from the District of Columbia, and for the support of their families, during the Civil War. His expenditures for these objects have been estimated at some $30,000. Died, in Prince George's County, Md., April 10, 1864.

ROANOKE, a village of Woodford County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, 26 miles northeast of Peoria; is in a coal district; has two banks, a coal mine, and one newspaper. Population (1880), 355; (1890), 831; (1900), 966.

ROBB, Thomas Patten, Sanitary Agent, was born in Bath, Maine, in 1819; came to Cook County, Ill., in 1838, and, after arriving at manhood, established the first exclusive wholesale grocery house in Chicago, remaining in the business until 1850. He then went to California, establishing himself in mercantile business at Sacramento, where he remained seven years, meanwhile being elected Mayor of that city. Returning to Chicago on the breaking out of the war, he was appointed on the staff of Governor Yates with the rank of Major, and, while serving in this capacity, was instrumental in giving General Grant the first duty he performed in the office of the Adjutant-General after his arrival from Galena. Later, he was assigned to duty as Inspector-General of Illinois troops with the rank of Colonel, having general charge of sanitary affairs until the close of the war, when he was appointed Cotton Agent for the State of Georgia, and, still later, President of the Board of Tax Commissioners for that State. Other positions held by him were those of Postmaster and Collector of Customs at Savannah, Ga.; he was also one of the publishers of "The New Era," a Republican paper at Atlanta, and a prominent actor in reconstruction affairs. Resigning the Collectorship, he was appointed by the President United States Commissioner to investigate Mexican outrages on the Rio Grande border; was subsequently identified with Texas railroad interests as the President of the Corpus Christi & Rio Grande Railroad, and one of the projectors of the Chicago, Texas & Mexican Central Railway, being thus engaged until 1872. Later he returned to California, dying near Glenwood, in that State, April 10, 1895, aged 75 years and 10 months.

ROBERTS, William Charles, clergyman and educator, was born in a small village of Wales, England., Sept. 23, 1832; received his primary education in that country, but, removing to America during his minority, graduated from Princeton College in 1855, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1858. After filling various pastorates in Delaware, New Jersey and Ohio, in 1881 he was elected Corresponding Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the next year being offered the Presidency of Rutgers College, which he declined. In 1887 he accepted the presidency of Lake Forest University, which he still retains. From 1859 to 1863 he was a Trustee of Lafayette College, and, in 1866, was elected to a trusteeship of his Alma Mater. He has traveled extensively in the Orient, and was a member of the first and third councils of the Reformed Churches, held at Edinburgh and Belfast. Besides occasional sermons and frequent contributions to English, American, German and Welsh periodicals, Dr. Roberts has published a Welsh translation of the Westminster shorter catechism and a collection of letters on the great preachers of Wales, which appeared in Utica, 1868. He received the degree of D.D., from Union College in 1873, and that of LL.D., from Princeton, in 1887.

ROBINSON, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Crawford County, 25 miles northwest of Vincennes, Ind., and 44 miles south of Paris, Ill.; is on two lines of railroad and in the heart of a fruit and agricultural region. The city has water-works, electric lights, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Population (1890) 1,387; (1900), 1,683; (1904), about 2,000.

ROBINSON, James C., lawyer and former Congressman, was born in Edgar County, Ill., in 1822, read law and was admitted to the bar in 1850. He served as a private during the Mexican War, and, in 1858, was elected to Congress as a Democrat, as he was again in 1860, '62, '70 and '72. In 1864 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. He was a fluent speaker, and attained considerable distinction as an advocate in criminal practice. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 3, 1886.

ROBINSON, John M., United States Senator, born in Kentucky in 1793, was liberally educated and became a lawyer by profession. In early life he settled at Carmi, Ill., where he married. He was of fine physique, of engaging manners, and personally popular. Through his association with the State militia he earned the title of "General." In 1830 he was elected to the United States Senate, to fill the unexpired term of John McLean. His immediate predecessor was David Jewett Baker, appointed by Governor Edwards, who served one month but failed of election by the Legislature. In 1834 Mr. Robinson was re-elected for a full term, which expired in 1841. In 1843 he was elected to a seat upon the Illinois Supreme bench, but died at Ottawa, April 27, of the same year, within three months after his elevation.

ROCHELLE, a city of Ogle County and an intersecting point of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways. It is 75 miles west of Chicago, 27 miles south of Rockford, and 23 miles east by north of Dixon. It is in a rich agricultural and stock-raising region, rendering Rochelle an important shipping point. Among its industrial establishments are water-works, electric lights, a flouring mill and silk-underwear factory. The city has three banks, five churches and three newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,789; (1900), 2,073; (1903), 2,500.

ROCHESTER, a village and early settlement in Sangamon County, laid out in 1819; in rich agricultural district, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 7½ miles southeast of Springfield; has a bank, two churches, one school, and a newspaper. Population (1900). 365

ROCK FALLS, a city in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad; has excellent water-power, a good public school system with a high school, banks and a weekly newspaper. Agricultural implements, barbed wire, furniture, flour and paper are its chief manufactures. Water for the navigable feeder of the Hennepin Canal is taken from Rock River at this point. Pop. (1900), 2,176.

ROCKFORD, a flourishing manufacturing city, the county-seat of Winnebago County; lies on both sides of the Rock River, 92 miles west of Chicago. Four trunk lines of railroad—the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Chicago & Northwestern, the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul—intersect here. Excellent water-power is secured by a dam across the river, and communication between the two divisions of the city is facilitated by three railway and three highway bridges. Water is provided from five artesian wells, a reserve main leading to the river. The city is wealthy, prosperous and progressive. The assessed valuation of property, in 1893, was $6,531,235. Churches are numerous and schools, both public and private, are abundant and well conducted. The census of 1890 showed $7,715,069 capital invested in 246 manufacturing establishments, which employed 5,223 persons and turned out an annual product valued at $8,888,904. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements and furniture, though watches, silver-plated ware, paper, flour and grape sugar are among the other products. Pop. (1880), 13,129; (1890), 23,584; (1900), 31,051.

ROCKFORD COLLEGE, located at Rockford, Ill., incorporated in 1847; in 1898 had a faculty of 21 instructors with 161 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, music and fine arts. It has a library of 6,150 volumes, funds and endowment aggregating $50,880 and property valued at $240,880, of which $150,000 is real estate.

ROCK ISLAND, the principal city and county-seat of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River, 182 miles west by south from Chicago; is the converging point of five lines of railroad, and the western terminus of the Hennepin Canal. The name is derived from an island in the Mississippi River, opposite the city, 3 miles long, which belongs to the United States Government and contains an arsenal and armory. The river channel north of the island is navigable, the southern channel having been dammed by the Government, thereby giving great water power to Rock Island and Moline. A combined railway and highway bridge spans the river from Rock Island to Davenport, Iowa, crossing the island, while a railway bridge connects the cities a mile below. The island was the site of Fort Armstrong during the Black Hawk War, and was also a place for the confinement of Confederate prisoners during the Civil War. Rock Island is in a region of much picturesque scenery and has extensive manufactures of lumber, agricultural implements, iron, carriages and wagons and oilcloth; also five banks and three newspapers, two issuing daily editions. Pop. (1890), 13,634; (1900), 19,493.

ROCK ISLAND COUNTY, in the northwestern section of the State bordering upon the Mississippi River (which constitutes its northwestern boundary for more than 60 miles), and having an area of 440 square miles. In 1816 the Government erected a fort on Rock Island (an island in the Mississippi, 3 miles long and one-half to three-quarters of a mile wide), naming it Fort Armstrong. It has always remained a military post, and is now the seat of an extensive arsenal and work-shops. In the spring of 1828, settlements were made near Port Byron by John and Thomas Kinney, Archibald Allen and George Harlan. Other early settlers, near Rock Island and Rapids City, were J. W. Spencer, J. W. Barriels, Benjamin F. Pike and Conrad Leak; and among the pioneers were Wells and Michael Bartlett, Joel Thompson, the Simms brothers and George Davenport. The country was full of Indians, this being the headquarters of Black Hawk and the initial point of the Black Hawk War. (See Black Hawk, and Black Hawk War.) By 1829 settlers were increased in number and county organization was effected in 1835, Rock Island (then called Stephenson) being made the county-seat. Joseph Conway was the first County Clerk, and Joel Wells, Sr., the first Treasurer. The first court was held at the residence of John W. Barriels, in Farnhamsburg. The county is irregular in shape, and the soil and scenery greatly varied. Coal is abundant, the water-power inexhaustible, and the county's mining and manufacturing interests are very extensive. Several lines of railway cross the county, affording admirable transportation facilities to both eastern and western markets. Rock Island and Moline (which see) are the two principal cities in the county, though there are several other important points. Coal Valley is the center of large mining interests, and Milan is also a manufacturing center. Port Byron is one of the oldest towns in the county, and has considerable lime and lumber interests, while Watertown is the seat of the Western Hospital for the Insane. Population of the county (1880), 38,302; (1890), 41,917; (1900), 55,249.

ROCK ISLAND & PEORIA RAILWAY, a standard-gauge road, laid with steel rails, extending from Rock Island to Peoria, 91 miles. It is lessee of the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, running from Milan to Cable, Ill., giving it a total length of 118 miles—with Peoria Terminal, 121.10 miles.—(HISTORY.) The company is a reorganization (Oct. 9, 1877) of the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Company, whose road was sold under foreclosure, April 4, 1877. The latter Road was the result of the consolidation, in 1869, of two corporations—the Rock Island & Peoria and the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Companies—the new organization taking the latter name. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1872, its sale under foreclosure and reorganization under its present name taking place, as already stated, in 1877. The Cable Branch was organized in 1876, as the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, and opened in December of the same year, sold under foreclosure in 1877, and leased to the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad, July 1, 1885, for 999 years, the rental for the entire period being commuted at $450,000.—(FINANCIAL.) The cost of the entire road and equipment was $2,654,487. The capital stock (1898) is $1,500,000; funded debt, $600,000; other forms of indebtedness increasing the total capital invested to $2,181,066.

ROCK RIVER, a stream which rises in Washington County, Wis., and flows generally in a southerly direction, a part of its course being very sinuous. After crossing the northern boundary of Illinois, it runs southwestward, intersecting the counties of Winnebago, Ogle, Lee, Whiteside and Rock Island, and entering the Mississippi three miles below the city of Rock Island. It is about 375 miles long, but its navigation is partly obstructed by rapids, which, however, furnish abundant water-power. The principal towns on its banks are Rockford, Dixon and Sterling. Its valley is wide, and noted for its beauty and fertility.

ROCKTON, a village in Winnebago County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, on Rock River, 13 miles north of Rockford; has manufactures of paper and agricultural implements, a feed mill, and local paper. Pop. (1890), 892; (1900), 936.

ROE, Edward Reynolds, A.B., M.D., physician, soldier and author, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, June 22, 1813; removed with his father, in 1819, to Cincinnati, and graduated at Louisville Medical Institute in 1842; began practice at Anderson, Ind., but soon removed to Shawneetown, Ill., where he gave much attention to geological research and made some extensive natural history collections. From 1848 to '52 he resided at Jacksonville, lectured extensively on his favorite science, wrote for the press and, for two years (1850-52), edited "The Jacksonville Journal," still later editing the newly established "Constitutionalist" for a few months. During a part of this period he was lecturer on natural science at Shurtleff College; also delivered a lecture before the State Legislature on the geology of Illinois, which was immediately followed by the passage of the act establishing the State Geological Department. A majority of both houses joined in a request for his appointment as State Geologist, but it was rejected on partisan grounds—he, then, being a Whig. Removing to Bloomington in 1852, Dr. Roe became prominent in educational matters, being the first Professor of Natural Science in the State Normal University, and also a Trustee of the Illinois Wesleyan University. Having identified himself with the Democratic party at this time, he became its nominee for State Superintendent of Public Instruction in 1860, but, on the inception of the war in 1861, he promptly espoused the cause of the Union, raised three companies (mostly Normal students) which were attached to the Thirty-third Illinois (Normal) Regiment; was elected Captain and successively promoted to Major and Lieutenant-Colonel. Having been dangerously wounded in the assault at Vicksburg, on May 22, 1863, and compelled to return home, he was elected Circuit Clerk by the combined vote of both parties, was re-elected four years later, became editor of "The Bloomington Pantagraph" and, in 1870, was elected to the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, where he won distinction by a somewhat notable humorous speech in opposition to removing the State Capital to Peoria. In 1871 he was appointed Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving nine years. Dr. Roe was a somewhat prolific author, having produced more than a dozen works which have appeared in book form. One of these, "Virginia Rose; a Tale of Illinois in Early Days," first appeared as a prize serial in "The Alton Courier" in 1852. Others of his more noteworthy productions are: "The Gray and the Blue"; "Brought to Bay"; "From the Beaten Path"; "G. A. R.; or How She Married His Double"; "Dr. Caldwell; or the Trail of the Serpent"; and "Prairie-Land and Other Poems." He died in Chicago, Nov. 6, 1893.

ROGERS, George Clarke, soldier, was born in Grafton County, N. H., Nov. 22, 1838; but was educated in Vermont and Illinois, having removed to the latter State early in life. While teaching he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1860; was the first, in 1861, to raise a company in Lake County for the war, which was mustered into the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers; was chosen Second-Lieutenant and later Captain; was wounded four times at Shiloh, but refused to leave the field, and led his regiment in the final charge; was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and soon after commissioned Colonel for gallantry at Hatchie. At Champion Hills he received three wounds, from one of which he never fully recovered; took a prominent part in the operations at Allatoona and commanded a brigade nearly two years, including the Atlanta campaign, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. Since the war has practiced law in Illinois and in Kansas.

ROGERS, Henry Wade, educator, lawyer and author, was born in Central New York in 1853; entered Hamilton College, but the following year became a student in Michigan University, graduating there in 1874, also receiving the degree of A.M., from the same institution, in 1877. In 1883 he was elected to a professorship in the Ann Arbor Law School, and, in 1885, was made Dean of the Faculty, succeeding Judge Cooley, at the age of 32. Five years later he was tendered, and accepted, the Presidency of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, being the first layman chosen to the position, and succeeding a long line of Bishops and divines. The same year (1890), Wesleyan University conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is a member of the American Bar Association, has served for a number of years on its Committee on Legal Education and Admission to the Bar, and was the first Chairman of the Section on Legal Education. President Rogers was the General Chairman of the Conference on the Future Foreign Policy of the United States, held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in August, 1898. At the Congress held in 1893, as auxiliary to the Columbian Exposition, he was chosen Chairman of the Committee on Law Reform and Jurisprudence, and was for a time associate editor of "The American Law Register," of Philadelphia. He is also the author of a treatise on "Expert Testimony," which has passed through two editions, and has edited a work entitled "Illinois Citations," besides doing much other valuable literary work of a similar character.

ROGERS, John Gorin, jurist, was born at Glasgow, Ky., Dec. 28, 1818, of English and early Virginian ancestry; was educated at Center College, Danville, Ky., and at Transylvania University, graduating from the latter institution in 1841, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. For sixteen years he practiced in his native town, and, in 1857, removed to Chicago, where he soon attained professional prominence. In 1870 he was elected a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court, continuing on the bench, through repeated re-elections, until his death, which occurred suddenly, Jan. 10, 1887, four years before the expiration of the term for which he had been elected.

ROGERS PARK, a village and suburb 9 miles north of Chicago, on Lake Michigan and the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; has a bank and two weekly newspapers; is reached by electric street-car line from Chicago, and is a popular residence suburb. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1893.

ROLL, John E., pioneer, was born in Green Village, N. J., June 4, 1814; came to Illinois in 1830, and settled in Sangamon County. He assisted Abraham Lincoln in the construction of the flat-boat with which the latter descended the Mississippi River to New Orleans, in 1831. Mr. Roll, who was a mechanic and contractor, built a number of houses in Springfield, where he has since continued to reside.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The earliest Christians to establish places of worship in Illinois were priests of the Catholic faith. Early Catholic missionaries were explorers and historians as well as preachers. (See Allouez; Bergier; Early Missionaries; Gravier; Marquette.) The church went hand in hand with the representatives of the French Government, carrying in one hand the cross and in the other the flag of France, simultaneously disseminating the doctrines of Christianity and inculcating loyalty to the House of Bourbon. For nearly a hundred years, the self-sacrificing and devoted Catholic clergy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries ministered to the spiritual wants of the early French settlers and the natives. They were not without factional jealousies, however, and a severe blow was dealt to a branch of them in the order for the banishment of the Jesuits and the confiscation of their property. (See Early Missionaries.) The subsequent occupation of the country by the English, with the contemporaneous emigration of a considerable portion of the French west of the Mississippi, dissipated many congregations. Up to 1830 Illinois was included in the diocese of Missouri; but at that time it was constituted a separate diocese, under the episcopal control of Rt. Rev. Joseph Rosatti. At that date there were few, if any, priests in Illinois. But Bishop Rosatti was a man of earnest purpose and rare administrative ability. New parishes were organized as rapidly as circumstances would permit, and the growth of the church has been steady. By 1840 there were thirty-one parishes and twenty priests. In 1896 there are reported 698 parishes, 764 clergymen and a Catholic population exceeding 850,000. (See also Religious Denominations.)

ROODHOUSE, a city in Greene County, 21 miles south of Jacksonville, and at junction of three divisions of the Chicago & Alton Railroad; is in fertile agricultural and coal-mining region; city contains a flouring mill, grain-elevator, stock-yards, railway shops, water-works, electric light plant, two private banks, fine opera house, good school buildings, one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,360; (1900), 2,351.

ROODHOUSE, John, farmer and founder of the town of Roodhouse, in Greene County, Ill., was born in Yorkshire, England, brought to America in childhood, his father settling in Greene County, Ill., in 1831. In his early manhood he opened a farm in Tazewell County, but finally returned to the paternal home in Greene County, where, on the location of the Jacksonville Division of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, he laid out the town of Roodhouse, at the junction of the Louisiana and Kansas City branch with the main line.

ROOT, George Frederick, musical composer and author, was born at Sheffield, Mass., August 30, 1820. He was a natural musician, and, while employed on his father's farm, learned to play on various instruments. In 1838 he removed to Boston, where he began his life-work. Besides teaching music in the public schools, he was employed to direct the musical service in two churches. From Boston he removed to New York, and, in 1850, went to Paris for purposes of musical study. In 1853 he made his first public essay as a composer in the song, "Hazel Dell," which became popular at once. From this time forward his success as a song-writer was assured. His music, while not of a high artistic character, captivated the popular ear and appealed strongly to the heart. In 1860 he took up his residence in Chicago, where he conducted a musical journal and wrote those "war songs" which created and perpetuated his fame. Among the best known are "Rally Round the Flag"; "Just Before the Battle, Mother"; and "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp." Other popular songs by him are "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower"; "A Hundred Years Ago"; and "The Old Folks are Gone." Besides songs he composed several cantatas and much sacred music, also publishing many books of instruction and numerous collections of vocal and instrumental music. In 1872 the University of Chicago conferred on him the degree of Mus. Doc. Died, near Portland, Maine, August 6, 1895.

ROOTS, Benajah Guernsey, civil engineer, and educator, was born in Onondaga County N. Y., April 20, 1811, and educated in the schools and academies of Central New York; began teaching in 1827, and, after spending a year at sea for the benefit of his health, took a course in law and civil engineering. He was employed as a civil engineer on the Western Railroad of Massachusetts until 1838, when he came to Illinois and obtained employment on the railroad projected from Alton to Shawneetown, under the "internal improvement system" of 1837. When that was suspended in 1839, he settled on a farm near the present site of Tamaroa, Perry County, and soon after opened a boarding school, continuing its management until 1846, when he became Principal of a seminary at Sparta. In 1851 he went into the service of the Illinois Central Railroad, first as resident engineer in charge of surveys and construction, later as land agent and attorney. He was prominent in the introduction of the graded school system in Illinois and in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington and the University of Illinois at Champaign; was a member of the State Board of Education from its organization, and served as delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1868. Died, at his home in Perry County, Ill., May 9, 1888.—Philander Keep (Roots), son of the preceding, born in Tolland County, Conn., June 4, 1838, brought to Illinois the same year and educated in his father's school, and in an academy at Carrollton and the Wesleyan University at Bloomington; at the age of 17 belonged to a corps of engineers employed on a Southern railroad, and, during the war, served as a civil engineer in the construction and repair of military roads. Later, he was Deputy Surveyor-General of Nebraska; in 1871 became Chief Engineer on the Cairo & Fulton (now a part of the Iron Mountain) Railway; then engaged in the banking business in Arkansas, first as cashier of a bank at Fort Smith and afterwards of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, of which his brother, Logan H., was President.—Logan H. (Roots), another son, born near Tamaroa, Perry County, Ill., March 22, 1841, was educated at home and at the State Normal at Bloomington, meanwhile serving as principal of a high school at Duquoin; in 1862 enlisted in the Eighty-first Illinois Volunteers, serving through the war and acting as Chief Commissary for General Sherman on the "March to the Sea," and participating in the great review in Washington, in May, 1865. After the conclusion of the war he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the First Arkansas District, was elected from that State to the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses (1868 and 1870)—being, at the time, the youngest member in that body—and was appointed United States Marshal by President Grant. He finally became President of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, with which he remained nearly twenty years. Died, suddenly, of congestion of the brain, May 30, 1893, leaving an estate valued at nearly one and a half millions, of which he gave a large share to charitable purposes and to the city of Little Rock, for the benefit of its hospitals and the improvement of its parks.

ROSE, James A., Secretary of State, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Oct. 13, 1850. The foundation of his education was secured in the public schools of his native place, and, after a term in the Normal University at Normal, Ill., at the age of 18 he took charge of a country school. Soon he was chosen Principal of the Golconda graded schools, was later made County Superintendent of Schools, and re-elected for a second term. During his second term he was admitted to the bar, and, resigning the office of Superintendent, was elected State's Attorney without opposition, being re-elected for another term. In 1889, by appointment of Governor Fifer, he became one of the Trustees of the Pontiac Reformatory, serving until the next year, when he was transferred to the Board of Commissioners of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester, which position he continued to occupy until 1893. In 1896 he was elected Secretary of State on the Republican ticket, his term extending to January, 1901.

ROSEVILLE, a village in Warren County, on the Rock Island Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 17 miles northwest of Bushnell; has water and electric-light plants, two banks, public library and one newspaper. Region agricultural and coal-mining. Pop. (1900), 1,014.

ROSS, Leonard Fulton, soldier, born in Fulton County, Ill., July 18, 1823; was educated in the common schools and at Illinois College, Jacksonville, studied law and admitted to the bar in 1845; the following year enlisted in the Fourth Illinois Volunteers for the Mexican War, became First Lieutenant and was commended for services at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo; also performed important service as bearer of dispatches for General Taylor. After the war he served six years as Probate Judge. In May, 1861, he enlisted in the war for the Union, and was chosen Colonel of the Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers, serving with it in Missouri and Kentucky; was commissioned Brigadier-General a few weeks after the capture of Fort Donelson, and, after the evacuation of Corinth, was assigned to the command of a division with headquarters at Bolivar, Tenn. He resigned in July, 1863, and, in 1867, was appointed by President Johnson Collector of Internal Revenue for the Ninth District; has been three times a delegate to National Republican Conventions and twice defeated as a candidate for Congress in a Democratic District. Since the war he has devoted his attention largely to stock-raising, having a large stock-farm in Iowa. In his later years was President of a bank at Lewistown, Ill. Died Jan. 17, 1901.

ROSS, (Col.) William, pioneer, was born at Monson, Hampden County, Mass., April 24, 1792; removed with his father's family, in 1805, to Pittsfield, Mass., where he remained until his twentieth year, when he was commissioned an Ensign in the Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, serving through the War of 1812-14, and participating in the battle of Sackett's Harbor. During the latter part of his service he acted as drill-master at various points. Then, returning to Pittsfield, he carried on the business of blacksmithing as an employer, meanwhile filling some local offices. In 1820, a company consisting of himself and four brothers, with their families and a few others, started for the West, intending to settle in Illinois. Reaching the head-waters of the Allegheny overland, they transferred their wagons, teams and other property to flat-boats, descending that stream and the Ohio to Shawneetown, Ill. Here they disembarked and, crossing the State, reached Upper Alton, where they found only one house, that of Maj. Charles W. Hunter. Leaving their families at Upper Alton, the brothers proceeded north, crossing the Illinois River near its mouth, until they reached a point in the western part of the present county of Pike, where the town of Atlas was afterwards located. Here they erected four rough log-cabins, on a beautiful prairie not far from the Mississippi, removing their families thither a few weeks later. They suffered the usual privations incident to life in a new country, not excepting sickness and death of some of their number. At the next session of the Legislature (1820-21) Pike County was established, embracing all that part of the State west and north of the Illinois, and including the present cities of Galena and Chicago. The Ross settlement became the nucleus of the town of Atlas, laid out by Colonel Ross and his associates in 1823, at an early day the rival of Quincy, and becoming the second county-seat of Pike County, so remaining from 1824 to 1833, when the seat of justice was removed to Pittsfield. During this period Colonel Ross was one of the most prominent citizens of the county, holding, simultaneously or successively, the offices of Probate Judge, Circuit and County Clerk, Justice of the Peace, and others of a subordinate character. As Colonel of Militia, in 1832, he was ordered by Governor Reynolds to raise a company for the Black Hawk War, and, in four days, reported at Beardstown with twice the number of men called for. In 1834 he was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, also serving in the Senate during the three following sessions, a part of the time as President pro tem. of the last-named body. While in the General Assembly he was instrumental in securing legislation of great importance relating to Military Tract lands. The year following the establishment of the county-seat at Pittsfield (1834) he became a citizen of that place, which he had the privilege of naming for his early home. He was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, and a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1860, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for President the first time. Beginning life poor he acquired considerable property; was liberal, public-spirited and patriotic, making a handsome donation to the first company organized in Pike County, for the suppression of the Rebellion. Died, at Pittsfield, May 31, 1873.

ROSSVILLE, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, 19 miles north of Danville; has electric-light plant, water-works, tile and brick-works, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 879; (1900), 1,435.

ROUNDS, Sterling Parker, public printer, was born in Berkshire, Vt., June 27, 1828; about 1840 began learning the printer's trade at Kenosha, Wis., and, in 1845, was foreman of the State printing office at Madison, afterward working in offices in Milwaukee, Racine and Buffalo, going to Chicago in 1851. Here he finally established a printer's warehouse, to which he later added an electrotype foundry and the manufacture of presses, also commencing the issue of "Round's Printers' Cabinet," a trade-paper, which was continued during his life. In 1881 he was appointed by President Garfield Public Printer at Washington, serving until 1885, when he removed to Omaha, Neb., and was identified with "The Republican," of that city, until his death, Dec. 17, 1887.

ROUNTREE, Hiram, County Judge, born in Rutherford County, N. C., Dec. 22, 1794; was brought to Kentucky in infancy, where he grew to manhood and served as an Ensign in the War of 1812 under General Shelby. In 1817 he removed to Illinois Territory, first locating in Madison County, where he taught school for two years near Edwardsville, but removed to Fayette County about the time of the removal of the State capital to Vandalia. On the organization of Montgomery County, in 1821, he was appointed to office there and ever afterwards resided at Hillsboro. For a number of years in the early history of the county, he held (at the same time) the offices of Clerk of the County Commissioners Court, Clerk of the Circuit Court, County Recorder, Justice of the Peace, Notary Public, Master in Chancery and Judge of Probate, besides that of Postmaster for the town of Hillsboro. In 1826 he was elected Enrolling and Engrossing Clerk of the Senate and re-elected in 1830; served as Delegate in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and the next year was elected to the State Senate, serving in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth General Assemblies. On retiring from the Senate (1852), he was elected County Judge without opposition, was re-elected to the same office in 1861, and again, in 1865, as the nominee of the Republicans. Judge Rountree was noted for his sound judgment and sterling integrity. Died, at Hillsboro, March 4, 1873.

ROUTT, John L., soldier and Governor, was born at Eddyville, Ky., April 25, 1826, brought to Illinois in infancy and educated in the common schools. Soon after coming of age he was elected and served one term as Sheriff of McLean County; in 1862 enlisted and became Captain of Company E, Ninety-fourth Illinois Volunteers. After the war he engaged in business in Bloomington, and was appointed by President Grant, successively, United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, Second Assistant Postmaster-General and Territorial Governor of Colorado. On the admission of Colorado as a State, he was elected the first Governor under the State Government, and re-elected in 1890—serving, in all, three years. His home is in Denver. He has been extensively and successfully identified with mining enterprises in Colorado.

ROWELL, Jonathan H., ex-Congressman, was born at Haverhill, N. H., Feb. 10, 1833. He is a graduate of Eureka College and of the Law Department of the Chicago University. During the War of the Rebellion he served three years as company officer in the Seventeenth Illinois Infantry. In 1868 he was elected State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1880, was a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. In 1882 he was elected to Congress from the Fourteenth Illinois District and three times re-elected, serving until March, 1891. His home is at Bloomington.

ROWETT, Richard, soldier, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1830, came to the United States in 1851, finally settling on a farm near Carlinville, Ill., and becoming a breeder of thorough-bred horses. In 1861 he entered the service as a Captain in the Seventh Illinois Volunteers and was successively promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth and Allatoona, especially distinguishing himself at the latter and being brevetted Brigadier-General for gallantry. After the war he returned to his stock-farm, but later held the positions of Canal Commissioner, Penitentiary Commissioner, Representative in the Thirtieth General Assembly and Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth (Quincy) District, until its consolidation with the Eighth District by President Cleveland. Died, in Chicago, July 13, 1887.

RUSH MEDICAL COLLEGE, located in Chicago; incorporated by act of March 2, 1837, the charter having been prepared the previous year by Drs. Daniel Brainard and Josiah C. Goodhue. The extreme financial depression of the following year prevented the organization of a faculty until 1843. The institution was named in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, the eminent practitioner, medical author and teacher of Philadelphia in the latter half of the eighteenth century. The first faculty consisted of four professors, and the first term opened on Dec. 4, 1843, with a class of twenty-two students. Three years' study was required for graduation, but only two annual terms of sixteen weeks each need be attended at the college itself. Instruction was given in a few rooms temporarily opened for that purpose. The next year a small building, costing between $3,000 and $4,000, was erected. This was re-arranged and enlarged in 1855 at a cost of $15,000. The constant and rapid growth of the college necessitated the erection of a new building in 1867, the cost of which was $70,000. This was destroyed in the fire of 1871, and another, costing $54,000, was erected in 1876 and a free dispensary added. In 1844 the Presbyterian Hospital was located on a portion of the college lot, and the two institutions connected, thus insuring abundant and stable facilities for clinical instruction. Shortly afterwards, Rush College became the medical department of Lake Forest University. The present faculty (1898) consists of 95 professors, adjunct professors, lecturers and instructors of all grades, and over 600 students in attendance. The length of the annual terms is six months, and four years of study are required for graduation, attendance upon at least three college terms being compulsory.

RUSHVILLE, the county-seat of Schuyler County, 50 miles northeast of Quincy and 11 miles northwest of Beardstown; is the southern terminus of the Buda and Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. The town was selected as the county-seat in 1826, the seat of justice being removed from a place called Beardstown, about five miles eastward (not the present Beardstown in Cass County), where it had been located at the time of the organization of Schuyler County, a year previous. At first the new seat of justice was called Rush-ton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but afterwards took its present name. It is a coal-mining, grain and fruit-growing region, and contains several manufactories, including flour-mills, brick and tile works; also has two banks (State and private) and a public library. Four periodicals (one daily) are published here. Population (1880), 1,662; (1890), 2,031; (1900), 2,292.

RUSSELL, John, pioneer teacher and author, was born at Cavendish, Vt., July 31, 1793, and educated in the common schools of his native State and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1818—having obtained means to support himself, during his college course, by teaching and by the publication, before he had reached his 20th year, of a volume entitled "The Authentic History of Vermont State Prison." After graduation he taught for a short time in Georgia; but, early in the following year, joined his father on the way to Missouri. The next five years he spent in teaching in the "Bonhomie Bottom" on the Missouri River. During this period he published, anonymously, in "The St. Charles Missourian," a temperance allegory entitled "The Venomous Worm" (or "The Worm of the Still"), which gained a wide popularity and was early recognized by the compilers of school-readers as a sort of classic. Leaving this locality he taught a year in St. Louis, when he removed to Vandalia (then the capital of Illinois), after which he spent two years teaching in the Seminary at Upper Alton, which afterwards became Shurtleff College. In 1828 he removed to Greene County, locating at a point near the Illinois River to which he gave the name of Bluffdale. Here he was licensed as a Baptist preacher, officiating in this capacity only occasionally, while pursuing his calling as a teacher or writer for the press, to which he was an almost constant contributor during the last twenty-five years of his life. About 1837 or 1838 he was editor of a paper called "The Backwoodsman" at Grafton—then a part of Greene County, but now in Jersey County—to which he afterwards continued to be a contributor some time longer, and, in 1841-42, was editor of "The Advertiser," at Lonisville, Ky. He was also, for several years, Principal of the Spring Hill Academy in East Feliciana Parish, La., meanwhile serving for a portion of the time as Superintendent of Public Schools. He was the author of a number of stories and sketches, some of which went through several editions, and, at the time of his death, had in preparation a history of "The Black Hawk War," "Evidences of Christianity" and a "History of Illinois." He was an accomplished linguist, being able to read with fluency Greek, Latin, French, Spanish and Italian, besides having considerable familiarity with several other modern languages. In 1862 he received from the University of Chicago the degree of LL.D. Died, Jan. 2, 1863, and was buried on the old homestead at Bluffdale.

RUSSELL, Martin J., politician and journalist, born in Chicago, Dec. 20, 1845. He was a nephew of Col. James A. Mulligan (see Mulligan, James A.) and served with credit as Adjutant-General on the staff of the latter in the Civil War. In 1870 he became a reporter on "The Chicago Evening Post," and was advanced to the position of city editor. Subsequently he was connected with "The Times," and "The Telegram"; was also a member of the Board of Education of Hyde Park before the annexation of that village to Chicago, and has been one of the South Park Commissioners of the city last named. After the purchase of "The Chicago Times" by Carter H. Harrison he remained for a time on the editorial staff. In 1894 President Cleveland appointed him Collector of the Port of Chicago. At the expiration of his term of office he resumed editorial work as editor-in-chief of "The Chronicle," the organ of the Democratic party in Chicago. Died June 25, 1900.

RUTHERFORD, Friend S., lawyer and soldier, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1820; studied law in Troy and removed to Illinois, settling at Edwardsville, and finally at Alton; was a Republican candidate for Presidential Elector in 1856, and, in 1860, a member of the National Republican Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for the Presidency. In September, 1862, he was commissioned Colonel of the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteers, and participated in the capture of Port Gibson and in the operations about Vicksburg—also leading in the attack on Arkansas Post, and subsequently serving in Louisiana, but died as the result of fatigue and exposure in the service, June 20, 1864, one week before his promotion to the rank of Brigadier-General.—Reuben C. (Rutherford), brother of the preceding, was born at Troy, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1823, but grew up in Vermont and New Hampshire; received a degree in law when quite young, but afterwards fitted himself as a lecturer on physiology and hygiene, upon which he lectured extensively in Michigan, Illinois and other States after coming west in 1849. During 1854-55, in co-operation with Prof. J. B. Turner and others, he canvassed and lectured extensively throughout Illinois in support of the movement which resulted in the donation of public lands, by Congress, for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States. The establishment of the University of Illinois, at Champaign, was the outgrowth of this movement. In 1856 he located at Quincy, where he resided some thirty years; in 1861, served for several months as the first Commissary of Subsistence at Cairo; was later associated with the State Quartermaster's Department, finally entering the secret service of the War Department, in which he remained until 1867, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. In 1886, General Rutherford removed to New York City, where he died, June 24, 1895.—George V. (Rutherford), another brother, was born at Rutland, Vt., 1830; was first admitted to the bar, but afterwards took charge of the construction of telegraph lines in some of the Southern States; at the beginning of the Civil War became Assistant Quartermaster-General of the State of Illinois, at Springfield, under ex-Gov. John Wood, but subsequently entered the Quartermaster's service of the General Government in Washington, retiring after the war with the rank of Brigadier-General. He then returned to Quincy, Ill., where he resided until 1872, when he engaged in manufacturing business at Northampton, Mass., but finally removed to California for the benefit of his failing health. Died, at St. Helena, Cal., August 28, 1872.

RUTLAND, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 25 miles south of La Salle; has a bank, five churches, school, and a newspaper, with coal mines in the vicinity. Pop. (1890), 509; (1900), 893; (1903), 1,093.

RUTLEDGE, (Rev.) William J., clergyman, Army Chaplain, born in Augusta County, Va., June 24, 1820; was converted at the age of 12 years and, at 21, became a member of the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving various churches in the central and western parts of the State—also acting, for a time, as Agent of the Illinois Conference Female College at Jacksonville. From 1861 to 1863 he was Chaplain of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Returning from the war, he served as pastor of churches at Jacksonville, Bloomington, Quincy, Rushville, Springfield, Griggsville and other points; from 1881 to '84 was Chaplain of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet. Mr. Rutledge was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, and served for many years as Chaplain of the order for the Department of Illinois. In connection with the ministry, he has occupied a supernumerary relation since 1885. Died in Jacksonville, April 14, 1900.

RUTZ, Edward, State Treasurer, was born in a village in the Duchy of Baden, Germany, May 5, 1829; came to America in 1848, locating on a farm in St. Clair County, Ill.; went to California in 1857, and, early in 1861, enlisted in the Third United States Artillery at San Francisco, serving with the Army of the Potomac until his discharge in 1864, and taking part in every battle in which his command was engaged. After his return in 1865, he located in St. Clair County, and was elected County Surveyor, served three consecutive terms as County Treasurer, and was elected State Treasurer three times—1872, '76 and '80. About 1892 he removed to California, where he now resides.

RYAN, Edward G., early editor and jurist, born at Newcastle House, County Meath, Ireland, Nov. 13, 1810; was educated for the priesthood, but turned his attention to law, and, in 1830, came to New York and engaged in teaching while prosecuting his legal studies; in 1836 removed to Chicago, where he was admitted to the bar and was, for a time, associated in practice with Hugh T. Dickey. In April, 1840, Mr. Ryan assumed the editorship of a weekly paper in Chicago called "The Illinois Tribune," which he conducted for over a year, and which is remembered chiefly on account of its bitter assaults on Judge John Pearson of Danville, who had aroused the hostility of some members of the Chicago bar by his rulings upon the bench. About 1842 Ryan removed to Milwaukee, Wis., where he was, for a time, a partner of Matthew H. Carpenter (afterwards United States Senator), and was connected with a number of celebrated trials before the courts of that State, including the Barstow-Bashford case, which ended with Bashford becoming the first Republican Governor of Wisconsin. In 1874 he was appointed Chief Justice of Wisconsin, serving until his death, which occurred at Madison, Oct. 19, 1880. He was a strong partisan, and, during the Civil War, was an intense opponent of the war policy of the Government. In spite of infirmities of temper, he appears to have been a man of much learning and recognized legal ability.

RYAN, James, Roman Catholic Bishop, born in Ireland in 1848 and emigrated to America in childhood; was educated for the priesthood in Kentucky, and, after ordination, was made a professor in St. Joseph's Seminary, at Bardstown, Ky. In 1878 he removed to Illinois, attaching himself to the diocese of Peoria, and having charge of parishes at Wataga and Danville. In 1881 he became rector of the Ottawa parish, within the episcopal jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Chicago. In 1888 he was made Bishop of the see of Alton, the prior incumbent (Bishop Baltes) having died in 1886.

SACS AND FOXES, two confederated Indian tribes, who were among the most warlike and powerful of the aborigines of the Illinois Country. The Foxes called themselves the Musk-wah-hak-kee, a name compounded of two words, signifying "those of red earth." The French called them On-ta-ga-mies, that being their spelling of the name given them by other tribes, the meaning of which was "Foxes," and which was bestowed upon them because their totem (or armorial device, as it may be called) was a fox. They seem to have been driven westward from the northern shore of Lake Ontario, by way of Niagara and Mackinac, to the region around Green Bay, Wis.—Concerning their allied brethren, the Sacs, less is known. The name is variously spelled in the Indian dialects—On-sa-kies, Sauks, etc.—and the term Sacs is unquestionably an abbreviated corruption. Black Hawk belonged to this tribe. The Foxes and Sacs formed a confederation according to aboriginal tradition, on what is now known as the Sac River, near Green Bay, but the date of the alliance cannot be determined. The origin of the Sacs is equally uncertain. Black Hawk claimed that his tribe originally dwelt around Quebec, but, as to the authenticity of this claim, historical authorities differ widely. Subsequent to 1670 the history of the allied tribes is tolerably well defined. Their characteristics, location and habits are described at some length by Father Allouez, who visited them in 1666-67. He says that they were numerous and warlike, but depicts them as "peevish, avaricious, thievish and quarrelsome." That they were cordially detested by their neighbors is certain, and Judge James Hall calls them "the Ishmaelites of the lakes." They were unfriendly to the French, who attached to themselves other tribes, and, through the aid of the latter, had well-nigh exterminated them, when the Sacs and Foxes sued for peace, which was granted on terms most humiliating to the vanquished. By 1718, however, they were virtually in possession of the region around Rock River in Illinois, and, four years later, through the aid of the Mascoutins and Kickapoos, they had expelled the Illinois, driving the last of that ill-fated tribe across the Illinois River. They abstained from taking part in the border wars that marked the close of the Revolutionary War, and therefore did not participate in the treaty of Greenville in 1795. At that date, according to Judge Hall, they claimed the country as far west as Council Bluffs, Iowa, and as far north as Prairie du Chien. They offered to co-operate with the United States Government in the War of 1812, but this offer was declined, and a portion of the tribe, under the leadership of Black Hawk, enlisted on the side of the British. The Black Hawk War proved their political ruin. By the treaty of Rock Island they ceded vast tracts of land, including a large part of the eastern half of Iowa and a large body of land east of the Mississippi. (See Black Hawk War; Indian Treaties.) In 1842 the Government divided the nation into two bands, removing both to reservations in the farther West. One was located on the Osage River and the other on the south side of the Nee-ma-ha River, near the northwest corner of Kansas. From these reservations, there is little doubt, many of them have silently emigrated toward the Rocky Mountains, where the hoe might be laid aside for the rifle, the net and the spear of the hunter. A few years ago a part of these confederated tribes were located in the eastern part of Oklahoma.

SAILOR SPRINGS, a village and health resort in Clay County, 5 miles north of Clay City, has an academy and a local paper. Population (1900), 419; (1903, est.), 550.

SALEM, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Marion County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Illinois Southern Railroads, 71 miles east of St. Louis, and 16 miles northeast of Centralia; in agricultural and coal district. A leading industry is the culture, evaporation and shipment of fruit. The city has flour-mills, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,493; (1900), 1,642.

SALINE COUNTY, a southeastern county, organized in 1847, having an area of 380 square miles. It derives its name from the salt springs which are found in every part of the county. The northern portion is rolling and yields an abundance of coal of a quality suitable for smithing. The bottoms are swampy, but heavily timbered, and saw-mills abound. Oak, hickory, sweet gum, mulberry, locust and sassafras are the prevailing varieties. Fruit and tobacco are extensively cultivated. The climate is mild and humid, and the vegetation varied. The soil of the low lands is rich, and, when drained, makes excellent farming lands. In some localities a good gray sandstone, soft enough to be worked, is quarried, and millstone grit is frequently found. In the southern half of the county are the Eagle Mountains, a line of hills having an altitude of some 450 to 500 feet above the level of the Mississippi at Cairo, and believed by geologists to have been a part of the upheaval that gave birth to the Ozark Mountains in Missouri and Arkansas. The highest land in the county is 864 feet above sea-level. Tradition says that these hills are rich in silver ore, but it has not been found in paying quantities. Springs strongly impregnated with sulphur are found on the slopes. The county-seat was originally located at Raleigh, which was platted in 1848, but it was subsequently removed to Harrisburg, which was laid out in 1859. Population of the county (1880), 15,940; (1890), 19,342; (1900), 21,685.

SALINE RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which flow through portions of Saline County, uniting in Gallatin County. The North Fork rises in Hamilton County and runs nearly south, while the South Fork drains part of Williamson County, and runs east through Saline. The river (which is little more than a creek), thus formed, runs southeast, entering the Ohio ten miles below Shawneetown.

SALT MANUFACTURE. There is evidence going to show that the saline springs, in Gallatin County, were utilized by the aboriginal inhabitants in the making of salt, long before the advent of white settlers. There have been discovered, at various points, what appear to be the remains of evaporating kettles, composed of hardened clay and pounded shells, varying in diameter from three to four feet. In 1812, with a view to encouraging the manufacture of salt from these springs, Congress granted to Illinois the use of 36 square miles, the fee still remaining in the United States. These lands were leased by the State to private parties, but the income derived from them was comparatively small and frequently difficult of collection. The workmen were mostly slaves from Kentucky and Tennessee, who are especially referred to in Article VI., Section 2, of the Constitution of 1818. The salt made brought $5 per 100 pounds, and was shipped in keel-boats to various points on the Ohio, Mississippi, Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, while many purchasers came hundreds of miles on horseback and carried it away on pack animals. In 1827, the State treasury being empty and the General Assembly having decided to erect a penitentiary at Alton, Congress was petitioned to donate these lands to the State in fee, and permission was granted "to sell 30,000 acres of the Ohio Salines in Gallatin County, and apply the proceeds to such purposes as the Legislature might by law direct." The sale was made, one-half of the proceeds set apart for the building of the penitentiary, and one-half to the improvement of roads and rivers in the eastern part of the State. The manufacture of salt was carried on, however—for a time by lessees and subsequently by owners—until 1873, about which time it was abandoned, chiefly because it had ceased to be profitable on account of competition with other districts possessing superior facilities. Some salt was manufactured in Vermilion County about 1824. The manufacture has been successfully carried on in recent years, from the product of artesian wells, at St. John, in Perry County.

SANDOVAL, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the western branch of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, 6 miles north of Centralia. The town has coal mines and some manufactures, with banks and one newspaper. Population (1880), 564; (1890), 834; (1900), 1,258.

SANDSTONE. The quantity of sandstone quarried in Illinois is comparatively insignificant, its value being less than one-fifth of one per cent of the value of the output of the entire country. In 1890 the State ranked twenty-fifth in the list of States producing this mineral, the total value of the stone quarried being but $17,896, representing 141,605 cubic feet, taken from ten quarries, which employed forty-six hands, and had an aggregate capital invested of $49,400.

SANDWICH, a city in De Kalb County, incorporated in 1873, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 58 miles southwest of Chicago. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements, hay-presses, corn-shell-ers, pumps and wind-mills. Sandwich has two private banks, two weekly and one semi-weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,516; (1900), 2,520; (1903), 2,865.

SANGAMON COUNTY, a central county, organized under act of June 30, 1821, from parts of Bond and Madison Counties, and embracing the present counties of Sangamon, Cass, Menard, Mason, Tazewell, Logan, and parts of Morgan, McLean, Woodford, Marshall and Putnam. It was named for the river flowing through it. Though reduced in area somewhat, four years later, it extended to the Illinois River, but was reduced to its present limits by the setting apart of Menard, Logan and Dane (now Christian) Counties, in 1839. Henry Funderburk is believed to have been the first white settler, arriving there in 1817 and locating in what is now Cotton Hill Township, being followed, the next year, by William Drennan, Joseph Dodds, James McCoy, Robert Pulliam and others. John Kelly located on the present site of the city of Springfield in 1818, and was there at the time of the selection of that place as the temporary seat of justice in 1821. Other settlements were made at Auburn, Island Grove, and elsewhere, and population began to flow in rapidly. Remnants of the Pottawatomie and Kickapoo Indians were still there, but soon moved north or west. County organization was effected in 1821, the first Board of County Commissioners being composed of William Drennan, Zachariah Peter and Samuel Lee. John Reynolds (afterwards Governor) held the first term of Circuit Court, with John Taylor, Sheriff; Henry Starr, Prosecuting Attorney, and Charles R. Matheny, Circuit Clerk. A United States Land Office was established at Springfield in 1823, with Pascal P. Enos as Receiver, the first sale of lands taking place the same year. The soil of Sangamon County is exuberantly fertile, with rich underlying deposits of bituminous coal, which is mined in large quantities. The chief towns are Springfield, Auburn, Riverton, Illiopolis and Pleasant Plains. The area of the county is 860 square miles. Population (1880), 52,894; (1890), 61,195; (1900), 71,593.

SANGAMON RIVER, formed by the union of the North and South Forks, of which the former is the longer, or main branch. The North Fork rises in the northern part of Champaign County, whence it runs southwest to the city of Decatur, thence westward through Sangamon County, forming the north boundary of Christian County, and emptying into the Illinois River about 9 miles above Beardstown. The Sangamon is nearly 240 miles long, including the North Fork. The South Fork flows through Christian County, and joins the North Fork about 6 miles east of Springfield. In the early history of the State the Sangamon was regarded as a navigable stream, and its improvement was one of the measures advocated by Abraham Lincoln in 1832, when he was for the first time a candidate (though unsuccessfully) for the Legislature. In the spring of 1832 a small steamer from Cincinnati, called the "Talisman," ascended the river to a point near Springfield. The event was celebrated with great rejoicing by the people, but the vessel encountered so much difficulty in getting out of the river that the experiment was never repeated.

SANGAMON & MORGAN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

SANGER, Lorenzo P., railway and canal contractor, was born at Littleton, N. H., March 2, 1809; brought in childhood to Livingston County, N. Y., where his father became a contractor on the Erie Canal, the son also being employed upon the same work. The latter subsequently became a contractor on the Pennsylvania Canal on his own account, being known as "the boy contractor." Then, after a brief experience in mercantile business, and a year spent in the construction of a canal in Indiana, in 1836 he came to Illinois, and soon after became an extensive contractor on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, having charge of rock excavation at Lockport. He was also connected with the Rock River improvement scheme, and interested in a line of stages between Chicago and Galena, which, having been consolidated with the line managed by the firm of Fink & Walker, finally became the Northwestern Stage Company, extending its operations throughout Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri—Mr. Sanger having charge of the Western Division, for a time, with headquarters at St. Louis. In 1851 he became the head of the firm of Sanger, Camp & Co., contractors for the construction of the Western (or Illinois) Division of the Ohio & Mississippi (now the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railway, upon which he was employed for several years. Other works with which he was connected were the North Missouri Railroad and the construction of the State Penitentiary at Joliet, as member of the firm of Sanger & Casey, for a time, also lessees of convict labor. In 1862 Mr. Sanger received from Governor Yates, by request of President Lincoln, a commission as Colonel, and was assigned to staff duty in Kentucky and Tennessee. After the war he became largely interested in stone quarries adjacent to Joliet; also had an extensive contract, from the City of Chicago, for deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Died, at Oakland, Cal., March 23, 1875, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health.—JAMES YOUNG (Sanger), brother of the preceding, was born at Sutton, Vt., March 14, 1814; in boyhood spent some time in a large mercantile establishment at Pittsburg, Pa., later being associated with his father and elder brother in contracts on the Erie Canal and similar works in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. At the age of 22 he came with his father's family to St. Joseph, Mich., where they established a large supply store, and engaged in bridge-building and similar enterprises. At a later period, in connection with his father and his brother, L. P. Sanger, he was prominently connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal—the aqueduct at Ottawa and the locks at Peru being constructed by them. About 1850 the Construction Company, of which he and his brother, L. P. Sanger, were leading members, undertook the construction of the Ohio & Mississippi (now Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railroad, from St. Louis to Vincennes, Ind., and were prominently identified with other railroad enterprises in Southern Illinois, Missouri and California. Died, July 3, 1867, when consummating arrangements for the performance of a large contract on the Union Pacific Railroad.

SANITARY COMMISSION. (See Illinois Sanitary Commission.)

SANITARY DISTRICT OF CHICAGO. (See Chicago Drainage Canal.)

SAUGANASH, the Indian name of a half-breed known as Capt. Billy Caldwell, the son of a British officer and a Pottawatomie woman, born in Canada about 1780; received an education from the Jesuits at Detroit, and was able to speak and write English and French, besides several Indian dialects; was a friend of Tecumseh's and, during the latter part of his life, a devoted friend of the whites. He took up his residence in Chicago about 1820, and, in 1826, was a Justice of the Peace, while nominally a subject of Great Britain and a Chief of the Ottawa and Pottawatomies. In 1828 the Government, in consideration of his services, built for him the first frame house ever erected in Chicago, which he occupied until his departure with his tribe for Council Bluffs in 1836. By a treaty, made Jan. 2, 1830, reservations were granted by the Government to Sauganash, Shabona and other friendly Indians (see Shabona), and 1,240 acres on the North Branch of Chicago River set apart for Caldwell, which he sold before leaving the country. Died, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sept. 28, 1841.

SAVAGE, George S. F., D.D., clergyman, was born at Cromwell, Conn., Jan. 29, 1817; graduated at Yale College in 1844; studied theology at Andover and New Haven, graduating in 1847; was ordained a home missionary the same year and spent twelve years as pastor at St. Charles, Ill., for four years being corresponding editor of "The Prairie Herald" and "The Congregational Herald." For ten years he was in the service of the American Tract Society, and, during the Civil War, was engaged in sanitary and religious work in the army. In 1870 he was appointed Western Secretary of the Congregational Publishing Society, remaining two years, after which he became Financial Secretary of the Chicago Theological Seminary. He has also been a Director of the institution since 1854, a Trustee of Beloit College since 1850, and, for several years, editor and publisher of "The Congregational Review."

SAVANNA, a city in Carroll County, situated on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; is 10 miles west of Mount Carroll and about 20 miles north of Clinton, Iowa. It is an important shipping-point and contains several manufactories of machinery, lumber, flour, etc. It has two State banks, a public library, churches, two graded schools, township high school, and two daily and weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 3,097; (1900), 3,325.

SAYBROOK, a village of McLean County, on the Lake Erie & Western Railroad, 26 miles east of Bloomington; district agricultural; county fairs held here; the town has two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 851; (1900), 879.

SCATES, Walter Bennett, jurist and soldier, was born at South Boston, Halifax County, Va., Jan. 18, 1808; was taken in infancy to Hopkinsville, Ky., where he resided until 1831, having meanwhile learned the printer's trade at Nashville and studied law at Louisville. In 1831 he removed to Frankfort, Franklin County, Ill., where, for a time, he was County Surveyor. In 1836, having been appointed Attorney-General, he removed to Vandalia, then the seat of government, but resigned at the close of the same year to accept the judgeship of the Third Judicial Circuit, and took up his residence at Shawneetown. In 1841 he was one of five new Judges added to the Supreme Court bench, the others being Sidney Breese, Stephen A. Douglas, Thomas Ford and Samuel H. Treat. In that year he removed to Mount Vernon, Jefferson County, and, in January, 1847, resigned his seat upon the bench to resume practice. The same year he was a member of the Constitutional Convention and Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. In June, 1854, he again took a seat upon the Supreme Court bench, being chosen to succeed Lyman Trumbull, but resigned in May, 1857, and resumed practice in Chicago. In 1862 he volunteered in defense of the Union, received a Major's commission and was assigned to duty on the staff of General McClelland; was made, Assistant Adjutant-General and mustered out in January, 1866. In July, 1866, President Johnson appointed him Collector of Customs at Chicago, which position he filled until July 1, 1869, when he was removed by President Grant, during the same period, being ex-officio custodian of United States funds, the office of Assistant Treasurer not having been then created. Died, at Evanston, Oct. 26, 1886.

SCAMMON, Jonathan Young, lawyer and banker, was born at Whitefield, Maine, July 27, 1812; after graduating at Waterville (now Colby) University in 1831, he studied law and was admitted to the bar at Hallowell, in 1835 removing to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. After a year spent as deputy in the office of the Circuit Clerk of Cook County, during which he prepared a revision of the Illinois statutes, he was appointed attorney for the State Bank of Illinois in 1837, and, in 1839, became reporter of the Supreme Court, which office he held until 1845. In the meantime, he was associated with several prominent lawyers, his first legal firm being that of Scammon, McCagg & Fuller, which was continued up to the fire of 1871. A large operator in real estate and identified with many enterprises of a public or benevolent character, his most important financial venture was in connection with the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, which conducted an extensive banking business for many years, and of which he was the President and leading spirit. As a citizen he was progressive, public-spirited and liberal. He was one of the main promoters and organizers of the old Galena & Chicago Union Railway, the first railroad to run west from Lake Michigan; was also prominently identified with the founding of the Chicago public school system, a Trustee of the (old) Chicago University, and one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, of the Chicago Academy of Sciences and the Chicago Astronomical Society — being the first President of the latter body. He erected, at a cost of $30,000, the Fort Dearborn Observatory, in which he caused to be placed the most powerful telescope which had at that time been brought to the West. He also maintained the observatory at his own expense. He was the pioneer of Swedenborgianism in Chicago, and, in politics, a staunch Whig, and, later, an ardent Republican. In 1844 he was one of the founders of "The Chicago American," a paper designed to advance the candidacy of Henry Clay for the Presidency; and, in 1872, when "The Chicago Tribune" espoused the Liberal Republican cause, he started "The Inter-Ocean" as a Republican organ, being, for some time, its sole proprietor and editor-in-chief. He was one of the first to encourage the adoption of the homeopathic system of medicine in Chicago, and was prominently connected with the founding of the Hahnemann Medical College and the Hahnemann Hospital, being a Trustee in both for many years. As a member of the General Assembly he secured the passage of many important measures, among them being legislation looking toward the bettering of the currency and the banking system. He accumulated a large fortune, but lost most of it by the fire of 1871 and the panic of 1873. Died, in Chicago, March 17, 1890.

SCARRITT, Nathan, pioneer, was born in Connecticut, came to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1820, and, in 1821, located in Scarritt's Prairie, Madison County. His sons afterward became influential in business and Methodist church circles. Died, Dec. 12, 1847.

SCENERY, NATURAL. Notwithstanding the uniformity of surface which characterizes a country containing no mountain ranges, but which is made up largely of natural prairies, there are a number of localities in Illinois where scenery of a picturesque, and even bold and rugged character, may be found. One of the most striking of these features is produced by a spur or low range of hills from the Ozark Mountains of Missouri, projected across the southern part of the State from the vicinity of Grand

Tower in Jackson County, through the northern part of Union, and through portions of Williamson, Johnson, Saline, Pope and Hardin Counties. Grand Tower, the initial point in the western part of the State, is an isolated cliff of limestone, standing out in the channel of the Mississippi, and forming an island nearly 100 feet above low-water level. It has been a conspicuous landmark for navigators ever since the discovery of the Mississippi. "Fountain Bluff," a few miles above Grand Tower, is another conspicuous point immediately on the river bank, formed by some isolated hills about three miles long by a mile and a half wide, which have withstood the forces that excavated the valley now occupied by the Mississippi. About half a mile from the lower end of this hill, with a low valley between them, is a smaller eminence known as the "Devil's Bake Oven." The main chain of bluffs, known as the "Back Bone," is about five miles from the river, and rises to a height of nearly 700 feet above low-tide in the Gulf of Mexico, or more than 400 feet above the level of the river at Cairo. "Bald Knob" is a very prominent inland bluff promontory near Alta Pass on the line of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, in the northern part of Union County, with an elevation above tide-water of 985 feet. The highest point in this range of hills is reached in the northeastern part of Pope County—the elevation at that point (as ascertained by Prof. Rolfe of the State University at Champaign) being 1,046 feet.—There is some striking scenery in the neighborhood of Grafton between Alton and the mouth of the Illinois, as well as some distance up the latter stream—though the landscape along the middle section of the Illinois is generally monotonous or only gently undulating, except at Peoria and a few other points, where bluffs rise to a considerable height. On the Upper Illinois, beginning at Peru, the scenery again becomes picturesque, including the celebrated "Starved Rock," the site of La Salle's Fort St. Louis (which see). This rock rises to a perpendicular height of about 125 feet from the surface of the river at the ordinary stage. On the opposite side of the river, about four miles below Ottawa, is "Buffalo Rock," an isolated ridge of rock about two miles long by forty to sixty rods wide, evidently once an island at a period when the Illinois River occupied the whole valley. Additional interest is given to both these localities by their association with early history. Deer Park, on the Vermilion River—some two miles from where it empties into the Illinois, just below "Starved

Rock"—is a peculiar grotto-like formation, caused by a ravine which enters the Vermilion at this point. Ascending this ravine from its mouth, for a quarter of a mile, between almost perpendicular walls, the road terminates abruptly at a dome-like overhanging rock which widens at this point to about 150 feet in diameter at the base, with a height of about 75 feet. A clear spring of water gushes from the base of the cliff, and, at certain seasons of the year, a beautiful water-fall pours from the cliffs into a little lake at the bottom of the chasm. There is much other striking scenery higher up, on both the Illinois and Fox Rivers.—A point which arrested the attention of the earliest explorers in this region was Mount Joliet, near the city of that name. It is first mentioned by St. Cosme in 1698, and has been variously known as Monjolly, Mont Jolie, Mount Juliet, and Mount Joliet. It had an elevation, in early times, of about 30 feet with a level top 1,300 by 225 feet. Prof. O. H. Marshall, in "The American Antiquarian," expresses the opinion that, originally, it was an island in the river, which, at a remote period, swept down the valley of the Des Plaines. Mount Joliet was a favorite rallying point of Illinois Indians, who were accustomed to hold their councils at its base.—The scenery along Rock River is not striking from its boldness, but it attracted the attention of early explorers by the picturesque beauty of its groves, undulating plains and sheets of water. The highest and most abrupt elevations are met with in Jo Daviess County, near the Wisconsin State line. Pilot Knob, a natural mound about three miles south of Galena and two miles from the Mississippi, has been a landmark well known to tourists and river men ever since the Upper Mississippi began to be navigated. Towering above the surrounding bluffs, it reaches an altitude of some 430 feet above the ordinary level of Fever River. A chain of some half dozen of these mounds extends some four or five miles in a northeasterly direction from Pilot Knob, Waddell's and Jackson's Mounds being conspicuous among them. There are also some castellated rocks around the city of Galena which are very striking. Charles Mound, belonging to the system already referred to, is believed to be the highest elevation in the State. It stands near the Wisconsin State line, and, according to Prof. Rolfe, has an altitude of 314 feet above the Illinois Central Railroad at Scales' Mound Station, and, 1,257 feet above the Gulf of Mexico.

SCHAUMBERG, a village in Schaumberg Township, Cook County. Population, 573.

SCHNEIDER, George, journalist and banker, was born at Pirmasens, Bavaria, Dec. 13, 1823. Being sentenced to death for his participation in the attempted rebellion of 1848, he escaped to America in 1849, going from New York to Cleveland, and afterwards to St. Louis. There, in connection with his brother, he established a German daily—"The New Era"—which was intensely anti-slavery and exerted a decided political influence, especially among persons of German birth. In 1851 he removed to Chicago, where he became editor of "The Staats Zeitung," in which he vigorously opposed the Kansas-Nebraska bill on its introduction by Senator Douglas. His attitude and articles gave such offense to the partisan friends of this measure, that "The Zeitung" was threatened with destruction by a mob in 1855. He early took advanced ground in opposition to slavery, and was a member of the convention of Anti-Nebraska editors, held at Decatur in 1856, and of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington the same year, as well as of the National Republican Conventions of 1856 and 1860, participating in the nomination of both John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. In 1861 he was a member of the Chicago Union Defense Committee, and was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Consul-General at Elsinore, Denmark. Returning to America in 1862, he disposed of his interest in "The Staats Zeitung" and was appointed the first Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District. On retiring from this office he engaged in banking, subsequently becoming President of the National Bank of Illinois, with which he was associated for a quarter of a century. In 1877 President Hayes tendered him the ministry to Switzerland, which he declined. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector for the State-at-large, also serving for a number of years as a member of the Republican State Central Committee.

SCHOFIELD, John McAllister, Major-General, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1831; brought to Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., in 1843, and, two years later, removed to Freeport; graduated from the United States Military Academy, in 1853, as classmate of Generals McPherson and Sheridan; was assigned to the artillery service and served two years in Florida, after which he spent five years (1855-60) as an instructor at West Point. At the beginning of the Civil War he was on leave of absence, acting as Professor of Physics in Washington University at St. Louis, but, waiving his leave, he at once returned to duty and was appointed mustering officer; then, by permission of the War Department, entered the First Missouri Volunteers as Major, serving as Chief of Staff to General Lyon in the early battles in Missouri, including Wilson's Creek. His subsequent career included the organization of the Missouri State Militia (1862), command of the Army of the Frontier in Southwest Missouri, command of the Department of the Missouri and Ohio, participation in the Atlanta campaign and co-operation with Sherman in the capture of the rebel Gen. Joseph E. Johnston in North Carolina—his army having been transferred for this purpose, from Tennessee by way of Washington. After the close of the war he went on a special mission to Mexico to investigate the French occupation of that country; was commander of the Department of the Potomac, and served as Secretary of War, by appointment of President Johnson, from June, 1868, to March, 1869. On retiring from the Cabinet he was commissioned a full Major-General and held various Division and Department commands until 1886, when, on the death of General Sherman, he succeeded to the command of the Army, with headquarters at Washington. He was retired under the age limit, Sept. 29, 1895. His present home is in Washington.

SCHOLFIELD, John, jurist, was born in Clark County, Ill., in 1834; acquired the rudiments of an education in the common schools during boyhood, meanwhile gaining some knowledge of the higher branches through toilsome application to text-books without a preceptor. At the age of 20 he entered the law school at Louisville, Ky., graduating two years later, and beginning practice at Marshall, Ill. He defrayed his expenses at the law school from the proceeds of the sale of a small piece of land to which he had fallen heir. In 1856 he was elected State's Attorney, and, in 1860, was chosen to represent his county in the Legislature. After serving one term he returned to his professional career and succeeded in building up a profitable practice. In 1869-70 he represented Clark and Cumberland Counties in the Constitutional Convention, and, in 1870, became Solicitor for the Vandalia Railroad. In 1873 he was elected to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of the State for the Middle Grand Division, caused by the resignation of Judge Anthony Thornton, and re-elected without opposition in 1879 and 1888. Died, in office, Feb. 13, 1893. It has been claimed that President Cleveland would have tendered him the Chief Justiceship of the United States Supreme Court, had he not insistently declined to accept the honor.

SCHOOL-HOUSES, EARLY. The primitive school-houses of Illinois were built of logs, and were extremely rude, as regards both structure and furnishing. Indeed, the earliest pioneers rarely erected a special building to be used as a school-house. An old smoke-house, an abandoned dwelling, an old block-house, or the loft or one end of a settler's cabin not unfrequently answered the purpose, and the church and the court-house were often made to accommodate the school. When a school-house, as such, was to be built, the men of the district gathered at the site selected, bringing their axes and a few other tools, with their ox-teams, and devoted four or five days to constructing a house into which, perhaps, not a nail was driven. Trees were cut from the public lands, and, without hewing, fashioned into a cabin. Sixteen feet square was usually considered the proper dimensions. In the walls were cut two holes, one for a door to admit light and air, and the other for the open fireplace, from which rose a chimney, usually built of sticks and mud, on the outside. Danger of fire was averted by thickly lining the inside of the chimney with clay mortar. Sometimes, but only with great labor, stone was substituted for mortar made from the clay soil. The chimneys were always wide, seldom less than six feet, and sometimes extending across one entire end of the building. The fuel used was wood cut directly from the forest, frequently in its green state, dragged to the spot in the form of logs or entire trees to be cut by the older pupils in lengths suited to the width of the chimney. Occasionally there was no chimney, the fire, in some of the most primitive structures, being built on the earth and the smoke escaping through a hole in the roof. In such houses a long board was set up on the windward side, and shifted from side to side as the wind varied. Stones or logs answered for andirons, clapboards served as shovels, and no one complained of the lack of tongs. Roofs were made of roughly split clapboards, held in place by "weight poles" laid on the boards, and by supports starting from "eaves poles." The space between the logs, which constituted the walls of the building, was filled in with blocks of wood or "chinking," and the crevices, both exterior and interior, daubed over with clay mortar, in which straw was sometimes mixed to increase its adhesiveness. On one side of the structure one or two logs were sometimes cut out to allow the admission of light; and, as glass could not always be procured, rain and snow were excluded and light admitted by the use of greased paper. Over this space a board, attached to the outer wall by leather hinges, was sometimes suspended to keep out the storms. The placing of a glass window in a country school-house at Edwardsville, in 1824, was considered an important event. Ordinarily the floor was of the natural earth, although this was sometimes covered with a layer of clay, firmly packed down. Only the more pretentious school-houses had "puncheon floors"; i. e., floors made of split logs roughly hewn. Few had "ceilings" (so-called), the latter being usually made of clapboards, sometimes of bark, on which was spread earth, to keep out the cold. The seats were also of puncheons (without backs) supported on four legs made of pieces of poles inserted through augur holes. No one had a desk, except the advanced pupils who were learning to write. For their convenience a broader and smoother puncheon was fastened into the wall by wooden pins, in such a way that it would slope downward toward the pupil, the front being supported by a brace extending from the wall. When a pupil was writing he faced the wall. When he had finished this task, he "reversed himself" and faced the teacher and his schoolmates. These adjuncts completed the furnishings, with the exception of a split-bottomed chair for the teacher (who seldom had a desk) and a pail, or "piggin," of water, with a gourd for a drinking cup. Rough and uncouth as these structures were, they were evidences of public spirit and of appreciation of the advantages of education. They were built and maintained by mutual aid and sacrifice, and, in them, some of the great men of the State and Nation obtained that primary training which formed the foundation of their subsequent careers. (See Education.)

SCHUYLER COUNTY, located in the western portion of the State, has an area of 430 square miles, and was named for Gen. Philip Schuyler. The first American settlers arrived in 1823, and, among the earliest pioneers, were Calvin Hobart, William H. Taylor and Orris McCartney. The county was organized from a portion of Pike County, in 1825, the first Commissioners being Thomas Blair, Thomas McKee and Samuel Horney. The Commissioners appointed to locate the county-seat, selected a site in the eastern part of the county about one mile west of the present village of Pleasant View, to which the name of Beardstown was given, and where the earliest court was held, Judge John York Sawyer presiding, with Hart Fellows as Clerk, and Orris McCartney, Sheriff. This location, however, proving unsatisfactory, new Commissioners were appointed, who, in the early part of 1826, selected the present site of the city of Rushville, some five miles west of the point originally chosen. The new seat of justice was first called Rushton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but the name was afterwards changed to Rushville. Ephraim Eggleston was the pioneer of Rushville. The surface of the county is rolling, and the region contains excellent farming land, which is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous creeks. Population (1890), 16,013; (1900), 16,129.

SCHWATKA, Frederick, Arctic explorer, was born at Galena, Ill., Sept. 29, 1849; graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1871, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Third Cavalry, serving on the frontier until 1877, meantime studying law and medicine, being admitted to the bar in 1875, and graduating in medicine in 1876. Having his interest excited by reports of traces of Sir John Franklin's expedition, found by the Esquimaux, he obtained leave of absence in 1878, and, with Wm. H. Gilder as second in command, sailed from New York in the "Eothen," June 19, for King William's Land. The party returned, Sept. 22, 1880, having found and buried the skeletons of many of Franklin's party, besides discovering relics which tended to clear up the mystery of their fate. During this period he made a sledge journey of 3,251 miles. Again, in 1883, he headed an exploring expedition up the Yukon River. After a brief return to army duty he tendered his resignation in 1885, and the next year led a special expedition to Alaska, under the auspices of "The New York Times," later making a voyage of discovery among the Aleutian Islands. In 1889 he conducted an expedition to Northern Mexico, where he found many interesting relics of Aztec civilization and of the cliff and cave-dwellers. He received the Roquette Arctic Medal from the Geographical Society of Paris, and a medal from the Imperial Geographical Society of Russia; also published several volumes relating to his researches, under the titles, "Along Alaska's Great River"; "The Franklin Search Under Lieutenant Schwatka"; "Nimrod of the North"; and "Children of the Cold." Died, at Portland, Ore., Nov. 2, 1892.

SCOTT, James W., journalist, was born in Walworth County, Wis., June 26, 1849, the son of a printer, editor and publisher. While a boy he accompanied his father to Galena, where the latter established a newspaper, and where he learned the printer's trade. After graduating from the Galena high school, he entered Beloit College, but left at the end of his sophomore year. Going to New York, he became interested in floriculture, at the same time contributing short articles to horticultural periodicals. Later he was a compositor in Washington. His first newspaper venture was the publication of a weekly newspaper in Maryland in 1872. Returning to Illinois, conjointly with his father he started "The Industrial Press" at Galena, but, in 1875, removed to Chicago. There he purchased "The Daily National Hotel Reporter," from which he withdrew a few years later. In May, 1881, in conjunction with others, he organized The Chicago Herald Company, in which he ultimately secured a controlling interest. His journalistic and executive capability soon brought additional responsibilities. He was chosen President of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, of the Chicago Press Club, and of the United Press—the latter being an organization for the collection and dissemination of telegraphic news to journals throughout the United States and Canada. He was also conspicuously connected with the preliminary organization of the World's Columbian Exposition, and Chairman of the Press Committee. In 1893 he started an evening paper at Chicago, which he named "The Post." Early in 1895 he purchased "The Chicago Times," intending to consolidate it with "The Herald," but before the final consummation of his plans, he died suddenly, while on a business visit in New York, April 14, 1895.

SCOTT, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., August 1, 1824; his father being of Scotch-Irish descent and his mother a Virginian. His attendance upon district schools was supplemented by private tuition, and his early education was the best that the comparatively new country afforded. He read law at Belleville, was admitted to the bar in 1848, removed to McLean County, which continued to be his home for nearly fifty years. He served as County School Commissioner from 1849 to 1852, and, in the latter year, was elected County Judge. In 1856 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for the State Senate, frequently speaking from the same platform with Abraham Lincoln. In 1862 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of the Eighth Judicial Circuit, to succeed David Davis on the elevation of the latter to the bench of the United States Supreme Court, and was re-elected in 1867. In 1870, a new judicial election being rendered necessary by the adoption of the new Constitution, Judge Scott was chosen Justice of the Supreme Court for a term of nine years; was re-elected in 1879, but declined a renomination in 1888. The latter years of his life were devoted to his private affairs. Died, at Bloomington, Jan. 21, 1898. Shortly before his death Judge Scott published a volume containing a History of the Illinois Supreme Court, including brief sketches of the early occupants of the Supreme Court bench and early lawyers of the State.

SCOTT, Matthew Thompson, agriculturist and real-estate operator, was born at Lexington, Ky., Feb. 24, 1828; graduated at Centre College in 1846, then spent several years looking after his father's landed interests in Ohio, when he came to Illinois and invested largely in lands for himself and others. He laid out the town of Chenoa in 1856; lived in Springfield in 1870-72, when he removed to Bloomington, where he organized the McLean County Coal Company, remaining as its head until his death; was also the founder of "The Bloomington Bulletin," in 1878. Died, at Bloomington, May 21, 1891.

SCOTT, Owen, journalist and ex-Congressman, was born in Jackson Township, Effingham County, Ill., July 6, 1848, reared on a farm, and, after receiving a thorough common-school education, became a teacher, and was, for eight years, Superintendent of Schools for his native county. In January, 1874, he was admitted to the bar, but abandoned practice, ten years later, to engage in newspaper work. His first publication was "The Effingham Democrat," which he left to become proprietor and manager of "The Bloomington Bulletin." He was also publisher of "The Illinois Freeman," a monthly periodical. Before removing to Bloomington he filled the offices of City Attorney and Mayor of Effingham, and also served as Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue. In 1890 he was elected as a Democrat from the Fourteenth Illinois District to the Fifty-second Congress. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Benjamin F. Funk. During the past few years, Mr. Scott has been editor of "The Bloomington Leader."

SCOTT COUNTY, lies in the western part of the State adjoining the Illinois River, and has an area of 248 square miles. The region was originally owned by the Kickapoo Indians, who ceded it to the Government by the treaty of Edwardsville, July 30, 1819. Six months later (in January, 1820) a party of Kentuckians settled near Lynnville (now in Morgan County), their names being Thomas Stevens, James Scott, Alfred Miller, Thomas Allen, John Scott and Adam Miller. Allen erected the first house in the county, John Scott the second and Adam Miller the third. About the same time came Stephen M. Umpstead, whose wife was the first white woman in the county. Other pioneers were Jedediah Webster, Stephen Pierce, Joseph Densmore, Jesse Roberts, and Samuel Bogard. The country was rough and the conveniences of civilization few and remote. Settlers took their corn to Edwardsville to be ground, and went to Alton for their mail. Turbulence early showed itself, and, in 1822, a band of "Regulators" was organized from the best citizens, who meted out a rough and ready sort of justice, until 1830, occasionally shooting a desperado at his cabin door. Scott County was cut off from Morgan and organized in 1839. It contains good farming land, much of it being originally timbered, and it is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous small streams. Winchester is the county-seat. Population of the county (1880), 10,741; (1890), 10,304; (1900), 10,455.

SCRIPPS, John L., journalist, was born near Cape Girardeau, Mo., Feb. 18, 1818; was taken to Rushville, Ill., in childhood, and educated at McKendree College; studied law and came to Chicago in 1847, with the intention of practicing, but, a year or so later, bought a third interest in "The Chicago Tribune," which had been established during the previous year. In 1852 he withdrew from "The Tribune," and, in conjunction with William Bross (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor), established "The Daily Democratic Press," which was consolidated with "The Tribune" in July, 1858, under the name of "The Press and Tribune," Mr. Scripps remaining one of the editors of the new concern. In 1861 he was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving until 1865, when, having sold his interest in "The Tribune," he engaged in the banking business as a member of the firm of Scripps, Preston & Kean. His health, however, soon showed signs of failure, and he died, Sept. 21, 1866, at Minneapolis, Minn., whither he had gone in hopes of restoration. Mr. Scripps was a finished and able writer who did much to elevate the standard of Chicago journalism.

SCROGGS, George, journalist, was born at Wilmington, Clinton, County, Ohio, Oct. 7, 1842—the son of Dr. John W. Scroggs, who came to Champaign County, Ill., in 1851, and, in 1858, took charge of "The Central Illinois Gazette." In 1866-67 Dr. Scroggs was active in securing the location of the State University at Champaign, afterwards serving as a member of the first Board of Trustees of that institution. The son, at the age of 15, became an apprentice in his father's printing office, continuing until 1862, when he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being promoted through the positions of Sergeant-Major and Second Lieutenant, and finally serving on the staffs of Gen. Jeff. C. Davis and Gen. James D. Morgan, but declining a commission as Adjutant of the Sixtieth Illinois. He participated in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge and the march with Sherman to the sea, in the latter being severely wounded at Bentonville, N. C. He remained in the service until July, 1865, when he resigned; then entered the University at Champaign, later studied law, meanwhile writing for "The Champaign Gazette and Union," of which he finally became sole proprietor. In 1877 he was appointed an Aid-de-Camp on the staff of Governor Cullom, and, the following year, was elected to the Thirty-first General Assembly, but, before the close of the session (1879), received the appointment of United States Consul to Hamburg, Germany. He was compelled to surrender this position, a year later, on account of ill-health, and, returning home, died, Oct. 15, 1880.

SEATONVILLE, a village in Hall Township, Bureau County. Population (1900), 909.

SECRETARIES OF STATE. The following is a list of the Secretaries of State of Illinois from its admission into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each incumbent: Elias Kent Kane, 1818-22; Samuel D. Lockwood, 1822-23; David Blackwell, 1823-24; Morris Birkbeck, October, 1824 to January, 1825 (failed of confirmation by the Senate); George Forquer, 1825-28; Alexander Pope Field, 1828-40; Stephen A. Douglas, 1840-41 (served three months—resigned to take a seat on the Supreme bench); Lyman Trumbull, 1841-43; Thompson Campbell, 1843-46; Horace S. Cooley, 1846-50; David L. Gregg, 1850-53; Alexander Starne, 1853-57; Ozias M. Hatch, 1857-65; Sharon Tyndale, 1865-69; Edward Rummel, 1869-73; George H. Harlow, 1873-81; Henry D. Dement, 1881-89; Isaac N. Pearson, 1889-93; William H. Hinrichsen, 1893-97; James A. Rose, 1897—. Nathaniel Pope and Joseph Phillips were the only Secretaries of Illinois during the Territorial period, the former serving from 1809 to 1816, and the latter from 1816 to 1818. Under the first Constitution (1818) the office of the Secretary of State was filled by appointment by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but without limitation as to term of office. By the Constitution of 1848, and again by that of 1870, that officer was made elective by the people at the same time as the Governor, for a term of four years.

SECRET TREASONABLE SOCIETIES. Early in the War of the Rebellion there sprang up, at various points in the Northwest, organizations of persons disaffected toward the National Government. They were most numerous in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Missouri. At first they were known by such titles as "Circles of Honor," "Mutual Protective Associations," etc. But they had kindred aims and their members were soon united in one organization, styled "Knights of the Golden Circle." Its secrets having been partially disclosed, this body ceased to exist—or, it would be more correct to say, changed its name—being soon succeeded (1863) by an organization of similar character, called the "American Knights." These societies, as first formed, were rather political than military. The "American Knights" had more forcible aims, but this, in turn, was also exposed, and the order was re-organized under the name of "Sons of Liberty." The last named order started in Indiana, and, owing to its more perfect organization, rapidly spread over the Northwest, acquiring much more strength and influence than its predecessors had done. The ultimate authority of the organization was vested in a Supreme Council, whose officers were a "supreme commander," "secretary of state," and "treasurer." Each State represented formed a division, under a "deputy grand commander." States were divided into military districts, under "major-generals." County lodges were termed "temples." The order was virtually an officered army, and its aims were aggressive. It had its commander-in-chief, its brigades and its regiments. Three degrees were recognized, and the oaths of secrecy taken at each initiation surpassed, in binding force, either the oath of allegiance or an oath taken in a court of justice. The maintenance of slavery, and forcible opposition to a coercive policy by the Government in dealing with secession, were the pivotal doctrines of the order. Its methods and purposes were to discourage enlistments and resist a draft; to aid and protect deserters; to disseminate treasonable literature; to aid the Confederates in destroying Government property. Clement L. Vallandigham, the expatriated traitor, was at its head, and, in 1864, claimed that it had a numerical strength of 400,000, of whom 65,000 were in Illinois. Many overt acts were committed, but the organization, having been exposed and defeated in its objects, disbanded in 1865. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.)

SELBY, Paul, editor, was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, July 20, 1825; removed with his parents, in 1837, to Van Buren County, Iowa, but, at the age of 19, went to Southern Illinois, where he spent four years teaching, chiefly in Madison County. In 1848 he entered the preparatory department of Illinois College at Jacksonville, but left the institution during his junior year to assume the editorship of "The Morgan Journal," at Jacksonville, with which he remained until the fall of 1858, covering the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which "The Journal" took an active part. He was a member of the Anti-Nebraska (afterwards known as Republican) State Convention, which met at Springfield, in October, 1854 (the first ever held in the State), and, on Feb. 22, 1856, attended and presided over a conference of Anti-Nebraska editors of the State at Decatur, called to devise a line of policy for the newly organizing Republican party. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) This body appointed the first Republican State Central Committee and designated the date of the Bloomington Convention of May 29, following, which put in nomination the first Republican State ticket ever named in Illinois, which ticket was elected in the following November (See Bloomington Convention.) In 1859 he prepared a pamphlet giving a history of the celebrated Canal scrip fraud, which was widely circulated. (See Canal Scrip Fraud.) Going South in the fall of 1859, he was engaged in teaching in the State of Louisiana until the last of June, 1861. Just two weeks before the fall of Fort Sumter he was denounced to his Southern neighbors as an "abolitionist" and falsely charged with having been connected with the "underground railroad," in letters from secession sympathizers in the North, whose personal and political enmity he had incurred while conducting a Republican paper in Illinois, some of whom referred to Jefferson Davis, Senator Slidell, of Louisiana, and other Southern leaders as vouchers for their characters. He at once invited an investigation by the Board of Trustees of the institution, of which he was the Principal, when that body—although composed, for the most part, of Southern men—on the basis of testimonials from prominent citizens of Jacksonville, and other evidence, adopted resolutions declaring the charges prompted by personal hostility, and delivered the letters of his accusers into his hands. Returning North with his family in July, 1861, he spent some nine months in the commissary and transportation branches of the service at Cairo and at Paducah, Ky. In July, 1862, he became associate editor of "The Illinois State Journal" at Springfield, remaining until November, 1865. The next six months were spent as Assistant Deputy Collector in the Custom House at New Orleans, but, returning North in June, 1866, he soon after became identified with the Chicago press, serving, first upon the staff of "The Evening Journal" and, later, on "The Republican." In May, 1868, he assumed the editorship of "The Quincy Whig," ultimately becoming part proprietor of that paper, but, in January, 1874, resumed his old place on "The State Journal," four years later becoming one of its proprietors. In 1880 he was appointed by President Hayes Postmaster of Springfield, was reappointed by Arthur in 1884, but resigned in 1886. Meanwhile he had sold his interest in "The Journal," but the following year organized a new company for its purchase, when he resumed his former position as editor. In 1889 he disposed of his holding in "The Journal," finally removing to Chicago, where he has been employed in literary work. In all he has been engaged in editorial work over thirty-five years, of which eighteen were spent upon "The State Journal." In 1860 Mr. Selby was complimented by his Alma Mater with the honorary degree of A. M. He has been twice married, first to Miss Erra Post, of Springfield, who died in November, 1865, leaving two daughters, and, in 1870, to Mrs. Mary J. Hitchcock, of Quincy, by whom he had two children, both of whom died in infancy.

SEMPLE, James, United States Senator, was born in Green County, Ky., Jan. 5, 1798, of Scotch descent; after learning the tanner's trade, studied law and emigrated to Illinois in 1818, removing to Missouri four years later, where he was admitted to the bar. Returning to Illinois in 1828, he began practice at Edwardsville, but later became a citizen of Alton. During the Black Hawk War he served as Brigadier-General. He was thrice elected to the lower house of the Legislature (1832, '34 and '36), and was Speaker during the last two terms. In 1833 he was elected Attorney-General by the Legislature, but served only until the following year, and, in 1837, was appointed Minister to Granada, South America. In 1843 he was appointed, and afterwards elected, United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Samuel McRoberts, at the expiration of his term (1847) retiring to private life. He laid out the town of Elsau, in Jersey County, just south of which he owned a large estate on the Mississippi bluffs, where he died. Dec. 20, 1866.

SENECA (formerly Crotty), a village of La Salle County, situated on the Illinois River, the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 13 miles east of Ottawa. It has a graded school, several churches, a bank, some manufactures, grain warehouses, coal mines, telephone system and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,190; (1900), 1,036.

SENN, (Dr.) Nicholas, physician and surgeon, was born in the Canton of St. Gaul, Switzerland, Oct. 31, 1844; was brought to America at 8 years of age, his parents settling at Washington, Wis. He received a grammar school education at Fond du Lac, and, in 1864, began the study of medicine, graduating at the Chicago Medical College in 1868. After some eighteen months spent as resident physician in the Cook County Hospital, he began practice at Ashford, Wis., but removed to Milwaukee in 1874, where he became attending physician of the Milwaukee Hospital. In 1877 he visited Europe, graduated the following year from the University of Munich, and, on his return, became Professor of the Principles of Surgery and Surgical Pathology in Rush Medical College in Chicago—also has held the chair of the Practice of Surgery in the same institution. Dr. Senn has achieved great success and won an international reputation in the treatment of difficult cases of abdominal surgery. He is the author of a number of volumes on different branches of surgery which are recognized as standard authorities. A few years ago he purchased the extensive library of the late Dr. William Baum, Professor of Surgery in the University of Gottingen, which he presented to the Newberry Library of Chicago. In 1893, Dr. Senn was appointed Surgeon-General of the Illinois National Guard, and has also been President of the Association of Military Surgeons of the National Guard of the United States, besides being identified with various other medical bodies. Soon after the beginning of the Spanish-American War, he was appointed, by President McKinley, a Surgeon of Volunteers with the rank of Colonel, and rendered most efficient aid in the military branch of the service at Camp Chickamauga and in the Santiago campaign.

SEXTON, (Col.) James A., Commander-in-Chief of Grand Army of the Republic, was born in the city of Chicago, Jan. 5, 1844; in April, 1861, being then only a little over 17, enlisted as a private soldier under the first call for troops issued by President Lincoln; at the close of his term was appointed a Sergeant, with authority to recruit a company which afterwards was attached to the Fifty-first Volunteer Infantry. Later, he was transferred to the Sixty-seventh with the rank of Lieutenant, and, a few months after, to the Seventy-second with a commission as Captain of Company D, which he had recruited. As commander of his regiment, then constituting a part of the Seventeenth Army Corps, he participated in the battles of Columbia, Duck Creek, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, and in the Nashville campaign. Both at Nashville and Franklin he was wounded, and again, at Spanish Fort, by a piece of shell which broke his leg. His regiment took part in seven battles and eleven skirmishes, and, while it went out 967 strong in officers and men, it returned with only 332, all told, although it had been recruited by 234 men. He was known as "The boy Captain," being only 18 years old when he received his first commission, and 21 when, after participating in the Mobile campaign, he was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he engaged in planting in the South, purchasing a plantation in Lowndes County, Ala., but, in 1867, returned to Chicago, where he became a member of the firm of Cribben, Sexton & Co., stove manufacturers, from which he retired in 1898. In 1884 he served as Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket for the Fourth District, and, in 1889, was appointed, by President Harrison, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving over five years. In 1888 he was chosen Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, and, ten years later, to the position of Commander-in-Chief of the order, which he held at the time of his death. He had also been, for a number of years, one of the Trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, and, during most of the time, President of the Board. Towards the close of the year 1898, he was appointed by President McKinley a member of the Commission to investigate the conduct of the Spanish-American War, but, before the Commission had concluded its labors, was taken with "the grip," which developed into pneumonia, from which he died in Washington, Feb. 5, 1899.

SEYMOUR, George Franklin, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, Jan. 5, 1829; graduated from Columbia College in 1850, and from the General Theological Seminary (New York) in 1854. He received both minor and major orders at the hands of Bishop Potter, being made deacon in 1854 and ordained priest in 1855. For several years he was engaged in missionary work. During this period he was prominently identified with the founding of St. Stephen's College. After serving as rector in various parishes, in 1865 he was made Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the New York Seminary, and, ten years later, was chosen Dean of the institution, still retaining his professorship. Racine College conferred upon him the degree of S.T.D., in 1867, and Columbia that of LL.D. in 1878. In 1874 he was elected Bishop of Illinois, but failed of confirmation in the House of Deputies. Upon the erection of the new diocese of Springfield (1877) he accepted and was consecrated Bishop at Trinity Church, N. Y., June 11, 1878. He was a prominent member of the Third Pan-Anglican Council (London, 1885), and has done much to foster the growth and extend the influence of his church in his diocese.

SHABBONA, a village of De Kalb County, on the Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 25 miles west of Aurora. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 587.

SHABONA (or Shabbona), an Ottawa Chief, was born near the Maumee River, in Ohio, about 1775, and served under Tecumseh from 1807 to the battle of the Thames in 1813. In 1810 he accompanied Tecumseh and Capt. Billy Caldwell (see Sauganash) to the homes of the Pottawatomies and other tribes within the present limits of Illinois and Wisconsin, to secure their co-operation in driving the white settlers out of the country. At the battle of the Thames, he was by the side of Tecumseh when he fell, and both he and Caldwell, losing faith in their British allies, soon after submitted to the United States through General Cass at Detroit. Shabona was opposed to Black Hawk in 1832, and did much to thwart the plans of the latter and aid the whites. Having married a daughter of a Pottawatomie chief, who had a village on the Illinois River east of the present city of Ottawa, he lived there for some time, but finally removed 25 miles north to Shabona's Grove in De Kalb County. Here he remained till 1837, when he removed to Western Missouri. Black Hawk's followers having a reservation near by, hostilities began between them, in which a son and nephew of Shabona were killed. He finally returned to his old home in Illinois, but found it occupied by whites, who drove him from the grove that bore his name. Some friends then bought for him twenty acres of land on Mazon Creek, near Morris, where he died, July 27, 1859. He is described as a noble specimen of his race. A life of him has been published by N. Matson (Chicago, 1878).

SHANNON, a village of Carroll County, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 18 miles southwest of Freeport. It is an important trade center, has a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 591; (1900), 678.

SHAW, Aaron, former Congressman, born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1811; was educated at the Montgomery Academy, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Goshen in that State. In 1833 he removed to Lawrence County, Ill. He has held various important public offices. He was a member of the first Internal Improvement Convention of the State; was chosen State's Attorney by the Legislature, in which body he served two terms; served four years as Judge of the Twenty-fifth Judicial Circuit; was elected to the Thirty-fifth Congress in 1856, and to the Forty-eighth in 1882, as a Democrat.

SHAW, James, lawyer, jurist, was born in Ireland, May 3, 1832, brought to this country in infancy and grew up on a farm in Cass County, Ill.; graduated from Illinois College in 1857, and, after admission to the bar, began practice at Mount Carroll. In 1870 he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, being re-elected in 1872, '76 and '78. He was Speaker of the House during the session of 1877, and one of the Republican leaders on the floor during the succeeding session. In 1872 he was chosen a Presidential Elector, and, in 1891, to a seat on the Circuit bench from the Thirteenth Circuit, and, in 1897 was re-elected for the Fifteenth Circuit.

SHAWNEETOWN, a city and the county-seat of Gallatin County, on the Ohio River 120 miles from its mouth and at the terminus of the Shawneetown Divisions of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Louisville & Nashville Railroads; is one of the oldest towns in the State, having been laid out in 1808, and noted for the number of prominent men who resided there at an early day. Coal is extensively mined in that section, and Shawneetown is one of the largest shipping points for lumber, coal and farm products between Cairo and Louisville, navigation being open the year round. Some manufacturing is done here; the city has several mills, a foundry and machine shop, two or three banks, several churches, good schools and two weekly papers. Since the disastrous floods of 1884 and 1898, Shawneetown has reconstructed its levee system on a substantial scale, which is now believed to furnish ample protection against the recurrence of similar disaster. Pop. (1900), 1,698; (1903, est.), 2,200.

SHEAHAN, James W., journalist, was born in Baltimore, Md., spent his early life, after reaching manhood, in Washington City as a Congressional Reporter, and, in 1847, reported the proceedings of the Illinois State Constitutional Convention at Springfield. Through the influence of Senator Douglas he was induced, in 1854, to accept the editorship of "The Young America" newspaper at Chicago, which was soon after changed to "The Chicago Times." Here he remained until the fall of 1860, when, "The Times" having been sold and consolidated with "The Herald," a Buchanan-Breckenridge organ, he established a new paper called "The Morning Post." This he made representative of the views of the "War Democrats" as against "The Times," which was opposed to the war. In May, 1865, he sold the plant of "The Post" and it became "The Chicago Republican" — now "Inter Ocean." A few months later, Mr. Sheahan accepted a position as chief writer on the editorial staff of "The Chicago Tribune," which he retained until his death, June 17, 1883.

SHEFFIELD, a prosperous village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, 44 miles east of Rock Island; has valuable coal mines, a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 993; (1900), 1,265.

SHELBY COUNTY, lies south of the center of the State, and contains an area of 776 square miles. The tide of immigration to this county was at first from Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina, although later it began to set in from the Northern States. The first cabin in the county was built by Simeon Wakefield on what is now the site of Williamsburg, first called Cold Spring. Joseph Daniel was the earliest settler in what is now Shelbyville, pre-empting ten acres, which he soon afterward sold to Joseph Oliver, the pioneer merchant of the county, and father of the first white child born within its limits. Other pioneers were Shimei Wakefield, Levi Casey and Samuel Hall. In lieu of hats the early settlers wore caps made of squirrel or coon skin, with the tails dangling at the backs, and he was regarded as well dressed who boasted a fringed buckskin shirt and trousers, with moccasins. The county was formed in 1827, and Shelbyville made the county-seat. Both county and town are named in honor of Governor Shelby, of Kentucky. County Judge Joseph Oliver held the first court in the cabin of Barnett Bone, and Judge Theophilus W. Smith presided over the first Circuit Court in 1828. Coal is abundant, and limestone and sandstone are also found. The surface is somewhat rolling and well wooded. The Little Wabash and Kaskaskia Rivers flow through the central and southeastern portions. The county lies in the very heart of the great corn belt of the State, and has excellent transportation facilities, being penetrated by four lines of railway. Population (1880), 30,270; (1890), 31,191; (1900), 32,126.

SHELBYVILLE, the county-seat and an incorporated city of Shelby County, on the Kaskaskia River and two lines of railway, 32 miles southeast of Decatur. Agriculture is carried on extensively, and there is considerable coal mining in the immediate vicinity. The city has two flouring mills, a handle factory, a creamery, one National and one State bank, one daily and four weekly papers and one monthly periodical, an Orphans' Home, ten churches, two graded schools, and a public library. Population (1890), 3,162; (1900), 3,546.

SHELDON, a village of Iroquois County, at the intersection of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railways, 9 miles east of Watseka; has two banks and a newspaper. The region is agricultural. Pop. (1890), 910; (1900), 1,103.

SHELDON, Benjamin R., jurist, was born in Massachusetts in 1813, graduated from Williams College in 1831, studied law at the Yale Law School, and was admitted to practice in 1836. Emigrating to Illinois, he located temporarily at Hennepin, Putnam County, but soon removed to Galena, and finally to Rockford. In 1848 he was elected Circuit Judge of the Sixth Circuit, which afterwards being divided, he was assigned to the Fourteenth Circuit, remaining until 1870, when he was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, presiding as Chief Justice in 1877. He was re-elected in 1879, but retired in 1888, being succeeded by the late Justice Bailey. Died, April 13, 1897.

SHEPPARD, Nathan, author and lecturer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1834; graduated at Rochester Theological Seminary in 1859; during the Civil War was special correspondent of "The New York World" and "The Chicago Journal" and "Tribune," and, during the Franco-German War, of "The Cincinnati Gazette;" also served as special American correspondent of "The London Times," and was a contributor to "Frazer's Magazine" and "Temple Bar." In 1873 he became a lecturer on Modern English Literature and Rhetoric in Chicago University and, four years later, accepted a similar position in Allegheny College; also spent four years in Europe, lecturing in the principal towns of Great Britain and Ireland. In 1884 he founded the "Athenaeum" at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., of which he was President until his death, early in 1888. "The Dickens Reader," "Character Readings from George Eliot" and "Essays of George Eliot" were among the volumes issued by him between 1881 and 1887. Died in New York City, Jan. 24, 1888.

SHERMAN, Alson Smith, early Chicago Mayor, was born at Barre, Vt., April 21, 1811, remaining there until 1836, when he came to Chicago and began business as a contractor and builder. Several years later he opened the first stone quarries at Lemont, Ill. Mr. Sherman spent many years in the service of Chicago as a public official. From 1840 to 1842 he was Captain of a company of militia; for two years served as Chief of the Fire Department, and was elected Alderman in 1842, serving again in 1846. In 1844, he was chosen Mayor, his administration being marked by the first extensive public improvements made in Chicago. After his term as Mayor he did much to secure a better water supply for the city. He was especially interested in promoting common school education, being for several years a member of the City School Board. He was Vice-President of the first Board of Trustees of Northwestern University. Retired from active pursuits, Mr. Sherman is now (1899) spending a serene old age at Waukegan, Ill.—Oren (Sherman) brother of the preceding and early Chicago merchant, was born at Barre, Vt., March 5, 1816. After spending several years in a mercantile house in Montpelier, Vt., at the age of twenty he came west, first to New Buffalo, Mich., and, in 1836, to Chicago, opening a dry-goods store there the next spring. With various partners Mr. Sherman continued in a general mercantile business until 1853, at the same time being extensively engaged in the provision trade, one-half the entire transactions in pork in the city passing through his hands. Next he engaged in developing stone quarries at Lemont, Ill.; also became extensively interested in the marble business, continuing in this until a few years after the panic of 1873, when he retired in consequence of a shock of paralysis. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 15, 1898.

SHERMAN, Elijah B., lawyer, was born at Fairfield, Vt., June 18, 1832—his family being distantly related to Roger Sherman, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and the late Gen. W. T. Sherman; gained his education in the common schools and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1860; began teaching, but soon after enlisted as a private in the war for the Union; received a Lieutenant's commission, and served until captured on the eve of the battle at Antietam, when he was paroled and sent to Camp Douglas, Chicago, awaiting exchange. During this period he commenced reading law and, having resigned his commission, graduated from the law department of Chicago University in 1864. In 1876 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Cook County, and re-elected in 1878, and the following year appointed Master in Chancery of the United States District Court, a position which he still occupies. He has repeatedly been called upon to deliver addresses on political, literary and patriotic occasions, one of these being before the alumni of his alma mater, in 1884, when he was complimented with the degree of LL.D.

SHIELDS, James, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Ireland in 1810, emigrated to the United States at the age of sixteen and began the practice of law at Kaskaskia in 1832. He was elected to the Legislature in 1836, and State Auditor in 1839. In 1843 he became a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, and, in 1845, was made Commissioner of the General Land Office. In July, 1846, he was commissioned Brigadier-General in the Mexican War gaining the brevet of Major-General at Cerro-Gordo, where he was severely wounded. He was again wounded at Chapultepec, and mustered out in 1848. The same year he was appointed Governor of Oregon Territory. In 1849 the Democrats in the Illinois Legislature elected him Senator, and he resigned his office in Oregon. In 1856 he removed to Minnesota, and, in 1858, was chosen United States Senator from that State, his term expiring in 1859, when he established a residence in California. At the outbreak of the Civil War (1861) he was superintending a mine in Mexico, but at once hastened to Washington to tender his services to the Government. He was commissioned Brigadier-General, and served with distinction until March, 1863, when the effect of numerous wounds caused him to resign. He subsequently removed to Missouri, practicing law at Carrollton and serving in the Legislature of that State in 1874 and 1879. In the latter year he was elected United States Senator to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Bogy, who had died in office—serving only six weeks, but being the only man in the history of the country who filled the office of United States Senator from three different States. Died, at Ottumwa, Iowa, June 1, 1879.

SHIPMAN, a town of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 19 miles north-northeast of Alton and 14 miles southwest of Carlinville. Population (1890), 410; (1900), 396.

SHIPMAN, George E., M.D., physician and philanthropist, born in New York City, March 4, 1820; graduated at the University of New York in 1839, and took a course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons; practiced for a time at Peoria, Ill., but, in 1846, located in Chicago, where he assisted in organizing the first Homeopathic Hospital in that city, and, in 1855, was one of the first Trustees of Hahnemann College. In 1871 he established, in Chicago, the Foundlings' Home at his own expense, giving to it the latter years of his life. Died, Jan. 20, 1893.

SHOREY, Daniel Lewis, lawyer and philanthropist, was born at Jonesborough, Washington County, Maine, Jan. 31, 1824; educated at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and at Dartmouth College, graduating from the latter in 1851; taught two years in Washington City, meanwhile reading law, afterwards taking a course at Dane Law School, Cambridge; was admitted to the bar in Boston in 1854, the next year locating at Davenport, Iowa, where he remained ten years. In 1865 he removed to Chicago, where he prosecuted his profession until 1890, when he retired. Mr. Shorey was prominent in the establishment of the Chicago Public Library, and a member of the first Library Board; was also a prominent member of the Chicago Literary Club, and was a Director in the new University of Chicago and deeply interested in its prosperity. Died, in Chicago, March 4, 1899.

SHORT, (Rev.) William F., clergyman and educator, was born in Ohio in 1829, brought to Morgan County, Ill., in childhood, and lived upon a farm until 20 years of age, when he entered McKendree College, spending his senior year, however, at Wesleyan University, Bloomington, where he graduated in 1854. He had meanwhile accepted a call to the Missouri Conference Seminary at Jackson, Mo.; where he remained three years, when he returned to Illinois, serving churches at Jacksonville and elsewhere, for a part of the time being Presiding Elder of the Jacksonville District. In 1875 he was elected President of Illinois Female College at Jacksonville, continuing in that position until 1893, when he was appointed Superintendent of the Illinois State Institution for the Blind at the same place, but resigned early in 1897. Dr. Short received the degree of D.D., conferred upon him by Ohio Wesleyan University.

SHOUP, George L., United States Senator, was born at Kittanning, Pa., June 15, 1836; came to Illinois in 1852, his father locating on a stock-farm near Galesburg; in 1859 removed to Colorado, where he engaged in mining and mercantile business until 1861, when he enlisted in a company of scouts, being advanced from the rank of First Lieutenant to the Colonelcy of the Third Colorado Cavalry, meanwhile serving as Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1864. Retiring to private life, he again engaged in mercantile and mining business, first in Nevada and then in Idaho; served two terms in the Territorial Legislature of the latter, was appointed Territorial Governor in 1889 and, in 1890, was chosen the first Governor of the State, in October of the same year being elected to the United States Senate, and re-elected in 1895 for a second term, which ends in 1901. Senator Shoup is one of the few Western Senators who remained faithful to the regular Republican organization, during the political campaign of 1896.

SHOWALTER, John W., jurist, was born in Mason County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1844; resided some years in Scott County in that State, and was educated in the local schools, at Maysville and Ohio University, finally graduating at Yale College in 1867; came to Chicago in 1869, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1870. He returned to Kentucky after the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, again came to Chicago and entered the employment of the firm of Moore & Caulfield, with whom he had been before the fire. In 1879 he became a member of the firm of Abbott, Oliver & Showalter (later, Oliver & Showalter), where he remained until his appointment as United States Circuit Judge, in March, 1895. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 12, 1898.

SHUMAN, Andrew, journalist and Lieutenant-Governor, was born at Manor, Lancaster County, Pa., Nov. 8, 1830. His father dying in 1837, he was reared by an uncle. At the age of 15 he became an apprentice in the office of "The Lancaster Union and Sentinel." A year later he accompanied his employer to Auburn, N.Y., working for two years on "The Daily Advertiser" of that city, then known as Governor Seward's "home organ." At the age of 18 he edited, published and distributed—during his leisure hours—a small weekly paper called "The Auburnian." At the conclusion of his apprenticeship he was employed, for a year or two, in editing and publishing "The Cayuga Chief," a temperance journal.

In 1851 he entered Hamilton College, but, before the completion of his junior year, consented, at the solicitation of friends of William H. Seward, to assume editorial control of "The Syracuse Daily Journal." In July, 1856, he came to Chicago, to accept an editorial position on "The Evening Journal" of that city, later becoming editor-in-chief and President of the Journal Company. From 1865 to 1870 (first by executive appointment and afterward by popular election) he was a Commissioner of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet, resigning the office four years before the expiration of his term. In 1876 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket. Owing to declining health, he abandoned active journalistic work in 1888, dying in Chicago, May 5, 1890. His home during the latter years of his life was at Evanston. Governor Shuman was author of a romance entitled "Loves of a Lawyer," besides numerous addresses before literary, commercial and scientific associations.

SHUMWAY, Dorice Dwight, merchant, was born at Williamsburg, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 28, 1813, descended from French Huguenot ancestry; came to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1837, and to Montgomery County, Ill., in 1841; married a daughter of Hiram Rountree, an early resident of Hillsboro, and, in 1843, located in Christian County; was engaged for a time in merchandising at Taylorville, but retired in 1858, thereafter giving his attention to a large landed estate. In 1846 he was chosen Representative in the General Assembly, served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and four years as County Judge of Christian County. Died, May 9, 1870.—Hiram P. (Shumway), eldest son of the preceding, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., June, 1842; spent his boyhood on a farm in Christian County and in his father's store at Taylorville; took an academy course and, in 1864, engaged in mercantile business; was Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly and Senator in the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh, afterwards removing to Springfield, where he engaged in the stone business.

SHURTLEFF COLLEGE, an institution located at Upper Alton, and the third established in Illinois. It was originally incorporated as the "Alton College" in 1831, under a special charter which was not accepted, but re-incorporated in 1835, in an "omnibus bill" with Illinois and McKendree Colleges. (See Early Colleges.) Its primal origin was a school at Rock Spring in St. Clair County, founded about 1824, by Rev. John M. Peck. This became the "Rock Spring Seminary" in 1827, and, about 1831, was united with an academy at Upper Alton. This was the nucleus of "Alton" (afterward "Shurtleff") College. As far as its denominational control is concerned, it has always been dominated by Baptist influence. Dr. Peck's original idea was to found a school for teaching theology and Biblical literature, but this project was at first inhibited by the State. Hubbard Loomis and John Russell were among the first instructors. Later, Dr. Benjamin Shurtleff donated the college $10,000, and the institution was named in his honor. College classes were not organized until 1840, and several years elapsed before a class graduated. Its endowment in 1898 was over $126,000, in addition to $125,000 worth of real and personal property. About 255 students were in attendance. Besides preparatory and collegiate departments, the college also maintains a theological school. It has a faculty of twenty instructors and is co-educational.

SIBLEY, a village of Ford County, on the Chicago Division of the Wabash Railway, 105 miles south-southwest of Chicago; has banks and a weekly newspaper. The district is agricultural. Population (1890), 404; (1900), 444.

SIBLEY, Joseph, lawyer and jurist, was born at Westfield, Mass., in 1818; learned the trade of a whip-maker and afterwards engaged in merchandising. In 1843 he began the study of law at Syracuse, N. Y., and, upon admission to the bar, came west, finally settling at Nauvoo, Hancock County. He maintained a neutral attitude during the Mormon troubles, thus giving offense to a section of the community. In 1847 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Legislature, but was elected in 1850, and re-elected in 1852. In 1853 he removed to Warsaw, and, in 1855, was elected Judge of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1861, '67 and '73, being assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Second District, in 1877. His residence, after 1865, was at Quincy, where he died, June 18, 1897.

SIDELL, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroads; has a bank, electric light plant and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 776.

SIDNEY, a village of Champaign County, on the main line of the Wabash Railway, at the junction of a branch to Champaign, 48 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is in a farming district; has a bank and a newspaper. Population, (1900), 564.

SIM, (Dr.) William, pioneer physician, was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1795, came to America in early manhood, and was the first physician to settle at Golconda, in Pope County, which he represented in the Fourth and Fifth General Assemblies (1824 and '28). He married a Miss Elizabeth Jack of Philadelphia, making the journey from Golconda to Philadelphia for that purpose on horseback. He had a family of five children, one son, Dr. Francis L. Sim, rising to distinction as a physician, and, for a time, being President of a Medical College at Memphis, Tenn. The elder Dr. Sim died at Golconda, in 1868.

SIMS, James, early legislator and Methodist preacher, was a native of South Carolina, but removed to Kentucky in early manhood, thence to St. Clair County, Ill., and, in 1820, to Sangamon County, where he was elected, in 1822, as the first Representative from that county in the Third General Assembly. At the succeeding session of the Legislature, he was one of those who voted against the Convention resolution designed to prepare the way for making Illinois a slave State. Mr. Sims resided for a time in Menard County, but finally removed to Morgan.

SINGER, Horace M., capitalist, was born in Schnectady, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1823; came to Chicago in 1836 and found employment on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as superintendent of repairs upon the Canal until 1853. While thus employed he became one of the proprietors of the stone-quarries at Lemont, managed by the firm of Singer & Talcott until about 1890, when they became the property of the Western Stone Company. Originally a Democrat, he became a Republican during the Civil War, and served as a member of the Twenty-fifth General Assembly (1867) for Cook County, was elected County Commissioner in 1870, and was Chairman of the Republican County Central Committee in 1880. He was also associated with several financial institutions, being a director of the First National Bank and of the Auditorium Company of Chicago, and a member of the Union League and Calumet Clubs. Died, at Pasadena, Cal., Dec. 28, 1896.

SINGLETON, James W., Congressman, born at Paxton, Va., Nov. 23, 1811; was educated at the Winchester (Va.) Academy, and removed to Illinois in 1833, settling first at Mount Sterling, Brown County, and, some twenty years later, near Quincy. By profession he was a lawyer, and was prominent in political and commercial affairs. In his later years he devoted considerable attention to stock-raising. He was elected Brigadier-General of the Illinois militia in 1844, being identified to some extent with the "Mormon War"; was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, served six terms in the Legislature, and was elected, on the Democratic ticket, to Congress in 1878, and again in 1880. In 1882 he ran as an independent Democrat, but was defeated by the regular nominee of his party, James M. Riggs. During the War of the Rebellion he was one of the most conspicuous leaders of the "peace party." He constructed the Quincy & Toledo (now part of the Wabash) and the Quincy, Alton & St. Louis (now part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy) Railways, being President of both companies. His death occurred at Baltimore, Md., April 4, 1892.

SINNET, John S., pioneer, was born at Lexington, Ky., March 10, 1796; at three years of age, taken by his parents to Missouri; enlisted in the War of 1812, but, soon after the war, came to Illinois, and, about 1818, settled in what is now Christian County, locating on land constituting a part of the present city of Taylorville. In 1840 he removed to Tazewell County, dying there, Jan. 13, 1872.

SKINNER, Mark, jurist, was born at Manchester, Vt., Sept. 13, 1813; graduated from Middlebury College in 1833, studied law, and, in 1836, came to Chicago; was admitted to the bar in 1839, became City Attorney in 1840, later Master in Chancery for Cook County, and finally United States District Attorney under President Tyler. As member of the House Finance Committee in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), he aided influentially in securing the adoption of measures for refunding and paying the State debt. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the Court of Common Pleas (now Superior Court) of Cook County, but declined a re-election in 1853. Originally a Democrat, Judge Skinner was an ardent opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill and a liberal supporter of the Government policy during the rebellion. He liberally aided the United States Sanitary Commission and was identified with all the leading charities of the city. Among the great business enterprises with which he was officially associated were the Galena & Chicago Union and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways (in each of which he was a Director), the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, the Gas-Light and Coke Company and others. Died, Sept. 16, 1887. Judge Skinner's only surviving son was killed in the trenches before Petersburg, the last year of the Civil War.

SKINNER, Otis Ainsworth, clergyman and author, was born at Royalton, Vt., July 3, 1807; taught for some time, became a Universalist minister, serving churches in Baltimore, Boston and New York between 1831 and 1857; then came to Elgin, Ill., was elected President of Lombard University at Galesburg, but the following year took charge of a church at Joliet. Died, at Naperville, Sept. 18, 1861. He wrote several volumes on religious topics, and, at different times, edited religious periodicals at Baltimore, Haverhill, Mass., and Boston.

SKINNER, Ozias C., lawyer and jurist, was born at Floyd, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1817; in 1836, removed to Illinois, settling in Peoria County, where he engaged in farming. In 1838 he began the study of law at Greenville, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar of that State in 1840. Eighteen months later he returned to Illinois, and began practice at Carthage, Hancock County, removing to Quincy in 1844. During the "Mormon War" he served as Aid-de-camp to Governor Ford. In 1848 he was elected to the lower house of the Sixteenth General Assembly, and, for a short time, served as Prosecuting Attorney for the district including Adams and Brown Counties. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the (then) Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1855, succeeded Judge S. H. Treat on the Supreme bench, resigning this position in April, 1858, two months before the expiration of his term. He was a large land owner and had extensive agricultural interests. He built, and was the first President of the Carthage & Quincy Railroad, now a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system. He was a prominent member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869, serving as Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. Died in 1877.

SLADE, Charles, early Congressman; his early history, including date and place of birth, are unknown. In 1820 he was elected Representative from Washington County in the Second General Assembly, and, in 1826, was re-elected to the same body for Clinton and Washington. In 1832 he was elected one of the three Congressmen from Illinois, representing the First District. After attending the first session of the Twenty-third Congress, while on his way home, he was attacked with cholera, dying near Vincennes, Ind., July 11, 1834.

SLADE, James P., ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born at Westerlo, Albany County, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1837, and spent his boyhood with his parents on a farm, except while absent at school; in 1856 removed to Belleville, Ill., where he soon became connected with the public schools, serving for a number of years as Principal of the Belleville High School. While connected with the Belleville schools, he was elected County Superintendent, remaining in office some ten years; later had charge of Almira College at Greenville, Bond County, served six years as Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis and, in 1878, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction as the nominee of the Republican party. On retirement from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed his place at the head of Almira College, but, for the past few years, has been Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis.

SLAVERY AGITATION OF 1823-24. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

SLAVERY AND SLAVE LAWS. African slaves were first brought into the Illinois country by a Frenchman named Pierre F. Renault, about 1722. At that time the present State formed a part of Louisiana, and the traffic in slaves was regulated by French royal edicts. When Great Britain acquired the territory, at the close of the French and Indian War, the former subjects of France were guaranteed security for their persons "and effects," and no interference with slavery was attempted. Upon the conquest of Illinois by Virginia (see Clark, George Rogers), the French very generally professed allegiance to that commonwealth, and, in her deed of cession to the United States, Virginia expressly stipulated for the protection of the "rights and liberties" of the French citizens. This was construed as recognizing the right of property in negro slaves. Even the Ordinance of 1787, while prohibiting slavery in the Northwest Territory, preserved to the settlers (reference being especially made to the French and Canadians) "of the Kaskaskias, St. Vincents and neighboring villages, their laws and customs, now (then) in force, relative to the descent and conveyance of property." A conservative construction of this clause was, that while it prohibited the extension of slavery and the importation of slaves, the status of those who were at that time in involuntary servitude, and of their descendants, was left unchanged. There were those, however, who denied the constitutionality of the Ordinance in toto, on the ground that Congress had exceeded its powers in its passage. There was also a party which claimed that all children of slaves, born after 1787, were free from birth. In 1794 a convention was held at Vincennes, pursuant to a call from Governor Harrison, and a memorial to Congress was adopted, praying for the repeal—or, at least a modification—of the sixth clause of the Ordinance of 1787. The first Congressional Committee, to which this petition was referred, reported adversely upon it; but a second committee recommended the suspension of the operation of the clause in question for ten years. But no action was taken by the National Legislature, and, in 1807, a counter petition, extensively signed, was forwarded to that body, and Congress left the matter in statu quo. It is worthy of note that some of the most earnest opponents of the measure were Representatives from Southern Slave States, John Randolph, of Virginia, being one of them. The pro-slavery party in the State then prepared what is popularly known as the "Indenture Law," which was one of the first acts adopted by Governor Edwards and his Council, and was re-enacted by the first Territorial Legislature in 1812. It was entitled, "An Act relating to the Introduction of Negroes and Mulattoes into this Territory," and gave permission to bring slaves above 15 years of age into the State, when they might be registered and kept in servitude within certain limitations. Slaves under that age might also be brought in, registered, and held in bondage until they reached the age of 35, if males, and 30, if females. The issue of registered slaves were to serve their mother's master until the age of 30 or 28, according to sex. The effect of this legislation was rapidly to increase the number of slaves. The Constitution of 1818 prohibited the introduction of slavery thereafter—that is to say, after its adoption. In 1822 the slave-holding party, with their supporters, began to agitate the question of so amending the organic law as to make Illinois a slave State. To effect such a change the calling of a convention was necessary, and, for eighteen months, the struggle between "conventionists" and their opponents was bitter and fierce. The question was submitted to a popular vote on August 2, 1824, the result of the count showing 4,972 votes for such convention and 6,640 against. This decisive result settled the question of slave-holding in Illinois for all future time, though the existence of slavery in the State continued to be recognized by the National Census until 1840. The number, according to the census of 1810, was 168; in 1820 they had increased to 917. Then the number began to diminish, being reduced in 1830 to 747, and, in 1840 (the last census which shows any portion of the population held in bondage), it was 331.

Hooper Warren—who has been mentioned elsewhere as editor of "The Edwardsville Spectator," and a leading factor in securing the defeat of the scheme to make Illinois a slave State in 1822—in an article in the first number of "The Genius of Liberty" (January, 1841), speaking of that contest, says there were, at its beginning, only three papers in the State—"The Intelligencer" at Vandalia, "The Gazette" at Shawneetown, and "The Spectator" at Edwardsville. The first two of these, at the outset, favored the Convention scheme, while "The Spectator" opposed it. The management of the campaign on the part of the pro-slavery party was assigned to Emanuel J. West, Theophilus W. Smith and Oliver L. Kelly, and a paper was established by the name of "The Illinois Republican," with Smith as editor. Among the active opponents of the measure were George Churchill, Thomas Lippincott, Samuel D. Lockwood, Henry Starr (afterwards of Cincinnati), Rev. John M. Peck and Rev. James Lemen, of St. Clair County. Others who contributed to the cause were Daniel P. Cook, Morris Birkbeck, Dr. Hugh Steel and ——— Burton of Jackson County, Dr. Henry Perrine of Bond; William Leggett of Edwardsville (afterwards editor of "The New York Evening Post"), Benjamin Lundy (then of Missouri), David Blackwell and Rev. John Dew, of St. Clair County. Still others were Nathaniel Pope (Judge of the United States District Court), William B. Archer, William H. Brown and Benjamin Mills (of Vandalia), John Tillson, Dr. Horatio Newhall, George Forquer, Col. Thomas Mather, Thomas Ford, Judge David J. Baker, Charles W. Hunter and Henry H. Snow (of Alton). This testimony is of interest as coming from one who probably had more to do with defeating the scheme, with the exception of Gov. Edward Coles. Outside of the more elaborate Histories of Illinois, the most accurate and detailed accounts of this particular period are to be found in "Sketch of Edward Coles" by the late E. B. Washburne, and "Early Movement in Illinois for the Legalization of Slavery," an address before the Chicago Historical Society (1864), by Hon. William H. Brown, of Chicago. (See also, Coles, Edward; Warren, Hooper; Brown, William H.; Churchill, George; Lippincott, Thomas; and Newspapers, Early, elsewhere in this volume.)

SLOAN, Wesley, legislator and jurist, was born in Dorchester County, Md., Feb. 20., 1806. At the age of 17, having received a fair academic education, he accompanied his parents to Philadelphia, where, for a year, he was employed in a wholesale grocery. His father dying, he returned to Maryland and engaged in teaching, at the same time studying law, and being admitted to the bar in 1831. He came to Illinois in 1838, going first to Chicago, and afterward to Kaskaskia, finally settling at Golconda in 1839, which continued to be his home the remainder of his life. In 1848 he was elected to the Legislature, and re-elected in 1850, '52, and '56, serving three times as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He was one of the members of the first State Board of Education, created by Act of Feb. 18, 1857, and took a prominent part in the founding and organization of the State educational institutions. In 1857 he was elected to the bench of the Nineteenth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1861, but declined a re-election for a third term. Died, Jan. 15, 1887.

SMITH, Abner, jurist, was born at Orange, Franklin County, Mass., August 4, 1843, of an old New England family, whose ancestors came to Massachusetts Colony about 1630; was educated in the public schools and at Middlebury College, Vt., graduating from the latter in 1866. After graduation he spent a year as a teacher in Newton Academy, at Shoreham, Vt., coming to Chicago in 1867, and entering upon the study of law, being admitted to the bar in 1868. The next twenty-five years were spent in the practice of his profession in Chicago, within that time serving as the attorney of several important corporations. In 1893 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected in 1897, his term of service continuing until 1903.

SMITH, (Dr.) Charles Gilman, physician, was born at Exeter, N. H., Jan. 4, 1828, received his early education at Phillips Academy, in his native place, finally graduating from Harvard University in 1847. He soon after commenced the study of medicine in the Harvard Medical School, but completed his course at the University of Pennsylvania in 1851. After two years spent as attending physician of the Alms House in South Boston, Mass., in 1853 he came to Chicago, where he soon acquired an extensive practice. During the Civil War he was one of six physicians employed by the Government for the treatment of prisoners of war in hospital at Camp Douglas. In 1868 he visited Europe for the purpose of observing the management of hospitals in Germany, France and England, on his return being invited to lecture in the Woman's Medical College in Chicago, and also becoming consulting physician in the Women's and Children's Hospital, as well as in the Presbyterian Hospital—a position which he continued to occupy for the remainder of his life, gaining a wide reputation in the treatment of women's and children's diseases. Died, Jan. 10, 1894.

SMITH, David Allen, lawyer, was born near Richmond, Va., June 18, 1809; removed with his father, at an early day, to Pulaski, Tenn.; at 17 went to Courtland, Lawrence County, Ala., where he studied law with Judge Bramlette and began practice. His father, dying about 1831, left him the owner of a number of slaves whom, in 1837, he brought to Carlinville, Ill., and emancipated, giving bond that they should not become a charge to the State. In 1839 he removed to Jacksonville, where he practiced law until his death. Col. John J. Hardin was his partner at the time of his death on the battle-field of Buena Vista. Mr. Smith was a Trustee and generous patron of Illinois College, for a quarter of a century, but never held any political office. As a lawyer he was conscientious and faithful to the interests of his clients; as a citizen, liberal, public-spirited and patriotic. He contributed liberally to the support of the Government during the war for the Union. Died, at Anoka, Minn., July 13, 1865, where he had gone to accompany an invalid son. — Thomas William (Smith), eldest son of the preceding, born at Courtland, Ala., Sept. 27, 1832; died at Clearwater, Minn., Oct. 29, 1865. He graduated at Illinois College in 1852, studied law and served as Captain in the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, until, broken in health, he returned home to die.

SMITH, Dietrich C., ex-Congressman, was born at Ostfriesland, Hanover, April 4, 1840, in boyhood came to the United States, and, since 1849, has been a resident of Pekin, Tazewell County. In 1861 he enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers, was promoted to a Lieutenantcy, and, while so serving, was severely wounded at Shiloh. Later, he was attached to the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, and was mustered out of service as Captain of Company C of that regiment. His business is that of banker and manufacturer, besides which he has had considerable experience in the construction and management of railroads. He was a member of the Thirtieth General Assembly, and, in 1880, was elected Representative in Congress from what was then the Thirteenth District, on the Republican ticket, defeating Adlai E. Stevenson, afterwards Vice-President. In 1882, his county (Tazewell) having been attached to the district for many years represented by Wm. M. Springer, he was defeated by the latter as a candidate for re-election.

SMITH, George, one of Chicago's pioneers and early bankers, was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, March 8, 1808. It was his early intention to study medicine, and he entered Aberdeen College with this end in view, but was forced to quit the institution at the end of two years, because of impaired vision. In 1833 he came to America, and, in 1834, settled in Chicago, where he resided until 1861, meanwhile spending one year in Scotland. He invested largely in real estate in Chicago and Wisconsin, at one time owning a considerable portion of the present site of Milwaukee. In 1837 he secured the charter for the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance Company, whose headquarters were at Milwaukee. He was really the owner of the company, although Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, was its Secretary. Under this charter Mr. Smith was able to issue $1,500,000 in certificates, which circulated freely as currency. In 1839 he founded Chicago's first private banking house. About 1843 he was interested in a storage and commission business in Chicago, with a Mr. Webster as partner. He was a Director in the old Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and aided it, while in course of construction, by loans of money; was also a charter member of the Chicago Board of Trade, organized in 1848. In 1854, the State of Wisconsin having prohibited the circulation of the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance certificates above mentioned, Mr. Smith sold out the company to his partner, Mitchell, and bought two Georgia bank charters, which, together, empowered him to issue $3,000,000 in currency. The notes were duly issued in Georgia, and put into circulation in Illinois, over the counter of George Smith & Co.'s Chicago bank. About 1856 Mr. Smith began winding up his affairs in Chicago, meanwhile spending most of his time in Scotland, but, returning in 1860, made extensive investments in railroad and other American securities, which netted him large profits. The amount of capital which he is reputed to have taken with him to his native land has been estimated at $10,000,000, though he retained considerable tracts of valuable lands in Wisconsin and about Chicago. Among those who were associated with him in business, either as employes or otherwise, and who have since been prominently identified with Chicago business affairs, were Hon. Charles B. Farwell, E. I. Tinkham (afterwards a prominent banker of Chicago), E. W. Willard, now of Newport, R. I., and others. Mr. Smith made several visits, during the last forty years, to the United States, but divided his time chiefly between Scotland (where he was the owner of a castle) and London. Died Oct. 7, 1899.

SMITH, George W., soldier, lawyer and State Treasurer, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1837. It was his intention to acquire a collegiate education, but his father's business embarrassments having compelled the abandonment of his studies, at 17 of years age he went to Arkansas and taught school for two years. In 1856 he returned to Albany and began the study of law, graduating from the law school in 1858. In October of that year he removed to Chicago, where he remained continuously in practice, with the exception of the years 1862-65, when he was serving in the Union army, and 1867-68, when he filled the office of State Treasurer. He was mustered into service, August 27, 1862, as a Captain in the Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry—the second Board of Trade regiment. At Stone River, he was seriously wounded and captured. After four days' confinement, he was aided by a negro to escape. He made his way to the Union lines, but was granted leave of absence, being incapacitated for service. On his return to duty he joined his regiment in the Chattanooga campaign, and was officially complimented for his bravery at Gordon's Mills. At Mission Ridge he was again severely wounded, and was once more personally complimented in the official report. At Kenesaw Mountain (June 27, 1864), Capt. Smith commanded the regiment after the killing of Lieutenant-Colonel Chandler, and was promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy for bravery on the field. He led the charge at Franklin, and was brevetted Colonel, and thanked by the commander for his gallant service. In the spring of 1865 he was brevetted Brigadier-General, and, in June following, was mustered out. Returning to Chicago, he resumed the practice of his profession, and gained a prominent position at the bar. In 1866 he was elected State Treasurer, and, after the expiration of his term, in January, 1869, held no public office. General Smith was, for many years, a Trustee of the Chicago Historical Society, and Vice-President of the Board. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 16, 1898.

SMITH, George W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Putnam County, Ohio, August 18, 1846. When he was four years old, his father removed to Wayne County, Ill., settling on a farm. He attended the common schools and graduated from the literary department of McKendree College, at Lebanon, in 1868. In his youth he learned the trade of a blacksmith, but later determined to study law. After reading for a time at Fairfield, Ill., he entered the Law Department of the Bloomington (Ind.) University, graduating there in 1870. The same year he was admitted to the bar in Illinois, and has since practiced at Murphysboro. In 1880 he was a Republican Presidential Elector, and, in 1888, was elected a Republican Representative to Congress from the Twentieth Illinois District, and has been continuously re-elected, now (1899) serving his sixth consecutive term as Representative from the Twenty-second District.

SMITH, Giles Alexander, soldier, and Assistant Postmaster-General, was born in Jefferson County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1829; engaged in dry-goods business in Cincinnati and Bloomington, Ill., in 1861 being proprietor of a hotel in the latter place; became a Captain in the Eighth Missouri Volunteers, was engaged at Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth, and promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel in 1862; led his regiment on the first attack on Vicksburg, and was severely wounded at Arkansas Post; was promoted Brigadier-General in August, 1863, for gallant and meritorious conduct; led a brigade of the Fifteenth Army Corps at Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, as also in the Atlanta campaign, and a division of the Seventeenth Corps in the "March to the Sea." After the surrender of Lee he was transferred to the Twenty-fifth Army Corps, became Major-General in 1865, and resigned in 1866, having declined a commission as Colonel in the regular army; about 1869 was appointed, by President Grant, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, but resigned on account of failing health in 1872. Died, at Bloomington, Nov. 8, 1876. General Smith was one of the founders of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee.

SMITH, Gustavus Adolphus, soldier, was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 26, 1820; at 16 joined two brothers who had located at Springfield, Ohio, where he learned the trade of a carriage-maker. In December, 1837, he arrived at Decatur, Ill., but soon after located at Springfield, where he resided some six years. Then, returning to Decatur, he devoted his attention to carriage manufacture, doing a large business with the South, but losing heavily as the result of the war. An original Whig, he became a Democrat on the dissolution of the Whig party, but early took ground in favor of the Union after the firing on Fort Sumter; was offered and accepted the colonelcy of the Thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the same time assisting Governor

Yates in the selection of Camp Butler as a camp of recruiting and instruction. Having been assigned to duty in Missouri, in the summer of 1861, he proceeded to Jefferson City, joined Fremont at Carthage in that State, and made a forced march to Springfield, afterwards taking part in the campaign in Arkansas and in the battle of Pea Ridge, where he had a horse shot under him and was severely (and, it was supposed, fatally) wounded, not recovering until 1868. Being compelled to return home, he received authority to raise an independent brigade, but was unable to accompany it to the field. In September, 1862, he was commissioned a Brigadier-General by President Lincoln, "for meritorious conduct," but was unable to enter into active service on account of his wound. Later, he was assigned to the command of a convalescent camp at Murfreesboro, Tenn., under Gen. George H. Thomas. In 1864 he took part in securing the second election of President Lincoln, and, in the early part of 1865, was commissioned by Governor Oglesby Colonel of a new regiment (the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois), but, on account of his wounds, was assigned to court-martial duty, remaining in the service until January, 1866, when he was mustered out with the brevet rank of Brigadier-General. During the second year of his service he was presented with a magnificent sword by the rank and file of his regiment (the Thirty-fifth), for brave and gallant conduct at Pea Ridge. After retiring from the army, he engaged in cotton planting in Alabama, but was not successful; in 1868, canvassed Alabama for General Grant for President, but declined a nomination in his own favor for Congress. In 1870 he was appointed, by General Grant, United States Collection and Disbursing Agent for the District of New Mexico, where he continued to reside.

SMITH, John Corson, soldier, ex-Lieutenant-Governor and ex-State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 13, 1832. At the age of 16 he was apprenticed to a carpenter and builder. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and worked at his trade, for a time, but soon removed to Galena, where he finally engaged in business as a contractor. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteers, but, having received authority from Governor Yates, raised a company, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was incorporated in the Ninety-sixth Illinois Infantry. Of this regiment he was soon elected Major. After a short service about Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington and Newport, Ky., the Ninety-sixth was sent to the front, and took part (among other battles) in the second engagement at Fort Donelson and in the bloody fight at Franklin, Tenn. Later, Major Smith was assigned to staff duty under Generals Baird and Steedman, serving through the Tullahoma campaign, and participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. Being promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, he rejoined his regiment, and was given command of a brigade. In the Atlanta campaign he served gallantly, taking a conspicuous part in its long series of bloody engagements, and being severely wounded at Kenesaw Mountain. In February, 1865, he was brevetted Colonel, and, in June, 1865, Brigadier-General. Soon after his return to Galena he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, but was legislated out of office in 1872. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and embarked in business. In 1874-76 he was a member (and Secretary) of the Illinois Board of Commissioners to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. In 1875 he was appointed Chief Grain-Inspector at Chicago, and held the office for several years. In 1872 and '76 he was a delegate to the National Republican Conventions of those years, and, in 1878, was elected State Treasurer, as he was again in 1882. In 1884 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor, serving until 1889. He is a prominent Mason, Knight Templar and Odd Fellow, as well as a distinguished member of the Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and was prominently connected with the erection of the "Masonic Temple Building" in Chicago.

SMITH, John Eugene, soldier, was born in Switzerland, August 3, 1816, the son of an officer who had served under Napoleon, and after the downfall of the latter, emigrated to Philadelphia. The subject of this sketch received an academic education and became a jeweler; in 1861 entered the volunteer service as Colonel of the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry; took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in the battle of Shiloh and siege of Corinth; was promoted a Brigadier-General in November, 1862, and placed in command of a division in the Sixteenth Army Corps; led the Third Division of the Seventeenth Army Corps in the Vicksburg campaign, later being transferred to the Fifteenth, and taking part in the battle of Missionary Ridge and the Atlanta and Carolina campaigns of 1864-65. He received the brevet rank of Major-General of Volunteers in January, 1865, and, on his muster-out from the volunteer service, became Colonel of the Twenty-seventh United States Infantry, being transferred, in 1870, to the Fourteenth. In 1867 his services at Vicksburg and Savannah were further recognized by conferring upon him the brevets of Brigadier and Major-General in the regular army. In May, 1881, he was retired, afterwards residing in Chicago, where he died, Jan. 29, 1897.

SMITH, Joseph, the founder of the Mormon sect, was born at Sharon, Vt., Dec. 23, 1805. In 1815 his parents removed to Palmyra, N. Y., and still later to Manchester. He early showed a dreamy mental cast, and claimed to be able to locate stolen articles by means of a magic stone. In 1820 he claimed to have seen a vision, but his pretensions were ridiculed by his acquaintances. His story of the revelation of the golden plates by the angel Moroni, and of the latter's instructions to him, is well known. With the aid of Martin Harris and Oliver Cowdery he prepared the "Book of Mormon," alleging that he had deciphered it from heaven-sent characters, through the aid of miraculous spectacles. This was published in 1830. In later years Smith claimed to have received supplementary revelations, which so taxed the credulity of his followers that some of them apostatized. He also claimed supernatural power, such as exorcism, etc. He soon gained followers in considerable numbers, whom, in 1832, he led west, a part settling at Kirtland, Ohio, and the remainder in Jackson County, Mo. Driven out of Ohio five years later, the bulk of the sect found the way to their friends in Missouri, whence they were finally expelled after many conflicts with the authorities. Smith, with the other refugees, fled to Hancock County, Ill., founding the city of Nauvoo, which was incorporated in 1840. Here was begun, in the following year, the erection of a great temple, but again he aroused the hostility of the authorities, although soon wielding considerable political power. After various unsuccessful attempts to arrest him in 1844, Smith and a number of his followers were induced to surrender themselves under the promise of protection from violence and a fair trial. Having been taken to Carthage, the county-seat, all were discharged under recognizance to appear at court except Smith and his brother Hyrum, who were held under the new charge of "treason," and were placed in jail. So intense had been the feeling against the Mormons, that Governor Ford called out the militia to preserve the peace; but it is evident that the feeling among the latter was in sympathy with that of the populace. Most of the militia were disbanded after Smith's arrest, one company being left on duty at Carthage, from whom only eight men were detailed to guard the jail. In this condition of affairs a mob of 150 disguised men, alleged to be from Warsaw, appeared before the jail on the evening of June 27, and, forcing the guards—who made only a feeble resistance,—Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both shot down, while a friend, who had remained with them, was wounded. The fate of Smith undoubtedly went far to win for him the reputation of martyr, and give a new impulse to the Mormon faith. (See Mormons; Nauvoo.)

SMITH, Justin Almerin, D.D., clergyman and editor, was born at Ticonderoga, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1819, educated at New Hampton Literary and Theological Institute and Union College, graduating from the latter in 1843; served a year as Principal of the Union Academy at Bennington, Vt., followed by four years of pastoral work, when he assumed the pastorate of the First Baptist church at Rochester, N. Y., where he remained five years. Then (1853) he removed to Chicago to assume the editorship of "The Christian Times" (now "The Standard"), with which he was associated for the remainder of his life. Meanwhile he assisted in organizing three Baptist churches in Chicago, serving two of them as pastor for a considerable period; made an extended tour of Europe in 1869, attending the Vatican Council at Rome; was a Trustee and one of the founders of the old Chicago University, and Trustee and Lecturer of the Baptist Theological Seminary; was also the author of several religious works. Died, at Morgan Park, near Chicago, Feb. 4, 1896.

SMITH, Perry H., lawyer and politician, was born in Augusta, Oneida County, N. Y., March 18, 1828; entered Hamilton College at the age of 14 and graduated, second in his class, at 18; began reading law and was admitted to the bar on coming of age in 1849. Then, removing to Appleton, Wis., when 23 years of age he was elected a Judge, served later in both branches of the Legislature, and, in 1857, became Vice-President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railway, retaining the same position in the reorganized corporation when it became the Chicago & Northwestern. In 1856 Mr. Smith came to Chicago and resided there till his death, on Palm Sunday of 1885. He was prominent in railway circles and in the councils of the Democratic party, being the recognized representative of Mr. Tilden's interests in the Northwest in the campaign of 1876.

SMITH, Robert, Congressman and lawyer, was born at Petersborough, N. H., June 12, 1802; was educated and admitted to the bar in his native town, settled at Alton, Ill., in 1832, and engaged in practice. In 1836 he was elected to the General Assembly from Madison County, and re-elected in 1838. In 1842 he was elected to the Twenty-eighth Congress, and twice re-elected, serving three successive terms. During the Civil War he was commissioned Paymaster, with the rank of Major, and was stationed at St. Louis. He was largely interested in the construction of water power at Minneapolis, Minn., and also in railroad enterprises in Illinois. He was a prominent Mason and a public-spirited citizen. Died, at Alton, Dec. 20, 1867.

SMITH, Samuel Lisle, lawyer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1817, and, belonging to a wealthy family, enjoyed superior educational advantages, taking a course in the Yale Law School at an age too early to admit of his receiving a degree. In 1836 he came to Illinois, to look after some landed interests of his father's in the vicinity of Peru. Returning east within the next two years, he obtained his diploma, and, again coming west, located in Chicago in 1838, and, for a time, occupied an office with the well-known law firm of Butterfield & Collins. In 1839 he was elected City Attorney and, at the great Whig meeting at Springfield, in June, 1840, was one of the principal speakers, establishing a reputation as one of the most brilliant campaign orators in the West. As an admirer of Henry Clay, he was active in the Presidential campaign of 1844, and was also a prominent speaker at the River and Harbor Convention at Chicago, in 1847. With a keen sense of humor, brilliant, witty and a master of repartee and invective, he achieved popularity, both at the bar and on the lecture platform, and had the promise of future success, which was unfortunately marred by his convivial habits. Died of cholera, in Chicago, July 30, 1854. Mr. Smith married the daughter of Dr. Potts, of Philadelphia, an eminent clergyman of the Episcopal Church.

SMITH, Sidney, jurist, was born in Washington County, N. Y., May 12, 1829; studied law and was admitted to the bar at Albion, in that State, in 1851; came to Chicago in 1856 and entered into partnership with Grant Goodrich and William W. Farwell, both of whom were afterwards elected to places on the bench—the first in the Superior, and the latter in the Circuit Court. In 1879 Judge Smith was elected to the Superior Court of Cook County, serving until 1885, when he became the attorney of the Chicago Board of Trade. He was the Republican candidate for Mayor, in opposition to Carter H. Harrison, in 1885, and is believed by many to have been honestly elected, though defeated on the face of the returns. A recount was ordered by the court, but so much delay was incurred and so many obstacles placed in the way of carrying the order into effect, that Judge Smith abandoned the contest in disgust, although making material gains as far as it had gone. During his professional career he was connected, as counsel, with some of the most important trials before the Chicago courts; was also one of the Directors of the Chicago Public Library, on its organization in 1871. Died suddenly, in Chicago, Oct. 6, 1898.

SMITH, Theophilus Washington, Judge and politician, was born in New York City, Sept. 28, 1784, served for a time in the United States navy, was a law student in the office of Aaron Burr, was admitted to the bar in his native State in 1805, and, in 1816, came west, finally locating at Edwardsville, where he soon became a prominent figure in early State history. In 1820 he was an unsuccessful candidate before the Legislature for the office of Attorney-General, being defeated by Samuel D. Lockwood, but was elected to the State Senate in 1822, serving four years. In 1823 he was one of the leaders of the "Conventionist" party, whose aim was to adopt a new Constitution which would legalize slavery in Illinois, during this period being the editor of the leading organ of the pro-slavery party. In 1825 he was elected one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, but resigned, Dec. 26, 1842. He was impeached in 1832 on charges alleging oppressive conduct, corruption, and other high misdemeanors in office, but secured a negative acquittal, a two-thirds vote being necessary to conviction. The vote in the Senate stood twelve for conviction (on a part of the charges) to ten for acquittal, four being excused from voting. During the Black Hawk War he served as Quartermaster-General on the Governor's staff. As a jurist, he was charged by his political opponents with being unable to divest himself of his partisan bias, and even with privately advising counsel, in political causes, of defects in the record, which they (the counsel) had not discovered. He was also a member of the first Board of Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, appointed in 1823. Died, in Chicago, May 6, 1846.

SMITH, William Henry, journalist, Associated Press Manager, was born in Columbia County, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1833; at three years of age was taken by his parents to Ohio, where he enjoyed the best educational advantages that State at the time afforded. After completing his school course he began teaching, and, for a time, served as tutor in a Western college, but soon turned his attention to journalism, at first as assistant editor of a weekly publication at Cincinnati, still later becoming its editor, and, in 1855, city editor of "The Cincinnati Gazette," with which he was connected in a more responsible position at the beginning of the war, incidentally doing work upon "The Literary Review." His connection with a leading paper enabled him to exert a strong influence in support of the Government. This he used most faithfully in assisting to raise troops in the first years of the war, and, in 1863, in bringing forward and securing the election of John Brough as a Union candidate for Governor in opposition to Clement L. Vallandigham, the Democratic candidate. In 1864 he was nominated and elected Secretary of State, being re-elected two years later. After retiring from office he returned to journalism at Cincinnati, as editor of "The Evening Chronicle," from which he retired in 1870 to become Agent of the Western Associated Press, with headquarters, at first at Cleveland, but later at Chicago. His success in this line was demonstrated by the final union of the New York and Western Associated Press organizations under his management, continuing until 1893, when he retired. Mr. Smith was a strong personal friend of President Hayes, by whom he was appointed Collector of the Port of Chicago in 1877. While engaged in official duties he found time to do considerable literary work, having published, several years ago, "The St. Clair Papers," in two volumes, and a life of Charles Hammond, besides contributions to periodicals. After retiring from the management of the Associated Press, he was engaged upon a "History of American Politics" and a "Life of Rutherford B. Hayes," which are said to have been well advanced at the time of his death, which took place at his home, at Lake Forest, Ill., July 27, 1896.

SMITH, William M., merchant, stock-breeder and politician, was born near Frankfort, Ky., May 23, 1827; in 1846 accompanied his father's family to Lexington, McLean County, Ill., where they settled. A few years later he bought forty acres of government land, finally increasing his holdings to 800 acres, and becoming a breeder of fine stock. Still later he added to his agricultural pursuits the business of a merchant. Having early identified himself with the Republican party, he remained a firm adherent of its principles during the Civil War and, while declining a commission tendered him by Governor Yates, devoted his time and means liberally to the recruiting and organization of regiments for service in the field, and procuring supplies for the sick and wounded. In 1866 he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature, and was re-elected in 1868 and '70, serving, during his last term, as Speaker. In 1877 he was appointed by Governor Cullom a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, of which body he served as President until 1883. He was a man of remarkably genial temperament, liberal impulses, and wide popularity. Died, March 25, 1886.

SMITH, William Sooy, soldier and civil engineer, was born at Tarlton, Pickaway County, Ohio, July 22, 1830; graduated at Ohio University in 1849, and, at the United States Military Academy, in 1853, having among his classmates, at the latter, Generals McPherson, Schofield and Sheridan. Coming to Chicago the following year, he first found employment as an engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad, but later became assistant of Lieutenant-Colonel Graham in engineer service on the lakes; a year later took charge of a select school in Buffalo; in 1857 made the first surveys for the International Bridge at Niagara Falls, then went into the service of extensive locomotive and bridge-works at Trenton, N. J., in their interest making a visit to Cuba, and also superintending the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River. The war intervening, he returned North and was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and assigned to duty as Assistant Adjutant-General at Camp Denison, Ohio, but, in June, 1862, was commissioned Colonel of the Thirteenth Ohio Volunteers, participating in the West Virginia campaigns, and later, at Shiloh and Perryville. In April, 1862, he was promoted Brigadier-General of volunteers, commanding divisions in the Army of the Ohio until the fall of 1862, when he joined Grant and took part in the Vicksburg campaign, as commander of the First Division of the Sixteenth Army Corps. Subsequently he was made Chief of the Cavalry Department, serving on the staffs of Grant and Sherman, until compelled to resign, in 1864, on account of impaired health. During the war General Smith rendered valuable service to the Union cause in great emergencies, by his knowledge of engineering. On retiring to private life he resumed his profession at Chicago, and since has been employed by the Government on some of its most stupendous works on the lakes, and has also planned several of the most important railroad bridges across the Missouri and other streams. He has been much consulted in reference to municipal engineering, and his name is connected with a number of the gigantic edifices in Chicago.

SMITHBORO, a village and railroad junction in Bond County, 3 miles east of Greenville. Population, 393; (1900), 314.

SNAPP, Henry, Congressman, born in Livingston County, N. Y., June 30, 1822, came to Illinois with his father when 11 years old, and, having read law at Joliet, was admitted to the bar in 1847. He practiced in Will County for twenty years before entering public life. In 1868 he was elected to the State Senate and occupied a seat in that body until his election, in 1871, to the Forty-second Congress, by the Republicans of the (then) Sixth Illinois District, as successor to B. C. Cook, who had resigned. Died, at Joliet, Nov. 23, 1895.

SNOW, Herman W., ex-Congressman, was born in La Porte County, Ind., July 3, 1836, but was reared in Kentucky, working upon a farm for five years, while yet in his minority becoming a resident of Illinois. For several years he was a school teacher, meanwhile studying law and being admitted to the bar. Early in the war he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, rising to the rank of Captain. His term of service having expired, he re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois, and was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he resumed teaching at the Chicago High School, and later served in the General Assembly (1873-74) as Representative from Woodford County. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Ninth Illinois District in Congress, but was defeated by his Republican opponent in 1892.

SNOWHOOK, William B., first Collector of Customs at Chicago, was born in Ireland in 1804; at the age of eight years was brought to New York, where he learned the printer's trade, and worked for some time in the same office with Horace Greeley. At 16 he went back to Ireland, remaining two years, but, returning to the United States, began the study of law; was also employed on the Passaic Canal; in 1836, came to Chicago, and was soon after associated with William B. Ogden in a contract on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, which lasted until 1841. As early as 1840 he became prominent as a leader in the Democratic party, and, in 1846, received from President Polk an appointment as first Collector of Customs for Chicago (having previously served as Special Surveyor of the Port, while attached to the District of Detroit); in 1853, was re-appointed to the Collectorship by President Pierce, serving two years. During the "Mormon War" (1844) he organized and equipped, at his own expense, the Montgomery Guards, and was commissioned Colonel, but the disturbances were brought to an end before the order to march. From 1856 he devoted his attention chiefly to his practice, but, in 1862, was one of the Democrats of Chicago who took part in a movement to sustain the Government by stimulating enlistments; was also a member of the Convention which nominated Mr. Greeley for President in 1872. Died, in Chicago, May 5, 1882.

SNYDER, Adam Wilson, pioneer lawyer, and early Congressman, was born at Connellsville, Pa., Oct. 6, 1799. In early life he followed the occupation of wool-curling for a livelihood, attending school in the winter. In 1815, he emigrated to Columbus, Ohio, and afterwards settled in Ridge Prairie, St. Clair County, Ill. Being offered a situation in a wool-curling and fulling mill at Cahokia, he removed thither in 1817. He formed the friendship of Judge Jesse B. Thomas, and, through the latter's encouragement and aid, studied law and gained a solid professional, political, social and financial position. In 1830 he was elected State Senator from St. Clair County, and re-elected for two successive terms. He served through the Black Hawk War as private, Adjutant and Captain. In 1833 he removed to Belleville, and, in 1834, was defeated for Congress by Governor Reynolds, whom he, in turn, defeated in 1836. Two years later Reynolds again defeated him for the same position, and, in 1840, he was elected State Senator. In 1841 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. The election was held in August, 1842, but, in May preceding, he died at his home in Belleville. His place on the ticket was filled by Thomas Ford, who was elected.—William H. (Snyder), son of the preceding, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., July 12, 1825; educated at McKendree College, studied law with Lieutenant-Governor Koerner, and was admitted to practice in 1845; also served for a time as Postmaster of the city of Belleville, and, during the Mexican War, as First-Lieutenant and Adjutant of the Fifth Illinois Volunteers. From 1850 to '54 he represented his county in the Legislature; in 1855 was appointed, by Governor Matteson, State's Attorney, which position he filled for two years. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of Secretary of State in 1856, and, in 1857, was elected a Judge of the Twenty-fourth Circuit, was re-elected for the Third Circuit in '73, '79 and '85. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 24, 1892.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME, a State charitable institution, founded by act of the Legislature in 1885, and located at Quincy, Adams County. The object of its establishment was to provide a comfortable home for such disabled or dependent veterans of the United States land or naval forces as had honorably served during the Civil War. It was opened for the reception of veterans on March 3, 1887, the first cost of site and buildings having been about $350,000. The total number of inmates admitted up to June 30, 1894, was 2,813; the number in attendance during the two previous years 988, and the whole number present on Nov. 10, 1894, 1,088. The value of property at that time was $393,636.08. Considerable appropriations have been made for additions to the buildings at subsequent sessions of the Legislature. The General Government pays to the State $100 per year for each veteran supported at the Home.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME, ILLINOIS, an institution, created by act of 1865, for the maintenance and education of children of deceased soldiers of the Civil War. An eighty-acre tract, one mile north of Normal, was selected as the site, and the first principal building was completed and opened for the admission of beneficiaries on June 1, 1869. Its first cost was $135,000, the site having been donated. Repairs and the construction of new buildings, from time to time, have considerably increased this sum. In 1875 the benefits of the institution were extended, by legislative enactment, to the children of soldiers who had died after the close of the war. The aggregate number of inmates, in 1894, was 572, of whom 323 were males and 249 females.

SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' HOME. Provision was made for the establishment of this institution by the Thirty-ninth General Assembly, in an act, approved, June 13, 1895, appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of a site, the erection of buildings and furnishing the same. It is designed for the reception and care of the mothers, wives, widows and daughters of such honorably discharged soldiers or sailors, in the United States service, as may have died, or may be physically or mentally unable to provide for the families naturally dependent on them, provided that such persons have been residents of the State for at least one year previous to admission, and are without means or ability for self-support.

The affairs of the Home are managed by a board of five trustees, of whom two are men and three women, the former to be members of the Grand Army of the Republic and of different political parties, and the latter members of the Women's Relief Corps of this State. The institution was located at Wilmington, occupying a site of seventeen acres, where it was formally opened in a house of eighteen rooms, March 11, 1896, with twenty-six applications for admittance. The plan contemplates an early enlargement by the erection of additional cottages.

SORENTO, a village of Bond County, at the intersection of the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 14 miles southeast of Litchfield; has a bank and a newspaper. Its interests are agricultural and mining. Pop. (1890), 538; (1900), 1,000.

SOULARD, James Gaston, pioneer, born of French ancestry in St. Louis, Mo., July 15, 1798; resided there until 1821, when, having married the daughter of a soldier of the Revolution, he received an appointment at Fort Snelling, near the present city of St. Paul, then under command of Col. Snelling, who was his wife's brother-in-law. The Fort was reached after a tedious journey by flat-boat and overland, late in the fall of 1821, his wife accompanying him. Three years later they returned to St. Louis, where, being an engineer, he was engaged for several years in surveying. In 1827 he removed with his family to Galena, for the next six years had charge of a store of the Gratiot Brothers, early business men of that locality. Towards the close of this period he received the appointment of County Recorder, also holding the position of County Surveyor and Postmaster of Galena at the same time. His later years were devoted to farming and horticulture, his death taking place, Sept. 17, 1878. Mr. Soulard was probably the first man to engage in freighting between Galena and Chicago. "The Galena Advertiser" of Sept. 14, 1829, makes mention of a wagon-load of lead sent by him to Chicago, his team taking back a load of salt, the paper remarking: "This is the first wagon that has ever passed from the Mississippi River to Chicago." Great results were predicted from the exchange of commodities between the lake and the lead mine district. — Mrs. Eliza M. Hunt (Soulard), wife of the preceding, was born at Detroit, Dec. 18, 1804, her father being Col. Thomas A. Hunt, who had taken part in the Battle of Bunker Hill and remained in the army until his death, at St. Louis, in 1807. His descendants have maintained their connection with the army ever since, a son being a prominent artillery officer at the Battle of Gettysburg. Mrs. Soular was married at St. Louis, in 1820, and survive her husband some sixteen years, dying at Galena August 11, 1894. She had resided in Galena nearly seventy years, and at the date of her death, in the 90th year of her age, she was that city's oldest resident.

SOUTH ELGIN, a village of Kane County, near the city of Elgin. Population (1900), 515.

SOUTHERN COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, located at Albion, Edwards County, incorporated in 1891; had a faculty of ten teachers with 219 pupils (1897-98)—about equally male and female. Besides classical, scientific, normal, music and fine arts departments, instruction is given in preparatory studies and business education. Its property is valued at $16,500.

SOUTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, located at Anna, Union County, founded by act of the Legislature in 1869. The original site comprised 290 acres and cost a little more than $22,000, of which one-fourth was donated by citizens of the county. The construction of buildings was begun in 1869, but it was not until March, 1875, that the north wing (the first completed) was ready for occupancy. Other portions were completed a year later. The Trustees purchased 160 additional acres in 1883. The first cost (up to September, 1876) was nearly $635,000. In 1881 one wing of the main building was destroyed by fire, and was subsequently rebuilt; the patients being, meanwhile, cared for in temporary wooden barracks. The total value of lands and buildings belonging to the State, June 30, 1894, was estimated at $738,580, and, of property of all sorts, at $833,700. The wooden barracks were later converted into a permanent ward, additions made to the main buildings, a detached building for the accommodation of 300 patients erected, numerous outbuildings put up and general improvements made. A second fire on the night of Jan. 3, 1895, destroyed a large part of the main building, inflicting a loss upon the State of $175,000. Provision was made for rebuilding by the Legislature of that year. The institution has capacity for about 750 patients.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL UNIVERSITY, established in 1869, and located, after competitive bidding, at Carbondale, which offered lands and bonds at first estimated to be of the value of $229,000, but which later depreciated, through shrinkage, to $75,000. Construction was commenced in May, 1870, and the first or main building was completed and appropriately dedicated in July, 1874. Its cost was $265,000, but it was destroyed by fire, Nov. 26, 1883. In February, 1887, a new structure was completed at a cost of $150,000. Two normal courses of instruction are given—classical and scientific—each extending over a period of four years. The conditions of admission require that the pupil shall be 16 years of age, and shall possess the qualifications enabling him to pass examination for a second-grade teacher's certificate. Those unable to do so may enter a preparatory department for six months. Pupils who pledge themselves to teach in the public schools, not less than half the time of their attendance at the University, receive free tuition with a small charge for incidentals, while others pay a tuition fee. The number of students in attendance for the year 1897-98 was 720, coming from forty-seven counties, chiefly in the southern half of the State, with representatives from eight other States. The teaching faculty for the same year consisted, besides the President, of sixteen instructors in the various departments, of whom five were ladies and eleven gentlemen.

SOUTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, located near Chester, on the Mississippi River. Its erection was rendered necessary by the overcrowding of the Northern Penitentiary. (See Northern Penitentiary.) The law providing for its establishment required the Commissioners to select a site convenient of access, adjacent to stone and timber, and having a high elevation, with a never failing supply of water. In 1877, 122 acres were purchased at Chester, and the erection of buildings commenced. The first appropriation was of $200,000, and $300,000 was added in 1879. By March, 1878, 200 convicts were received, and their labor was utilized in the completion of the buildings, which are constructed upon approved modern principles. The prison receives convicts sent from the southern portion of the State, and has accommodation for some 1,200 prisoners. In connection with this penitentiary is an asylum for insane convicts, the erection of which was provided for by the Legislature in 1889.

SOUTH GROVE, a village of De Kalb County. Population (1890), 730.

SPALDING, Jesse, manufacturer. Collector of Customs and Street Railway President, was born at Athens, Bradford County, Pa., April 15, 1833; early commenced lumbering on the Susquehanna, and, at 23, began dealing on his own account. In 1857 he removed to Chicago, and soon after bought the property of the New York Lumber Company at the mouth of the Menominee River in Wisconsin, where, with different partners, and finally practically alone, he has carried on the business of lumber manufacture on a large scale ever since. In 1881 he was appointed, by President Arthur, Collector of the Port of Chicago, and, in 1889, received from President Harrison an appointment as one of the Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railway. Mr. Spalding was a zealous supporter of the Government during the War of the Rebellion and rendered valuable aid in the construction and equipment of Camp Douglas and the barracks at Chicago for the returning soldiers, receiving Auditor's warrants in payment, when no funds in the State treasury were available for the purpose. He was associated with William B. Ogden and others in the project for connecting Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay by a ship canal, which was completed in 1882, and, on the death of Mr. Ogden, succeeded to the Presidency of the Canal Company, serving until 1893, when the canal was turned over to the General Government. He has also been identified with many other public enterprises intimately connected with the development and prosperity of Chicago, and, in July, 1899, became President of the Chicago Union Traction Company, having control of the North and West Chicago Street Railway Systems.

SPALDING, John Lancaster, Catholic Bishop, was born in Lebanon, Ky., June 2, 1840; educated in the United States and in Europe, ordained a priest in the Catholic Church in 1863, and thereupon attached to the cathedral at Louisville, as assistant. In 1869 he organized a congregation of colored people, and built for their use the Church of St. Augustine, having been assigned to that parish as pastor. Soon afterwards he was appointed Secretary to the Bishop and made Chancellor of the Diocese. In 1873 he was transferred from Louisville to New York, where he was attached to the missionary parish of St. Michael's. He had, by this time, achieved no little fame as a pulpit orator and lecturer. When the diocese of Peoria, Ill., was created, in 1877, the choice of the Pope fell upon him for the new see, and he was consecrated Bishop, on May 1 of that year, by Cardinal McCloskey at New York. His administration has been characterized by both energy and success. He has devoted much attention to the subject of emigration, and has brought about the founding of many new settlements in the far West. He was also largely instrumental in bringing about the founding of the Catholic University at Washington. He is a frequent contributor to the reviews, and the author of a number of religious works.

SPANISH INVASION OF ILLINOIS. In the month of June, 1779, soon after the declaration of war between Spain and Great Britain, an expedition was organized in Canada, to attack the Spanish posts along the Mississippi. Simultaneously, a force was to be dispatched from Pensacola against New Orleans, then commanded by a young Spanish Colonel, Don Bernardo de Galvez. Secret instructions had been sent to British Commandants, all through the Western country, to co-operate with both expeditions. De Galvez, having learned of the scheme through intercepted letters, resolved to forestall the attack by becoming the assailant. At the head of a force of 670 men, he set out and captured Baton Rouge, Fort Manchac and Natchez, almost without opposition. The British in Canada, being ignorant of what had been going on in the South, in February following dispatched a force from Mackinac to support the expedition from Pensacola, and, incidentally, to subdue the American rebels while en route. Cahokia and Kaskaskia were contemplated points of attack, as well as the Spanish forts at St. Louis and St. Genevieve. This movement was planned by Capt. Patrick Sinclair, commandant at Mackinac, but Captain Hesse was placed in charge of the expedition, which numbered some 750 men, including a force of Indians led by a chief named Wabasha. The British arrived before St. Louis, early on the morning of May 26, 1780, taking the Spaniards by surprise. Meanwhile Col. George Rogers Clark, having been apprised of the project, arrived at Cahokia from the falls of the Ohio, twenty-four hours in advance of the attack, his presence and readiness to co-operate with the Spanish, no doubt, contributing to the defeat of the expedition. The accounts of what followed are conflicting, the number of killed on the St. Louis shore being variously estimated from seven or eight to sixty-eight—the last being the estimate of Capt. Sinclair in his official report. All agree, however, that the invading party was forced to retreat in great haste. Colonel Montgomery, who had been in command at Cahokia, with a force of 350 and a party of Spanish allies, pursued the retreating invaders as far as the Rock River, destroying many Indian villages on the way. This movement on the part of the British served as a pretext for an attempted reprisal, undertaken by the Spaniards, with the aid of a number of Cahokians, early in 1781. Starting early in January, this latter expedition crossed Illinois, with the design of attacking Fort St. Joseph, at the head of Lake Michigan, which had been captured from the English by Thomas Brady and afterwards retaken. The Spaniards were commanded by Don Eugenio Pourre, and supported by a force of Cahokians and Indians. The fort was easily taken and the British flag replaced by the ensign of Spain. The affair was regarded as of but little moment, at the time, the post being evacuated in a few days, and the Spaniards returning to St. Louis. Yet it led to serious international complications, and the "conquest" was seriously urged by the Spanish ministry as giving that country a right to the territory traversed. This claim was supported by France before the signing of the Treaty of Paris, but was defeated, through the combined efforts of Messrs. Jay, Franklin and Adams, the American Commissioners in charge of the peace negotiations with England.

SPARKS, (Capt.) David R., manufacturer and legislator, was born near Lanesville, Ind., in 1823; in 1836, removed with his parents to Macoupin County, Ill.; in 1847, enlisted for the Mexican War, crossing the plains to Santa Fe, New Mexico. In 1850 he made the overland trip to California, returning the next year by the Isthmus of Panama. In 1855 he engaged in the milling business at Staunton, Macoupin County, but, in 1860, made a third trip across the plains in search of gold, taking a quartz-mill which was erected near where Central City, Colo., now is, and which was the second steam-engine in that region. He returned home in time to vote for Stephen A. Douglas for President, the same year, but became a stalwart Republican, two weeks later, when the advocates of secession began to develop their policy after the election of Lincoln. In 1861 he enlisted, under the call for 500,000 volunteers following the first battle of Bull Run, and was commissioned a Captain in the Third Illinois Cavalry (Col. Eugene A. Carr), serving two and a half years, during which time he took part in several hard-fought battles, and being present at the fall of Vicksburg. At the end of his service he became associated with his former partner in the erection of a large flouring mill at Litchfield, but, in 1869, the firm bought an extensive flouring mill at Alton, of which he became the principal owner in 1881, and which has since been greatly enlarged and improved, until it is now one of the most extensive establishments of its kind in the State. Capt. Sparks was elected to the House of Representatives in 1888, and to the State Senate in 1894, serving in the sessions of 1895 and '97; was also strongly supported as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress in 1896.

SPARKS, William A. J., ex-Congressman, was born near New Albany, Ind., Nov. 19, 1828, at 8 years of age was brought by his parents to Illinois, and shortly afterwards left an orphan. Thrown on his own resources, he found work upon a farm, his attendance at the district schools being limited to the winter months. Later, he passed through McKendree College, supporting himself, meanwhile, by teaching, graduating in 1850. He read law with Judge Sidney Breese, and was admitted to the bar in 1851. His first public office was that of Receiver of the Land Office at Edwardsville, to which he was appointed by President Pierce in 1853, remaining until 1856, when he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. The same year he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1863-64, served in the State Senate for the unexpired term of James M. Rodgers, deceased. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1868, and a Democratic Representative in Congress from 1875 to 1883. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Commissioner of the General Land Office in Washington, retiring, by resignation, in 1887. His home is at Carlyle.

SPEED, Joshua Fry, merchant, and intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln; was educated in the local schools and at St. Joseph's College, Bardstown, Ky., after which he spent some time in a wholesale mercantile establishment in Louisville. About 1835 he came to Springfield, Ill., where he engaged in the mercantile business, later becoming the intimate friend and associate of Abraham Lincoln, to whom he offered the privilege of sharing a room over his store, when Mr. Lincoln removed from New Salem to Springfield, in 1836. Mr. Speed returned to Kentucky in 1842, but the friendship with Mr. Lincoln, which was of a most devoted character, continued until the death of the latter. Having located in Jefferson County, Ky., Mr. Speed was elected to the Legislature in 1848, but was never again willing to accept office, though often solicited to do so. In 1851 he removed to Louisville, where he acquired a handsome fortune in the real-estate business. On the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861, he heartily embraced the cause of the Union, and, during the war, was entrusted with many delicate and important duties in the interest of the Government, by Mr. Lincoln, whom he frequently visited in Washington. His death occurred at Louisville, May 29, 1882.—James (Speed), an older brother of the preceding, was a prominent Unionist of Kentucky, and, after the war, a leading Republican of that State, serving as delegate to the National Republican Conventions of 1872 and 1876. In 1864 he was appointed Attorney-General by Mr. Lincoln and served until 1866, when he resigned on account of disagreement with President Johnson. He died in 1887, at the age of 75 years.

SPOON RIVER, rises in Bureau County, flows southward through Stark County into Peoria, thence southwest through Knox, and to the south and southeast, through Fulton County, entering the Illinois River opposite Havana. It is about 150 miles long.

SPRINGER, (Rev.) Francis, D.D., educator and Army Chaplain, born in Franklin County, Pa., March 19, 1810; was left an orphan at an early age, and educated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg; entered the Lutheran ministry in 1836, and, in 1839, removed to Springfield, Ill., where he preached and taught school; in 1847 became President of Hillsboro College, which, in 1852, was removed to Springfield and became Illinois State University, now known as Concordia Seminary. Later, he served for a time as Superintendent of Schools for the city of Springfield, but, in September, 1861, resigned to accept the Chaplaincy of the Tenth Illinois Cavalry; by successive resignations and appointments, held the positions of Chaplain of the First Arkansas Infantry (1863-64) and Post Chaplain at Fort Smith, Ark., serving in the latter position until April, 1867, when he was commissioned Chaplain of the United States Army. This position he resigned while stationed at Fort Harker, Kan., August 23, 1867. During a considerable part of his incumbency as Chaplain at Fort Smith, he acted as Agent of the Bureau of Refugees and Freedmen, performing important service in caring for non-combatants rendered homeless by the vicissitudes of war. After the war he served, for a time, as Superintendent of Schools for Montgomery County, Ill.; was instrumental in the founding of Carthage (Ill.) College, and was a member of its Board of Control at the time of his death. He was elected Chaplain of the Illinois House of Representatives at the session of the Thirty-fifth General Assembly (1887), and Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Illinois for two consecutive terms (1890-'92). He was also member of the Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R., at Springfield, and served as its Chaplain from January, 1884, to his death, which occurred at Springfield, Oct. 21, 1892.

SPRINGER, William McKendree, ex-Congressman, Justice of United States Court, was born in Sullivan County, Ind., May 30, 1836. In 1848 he removed with his parents to Jacksonville, Ill., was fitted for college in the public high school at Jacksonville, under the tuition of the late Dr. Bateman, entered Illinois College, remaining three years, when he removed to the Indiana State University, graduating there in 1858. The following year he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice in Logan County, but soon after removed to Springfield. He entered public life as Secretary of the Constitutional Convention of 1862. In 1871-'72 he represented Sangamon County in the Legislature, and, in 1874, was elected to Congress from the Thirteenth Illinois District as a Democrat. From that time until the close of the Fifty-third Congress (1895), he served in Congress continuously, and was recognized as one of the leaders of his party on the floor, being at the head of many important committees when that party was in the ascendancy, and a candidate for the Democratic caucus nomination for Speaker, in 1893. In 1894 he was the candidate of his party for Congress for the eleventh time, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, James A. Connolly. In 1895 President Cleveland appointed him United States District Judge for Indian Territory.

SPRINGFIELD, the State capital, and the county-seat of Sangamon County, situated five miles south of the Sangamon River and 185 miles southwest of Chicago; is an important railway center. The first settlement on the site of the present city was made by John Kelly in 1819. On April 10, 1821, it was selected, by the first Board of County Commissioners, as the temporary county-seat of Sangamon County, the organization of which had been authorized by act of the Legislature in January previous, and the name Springfield was given to it. In 1823 the selection was made permanent. The latter year the first sale of lands took place, the original site being entered by Pascal P. Enos, Elijah Iles and Thomas Cox. The town was platted about the same time, and the name "Calhoun" was given to a section in the northwest quarter of the present city—this being the "hey-day" of the South Carolina statesman's greatest popularity—but the change was not popularly accepted, and the new name was soon dropped. It was incorporated as a town, April 2, 1832, and as a city, April 6, 1840; and re-incorporated, under the general law in 1882. It was made the State capital by act of the Legislature, passed at the session of 1837, which went into effect, July 4, 1839, and the Legislature first convened there in December of the latter year. The general surface is flat, though there is rolling ground to the west. The city has excellent water-works, a paid fire-department, six banks, electric street railways, gas and electric lighting, commodious hotels, fine churches, numerous handsome residences, beautiful parks, thorough sewerage, and is one of the best paved and handsomest cities in the State. The city proper, in 1890, contained an area of four square miles, but has since been enlarged by the annexation of the following suburbs: North Springfield, April 7, 1891; West Springfield, Jan. 4, 1898; and South Springfield and the village of Laurel, April 5, 1898. These additions give to the present city an area of 5.84 square miles. The population of the original city, according to the census of 1880, was 19,743, and, in 1890, 24,963, while that of the annexed suburbs, at the last census, was 2,109—making a total of 29,072. The latest school census (1898) showed a total population of 33,375—population by census (1900), 34,159. Besides the State House, the city has a handsome United States Government Building for United States Court and post-office purposes, a county courthouse (the former State capitol), a city hall and (State) Executive Mansion. Springfield was the home of Abraham Lincoln. His former residence has been donated to the State, and his tomb and monument are in the beautiful Oak Ridge cemetery, adjoining the city. Springfield is an important coal-mining center, and has many important industries, notably a watch factory, rolling mills, and extensive manufactories of agricultural implements and furniture. It is also the permanent location of the State Fairs, for which extensive buildings have been erected on the Fair Grounds north of the city. There are three daily papers—two morning and one evening—published here, besides various other publications. Pop. (1900), 34,159.

SPRING VALLEY, an incorporated city in Bureau County, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Toluca, Marquette & Northern Railways, 100 miles southwest of Chicago. It lies in a coal-mining region and has important manufacturing interests as well. It has two banks, electric street and interurban railways, and two newspapers. Population (1890), 3,837; (1900), 6,214.

ST. AGATHA'S SCHOOL, an institution for young ladies, at Springfield, under the patronage of the Bishop of the Episcopal Church, incorporated in 1889. It has a faculty of eight teachers giving instruction in the preparatory and higher branches, including music and fine arts. It reported fifty-five pupils in 1894, and real estate valued at $15,000.

ST. ALBAN'S ACADEMY, a boys' and young men's school at Knoxville, Ill., incorporated in 1896 under the auspices of the Episcopal Church; in 1898 had a faculty of seven teachers, with forty-five pupils, and property valued at $61,100, of which $54,000 was real estate. Instruction is given in the classical and scientific branches, besides music and preparatory studies.

ST. ANNE, a village of Kankakee County, at the crossing of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 60 miles south of Chicago. The town has two banks, tile and brick factory, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,000.

ST. CHARLES, a city in Kane County, on both sides of Fox River, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railways; 38 miles west of Chicago and 10 miles south of Elgin. The river furnishes excellent water-power, which is being utilized by a number of important manufacturing enterprises. The city is connected with Chicago and many towns in the Fox River valley by interurban electric trolley lines; is also the seat of the State Home for Boys. Pop. (1890), 1,690; (1900), 2,675.

ST. CLAIR, Arthur, first Governor of the Northwest Territory, was born of titled ancestry at Thurso, Scotland, in 1734; came to America in 1757 as an ensign, having purchased his commission, participated in the capture of Louisburg, Canada, in 1758, and fought under Wolfe at Quebec. In 1764 he settled in Pennsylvania, where he amassed a moderate fortune, and became prominent in public affairs. He served with distinction during the Revolutionary War, rising to the rank of Major-General, and succeeding General Gates in command at Ticonderoga, but, later, was censured by Washington for his hasty evacuation of the post, though finally vindicated by a military court. His Revolutionary record, however, was generally good, and even distinguished. He represented Pennsylvania in the Continental Congress, and presided over that body in 1787. He served as Governor of the Northwest Territory (including the present State of Illinois) from 1789 to 1802. As an executive he was not successful, being unpopular because of his arbitrariness. In November, 1791, he suffered a serious defeat by the Indians in the valley between the Miami and the Wabash. In this campaign he was badly crippled by the gout, and had to be carried on a litter; he was again vindicated by a Congressional investigation. His first visit to the Illinois Country was made in 1790, when he organized St. Clair County, which was named in his honor. In 1802 President Jefferson removed him from the governorship of Ohio Territory, of which he had continued to be the Governor after its separation from Indiana and Illinois. The remainder of his life was spent in comparative penury. Shortly before his decease, he was granted an annuity by the Pennsylvania Legislature and by Congress. Died, at Greensburg, Pa., August 31, 1818.

ST. CLAIR COUNTY, the first county organized within the territory comprised in the present State of Illinois—the whole region west of the Ohio River having been first placed under civil jurisdiction, under the name of "Illinois County," by an act of the Virginia House of Delegates, passed in October, 1778, a few months after the capture of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark. (See Illinois; also Clark, George Rogers.) St. Clair County was finally set off by an order of Gov. Arthur St. Clair, on occasion of his first visit to the "Illinois Country," in April, 1790—more than two years after his assumption of the duties of Governor of the Northwest Territory, which then comprehended the "Illinois Country" as well as the whole region within the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. Governor St. Clair's order, which bears date, April 27, 1790, defines the boundaries of the new county—which took his own name—as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of the Little Michillimackinack River, running thence southerly in a direct line to the mouth of the little river above Fort Massac upon the Ohio River; thence with the said river to its junction with the Mississippi; thence up the Mississippi to the mouth of the Illinois, and so up the Illinois River to the place of beginning, with all the adjacent islands of said rivers, Illinois and Mississippi." The "Little Michillimackanaek," the initial point mentioned in this description—also variously spelled "Makina" and "Mackinaw," the latter being the name by which the stream is now known—empties into the Illinois River on the south side a few miles below Pekin, in Tazewell County. The boundaries of St. Clair County, as given by Gov. St. Clair, indicate the imperfect knowledge of the topography of the "Illinois Country" existing in that day, as a line drawn south from the mouth of the Mackinaw River, instead of reaching the Ohio "above Fort Massac," would have followed the longitude of the present city of Springfield, striking the Mississippi about the northwestern corner of Jackson County, twenty-five miles west of the mouth of the Ohio. The object of Governor St. Clair's order was, of course, to include the settled portions of the Illinois Country in the new county; and, if it had had the effect intended, the eastern border of the county would have followed a line some fifty miles farther eastward, along the eastern border of Marion, Jefferson, Franklin, Williamson and Johnson Counties, reaching the Ohio River about the present site of Metropolis City in Massac County, and embracing about one-half of the area of the present State of Illinois. For all practical purposes it embraced all the Illinois Country, as it included that portion in which the white settlements were located. (See St. Clair, Arthur; also Illinois Country.) The early records of St. Clair County are in the French language; its first settlers and its early civilization were French, and the first church to inculcate the doctrine of Christianity was the Roman Catholic. The first proceedings in court under the common law were had in 1796. The first Justices of the Peace were appointed in 1807, and, as there was no penitentiary, the whipping-post and pillory played an important part in the code of penalties, these punishments being impartially meted out as late as the time of Judge (afterwards Governor) Reynolds, to "the lame, the halt and the blind," for such offenses as the larceny of a silk handkerchief. At first three places—Cahokia, Prairie du Rocher and Kaskaskia—were named as county-seats by Governor St. Clair; but Randolph County having been set off in 1895, Cahokia became the county-seat of the older county, so remaining until 1813, when Belleville was selected as the seat of justice. At that time it was a mere cornfield owned by George Blair, although settlements had previously been established in Ridge Prairie and at Badgley. Judge Jesse B. Thomas held his first court in a log-cabin, but a rude court house was erected in 1814, and, the same year, George E. Blair established a hostelry, Joseph Kerr opened a store, and, in 1817, additional improvements were inaugurated by Daniel Murray and others, from Baltimore. John H. Dennis and the Mitchells and Wests (from Virginia) settled soon afterward, becoming farmers and mechanics. Belleville was incorporated in 1819. In 1825 Governor Edwards bought the large landed interests of Etienne Personneau, a large French land-owner, ordered a new survey of the town and infused fresh life into its development. Settlers began to arrive in large numbers, mainly Virginians, who brought with them their slaves, the right to hold which was, for many years, a fruitful and perennial source of strife. Emigrants from Germany began to arrive at an early day, and now a large proportion of the population of Belleville and St. Clair County is made up of that nationality. The county, as at present organized, lies on the western border of the south half of the State, immediately opposite St. Louis, and comprises some 680 square miles. Three-fourths of it are underlaid by a vein of coal, six to eight feet thick, and about one hundred feet below the surface. Considerable wheat is raised. The principal towns are Belleville, East St. Louis, Lebanon and Mascoutah. Population of the county (1880), 61,806; (1890), 66,571; (1900), 86,685.

ST. JOHN, an incorporated village of Perry County, on the Illinois Central Railway, one mile north of Duquoin. Coal is mined and salt manufactured here. Population about 500.

ST. JOSEPH, a village of Champaign County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 10 miles east of Champaign; has inter-urban railroad connection. Pop. (1900), 637.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPITAL, (Chicago), founded in 1860, by the Sisters of Charity. Having been destroyed in the fire of 1871, it was rebuilt in the following year. In 1892 it was reconstructed, enlarged and made thoroughly modern in its appointments. It can accommodate about 250 patients. The Sisters attend to the nursing, and conduct the domestic and financial affairs. The medical staff comprises ten physicians and surgeons, among whom are some of the most eminent in Chicago.

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD, a corporation formerly operating an extensive system of railroads in Illinois. The Terre Haute & Alton Railroad Company (the original corporation) was chartered in January, 1851, work begun in 1852, and the main line from Terre Haute to Alton (172.5 miles) completed, March 1, 1856. The Belleville & Illinoistown branch (from Belleville to East St. Louis) was chartered in 1852, and completed between the points named in the title, in the fall of 1854. This corporation secured authority to construct an extension from Illinoistown (now East St. Louis) to Alton, which was completed in October, 1856, giving the first railroad connection between Alton & St. Louis. Simultaneously with this, these two roads (the Terre Haute & Alton and the Belleville & Illinoistown) were consolidated under a single charter by special act of the Legislature in February, 1854, the consolidated line taking the name of the Terre Haute, Alton & St. Louis Railroad. Subsequently the road became financially embarrassed, was sold under foreclosure and reorganized, in 1862, under the name of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad. June 1, 1867, the main line (from Terre Haute to St. Louis) was leased for ninety-nine years to the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railway Company (an Indiana corporation) guaranteed by certain other lines, but the lease was subsequently broken by the insolvency of the lessee and some of the guarantors. The Indianapolis & St. Louis went into the hands of a receiver in 1882, and was sold under foreclosure, in July of the same year, its interest being absorbed by the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which the main line is now operated. The properties officially reported as remaining in the hands of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad, June 30, 1895, beside the Belleville Branch (14.40 miles), included the following leased and subsidiary lines: Belleville & Southern Illinois—"Cairo Short Line" (56.40 miles); Belleville & Eldorado, (50.20 miles); Belleville & Carondelet (17.30 miles); St. Louis Southern and branches (47.27 miles), and Chicago, St. Louis & Paducah Railway (53.50 miles). All these have been leased, since the close of the fiscal year 1895, to the Illinois Central. (For sketches of these several roads see headings of each.)

ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO & ST. PAUL RAILROAD, (Bluff Line), a line running from Springfield to Granite City, Ill., (opposite St. Louis), 102.1 miles, with a branch from Lock Haven to Grafton, Ill., 8.4 miles—total length of line in Illinois, 110.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge, laid with 56 to 70-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The road was originally incorporated under the name of the St. Louis, Jerseyville & Springfield Railroad, built from Bates to Grafton in 1882, and absorbed by the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company; was surrendered by the receivers of the latter in 1886, and passed under the control of the bond-holders, by whom it was transferred to a corporation known as the St. Louis & Central Illinois Railroad Company. In June, 1887, the St. Louis, Alton & Springfield Railroad Company was organized, with power to build extensions from Newbern to Alton, and from Bates to Springfield, which was done. In October, 1890, a receiver was appointed, followed by a reorganization under the present name (St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul). Default was made on the interest and, in June following, it was again placed in the hands of receivers, by whom it was operated until 1898. The total earnings and income for the fiscal year 1897-98 were $318,815, operating expenses, $373,270; total capitalization, $4,853,526, of which, $1,500,000 was in the form of stock and $1,235,000 in income bonds.

ST. LOUIS, INDIANAPOLIS & EASTERN RAILROAD, a railroad line 90 miles in length, extending from Switz City, Ind., to Effingham, Ill.—56 miles being within the State of Illinois. It is of standard gauge and the track laid chiefly with iron rails.—(HISTORY.) The original corporation was chartered in 1869 as the Springfield, Effingham & Quincy Railway Company. It was built as a narrow-gauge line by the Cincinnati, Effingham & Quincy Construction Company, which went into the hands of a receiver in 1878. The road was completed by the receiver in 1880, and, in 1885, restored to the Construction Company by the discharge of the receiver. For a short time it was operated in connection with the Bloomfield Railroad of Indiana, but was reorganized in 1886 as the Indiana & Illinois Southern Railroad, and the gauge changed to standard in 1887. Having made default in the payment of interest, it was sold under foreclosure in 1890 and purchased in the interest of the bond-holders, by whom it was conveyed to the St. Louis, Indianapolis & Eastern Railroad Company, in whose name the line is operated. Its business is limited, and chiefly local. The total earnings in 1898 were $65,583 and the expenditures $69,112. Its capital stock was $740,900; bonded debt, $978,000, other indebtedness increasing the total capital investment to $1,816,736.

ST. LOUIS, PEORIA & NORTHERN RAILWAY, known as "Peoria Short Line," a corporation organized, Feb. 29, 1896, to take over and unite the properties of the St. Louis & Eastern, the St. Louis & Peoria and the North and South Railways, and to extend the same due north from Springfield to Peoria (60 miles), and thence to Fulton or East Clinton, Ill., on the Upper Mississippi. The line extends from Springfield to Glen Carbon (84.46 miles), with trackage facilities over the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad and the Merchants' Terminal Bridge (18 miles) to St. Louis.—(HISTORY.) This road has been made up of three sections or divisions. (1) The initial section of the line was constructed under the name of the St. Louis & Chicago Railroad of Illinois, incorporated in 1885, and opened from Mount Olive to Alhambra in 1887. It passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1889, and reorganized, in 1890, as the St. Louis & Peoria Railroad. The St. Louis & Eastern, chartered in 1889, built the line from Glen Carbon to Marine, which was opened in 1893; the following year, bought the St. Louis & Peoria line, and, in 1895, constructed the link (8 miles) between Alhambra and Marine. (3) The North & South Railroad Company of Illinois, organized in 1890, as successor to the St. Louis & Chicago Railway Company, proceeded in the construction of the line (50.46 miles) from Mt. Olive to Springfield, which was subsequently leased to the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, then under the management of the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railway. The latter corporation having defaulted, the property passed into the hands of a receiver. By expiration of the lease in December, 1896, the property reverted to the proprietary Company, which took possession, Jan. 1, 1896. The St. Louis & Southeastern then bought the line outright, and it was incorporated as a part of the new organization under the name of the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway, the North & South Railroad going out of existence. In May, 1899, the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern was sold to the reorganized Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, to be operated as a short line between Peoria & St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, ROCK ISLAND & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS SOUTHERN RAILROAD, a line running from Pinckneyville, Ill., via Murphysboro, to Carbondale. The company is also the lessee of the Carbondale & Shawneetown Railroad, extending from Carbondale to Marion, 17.5 miles—total, 50.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid with 56 and 60-pound steel rails. The company was organized in August, 1886, to succeed to the property of the St. Louis Coal Railroad (organized in 1879) and the St. Louis Central Railway; and was leased for 980 years from Dec. 1, 1886, to the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, at an annual rental equal to thirty per cent of the gross earnings, with a minimum guarantee of $32,000, which is sufficient to pay the interest on the first mortgage bonds. During the year 1896 this line passed under lease from the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, into the hands of the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

ST. LOUIS, SPRINGFIELD & VINCENNES RAILROAD COMPANY, a corporation organized in July, 1899, to take over the property of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway in the State of Illinois, known as the Ohio & Mississippi and the Springfield & Illinois Southeastern Railways—the former extending from Vincennes, Ind., to East St. Louis, and the latter from Beardstown to Shawneetown. The property was sold under foreclosure, at Cincinnati, July 10, 1899, and transferred, for purposes of reorganization, into the hands of the new corporation, July 28, 1899. (For history of the several lines see Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway.)

ST. LOUIS, VANDALIA & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD. This line extends from East St. Louis eastward across the State, to the Indiana State line, a distance of 158.3 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company is the lessee. The track is single, of standard gauge, and laid with steel rails. The outstanding capital stock, in 1898, was $3,924,058, the bonded debt, $4,496,000, and the floating debt, $218,480.—(HISTORY.) The St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute Railroad was chartered in 1865, opened in 1870 and leased to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, for itself and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad.

ST. LOUIS & CAIRO RAILROAD, extends from East St. Louis to Cairo, Ill., 151.6 miles, with a branch from Millstadt Junction to High Prairie, 9 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid mainly with steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The original charter was granted to the Cairo & St. Louis Railroad Company, Feb. 16, 1865, and the road opened, March 1, 1875. Subsequently it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, July 14, 1881, and was taken charge of by a new company under its present name, Feb. 1, 1882. On Feb. 1, 1886, it was leased to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company for forty-five years, and now constitutes the Illinois Division of that line, giving it a connection with St. Louis. ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, located in Chicago. It was chartered in 1865, its incorporators, in their initial statement, substantially declaring their object to be the establishment of a free hospital under the control of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which should be open to the afflicted poor, without distinction of race or creed. The hospital was opened on a small scale, but steadily increased until 1879, when re-incorporation was effected under the general law. In 1885 a new building was erected on land donated for that purpose, at a cost exceeding $150,000, exclusive of $20,000 for furnishing. While its primary object has been to afford accommodation, with medical and surgical care, gratuitously, to the needy poor, the institution also provides a considerable number of comfortable, well-furnished private rooms for patients who are able and willing to pay for the same. It contains an amphitheater for surgical operations and clinics, and has a free dispensary for out-patients. During the past few years important additions have been made, the number of beds increased, and provision made for a training school for nurses. The medical staff (1896) consists of thirteen physicians and surgeons and two pathologists.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL, a young ladies' seminary, under the patronage of the Episcopal Church, at Knoxville, Knox County, Ill.; was incorporated in 1858, in 1898 had a faculty of fourteen teachers, giving instruction to 113 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, the sciences, fine arts, music and preparatory studies. The institution has a library of 2,200 volumes, and owns property valued at $130,500, of which $100,000 is real estate.

STAGER, Anson, soldier and Telegraph Superintendent, was born in Ontario County, N. Y., April 20, 1825; at 16 years of age entered the service of Henry O'Reilly, a printer who afterwards became a pioneer in building telegraph lines, and with whom he became associated in various enterprises of this character. Having introduced several improvements in the construction of batteries and the arrangement of wires, he was, in 1852, made General Superintendent of the principal lines in the West, and, on the organization of the Western Union Company, was retained in this position. Early in the Civil War he was entrusted with the management of telegraph lines in Southern Ohio and along the Virginia border, and, in October following, was appointed General Superintendent of Government telegraphs, remaining in this position until September, 1868, his services being recognized in his promotion to a brevet Brigadier-Generalship of Volunteers. In 1869 General Stager returned to Chicago and, in addition to his duties as General Superintendent, engaged in the promotion of a number of enterprises connected with the manufacture of electrical appliances and other branches of the business. One of these was the consolidation of the telephone companies, of which he became President, as also of the Western Edison Electric Light Company, besides being a Director in several other corporations. Died, in Chicago, March 26, 1885.

STANDISH, John Van Ness, a lineal descendant of Capt. Miles Standish, the Pilgrim leader, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 26, 1825. His early years were spent on a farm, but a love of knowledge and books became his ruling passion, and he devoted several years to study, in the "Liberal Institute" at Lebanon, N. H., finally graduating, with the degree of A. B., at Norwich University in the class of 1847. Later, he received the degree of A. M., in due course, from his Alma Mater in 1855; that of Ph.D. from Knox College, in 1883, of LL.D. from St. Lawrence University in 1893, and from Norwich, in 1898. Dr. Standish chose the profession of a teacher, and has spent over fifty years in its pursuit in connection with private and public schools and the College, of which more than forty years were as Professor and President of Lombard University at Galesburg. He has also lectured and conducted Teachers' Institutes all over the State, and, in 1859, was elected President of the State Teachers' Association. He made three visits to the Old World—in 1879, '82-83, and '91-92—and, during his second trip, traveled over 40,000 miles, visiting nearly every country of Europe, including the "Land of the Midnight Sun," besides Northern Africa from the Mediterranean to the Desert of Sahara, Egypt, Palestine, Syria and Asia Minor. A lover of art, he has visited nearly all the principal museums and picture galleries of the world. In politics he is a Republican, and, in opposition to many college men, a firm believer in the doctrine of protection. In religion, he is a Universalist.

STAPP, James T. B., State Auditor, was born in Woodford County, Ky., April 13, 1804; at the age of 12 accompanied his widowed mother to Kaskaskia, Ill., where she settled; before he was 20 years old, was employed as a clerk in the office of the State Auditor, and, upon the resignation of that officer, was appointed his successor, being twice thereafter elected by the Legislature, serving nearly five years. He resigned the auditorship to accept the Presidency of the State Bank at Vandalia, which post he filled for thirteen years; acted as Aid-de-camp on Governor Reynolds staff in the Black Hawk War, and served as Adjutant of the Third Illinois Volunteers during the war with Mexico. President Taylor appointed Mr. Stapp Receiver of the United States Land Office at Vandalia, which office he held during the Fillmore administration, resigning in 1855. Two years later he removed to Decatur, where he continued to reside until his death in 1876. A handsome Methodist chapel, erected by him in that city, bears his name.

STARK COUNTY, an interior county in the northern half of the State, lying west of the Illinois River; has an area of 290 square miles. It has a rich, alluvial soil, well watered by numerous small streams. The principal industries are agriculture and stock-raising, and the chief towns are Toulon and Wyoming. The county was erected from Putnam and Knox in 1839, and named in honor of General Stark, of Revolutionary fame. The earliest settler was Isaac B. Essex, who built a cabin on Spoon River, in 1828, and gave his name to a township. Of other pioneer families, the Buswells, Smiths, Spencers and Eastmans came from New England; the Thomases, Moores, Holgates, Fullers and Whittakers from Pennsylvania; the Coxes from Ohio; the Perrys and Parkers from Virginia; the McClanahans from Kentucky; the Hendersons from Tennessee; the Lees and Hazens from New Jersey; the Halls from England, and the Turnbells and Olivers from Scotland. The pioneer church was the Congregational at Toulon. Population (1880), 11,207; (1890), 9,982; (1900), 10,186.

STARVED ROCK, a celebrated rock or cliff on the south side of Illinois River, in La Salle County, upon which the French explorer, La Salle, and his lieutenant, Tonty, erected a fort in 1682, which they named Fort St. Louis. It was one mile north of the supposed location of the Indian village of La Vantum, the metropolis, so to speak, of the Illinois Indians about the time of the arrival of the first French explorers. The population of this village, in 1680, according to Father Membre, was some seven or eight thousand. Both La Vantum and Fort St. Louis were repeatedly attacked by the Iroquois. The Illinois were temporarily driven from La Vantum, but the French, for the time being, successfully defended their fortification. In 1702 the fort was abandoned as a military post, but continued to be used as a French trading-post until 1718, when it was burned by Indians. The Illinois were not again molested until 1722, when the Foxes made an unsuccessful attack upon them. The larger portion of the tribe, however, resolved to cast in their fortunes with other tribes on the Mississippi River. Those who remained fell an easy prey to the foes by whom they were surrounded. In 1769 they were attacked from the north by tribes who desired to avenge the murder of Pontiac. Finding themselves hard pressed, they betook themselves to the bluff where Fort St. Louis had formerly stood. Here they were besieged for twelve days, when, destitute of food or water, they made a gallant but hopeless sortie. According to a tradition handed down among the Indians, all were massacred by the besiegers in an attempt to escape by night, except one half-breed, who succeeded in evading his pursuers. This sanguinary catastrophe has given the rock its popular name. Elmer Baldwin, in his History of La Salle County (1877), says: "The bones of the victims lay scattered about the cliff in profusion after the settlement by the whites, and are still found mingled plentifully with the soil." (See La Salle, Robert Cavelier; Tonty; Fort St. Louis.)

STARNE, Alexander, Secretary of State and State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 21, 1813; in the spring of 1836 removed to Illinois, settling at Griggsville, Pike County, where he opened a general store. From 1839 to '42 he served as Commissioner of Pike County, and, in the latter year, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and re-elected in 1844. Having, in the meanwhile, disposed of his store at Griggsville and removed to Pittsfield, he was appointed, by Judge Purple, Clerk of the Circuit Court, and elected to the same office for four years, when it was made elective. In 1852 he was elected Secretary of State, when he removed to Springfield, returning to Griggsville at the expiration of his term in 1857, to assume the Presidency of the old Hannibal and Naples Railroad (now a part of the Wabash system). He represented Pike and Brown Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and the same year was elected State Treasurer. He thereupon again removed to Springfield, where he resided until his death, being, with his sons, extensively engaged in coal mining. In 1870, and again in 1872, he was elected State Senator from Sangamon County. He died at Springfield, March 31, 1886.

STATE BANK OF ILLINOIS. The first legislation, having for its object the establishment of a bank within the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois, was the passage, by the Territorial Legislature of 1816, of an act incorporating the "Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, with branches at Edwardsville and Kaskaskia." In the Second General Assembly of the State (1820) an act was passed, over the Governor's veto and in defiance of the adverse judgment of the Council of Revision, establishing a State Bank at Vandalia with branches at Shawneetown, Edwardsville, and Brownsville in Jackson County. This was, in effect, a rechartering of the banks at Shawneetown and Edwardsville. So far as the former is concerned, it seems to have been well managed; but the official conduct of the officers of the latter, on the basis of charges made by Governor Edwards in 1826, was made the subject of a legislative investigation, which (although it resulted in nothing) seems to have had some basis of fact, in view of the losses finally sustained in winding up its affairs—that of the General Government amounting to $54,000. Grave charges were made in this connection against men who were then, or afterwards became, prominent in State affairs, including one Justice of the Supreme Court and one (still later) a United States Senator. The experiment was disastrous, as, ten years later (1831), it was found necessary for the State to incur a debt of $100,000 to redeem the outstanding circulation. Influenced, however, by the popular demand for an increase in the "circulating medium," the State continued its experiment of becoming a stockholder in banks managed by its citizens, and accordingly we find it, in 1835, legislating in the same direction for the establishing of a central "Bank of Illinois" at Springfield, with branches at other points as might be required, not to exceed six in number. One of these branches was established at Vandalia and another at Chicago, furnishing the first banking institution of the latter city. Two years later, when the State was entering upon its scheme of internal improvement, laws were enacted increasing the capital stock of these banks to $4,000,000 in the aggregate. Following the example of similar institutions elsewhere, they suspended specie payments a few months later, but were protected by "stay laws" and other devices until 1842, when the internal improvement scheme having been finally abandoned, they fell in general collapse. The State ceased to be a stockholder in 1843, and the banks were put in course of liquidation, though it required several years to complete the work.

STATE CAPITALS. The first State capital of Illinois was Kaskaskia, where the first Territorial Legislature convened, Nov. 25, 1812. At that time there were but five counties in the State—St. Clair and Randolph being the most important, and Kaskaskia being the county-seat of the latter. Illinois was admitted into the Union as a State in 1818, and the first Constitution provided that the seat of government should remain at Kaskaskia until removed by legislative enactment. That instrument, however, made it obligatory upon the Legislature, at its first session, to petition Congress for a grant of not more than four sections of land, on which should be erected a town, which should remain the seat of government for twenty years. The petition was duly presented and granted; and, in accordance with the power granted by the Constitution, a Board of five Commissioners selected the site of the present city of Vandalia, then a point in the wilderness twenty miles north of any settlement. But so great was the faith of speculators in the future of the proposed city, that town lots were soon selling at $100 to $780 each. The Commissioners, in obedience to law, erected a plain two-story frame building—scarcely more than a commodious shanty—to which the State offices were removed in December, 1820. This building was burned, Dec. 9, 1823, and a brick structure erected in its place. Later, when the question of a second removal of the capital began to be agitated, the citizens of Vandalia assumed the risk of erecting a new, brick State House, costing $16,000. Of this amount $6,000 was reimbursed by the Governor from the contingent fund, and the balance ($10,000) was appropriated in 1837, when the seat of government was removed to Springfield, by vote of the Tenth General Assembly on the fourth ballot. The other places receiving the principal vote at the time of the removal to Springfield, were Jacksonville, Vandalia, Peoria, Alton and Illiopolis—Springfield receiving the largest vote at each ballot. The law removing the capital appropriated $50,000 from the State Treasury, provided that a like amount should be raised by private subscription and guaranteed by bond, and that at least two acres of land should be donated as a site. Two State Houses have been erected at Springfield, the first cost of the present one (including furnishing) having been a little in excess of $4,000,000. Abraham Lincoln, who was a member of the Legislature from Sangamon County at the time, was an influential factor in securing the removal of the capital to Springfield.

STATE DEBT. The State debt, which proved so formidable a burden upon the State of Illinois for a generation, and, for a part of that period, seriously checked its prosperity, was the direct outgrowth of the internal improvement scheme entered upon in 1837. (See Internal Improvement Policy.) At the time this enterprise was undertaken the aggregate debt of the State was less than $400,000—accumulated within the preceding six years. Two years later (1838) it had increased to over $6,500,000, while the total valuation of real and personal property, for the purposes of taxation, was less than $60,000,000, and the aggregate receipts of the State treasury, for the same year, amounted to less than $150,000. At the same time, the disbursements, for the support of the State Government alone, had grown to more than twice the receipts. This disparity continued until the declining credit of the State forced upon the managers of public affairs an involuntary economy, when the means could no longer be secured for more lavish expenditures. The first bonds issued at the inception of the internal improvement scheme sold at a premium of 5 per cent, but rapidly declined until they were hawked in the markets of New York and London at a discount, in some cases falling into the hands of brokers who failed before completing their contracts, thus causing a direct loss to the State. If the internal improvement scheme was ill-advised, the time chosen to carry it into effect was most unfortunate, as it came simultaneously with the panic of 1837, rendering the disaster all the more complete. Of the various works undertaken by the State, only the Illinois & Michigan Canal brought a return, all the others resulting in more or less complete loss. The internal improvement scheme was abandoned in 1839-40, but not until State bonds exceeding $13,000,000 had been issued. For two years longer the State struggled with its embarrassments, increased by the failure of the State Bank in February, 1842, and, by that of the Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, a few months later, with the proceeds of more than two and a half millions of the State's bonds in their possession. Thus left without credit, or means even of paying the accruing interest, there were those who regarded the State as hopelessly bankrupt, and advocated repudiation as the only means of escape. Better counsels prevailed, however; the Constitution of 1848 put the State on a basis of strict economy in the matter of salaries and general expenditures, with restrictions upon the Legislature in reference to incurring indebtedness, while the beneficent "two-mill tax" gave assurance to its creditors that its debts would be paid. While the growth of the State, in wealth and population, had previously been checked by the fear of excessive taxation, it now entered upon a new career of prosperity, in spite of its burdens—its increase in population, between 1850 and 1860, amounting to over 100 per cent. The movement of the State debt after 1840—when the internal improvement scheme was abandoned—chiefly by accretions of unpaid interest, has been estimated as follows: 1842, $15,637,950; 1844, $14,633,969; 1846, $16,389,817; 1848, $16,661,795. It reached its maximum in 1853—the first year of Governor Matteson's administration—when it was officially reported at $16,724,177. At this time the work of extinguishment began, and was prosecuted under successive administrations, except during the war, when the vast expense incurred in sending troops to the field caused an increase. During Governor Bissell's administration, the reduction amounted to over $3,000,000; during Oglesby's, to over five and a quarter million, besides two and a quarter million paid on interest. In 1880 the debt had been reduced to $281,059.11, and, before the close of 1882, it had been entirely extinguished, except a balance of $18,500 in bonds, which, having been called in years previously and never presented for

STATE GUARDIANS FOR GIRLS, a bureau organized for the care of female juvenile delinquents, by act of June 2, 1893. The Board consists of seven members, nominated by the Executive and confirmed by the Senate, and who constitute a body politic and corporate. Not more than two of the members may reside in the same Congressional District and, of the seven members, four must be women. (See also Home for Female Juvenile Offenders.) The term of office is six years.

STATE HOUSE, located at Springfield. Its construction was begun under an act passed by the Legislature in February, 1867, and completed in 1887. It stands in a park of about eight acres, donated to the State by the citizens of Springfield. A provision of the State Constitution of 1870 prohibited the expenditure of any sum in excess of $3,500,000 in the erection and furnishing of the building, without previous approval of such additional expenditure by the people. This amount proving insufficient, the Legislature, at its session of 1885, passed an act making an additional appropriation of $531,712, which having been approved by popular vote at the general election of 1886, the expenditure was made and the capitol completed during the following year, thus raising the total cost of construction and furnishing to a little in excess of $4,000,000. The building is cruciform as to its ground plan, and classic in its style of architecture; its extreme dimensions (including porticoes), from north to south, being 379 feet, and, from east to west, 286 feet. The walls are of dressed Joliet limestone, while the porticoes, which are spacious and lofty, are of sandstone, supported by polished columns of gray granite. The three stories of the building are surmounted by a Mansard roof, with two turrets and a central dome of stately dimensions. Its extreme height, to the top of the iron flag-staff, which rises from a lantern springing from the dome, is 364 feet.

STATE NORMAL UNIVERSITY, an institution for the education of teachers, organized under an act of the General Assembly, passed Feb. 18, 1857. This act placed the work of organization in the hands of a board of fifteen persons, which was styled "The Board of Education of the State of Illinois," and was constituted as follows: C. B. Denio of Jo Daviess County; Simeon Wright of Lee; Daniel Wilkins of McLean; Charles E. Hovey of Peoria; George P. Rex of Pike; Samuel W. Moulton of Shelby; John Gillespie of Jasper; George Bunsen of St. Clair; Wesley Sloan of Pope; Ninian W. Edwards of Sangamon; John R. Eden of Moultrie; Flavel Moseley and William Wells of Cook; Albert R. Shannon of White; and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, ex-officio. The object of the University, as defined in the organizing law, is to qualify teachers for the public schools of the State, and the course of instruction to be given embraces "the art of teaching, and all branches which pertain to a common-school education; in the elements of the natural sciences, including agricultural chemistry, animal and vegetable physiology; in the fundamental laws of the United States and of the State of Illinois in regard to the rights and duties of citizens, and such other studies as the Board of Education may, from time to time, prescribe." Various cities competed for the location of the institution, Bloomington being finally selected, its bid, including 160 acres of land, being estimated as equivalent to $141,725. The corner-stone was laid on September 29, 1857, and the first building was ready for permanent occupancy in September, 1860. Previously, however, it had been sufficiently advanced to permit of its being used, and the first commencement exercises were held on June 29 of the latter year. Three years earlier, the academic department had been organized under the charge of Charles E. Hovey. The first cost, including furniture, etc., was not far from $200,000. Gratuitous instruction is given to two pupils from each county, and to three from each Senatorial District. The departments are: Grammar school, high school, normal department and model school, all of which are overcrowded. The whole number of students in attendance on the institution during the school year, 1897-98, was 1,197, of whom 891 were in the normal department and 306 in the practice school department, including representatives from 86 counties of the State, with a few pupils from other States on the payment of tuition. The teaching faculty (including the President and Librarian) for the same year, was made up of twenty-six members—twelve ladies and fourteen gentlemen. The expenditures for the year 1897-98 aggregated $47,626.92, against $66,528.69 for 1896-97. Nearly $22,000 of the amount expended during the latter year was on account of the construction of a gymnasium building.

STATE PROPERTY. The United States Census of 1890 gave the value of real and personal property belonging to the State as follows: Public lands, $328,000; buildings, $22,164,000; miscellaneous property, $2,650,000—total, $25,142,000. The land may be subdivided thus: Camp-grounds of the Illinois National Guard near Springfield (donated), $40,000; Illinois and Michigan Canal, $168,000; Illinois University lands, in Illinois (donated by the General Government), $41,000, in Minnesota (similarly donated), $79,000. The buildings comprise those connected with the charitable, penal and educational institutions of the State, besides the State Arsenal, two buildings for the use of the Appellate Courts (at Ottawa and Mount Vernon), the State House, the Executive Mansion, and locks and dams erected at Henry and Copperas Creek. Of the miscellaneous property, $120,000 represents the equipment of the Illinois National Guard; $1,959,000 the value of the movable property of public buildings; $550,000 the endowment fund of the University of Illinois; and $21,000 the movable property of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The figures given relative to the value of the public buildings include only the first appropriations for their erection. Considerable sums have since been expended upon some of them in repairs, enlargements and improvements.

STATE TREASURERS. The only Treasurer of Illinois during the Territorial period was John Thomas, who served from 1812 to 1818, and became the first incumbent under the State Government. Under the Constitution of 1818 the Treasurer was elected, biennially, by joint vote of the two Houses of the General Assembly; by the Constitution of 1848, this officer was made elective by the people for the same period, without limitations as to number of terms; under the Constitution of 1870, the manner of election and duration of term are unchanged, but the incumbent is ineligible to re-election, for two years from expiration of the term for which he may have been chosen. The following is a list of the State Treasurers, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each: John Thomas, 1818-19; Robert K. McLaughlin, 1819-23; Abner Field, 1823-27; James Hall, 1827-31; John Dement, 1831-36; Charles Gregory, 1836-37; John D. Whiteside, 1837-41; Milton Carpenter, 1841-48; John Moore, 1848-57; James Miller, 1857-59; William Butler, 1859-63; Alexander Starne, 1863-65; James H. Beveridge, 1865-67; George W. Smith, 1867-69; Erastus N. Bates, 1869-73; Edward Rutz, 1873-75; Thomas S. Ridgway, 1875-77; Edward Rutz, 1877-79; John C. Smith, 1879-81; Edward Rutz, 1881-83; John C. Smith, 1883-85; Jacob Gross, 1885-87; John R. Tanner, 1887-89; Charles Becker, 1889-91; Edward S. Wilson, 1891-93; Rufus N. Ramsay, 1893-95; Henry Wulff, 1895-97; Henry L. Hertz, 1897-99; Floyd K. Whittemore, 1899—.

STAUNTON, a village in the southeast corner of Maconpin County, on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways; is 36 miles northeast of St. Louis, and 14 miles southwest of Litchfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the industries of the surrounding region. Staunton has two banks, eight churches and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 1,358; (1890), 2,209; (1900), 2,786.

STEEL PRODUCTION. In the manufacture of steel, Illinois has long ranked as the second State in the Union in the amount of its output, and, during the period between 1880 and 1890, the increase in production was 241 per cent. In 1880 there were but six steel works in the State; in 1890 these had increased to fourteen; and the production of steel of all kinds (in tons of 2,000 pounds) had risen from 254,569 tons to 868,250. Of the 3,837,039 tons of Bessemer steel ingots, or direct castings, produced in the United States in 1890, 22 per cent were turned out in Illinois, nearly all the steel produced in the State being made by that process. From the tonnage of ingots, as given above, Illinois produced 622,260 pounds of steel rails,—more than 30 per cent of the aggregate for the entire country. This fact is noteworthy, inasmuch as the competition in the manufacture of Bessemer steel rails, since 1880, has been so great that many rail mills have converted their steel into forms other than rails, experience having proved their production to any considerable extent, during the past few years, unprofitable except in works favorably located for obtaining cheap raw material, or operated under the latest and most approved methods of manufacture. Open-hearth steel is no longer made in Illinois, but the manufacture of crucible steel is slightly increasing, the output in 1890 being 445 tons, as against 130 in 1880. For purposes requiring special grades of steel the product of the crucible process will be always in demand, but the high cost of manufacture prevents it, in a majority of instances, from successfully competing in price with the other processes mentioned.

STEPHENSON, Benjamin, pioneer and early politician, came to Illinois from Kentucky in 1809, and was appointed the first Sheriff of Randolph County by Governor Edwards under the Territorial Government; afterwards served as a Colonel of Illinois militia during the War of 1812; represented Illinois Territory as Delegate in Congress, 1814-16, and, on his retirement from Congress, became Register of the Land Office at Edwardsville, finally dying at Edwardsville—Col. James W. (Stephenson), a son of the preceding, was a soldier during the Black Hawk War, afterwards became a prominent politician in the north-western part of the State, served as Register of the Land Office at Galena and, in 1838, received the Democratic nomination for Governor, but withdrew before the election.

STEPHENSON, (Dr.) Benjamin Franklin, physician and soldier, was born in Wayne County, Ill., Oct. 30, 1822, and accompanied his parents, in 1825, to Sangamon County, where the family settled. His early educational advantages were meager, and he did not study his profession (medicine) until after reaching his majority, graduating from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1850. He began practice at Petersburg, but, in April, 1862, was mustered into the volunteer army as Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry. After a little over two years service he was mustered out in June, 1864, when he took up his residence in Springfield, and, for a year, was engaged in the drug business there. In 1865 he resumed professional practice. He lacked tenacity of purpose, however, was indifferent to money, and always willing to give his own services and orders for medicine to the poor. Hence, his practice was not lucrative. He was one of the leaders in the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic (which see), in connection with which he is most widely known; but his services in its cause failed to receive, during his lifetime, the recognition which they deserved, nor did the organization promptly flourish, as he had hoped. He finally returned with his family to Petersburg. Died, at Rock Creek, Menard County, Ill., August 30, 1871.

STEPHENSON COUNTY, a northwestern county, with an area of 560 square miles. The soil is rich, productive and well timbered. Fruit-culture and stock-raising are among the chief industries. Not until 1827 did the aborigines quit the locality, and the county was organized, ten years later, and named for Gen. Benjamin Stephenson. A man named Kirker, who had been in the employment of Colonel Gratiot as a lead-miner, near Galena, is said to have built the first cabin within the present limits of what was called Burr Oak Grove, and set himself up as an Indian-trader in 1826, but only remained a short time. He was followed, the next year, by Oliver

W. Kellogg, who took Kirker's place, built a more pretentious dwelling and became the first permanent settler. Later came William Wadams, the Montagues, Baker, Kilpatrick, Preston, the Goddards, and others whose names are linked with the county's early history. The first house in Freeport was built by William Baker. Organization was effected in 1837, the total poll being eighty-four votes. The earliest teacher was Nelson Martin, who is said to have taught a school of some twelve pupils, in a house which stood on the site of the present city of Freeport. Population (1880), 31,963; (1890), 31,338; (1900), 34,933.

STERLING, a flourishing city on the north bank of Rock River, in Whiteside County, 109 miles west of Chicago, 29 miles east of Clinton, Iowa, and 52 miles east-northeast of Rock Island. It has ample railway facilities, furnished by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Sterling & Peoria, and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. It contains fourteen churches, an opera house, high and grade schools, Carnegie library, Government postoffice building, three banks, electric street and interurban car lines, electric and gas lighting, water-works, paved streets and sidewalks, fire department and four newspaper offices, two issuing daily editions. It has fine water-power, and is an important manufacturing center, its works turning out agricultural implements, carriages, paper, barbed-wire, school furniture, burial caskets, pumps, sash, doors, etc. It also has the Sterling Iron Works, besides foundries and machine shops. The river here flows through charming scenery. Pop. (1890), 5,824; (1900), 6,309.

STEVENS, Bradford A., ex-Congressman, was born at Boscawen (afterwards Webster), N. H., Jan. 3, 1813. After attending schools in New Hampshire and at Montreal, he entered Dartmouth College, graduating therefrom in 1835. During the six years following, he devoted himself to teaching, at Hopkinsville, Ky., and New York City. In 1843 he removed to Bureau County, Ill., where he became a merchant and farmer. In 1868 he was chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and, in 1870, was elected to Congress, as an Independent Democrat, for the Fifth District.

STEVENSON, Adlai E., ex-Vice-President of the United States, was born in Christian County, Ky., Oct. 23, 1835. In 1852 he removed with his parents to Bloomington, McLean County, Ill., where the family settled; was educated at the Illinois Wesleyan University and at Centre College, Ky., was admitted to the bar in 1858 and began practice at Metamora, Woodford County, where he was Master in Chancery, 1861-65, and State's Attorney, 1865-69. In 1864 he was candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. In 1869 he returned to Bloomington, where he has since resided. In 1874, and again in 1876, he was an unsuccessful candidate of his party for Congress, but was elected as a Greenback Democrat in 1878, though defeated in 1880 and 1882. In 1877 he was appointed by President Hayes a member of the Board of Visitors to West Point. During the first administration of President Cleveland (1885-89) he was First Assistant Postmaster General; was a member of the National Democratic Conventions of 1884 and 1892, being Chairman of the Illinois delegation the latter year. In 1892 he received his party's nomination for the Vice-Presidency, and was elected to that office, serving until 1897. Since retiring from office he has resumed his residence at Bloomington.

STEWART, Lewis, manufacturer and former Congressman, was born in Wayne County, Pa., Nov. 20, 1824, and received a common school education. At the age of 14 he accompanied his parents to Kendall County, Ill., where he afterwards resided, being engaged in farming and the manufacture of agricultural implements at Plano. He studied law but never practiced. In 1876 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket, being defeated by Shelby M. Cullom. In 1890 the Democrats of the Eighth Illinois District elected him to Congress. In 1892 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Robert A. Childs, by the narrow margin of 27 votes, and, in 1894, was again defeated, this time being pitted against Albert J. Hopkins. Mr. Stewart died at his home at Plano, August 26, 1896.

STEWARTSON, a town of Shelby County, at the intersection of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railway with the Altamont branch of the Wabash, 12 miles southeast of Shelbyville; is in a grain and lumber region; has a bank and a weekly paper. Population, (1900), 677.

STICKNEY, William II., pioneer lawyer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1809, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Cincinnati in 1831, and, in Illinois in 1834, being at that time a resident of Shawneetown; was elected State's Attorney by the Legislature, in 1839, for the circuit embracing some fourteen counties in the southern and southeastern part of the State; for a time also, about 1835-36, officiated as editor of "The Gallatin Democrat," and "The Illinois Advertiser," published at Shawneetown. In 1846

Mr. Stickney was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly from Gallatin County, and, twenty-eight years later—having come to Chicago in 1848—to the same body from Cook County, serving in the somewhat famous Twenty-ninth Assembly. He also held the office of Police Justice for some thirteen years, from 1860 onward. He lived to an advanced age, dying in Chicago, Feb. 14, 1898, being at the time the oldest surviving member of the Chicago bar.

STILES, Isaac Newton, lawyer and soldier, born at Suffield, Conn., July 16, 1833; was admitted to the bar at Lafayette, Ind., in 1855, became Prosecuting Attorney, a member of the Legislature and an effective speaker in the Fremont campaign of 1856; enlisted as a private soldier at the beginning of the war, went to the field as Adjutant, was captured at Malvern Hill, and, after six weeks' confinement in Libby prison, exchanged and returned to duty; was promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel, and brevetted Brigadier-General for meritorious service. After the war he practiced his profession in Chicago, though almost totally blind. Died, Jan. 18, 1895.

STILLMAN, Stephen, first State Senator from Sangamon County, Ill., was a native of Massachusetts who came, with his widowed mother, to Sangamon County in 1820, and settled near Williamsville, where he became the first Postmaster in the first postoffice in the State north of the Sangamon River. In 1822, Mr. Stillman was elected as the first State Senator from Sangamon County, serving four years, and, at his first session, being one of the opponents of the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died, in Peoria, somewhere between 1835 and 1840.

STILLMAN VALLEY, village in Ogle County, on Chicago Great Western and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; site of first battle Black Hawk War; has graded schools, four churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop., 475.

STITES, Samuel, pioneer, was born near Mount Bethel, Somerset County, N. J., Oct. 31, 1776; died, August 16, 1839, on his farm, which subsequently became the site of the city of Trenton, in Clinton County, Ill. He was descended from John Stites, M.D., who was born in England in 1595, emigrated to America, and died at Hempstead, L. I., in 1717, at the age of 122 years. The family removed to New Jersey in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Samuel was a cousin of Benjamin Stites, the first white man to settle within the present limits of Cincinnati, and various members of the family were prominent in the settlement of the upper Ohio Valley as early as 1788. Samuel Stites married, Sept. 14, 1794, Martha Martin, daughter of Ephraim Martin, and grand-daughter of Col. Ephraim Martin, both soldiers of the New Jersey line during the Revolutionary War—with the last named of whom he had (in connection with John Cleves Symmes) been intimately associated in the purchase and settlement of the Miami Valley. In 1800 he removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, in 1803 to Greene County, and, in 1818, in company with his son-in-law, Anthony Wayne Casad, to St. Clair County, Ill., settling near Union Grove. Later, he removed to O'Fallon, and, still later, to Clinton County. He left a large family, several members of which became prominent pioneers in the movements toward Minnesota and Kansas.

STOLBRAND, Carlos John Mueller, soldier, was born in Sweden, May 11, 1821; at the age of 18, enlisted in the Royal Artillery of his native land, serving through the campaign of Schleswig-Holstein (1848); came to the United States soon after, and, in 1861, enlisted in the first battalion of Illinois Light Artillery, finally becoming Chief of Artillery under Gen. John A. Logan. When the latter became commander of the Fifteenth Army Corps, Col. Stolbrand was placed at the head of the artillery brigade; in February, 1865, was made Brigadier-General, and mustered out in January, 1866. After the war he went South, and was Secretary of the South Carolina Constitutional Convention of 1868. The same year he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and a Presidential Elector. He was an inventor and patented various improvements in steam engines and boilers; was also Superintendent of Public Buildings at Charleston, S. C., under President Harrison. Died, at Charleston, Feb. 3, 1894.

STONE, Daniel, early lawyer and legislator, was a native of Vermont and graduate of Middlebury College; became a member of the Springfield (Ill.) bar in 1833, and, in 1836, was elected to the General Assembly—being one of the celebrated "Long Nine" from Sangamon County, and joining Abraham Lincoln in his protest against a series of pro-slavery resolutions which had been adopted by the House. In 1837 he was a Circuit Court Judge and, being assigned to the north-western part of the State, removed to Galena, but was legislated out of office, when he left the State, dying a few years later, in Essex County, N. J.

STONE, Horatio O., pioneer, was born in Ontario (now Monroe) County, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1811; in boyhood learned the trade of shoemaker, and later acted as overseer of laborers on the Lackawanna Canal. In 1831, having located in Wayne County, Mich., he was drafted for the Black Hawk War, serving twenty-two days under Gen. Jacob Brown. In January, 1835, he came to Chicago and, having made a fortunate speculation in real estate in that early day, a few months later entered upon the grocery and provision trade, which he afterwards extended to grain; finally giving his chief attention to real estate, in which he was remarkably successful, leaving a large fortune at his death, which occurred in Chicago, June 20, 1877.

STONE, (Rev.) Luther, Baptist clergyman, was born in the town of Oxford, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 26, 1815, and spent his boyhood on a farm. After acquiring a common school education, he prepared for college at Leicester Academy, and, in 1835, entered Brown University, graduating in the class of 1839. He then spent three years at the Theological Institute at Newton, Mass.; was ordained to the ministry at Oxford, in 1843, but, coming west the next year, entered upon evangelical work in Rock Island, Davenport, Burlington and neighboring towns. Later, he was pastor of the First Baptist Church at Rockford, Ill. In 1847 Mr. Stone came to Chicago and established "The Watchman of the Prairies," which survives today under the name of "The Standard," and has become the leading Baptist organ in the West. After six years of editorial work, he took up evangelistic work in Chicago, among the poor and criminal classes. During the Civil War he conducted religious services at Camp Douglas, Soldiers' Rest and the Marine Hospital. He was associated in the conduct and promotion of many educational and charitable institutions. He did much for the First Baptist Church of Chicago, and, during the latter years of his life, was attached to the Immanuel Baptist Church, which he labored to establish. Died, in July, 1890.

STONE, Melville E., journalist, banker, Manager of Associated Press, born at Hudson, Ill., August 18, 1848. Coming to Chicago in 1860, he graduated from the local high school in 1867, and, in 1870, acquired the sole proprietorship of a foundry and machine shop. Finding himself without resources after the great fire of 1871, he embarked in journalism, rising, through the successive grades of reporter, city editor, assistant editor and Washington correspondent, to the position of editor-in-chief of his own journal.

He was connected with various Chicago dailies between 1871 and 1875, and, on Christmas Day of the latter year, issued the first number of "The Chicago Daily News." He gradually disposed of his interest in this journal, entirely severing his connection therewith in 1888. Since that date he has been engaged in banking in the city of Chicago, and is also General Manager of the Associated Press.

STONE, Samuel, philanthropist, was born at Chesterfield, Mass., Dec. 6, 1798; left an orphan at seven years of age, after a short term in Leicester Academy, and several years in a wholesale store in Boston, at the age of 19 removed to Rochester, N. Y., to take charge of interests in the "Holland Purchase," belonging to his father's estate; in 1843-49, was a resident of Detroit and interested in some of the early railroad enterprises centering there, but the latter year removed to Milwaukee, being there associated with Ezra Cornell in telegraph construction. In 1859 he became a citizen of Chicago, where he was one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, and a liberal patron of many enterprises of a public and benevolent character. Died, May 4, 1876.

STONE FORT, a village in the counties of Saline and Williamson. It is situated on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 57 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1900), 479.

STOREY, Wilbur F., journalist and newspaper publisher, was born at Salisbury, Vt., Dec. 19, 1819. He began to learn the printer's trade at 12, and, before he was 19, was part owner of a Democratic paper called "The Herald," published at La Porte, Ind. Later, he either edited or controlled journals published at Mishawaka, Ind., and Jackson and Detroit, Mich. In January, 1861, he became the principal owner of "The Chicago Times," then the leading Democratic organ of Chicago. His paper soon came to be regarded as the organ of the anti-war party throughout the Northwest, and, in June, 1863, was suppressed by a military order issued by General Burnside, which was subsequently revoked by President Lincoln. The net result was an increase in "The Times'" notoriety and circulation. Other charges, of an equally grave nature, relating to its sources of income, its character as a family newspaper, etc., were repeatedly made, but to all these Mr. Storey turned a deaf ear. He lost heavily in the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, appeared as the editor of "The Times," then destitute of political ties. About 1876 his health began to decline. Medical aid failed to afford relief, and, in August, 1884, he was adjudged to be of unsound mind, and his estate was placed in the hands of a conservator. On the 27th of the following October (1884), he died at his home in Chicago.

STORRS, Emery Alexander, lawyer, was born at Hinsdale, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., August 12, 1835; began the study of law with his father, later pursued a legal course at Buffalo, and, in 1853, was admitted to the bar; spent two years (1857-59) in New York City, the latter year removing to Chicago, where he attained great prominence as an advocate at the bar, as well as an orator on other occasions. Politically a Republican, he took an active part in Presidential campaigns, being a delegate-at-large from Illinois to the National Republican Conventions of 1868, '72, and '80, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents in 1872. Erratic in habits and a master of epigram and repartee, many of his speeches are quoted with relish and appreciation by those who were his contemporaries at the Chicago bar. Died suddenly, while in attendance on the Supreme Court at Ottawa, Sept. 12, 1885.

STRAWN, Jacob, agriculturist and stock-dealer, born in Somerset County, Pa., May 30, 1800; removed to Licking County, Ohio, in 1817, and to Illinois, in 1831, settling four miles southwest of Jacksonville. He was one of the first to demonstrate the possibilities of Illinois as a live-stock state. Unpretentious and despising mere show, he illustrated the virtues of industry, frugality and honesty. At his death—which occurred August 23, 1865—he left an estate estimated in value at about $1,000,000, acquired by industry and business enterprise. He was a zealous Unionist during the war, at one time contributing $10,000 to the Christian Commission.

STREATOR, a city (laid out in 1868 and incorporated in 1882) in the southern part of La Salle County, 93 miles southwest of Chicago; situated on the Vermilion River and a central point for five railroads. It is surrounded by a rich agricultural country, and is underlaid by coal seams (two of which are worked) and by shale and various clay products of value, adapted to the manufacture of fire and building-brick, drain-pipe, etc. The city is thoroughly modern, having gas, electric lighting, street railways, water-works, a good fire-department, and a large, improved public park. Churches and schools are numerous, as are also fine public and private buildings. One of the chief industries is the manufacture of glass, including rolled-plate, window-glass, flint and Bohemian ware and glass bottles. Other successful industries are foundries and machine shops, flour mills, and clay working establishments. There are several banks, and three daily and weekly papers are published here. The estimated property valuation, in 1884, was $12,000,000. Streator boasts some handsome public buildings, especially the Government post-office and the Carnegie public library building, both of which have been erected within the past few years. Pop. (1890), 11,414; (1900), 14,079.

STREET, Joseph M., pioneer and early politician, settled at Shawneetown about 1812, coming from Kentucky, though believed to have been a native of Eastern Virginia. In 1827 he was a Brigadier-General of militia, and appears to have been prominent in the affairs of that section of the State. His correspondence with Governor Edwards, about this time, shows him to have been a man of far more than ordinary education, with a good opinion of his merits and capabilities. He was a most persistent applicant for office, making urgent appeals to Governor Edwards, Henry Clay and other politicians in Kentucky, Virginia and Washington, on the ground of his poverty and large family. In 1827 he received the offer of the clerkship of the new county of Peoria, but, on visiting that region, was disgusted with the prospect; returning to Shawneetown, bought a farm in Sangamon County, but, before the close of the year, was appointed Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. This was during the difficulties with the Winnebago Indians, upon which he made voluminous reports to the Secretary of War. Mr. Street was a son-in-law of Gen. Thomas Posey, a Revolutionary soldier, who was prominent in the early history of Indiana and its last Territorial Governor. (See Posey, (Gen.) Thomas.)

STREETER, Alson J., farmer and politician, was born in Rensselaer County, N. Y., in 1823; at the age of two years accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling at Dixon, Lee County. He attended Knox College for three years, and, in 1849, went to California, where he spent two years in gold mining. Returning to Illinois, he purchased a farm of 240 acres near New Windsor, Mercer County, to which he has since added several thousand acres. In 1872 he was elected to the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly as a Democrat, but, in 1873, allied himself with the Greenback party, whose candidate for Congress he was in 1878, and for Governor in 1880, when he received nearly 3,000 votes more than his party's Presidential nominee, in Illinois.

In 1884 he was elected State Senator by a coalition of Greenbackers and Democrats in the Twenty-fourth Senatorial District, but acted as an independent throughout his entire term.

STRONG, William Emerson, soldier, was born at Granville, N. Y., in 1840; from 13 years of age, spent his early life in Wisconsin, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Racine in 1861. The same year he enlisted under the first call for troops, took part, as Captain of a Wisconsin Company, in the first battle of Bull Run; was afterwards promoted and assigned to duty as Inspector-General in the West, participated in the Vicksburg and Atlanta campaigns, being finally advanced to the rank of Brigadier-General. After some fifteen months spent in the position of Inspector-General of the Freedmen's Bureau (1865-66), he located in Chicago, and became connected with several important business enterprises, besides assisting, as an officer on the staff of Governor Cullom, in the organization of the Illinois National Guard. He was elected on the first Board of Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition, and, while making a tour of Europe in the interest of that enterprise, died, at Florence, Italy, April 10, 1891.

STUART, John Todd, lawyer and Congressman, born near Lexington, Ky., Nov. 10, 1807—the son of Robert Stuart, a Presbyterian minister and Professor of Languages in Transylvania University, and related, on the maternal side, to the Todd family, of whom Mrs. Abraham Lincoln was a member. He graduated at Centre College, Danville, in 1826, and, after studying law, removed to Springfield, Ill., in 1828, and began practice. In 1832 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly, re-elected in 1834, and, in 1836, defeated, as the Whig candidate for Congress, by Wm. L. May, though elected, two years later, over Stephen A. Douglas, and again in 1840. In 1837, Abraham Lincoln, who had been studying law under Mr. Stuart's advice and instruction, became his partner, the relationship continuing until 1841. He served in the State Senate, 1849-53, was the Bell-Everett candidate for Governor in 1860, and was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, for a third time, in 1862, but, in 1864, was defeated by Shelby M. Cullom, his former pupil. During the latter years of his life, Mr. Stuart was head of the law firm of Stuart, Edwards & Brown. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 28, 1885.

STURGES, Solomon, merchant and banker, was born at Fairfield, Conn., April 21, 1796, early manifested a passion for the sea and, in 1810, made a voyage, on a vessel of which his brother was captain, from New York to Georgetown, D. C., intending to continue it to Lisbon. At Georgetown he was induced to accept a position as clerk with a Mr. Williams, where he was associated with two other youths, as fellow-employés, who became eminent bankers and capitalists—W. W. Corcoran, afterwards the well-known banker of Washington, and George W. Peabody, who had a successful banking career in England, and won a name as one of the most liberal and public-spirited of philanthropists. During the War of 1812 young Sturges joined a volunteer infantry company, where he had, for comrades, George W. Peabody and Francis S. Key, the latter author of the popular national song, "The Star Spangled Banner." In 1814 Mr. Sturges accepted a clerkship in the store of his brother-in-law, Ebenezer Buckingham, at Putnam, Muskingum County, Ohio, two years later becoming a partner in the concern, where he developed that business capacity which laid the foundation for his future wealth. Before steamers navigated the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, he piloted flat-boats, loaded with produce and merchandise, to New Orleans, returning overland. During one of his visits to that city, he witnessed the arrival of the "Washington," the first steamer to descend the Mississippi, as, in 1817, he saw the arrival of the "Walk-in-the-Water" at Detroit, the first steamer to arrive from Buffalo—the occasion of his visit to Detroit being to carry funds to General Cass to pay off the United States troops. About 1849 he was associated with the construction of the Wabash & Erie Canal, from the Ohio River to Terre Haute, Ind., advancing money for the prosecution of the work, for which was reimbursed by the State. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and, in partnership with his brothers-in-law, C. P. and Alvah Buckingham, erected the first large grain-elevator in that city, on land leased from the Illinois Central Railroad Company, following it, two years later, by another of equal capacity. For a time, substantially all the grain coming into Chicago, by railroad, passed into these elevators. In 1857 he established the private banking house of Solomon Sturges & Sons, which, shortly after his death, under the management of his son, George Sturges, became the Northwestern National Bank of Chicago. He was intensely patriotic and, on the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, used of his means freely in support of the Government, equipping the Sturges Rifles, an independent company, at a cost of $20,000. He was also a subscriber to the first loan made by the Government, during this period, taking $100,000 in Government bonds. While devoted to his business, he was a hater of shams and corruption, and contributed freely to Christian and benevolent enterprises. Died, at the home of a daughter, at Zanesville, Ohio, Oct. 14, 1864, leaving a large fortune acquired by legitimate trade.

STURTEVANT, Julian Munson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman and educator, was born at Warren, Litchfield County, Conn., July 26, 1805; spent his youth in Summit County, Ohio, meanwhile preparing for college; in 1822, entered Yale College as the classmate of the celebrated Elizur Wright, graduating in 1826. After two years as Principal of an academy at Canaan, Conn., he entered Yale Divinity School, graduating there in 1829; then came west, and, after spending a year in superintending the erection of buildings, in December, 1830, as sole tutor, began instruction to a class of nine pupils in what is now Illinois College, at Jacksonville. Having been joined, the following year, by Dr. Edward Beecher as President, Mr. Sturtevant assumed the chair of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy, which he retained until 1844, when, by the retirement of Dr. Beecher, he succeeded to the offices of President and Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy. Here he labored, incessantly and unselfishly, as a teacher during term time, and, as financial agent during vacations, in the interest of the institution of which he had been one of the chief founders, serving until 1876, when he resigned the Presidency, giving his attention, for the next ten years, to the duties of Professor of Mental Science and Science of Government, which he had discharged from 1870. In 1886 he retired from the institution entirely, having given to its service fifty-six years of his life. In 1863, Dr. Sturtevant visited Europe in the interest of the Union cause, delivering effective addresses at a number of points in England. He was a frequent contributor to the weekly religious and periodical press, and was the author of "Economics, or the Science of Wealth" (1876)—a text-book on political economy, and "Keys of Sect, or the Church of the New Testament" (1879), besides frequently occupying the pulpits of local and distant churches—having been early ordained a Congregational minister. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Missouri and that of LL.D. from Iowa University. Died, in Jacksonville, Feb. 11, 1886.—Julian M. (Sturtevant), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Jacksonville, Ill., Feb. 2, 1834; fitted for college in the preparatory department of Illinois College and graduated from the college (proper) in 1854. After leaving college he served as teacher in the Jacksonville public schools one year, then spent a year as tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of theology at Andover Theological Seminary, graduating there in 1859, meanwhile having discharged the duties of Chaplain of the Connecticut State's prison in 1858. He was ordained a minister of the Congregational Church at Hannibal, Mo., in 1860, remaining as pastor in that city nine years. He has since been engaged in pastoral work in New York City (1869-70), Ottawa, Ill., (1870-73); Denver, Colo., (1873-77); Grinnell, Iowa, (1877-84); Cleveland, Ohio, (1884-90); Galesburg, Ill., (1890-93), and Aurora, (1893-97). Since leaving the Congregational church at Aurora, Dr. Sturtevant has been engaged in pastoral work in Chicago. He was also editor of "The Congregationalist" of Iowa (1881-84), and, at different periods, has served as Trustee of Colorado, Marietta and Knox Colleges; being still an honored member of the Knox College Board. He received the degree of D.D. from Illinois College, in 1879.

SUBLETTE, a station and village on the Illinois Central Railroad, in Lee County, 8 miles northwest of Mendota. Population, (1900), 306.

SUFFRAGE, in general, the right or privilege of voting. The qualifications of electors (or voters), in the choice of public officers in Illinois, are fixed by the State Constitution (Art. VII.), except as to school officers, which are prescribed by law. Under the State Constitution the exercise of the right to vote is limited to persons who were electors at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, or who are native or naturalized male citizens of the United States, of the age of 21 years or over, who have been residents of the State one year, of the county ninety days, and of the district (or precinct) in which they offer to vote, 30 days. Under an act passed in 1891, women, of 21 years of age and upwards, are entitled to vote for school officers, and are also eligible to such offices under the same conditions, as to age and residence, as male citizens. (See Elections; Australian Ballot.)

SULLIVAN, a city and county-seat of Moultrie County, 25 miles southeast of Decatur and 14 miles northwest of Mattoon; is on three lines of railway. It is in an agricultural and stock-raising region; contains two State banks and four weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,305; (1890), 1,468; (1900), 2,399; (1900, est.), 3,100.

SULLIVAN, William K., journalist, was born at Waterford, Ireland, Nov. 10, 1843; educated at the Waterford Model School and in Dublin; came to the United States in 1863, and, after teaching for a time in Kane County, in 1864 enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Then, after a brief season spent in teaching and on a visit to his native land, he began work as a reporter on New York papers, later being employed on "The Chicago Tribune" and "The Evening Journal," on the latter, at different times, holding the position of city editor, managing editor and correspondent. He was also a Representative from Cook County in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, for three years a member of the Chicago Board of Education, and appointed United States Consul to the Bermudas by President Harrison, resigning in 1892. Died, in Chicago, January 17, 1899.

SULLIVANT, Michael Lucas, agriculturist, was born at Franklinton (a suburb of Columbus, Ohio), August 6, 1807; was educated at Ohio University and Centre College, Ky., and—after being engaged in the improvement of an immense tract of land inherited from his father near his birth-place, devoting much attention, meanwhile, to the raising of improved stock—in 1854 sold his Ohio lands and bought 80,000 acres, chiefly in Champaign and Piatt Counties, Ill., where he began farming on a larger scale than before. The enterprise proved a financial failure, and he was finally compelled to sell a considerable portion of his estate in Champaign County, known as Broad Lands, to John T. Alexander (see Alexander, John T.), retiring to a farm of 40,000 acres at Burr Oaks, Ill. He died, at Henderson, Ky., Jan. 29, 1879.

SUMMERFIELD, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 27 miles east of St. Louis; was the home of Gen. Fred. Hecker. Population (1900), 360.

SUMNER, a city of Lawrence County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 19 miles west of Vincennes, Ind.; has a fine school house, four churches, two banks, two flour mills, telephones, and one weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,037; (1900), 1,268.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION. The office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction was created by act of the Legislature, at a special session held in 1854, its duties previous to that time, from 1845, having been discharged by the Secretary of State as Superintendent, ex-officio. The following is a list of the incumbents from the date of the formal creation of the office down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each: Ninian W. Edwards (by appointment of the Governor), 1854-57; William H. Powell (by election), 1857-59; Newton Bateman, 1859-63; John P. Brooks, 1863-65; Newton Bateman, 1865-75; Samuel W. Etter, 1875-79; James P. Slade, 1879-83; Henry Raab, 1883-87; Richard Edwards, 1887-91; Henry Raab, 1891-95; Samuel M. Inglis, 1895-98; James H. Freeman, June, 1898, to January, 1899 (by appointment of the Governor, to fill the unexpired term of Prof. Inglis, who died in office, June 1, 1898); Alfred Baylis, 1899—.

Previous to 1870 the tenure of the office was two years, but, by the Constitution adopted that year, it was extended to four years, the elections occurring on the even years between those for Governor and other State officers except State Treasurer.

SUPREME COURT, JUDGES OF THE. The following is a list of Justices of the Supreme Court of Illinois who have held office since the organization of the State Government, with the period of their respective incumbencies: Joseph Phillips, 1818-22 (resigned); Thomas C. Browne, 1818-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); William P. Foster, Oct. 9, 1818, to July 7, 1819 (resigned); John Reynolds, 1818-25; Thomas Reynolds (vice Phillips), 1822-25; William Wilson (vice Foster) 1819-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Samuel D. Lockwood, 1825-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Theophilus W. Smith, 1825-42 (resigned); Thomas Ford, Feb. 15, 1841, to August 1, 1842 (resigned); Sidney Breese, Feb. 15, 1841, to Dec. 19, 1842 (resigned)—also (by re-elections), 1857-78 (died in office); Walter B. Scates, 1841-47 (resigned)—also (vice Trumbull), 1854-57 (resigned); Samuel H. Treat, 1841-55 (resigned); Stephen A. Douglas, 1841-42 (resigned); John D. Caton (vice Ford) August, 1842, to March, 1843—also (vice Robinson and by successive re-elections), May, 1843 to January, 1864 (resigned); James Semple (vice Breese), Jan. 14, 1843, to April 16, 1843 (resigned); Richard M. Young (vice Smith), 1843-47 (resigned); John M. Robinson (vice Ford), Jan. 14, 1843, to April 27, 1843 (died in office); Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., (vice Douglas), 1843-45 (resigned)—also (vice Young), 1847-48; James Shields (vice Semple), 1843-45 (resigned); Norman H. Purple (vice Thomas), 1843-48 (retired under Constitution of 1848); Gustavus Koerner (vice Shields), 1845-48 (retired by Constitution); William A. Denning (vice Scates), 1847-48 (retired by Constitution); Lyman Trumbull, 1848-53 (resigned); Ozias C. Skinner (vice Treat), 1855-58 (resigned); Pinkney H. Walker (vice Skinner), 1858-85 (deceased); Corydon Beckwith (by appointment, vice Caton), Jan. 7, 1864, to June 6, 1864; Charles B. Lawrence (one term), 1864-73; Anthony Thornton, 1870-73 (resigned); John M. Scott (two terms), 1870-88; Benjamin R. Sheldon (two terms), 1870-88; William K. McAllister, 1870-75 (resigned); John Scholfield (vice Thornton), 1873-93 (died); T. Lyle Dickey (vice McAllister), 1875-85 (died); David J. Baker (appointed, vice Breese), July 9, 1878, to June 2, 1879—also, 1888-97; John H. Mulkey, 1879-88; Damon G. Tunnicliffe (appointed, vice Walker), Feb. 15, 1885, to June 1, 1885; Simeon P. Shope, 1885-94; Joseph M. Bailey, 1888-95 (died in office). The Supreme Court, as at present constituted (1899), is as follows: Carroll C. Boggs, elected, 1897; Jesse J. Phillips (vice Scholfield, deceased) elected, 1893, and re-elected, 1897; Jacob W. Wilkin, elected, 1888, and re-elected, 1897; Joseph N. Carter, elected, 1894; Alfred M. Craig, elected, 1873, and re-elected, 1882 and '91; James H. Cartwright (vice Bailey), elected, 1895, and re-elected, 1897; Benjamin D. Magruder (vice Dickey), elected, 1885, '88 and '97. The terms of Justices Boggs, Phillips, Wilkin, Cartwright and Magruder expire in 1906; that of Justice Carter on 1903; and Justice Craig's, in 1900. Under the Constitution of 1818, the Justices of the Supreme Court were chosen by joint ballot of the Legislature, but, under the Constitutions of 1848 and 1870, by popular vote for terms of nine years each. (See Judicial System; also sketches of individual members of the Supreme Court under their proper names.)

SURVEYS, EARLY GOVERNMENT. The first United States law passed on the subject of Government surveys was dated, May 20, 1785. After reserving certain lands to be allotted by way of pensions and to be donated for school purposes, it provided for the division of the remaining public lands among the original thirteen States. This, however, was, in effect, repealed by the Ordinance of 1788. The latter provided for a rectangular system of surveys which, with but little modification, has remained in force ever since. Briefly outlined, the system is as follows: Townships, six miles square, are laid out from principal bases, each township containing thirty-six sections of one square mile, numbered consecutively, the numeration to commence at the upper right hand corner of the township. The first principal meridian (84° 51' west of Greenwich), coincided with the line dividing Indiana and Ohio. The second (1° 37' farther west) had direct relation to surveys in Eastern Illinois. The third (89° 10' 30" west of Greenwich) and the fourth (90° 29' 56" west) governed the remainder of Illinois surveys. The first Public Surveyor was Thomas Hutchins, who was called "the geographer." (See Hutchins, Thomas.)

SWEET, (Gen.) Benjamin J., soldier, was born at Kirkland, Oneida County, N. Y., April 24, 1832; came with his father, in 1848, to Sheboygan, Wis., studied law, was elected to the State Senate in 1859, and, in 1861, enlisted in the Sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, being commissioned Major in 1862. Later, he resigned and, returning home, assisted in the organization of the Twenty-first and Twenty-second regiments, being elected Colonel of the former; and with it taking part in the campaign in Western Kentucky and Tennessee. In 1863 he was assigned to command at Camp Douglas, and was there on the exposure, in November, 1864, of the conspiracy to release the rebel prisoners. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.) The service which he rendered in the defeat of this bold and dangerous conspiracy evinced his courage and sagacity, and was of inestimable value to the country. After the war, General Sweet located at Lombard, near Chicago, was appointed Pension Agent at Chicago, afterwards served as Supervisor of Internal Revenue, and, in 1872, became Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington. Died, in Washington, Jan. 1, 1874. — Miss Ada C. (Sweet), for eight years (1874-82) the efficient Pension Agent at Chicago, is General Sweet's daughter.

SWEETSER, A. C., soldier and Department Commander G. A. R., was born in Oxford County, Maine, in 1839; came to Bloomington, Ill., in 1857; enlisted at the beginning of the Civil War in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers and, later, in the Thirty-ninth; at the battle of Wierbottom Church, Va., in June, 1864, was shot through both legs, necessitating the amputation of one of them. After the war he held several offices of trust, including those of City Collector of Bloomington and Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for the Springfield District; in 1887 was elected Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for Illinois. Died, at Bloomington, March 23, 1896.

SWETT, Leonard, lawyer, was born near Turner, Maine, August 11, 1825, was educated at Waterville College (now Colby University), but left before graduation, read law in Portland, and, while seeking a location in the West, enlisted in an Indiana regiment for the Mexican War, being attacked by climatic fever, was discharged before completing his term of enlistment. He soon after came to Bloomington, Ill., where he became the intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln and David Davis, traveling the circuit with them for a number of years. He early became active in State politics, was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1858, and, in 1860, was a zealous supporter of Mr. Lincoln as a Presidential Elector for the State-at-large. In 1863 he received the Republican nomination for Congress in his District, but was defeated. Removing to Chicago in 1865, he gained increased distinction as a lawyer, especially in the management of criminal cases. In 1872 he was a supporter of Horace Greeley for President, but later returned to the Republican party, and, in the National Republican Convention of 1888, presented the name of Judge Gresham for nomination for the Presidency. Died, June 8, 1889.

SWIGERT, Charles Philip, ex-Auditor of Public Accounts, was born in the Province of Baden, Germany, Nov. 27, 1843, brought by his parents to Chicago, Ill., in childhood, and, in his boyhood, attended the Scammon School in that city. In 1854 his family removed to a farm in Kankakee County, where, between the ages of 12 and 18, he assisted his father in "breaking" between 400 and 500 acres of prairie land. On the breaking out of the war, in 1861, although scarcely 18 years of age, he enlisted as a private in the Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, in April, 1862, was one of twenty heroic volunteers who ran the blockade, on the gunboat Carondelet, at Island No. 10, assisting materially in the reduction of that rebel stronghold, which resulted in the capture of 7,000 prisoners. At the battle of Farmington, Miss., during the siege of Corinth, in May, 1862, he had his right arm torn from its socket by a six-pound cannon-ball, compelling his retirement from the army. Returning home, after many weeks spent in hospital at Jefferson Barracks and Quincy, Ill., he received his final discharge, Dec. 21, 1862, spent a year in school, also took a course in Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College in Chicago, and having learned to write with his left hand, taught for a time in Kankakee County; served as letter-carrier in Chicago, and for a year as Deputy County Clerk of Kankakee County, followed by two terms (1867-69) as a student in the Soldiers' College at Fulton, Ill. The latter year he entered upon the duties of Treasurer of Kankakee County, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1880, when he resigned to take the position of State Auditor, to which he was elected a second time in 1884. In all these positions Mr. Swigert has proved himself an upright, capable and high-minded public official. Of late years his residence has been in Chicago.

SWING, (Rev.) David, clergyman and pulpit orator, was born of German ancestry, at Cincinnati, Ohio, August 23, 1836. After 1837 (his father dying about this time), the family resided for a time at Reedsburgh, and, later, on a farm near Williamsburgh, in Clermont County, in the same State. In 1852, having graduated from the Miami (Ohio) University, he commenced the study of theology, but, in 1854, accepted the position of Professor of Languages in his Alma Mater, which he continued to fill for thirteen years. His first pastorate was in connection with the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Chicago, which he assumed in 1866. His church edifice was destroyed in the great Chicago fire, but was later rebuilt. As a preacher he was popular; but, in April, 1874, he was placed on trial, before an ecclesiastical court of his own denomination, on charges of heresy. He was acquitted by the trial court, but, before the appeal taken by the prosecution could be heard, he personally withdrew from affiliation with the denomination. Shortly afterward he became pastor of an independent religious organization known as the "Central Church," preaching, first at McVicker's Theatre and, afterward, at Central Music Hall, Chicago. He was a fluent and popular speaker on all themes, a frequent and valued contributor to numerous magazines, as well as the author of several volumes. Among his best known books are "Motives of Life," "Truths for To-day," and "Club Essays." Died, in Chicago, Oct. 3, 1894.

SYCAMORE, the county-seat of De Kalb County (founded in 1836), 56 miles west of Chicago, at the intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railroads; lies in a region devoted to agriculture, dairying and stock-raising. The city itself contains several factories, the principal products being agricultural implements, flour, insulated wire, brick, tile, varnish, furniture, soap and carriages and wagons. There are also works for canning vegetables and fruit, besides two creameries. The town is lighted by electricity, and has high-pressure water-works. There are eleven churches, three graded public schools and a young ladies' seminary. Population (1880), 3,028; (1890), 2,987; (1900), 3,653.

TAFT, Lorado, sculptor, was born at Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., April 29, 1860; at an early age evinced a predilection for sculpture and began modeling; graduated at the University of Illinois in 1880, then went to Paris and studied sculpture in the famous Ecole des Beaux Arts until 1885. The following year he settled in Chicago, finally becoming associated with the Chicago Art Institute. He has been a lecturer on art in the Chicago University. Mr. Taft furnished the decorations of the Horticultural Building on the World's Fair Grounds, in 1893.

TALCOTT, Mancel, business man, was born in Rome, N. Y., Oct. 12, 1817; attended the common schools until 17 years of age, when he set out for the West, traveling on foot from Detroit to Chicago, and thence to Park Ridge, where he worked at farming until 1850. Then, having followed the occupation of a miner for some time, in California, with some success, he united with Horace M. Singer in establishing the firm of Singer & Talcott, stone-dealers, which lasted during most of his life. He served as a member of the Chicago City Council, on the Board of County Commissioners, as a member of the Police Board, and was one of the founders of the First National Bank, and President, for several years, of the Stock Yards National Bank. Liberal and public-spirited, he contributed freely to works of charity. Died, June 5, 1878.

TALCOTT, (Capt.) William, soldier of the War of 1812 and pioneer, was born in Gilead, Conn., March 6, 1774; emigrated to Rome, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1810, and engaged in farming; served as a Lieutenant in the Oneida County militia during the War of 1812-14, being stationed at Sackett's Harbor under the command of Gen. Winfield Scott. In 1835, in company with his eldest son, Thomas B. Talcott, he made an extended tour through the West, finally selecting a location in Illinois at the junction of Rock River and the Pecatonica, where the town of Rockton now stands—there being only two white families, at that time, within the present limits of Winnebago County. Two years later (1837), he brought his family to this point, with his sons took up a considerable body of Government land and erected two mills, to which customers came from a long distance. In 1838 Captain Talcott took part in the organization of the first Congregational Church in that section of the State. A zealous anti-slavery man, he supported James G.

Birney (the Liberty candidate for President) in 1841, continuing to act with that party until the organization of the Republican party in 1856; was deeply interested in the War for the Union, but died before its conclusion, Sept. 2, 1864.—Maj. Thomas B. (Talcott), oldest son of the preceding, was born at Hebron, Conn., April 17, 1806; was taken to Rome, N. Y., by his father in infancy, and, after reaching maturity, engaged in mercantile business with his brother in Chemung County; in 1835 accompanied his father in a tour through the West, finally locating at Rockton, where he engaged in agriculture. On the organization of Winnebago County, in 1836, he was elected one of the first County Commissioners, and, in 1850, to the State Senate, serving four years. He also held various local offices. Died, Sept. 30, 1894.—Hon. Wait (Talcott), second son of Capt. William Talcott, was born at Hebron, Conn., Oct. 17, 1807, and taken to Rome, N. Y., where he remained until his 19th year, when he engaged in business at Booneville and, still later, in Utica; in 1838, removed to Illinois and joined his father at Rockton, finally becoming a citizen of Rockford, where, in his later years, he was extensively engaged in manufacturing, having become, in 1854, with his brother Sylvester, a partner of the firm of J. H. Manny & Co., in the manufacture of the Manny reaper and mower. He was an original anti-slavery man and, at one time, a Free-Soil candidate for Congress, but became a zealous Republican and ardent friend of Abraham Lincoln, whom he employed as an attorney in the famous suit of McCormick vs. the Manny Reaper Company for infringement of patent. In 1854 he was elected to the State Senate, succeeding his brother, Thomas B., and was the first Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District, appointed by Mr. Lincoln in 1862, and continuing in office some five years. Though too old for active service in the field, during the Civil War, he voluntarily hired a substitute to take his place. Mr. Talcott was one of the original incorporators and Trustees of Beloit College, and a founder of Rockford Female Seminary, remaining a trustee of each for many years. Died, June 7, 1890.—Sylvester (Talcott), third son of William Talcott, born at Rome, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1810; when of age, engaged in mercantile business in Chemung County; in 1837 removed, with other members of the family, to Winnebago County, Ill., where he joined his father in the entry of Government lands and the erection of mills, as already detailed. He became one of the first Justices of the Peace in Winnebago County, also served as Supervisor for a number of years and, although a farmer, became interested, in 1854, with his brother Wait, in the Manny Reaper Company at Rockford. He also followed the example of his brother, just named, in furnishing a substitute for the War of the Rebellion, though too old for service himself. Died, June 19, 1885.—Henry Walter (Talcott), fourth son of William Talcott, was born at Rome, N. Y., Feb. 13, 1814; came with his father to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and was connected with his father and brothers in business. Died, Dec. 9, 1870.—Dwight Lewis (Talcott), oldest son of Henry Walter Talcott, born in Winnebago County; at the age of 17 years enlisted at Belvidere, in January, 1864, as a soldier in the Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; served as provost guard some two months at Fort Pickering, near Memphis, and later took part in many of the important battles of that year in Mississippi and Tennessee. Having been captured at Campbellsville, Tenn., he was taken to Andersonville, Ga., where he suffered all the horrors of that famous prison-pen, until March, 1865, when he was released, arriving at home a helpless skeleton, the day after Abraham Lincoln's assassination. Mr. Talcott subsequently settled in Muscatine County, Iowa.

TALLULA, a prosperous village of Menard County, on the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway, 24 miles northeast of Jacksonville; is in the midst of a grain, coal-mining, and stock-growing region; has a local bank and newspaper. Pop. (1890), 445; (1900), 639.

TAMAROA, a village in Perry County, situated at the junction of the Illinois Central with the Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad, 8 miles north of Duquoin, and 57 miles east-southeast of Belleville. It has a bank, a newspaper office, a large public school, five churches and two flouring mills. Coal is mined here and exported in large quantities. Pop. (1900), 853.

TANNER, Edward Allen, clergyman and educator, was born of New England ancestry, at Waverly, Ill., Nov. 29, 1837—being the first child who could claim nativity there; was educated in the local schools and at Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1857; spent four years teaching in his native place and at Jacksonville; then accepted the Professorship of Latin in Pacific University at Portland, Oregon, remaining four years, when he returned to his Alma Mater (1865), assuming there the chair of Latin and Rhetoric. In 1881 he was appointed financial agent of the latter institution, and, in 1882, its President. While in Oregon he had been ordained a minister of the Congregational Church, and, for a considerable period during his connection with Illinois College, officiated as Chaplain of the Central Hospital for the Insane at Jacksonville, besides supplying local and other pulpits. He labored earnestly for the benefit of the institution under his charge, and, during his incumbency, added materially to its endowment and resources. Died, at Jacksonville, Feb. 8, 1892.

TANNER, John R., Governor, was born in Warrick County, Ind., April 4, 1844, and brought to Southern Illinois in boyhood, where he grew up on a farm in the vicinity of Carbondale, enjoying only such educational advantages as were afforded by the common school; in 1863, at the age of 19, enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteers, serving until June, 1865, when he was transferred to the Sixty-first, and finally mustered out in September following. All the male members of Governor Tanner's family were soldiers of the late war, his father dying in a rebel prison at Columbus, Miss., one of his brothers suffering the same fate from wounds at Nashville, Tenn., and another brother dying in hospital at Pine Bluff, Ark. Only one of this patriotic family, besides Governor Tanner, still survives—Mr. J. M. Tanner of Clay County, who left the service with the rank of Lieutenant of the Thirteenth Illinois Cavalry. Returning from the war, Mr. Tanner established himself in business as a farmer in Clay County, later engaging successfully in the milling and lumber business as the partner of his brother. The public positions held by him, since the war, include those of Sheriff of Clay County (1870-72), Clerk of the Circuit Court (1872-76), and State Senator (1880-83). During the latter year he received the appointment of United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving until after the accession of President Cleveland in 1885. In 1886, he was the Republican nominee for State Treasurer and was elected by an unusually large majority; in 1891 was appointed, by Governor Fifer, a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, but, in 1892, received the appointment of Assistant United States Treasurer at Chicago, continuing in the latter office until December, 1893. For ten years (1874-84) he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, returning to that body in 1894, when he was chosen Chairman and conducted the campaign which resulted in the unprecedented Republican successes of that year. In 1896 he received the nomination of his party for Governor, and was elected over Gov. John P. Altgeld, his Democratic opponent, by a plurality of over 113,000, and a majority, over all, of nearly 90,000 votes.

TANNER, Tazewell B., jurist, was born in Henry County, Va., and came to Jefferson County, Ill., about 1846 or '47, at first taking a position as teacher and Superintendent of Public Schools. Later, he was connected with "The Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper at Mount Vernon, and, in 1849, went to the gold regions of California, meeting with reasonable success as a miner. Returning in a year or two, he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and, while in the discharge of his duties, prosecuted the study of law, finally, on admission to the bar, entering into partnership with the late Col. Thomas S. Casey. In 1854 he was elected Representative in the Nineteenth General Assembly, and was instrumental in securing the appropriation for the erection of a Supreme Court building at Mount Vernon. In 1863 he served as a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of that year; was elected Circuit Judge in 1873, and, in 1877, was assigned to duty on the Appellate bench, but, at the expiration of his term, declined a re-election and resumed the practice of his profession at Mount Vernon. Died, March 25, 1880.

TAXATION, in its legal sense, the mode of raising revenue. In its general sense its purposes are the support of the State and local governments, the promotion of the public good by fostering education and works of public improvement, the protection of society by the preservation of order and the punishment of crime, and the support of the helpless and destitute. In practice, and as prescribed by the Constitution, the raising of revenue is required to be done "by levying a tax by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her or its property—such value to be ascertained by some person or persons, to be elected or appointed in such manner as the General Assembly shall direct, and not otherwise." (State Constitution, 1870—Art. Revenue, Sec. 1.) The person selected under the law to make this valuation is the Assessor of the county or the township (in counties under township organization), and he is required to make a return to the County Board at its July meeting each year—the latter having authority to hear complaints of taxpayers and adjust inequalities when found to exist. It is made the duty of the Assessor to include in his return, as real-estate, all lands and the buildings or other improvements erected thereon; and, under the head of personal property, all tangible effects, besides moneys, credits, bonds or stocks, shares of stock of companies or corporations, investments, annuities, franchises, royalties, etc. Property used for school, church or cemetery purposes, as well as public buildings and other property belonging to the State and General Government, municipalities, public charities, public libraries, agricultural and scientific societies, are declared exempt. Nominally, all property subject to taxation is required to be assessed at its cash valuation; but, in reality, the valuation, of late years, has been on a basis of twenty-five to thirty-three per cent of its estimated cash value. In the larger cities, however, the valuation is often much lower than this, while very large amounts escape assessment altogether. The Revenue Act, passed at the special session of the Fortieth General Assembly (1898), requires the Assessor to make a return of all property subject to taxation in his district, at its cash valuation, upon which a Board of Review fixes a tax on the basis of twenty per cent of such cash valuation. An abstract of the property assessment of each county goes before the State Board of Equalization, at its annual meeting in August, for the purpose of comparison and equalizing valuations between counties, but the Board has no power to modify the assessments of individual tax-payers. (See State Board of Equalization.) This Board has exclusive power to fix the valuation for purposes of taxation of the capital stock or franchises of companies (except certain specified manufacturing corporations), incorporated under the State laws, together with the "railroad track" and "rolling stock" of railroads, and the capital stock of railroads and telegraph lines, and to fix the distribution of the latter between counties in which they lie.—The Constitution of 1848 empowered the Legislature to impose a capitation tax, of not less than fifty cents nor more than one dollar, upon each free white male citizen entitled to the right of suffrage, between the ages of 21 and 60 years, but the Constitution of 1870 grants no such power, though it authorizes the extension of the "objects and subjects of taxation" in accordance with the principle contained in the first section of the Revenue Article.—Special assessments in cities, for the construction of sewers, pavements, etc., being local and in the form of benefits, cannot be said to come under the head of general taxation. The same is to be said of revenue derived from fines and penalties, which are forms of punishment for specific offenses, and go to the benefit of certain specified funds.

TAYLOR, Abner, ex-Congressman, is a native of Maine, and a resident of Chicago. He has been in active business all his life as contractor, builder and merchant, and, for some time, a member of the wholesale dry-goods firm of J. V. Farwell & Co., of Chicago. He was a member of the Thirty-fourth General Assembly, a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1884, and represented the First Illinois District in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, 1889 to 1893. Mr. Taylor was one of the contractors for the erection of the new State Capitol of Texas.

TAYLOR, Benjamin Franklin, journalist, poet and lecturer, was born at Lowville, N. Y., July 19, 1819; graduated at Madison University in 1839, the next year becoming literary and dramatic critic of "The Chicago Evening Journal." Here, in a few years, he acquired a wide reputation as a journalist and poet, and was much in demand as a lecturer on literary topics. His letters from the field during the Rebellion, as war correspondent of "The Evening Journal," won for him even a greater popularity, and were complimented by translation into more than one European language. After the war, he gave his attention more unreservedly to literature, his principal works appearing after that date. His publications in book form, including both prose and poetry, comprise the following: "Attractions of Language" (1845); "January and June" (1853); "Pictures in Camp and Field" (1871); "The World on Wheels" (1873); "Old Time Pictures and Sheaves of Rhyme" (1874); "Songs of Yesterday" (1877); "Summer Savory Gleaned from Rural Nooks" (1879); "Between the Gates"—pictures of California life—(1881); "Dulce Domum, the Burden of Song" (1884), and "Theophilus Trent, or Old Times in the Oak Openings," a novel (1887). The last was in the hands of the publishers at his death, Feb. 27, 1887. Among his most popular poems are "The Isle of the Long Ago," "The Old Village Choir," and "Rhymes of the River." "The London Times" complimented Mr. Taylor with the title of "The Oliver Goldsmith of America."

TAYLOR, Edmund Dick, early Indian-trader and legislator, was born at Fairfield C. H., Va., Oct. 18, 1802—the son of a commissary in the army of the Revolution, under General Greene, and a cousin of General (later, President) Zachary Taylor; left his native State in his youth and, at an early day, came to Springfield, Ill., where he opened an Indian-trading post and general store; was elected from Sangamon County to the lower branch of the Seventh General Assembly (1830) and re-elected in 1832—the latter year being a competitor of Abraham Lincoln, whom he defeated. In 1834 he was elected to the State Senate and, at the next session of the Legislature, was one of the celebrated “Long Nine” who secured the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. He resigned before the close of his term to accept, from President Jackson, the appointment of Receiver of Public Moneys at Chicago. Here he became one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (1837), serving as one of the Commissioners to secure subscriptions of stock, and was also active in advocating the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The title of “Colonel,” by which he was known during most of his life, was acquired by service, with that rank, on the staff of Gov. John Reynolds, during the Black Hawk War of 1832. After coming to Chicago, Colonel Taylor became one of the Trustees of the Chicago branch of the State Bank, and was later identified with various banking enterprises, as also a somewhat extensive operator in real estate. An active Democrat in the early part of his career in Illinois, Colonel Taylor was one of the members of his party to take ground against the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and advocated the election of General Bissell to the governorship in 1856. In 1860 he was again in line with his party in support of Senator Douglas for the Presidency, and was an opponent of the war policy of the Government still later, as shown by his participation in the celebrated “Peace Convention” at Springfield, of June 17, 1863. In the latter years of his life he became extensively interested in coal lands in La Salle and adjoining counties, and, for a considerable time, served as President of the Northern Illinois Coal & Mining Company, his home, during a part of this period, being at Mendota. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 4, 1891.

TAYLORVILLE, a city and county-seat of Christian County, on the South Fork of the Sangamon River and on the Wabash Railway at its point of intersection with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern. It is about 27 miles southeast of Springfield, and 28 miles southwest of Decatur. It has several banks, flour mills, paper mill, electric light and gas plants, water-works, two coal mines, carriage and wagon shops, a manufactory of farming implements, two daily and weekly papers, nine churches and five graded and township high schools. Much coal is mined in this vicinity. Pop. (1890), 2,839; (1900), 4,248.

TAZEWELL COUNTY, a central county on the Illinois River; was first settled in 1823 and organized in 1827; has an area of 650 square miles—was named for Governor Tazewell of Virginia. It is drained by the Illinois and Mackinaw Rivers and traversed by several lines of railway. The surface is generally level, the soil alluvial and rich, but, requiring drainage, especially on the river bottoms. Gravel, coal and sandstone are found, but, generally speaking, Tazewell is an agricultural county. The cereals are extensively cultivated; wool is also clipped, and there are dairy interests of some importance. Distilling is extensively conducted at Pekin, the county-seat, which is also the seat of other mechanical industries. (See also Pekin.) Population of the county (1880), 29,666; (1890), 29,556; (1900), 33,221.

TEMPLE, John Taylor, M.D., early Chicago physician, born in Virginia in 1804, graduated in medicine at Middlebury College, Vt., in 1830, and, in 1833, arrived in Chicago. At this time he had a contract for carrying the United States mail from Chicago to Fort Howard, near Green Bay, and the following year undertook a similar contract between Chicago and Ottawa. Having sold these out three years later, he devoted his attention to the practice of his profession, though interested, for a time, in contracts for the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Dr. Temple was instrumental in erecting the first house (after Rev. Jesse Walker's missionary station at Wolf Point), for public religious worship in Chicago, and, although himself a Baptist, it was used in common by Protestant denominations. He was a member of the first Board of Trustees of Rush Medical College, though he later became a convert to homeopathy, and finally, removing to St. Louis, assisted in founding the St. Louis School of Homeopathy, dying there, Feb. 24, 1877.

TERRE HAUTE, ALTON & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & ALTON RAILROAD (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & INDIANAPOLIS RAILROAD, a corporation operating no line of its own within the State, but the lessee and operator of the following lines (which see): St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute, 158.3 miles; Terre Haute & Peoria, 145.12 miles; East St. Louis & Carondelet, 12.74 miles—total length of leased lines in Illinois, 316.16 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad was incorporated in Indiana in 1847, as the Terre Haute & Richmond, completed a line between the points named in the title, in 1852, and took its present name in 1866. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company purchased a controlling interest in its stock in 1893.

TERRE HAUTE & PEORIA RAILROAD, (Vandalia Line), a line of road extending from Terre Haute, Ind., to Peoria, Ill., 145.12 miles, with 28.78 miles of trackage, making in all 173.9 miles in operation, all being in Illinois—operated by the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company. The gauge is standard, and the rails are steel. (HISTORY.) It was organized Feb. 7, 1887, successor to the Illinois Midland Railroad. The latter was made up by the consolidation (Nov. 4, 1874) of three lines: (1) The Peoria, Atlanta & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1869 and opened in 1874; (2) the Paris & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1861 and opened in December, 1872; and (3) the Paris & Terre Haute Railroad, chartered in 1873 and opened in 1874—the consolidated lines assuming the name of the Illinois Midland Railroad. In 1886 the Illinois Midland was sold under foreclosure and, in February, 1887, reorganized as the Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad. In 1892 it was leased for ninety-nine years to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company, and is operated as a part of the "Vandalia System." The capital stock (1898) was $3,764,200; funded debt, $2,230,000,—total capital invested, $6,227,481.

TEUTOPOLIS, a village of Effingham County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, 4 miles east of Effingham; was originally settled by a colony of Germans from Cincinnati. Population (1900), 498.

THOMAS, Horace H., lawyer and legislator, was born in Vermont, Dec. 18, 1831, graduated at Middlebury College, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Chicago, where he commenced practice. At the outbreak of the rebellion he enlisted and was commissioned Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army of the Ohio. At the close of the war he took up his residence in Tennessee, serving as Quartermaster upon the staff of Governor Brownlow. In 1867 he returned to Chicago and resumed practice. He was elected a Representative in the Legislature in 1878 and re-elected in 1880, being chosen Speaker of the House during his latter term. In 1888 he was elected State Senator from the Sixth District, serving during the sessions of the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies. In 1897, General Thomas was appointed United States Appraiser in connection with the Custom House in Chicago.

THOMAS, Jesse Burgess, jurist and United States Senator, was born at Hagerstown, Md., claiming direct descent from Lord Baltimore. Taken west in childhood, he grew to manhood and settled at Lawrenceburg, Indiana Territory, in 1803; in 1805 was Speaker of the Territorial Legislature and, later, represented the Territory as Delegate in Congress. On the organization of Illinois Territory (which he had favored), he removed to Kaskaskia, was appointed one of the first Judges for the new Territory, and, in 1818, as Delegate from St. Clair County, presided over the first State Constitutional Convention, and, on the admission of the State, became one of the first United States Senators—Governor Edwards being his colleague. Though an avowed advocate of slavery, he gained no little prominence as the author of the celebrated "Missouri Compromise," adopted in 1820. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1823, serving until 1829. He subsequently removed to Mount Vernon, Ohio, where he died by suicide, May 4, 1853.—Jesse Burgess (Thomas), Jr., nephew of the United States Senator of the same name, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, July 31, 1806, was educated at Transylvania University, and, being admitted to the bar, located at Edwardsville, Ill. He first appeared in connection with public affairs as Secretary of the State Senate in 1830, being re-elected in 1832; in 1834 was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Madison County, but, in February following, was appointed Attorney-General, serving only one year. He afterwards held the position of Circuit Judge (1837-39), his home being then in Springfield; in 1843 he became Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, by appointment of the Governor, as successor to Stephen A. Douglas, and was afterwards elected to the same office by the Legislature, remaining until 1848. During a part of his professional career he was the partner of David Prickett and William L. May, at Springfield, and afterwards a member of the Galena bar, finally removing to Chicago, where he died, Feb. 21, 1850.—Jesse B. (Thomas) third, clergyman and son of the last named; born at Edwardsville, Ill., July 29, 1832; educated at Kenyon College, Ohio, and Rochester (N. Y.) Theological Seminary; practiced law for a time in Chicago, but finally entered the Baptist ministry, serving churches at Waukegan, Ill., Brooklyn, N. Y., and San Francisco (1862-69). He then became pastor of the Michigan Avenue Baptist Church, in Chicago, remaining until 1874, when he returned to Brooklyn. In 1887 he became Professor of Biblical History in the Theological Seminary at Newton, Mass., where he has since resided. He is the author of several volumes, and, in 1866, received the degree of D.D. from the old University of Chicago.

THOMAS, John, pioneer and soldier of the Black Hawk War, was born in Wythe County, Va., Jan. 11, 1800. At the age of 18 he accompanied his parents to St. Clair County, Ill., where the family located in what was then called the Alexander settlement, near the present site of Shiloh. When he was 22 he rented a farm (although he had not enough money to buy a horse) and married. Six years later he bought and stocked a farm, and, from that time forward, rapidly accumulated real property, until he became one of the most extensive owners of farming land in St. Clair County. In early life he was fond of military exercise, holding various offices in local organizations and serving as a Colonel in the Black Hawk War. In 1824 he was one of the leaders of the party opposed to the amendment of the State Constitution to sanction slavery, was a zealous opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and a firm supporter of the Republican party from the date of its formation. He was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1838, '62, '64, '72 and '74; and to the State Senate in 1878, serving four years in the latter body. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 16, 1894, in the 95th year of his age.

THOMAS, John R., ex-Congressman, was born at Mount Vernon, Ill., Oct. 11, 1846. He served in the Union Army during the War of the Rebellion, rising from the ranks to a captaincy. After his return home he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1869. From 1872 to 1876 he was State's Attorney, and, from 1879 to 1889, represented his District in Congress. In 1897, Mr. Thomas was appointed by President McKinley an additional United States District Judge for Indian Territory. His home is now at Vanita, in that Territory.

THOMAS, William, pioneer lawyer and legislator, was born in what is now Allen County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1802; received a rudimentary education, and served as deputy of his father (who was Sheriff), and afterwards of the County Clerk; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1823; in 1826 removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he taught school, served as a private in the Winnebago War (1827), and at the session of 1828-29, reported the proceedings of the General Assembly for "The Vandalia Intelligencer"; was State's Attorney and School Commissioner of Morgan County; served as Quartermaster and Commissary in the Black Hawk War (1831-32), first under Gen. Joseph Duncan and, a year later, under General Whiteside; in 1839 was appointed Circuit Judge, but legislated out of office two years later. It was as a member of the Legislature, however, that he gained the greatest prominence, first as State Senator in 1834-40, and Representative in 1846-48 and 1850-52, when he was especially influential in the legislation which resulted in establishing the institutions for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, and the Hospital for the Insane (the first in the State) at Jacksonville—serving, for a time, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the latter. He was also prominent in connection with many enterprises of a local character, including the establishment of the Illinois Female College, to which, although without children of his own, he was a liberal contributor. During the first year of the war he was a member of the Board of Army Auditors by appointment of Governor Yates. Died, at Jacksonville, August 22, 1889.

THORNTON, Anthony, jurist, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., Nov. 9, 1814—being descended from a Virginia family. After the usual primary instruction in the common schools, he spent two years in a high school at Gallatin, Tenn., when he entered Centre College at Danville, Ky., afterwards continuing his studies at Miami University, Ohio, where he graduated in 1834. Having studied law with an uncle at Paris, Ky., he was licensed to practice in 1836, when he left his native State with a view to settling in Missouri, but, visiting his uncle, Gen. William F. Thornton, at Shelbyville, Ill., was induced to establish himself in practice there. He served as a member of the State Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, and as Representative in the Seventeenth General Assembly (1850-52) for Shelby County. In 1864 he was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress, and, in 1870, to the Illinois Supreme Court, but served only until 1873, when he resigned. In 1879 Judge Thornton removed to Decatur, Ill., but subsequently returned to Shelbyville, where (1898) he now resides.

THORNTON, William Fitzhugh, Commissioner of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, was born in Hanover County, Va., Oct. 4, 1789; in 1806, went to Alexandria, Va., where he conducted a drug business for a time, also acting as associate editor of "The Alexandria Gazette." Subsequently removing to Washington City, he conducted a paper there in the interest of John Quincy Adams for the Presidency. During the War of 1812-14 he served as a Captain of cavalry, and, for a time, as staff-officer of General Winder. On occasion of the visit of Marquis La Fayette to America (1824-25) he accompanied the distinguished Frenchman from Baltimore to Richmond. In 1829 he removed to Kentucky, and, in 1833, to Shelbyville, Ill., where he soon after engaged in mercantile business, to which he added a banking and brokerage business in 1859, with which he was actively associated until his death. In 1836, he was appointed, by Governor Duncan, one of the Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as President of the Board until 1842. In 1840, he made a visit to London, as financial agent of the State, in the interest of the Canal, and succeeded in making a sale of bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 on what were then considered favorable terms. General Thornton was an ardent Whig until the organization of the Republican party, when he became a Democrat. Died, at Shelbyville, Oct. 21, 1873.

TILLSON, John, pioneer, was born at Halifax, Mass., March 13, 1796; came to Illinois in 1819, locating at Hillsboro, Montgomery County, where he became a prominent and enterprising operator in real estate, doing a large business for eastern parties; was one of the founders of Hillsboro Academy and an influential and liberal friend of Illinois College, being a Trustee of the latter from its establishment until his death; was supported in the Legislature of 1827 for State Treasurer, but defeated by James Hall. Died, at Peoria, May 11, 1853.—Christiana Holmes (Tillson), wife of the preceding, was born at Kingston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1798; married to John Tillson in 1822, and immediately came to Illinois to reside; was a woman of rare culture and refinement, and deeply interested in benevolent enterprises. Died, in New York City, May 29, 1872.—Charles Holmes (Tillson), son of John and Christiana Holmes Tillson, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Sept. 15, 1823; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1844; studied law in St. Louis and at Transylvania University, was admitted to the bar in St. Louis and practiced there some years—also served several terms in the City Council, and was a member of the National Guard of Missouri in the War of the Rebellion. Died, Nov. 25, 1865.—John (Tillson), Jr., another son, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Oct. 12, 1825; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, but did not graduate from the latter; graduated from Transylvania Law School, Ky., in 1847, and was admitted to the bar at Quincy, Ill., the same year; practiced two years at Galena, when he returned to Quincy. In 1861 he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, became its Lieutenant-Colonel, on the promotion of Col. J. D. Morgan to Brigadier-General, was advanced to the colonelcy, and, in July, 1865, was mustered out with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General; for two years later held a commission as Captain in the regular army. During a portion of 1869-70 he was editor of "The Quincy Whig"; in 1873 was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly to succeed Nehemiah Bushnell, who had died in office, and, during the same year, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Quincy District, serving until 1881. Died, August 6, 1892.

TILLSON, Robert, pioneer, was born in Halifax County, Mass., August 12, 1800; came to Illinois in 1822, and was employed, for several years, as a clerk in the land agency of his brother, John Tillson, at Hillsboro. In 1826 he engaged in the mercantile business with Charles Holmes, Jr., in St. Louis, but, in 1828, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he opened the first general store in that city; also served as Postmaster for some ten years. During this period he built the first two-story frame building erected in Quincy, up to that date. Retiring from the mercantile business in 1840 he engaged in real estate, ultimately becoming the proprietor of considerable property of this character; was also a contractor for furnishing cavalry accouterments to the Government during the war. Soon after the war he erected one of the handsomest business blocks existing in the city at that time. Died, in Quincy, Dec. 27, 1892.

TINSCHER, John L., banker, was born in Kentucky in 1821; brought by his parents to Vermilion County, Ind., in 1829, and left an orphan at 17; attended school in Coles County, Ill., and was employed as clerk in a store at Danville, 1843-53. He then became a member of the firm of Tinscher & English, merchants, later establishing a bank, which became the First National Bank of Danville. In 1864 Mr. Tinscher was elected Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly and, two years later, to the Senate, being re-elected in 1870. He was also a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, in Springfield, Dec. 17, 1871, while in attendance on the adjourned session of that year.

TIPTON, Thomas F., lawyer and jurist, was born in Franklin County, Ohio, August 29, 1833; has been a resident of McLean County, Ill., from the age of 10 years, his present home being at Bloomington. He was admitted to the bar in 1857, and, from January, 1867, to December, 1868, was State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit. In 1870 he was elected Judge of the same circuit, and under the new Constitution, was chosen Judge of the new Fourteenth Circuit. From 1877 to 1879 he represented the (then) Thirteenth Illinois District in Congress, but, in 1878, was defeated by Adlai E. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee. In 1891 he was re-elected to a seat on the Circuit bench for the Bloomington Circuit, but resumed practice at the expiration of his term in 1897.

TISKILWA, a village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 7 miles southwest of Princeton; has creameries and cheese factories, churches, school, library, water-works, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 965.

TODD, (Col.) John, soldier, was born in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1750; took part in the battle of Point Pleasant, Va., in 1774, as Adjutant-General of General Lewis; settled as a lawyer at Fincastle, Va., and, in 1775, removed to Fayette County, Ky., the next year locating near Lexington. He was one of the first two Delegates from Kentucky County to the Virginia House of Burgesses, and, in 1778, accompanied Col. George Rogers Clark on his expedition against Kaskaskia and Vincennes. In December, 1778, he was appointed by Gov. Patrick Henry, Lieutenant-Commandant of Illinois County, embracing the region northwest of the Ohio River, serving two years; in 1780, was again a member of the Virginia Legislature, where he procured grants of land for public schools and introduced a bill for negro-emancipation. He was killed by Indians, at the battle of Blue Licks, Ky., August 19, 1782.

TODD, (Dr.) John, physician, born near Lexington, Ky., April 27, 1787, was one of the earliest graduates of Transylvania University, also graduating at the Medical University of Philadelphia; was appointed Surgeon-General of Kentucky troops in the War of 1812, and captured at the battle of River Raisin. Returning to Lexington after his release, he practiced there and at Bardstown, removed to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1817, and, in 1827, to Springfield, where he had been appointed Register of the Land Office by President John Quincy Adams, but was removed by Jackson in 1829. Dr. Todd continued to reside at Springfield until his death, which occurred, Jan. 9, 1865. He was a grandson of John Todd, who was appointed Commandant of Illinois County by Gov. Patrick Henry in 1778, and an uncle of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln.—John Blair Smith (Todd), son of the preceding, was born at Lexington, Ky., April 4, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1817; graduated at the United States Military Academy in 1837, serving afterwards in the Florida and Mexican wars and on the frontier; resigned, and was an Indian-trader in Dakota, 1856-61; the latter year, took his seat as a Delegate in Congress from Dakota, then served as Brigadier-General of Volunteers, 1861-62; was again Delegate in Congress in 1863-65, Speaker of the Dakota Legislature in 1867, and Governor of the Territory, 1869-71. Died, at Yankton City, Jan. 5, 1872.

TOLEDO, a village and the county-seat of Cumberland County, on the Illinois Central Railroad; founded in 1854; has five churches, a graded school, two banks, creamery, flour mill, elevator, and two weekly newspapers. There are no manufacturing, the leading industry in the surrounding country being agriculture. Pop. (1890), 676; (1900), 818.

TOLEDO, CINCINNATI & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WARSAW RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILWAY, a line of railroad wholly within the State of Illinois, extending from Effner, at the Indiana State line, west to the Mississippi River at Warsaw. The length of the whole line is 230.7 miles, owned entirely by the company. It is made up of a division from Effner to Peoria (110.9 miles)—which is practically an air-line throughout nearly its entire length—and the Peoria and Warsaw Division (108.8 miles) with branches from La Harpe to Iowa Junction (10.4 miles) and 0.6 of a mile connecting with the Keokuk bridge at Hamilton.—(HISTORY.) The original charter for this line was granted, in 1863, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad; the main line was completed in 1868, and the La Harpe & Iowa Junction branch in 1873. Default was made in 1873, the road sold under foreclosure, in 1880, and reorganized as the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, and the line leased for 49¼ years to the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company. The latter defaulted in July, 1884, and, a year later, the Toledo, Peoria & Western was transferred to trustees for the first mortgage bond-holders, was sold under foreclosure in October, 1886, and, in March, 1887, the present company, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway Company, was organized for the purpose of taking over the property. In 1893 the Pennsylvania Railroad Company obtained a controlling interest in the stock, and, in 1894, an agreement, for joint ownership and management, was entered into between that corporation and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. The total capitalization, in 1898, was $9,712,433, of which $4,076,900 was in stock and $4,895,000 in bonds.

TOLEDO, ST. LOUIS & KANSAS CITY RAILROAD. This line crosses the State in a northeast direction from East St. Louis to Humrick, near the Indiana State line, with Toledo as its eastern terminus. The length of the entire line is 450.72 miles, of which 179½ miles are operated in Illinois.—(HISTORY.) The Illinois portion of the line grew out of the union of charters granted to the Tuscola, Charleston & Vincennes and the Charleston, Neoga & St. Louis Railroad Companies, which were consolidated in 1881 with certain Indiana lines under the name of the Toledo, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad. During 1882 a narrow-gauge road was constructed from Ridge Farm, in Vermilion County, to East St. Louis (172 miles). In 1885 this was sold under foreclosure and, in June, 1886, consolidated with the main line under the name of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad. The whole line was changed to standard gauge in 1887-89, and otherwise materially improved, but, in 1893, went into the hands of receivers. Plans of reorganization have been under consideration, but the receivers were still in control in 1898.

TOLEDO, WABASH & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

TOLONO, a city in Champaign County, situated at the intersection of the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads, 9 miles south of Champaign and 37 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is the business center of a prosperous agricultural region. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank, a button factory, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 905; (1890), 902; (1900), 845.

TONICA, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 9 miles south of La Salle; the district is agricultural, but the place has some manufactures and a newspaper. Population (1890), 473; (1900), 497.

TONTY, Chevalier Henry de, explorer and soldier, born at Gaeta, Italy, about 1650. What is now known as the Tontine system of insurance undoubtedly originated with his father. The younger Tonty was adventurous, and, even as a youth, took part in numerous land and naval encounters. In the course of his experience he lost a hand, which was replaced by an iron or copper substitute. He embarked with La Salle in 1678, and aided in the construction of a fort at Niagara. He advanced into the country of the Illinois and established friendly relations with them, only to witness the defeat of his putative savage allies by the Iroquois. After various encounters (chiefly under the direction of La Salle) with the Indians in Illinois, he returned to Green Bay in 1681. The same year—under La Salle's orders—he began the erection of Fort St. Louis, on what is now called "Starved Rock" in La Salle County. In 1682 he descended the Mississippi to its mouth, with La Salle, but was ordered back to Mackinaw for assistance. In 1684 he returned to Illinois and successfully repulsed the Iroquois from Fort St. Louis. In 1686 he again descended the Mississippi in search of La Salle. Disheartened by the death of his commander and the loss of his early comrades, he took up his residence with the Illinois Indians. Among them he was found by Iberville in 1700, as a hunter and fur-trader. He died, in Mobile, in September, 1704. He was La Salle's most efficient coadjutor, and next to his ill-fated leader, did more than any other of the early French explorers to make Illinois known to the civilized world.

TOPOGRAPHY. Illinois is, generally speaking, an elevated table-land. If low water at Cairo be adopted as the maximum depression, and the summits of the two ridges hereinafter mentioned as the highest points of elevation, the altitude of this table land above the sea-level varies from 300 to 850 feet, the mean elevation being about 600 feet. The State has no mountain chains, and its few hills are probably the result of unequal denudation during the drift epoch. In some localities, particularly in the valley of the upper Mississippi, the streams have cut channels from 200 to 300 feet deep through the nearly horizontal strata, and here are found precipitous scarps, but, for the most part, the fundamental rocks are covered by a thick layer of detrital material. In the northwest there is a broken tract of uneven ground; the central portion of the State is almost wholly flat prairie, and, in the alluvial lands in the State, there are many deep valleys, eroded by the action of streams. The surface generally slopes toward the south and southwest, but the uniformity is broken by two ridges, which cross the State, one in either extremity. The northern ridge crosses the Rock River at Grand Detour and the Illinois at Split Rock, with an extreme altitude of 800 to 850 feet above sea level, though the altitude of Mount Morris, in Ogle County, exceeds 900 feet. That in the south consists of a range of hills in the latitude of Jonesboro, and extending from Shawneetown to Grand Tower. These hills are also about 800 feet above the level of the ocean. The highest point in the State is in Jo Daviess County, just south of the Wisconsin State line (near Scale's Mound) reaching an elevation of 1,257 feet above sea-level, while the highest in the south is in the northeast corner of Pope County—1,046 feet—a spur of the Ozark mountains. The following statistics regarding elevations are taken from a report of Prof. C. W. Rolfe, of the University of Illinois, based on observations made under the auspices of the Illinois Board of World's Fair Commissioners: The lowest gauge of the Ohio river, at its mouth (above sea-level), is 268.58 feet, and the mean level of Lake Michigan at Chicago 581.28 feet. The altitudes of a few prominent points are as follows: Highest point in Jackson County, 695 feet; "Bald Knob" in Union County, 985; highest point in Cook County (Barrington), 818; in La Salle County (Mendota), 747; in Livingston (Strawn), 770; in Will (Monee), 804; in Pike (Arden), 790; in Lake (Lake Zurich), 880; in Bureau, 910; in Boone, 1,010; in Lee (Carnahan), 1,017; in Stephenson (Waddam's Grove), 1,018; in Kane (Briar Hill), 974; in Winnebago, 985. The elevations of important towns are: Peoria, 465; Jacksonville, 602; Springfield, 596; Galesburg, 755; Joliet, 537; Rockford, 728; Bloomington, 821. Outside of the immediate valleys of the streams, and a few isolated groves or copses, little timber is found in the northern and central portions of the State, and such growth as there is, lacks the thriftiness characteristic of the forests in the Ohio valley. These forests cover a belt extending some sixty miles north of Cairo, and, while they generally include few coniferous trees, they abound in various species of oak, black and white walnut, white and yellow poplar, ash, elm, sugar-maple, linden, honey locust, cottonwood, mulberry, sycamore, pecan, persimmon, and (in the immediate valley of the Ohio)

the cypress. From a commercial point of view, Illinois loses nothing through the lack of timber over three-fourths of the State's area. Chicago is an accessible market for the product of the forests of the upper lakes, so that the supply of lumber is ample, while extensive coal-fields supply abundant fuel. The rich soil of the prairies, with its abundance of organic matter (see Geological Formations), more than compensates for the want of pine forests, whose soil is ill adapted to agriculture. About two-thirds of the entire boundary of the State consists of navigable waters. These, with their tributary streams, ensure sufficient drainage.

TORRENS LAND TITLE SYSTEM. A system for the registration of titles to, and incumbrances upon, land, as well as transfers thereof, intended to remove all unnecessary obstructions to the cheap, simple and safe sale, acquisition and transfer of realty. The system has been in successful operation in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and British Columbia for many years, and it is also in force in some States in the American Union. An act providing for its introduction into Illinois was first passed by the Twenty-ninth General Assembly, and approved, June 13, 1895. The final legislation in reference thereto was enacted by the succeeding Legislature, and was approved, May 1, 1897. It is far more elaborate in its consideration of details, and is believed to be, in many respects, much better adapted to accomplish the ends in view, than was the original act of 1895. The law is applicable only to counties of the first and second class, and can be adopted in no county except by a vote of a majority of the qualified voters of the same—the vote "for" or "against" to be taken at either the November or April elections, or at an election for the choice of Judges. Thus far the only county to adopt the system has been Cook, and there it encountered strong opposition on the part of certain parties of influence and wealth. After its adoption, a test case was brought, raising the question of the constitutionality of the act. The issue was taken to the Supreme Court, which tribunal finally upheld the law.—The Torrens system substitutes a certificate of registration and of transfer for the more elaborate deeds and mortgages in use for centuries. Under it there can be no actual transfer of a title until the same is entered upon the public land register, kept in the office of the Registrar, in which case the deed or mortgage becomes a mere power of attorney to authorize the transfer to be made, upon the principle of an ordinary stock transfer, or of the registration of a United States bond, the actual transfer and public notice thereof being simultaneous. A brief synopsis of the provisions of the Illinois statute is given below: Records of deeds are made Registrars, and required to give bonds of either $50,000 or $200,000, according to the population of the county. Any person or corporation, having an interest in land, may make application to any court having chancery jurisdiction, to have his title thereto registered. Such application must be in writing, signed and verified by oath, and must conform, in matters of specification and detail, with the requirements of the act. The court may refer the application to one of the standing examiners appointed by the Registrar, who are required to be competent attorneys and to give bond to examine into the title, as well as the truth of the applicant's statements. Immediately upon the filing of the application, notice thereof is given by the clerk, through publication and the issuance of a summons to be served, as in other proceedings in chancery, against all persons mentioned in the petition as having or claiming any interest in the property described. Any person interested, whether named as a defendant or not, may enter an appearance within the time allowed. A failure to enter an appearance is regarded as a confession by default. The court, in passing upon the application, is in no case bound by the examiner's report, but may require other and further proof; and, in its final adjudication, passes upon all questions of title and incumbrance, directing the Registrar to register the title in the party in whom it is to be vested, and making provision as to the manner and order in which incumbrances thereon shall appear upon the certificate to be issued. An appeal may be allowed to the Supreme Court, if prayed at the time of entering the decree, upon like terms as in other cases in chancery; and a writ of error may be sued out from that tribunal within two years after the entry of the order or decree. The period last mentioned may be said to be the statutory period of limitation, after which the decree of the court must be regarded as final, although safeguards are provided for those who may have been defrauded, and for a few other classes of persons. Upon the filing of the order or decree of the court, it becomes the duty of the Registrar to issue a certificate of title, the form of which is prescribed by the act, making such notations at the end as shall show and preserve the priorities of all estates, mortgages, incumbrances and changes to which the owner's title is subject. For the purpose of preserving evidence of the owner's handwriting, a receipt for the certificate, duly witnessed or acknowledged, is required of him, which is preserved in the Registrar's office. In case any registered owner should desire to transfer the whole or any part of his estate, or any interest therein, he is required to execute a conveyance to the transferee, which, together with the certificate of title last issued, must be surrendered to the Registrar. That official thereupon issues a new certificate, stamping the word "cancelled" across the surrendered certificate, as well as upon the corresponding entry in his books of record. When land is first brought within the operation of the act, the receiver of the certificate of title is required to pay to the Registrar one-tenth of one per cent of the value of the land, the aggregate so received to be deposited with and invested by the County Treasurer, and reserved as an indemnity fund for the reimbursement of persons sustaining any loss through any omission, mistake or malfeasance of the Registrar or his subordinates. The advantage claimed for the Torrens system is, chiefly, that titles registered thereunder can be dealt with more safely, quickly and inexpensively than under the old system; it being possible to close the entire transaction within an hour or two, without the need of an abstract of title, while (as the law is administered in Cook County) the cost of transfer is only $3. It is asserted that a title, once registered, can be dealt with almost as quickly and cheaply, and quite as safely, as shares of stock or registered bonds.

TOULON, the county-seat of Stark County, on the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad, 37 miles north-northwest of Peoria, and 11 miles southeast of Galva. Besides the county court-house, the town has five churches and a high school, an academy, steam granite works, two banks, and two weekly papers. Population (1880), 967; (1890), 945; (1900), 1,057.

TOWER HILL, a village of Shelby County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroads, 7 miles east of Pana; has bank, grain elevators, and coal mine. Pop. (1900), 615.

TOWNSHEND, Richard W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Prince George's County, Md., April 30, 1840. Between the ages of 10 and 18 he attended public and private schools at Washington, D. C. In 1858 he came to Illinois, where he began teaching, at the same time reading law with S. S. Marshall, at McLeansboro, where he was admitted to the bar in 1862, and where he began practice. From 1863 to 1868 he was Circuit Clerk of Hamilton County, and, from 1868 to 1872, Prosecuting Attorney for the Twelfth Judicial Circuit. In 1873 he removed to Shawneetown, where he became an officer of the Gallatin National Bank. From 1864 to 1875 he was a member of the Democratic State Central Committee, and a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Baltimore, in 1872. For twelve years (1877 to 1889) he represented his District in Congress; was re-elected in 1888, but died, March 9, 1889, a few days after the beginning of his seventh term.

TRACY, John M., artist, was born in Illinois about 1842; served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil War; studied painting in Paris in 1866-76; established himself as a portrait painter in St. Louis and, later, won a high reputation as a painter of animals, being regarded as an authority on the anatomy of the horse and the dog. Died, at Ocean Springs, Miss., March 20, 1893.

TREASURERS. (See State Treasurers.)

TREAT, Samuel Hubbel, lawyer and jurist, was born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., June 21, 1811, worked on his father's farm and studied law at Richfield, where he was admitted to practice. In 1834 he came to Springfield, Ill., traveling most of the way on foot. Here he formed a partnership with George Ferquer, who had held the offices of Secretary of State and Attorney-General. In 1839 he was appointed a Circuit Judge, and, on the reorganization of the Supreme Court in 1841, was elevated to the Supreme bench, being acting Chief Justice at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848. Having been elected to the Supreme bench under the new Constitution, he remained in office until March, 1855, when he resigned to take the position of Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, to which he had been appointed by President Pierce. This position he continued to occupy until his death, which occurred at Springfield, March 27, 1887. Judge Treat's judicial career was one of the longest in the history of the State, covering a period of forty-eight years, of which fourteen were spent upon the Supreme bench, and thirty-two in the position of Judge of the United States District Court.

TREATIES. (See Greenville, Treaty of; Indian Treaties.)

TREE, Lambert, jurist, diplomat and ex-Congressman, was born in Washington, D. C., Nov. 29, 1832, of an ancestry distinguished in the War of the Revolution. He received a superior classical and professional education, and was admitted to the bar, at Washington, in October, 1855. Removing to Chicago soon afterward, his professional career has been chiefly connected with that city. In 1864 he was chosen President of the Law Institute, and served as Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, from 1870 to 1875, when he resigned. The three following years he spent in foreign travel, returning to Chicago in 1878. In that year, and again in 1880, he was the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Fourth Illinois District, but was defeated by his Republican opponent. In 1885 he was the candidate of his party for United States Senator, but was defeated by John A. Logan, by one vote. In 1884 he was a member of the National Democratic Convention which first nominated Grover Cleveland, and, in July, 1885, President Cleveland appointed him Minister to Belgium, conferring the Russian mission upon him in September, 1888. On March 3, 1889, he resigned this post and returned home. In 1890 he was appointed by President Harrison a Commissioner to the International Monetary Conference at Washington. The year before he had attended (although not as a delegate) the International Conference, at Brussels, looking to the suppression of the slave-trade, where he exerted all his influence on the side of humanity. In 1892 Belgium conferred upon him the distinction of "Councillor of Honor" upon its commission to the World's Columbian Exposition. In 1896 Judge Tree was one of the most earnest opponents of the free-silver policy, and, after the Spanish-American War, a zealous advocate of the policy of retaining the territory acquired from Spain.

TREMONT, a town of Tazewell County, on the Peoria Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 9 miles southeast of Pekin; has two banks, two telephone exchanges, and one newspaper. Pop. (1900), 768.

TRENTON, a town of Clinton County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 31 miles east of St. Louis; in agricultural district; has creamery, milk condensery, two coal mines, six churches, a public school and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,384; (1900), 1,706; (1904), about 2,000.

TROY, a village of Madison County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis railroad, 21 miles northeast of St. Louis; has churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,080.

TRUITT, James Madison, lawyer and soldier, a native of Trimble County, Ky., was born Feb. 12, 1842, but lived in Illinois since 1843, his father having settled near Carrollton that year; was educated at Hillsboro and at McKendree College; enlisted in the One Hundred and Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers in 1862, and was promoted from the ranks to Lieutenant. After the war he studied law with Jesse J. Phillips, now of the Supreme Court, and, in 1872, was elected to the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1888, a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Mr. Truitt has been twice a prominent but unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for Attorney-General. His home is at Hillsboro, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession. Died July 26, 1900.

TRUMBULL, Lyman, statesman, was born at Colchester, Conn., Oct. 12, 1813, descended from a historical family, being a grand-nephew of Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, of Connecticut, from whom the name "Brother Jonathan" was derived as an appellation for Americans. Having received an academic education in his native town, at the age of 16 he began teaching a district school near his home, went South four years later, and engaged in teaching at Greenville, Ga. Here he studied law with Judge Hiram Warner, afterwards of the Supreme Court, and was admitted to the bar in 1837. Leaving Georgia the same year, he came to Illinois on horseback, visiting Vandalia, Belleville, Jacksonville, Springfield, Tremont and La Salle, and finally reaching Chicago, then a village of four or five thousand inhabitants. At Jacksonville he obtained a license to practice from Judge Lockwood, and, after visiting Michigan and his native State, he settled at Belleville, which continued to be his home for twenty years. His entrance into public life began with his election as Representative in the General Assembly in 1840. This was followed, in February, 1841, by his appointment by Governor Carlin, Secretary of State, as the successor of Stephen A. Douglas, who, after holding the position only two months, had resigned to accept a seat on the Supreme bench. Here he remained two years, when he was removed by Governor Ford, March 4, 1843, but, five years later (1848), was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, was re-elected in 1852, but resigned in 1853 on account of impaired health. A year later (1854) he was elected to Congress from the Belleville District as an anti-Nebraska Democrat, but, before taking his seat, was promoted to the United States Senate, as the successor of General Shields in the memorable contest of 1855, which resulted in the defeat of Abraham Lincoln. Senator Trumbull's career of eighteen years in the United States Senate (being re-elected in 1861 and 1867) is one of the most memorable in the history of that body, covering, as it does, the whole history of the war for the Union, and the period of reconstruction which followed it. During this period, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Judiciary, he had more to do in shaping legislation on war and reconstruction measures than any other single member of that body. While he disagreed with a large majority of his Republican associates on the question of Andrew Johnson's impeachment, he was always found in sympathy with them on the vital questions affecting the war and restoration of the Union. The Civil Rights Bill and Freedmen's Bureau Bills were shaped by his hand. In 1872 he joined in the "Liberal Republican" movement and afterwards co-operated with the Democratic party, being their candidate for Governor in 1880. From 1863 his home was in Chicago, where, after retiring from the Senate, he continued in the practice of his profession until his death, which occurred in that city, June 25, 1896.

TUG MILLS. These were a sort of primitive machine used in grinding corn in Territorial and early State days. The mechanism consisted of an upright shaft, into the upper end of which were fastened bars, resembling those in the capstan of a ship. Into the outer end of each of these bars was driven a pin. A belt, made of a broad strip of ox-hide, twisted into a sort of rope, was stretched around these pins and wrapped twice around a circular piece of wood called a trundle head, through which passed a perpendicular flat bar of iron, which turned the mill-stone, usually about eighteen inches in diameter. From the upright shaft projected a beam, to which were hitched one or two horses, which furnished the motive power. Oxen were sometimes employed as motive power in lieu of horses. These rudimentary contrivances were capable of grinding about twelve bushels of corn, each, per day.

TULEY, Murray Floyd, lawyer and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., March 4, 1827, of English extraction and descended from the early settlers of Virginia. His father died in 1832, and, eleven years later, his mother, having married Col. Richard J. Hamilton, for many years a prominent lawyer of Chicago, removed with her family to that city. Young Tuley began reading law with his step-father and completed his studies at the Louisville Law Institute in 1847, the same year being admitted to the bar in Chicago. About the same time he enlisted in the Fifth Illinois Volunteers for service in the Mexican War, and was commissioned First Lieutenant. The war having ended, he settled at Santa Fe, N. M., where he practiced law, also served as Attorney-General and in the Territorial Legislature. Returning to Chicago in 1854, he was associated in practice, successively, with Andrew Harvie, Judge Gary and J. N. Barker, and finally as head of the firm of Tuley, Stiles & Lewis. From 1869 to 1873 he was Corporation Counsel, and during this time framed the General Incorporation Act for Cities, under which the City of Chicago was reincorporated. In 1879 he was elevated to the bench of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected every six years thereafter, his last election being in 1897. He is now serving his fourth term, some ten years of his incumbency having been spent in the capacity of Chief Justice.

TUNNICLIFFE, Damon G., lawyer and jurist, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., August 20, 1829; at the age of 20, emigrated to Illinois, settling in Vermont, Fulton County, where, for a time, he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. He subsequently studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1853. In 1854 he established himself at Macomb, McDonough County, where he built up a large and lucrative practice. In 1868 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, from February to June, 1885, by appointment of Governor Oglesby, occupied a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, vice Pinkney H. Walker, deceased, who had been one of his first professional preceptors.

TURCHIN, John Basil (Ivan Vasilevitch Turchinoff), soldier, engineer and author, was born in Russia, Jan. 30, 1822. He graduated from the artillery school at St. Petersburg, in 1841, and was commissioned ensign; participated in the Hungarian campaign of 1849, and, in 1852, was assigned to the staff of the Imperial Guards; served through the Crimean War, rising to the rank of Colonel, and being made senior staff officer of the active corps. In 1856 he came to this country, settling in Chicago, and, for five years, was in the service of the Illinois Central Railway Company as topographical engineer. In 1861 he was commissioned Colonel of the Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, and, after leading his regiment in Missouri, Kentucky and Alabama, was, on July 7, 1862, promoted to a Brigadier-Generalship, being attached to the Army of the Cumberland until 1864, when he resigned. After the war he was, for six years, solicitor of patents at Chicago, but, in 1873, returned to engineering. In 1879 he established a Polish colony at Radom, in Washington County, in this State, and settled as a farmer. He is an occasional contributor to the press, writing usually on military or scientific subjects, and is the author of the "Campaign and Battle of Chickamunga" (Chicago, 1888).

TURNER (now WEST CHICAGO), a town and manufacturing center in Winfield Township, Du Page County, 30 miles west of Chicago, at the junction of two divisions of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. The town has a rolling mill, manufactories of wagons and pumps, and railroad repair shops. It also has five churches, a graded school and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 1,877; with suburb, 2,270.

TURNER, (Col.) Henry L., soldier and real-estate operator, was born at Oberlin, Ohio, August 26, 1845, and received a part of his education in the college there. During the Civil War he served as First Lieutenant in the One Hundred and Fiftieth Ohio Volunteers, and later, with the same rank in a colored regiment, taking part in the operations about Richmond, the capture of Fort Fisher, of Wilmington and of Gen. Joe Johnston's army. Coming to Chicago after the close of the war, he became connected with the business office of "The Advance," but later was employed in the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., in Philadelphia. On the failure of that concern, in 1872, he returned to Chicago and bought "The Advance," which he conducted some two years, when he sold out and engaged in the real estate business, with which he has since been identified—being President of the Chicago Real Estate Board in 1888. He has also been President of the Western Publishing Company and a Trustee of Oberlin College. Colonel Turner is an enthusiastic member of the Illinois National Guard and, on the declaration of war between the United States and Spain, in April, 1898, promptly resumed his connection with the First Regiment of the Guard, and finally led it to Santiago de Cuba during the fighting there—his regiment being the only one from Illinois to see actual service in the field during the progress of the war. Colonel Turner won the admiration of his command and the entire nation by the manner in which he discharged his duty. The regiment was mustered out at Chicago, Nov. 17, 1898, when he retired to private life.

TURNER, John Bice, Railway President, was born at Colchester, Delaware County, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1799; after a brief business career in his native State, he became identified with the construction and operation of railroads. Among the works with which he was thus connected, were the Delaware Division of the New York & Erie and the Troy & Schenectady Roads. In 1843 he came to Chicago, having previously purchased a large body of land at Blue Island. In 1847 he joined with W. B. Ogden and others, in resuscitating the Galena & Chicago Union Railway, which had been incorporated in 1836. He became President of the Company in 1850, and assisted in constructing various sections of road in Northern Illinois and Wisconsin, which have since become portions of the Chicago & Northwestern system. He was also one of the original Directors of the North Side Street Railway Company, organized in 1859. Died, Feb. 26, 1871.

TURNER, Jonathan Baldwin, educator and agriculturist, was born in Templeton, Mass., Dec. 7, 1805; grew up on a farm and, before reaching his majority, began teaching in a country school. After spending a short time in an academy at Salem, in 1827 he entered the preparatory department of Yale College, supporting himself, in part, by manual labor and teaching in a gymnasium. In 1829 he matriculated in the classical department at Yale, graduated in 1833, and the same year accepted a position as tutor in Illinois College at Jacksonville, Ill., which had been opened, three years previous, by the late Dr. J. M. Sturtevant. In the next fourteen years he gave instruction in nearly every branch embraced in the college curriculum, though holding, during most of this period, the chair of Rhetoric and English Literature. In 1847 he retired from college duties to give attention to scientific agriculture, in which he had always manifested a deep interest. The cultivation and sale of the Osage orange as a hedge plant now occupied his attention for many years, and its successful introduction in Illinois and other Western States—where the absence of timber rendered some substitute a necessity for fencing purposes—was largely due to his efforts. At the same time he took a deep interest in the cause of practical scientific education for the industrial classes, and, about 1850, began formulating that system of industrial education which, after twelve years of labor and agitation, he had the satisfaction of seeing recognized in the act adopted by Congress, and approved by President Lincoln, in July, 1862, making liberal donations of public lands for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States, out of which grew the University of Illinois at Champaign. While Professor Turner had zealous collaborators in this field, in Illinois and elsewhere, to him, more than to any other single man in the Nation, belongs the credit for this magnificent achievement. (See Education, and University of Illinois.) He was also one of the chief factors in founding and building up the Illinois State Teachers' Association, and the State Agricultural and Horticultural Societies. His address on "The Millennium of Labor," delivered at the first State Agricultural Fair at Springfield, in 1853, is still remembered as marking an era in industrial progress in Illinois. A zealous champion of free thought, in both political and religious affairs, he long bore the reproach which attached to the radical Abolitionist, only to enjoy, in later years, the respect universally accorded to those who had the courage and independence to avow their honest convictions. Prof. Turner was twice an unsuccessful candidate for Congress—once as a Republican and once as an "Independent"—and wrote much on political, religious and educational topics. The evening of an honored and useful life was spent among friends in Jacksonville, which was his home for more than sixty years, his death taking place in that city, Jan. 10, 1899, at the advanced age of 93 years.—Mrs. Mary Turner Carriel, at the present time (1899) one of the Trustees of the University of Illinois, is Prof. Turner's only daughter.

TURNER, Thomas J., lawyer and Congressman, born in Trumbull County, Ohio, April 5, 1815. Leaving home at the age of 18, he spent three years in Indiana and in the mining districts about Galena and in Southern Wisconsin, locating in Stephenson County, in 1836, where he was admitted to the bar in 1840, and elected Probate Judge in 1841. Soon afterwards Governor Ford appointed him Prosecuting Attorney, in which capacity he secured the conviction and punishment of the murderers of Colonel Davenport. In 1846 he was elected to Congress as a Democrat, and, the following year, founded "The Prairie Democrat" (afterward "The Freeport Bulletin"), the first newspaper published in the county. Elected to the Legislature in 1854, he was chosen Speaker of the House, the next year becoming the first Mayor of Freeport. He was a member of the Peace Conference of 1861, and, in May of that year, was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Colonel of the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers, but resigned in 1862. He served as a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1871, was again elected to the Legislature, where he received the Democratic caucus nomination for United States Senator against General Logan. In 1871 he removed to Chicago, and was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the office of State's Attorney. In February, 1874, he went to Hot Springs, Ark., for medical treatment, and died there, April 3 following.

TUSCOLA, a city and the county-seat of Douglas County, located at the intersection of the Illinois Central and two other trunk lines of railway, 22 miles south of Champaign, and 36 miles east of Decatur. Besides a brick court-house it has five churches, a graded school, a national bank, two weekly newspapers and two establishments for the manufacture of carriages and wagons. Population (1880), 1,457; (1890), 1,897; (1900), 2,569.

TUSCOLA, CHARLESTON & VINCENNES RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TUTHILL, Richard Stanley, jurist, was born at Vergennes, Jackson County, Ill., Nov. 10, 1841. After passing through the common schools of his native county, he took a preparatory course in a high school at St. Louis and in Illinois College, Jacksonville, when he entered Middlebury College, Vt., graduating there in 1863. Immediately thereafter he joined the Federal army at Vicksburg, and, after serving for some time in a company of scouts attached to General Logan's command, was commissioned a Lieutenant in the First Michigan Light Artillery, with which he served until the close of the war, meanwhile being twice promoted. During this time he was with General Sherman in the march to Meridian, and in the Atlanta campaign, also took part with General Thomas in the operations against the rebel General Hood in Tennessee, and in the battle of Nashville. Having resigned his commission in May, 1865, he took up the study of law, which he had prosecuted as he had opportunity while in the army, and was admitted to the bar at Nashville in 1866, afterwards serving for a time as Prosecuting Attorney on the Nashville circuit. In 1873 he removed to Chicago, two years later was elected City Attorney and re-elected in 1877; was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880 and, in 1884, was appointed United States District Attorney for the Northern District, serving until 1886. In 1887 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Rogers, was re-elected for a full term in 1891, and again in 1897.

TYNDALE, Sharon, Secretary of State, born in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 19, 1816; at the age of 17 came to Belleville, Ill., and was engaged for a time in mercantile business, later being employed in a surveyor's corps under the internal improvement system of 1837. Having married in 1839, he returned soon after to Philadelphia, where he engaged in mercantile business with his father;

then came to Illinois, a second time, in 1845, spending a year or two in business at Peoria. About 1847 he returned to Belleville and entered upon a course of mathematical study, with a view to fitting himself more thoroughly for the profession of a civil engineer. In 1851 he graduated in engineering at Cambridge, Mass., after which he was employed for a time on the Sunbury & Erie Railroad, and later on certain Illinois railroads. In 1857 he was elected County Surveyor of St. Clair County, and, in 1861, by appointment of President Lincoln, became Postmaster of the city of Belleville. He held this position until 1864, when he received the Republican nomination for Secretary of State and was elected, remaining in office four years. He was an earnest advocate, and virtually author, of the first act for the registration of voters in Illinois, passed at the session of 1865. After retiring from office in 1869, he continued to reside in Springfield, and was employed for a time in the survey of the Gilman, Clinton & Springfield Railway—now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central. At an early hour on the morning of April 29, 1871, while going from his home to the railroad station at Springfield, to take the train for St. Louis, he was assassinated upon the street by shooting, as supposed for the purpose of robbery—his dead body being found a few hours later at the scene of the tragedy. Mr. Tyndale was a brother of Gen. Hector Tyndale of Pennsylvania, who won a high reputation by his services during the war. His second wife, who survived him, was a daughter of Shadrach Penn, an editor of considerable reputation who was the contemporary and rival of George D. Prentice at Louisville, for some years.

"UNDERGROUND RAILROAD," THE. A history of Illinois would be incomplete without reference to the unique system which existed there, as in other Northern States, from forty to seventy years ago, known by the somewhat mysterious title of "The Underground Railroad." The origin of the term has been traced (probably in a spirit of facetiousness) to the expression of a Kentucky planter who, having pursued a fugitive slave across the Ohio River, was so surprised by his sudden disappearance, as soon as he had reached the opposite shore, that he was led to remark, "The nigger must have gone off on an underground road." From "underground road" to "underground railroad," the transition would appear to have been easy, especially in view of the increased facility with which the work was performed when railroads came into use. For readers of the present generation, it may be well to explain what "The Underground Railroad" really was. It may be defined as the figurative appellation for a spontaneous movement in the free States—extending, sometimes, into the slave States themselves—to assist slaves in their efforts to escape from bondage to freedom. The movement dates back to a period close to the Revolutionary War, long before it received a definite name. Assistance given to fugitives from one State by citizens of another, became a cause of complaint almost as soon as the Government was organized. In fact, the first President himself lost a slave who took refuge at Portsmouth, N. H., where the public sentiment was so strong against his return, that the patriotic and philosophic "Father of his Country" chose to let him remain unmolested, rather than "excite a mob or riot, or even uneasy sensations, in the minds of well-disposed citizens." That the matter was already one of concern in the minds of slaveholders, is shown by the fact that a provision was inserted in the Constitution for their conciliation, guaranteeing the return of fugitives from labor, as well as from justice, from one State to another.

In 1793 Congress passed the first Fugitive Slave Law, which was signed by President Washington. This law provided that the owner, his agent or attorney, might follow the slave into any State or Territory, and, upon oath or affidavit before a court or magistrate, be entitled to a warrant for his return. Any person who should hinder the arrest of the fugitive, or who should harbor, aid or assist him, knowing him to be such, was subject to a fine of $500 for each offense.—In 1850, fifty-seven years later, the first act having proved inefficacious, or conditions having changed, a second and more stringent law was enacted. This is the one usually referred to in discussions of the subject. It provided for an increased fine, not to exceed $1,000, and imprisonment not exceeding six months, with liability for civil damages to the party injured. No proof of ownership was required beyond the statement of a claimant, and the accused was not permitted to testify for himself. The fee of the United States Commissioner, before whom the case was tried, was ten dollars if he found for the claimant; if not, five dollars. This seemed to many an indirect form of bribery: clearly, it made it to the Judge's pecuniary advantage to decide in favor of the claimant. The law made it possible and easy for a white man to arrest, and carry into slavery, any free negro who could not immediately prove, by other witnesses, that he was born free, or had purchased his freedom.

Instead of discouraging the disposition, on the part of the opponents of slavery, to aid fugitives in their efforts to reach a region where they would be secure in their freedom, the effect of the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850 (as that of 1793 had been in a smaller degree) was the very opposite of that intended by its authors—unless, indeed, they meant to make matters worse. The provisions of the act seemed, to many people, so unfair, so one-sided, that they rebelled in spirit and refused to be made parties to its enforcement. The law aroused the anti-slavery sentiment of the North, and stimulated the active friends of the fugitives to take greater risks in their behalf. New efforts on the part of the slaveholders were met by a determination to evade, hinder and nullify the law.

And here a strange anomaly is presented. The slaveholder, in attempting to recover his slave, was acting within his constitutional and legal rights. The slave was his property in law. He had purchased or inherited his bondman on the same plane with his horse or his land, and, apart from the right to hold a human being in bondage, regarded his legal rights to the one as good as the other. From a legal standpoint his position was impregnable. The slave was his, representing so much of money value, and whoever was instrumental in the loss of that slave was, both theoretically and technically, a partner in robbery. Therefore he looked on "The Underground Railway" as the work of thieves, and entertained bitter hatred toward all concerned in its operation. On the other hand, men who were, in all other respects, good citizens—often religiously devout and pillars of the church—became bold and flagrant violators of the law in relation to this sort of property. They set at naught a plain provision of the Constitution and the act of Congress for its enforcement. Without hope of personal gain or reward, at the risk of fine and imprisonment, with the certainty of social ostracism and bitter opposition, they harbored the fugitive and helped him forward on every occasion. And why? Because they saw in him a man, with the same inherent right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" that they themselves possessed. To them this was a higher law than any Legislature, State or National, could enact. They denied that there could be truly such a thing as property in man. Believing that the law violated human rights, they justified themselves in rendering it null and void.

For the most part, the "Underground Railroad" operators and promoters were plain, obscure men, without hope of fame or desire for notoriety. Yet there were some whose names are conspicuous in history, such as Wendell Phillips, Thomas Wentworth Higginson and Theodore Parker of Massachusetts; Gerrit Smith and Thurlow Weed of New York; Joshua R. Giddings of Ohio, and Owen Lovejoy of Illinois. These had their followers and sympathizers in all the Northern States, and even in some portions of the South. It is a curious fact, that some of the most active spirits connected with the "Underground Railroad" were natives of the South, or had resided there long enough to become thoroughly acquainted with the "institution." Levi Coffin, who had the reputation of being the "President of the Underground Railroad"—at least so far as the region west of the Ohio was concerned—was an active operator on the line in North Carolina before his removal from that State to Indiana in 1826. Indeed, as a system, it is claimed to have had its origin at Guilford College, in the "Old North State" in 1819, though the evidence of this may not be conclusive.

Owing to the peculiar nature of their business, no official reports were made, no lists of officers, conductors, station agents or operators preserved, and few records kept which are now accessible. Consequently, we are dependent chiefly upon the personal recollection of individual operators for a history of their transactions. Each station on the road was the house of a "friend" and it is significant, in this connection, that in every settlement of Friends, or Quakers, there was sure to be a house of refuge for the slave. For this reason it was, perhaps, that one of the most frequently traveled lines extended from Virginia and Maryland through Eastern Pennsylvania, and then on towards New York or directly to Canada. From the proximity of Ohio to Virginia and Kentucky, and the fact that it offered the shortest route through free soil to Canada, it was traversed by more lines than any other State, although Indiana was pretty thoroughly "grid-ironed" by roads to freedom. In all, however, the routes were irregular, often zigzag, for purposes of security, and the "conductor" was any one who conveyed fugitives from one station to another. The "train" was sometimes a farm-wagon, loaded with produce for market at some town (or depot) on the line, frequently a closed carriage, and it is related that once, in Ohio, a number of carriages conveying a large party, were made to represent a funeral procession. Occasionally the train ran on foot, for convenience of side-tracking into the woods or a cornfield, in case of pursuit by a wild locomotive.

Then, again, there were not wanting lawyers who, in case the operator, conductor or station agent got into trouble, were ready, without fee or reward, to defend either him or his human freight in the courts. These included such names of national repute as Salmon P. Chase, Thaddeus Stevens, Charles Sumner, William H. Seward, Rutherford B. Hayes, Richard H. Dana, and Isaac N. Arnold, while, taking the whole country over, their "name was legion." And there were a few men of wealth, like Thomas Garrett of Delaware, willing to contribute money by thousands to their assistance. Although technically acting in violation of law—or, as claimed by themselves, in obedience to a "higher law"—the time has already come when there is a disposition to look upon the actors as, in a certain sense, heroes, and their deeds as fitly belonging to the field of romance.

The most comprehensive collection of material relating to the history of this movement has been furnished in a recent volume entitled, "The Underground Railroad from Slavery to Freedom," by Prof. Wilbur H. Siebert, of Ohio State University; and, while it is not wholly free from errors, both as to individual names and facts, it will probably remain as the best compilation of history bearing on this subject—especially as the principal actors are fast passing away. One of the interesting features of Prof. Siebert's book is a map purporting to give the principal routes and stations in the States northwest of the Ohio, yet the accuracy of this, as well as the correctness of personal names given, has been questioned by some best informed on the subject. As might be expected from its geographical position between two slave States—Kentucky and Missouri—on the one hand, and the lakes offering a highway to Canada on the other, it is naturally to be assumed that Illinois would be an attractive field, both for the fugitive and his sympathizer.

The period of greatest activity of the system in this State was between 1840 and 1861—the latter being the year when the pro-slavery party in the South, by their attempt forcibly to dissolve the Union, took the business out of the hands of the secret agents of the "Underground Railroad," and—in a certain sense—placed it in the hands of the Union armies. It was in 1841 that Abraham Lincoln—then a conservative opponent of the extension of slavery—on an appeal from a judgment, rendered by the Circuit Court in Tazewell County, in favor of the holder of a note given for the service of the indentured slave-girl "Nance," obtained a decision from the Supreme Court of Illinois upholding the doctrine that the girl was free under the Ordinance of 1787 and the State Constitution, and that the note, given to the person who claimed to be her owner, was void. And it is a somewhat curious coincidence that the same Abraham Lincoln, as President of the United States, in the second year of the War of the Rebellion, issued the Proclamation of Emancipation which finally resulted in striking the shackles from the limbs of every slave in the Union.

In the practical operation of aiding fugitives in Illinois, it was natural that the towns along the border upon the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, should have served as a sort of entrepôts, or initial stations, for the reception of this class of freight—especially if adjacent to some anti-slavery community. This was the case at Chester, from which access was easy to Sparta, where a colony of Covenanters, or Seceders, was located, and whence a route extended, by way of Oakdale, Nashville and Centralia, in the direction of Chicago. Alton offered convenient access to Bond County, where there was a community of anti-slavery people at an early day, or the fugitives could be forwarded northward by way of Jerseyville, Waverly and Jacksonville, about each of which there was a strong anti-slavery sentiment. Quincy, in spite of an intense hostility among the mass of the community to anything savoring of abolitionism, became the theater of great activity on the part of the opponents of the institution, especially after the advent there of Dr. David Nelson and Dr. Richard Eells, both of whom had rendered themselves obnoxious to the people of Missouri by extending aid to fugitives. The former was a practical abolitionist who, having freed his slaves in his native State of Virginia, removed to Missouri and attempted to establish Marion College, a few miles from Palmyra, but was soon driven to Illinois. Locating near Quincy, he founded the "Mission Institute" there, at which he continued to disseminate his anti-slavery views, while educating young men for missionary work. The "Institute" was finally burned by emissaries from Missouri, while three young men who had been connected with it, having been caught in Missouri, were condemned to twelve years' confinement in the penitentiary of that State—partly on the testimony of a negro, although a negro was not then a legal witness in the courts against a white man. Dr. Eells was prosecuted before Stephen A. Douglas (then a Judge of the Circuit Court), and fined for aiding a fugitive to escape, and the judgment against him was finally confirmed by the Supreme Court after his death, in 1852, ten years after the original indictment.

A map in Professor Siebert's book, showing the routes and principal stations of the "Underground Railroad," makes mention of the following places in Illinois, in addition to those already referred to: Carlinville, in Macoupin County; Payson and Mendon, in Adams; Washington, in Tazewell; Metamora, in Woodford; Magnolia, in Putnam; Galesburg, in Knox; Princeton (the home of Owen Lovejoy and the Bryants), in Bureau; and many more. Ottawa appears to have been the meeting point of a number of lines, as well as the home of a strong colony of practical abolitionists. Cairo also became an important transfer station for fugitives arriving by river, after the completion of the Illinois Central Railroad, especially as it offered the speediest way of reaching Chicago, towards which nearly all the lines converged. It was here that the fugitives could be most safely disposed of by placing them upon vessels, which, without stopping at intermediate ports, could soon land them on Canadian soil.

As to methods, these differed according to circumstances, the emergencies of the occasion, or the taste, convenience or resources of the operator. Deacon Levi Morse, of Woodford County, near Metamora, had a route towards Magnolia, Putnam County; and his favorite "car" was a farm wagon in which there was a double bottom. The passengers were snugly placed below, and grain sacks, filled with bran or other light material, were laid over, so that the whole presented the appearance of an ordinary load of grain on its way to market. The same was true as to stations and routes. One, who was an operator, says: "Wherever an abolitionist happened on a fugitive, or the converse, there was a station, for the time, and the route was to the next anti-slavery man to the east or the north. As a general rule, the agent preferred not to know anything beyond the operation of his own immediate section of the road. If he knew nothing about the operations of another, and the other knew nothing of his, they could not be witnesses in court.

We have it on the authority of Judge Harvey B. Hurd, of Chicago, that runaways were usually forwarded from that city to Canada by way of the Lakes, there being several steamers available for that purpose. On one occasion thirteen were put aboard a vessel under the eyes of a United States Marshal and his deputies. The fugitives, secreted in a woodshed, one by one took the places of colored stevedores carrying wood aboard the ship. Possibly the term, "There's a nigger in the woodpile," may have originated in this incident. Thirteen was an "unlucky number" in this instance—for the masters.

Among the notable trials for assisting runaways in violation of the Fugitive Slave Law, in addition to the case of Dr. Eells, already mentioned, were those of Owen Lovejoy of Princeton, and Deacon Cushing of Will County, both of whom were defended by Judge James Collins of Chicago. John Hossack and Dr. Joseph Stout of Ottawa, with some half-dozen of their neighbors and friends, were tried at Ottawa, in 1859, for assisting a fugitive and acquitted on a technicality. A strong array of attorneys, afterwards widely known through the northern part of the State, appeared for the defense, including Isaac N. Arnold, Joseph Knox, B. C. Cook, J. V. Eustace, Edward S. Leland and E. C. Larned. Joseph T. Morse, of Woodford County, was also arrested, taken to Peoria and committed to jail, but acquitted on trial.

Another noteworthy case was that of Dr. Samuel Willard (now of Chicago) and his father, Julius A. Willard, charged with assisting in the escape of a fugitive at Jacksonville, in 1843, when the Doctor was a student in Illinois College. "The National Corporation Reporter," a few years ago, gave an account of this affair, together with a letter from Dr. Willard, in which he states that, after protracted litigation, during which the case was carried to the Supreme Court, it was ended by his pleading guilty before Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, when he was fined one dollar and costs—the latter amounting to twenty dollars. The Doctor frankly adds: "My father, as well as myself, helped many fugitives afterwards." It did not always happen, however, that offenders escaped so easily.

Judge Harvey B. Hurd, already referred to, and an active anti-slavery man in the days of the Fugitive Slave Law, relates the following: Once, when the trial of a fugitive was going on before Justice Kercheval, in a room on the second floor of a two-story frame building on Clark Street in the city of Chicago, the crowd in attendance filled the room, the stairway and the adjoining sidewalk. In some way the prisoner got mixed in with the audience, and passed down over the heads of those on the stairs, where the officers were unable to follow.

In another case, tried before United States Commissioner Geo. W. Meeker, the result was made to hinge upon a point in the indictment to the effect that the fugitive was "copper-colored." The Commissioner, as the story goes, being inclined to favor public sentiment, called for a large copper cent, that he might make comparison. The decision was, that the prisoner was "off color," so to speak, and he was hustled out of the room before the officers could re-arrest him, as they had been instructed to do.

Dr. Samuel Willard, in a review of Professor Siebert's book, published in "The Dial" of Chicago, makes mention of Henry Irving and William Chauncey Carter as among his active allies at Jacksonville, with Rev. Bilious Pond and Deacon Lyman of Farmington (near the present village of Farmingdale in Sangamon County), Luther Ransom of Springfield, Andrew Borders of Randolph County, Joseph Gerrish of Jersey and William T. Allan of Henry, as their coadjutors in other parts of the State. Other active agents or promoters, in the same field, included such names as Dr. Charles V. Dyer, Philo Carpenter, Calvin De Wolf, L. C. P. Freer, Zebina Eastman, James H. Collins, Harvey B. Hurd, J. Young Scammon, Col. J. F. Farnsworth and others of Chicago, whose names have already been mentioned; Rev. Asa Turner, Deacon Ballard, J. K. Van Dorn and Erastus Benton, of Quincy and Adams County; President Rufus Blanchard of Knox College, Galesburg; John Leeper of Bond; the late Prof. J. B. Turner and Elihu Wolcott of Jacksonville; Capt. Parker Morse and his four sons—Joseph T., Levi P., Parker, Jr., and Mark—of Woodford County; Rev. William Sloane of Randolph; William Strawn of La Salle, besides a host who were willing to aid their fellow men in their aspirations to freedom, without advertising their own exploits.

Among the incidents of "Underground Railroad" in Illinois is one which had some importance politically, having for its climax a dramatic scene in Congress, but of which, so far as known, no full account has ever been written. About 1855, Ephraim Lombard, a Mississippi planter, but a New Englander by birth, purchased a large body of prairie land in the northeastern part of Stark County, and, taking up his residence temporarily in the village of Bradford, began its improvement. He had brought with him from Mississippi a negro, gray-haired and bent with age, a slave of probably no great value. "Old Mose," as he was called, soon came to be well known and a favorite in the neighborhood. Lombard boldly stated that he had brought him there as a slave; that, by virtue of the Dred Scott decision (then of recent date), he had a constitutional right to take his slaves wherever he pleased, and that "Old Mose" was just as much his property in Illinois as in Mississippi. It soon became evident to some, that his bringing of the negro to Illinois was an experiment to test the law and the feelings of the Northern people. This being the case, a shrewd play would have been to let him have his way till other slaves should have been brought to stock the new plantation. But this was too slow a process for the abolitionists, to whom the holding of a slave in the free State of Illinois appeared an unbearable outrage. It was feared that he might take the old negro back to Mississippi and fail to bring any others. It was reported, also, that "Old Mose" was ill-treated; that he was given only the coarsest food in a back shed, as if he were a horse or a dog, instead of being permitted to eat at table with the family. The prairie citizen of that time was very particular upon this point of etiquette. The hired man or woman, debarred from the table of his or her employer, would not have remained a day. A quiet consultation with "Old Mose" revealed the fact that he would bail the gift of freedom joyously. Accordingly, one Peter Risedorf, and another equally daring, met him by the light of the stars and, before morning, he was placed in the care of Owen Lovejoy, at Princeton, twenty miles away. From there he was speedily "franked" by the member of Congress to friends in Canada.

There was a great commotion in Bradford over the "stealing" of "Old Mose." Lombard and his friends denounced the act in terms bitter and profane, and threatened vengeance upon the perpetrators. The conductors were known only to a few, and they kept their secret well. Lovejoy's part in the affair, however, soon leaked out. Lombard returned to Mississippi, where he related his experiences to Mr. Singleton, the Representative in Congress from his district. During the next session of Congress, Singleton took occasion, in a speech, to sneer at Lovejoy as a "nigger-stealer," citing the case of "Old Mose." Mr. Lovejoy replied in his usual fervid and dramatic style, making a speech which ensured his election to Congress for life—"Is it desired to call attention to this fact of my assisting fugitive slaves?" he said. "Owen Lovejoy lives at Princeton, Ill., three-quarters of a mile east of the village, and he aids every slave that comes to his door and asks it. Thou invisible Demon of Slavery, dost thou think to cross my humble threshold and forbid me to give bread to the hungry and shelter to the homeless? I bid you defiance, in the name of my God!"

With another incident of an amusing character this article may be closed: Hon. J. Young Scammon, of Chicago, being accused of conniving at the escape of a slave from officers of the law, was asked by the court what he would do if summoned as one of a posse to pursue and capture a fugitive. "I would certainly obey the summons," he replied, "but—I should probably stub my toe and fall down before I reached him."

NOTE.—Those who wish to pursue the subject of the "Underground Railroad" in Illinois further, are referred to the work of Dr. Siebert, already mentioned, and to the various County Histories which have been issued and may be found in the public libraries; also for interesting incidents, to "Reminiscences of Levi Coffin," Johnson's "From Dixie to Canada," Petit's Sketches, "Still, Underground Railroad," and a pamphlet of the same title by James H. Fairchild, ex-President of Oberlin College.

UNDERWOOD, William H., lawyer, legislator and jurist, was born at Schoharie Court House, N. Y., Feb. 21, 1818, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Belleville, Ill., where he began practice in 1840. The following year he was elected State's Attorney, and re-elected in 1843. In 1846 he was chosen a member of the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1848-54, sat as Judge of the Second Circuit. During this period he declined a nomination to Congress, although equivalent to an election. In 1856 he was elected State Senator, and re-elected in 1860. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1870, was again elected to the Senate, retiring to private life in 1872. Died, Sept. 23, 1875.

UNION COUNTY, one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the time of its admission as a State—having been organized, under the Territorial Government, in January, 1818. It is situated in the southern division of the State, bounded on the west by the Mississippi River, and has an area of 400 square miles. The eastern and interior portions are drained by the Cache River and Clear Creek. The western part of the county comprises the broad, rich bottom lands lying along the Mississippi, but is subject to frequent overflow, while the eastern portion is hilly, and most of its area originally heavily timbered. The county is especially rich in minerals. Iron-ore, lead, bituminous coal, chalk, alum and potter's clay are found in considerable abundance. Several lines of railway (the most important being the Illinois Central) either cross or tap the county. The chief occupation is agriculture, although manufacturing is carried on to a limited extent. Fruit is extensively cultivated. Jonesboro is the county-seat, and Cobden and Anna important shipping stations. The latter is the location of the Southern Hospital for the Insane. The population of the county, in 1890, was 21,529. Being next to St. Clair, Randolph and Gallatin, one of the earliest settled counties in the State, many prominent men found their first home, on coming into the State, at Jonesboro, and this region, for a time, exerted a strong influence in public affairs. Pop. (1900), 22,610.

UNION LEAGUE OF AMERICA, a secret political and patriotic order which had its origin early in the late Civil War, for the avowed purpose of sustaining the cause of the Union and counteracting the machinations of the secret organizations designed to promote the success of the Rebellion. The first regular Council of the order was organized at Pekin, Tazewell County, June 25, 1862, consisting of eleven members, as follows: John W. Glasgow, Dr. D. A. Cheever, Hart Montgomery, Maj. Richard N. Cullom (father of Senator Cullom), Alexander Small, Rev. J. W. M. Vernon, George H. Harlow (afterward Secretary of State), Charles Turner, Col. Jonathan Merriam, Henry Pratt and L. F. Garrett. One of the number was a Union refugee from Tennessee, who dictated the first oath from memory, as administered to members of a somewhat similar order which had been organized among the Unionists of his own State. It solemnly pledged the taker, (1) to preserve inviolate the secrets and business of the order; (2) to "support, maintain, protect and defend the civil liberties of the Union of these United States against all enemies, either domestic or foreign, at all times and under all circumstances," even "if necessary, to the sacrifice of life"; (3) to aid in electing only true Union men to offices of trust in the town, county, State and General Government; (4) to assist, protect and defend any member of the order who might be in peril from his connection with the order, and (5) to obey all laws, rules or regulations of any Council to which the taker of the oath might be attached. The oath was taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States, the taker pledging his sacred honor to its fulfillment. A special reason for the organization existed in the activity, about this time, of the "Knights of the Golden Circle," a disloyal organization which had been introduced from the South, and which afterwards took the name, in the North, of "American Knights" and "Sons of Liberty." (See Secret Treasonable Societies.) Three months later, the organization had extended to a number of other counties of the State and, on the 25th of September following, the first State Council met at Bloomington—twelve counties being represented—and a State organization was effected. At this meeting the following general officers were chosen: Grand President—Judge Mark Bangs, of Marshall County (now of Chicago); Grand Vice-President—Prof. Daniel Wilkin, of McLean; Grand Secretary—George H. Harlow, of Tazewell; Grand Treasurer—H. S. Austin, of Peoria, Grand Marshal—J. R. Gorin, of Macon; Grand Herald—A. Gould, of Henry; Grand Sentinel—John E. Rosette, of Sangamon. An Executive Committee was also appointed, consisting of Joseph Medill of "The Chicago Tribune"; Dr. A. J. McFarland, of Morgan County; J. K. Warren, of Macon; Rev. J. C. Rybolt, of La Salle; the President, Judge Bangs; Enoch Emery, of Peoria; and John E. Rosette. Under the direction of this Committee, with Mr. Medill as its Chairman, the constitution and by-laws were thoroughly revised and a new ritual adopted, which materially changed the phraseology and removed some of the crudities of the original obligation, as well as increased the beauty and impressiveness of the initiatory ceremonies. New signs, grips and pass-words were also adopted, which were finally accepted by the various organizations of the order throughout the Union, which, by this time, included many soldiers in the army, as well as civilians. The second Grand (or State) Council was held at Springfield, January 14, 1863, with only seven counties represented. The limited representation was discouraging, but the members took heart from the inspiring words of Governor Yates, addressed to a committee of the order who waited upon him. At a special session of the Executive Committee, held at Peoria, six days later, a vigorous campaign was mapped out, under which agents were sent into nearly every county in the State. In October, 1862, the strength of the order in Illinois was estimated at three to five thousand; a few months later, the number of enrolled members had increased to 50,000—so rapid had been the growth of the order. On March 25, 1863, a Grand Council met in Chicago—404 Councils in Illinois being represented, with a number from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. At this meeting a Committee was appointed to prepare a plan of organization for a National Grand Council, which was carried out at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 20th of May following—the constitution, ritual and signs of the Illinois organization being adopted with slight modifications. The revised obligation—taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States—bound members of the League to “support, protect and defend the Government of the United States and the flag thereof, against all enemies, foreign and domestic,” and to “bear true faith and allegiance to the same”; to “defend the State against invasion or insurrection”; to support only “true and reliable men” for offices of trust and profit; to protect and defend worthy members, and to preserve inviolate the secrets of the order. The address to new members was a model of impressiveness and a powerful appeal to their patriotism. The organization extended rapidly, not only throughout the Northwest, but in the South also, especially in the army. In 1864 the number of Councils in Illinois was estimated at 1,300, with a membership of 175,000; and it is estimated that the total membership, throughout the Union, was 2,000,000. The influence of the silent, but zealous and effective, operations of the organization, was shown, not only in the stimulus given to enlistments and support of the war policy of the Government, but in the raising of supplies for the sick and wounded soldiers in the field. Within a few weeks before the fall of Vicksburg, over $25,000 in cash, besides large quantities of stores, were sent to Col. John Williams (then in charge of the Sanitary Bureau at Springfield), as the direct result of appeals made through circulars sent out by the officers of the “League.” Large contributions of money and supplies also reached the sick and wounded in hospital through the medium of the Sanitary Commission in Chicago. Zealous efforts were made by the opposition to get at the secrets of the order, and, in one case, a complete copy of the ritual was published by one of their organs; but the effect was so far the reverse of what was anticipated, that this line of attack was not continued. During the stormy session of the Legislature in 1863, the League is said to have rendered effective service in protecting Governor Yates from threatened assassination. It continued its silent but effective operations until the complete overthrow of the rebellion, when it ceased to exist as a political organization.

UNITED STATES SENATORS. The following is a list of United States senators from Illinois, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union until 1899, with the date and duration of the term of each: Ninian Edwards, 1818-24; Jesse B. Thomas, Sr., 1818-29; John McLean, 1824-25 and 1829-30; Elias Kent Kane, 1825-35; David Jewett Baker, Nov. 12 to Dec. 11, 1830; John M. Robinson, 1830-41; William L. D. Ewing, 1835-37; Richard M. Young, 1837-43; Samuel McRoberts, 1841-43; Sidney Breese, 1843-49; James Semple, 1843-47; Stephen A. Douglas, 1847-61; James Shields, 1849-55; Lyman Trumbull, 1855-73; Orville H. Browning, 1861-63; William A. Richardson, 1863-65; Richard Yates, 1865-71; John A. Logan, 1871-77 and 1879-86; Richard J. Oglesby, 1873-79; David Davis, 1877-83; Shelby M. Cullom, first elected in 1883, and re-elected in '89 and '95, his third term expiring in 1901; Charles B. Farwell, 1887-91; John McAuley Palmer, 1891-97; William E. Mason, elected in 1897, for the term expiring, March 4, 1903.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The New). One of the leading educational institutions of the country, located at Chicago. It is the outgrowth of an attempt, put forth by the American Educational Society (organized at Washington in 1888), to supply the place which the original institution of the same name had been designed to fill. (See University of Chicago—The Old.) The following year, Mr. John D. Rockefeller of New York tendered a contribution of $600,000 toward the endowment of the enterprise, conditioned upon securing additional pledges to the amount of $400,000 by June 1, 1890. The offer was accepted, and the sum promptly raised. In addition, a site, covering four blocks of land in the city of Chicago, was secured—two and one-half blocks being acquired by purchase for $282,500, and one and one-half (valued at $125,000) donated by Mr. Marshall Field. A charter was secured and an organization effected, Sept. 10, 1890. The Presidency of the institution was tendered to, and accepted by, Dr. William R. Harper. Since that time the University has been the recipient of other generous benefactions by Mr. Rockefeller and others, until the aggregate donations (1898) exceed $10,000,000. Of this amount over one-half has been contributed by Mr. Rockefeller, while he has pledged himself to make additional contributions of $2,000,000, conditioned upon the raising of a like sum, from other donors, by Jan. 1, 1900. The buildings erected on the campus, prior to 1896, include a chemical laboratory costing $182,000; a lecture hall, $150,000; a physical laboratory $150,000; a museum, $100,000; an academy dormitory, $30,000; three dormitories for women, $150,000; two dormitories for men, $100,000, to which several important additions were made during 1896 and 97. The faculty embraces over 150 instructors, selected with reference to their fitness for their respective departments from among the most eminent scholars in America and Europe. Women are admitted as students and graduated upon an equality with men. The work of practical instruction began in October, 1892, with 589 registered students, coming from nearly every Northern State, and including 250 graduates from other institutions, to which accessions were made, during the year, raising the aggregate to over 900. The second year the number exceeded 1,100; the third, it rose to 1,750, and the fourth (1895-96), to some 2,000, including representatives from every State of the Union, besides many from foreign countries. Special features of the institution include the admission of graduates from other institutions to a post-graduate course, and the University Extension Division, which is conducted largely by means of lecture courses, in other cities, or through lecture centers in the vicinity of the University, non-resident students having the privilege of written examinations. The various libraries embrace over 300,000 volumes, of which nearly 60,000 belong to what are called the "Departmental Libraries," besides a large and valuable collection of maps and pamphlets.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The Old), an educational institution at Chicago, under the care of the Baptist denomination, for some years known as the Douglas University. Senator Stephen A. Douglas offered, in 1854, to donate ten acres of land, in what was then near the southern border of the city of Chicago, as a site for an institution of learning, provided buildings costing $100,000, be erected thereon within a stipulated time. The corner-stone of the main building was laid, July 4, 1857, but the financial panic of that year prevented its completion, and Mr. Douglas extended the time, and finally deeded the land to the trustees without reserve. For eighteen years the institution led a precarious existence, struggling under a heavy debt. By 1885, mortgages to the amount of $320,000 having accumulated, the trustees abandoned further effort, and acquiesced in the sale of the property under foreclosure proceedings. The original plan of the institution contemplated preparatory and collegiate departments, together with a college of law and a theological school.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS, the leading educational institution under control of the State, located at Urbana and adjoining the city of Champaign. The Legislature at the session of 1863 accepted a grant of 480,000 acres of land under Act of Congress, approved July 2, 1862, making an appropriation of public lands to States—30,000 acres for each Senator and each Representative in Congress—establishing colleges for teaching agriculture and the mechanic arts, though not to the exclusion of classical and scientific studies. Land-scrip under this grant was issued and placed in the hands of Governor Yates, and a Board of Trustees appointed under the State law was organized in March, 1867, the institution being located the same year. Departments and courses of study were established, and Dr. John M. Gregory, of Michigan, was chosen Regent (President).—The landscrip issued to Illinois was sold at an early day for what it would bring in open market, except 25,000 acres, which was located in Nebraska and Minnesota. This has recently been sold, realizing a larger sum than was received for all the scrip otherwise disposed of. The entire sum thus secured for permanent endowment aggregates $613,026. The University revenues were further increased by donations from Congress to each institution organized under the Act of 1862, of $15,000 per annum for the maintenance of an Agricultural Experiment Station, and, in 1890, of a similar amount for instruction—the latter to be increased $1,000 annually until it should reach $25,000.—A mechanical building was erected in 1871, and this is claimed to have been the first of its kind in America intended for strictly educational purposes. What was called "the main building" was formally opened in December, 1873. Other buildings embrace a "Science Hall," opened in 1892; a new "Engineering Hall," 1894; a fine Library Building, 1897. Eleven other principal structures and a number of smaller ones have been erected as conditions required. The value of property aggregates nearly $2,500,000, and appropriations from the State, for all purposes, previous to 1904, foot up $5,123,517.90.—Since 1871 the institution has been open to women. The courses of study embrace agriculture, chemistry, polytechnics, military tactics, natural and general sciences, languages and literature, economics, household science, trade and commerce. The Graduate School dates from 1891. In 1896 the Chicago College of Pharmacy was connected with the University: a College of Law and a Library School were opened in 1897, and the same year the Chicago College of Physicians and Sur-geous was affiliated as the College of Medicine—a School of Dentistry being added to the latter in 1901. In 1885 the State Laboratory of Natural History was transferred from Normal, Ill., and an Agricultural Experiment Station established in 1888, from which bulletins are sent to farmers throughout the State who may desire them.—The first name of the Institution was "Illinois Industrial University," but, in 1885, this was changed to "University of Illinois." In 1887 the Trustees (of whom there are nine) were made elective by popular vote—three being elected every two years, each holding office six years. Dr. Gregory, having resigned the office of Regent in 1880, was succeeded by Dr. Selim H. Peabody, who had been Professor of Mechanical and Civil Engineering. Dr. Peabody resigned in 1891. The duties of Regent were then discharged by Prof. Thomas J. Burrill until August, 1894, when Dr. Andrew Sloan Draper, former State Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of New York, was installed as President, serving until 1904.—The corps of instruction (1904) includes over 100 Professors, 60 Associate and Assistant Professors and 200 Instructors and Assistants, besides special lecturers, demonstrators and clerks. The number of students has increased rapidly in recent years, as shown by the following totals for successive years from 1890-91 to 1903-04, inclusive: 519; 583; 714; 743; 810; 852; 1,075; 1,582; 1,824; 2,234; 2,505; 2,932; 3,289; 3,589. Of the last number, 2,271 were men and 718 women. During 1903-04 there were in all departments at Urbana, 2,547 students (256 being in the Preparatory Academy); and in the three Professional Departments in Chicago, 1,042, of whom 694 were in the College of Medicine, 185 in the School of Pharmacy, and 163 in the School of Dentistry. The University Library contains 63,700 volumes and 14,500 pamphlets, not including 5,350 volumes and 15,850 pamphlets in the State Laboratory of Natural History.—The University occupies a conspicuous and attractive site, embracing 220 acres adjacent to the line between Urbana and Champaign, and near the residence portion of the two cities. The athletic field of 11 acres, on which stand the gymnasium and armory, is enclosed with an ornamental iron fence. The campus, otherwise, is an open and beautiful park with fine landscape effects.

UNORGANIZED COUNTIES. In addition to the 102 counties into which Illinois is divided, acts were passed by the General Assembly, at different times, providing for the organization of a number of others, a few of which were subsequently organized under different names, but the majority of which were never organized at all—the proposition for such organization being rejected by vote of the people within the proposed boundaries, or allowed to lapse by non-action. These unorganized counties, with the date of the several acts authorizing them, and the territory which they were intended to include, were as follows: Allen County (1841)—comprising portions of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties; Audobon (Audubon) County (1843)—from portions of Montgomery, Fayette and Shelby; Benton County (1843)—from Morgan, Greene and Macoupin; Coffee County (1837)—with substantially the same territory now comprised within the boundaries of Stark County, authorized two years later; Daue County (1839)—name changed to Christian in 1840; Harrison County (1855)—from McLean, Champaign and Vermilion, comprising territory since partially incorporated in Ford County; Holmes County (1857)—from Champaign and Vermilion; Marquette County (1843), changed (1847) to Highland—comprising the northern portion of Adams, (this act was accepted, with Columbus as the county seat, but organization finally vacated); Michigan County (1837)—from a part of Cook; Milton County (1843)—from the south part of Vermilion; Okaw County (1841)—comprising substantially the same territory as Moultrie, organized under act of 1843; Oregon County (1851)—from parts of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties, and covering substantially the same territory as proposed to be incorporated in Allen County ten years earlier. The last act of this character was passed in 1867, when an attempt was made to organize Lincoln County out of parts of Champaign and Vermilion, but which failed for want of an affirmative vote.

UPPER ALTON, a city of Madison County, situated on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, about 1½ miles northeast of Alton—laid out in 1816. It has several churches, and is the seat of Shurtleff College and the Western Military Academy, the former founded about 1831, and controlled by the Baptist denomination. Beds of excellent clay are found in the vicinity and utilized in pottery manufacture. Pop. (1890), 1,803; (1900), 2,373.

UPTON, George Putnam, journalist, was born at Roxbury, Mass., Oct. 25, 1834; graduated from Brown University in 1854, removed to Chicago in 1855, and began newspaper work on "The Native American," the following year taking the place of city editor of "The Evening Journal." In 1862, Mr. Upton became musical critic on "The Chicago Tribune," serving for a time also as its war correspondent in the field, later (about 1881) taking a place on the general editorial staff, which he still retains. He is regarded as an authority on musical and dramatic topics. Mr. Upton is also a stockholder in, and, for several years, has been Vice-President of the "Tribune" Company. Besides numerous contributions to magazines, his works include: "Letters of Peregrine Pickle" (1869); "Memories, a Story of German Love," translated from the German of Max Muller (1879); "Woman in Music" (1880); "Lives of German Composers" (3 vols.—1883-84); besides four volumes of standard operas, oratorios, cantatas, and symphonies (1885-88).

URBANA, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Champaign County, on the "Big Four," the Illinois Central and the Wabash Railways; 130 miles south of Chicago and 31 miles west of Danville; in agricultural and coal-mining region. The mechanical industries include extensive railroad shops, manufacture of brick, suspenders and lawn-mowers. The Cunningham Deaconesses' Home and Orphanage is located here. The city has water-works, gas and electric light plants, electric car-lines (local and interurban), superior schools, nine churches, three banks and three newspapers. Urbana is the seat of the University of Illinois. Pop. (1890), 3,511; (1900), 5,728.

USREY, William J., editor and soldier, was born at Washington (near Natchez), Miss., May 16, 1827; was educated at Natchez, and, before reaching manhood, came to Macon County, Ill., where he engaged in teaching until 1846, when he enlisted as a private in Company C, Fourth Illinois Volunteers, for the Mexican War. In 1855, he joined with a Mr. Wingate in the establishment, at Decatur, of "The Illinois State Chronicle," of which he soon after took sole charge, conducting the paper until 1861, when he enlisted in the Thirty-fifth Illinois Volunteers and was appointed Adjutant. Although born and educated in a slave State, Mr. Usrey was an earnest opponent of slavery, as proved by the attitude of his paper in opposition to the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. He was one of the most zealous endorsers of the proposition for a conference of the Anti-Nebraska editors of the State of Illinois, to agree upon a line of policy in opposition to the further extension of slavery, and, when that body met at Decatur, on Feb. 22, 1856, he served as its Secretary, thus taking a prominent part in the initial steps which resulted in the organization of the Republican party in Illinois. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) After returning from the war he resumed his place as editor of "The Chronicle," but finally retired from newspaper work in 1871. He was twice Postmaster of the city of Decatur, first previous to 1850, and again under the administration of President Grant; served also as a member of the City Council and was a member of the local Post of the G. A. R., and Secretary of the Macon County Association of Mexican War Veterans. Died, at Decatur, Jan. 20, 1894.

UTICA, (also called North Utica), a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 10 miles west of Ottawa, situated on the Illinois River opposite "Starved Rock," also believed to stand on the site of the Kaskaskia village found by the French Explorer, La Salle, when he first visited Illinois. "Utica cement" is produced here; it also has several factories or mills, besides banks and a weekly paper. Population (1880), 767; (1890), 1,094; (1900), 1,150.

VAN ARNAM, John, lawyer and soldier, was born at Plattsburg, N. Y., March 3, 1820. Having lost his father at five years of age, he went to live with a farmer, but ran away in his boyhood; later, began teaching, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in New York City, beginning practice at Marshall, Mich. In 1858 he removed to Chicago, and, as a member of the firm of Walker, Van Arnam & Dexter, became prominent as a criminal lawyer and railroad attorney, being for a time Solicitor of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. In 1862 he assisted in organizing the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was commissioned its Colonel, but was compelled to resign on account of illness. After spending some time in California, he resumed practice in Chicago in 1865. His later years were spent in California, dying at San Diego, in that State, April 6, 1890.

VANDALIA, the principal city and county-seat of Fayette County. It is situated on the Kaskaskia River, 30 miles north of Centralia, 62 miles south by west of Decatur, and 68 miles east-northeast of St. Louis. It is an intersecting point for the Illinois Central and the St. Louis, Vandalia and Terre Haute Railroads. It was the capital of the State from 1820 to 1839, the seat of government being removed to Springfield, the latter year, in accordance with act of the General Assembly passed at the session of 1837. It contains a court house (old State Capitol building), six churches, two banks, three weekly papers, a graded school, flour, saw and paper mills, foundry, stove and heading mill, carriage and wagon and brick works. Pop. (1890), 2,144; (1900), 2,665.

VANDEVEER, Horatio M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Washington County, Ind., March 1, 1816; came with his family to Illinois at an early age, settling on Clear Creek, now in Christian County; taught school and studied law, using books borrowed from the late Hon. John T. Stuart of Springfield; was elected first County Recorder of Christian County and, soon after, appointed Circuit Clerk, filling both offices three years. He also held the office of County Judge from 1848 to 1857; was twice chosen Representative in the General Assembly (1842 and 1850) and once to the State Senate (1862); in 1846, enlisted and was chosen Captain of a company for the Mexican War, but, having been rejected on account of the quota being full, was appointed Assistant-Quartermaster, in this capacity serving on the staff of General Taylor at the battle of Buena Vista. Among other offices held by Mr. Vandever, were those of Postmaster of Taylorville, Master in Chancery, Presidential Elector (1848), Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and Judge of the Circuit Court (1870-79). In 1868 Judge Vandever established the private banking firm of H. M. Vandever & Co., at Taylorville, which, in conjunction with his sons, he continued successfully during the remainder of his life. Died, March 12, 1894.

VAN HORNE, William C., Railway Manager and President, was born in Will County, Ill., February, 1843; began his career as a telegraph operator on the Illinois Central Railroad in 1856, was attached to the Michigan Central and Chicago & Alton Railroads (1858-72), later being General Manager or General Superintendent of various other lines (1872-79). He next served as General Superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, but soon after became General Manager of the Canadian Pacific, which he assisted to construct to the Pacific Coast; was elected Vice-President of the line in 1884, and its President in 1888. His services have been recognized by conferring upon him the order of knighthood by the British Government.

VASSEUR, Noel C., pioneer Indian-trader, was born of French parentage in Canada, Dec. 25, 1799; at the age of 17 made a trip with a trading party to the West, crossing Wisconsin by way of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, the route pursued by Joliet and Marquette in 1673; later, was associated with Gurdon S. Hubbard in the service of the American Fur Company, in 1820 visiting the region now embraced in Iroquois County, where he and Hubbard subsequently established a trading post among the Pottawatomie Indians, believed to have been the site of the present town of Iroquois. The way of reaching their station from Chicago was by the Chicago and Des Plaines Rivers to the Kankakee, and ascending the latter and the Iroquois. Here Vasseur remained in trade until the removal of the Indians west of the Mississippi, in which he served as agent of the Government. While in the Iroquois region he married Watseka, a somewhat famous Pottawatomie woman, for whom the town of Watseka was named, and who had previously been the Indian wife of a fellow-trader. His later years were spent at Bourbonnais Grove, in Kankakee County, where he died, Dec. 12, 1879.

VENICE, a city of Madison County, on the Mississippi River opposite St. Louis and 2 miles north of East St. Louis; is touched by six trunk lines of railroad, and at the eastern approach to the new "Merchants' Bridge," with its round-house, has two ferries to St. Louis, street car line, electric lights, water-works, some manufactures and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 932; (1900), 2,450.

VENICE & CARONDELET RAILROAD. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

VERMILION COUNTY, an eastern county, bordering on the Indiana State line, and drained by the Vermilion and Little Vermilion Rivers, from which it takes its name. It was originally organized in 1826, when it extended north to Lake Michigan. Its present area is 926 square miles. The discovery of salt springs, in 1819, aided in attracting immigration to this region, but the manufacture of salt was abandoned many years ago. Early settlers were Seymour Treat, James Butler, Henry Johnston, Harvey Lidington, Gurdon S. Hubbard and Daniel W. Beckwith. James Butler and Achilles Morgan were the first County Commissioners. Many interesting fossil remains have been found, among them the skeleton of a mastodon (1868). Fire clay is found in large quantities, and two coal seams cross the county. The surface is level and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief agricultural product, although oats, wheat, rye, and potatoes are extensively cultivated. Stock-raising and wool-growing are important industries. There are also several manufactories, chiefly at Danville, which is the county-seat. Coal mining is carried on extensively, especially in the vicinity of Danville. Population (1880), 41,588; (1890), 49,905; (1900), 65,635.

VERMILION RIVER, a tributary of the Illinois; rises in Ford and the northern part of McLean County, and, running northwestward through Livingston and the southern part of La Salle Counties, enters the Illinois River nearly opposite the city of La Salle; has a length of about 80 miles.

VERMILION RIVER, an affluent of the Wabash, formed by the union of the North, Middle and South Forks, which rise in Illinois, and come together near Danville in this State. It flows southeastward, and enters the Wabash in Vermilion County, Ind. The main stream is about 28 miles long. The South Fork, however, which rises in Champaign County and runs eastward, has a length of nearly 75 miles. The Little Vermilion River enters the Wabash about 7 or 8 miles below the Vermilion, which is sometimes called the Big Vermilion, by way of distinction.

VERMONT, a village in Fulton County, at junction of Galesburg and St. Louis Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 24 miles north of Beardstown; has a carriage manufactory, flour and saw-mills, brick and tile works, electric light plant, besides two banks, four churches, two graded schools, and one weekly newspaper. An artesian well has been sunk here to the depth of 2 600 feet. Pop. (1900), 1,195.

VERSAILLES, a town of Brown County, on the Wabash Railway, 48 miles east of Quincy; is in a timber and agricultural district; has a bank and weekly newspaper. Population (1900), 524.

VIENNA, the county-seat of Johnson County, situated on the Cairo and Vincennes branch of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, 36 miles north-northwest of Cairo. It has a court house, several churches, a graded school, banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 494; (1890), 828; (1900), 1,217.

VIGO, Francois, pioneer and early Indian-trader, was born at Mondovi, Sardinia (Western Italy), in 1747, served as a private soldier, first at Havana and afterwards at New Orleans. When he left the Spanish army he came to St. Louis, then the military headquarters of Spain for Upper Louisiana, where he became a partner of Commandant de Leba, and was extensively engaged in the fur-trade among the Indians on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. On the occupation of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark in 1778, he rendered valuable aid to the Americans, turning out supplies to feed Clark's destitute soldiers, and accepting Virginia Continental money, at par, in payment, incurring liabilities in excess of $20,000. This, followed by the confiscation policy of the British Colonel Hamilton, at Vincennes, where Vigo had considerable property, reduced him to extreme penury. H. W. Beckwith says that, towards the close of his life, he lived on his little homestead near Vincennes, in great poverty but cheerful to the last. He was never recompensed during his life for his sacrifices in behalf of the American cause, though a tardy restitution was attempted, after his death, by the United States Government, for the benefit of his heirs. He died, at a ripe old age, at Vincennes, Ind., March 22, 1835.

VILLA RIDGE, a village of Pulaski County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 10 miles north of Cairo. Population, 500.

VINCENNES, Jean Baptiste Bissot, a Canadian explorer, born at Quebec, January, 1688, of aristocratic and wealthy ancestry. He was closely connected with Louis Joliet — probably his brother-in-law, although some historians say that he was the latter's nephew. He entered the Canadian army as ensign in 1701, and had a long and varied experience as an Indian fighter. About 1725 he took up his residence on what is now the site of the present city of Vincennes, Ind., which is named in his honor. Here he erected an earth fort and established a trading-post. In 1726, under orders, he co-operated with D'Artaguette (then the French Governor of Illinois) in an expedition against the Chickasaws. The expedition resulted disastrously. Vincennes and D'Artaguette were captured and burned at the stake, together with Father Senat (a Jesuit priest) and others of the command. (See also D'Artaguette; French Governors of Illinois.)

VIRDEN, a city of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 21 miles south by west from Springfield, and 31 miles east-southeast of Jacksonville. It has five churches, two banks, two newspapers, telephone service, electric lights, grain elevators, machine shop, and extensive coal mines. Pop. (1900), 2,280; (school census 1903), 3,651.

VIRGINIA, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Cass County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 15 miles north of Jacksonville, and 33 miles west-northwest of Springfield. It lies in the heart of a rich agricultural region. There is a flouring mill here, besides manufactories of wagons and cigars. The city has two National and one State bank, five churches, a high school, and two weekly papers. Pop (1890), 1,602; (1900), 1,600.

VOCKE, William, lawyer, was born at Minden, Westphalia (Germany), in 1839, the son of a Government Secretary in the Prussian service. Having lost his father at an early age, he emigrated to America in 1856, and, after a short stay in New York, came to Chicago, where he found employment as a paper-carrier for "The Staats-Zeitung," meanwhile giving his attention to the study of law. Later, he became associated with a real-estate firm; on the commencement of the Civil War, enlisted as a private in a three-months' regiment, and, finally, in the Twenty-fourth Illinois (the first Hecker regiment), in which he rose to the rank of Captain. Returning from the army, he was employed as city editor of "The Staats-Zeitung," but, in 1865, became Clerk of the Chicago Police Court, serving until 1869. Meanwhile he had been admitted to the bar, and, on retirement from office, began practice, but, in 1870, was elected Representative in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, in which he bore a leading part in framing "the burnt record act" made necessary by the fire of 1871. He has since been engaged in the practice of his profession, having been, for a number of years, attorney for the German Consulate at Chicago, also serving, for several years, on the Chicago Board of Education. Mr. Vocke is a man of high literary tastes, as shown by his publication, in 1869, of a volume of poems translated from the German, which has been highly commended, besides a legal work on "The Administration of Justice in the United States, and a Synopsis of the Mode of Procedure in our Federal and State Courts and All Federal and State Laws relating to Subjects of Interest to Aliens," which has been published in the German Language, and is highly valued by German lawyers and business men. Mr. Vocke was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1872 at Philadelphia, which nominated General Grant for the Presidency a second time.

VOLK, Leonard Wells, a distinguished Illinois sculptor, born at Wellstown (afterwards Wells), N. Y., Nov. 7, 1828. Later, his father, who was a marble cutter, removed to Pittsfield, Mass., and, at the age of 16, Leonard began work in his shop. In 1848 he came west and began modeling in clay and drawing at St. Louis, being only self-taught. He married a cousin of Stephen A. Douglas, and the latter, in 1855, aided him in the prosecution of his art studies in Italy. Two years afterward he settled in Chicago, where he modeled the first portrait bust ever made in the city, having for his subject his first patron—the "Little Giant." The next year (1858) he made a life-size marble statue of Douglas. In 1860 he made a portrait bust of Abraham Lincoln, which passed into the possession of the Chicago Historical Society and was destroyed in the great fire of 1871. In 1868-69, and again in 1871-72, he revisited Italy for purposes of study. In 1867 he was elected academician of the Chicago Academy, and was its President for eight years. He was genial, companionable and charitable, and always ready to assist his younger and less fortunate professional brethren. His best known works are the Douglas Monument, in Chicago, several soldiers' monuments in different parts of the country, the statuary for the Henry Keep mausoleum at Watertown, N. Y., life-size statues of Lincoln and Douglas, in the State House at Springfield, and numerous portrait busts of men eminent in political, ecclesiastical and commercial life. Died, at Osceola, Wis., August 18, 1895.

VOSS, Arno, journalist, lawyer and soldier, born in Prussia, April 16, 1821; emigrated to the United States and was admitted to the bar in Chicago, in 1848, the same year becoming editor of "The Staats-Zeitung"; was elected City Attorney in 1852, and again in 1853; in 1861 became Major of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry, but afterwards assisted in organizing the Twelfth Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Colonel, still later serving with his command in Virginia. He was at Harper's Ferry at the time of the capture of that place in September, 1862, but succeeded in cutting his way, with his command, through the rebel lines, escaping into Pennsylvania. Compelled by ill-health to leave the service in 1863, he retired to a farm in Will County, but, in 1869, returned to Chicago, where he served as Master in Chancery and was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly in 1876, but declined a re-election in 1878. Died, in Chicago, March 23, 1888.

WABASH, CHESTER & WESTERN RAILROAD, a railway running from Chester to Mount Vernon, Ill., 63.33 miles, with a branch extending from Chester to Menard. 1.5 miles; total mileage, 64.83. It is of standard gauge, and almost entirely laid with 60-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) It was organized, Feb. 29, 1878, as successor to the Iron Mountain, Chester & Eastern Railroad. During the fiscal year 1893-94 the Company purchased the Tamaroa & Mount Vernon Railroad, extending from Mount Vernon to Tamara, 22.5 miles. Capital stock (1898), $1,250,000; bonded indebtedness, $690,000; total capitalization, $2,028,573.

WABASH COUNTY, situated in the southeast corner of the State; area 220 square miles. The county was carved out from Edwards in 1824, and the first court house built at Centerville, in May, 1826. Later, Mount Carmel was made the county-seat. (See Mount Carmel.) The Wabash River drains the county on the east; other streams are the Bon Pas, Coffee and Crawfish Creeks. The surface is undulating with a fair growth of timber. The chief industries are the raising of live-stock and the cultivation of cereals. The wool-crop is likewise valuable. The county is crossed by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Cairo and Vincennes Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads. Population (1880), 4,945; (1890), 11,866; (1900), 12,583.

WABASH RAILROAD, an extensive railroad system connecting the cities of Detroit and Toledo, on the east, with Kansas City and Council Bluffs, on the west, with branches to Chicago, St. Louis, Quincy and Altamont, Ill., and to Keokuk and Des Moines, Iowa. The total mileage (1898) is 1,874.96 miles, of which 677.4 miles are in Illinois—all of the latter being the property of the company, besides 176.7 miles of yard-tracks, sidings and spurs. The company has trackage, privileges over the Toledo, Peoria & Western (6.5 miles) between Elvaston and Keokuk bridge, and over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (21.8 miles) between Camp Point and Quincy.—(HISTORY.) A considerable portion of this road in Illinois is constructed on the line upon which the Northern Cross Railroad was projected, in the "internal improvement" scheme adopted in 1837, and embraces the only section of road completed under that scheme—that between the Illinois River and Springfield. (1) The construction of this section was begun by the State, May 11, 1837, the first rail laid, May 9, 1838, the road completed to Jacksonville, Jan. 1, 1840, and to Springfield, May 13, 1842. It was operated for a time by "mule power," but the income was insufficient to keep the line in repair and it was finally abandoned. In 1847 the line was sold for $21,100 to N. H. Ridgely and Thomas Mather of Springfield, and by them transferred to New York capitalists, who organized the Sangamon & Morgan Railroad Company, reconstructed the road from Springfield to Naples and opened it for business in 1849. (2) In 1853 two corporations were organized in Ohio and Indiana, respectively, under the name of the Toledo & Illinois Railroad and the Lake Erie, Wabash & St. Louis Railroad, which were consolidated as the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroad, June 25, 1856. In 1858 these lines were sold separately under foreclosure, and finally reorganized, under a special charter granted by the Illinois Legislature, under the name of the Great Western Railroad Company. (3) The Quincy & Toledo Railroad, extending from Camp Point to the Illinois River opposite Meredosia, was constructed in 1858-59, and that, with the Illinois & Southern Iowa (from Clayton to Keokuk), was united, July 1, 1865, with the eastern divisions extending to Toledo, the new organization taking the name of the main line, (Toledo, Wabash & Western). (4) The Hannibal & Naples Division (49.6 miles), from Bluffs to Hannibal, Mo., was chartered in 1863, opened for business in 1870 and leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western. The latter defaulted on its interest in 1875, was placed in the hands of a receiver and, in 1877, was turned over to a new company under the name of the Wabash Railway Company. (5) In 1868 the company, as it then existed, promoted and secured the construction, and afterwards acquired the ownership, of a line extending from Decatur to East St. Louis (110.5 miles) under the name of the Decatur & East St. Louis Railroad. (6) The Eel River Railroad, from Butler to Logansport, Ind., was acquired in 1877, and afterwards extended to Detroit under the name of the Detroit, Butler & St. Louis Railroad, completing the connection from Logansport to Detroit.—In November, 1879, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company was organized, took the property and consolidated it with certain lines west of the Mississippi, of which the chief was the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern. A line had been projected from Decatur to Chicago as early as 1870, but, not having been constructed in 1881, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific purchased what was known as the Chicago & Paducah Railroad, uniting with the main line at Bement, and (by way of the Decatur and St. Louis Division) giving a direct line between Chicago and St. Louis. At this time the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific was operating the following additional leased lines: Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur (67.2 miles); Hannibal & Central Missouri (70.2 miles); Lafayette, Muncie & Bloomington (36.7 miles), and the Lafayette Bloomington & Muncie (80 miles). A connection between Chicago on the west and Toledo and Detroit on the east was established over the Grand Trunk road in 1882, but, in 1890, the company constructed a line from Montpelier, Ohio, to Clark, Ind. (149.7 miles), thence by track lease to Chicago (17.5 miles), giving an independent line between Chicago and Detroit by what is known to investors as the Detroit & Chicago Division.

The total mileage of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific system, in 1884, amounted to over 3,600 miles; but, in May of that year, default having been made in the payment of interest, the work of disintegration began. The main line east of the Mississippi and that on the west were separated, the latter taking the name of the "Wabash Western." The Eastern Division was placed in the hands of a receiver, so remaining until May, 1889, when the two divisions, having been bought in by a purchasing committee, were consolidated under the present name. The total earnings and income of the road in Illinois, for the fiscal year 1898, were $4,402,621, and the expenses $4,836,110. The total capital invested (1898) was $139,889,643, including capital stock of $52,000,000 and bonds to the amount of $81,534,000.

WABASH RIVER, rises in northwestern Ohio, passes into Indiana, and runs northwest to Huntington. It then flows nearly due west to Logansport, thence southwest to Covington, finally turning southward to Terre Haute, a few miles below which it strikes the western boundary of Indiana. It forms the boundary between Illinois and Indiana (taking into account its numerous windings) for some 200 miles. Below Vincennes it runs in a south-southwesterly direction, and enters the Ohio at the south-west extremity of Indiana, near latitude 37° 49' north. Its length is estimated at 557 miles.

WAIT, William Smith, pioneer, and original suggestor of the Illinois Central Railroad, was born in Portland, Maine, March 5, 1789, and educated in the public schools of his native place. In his youth he entered a book-publishing house in which his father was a partner, and was for a time associated with the publication of a weekly paper. Later the business was conducted at Boston, and extended over the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States, the subject of this sketch making extensive tours in the interest of the firm. In 1817 he made a tour to the West, reaching St. Louis, and, early in the following year, visited Bond County, Ill., where he made his first entry of land from the Government. Returning to Boston a few months later, he continued in the service of the publishing firm until 1820, when he again came to Illinois, and, in 1821, began farming in Ripley Township, Bond County. Returning East in 1824, he spent the next ten years in the employment of the publishing firm, with occasional visits to Illinois. In 1835 he located permanently near Greenville, Bond County, and engaged extensively in farming and fruit-raising, planting one of the largest apple orchards in the State at that early day. In 1845 he presided as chairman over the National Industrial Convention in New York, and, in 1848, was nominated as the candidate of the National Reform Association for Vice-President on the ticket with Gerrit Smith of New York, but declined. He was also prominent in County and State Agricultural Societies. Mr Wait has been credited with being one of the first (if not the very first) to suggest the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, which he did as early as 1835; was also one of the prime movers in the construction of the Mississippi & Atlantic Railroad—now the "Vandalia Line"—giving much time to the latter enterprise from 1846 for many years, and was one of the original incorporators of the St. Louis & Illinois Bridge Company. Died, July 17, 1865.

WALKER, Cyrus, pioneer, lawyer, born in Rockbridge County, Va., May 14, 1791; was taken while an infant to Adair County, Ky., and came to Macomb, Ill., in 1833, being the second lawyer to locate in McDonough County. He had a wide reputation as a successful advocate, especially in criminal cases, and practiced extensively in the courts of Western Illinois and also in Iowa. Died, Dec. 1, 1875. Mr. Walker was uncle of the late Pinkney H. Walker of the Supreme Court, who studied law with him. He was Whig candidate for Presidential Elector for the State-at-large in 1840.

WALKER, James Barr, clergyman, was born in Philadelphia, July 29, 1805; in his youth served as errand-boy in a country store near Pittsburg and spent four years in a printing office; then became clerk in the office of Mordecai M. Noah, in New York, studied law and graduated from Western Reserve College, Ohio; edited various religious papers, including "The Watchman of the Prairies" (now "The Advance") of Chicago, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Chicago, and for some time was lecturer on "Harmony between Science and Revealed Religion" at Oberlin College and Chicago Theological Seminary. He was author of several volumes, one of which—"The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," published anonymously under the editorship of Prof. Calvin E. Stowe (1855)—ran through several editions and was translated into five different languages, including Hindustanee. Died, at Wheaton, Ill., March 6, 1887.

WALKER, James Monroe, corporation lawyer and Railway President, was born at Claremont, N. H., Feb. 14, 1820. At fifteen he removed with his parents to a farm in Michigan; was educated at Oberlin, Ohio, and at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, graduating from the latter in 1849. He then entered a law office as clerk and student, was admitted to the bar the next year, and soon after elected Prosecuting Attorney of Washtenaw County; was also local attorney for the Michigan Central Railway, for which, after his removal to Chicago in 1853, he became General Solicitor. Two years later the firm of Sedgwick & Walker, which had been organized in Michigan, became attorneys for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and, until his death, Mr. Walker was associated with this company, either as General Solicitor, General Counsel or President, filling the latter position from 1870 to 1875. Mr. Walker organized both the Chicago and Kansas City stock-yards, and was President of these corporations, as also of the Wilmington Coal Company, down to the time of his death, which occurred on Jan. 23, 1881, as a result of heart disease.

WALKER, (Rev.) Jesse, Methodist Episcopal missionary, was born in Rockingham County, Va., June 9, 1766; in 1800 removed to Tennessee, became a traveling preacher in 1802, and, in 1806, came to Illinois under the presiding-elder-ship of Rev. William McKendree (afterwards Bishop), locating first at Turkey Hill, St. Clair County. In 1807 he held a camp meeting near Edwardsville—the first on Illinois soil. Later, he transferred his labors to Northern Illinois; was at Peoria in 1824; at Ottawa in 1825, and devoted much time to missionary work among the Pottawatomies, maintaining a school among them for a time. He visited Chicago in 1826, and there is evidence that he was a prominent resident there for several years, occupying a log house, which he used as a church and living-room, on "Wolf Point" at the junction of the North and South Branches of the Chicago River. While acting as superintendent of the Fox River mission, his residence appears to have been at Plainfield, in the northern part of Will County. Died, Oct. 5, 1835.

WALKER, Pinkney H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Adair County, Ky., June 18, 1815. His boyhood was chiefly passed in farm work and as clerk in a general store; in 1834 he came to Illinois, settling at Rushville, where he worked in a store for four years. In 1838 he removed to Macomb, where he began attendance at an academy and the study of law with his uncle, Cyrus Walker, a leading lawyer of his time. He was admitted to the bar in 1839, practicing at Macomb until 1848, when he returned to Rushville. In 1853 he was elected Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, to fill a vacancy, and re-elected in 1855. This position he resigned in 1858, having been appointed, by Governor Bissell, to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court occasioned by the resignation of Judge Skinner. Two months later he was elected to the same position, and re-elected in 1867 and '76. He presided as Chief Justice from January, 1864, to June, '67, and again from June, 1874, to June, '75. Before the expiration of his last term he died, Feb. 7, 1885.

WALL, George Willard, lawyer, politician and Judge, was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, April 22, 1839; brought to Perry County, Ill., in infancy, and received his preparatory education at McKendree College, finally graduating from the University of Michigan in 1858, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1859, when he began practice at Duquoin, Ill. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, from 1864 to '68, served as State's Attorney for the Third Judicial District; was also a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. In 1872 he was an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Congress, although running ahead of his ticket. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Third Circuit, and re-elected in '79, '85 and '91, much of the time since 1877 being on duty upon the Appellate bench. His home is at Duquoin.

WALLACE, (Rev.) Peter, D.D., clergyman and soldier; was born in Mason County, Ky., April 11, 1813; taken in infancy to Brown County, Ohio, where he grew up on a farm until 15 years of age, when he was apprenticed to a carpenter; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, where he became a contractor and builder, following this occupation for a number of years. He was converted in 1835 at Springfield, Ill., and, some years later, having decided to enter the ministry, was admitted to the Illinois Conference as a deacon by Bishop E. S. Janes in 1855, and placed in charge of the Danville Circuit. Two years later he was ordained by Bishop Scott, and, in the next few years, held pastorates at various places in the central and eastern parts of the State. From 1867 to 1874 he was Presiding Elder of the Mattoon and Quincy Districts, and, for six years, held the position of President of the Board of Trustees of Chadlock College at Quincy, from which he received the degree of D.D. in 1881. In the second year of the Civil War he raised a company in Sangamon County, was chosen its Captain and assigned to the Seventy-third Illinois Volunteers, known as the "preachers' regiment"—all of its officers being ministers. In 1864 he was compelled by ill-health to resign his commission. While pastor of the church at Saybrook, Ill., he was offered the position of Postmaster of that place, which he decided to accept, and was allowed to retire from the active ministry. On retirement from office, in 1884, he removed to Chicago. In 1889 he was appointed by Governor Fifer the first Chaplain of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, but retired some four years afterward, when he returned to Chicago. Dr. Wallace was an eloquent and effective preacher and continued to preach, at intervals, until within a short time of his decease, which occurred in Chicago, Feb. 21, 1897, in his 84th year. A zealous patriot, he frequently spoke very effectively upon the political rostrum. Originally a Whig, he became a Republican on the organization of that party, and took pride in the fact that the first vote he ever cast was for Abraham Lincoln, for Representative in the Legislature, in 1834. He was a Knight Templar, Vice-President of the Tippecanoe Club of Chicago, and, at his death, Chaplain of America Post, No. 708, G. A. R.

WALLACE, William Henry Lamb, lawyer and soldier, was born at Urbana, Ohio, July 8, 1821; brought to Illinois in 1833, his father settling near La Salle and, afterwards, at Mount Morris, Ogle County, where young Wallace attended the Rock River Seminary; was admitted to the bar in 1845; in 1846 enlisted as a private in the First Illinois Volunteers (Col. John J. Hardin's regiment), for the Mexican War, rising to the rank of Adjutant and participating in the battle of Buena Vista (where his commander was killed), and in other engagements. Returning to his profession at Ottawa, he served as District Attorney (1852-56), then became partner of his father-in-law, Col. T. Lyle Dickey, afterwards of the Supreme Court. In April, 1861, he was one of the first to answer the call for troops by enlisting, and became Colonel of the Eleventh Illinois (three-months' men), afterwards re-enlisting for three years. As commander of a brigade he participated in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in February, 1862, receiving promotion as Brigadier-General for gallantry. At Pittsburg Landing (Shiloh), as commander of Gen. C. F. Smith's Division, devolving on him on account of the illness of his superior officer, he showed great courage, but fell mortally wounded, dying at Charleston, Tenn., April 10, 1862. His career promised great brilliancy and his loss was greatly deplored.—Martin R. M. (Wallace), brother of the preceding, was born at Urbana, Ohio, Sept. 29, 1829, came to La Salle County, Ill., with his father's family and was educated in the local schools and at Rock River Seminary; studied law at Ottawa, and was admitted to the bar in 1856, soon after locating in Chicago. In 1861 he assisted in organizing the Fourth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, of which he became Lieutenant-Colonel, and was complimented, in 1865, with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. After the war he served as Assessor of Internal Revenue (1866-69); County Judge (1869-77); Prosecuting Attorney (1884); and, for many years past, has been one of the Justices of the Peace of the city of Chicago.

WALNUT, a town of Bureau County, on the Mendota and Fulton branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 26 miles west of Mendota; is in a farming and stock-raising district; has two banks and two newspapers. Population (1890), 605; (1900), 791.

WAR OF 1812. Upon the declaration of war by Congress, in June, 1812, the Pottawatomies, and most of the other tribes of Indians in the Territory of Illinois, strongly sympathized with the British. The savages had been hostile and restless for some time previous, and blockhouses and family forts had been erected at a number of points, especially in the settlements most exposed to the incursions of the savages. Governor Edwards, becoming apprehensive of an outbreak, constructed Fort Russell, a few miles from Edwardsville. Taking the field in person, he made this his headquarters, and collected a force of 250 mounted volunteers, who were later reinforced by two companies of rangers, under Col. William Russell, numbering about 100 men. An independent company of twenty-one spies, of which John Reynolds—afterwards Governor—was a member, was also formed and led by Capt. Samuel Judy. The Governor organized his little army into two regiments under Colonels Rector and Stephenson, Colonel Russell serving as second to the commander-in-chief, other members of his staff being Secretary Nathaniel Pope and Robert K. McLaughlin. On Oct. 18, 1812, Governor Edwards, with his men, set out for Peoria, where it was expected that their force would meet that of General Hopkins, who had been sent from Kentucky with a force of 2,000 men. En route, two Kickapoo villages were burned, and a number of Indians unnecessarily slain by Edwards' party. Hopkins had orders to disperse the Indians on the Illinois and Wabash Rivers, and destroy their villages. He determined, however, on reaching the headwaters of the Vermilion to proceed no farther. Governor Edwards reached the head of Peoria Lake, but, failing to meet Hopkins, returned to Fort Russell. About the same time Capt. Thomas E. Craig led a party, in two boats, up the Illinois River to Peoria. His boats, as he alleged, having been fired upon in the night by Indians, who were harbored and protected by the French citizens of Peoria, he burned the greater part of the village, and capturing the population, carried them down the river, putting them on shore, in the early part of the winter, just below Alton. Other desultory expeditions marked the campaigns of 1813 and 1814. The Indians meanwhile gaining courage, remote settlements were continually harassed by marauding bands. Later in 1814, an expedition, led by Major (afterwards President) Zachary Taylor, ascended the Mississippi as far as Rock Island, where he found a large force of Indians, supported by British regulars with artillery. Finding himself unable to cope with so formidable a foe, Major Taylor retreated down the river. On the site of the present town of Warsaw he threw up fortifications, which he named Fort Edwards, from which point he was subsequently compelled to retreat. The same year the British, with their Indian allies, descended from Mackinac, captured Prairie du Chien, and burned Forts Madison and Johnston, after which they retired to Cap au Gris. The treaty of Ghent, signed Dec. 24, 1814, closed the war, although no formal treaties were made with the tribes until the year following.

WAR OF THE REBELLION. At the outbreak of the Civil War, the executive chair, in Illinois, was occupied by Gov. Richard Yates. Immediately upon the issuance of President Lincoln's first call for troops (April 15, 1861), the Governor issued his proclamation summoning the Legislature together in special session and, the same day, issued a call for "six regiments of militia," the quota assigned to the State under call of the President. Public excitement was at fever heat, and dormant patriotism in both sexes was aroused as never before. Party lines were broken down and, with comparatively few exceptions, the mass of the people were actuated by a common sentiment of patriotism. On April 19, Governor Yates was instructed, by the Secretary of War, to take possession of Cairo as an important strategic point. At that time, the State militia organizations were few in number and poorly equipped, consisting chiefly of independent companies in the larger cities. The Governor acted with great promptitude, and, on April 21, seven companies, numbering 595 men, commanded by Gen. Richard K. Swift of Chicago, were en route to Cairo. The first volunteer company to tender its services, in response to Governor Yates' proclamation, on April 16, was the Zouave Grays of Springfield. Eleven other companies were tendered the same day, and, by the evening of the 18th, the number had been increased to fifty. Simultaneously with these proceedings, Chicago bankers tendered to the Governor a war loan of $500,000, and those of Springfield, $100,000. The Legislature, at its special session, passed acts increasing the efficiency of the militia law, and provided for the creation of a war fund of $2,000,000. Besides the six regiments already called for, the raising of ten additional volunteer regiments and one battery of light artillery was authorized. The last of the six regiments, apportioned to Illinois under the first presidential call, was dispatched to Cairo early in May. The six regiments were numbered the Seventh to Twelfth, inclusive—the earlier numbers, First to Sixth, being conceded to the six regiments which had served in the war with Mexico. The regiments were commanded, respectively, by Colonels John Cook, Richard J. Oglesby, Eleazer A. Paine, James D. Morgan, William H. L. Wallace, and John McArthur, constituting the "First Brigade of Illinois Volunteers." Benjamin M. Prentiss, having been chosen Brigadier-General on arrival at Cairo, assumed command, relieving General Swift. The quota under the second call, consisting of ten regiments, was mustered into service within sixty days, 200 companies being tendered immediately. Many more volunteered than could be accepted, and large numbers crossed to Missouri and enlisted in regiments forming in that State. During June and July the Secretary of War authorized Governor Yates to recruit twenty-two additional regiments (seventeen infantry and five cavalry), which were promptly raised. On July 22, the day following the defeat of the Union army at Bull Run, President Lincoln called for 500,000 more volunteers. Governor Yates immediately responded with an offer to the War Department of sixteen more regiments (thirteen of infantry and three of cavalry), and a battalion of artillery, adding, that the State claimed it as her right, to do her full share toward the preservation of the Union. Under supplemental authority, received from the Secretary of War in August, 1861, twelve additional regiments of infantry and five of cavalry were raised, and, by December, 1861, the State had 43,000 volunteers in the field and 17,000 in camps of instruction. Other calls were made in July and August, 1862, each for 300,000 men. Illinois' quota, under both calls, was over 52,000 men, no regard being paid to the fact that the State had already furnished 16,000 troops in excess of its quotas under previous calls. Unless this number of volunteers was raised by September 1, a draft would be ordered. The tax was a severe one, inasmuch as it would fall chiefly upon the prosperous citizens, the floating population, the idle and the extremely poor having already followed the army's march, either as soldiers or as camp-followers. But recruiting was actively carried on, and, aided by liberal bounties in many of the counties, in less than a fortnight the 52,000 new troops were secured, the volunteers coming largely from the substantial classes—agricultural, mercantile, artisan and professional. By the end of December, fifty-nine regiments and four batteries had been dispatched to the front, besides a considerable number to fill up regiments already in the field, which had suffered severely from battle, exposure and disease. At this time, Illinois had an aggregate of over 135,000 enlisted men in the field. The issue of President Lincoln's preliminary proclamation of emancipation, in September, 1862, was met by a storm of hostile criticism from his political opponents, who—aided by the absence of so large a proportion of the loyal population of the State in the field—were able to carry the elections of that year. Consequently, when the Twenty-third General Assembly convened in regular session at Springfield, on Jan. 5, 1863, a large majority of that body was not only opposed to both the National and State administrations, but avowedly opposed to the further prosecution of the war under the existing policy. The Legislature reconvened in June, but was prorogued by Governor Yates. Between Oct. 1, 1863, and July 1, 1864, 16,000 veterans re-enlisted and 37,000 new volunteers were enrolled; and, by the date last mentioned, Illinois had furnished to the Union army 244,496 men, being 14,596 in excess of the allotted quotas, constituting fifteen per cent of the entire population. These were comprised in 151 regiments of infantry, 17 of cavalry and two complete regiments of artillery, besides twelve independent batteries. The total losses of Illinois organizations, during the war, has been reported at 34,834, of which 5,874 were killed in battle, 4,020 died from wounds, 23,786 from disease and 2,154 from other causes—being a total of thirteen per cent of the entire force of the State in the service. The part which Illinois played in the contest was conspicuous for patriotism, promptness in response to every call, and the bravery and efficiency of its troops in the field—reflecting honor upon the State and its history. Nor were its loyal citizens—who, while staying at home, furnished moral and material support to the men at the front—less worthy of praise than those who volunteered. By upholding the Government—National and State—and by their zeal and energy in collecting and sending forward immense quantities of supplies—surgical, medical and other—often at no little sacrifice, they contributed much to the success of the Union arms. WAR OF THE REBELLION (HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS). The following is a list of the various military organizations mustered into the service during the Civil War (1861-65), with the terms of service and a summary of the more important events in the history of each, while in the field:

SEVENTH INFANTRY. Illinois having sent six regiments to the Mexican War, by courtesy the numbering of the regiments which took part in the war for the Union began with number Seven. A number of regiments which responded to the first call of the President, claimed the right to be recognized as the first regiment in the field, but the honor was finally accorded to that organized at Springfield by Col. John Cook, and hence his regiment was numbered Seventh. It was mustered into the service, April 25, 1861, and remained at Mound City during the three months' service, the period of its first enlistment. It was subsequently reorganized and mustered for the three years' service, July 25, 1861, and was engaged in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Cherokee, Allatoona Pass, Salkahatchie Swamp, Bentonville and Columbia. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans at Pulaski, Tenn., Dec. 22, 1863; was mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, July 11.

EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in for three months' service, April 26, 1861, Richard J. Oglesby of Decatur, being appointed Colonel. It remained at Cairo during its term of service, when it was mustered out. July 25, 1861, it was reorganized and mustered in for three years' service. It participated in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Port Gibson, Thompson Hill, Raymond, Champion Hill, Vicksburg, Brownsville, and Spanish Fort; re-enlisted as veterans, March 24, 1864; was mustered out at Baton Rouge, May 4, 1866, paid off and discharged, May 13, having served five years.

NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Springfield, April 26, 1861, for the term of three months, under Col. Eleazer A. Paine. It was reorganized at Cairo, in August, for three years, being composed of companies from St. Clair, Madison, Montgomery, Pulaski, Alexander and Mercer Counties; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Jackson (Tenn.), Meed Creek Swamps, Salem, Wyatt, Florence, Montezuma, Athens and Grenada. The regiment was mounted, March 15, 1863, and so continued during the remainder of its service. Mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865.

TENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into the service for three months, on April 29, 1861, at Cairo, and on July 29, 1861, was mustered into the service for three years, with Col. James D. Morgan in command. It was engaged at Sykeston, New Madrid, Corinth, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw, Chattahoochie, Savannah and Bentonville. Re-enlisted as veterans, Jan. 1, 1864, and mustered out of service, July 4, 1865, at Louisville, and received final discharge and pay, July 11, 1865, at Chicago.

ELEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, April 30, 1861, for three months. July 30, the regiment was mustered out, and re-enlisted for three years' service. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Tallahatchie, Vicksburg, Liverpool Heights, Yazoo City, Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards Brigadier-General and killed at Shiloh, was its first Colonel. Mustered out of service, at Baton Rouge, July 14, 1865; paid off and discharged at Springfield.

TWELFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service for three years, August 1, 1861; was engaged at Columbus, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Lay's Ferry, Rome Cross Roads, Dallas, Kenesaw, Nickajack Creek, Bald Knob, Decatur, Ezra Church, Atlanta, Allatoona and Goldsboro. On Jan. 16, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. John McArthur was its first Colonel, succeeded by Augustus L. Chetlain, both being promoted to Brigadier-Generalships. Mustered out of service at Louisville, Ky., July 10, 1865, and received final pay and discharge, at Springfield, July 18.

THIRTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments organized under the act known as the "Ten Regiment Bill"; was mustered into service on May 24, 1861, for three years, at Dixon, with John B. Wyman as Colonel; was engaged at Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, Jackson, Missionary Ridge, Rossville and Ringgold Gap. Mustered out at Springfield, June 18, 1864, having served three years and two months.

FOURTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments raised under the "Ten Regiment Bill," which anticipated the requirements of the General Government by organizing, equipping and drilling a regiment in each Congressional District in the State for thirty days, unless sooner required for service by the United States. It was mustered in at Jacksonville for three years, May 25, 1861, under command of John M. Palmer as its first Colonel; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora, Vicksburg, Jackson, Fort Beauregard and Meridian; consolidated with the Fifteenth Infantry, as a veteran battalion (both regiments having enlisted as veterans), on July 1, 1864. In October, 1864, the major part of the battalion was captured by General Hood and sent to Andersonville. The remainder participated in the "March to the Sea," and through the campaign in the Carolinas. In the spring of 1865 the battalion organization was discontinued, both regiments having been filled up by recruits. The regiment was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., Sept. 16, 1865; and arrived at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 22, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge. The aggregate number of men who belonged to this organization was 1,980, and the aggregate mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, 480. During its four years and four months of service, the regiment marched 4,490 miles, traveled by rail, 2,330 miles, and, by river, 4,490 miles—making an aggregate of 11,670 miles.

FIFTEENTH INFANTRY. Raised under the "Ten Regiment Act," in the (then) First Congressional District; was organized at Freeport, and mustered into service, May 24, 1861. It was engaged at Sedalia, Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora Hill, Vicksburg, Fort Beauregard, Champion Hill, Allatoona and Bentonville. In March, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in July, 1864, was consolidated with the Fourteenth Infantry as a Veteran Battalion. At Big Shanty and Ackworth a large portion of the battalion was captured by General Hood. At Raleigh the Veteran Battalion was discontinued and the Fifteenth reorganized. From July 1, to Sept. 1, 1865, the regiment was stationed at Forts Leavenworth and Kearney. Having been mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, it was sent to Springfield for final payment and discharge—having served four years and four months. Miles marched, 4,299; miles by rail, 2,403, miles by steamer, 4,310; men enlisted from date of organization, 1,963; strength at date of muster-out, 640.

SIXTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Quincy under the "Ten-Regiment Act," May 24, 1861. The regiment was engaged at New Madrid, Tiptonville, Corinth, Buzzards' Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw Mountain, Chattahoochie River, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Savannah, Columbia, Fayetteville, Aversboro and Bentonville. In December, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans; was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 8, 1865, after a term of service of four years and three months, and, a week later, arrived at Springfield, where it received its final pay and discharge papers.

SEVENTEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Peoria, Ill., on May 24, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Greenfield (Ark.), Shiloh, Corinth, Hatchie and Vicksburg. In May, 1864, the term of enlistment having expired, the regiment was ordered to Springfield for pay and discharge. Those men and officers who re-enlisted, and those whose term had not expired, were consolidated with the Eighth Infantry, which was mustered out in the spring of 1866.

EIGHTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized under the provisions of the "Ten Regiment Bill," at Auna, and mustered into the service on May 28, 1861, the term of enlistment being for three years. The regiment participated in the capture of Fort McHenry, and was actively engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth. It was mustered out at Little Rock, Dec. 16, 1865, and Dec. 31, thereafter, arrived at Springfield, Ill., for payment and discharge. The aggregate enlistments in the regiment, from its organization to date of discharge (rank and file), numbered 2,043.

NINETEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the United States service for three years, June 17, 1861, at Chicago, embracing four companies which had been accepted under the call for three months' men; participated in the battle of Stone River and in the Tullahoma and Chattanooga campaigns; was also engaged at Davis' Cross Roads, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Resaca. It was mustered out of service on July 9, 1864, at Chicago. Originally consisting of nearly 1,000 men, besides a large number of recruits received during the war, its strength at the final muster-out was less than 350.

TWENTIETH INFANTRY. Organized, May 14, 1861, at Joliet, and June 13, 1861, and mustered into the service for a term of three years. It participated in the following engagements, battles, sieges, etc.: Fredericktown (Mo.), Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Thompson's Plantation, Champion Hills, Big Black River, Vicksburg, Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta. After marching through the Carolinas, the regiment was finally ordered to Louisville, where it was mustered out, July 16, 1865, receiving its final discharge at Chicago, on July 24.

TWENTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized under the "Ten Regiment Bill," from the (then) Seventh Congressional District, at Mattoon, and mustered into service for three years, June 28, 1861. Its first Colonel was U. S. Grant, who was in command until August 7, when he was commissioned Brigadier-General. It was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Corinth, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Chattanooga, in February, 1864. From June, 1864, to December, 1865, it was on duty in Texas. Mustered out at San Antonio, Dec. 16, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 18, 1866.

TWENTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Belleville, and mustered into service, for three years, at Caseyville, Ill., June 25, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Charleston (Mo.), Sikestown, Tiptonville, Farmington, Corinth, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, New Hope Church, and all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, except Rocky Face Ridge. It was mustered out at Springfield, July 7, 1864, the veterans and recruits, whose term of service had not expired, being consolidated with the Forty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

TWENTY-THIRD INFANTRY. The organization of the Twenty-third Infantry Volunteers commenced, at Chicago, under the popular name of the "Irish Brigade," immediately upon the opening of hostilities at Sumter. The formal muster of the regiment, under the command of Col. James A. Mulligan, was made, June 15, 1861, at Chicago, when it was occupying barracks known as Kane's brewery near the river on West Polk Street. It was early ordered to Northern Missouri, and was doing garrison duty at Lexington, when, in September, 1861, it surrendered with the rest of the garrison, to the forces under the rebel General Price, and was paroled. From Oct. 8, 1861, to June 14, 1862, it was detailed to guard prisoners at Camp Douglas. Thereafter it participated in engagements in the Virginias, as follows: at South Fork, Greenland Gap, Philippi, Hedgeville, Leetown, Maryland Heights, Snicker's Gap, Kernstown, Cedar Creek, Winchester, Charlestown, Berryville, Opequan Creek, Fisher's Hill, Harrisonburg, Hatcher's Run and Petersburg. It also took part in the siege of Richmond and the pursuit of Lee, being present at the surrender at Appomattox. In January and February, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Greenland Gap, W. Va. In August, 1864, the ten companies of the Regiment, then numbering 440, were consolidated into five companies and designated, "Battalion, Twenty-third Regiment, Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry." The regiment was thanked by Congress for its part at Lexington, and was authorized to inscribe Lexington upon its colors. (See also Mulligan, James A.)

TWENTY-FOURTH INFANTRY, (known as the First Hecker Regiment). Organized at Chicago, with two companies—to-wit: the Union Cadets and the Lincoln Rifles—from the three months' service, in June, 1861, and mustered in, July 8, 1861. It participated in the battles of Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain and other engagements in the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out of service at Chicago, August 6, 1864. A fraction of the regiment, which had been recruited in the field, and whose term of service had not expired at the date of muster-out, was organized into one company and attached to the Third Brigade, First Division, Fourteenth Army Corps, and mustered out at Camp Butler, August 1, 1865.

TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized from the counties of Kankakee, Iroquois, Ford, Vermilion, Douglas, Coles, Champaign and Edgar, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 4, 1861. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, in the siege of Corinth, the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, the siege of Atlanta, and innumerable skirmishes; was mustered out at Springfield, Sept. 5, 1864. During its three years' service the regiment traveled 4,962 miles, of which 3,252 were on foot, the remainder by steamboat and railroad.

TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, consisting of seven companies, at Springfield, August 31, 1861. On Jan. 1, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. It was authorized by the commanding General to inscribe upon its banners "New Madrid"; "Island No. 10;" "Farmington;" "Siege of Corinth;" "Iuka;" "Corinth—3d and 4th, 1862;" "Resaca;" "Kenesaw;" "Ezra Church;" "Atlanta;" "Jonesboro;" "Griswoldville;" "McAllister;" "Savannah;" "Columbia," and "Bentonville." It was mustered out at Louisville, July 20, 1865, and paid off and discharged, at Springfield, July 28—the regiment having marched, during its four years of service, 6,931 miles, and fought twenty-eight hard battles, besides innumerable skirmishes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. First organized, with only seven companies, at Springfield, August 10, 1861, and organization completed by the addition of three more companies, at Cairo, on September 1. It took part in the battle of Belmont, the siege of Island No. 10, and the battles of Farmington, Nashville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Calhoun, Adairsville, Dallas, Pine Top Mountain and Kenesaw Mountain, as well as in the investment of Atlanta; was relieved from duty, August 25, 1864, while at the front, and mustered out at Springfield, September 20. Its veterans, with the recruits whose term of service had not expired, were consolidated with the Ninth Infantry.

TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Composed of companies from Pike, Fulton, Schuyler, Mason, Scott and Menard Counties; was organized at Springfield, August 15, 1861, and mustered into service for three years. It participated in the battles of Shiloh and Metamora, the siege of Vicksburg and the battles of Jackson, Mississippi, and Fort Beauregard, and in the capture of Spanish Fort, Fort Blakely and Mobile. From June, 1864, to March, 1866, it was stationed in Texas, and was mustered out at Brownsville, in that State, March 15, 1866, having served four years and seven months. It was discharged, at Springfield, May 13, 1866.

TWENTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, August 19, 1861, and was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the sieges of Corinth, Vicksburg and Mobile. Eight companies were detailed for duty at Holly Springs, and were there captured by General Van Dorn, in December, 1862, but were exchanged, six months later. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, from June, 1864, to November, 1865, was on duty in Texas. It was mustered out of service in that State, Nov. 6, 1865, and received final discharge on November 28.

THIRTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, August 28, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, the siege of Corinth, Median Station, Raymond, Champion Hills, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, Big Shanty, Atlanta, Savannah, Pocotaligo, Orangeburg, Columbia, Cheraw, and Fayetteville; mustered out, July 17, 1865, and received final payment and discharge at Springfield, July 27, 1865.

THIRTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized at Cairo, and there mustered into service on Sept. 18, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the two expeditions against Vicksburg, at Thompson's Hill, Ingram Heights, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hill, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Lovejoy Station and Jonesboro; also participated in the "March to the Sea" and took part in the battles and skirmishes at Columbia, Cheraw, Fayetteville and Bentonville. A majority of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in March, 1864. It was mustered out at Louisville, July 19, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield, July 23.

THIRTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, Dec. 31, 1861. By special authority from the War Department, it originally consisted of ten companies of infantry, one of cavalry, and a battery. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the sieges of Corinth and Vicksburg, and in the battles of La Grange, Grand Junction, Metamora, Harrisonburg, Kenesaw Mountain, Nickajack Creek, Allatoona, Savannah, Columbia, Cheraw and Bentonville. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in June, 1865, was ordered to Fort Leavenworth. Mustered out there, Sept. 16, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield.

THIRTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Springfield in September, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, the assault and siege of Vicksburg, siege of Jackson, Fort Esperanza, and in the expedition against Mobilé. The regiment veteranized at Vicksburg, Jan. 1, 1864; was mustered out, at the same point, Nov. 24, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield, Dec. 6 and 7, 1865. The aggregate enrollment of the regiment was between 1,900 and 2,000.

THIRTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Sept. 7, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Murfreesboro, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, and, after participating in the "March to the Sea" and through the Carolinas, took part in the battle of Bentonville. After the surrender of Johnston, the regiment went with Sherman's Army to Washington, D. C., and took part in the grand review, May 24, 1865; left Washington, June 12, and arrived at Louisville, Ky., June 18, where it was mustered out, on July 12; was discharged and paid at Chicago, July 17, 1865.

THIRTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Decatur on July 3, 1861, and its services tendered to the President, being accepted by the Secretary of War as "Col. G. A. Smith's Independent Regiment of Illinois Volunteers," on July 23, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 12. It was engaged at Pea Ridge and in the siege of Corinth, also participated in the battles of Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Dallas and Kenesaw. Its final muster-out took place at Springfield, Sept. 27, 1864, the regiment having marched (exclusive of railroad and steamboat transportation) 3,056 miles.

THIRTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Camp Hammond, near Aurora, Ill., and mustered into service, Sept. 23, 1861, for a term of three years. The regiment, at its organization, numbered 965 officers and enlisted men, and had two companies of Cavalry ("A" and "B"), 186 officers and men. It was engaged at Leetown, Pea Ridge, Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, the siege of Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Adairsville, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. Mustered out, Oct. 8, 1865, and disbanded, at Springfield, Oct. 27, having marched and been transported, during its term of service, more than 10,000 miles.

THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Familiarly known as "Fremont Rifles"; organized in August, 1861, and mustered into service, Sept. 18. The regiment was presented with battle-flags by the Chicago Board of Trade. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Neosho, Prairie Grove and Chalk Bluffs, the siege of Vicksburg, and in the battles of Yazoo City and Morgan's Bend. In October, 1863, it was ordered to the defense of the frontier along the Rio Grande; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; took part in the siege and storming of Fort Blakely and the capture of Mobile; from July, 1865, to May, 1866, was again on duty in Texas; was mustered out at Houston, May 15, 1866, and finally discharged at Springfield, May 31, having traveled some 17,000 miles, of which nearly 3,300 were by marching.

THIRTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, in September, 1861. The regiment was engaged in the battles of Fredericktown, Perryville, Knob Gap, Stone River, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Pine Top, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; from June to December, 1865, was on duty in Louisiana and Texas; was mustered out at Victoria, Texas, Dec. 31, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield.

THIRTY-NINTH INFANTRY. The organization of this Regiment was commenced as soon as the news of the firing on Fort Sumter reached Chicago. General Thomas O. Osborne was one of its contemplated field officers, and labored zealously to get it accepted under the first call for troops, but did not accomplish his object. The regiment had already assumed the name of the "Yates Phalanx" in honor of Governor Yates. It was accepted by the War Department on the day succeeding the first Bull Run disaster (July 22, 1861), and Austin Light, of Chicago, was appointed Colonel. Under his direction the organization was completed, and the regiment left Camp Mather, Chicago, on the morning of Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Winchester, Malvern Hill (the second), Morris Island, Fort Wagner, Drury's Bluff, and in numerous engagements before Petersburg and Richmond, including the capture of Fort Gregg, and was present at Lee's surrender at Appomattox. In the meantime the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Hilton Head, S. C., in September, 1863. It was mustered out at Norfolk, Dec. 6, 1865, and received final discharge at Chicago, December 16.

FORTIETH INFANTRY. Enlisted from the counties of Franklin, Hamilton, Wayne, White, Wabash, Marion, Clay and Fayette, and mustered into service for three years at Springfield, August 10, 1861. ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 11, 1865, and mustered in for one year; was engaged in garrison and guard duty; mustered out, Jan. 27, 1866, at Dalton, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in, Feb. 14, 1865, for one year; was on duty in Tennessee and Georgia, guarding railroads and garrisoning towns. It was mustered out, Jan. 16, 1866, at Atlanta, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIRST INFANTRY. This regiment was organized at Quincy, Ill., and mustered into the United States service, Feb. 23, 1865, and was composed of companies from various parts of the State, recruited, under the call of Dec. 19, 1864. It was engaged in guard duty, with a few guerrilla skirmishes, and was present at the surrender of General Warford's army, at Kingston, Ga.; was mustered out at Columbus, Ga., Jan. 24, 1866, and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge, Feb. 8, 1866.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in, Feb. 18, 1865, for one year; was mustered out of service, to date Sept. 11, at Memphis, Tenn., and arrived at Camp Butler, Sept. 9, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered in, Feb. 27, 1865, for one year; was not engaged in any battles. It was mustered out, Sept. 15, 1865, and moved to Springfield, Ill., and, Sept. 24, received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for one year. Sept. 18, 1865, the regiment was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., and ordered to Springfield for final payment and discharge, where it arrived, Sept. 22; was paid off and discharged at Camp Butler, Sept. 29.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in Feb. 28, 1865, for one year, 904 strong. On Sept. 4, 1865, it was mustered out of service, and moved to Camp Butler, where it received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered in during the months of February and March, 1865, from the northern counties of the State, for the term of one year. The officers of the regiment have left no written record of its history, but its service seems to have been rendered chiefly in Tennessee in the neighborhood of Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga. Judging by the muster-rolls of the Adjutant-General, the regiment would appear to have been greatly depleted by desertions and otherwise, the remnant being finally mustered out, Sept. 20, 1865.

FIRST CAVALRY. Organized — consisting of seven companies, A, B, C, D, E, F and G—at Alton, in 1861, and mustered into the United States service, July 3. After some service in Missouri, the regiment participated in the battle of Lexington, in that State, and was surrendered, with the remainder of the garrison, Sept. 20, 1861. The officers were paroled, and the men sworn not to take up arms again until discharged. No exchange having been effected in November, the non-commissioned officers and privates were ordered to Springfield and discharged. In June, 1862, the regiment was reorganized at Benton Barracks, Mo., being afterwards employed in guarding supply trains and supply depots at various points. Mustered out, at Benton Barracks, July 14, 1862.

SECOND CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, August 12, 1861, with Company M (which joined the regiment some months later), numbering 47 commissioned officers and 1,040 enlisted men. This number was increased by recruits and re-enlistments, during its four and a half year's term of service, to 2,236 enlisted men and 145 commissioned officers. It was engaged at Belmont; a portion of the regiment took part in the battles at Fort Henry, Fort Donelson and Shiloh, another portion at Merriweather's Ferry, Bolivar and Holly Springs, and participated in the investment of Vicksburg. In January, 1864, the major part of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, later, participating in the Red River expedition and the investment of Fort Blakely. It was mustered out at San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 22, 1865, and finally paid and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 3, 1866.

THIRD CAVALRY. Composed of twelve companies, from various localities in the State, the grand total of company officers and enlisted men, under the first organization, being 1,433. It was organized at Springfield, in August, 1861; participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Haines' Bluff, Arkansas Post, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, and the siege of Vicksburg. In July, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. The remainder were mustered out, Sept. 5, 1864. The veterans participated in the repulse of Forrest, at Memphis, and in the battles of Lawrenceburg, Spring Hill, Campbellsville and Franklin. From May to October, 1865, engaged in service against the Indians in the Northwest. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, Oct. 18, 1865.

FOURTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 26, 1861, and participated in the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, and Shiloh; in the siege of Corinth, and in many engagements of less historic note; was mustered out at Springfield in November, 1864. By order of the War Department, of June 18, 1865, the members of the regiment whose terms had not expired, were consolidated with the Twelfth Illinois Cavalry.

FIFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Camp Butler, in November, 1861; took part in the Meridian raid and the expedition against Jackson, Miss., and in numerous minor expeditions, doing effective work at Canton, Grenada, Woodville, and other points. On Jan. 1, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. Its final muster-out took place, Oct. 27, 1865, and it received final payment and discharge, October 30.

SIXTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, Nov. 19, 1861; participated in Sherman's advance upon Grenada; in the Grierson raid through Mississippi and Louisiana, the siege of Port Hudson, the battles of Moscow (Tenn.), West Point (Miss.), Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans, March 30, 1864; was mustered out at Selma, Ala., Nov. 5, 1865, and received discharge, November 20, at Springfield.

SEVENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, and was mustered into service, Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Farmington, Iuka, Corinth (second battle); in Grierson's raid through Mississippi and Louisiana; in the engagement at Plain's Store (La.), and the investment of Port Hudson. In March, 1864, 238 officers and men re-enlisted as veterans. The non-veterans were engaged at Guntown, and the entire regiment took part in the battle of Franklin. After the close of hostilities, it was stationed in Alabama and Mississippi, until the latter part of October, 1865; was mustered out at Nashville, and finally discharged at Springfield, Nov. 17, 1865.

EIGHTH CAVALRY. Organized at St. Charles, Ill., and mustered in, Sept. 18, 1861. The regiment was ordered to Virginia, and participated in the general advance on Manassas in March, 1862; was engaged at Mechanicsville, Gaines' Hill, Malvern Hill, Sugar Loaf Mountain, Middletown, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Sulphur Springs, Warrenton, Rapidan Station, Northern Neck, Gettysburg, Williamsburg, Funkstown, Falling Water, Chester Gap, Sandy Hook, Culpepper, Brandy Station, and in many raids and skirmishes. It was mustered out of service at Benton Barracks, Mo., July 17, 1865, and ordered to Chicago, where it received final payment and discharge.

NINTH CAVALRY. Organized at Chicago, in the autumn of 1861, and mustered in, November 30; was engaged at Coldwater, Grenada, Wyatt, Saulsbury, Moscow, Guntown, Pontotoc, Tupelo, Old Town Creek, Hurricane Creek, Lawrenceburg, Campbellsville, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, March 16, 1864; was mustered out of service at Selma, Ala., Oct. 31, 1865, and ordered to Springfield, where the men received final payment and discharge.

TENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield in the latter part of September, 1861, and mustered into service, Nov. 25, 1861; was engaged at Prairie Grove, Cotton Plant, Arkansas Post, in the Yazoo Pass expedition, at Richmond (La.), Brownsville, Bayou Metoe, Bayou La Fourche and Little Rock. In February, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, the non-veterans accompanying General Banks in his Red River expedition. On Jan. 27, 1865, the veterans, and recruits were consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, and all reorganized under the name of the Tenth Illinois Veteran Volunteer Cavalry. Mustered out of service at San Antonio, Texas, Nov. 22, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield, Jan. 6, 1866.

ELEVENTH CAVALRY. Robert G. Ingersoll of Peoria, and Basil D. Meeks, of Woodford County, obtained permission to raise a regiment of cavalry, and recruiting commenced in October, 1861. The regiment was recruited from the counties of Peoria, Fulton, Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall, Stark, Knox, Henderson and Warren; was mustered into the service at Peoria, Dec. 20, 1861, and was first under fire at Shiloh. It also took part in the raid in the rear of Corinth, and in the battles of Bolivar, Corinth (second battle), Iuka, Lexington and Jackson (Tenn.); in McPherson's expedition to Canton and Sherman's Meridian raid, in the relief of Yazoo City, and in numerous less important raids and skirmishes. Most of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in December, 1863; the non-veterans being mustered out at Memphis, in the autumn of 1864. The veterans were mustered out at the same place, Sept. 30, 1865, and discharged at Springfield, October 20.

TWELFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, in February, 1862, and remained there guarding rebel prisoners until June 25, when it was mounted and sent to Martinsburg, Va. It was engaged at Fredericksburg, Williamsport, Falling Waters, the Rapidan and Stevensburg. On Nov. 26, 1863, the regiment was relieved from service and ordered home to reorganize as veterans. Subsequently it joined Banks in the Red River expedition and in Davidson's expedition against Mobile. While at Memphis the Twelfth Cavalry was consolidated into an eight-company organization, and the Fourth Cavalry, having previously been consolidated into a battalion of five companies, was consolidated with the Twelfth. The consolidated regiment was mustered out at Houston, Texas, May 29, 1866, and, on June 18, received final pay and discharge at Springfield.

THIRTEENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Chicago, in December, 1861; moved to the front from Benton Barracks, Mo., in February, 1862, and was engaged in the following battles and skirmishes (all in Missouri and Arkansas): Putnam's Ferry, Cotton Plant, Union City (twice), Camp Pillow, Bloomfield (first and second battles), Van Buren, Allen, Eleven Point River, Jackson, White River, Chalk Bluff, Bushy Creek, near Helena, Grand Prairie, White River, Deadman's Lake, Brownsville, Bayou Metoe, Austin, Little Rock, Benton, Batesville, Pine Bluff, Arkadelphia, Okolona, Little Missouri River, Prairie du Anne, Camden, Jenkins' Ferry, Cross Roads, Mount Elba, Douglas Landing and Monticello. The regiment was mustered out, August 31, 1865, and received final pay and discharge at Springfield, Sept. 13, 1865.

FOURTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service at Peoria, in January and February, 1863; participated in the battle of Cumberland Gap, in the defense of Knoxville and the pursuit of Longstreet, in the engagements at Bean Station and Dandridge, in the Macon raid, and in the cavalry battle at Sunshine Church. In the latter General Stoneman surrendered, but the Fourteenth cut its way out. On their retreat the men were betrayed by a guide and the regiment badly cut up and scattered, those escaping being hunted by soldiers with bloodhounds. Later, it was engaged at Waynesboro and in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, and was mustered out at Nashville, July 31, 1865, having marched over 10,000 miles, exclusive of duty done by detachments.

FIFTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed of companies originally independent, attached to infantry regiments and acting as such; participated in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege and capture of Corinth. Regimental organization was effected in the spring of 1863, and thereafter it was engaged chiefly in scouting and post duty. It was mustered out at Springfield, August 25, 1864, the recruits (whose term of service had not expired) being consolidated with the Tenth Cavalry.

SIXTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed principally of Chicago men—Thielenman's and Schambeck's Cavalry Companies, raised at the outset of the war, forming the nucleus of the regiment. The former served as General Sherman's body-guard for some time. Captain Thieleman was made a Major and authorized to raise a battalion, the two companies named thenceforth being known as Thieleman's Battalion. In September, 1862, the War Department authorized the extension of the battalion to a regiment, and, on the 11th of June, 1863, the regimental organization was completed. It took part in the East Tennessee campaign, a portion of the regiment aiding in the defense of Knoxville, a part garrisoning Cumberland Gap, and one battalion being captured by Longstreet. The regiment also participated in the battles of Rocky Face Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Kingston, Cassville, Cartersville, Allatoona, Kenesaw, Lost Mountain, Mines Ridge, Powder Springs, Chattahoochie, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. It arrived in Chicago, August 23, 1865, for final payment and discharge, having marched about 5,000 miles and engaged in thirty-one battles, besides numerous skirmishes.

SEVENTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service in January and February, 1864; aided in the repulse of Price at Jefferson City, Mo., and was engaged at Booneville, Independence, Mine Creek, and Fort Scott, besides doing garrison duty, scouting and raiding. It was mustered out in November and December, 1865, at Leavenworth, Kan. Gov. John L. Beveridge, who had previously been a Captain and Major of the Eighth Cavalry, was the Colonel of this regiment.

FIRST LIGHT ARTILLERY. Consisted of ten batteries. Battery A was organized under the first call for State troops, April 21, 1861, but not mustered into the three years' service until July 16; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the Atlanta campaign; was in reserve at Champion Hills and Nashville, and mustered out July 3, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery B was organized in April, 1861, engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the siege of Corinth and at La Grange, Holly Springs, Memphis, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, Mechanicsburg, Richmond (La.), the Atlanta campaign and the battle of Nashville. The Battery was reorganized by consolidation with Battery A, and mustered out at Chicago, July 2, 1865.

Battery D was organized at Cairo, Sept. 2, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson and at Shiloh, and mustered out, July 28, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery E was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into service, Dec. 19, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Jackson, Vicksburg, Gun-town, Pontotoc, Tupelo and Nashville, and mustered out at Louisville, Dec. 24, 1864.

Battery F was recruited at Dixon and mustered in at Springfield, Feb. 25, 1862. It took part in the siege of Corinth and the Yocona expedition, and was consolidated with the other batteries in the regiment, March 7, 1865.

Battery G was organized at Cairo and mustered in Sept. 28, 1861; was engaged in the siege and the second battle of Corinth, and mustered out at Springfield, July 24, 1865.

Battery H was recruited in and about Chicago, during January and February, 1862; participated in the battle of Shiloh, siege of Vicksburg, and in the Atlanta campaign, the "March to the Sea," and through the Carolinas with Sherman.

Battery I was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered in, Feb. 10, 1862; was engaged at Shiloh, in the Tallahatchie raid, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the battles of Chattanooga and Vicksburg. It veteranized, March 17, 1864, and was mustered out, July 26, 1865.

Battery K was organized at Shawneetown and mustered in, Jan. 9, 1862, participated in Burnside's campaign in Tennessee, and in the capture of Knoxville. Part of the men were mustered out at Springfield in June, 1865, and the remainder at Chicago in July.

Battery M was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into the service, August 12, 1862, for three years. It served through the Chickamunga campaign, being engaged at Chickamauga; also was engaged at Missionary Ridge, was besieged at Chattanooga, and took part in all the important battles of the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out at Chicago, July 24, 1864, having traveled 3,102 miles and been under fire 178 days.

SECOND LIGHT ARTILLERY. Consisted of nine batteries. Battery A was organized at Peoria, and mustered into service, May 23, 1861; served in Missonri and Arkansas, doing brilliant work at Pea Ridge. It was mustered out of service at Springfield, July 27, 1865.

Battery D was organized at Cairo, and mustered into service in December, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Vicksburg, Jackson, Meridian and Decatur, and mustered out at Louisville, Nov. 21, 1864.

Battery E was organized at St. Louis, Mo., in August, 1861, and mustered into service, August 20, at that point. It was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege of Corinth and the Yocona expedition—was consolidated with Battery A.

Battery F was organized at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and mustered in, Dec. 11, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, in the siege and second battle of Corinth, and the Meridian campaign; also at Kenesaw, Atlanta and Jonesboro. It was mustered out, July 27, 1865, at Springfield.

Battery H was organized at Springfield, December, 1861, and mustered in, Dec. 31, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson and in the siege of Fort Pillow; veteranized, Jan. 1, 1864, was mounted as cavalry the following summer, and mustered out at Springfield, July 29, 1865.

Battery I was recruited in Will County, and mustered into service at Camp Butler, Dec. 31, 1861. It participated in the siege of Island No. 10, in the advance upon Corinth, and in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Chattanooga. It veteranized, Jan. 1, 1864, marched with Sherman to Atlanta, and thence to Savannah and through the Carolinas, and was mustered out at Springfield.

Battery K was organized at Springfield and mustered in Dec. 31, 1863; was engaged at Fort Pillow, the capture of Clarkston, Mo., and the siege of Vicksburg. It was mustered out, July 14, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery L was organized at Chicago and mustered in, Feb. 28, 1862; participated in the advance on Corinth, the battle of Hatchie and the advance on the Tallahatchie, and was mustered out at Chicago, August 9, 1865.

Battery M was organized at Chicago, and mustered in at Springfield, June, 1862; was engaged at Jonesboro, Blue Spring, Blountsville and Rogersville, being finally consolidated with other batteries of the regiment.

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE BATTERY. Organized through the efforts of the Chicago Board of Trade, which raised $15,000 for its equipment, within forty-eight hours. It was mustered into service, August 1, 1862, was engaged at Lawrenceburg, Murfreesboro, Stone River, Chickamauga, Farmington, Decatur (Ga.), Atlanta, Lovejoy Station, Nashville, Selma and Columbus (Ga.) It was mustered out at Chicago, June 30, 1865, and paid in full, July 3, having marched 5,268 miles and traveled by rail 1,231 miles. The battery was in eleven of the hardest battles fought in the West, and in twenty-six minor battles, being in action forty-two times while on scouts, reconnaissances or outpost duty.

CHICAGO MERCANTILE BATTERY. Recruited and organized under the auspices of the Mercantile Association, an association of prominent and patriotic merchants of the City of Chicago. It was mustered into service, August 29, 1862, at Camp Douglas, participated in the Tallahatchie and Yazoo expeditions, the first attack upon Vicksburg, the battle of Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, the battles of Magnolia Hills, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge and Jackson (Miss.); also took part in Banks' Red River expedition; was mustered out at Chicago, and received final payment, July 10, 1865, having traveled, by river, sea and land, over 11,000 miles.

SPRINGFIELD LIGHT ARTILLERY. Recruited principally from the cities of Springfield, Belleville and Wenona, and mustered into service at Springfield, for the term of three years, August 21, 1862, numbering 199 men and officers. It participated in the capture of Little Rock and in the Red River expedition, and was mustered out at Springfield, 114 strong, June 30, 1865.

COGSWELL'S BATTERY, LIGHT ARTILLERY. Organized at Ottawa, Ill., and mustered in, Nov. 11, 1861, as Company A (Artillery) Fifty-third Illinois Volunteers, Colonel Cushman commanding the regiment. It participated in the advance on Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg, the battle of Missionary Ridge, and the capture of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, near Mobile. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, August 14, 1865, having served three years and nine months, marched over 7,500 miles, and participated in seven sieges and battles.

STURGES RIFLES. An independent company, organized at Chicago, armed, equipped and subsisted for nearly two months, by the patriotic generosity of Mr. Solomon Sturges; was mustered into service, May 6, 1861; in June following, was ordered to West Virginia, serving as body-guard of General McClellan; was engaged at Rich Mountain, in the siege of Yorktown, and in the seven days' battle of the Chickahominy. A portion of the company was at Antietam, the remainder having been detached as foragers, scouts, etc. It was mustered out at Washington, Nov. 25, 1862.

WAR, THE SPANISH-AMERICAN. The oppressions and misrule which had characterized the administration of affairs by the Spanish Government and its agents for generations, in the Island of Cuba, culminated, in April, 1898, in mutual declarations of war between Spain and the United States. The causes leading up to this result were the injurious effects upon American commerce and the interests of American citizens owning property in Cuba, as well as the constant expense imposed upon the Government of the United States in the maintenance of a large navy along the South Atlantic coast to suppress filibustering, superadded to the friction and unrest produced among the people of this country by the long continuance of disorders and abuses so near to our own shores, which aroused the sympathy and indignation of the entire civilized world. For three years a large proportion of the Cuban population had been in open rebellion against the Spanish Government, and, while the latter had imported a large army to the island and subjected the insurgents and their families and sympathizers to the grossest cruelties, not even excepting torture and starvation itself, their policy had failed to bring the insurgents into subjection or to restore order. In this condition of affairs the United States Government had endeavored, through negotiation, to secure a mitigation of the evils complained of, by a modification of the Spanish policy of government in the island; but all suggestions in this direction had either been resented by Spain as unwarrantable interference in her affairs, or promises of reform, when made, had been as invariably broken.

In the meantime an increasing sentiment had been growing up in the United States in favor of conceding belligerent rights to the Cuban insurgents, or the recognition of their independence, which found expression in measures proposed in Congress—all offers of friendly intervention by the United States having been rejected by Spain with evidences of indignation. Compelled, at last, to recognize its inability to subdue the insurrection, the Spanish Government, in November, 1897, made a pretense of tendering autonomy to the Cuban people, with the privilege of amnesty to the insurgents on laying down their arms. The long duration of the war and the outrages perpetrated upon the helpless "reconcentrados," coupled with the increased confidence of the insurgents in the final triumph of their cause, rendered this movement—even if intended to be carried out to the letter—of no avail. The proffer came too late, and was promptly rejected.

In this condition of affairs and with a view to greater security for American interests, the American battleship Maine was ordered to Havana, on Jan. 24, 1898. It arrived in Havana Harbor the following day, and was anchored at a point designated by the Spanish commander. On the night of February 15, following, it was blown up and destroyed by some force, as shown by after investigation, applied from without. Of a crew of 354 men belonging to the vessel at the time, 266 were either killed outright by the explosion, or died from their wounds. Not only the American people, but the entire civilized world, was shocked by the catastrophe. An act of horrible treachery had been perpetrated against an American vessel and its crew on a peaceful mission in the harbor of a professedly friendly nation.

The successive steps leading to actual hostilities were rapid and eventful. One of the earliest and most significant of these was the passage, by a unanimous vote of both houses of Congress, on March 9, of an appropriation placing $50,000,000 in the hands of the President as an emergency fund for purposes of national defense. This was followed, two days later, by an order for the mobilization of the army. The more important events following this step were: An order, under date of April 5, withdrawing American consuls from Spanish stations; the departure, on April 9, of Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee from Havana; April 19, the adoption by Congress of concurrent resolutions declaring Cuba independent and directing the President to use the land and naval forces of the United States to put an end to Spanish authority in the island; April 20, the sending to the Spanish Government, by the President, of an ultimatum in accordance with this act; April 21, the delivery to Minister Woodford, at Madrid, of his passports without waiting for the presentation of the ultimatum, with the departure of the Spanish Minister from Washington; April 23, the issue of a call by the President for 125,000 volunteers; April 24, the final declaration of war by Spain; April 25, the adoption by Congress of a resolution declaring that war had existed from April 21; on the same date an order to Admiral Dewey, in command of the Asiatic Squadron at Hongkong, to sail for Manila with a view to investing that city and blockading Philippine ports.

The chief events subsequent to the declaration of war embraced the following: May 1, the destruction by Admiral Dewey's squadron of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila; May 19, the arrival of the Spanish Admiral Cervera's fleet at Santiago de Cuba; May 25, a second call by the President for 75,000 volunteers; July 3, the attempt of Cervera's fleet to escape, and its destruction off Santiago; July 17, the surrender of Santiago to the forces under General Shafter; July 30, the statement by the President, through the French Ambassador at Washington, of the terms on which the United States would consent to make peace; August 9, acceptance of the peace terms by Spain, followed, three days later, by the signing of the peace protocol; September 9, the appointment by the President of Peace Commissioners on the part of the United States; Sept. 18, the announcement of the Peace Commissioners selected by Spain; October 1, the beginning of the Peace Conference by the representatives of the two powers, at Paris, and the formal signing, on December 10, of the peace treaty, including the recognition by Spain of the freedom of Cuba, with the transfer to the United States of Porto Rico and her other West India islands, together with the surrender of the Philippines for a consideration of $20,000,000.

Seldom, if ever, in the history of nations have such vast and far-reaching results been accomplished within so short a period. The war, which practically began with the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila Harbor—an event which aroused the enthusiasm of the whole American people, and won the respect and admiration of other nations—was practically ended by the surrender of Santiago and the declaration by the President of the conditions of peace just three months later. Succeeding events, up to the formal signing of the peace treaty, were merely the recognition of results previously determined.

HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS.—The part played by Illinois in connection with these events may be briefly summarized in the history of Illinois regiments and other organizations. Under the first call of the President for 125,000 volunteers, eight regiments—seven of infantry and one of cavalry—were assigned to Illinois, to which was subsequently added, on application through Governor Tanner, one battery of light artillery. The infantry regiments were made up of the Illinois National Guard, numbered consecutively from one to seven, and were practically mobilized at their home stations within forty-eight hours from the receipt of the call, and began to arrive at Camp Tanner, near Springfield, the place of rendezvous, on April 26, the day after the issue of the Governor's call. The record of Illinois troops is conspicuous for the promptness of their response and the completeness of their organization—in this respect being unsurpassed by those of any other State. Under the call of May 25 for an additional force of 75,000 men, the quota assigned to Illinois was two regiments, which were promptly furnished, taking the names of the Eighth and Ninth. The first of these belonged to the Illinois National Guard, as the regiments mustered in under the first call had done, while the Ninth was one of a number of "Provisional Regiments" which had tendered their services to the Government. Some twenty-five other regiments of this class, more or less complete, stood ready to perfect their organizations should there be occasion for their services. The aggregate strength of Illinois organizations at date of muster out from the United States service was 12,280—11,789 men and 491 officers.

FIRST REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEERS (originally Illinois National Guard) was organized at Chicago, and mustered into the United States service at Camp Tanner (Springfield), under the command of Col. Henry L. Turner, May 13, 1898; left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga) May 17; assigned to First Brigade, Third Division, of the First Army Corps; started for Tampa, Fla., June 2, but soon after arrival there was transferred to Picnic Island, and assigned to provost duty in place of the First United States Infantry. On June 30 the bulk of the regiment embarked for Cuba, but was detained in the harbor at Key West until July 5, when the vessel sailed for Santiago, arriving in Guantanamo Bay on the evening of the 8th. Disembarking on the 10th, the whole regiment arrived on the firing line on the 11th, spent several days and nights in the trenches before Santiago, and were present at the surrender of that city on the 17th. Two companies had previously been detached for the scarcely less perilous duty of service in the fever hospitals and in caring for their wounded comrades. The next month was spent on guard duty in the captured city, until August 25, when, depleted in numbers and weakened by fever, the bulk of the regiment was transferred by hospital boats to Camp Wikoff, on Montauk Point, L. I. The members of the regiment able to travel left Camp Wikoff, September 8, for Chicago, arriving two days later, where they met an enthusiastic reception and were mustered out, November 17, 1,235 strong (rank and file)—a considerable number of recruits having joined the regiment just before leaving Tampa. The record of the First was conspicuous by the fact that it was the only Illinois regiment to see service in Cuba during the progress of actual hostilities. Before leaving Tampa some eighty members of the regiment were detailed for engineering duty in Porto Rico, sailed for that island on July 12, and were among the first to perform service there. The First suffered severely from yellow fever while in Cuba, but, as a regiment, while in the service, made a brilliant record, which was highly complimented in the official reports of its commanding officers.

SECOND REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (originally Second I. N. G.). This regiment, also from Chicago, began to arrive at Springfield, April 27, 1898—at that time numbering 1,202 men and 47 officers, under command of Col. George M. Moulton; was mustered in between May 4 and May 15; on May 17 started for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where, as a part of the Seventh Army Corps, under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, it assisted in the dedication of Camp Cuba Libre. October 25 it was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at "Camp Lee" until December 8, when two battalions embarked for Havana, landing on the 15th, being followed, a few days later, by the Third Battalion, and stationed at Camp Columbia. From Dec. 17 to Jan. 11, 1899, Colonel Moulton served as Chief of Police for the city of Havana. On March 28 to 30 the regiment left Camp Columbia in detachments for Augusta, Ga., where it arrived April 5, and was mustered out, April 26, 1,051 strong (rank and file), and returned to Chicago. During its stay in Cuba the regiment did not lose a man. A history of this regiment has been written by Rev. H. W. Bolton, its late Chaplain.

THIRD REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies of the Illinois National Guard from the counties of La Salle, Livingston, Kane, Kankakee, McHenry, Ogle, Will, and Winnebago, under command of Col. Fred Bennitt, reported at Springfield, with 1,170 men and 50 officers, on April 27; was mustered in May 7, 1898; transferred from Springfield to Camp Thomas (Chickamauga), May 14; on July 22 left Chickamauga for Porto Rico; on the 28th sailed from Newport News, on the liner St. Louis, arriving at Ponce, Porto Rico, on July 31; soon after disembarking captured Arroyo, and assisted in the capture of Guayama, which was the beginning of General Brooke's advance across the island to San Juan, when intelligence was received of the signing of the peace protocol by Spain. From August 13 to October 1 the Third continued in the performance of guard duty in Porto Rico; on October 22, 986 men and 39 officers took transport for home by way of New York, arriving in Chicago, November 11, the several companies being mustered out at their respective home stations. Its strength at final muster-out was 1,273 men and officers. This regiment had the distinction of being one of the first to see service in Porto Rico, but suffered severely from fever and other diseases during the three months of its stay in the island.

FOURTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies from Champaign, Coles, Douglas, Edgar, Effingham, Fayette, Jackson, Jefferson, Montgomery, Richland, and St. Clair counties; mustered into the service at Springfield, May 20, under command of Col. Casimer Andel; started immediately for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where it was stationed at Camp Cuba Libre as a part of the Seventh Corps under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee; in October was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at Camp Onward until about the first of January, when the regiment took ship for Havana. Here the regiment was stationed at Camp Columbia until April 4, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out at Camp Mackenzie (Augusta), May 2, the companies returning to their respective home stations. During a part of its stay at Jacksonville, and again at Savannah, the regiment was employed on guard duty. While at Jacksonville Colonel Andel was suspended by court-martial, and finally tendered his resignation, his place being supplied by Lieut.-Col. Eben Swift, of the Ninth.

FIFTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was the first regiment to report, and was mustered in at Springfield, May 7, 1898, under command of Col. James S. Culver, being finally composed of twelve companies from Pike, Christian, Sangamon, McLean, Montgomery, Adams, Tazewell, Macon, Morgan, Peoria, and Fulton counties; on May 14 left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga, Ga.), being assigned to the command of General Brooke; August 3 left Chickamauga for Newport News, Va., with the expectation of embarking for Porto Rico—a previous order of July 26 to the same purport having been countermanded; at Newport News embarked on the transport Obdam, but again the order was rescinded, and, after remaining on board thirty-six hours, the regiment was disembarked. The next move was made to Lexington, Ky., where the regiment—having lost hope of reaching “the front”—remained until Sept. 5, when it returned to Springfield for final muster-out. This regiment was composed of some of the best material in the State, and anxious for active service, but after a succession of disappointments, was compelled to return to its home station without meeting the enemy. After its arrival at Springfield the regiment was furloughed for thirty days and finally mustered out, October 16, numbering 1,213 men and 47 officers.

SIXTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, consisting of twelve companies from the counties of Rock Island, Knox, Whiteside, Lee, Carroll, Stephenson, Henry, Warren, Bureau, and Jo Daviess, was mustered in May 11, 1898, under command of Col. D. Jack Foster; on May 17 left Springfield for Camp Alger, Va.; July 5 the regiment moved to Charleston, S. C., where a part embarked for Siboney, Cuba, but the whole regiment was soon after united in General Miles' expedition for the invasion of Porto Rico, landing at Guanico on July 25, and advancing into the interior as far as Adjunta and Utuado. After several weeks' service in the interior, the regiment returned to Ponce, and on September 7 took transport for the return home, arrived at Springfield a week later, and was mustered out November 25, the regiment at that time consisting of 1,239 men and 49 officers.

SEVENTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (known as the “Hibernian Rifles”). Two battalions of this regiment reported at Springfield, April 27, with 33 officers and 765 enlisted men, being afterwards increased to the maxi-mun; was mustered into the United States service, under command of Col. Marcus Kavanagh, May 18, 1898; on May 28 started for Camp Alger, Va.; was afterwards encamped at Thoroughfare Gap and Camp Meade; on September 9 returned to Springfield, was furloughed for thirty days, and mustered out, October 20, numbering 1,260 men and 49 officers. Like the Fifth, the Seventh saw no actual service in the field.

EIGHTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (colored regiment), mustered into the service at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 23, 1898, being composed wholly of Afro-Americans under officers of their own race, with Col. John R. Marshall in command, the muster-roll showing 1,195 men and 76 officers. The six companies, from A to F, were from Chicago, the other five being, respectively, from Bloomington, Springfield, Quincy, Litchfield, Mound City and Metropolis, and Cairo. The regiment having tendered their services to relieve the First Illinois on duty at Santiago de Cuba, it started for Cuba, August 8, by way of New York; immediately on arrival at Santiago, a week later, was assigned to duty, but subsequently transferred to San Luis, where Colone, Marshall was made military governor. The major part of the regiment remained here until ordered home early in March, 1899, arrived at Chicago, March 15, and was mustered out, April 3, 1,226 strong, rank and file, having been in service nine months and six days.

NINTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was organized from the counties of Southern Illinois, and mustered in at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 4-11, 1898, under command of Col. James R. Campbell; arrived at Camp Cuba Libre (Jacksonville, Fla.), August 9; two months later was transferred to Savannah, Ga.; was moved to Havana in December, where it remained until May, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out there, May 20, 1899, at that time consisting of 1,095 men and 46 officers. From Augusta the several companies returned to their respective home stations. The Ninth was the only "Provisional Regiment" from Illinois mustered into the service during the war, the other regiments all belonging to the National Guard.

FIRST ILLINOIS CAVALRY was organized at Chicago immediately after the President's first call, seven companies being recruited from Chicago, two from Bloomington, and one each from Springfield, Elkhart, and Lacon; was mustered in at Springfield, May 21, 1898, under command of Col. Edward C. Young; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 30, remaining there until August 24, when it returned to Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, where it was stationed until October 11, when it was mustered out, at that time consisting of 1,158 men and 50 officers. Although the regiment saw no active service in the field, it established an excellent record for itself in respect to discipline.

FIRST ENGINEERING CORPS, consisting of 80 men detailed from the First Illinois Volunteers, were among the first Illinois soldiers to see service in Porto Rico, accompanying General Miles' expedition in the latter part of July, and being engaged for a time in the construction of bridges in aid of the intended advance across the island. On September 8 they embarked for the return home, arrived at Chicago, September 17, and were mustered out November 20.

BATTERY A (I. N. G.), from Danville, Ill., was mustered in under a special order of the War Department, May 12, 1898, under command of Capt. Oscar P. Yaeger, consisting of 118 men; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 19, and, two months later, joined in General Miles' Porto Rico expedition, landing at Guanico on August 3, and taking part in the affair at Guayama on the 12th. News of peace having been received, the Battery returned to Ponce, where it remained until September 7, when it started on the return home by way of New York, arrived at Danville, September 17, was furloughed for sixty days, and mustered out November 25. The Battery was equipped with modern breech-loading rapid-firing guns, operated by practical artillerymen and prepared for effective service.

NAVAL RESERVES.—One of the earliest steps taken by the Government after it became apparent that hostilities could not be averted, was to begin preparation for strengthening the naval arm of the service. The existence of the "Naval Militia," first organized in 1893, placed Illinois in an exceptionally favorable position for making a prompt response to the call of the Government, as well as furnishing a superior class of men for service—a fact evidenced during the operations in the West Indies. Gen. John McNulta, as head of the local committee, was active in calling the attention of the Navy Department to the value of the service to be rendered by this organization, which resulted in its being enlisted practically as a body, taking the name of "Naval Reserves"—all but eighty-eight of the number passing the physical examination, the places of these being promptly filled by new recruits. The first detachment of over 200 left Chicago May 2, under the command of Lieut.-Com. John M. Hawley, followed soon after by the remainder of the First Battalion, making the whole number from Chicago 400, with 267, constituting the Second Battalion, from other towns of the State. The latter was made up of 147 men from Moline, 58 from Quincy, and 62 from Alton—making a total from the State of 667. This does not include others, not belonging to this organization, who enlisted for service in the navy during the war, which raised the whole number for the State over 1,000. The Reserves enlisted from Illinois occupied a different relation to the Government from that of the "naval militia" of other States, which retained their State organizations, while those from Illinois were regularly mustered into the United States service. The recruits from Illinois were embarked at Key West, Norfolk and New York, and distributed among fifty-two different vessels, including nearly every vessel belonging to the North Atlantic Squadron. They saw service in nearly every department from the position of stokers in the hold to that of gunners in the turrets of the big battleships, the largest number (60) being assigned to the famous battleship Oregon, while the cruiser Yale followed with 47; the Harvard with 35; Cincinnati, 27; Yankton, 19; Franklin, 18; Montgomery and Indiana, each, 17; Hector, 14; Marietta, 11; Wilmington and Lancaster, 10 each, and others down to one each. Illinois sailors thus had the privilege of participating in the brilliant affair of July 3, which resulted in the destruction of Cervera's fleet off Santiago, as also in nearly every other event in the West Indies of less importance, without the loss of a man while in the service, although among the most exposed. They were mustered out at different times, as they could be spared from the service, or the vessels to which they were attached went out of commission, a portion serving out their full term of one year. The Reserves from Chicago retain their organization under the name of "Naval Reserve Veterans," with headquarters in the Masonic Temple Building, Chicago.

WARD, James H., ex-Congressman, was born in Chicago, Nov. 30, 1853, and educated in the Chicago public schools and at the University of Notre Dame, graduating from the latter in 1873. Three years later he graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, and was admitted to the bar. Since then he has continued to practice his profession in his native city. In 1879 he was elected Supervisor of the town of West Chicago, and, in 1884, was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket, and the same year, was the successful candidate of his party for Congress in the Third Illinois District, serving one term.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS, a tribe of the Dakota, or Sioux, stock, which at one time occupied a part of Northern Illinois. The word Winnebago is a corruption of the French Ouinebegoutz, Onimbegouc, etc., the diphthong "ou" taking the place of the consonant "w," which is wanting in the French alphabet. These were, in turn, French misspellings of an Algonquin term meaning "fetid," which the latter tribe applied to the Winnebagoes because they had come from the western ocean—the salt (or "fetid") water. In their advance towards the East the Winnebagoes early invaded the country of the Illinois, but were finally driven northward by the latter, who surpassed them in numbers rather than in bravery. The invaders settled in Wisconsin, near the Fox River, and here they were first visited by the Jesuit Fathers in the seventeenth century. (See Jesuit Relations.) The Winnebagoes are commonly regarded as a Wisconsin tribe; yet, that they claimed territorial rights in Illinois is shown by the fact that the treaty of Prairie du Chien (August 1, 1829), alludes to a Winnebago village located in what is now Jo Daviess County, near the mouth of the Pecatonica River. While, as a rule, the tribe, if left to itself, was disposed to live in amity with the whites, it was carried away by the eloquence and diplomacy of Tecumseh and the cajoleries of "The Prophet." General Harrison especially alludes to the bravery of the Winnebago warriors at Tipppecanoe, which he attributes in part, however, to a superstitious faith in "The Prophet." In June or July, 1827, an unprovoked and brutal outrage by the whites upon an unoffending and practically defenseless party of Winnebagoes, near Prairie du Chien brought on what is known as the "Winnebago War." (See Winnebago War.) The tribe took no part in the Black Hawk War, largely because of the great influence and shrewd tactic of their chief, Naw-caw. By treaties executed in 1832 and 1837 the Winnebagoes ceded to the United States all their lands lying east of the Mississippi. They were finally removed west of that river, and, after many shiftings of location, were placed upon the Omaha Reservation in Eastern Nebraska, where their industry, thrift and peaceable disposition elicited high praise from Government officials.

WARNER, Vespasian, lawyer and Member of Congress, was born in De Witt County, Ill., April 23, 1842, and has lived all his life in his native county—his present residence being Clinton. After a short course in Lombard University, while studying law in the office of Hon. Lawrence Weldon, at Clinton, he enlisted as a private soldier of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, in June, 1861, serving until July, 1866, when he was mustered out with the rank of Captain and brevet Major. He received a gunshot wound at Shiloh, but continued to serve in the Army of the Tennessee until the evacuation of Atlanta, when he was ordered North on account of disability. His last service was in fighting Indians on the plains. After the war he completed his law studies at Harvard University, graduating in 1868, when he entered into a law partnership with Clifton H. Moore of Clinton. He served as Judge-Advocate General of the Illinois National Guard for several years, with the rank of Colonel, under the administrations of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer, and, in 1894, was nominated and elected, as a Republican, to the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Thirteenth District, being re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, Mr. Warner was a member of the Committees on Agriculture and Invalid Pensions, and Chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

WARREN, a village in Jo Daviess County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways, 26 miles west-northwest of Freeport and 27 miles east by north of Galena. The surrounding region is agricultural and stock-raising; there are also lead mines in the vicinity. Tobacco is grown to some extent. Warren has a flouring mill, tin factory, creamery and stone quarries, a State bank, water supply from artesian wells, fire department, gas plant, two weekly newspapers, five churches, a high school, an academy and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,172; (1900), 1,327.

WARREN, Calvin A., lawyer, was born in Essex County, N. Y., June 3, 1807; in his youth, worked for a time, as a typographer, in the office of "The Northern Spectator," at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., side by side with Horace Greeley, afterwards the founder of "The New York Tribune." Later, he became one of the publishers of "The Palladium" at Ballston, N. Y., but, in 1832, removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, where he began the study of law, completing his course at Transylvania University, Ky., in 1834, and beginning practice at Batavia, Ohio, as the partner of Thomas Morris, then a United States Senator from Ohio, whose daughter he married, thereby becoming the brother-in-law of the late Isaac N. Morris, of Quincy, Ill. In 1836, Mr. Warren came to Quincy, Adams County, Ill., but soon after removed to Warsaw in Hancock County, where he resided until 1839, when he returned to Quincy. Here he continued in practice, either alone or as a partner, at different times, of several of the leading attorneys of that city. Although he held no office except that of Master in Chancery, which he occupied for some sixteen years, the possession of an inexhaustible fund of humor, with strong practical sense and decided ability as a speaker, gave him great popularity at the bar and upon the stump, and made him a recognized leader in the ranks of the Democratic party, of which he was a life-long member. He served as Presidential Elector on the Pierce ticket in 1852, and was the nominee of his party for the same position on one or two other occasions. Died, at Quincy, Feb. 22, 1881.

WARREN, Hooper, pioneer journalist, was born at Walpole, N. H., in 1790; learned the printer's trade on the Rutland (Vt.) "Herald"; in 1814 went to Delaware, whence, three years later, he emigrated to Kentucky, working for a time on a paper at Frankfort. In 1818 he came to St. Louis and worked in the office of the old "Missouri Gazette" (the predecessor of "The Republican"), and also acted as the agent of a lumber company at Cairo, Ill., when the whole population of that place consisted of one family domiciled on a grounded flat-boat. In March, 1819, he established, at Edwardsville, the third paper in Illinois, its predecessors being "The Illinois Intelligencer," at Kaskaskia, and "The Illinois Emigrant," at Shawneetown. The name given to the new paper was "The Spectator," and the contest over the effort to introduce a pro-slavery clause in the State Constitution soon brought it into prominence. Backed by Governor Coles, Congressman Daniel P. Cook, Judge S. D. Lockwood, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Wm. H. Brown (afterwards of Chicago), George Churchill and other opponents of slavery, "The Spectator" made a sturdy fight in opposition to the scheme, which ended in defeat of the measure by the rejection at the polls, in 1824, of the proposition for a Constitutional Convention. Warren left the Edwardsville paper in 1825, and was, for a time, associated with "The National Crisis," an anti-slavery paper at Cincinnati, but soon returned to Illinois and established "The Sangamon Spectator"—the first paper ever published at the present State capital. This he sold out in 1829, and, for the next three years, was connected with "The Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald," at Galena. Abandoning this field in 1832, he removed to Hennepin, where, within the next five years, he held the offices of Clerk of the Circuit and County Commissioners' Courts and ex-officio Recorder of Deeds. In 1836 he began the publication of the third paper in Chicago—"The Commercial Advertiser" (a weekly)—which was continued a little more than a year, when it was abandoned, and he settled on a farm at Henry, Marshall County. His further newspaper ventures were, as the associate of Zebina Eastman, in the publication of "The Genius of Liberty," at Lowell, La Salle County, and "The Western Citizen"—afterwards "The Free West"—in Chicago. (See Eastman, Zebina, and Lundy, Benjamin.) On the discontinuance of "The Free West" in 1856, he again retired to his farm at Henry, where he spent the remainder of his days. While returning home from a visit to Chicago, in August, 1864, he was taken ill at Mendota, dying there on the 22d of the month.

WARREN, John Esaias, diplomatist and real-estate operator, was born in Troy, N. Y., in 1826, graduated at Union College and was connected with the American Legation to Spain during the administration of President Pierce; in 1859-60 was a member of the Minnesota Legislature and, in 1861-62, Mayor of St. Paul; in 1867, came to Chicago, where, while engaged in real-estate business, he became known to the press as the author of a series of articles entitled "Topics of the Time." In 1886 he took up his residence in Brussels, Belgium, where he died, July 6, 1896. Mr. Warren was author of several volumes of travel, of which "An Attache in Spain" and "Para" are most important.

WARREN COUNTY. A western county, created by act of the Legislature, in 1825, but not fully organized until 1830, having at that time about 350 inhabitants; has an area of 540 square miles, and was named for Gen. Joseph Warren. It is drained by the Henderson River and its affluents, and is traversed by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (two divisions), the Iowa Central and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroads. Bituminous coal is mined and limestone is quarried in large quantities. The county's early development was retarded in consequence of having become the "seat of war," during the Black Hawk War. The principal products are grain and live-stock, although manufacturing is carried on to some extent. The county-seat and chief city is Monmouth (which see). Roseville is a shipping point. Population (1880), 22,933. (1890), 21,281; (1900), 23,163.

WARRENSBURG, a town of Macon County, on Peoria Division Ill. Cent. Railway, 9 miles northwest of Decatur; has elevators, canning factory, a bank and newspaper. Pop. (1900), 503.

WARSAW, the largest town in Hancock County, and admirably situated for trade. It stands on a bluff on the Mississippi River, some three miles below Keokuk, and about 40 miles above Quincy. It is the western terminus of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway, and lies 116 miles west-southwest of Peoria. Old Fort Edwards, established by Gen. Zachary Taylor, during the War of 1812, was located within the limits of the present city of Warsaw, opposite the mouth of the Des Moines River. An iron foundry, a large woolen mill, a plow factory and cooperage works are its principal manufacturing establishments. The channel of the Mississippi admits of the passage of the largest steamers up to this point. Warsaw has eight churches, a system of common schools comprising one high and three grammar schools, a National bank and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 3,105; (1890), 2,721; (1900), 2,335.

WASHBURN, a village of Woodford County, on a branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway 25 miles northeast of Peoria; has banks and a weekly paper; the district is agricultural. Population (1890), 598; (1900), 703.

WASHBURN, Elihu Benjamin, Congressman and diplomatist, was born at Livermore, Maine, Sept. 23, 1816; in early life learned the trade of a printer, but graduated from Harvard Law School and was admitted to the bar in 1840. Coming west, he settled at Galena, forming a partnership with Charles S. Hempstead, for the practice of law, in 1841. He was a stalwart Whig, and, as such, was elected to Congress in 1852. He continued to represent his District until 1869, taking a prominent position, as a Republican, on the organization of that party. On account of his long service he was known as the "Father of the House," administering the Speaker's oath three times to Schuyler Colfax and once to James G. Blaine. He was appointed Secretary of State by General Grant in 1869, but surrendered his portfolio to become Envoy to France, in which capacity he achieved great distinction. He was the only official representative of a foreign government who remained in Paris, during the siege of that city by the Germans (1870-71) and the reign of the "Commune." For his conduct he was honored by the Governments of France and Germany alike. On his return to the United States, he made his home in Chicago, where he devoted his latter years chiefly to literary labor, and where he died, Oct. 22, 1887. He was strongly favored as a candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

WASHINGTON, a city in Tazewell County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads. It is 21 miles west of El Paso, and 12 miles east of Peoria. Carriages, plows and farming implements constitute the manufactured output. It is also an important shipping-point for farm products. It has electric light and water-works plants, eight churches, a graded school, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,301; (1900), 1,451.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, an interior county of Southern Illinois, east of St. Louis; is drained by the Kaskaskia River and the Elkhorn, Beaucoup and Muddy Creeks; was organized in 1818, and has an area of 540 square miles. The surface is diversified, well watered and timbered. The soil is of variable fertility. Corn, wheat and oats are the chief agricultural products. Manufacturing is carried on to some extent, among the products being agricultural implements, flour, carriages and wagons. The most important town is Nashville, which is also the county-seat. Population (1890), 19,262; (1900), 19,526. Washington was one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the organization of the State Government, being one of the last three created during the Territorial period—the other two being Franklin and Union.

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 12 miles southwest of Chicago; has a graded school, female seminary, military school, a car factory, several churches and a newspaper. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1890.

WATAGA, a village of Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 8 miles northeast of Galesburg. Population (1900), 545.

WATERLOO, the county-seat and chief town of Monroe County, on the Illinois Division of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, 24 miles east of south from St. Louis. The region is chiefly agricultural, but underlaid with coal. Its industries embrace two flour mills, a plow factory, distillery, creamery, two ice plants, and some minor concerns. The city has municipal water and electric light plants, four churches, a graded school and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,860; (1900), 2,114.

WATERMAN, Arba Nelson, lawyer and jurist, was born at Greensboro, Orleans County, Vt., Feb. 3, 1836. After receiving an academic education and teaching for a time, he read law at Montpelier and, later, passed through the Albany Law School. In 1861 he was admitted to the bar, removed to Joliet, Ill., and opened an office. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the One Hundredth Illinois Volunteers, serving with the Army of the Cumberland for two years, and being mustered out in August, 1864, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. On leaving the army, Colonel Waterman commenced practice in Chicago. In 1873-74 he represented the Eleventh Ward in the City Council. In 1887 he was elected to the bench of the Cook County Circuit Court, and was re-elected in 1891 and, again, in 1897. In 1890 he was assigned as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court.

WATSEKA, the county-seat of Iroquois County, situated on the Iroquois River, at the mouth of Sugar Creek, and at the intersection of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads, 77 miles south of Chicago, 46 miles north of Danville and 14 miles east of Gilman. It has flour-mills, brick and tile works and foundries, besides several churches, banks, a graded school and three weekly newspapers. Artesian well water is obtained by boring to the depth of 100 to 160 feet, and some forty flowing streams from these shafts are in the place. Population (1890), 2,017; (1900), 2,505.

WATTS, Amos, jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., Oct. 25, 1821, but removed to Washington County in boyhood, and was elected County Clerk in 1847, '49 and '53, and State's Attorney for the Second Judicial District in 1856 and '60; then became editor and proprietor of a newspaper, later resuming the practice of law, and, in 1873, was elected Circuit Judge, remaining in office until his death, at Nashville, Ill. Dec. 6, 1888.

WAUKEGAN, the county-seat and principal city of Lake County, situated on the shore of Lake Michigan and on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, about 36 miles north by west from Chicago, and 50 miles south of Milwaukee; is also the northern terminus of the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and connected by electric lines with Chicago and Fox Lake. Lake Michigan is about 80 miles wide opposite this point. Waukegan was first known as "Little Fort," from the remains of an old fort that stood on its site. The principal part of the city is built on a bluff, which rises abruptly to the height of about fifty feet. Between the bluff and the shore is a flat tract about 400 yards wide which is occupied by gardens, dwellings, warehouses and manufactories. The manufactures include steel-wire, refined sugar, scales, agricultural implements, brass and iron products, sash, doors and blinds, leather, beer, etc.; the city has paved streets, gas and electric light plants, three banks, eight or ten churches, graded and high schools and two newspapers. A large trade in grain, lumber, coal and dairy products is carried on. Pop. (1890), 4,915; (1900), 9,426.

WAUKEGAN & SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY. (See Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railway.)

WAVERLY, a city in Morgan County, 18 miles southeast of Jacksonville, on the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroads. It was originally settled by enterprising emigrants from New England, whose descendants constitute a large proportion of the population. It is the center of a rich agricultural region, has a fine graded school, six or seven churches, two banks, two newspapers and tile works. Population (1880), 1,124; (1890), 1,337; (1900), 1,573.

WAYNE, (Gen.) Anthony, soldier, was born in Chester County, Pa., Jan. 1, 1745, of Anglo-Irish descent, graduated as a Surveyor, and first practiced his profession in Nova Scotia. During the years immediately antecedent to the Revolution he was prominent in the colonial councils of his native State, to which he had returned in 1767, where he became a member of the "Committee of Safety." On June 3, 1776, he was commissioned Colonel of the Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania troops in the Continental army, and, during the War of the Revolution, was conspicuous for his courage and ability as a leader. One of his most daring and successful achievements was the capture of Stony Point, in 1779, when—the works having been carried and Wayne having received, what was supposed to be, his death-wound—he entered the fort, supported by his aids. For this service he was awarded a gold medal by Congress. He also took a conspicuous part in the investiture and capture of Yorktown. In October, 1783, he was brevetted Major-General. In 1784 he was elected to the Pennsylvania Legislature. A few years later he settled in Georgia, which State he represented in Congress for seven months, when his seat was declared vacant after contest. In April, 1792, he was confirmed as General-in-Chief of the United States Army, on nomination of President Washington. His connection with Illinois history began shortly after

St. Clair's defeat, when he led a force into Ohio (1783) and erected a stockade at Greenville, which he named Fort Recovery; his object being to subdue the hostile savage tribes. In this he was eminently successful and, on August 3, 1793, after a victorious campaign, negotiated the Treaty of Greenville, as broad in its provisions as it was far-reaching in its influence. He was a daring fighter, and although Washington called him "prudent," his dauntlessness earned for him the sobriquet of "Mad Anthony." In matters of dress he was punctilious, and, on this account, he was sometimes dubbed "Dandy Wayne." He was one of the few white officers whom all the Western Indian tribes at once feared and respected. They named him "Black Snake" and "Tornado." He died at Presque Isle near Erie, Dec. 15, 1796. Thirteen years afterward his remains were removed by one of his sons, and interred in Badnor churchyard, in his native county. The Pennsylvania Historical Society erected a marble monument over his grave, and appropriately dedicated it on July 4 of the same year.

WAYNE COUNTY, in the southeast quarter of the State; has an area of 720 square miles; was organized in 1819, and named for Gen. Anthony Wayne. The county is watered and drained by the Little Wabash and its branches, notably the Skillet Fork. At the first election held in the county, only fifteen votes were cast. Early life was exceedingly primitive, the first settlers pounding corn into meal with a wooden pestle, a hollowed stump being used as a mortar. The first mill erected (of the antique South Carolina pattern) charged 25 cents per bushel for grinding. Prairie and woodland make up the surface, and the soil is fertile. Railroad facilities are furnished by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio (Southwestern) Railroads. Corn, oats, tobacco, wheat, hay and wool are the chief agricultural products. Saw mills are numerous and there are also carriage and wagon factories. Fairfield is the county-seat. Population (1880), 21,291; (1890), 23,806; (1900), 27,626.

WEAS, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. They called themselves "We-wee-hahs," and were spoken of by the French as "Oui-at-a-nons" and "Oui-as." Other corruptions of the name were common among the British and American colonists. In 1718 they had a village at Chicago, but abandoned it through fear of their hostile neighbors, the Chippewas and Pottawatomies. The Weas were, at one time, brave and warlike; but their numbers were reduced by constant warfare and disease, and, in the end, debauchery enervated and demoralized them. They were removed west of the Mississippi and given a reservation in Miami County, Kan. This they ultimately sold, and, under the leadership of Baptiste Peoria, united with their few remaining brethren of the Miamis and with the remnant of the Ill-i-ni under the title of the "confederated tribes," and settled in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Piankeshaws.)

WEBB, Edwin B., early lawyer and politician, was born about 1802, came to the vicinity of Carmi, White County, Ill., about 1828 to 1830, and, still later, studied law at Transylvania University. He held the office of Prosecuting Attorney of White County, and, in 1834, was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1842, and, in the Senate, from 1842 to '46. During his service in the House he was a colleague and political and personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. He opposed the internal improvement scheme of 1837, predicting many of the disasters which were actually realized a few years later. He was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Whig ticket, in 1844 and '48, and, in 1852, received the nomination for Governor as the opponent of Joel A. Matteson, two years later, being an unsuccessful candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court in opposition to Judge W. B. Scates. While practicing law at Carmi, he was also a partner of his brother in the mercantile business. Died, Oct. 14, 1858, in the 56th year of his age.

WEBB, Henry Livingston, soldier and pioneer (an elder brother of James Watson Webb, a noted New York journalist), was born at Claverack, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1795; served as a soldier in the War of 1812, came to Southern Illinois in 1817, and became one of the founders of the town of America near the mouth of the Ohio; was Representative in the Fourth and Eleventh General Assemblies, a Major in the Black Hawk War and Captain of volunteers and, afterwards, Colonel of regulars, in the Mexican War. In 1860 he went to Texas and served, for a time, in a semi-military capacity under the Confederate Government; returned to Illinois in 1869, and died, at Makanda, Oct. 5, 1876.

WEBSTER, Fletcher, lawyer and soldier, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., July 23, 1813; graduated at Harvard in 1833, and studied law with his father (Daniel Webster); in 1837, located at Peru, Ill., where he practiced three years. His father having been appointed Secretary of State in 1841, the son became his private secretary, was also Secretary of Legation to Caleb Cushing (Minister to China) in 1843, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature in 1847, and Surveyor of the Port of Boston, 1850-61; the latter year became Colonel of the Twelfth Massachusetts Volunteers, and was killed in the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862.

WEBSTER, Joseph Dana, civil engineer and soldier, was born at Old Hampton, N. H., August 25, 1811. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1832, and afterwards read law at Newburyport, Mass. His natural inclination was for engineering, and, after serving for a time in the Engineer and War offices, at Washington, was made a United States civil engineer (1835) and, on July 7, 1838, entered the army as Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers. He served through the Mexican War, was made First Lieutenant in 1849, and promoted to a captaincy, in March, 1853. Thirteen months later he resigned, removing to Chicago, where he made his permanent home, and soon after was identified, for a time, with the proprietorship of "The Chicago Tribune." He was President of the commission that perfected the Chicago sewerage system, and designed and executed the raising of the grade of a large portion of the city from two to eight feet, while blocks of buildings being raised by jack screws, while new foundations were inserted. At the outbreak of the Civil War he tendered his services to the Government and superintended the erection of the fortifications at Cairo, Ill., and Paducah, Ky. On April 7, 1861, he was commissioned Paymaster of Volunteers, with the rank of Major, and, in February, 1862, Colonel of the First Illinois Artillery. For several months he was chief of General Grant's staff, participating in the capture of Forts Donelson and Henry, and in the battle of Shiloh, in the latter as Chief of Artillery. In October, 1862, the War Department detailed him to make a survey of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, and, the following month, he was commissioned Brigadier-General of Volunteers, serving as Military Governor of Memphis and Superintendent of military railroads. He was again chief of staff to General Grant during the Vicksburg campaign, and, from 1864 until the close of the war, occupied the same relation to General Sherman. He was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers, March 13, 1865, but, resigning Nov. 6, following, returned to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. From 1869 to 1872 he was Assessor of Internal Revenue there, and, later, Assistant United States Treasurer, and, in July, 1872, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue. Died, at Chicago, March 12, 1876.

WELCH, William R., lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., Jan. 22, 1828, educated at Transylvania University, Lexington, graduating from the academic department in 1847, and, from the law school, in 1851. In 1864 he removed to Carlinville, Macoupin County, Ill., which place he made his permanent home. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Circuit, and re-elected in 1879 and '85. In 1884 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court for the Second District. Died, Sept. 1, 1888.

WELDON, Lawrence, one of the Judges of the United States Court of Claims, Washington, D. C., was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, in 1829; while a child, removed with his parents to Madison County, and was educated in the common schools, the local academy and at Wittenberg College, Springfield, in the same State; read law with Hon. R. A. Harrison, a prominent member of the Ohio bar, and was admitted to practice in 1854, meanwhile, in 1852-53, having served as a clerk in the office of the Secretary of State at Columbus. In 1854 he removed to Illinois, locating at Clinton, DeWitt County, where he engaged in practice; in 1860 was elected a Representative in the Twenty-second General Assembly, was also chosen a Presidential Elector the same year, and assisted in the first election of Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency. Early in 1861 he resigned his seat in the Legislature to accept the position of United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, tendered him by President Lincoln, but resigned the latter office in 1866 and, the following year, removed to Bloomington, where he continued the practice of his profession until 1883, when he was appointed, by President Arthur, an Associate Justice of the United States Court of Claims at Washington—a position which he still (1899) continues to fill. Judge Weldon is among the remaining few who rode the circuit and practiced law with Mr. Lincoln. From the time of coming to the State in 1854 to 1860, he was one of Mr. Lincoln's most intimate traveling companions in the old Eighth Circuit, which extended from Sangamon County on the west to Vermilion on the east, and of which Judge David Davis, afterwards of the Supreme Court of the United States and United States Senator, was the presiding Justice. The Judge holds in his memory many pleasant reminiscences of that day, especially of the eastern portion of the District, where he was accustomed to meet the late Senator Voorhees, Senator McDonald and other leading lawyers of Indiana, as well as the historic men whom he met at the State capital.

WELLS, Albert W., lawyer and legislator, was born at Woodstock, Conn., May 9, 1839, and enjoyed only such educational and other advantages as belonged to the average New England boy of that period. During his boyhood his family removed to New Jersey, where he attended an academy, later, graduating from Columbia College and Law School in New York City, and began practice with State Senator Robert Allen at Red Bank, N. J. During the Civil War he enlisted in a New Jersey regiment and took part in the battle of Gettysburg, resuming his profession at the close of the war. Coming west in 1870, he settled in Quincy, Ill., where he continued practice. In 1886 he was elected to the House of Representatives from Adams County, as a Democrat, and re-elected two years later. In 1890 he was advanced to the Senate, where, by re-election in 1894, he served continuously until his death in office, March 5, 1897. His abilities and long service—covering the sessions of the Thirty-fifth to the Fortieth General Assemblies—placed him at the head of the Democratic side of the Senate during the latter part of his legislative career.

WELLS, William, soldier and victim of the Fort Dearborn massacre, was born in Kentucky, about 1770. When a boy of 12, he was captured by the Miami Indians, whose chief, Little Turtle, adopted him, giving him his daughter in marriage when he grew to manhood. He was highly esteemed by the tribe as a warrior, and, in 1790, was present at the battle where Gen. Arthur St. Clair was defeated. He then realized that he was fighting against his own race, and informed his father-in-law that he intended to ally himself with the whites. Leaving the Miamis, he made his way to General Wayne, who made him Captain of a company of scouts. After the treaty of Greenville (1795) he settled on a farm near Fort Wayne, where he was joined by his Indian wife. Here he acted as Indian Agent and Justice of the Peace. In 1812 he learned of the contemplated evacuation of Fort Dearborn, and, at the head of thirty Miamis, he set out for the post, his intention being to furnish a body-guard to the non-combatants on their proposed march to Fort Wayne. On August 13, he marched out of the fort with fifteen of his dusky warriors behind him, the remainder bringing up the rear. Before a mile and a half had been traveled, the party fell into an Indian ambuscade, and an indiscriminate massacre followed. (See Fort Dearborn.) The Miamis fled, and Captain Wells' body was riddled with bullets, his head cut off and his heart taken out. He was an uncle of Mrs. Heald, wife of the commander of Fort Dearborn.

WELLS, William Harvey, educator, was born in Tolland, Conn., Feb. 27, 1812; lived on a farm until 17 years old, attending school irregularly, but made such progress that he became successively a teacher in the Teachers' Seminary at Andover and Newburyport, and, finally, Principal of the State Normal School at Westfield, Mass. In 1856 he accepted the position of Superintendent of Public Schools for the city of Chicago, serving till 1864, when he resigned. He was an organizer of the Massachusetts State Teachers' Association, one of the first editors of "The Massachusetts Teacher" and prominently connected with various benevolent, educational and learned societies; was also author of several textbooks, and assisted in the revision of "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary." Died, Jan. 21, 1885.

WENONA, city on the eastern border of Marshall County, 20 miles south of La Salle, has zinc works, public and parochial schools, a weekly paper, two banks, and five churches. A good quality of soft coal is mined here. Population (1880), 911; (1890), 1,053; (1900), 1,486.

WENTWORTH, John, early journalist and Congressman, was born at Sandwich, N. H., March 5, 1815, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1836, and came to Chicago the same year, where he became editor of "The Chicago Democrat," which had been established by John Calhoun three years previous. He soon after became proprietor of "The Democrat," of which he continued to be the publisher until it was merged into "The Chicago Tribune," July 24, 1864. He also studied law, and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1841. He served in Congress as a Democrat from 1843 to 1851, and again from 1853 to 1855, but left the Democratic party on the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. He was elected Mayor of Chicago in 1857, and again in 1860, during his incumbency introducing a number of important municipal reforms; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and twice served on the Board of Education. He again represented Illinois in Congress as a Republican from 1865 to 1867—making fourteen years of service in that body. In 1872 he joined in the Greeley movement, but later renewed his allegiance to the Republican party. In 1874 Mr. Wentworth published an elaborate genealogical work in three volumes, entitled "History of the Wentworth Family." A volume of "Congressional Reminiscences" and two by him on "Early Chicago," published in connection with the Fergus Historical Series, contain some valuable information on early local and national history. On account of his extraordinary height he received the sobriquet of "Long John," by which he was familiarly known throughout the State. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 16, 1888.

WEST, Edward M., merchant and banker, was born in Virginia, May 2, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1818; in 1829 became a clerk in the Recorder's office at Edwardsville, also served as deputy postmaster, and, in 1833, took a position in the United States Land Office there. Two years later he engaged in mercantile business, which he prosecuted over thirty years—meanwhile filling the office of County Treasurer, ex-officio Superintendent of Schools, and Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1867, in conjunction with W. R. Prickett, he established a bank at Edwardsville, with which he was connected until his death, Oct. 31, 1887. Mr. West officiated frequently as a "local preacher" of the Methodist Church, in which capacity he showed much ability as a public speaker.

WEST, Mary Allen, educator and philanthropist, was born at Galesburg, Ill., July 31, 1837; graduated at Knox Seminary in 1854 and taught until 1873, when she was elected County Superintendent of Schools, serving nine years. She took an active and influential interest in educational and reformatory movements, was for two years editor of "Our Home Monthly," in Philadelphia, and also a contributor to other journals, besides being editor-in-chief of "The Union Signal," Chicago, the organ of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—in which she held the position of President; was also President, in the latter days of her life, of the Illinois Woman's Press Association of Chicago, that city having become her home in 1885. In 1892, Miss West started on a tour of the world for the benefit of her health, but died at Tokio, Japan, Dec. 1, 1892.

WESTERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, located at Watertown, Rock Island County, in accordance with an act of the General Assembly, approved, May 22, 1895. The Thirty-ninth General Assembly made an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of fire-proof buildings, while Rock Island County donated a tract of 400 acres of land valued at $40,000. The site selected by the Commissioners, is a commanding one overlooking the Mississippi River, eight miles above Rock Island, and five and a half miles from Moline, and the buildings are of the most modern style of construction. Watertown is reached by two lines of railroad—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy—besides the Mississippi River. The erection of buildings was begun in 1896, and they were opened for the reception of patients in 1898. They have a capacity for 800 patients.

WESTERN MILITARY ACADEMY, an institution located at Upper Alton, Madison County, incorporated in 1892; has a faculty of eight members and reports eighty pupils for 1897-98, with property valued at $70,000. The institution gives instruction in literary and scientific branches, besides preparatory and business courses.

WESTERN NORMAL COLLEGE, located at Bushnell, McDonough County; incorporated in 1888. It is co-educational, has a corps of twelve instructors and reported 500 pupils for 1897-98, 300 males and 200 females.

WESTERN SPRINGS, a village of Cook County, and residence suburb of the city of Chicago, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of the initial station. Population (1890), 451; (1900), 662.

WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, located in Chicago and controlled by the Protestant Episcopal Church. It was founded in 1883 through the munificence of Dr. Tolman Wheeler, and was opened for students two years later. It has two buildings, of a superior order of architecture—one including the school and lecture rooms and the other a dormitory. A hospital and gymnasium are attached to the latter, and a school for boys is conducted on the first floor of the main building, which is known as Wheeler Hall. The institution is under the general supervision of Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Illinois.

WESTFIELD, village of Clark County, on Cin., Ham. & Dayton R. R., 10 m. s.-e. of Charleston; seat of Westfield College; has a bank, five churches and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 820.

WEST SALEM, a town of Edwards County, on the Peoria-Evansville Div. Ill. Cent. R. R., 12 miles northeast of Albion; has a bank and a weekly paper. Pop. (1890), 476; (1900), 700.

WETHERELL, Emma Abbott, vocalist, was born in Chicago, Dec. 9, 1849; in her childhood attracted attention while singing with her father (a poor musician) in hotels and on the streets in Chicago, Peoria and elsewhere; at 18 years of age, went to New York to study, earning her way by giving concerts en route, and receiving aid and encouragement from Clara Louisa Kellogg; in New York was patronized by Henry Ward Beecher and others, and aided in securing the training of European masters. Compelled to surmount many obstacles from poverty and other causes, her after success in her profession was phenomenal. Died, during a professional tour, at Salt Lake City, Jan. 5, 1891. Miss Abbott married her manager, Eugene Wetherell, who died before her.

WHEATON, a city and the county-seat of Du Page County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 25 miles west of Chicago. Agriculture and stock-raising are the chief industries in the surrounding region. The city owns a new water-works plant (costing $60,000) and has a public library valued at $75,000, the gift of a resident, Mr. John Quincy Adams; has a court house, electric light plant, sewerage and drainage system, seven churches, three graded schools, four weekly newspapers and a State bank. Wheaton is the seat of Wheaton College (which see). Population (1880), 1,160; (1890), 1,622; (1900), 2,345.

WHEATON COLLEGE, an educational institution located at Wheaton, Du Page County, and under Congregational control. It was founded in 1853, as the Illinois Institute, and was chartered under its present name in 1860. Its early existence was one of struggle, but of late years it has been established on a better foundation, in 1898 having $54,000 invested in productive funds, and property aggregating $136,000. The faculty comprises fifteen professors, and, in 1898, there were 321 students in attendance. It is co-educational and instruction is given in business and preparatory studies, as well as the fine arts, music and classical literature.

WHEELER, David Hilton, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born at Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1829; graduated at Rock River Seminary, Mount Morris, in 1851; edited "The Carroll County Republican" and held a professorship in Cornell College, Iowa, (1857-61); was United States Consul at Geneva, Switzerland, (1861-66); Professor of English Literature in Northwestern University (1867-75); edited "The Methodist" in New York, seven years, and was President of Allegheny College (1883-87); received the degree of D.D. from Cornell College in 1867, and that of LL.D. from the Northwestern University in 1881. He is the author of "Brigandage in South Italy"

(two volumes, 1864) and "By-Ways of Literature" (1883), besides some translations.

WHEELER, Hamilton K., ex-Congressman, was born at Ballston, N. Y., August 5, 1848, but emigrated with his parents to Illinois in 1852; remained on a farm until 19 years of age, his educational advantages being limited to three months' attendance upon a district school each year. In 1871, he was admitted to the bar at Kankakee, where he has since continued to practice. In 1884 he was elected to represent the Sixteenth District in the State Senate, where he served on many important committees, being Chairman of that on the Judicial Department. In 1892 he was elected Representative in Congress from the Ninth Illinois District, on the Republican ticket.

WHEELING, a town on the northern border of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Central Railway. Population (1890), 811; (1900), 331.

WHISTLER, (Maj.) John, soldier and builder of the first Fort Dearborn, was born in Ulster, Ireland, about 1756; served under Burgoyne in the Revolution, and was with the force surrendered by that officer at Saratoga, in 1777. After the peace he returned to the United States, settled at Hagerstown, Md., and entered the United States Army, serving at first in the ranks and being severely wounded in the disastrous Indian campaigns of 1791. Later, he was promoted to a captaincy and, in the summer of 1803, sent with his company, to the head of Lake Michigan, where he constructed the first Fort Dearborn within the limits of the present city of Chicago, remaining in command until 1811, when he was succeeded by Captain Heald. He received the brevet rank of Major, in 1815 was appointed military store-keeper at Newport, Ky., and afterwards at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, where he died, Sept. 3, 1829. Lieut. William Whistler, his son, who was with his father, for a time, in old Fort Dearborn—but transferred, in 1809, to Fort Wayne—was of the force included in Hull's surrender at Detroit in 1812. After his exchange he was promoted to a captaincy, to the rank of Major in 1826 and to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy in 1845, dying at Newport, Ky., in 1863. James Abbott McNeil Whistler, the celebrated, but eccentric artist of that name, is a grandson of the first Major Whistler.

WHITE, George E., ex-Congressman, was born in Massachusetts in 1848; after graduating, at the age of 16, he enlisted as a private in the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, serving under General Grant in the campaign against Richmond from the battle of the Wilderness until the surrender of Lee. Having taken a course in a commercial college at Worcester, Mass., in 1867 he came to Chicago, securing employment in a lumber yard, but a year later began business on his own account, which he has successfully conducted. In 1878 he was elected to the State Senate, as a Republican, from one of the Chicago Districts, and re-elected four years later, serving in that body eight years. He declined a nomination for Congress in 1884, but accepted in 1894, and was elected for the Fifth District, as he was again in 1896, but was defeated, in 1898, by Edward T. Noonan, Democrat.

WHITE, Horace, journalist, was born at Colebrook, N. H., August 10, 1834; in 1853 graduated at Beloit College, Wis., whither his father had removed in 1837; engaged in journalism as city editor of "The Chicago Evening Journal," later becoming agent of the Associated Press, and, in 1857, an editorial writer on "The Chicago Tribune," during a part of the war acting as its Washington correspondent. He also served, in 1856, as Assistant Secretary of the Kansas National Committee, and, later, as Secretary of the Republican State Central Committee. In 1864 he purchased an interest in "The Tribune," a year or so later becoming editor-in-chief, but retired in October, 1874. After a protracted European tour, he united with Carl Schurz and E. L. Godkin of "The Nation," in the purchase and reorganization of "The New York Evening Post," of which he is now editor-in-chief.

WHITE, Julius, soldier, was born in Cazenovia, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1816; removed to Illinois in 1836, residing there and in Wisconsin, where he was a member of the Legislature of 1849; in 1861 was made Collector of Customs at Chicago, but resigned to assume the colonelcy of the Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, which he commanded on the Fremont expedition to Southwest Missouri. He afterwards served with General Curtiss in Arkansas, participated in the battle of Pea Ridge and was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General. He was subsequently assigned to the Department of the Shenandoah, but finding his position at Martinsburg, W. Va., untenable, retired to Harper's Ferry, voluntarily serving under Colonel Miles, his inferior in command. When this post was surrendered (Sept. 15, 1862), he was made a prisoner, but released under parole; was tried by a court of inquiry at his own request, and acquitted, the court finding that he had acted with courage and capability.

He resigned in 1864, and, in March, 1865, was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. Died, at Evanston, May 12, 1890.

WHITE COUNTY, situated in the southeastern quarter of the State, and bounded on the east by the Wabash River; was organized in 1816, being the tenth county organized during the Territorial period: area, 500 square miles. The county is crossed by three railroads and drained by the Wabash and Little Wabash Rivers. The surface consists of prairie and woodland, and the soil is, for the most part, highly productive. The principal agricultural products are corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, tobacco, fruit, butter, sorghum and wool. The principal industrial establishments are carriage factories, saw mills and flour mills. Carmi is the county-seat. Other towns are Enfield, Grayville and Norris City. Population (1880), 23,087; (1890), 25,005; (1900), 25,386.

WHITEHALL, a city in Greene County, at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 65 miles north of St. Louis and 24 miles south-southwest of Jacksonville; in rich farming region; has stoneware and sewer-pipe factories, foundry and machine shop, flour mill, elevators, wagon shops, creamery, water system, sanitarium, heating, electric light and power system, nurseries and fruit-supply houses, and two poultry packing houses; also has five churches, a graded school, two banks and three newspapers—one daily. Population (1890), 1,961; (1900), 2,030.

WHITEHOUSE, Henry John, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, August 19, 1803; graduated from Columbia College in 1821, and from the (New York) General Theological Seminary in 1824. After ordination he was rector of various parishes in Pennsylvania and New York until 1851, when he was chosen Assistant Bishop of Illinois, succeeding Bishop Chase in 1852. In 1867, by invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, he delivered the opening sermon before the Pan-Anglican Conference held in England. During this visit he received the degree of D.D. from Oxford University, and that of LL.D. from Cambridge. His rigid views as a churchman and a disciplinarian, were illustrated in his prosecution of Rev. Charles Edward Cheney, which resulted in the formation of the Reformed Episcopal Church. He was a brilliant orator and a trenchant and unyielding controversialist. Died, in Chicago, August 10, 1874.

WHITESIDE COUNTY, in the northwestern portion of the State bordering on the Mississippi River; created by act of the Legislature passed in 1836, and named for Capt. Samuel Whiteside, a noted Indian fighter; area, 700 square miles. The surface is level, diversified by prairies and woodland, and the soil is extremely fertile. The county-seat was first fixed at Lyndon, then at Sterling, and finally at Morrison, its present location. The Rock River crosses the county and furnishes abundant water power for numerous factories, turning out agricultural implements, carriages and wagons, furniture, woolen goods, flour and wrapping paper. There are also distilling and brewing interests, besides saw and planing mills. Corn is the staple agricultural product, although all the leading cereals are extensively grown. The principal towns are Morrison, Sterling, Fulton and Rock Falls. Population (1880), 30,885; (1890), 30,854; (1900), 34,710.

WHITESIDE, William, pioneer and soldier of the Revolution, emigrated from the frontier of North Carolina to Kentucky, and thence, in 1793, to the present limits of Monroe County, Ill., erecting a fort between Cahokia and Kaskaskia, which became widely known as "Whiteside Station." He served as a Justice of the Peace, and was active in organizing the militia during the War of 1812-14, dying at the old Station in 1815.—John (Whiteside), a brother of the preceding, and also a Revolutionary soldier, came to Illinois at the same time, as also did William B. and Samuel, sons of the two brothers, respectively. All of them became famous as Indian fighters. The two latter served as Captains of companies of "Rangers" in the War of 1812, Samuel taking part in the battle of Rock Island in 1814, and contributing greatly to the success of the day. During the Black Hawk War (1832) he attained the rank of Brigadier-General. Whiteside County was named in his honor. He made one of the earliest improvements in Ridge Prairie, a rich section of Madison County, and represented that county in the First General Assembly. William B. served as Sheriff of Madison County for a number of years.—John D. (Whiteside), another member of this historic family, became very prominent, serving in the lower House of the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth General Assemblies, and in the Senate of the Tenth, from Monroe County; was a Presidential Elector in 1836, State Treasurer (1837-41) and a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1847. General Whiteside, as he was known, was the second of James Shields in the famous Shields and Lincoln duel (so-called) in 1842, and, as such, carried the challenge of the former to Mr. Lincoln. (See Duels.)

WHITING, Lorenzo D., legislator, was born in Wayne County, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1819; came to Illinois in 1838, but did not settle there permanently until 1849, when he located in Bureau County. He was a Representative from that county in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1869), and a member of the Senate continuously from 1871 to 1887, serving in the latter through eight General Assemblies. Died at his home near Tiskilwa, Bureau County, Ill., Oct. 10, 1889.

WHITING, Richard H., Congressman, was born at West Hartford, Conn., June 17, 1826, and received a common school education. In 1862 he was commissioned Paymaster in the Volunteer Army of the Union, and resigned in 1866. Having removed to Illinois, he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue for the Fifth Illinois District, in February, 1870, and so continued until the abolition of the office in 1873. On retiring from the Assessorship he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue, and served until March 4, 1875, when he resigned to take his seat as Republican Representative in Congress from the Peoria District, to which he had been elected in November, 1874. After the expiration of his term he held no public office, but was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1884. Died, at the Continental Hotel, in New York City, May 24, 1888.

WHITNEY, James W., pioneer lawyer and early teacher, known by the nickname of "Lord Coke"; came to Illinois in Territorial days (believed to have been about 1800); resided for some time at or near Edwardsville, then became a teacher at Atlas, Pike County, and, still later, the first Circuit and County Clerk of that county. Though nominally a lawyer, he had little if any practice. He acquired the title, by which he was popularly known for a quarter of a century, by his custom of visiting the State Capital, during the sessions of the General Assembly, when he would organize the lobbyists and visitors about the capital—of which there were an unusual number in those days—into what was called the "Third House." Having been regularly chosen to preside under the name of "Speaker of the Lobby," he would deliver a message full of practical hits and jokes, aimed at members of the two houses and others, which would be received with cheers and laughter. The meetings of the "Third House," being held in the evening, were attended by many members and visitors in lieu of other forms of entertainment. Mr. Whitney's home, in his latter years, was at Pittsfield. He resided for a time at Quincy. Died, Dec. 13, 1860, aged over 80 years.

WHITEMORE, Floyd K., State Treasurer, is a native of New York, came at an early age, with his parents, to Sycamore, Ill., where he was educated in the high school there. He purposed becoming a lawyer, but, on the election of the late James H. Beveridge State Treasurer, in 1864, accepted the position of clerk in the office. Later, he was employed as a clerk in the banking house of Jacob Bunn in Springfield, and, on the organization of the State National Bank, was chosen cashier of that Institution, retaining the position some twenty years. After the appointment of Hon. John R. Tanner to the position of Assistant Treasurer of the United States, at Chicago, in 1892, Mr. Whittemore became cashier in that office, and, in 1865, Assistant State Treasurer under the administration of State Treasurer Henry Wulff. In 1898 he was elected State Treasurer, receiving a plurality of 43,450 over his Democratic opponent.

WICKERSHAM, (Col.) Dudley, soldier and merchant, was born in Woodford County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1819; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1843, and served as a member of the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) through the Mexican War. On the return of peace he engaged in the dry-goods trade in Springfield, until 1861, when he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, serving, first as Lieutenant-Colonel and then as Colonel, until May, 1864, when, his regiment having been consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, he resigned. After the war, he held the office of Assessor of Internal Revenue for several years, after which he engaged in the grocery trade. Died, in Springfield, August 8, 1898.

WIDEN, Raphael, pioneer and early legislator, was a native of Sweden, who, having been taken to France at eight years of age, was educated for a Catholic priest. Coming to the United States in 1815, he was at Cahokia, Ill., in 1818, where, during the same year, he married into a French family of that place. He served in the House of Representatives from Randolph County, in the Second and Third General Assemblies (1820-24), and as Senator in the Fourth and Fifth (1824-28). During his last term in the House, he was one of those who voted against the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died of cholera, at Kaskaskia, in 1833.

WIKE, Scott, lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Meadville, Pa., April 6, 1834; at 4 years of age removed with his parents to Quincy, Ill., and, in 1844, to Pike County. Having graduated from Lombard University, Galesburg, in 1857, he began reading law with Judge O. C. Skinner of Quincy. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, but, before commencing practice, spent a year at Harvard Law School, graduating there in 1859. Immediately thereafter he opened an office at Pittsfield, Ill., and has resided there ever since. In politics he has always been a strong Democrat. He served two terms in the Legislature (1863-67) and, in 1874, was chosen Representative from his District in Congress, being re-elected in 1888 and, again, in 1890. In 1893 he was appointed by President Cleveland Third Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, which position he continued to fill until March, 1897, when he resumed the practice of law at Pittsfield. Died Jan. 15, 1901.

WILEY, (Col.) Benjamin Ladd, soldier, was born in Smithfield, Jefferson County, Ohio, March 25, 1821, came to Illinois in 1845 and began life at Vienna, Johnson County, as a teacher. In 1846 he enlisted for the Mexican War, as a member of the Fifth (Colonel Newby's) Regiment Illinois Volunteers, serving chiefly in New Mexico until mustered out in 1848. A year later he removed to Jonesboro, where he spent some time at the carpenter's trade, after which he became clerk in a store, meanwhile assisting to edit "The Jonesboro Gazette" until 1853; then became traveling salesman for a St. Louis firm, but later engaged in the hardware trade at Jonesboro, in which he continued for several years. In 1856 he was the Republican candidate for Congress for the Ninth District, receiving 4,000 votes, while Fremont, the Republican candidate for President, received only 825 in the same district. In 1857 he opened a real estate office in Jonesboro in conjunction with David L. Phillips and Col. J. W. Ashley, with which he was connected until 1860, when he removed to Makanda, Jackson County. In September, 1861, he was mustered in as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifth Illinois Cavalry, later serving in Missouri and Arkansas under Generals Steele and Curtiss, being, a part of the time, in command of the First Brigade of Cavalry, and, in the advance on Vicksburg, having command of the right wing of General Grant's cavalry. Being disabled by rheumatism at the end of the siege, he tendered his resignation, and was immediately appointed Enrolling Officer at Cairo, serving in this capacity until May, 1865, when he was mustered out. In 1869 he was appointed by Governor Palmer one of the Commissioners to locate the Southern Illinois Hospital for the Insane, and served as Secretary of the Board until the institution was opened at Anna, in May, 1871. In 1869 he was defeated as a candidate for County Judge of Jackson County, and, in 1872, for the State Senate, by a small majority in a strongly Democratic District; in 1876 was the Republican candidate for Congress, in the Eighteenth District, against William Hartzell, but was defeated by only twenty votes, while carrying six out of the ten counties comprising the District. In the latter years of his life, Colonel Wiley was engaged quite extensively in fruit-growing at Makanda, Jackson County, where he died, March 22, 1890.

WILKIE, Franc Bangs, journalist, was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., July 2, 1830; took a partial course at Union College, after which he edited papers at Schenectady, N. Y., Elgin, Ill., and Davenport and Dubuque, Iowa; also serving, during a part of the Civil War, as the western war correspondent of "The New York Times." In 1863 he became an editorial writer on "The Chicago Times," remaining with that paper, with the exception of a brief interval, until 1888—a part of the time as its European correspondent. He was the author of a series of sketches over the nom de plume of "Polinto," and of a volume of reminiscences under the title, "Thirty-five Years of Journalism," published shortly before his death, which took place, April 12, 1892.

WILKIN, Jacob W., Justice of the Supreme Court, was born in Licking County, Ohio, June 7, 1837; removed with his parents to Illinois, at 12 years of age, and was educated at McKendree College; served three years in the War for the Union; studied law with Judge Scholfield and was admitted to the bar in 1866. In 1872, he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, in 1879, elected Judge of the Circuit Court and re-elected in 1885—the latter year being assigned to the Appellate bench for the Fourth District, where he remained until his election to the Supreme bench in 1888, being re-elected to the latter office in 1897. His home is at Danville.

WILKINSON, Ira O., lawyer and Judge, was born in Virginia in 1822, and accompanied his father to Jacksonville (1835), where he was educated. During a short service as Deputy Clerk of Morgan County, he conceived a fondness for the profession of the law, and, after a course of study under Judge William Thomas, was admitted to practice in 1847. Richard Yates (afterwards Governor and Senator) was his first partner. In 1845 he removed to Rock Island, and, six years later, was elected a Circuit Judge, being again closed to the same position in 1861. At the expiration of his second term he removed to Chicago. Died, at Jacksonville, August 24, 1894.

WILKINSON, John P., early merchant, was born, Dec. 14, 1790, in New Kent County, Va., emigrated first to Kentucky, and, in 1828, settled in Jacksonville, Ill., where he engaged in mercantile business. Mr. Wilkinson was a liberal friend of Illinois College and Jacksonville Female Academy, of each of which he was a Trustee from their origin until his death, which occurred, during a business visit to St. Louis, in December, 1841.

WILL, Conrad, pioneer physician and early legislator, was born in Philadelphia, June 4, 1778; about 1804 removed to Somerset County Pa., and, in 1813, to Kaskaskia, Ill. He was a physician by profession, but having leased the saline lands on the Big Muddy, in the vicinity of what afterwards became the town of Brownsville, he engaged in the manufacture of salt, removing thither in 1815, and becoming one of the founders of Brownsville, afterwards the first county-seat of Jackson County. On the organization of Jackson County, in 1816, he became a member of the first Board of County Commissioners, and, in 1818, served as Delegate from that county in the Convention which framed the first State Constitution. Thereafter he served continuously as a member of the Legislature from 1818 to '34—first as Senator in the First General Assembly, then as Representative in the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth, and again as Senator in the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth—his career being conspicuous for long service. He died in office, June 11, 1834. Dr. Will was short of stature, fleshy, of jovial disposition and fond of playing practical jokes upon his associates, but very popular, as shown by his successive elections to the Legislature. He has been called "The Father of Jackson County." Will County, organized by act of the Legislature two years after his death, was named in his honor.

WILL COUNTY, a northeastern county, embracing 850 square miles, named in honor of Dr. Conrad Will, an early politician and legislator. Early explorations of the territory were made in 1829, when white settlers were few. The bluff west of Joliet is said to have been first occupied by David and Benjamin Maggard. Joseph Smith, the Mormon "apostle," expounded his peculiar doctrines at "the Point" in 1831. Several of the early settlers fled from the country during (or after) a raid by the Sac Indians.

There is a legend, seemingly well supported, to the effect that the first lumber, sawed to build the first frame house in Chicago (that of P. F. W. Peck), was sawed at Plainfield. Will County, originally a part of Cook, was separately erected in 1836, Joliet being made the county-seat. Agriculture, quarrying and manufacturing are the chief industries. Joliet, Lockport and Wilmington are the principal towns. Population (1880), 53,422; (1890), 62,007; (1900), 74,764.

WILLARD, Frances Elizabeth, teacher and reformer, was born at Churchville, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1839, graduated from the Northwestern Female College at Evanston, Ill., in 1859, and, in 1862, accepted the Professorship of Natural Sciences in that institution. During 1866-67 she was the Principal of the Genessee Wesleyan Seminary. The next two years she devoted to travel and study abroad, meanwhile contributing to various periodicals. From 1871 to 1874 she was Professor of Æsthetics in the Northwestern University and dean of the Woman's College. She was always an enthusiastic champion of temperance, and, in 1874, abandoned her profession to identify herself with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. For five years she was Corresponding Secretary of the national body, and, from 1879, its President. While Secretary she organized the Home Protective Association, and prepared a petition to the Illinois Legislature, to which nearly 200,000 names were attached, asking for the granting to women of the right to vote on the license question. In 1878 she succeeded her brother, Oliver A. Willard (who had died), as editor of "The Chicago Evening Post," but, a few months later, withdrew, and, in 1882, was elected as a member of the executive committee of the National Prohibition party. In 1886 she became leader of the White Cross Movement for the protection of women, and succeeded in securing favorable legislation, in this direction, in twelve States. In 1883 she founded the World's Christian Temperance Union, and, in 1888, was chosen its President, as also President of the International Council of Women. The latter years of her life were spent chiefly abroad, much of the time as the guest and co-worker of Lady Henry Somerset, of England, during which she devoted much attention to investigating the condition of women in the Orient. Miss Willard was a prolific and highly valued contributor to the magazines, and (besides numerous pamphlets) published several volumes, including "Nineteen Beautiful Years" (a tribute to her sister); "Woman in Temperance"; "How to Win," and "Woman in the Pulpit." Died, in New York, Feb. 18, 1898.

WILLARD, Samuel, A.M., M.D., LL.D., physician and educator, was born in Lunenburg, Vt., Dec. 30, 1821—the lineal descendant of Maj. Simon Willard, one of the founders of Concord, Mass., and prominent in "King Philip's War," and of his son, Rev. Dr. Samuel Willard, of the Old South Church, Boston, and seventh President of Harvard College. The subject of this sketch was taken in his infancy to Boston, and, in 1831, to Carrollton, Ill., where his father pursued the avocation of a druggist. After a preparatory course at Shurtleff College, Upper Alton, in 1836 he entered the freshman class in Illinois College at Jacksonville, but withdrew the following year, re-entering college in 1840 and graduating in the class of 1843, as a classmate of Dr. Newton Bateman, afterwards State Superintendent of Public Instruction and President of Knox College, and Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, now of Elmira, N. Y. The next year he spent as Tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of medicine at Quincy, graduating from the Medical Department of Illinois College in 1848. During a part of the latter year he edited a Free-Soil campaign paper ("The Tribune") at Quincy, and, later, "The Western Temperance Magazine" at the same place. In 1849 he began the practice of his profession at St. Louis, but the next year removed to Collinsville, Ill., remaining until 1857, when he took charge of the Department of Languages in the newly organized State Normal University at Normal. The second year of the Civil War (1862) he enlisted as a private in the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but was soon after commissioned as Surgeon with the rank of Major, participating in the campaigns in Tennessee and in the first attack upon Vicksburg. Being disabled by an attack of paralysis, in February, 1863, he was compelled to resign, when he had sufficiently recovered accepting a position in the office of Provost Marshal General Oakes, at Springfield, where he remained until the close of the war. He then became Grand Secretary of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows for the State of Illinois—a position which he had held from 1856 to 1862—remaining under his second appointment from 1865 to '69. The next year he served as Superintendent of Schools at Springfield, meanwhile assisting in founding the Springfield public library, and serving as its first librarian. In 1870 he accepted the professorship of History in the West Side High School of Chicago, which, with the exception of two years (1884-86), he continued to occupy for more than twenty-five years, retiring in 1898. In the meantime, Dr. Willard has been a laborious literary worker, having been, for a considerable period, editor, or assistant-editor, of "The Illinois Teacher," a contributor to "The Century Magazine" and "The Dial" of Chicago, besides having published a "Digest of the Laws of Odd Fellowship" in sixteen volumes, begun while he was Grand Secretary of the Order in 1864, and continued in 1872 and '82; a "Synopsis of History and Historical Chart," covering the period from B. C. 800 to A. D. 1876—of which he has had a second edition in course of preparation. Of late years he has been engaged upon a "Historical Dictionary of Names and Places," which will include some 12,000 topics, and which promises to be the most important work of his life. Previous to the war he was an avowed Abolitionist and operator on the "Underground Railroad," who made no concealment of his opinions, and, on one or two occasions, was called to answer for them in prosecutions under the "Fugitive Slave Act." (See "Underground Railroad.") His friend and classmate, the late Dr. Bateman, says of him: "Dr. Willard is a sound thinker; a clear and forcible writer; of broad and accurate scholarship; conscientious, genial and kindly, and a most estimable gentleman."

WILLIAMS, Archibald, lawyer and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ky., June 10, 1801; with moderate advantages but natural fondness for study, he chose the profession of law, and was admitted to the bar in Tennessee in 1828, coming to Quincy, Ill., the following year. He was elected to the General Assembly three times—serving in the Senate in 1832-36, and in the House, 1836-40; was United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, by appointment of President Taylor, 1849-53; was twice the candidate of his party (the Whig) for United States Senator, and appointed by President Lincoln, in 1861, United States District Judge for the State of Kansas. His abilities and high character were widely recognized. Died, in Quincy, Sept. 21, 1863—His son, John H., an attorney at Quincy, served as Judge of the Circuit Court 1879-85.—Another son, Abraham Lincoln, was twice elected Attorney-General of Kansas.

WILLIAMS, Erastus Smith, lawyer and jurist, was born at Salem, N. Y., May 22, 1821. In 1842 he removed to Chicago, where, after reading law, he was admitted to the bar in 1844. In 1854 he was appointed Master in Chancery, which office he filled until 1863, when he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County. After re-election in 1870 he became Chief Justice, and, at the same time, heard most of the cases on the equity side of the court. In 1879 he was a candidate for re-election as a Republican, but was defeated with the party ticket. After his retirement from the bench he resumed private practice. Died, Feb. 24, 1884.

WILLIAMS, James R., Congressman, was born in White County, Ill., Dec. 27, 1850, at the age of 25 graduated from the Indiana State University, at Bloomington, and, in 1876, from the Union College of Law, Chicago, since then being an active and successful practitioner at Carmi. In 1880 he was appointed Master in Chancery and served two years. From 1882 to 1886 he was County Judge. In 1892 he was a nominee on the Democratic ticket for Presidential Elector. He was elected to represent the Nineteenth Illinois District in the Fifty-first Congress at a special election held to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of R. W. Townshend, was re-elected in 1890 and 1892, but defeated by Orlando Burrell (Republican) for re-election in the newly organized Twentieth District in 1894. In 1898 he was again a candidate and elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

WILLIAMS, John, pioneer merchant, was born in Bath County, Ky., Sept. 11, 1808; between 14 and 16 years of age was clerk in a store in his native State; then, joining his parents, who had settled on a tract of land in a part of Sangamon (now Menard) County, Ill., he found employment as clerk in the store of Major Elijah Hles, at Springfield, whom he succeeded in business at the age of 22, continuing it without interruption until 1880. In 1856 Mr. Williams was the Republican candidate for Congress in the Springfield District, and, in 1861, was appointed Commissary-General for the State, rendering valuable service in furnishing supplies for State troops, in camps of instruction and while proceeding to the field, in the first years of the war; was also chief officer of the Illinois Sanitary Commission for two years, and, as one of the intimate personal friends of Mr. Lincoln, was chosen to accompany the remains of the martyred President, from Washington to Springfield, for burial. Liberal, enterprising and public-spirited, his name was associated with nearly every public enterprise of importance in Springfield during his business career—being one of the founders, and, for eleven years President, of the First National Bank; a chief promoter in the construction of what is now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Springfield and Peoria line; a Director of the Springfield Iron Company; one of the Commissioners who constructed the Springfield water-works, and an officer of the Lincoln Monument Association, from 1865 to his death, May 29, 1890.

WILLIAMS, Norman, lawyer, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 1, 1833, being related, on both the paternal and maternal sides, to some of the most prominent families of New England. He fitted for college at Union Academy, Meriden, and graduated from the University of Vermont in the class of 1855. After taking a course in the Albany Law School and with a law firm in his native town, he was admitted to practice in both New York and Vermont, removed to Chicago in 1858, and, in 1860, became a member of the firm of King, Kales & Williams, still later forming a partnership with Gen. John L. Thompson, which ended with the death of the latter in 1888. In a professional capacity he assisted in the organization of the Pullman Palace Car Company, and was a member of its Board of Directors; also assisted in organizing the Western Electric Company, and was prominently identified with the Chicago Telephone Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company. In 1881 he served as the United States Commissioner to the Electrical Exposition at Paris. In conjunction with his brother (Edward H. Williams) he assisted in founding the public library at Woodstock, Vt., which, in honor of his father, received the name of "The Norman Williams Public Library." With Col. Huntington W. Jackson and J. McGregor Adams, Mr. Williams was named, in the will of the late John Crerar, as an executor of the Crerar estate and one of the Trustees of the Crerar Public Library, and became its first President; was also a Director of the Chicago Public Library, and trustee of a number of large estates. Mr. Williams was a son-in-law of the late Judge John D. Caton, and his oldest daughter became the wife of Major-General Wesley Merritt, a few months before his death, which occurred at Hampton Beach, N. H., June 19, 1899—his remains being interred in his native town of Woodstock, Vt.

WILLIAMS, Robert Ebenezer, lawyer, born Dec. 3, 1825, at Clarksville, Pa., his grandfathers on both sides being soldiers of the Revolutionary War. In 1830 his parents removed to Washington in the same State, where in boyhood he worked as a mechanic in his father's shop, attending a common school in the winter until he reached the age of 17 years, when he entered Washington College, remaining for more than a year. He then began teaching, and, in 1845 went to Kentucky, where he pursued the business of a teacher for four years. Then he entered Bethany College in West Virginia, at the same time prosecuting his law studies, but left at the close of his junior year, when, having been licensed to practice, he removed to Clinton, Texas. Here he accepted, from a retired lawyer, the loan of a law library, which he afterwards purchased; served for two years as State's Attorney, and, in 1856, came to Bloomington, Ill., where he spent the remainder of his life in the practice of his profession. Much of his time was devoted to practice as a railroad attorney, especially in connection with the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads, in which he acquired prominence and wealth. He was a life-long Democrat and, in 1868, was the unsuccessful candidate of his party for Attorney-General of the State. The last three years of his life he had been in bad health, dying at Bloomington, Feb. 15, 1899.

WILLIAMS, Samuel, Bank President, was born in Adams County, Ohio, July 11, 1820; came to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and, in 1842, removed to Iroquois County, where he held various local offices, including that of County Judge, to which he was elected in 1861. During his later years he had been President of the Watseka Citizens' Bank. Died, June 16, 1896.

WILLIAMSON, Rollin Samuel, legislator and jurist, was born at Cornwall, Vt., May 23, 1839. At the age of 14 he went to Boston, where he began life as a telegraph messenger boy. In two years he had become a skillful operator, and, as such, was employed in various offices in New England and New York. In 1857 he came to Chicago seeking employment and, through the fortunate correction of an error on the part of the receiver of a message, secured the position of operator and station agent at Palatine, Cook County. Here he read law during his leisure time without a preceptor, and, in 1870, was admitted to the bar. The same year he was elected to the lower House of the General Assembly and, in 1872, to the Senate. In 1880 he was elected to the bench of the Superior Court of Cook County, and, in 1887, was chosen a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court. Died, August 10, 1889.

WILLIAMSON COUNTY, in the southern part of the State, originally set off from Franklin and organized in 1839. The county is well watered, the principal streams being the Big Muddy and the South Fork of the Saline. The surface is undulating and the soil fertile. The region was originally well covered with forests. All the cereals (as well as potatoes) are cultivated, and rich meadows encourage stock-raising. Coal and sandstone underlie the entire county. Area, 440 square miles; population (1880), 19,324; (1890) 22,226; (1900), 27,796.

WILLIAMSVILLE, village of Sangamon County, on Chicago & Alton Railroad, 12 miles north of Springfield; has a bank, elevator, 3 churches, a newspaper and coal-mines. Pop. (1900), 573.

WILLIS, Jonathan Clay, soldier and former Railroad and Warehouse Commissioner, was born in Sumner County, Tenn., June 27, 1826; brought to Gallatin County, Ill., in 1834, and settled at Golconda in 1843; was elected Sheriff of Pope County in 1856, removed to Metropolis in 1859, and engaged in the wharf-boat and commission business. He entered the service as Quartermaster of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers in 1861, but was compelled to resign on account of injuries, in 1863; was elected Representative in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1868), appointed Collector of Internal Revenue in 1869, and Railway and Warehouse Commissioner in 1892, as the successor of John R. Tanner, serving until 1893.

WILMETTE, a village in Cook County, 14 miles north of Chicago, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, a handsome suburb of Chicago on the shore of Lake Michigan; principal streets paved and shaded with fine forest trees; has public library and good schools. Pop. (1900), 2,300.

WILMINGTON, a city of Will County, on the Kankakee River and the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 53 miles from Chicago and 15 south-south-west of Joliet; has considerable manufactures, two National banks, a graded school, churches and one newspaper. Wilmington is the location of the Illinois Soldiers' Widows' Home. Population (1890), 1,576; (1900), 1,420.

WILSON, Charles Lush, journalist, was born in Fairfield County, Conn., Oct. 10, 1818, educated in the common schools and at an academy in his native State, and, in 1835, removed to Chicago, entering the employment of his older brothers, who were connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal at Joliet. His brother, Richard L., having assumed charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" (the successor of "The Chicago American"), in 1844, Charles L. took a position in the office, ultimately securing a partnership, which continued until the death of his brother in 1856, when he succeeded to the ownership of the paper. Mr. Wilson was an ardent friend and supporter of Abraham Lincoln for the United States Senate in 1858, but, in 1860, favored the nomination of Mr. Seward for the Presidency, though earnestly supporting Mr. Lincoln after his nomination. In 1861 he was appointed Secretary of the American Legation at London, serving with the late Minister Charles Francis Adams, until 1864, when he resigned and resumed his connection with "The Journal." In 1875 his health began to fail, and three years later, having gone to San Antonio, Tex., in the hope of receiving benefit from a change of climate, he died in that city, March 9, 1878.—Richard Lush (Wilson), an older brother of the preceding, the first editor and publisher of "The Chicago Evening Journal," the oldest paper of consecutive publication in Chicago, was a native of New York. Coming to Chicago with his brother John L., in 1834, they soon after established themselves in business on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, then in course of construction. In 1844 he took charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" for a publishing committee which had purchased the material of "The Chicago American," but soon after became principal proprietor. In April, 1847, while firing a salute in honor of the victory of Buena Vista, he lost an arm and was otherwise injured by the explosion of the cannon. Early in 1849, he was appointed, by President Taylor, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, but, having failed of confirmation, was compelled to retire in favor of a successor appointed by Millard Fillmore, eleven months later. Mr. Wilson published a little volume in 1842 entitled "A Trip to Santa Fe," and, a few years later, a story of travel under the title, "Short Ravelings from a Long Yarn." Died, December, 1856.—John Lush (Wilson), another brother, also a native of New York, came to Illinois in 1834, was afterwards associated with his brothers in business, being for a time business manager of "The Chicago Journal;" also served one term as Sheriff of Cook County. Died, in Chicago, April 13, 1888.

WILSON, Isaac Grant, jurist, was born at Middlebury, N. Y., April 26, 1817, graduated from Brown University in 1838, and the same year came to Chicago, whither his father's family had preceded him in 1835. After reading law for two years, he entered the senior class at Cambridge (Mass.) Law School, graduating in 1841. In August of that year he opened an office at Elgin and, for ten years "rode the circuit." In 1851 he was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit to fill a vacancy, and re-elected for a full term in 1855, and again in '61. In November of the latter year he was commissioned the first Colonel of the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but resigned, a few weeks later, and resumed his place upon the bench. From 1867 to 1879 he devoted himself to private practice, which was largely in the Federal Courts. In 1879 he resumed his seat upon the bench (this time for the Twelfth Circuit), and was at once designated as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court at Chicago, of which tribunal he became Chief Justice in 1881. In 1885 he was re-elected Circuit Judge, but died, about the close of his term, at Geneva, June 8, 1891.

WILSON, James Grant, soldier and author, was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, April 28, 1832, and, when only a year old, was brought by his father, William Wilson, to America. The family settled at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where James Grant was educated at College Hill and under private teachers. After finishing his studies he became his father's partner in business, but, in 1855, went abroad, and, shortly after his return, removed to Chicago, where he founded the first literary paper established in the Northwest. At the outbreak of the Civil War, he disposed of his journal to enlist in the Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Major and afterwards promoted to the colonelcy. In August, 1863, while at New Orleans, by advice of General Grant, he accepted a commission as Colonel of the Fourth Regiment United States Colored Cavalry, and was assigned, as Aid-de-camp, to the staff of the Commander of the Department of the Gulf, filling this post until April, 1865. When General Banks was relieved, Colonel Wilson was brevetted Brigadier-General and placed in command at Port Hudson, resigning in July, 1865, since which time his home has been in New York. He is best known as an author, having published numerous addresses, and being a frequent contributor to American and European magazines. Among larger works which he has written or edited are "Biographical Sketches of Illinois Officers"; "Love in Letters"; "Life of General U. S. Grant"; "Life and Letters of Fitz Greene Halleck"; "Poets and Poetry of Scotland"; "Bryant and His Friends"; and "Appleton's Cyclopaedia of American Biography."

WILSON, James Harrison, soldier and military engineer, was born near Shawneetown, Ill., Sept. 2, 1837. His grandfather, Alexander Wilson, was one of the pioneers of Illinois, and his father (Harrison Wilson) was an ensign during the War of 1812 and a Captain in the Black Hawk War. His brother (Bluford Wilson) served as Assistant Adjutant-General of Volunteers during the Civil War, and as Solicitor of the United States Treasury during the "whisky ring" prosecutions. James H. was educated in the common schools, at McKendree College, and the United States Military Academy at West Point, graduating from the latter in 1860, and being assigned to the Topographical Engineer Corps. In September, 1861, he was promoted to a First Lieutenantcy, then served as Chief Topographical Engineer of the Port Royal expedition until March, 1862; was afterwards attached to the Department of the South, being present at the bombardment of Fort Pulaski; was Aid-de-camp to McClellan, and participated in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam; was made Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers in November, 1862; was Chief Topographical Engineer and Inspector-General of the Army of the Tennessee until October, 1863, being actively engaged in the operations around Vicksburg; was made Captain of Engineers in May, 1863, and Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Oct. 31, following. He also conducted operations preliminary to the battle of Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, and for the relief of Knoxville. Later, he was placed in command of the Third Division of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac, serving from May to August, 1864, under General Sheridan. Subsequently he was transferred to the Department of the Mississippi, where he so distinguished himself that, on April 20, 1865, he was made Major-General of Volunteers. In twenty-eight days he captured five fortified cities, twenty-three stands of colors, 288 guns and 6,820 prisoners—among the latter being Jefferson Davis. He was mustered out of the volunteer service in January, 1866, and, on July 28, following, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Thirty-fifth United States Infantry, being also brevetted Major-General in the regular army. On Dec. 31, 1870, he returned to civil life, and was afterwards largely engaged in railroad and engineering operations, especially in West Virginia. Promptly after the declaration of war with Spain (1898) General Wilson was appointed, by the President, Major-General of Volunteers, serving until its close. He is the author of "China: Travels and Investigations in the Middle Kingdom"; "Life of Andrew J. Alexander"; and the "Life of Gen. U. S. Grant," in conjunction with Charles A.

Dana. His home, in recent years, has been in New York.

WILSON, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in New Hampshire in 1802, graduated at Bowdoin College in 1824—the classmate of Franklin Pierce and Nathaniel Hawthorne; studied law in New Hampshire and came to Illinois in 1835, locating at Joliet; removed to Chicago in 1841, where he was the partner of Norman B. Judd, serving, at different periods, as attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railways; was Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Cook County, 1853-59, when he became Presiding Judge of the Superior Court of Chicago, serving until 1868. Died, Dec. 7, 1883.

WILSON, John P., lawyer, was born in Whiteside County, Ill., July 3, 1844; educated in the common schools and at Knox College, Galesburg, graduating from the latter in 1865; two years later was admitted to the bar in Chicago, and speedily attained prominence in his profession. During the World's Fair period he was retained as counsel by the Committee on Grounds and Buildings, and was prominently connected, as counsel for the city, with the Lake Front litigation.

WILSON, Robert L., early legislator, was born in Washington County, Pa., Sept. 11, 1805, taken to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1810, graduated at Franklin College in 1831, studied law and, in 1833, removed to Athens (now in Menard County), Ill.; was elected Representative in 1836, and was one of the members from Sangamon County, known as the "Long Nine," who assisted in securing the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. Mr. Wilson removed to Sterling, Whiteside County, in 1840, was elected five times Circuit Clerk and served eight years as Probate Judge. Immediately after the fall of Fort Sumter, he enlisted as private in a battalion in Washington City under command of Cassius M. Clay, for guard duty until the arrival of the Seventh New York Regiment. He subsequently assisted in raising troops in Illinois, was appointed Paymaster by Lincoln, serving at Washington, St. Louis, and, after the fall of Vicksburg, at Springfield—being mustered out in November, 1865. Died, in Whiteside County, 1880.

WILSON, Robert S., lawyer and jurist, was born at Montrose, Susquehanna County, Pa., Nov. 6, 1812; learned the printer's art, then studied law and was admitted to the bar in Allegheny County, about 1833; in 1836 removed to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he served as Probate Judge and State Senator; in 1850 came to Chicago, was elected Judge of the Recorder's Court in 1853, and re-elected in 1858, serving ten years, and proving "a terror to evil-doers." Died, at Lawrence, Mich., Dec. 23, 1882.

WILSON, William, early jurist, was born in Loudoun County, Va., April 27, 1794; studied law with Hon. John Cook, a distinguished lawyer, and minister to France in the early part of the century; in 1817 removed to Kentucky, soon after came to Illinois, two years later locating in White County, near Carmi, which continued to be his home during the remainder of his life. In 1819 he was appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court as successor to William P. Foster, who is described by Governor Ford as "a great rascal and no lawyer," and who held office only about nine months. Judge Wilson was re-elected to the Supreme bench, as Chief-Justice, in 1825, being then only a little over 30 years old, and held office until the reorganization of the Supreme Court under the Constitution of 1848—a period of over twenty-nine years, and, with the exception of Judge Browne's, the longest term of service in the history of the court. He died at his home in White County, April 29, 1857. A Whig in early life, he allied himself with the Democratic party on the dissolution of the former. Hon. James C. Conkling, of Springfield, says of him, "as a writer, his style was clear and distinct; as a lawyer, his judgment was sound and discriminating."

WINCHESTER, a city and county-seat of Scott County, founded in 1839, situated on Big Sandy Creek and on the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 29 miles south of Beardstown and 84 miles north by west of St. Louis. While the surrounding region is agricultural and largely devoted to wheat growing, there is some coal mining. Winchester is an important shipping-point, having three grain elevators, two flouring mills, and a coal mine employing fifty miners. There are four Protestant and one Catholic church, a court house, a high school, a graded school building, two banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,626; (1890), 1,542; (1900), 1,711.

WINDSOR, a city of Shelby County at the crossing of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways, 11 miles north-east of Shelbyville. Population (1880), 768; (1890), 888; (1900), 866.

WINE, Frederick Howard, clergyman and sociologist, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., April 9, 1838, graduated at Washington (Pa.) College in 1857, and, after serving as tutor there for a short time, entered Princeton Theological Seminary, but was compelled temporarily to discontinue his studies on account of a weakness of the eyes. The Presbytery of St. Louis licensed him to preach in 1860, and, in 1862, he was commissioned Hospital Chaplain in the Union army. During 1862-64 he was stationed at Springfield, Mo., participating in the battle of Springfield on Jan. 8, 1863, and being personally mentioned for bravery on the field in the official report. Re-entering the seminary at Princeton in 1864, he graduated in 1865, and at once accepted a call to the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Ill., which he filled for four years. In 1869 he was appointed Secretary of the newly created Board of Commissioners of Public Charities of Illinois, in which capacity he continued until 1893, when he resigned. For the next four years he was chiefly engaged in literary work, in lecturing before universities on topics connected with social science, in aiding in the organization of charitable work, and in the conduct of a thorough investigation into the relations between liquor legislation and crime. At an early period he took a prominent part in organizing the various Boards of Public Charities of the United States into an organization known as the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, and, at the Louisville meeting (1883), was elected its President. At the International Penitentiary Congress at Stockholm (1878) he was the official delegate from Illinois. On his return, as a result of his observations while abroad, he submitted to the Legislature a report strongly advocating the construction of the Kankakee Hospital for the Insane, then about to be built, upon the "detached ward" or "village" plan, a departure from then existing methods, which marks an era in the treatment of insane in the United States. Mr. Wines conducted the investigation into the condition and number of the defective, dependent and delinquent classes throughout the country, his report constituting a separate volume under the "Tenth Census," and rendered a similar service in connection with the eleventh census (1890). In 1887 he was elected Secretary of the National Prison Association, succeeding to the post formerly held by his father, Enoch Cobb Wines, D.D., LL.D. After the inauguration of Governor Tanner in 1897, he resumed his former position of Secretary of the Board of Public Charities, remaining until 1899, when he again tendered his resignation, having received the appointment to the position of Assistant Director of the Twelfth Census, which he now holds. He is the author of "Crime and Reformation" (1895); of a voluminous series of reports; also of numerous pamphlets and brochures, among which may be mentioned "The County Jail System; An Argument for its Abolition" (1878); "The Kankakee Hospital" (1882); "Provision for the Insane in the United States" (1885); "Conditional Liberation, or the Paroling of Prisoners" (1886), and "American Prisons in the Tenth Census" (1888).

WINES, Walter B., lawyer (brother of Frederick H. Wines), was born in Boston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1848, received his primary education at Williston Academy, East Hampton, Mass., after which he entered Middlebury College, Vt., taking a classical course and graduating there. He afterwards became a student in the law department of Columbia College, N. Y., graduating in 1871, being admitted to the bar the same year and commencing practice in New York City. In 1879 he came to Springfield, Ill., and was, for a time, identified with the bar of that city. Later, he removed to Chicago, where he has been engaged in literary and journalistic work.

WINNEBAGO COUNTY, situated in the "northern tier," bordering on the Wisconsin State line; was organized, under an act passed in 1836, from La Salle and Jo Daviess Counties, and has an area of 552 square miles. The county is drained by the Rock and Pecatonica Rivers. The surface is rolling prairie and the soil fertile. The geology is simple, the quaternary deposits being underlaid by the Galena blue and buff limestone, adapted for building purposes. All the cereals are raised in abundance, the chief product being corn. The Winnebago Indians (who gave name to the county) formerly lived on the west side of the Rock River, and the Pottawatomies on the east, but both tribes removed westward in 1835. (As to manufacturing interests, see Rockford.) Population (1880), 30,505; (1890), 39,938; (1900), 47,845

WINNEBAGO WAR. The name given to an Indian disturbance which had its origin in 1827, during the administration of Gov. Ninian Edwards. The Indians had been quiet since the conclusion of the War of 1812, but a few isolated outrages were sufficient to start terrified "runners" in all directions. In the northern portion of the State, from Galena to Chicago (then Fort Dearborn) the alarm was intense. The meagre militia force of the State was summoned and volunteers were called for. Meanwhile, 600 United States Regular Infantry, under command of Gen. Henry Atkinson, put in an appearance. Besides the infantry, Atkinson had at his disposal some 130 mounted sharpshooters. The origin of the disturbance was as follows: The Winnebagoes attacked a band of Chippewas, who were (by treaty) under Government protection, several of the latter being killed. For participation in this offense, four Winnebago Indians were summarily apprehended, surrendered to the Chippewas and shot. Meanwhile, some dispute had arisen as to the title of the lands, claimed by the Winnebagoes in the vicinity of Galena, which had been occupied by white miners. Repeated acts of hostility and of reprisal, along the Upper Mississippi, intensified mutual distrust. A gathering of the Indians around two keel-boats, laden with supplies for Fort Snelling, which had anchored near Prairie du Chien and opposite a Winnebago camp, was regarded by the whites as a hostile act. Liquor was freely distributed, and there is historical evidence that a half-dozen drunken squaws were carried off and shamefully maltreated. Several hundred warriors assembled to avenge the deception which had been practiced upon them. They laid in ambush for the boats on their return trip. The first passed too rapidly to be successfully assailed, but the second grounded and was savagely, yet unsuccessfully, attacked. The presence of General Atkinson's forces prevented an actual outbreak, and, on his demand, the great Winnebago Chief, Red Bird, with six other leading men of the tribe, surrendered themselves as hostages to save their nation from extermination. A majority of these were, after trial, acquitted. Red Bird, however, unable to endure confinement, literally pined to death in prison, dying on Feb. 16, 1828. He is described as having been a savage of superior intelligence and noble character. A treaty of peace was concluded with the Winnebagoes in a council held at Prairie du Chien, a few months later, but the affair seems to have produced as much alarm among the Indians as it did among the whites. (For Winnebago Indians see page 576.)

WINNETKA, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 16½ miles north of Chicago. It stands eighty feet above the level of Lake Michigan, has good schools (being the seat of the Winnetka Institute), several churches, and is a popular residence town. Population (1880), 584; (1890), 1,079; (1900), 1,833.

WINSTON, Frederick Hampton, lawyer, was born in Liberty County, Ga., Nov. 20, 1830, was brought to Woodford County, Ky., in 1835, left an orphan at 12, and attended the common schools until 18, when, returning to Georgia, he engaged in cotton manufacture. He finally began the study of law with United States Senator W. C. Dawson, and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1852; spent some time in the office of W. M. Evarts in New York, was admitted to the bar and came to Chicago in 1853, where he formed a partnership with Norman B. Judd, afterwards being associated with Judge Henry W. Blodgett; served as general solicitor of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railways—remaining with the latter twenty years. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Minister to Persia, but resigned the following year, and traveled extensively in Russia, Scandinavia and other foreign countries. Mr. Winston was a delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1868, '76 and '84; first President of the Stock Yards at Jersey City, for twelve years President of the Lincoln Park Commission, and a Director of the Lincoln National Bank.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL LINES. The Wisconsin Central Company was organized, June 17, 1887, and subsequently acquired the Minnesota, St. Croix & Wisconsin, the Wisconsin & Minnesota, the Chippewa Falls & Western, the St. Paul & St. Croix Falls, the Wisconsin Central, the Penokee, and the Packwaukee & Montebello Railroads, and assumed the leases of the Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago and the Wisconsin & Minnesota Roads. On July 1, 1888, the company began to operate the entire Wisconsin Central system, with the exception of the Wisconsin Central Railroad and the leased Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago, which remained in charge of the Wisconsin Central Railroad mortgage trustees until Nov. 1, 1889, when these, too, passed under the control of the Wisconsin Central Company. The Wisconsin Central Railroad Company is a reorganization (Oct. 1, 1879) of a company formed Jan. 1, 1871. The Wisconsin Central and the Wisconsin Central Railroad Companies, though differing in name, are a financial unit; the former holding most of the first mortgage bonds of the latter, and substantially all its notes, stocks and income bonds, but, for legal reasons (such as the protection of land titles), it is necessary that separate corporations be maintained. On April 1, 1890, the Wisconsin Central Company executed a lease to the Northern Pacific Railroad, but this was set aside by the courts, on Sept. 27, 1893, for non-payment of rent, and was finally canceled. On the same day receivers were appointed to insure the protection of all interests. The total mileage is 415.46 miles, of which the Company owns 258.90—only .10 of a mile in Illinois. A line, 58.10 miles in length, with 8.44 miles of side-track (total, 66.54 miles), lying wholly within the State of Illinois, is operated by the Chicago & Wisconsin and furnishes the allied line an entrance into Chicago.

WITHROW, Thomas F., lawyer, was born in Virginia in March, 1833, removed with his parents to Ohio in childhood, attended the Western Reserve College, and, after the death of his father, taught school and worked as a printer, later, editing a paper at Mount Vernon. In 1855 he removed to Janesville, Wis., where he again engaged in journalistic work, studied law, was admitted to the bar in Iowa in 1857, settled at Des Moines and served as private secretary of Governors Lowe and Kirkwood. In 1860 he became Supreme Court Reporter; served as Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee in 1863 and, in 1866, became associated with the Rock Island Railroad in the capacity of local attorney, was made chief law officer of the Company in 1873, and removed to Chicago, and, in 1890, was promoted to the position of General Counsel. Died, in Chicago, Feb. 3, 1893.

WOLCOTT, (Dr.) Alexander, early Indian Agent, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Feb. 14, 1790; graduated from Yale College in 1809, and, after a course in medicine, was commissioned, in 1812, Surgeon's Mate in the United States Army. In 1820 he was appointed Indian Agent at Fort Dearborn (now Chicago), as successor to Charles Jouett—the first Agent—who had been appointed a United States Judge in Arkansas. The same year he accompanied General Lewis Cass and Henry Schoolcraft on their tour among the Indians of the Northwest; was married in 1823 to Ellen Marion Kinzie, a daughter of Col. John Kinzie, the first permanent settler of Chicago; in 1825 was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Peoria County, which then included Cook County; was a Judge of Election in 1830, and one of the purchasers of a block of ground in the heart of the present city of Chicago, at the first sale of lots, held Sept. 27, 1830, but died before the close of the year. Dr. Wolcott appears to have been a high-minded and honorable man, as well as far in advance of the mass of pioneers in point of education and intelligence.

WOMAN'S MEDICAL COLLEGE OF CHICAGO. (See Northwestern University Woman's Medical School.)

WOMAN SUFFRAGE. (See Suffrage.)

WOOD, Benson, lawyer and Congressman, was born in Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1839; received a common school and academic education; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, and, for two years, taught school in Lee County. He then enlisted as a soldier in an Illinois regiment, attaining the rank of Captain of Infantry; after the war, graduated from the Law Department of the old Chicago University, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession. He was elected a member of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872) and was a delegate to the Republican National Conventions of 1876 and 1888; also served as Mayor of the city of Effingham, where he now resides. In 1894 he was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress by the Republicans of the Nineteenth District, which has uniformly returned a Democrat, and, in office, proved himself a most industrious and efficient member. Mr. Wood was defeated as a candidate for re-election in 1896.

WOOD, John, pioneer, Lieutenant-Governor and Governor, was born at Moravia, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1798—his father being a Revolutionary soldier who had served as Surgeon and Captain in the army. At the age of 21 years young Wood removed to Illinois, settling in what is now Adams County, and building the first log-cabin on the site of the present city of Quincy. He was a member of the upper house of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth General Assemblies, and was elected Lieutenant-Governor in 1859 on the same ticket with Governor Bissell, and served out the unexpired term of the latter, who died in office. (See Bissell, William H.) He was succeeded by Richard Yates in 1861. In February of that year he was appointed one of the five Commissioners from Illinois to the "Peace Conference" at Washington, to consider methods for averting civil war. The following May he was appointed Quartermaster-General for the State by Governor Yates, and assisted most efficiently in fitting out the troops for the field. In June, 1864, he was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers (100-days' men) and mustered out of service the following September. Died, at Quincy, June 11, 1880. He was liberal, patriotic and public-spirited. His fellow-citizens of Quincy erected a monument to his memory, which was appropriately dedicated, July 4, 1883.

WOODFORD COUNTY, situated a little north of the center of the State, bounded on the west by the Illinois River; organized in 1841; area, 540 square miles. The surface is generally level, except along the Illinois River, the soil fertile and well watered. The county lies in the northern section of the great coal field of the State. Eureka is the county-seat. Other thriving cities and towns are Metamora, Minonk, El Paso and Roanoke. Corn, oats, wheat, potatoes and barley are the principal crops. The chief mechanical industries are flour manufacture, carriage and wagon-making, and saddlery and harness work. Population (1890), 21,429; (1900), 21,822.

WOODHULL, a village of Henry County, on Keithsburg branch Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of Galva; has a bank, electric lights, water works, brick and tile works, six churches and weekly paper. Pop. (1900), 774.

WOODMAN, Charles W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Aalborg, Denmark, March 11, 1844; received his early education in the schools of his native country, but took to the sea in 1860, following the life of a sailor until 1863, when, coming to Philadelphia, he enlisted in the Gulf Squadron of the United States. After the war, he came to Chicago, and, after reading law for some time in the office of James L. High, graduated from the Law Department of the Chicago University in 1871. Some years later he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for some of the lower courts, and, in 1881, was nominated by the Judges of Cook County as one of the Justices of the Peace for the city of Chicago. In 1894 he became the Republican candidate for Congress from the Fourth District and was elected, but failed to secure a renomination in 1896. Died, in Elgin Asylum for the Insane, March 18, 1898.

WOODS, Robert Mann, was born at Greenville, Pa., April 17, 1840; came with his parents to Illinois in 1842, the family settling at Barry, Pike County, but subsequently residing at Pittsfield, Canton and Galesburg. He was educated at Knox College in the latter place, which was his home from 1849 to '58; later, taught school in Iowa and Missouri until 1861, when he went to Springfield and began the study of law with Milton Hay and Shelby M. Cullom. His law studies having been interrupted by the Civil War, after spending some time in the mustering and disbursing office, he was promoted by Governor Yates to a place in the executive office, from which he went to the field as Adjutant of the Sixty-fourth Illinois Infantry, known as the "Yates Sharp-Shooters." After participating, with the Army of the Tennessee, in the Atlanta campaign, he took part in the "March to the Sea," and the campaign in the Carolinas, including the siege of Savannah and the forcing of the Salkahatchie, where he distinguished himself, as also in the taking of Columbia, Fayetteville, Cheraw, Raleigh and Bentonville. At the latter place he had a horse shot under him and won the brevet rank of Major for gallantry in the field, having previously been commissioned Captain of Company A of his regiment. He also served on the staffs of Gens. Giles A. Smith, Benjamin F. Potts, and William W. Belknap, and was the last mustering officer in General Sherman's army. In 1867 Major Woods removed to Chicago, where he was in business for a number of years, serving as chief clerk of Custom House construction from 1872 to 1877. In 1879 he purchased "The Daily Republican" at Joliet, which he conducted successfully for fifteen years. While connected with "The Republican," he served as Secretary of the Illinois Republican Press Association and in various other positions.

Major Woods was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, whose birth-place was in Illinois. (See Grand Army of the Republic; also Stephenson, Dr. B. F.) When Dr. Stephenson (who had been Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry), conceived the idea of founding such an order, he called to his assistance Major Woods, who was then engaged in writing the histories of Illinois regiments for the Adjutant-General's Report. The Major wrote the Constitution and By-laws of the Order, the charter blanks for all the reports, etc. The first official order bears his name as the first Adjutant-General of the Order, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF ILLINOIS
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., APRIL 1, 1866.

GENERAL ORDERS
No. 1.

The following named officers are hereby appointed and assigned to duty at these headquarters. They will be obeyed and respected accordingly:

Colonel Jules C. Webber, A.D.C. and Chief of Staff.

Colonel John M. Snyder, Quartermaster-General.

Major Robert M. Woods, Adjutant-General.

Captain John A. Lightfoot, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Captain John S. Phelps, Aid-de-Camp.

By order of B. F. Stephenson, Department Commander.

ROBERT M. WOODS,
Adjutant-General.

Major Woods afterwards organized the various Departments in the West, and it has been conceded that he furnished the money necessary to carry on the work during the first six months of the existence of the Order. He has never accepted a nomination or run for any political office, but is now engaged in financial business in Joliet and Chicago, with his residence in the former place.

WOODSON, David Meade, lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., May 18, 1806; was educated in private schools and at Transylvania University, and read law with his father. He served a term in the Kentucky Legislature in 1832, and, in 1834, removed to Illinois, settling at Carrollton, Greene County. In 1839 he was elected State's Attorney and, in 1840, a member of the lower house of the Legislature, being elected a second time in 1868. In 1843 he was the Whig candidate for Congress in the Fifth District, but was defeated by Stephen A. Douglas. He was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1869-70. In 1848 he was elected a Judge of the First Judicial Circuit, remaining in office until 1867. Died, in 1877.

WOODSTOCK, the county-seat of McHenry County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, about 51 miles northwest of Chicago and 32 miles east of Rockford. It contains a court house, eight churches, four banks, three newspaper offices, foundry and machine shops, planing mills, canning works, pickle, cheese and butter factories. The Oliver Typewriter Factory is located here; the town is also the seat of the Todd Seminary for boys. Population (1890), 1,683; (1900), 2,502.

WORCESTER, Linus E., State Senator, was born in Windsor, Vt., Dec. 5, 1811, was educated in the common schools of his native State and at Chester Academy, came to Illinois in 1836, and, after teaching three years, entered a dry-goods store at Whitehall as clerk, later becoming a partner. He was also engaged in various other branches of business at different times, including the drug, hardware, grocery, agricultural implement and lumber business. In 1843 he was appointed Postmaster at Whitehall, serving twelve years; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, served as County Judge for six years from 1853, and as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Jacksonville, from 1859, by successive reappointments, for twelve years. In 1856 he was elected, as a Democrat, to the State Senate, to succeed John M. Palmer, resigned; was re-elected in 1860, and, at the session of 1865, was one of the five Democratic members of that body who voted for the ratification of the Emancipation Amendment of the National Constitution. He was elected County Judge a second time, in 1863, and re-elected in 1867, served as delegate to the Democratic National Convention of 1876, and, for more than thirty years, was one of the Directors of the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, serving from the organization of the corporation until his death, which occurred Oct. 19, 1891.

WORDEN, a village of Madison County, on the Wabash and the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railways, 32 miles northeast of St. Louis. Population (1890), 522; (1900), 544

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION. An exhibition of the scientific, liberal and mechanical arts of all nations, held at Chicago, between May 1 and Oct. 31, 1893. The project had its inception in November, 1885, in a resolution adopted by the directorate of the Chicago Inter-State Exposition Company. On July 6, 1888, the first well defined action was taken, the Iroquois Club, of Chicago, inviting the co-operation of six other leading clubs of that city in "securing the location of an international celebration at Chicago of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus." In July, 1889, a decisive step was taken in the appointment by Mayor Cregier, under resolution of the City Council, of a committee of 100 (afterwards increased to 256) citizens, who were charged with the duty of promoting the selection of Chicago as the site for the Exposition. New York, Washington and St. Louis were competing points, but the choice of Congress fell upon Chicago, and the act establishing the World's Fair at that city was signed by President Harrison on April 25, 1890. Under the requirements of the law, the President appointed eight Commissioners-at-large, with two Commissioners and two alternates from each State and Territory and the District of Columbia. Col. George R. Davis, of Chicago, was elected Director-General by the body thus constituted. Ex-Senator Thomas M. Palmer, of Michigan, was chosen President of the Commission and John T. Dickinson, of Texas, Secretary. This Commission delegated much of its power to a Board of Reference and Control, who were instructed to act with a similar number appointed by the World's Columbian Exposition. The latter organization was an incorporation, with a directorate of forty-five members, elected annually by the stockholders. Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, was the first President of the corporation, and was succeeded by W. T. Baker and Harlow N. Higinbotham.

In addition to these bodies, certain powers were vested in a Board of Lady Managers, composed of two members, with alternates, from each State and Territory, besides nine from the city of Chicago. Mrs. Potter Palmer was chosen President of the latter. This Board was particularly charged with supervision of women's participation in the Exposition, and of the exhibits of women's work.

The supreme executive power was vested in the Joint Board of Control. The site selected was Jackson Park, in the South Division of Chicago, with a strip connecting Jackson and Washington Parks, known as the "Midway Plaisance," which was surrendered to "concessionaires" who purchased the privilege of giving exhibitions, or conducting restaurants or selling-booths thereon. The total area of the site was 633 acres, and that of the buildings—not reckoning those erected by States other than Illinois, and by foreign governments—was about 200 acres. When to this is added the acreage of the foreign and State buildings, the total space under roof approximated 250 acres. These figures do not include the buildings erected by private exhibitors, caterers and vendors, which would add a small percentage to the grand total. Forty-seven foreign Governments made appropriations for the erection of their own buildings and other expenses connected with official representation, and there were exhibitors from eighty-six nations. The United States Government erected its own building, and appropriated $500,000 to defray the expenses of a national exhibit, besides $2,500,000 toward the general cost of the Exposition. The appropriations by foreign Governments aggregated about $6,500,000, and those by the States and Territories, $6,120,000—that of Illinois being $800,000. The entire outlay of the World's Columbian Exposition Company, up to March 31, 1894, including the cost of preliminary organization, construction, operating and post-Exposition expenses, was $27,151,800. This is, of course, exclusive of foreign and State expenditures, which would swell the aggregate cost to nearly $45,000,000. Citizens of Chicago subscribed $5,608,206 toward the capital stock of the Exposition Company, and the municipality, $5,000,000, which was raised by the sale of bonds. (See Thirty-sixth General Assembly.)

The site, while admirably adapted to the purpose, was, when chosen, a marshy flat, crossed by low sand ridges, upon which stood occasional clumps of stunted scrub oaks. Before the gates of the great fair were opened to the public, the entire area had been transformed into a dream of beauty. Marshes had been drained, filled in and sodded; driveways and broad walks constructed; artificial ponds and lagoons dug and embanked, and all the highest skill of the landscape gardener's art had been called into play to produce varied and striking effects. But the task had been a Herculean one. There were seventeen principal (or, as they may be called, departmental) buildings, all of beautiful and ornate design, and all of vast size. They were known as the Manufacturers' and Liberal Arts, the Machinery, Electrical, Transportation, Woman's, Horticultural, Mines and Mining, Anthropological, Administration, Art Galleries, Agricultural, Art Institute, Fisheries, Live Stock, Dairy and Forestry buildings, and the Music Hall and Casino. Several of these had large annexes. The Manufacturers' Building was the largest. It was rectangular (1687x787 feet), having a ground area of 31 acres and a floor and gallery area of 44 acres. Its central chamber was 1280x380 feet, with a nave 107 feet wide, both hall and nave being surrounded by a gallery 50 feet wide. It was four times as large as the Roman Coliseum and three times as large as St. Peter's at Rome; 17,000,000 feet of lumber, 13,000,000 pounds of steel, and 2,000,000 pounds of iron had been used in its construction, involving a cost of $1,800,000.

It was originally intended to open the Exposition, formally, on Oct. 21, 1892, the quadri-centennial of Columbus' discovery of land on the Western Hemisphere, but the magnitude of the undertaking rendered this impracticable. Consequently, while dedicatory ceremonies were held on that day, preceded by a monster procession and followed by elaborate pyrotechnic displays at night, May 1, 1893, was fixed as the opening day—the machinery and fountains being put in operation, at the touch of an electric button by President Cleveland, at the close of a short address. The total number of admissions from that date to Oct. 31, was 27,530,460—the largest for any single day being on Oct. 9 (Chicago Day) amounting to 761,944. The total receipts from all sources (including National and State appropriations, subscriptions, etc.), amounted to $28,151,168.75, of which $10,626,330.76 was from the sale of tickets, and $3,699,581.43 from concessions. The aggregate attendance fell short of that at the Paris Exposition of 1889 by about 500,000, while the receipts from the sale of tickets and concessions exceeded the latter by nearly $5,800,000. Subscribers to the Exposition stock received a return of ten per cent on the same.

The Illinois building was the first of the State buildings to be completed. It was also the largest and most costly, but was severely criticised from an architectural standpoint. The exhibits showed the internal resources of the State, as well as the development of its governmental system, and its progress in civilization from the days of the first pioneers. The entire Illinois exhibit in the State building was under charge of the State Board of Agriculture, who devoted one-tenth of the appropriation, and a like proportion of floor space, to the exhibition of the work of Illinois women as scientists, authors, artists, decorators, etc. Among special features of the Illinois exhibit were: State trophies and relics, kept in a fire-proof memorial hall; the display of grains and minerals, and an immense topographical map (prepared at a cost of $15,000), drafted on a scale of two miles to the inch, showing the character and resources of the State, and correcting many serious cartographical errors previously undiscovered.

WORTHEN, Amos Henry, scientist and State Geologist, was born at Bradford, Vt., Oct. 31, 1813, emigrated to Kentucky in 1834, and, in 1836, removed to Illinois, locating at Warsaw. Teaching, surveying and mercantile business were his pursuits until 1842, when he returned to the East, spending two years in Boston, but returning to Warsaw in 1844. His natural predilections were toward the natural sciences, and, after coming west, he devoted most of his leisure time to the collection and study of specimens of mineralogy, geology and conchology. On the organization of the geological survey of Illinois in 1851, he was appointed assistant to Dr. J. G. Norwood, then State Geologist, and, in 1858, succeeded to the office, having meanwhile spent three years as Assistant Geologist in the first Iowa survey. As State Geologist he published seven volumes of reports, and was engaged upon the eighth when overtaken by death, May 6, 1888. These reports, which are as comprehensive as they are voluminous, have been reviewed and warmly commended by the leading scientific periodicals of this country and Europe. In 1877 field work was discontinued, and the State Historical Library and Natural History Museum were established, Professor Worthen being placed in charge as curator. He was the author of various valuable scientific papers and member of numerous scientific societies in this country and in Europe.

WORTHINGTON, Nicholas Ellsworth, ex-Congressman, was born in Brooke County, W. Va., March 30, 1836, and completed his education at Allegheny College, Pa., studied Law at Morgantown, Va., and was admitted to the bar in 1860. He is a resident of Peoria, and, by profession, a lawyer; was County Superintendent of Schools of Peoria County from 1868 to 1872, and a member of the State Board of Education from 1869 to 1872. In 1882 he was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, from the Tenth Congressional District, and re-elected in 1884. In 1886 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Philip Sidney Post. He was elected Circuit Judge of the Tenth Judicial District in 1891, and re-elected in 1897. In 1894 he served upon a commission appointed by President Cleveland, to investigate the labor strikes of that year at Chicago.

WRIGHT, John Stephen, manufacturer, was born at Sheffield, Mass., July 16, 1815; came to Chicago in 1832, with his father, who opened a store in that city; in 1837, at his own expense, built the first school building in Chicago; in 1840 established "The Prairie Farmer," which he conducted for many years in the interest of popular education and progressive agriculture. In 1852 he engaged in the manufacture of Atkins' self-raking reaper and mower, was one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union and the Illinois Central Railways, and wrote a volume entitled, "Chicago: Past, Present and Future," published in 1870. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 26, 1874.

WULFF, Henry, ex-State Treasurer, was born in Meldorf, Germany, August 24, 1854; came to Chicago in 1863, and began his political career as a Trustee of the town of Jefferson. In 1866 he was elected County Clerk of Cook County, and re-elected in 1890; in 1894 became the Republican nominee for State Treasurer, receiving, at the November election of that year, the unprecedented plurality of 133,427 votes over his Democratic opponent.

WYANET, a town of Bureau County, at the intersection of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 7 miles southwest of Princeton. Population (1890), 670; (1900), 902.

WYLIE, (Rev.) Sammel, domestic missionary, born in Ireland and came to America in boyhood; was educated at the University of Pennsylvania and the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and ordained in 1818. Soon after this he came west as a domestic missionary and, in 1820, became pastor of a church at Sparta, Ill., where he remained until his death, March 20, 1872, after a pastorate of 52 years. During his pastorate the church sent out a dozen colonies to form new church organizations elsewhere. He is described as able, eloquent and scholarly.

WYMAN, (Col.) John B., soldier, was born in Massachusetts, July 12, 1817, and educated in the schools of that State until 14 years of age, when he became a clerk in a clothing store in his native town of Shrewsbury, later being associated with mercantile establishments in Cincinnati, and again in his native State. From 1846 to 1850 he was employed successively as a clerk in the car and machine shops at Springfield, Mass., then as Superintendent of Construction, and, later, as conductor on the New York & New Haven Railroad, finally, in 1850, becoming Superintendent of the Connecticut River Railroad. In 1852 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, assisting in the survey and construction of the line under Col. R. B. Mason, the Chief Engineer, and finally becoming Assistant Superintendent of the Northern Division. He was one of the original proprietors of the town of Amboy, in Lee County, and its first Mayor, also serving a second term. Having a fondness for military affairs, he was usually connected with some military organization—while in Cincinnati being attached to a company, of which Prof. O. M. Mitchell, the celebrated astronomer (afterwards Major-General Mitchell), was Captain. After coming to Illinois he became Captain of the Chicago Light Guards. Having left the employ of the Railroad in 1858, he was in private business at Amboy at the beginning of the Civil War in 1861. As Assistant-Adjutant General, by appointment of Governor Yates, he rendered valuable service in the early weeks of the war in securing arms from Jefferson Barracks and in the organization of the three-months' regiments. Then, having organized the Thirtieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry—the first organized in the State for the three years' service—he was commissioned its Colonel, and, in July following, entered upon the duty of guarding the railroad lines in Southwest Missouri and Arkansas. The following year his regiment was attached to General Sherman's command in the first campaign against Vicksburg. On the second day of the Battle of Chickasaw Bayou, he fell mortally wounded, dying on the field, Dec. 28, 1862. Colonel Wyman was one of the most accomplished and promising of the volunteer soldiers sent to the field from Illinois, of whom so many were former employes of the Illinois Central Railroad.

WYOMING, a town of Stark County, 31 miles north-northwest from Peoria, at the junction of the Peoria branch Rock Island & Pacific and the Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has two high schools, churches, two banks, flour mills, water-works, machine shop, and two weekly newspapers. Coal is mined here. Pop. (1890), 1,116; (1900), 1,277.

XENIA, a village of Clay County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 87 miles east of St. Louis. Population (1900), 800.

YATES CITY, a village of Knox County, at the junction of the Peoria Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with the Rushville branch, 23 miles southeast of Galesburg. The town has banks, a coal mine, telephone exchange, school, churches and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 687; (1900), 650.

YATES, Henry, pioneer, was born in Caroline County, Va., Oct. 29, 1786—being a grand-nephew of Chief Justice John Marshall; removed to Fayette County, Ky., where he located and laid out the town of Warsaw, which afterwards became the county-seat of Gallatin County. In 1831 he removed to Sangamon County, Ill., and, in 1832, settled at the site of the present town of Berlin, which he laid out the following year, also laying out the town of New Berlin, a few years later, on the line of the Wabash Railway. He was father of Gov. Richard Yates. Died, Sept. 13, 1865.—Henry (Yates), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Berlin, Ill., March 7, 1835; engaged in merchandising at New Berlin; in 1862, raised a company of volunteers for the One Hundred and Sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry, was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and brevetted Colonel and Brigadier-General. He was accidentally shot in 1863, and suffered sun-stroke at Little Rock, from which he never fully recovered. Died, August 3, 1871.

YATES, Richard, former Governor and United States Senator, was born at Warsaw, Ky., Jan. 18, 1815, of English descent. In 1831 he accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling first at Springfield and later at Berlin, Sangamon County. He soon after entered Illinois College, from which he graduated in 1835, and subsequently read law with Col. John J. Hardin, at Jacksonville, which thereafter became his home. In 1842 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Morgan County, and was re-elected in 1844, and again in 1848. In 1850 he was a candidate for Congress from the Seventh District and elected over Maj. Thomas L. Harris, the previous incumbent, being the only Whig Representative in the Thirty-second Congress from Illinois. Two years later he was re-elected over John Calhoun, but was defeated, in 1854, by his old opponent, Harris. He was one of the most vigorous opponents of the Kansas-Nebraska^{*} Bill in the Thirty-third Congress, and an early participant in the movement for the organization of the Republican party to resist the further extension of slavery, being a prominent speaker, on the same platform with Lincoln, before the first Republican State Convention held at Bloomington, in May, 1856, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents of that body. In 1860 he was elected to the executive chair on the ticket headed by Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency, and, by his energetic support of the National administration in its measures for the suppression of the Rebellion, won the sobriquet of "the Illinois War-Governor." In 1865 he was elected United States Senator, serving until 1871. He died suddenly, at St. Louis, Nov. 27, 1873, while returning from Arkansas, whither he had gone, as a United States Commissioner, by appointment of President Grant, to inspect a land-subsidy railroad. He was a man of rare ability, earnestness of purpose and extraordinary personal magnetism, as well as of a lofty order of patriotism. His faults were those of a nature generous, impulsive and warm-hearted.

YORKVILLE, the county-seat of Kendall County, on Fox River and Streator Division of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles southwest of Aurora; on interurban electric line; has water-power, electric lights, a bank, churches and weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890) 375; (1900), 413.

YOUNG, Brigham, Mormon leader, was born at Whittingham, Vt., June 1, 1801, joined the Mormons in 1831 and, the next year, became associated with Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, and, in 1835, an "apostle." He accompanied a considerable body of that sect to Independence, Mo., but was driven out with them in 1837, settling for a short time at Quincy, Ill., but later removing to Nauvoo, of which he was one of the founders. On the assassination of Smith, in 1844, he became the successor of the latter, as head of the Mormon Church, and, the following year, headed the exodus from Illinois, which finally resulted in the Mormon settlement in Utah. His subsequent career there, where he was appointed Governor by President Fillmore, and, for a time, successfully defied national authority, is a matter of national rather than State history. He remained at the head of the Mormon Church until his death at Salt Lake City, August 29, 1877.

YOUNG, Richard Montgomery, United States Senator, was born in Kentucky in 1796, studied law and removed to Jonesboro, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar in 1817; served in the Second

* General Assembly (1820-22) as Representative from Union County; was a Circuit Judge, 1825-27; Presidential Elector in 1828; Circuit Judge again, 1829-37; elected United States Senator in 1837 as successor to W. L. D. Ewing, serving until 1843, when he was commissioned Justice of the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1847 to become Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington. During the session of 1850-51, he served as Clerk of the National House of Representatives. Died, in an insane asylum, in Washington, in 1853.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, first permanently organized at Chicago, in 1858, although desultory movements of a kindred character had previously been started at Peoria, Quincy, Chicago and Springfield, some as early as 1854. From 1858 to 1872, various associations were formed at different points throughout the State, which were entirely independent of each other. The first effort looking to union and mutual aid, was made in 1872, when Robert Weideusall, on behalf of the International Committee, called a convention, to meet at Bloomington, November 6-9. State conventions have been held annually since 1872. In that of 1875, steps were taken looking to the appointment of a State Secretary, and, in 1876, Charles M. Morton assumed the office. Much evangelistic work was done, and new associations formed, the total number reported at the Champaign Convention, in 1877, being sixty-two. After one year's work Mr. Morton resigned the secretaryship, the office remaining vacant for three years. The question of the appointment of a successor was discussed at the Decatur Convention in 1879, and, in April, 1880, I. B. Brown was made State Secretary, and has occupied the position to the present time (1899). At the date of his appointment the official figures showed sixteen associations in Illinois, with a total membership of 2,443, and property valued at $126,500, including building funds, the associations at Chicago and Aurora owning buildings. Thirteen officers were employed, none of them being in Chicago. Since 1880 the work has steadily grown, so that five Assistant State Secretaries are now employed. In 1886, a plan for arranging the State work under departmental administration was devised, but not put in operation until 1890. The present six departments of supervision are: General Supervision, in charge of the State Secretary and his Assistants; railroad and city work; counties and towns; work among students; corresponding membership department, and office work. The two last named are under one executive head, but each of the others in charge of an Assistant Secretary, who is responsible for its development. The entire work is under the supervision of a State Executive Committee of twenty-seven members, one-third of whom are elected annually. Willis H. Herrick of Chicago has been its chairman for several years. This body is appointed by a State convention composed of delegates from the local Associations. Of these there were, in October, 1898, 116, with a membership of 15,888. The value of the property owned was $2,500,000. Twenty-two occupy their own buildings, of which five are for railroad men and one for students. Weekly gatherings for young men numbered 248, and there are now representatives or correspondents in 665 communities where no organization has been effected. Scientific physical culture is made a feature by 40 associations, and educational work has been largely developed. The enrollment in evening classes, during 1898-99, was 978. The building of the Chicago branch (erected in 1893) is the finest of its class in the world. Recently a successful association has been formed among coal miners, and another among the first grade boys of the Illinois State Reformatory, while an extensive work has been conducted at the camps of the Illinois National Guard.

ZANE, Charles S., lawyer and jurist, was born in Cumberland County, N. J., March 2, 1831, of English and New England stock. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Sangamon County, Ill., for a time working on a farm and at brick-making. From 1852 to '55 he attended McKendree College, but did not graduate, and, on leaving college, engaged in teaching, at the same time reading law. In 1857 he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice at Springfield. The following year he was elected City Attorney. He had for partners, at different times, William H. Herndon (once a partner of Abraham Lincoln) and Senator Shelby M. Cullom. In 1873 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court for the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and was re-elected in 1879. In 1883 President Arthur appointed him Chief Justice of Utah, where he has since resided, though superseded by the appointment of a successor by President Cleveland. At the first State election in Utah, held in November, 1895, he was chosen one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the new Commonwealth, but was defeated for re-election, by his Democratic opponent, in 1898.

SUPPLEMENT.

The following matter, received too late for insertion in the body of this work, is added in the form of a supplement.

COGHLAN, (Capt.) Joseph Bullock, naval officer, was born in Kentucky, and, at the age of 15 years, came to Illinois, living on a farm for a time near Carlyle, in Clinton County. In 1860 he was appointed by his uncle, Hon. Philip B. Fouke—then a Representative in Congress from the Belleville District—to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, graduating in 1863, and being promoted through the successive grades of Ensign, Master, Lieutenant, Lieutenant-Commander, and Commander, and serving upon various vessels until Nov. 18, 1893, when he was commissioned Captain and, in 1897, assigned to the command of the battleship Raleigh, on the Asiatic Station. He was thus connected with Admiral Dewey's squadron at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, and took a conspicuous and brilliant part in the affair in Manila Bay, on May 1, 1898, which resulted in the destruction of the Spanish fleet. Captain Coghlan's connection with subsequent events in the Philippines was in the highest degree creditable to himself and the country. His vessel (the Raleigh) was the first of Admiral Dewey's squadron to return home, coming by way of the Suez Canal, in the summer of 1899, he and his crew receiving an immense ovation on their arrival in New York harbor.

CRANE, (Rev.) James Lyons, clergyman, army chaplain, was born at Mt. Eaton, Wayne County, Ohio, August 30, 1823, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Cincinnati in 1841, and, coming to Edgar County, Illinois, in 1842, attended a seminary at Paris some three years. He joined the Illinois Conference in 1846, and was assigned to the Danville circuit, afterwards presiding over charges at Grandview, Hillsboro, Alton, Jacksonville, and Springfield—at the last two points being stationed two or more times, besides serving as Presiding Elder of the Paris, Danville, and Springfield Districts. The importance of the stations which he filled during his itinerant career served as evidence of his recognized ability and popularity as a preacher.

In July, 1861, he was appointed Chaplain of the Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at that time commanded by Ulysses S. Grant as Colonel, and, although he remained with the regiment only a few months, the friendship then established between him and the future commander of the armies of the Union lasted through their lives. This was shown by his appointment by President Grant, in 1869, to the position of Postmaster of the city of Springfield, which came to him as a personal compliment, being re-appointed four years afterwards and continuing in office eight years. After retiring from the Springfield postoffice, he occupied charges at Island Grove and Shelbyville, his death occurring at the latter place, July 29, 1879, as the result of an attack of paralysis some two weeks previous. Mr. Crane was married in 1847 to Miss Elizabeth Mayo, daughter of Col. J. Mayo—a prominent citizen of Edgar County, at an early day—his wife surviving him some twenty years. Rev. Charles A. Crane and Rev. Frank Crane, pastors of prominent Methodist churches in Boston and Chicago, are sons of the subject of this sketch.

DAWES, Charles Gates, Comptroller of the Treasury, was born at Marietta, Ohio, August 27, 1865; graduated from Marietta College in 1884, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1886; worked at civil engineering during his vacations, finally becoming Chief Engineer of the Toledo & Ohio Railroad. Between 1887 and 1894 he was engaged in the practice of law at Lincoln, Neb., but afterwards became interested in the gas business in various cities, including Evanston, Ill., which became his home. In 1896 he took a leading part in securing instructions by the Republican State Convention at Springfield in favor of the nomination of Mr. McKinley for the Presidency, and during the succeeding campaign served as a member of the National Republican Committee for the State of Illinois. Soon after the accession of President McKinley, he was appointed Comptroller of the Treasury, a position which he now holds. Mr. Dawes is the son of R. B. Dawes, a former Congressman from Ohio, and the great-grandson of Manasseh Cutler, who was an influential factor in the early history of the Northwest Territory, and has been credited with exerting a strong influence in shaping and securing the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787.

DISTIN, (Col.) William L., former Department Commander of Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, was born at Ciucinnati, Ohio, Feb. 9, 1843, his father being of English descent, while his maternal grandfather was a Colonel of the Polish Lancers in the army of the first Napoleon, who, after the exile of his leader, came to America, settling in Indiana. The father of the subject of this sketch settled at Keokuk, Iowa, where the son grew to manhood and in February, 1863, enlisted as a private in the Seventeenth Iowa Infantry, having been twice rejected previously on account of physical ailment. Soon after enlistment he was detailed for provost-marshal duty, but later took part with his regiment in the campaign in Alabama. He served for a time in the Fifteenth Army Corps, under Gen. John A. Logan, was subsequently detailed for duty on the Staff of General Raum, and participated in the battles of Resaca and Tilton, Ga. Having been captured in the latter, he was imprisoned successively at Jacksonville (Ga.), Montgomery, Savannah, and finally at Andersonville. From the latter he succeeded in effecting his escape, but was recaptured and returned to that famous prison-pen. Having escaped a second time by assuming the name of a dead man and bribing the guard, he was again captured and imprisoned at various points in Mississippi until exchanged about the time of the assassination of President Lincoln. He was then so weakened by his long confinement and scanty fare that he had to be carried on board the steamer on a stretcher. At this time he narrowly escaped being on board the steamer Sultana, which was blown up below Cairo, with 2,100 soldiers on board, a large proportion of whom lost their lives. After being mustered out at Davenport, Iowa, June 28, 1865, he was employed for a time on the Des Moines Valley Railroad, and as a messenger and route agent of the United States Express Company. In 1872 he established himself in business in Quincy, Ill., in which he proved very successful. Here he became prominent in local Grand Army circles, and, in 1890, was unanimously elected Commander of the Department of Illinois. Previous to this he had been an officer of the Illinois National Guard, and served as Aid-de-Camp, with the rank of Colonel, on the staff of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer. In 1897 Colonel Distin was appointed by President McKinley Surveyor-General for the Territory of Alaska, a position which (1899) he still holds.

DUMMER, Henry E., lawyer, was born at Hallowell, Maine, April 9, 1808, was educated in Bowdoin College, graduating there in the class of 1827, after which he took a course in law at Cambridge Law School, and was soon after admitted to the bar. Then, having spent some two years in his native State, in 1832 he removed to Illinois, settling first in Springfield, where he remained six years, being for a part of the time a partner of John T. Stuart, who afterwards became the first partner in law of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Dummer had a brother, Richard William Dummer, who had preceded him to Illinois, living for a time in Jacksonville. In 1838 he removed to Beardstown, Cass County, which continued to be his home for more than a quarter of a century. During his residence there he served as Alderman, City Attorney and Judge of Probate for Cass County; also represented Cass County in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and, in 1860, was elected State Senator in the Twenty-second General Assembly, serving four years. Mr. Dummer was an earnest Republican, and served that party as a delegate for the State-at-large to the Convention of 1864, at Baltimore, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency a second time. In 1864 he removed to Jacksonville, and for the next year was the law partner of David A. Smith, until the death of the latter in 1865. In the summer of 1878 Mr. Dummer went to Mackinac, Mich., in search of health, but died there August 12 of that year.

ECKELS, James H., ex-Comptroller of the Currency, was born of Scotch-Irish parentage at Princeton, Ill., Nov. 22, 1858, was educated in the common schools and the high school of his native town, graduated from the Law School at Albany, N. Y., in 1881, and the following year began practice at Ottawa, Ill. Here he continued in active practice until 1893, when he was appointed by President Cleveland Comptroller of the Currency, serving until May 1, 1898, when he resigned to accept the presidency of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago. Mr. Eckels manifested such distinguished ability in the discharge of his duties as Comptroller that he received the notable compliment of being retained in office by a Republican administration more than a year after the retirement of President Cleveland, while his selection for a place at the head of one of the leading banking institutions of Chicago was a no less marked recognition of his abilities as a financier. He was a Delegate from the Eleventh District to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in 1892, and represented the same district in the Gold Democratic Convention at Indianapolis in 1896, and assisted in framing the platform there adopted—which indicated his views on the financial questions involved in the campaign of that year.

FIELD, Daniel, early merchant, was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, Nov. 30, 1790, and settled at Golconda, Ill., in 1818, dying there in 1855. He was a man of great enterprise, engaged in merchandising, and became a large landholder, farmer and stock-grower, and an extensive shipper of stock and produce to lower Mississippi markets. He married Elizabeth Dailey of Charleston, Ind., and raised a large family of children, one of whom, Philip D., became Sheriff, while another, John, was County Judge of Pope County. His daughter, Maria, married Gen. Green B. Raum, who became prominent as a soldier during the Civil War and, later, as a member of Congress and Commissioner of Internal Revenue and Pension Commissioner in Washington.

FIELD, Green B., member of a pioneer family, was born within the present limits of the State of Indiana in 1787, served as a Lieutenant in the War of 1812, was married in Bourbon County, Kentucky, to Miss Mary E. Cogswell, the daughter of Dr. Joseph Cogswell, a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and, in 1817, removed to Pope County, Illinois, where he laid off the town of Golconda, which became the county-seat. He served as a Representative from Pope County in the First General Assembly (1818-20), and was the father of Juliet C. Field, who became the wife of John Raum; of Edna Field, the wife of Dr. Tarlton Dunn, and of Green B. Field, who was a Lieutenant in Third Regiment Illinois Volunteers during the Mexican War. Mr. Field was the grandfather of Gen. Green B. Raum, mentioned in the preceding paragraph. He died of yellow fever in Louisiana in 1823.

GALE, Stephen Francis, first Chicago bookseller and a railway promoter, was born at Exeter, N. H., March 8, 1812; at 15 years of age became clerk in a leading book-store in Boston; came to Chicago in 1833, and soon afterwards opened the first book and stationery establishment in that city, which, in after years, gained an extensive trade. In 1842 the firm of S. F.

Gale & Co. was organized, but Mr. Gale, having become head of the Chicago Fire Department, retired from business in 1845. As early as 1846 he was associated with Wm. B. Ogden and John B. Turner in the steps then being taken to revive the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and, in conjunction with these gentlemen, became responsible for the means to purchase the charter and assets of the road from the Eastern bondholders. Later, he engaged in the construction of the branch road from Turner Junction to Aurora, became President of the line and extended it to Mendota to connect with the Illinois Central at that Point. These roads afterwards became a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line. A number of years ago Mr. Gale returned to his old home in New Hampshire, where he has since resided.

HAY, John, early settler, came to the region of Kaskaskia between 1790 and 1800, and became a prominent citizen of St. Clair County. He was selected as a member of the First Legislative Council of Indiana Territory for St. Clair County in 1805. In 1809 he was appointed Clerk of the Common Pleas Court of St. Clair County, and was continued in office after the organization of the State Government, serving until his death at Belleville in 1845.

HAYS, John, pioneer settler of Northwest Territory, was a native of New York, who came to Cahokia, in the "Illinois Country," in 1793, and lived there the remainder of his life. His early life had been spent in the fur-trade about Mackinac, in the Lake of the Woods region and about the sources of the Mississippi. During the War of 1812 he was able to furnish Governor Edwards valuable information in reference to the Indians in the Northwest. He filled the office of Postmaster at Cahokia for a number of years, and was Sheriff of St. Clair County from 1798 to 1818.

MOULTON, (Col.) George M., soldier and building contractor, was born at Readsburg, Vt., March 15, 1851, came early in life to Chicago, and was educated in the schools of that city. By profession he is a contractor and builder, the firm of which he is a member having been connected with the construction of a number of large buildings, including some extensive grain elevators. Colonel Moulton became a member of the Second Regiment Illinois National Guard in June, 1884, being elected to the office of Major, which he retained until January, 1893, when he was appointed Inspector of Rifle Practice on the staff of General Wheeler. A year later he was commissioned Colonel of the regiment, a position which he occupied at the time of the call by the President for troops to serve in the Spanish-American War in April, 1898. He promptly answered the call, and was sworn into the United States service at the head of his regiment early in May. The regiment was almost immediately ordered to Jacksonville, Fla., remaining there and at Savannah, Ga., until early in December, when it was transferred to Havana, Cuba. Here he was soon after appointed Chief of Police for the city of Havana, remaining in office until the middle of January, 1899, when he returned to his regiment, then stationed at Camp Columbia, near the city of Havana. In the latter part of March he returned with his regiment to Augusta, Ga., where it was mustered out, April 26, 1899, one year from the date of its arrival at Springfield. After leaving the service Colonel Moulton resumed his business as a contractor.

SHERMAN, Lawrence Y., legislator and Speaker of the Forty-first General Assembly, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Nov. 6, 1858; at 3 years of age came to Illinois, his parents settling at Industry, McDonough County. When he had reached the age of 10 years he went to Jasper County, where he grew to manhood, received his education in the common schools and in the law department of McKendree College, graduating from the latter, and, in 1881, located at Macomb, McDonough County. Here he began his career by driving a team upon the street in order to accumulate means enabling him to devote his entire attention to his chosen profession of law. He soon took an active interest in politics, was elected County Judge in 1886, and, at the expiration of his term, formed a partnership with George D. Tunncliffe and D. G. Tunncliffe, ex-Justice of the Supreme Court. In 1894 he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative in the General Assembly, but withdrew to prevent a split in the party; was nominated and elected in 1896, and re-elected in 1898, and, at the succeeding session of the Forty-first General Assembly, was nominated by the Republican caucus and elected Speaker, as he was again of the Forty-second in 1901.

VINYARD, Philip, early legislator, was born in Pennsylvania in 1800, came to Illinois at an early day, and settled in Pope County, which he represented in the lower branch of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth General Assemblies. He married Miss Matilda McCoy, the daughter of a prominent Illinois pioneer, and served as Sheriff of Pope County for a number of years. Died, at Golconda, in 1862.

SUPPLEMENT NO. II.

BLACK HAWK WAR, THE. The episode known in history under the name of "The Black Hawk War," was the most formidable conflict between the whites and Indians, as well as the most far-reaching in its results, that ever occurred upon the soil of Illinois. It takes its name from the Indian Chief, of the Sac tribe, Black Hawk (Indian name, Makatai Meshekiakia, meaning "Black Sparrow Hawk"), who was the leader of the hostile Indian band and a principal factor in the struggle. Black Hawk had been an ally of the British during the War of 1812-15, served with Tecumseh when the latter fell at the battle of the Thames in 1813, and, after the war, continued to maintain friendly relations with his "British father." The outbreak in Illinois had its origin in the construction put upon the treaty negotiated by Gen. William Henry Harrison with the Sac and Fox Indians on behalf of the United States Government, November 3, 1804, under which the Indians transferred to the Government nearly 15,000,000 acres of land comprising the region lying between the Wisconsin River on the north, Fox River of Illinois on the east and southeast, and the Mississippi on the west, for which the Government agreed to pay to the confederated tribes less than $2,500 in goods and the insignificant sum of $1,000 per annum in perpetuity. While the validity of the treaty was denied on the part of the Indians on the ground that it had originally been entered into by their chiefs under duress, while held as prisoners under a charge of murder at Jefferson Barracks, during which they had been kept in a state of constant intoxication, it had been repeatedly reaffirmed by parts or all of the tribe, especially in 1815, in 1816, in 1822 and in 1823, and finally recognized by Black Hawk himself in 1831. The part of the treaty of 1804 which was the immediate cause of the disagreement was that which stipulated that, so long as the lands ceded under it remained the property of the United States (that is, should not be transferred to private owners), "the Indians belonging to the said tribes shall enjoy the privilege of living or hunting upon them." Although these lands had not been put upon the market, or even surveyed, as "squatters" multiplied in this region little respect was paid to the treaty rights of the Indians, particularly with reference to those localities where, by reason of fertility of the soil or some other natural advantage, the Indians had established something like permanent homes and introduced a sort of crude cultivation. This was especially the case with reference to the Sac village of "Saukenuk" on the north bank of Rock River near its mouth, where the Indians, when not absent on the chase, had lived for over a century, had cultivated fields of corn and vegetables and had buried their dead. In the early part of the last century, it is estimated that some five hundred families had been accustomed to congregate here, making it the largest Indian village in the West. As early as 1823 the encroachments of squatters on the rights claimed by the Indians under the treaty of 1804 began; their fields were taken possession of by the intruders, their lodges burned and their women and children whipped and driven away during the absence of the men on their annual hunts. The dangers resulting from these conflicts led Governor Edwards, as early as 1828, to demand of the General Government the expulsion of the Indians from Illinois, which resulted in an order from President Jackson in 1829 for their removal west of the Mississippi. On application of Col. George Davenport, a trader of much influence with the Indians, the time was extended to April 1, 1830. During the preceding year Colonel Davenport and the firm of Davenport and Farnham bought from the United States Government most of the lands on Rock River occupied by Black Hawk's band, with the intention, as has been claimed, of permitting the Indians to remain. This was not so understood by Black Hawk, who was greatly incensed, although Davenport offered to take other lands from the Government in exchange or cancel the sale—an arrangement to which President Jackson would not consent. On their return in the spring of 1830, the Indians found whites in possession of their village. Prevented from cultivating their fields, and their annual hunt proving unsuccessful, the following winter proved for them one of great hardship. Black Hawk, having made a visit to his "British father" (the British Agent) at Malden, Canada, claimed to have received words of sympathy and encouragement, which induced him to determine to regain possession of their fields. In this he was encouraged by Neapope, his second in command, and by assurance of support from White Cloud, a half Sac and half Winnebago—known also as "The Prophet"—whose village (Prophet's Town) was some forty miles from the mouth of Rock River, and through whom Black Hawk claimed to have received promises of aid in guns, ammunition and provisions from the British. The reappearance of Black Hawk's band in the vicinity of his old haunts, in the spring of 1831, produced a wild panic among the frontier settlers. Messages were hurried to Governor Reynolds, who had succeeded Governor Edwards in December previous, appealing for protection against the savages. The Governor issued a call for 700 volunteers "to remove the band of Sac Indians" at Rock Island beyond the Mississippi. Although Gen. E. P. Gaines of the regular army, commanding the military district, thought the regulars sufficiently strong to cope with the situation, the Governor's proclamation was responded to by more than twice the number called for. The volunteers assembled early in June, 1831, at Beardstown, the place of rendezvous named in the call, and having been organized into two regiments under command of Col. James D. Henry and Col. Daniel Lieb, with a spy battalion under Gen. Joseph Duncan, marched across the country and, after effecting a junction with General Gaines' regulars, appeared before Black Hawk's village on the 25th of June. In the meantime General Gaines, having learned that the Pottawatomies, Winnebagos and Kickapoos had promised to join the Sacs in their uprising, asked the assistance of the battalion of mounted men previously offered by Governor Reynolds. The combined armies amounted to 2,500 men, while the fighting force of the Indians was 300. Finding himself overwhelmingly outnumbered, Black Hawk withdrew under cover of night to the west side of the Mississippi. After burning the village, General Gaines notified Black Hawk of his intention to pursue and attack his band, which had the effect to bring the fugitive chief to the General's headquarters, where, on June 30, a new treaty was entered into by which he bound himself and his people to remain west of the Mississippi unless permitted to return by the United States. This ended the campaign, and the volunteers returned to their homes, although the affair had produced an intense excitement along the whole frontier, and involved a heavy expense.

The next winter was spent by Black Hawk and his band on the site of old Fort Madison, in the present State of Iowa. Dissatisfied and humiliated by his repulse of the previous year, in disregard of his pledge to General Gaines, on April 6, 1832, at the head of 500 warriors and their families, he again crossed the Mississippi at Yellow Banks about the site of the present city of Oquawka, fifty miles below Rock Island, with the intention, as claimed, if not permitted to stop at his old village, to proceed to the Prophet's Town and raise a crop with the Winnebagoes. Here he was met by The Prophet with renewed assurances of aid from the Winnebagoes, which was still further strengthened by promises from the British Agent received through a visit by Neapope to Malden the previous autumn. An incident of this invasion was the effective warning given to the white settlers by Shabona, a friendly Ottawa chief, which probably had the effect to prevent a widespread massacre. Besides the towns of Galena and Chicago, the settlements in Illinois north of Fort Clark (Peoria) were limited to some thirty families on Bureau Creek with a few cabins at Hennepin, Peru, LaSalle, Ottawa, Indian Creek, Dixon, Kellogg's Grove, Apple Creek, and a few other points. Gen. Henry Atkinson, commanding the regulars at Fort Armstrong (Rock Island), having learned of the arrival of Black Hawk a week after he crossed the Mississippi, at once took steps to notify Governor Reynolds of the situation with a requisition for an adequate force of militia to coöperate with the regulars. Under date of April 16, 1832, the Governor issued his call for "a strong detachment of militia" to meet by April 22. Beardstown again being named as a place of rendezvous. The call resulted in the assembling of a force which was organized into four regiments under command of Cols. John DeWitt, Jacob Fry, John Thomas and Samuel M. Thompson, together with a spy battalion under Maj. James D. Heury, an odd battalion under Maj. Thomas James and a foot battalion under Maj. Thomas Long. To these were subsequently added two independent battalions of mounted men, under command of Majors Isaiah Stillman and David Bailey, which were finally consolidated as the Fifth Regiment under command of Col. James Johnson. The organization of the first four regiments at Beardstown was completed by April 27, and the force under command of Brigadier-General Whiteside (but accompanied by Governor Reynolds, who was allowed pay as Major General by the General Government) began its march to Fort Armstrong, arriving there May 7 and being mustered into the United States service. Among others accompanying the expedition who were then, or afterwards became, noted citizens of the State, were Vital Jarrot, Adjutant-General; Cyrus Edwards, Ordnance Officer; Murray McConnell, Staff Officer, and Abraham Lincoln, Captain of a company of volunteers from Sangamon County in the Fourth Regiment. Col. Zachary Taylor, then commander of a regiment of regulars, arrived at Fort Armstrong about the same time with reinforcements from Fort Leavenworth and Fort Crawford. The total force of militia amounted to 1,935 men, and of regulars about 1,000. An interesting story is told concerning a speech delivered to the volunteers by Colonel Taylor about this time. After reminding them of their duty to obey an order promptly, the future hero of the Mexican War added: "The safety of all depends upon the obedience and courage of all. You are citizen soldiers; some of you may fill high offices, or even be Presidents some day—but not if you refuse to do your duty. Forward, march!" A curious commentary upon this speech is furnished in the fact that, while Taylor himself afterwards became President, at least one of his hearers—a volunteer who probably then had no aspiration to that distinction (Abraham Lincoln)—reached the same position during the most dramatic period in the nation's history.

Two days after the arrival at Fort Armstrong, the advance up Rock River began, the main force of the volunteers proceeding by land under General Whiteside, while General Atkinson, with 400 regular and 300 volunteer foot soldiers, proceeded by boat, carrying with him the artillery, provisions and bulk of the baggage. Whiteside, advancing by the east bank of the river, was the first to arrive at the Prophet's Town, which, finding deserted, he pushed on to Dixon's Ferry (now Dixon), where he arrived May 12. Here he found the independent battalions of Stillman and Bailey with ammunition and supplies of which Whiteside stood in need. The mounted battalions under command of Major Stillman, having been sent forward by Whiteside as a scouting party, left Dixon on the 13th and, on the afternoon of the next day, went into camp in a strong position near the mouth of Sycamore Creek. As soon discovered, Black Hawk was in camp at the same time, as he afterwards claimed, with about forty of his braves, on Sycamore Creek, three miles distant, while the greater part of his band were encamped with the more war-like faction of the Pottawatomies some seven miles farther north on the Kishwaukee River. As claimed by Black Hawk in his autobiography, having been disappointed in his expectation of forming an alliance with the Winnebagoes and the Pottawatomies, he had at this juncture determined to return to the west side of the Mississippi. Hearing of the arrival of Stillman's command in the vicinity, and taking it for granted that this was the whole of Atkinson's command, he sent out three of his young men with a white flag, to arrange a parley and convey to Atkinson his offer to meet the latter in council. These were captured by some of Stillman's band regardless of their flag of truce, while a party of five other braves who followed to observe the treatment received by the flagbearers, were attacked and two of their number killed, the other three escaping to their camp. Black Hawk learning the fate of his truce party was aroused to the fiercest indignation. Tearing the flag to pieces with which he had intended to go into council with the whites, and appealing to his followers to avenge the murder of their comrades, he prepared for the attack. The rangers numbered 275 men, while Black Hawk's band has been estimated at less than forty. As the rangers caught sight of the Indians, they rushed forward in pell-mell fashion. Retiring behind a fringe of bushes, the Indians awaited the attack. As the rangers approached, Black Hawk and his party rose up with a war whoop, at the same time opening fire on their assailants. The further history of the affair was as much of a disgrace to Stillman's command as had been their desecration of the flag of truce. Thrown into panic by their reception by Black Hawk's little band, the rangers turned and, without firing a shot, began the retreat, dashing through their own camp and abandoning everything, which fell into the hands of the Indians. An attempt was made by one or two officers and a few of their men to check the retreat, but without success, the bulk of the fugitives continuing their mad rush for safety through the night until they reached Dixon, twenty-five miles distant, while many never stopped until they reached their homes, forty or fifty miles distant. The casualties to the rangers amounted to eleven killed and two wounded, while the Indian loss consisted of two spies and one of the flag-bearers, treacherously killed near Stillman's camp. This ill-starred affair, which has passed into history as "Stillman's defeat," produced a general panic along the frontier by inducing an exaggerated estimate of the strength of the Indian force, while it led Black Hawk to form a poor opinion of the courage of the white troops at the same time that it led to an exalted estimate of the prowess of his own little band—thus becoming an important factor in prolonging the war and in the bloody massacres which followed. Whiteside, with his force of 1,400 men, advanced to the scene of the defeat the next day and buried the dead, while on the 19th, Atkinson, with his force of regulars, proceeded up Rock River, leaving the remnant of Stillman's force to guard the wounded and supplies at Dixon. No sooner had he left than the demoralized fugitives of a few days before deserted their post for their homes, compelling Atkinson to return for the protection of his base of supplies, while Whiteside was ordered to follow the trail of Black Hawk who had started up the Kishwaukee for the swamps about Lake Koshkonong, nearly west of Milwaukee within the present State of Wisconsin.

At this point the really active stage of the campaign began. Black Hawk, leaving the women and children of his band in the fastnesses of the swamps, divided his followers into two bands, retaining about 200 under his own command, while the notorious half-breed, Mike Girty, led a band of one hundred renegade Pottawatomies. Returning to the vicinity of Rock Island, he gathered some recruits from the Pottawatomies and Winnebagoes, and the work of rapine and massacre among the frontier settlers began. One of the most notable of these was the Indian Creek Massacre in LaSalle County, about twelve miles north of Ottawa, on May 21, when sixteen persons were killed at the Home of William Davis, and two young girls—Sylvia and Rachel Hall, aged, respectively, 17 and 15 years—were carried away captives. The girls were subsequently released, having been ransomed for $2,000 in horses and trinkets through a Winnebago Chief and surrendered to sub-agent Henry Gratiot. Great as was the emergency at this juncture, the volunteers began to manifest evidence of dissatisfaction and, claiming that they had served out their term of enlistment, refused to follow the Indians into the swamps of Wisconsin. As the result of a council of war, the volunteers were ordered to Ottawa, where they were mustered out on May 28, by Lieut. Robt. Anderson, afterwards General Anderson of Fort Sumter fame. Meanwhile Governor Reynolds had issued his call (with that of 1831 the third,) for 2,000 men to serve during the war. Gen. Winfield Scott was also ordered from the East with 1,000 regulars although, owing to cholera breaking out among the troops, they did not arrive in time to take part in the campaign. The rank and file of volunteers responding under the new call was 3,148, with recruits and regulars then in Illinois making an army of 4,000. Pending the arrival of the troops under the new call, and to meet an immediate emergency, 300 men were enlisted from the disbanded rangers for a period of twenty days, and organized into a regiment under command of Col. Jacob Fry, with James D. Henry as Lieutenant Colonel and John Thomas as Major. Among those who enlisted as privates in this regiment were Brig.-Gen. Whiteside and Capt. Abraham Lincoln. A regiment of five companies, numbering 195 men, from Putnam County under command of Col. John Strawn, and another of eight companies from Vermilion County under Col. Isaac R. Moore, were organized and assigned to guard duty for a period of twenty days.

The new volunteers were rendezvoused at Fort Wilbourn, nearly opposite Peru, June 15, and organized into three brigades, each consisting of three regiments and a spy battalion. The First Brigade (915 strong) was placed under command of Brig.-Gen. Alexander Posey, the Second under Gen. Milton K. Alexander, and the third under Gen. James D. Henry. Others who served as officers in some of these several organizations, and afterwards became prominent in State history, were Lieut.-Col. Gurdon S. Hubbard of the Vermilion County regiment; John A. McClernand, on the staff of General Posey; Maj. John Dement; then State Treasurer; Stinson H. Anderson, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor; Lieut.-Gov. Zadoc Casey; Maj., William McHenry; Sidney Breese (afterwards Judge of the State Supreme Court and United States Senator); W. L. D. Ewing (as Major of a spy battalion, afterwards United States Senator and State Auditor); Alexander W. Jenkins (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor); James W. Semple (afterwards United States Senator); and William Weatherford (afterwards a Colonel in the Mexican War), and many more. Of the Illinois troops, Posey's brigade was assigned to the duty of dispersing the Indians between Galena and Rock River, Alexander's sent to intercept Black Hawk up the Rock River, while Henry's remained with Gen. Atkinson at Dixon. During the next two weeks engagements of a more or less serious character were had on the Pecatonica on the southern border of the present State of Wisconsin; at Apple River Fort fourteen miles east of Galena, which was successfully defended against a force under Black Hawk himself, and at Kellogg's Grove the next day (June 25), when the same band ambushed Maj. Dement's spy battalion, and came near inflicting a defeat, which was prevented by Dement's coolness and the timely arrival of reinforcements. In the latter engagement the whites lost five killed besides 47 horses which had been tethered outside their lines, the loss of the Indians being sixteen killed. Skirmishes also occurred with varying results, at Plum River Fort, Burr Oak Grove, Sinsiniwa and Blue Mounds—the last two within the present State of Wisconsin.

Believing the bulk of the Indians to be camped in the vicinity of Lake Koshkonong, General Atkinson left Dixon June 27 with a combined force of regulars and volunteers numbering 2,600 men—the volunteers being under the command of General Henry. They reached the outlet of the Lake July 2, but found no Indians, being joined two days later by General Alexander's brigade, and on the 6th by Gen. Posey's. From here the commands of Generals Henry and Alexander were sent for supplies to Fort Winnebago, at the Portage of the Wisconsin; Colonel Ewing, with the Second Regiment of Posey's brigade descending Rock River to Dixon, Posey with the remainder, going to Fort Hamilton for the protection of settlers in the lead-mining region, while Atkinson, advancing with the regulars up Lake Koshkonong, began the erection of temporary fortifications on Bark River near the site of the present village of Fort Atkinson. At Fort Winnebago Alexander and Henry obtained evidence of the actual location of Black Hawk's camp through Pierre Poquette, a half-breed scout and trader in the employ of the American Fur Company, whom they employed with a number of Winnebagoes to act as guides. From this point Alexander's command returned to General Atkinson's headquarters, carrying with them twelve day's provisions for the main army, while General Henry's (600 strong), with Major Dodge's battalion numbering 150, with an equal quantity of supplies for themselves, started under the guidance of Poquette and his Winnebago aids to find Black Hawk's camp. Arriving on the 18th at the Winnebago village on Rock River where Black Hawk and his band had been located, their camp was found deserted, the Winnebagos insisting that they had gone to Cranberry (now Horicon) Lake, a half-day's march up the river. Messengers were immediately dispatched to Atkinson's headquarters, thirty-five miles distant, to apprise him of this fact. When they had proceeded about half the distance, they struck a broad, fresh trail, which proved to be that of Black Hawk's band headed westward toward the Mississippi. The guide having deserted them in order to warn his tribesmen that further dissembling to deceive the whites as to the whereabouts of the Sacs was useless, the messengers were compelled to follow him to General Henry's camp. The discovery produced the wildest enthusiasm among the volunteers, and from this time events followed in rapid succession. Leaving as far as possible all incumbrances behind, the pursuit of the fugitives was begun without delay, the troops wading through swamps sometimes in water to their armpits. Soon evidence of the character of the flight the Indians were making, in the shape of exhausted horses, blankets, and camp equipage cast aside along the trail, began to appear, and straggling bands of Winnebagos, who had now begun to desert Black Hawk, gave information that the Indians were only a few miles in advance. On the evening of the 20th of July Henry's forces encamped at "The Four Lakes," the present site of the city of Madison, Wis., Black Hawk's force lying in ambush the same night seven or eight miles distant. During the next afternoon the rear-guard of the Indians under Neapope was overtaken and skirmishing continued until the bluffs of the Wisconsin were reached. Black Hawk's avowed object was to protect the passage of the main body of his people across the stream. The loss of the Indians in these skirmishes has been estimated at 40 to 68, while Black Hawk claimed that it was only six killed, the loss of the whites being one killed and eight wounded. During the night Black Hawk succeeded in placing a considerable number of the women and children and old men on a raft and in canoes obtained from the Winnebagos, and sent them down the river, believing that, as non-combatants, they would be permitted by the regulars to pass Fort Crawford, at the mouth of the Wisconsin, undisturbed. In this he was mistaken. A force sent from the fort under Colonel Ritner to intercept them, fired mercilessly upon the helpless fugitives, killing fifteen of their number, while about fifty were drowned and thirty-two women and children made prisoners. The remainder, escaping into the woods, with few exceptions died from starvation and exposure, or were massacred by their enemies, the Menominees, acting under white officers. During the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights, a loud, shrill voice of some one speaking in an unknown tongue was heard in the direction where Black Hawk's band was supposed to be. This caused something of a panic in Henry's camp, as it was supposed to come from some one giving orders for an attack. It was afterwards learned that the speaker was Neapope speaking in the Winnebago language in the hope that he might be heard by Poquette and the Winnebago guides. He was describing the helpless condition of his people, claiming that the war had been forced upon them, that their women and children were starving, and that, if permitted peacefully to recross the Mississippi, they would give no further trouble. Unfortunately Poquette and the other guides had left for Fort Winnebago, so that no one was there to translate Neapope's appeal and it failed of its object.

General Henry's force having discovered that the Indians had escaped—Black Hawk heading with the bulk of his warriors towards the Mississippi—spent the next and day night on the field, but on the following day (July 23) started to meet General Atkinson, who had, in the meantime, been notified of the pursuit. The head of their columns met at Blue Mounds, the same evening, a complete junction between the regulars and the volunteers being effected at Helena, a deserted village on the Wisconsin. Here by using the logs of the deserted cabins for rafts, the army crossed the river on the 27th and the 28th and the pursuit of black Hawk's fugitive band was renewed. Evidence of their famishing condition was found in the trees stripped of bark for food, the carcasses of dead ponies, with here and there the dead body of an Indian.

On August 1, Black Hawk's depleted and famishing band reached the Mississippi two miles below the mouth of the Bad Ax, an insignificant stream, and immediately began trying to cross the river; but having only two or three canoes, the work was slow. About the middle of the afternoon the steam transport, "Warrior," appeared on the scene, having on board a score of regulars and volunteers, returning from a visit to the village of the Sioux Chief, Wabasha, to notify him that his old enemies, the Sacs, were headed in that direction. Black Hawk raised the white flag in token of surrender but the officer in command claiming that he feared treachery or an ambush, demanded that Black Hawk should come on board. This he was unable to do, as he had no canoe. After waiting a few minutes a murderous fire of canister and musketry was opened from the steamer on the few Indians on shore, who made such feeble resistance as they were able. The result was the killing of one white man and twenty-three Indians. After this exploit the "Warrior" proceeded to Prairie du Chien, twelve or fifteen miles distant, for fuel. During the night a few more of the Indians crossed the river, but Black Hawk, seeing the hopelessness of further resistance, accompanied by the Prophet, and taking with him a party of ten warriors and thirty-five squaws and children, fled in the direction of "the dells" of the Wisconsin. On the morning of the 2d General Atkinson arrived within four or five miles of the Sac position. Disposing his forces with the regulars and Colonel Dodge's rangers in the center, the brigades of Posey and Alexander on the right and Henry's on the left, he began the pursuit, but was drawn by the Indian decoys up the river from the place where the main body of the Indians were trying to cross the stream. This had the effect of leaving General Henry in the rear practically without orders, but it became the means of making his command the prime factors in the climax which followed. Some of the spies attached to Henry's command having accidentally discovered the trail of the main body of the fugitives, he began the pursuit without waiting for orders and soon found himself engaged with some 300 savages, a force nearly equal to his own. It was here that the only thing like a regular battle occurred. The savages fought with the fury of despair, while Henry's force was no doubt nerved to greater deeds of courage by the insult which they conceived had been put upon them by General Atkinson. Atkinson, hearing the battle in progress and discovering that he was being led off on a false scent, soon joined Henry's force with his main army, and the steamer "Warrior," arriving from Prairie du Chien, opened a fire of canister upon the pent-up Indians. The battle soon degenerated into a massacre. In the course of the three hours through which it lasted, it is estimated that 150 Indians were killed by fire from the troops, an equal number of both sexes and all ages drowned while attempting to cross the river or by being driven into it, while about 50 (chiefly women and children) were made prisoners. The loss of the whites was 20 killed and 13 wounded. When the "battle" was nearing its close it is said that Black Hawk, having repented the abandonment of his people, returned within sight of the battle-ground, but seeing the slaughter in progress which he was powerless to avert, he turned and, with a howl of rage and horror, fled into the forest. About 300 Indians (mostly non-combatants) succeeded in crossing the river in a condition of exhaustion from hunger and fatigue, but these were set upon by the Sioux under Chief Wabasha, through the suggestion and agency of General Atkinson, and nearly one-half their number exterminated. Of the remainder many died from wounds and exhaustion, while still others perished while attempting to reach Keokuk's band who had refused to join in Black Hawk's desperate venture. Of one thousand who crossed to the east side of the river with Black Hawk in April, it is estimated that not more than 150 survived the tragic events of the next four months.

General Scott, having arrived at Prairie du Chien early in August, assumed command and, on August 15, mustered out the volunteers at Dixon, Ill. After witnessing the bloody climax at the Bad Axe of his ill-starred invasion, Black Hawk fled to the dells of the Wisconsin, where he and the Prophet surrendered themselves to the Winnebagoes, by whom they were delivered to the Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. Having been taken to Fort Armstrong on September 21, he there signed a treaty of peace. Later he was taken to Jefferson Barracks (near St. Louis) in the custody of Jefferson Davis, then a Lieutenant in the regular army, where he was held a captive during the following winter. The connection of Davis with the Black Hawk War, mentioned by many historians, seems to have been confined to this act. In April, 1833, with the Prophet and Neapope, he was taken to Washington and then to Fortress Monroe, where they were detained as prisoners of war until June 4, when they were released. Black Hawk, after being taken to many principal cities in order to impress him with the strength of the American nation, was brought to Fort Armstrong, and there committed to the guardianship of his rival, Keokuk, but survived this humiliation only a few years, dying on a small reservation set apart for him in Davis County, Iowa, October 3, 1838.

Such is the story of the Black Hawk War, the most notable struggle with the aborigines in Illinois history. At its beginning both the State and national authorities were grossly misled by an exaggerated estimate of the strength of Black Hawk's force as to numbers and his plans for recovering the site of his old village, while

Black Hawk had conceived a low estimate of the numbers and courage of his white enemies, especially after the Stillman defeat. The cost of the war to the State and nation in money has been estimated at $2,000,000, and in sacrifice of life on both sides at not less than 1,200. The loss of life by the troops in irregular skirmishes, and in massacres of settlers by the Indians, aggregated about 250, while an equal number of regulars perished from a visitation of cholera at the various stations within the district affected by the war, especially at Detroit, Chicago, Fort Armstrong and Galena. Yet it is the judgment of later historians that nearly all this sacrifice of life and treasure might have been avoided, but for a series of blunders due to the blind or unscrupulous policy of officials or interloping squatters upon lands which the Indians had occupied under the treaty of 1804. A conspicuous blunder—to call it by no harsher name—was the violation by Stillman's command of the rules of civilized warfare in the attack made upon Black Hawk's messengers, sent under flag of truce to request a conference to settle terms under which he might return to the west side of the Mississippi—an act which resulted in a humiliating and disgraceful defeat for its authors and proved the first step in actual war. Another misfortune was the failure to understand Neapope's appeal for peace and permission for his people to pass beyond the Mississippi the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights; and the third and most inexcusable blunder of all, was the refusal of the officer in command of the "Warrior" to respect Black Hawk's flag of truce and request for a conference just before the bloody massacre which has gone into history under the name of the "battle of the Bad Axe." Either of these events, properly availed of, would have prevented much of the butchery of that bloody episode which has left a stain upon the page of history, although this statement implies no disposition to detract from the patriotism and courage of some of the leading actors upon whom the responsibility was placed of protecting the frontier settler from outrage and massacre. One of the features of the war was the bitter jealousy engendered by the unwise policy pursued by General Atkinson towards some of the volunteers—especially the treatment of General James D. Henry, who, although subjected to repeated slights and insults, is regarded by Governor Ford and others as the real hero of the war. Too brave a soldier to shirk any responsibility and too modest to exploit his own deeds, he felt deeply the studied purpose of his superior to ignore him in the conduct of the campaign—a purpose which, as in the affair at the Bad Axe, was defeated by accident or by General Henry's soldierly sagacity and attention to duty, although he gave out to the public no utterance of complaint. Broken in health by the hardships and exposures of the campaign, he went South soon after the war and died of consumption, unknown and almost alone, in the city of New Orleans, less two years later.

Aside from contemporaneous newspaper accounts, monographs, and manuscripts on file in public libraries relating to this epoch in State history, the most comprehensive records of the Black Hawk War are to be found in the "Life of Black Hawk," dictated by himself (1834); Wakefield's "History of the War between the United States and the Sac and Fox Nations" (1834); Drake's "Life of Black Hawk" (1854); Ford's "History of Illinois" (1854); Reynolds' "Pioneer History of Illinois; and "My Own Times"; Davidson & Stuve's and Moses' Histories of Illinois; Blanchard's "The Northwest and Chicago"; Armstrong's "The Sauks and the Black Hawk War," and Reuben G. Thwaite's "Story of the Black Hawk War" (1892.)

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, a village in the southern part of Cook County, twenty-eight miles south of the central part of Chicago, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Michigan Central Railroads; is located in an agricultural region, but has some manufactures as well as good schools—also has one newspaper. Population (1900), 5,100.

GRANITE, a city of Madison County, located five miles north of St. Louis on the lines of the Burlington; the Chicago & Alton; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis; Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis (Illinois), and the Wabash Railways. It is adjacent to the Merchants' Terminal Bridge across the Mississippi and has considerable manufacturing and grain-storage business; has two newspapers. Population (1900), 3,122.

HARLEM, a village of Proviso Township, Cook County, and suburb of Chicago, on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, nine miles west of the terminal station at Chicago. Harlem originally embraced the village of Oak Park, now a part of the city of Chicago, but, in 1884, was set off and incorporated as a village. Considerable manufacturing is done here. Population (1900), 4,085.

HARVEY, a city of Cook County, and an important manufacturing suburb of the city of Chicago, three miles southwest of the southern city limits. It is on the line of the Illinois Central and the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railways, and has extensive manufactures of harvesting, street and steam railway machinery, gasoline stoves, enameled ware, etc.; also has one newspaper and ample school facilities. Population (1900), 5,395.

IOWA CENTRAL RAILWAY, a railway line having its principal termini at Peoria, Ill., and Manly Junction, nine miles north of Mason City, Iowa, with several lateral branches making connections with Centerville, Newton, State Center, Story City, Algona and Northwood in the latter State. The total length of line owned, leased and operated by the Company, officially reported in 1899, was 508.98 miles, of which 89.76 miles—including 3.5 miles trackage facilities on the Peoria & Pekin Union between Iowa Junction and Peoria—were in Illinois. The Illinois division extends from Keithsburg—where it enters the State at the crossing of the Mississippi—to Peoria.—(HISTORY.) The Iowa Central Railway Company was originally chartered as the Central Railroad Company of Iowa and the road completed in October, 1871. In 1873 it passed into the hands of a receiver and, on June 4, 1879, was reorganized under the name of the Central Iowa Railway Company. In May, 1883, this company purchased the Peoria & Farmington Railroad, which was incorporated into the main line, but defaulted and passed into the hands of a receiver December 1, 1886; the line was sold under foreclosure in 1887 and 1888, to the Iowa Central Railway Company, which had effected a new organization on the basis of $11,000,000 common stock, $6,000,000 preferred stock and $1,379,625 temporary debt certificates convertible into preferred stock, and $7,500,000 first mortgage bonds. The transaction was completed, the receiver discharged and the road turned over to the new company, May 15, 1889.—(FINANCIAL). The total capitalization of the road in 1899 was $21,337,558, of which $14,159,180 was in stock, $6,650,095 in bonds and $528,283 in other forms of indebtedness. The total earnings and income of the line in Illinois for the same year were $532,568, and the expenditures $566,333.

SPARTA, a city of Randolph County, situated on the Centralia & Chester and the Mobile & Ohio Railroads, twenty miles northwest of Chester and fifty miles southeast of St. Louis. It has a number of manufacturing establishments, including plow factories, a woolen mill, a cannery and creameries; also has natural gas. The first settler was James McClurken, from South Carolina, who settled here in 1818. He was joined by James Armour a few years later, who bought land of McClurken, and together they laid out a village, which first received the name of Columbus. About the same time Robert G. Shannon, who had been conducting a mercantile business in the vicinity, located in the town and became the first Postmaster. In 1839 the name of the town was changed to Sparta. Mr. McClurken, its earliest settler, appears to have been a man of considerable enterprise, as he is credited with having built the first cotton gin in this vicinity, besides still later, erecting saw and flour mills and a woolen mill. Sparta was incorporated as a village in 1837 and in 1859 as a city. A colony of members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church (Covenanters or "Seceders") established at Eden, a beautiful site about a mile from Sparta, about 1822, cut an important figure in the history of the latter place, as it became the means of attracting here an industrious and thriving population. At a later period it became one of the most important stations of the "Underground Railroad" (so called) in Illinois (which see). The population of Sparta (1890) was 1,979; (1900), 2,041.

TOLUCA, a city of Marshall County situated on the line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad, 18 miles southwest of Streator. It is in the center of a rich agricultural district; has the usual church and educational facilities of cities of its rank, and two newspapers. Population (1900), 2,629.

WEST HAMMOND, a village situated in the northeast corner of Thornton Township, Cook County, adjacent to Hammond, Ind., from which it is separated by the Indiana State line. It is on the Michigan Central Railroad, one mile south of the Chicago City limits, and has convenient access to several other lines, including the Chicago & Erie; New York, Chicago & St. Louis, and Western Indiana Railroads. Like its Indiana neighbor, it is a manufacturing center of much importance, was incorporated as a village in 1892, and has grown rapidly within the last few years, having a population, according to the census of 1900, of 2,935.

CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCTORY.

THE NORTHWEST TERRITORY—ORIGINAL GEOGRAPHY
—CESSION BY VIRGINIA—NATURAL CONDITIONS—
ORDINANCE OF 1787—DIVISION AND CIVIL GOVERN-MENT—FRONTIERS.

The State of Illinois was originally a part of the Northwest Territory, which included all that vast region lying between the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers and projecting north to the present boundaries of Canada. As a result of the conquest by Col. George Rogers Clark under authority of the State of Virginia in 1778, this region became a part of that commonwealth under the name of Illinois County. This jurisdiction was continued until 1784, when Virginia ceded its rights to the United States, its example being followed during the next two years by several other States, including New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut which claimed rights to territory west of their boundaries by virtue of their original charters received as colonies from the British government. As a consequence of these cessions, the General Government obtained control of a domain out of which were later created the imperial commonwealths of Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and the eastern portion of Minnesota. The deed of cession by Virginia was dated March 1, 1784, signed by Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, Arthur Lee and Samuel Hardy, and by it the Old Dominion relinquished forever all right, title and claim to a virgin realm whose wide extending prairies were to become the most fruitful and opulent agricultural portion of the earth, and upon the placid bosoms of whose rivers and great lakes would float the most colossal inland commerce of the world.

CONDITIONS.—At that time this land, so prodigal in potential wealth, so remote from civilization, so primitive in character, was regarded as a strange unexplored and inhospitable region, where the gory tomahawk of the savage and the death-dealing fevers of pestilential marshes and insalubrious swamps, envenomed reptiles and ferocious wild animals, with malignant vehemence would assail the on-coming skirmish lines of civilization, and exact from them a fearful toll of suffering and death.

Yet these portentous foes of the bold and self-sacrificing pioneers failed to thwart the on-rushing tide of emigrants, eager to confront these fatal perils and grapple them in grim and deadly conflict, if only they could reach and reclaim from savagery this Western Paradise and hand it down as a priceless legacy of their valor and devotion to their children and country.

DIVISION AND CIVIL GOVERNMENT.—The ever-increasing tide of emigration and the vast area of this magnificent territory rendered the usual processes of government impotent or inoperative, and to overcome this grave exigency and to effect a prompt and salutary administration of civil affairs, the country was organized as the Northwest Territory, and its government regulated by the celebrated act familiar at this day as "the Ordinance of 1787" and which, in its great consequences, was to become one of the most far-reaching enactments in American history.

It struck down the aristocratic privileges of primogeniture and consecrated the soil of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin to the sacred cause of human liberty by forever excluding slavery from their vast confines.

In a large measure the Ordinance of 1787 determined the character of our social, political and educational institutions. Daniel Webster said of it: "I doubt whether one single law, ancient or modern, has produced effects of more distinct and lasting character than the Ordinance of 1787."

After the adoption of this ordinance and the extinction of Indian titles, settlers from the east poured over the Alleghenies and down the Ohio into the new country now opened for settlement, and with them came many Revolutionary patriots—officers and soldiers—who, influenced by the Government's promise of free lands, eagerly turned the prow of hope toward the unmeasured bountifulness of the, then, "Far West."

We cannot study the compact of 1787 without being deeply impressed by the wisdom, patriotism and philanthropy of those who enacted it. It provided for public schools, and the donation of every sixteenth section of land in each township for public schools, and declared that—"Religion, morality, and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall always be encouraged."

On July 13, 1787, the bill was passed, the now famous compact was placed beyond repeal, and a splendid empire, in the heart of the grandest valley on the globe, dedicated to freedom, intelligence and progress.

FRONTIERS.—The people of this interior wilderness, plethoric with abounding opportunities, were virtually isolated from the world. They spun on spinning-wheels and wove on looms of their own handicraft material for their own clothing. They made their own clumsy chairs, rough tables and rude bedsteads, and ate from wooden bowls instead of dishes. They crudely tanned for leather the skins of the wild beasts they slew for food, and from it fabricated shoes and raiment, and from the husks of corn made ropes and brooms and harness. They made cradles for the babies from sugar troughs and hives for the bees from hollow trees, and drank sassafras tea sweetened with maple sugar.

The trusty rifle was always carried afield, to be at instant service for the skulking Indian.

The fertile soil yielded bounteous crops. The streams were filled with edible fish. The elk, deer, and bear, the wild turkey and pigeons abounded in endless profusion; the majestic forests were stored with nutritious nuts and acorns; wild strawberries, in luscious abundance, embroidered, with crimson hues, the settlers' lonely paths; industrious bees filled the hollows of giant trees with honey, sweet as those of ancient Trebizond, and the wild crab apple freighted the drowsy air with the most redolent of perfumes.

This was indeed a land of romance and opportunity, of enchantment and grandeur, and from it there has been developed the fairest and richest territorial dominion ever vouchsafed to the destiny of mankind.

CHAPTER II.

ILLINOIS.

AREA AND GEOGRAPHY—PRAIRIES AND FORESTS—
PREHISTORIC MONUMENTS AND RELICS—INDIANS
—FRENCH EXPLORERS—SETTLEMENT—BRITISH DOMINION—THE CONQUEST OF KASKASKIA—TER-RITORY OF ILLINOIS—ILLINOIS A STATE.

A knowledge of the history and resources of our great State is important, as well as the history of our nation. It is essential to a proper understanding of the magnitude of its material and industrial importance, and to a just appreciation of its influence upon our sisterhood of States. Illinois is 218 miles wide at its widest part, and has an extreme length of 385 miles, thus extending as far north as Boston, Mass., and as far south as Richmond, Va. Its area is 56,650 square miles.

GEOGRAPHY.—It was due to the sagacity and tactics of Nathaniel Pope, our Territorial Delegate in the Congress of 1818, that the present northern boundary of the State was fixed at lat. 42° 30', instead of the southern bend of Lake Michigan, which would have crossed the State about fifteen miles below the City of Chicago, and fixed that great metropolis in what is now the State of Wisconsin.

Illinois is eminently fortunate in her geographical location. Situated in the very heart of the nation, a prodigious volume of the travel and commerce of the country is compelled to traverse her soil, augmenting her great industries and enhancing her wealth.

More than two-thirds of her boundaries are made up the navigable waters, the Mississippi on the west, the Ohio on the south and the Wa-

Wabash River and Lake Michigan on the east. The courses of her interior rivers are highly favorable for domestic trade and calculated to promote commercial development.

The average altitude of the State above sea-level is about 600 feet, the highest point being 1257 feet, which is in Jo Daviess County, while Cairo, the lowest point, is about 300 feet above the sea.

The average temperature is 58° degrees, and the average rainfall for the north is 34 inches and, of the south, 40 inches per annum.

The surface is undulating, sloping gradually to the south, except where it is crossed by a ridge of the Ozarks.

PRAIRIES.—The vast prairies of Illinois are wonderfully fertile and very level. The word prairie means meadows, and was used by the French explorers to describe the vast and treeless areas they discovered in this region, resplendent with brilliant hued wild flowers and over which grazed the lordly buffalo, the stately elk and graceful deer.

It was the habit of the Indians to burn off grass on the prairies in the fall and winter to provide nutritious pasturage in the spring, for the wild animals, which would feed in great squadrons, upon their luxuriant growth, and, it is supposed, that these fires prevented the spreading of forests.

FORESTS.—Fully three-fifths of the State was treeless, almost entirely north of a line drawn from St. Louis to Mt. Carmel, while south of this there were many noble forests of the most valuable species of timber, which even yet sustain valuable and extensive lumber industries. Vandal hands have ignorantly and wantonly dismantled much of this land, which, otherwise would be gorgeous and stately natural parks, preserving in miniature, at least, some aspect of the grace and splendor of the primeval forests as they were beheld by the wrapt and wondering visions of the iron-willed explorers.

PREHISTORIC MONUMENTS AND RELICS.—Illinois is rich in the relics of prehistoric races, and rare and extensive collections of stone implements have been collected from their ancient abodes and burial mounds.

Fine specimens of pottery, copper implements and ceremonial stones have been found in many places.

These races carved and painted the images of animals and fantastic figures on the faces of bluffs and exposed rocks.

The most remarkable feat performed by these vanished races was the rearing of stupendous mounds, the purpose of which, and the manner of their construction, are veiled in obscurity as dim as that of the Egyptian pyramids and to which there is a plainly recognizable but inexplicable similitude. It is supposed some were built for the purposes of war, others for worship and interment, but as to the greater portion, our ingenuity is baffled, even in the realm of conjecture.

These mounds abound chiefly along rivers and are especially numerous and large in the "American Bottom." There are almost one hundred in the vicinity of the old Cahokia Mound—one of this group which is the most extensive earth-work of its kind in the United States. This mound is pyramidal in form, rising in a series of four terraces to a height of one hundred feet, while its base covers an area of fourteen acres, surpassing the base of any of the Egyptian pyramids.

INDIANS OF ILLINOIS.—The Indians of Illinois were generally superior in physical strength and prowess to those of other portions of North America, and had attained to somewhat better conditions of living, due, doubtless, to the favorable conditions afforded them by the productive soil of the prairies, which needed no clearing, and on which an abundance of wild fowl and other game was more easily obtained than in the dense forests and mountain fastnesses of other parts of the country; and also to the fact that, out on the expanding and variegated prairies, with their luxuriant landscapes, beautiful sunshine and emerald verdure, there was wanting that oppressive sense of isolation, fear and superstition that peopled the gloomy forest and frowning mountain heights with phantom foes and disembodied spirits.

Because of these favorable environments, the densest Indian population of the country grew up along the Illinois and other rivers of the State. No where could the red man find such an abundance of game, fish and fowl so easy of procurement, live in such savage affluence or find a more congenial home. This beautiful and prodigal land was coveted by many tribes and fierce and bloody were the numerous wars waged by contending tribes for its possession.

Even the renowned Iroquois of New York had heard the inviting tales of this plentiful region, and in the seventeenth century, invading it with 500 picked warriors, attacked and defeated the Illinois Indians but never made this region their permanent dwelling place.

The most numerous and powerful tribe in Illinois was the Illini, and from it the State took its name—a word which, in the Indian language, means "superior men," and was supposed to be descriptive of the tribe which Father Membre says were "tall of stature, strong and robust, the swiftest runners in the world."

The Sacs and Foxes, and the Pottawatomies lived north of the Illinois River, the ambitious and savage Kickapoos near the mouth of Fox River, Wis., and later in the central part of Illinois, the Miamis on the eastern borders, the Shawnees and Piankishaws on the lower Wabash.

The red man has departed from the land he loved so dearly, but his race is perpetuated in the sweetly euphonious and musical names of our rivers, counties and States, which he has bequeathed to us as a legacy of his poetical fancies.

FRENCH EXPLORERS.—Jean Nicolet, a French explorer, was the first white man known to have visited the Illinois Country. Having discovered Lake Michigan, in 1634, it is supposed that he then visited the village of the Illinois Indians.

He was followed by fur traders and trappers who undoubtedly wandered over the greater portion of the present State prior to the coming of the intrepid LaSalle and adventurous Joliet, but of their adventures and perils tradition alone can furnish any account.

Louis Joliet was a bold and active French Canadian, who longed to explore and claim the country for the king of France. On May 17, 1673, he and the pious, prudent and humble priest, Father Jacques Marquette, master of seven Indian dialects, and a typical missionary, in company with five dauntless companions, started from St. Ignace on the northern shore of Lake Michigan, in two birch bark canoes, and with provisions of meal and smoked meat, made the hazardous journey which led them down the Father of Waters. On their return they passed up the Illinois River, visited the Peoria Indians and Marquette preached to them, afterward making their way to Lake Michigan whence Joliet returned to Quebec. The following year Marquette returned to Illinois and after spending the winter near the mouth of the Chicago River, in the spring of 1675, founded the first Mission in Illinois, where the village of Utica now stands. Marquette wrote accurate descriptions of the land, vegetation, animals, fish and small game seen by these heroic voyagers on the first journey of the white man down the lordly Mississippi.

Robert Cavelier, Sieur de la Salle, was the most daring and intrepid genius ever sent by France to the new world. None of the French explorers were so bold or resourceful as LaSalle. Assailed by jealousy, the victim of treachery and conspiracies of white men and Indians, attempts made upon his life, wounded, suspected and betrayed, yet his masterful genius and indomitable courage overcame all obstacles and he achieved marvelous results for his country. He explored the country west of the Alleghenies, found the Ohio and overcoming great disasters, at last reached the mouth of the Mississippi, and took possession of the country in the name of Louis XIV. naming it Louisiana, in honor of his king. In 1684 he attempted to found a colony at the mouth of the Mississippi, but through lack of knowledge of the Gulf coast, located in the vicinity of what is now believed to have been the vicinity of Matagorda Bay, Texas. There he remained three years, his colonists enduring, in the meantime, great suffering and privation. He then attempted to return north to Canada, but on the way was murdered by some of his mutinous companions on the Trinity River, in Texas, on March 19, 1687, and thus treacherously perished the wisest and bravest of the great French explorers on the continent.

SETTLEMENT.—The mission which Marquette established, on the Illinois River, near the present site of Utica, he named Kaskaskia. Through fear of the hostile Iroquois and to secure the fur trade on the Mississippi the mission was abandoned, and the tribe moving south settled near the mouth of what became the Kaskaskia River, and the new town was given the name of the old one, and thus in 1700 the second Kaskaskia was founded. The first permanent settlement in the State, however, there is reason to believe, was the village of Cahokia, some forty miles north of Kaskaskia, thus antedating the latter by a few months, but occurring the same year. In 1718 the French soldiers erected a fort between Kaskaskia and Cahokia, which they named Fort Chartres and

and sons, Maynard and Sherwood.*

It soon grew into such prominence that it was often said that "All the roads lead to Fort Chartres."

Prior to 1712 Illinois was a part of Canada, but it was then united with the lower Mississippi settlements under the name of Louisiana. In the year 1717 the Illinois country had but 300 white inhabitants.

BRITISH DOMINION.—By the terms of the treaty of Fontainebleau, signed February 10, 1763, the Illinois Country was transferred to the British crown. The brief rule of England brought but little change to Illinois, and but few of its inhabitants knew or cared anything about it. In 1763 England issued a proclamation designating the provinces and the manner of their government.

Upon the arrival of Captain Sterling the flag of France was taken down and the English flag run over Fort Chartres, which was certainly a strange and interesting sight to the inhabitants. They were given eighteen months to decide whether they would remain or remove, and one-third left, going to St. Louis and New Orleans. Col. Wilkins, the British Commandant, in 1768, by proclamation established a code of civil and criminal administration, of which trial by jury was the central feature. The French, unaccustomed to jury trials, avoided the courts and submitted their controversies to the priest for adjudication.

CONQUEST OF KASKASKIA.—Kaskaskia was captured July 4, 1778, by the redoubtable Gen. George Rogers Clark, a good soldier and an able diplomatist, after which the other French villages surrendered at discretion, and soon the British flag was lowered at Cahokia never again to wave on Illinois soil as a British possession.

By Gen. Clark's conquest Illinois became a part of Virginia and by act of her Legislature, in October, 1778, was created and organized as the County of Illinois. The illustrious orator, Patrick Henry, then Governor Virginia, thus became the first American Governor of Illinois. His first administrative act was to appoint Col. John Todd, Lieutenant-Commandant of the County of Illinois, his commission bearing date December 12, 1778. At the time of his appointment Col. Todd was a judge on the bench in Kentucky, where he had evinced rare ability, clear discernment and uncommon learning as a jurist. He had been a soldier under Gen. Clark and was the first man, in Clark's little army, to enter Kaskaskia at the time of its capture, so that when he again returned to the frontier capital, entrusted with the authority of the commonwealth of Virginia, he was not a stranger to its citizens.

In addition to his official commission Col. Todd carried a grave and sensible letter of instructions from Governor Patrick Henry, by which, among other things, he was instructed, first—

"To cultivate the affections of the French and Indians.

"To impress the people with the value of liberty.

"To guarantee an improved jurisprudence.

"To consult and advise with the most intelligent people who might fall in his way.

"To hold the property of the Indians, particularly their land, inviolable.

"To subordinate the military to the civil authority.

"To encourage trade and to carry out the above principles with unwearied diligence."

Todd's arrival was no common event in the annals of the already historic village of Kaskaskia, which had witnessed many vicissitudes of fortune and been the headquarters of explorers, missionaries, soldiers, priests and celebrated travelers, for this man came to administer the most enlightened laws of the age.

TERRITORY OF ILLINOIS.—By an act of Congress passed, February 3, 1800, the Territory of Illinois was created and Ninian Edwards of Kentucky, a man of unusual mental and moral endowments, was appointed its first Governor, as it is said by the potent influence of Henry Clay, who, in a letter, ascribed to him the highest virtues and rarest qualifications for administrative duties. Governor Edwards had received a classical education, inherited uncommon sagacity, and was a man of amiable disposition and beautiful character.

Some of the early Territorial laws of Illinois were extremely harsh and cruel, but they were taken from the laws of the older States.

In our day of enlightenment and tolerance for the unfortunate, it is difficult to believe that our statutes were ever sullied by providing for the following degrading punishments: for burglary, whipping on the bare back 39 stripes; larceny, 31 stripes; hog-stealing, 39 lashes; bigamy, 100 to 300 stripes; disobedient children and servants, 10 lashes; branding with hot iron and standing in the pillory—extreme cases—and there were five crimes punishable with death. No property was exempt from execution and if the debt and costs were not paid in full, the hapless and helpless debtor could be cast into prison to satisfy the vengeance of his vindictive creditor. In those halcyon days men and women rode a hundred miles, over wild and unbroken roads, to witness the pious spectacle of a public hanging, from which—thanks for the growth of human charity and refinement—their now living descendants would ride farther to avoid witnessing.

ILLINOIS A STATE.—When the year 1818 dawned, the inhabitants of Illinois had lived under French, English and American Territorial government. From the north, south and east immigration had rushed into this land of golden promise. Travelers and adventurers, in every country, were telling entrancing tales of its fertile soil, gliding rivers, opulent mines and exuberance of palatable game, and their alluring reports augmented the hurrying tide of immigrants until it poured over the boundless prairies by thousands.

The enabling act, making Illinois a State, was passed April 18, 1818.

The first Constitutional Convention convened at Kaskaskia, and established a constitution which was signed August 26, 1818. Shadrach Bond was elected Governor and Ninian Edwards (the previous Territorial Governor) and Jesse B. Thomas were chosen United States Senators. Thus Illinois started upon that great career of prosperity and honor which has made her one of the greatest and most populous States of the Union. In population she is exceeded only by New York and Pennsylvania, according to the census of 1910, 5,638,591 inhabitants dwelling within her borders.

The State has 102 counties and over 1,000 incorporated cities, towns and villages. The total value of its farm products surpasses that of any other State in the Union and it ranks third in manufacturing. It manufactures more railway cars, more farm implements, more watches, packs more meat, distills more liquor and has more miles of railway than any other State. It has 40,000 square miles of coal lands, is the second State in the production of oil, and is possessed of vast and valuable other mineral wealth. Its geographical situation makes it the natural center of trade and commerce between the East and the West, and it is certainly destined to become the wealthiest and most populous State of the Union.

The sons of Illinois have performed deeds of valor on all our battle fields and her history is illuminated by the record of their gallantry. Illinois supplied for her own regiments during our great Civil War 256,000 men, and those of her sons who went into the army from other States increase the total number of her heroic host to 290,000, or more than all the soldiers the Colonies had enrolled in the armies of the Revolutionary War. She gave to the nation many brave and distinguished Generals and eminent statesmen, and in recounting the list of heroes of that mighty conflict, we cannot forbear mentioning the names of Grant, Logan, Oglesby, Palmer, Hurlbut, Pope, Wallace, Ransom, Grierson, Black, Prentiss, and McClelland. At the head of her illustrious roll of statesmen stand the immortal names of Lincoln and Douglas, Trumbull, Washburne, Bissell and Yates, David Davis and Shelby M. Cullom.

The unrivaled progress and replendent history of Illinois should inspire the just pride and exalt the patriotism of all her citizens.

"Not without thy wondrous story,

Illinois, Illinois,

Can be writ the Nation's glory

Illinois, Illinois,

On the record of the years,

Abr'ham Lincoln's name appears,

Grant and Logan, and our tears,

Illinois, Illinois,

Grant and Logan, and our tears,

Illinois."

CHAPTER III.

WABASH COUNTY.

FIRST COUNTY ORGANIZATION—ILLINOIS COUNTY—
SUBSEQUENT ORGANIZATIONS OF WHICH WABASH
COUNTY FORMED A PART—THE PRESENT COUNTY ORGANIZED IN 1824—ITS AREA AND BOUNDARIES —TOPOGRAPHY, HYDROGRAPHY AND SOIL.

County organization first took place in Illinois in 1779, following the conquest of Kaskas-and Vincennes by George Rogers Clark, and the great county of Illinois was created by act of the Assembly of Virginia, but the boundaries of the vast region were only vaguely defined and the plan of government devised for its regulation was never set in complete operation throughout its far flung limitations. Wabash County was organized in 1824 from the eastern portion of Edwards County, with its present area of 220 square miles or about 140,000 acres of land. The territory of which it is composed had previously constituted a part of the following counties: Illinois County (as part of the State of Virginia), 1778 to 1790; Knox County (as part of the Northwest Territory and Indiana Territory), 1790 to 1800; Randolph County (after the organization of Indiana Territory), 1800 to 1812; Gallatin County, 1812 to 1815; and Edwards County, 1815 to 1824. There are but three smaller counties in the State, viz: Putnam (the smallest) with an area of 170 square miles; Hardin, with 180 square miles and Pulaski, with 190. Edwards and Alexander each have the same area as Wabash.

BOUNDARIES.—It is bounded on the north by Lawrence and Richland Counties; on the east and south by the Wabash River; and on the west by Edwards County, the Bonpas Creek flowing between, constitutes the boundary line. Its general contour is triangular, its greatest length north and south is 23 miles and its extreme width from the Wabash to the Bonpas is 16 miles and includes two complete and thirteen fractional portions of congressional townships. It embraces seven political subdivisions or election precincts, the names of which are: Mt. Carmel, Coffee, Compton, Belmont, Lick Prairie, Friendsville and Wabash.

TOPOGRAPHY.—The surface of the county is generally level, except in the northwest, which is considerably undulating, and slopes east and south from the uplands until it is merged into the rich alluvial bottoms, which constitute one-third of the area of the county, and which were formerly covered with immense forests of poplar, oak, hickory, walnut, cypress, gum, maple, elm and sycamore. Along the Wabash River and on the Illinois shore within the county, are several prominent bluffs ranging from 75 to 100 feet in height. McCleary Bluff in the southeast was near the site of the ancient and important village of the Piankishaw Indians, and at this point, during low water, the farmers take coal from the bed of the river. Little Rock is about ten miles above Mt. Carmel. Its natural beauty has been greatly marred by cutting away great portions of its once smooth and lofty walls for stone. At this place the Illinois shore is a vertical palisade of rocks for a great distance. Near its center it is cleft by an abrupt canon, within which are small caves, shaded nooks, trickling cascades and lovely grottos, where great ferns grow in tropical profusion. Hanging Rock, three miles above Mt. Carmel, is a semi-circular rock wall which, in the center, rears its huge pinnacle over a hundred feet above the water and projects out over the river many feet, from which fact it takes its name. From its lofty summit can be obtained a superb view of the surrounding country, which affords a fascinating perspective, and the place itself is rich in relics and legends of the Indians, once romantic, but evanescent abode. At Mt. Carmel the bluffs are one hundred feet high and gracefully crowned with noble shade trees, and from their heights can be had a splendid view of the Wabash, White and Patoka Rivers, which roll their wimpling sea of waters at their rocky base. Here one may stand

And see the rivers, how they run,
Through woods and meads, in shade and sun,
Sometimes swift, and sometimes slow,
Wave succeeding wave, they go
A various journey to the deep,
Like human life to endless sleep.

HYDROGRAPHY.—Lying between the Wabash River and Bonpas Creek, the county is well supplied with water courses, the entire eastern and southern boundary being washed by the Wabash. The smaller streams of importance are the Coffee, Crawfish, Greathouse, Sugar and Jordan Creeks. Until recent years there were large ponds in the southeast part of the county, the principal ones being Bairds, Brushy and Grassy Ponds, all of which have been reclaimed by extensive drainage, and where the pioneers seined barrels of fish and trapped the otter and muskrat, are now found cultivated fields, with a black soil six feet in depth.

SOIL.—Wabash is an agricultural county, its regular surface and well drained lands making it particularly suitable for husbandry. In the northern and eastern portions, near the bluffs, the soil is clayey, but is underlaid by loess deposit, and is consequently very productive and yields abundant crops of all the cereals known to this climate. Most of the upland soil is a clay loam and is peculiarly well adapted for wheat, of which it produces a superior quality. The bottom lands, on which there is still considerable timber, are composed of a deep alluvial deposit with a sandy subsoil, and are the most productive lands in the county.

It has been claimed that if this soil were in some parts of New England, it would be sold by the bushel.

CHAPTER IV.

GEOLOGY—FLORA AND FAUNA.

GEOLOGICAL CONDITIONS IN WABASH COUNTY—SOIL, COAL MEASURES AND STONE VARIETIES—
BRICK AND POTTER'S CLAY—BOTANY—INDIGENOUS TREES AND OTHER PRODUCTS—NATIVE ANIMALS—CHANGES THAT HAVE BEEN PRODUCED BY CIVILIZATION—ANIMALS AND BIRDS THAT HAVE DISAPPEARED.

The geological formations of Wabash County are found to belong to the Quaternary and upper coal measures. The first attains its completest development along the bluffs of the Wabash, where it consists of the buff and yellow marly sands and clays of the loess, and an ordinary thickness of the gravelly clays of the drift formation, while stratified clays abound along the lower streams and near the mouth of the Bonpas. At Mt. Carmel the loess and drift clays are about thirty feet in thickness, this being the average depth, and being the same as in the river bluffs, but on the uplands, distant from the river, the usual thickness ranges from fifteen to twenty feet. At Grayville, the banks of the Bonpas reveal out-crops of stratified clay of from five to ten feet in thickness, of various colors and apparently derived from the decomposition of the clay shales of the coal measures, while above these are found from twenty to thirty feet of loess, probably covering a nucleus of gravelly drift clay.

At Mt. Carmel, in the river bluffs, there is an outcrop of sandstone, forming the lower part of the bluff, which is underlaid by a blue clay shale, partially exposed, which comes under the classification of coal measures. A section of the bluff at this point shows the following:

Strata	Feet
Loess and drift clay.....	30
Soft, shaly, micaceous sandstone.....	13
Massive sandstone, partly concretionary...	20
Blue clay shale, partial exposure.....	3 to 6
Springs of water issue from the sandstone indicating the impervious nature of the underlying beds. A boring for coal was made at this point, the record of which Mr. J. Zimmerman furnished for publication in the State Geological Report; also a report of borings for oil is accessible in the same publication, and to which we are indebted for much information contained in this chapter.

Coal shafts have been sunken and mining has been done at Friendsville, Maud, McCleary's Bluff and on the Schrodts, Chapman and Simonds farms. The latter lies two miles southwest of Mt. Carmel. The vein found in it conformed in thickness and quality with the others, being about three feet in thickness and a section of which showed the following:

Strata	Ft. In.
Drift clay and soil	5 6
Argillaceous shale	30
Limestone	0 6

MINERALOGY.—Coal is quite generally found in drinking wells and, at several places through the county, crops out above the surface in the beds of streams. There is but little stone in the county fit for building purpose, and that which exists is found in the sandstone out-croppings along the bluffs of the river and in the northwest part of the county. There is a ledge of rock in the river at Rochester, which has been slightly worked, and it is thought, if sufficiently quarried, it would yield a fair quality of building stone. In the banks of Greathouse Creek, near Mt. Carmel, there is found, what is thought to be a fair quality of potter's clay. Good brick clay is plentiful in nearly all parts of the county, and sand suitable for building purposes is abundant.

FLORA.—In this work we cannot treat fully of the flora of the county. Our plants are of great variety, many of great beauty and some quite rare; in fact, it is one of the richest and most inviting fields to be found by the botanist. The late Dr. J. Schneck, a capable and enterprising botanist, made an accurate and exhaustive botanical study of the county and made a complete list of its indigenous trees and shrubs, which is found on page 63, Vol. VI., of the "Geological Survey of Illinois."

The most common varieties of timber to be observed in the county are the common species of oak, hickory, walnut, maple, ash, locust, elm, cottonwood, sycamore, gum, pecan, persimmon, hackberry, dogwood, sassafras, crab-apple, calappa and pawpaw.

FAUNA.—Among the native animals found in the county were the buffalo, elk, Virginia deer, black bear, panther, gray wolf, wild-cat, fox, mink, otter, skunk, raccoon, opossum, squirrel, muskrat, etc.

The bones of the larger animals were often found as late as 1830; bears did not entirely disappear until 1850, and the last wild deer was shot by Mr. Larner Risley on the Robert Chapman farm in 1869. Like the red man, the buffalo and elk, the deer, wolf and other important species of mammals were unable to withstand the strenuous march of civilization, and have passed away, never again to return to our borders.

BIRDS.—The groves and noble forests of the county were in highly favorable conditions for birds, both from the standpoint of subsistence and shelter, and no region in the country was blessed with greater numbers or more beautiful varieties than Wabash County once enjoyed; but like the wild animals, many of their species have departed to other localities or become extinct. The latter class includes the wild turkey, wild pigeon, and prairie chicken.

The birds of this section have been carefully classified and reported in the Transactions of Illinois Horticultural Society of the year 1876.

CHAPTER V.

SETTLEMENT.

ORIGIN OF THE NAME "WABASH"—COUNTY ORGANIZATION—SOME EARLY FRENCH SETTLERS—FIRST ENGLISH SETTLEMENT—THE COMPTONS, GREAT-HOUSE AND SETH GARD—THE ALLEGHANY COUNTY COLONY—THE CANNON MASSACRE—PRIMITIVE INDUSTRIES—FIRST MILLS—FLAT-BOATING TO NEW ORLEANS—LIFE IN THE PIONEER CABINS—AMUSEMENTS AND SOCIAL LIFE.

Wabash County takes its name from the Wabash River. The name Wabash is derived from the Indian name, "Ouabache," by which the river was known to the Indians and early explorers. The word has various meanings in the Indian language, among which are "White Waters," "Moving Cloud," "Swift Summer Cloud," Silver Water, and "Mad Bull," all evidently being figures of speech, expressive of the swift and foaming waters at the Grand Rapids.

The early French explorers gave the name of St. Jerome to the river, but the Indians and English refused to recognize it by any other than its metaphorical and symphonious Indian name.

Wabash County was originally a part of Edwards County, which was divided and Wabash established in 1824. The French were the first to locate in Wabash County, their settlement being made at Rochester, a very favorable site on the Wabash River, in 1800. Among the first settlers were four brothers, named August, William, Joseph and Francis Tougas, also called Lauvelette or Lovellette. They were feared and respected by the Indians. August was particularly respected by the Piankishaws, and he had the boldness to punish thieving members of the tribe and they regarded him as their superior in prowess and intellect, and, while massacring other settlers, they remained at peace with the four daring and stalwart brothers. August, in 1838, moved to Mt. Carmel, where he conducted a hotel for several years, and in 1849 returned to Rochester, where he died. William removed to Vincennes but in 1816 returned to Rochester and erected a horse mill, the second one operated in the county.

The first English settlement was made in Wabash Precinct in 1802, being founded by Levi Compton and Joshua Jordan. Compton afterwards erected Fort Compton in 1810, which was surrounded with a palisade and contained dwellings, barns, etc., for the use of the inmates. This fort was large enough to shelter and protect a hundred families, and often, at a hurried signal, were they compelled to seek refuge within its enclosure.

The first horse-mill in the county was built by Compton at this place.

Compton was an influential and progressive man and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818 and afterwards Representative in the First General Assembly from Edwards County, of which Wabash County then constituted a part. He attained the age of eighty years. John Compton was a Representative from Wabash County in 1842-44. Levi Compton's son, Joseph, who died about 1874, was the first white child born in the county. Levi's companion and brother-in-law, Jordan, was a Virginian and had been a tenant of George Washington and fought with him at the time of Braddock's disastrous defeat.

John Stilwell came from Kentucky in 1804 and brought with him a negro slave, named Armstead, whom the records show, he liberated in 1822. He was the wealthiest of the pioneers, but afflicted with many strange peculiarities. Enoch Greathouse, a native of Germany, settled on the present site of Mt. Carmel in 1804, and in 1817 moved to the now extinct town of Centreville, where he died at the advanced age of 110 years. The Degans were French and coming from Detroit, joined their countryman at Rochester about 1804.

Two hardy and adventurous young Frenchmen, Joseph Burway and Joseph Pichinant, had joined the numerous little colony at Rochester. They were both killed by the Indians in 1815 near Baird's Pond. Having lost their horses, they had gone in search of them and, while trailing through the dense woods, were surprised and killed. Burway carried a rifle, the report of which was recognized by three settlers in the bottoms. They suspected the cause of the firing, and rushed to the settlement to give the alarm. Hastening to the locality where the firing was heard, they found the dead and mutilated bodies of the young heroes. The savages were pursued but escaped. The surrounding circumstances showed that Burway had fought heroically, for several dead Indians strewed the perilous path he had followed.

Seth Gard, the most prominent of all the early settlers, located in what is now Lick Prairie Precinct, in 1813. The locality was named, Gard's Point in his honor, and the name still perpetuates his memory. Judge Gard was a man of commanding force, a rare judgment and clear discernment. He was a truly representative man, and the early settlers leaned on him for counsel and direction. Upon the organization of Edwards County in 1815, he was elected a Representative to the Third Territorial Legislature, and filled that office during the first session, being succeeded by M. S. Davenport for the second and last session. He was one of the first County Judges and was a leading member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818. By his noble and useful life he bequeathed a legacy of honor to Wabash County which will ever cherish his venerated name.

In 1816 a little band of colonists left their fair and tranquil homes in Alleghany County, N. Y., to seek habitations in the deep solitude of the far western frontier. Of that memorable little company, one still survives at the age of 95 years, Rosander Smith, the son of Benjamin Smith. They made the entire journey by boats and settled at old Palmyra, where Crawfish Creek puts into the Wabash, and after a year of wretched privations and many deaths, the malarial location was cheerfully abandoned and the inhabitants dispersed to more genial parts of the county. Brevity forbids calling the roll of the many courageous and self-sacrificing pioneers who, struggling with grave and innumerable privations and dangers, wrested this beautiful country from savagery and chaos, and struck out for their descendants the fair highways of civilization and prosperity.

THE CANNON MASSACRE.—The pioneers were confronted with many perils and hardships on account of the hostility of the Indians, and until 1815 the region was filled with treacherous and marauding bands. The murderous redskins frequently drove the settlers into the forts or block-houses, and on several occasions the sanguinary tomahawk and bloody scalping knife secured many ghastly trophies. In 1818 occurred what is known in local history as the "Cannon Massacre," an event whose tragic and bloody character threw the settlers into a state of fearful apprehension. An account of the tragedy, as afterward given by one of Mr. Cannon's daughters, describes it in the following manner: "Mr. Cannon and his sons came across the Wabash from the Indiana side, and constructed a cabin near Campbell's Landing, in Coffee Precinct, on the ground where the Painter Grave-yard is now located. No signs of Indians were seen while they were engaged in the work, and it was supposed they had all left.

"After completing the cabin, they crossed the river to bring over the family. Late in the afternoon of the same day, after they all moved and settled in their house, they found a bee tree, and after becoming fairly settled, the men went into the timber to cut it. While thus engaged a band of Indians fell upon them suddenly. Mr.

Cannon was instantly killed, and the others fled for their lives. Samuel, a son of Mr. Cannon, was soon overtaken and dispatched by the murderous foe. They cut off his head and otherwise mutilated his body, leaving it where he fell."

Mrs. Cannon, a daughter, a boy about ten years old, and a son-in-law, by the name of Starks, were captured and carried off by the Indians. They were, however, all subsequently ransomed except the boy. Mr. Cannon and his son were buried by two neighbors. They wrapped the bodies in a horse skin and placed them in one grave.

PRIMITIVE INDUSTRIES.—The industries of the pioneers consisted of farming, lumbering, crude manufacturing and flat-boating. Wheat and corn were raised in considerable quantities. The wheat was harvested with sickles, threshed with resounding flails or tramped out with horses, ridden by children, and the grain ground at mills run by water or propelled by horses. A Mrs. Ingraham is said to have made the first wheat bread in the county, from wheat she plucked from the golden field, rubbed out and crushed in a mortar, and of which she made a cake for company and upon which her wondering guest looked with delighted surprise.

The chief and most necessary among the manufacturing industries were the "Pioneer Mills." They were a cheap and simple contrivance, with a capacity for grinding from ten to twelve bushels of grain per day. In 1818 there were two of these mills in this region, one at Fort Barney and the other at Rochester, and to the latter, it is said, customers came a distance of sixty miles. These primitive mills were called "hand mills." Graters and hand mills were in common use for manufacturing meal. Water mills were also used for sawing lumber and grinding grain. The whipsaw was the chief device for sawing boards. One was erected at Rochester in a very early day. Most of the lumber manufactured in this way was used for constructing flat-boats, and some for houses. Blacksmiths were scarce and nearly all domestic articles and machines were manufactured from wood. Even wagons and plows were made chiefly of wood, as well as the furniture and most of the dishes. The pioneers raised flax, spun on spinning-wheels and wove on looms of their own making, tanned leather and made their own shoes. Their most active industry was that of building flat-boats, which were used for transporting their surplus products to New Orleans, for it was too bulky to be hauled to the eastern markets. These boats were loaded and embarked, on the Wabash, at Mt. Carmel or Rochester usually, and started on their long and toilsome voyages, lasting sometimes several weeks. The flat-boats were chiefly used for descending the river and upon arrival in New Orleans were abandoned. Keel-boats and barges were used for ascending the river, and were propelled by poles or towed like canal boats. These weary journeys were beset with many perils and serious hardships.

MODE OF LIVING.—The pioneers had but few of the comforts and conveniences of life, as we know them today, and many times were destitute of the most ordinary necessities, but their sturdy hearts were stout with courage and they were filled with the inspiring hope of better days and the promises of rich inheritances for their posterity. They sat at rough tables and ate from rude dishes their frugal but wholesome food, which consisted of the savory meats of the deer and bear, the quail and squirrel, and the wild duck and delectable turkey, which fell an easy prey to their unerring rifles. From hollow trees they garnered wild honey, and the graceful maples yielded the delicious sap from which they made sugar. They strode the forests and walked the prairies, happy, hopeful and self-reliant men, ruddy with the glow of health and unvexed by the ensnaring follies, envious rivalries and mind racking competitions that, today, fill asylums, prisons and suicidal graves with hapless victims of the "pace that kills." The axe and the trusty rifle were their indispensable weapons. With the one they cleared away the dense forest and reared their cabin homes, and with the other they supplied the larder and repelled the murderous savage foe.

Theirs was a home of severe simplicity but substantial, and proof against the rude blasts of winter and but seldom decorated with the pretentious adornments of nails, hinges, locks and glass. The ordinary cabin had but one room, chinked and daubed, and contained a huge fireplace for heating and cooking purposes. The ceiling and doors were often covered with the skins of animals, and windows were made of greased paper and torches were used instead of candles. Wild hogs were fattened upon the abundant mast that covered the green carpets of the forest. From corn they made "ye," hominy, "sawp" and whiskey. On public occasions whiskey was consumed in generous quantities and the æsthetic art of "bootlegging" was unknown.

Their simple and routine lives were undisturbed by financial panics and society scandals, and all belonged to the aristocracy of usefulness. They made their clothes from cotton, wool, flax and furs, which were more remarkable for durability and comfort than beauty, and were made by the patient and industrious women. The men wore "jeans" and linsey-woolsey hunting-shirts and coonskin caps, and the women linsey-woolsey gowns. The women often became adepts with the use of the hand card, spinning wheel and loom, and made several kinds of cloth which were colored to suit the fancy of the maker or the wearer. The young gallants were fond of wearing fringed buckskin breeches on special occasions, believing that they exercised a subtle influence upon the hearts of the buxom damsels whom they courted.

Amusements were robust and athletic and regarded for their exhibitions of physical skill and endurance: shooting was universally practiced and esteemed above all other accomplishments. Jumping and wrestling were common sports and everybody danced. Disputes and quarrels were settled by square stand up fights, and the deadly revolver, which reaps an annual harvest of between six and eight thousand lives in our country, today, was never found in the pocket of the brave pioneer.

The complete story of the modes of life, the customs and amusements, privations and perils of the pioneers of Wabash County, is not essentially different from that of our whole country at an early day, which has been told with such thrilling reality and ravishing beauty by several of our great historians, and generations to come will linger over the fascinating recital with envious admiration.

The history of Wabash County as a body politic began December 27, 1824, when, by an act of the Legislature, it was severed from Edwards County and organized as Wabash County. Its political history, up to that time, is blended with Edwards County, which, at one time during the Territorial period, included one-third of the present area of the State of Illinois. Wabash constituted the east half of Edwards County at the time of separation, and in it the first important pioneer settlements within its boundaries were made chiefly by immigrants from Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, and North Carolina, except the French settlement at Rochester. Edwards County was created by act of the Territorial Legislature in 1814, its northern boundary being the Canadian line and Palmyra was named in the act as its county-seat. The proprietors of the town were required to donate twenty acres of ground for such purpose. Palmyra was accordingly founded on the 22nd day of April, 1815, by the cooperation of Seth Gard, Peter Keen, Gervaise Hazelton, Levi Compton and John Waggoner, who constituted the partnership of Seth Gard & Co.

Palmyra, named after the famous city of the East, was located on Crawfish Creek near the Great Wabash River about two and a half miles north of the present city of Mt. Carmel, and like its proud predecessor of antiquity, was destined to fall into decay. Its site was a sluggish, marshy bend near the river, one of the most unhealthy locations in the whole region. Its sturdy inhabitants were tortured with malarial fever, and many were soon buried on the sloping little knoll where, until a few years ago, fragments of the rude tombstones that marked their desolate resting places, could be found beneath the withered leaves of the forest that had sprung into luxurious growth above them.

Upon their arrival an Indian chief told them how many of his tribe had sickened and died at the place, and warned them that the white man would share the same fate. But his counsel was unheeded until many of the colony had perished of wasting fever, and impending doom was apparent. The spot where Palmyra once stood is now a cultivated field, and the plowshare ruthlessly upturns the hallowed sod above the sepulcher of its forgotten dead.

A NEW COUNTY SEAT.—Such unsuitable and noxious environments were destined to compel an early abandonment of the ill-fated town, and accordingly a proposition to re-locate the county-seat was submitted to a popular vote at an election held in 1821.

Albion and Mt. Carmel were candidates and the former won. Albion was the heart of the noted English settlement in the west part of the county and, as the bitterness engendered by the war of 1812 had not entirely subsided, Mt. Carmel and the east part of the county were sorely aggrieved over the result. They would not be reconciled to the idea of having the county administration transferred to the British, as they satirically denominated their English neighbors of the west half. The feeling became so bitter that Mt. Carmel raised and drilled four companies of militia, for the purpose of marching upon Albion and violently seizing the records and transporting them to Mt. Carmel. The companies started on the march and the first night bivouacked on Bald Hill Prairie, and proposed to descend on the metropolis of "Little Britain" the next day. In the meantime Albion, having been advised of the contemplated attack, speedily dispatched peace commissioners to arrange terms of settlement. The controversy was happily settled by an agreement to divide the county into eastern and western divisions, making the Ponpas Creek the dividing line.

COURTS.—During Palmyra's existence as the county-seat, several important terms of county court were held at that place, and much public business transacted, of which there is preserved a complete and authentic record. The first session of court was convened at the house of Gervaise Hazelton, January 23rd, 1815. The house of Hazelton was officially declared to be the court house, for which Mr. Hazelton was paid six and a fourth cents, in full, for the first year's rent. The history of the brief and formal proceedings of those early courts is full of interest to the student of pioneer jurisprudence. The first license was issued to Robert Erwin for the sale of spirituous liquors, on payment to the county of the sum of two dollars, and the price for the commodity sold was fixed at 12½ cents per half pint. The license was dated April 4, 1815. At this term Francis Vallie was granted license to operate a ferry across the Wabash River, and James Martin was licensed to keep a public house in the town on payment of one dollar to the county.

No court house was ever built at Palmyra, the house of Mr. Hazelton being always used for that purpose. The first Circuit Court held in Palmyra convened July 11, 1815, over which Judge Stanley Griswold presided, and of which Nathaniel Claypole was appointed Clerk. At this session the Grand Jury returned five indictments. The first case tried was that of the United States vs. John Stillwell for assault and battery. The defendant was convicted and fined two dollars and costs. The petit jury was constituted, largely, of members of the Grand Jury, who found the indictments.

At the July term in 1816, six applicants were admitted to practice law, one of these being the celebrated Elias Kent Kane, who later became United States Senator from Illinois. The first jail was built at Palmyra, in 1815, of hewed logs with a puncheon floor and shingle roof, at a cost of $255. By an order of court it was ordered that certain town lots should be sold at $15.00 each, to defray the expenses of the public buildings, but because of Palmyra's unfortunate location, but few lots were sold even at that low price.

On the 10th day of April, 1821, the seat of justice was formally transferred from unhappy Palmyra to Albion and on that day the Board of Commissioners, that had been appointed to appraise the damages accruing to the town in consequence of its loss of the county-seat, reported such damages at $100 and said sum was ordered to be equally distributed to the proprietors of the town of Palmyra. The removal of the county-seat was the culminating adversity of Palmyra's disastrous career, and by it she was doomed to early and complete obliteration.

COUNTY DIVISION.—In pursuance of the peace compact entered into between the hostile factions on Bald Hill Prairie, by which a partition of Edwards County was agreed upon, Major Utter, a member of the House of Representatives from Edwards County, introduced a bill, providing for the formation of a separate county out of the County of Edwards, which was passed and approved December 27, 1824, and thenceforward the history of the two counties diverges. Old asperities were sunk in oblivion and a sentimental feeling and reverence for a common history, together with many neighborly deeds and acts of reciprocal appreciation, have united these two counties in bonds of faithful friendship and neighborly association. The legislative act establishing Wabash County is now an interesting document to its citizens and should be esteemed with much regard for its historical interest.

The debt of Edwards County was to be shared equally, and a commission, composed of Samuel Mundy, of Wabash, and John Cover, of Edwards, was appointed to audit the indebtedness and apportion the same.

AN ACT forming a separate county out of the County of Edwards: Approved December 27, 1824.

Herewith follows a copy of the act:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the people of the State of Illinois represented in the General Assembly, That all the tract of country within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning at the mouth of De Bon Pas Creek, thence running up the main branch of said creek to the line of Lawrence County, thence running east, with said line, to the Wabash River, and thence down the same to the place of beginning, shall constitute a new county, to be called Wabash; and for the purpose of fixing a permanent seat of justice in said county, William Kinkade, John H. Morris, Cornelius DeLong and Thomas Mason, of Lawrence County, and George W. Farris, of Wayne County, be, and they are hereby appointed, Commissioners, which said Commissioners, or a majority of them, being duly sworn before some judge or Justice of the Peace of their State, to faithfully take into view the convenience of the people, and the situation of the settlements, with an eye to future population and the eligibility of the place, shall meet on the first Monday in May, or within six days thereafter, at the house of Gervaise Hazleton, in said county, and proceed to examine and determine upon the place of the permanent seat of justice and designate the same;

Provided, That the proprietors of the land shall give to the county a quantity of land not less than twenty acres, for the purpose of erecting county buildings, to be laid out in lots and sold for that purpose; or should the proprietor, or proprietors, refuse or neglect to make the donation aforesaid, then it shall be the duty of said Commissioners to fix upon some other place for the seat of justice, as convenient as may be to the inhabitants of said county, which place so fixed and determined upon, the said Commissioners shall certify under their hands and seals, and return the same to the next County Commissioners' Court in said county; which court shall cause an entry to be made in their books of record, which place, so designated, shall be the permanent seat of justice of said county, and until the public buildings shall be erected, the courts shall be held at such place in said county, as the County Commissioners of said county shall appoint.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That said county shall bear an even share of the debts which are now outstanding against Edwards County, excepting all such as have arisen from the erection of public buildings at Albion; and for the purpose of ascertaining and adjusting the same, Samuel Mundy, of said county, and John Cover, Junior, of Edwards County, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners, whose duty it shall be to meet at the court house in Albion on the first Monday in June next, and to examine into the state of the treasury of the present Edwards County and the debts due from said county, and to divide the amount of debts which shall remain unpaid, excepting such as have arisen from the erection of the public building at Albion, between the two counties in equal proportion, and certify, under their hands and seals, to the next County Commissioners' Court of each county, the amount to be paid by each; and for the purpose of executing their commission, the said commissioners are hereby authorized to send for witnesses and examine them upon oath.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That each of the Commissioners appointed to locate the seat of justice in said county, shall receive a compensation of two dollars for each and every day they may be necessarily employed in fixing the aforesaid seat of justice, to be paid out of the county treasury, by an order from the County Commissioners, and that the commissioners appointed by the second section of this act, shall receive the like sum per day, for every day necessarily employed in executing their commission, to be paid out of the treasuries of their respective counties, upon the order of their respective County Commissioners' Courts.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That on the first Monday of April next, an election shall be held at the house of Henry Utter, in said county, for one Sheriff, one Coroner and three County Commissioners, which election shall be conducted in all respects agreeably to the provisions of the law regulating elections; Provided, That any three Justices of the Peace in said county, may act as judges of election, taking to themselves two qualified voters as Clerks, and it shall be the duty of the Circuit Clerk of said County to give public notice agreeably to law, at least ten days previous to such elections, and in case there should be no clerk in said County, it shall be the duty of the Recorder to give such notice.

Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, That the Citizens of said County are hereby declared to be entitled to the same rights and privileges as are allowed in general to other Counties in this State.

Sec. 6. Be it further enacted, That the said County shall vote in conjunction with Edwards County for Representatives and Senator of the General Assembly.

CENTREVILLE.—In compliance with the provisions of Section 1, of the foregoing act, John E. Morris, Cornelius DeLong and Thomas Mason, who were appointed as Commissioners for that purpose reported that they had located the County-Seat of the County of Wabash, at Centreville, the location of which was in Section 35, Town 1, North, and Section 2, Town 1 South, the site of which is now owned by Rufus Newkirk and J. M. Ramsey. Part of the logs of the Old Court House are now used in a barn on Mr. Ramsey's farm.

The share of the old Edwards County debt assessed against Wabash County was $748.20½.

The first election was held at the home of Henry Utter, at which Levi Compton, Tarleton Boren and Moses Bedel were chosen County Commissioners, and Abner Armstrong, Sheriff.

MT. CARMEL, COUNTY-SEAT.—As a county-seat town, Centreville soon proved to be an utter failure and in 1829 the seat of government was removed to Mt. Carmel, its already prosperous rival, and lots 217 and 477 were selected as its permanent site, and where it has continued to remain.

The first court house built by Wabash County was erected at Centreville, by Moses Bedell, at a contract price of $715, and was first occupied by the County Commissioners, June 5, 1826.

The second court house was erected by Scoby Stewart, in Mt. Carmel, in 1829; 1857 it was totally destroyed by fire and the county records consumed, a loss which entailed great confusion and expense to the county. The third court house was erected in the same year by Hiram Bell, as contractor, for the sum of $6,770. This structure was demolished by the terrible cyclone which devastated the city of Mt. Carmel, at the hour of four o'clock P. M., June 4, 1877, and which destroyed eighteen lives, prostrated the business portion of the town in almost hopeless ruin and wrecked thousands upon thousands of dollars worth of property.

In the midst of its distress and suffering, the county importuned the State Legislature for assistance for the purpose of providing a new court house. To this timely appeal a generous response was made, $15,000 being appropriated.

The present and fourth court house was completed and occupied in March, 1881, at a cost of about $17,000, and it is hoped that, if it shall become necessary to supplant it with a new "Hall of Justice," the work will be intrusted to more competent and reliable hands than those which reared the present edifice.

CHAPTER VII.

BENCH AND BAR—COUNTY OFFICERS.

FIRST CIRCUIT COURT—JUDGES WHO HAVE PRESIDED OVER EDWARDS AND WABASH COUNTY CIRCUIT COURTS—CHANGES IN CIRCUITS AND COURT DISTRICTS—SOME OF THE MOST EMINENT JURISTS—WABASH COUNTY BAR—THE PLACE WHICH LAWYERS HAVE FILLED IN GENERAL HISTORY—EARLY AND PRESENT LAWYERS IN WABASH COUNTY—COUNTY OFFICERS, 1882 TO 1910.

CIRCUIT JUDGES.—The first Circuit Court held within the territory of what is now Edwards and Wabash Counties, was held at Old Palmyra, then the county seat of Edwards County, over which Judge Stanley Griswold presided. At the term held in 1816, Thomas Towles was on the bench. From 1817 to 1818, Jephtha Hardin was on the bench; 1818 to 1819, Thomas C. Browne; William Wilson, from 1819 to 1825; James O. Wattles from 1825 to 1827, when Thomas C. Browne, as a Justice of the Supreme Court, was again on the circuit bench, serving one year, and being succeeded by William Wilson, also of the Supreme Court, from 1828 to 1835; Justin Harlan from 1835 to 1841, when by a change of the State law increasing the number of Supreme Judges, William Wilson again returned to the circuit bench, serving until 1849, and being succeeded by Justin Harlan, as Circuit Judge, from 1849 to 1851; Samuel S. Marshall was then elected, serving until 1854, when he resigned, and Downing Baugh served one year; Edwin Beecher served from 1855 to 1861; Samuel S. Marshall, from 1861 to 1865, when James M. Pollock succeeded him, serving until 1873.

By act of Legislature on March 28, 1873, the State was divided, exclusive of Cook County, into twenty-six Judicial Circuits, and at the election in June, 1873, one Judge was elected for each circuit, for the term of six years, Edwards and Wabash Counties then forming a part of the Twenty-fourth District. Tazewell B. Tanner was elected Judge of the Circuit, and Lawrence County forming a part of the Twenty-first District, James C. Allen was elected in that circuit.

In 1877, the Legislature, in order to increase the number of Circuit Judges, and to provide for the origination of the Appellate Courts, consolidated the Twenty-six Judicial Circuits into thirteen, thereby giving each circuit two judges, and provided for the election of one additional judge for each circuit in August, 1877, for two years, making three judges in each judicial circuit. In September following the Supreme Court appointed twelve of the circuit judges to appellate court duty, the remaining judges presiding over the Circuit Courts in their respective districts. By this change of the judiciary system the Twenty-fifth and the Twenty-fourth Districts were united, to be known as the Second Judicial Circuit.

In those districts Tazewell B. Tanner and James C. Allen, were already serving on the bench, and John H. Halley was elected to make the requisite number. Under the above act they presided until 1879, when Chauncey S. Conger, Thomas S. Casey and William C. Jones, were elected. In 1885, Chauncey C. Conger, Carroll C. Boggs and William C. Jones were elected; in 1891, Judge Boggs was re-elected with Edward Youngblood and S. Z. Landes as his colleagues; in 1897, Judge Youngblood was re-elected with P. A. Pearce and E. E. Newlin as new incumbents; in 1903, Pearce and Newlin were re-elected with J. R. Creighton, and in 1909, Newlin and Creighton were re-elected with William H. Green, new incumbent. The present judges are capable and conscientious lawyers, as well as courageous and upright men.

Several of the judges mentioned attained distinction as learned, fearless and conscientious jurists and afterward became prominent and influential public men and eminent lawyers. In recalling their names we cannot refrain from mentioning those whom we esteem as especially deserving of honor, and we do so with no invidious intent. Prominent among those particularly eminent in public affairs and justly deserving of popular esteem, we recall William Wilson, Jephtha Hardin, Justin Harlan, S. S. Marshall, James C. Allen, Chauncey S. Conger, Carroll C. Boggs and Hon. S. Z. Landes.

WABASH COUNTY BAR.—Law is an ordination of omnipotent wisdom and is co-existent with all nature. It is as essential to the regulation and good order of society as it is to the supreme control of the infinite systems of the universe. Its growth and evolution is co-ordinate with man's long and painful development from savagery to civilization. The history of jurisprudence is the record of man's advancement from rapine, predatory warfare and barbaric vengeance, to order, justice and stability.

The administration of justice and the laws of property require the ripened wisdom and trained experience of those who have assiduously applied their talents and knowledge of human experience to the mastery of the science of law and the understanding of the complex, subtle and enigmatical causations of human conduct. An able and conscientious lawyer is one of the most influential factors in every county and community, his advice and direction are the earliest sought and the most faithfully relied upon.

The names of great lawyers in England and America, who were first to defy the despotism of tyrants, corrupted courts, repressive laws, and cruel persecutions, are among the world's most revered and venerated characters.

LEWIS G. CANEDY AND FAMILY

In the struggles for liberty, the lawyers have been among the first to lead and the last to retreat in the cause of freedom, and their splendid services for mankind illuminate the most resplendent pages of our common history. In no country have lawyers wielded so great an influence for good as in America, and especially is this true in relation to the growth of our judicial system and the practice of our Western States. So intimately are the beneficent results of the pioneer bar of our counties interwoven with their legal, political and domestic affairs, that it is impossible to write a clearly intelligible history of them without at least a brief sketch of the bar in the several counties.

Mr. Edward Mundy, a native of New Jersey, and who came to the county in 1820, was the first attorney to engage in regular practice in Wabash County. As was the custom for many years, he traveled the circuit and was ranked as a good lawyer. Samuel Mundy, a brother of Edward, was elected to the State Legislature from Wabash County in 1828. Edward Mundy moved to Michigan where he became the first Lieutenant Governor on the admission of that State into the Union.

An attorney by the name of Edward J. Elkins, came to the county in 1825, and practiced his profession for two years. Hon. Orlando B. Ficklin, whose parents lie buried in the Old Sand Hill Cemetery at Mt. Carmel, entered upon the practice of law in 1830. He was the most distinguished of all the pioneer lawyers and was elected to the Legislature from Wabash County. Afterward he moved to Charleston and was elected to Congress for four terms. After he had passed four-score years, he entered the lecture field. His lecture on "The Bench and Bar of the Wabash Valley for Fifty Years," covered the period from 1834 to 1884, during which he met at the bar, or on the hustings, nearly all the celebrated men of Illinois and Indiana and was very popular. Among his contemporary attorneys were a Mr. Pyle, James McDowell, Joseph Bowman, Joseph Orth, Robert Dougherty, Victor B. Bell, the elegant Charles H. Constable and the celebrated Usher F. Linder, who was for a short time Attorney General of the State, and for four terms a member of the lower branch of the General Assembly.

The last two were doubtless the most talented, eloquent and picturesque lawyers that ever thrilled a jury and entranced a wondering audience in Southern Illinois, in those days of forensic eloquence.

Robert Bell practiced law in Wabash County nearly half a century, attained wide distinction as a popular orator, and no man's life is more intimately inwrought with the history of the county. He was a man of distinguished appearance, of gracious demeanor, generous and public spirited, and was known and honored throughout the State. He graduated from the Indiana State University in 1855, and practiced law two years at Fairfield, Ill. In 1864, he formed a partnership with Edward B. Green, which continued twenty-five years, and the firm became one of the most prominent in Southern Illinois.

Judge Bell was elected President of the Illinois Southern Railroad Company, in 1863, and in 1869, became President of the St. Louis, Mt. Carmel & New Albany Railroad Company. From these old lines have grown the present Southern and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads. He was twice elected County Judge and, in 1876, President Hayes appointed him special agent to investigate alleged internal revenue frauds in California. Judge Bell held numerous other important positions, and was frequently mentioned as a Republican candidate for Governor. In 1881 he was appointed one of the U. S. Commissioners to examine the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad in New Mexico. He continued in the practice of his profession until his death in 1906. Judge Bell had a strong hold upon the affections of the people of Southern Illinois, and no man had a larger or more devoted personal acquaintance in this section of the State than he. At the time of his death he had arranged to write a history of Wabash County and, with his clear recollection of events gained from seventy-five years' residence among its people, together with his fine literary accomplishments, he would, had he lived to complete it, have produced a work, fascinating in style and rich in historical facts.

Edward B. Green for nearly fifty years has been recognized as one of the most learned and eminent lawyers of Southern Illinois. He was admitted to the bar at Paris, Ill., in 1860, and immediately afterward located in Mt. Carmel. In 1864 he formed the partnership with Judge Bell which continued with great success for twenty-five years. He has been nominated by the Republican party as a candidate for Circuit Judge, Judge of the Supreme Court and for Congress. He has also been President of the State Bar Association and, in 1890, was appointed by President Harrison as the first Chief Justice of Oklahoma, and as such edited the now noted first volume of the Oklahoma Reports. As a jurist he evinced rare learning and wisdom. He rendered opinions in many cases involving novel and perplexing legal questions, which have become precedents in the jurisprudence of that country, and which have raised him to general eminence as a jurist. In 1898 he returned to Mt. Carmel where he received Mr. Theodore G. Risley into partnership with him, under the firm name of Green & Risley, which still continues. Judge Green has probably taken more cases to the higher courts than any lawyer who has ever practiced in Southern Illinois, and has tried many important cases in other States. He is a man of prepossessing appearance, finely educated and gifted with eminent talent.

Hon. S. Z. Landes was admitted to the bar in 1864 and removed to Mt. Carmel where he was destined, by reason of his unflagging energy, capability and integrity, to become an eminent lawyer, prominent in public life and successful in business. He served as City Attorney three terms, as State's Attorney two terms, was Master in Chancery, County Judge, Circuit Judge and served two terms in Congress. Judge Landes was an earnest student, a tireless worker, a resourceful and vigorous lawyer and a man of propelling force in all the usual walks of life. In 1905, he retired from practice, but continued to take an active interest in public and business affairs. Even in his retirement his aid and counsel were constantly sought and he continued to exercise a great influence in many directions, but while this sketch was being prepared came the announcement of his death. He died enjoying the esteem and affections of the people of Wabash County, and his earnest, upright and influential life will long be a solace and source of encouragement to those who knew him.

Samuel R. Putman, M. F. Hoskins and Lyman Leeds were esteemed and able attorneys who have recently passed away.

The present bar is composed, in addition to those already mentioned, of Hon. M. H. Mundy, P. J. Kolb, George P. Ramsey, H. M. Phipps, Frank Fornoff, Judge John A. Lopp, Howard P. French, B. A. Harvey and Theodore G. Risley.

The bar of Wabash County has been exceptionally able and honorable, and has reflected deserved credit and honor upon its people.

COUNTY OFFICIALS.—The excellent and authentic history of Edwards, Lawrence and Wabash Counties published by J. L. McDonough & Co., in 1883, and written by an author of enviable literary repute, whose learning evinced a vast knowledge of history, and who possessed the rare gift of embellishing ordinary facts with fascinating charms, contains a complete list of all the officials of Edwards County up to 1824 and of Wabash County from that period down to 1882. For that reason we deem it advisable to commence the list with the year 1882, bringing it down to date.

INDUSTRIAL—PUBLIC UTILITIES.

AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS—STREAMS AND WATER FACILITIES—ARTIFICIAL DRAINAGE AND TILING —SOIL AND CEREAL CROPS—VEGETABLE AND FRUIT PRODUCTS—STOCK BREEDING—WABASH COUNTY BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION—COUNTY FAIRS —TRANSPORTATION AND RAILWAY FACILITIES—THE BIG FOUR RAILROAD—THE GRAND RAPIDS DAM—FISHING INDUSTRY—DEVELOPMENT OF THE MUSSEL-SHELL INDUSTRY—VALUABLE PEARL DISCOVERIES.

Wabash County, although in extent of territory one of the smallest counties in Illinois, is one of the most highly favored by nature and, as an agricultural district, is unexcelled in fertility and productiveness.

No county in the State is better watered. The Wabash River skirts the entire county on the south and east; the Bon Pas, a large stream flowing into the Wabash, forms the boundary on the west; the Raccoon, another stream of considerable size, forms the northern boundary from the Wabash westward, and three creeks of never failing water traverse the interior. The well water in Mt. Carmel, and in nearly every part of the county, is of exceptional purity, the wells in most instances penetrating sandstone before reaching veins of water.

The county is probably the best drained and tilled of any in the State, and there is not an acre of soil, under present improved conditions, that is not capable of producing abundant crops of almost any variety grown in a temperate or semi-tropical climate. The soil is especially well adapted to the growth of cereals. Wheat crops average from 20 to 45 bushels per acre, and an average of more than 40 bushels per acre has been obtained in fields of 100 acres or more. On land next to the river, the average of corn per acre exceeds 50 bushels, and in fields of considerable size, the average has reached 90 bushels.

The uplands produce bountiful crops of oats, grass, clover, potatoes, melons, beans, fruits and berries of every description. The lands of the county are well improved and the farmers are prosperous to an unusual extent, which is evidenced by the many fine and commodious residences and barns that dot the country in every direction.

BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION.—Many of the farmers of Wabash County are now engaged in the rearing of pure blooded live-stock, and their exhibits of registered cattle and hogs have won handsome premiums at high-class fairs and evoked the commendation of noted judges. The Wabash County Breeders' Association was organized in September, 1908. Its object is to improve the breeds of live-stock, generally, in the county and to encourage and develop a spirit of enterprise among the farmers in the rearing of animals eligible to registration. The society has a membership of about twenty-five and has a regular constitution and by-laws, the membership being limited to breeders of live-stock entitled to be registered.

COUNTY FAIRS.—The first county fair of which we have any authentic record was held at Mt. Carmel on the commons in 1866. Soon after fairs were held on the farm of Marion Rigg for about two years, but, being inconveniently located, they were unsuccessful and discontinued. In the year 1870 the Wabash County Fair was held, for the time on the William H. Harper farm, two miles from Mt. Carmel. This series of fairs ran a very successful course for about seven years. The fairs acquired great popularity and attracted liberal exhibits, some of them being of much merit, and they proved not only a credit, but a helpful incentive to the farmers of the county. Another fair association, known as the Wabash County Grange Fair, was organized and held a fair at Asbury Chapel, in 1887, and thereafter held three exhibitions on the farm of I. W. Jaquess, at Mt. Carmel. The county, since then, has had no fair, but it is one of the strongest and most liberal exhibitors at neighboring county, and even state fairs, in this section of the State.

Sometime in the 'fifties a fair was held at Lancaster, and soon thereafter one was held on Main Street in Mt. Carmel, the court house yard being used for the purpose of displaying exhibits.

TRANSPORTATION.—The earliest means employed for the transportation of the surplus products of the Wabash Valley, were rafts and flat boats on the Wabash River and its tributary streams. The first steamboat to arrive at Mt. Carmel was "The Commerce," of Cincinnati, in 1819, and it subsequently went as far north as Terre Haute. About 1830, steam boating became quite regular and in later years greatly increased, and on account of their facilities, for river commerce Mt. Carmel and Rochester became thriving towns. When railroads made their advent into the region, river traffic soon became inconsequential.

RAILROADS.—In 1837 an attempt was made to construct a railroad from Mt. Carmel to Alton. The work of grading was commenced at each place and after more than twenty miles of it had been accomplished, the enterprise was abandoned and the roadway sold to General Pickering for $300. It was not until 1872 that the first railway train pulled into Mt. Carmel over the line now known as the Louisville & St. Louis Division of the "Southern." For years it was known as the "Air Line." It is now one of the most prosperous lines passing across the State. The old Cairo & Vincennes line was opened up for operation through Mt. Carmel in December, 1872. It has changed hands often and gone under various names, but is now known as the Cairo & Danville Division of the C. C. C. & St. L. (or "Big Four") Railway, which is a part of the New York & Hudson River Railroad system. Its division headquarters and shops are located at Mt. Carmel, being originally at Carmi, whence they were removed in 1884. The company has recently expended large sums of money in improving the line, its equipment and shops, and now has upwards of one thousand men employed at Mt. Carmel. The company handles an immense freight business on this line, from the Saline County coal mines. The pay-roll of the shops and division employes at Mt. Carmel averages $54,000 per month.

The cost of the new shops was $230,000, and of the new depot and remodeling of the Y. M. C. A. building $50,000. In 1906 the roadway of the division was reconstructed at a cost of $6,- 500,000. The company is now constructing a new line from Mt. Carmel to Evansville, Ind., called the Evansville, Mt. Carmel & Northern, which crosses the Wabash River about two miles below Mt. Carmel and where a splendid steel bridge is being built at a cost of $337,000. The Big Four depot at Mt. Carmel is the handsomest and most commodious in the State south of Springfield.

The Big Four Railway Company has been a tremendous factor in the upbuilding and improvement of the prosperous and attractive city of Mt. Carmel.

GRAND RAPIDS DAM.—There are several attractive resorts along the Wabash River, such as McCleary's Bluffs, Old Rochester and Hanging Rock, but the place of chief interest and greatest importance is the famous Grand Rapids Dam, about two and one-half miles above Mt. Carmel.

As early as 1837 it was believed the water power at Grand Rapids could easily be developed sufficiently to build up a large city at that place, and predictions of the most extravagant character, as to its future, were indulged by promoters. Townsites were laid off, imaginary streets were given metropolitan names, and fabulous prices asked for lots. Plats of one of these phantom cities is preserved among the old archives at Vincennes.

The Wabash Navigation Company about 1847 constructed its great wooden dam, for the purpose of navigation and manufacturing, and immediately flooring and saw-mills sprang up, and trade was drawn from fifty miles distant. When the dam was completed the place became a veritable "anglers paradise." Bass, salmon, perch, catfish and buffalo of the finest quality were easily caught and in inexhaustible quantities, so great was the fame of the place that fishermen came from all the surrounding country, and even from the distant cities of Cincinnati, Louisville and St. Louis. Anglers fished not only for sport but for profit, and campers from distant counties would return home with their creaking wagons loaded with barrels of salted fish. For years Jack Kavanaugh, the jovial, witty and intelligent miller at the Old Dam, charmed and amazed all visitors by his irresistible humor and fanciful tales. None who experienced the merriment and good fellowship of that delightful spot can ever forget the halcyon days of the "Old Dam."

In 1879 the Old Dam gave way and was finally removed. The present dam, eleven hundred feet in length and twelve feet in height, was constructed by the General Government, together with a splendid system of locks, the total cost of which approximated $340,000, and again the place has become a great popular resort, and railroads make reduced rates to fishing and outing parties who visit it in great numbers. It is the most interesting and inviting resort in the entire Wabash Valley and is visited by more people than any other point of attraction on the Wabash River.

PEARL AND MUSSEL SHELL INDUSTRY.—Pearl-fishing has been a valuable industry since the days of the Macedonians. They were first to develop the pearl fisheries of the Persian Gulf, which have been celebrated for their value for ages. In the time of the Ptolemies pearl-fishing was prosecuted along the shores of the Red Sea.

Some of the finest pearls are secured from the Sulu Archipelago, and when the Sultan of Sulu recently started on his tour around the world, he is said to have taken with him several bushels of Sulu pearls, which he distributed with a lavishness that seemed a realization of the ancient Oriental custom of sprinkling gold dust and seed pearl on the princes of royal blood, and to which Milton refers in the following lines:

"Or where the gorgeous East, with richest hand, Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold."

The great poet, in his description of the wealth of Ormus, alluded to the pearl-fishing of the Persian Gulf.

The ancients obtained pearls only from India and the Persian Gulf, but now they are procured chiefly from the Sulu seas, Australia, the Coast of Central America and the South Pacific Islands. They were familiar only with salt water pearls.

River pearls are produced by fresh water mussels, which inhabit the rivers in the temperate climates of the Northern Hemisphere, principally in Scotland, Wales, Saxony, Bohemia, Canada and the United States.

The first river pearls, systematically worked in this country, were found in the Little Miami River, and from there the industry gradually spread over the whole country, and has become especially important along the rivers of Illinois, Iowa and Arkansas, where the fresh water mussel abounded in great profusion.

Pearls have always been esteemed as among the most coveted of personal ornaments; even Julius Caesar regarded them so highly that he presented a breastplate of British pearls to one of his greatest Generals.

They are calcareous concretions of remarkable luster and are supposed to be formed by the intrusion of some foreign substance between the mantle of the mollusk and its shell, which, becoming a source of irritation, determines the deposition of nacreous matter in concentric layers until the substance is completely encysted.

The pearl and mussel industry was first developed on the Wabash River at Mt. Carmel, in the fall of 1902, and steadily grew in importance until its rich rewards attracted men of almost every vocation to engage in the alluring occupation of pearl-fishing. Farmers, clerks, mechanics, rivermen and laborers rushed to the mussel beds, with an eager impulse that reminded one of the poet's lines describing the muster at Tilbury:

"The fisher left his boat to rock
On Tamar's glittering waves;
The rugged miner rushed to war
From Mendip's sunless caves."

Experienced and capable pearl buyers estimate that the total value of pearls taken from that part of the Wabash River bounding Wabash County will approximate one million, three hundred thousand dollars, and that the value of the shells taken from the same region has reached as much as seven hundred thousand dollars. Many pearls of great value have been found, and one is said to have brought the fabulous sum of $8,000 in the city of Paris. Pearl buyers have come direct from Paris to Mt. Carmel to spend the pearl season in pursuit of their occupation, notwithstanding they had strong local competition. The season for taking mussels is fixed by statute, in order to prevent the extermination of the mussels. It opens April 1st and closes October 1st of each year.

The mussel shells are of many varieties and greatly different values. Among the names of the many kinds of shells the following are the common ones: Buckhorn, Sandshell, the Mucket, Washboards, Three Ridges, Butterfly, Monkey Face, Nigger Heads, Pig Toes, Maple Leaf, and Knife Handles. The Washboards and Three Ridges are the most valuable.

During the year 1905 it is estimated that, within twenty miles up and down the river from Mt. Carmel, four thousand men were engaged in musseling. The average number now employed during the season is about four hundred.

The vast beds of mussels were being rapidly exhausted, and protective legislation alone has preserved them from utter depletion. It is a sorry fact that the selfishness of human nature, if unrestrained, in so far as it is physically able, would destroy every species of natural wealth the abundant earth yields for man's pleasure and profit.

THE WABASH COUNTY PRESS.

THE PART PLAYED BY THE LOCAL NEWSPAPER AND WHAT IT ACCOMPLISHES—THE FIRST PAPER IN MT. CARMEL—THE MT. CARMEL SENTINEL AND ADVOCATE—MT. CARMEL REGISTER AND ITS VARIOUS POLITICAL CAREER—THE WABASH REPUBLICAN, GREENBRIER AND PLOW BOY HAVE A BRIEF EXISTENCE—WABASH DEMOCRAT—TEMPERANCE JOURNALS—THE MT. CARMEL REPUBLICAN—HAYVILLE'S EVERY MORNING.

The local newspaper is the ubiquitous chronicler of all the events, affairs and transactions of the community. It is a supervisor of all public proceedings and censor of political conduct, and is supposed to be authority on all subjects of general interest. It spreads sunshine, fosters improvement, inspires courage, unmasks shams, irradiates intelligence, and enjoys the confidence of the public when actuated by good motives and solemn regard for the truth. It speaks as with myriad tongues, and is the medium and servant of all men. It heralds our coming into the world, narrates our daily deeds and, with simple pathos, announces our everlasting departure.

MT. CARMEL SENTINEL AND ADVOCATE.—The first newspaper published in Mt. Carmel was the "Mt. Carmel Sentinel and Advocate," which appeared in 1834. Its editor was Horace Roney. After publishing the paper one year Mr. Roney died and it passed into the hands of Edward Baker, who continued in charge until 1836. It was then secured by Richard Beck, with O. B. Ficklin as editor. Joseph G. Bowman was connected with it for a time, but in 1839 it was moved to Mt. Vernon, Ind.

MT. CARMEL REGISTER.—The first edition of the "Mt. Carmel Register" was issued in 1839, with J. S. Powers as editor. It acquired a wide circulation, was Whig in politics and supported Gen. Harrison for president in 1840. Powers was succeeded by E. B. Meeny, and he by George B. Backus in 1841, who conducted it for several years. Frank Fuller and Fuller & Hutchinson owned the paper for a time. From 1848 it was in the possession of W. D. Jackson, S. S. Luken, and Victor B. and Robert Bell, respectively, until 1852, during the greater part of which time it was independent in politics.

Theodore S. Bowers purchased it in 1852. Bowers achieved a splendid war record, was made Colonel in the regular army, and Adjutant on Gen. Grant's staff. He was accidentally killed by a railroad train while attending Gen. Grant at West Point, in 1866. He was succeeded by F. C. Manley, with E. B. Green as political editor, who made it a Republican organ. In 1862 it fell into the hands of George W. Douglas, who made it Democratic and supported McClellan for President in 1864. Douglas died before the election and the paper was sold to Richard Beck, who again made it Republican in politics. In 1867 it was sold to E. B. Green for $100. Beck published it until it was sold to J. M. Calvo. After this it passed through various hands, and was once destroyed by fire, but surmounting all changes of fortune, it finally became the property of Frank W. Havill, in 1875. He published it as a Republican paper until 1878, when it was made an organ of the democracy.

Mr. Havill was a natural newspaper man and made the "Register" one of the ablest and most popular local papers in the State, thereby winning for himself an enviable reputation as a journalist, both at home and abroad. On account of failing health its veteran editor sold the entire plant to Messrs. Kolb & Smith, on November 8, 1906, and Mr. Smith became acting editor.

Mr. Duke Havill had editorial charge of the "Daily Register" from July 6, 1909, to January 1, 1910, when he gave place to the present editor, but is still a stockholder in the concern. February 1, 1910, it was sold to the Mt. Carmel Register Company, where Mr. A. E. Smith, a scholarly and versatile writer, became editor. The "Register" is one of the oldest and best known local papers in the State. In May, 1901, it began issue as a daily.

WABASH REPUBLICAN.—W. D. Latshaw, in 1840, published the "Wabash Republican" for about one year.

THE GREENBRIER.—In 1840 a small sheet called the "Greenbrier" was published by J. S. Powers.

THE PLOW BOY was published by Valentine Miller in 1844.

THE WABASH DEMOCRAT was founded by W. E. Latshaw in 1844, and continued for two years, when it was sold to Brooks & Preston and promptly discontinued. In 1860, a new outfit was purchased, the old name revived and Hon. Jacob Zimmerman employed as editor, who proved to be a very capable writer. Zimmerman was succeeded by George W. Besore, who was killed by Hiram Stanton in a political duel which he had provoked by the utterance of disloyal sentiments in 1863.

The unfortunate Besore was succeeded by John T. Costello, who got out an excellent paper. The "Democrat" was published until 1878, when it collapsed under the strain of many vicissitudes.

THE TEMPERANCE LEADER, launched in 1878, on the crest of the "Blue Ribbon Movement," by Grossman & Scafer, was a monthly publication and had a glorious but brief career.

THE PILOT, another temperance paper, was established by Rev. W. E. Willey, in 1892, and ran an earnest and aggressive career of about six months.

MT. CARMEL REPUBLICAN.—This able and reliable journal was established in 1878 by Richard Brown and his father. Being unable to compete with the popularity and strength of the "Register," they sold the plant to J. F. Wilman, who was a brother-in-law of the resourceful and vigorous editor of the "Register." Wilman refitted the office and published the paper until January 11, 1883, when it was sold to Thomas L. Joy, who steadily improved and developed the value and influence of the paper and demonstrated that it was possible for a Republican newspaper to exist and prosper in Wabash County. Mr. D. E. Keen purchased the paper from T. L. Joy, April 15, 1888, and on September 4, 1890, Mr. Keen commenced the issue of a daily edition, this being the first daily paper published in the county.

During the twenty-two years which Mr. Keen has been the sole proprietor and editor of the "Mt. Carmel Republican," he has assiduously devoted his time and talents to the ambitious purpose of making it a reliable, progressive and influential organ, and with such admirable success as to make his paper a solid public and political force. Mr. Keen is a clear, versatile and fearless writer, an excellent manager, progressive and unswerving in the maintenance of his convictions, and the utterances of the "Republican" bear the impress of his serious thought and stable character.

HAVILL'S EVERY MORNING.—Orra F. Havill established and published "Havill's Every Morning," in February, 1897. The editor boldly announced its commendable object to be, the exposure of official corruption and dishonesty and rascality in general. Mr. Havill had the benefit of a sensational career, which he insisted peculiarly fitted him for the militant and self-sacrificing career upon which he was about to enter. He was a facile, nervous and graphic writer, and possessed a wonderful mastery of current slang. He had rare gifts for journalism, especially as a head-line writer, and, could he have controlled his passion for personal controversies, he would doubtless have had a brilliantly successful career.

From the first his paper was filled with sensational and startling matter, calculated to arouse fierce resentment. Prosecutions, collisions and bloodshed were constantly expected as the natural sequence of its grave charges. Despite these threatening foreshadowings the publication gained a large circulation for a time. Many applauded, what they believed to be its bold and worthy purpose, while others denounced it as a menace to peace and good order.

Its untempered and reckless career soon involved its headlong editor in a multitude of troubles. As a result of these disastrous consequences, the paper, after a stormy and tempestuous career of two years was discontinued. The publication of "Havill's Every Morning" was a startling episode in Southern Illinois Journalism that will long be remembered.

Patriotism is defined as a love of country. It has ever been esteemed one of the noblest of human virtues, and those who, unhappily, may prove themselves unresponsive to its thrilling impulses, are denounced as base and degraded ingrates. It springs from the love of home, family and friends. It is a sentiment so universal that it stirs a kindred sentiment

"From Greenland's icy mountains, From India's coral strand," and no country has more to incite this hallowed sentiment than America, for it is a land of glorious memories.

The war record of Illinois should inspire her people with a deep sense of affection and just pride for her heroes who have struggled on so many sanguinary fields for the honor of their country.

In the Civil War our soldiers were heroically conspicuous in all the great battles and victories of the West, particularly at Ft. Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Perryville, Stone River, Vicksburg, Chickamauga, Chattanooga and in the great "March to the Sea." Of her patriotic sons 5,874 went down amid the crash and slaughter of battles, to rise no more, except in fancy's grand review of the nation's heroic dead; 4,020 died of wounds received on bloody fields; and that fell destroyer of armies, disease, swept 22,786 into untimely graves, and various causes incident to their loyal service exacted an additional sacrifice of 2,154, making the appalling atonement for the redemption and regeneration of the Republic of 34,834 lives offered up by Illinois and drawn from the youth and flower of our citizenship. In this sacrifice Wabash County bore a noble part, as she has in all the nation's struggles since her organization.

BLACK HAWK WAR.—Many men from Wabash County served in the Black Hawk War and believing their numerous descendants would be interested in knowing who they were, we insert their names:

MEXICAN WAR.—In the war with Mexico Illinois furnished four full regiments, nearly all of whom were from the southern portion of the State and distinguished themselves by exceptional bravery. At the desperate battle of Buena Vista the First and Second Regiments were under the eye of Gen. Taylor, who, in his report of the battle, bestowed upon them the very highest praise for spirit and gallantry, while the Third and Fourth Illinois did heroic service at Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, and the City of Mexico. In all these conflicts, marches and campaigns Wabash County had brave and fearless sons under the commands of Hardin, Bissell, Forman and Baker. We have unfortunately been unable to secure the names of soldiers from Wabash County who participated in that conflict, and it is our impression that Rev. V. D. Lingenfelter is the only one of their number who still survives.

CIVIL WAR.—Wabash County's part in the Civil War is largely in common with that of her neighboring counties, and constitutes a history of valor and self-sacrificing devotion of which her people are truly proud. In 1860 her population was only 7,233, and out of this number there were enrolled 939 men (or nearly 13 per cent of the whole population) who took part in that war. The following is a list of regiments of which volunteers from Wabash County formed a part:

EIGHTEENTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY.—This Regiment was organized at Anna, Ill., and mustered into the State service by Capt. L. S. Grant. It suffered severely at Ft. Donelson and Shiloh. It was mustered out December 16, 1865, at Little Rock, Ark., Company G contained eight and Company C one man from Wabash County. These were the first soldiers of the county to enlist in the service during that struggle.

TWENTY-SIXTH ILLINOIS INFANTRY.—Company H of this regiment contained ten men from Wabash County.

THIRTIETH INFANTRY.—Company B of this regiment was principally recruited in Wabash County, as was also Company I of the Thirty-second Infantry, which was organized and commanded by Col. John Logan. This splendid regiment saw a prodigious amount of service and was in nearly every important battle in the West, from Shiloh to Vicksburg, in the Georgia Campaign, Sherman's March to the Sea and through the Carolinas, having traveled eleven thousand miles during the war. It was mustered out September 16, 1865, at Ft. Leavenworth, Kans.

FORTIETH ILLINOIS INFANTRY.—Company I of this regiment was raised in Wabash County and Company E contained a number of men from the county.

The Captains of Company I were Abraham Hummacker, resigned March 14, 1863; Samuel B. Lingenfelter, term expired December 28, 1864; and Frank W. Havill, detached and mustered out of regiment. The regiment was organized by Col. Stephen G. Hicks, was mustered into service August 10, 1861, and re-enlisted January 1, 1864. It fought at Shiloh, Holly Springs, Missionary Ridge, participated in the battles around Atlanta and marched to the Sea. It was mustered out at Louisville, July 24, 1865, after rendering the cause of the Union superb service.

FORTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY.—This intrepid regiment had a larger representation from Wabash County than any other. It was organized in September, 1861, by Col. Isham N. Haynie, Lieut. Col. John W. Ingersoll. Major Edward Adams. Company G was recruited in Wabash County and almost wholly from Mt. Carmel. Its Captains were William W. Beall, George M. Keneipp, and Isaac R. Carlton. Its First Lieutenant, Theodore S. Bowers, was promoted to the Staff of Gen. Grant. The regiment had a long and brilliant record and bore a gallant part in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Missionary Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain and Sandstown, and was engaged in all the conflicts leading up to the capture of Atlanta. It marched with Sherman to the Sea, was in the siege of Savannah, at South Edisto and on the march through the Carolinas, closed its active campaign at Bentonville and was mustered out at Little Rock, Ark., August 15, 1865. The heroic achievements of this dauntless regiment will always be remembered by our people with patriotic pride.

FIFTY-SIXTH REGIMENT.—Company F of this regiment had a large enrollment from Wabash County. Six of them were lost on the ill-fated steamer Gen. Lyon and two killed at Vicksburg.

SIXTY-SECOND INFANTRY.—Company A of this regiment contained many soldiers from Wabash County, as also did Company K of the Sixty-Fourth, known as the "First Battalion of the Yates Sharp Shooters." In the Sixty-sixth and Eighty-seventh Regiments, Companies I and H, respectively of these regiments, were made up in part by enlistments from Wabash County.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTEENTH INFANTRY.—This regiment was organized at Camp Butler, September 19, 1862, and ordered into the field in October following and became a part of the command of Gen. A. J. Smith. Company C was recruited in Wabash County and its Captain was David Williams. It distinguished itself for valor at Chickamauga, Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge. It was with Sherman on the Atlanta Campaign and took a gallant part in the campaign which destroyed Bragg's Army. It was mustered out July 11, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH INFANTRY.—Company H of this regiment was largely recruited from Wabash County. It was organized October 25, 1862, by Col. Nathaniel Niles, and mustered out at New Orleans August 15, 1865.

Wabash County was represented in eighteen regiments of infantry and two of cavalry in our own State, besides many of her patriotic sons enlisted and performed valiant service in Indiana and Missouri regiments.

We have made special mention of the Fortieth, Forty-eighth and One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiments, because they contained a much larger representation from Wabash County than any other regiments, and are therefore, most closely connected with her war history. The names of the many war heroes of our county are far too numerous to be here enrolled, and we can only present those war facts that come within our more immediate range.

In August, 1906, the grateful and patriotic citizens of Wabash County, as a memorial in honor of her heroic dead, erected a handsome and stately monument, which was dedicated with solemn and befitting ceremony, the dedicatory address being most appropriately delivered by Gov. Richard Yates, son of Illinois' great War Governor, who was one of the central figures of that heroic day.

WAR WITH SPAIN.—When war was declared between the United States and Spain, in April, 1898, following the destruction of the battleship Maine, the old time war spirit flamed up everywhere in the United States, and Illinois responded with patriotic ardor. The State furnished nine regiments, one of which (the Ninth) was colored.

The Ninth Regiment, organized in "Egypt" by Col. James R. Campbell, and of Company G of this regiment—consisting of 107 men—all but about fifteen were from Wabash County. The Company left Mt. Carmel June 29, 1898, for Camp Tanner, at Springfield, and was mustered into the service on July 8th. From Springfield the regiment went to Camp Cuba Libre, at Jacksonville, Fla., afterward to Savannah and in January, 1899, was transferred to Cuba, where it remained in service several months. The regiment was mustered out at Huntsville, Ala., and Company G returned to Mt. Carmel on May 22, 1899.

To that great sacramental host, which Illinois has laid upon the altar of the Republic in the conflicts of war, Wabash County has contributed a noble part.

CHAPTER XI.

PRECINCT HISTORY.

LIST OF PRESENT PRECINCTS IN WABASH COUNTY—MT. CARMEL, BELLMONT, COFFEE, COMPTON, FRIENDSVILLE, LANCASTER, LICK PRAIRIE AND WABASH—INDIVIDUAL SKETCHES OF PRECINCTS
 —EARLY AND NOTED SETTLERS—IMPORTANT LOCAL EVENTS.

Wabash County having never adopted township organization, its local affairs are administered by a Board of County Commissioners elected by popular vote of the whole county. The geographical subdivisions of the county remain under the name of Precincts, instead of Townships, of which there are eight in Wabash County. In the following chapter the histories of the several precincts are treated separately in alphabetical order, except as to Mt. Carmel Precinct, which leads the list.

MT. CARMEL PRECINCT.

Mt. Carmel Precinct, extending along the Wabash River, is bounded on the north by the Base Line, east by the Wabash River, west by Bellmont and Lick Prairie Precincts and south by Coffee Precinct. Its surface in general, conforms to that of the rest of the county. Its first known settler was a native of Germany by the name (evidently anglicized) of Enoch Great-house, who, in 1803, settled where the City of Mt. Carmel now stands. He sold his lands to Messrs. Hinde and McDowell, who founded the town of Mt. Carmel. He then removed to the point where old Centreville was subsequently located, and there he died, as it is claimed, at the great age of 110 years. He has numerous descendants still residing in the precinct. William McIntosh settled in the precinct in 1814 and was the proprietor of what was known as the "McIntosh Reserve." He built a large house on the river at the Grand Rapids, and lived in great style, for his day and locality. He was a bachelor, but had a colored woman for a servant, who is said to have blessed him with a numerous progeny.

Other early settlers besides those mentioned in foregoing chapters, were Hiram Bell of Virginia, who became very prominent in public life and was Circuit Clerk of Wabash County for thirty-six successive years. Among others of his children were the late James H. and Judge Robert Bell, of Mt. Carmel. About this time came Joshua and James Beall, and a little later the Ingersolls, Ulms, Townsends, Simonds, Goulds, and Russells, all of whom have descendants living in the county. These were followed by Beauchamp Harvey, John Tilton, Samuel and Robert Rigg, James M. Sharp, Isaac Hoskinson and Isaac N. Jaquess, whose names and families became well known.

The first physicians in the precinct were: Drs. Renben Baker, Allison, Thrall and Fithian.

John Marshall, on October 24, 1814, entered the northwest quarter of fractional Section 28, which was the first land entry made in the precinct. The population of the precinct is approximately 8,000, or probably nearly one-half that of the whole county.

BELLMONT PRECINCT.

This precinct was called Bompas until September, 1881, when it received its present name. The name Bompas, taken from Bompas Creek on its western boundary, is a French word, meaning good bay. The early French boatmen on the Wabash, are said to have frequently sought shelter in its favorable cove or inlet, from storms and floating ice, and were accustomed to ascend it as far as Richland County, in their keel-boats, plying the fur trade with the Indians. Until within recent years it was classed as a navigable stream.

The precinct is bounded on the north by Lick Prairie Precinct, on the east by Coffee and Bellmont Precincts, on the south by Compton and Coffee Precincts, and on the west by the Bompas Creek, which separates it from Edwards County. The chief water course in the precinct is Fordyce Creek, which flows into the Bompas. The farms are well tiled and drained, but the western part is subject to overflow from the Fordyce and Bompas Creeks. The soil is rich and there remains some small areas of good timbered lands. It was settled in 1816 by Jacob Arnold, Staley McClure, and Eli Reid. Arnold gained much notoriety as a hunter and is said to have killed a great number of bear and deer along the Bompas, where game is said to have been so wonderfully plentiful that bruin, impudently robbed the farmers' pig pens, the deer ate at his straw-stack and wild turkeys fed on scraps shaken from the table cloth. Such an abundance of delicious meat, so easily procured, was not calculated to inculcate habits of industry and thrift among pioneers. But as the game moved on before the vanguard of civilization, the pioneer was forced either to move with it or wrest a living from the soil.

William Tanquary, William Deputy, and Jonathan Gilkinson came in 1818, all of whom became prominent and have left many descendants. The following year came Samuel and Robert Rigg of Virginia and their family name, with one exception, is now the most numerously represented in the county.

The first school was taught in 1828 by Oliver

Thrall, and William Tanquary was the first Justice of the Peace. Jacob Arnold, the noted hunter, was united in marriage with Rebecca Thompson in 1818, this being the first marriage in the precinct. The first religious services were conducted in the interests of the "New Light" faith by some of the brethren from Coffee Precinct, and the first, regular preacher to locate in the precinct was Rev. Joseph Ballard.

Bellmont is a thriving village of about 750 population located on the line of the Southern Railroad in the south part of the precinct.

COFFEE PRECINCT.

In the early days of river navigation a keel-boat, loaded with coffee, on her passage up the Wabash River, took shelter, over night, in the mouth of what is now known as Coffee Creek, and when morning dawned, the boat was found sunken in the creek and the cargo of coffee lost. From this incident the creek took its name, and the precinct was named after the creek. The precinct is bounded on the north by Mt. Carmel and Bellmont Precincts, on the west by Compton Precinct and on the east and south by the Wabash River. It is exceedingly fertile, well drained and, until recent years, was finely timbered. Its chief water courses are Coffee and Village Creeks, the latter named from the fact that a village of the Piankishaw Indians was located on its banks. Coffee Island, opposite Rochester, received its name from the creek of the same name. The bottom lands formerly produced a luxuriant growth of cane.

The early settlement of Coffee Precinct is of unusual interest and filled with several stirring events and exciting incidents. Its first settlers were the Tougas or Lovelette, brothers, who came in the year 1800 and located where Rochester now stands. They were bold and adventurous spirits, always ready for "a fight or frolic," and engaged in trapping, hunting and trading with the neighboring Indians. This point afterward became a favorite location for families of French descent and their names are being perpetuated by many worthy descendants in the vicinity. Augustus Lovelette was a man of remarkable prowess and endurance. It is said that he would purchase produce, flat-boat it to New Orleans and walk the entire distance home, often encountering hazardous experiences and severe privations. John Degan followed the Lovelettes, coming from Detroit with his family, consisting of his wife, two sons and a step-son, Frank Burway. This was the first white family to live in Wabash County. These early settlers were constantly threatened and menaced by the bloodthirsty Piankishaws, Two young Frenchmen, Joseph Pichinaut and Joseph Burway, who had joined the little settlement, were killed by the Indians in 1815, while in quest of their horses, in the bottoms, surrounding Baird's pond. The wounds on Pichinaut's mutilated body plainly showed he had been killed with a tomahawk, and Burway's body was riddled with bullets. Both had been scalped. Within a few days after the fight the bodies of five Indians were found, lying within what must have been the range of Burway's good rifle. The bodies of the unfortunate Frenchmen and their murderous foes were buried not far apart on the old Baird farm, now owned by Dr. H. R. Lovelette.

In a preceding chapter an account has been given of the Cannon massacre which occurred in the same locality. The captives secured and borne away by the Indians, at the time of this outrage, were afterward ransomed by Gen. Harrison in exchange for seven ponies, to which their chief, Kibega, had taken a great fancy.

The settlement known as Campbell's landing on Section 11, S., T. 2 S., R. 14 W., was made, August 17, 1810, by James Campbell. He had come from Kentucky, with his wife and seven children and thirteen slaves. He was a thrifty farmer in Kentucky, but had become thoroughly convinced that human slavery was wholly indefensible, and desired to remove beyond the pale of its baneful influence, and for that reason sought a home on the wild frontier. Immediately upon his arrival he called his faithful and devoted slaves about him and liberated them. The story of his philanthropic deed having reached his former home in Kentucky, a band of ruffians, or "Nigger stealers," concocted the nefarious plot of arresting the manumitted bondsmen and reselling them into slavery, as a pecuniary adventure, and they succeeded in kidnapping eleven of the negroes and sold them back into slavery. Mr. Campbell was a man of enterprise and soon established a ferry, which became the crossing point for all travel and freight across the river. On several occasions the settlers of Campbell's Landing were compelled to flee across the river in order to find protection from the hostile savages.

The Indian population in this vicinity must have been unusually dense—in fact, the whole region, because of its water courses, affording excellent opportunities for the catching of fish and wild fowl; the bottom lands covered during almost the entire winter with nutritious cane upon which the deer browsed; the stately forests filled with fur-bearing game and yielding an abundance of edible mast for the wild game, together with the beautiful bluffs skirting the banks of the great Wabash River, and affording favorite "watch towers" for enemies and noble eminences for the burial of the dead—all these served to make this locality an ideal home for the redman. The village at Village Bend must have had a large Indian population, as old pioneers stated that they had witnessed the gathering of as many as 350 Indians at a time under the great elm trees, that once flourished where Rochester now stands.

McCleary's Bluffs, Brewer Hill and other points have been found wonderfully rich in prehistoric and Indian relics. In 1880 large quantities of the most perfect specimens of pottery were found on the bluffs, besides many other relics, the most valuable being a copper hatchet. The old Brewer fields must have yielded up as fine Indian arrows, stone axes and vases as can be seen in the Smithsonian Institute, to which place the late Dr. J. Schneck sent some of the choicest specimens. Excavations have also revealed numerous burial places, in which, judging from the many skeletons found, large numbers of Indians must have been interred.

The Piankishaws were a tribe of the Algonquin family, originally were a part of the Miamis and came to Illinois with the latter tribe. They never numbered over a thousand. The Government removed them to the Indian Territory in the southwest in 1867, and in 1890 there were said to be but three survivors of this once bold and roving tribe. They had previously removed from Piankishaw Bend about 1817, and their going was a happy and composing event for the anxious and perturbed settlers.

John McCleary settled on McCleary's bluff in 1817, having walked all the way from Dayton, Ohio. Soon after he was joined by his family and resided on the bluff the remainder of his life, and he and his wife lie buried together, on the beautiful heights whereon, in youth, they built a home in the lone wilderness.

Daniel Keen, a brawny, fearless man, came in 1819, and his cabin was used as a sanctuary in the community where the gospel was first preached, and convicted sinners had the "jirks." About this time the "New Lights" invaded the neighborhood and organized a society and did much successful proselyting.

William Townsend, a bachelor and Methodist exhorter, opened and taught a school, in the log house of a benevolent neighbor.

The first Catholic Church built in the county was erected in 1842 on Brewer Hill, now on the farm of Theodore G. Risley, midway between Rochester and Keensburg. The name of the church was St. Rose. It was a fair-sized brick structure and Catholics came from a great distance to it to worship and were ministered to by priests usually sent from Vincennes. Most of the congregation consisted of people of French descent. In 1868, its membership had so declined, that the organization was abandoned and the building sold and removed, and only portions of its foundation and the beautiful little cemetery beneath the great oaks that grow thereby, mark the spot where once stood the humble fane of devout pioneers. Keensburg, a village and station on the line of the "Big Four" Railroad, has a population of about 500.

COMPTON PRECINCT.

This precinct for many years was a part of Coffee Precinct, but was, for a time, detached and known as Keensburg. On July 15, 1899, the Board of County Commissioners organized it under the name of Compton Precinct. It is named after the Compton family who were among its early settlers, and have been prominent in county history.

The sketch of Coffee Precinct embraces the history of Compton also, as they were parts of the same precinct for three-quarters of a century.

FRIENDSVILLE PRECINCT.

This precinct is bounded on the north by Lancaster Precinct and Lawrence County, on the east by Wabash Precinct, on the south by Mt. Carmel, and on the west by Lick Prairie and Lancaster Precincts. It is generally of level surface diversified by timber and prairie lands, the east part being fertile and productive. Crawfish Creek is its important source of drainage. The great number of "salt licks" within its boundary indicate that it must once have been a favorite locality for buffalo, elk and deer. One of these licks on the old McNair farm, covered more than an acre of ground, and some of the earliest settlers claimed to have seen buffalo, on one or two occasions, at this great lick. At this time the woods were filled with bear, deer and wolves. Panthers were also frequently seen, and in 1838 Hezekiah Clark killed one of these about 2½ miles north of Friendsville, which was the last ever seen in the county. Wolves "fairly swarmed" around the settlement, the black species being especially troublesome and vicious. Several settlers—among others, Jere Wood and Jasper Demins, the latter an emancipated slave—on one occasion were attacked while hunting at night, and seriously injured. As was the habit of these ravenous beasts before leaving a locality, which had long been their haunting place, they howled so hideously for several nights as to keep the whole settlement awake, then suddenly disappeared forever.

The Indians, dependent—as they were before the advent of the whites, who introduced the use of fire-arms among them—upon the bow and arrow as a means of warfare, and for the procuring of game for food, were compelled to find localities where flint, jasper and other kinds of stone could be found, of sufficient hardness to make arrows and "arrow-heads," and such places have become discoverable from the fragments of flint or chips left by the arrow makers of the tribes. One of these places undoubtedly was a locality on Crawfish Creek, about three and one-half miles southeast of Friendsville, as the surrounding conditions clearly indicate that the flint or Jasper relics found in the rocky bank of the creek must be the "chips" left by Indian arrow makers.

John Wood was the first settler in Friendsville Precinct, coming from Kentucky in 1809. He is said to have planted the first apple orchard in the county, and for that reason the fruit of his orchard was called the "Woods apple," and until recent years was grown in all parts of the county. William Barney, after whom Barney's Prairie and Fort Barney were named, came from New York in 1808 and settled on the present site of Friendsville. A little east, Ransom Higgins also built a fort which he named Fort Higgins. The region at this time was occupied by a small band of hostile Shawnee Indians, and while they frequently frightened the settlers, they committed no depredations.

The first burial to take place in the Friendsville cemetery was that of the boy, Willis Higgins, a lad thirteen years of age, who was accidentally shot by an inmate of Fort Barney named Preston, who ran his steed to death on the way to Vincennes to procure a surgeon to dress the wound of the dying boy. The McNair family, one of the most prominent that ever lived in the precinct, came from New York in 1815. Gervaise Hazelton, an extensive land owner, and in honor of whom Hazelton, Indiana, was named, and Henry Utter, two men of controlling influence in the early history of Edwards and Wabash Counties, came to the precinct about 1814. Robert Bell, the only Revolutionary soldier positively known to have lived and been buried in the county, came to the precinct from Rockbridge County, Va., in 1815. He was the father of Hiram Bell and the grandfather of Judge Robert Bell. Of all the pioneers who came to Wabash County, none were so prominent and conspicuous or had such an important or transitional career, as Dr. Ezra Baker, Jr., who was raised in Philadelphia. He was wealthy, well educated, positively handsome in appearance, generous, of elegant address, and ambitious to make a name in the world. He came to the precinct in 1820, soon located on a farm near Cabbage Corners, built a fine brick house, had a store and put up a castor-oil mill. He was the chief promoter of old Centreville and founded Rochester, which he boomed so successfully that for a time it surpassed Mt. Carmel. He built the largest mill and owned the best steamboat in the country. He also founded Bennington in Edwards County. In after years, reckless speculation dissipated his splendid fortune, domestic discord shattered his dreams of happiness, convivial excesses undermined his health, and his troubled days were closed in that dread abode of Charity, the almshouse. But few new countries have ever been settled by such an intelligent and progressive class of pioneers as was the Precinct of Friendsville.

Friendsville village has a population of three to four hundred, while Linn is a small hamlet in the northern part of the precinct.

LANCASTER PRECINCT.

Lancaster was not named after the, "time honored Lancaster," of King Richard II, but from the city of that name in Pennsylvania, whence the largest part of its population, being of German descent, had immigrated to this locality. It is bounded on the north by Lawrence County, on the east by Friendsville Precinct, on the south by Lick Prairie, on the west by Edwards County. Some portions of the surface are somewhat hilly and the remainder level and fairly well timbered. Its water courses are the Jordan and Little Bonpas Creeks, Sandstone, of fair building quality, is found in places.

In 1814 a number of settlers came, and among them being William Jordan of Kentucky, who put up a distillery and made corn whisky. Tarleton Borin came in 1815, and afterward became a prominent citizen.

In the year 1814 many settlers came from the East. A little colony consisting of the ancestors of the Higgins, Utter, Brines, Harrison, Smith and Couch families, came from Alleghany County New York. They made the long journey in a family boat from the Alleghany River to Old Palmyra, where they resided for a time, and then removed to Lancaster Precinct. The first school building was erected in 1822, where a man named Fox taught school. Rev. Rote came out from Pennsylvania in 1820 and organized a New Light church. It is said that the ten-year-old boy that was captured by the Indians with the Cannon family, was taken by them on their departure for the northwest, as far as Lancaster, near where they encamped for the night, and was there killed and buried and some of the old settlers marked what they believed to be the grave of the murdered child; at least the boy was not found with the Indians at the time of the other Cannon captives were ransomed by Gen. Harrison, on the Little Wabash, near where Clay City now stands. Mr. John Higgins, who died recently, had a vivid recollection of being pursued, when a boy, by the Indians who still lived but a few miles west of where Lancaster now stands. Rosander Smith, who came to the Precinct from New York in 1822, his parents first stopping at old Palmyra several years, is still living near Lancaster, a village in the central part of the precinct.

LICK PRAIRIE PRECINCT.

Lick Prairie was so named on account of the many "Deer Licks" found there by the early settlers. It is the smallest precinct in the county, both in area and in population. It is bounded on the north by Lancaster Precinct, on the east by Friendsville and Mt. Carmel, on the south by Bellmont, and on the west by Edwards County, and is drained by the Big Bonpas, and Fordyce creeks. The surface is rolling in the northeast, and level in the south and west, and the black lands along the Bonpas are very productive. Its first settler was Franklin Gard, but the most prominent of its pioneers was the well known Seth Gard, whom we have already had frequent occasion to mention with honor. In 1814 Jacob Claypole settled on the northwest quarter of Section 4, and became quite prominent.

Samuel Mundy, his wife and sons, Griffith and William, came from New York in 1819. Mr. Mundy was a member of the Legislature, while the capital was at Vandalia, and was afterward elected Circuit Clerk. William Ulm and James Wiley were very early and influential settlers. Illustrative of the hardihood of the pioneers, we relate a story told by John Moore, a New Light minister from Virginia. The Rev. Moore said that, "in the winter of 1825, while returning from a preaching tour, he saw Joseph Preston and Harrison Ingram skating, barefooted on the ice of the Bonpas, with pieces of clapboard strapped to their feet, having walked five miles through six inches of snow in their naked feet." This story, if told by any one else than a clergyman, would, of course, be regarded as too wholly incredible to be related in this veracious history.

William Townsend, who taught the first school in Coffee Precinct, also taught the first school in Lick Prairie, in a log building with puncheon floor, which was also used for a church, and in which, as a Methodist divine, he preached the gospel to the early settlers. Townsend was a man of good education, amiable disposition and sincerely devoted to the causes of education and religion and was well beloved by all.

Gards Point was named after the venerated Seth Gard and Cabbage Corner after Justice Gard's cabbage patch.

On August 1, 1814, James Claypole made the first land entry in the precinct.

WABASH PRECINCT.

Wabash Precinct was the first portion of Wabash County to be settled by Americans, the French having preceded them by two years at Rochester. It is bounded on the north by Lawrence County, on the east and southeast by the Wabash River, its southwest corner touching Mt. Carmel Precinct, and on the west by Friendsville Precinct. Its chief drainage is furnished by Raccoon and Crawfish Creeks.

The land is generally rolling, exceedingly fertile and was formerly covered with a magnificent growth of excellent timber. There is not a better wheat growing section in Illinois and but few farming localities so well improved.

The first settlers found here every variety of game known to the Wabash Valley, in boundless abundance. They were, however, sorely troubled by hostile Indians who, for a time, were said to be under the influence of the younger Tecumseh, and not the least of their troubles was the great number of rattlesnakes that infested the lands near the river. Dens of them, containing astonishing numbers, were destroyed and none have been seen for years.

A few lone monarchs of the noble sugar-tree groves that grandly crowned the rich uplands in the eastern portion of the precinct, still survive in stately majesty, as if in protest against the civilized vandalism of man.

Joshua Jordan and Levi Compton settled on the Wabash River in 1802; later they moved to the northwest quarter of Section 12 and in 1810 built Fort Compton, which was an extensive affair for those days, and is said to have been large enough to accommodate one hundred families. Compton was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818, and later a Representative in the First General Assembly from Edwards County, which then included what is now Wabash County.

There is a tradition that Jordan, who was Compton's brother-in-law, and who was a tenant of George Washington, and with him at Braddock's defeat, shot and killed Gen. Braddock, to avenge the insult he had given Washington just before the battle commenced. The probability is that the tradition originated in Jordan's imagination, as Gen. Braddock had four horses shot under him and had mounted the fifth when slain.

John Stilwell and sons came from New Jersey in 1804, after a brief sojourn in Kentucky. He also built a fort. He was a man of considerable wealth and acquired a vast body of fine land. He was a very eccentric character and of sarcastic temper. The McIntoshes, Leeks, Armstrongs and Ramseys were early and desirable settlers, whose descendants have been well known in the county. The first school was taught in Fort Compton by Renben Fox.

BIG FOUR DEPOT AND Y. M. C. A., MT. CARMEL

CITY HALL, MT. CARMEL

The first important industry established in the county was a flouring mill, built by Moses Bedell on the northwest quarter of Section 30. It was built of logs, did a considerable business and was in operation for about sixteen years.

The Fox graveyard, long since neglected and forgotten, holds the dust of Jarvis Dale, who erected the first house in Old Palmyra; of Joseph Haniford, the pioneer schoolmaster and Abner Armstrong, the first sheriff of Edwards County.

Allendale, a railway station on the "Big Four" Railroad, and has a population of about 500.

In these days of self-worship and selfish competition, but few people have sufficient veneration for the deeds and good names of their ancestors, to study their history or preserve their memory from oblivion. The privations endured, the arduous struggles encountered and the labors accomplished by the pioneers of Wabash Precinct are worthy of commendation and of perpetuation in the memory of later generations.

CHAPTER XII.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

CITY OF MT. CARMEL—ITS FOUNDERS AND THEIR PLANS FOR ESTABLISHING AN IDEAL CITY—ARTICLE OF INCORPORATION—FIRST HOUSES AND FIRST BUSINESS ENTERPRISES—LATER DEVELOPMENT—A BOOMING ADVERTISEMENT—SOME CALAMITOUS EVENTS—THE OLD TOWN OF ROCHESTER—ITS EARLY PROSPERITY AND FINAL COLLAPSE—VILLAGES OF LATER DAYS—KEENSBURG, COWLING, BELLMONT, LANCASTER, FRIENDSVILLE, ALLENDALE AND PATTON.

The City of Mt. Carmel was founded in 1817 and already the celebration of the completion of its first centenary is contemplated. Its founders were Rev. Thomas S. Hinde and William McDowell, whose purpose was to build a town that should be governed by a code of laws based upon their particular views of morality. The location was then in the "Far West." Its proprietors believed that the navigation facilities, afforded by its three rivers, would soon develop it into an important commercial city, and that its beautiful situation on the prominent bluffs of the Wabash River would render it an exceptionally healthy and desirable place of residence. Their first thought was to name their town "Three Rivers," on account of the three rivers, near whose junction it was situated, but being profoundly orthodox in their religious views, the bluffs reminded them of the place where Elijah rendered up his bloody sacrifice to Deity, and being at once overcome with pious emotions, they adopted the biblical name of Mt. Carmel. Between the river and the bluffs a beautiful commons of several hundred acres intervened which, thanks to the forethought and liberality of its founders, was reserved to the city. The actual site was selected, surveyed and platted in 1818, the town was laid out on an extensive scale, and lots were donated to immigrants, who would build on them within a prescribed period. In September of the same year articles of association for the government of the town were drafted. They provided for the erection of a seminary and the founding of a bank. Among other inhibitions contained in Article 18, of the Association, it was provided that "No theatre or playhouse should ever be built within the bounds of the city," profane swearing and Sabbath breaking were made grave offenses, the offender, upon conviction, being disfranchised and disqualified for holding any position of honor or trust for a term of three years. These enactments were very aptly designated "blue laws." Rev. Mr. Hinde was reared in Kentucky and moved to Ohio, where he served several terms in the Legislature of that state. He was a man of good education and philanthropic impulses, and did much good in the world. He died at Mt. Carmel in 1846.

Soon after Hinde and McDowell left Chillicothe, Ohio, to make a settlement on the Wabash, they were joined by the Rev. William Beauchamp, who surveyed and platted the town. Rev. Beauchamp was a celebrated Methodist preacher, an able writer and, at one time, lacked but a single vote of election to the office of bishop. The splendid Methodist church at Mt. Carmel is named in memory of this devoted man. Francis Dixon is said to have constructed the first house in the town in 1818. This was located in the alley between Third and Fourth Streets, and was a double log cabin of commodious dimensions. Mr. Dixon resided in one end and sold goods in the other, thus conferring on the proprietor the distinction of being the first actual resident and storekeeper in Mt. Carmel. Scoby Stewart built the first frame house, which stood on Fifth Street, between Main and Cherry Streets.

Mt. Carmel's first industry was a foundry, erected by Joseph L. Wilson, in 1823. It was located on the lot where now stands the old brick house in which the late Gilbert Turner lived for many years. Many of our people have seen "The Old Red Tavern" that stood on Mulberry Street, between Fifth and Sixth Streets. It was the first tavern built in Mt. Carmel and was erected by Reuben Baker in 1819.

It is claimed, upon what appears to be authentic information, that the first brick church erected in Illinois was built in Mt. Carmel in 1824, by the Methodist Episcopal denomination and our investigation convinces us that the claim is well established. It stood at the corner of Fourth and Mulberry Streets. The building ultimately fell into the hands of John Baumgartner, who impiously converted it into a brewery, but the brewer's art did not flourish within its sacred walls, and it later became a dwelling and, in 1877, was destroyed by the cyclone. The first regular licensed minister to preach in Mt. Carmel, was the Rev. Charles Slocumb.

A flouring mill was constructed by Russell & Stewart in 1822, and the same year John Bunting, a negro, erected a tan-yard. Bunting soon sold his tan-yard and moved to Liberia, Africa.

Robert Ballentine established the first ferry across the river in 1817, and J. L. Wilson, an enterprising man, put in operation a steam flour-mill as early as 1833. The first school house was built on the site of the home of Charles W. Russell in 1823. In 1836 there were not a dozen houses east of Mulberry Street, and nearly all were built of logs.

The town was incorporated as a village in 1825, and as a city in 1865. Mt. Carmel, in its early days, was regarded as a town of great promise and was widely advertised by those who endeavored to promote its growth. For the purpose of enabling the reader to appreciate the enterprise, courage and energy of the founders of Mt. Carmel, in their ambitious efforts to make it a great manufacturing city, even in that remote pioneer day, we copy a portion of a pretentious circular, printed by the "Mereury," of Leeds, England, in 1822, which may be found in the valuable and highly interesting scrap-book, kept by the late Mrs. Mary Turner, of Mt. Carmel, an intelligent and appreciative woman, and we commend it as a document of rare interest to students of Mt. Carmel pioneer history:

"A Most Advantageous Opportunity for the Profitable Employment of Capital, and the Successful Direction of Industry, is Offered in the Beautiful and Thriving Town of Mount Carmel, on the Great Wabash River, in the United States of America.

"The states of Illinois and Indiana, in the former of which Mount Carmel is situated, form one of the richest countries in the world, possessing all the elements of agricultural and manufacturing prosperity, and advancing in population and wealth with a rapidity almost unparalleled.

"Forming part of the powerful and free Republic of the United States, they are the Government of the poor.

"The richness of the soil, the cheapness of land, the great natural advantages of the country for the growth of every kind of produce, as well as for manufactures, are continually attracting settlers from the Eastern States of America, as well as from Europe; so that many towns have now sprung up there, which are daily increasing in population and all the comforts of civilized life.

"It is believed that there is no country where the farmer thrives more rapidly, where the store-keeper sells his goods at a higher profit, or where capital laid out in improvements yields a larger and quicker return.

"The Great Wabash River is one of those noble streams which flow through the centre of America, and after fertilizing an extensive tract of country, empty themselves into the still larger rivers, the Ohio and Mississippi. It enjoys the advantage of steam navigation, by means of which it has an internal communication of several thousand miles, from above Pittsburg, in Pennsylvania to New Orleans and the Gulf of Mexico.

"On the banks of the Great Wabash River are prairies, or natural meadows, of considerable extent and of the highest fertility, with an inexhaustible abundance of fine timber and grounds sufficiently elevated to form beautiful and healthful situations for towns.

"The soil and climate are so good that all the productions both of the northern and southern extremities of the American continent come to perfection—Tobacco, wheat, rice, Indian corn, Indigo, Irish and sweet potatoes, rye, barley, oats, hemp, flax, etc., as well as fruits of all kinds, apples, peaches, cherries, pears, etc.

"It is an excellent region for sheep, and the wool is good. Cotton grows finely, and of a staple equal to the Georgia upland cotton.

"The country is healthful for cattle and horses, and hogs are a great article of trade.

"Mr. Hinde is the son of an English gentleman, who was surgeon to General Wolfe at the taking of Quebec, and who received a grant of lands from the government in Virginia. Mr. Hinde is an extensive proprietor of lands in the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. For the satisfaction of the English public he makes known the following testimonials, (of which Mr. Ringrose has the originals,) which he received in the year 1825 from the Hon. Henry Clay, then the Vice-President of the United States, and the Hon. McLean, then Postmaster General of the United States, and now one of the Judges of the Supreme Court:

"Washington, 25th Sept., 1825.

"The bearer hereof, Mr. Thomas S. Hinde, is a citizen of the State of Kentucky, and at present an inhabitant of New Port opposite to Cincinnati. I have known him for many years, during which he has always borne a high character as a man of probity and veracity. He is the proprietor of a considerable landed estate, situated chiefly in the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and I should myself have great confidence in his faithful fulfillment of any engagement that he might contract.

"H. CLAY."

"Mr. Hinde has been long known to me, and I take great pleasure in saying that I entirely accord with the above statement.

"JOHN MCLEAN."

"For further particulars concerning the above, written applications may be made, post-paid, to Mr. Joseph Ringrose, Ganton, near Malton, Yorkshire, who will show to applicants plans of the town and district of Mount Carmel, the original instructions and authority given to him by Mr. Hinde, the regulations to be adopted for securing the prosperity, as well as the morality of the town, and the original testimonials which Mr. Hinde has obtained from the Hon. H. Clay and Judge McLean. He will meet the agent of any association at York, Leeds, or any other convenient place, and will give to the agent who may be deputed to go to Illinois to examine the establishment, every information to facilitate his traveling in America. Applicants residing in or near Leeds may see the Articles of Association for the city of Mount Carmel, and plans of the city, at the Leeds Mercury Office."

CALAMITOUS EVENTS.—Mt. Carmel has been visited with several calamitous misfortunes. It has had two disastrous fires and the great flood of 1875 wrought incalculable damage to the surrounding country. The terrible cyclone that struck and prostrated the city, at 4 o'clock, June 4, 1877, was the culminating disaster of its history and one that will always awaken recollections of grief and horror. In all, nineteen lives were lost, seventy-five persons seriously injured, two hundred buildings and houses demolished and six hundred people made homeless. To add to the reign of terror and confusion, fire broke out and swept over the fearful ruins with awe inspiring fury. In the hour of appalling calamity the appeal for help was generously and bravely answered from every direction and in every needed form.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISES, CHURCHES, SOCIETIES, ETC.—Mr. Carmel is now one of the leading manufacturing cities of Southern Illinois, and its many flourishing industries have greatly enhanced its wealth and prosperity. Its population, according to the census of 1910, is 6,934, being more than 46 per cent. of the whole county.

It has two excellent daily newspapers; ten churches, some of which are elegant and costly edifices; seven school buildings, 30 fraternal orders and one scientific society, besides clubs, literary and social organizations. An imposing Public Library Building has just been completed, and plans have been adopted and bids filed for the construction of a Masonic and Odd Fellows temple at an estimated cost of $25,000. Mt. Carmel is a clean and beautiful city, healthful and delightfully located, proud of its history and confident of its future.

The city has four banking institutions, two National and two State, and its banking facilities are second to no other town of its size in the State.

The First National Bank has a capital of $100,000, with the following officers: H. T. Goddard, President; P. J. Kolb, Vice President and K. F. Putnam, Cashier.

The American National has a capital of $75,000. Its present officers are: J. M. Mitchell, President; Theodore G. Risley, Vice President; M. J. White, Cashier, and L. E. McKittrick, Assistant Cashier.

The Mt. Carmel Bank and Trust Company has the following officers: John T. Stansfield, President; Louis Walters, Vice President; John S. Rigg, Cashier, with a capital of $50,000.

The Mt. Carmel Trust and Savings Bank, with a capital of $50,000, has the following officers: Levin Seitz, President; William P. Hubberton, vice President, and D. F. Seibert, Cashier.

ROCHESTER.

The historic old town of Rochester, so often mentioned in these pages—its ancient glory faded, its commerce departed and its buildings gone or dilapidated—tell all too vividly the story of the decline of river navigation, in competition with railway transportation. Here the white man first settled and traded with the Indian. Here at one time came the inhabitants of the now proud cities of Mt. Vernon, Grayville, Mt. Carmel, Princeton and Albion for flour, timber and provisions.

The first plows and chairs ever made in the county were made in Rochester. Steamboats visited it regularly and often single cargoes of $5,000 in value were unloaded for its merchants, and flat-boats by the score were built in Coffee Creek and launched for New Orleans. The late David Harvey, immediately after the ice-gorge had gone out at the Grand Rapids in 1849, counted forty flat-boats passing Rochester in one day for New Orleans. It was the flat-boatman's headquarters from far and near, both for building and equipping their rude crafts.

Dr. Ezra Baker established the town in 1839 and built his famous mills during the same year. His grain and pork-packing business became so extensive that he purchased a steamboat to use in his river trade. Unhappily, in the midst of his abounding prosperity in the flush days of old Rochester, little did Dr. Baker foresee or dream of the cruel fate which was so soon to strip him of the riches and esteem which he had enjoyed and leave him in wretchedness and despair, to seek a mendicant's home and death-bed in the great city of Philadelphia, where he was born an heir to a noble inheritance of wealth and family honor.

The loss of the steamboat trade, which followed the building of the old Cairo & Vincennes Railroad and the founding of Keensburg, was a fatal blow to Rochester and thenceforward it steadily fell into decline and hopeless decay.

KEENSBURG.

Keensburg, situated in Section 8, Township 2, South, Range 13 West, was formally established in April, 1874, by Ornamiel H. Keen, after whom it was named. It is located on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway. It is a flourishing town of about 600 inhabitants and does an immense grain business, being located in an agricultural region of almost unsurpassed fertility and settled by a class of farmers, who drain, till and improve their valuable lands and who dwell in substantial and even elegant homes. The town has two churches, and a good school building, and is rapidly improving.

COWLING.

Cowling is a small but thrifty village, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, four miles south of Keensburg, which was laid out and settled in 1875 by Ex-Sheriff Francis M. Cowling. It handles considerable grain and has several small stores. It was originally laid out in the southeast quarter of Section 18, 2 S., R. 13 W., and called Logan, the buildings of which were moved to their present site and the new town named in honor of Mr. Cowling.

BELLMONT.

The town of Belmont was laid out and the plat filed by Gett Joachim in August, 1872, being named in honor of the late Judge Robert Bell. The town has prospered and has an estimated population of about 675. It has quite a variety of thriving industries and several very substantial and modern brick business buildings, and has completed a fine modern school building, also a new and commodious banking house. The Methodist congregation have recently finished a large and handsome church structure. Belmont is pleasantly situated in the midst of an excellent farming country. There is one private bank in Belmont under the management of George E. Gilkison.

LANCASTER.

The town of Lancaster was settled, principally, by people who came from Lancaster, Pa., from which place it derived its name. John Knapp, as County Surveyor, surveyed and platted the town in 1846. The first house on the present town-site was built by John Higgins in 1817. Lancaster was a prosperous town for a number of years, containing several stores which did considerable business and was also quite an important milling point. Its surroundings were pleasant and men of considerable business and professional ability were attracted to the place. It had four good churches and a commodious school building. Of recent years its condition has been stationary and is beginning to show evidence of decay, as little or no improvement is now being made. However, its residents are very hopeful of securing an inter-urban railway line to Mt. Carmel, which would enhance its fortunes. It is situated fourteen miles northwest of Mt. Carmel and has a population of about 120.

FRIENDSVILLE.

The old town of Friendsville, in the past exerted a very considerable influence upon the affairs of Wabash County, and has a history of much interest to its people, although its career is particularly free from any sensational or exciting events. Job Pixley as early as 1818 built the first house where the town now stands. He came from Cincinnati accompanied by his courageous wife and two young sons. The first merchant in the town was Robert Parkinson, who set up business in the house of John F. Youngken, in 1835, and in 1838 built the first store in the town. William R. Wilkinson, of Yorkshire, England, established a drug-store about the same time. In 1839 the post-office was established, with Robert Parkinson as Postmaster. The plat of the town was filed for record April 10, 1866.

The proprietors named the town after the village of that name, in Susquehanna County, Pa., where some of them had formerly resided. The town at one time had a large flouring mill, also a woolen mill and was an enterprising and thrifty place. In 1866 the Friendsville Academy building was erected and a school established that enjoyed considerable popularity for many years. The Friendsville Library Association was organized and secured a charter in 1840, and during its long existence made a fine collection of books. It was founded through the efforts of Dr. David Allison, a highly educated man who had spent several years in foreign travel, and was ambitious to disseminate knowledge and promote culture and learning.

Friendsville has been the home of many of the county's ablest and most prominent citizens, among whom were Rev. S. C. Baldrige, Hon. William R. Wilkinson, Dr. James Leeds, J. P. McNair, Alfred McNair and Fleming Williams—all now deceased but well remembered in their former place of residence. John D. Kavanaugh, wit, raconteur, and local historian, who was a companion of nearly all these men, still lives to recite the ancient glories of Old Friendsville.

ALLENDALE.

The town of Allendale was established in 1869.

It is finely located on the Big Four Railway and was named after Col. C. M. Allen, who was connected with the building of the old Cairo & Vincennes Railroad. The first store in the town was moved from the nearby town of "Old Timberville." During recent years Allendale has made a steady and substantial growth and has become a fine and prosperous place of 550 inhabitants. It has a number of flourishing industries and is in the heart of a fertile and wealthy agricultural section.

The town has good church and school buildings and several excellent business houses. In 1824 the Armstrong post-office was established where Allendale is located. At that time the only other post-offices in the county were Mt. Carmel, Centerville and "Coffeeton." Old Timberville, which was about two and one-half miles south of Allendale, was practically moved to the latter place in 1871.

Banking facilities are furnished by the First National Bank of Allendale, which has a paid up capital of $25,000. Its present officers are: James W. Price, President; William F. Courter, Vice President, and W. F. Price, Cashier.

PATTON.

This village is on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, midway between Mt. Carmel and Allendale on the Wabash River, and does a considerable business in the lumber trade. It was named after Dr. Patton of Vincennes.

CHAPTER XIII.

EDUCATION.

COLONIAL EDUCATION—APPROPRIATION OF PUBLIC LANDS FOR SUPPORT OF SCHOOLS IN ILLINOIS—FIRST PUBLIC SCHOOL LAW—ESTABLISHMENT OF PRESENT SYSTEM IN 1854—FIRST STATE SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS—FIRST TEACHERS AND LATER PROMOTERS OF POPULAR EDUCATION—DESCRIPTION OF EARLY SCHOOL HOUSES BY DR. SAMUEL WILLARD—FIRST REGULAR SCHOOL ESTABLISHED IN WABASH COUNTY AT FRIENDSVILLE IN 1816—FRIENDSVILLE ACADEMY—FIRST SCHOOLS IN COFFEE PRECINCT AND MT. CARMEL—STATISTICS OF WABASH COUNTY SCHOOLS FOR 1909—PRESENT CONDITIONS.

With our forefathers there came many educated men from Old England, and upon settling in the New World, their thoughts early turned to the purpose of providing schools for the education of the youth of the colonies. Amid the perils of a wild frontier, impoverished and bereft of the ordinary conveniences of life, they provided the means of education by arranging for places of instruction in log houses and sometimes in forts, and selected such instructors as the community could best afford. Soon there were schools in nearly every township, of some character. They were generally supported by private means. The system was chaotic and elementary, and the discipline was severe, as the theory that "learning and licking" went together was a popular notion. However deficient the colonial system of education may have been, it possessed the elements and the spirit of wonderful development, and laid the foundations of popular education as it exists today.

FIRST SCHOOLS IN ILLINOIS.—The enabling act of Illinois provided for the encouragement of education, by appropriating the sixteenth section of every township, amounting in all to 998,448 acres of the best land in America, for school purposes, the net proceeds, realized from the sale of which, was to be used for the advancement and diffusion of education, among the people in general, throughout the State.

Our first public school law was enacted in 1825, but as this was repealed, our public school system was not regularly established until 1849, when the Secretary of State was made ex-officio Superintendent of Public Instruction, and at the same time required qualifications were legally prescribed for teachers. In 1854 the office of Superintendent of Schools was established, and the able and distinguished Ninian W. Edwards, son of former Governor Edwards, was appointed to the new office. Mr. Edwards prepared the act, passed in 1855, which, in substance, is the school law of Illinois today. History records that the Jesuit priests were the first school teachers of Illinois, and that they conducted a school at Kaskaskia as early as 1747. Samuel J. Seeley taught a school in a squatter's cabin, at the pioneer village of New Design, in 1783, which is supposed to have been the first American school taught in Illinois. He was succeeded by an Irishman named Halfpenny, whom Governor Reynolds denominated "The School Master General of Illinois," because of his cosmopolitan habit of roving about the State in search of schools.

Among those who engaged in promoting the cause of education in Illinois, was the Rev. Theron Baldwin, and history records that he delivered a lecture on education in the larger cities of the State, and that he lectured on this favorite theme to a large and appreciative audience at Mt. Carmel, Wabash County, in August, 1836, which must have been an epochal event in that day for Mt. Carmel.

EARLY SCHOOLHOUSES.—How fondly our memories dwell on the recollections of the first schoolhouse, to which we curiously and thoughtlessly wended our childish way. We love to read the immortal lines of Whittier's pathetic description of the old schoolhouse, and listen to our grandsires as they tell about the log school house with its puncheon floor, clap-board roof and split-log seats, but we have found no more accurate, vivid and instructive pen-picture of the early school house than that given by Dr. Samuel Willard, of Chicago, and believing that it will prove delightfully interesting to the younger readers, we quote a portion of it.

"For the first school," says Dr. Willard, "the settlers met with a yoke or two of oxen, with axes, a saw, and an auger, no other tools were necessary, though a frow or tool for splitting out clapboards was desirable. The first settlements were never in the open prairies, but always on the skirts of the timber land or in the woods; the school house had the same location. Trees were cut from the public lands; rough trimmed and unhewn, they were put together to make a log house, generally sixteen feet square; a hole was cut on one side for a side door; a larger hole on the other side to allow the building of an outdoor chimney. The roof was made of clapboards, roughly split out, which were held in place by 'weight poles' laid on the ends of the clapboards and secured by pins or otherwise. Three or four days' labor might be enough to do all this and to add the chimney and the furniture, the walls and roof, with a fairly numerous company, would require but the second day. Generally such a house had no atom of iron in its structure; all was of wood or stone. We read of one of gum logs that sent forth sprouts and twigs after the house was built; of another which was used without door, or window or chinking."

In 1824 Edwards County had the distinction of having a school with a real glass window. These old schoolhouses were warmed with great fire-places and the teachers carried a piece of flint or steel with which to kindle the fire. Water was carried in a pail or "piggin" from a nearby well or spring, and a gourd was used as a drinking vessel. To go for a bucket of water was esteemed quite a privilege and was a "reward of merit" for good conduct.

WABASH COUNTY SCHOOLS.—In 1816 the first regular school was taught in Wabash County. It is said to have been conducted in a log cabin, near Fort Barney, which was within the limits of the present town of Friendsville, and the first instructors were John Griffith and Betsey Os-good. The first regular school house was erected but a short distance east of Friendsville in 1820, and was built of unhewn logs, had a puncheon floor and genuine "rustic" furniture.

The Rev. Samuel Baldrige, who came to Friendsville in an early day, was a man of classical education and benevolent impulses, and always manifested a deep concern in the cause of education. He conducted classes in the "higher branches" in his church, for a number of years, and in 1866, through the co-operation of others, secured the erection of the Friendsville Academy, which had a useful and successful career of many years. More than 1,200 students, representing many States, were educated at this institution. Some twenty years ago the building was purchased by the school district and has since been used as a public schoolhouse.

In Coffee Precinct, William Townsend taught a school as early as 1818, which was located on the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 10. Mr. Townsend was a Methodist minister, and conducted divine services in the community. Reuben Fox was the veteran pioneer school teacher of the county. He taught school in Fort Compton as early as 1814 and 1815, and continued to teach at various places in the county for a number of years. Mr. Fox is, undoubtedly, entitled to the worthy distinction of being Wabash County's first regular pedagogue.

Schools were first established in Mt. Carmel in 1819, and among the earliest instructors were a Mr. Curry and a Mr. Schurfield, and the first woman teacher was a Mrs. Joy. The first school-house was a log building, which stood on the Charles Russell lot. The history and character of the schools in the different towns and in the country is quite similar, and all have been greatly improved in recent years. The log school-house and its successor, the little cramped, unsanitary octagonal building, are gone, and, new, handsome and commodious buildings have succeeded them. New methods of teaching, improved text-books and all the latest auxiliaries of the present system of instruction are in general use. The schools are maintained in a sanitary, cheerful and comfortable condition. Gilbert C. Turner, was the first County Superintendent and was elected in 1833.

The annual report of County Superintendent S. A. Mayne, for the year 1909, shows the following statistical facts relating to the schools of Wabash County:

Pupils enrolled.....	6012
No. of Schoolhouses.....	57
Number of Districts having Libraries	49
Average monthly wages (men).....	$58.85
Average monthly wages (women)....	43.56
Amount of Tax Levy.....	42,359.91
Value of School Property.....	112,395.00
Amount bonded school debt.....	$,175.00
Number of Teachers employed.....	89

The schools of Mt. Carmel, under the capable and progressive management of Prof. W. S. Booth, who is assisted by an excellent corps of teachers, are accomplishing thorough and efficient results. Of recent years our County Superintendents, fully appreciating the value and importance of good "Institute" work, have kept up a practical and thorough course of institute instruction. The schools of the county compare favorably with those of other counties throughout the State. County Superintendent S. A. Mayne is a capable, energetic and judicious official and the teachers throughout the county are a well qualified, industrious and progressive body of instructors.

CHAPTER XIV.

CHURCH HISTORY.

PIONEER MINISTERS IN WABASH COUNTY—CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS AND DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT—PRESBYTERIAN, CATHOLIC, CHRISTIAN, UNITED BRETHREN, METHODIST, EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN

AND EPISCOPAL ORGANIZATIONS—LIST OF PASTORS AND IMPORTANT EVENTS IN CHURCH HISTORY.

PIONEER MINISTERS.—The pioneer preachers came into the wilderness with the first groups of settlers that fied out on the frontier lines of civilization. They encountered and endured all the perils incident to the wild frontier, and never wavered in their resolute efforts to promulgate the gospel, organize religious societies, and build houses of worship. They constantly pushed their itinerant labors westward, ever keeping pace with the wide sweep of advancing civilization. The growth and development of the country soon became so extensive that their duties were extended over vast circuits, requiring the little army of itinerants to ride on horseback, many hundreds of miles, to minister to their congregations. They were exposed to the murderous savages, the fatigue of long and arduous journeys, and often furnished with scant and coarse food and rude lodging.

They conducted services under trees, in forts and the log cabins of the settlers. They preached with a fervor and zeal, accompanied by such emotional manifestations as to produce upon their audiences at times the most thrilling and paroxysmal effects. These preachers were usually men of vigorous energy, burning zeal, earnest piety and solidity of character. Many of them were imbued with great power of eloquence, as well as clear discernment and knowledge of human character, and by reason of these gifts were able, at the great camp-meetings, to sway the listening multitudes at will and move them to the most fantastic exhibitions of nervous excitement and penitential grief. But, however harsh, patristic and emotional, the religious teachings and labors of these early ministers may have been, they nevertheless performed a necessary and self-sacrificing duty to humanity and redeemed the reckless frontiers from many vicious and demoralizing influences, and inculcated in the minds and hearts of the pioneers a veneration for the faith of the church, a regard for morality and a love of piety which were essential to their moral, intellectual and spiritual growth.

In its early settlement, Wabash County was blessed by the active influence of several ministers of noble character and devout piety, and who were men of fine education and good ability, the impress of whose wholesome lives continues to exist in refreshing consequences.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.—Four Presbyterian Churches have been organized in Wabash County. The Wabash Church was organized March 5, 1822, by Rev. D. C. Proctor, with five members, and is the mother church in the county.

The church at Mt. Carmel was organized May 5, 1839, by the celebrated Rev. Stephen Bliss, assisted by Rev. Isaac Bennett, with a membership of eleven. The Friendsville church was organized August 25, 1857, by Revs. J. Crozier and S. C. Baldrige with twenty-eight members. Allendale church was organized February 26, 1867, by Rev. S. C. Baldrige and W. H. Smith and John Mack as Elders, with a membership of nine.

The first Presbyterian sermon delivered in the county was at the home of Thomas Gould, who had settled in Timberville settlement in 1816. He came to the county by way of Evansville, which at that time was a straggling cluster of log cabins, covered with clapboards. The preacher was Rev. Samuel Scott Thornton of Vincennes. His sermon was well received and he afterward came frequently to Gould's cabin to preach and, upon his arrival, Gould's boys were put on the horses to ride the neighborhood and announce the "preaching." Soon after William Crane, called the "Sweet Singer," settled in the community and was made chorister of the little congregation. In 1824 a Sabbath school was organized in Mr. Gould's home and maintained for many years.

The active organization of the Presbyterian Church in the county assumed systematic form, when taken in charge by Rev. Stephen Bliss, April 11, 1819, who was assisted by Rev. George May. They founded a Sabbath school in their cabin home, also a prayer-meeting. These reverend gentlemen came from New England and were graduates of Middlebury College, Vt. The Rev. Mr. Bliss, in 1820, walked back to Boscaawen, N. H., to marry Miss Elizabeth Worcester, a cousin of Joseph Worcester, author of Worcester's Dictionary, and she returned with him to Barney's Prairie in 1821. Cyrus Danforth, who settled on Barney's Prairie in 1817, was a strong, fearless, original and decisive man, but tenacious of his views and intolerant of all religious opinions but his own. He came from New York and was soon joined by Charles McNair, from his home community, who was the pioneer of the McNair family in Wabash County. Danforth and McNair were orthodox Presbyterians, and were of invaluable help to Bliss and Gould in founding the Presbyterian Church in Wabash County. Rev. Stephen Bliss was for many years the only preacher of his denomination in the county. He was a scholarly man, possessed of clear judgment, moderate in his views and endowed with exceptional ability.

In 1824 he was elected State Senator in the Fourth General Assembly from Edwards County, as an anti-slavery candidate, serving a term of four years. He was a modest, conscientious, capable and attractive man, who wielded a beneficent influence, and whose high character lent a charm to the rugged outlines of frontier life. His faithful friend and co-laborer, Rev. S. C. Baldrige, has written an interesting and instructive biography of his life and work. The Rev. Isaac Bennett did great service for the cause of his church in the early days. He had a logical mind, a good education and a nervous eloquence that mightily stirred his hearers. The Rev. S. C. Baldrige was one of the most typically spiritual characters that ever graced the ministry, and was the soul of piety. He was a classical scholar and labored with tireless zeal in the cause of education. We cannot better characterize him, than by using his own language: "Oh solemn, stern, single-eyed, holy brother, thou canst never be forgotten."

The Mt. Carmel Presbyterian Church was organized on the 5th day of May, 1839, by Revs. Stephen Bliss and Isaac Bennett, who had been appointed by the Presbytery of Palestine, Ill. The following are the names of the original members of the church, the first twelve of whom had been members of the Wabash Presbyterian Church: William Eldridge, Paulina Eldridge, Anna E. Page, Elizabeth Bell, Elizabeth P. McDowell, Rachel R. Cook, Elizabeth Harris, Elijah Harris, William H. Miller, James D. Knapp, Sarah Knapp, Martha Harris, William Mudge, Mary B. Mudge, Alvin S. Sturgis, Anganet Sturgis, Margaret Mahon, William H. Swain, Abigail Swain and Rebecca Galloway. William Eldridge and Elijah Harris were unanimously chosen elders and were subsequently ordained, and Eldridge was chosen clerk of the session and served in that capacity till October, 1852, over 13 years.

Rev. R. H. Lilly, the first pastor and one of the organizers of the church, served the church for about six years and reported a membership of 36 in 1844. Mr. Lilly was succeeded by Rev. Blackburn Leffler in 1847. He remained one year. Rev. Preston Wallace Thomson, cousin of Rev. William M. Thomson, D. D., famous author of "The Land and the Book," was here for about two years, 1848-50.

Rev. John L. Hawkins began his labors in Mt. Carmel, in 1852, and is reported as having remained until 1856. Rev. Charles P. Spinning is still living in honorable retirement at Iowa City, Iowa, and is the oldest living minister of this church. He supplied the church one year, 1858-59. Rev. Jefferson Clay Thornton was the next minister, from 1861-63.

We find no record of any regular supply of the church from 1863 to 1875, but it is understood that Rev. S. C. Baldrige, of Friendsville, preached on alternate Sabbaths for a time. Rev. William S. Heindel supplied the church from 1875 to 1876.

Rev. Thomas C. Winn, now of Osaka, Japan, spent the summer of 1876 with the church while a student in a Theological Seminary, and gathered many new members into the church.

Rev. Thomas E. Green, supplied the church for about a year, 1879-80, when a reorganization of the session was effected and an effort was made to erect a new house of worship.

Then there was another period of six years without any regular services and without any official meeting of session till the spring of 1886, when the church was reorganized on the arrival of Rev. W. W. Tait.

At the time of the cyclone in 1877, the church reported 35 members in consequence of the splendid ingathering in 1876 under Rev. Thomas C. Winn. In 1880, after the accessions under Rev. T. E. Green, it reported 73; in 1882 and 1883, only 10, and in 1885 and 1886, 43 members. Soon after the arrival of Mr. Tait, on June 10, 1886, 11 new members were received, two elders and four deacons were elected, and church services and meetings of the session have continued without serious interruption ever since. June 10, 1886, stands out as the date of reconstruction and renewed life.

On the account of ill health, Rev. Mr. Tait remained but a few months, being followed by Rev. R. Dobson, who remained for one year; he was followed by Rev. J. H. Stevenson, under whose ministry of eight years the church made marked progress in every way. He found only about 25 active members holding services in the hall over the First National Bank. After worshiping there for a short season, they removed to the courthouse where they remained till the present house of worship was dedicated on February 23, 1890.

The first year in the new church was marked by an unprecedented growth in the membership, 44 names being added, and for the first time in its history, it reached 100 and reported 118.

Four years later, 44, the largest number in all its history, were added, and the roll attained its maximum, reporting 153 to the Presbytery.

Dr. Stevenson was followed by Rev. Lucian Doty Noel, who remained but a short period on account of sickness. Then came Rev. J. F. Knowles, who remained a little over one year. He was followed by Rev. John T. Farris, under whose ministry of five years the church came, for the first time, to self-support and also erected the fine parsonage occupied by the pastor. Rev. Charles E. Marvin followed and remained but one year when he moved to a more northern climate.

Rev. George E. Richards came as pastor in 1905, and spent four prosperous years. He was succeeded by Rev. W. P. Hoskin, who remained only one year. The church has a larger membership at present than ever before, is out of debt and is in the most prosperous condition since its organization. The congregation at different periods has occupied two houses of worship, both of them brick. The first was erected on Third street between Mulberry and Cherry. It was built prior to the organization of the church in 1830, and was said, at that time, to be the finest church in the town or in the presbytery. This building was destroyed by the cyclone of June 4, 1877.

The present building was erected under the ministry of Dr. J. H. Stevenson. Ground was broken in the summer of 1889, and on February 23, 1890, Dr. Jonathan E. Spillman, of Carmi, preached the dedication sermon. It cost $4,500.00, of which it received $900 from the Board of Church Erection.¹

In 1885, one year before the reorganization, the church lost the last charter member by the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Bell, the mother of Judge Robert Bell.

ST. MARY'S CATHOLIC CHURCH.—The first celebration of the rites of the Catholic Church, to take place in Wabash County, of which we have any authentic record, was the marriage of Nicholas Peter and Barbara Wirth, in 1836, the ceremony being celebrated by Rev. P. Chakert, S. J., who was a Jesuit priest, from St. Marie, Jasper County, Ill. The first child that was baptized was Thomas, son of Thomas and Anna Moulehin, April 14, 1839. The Rev. Valentine Burgos was the first priest to be stationed in the parish. The first regular services were celebrated by Rev. K. Muller, August 20, 1840. From 1840 to 1851, priests were sent from various places to celebrate mass, as there was neither church nor residence available for church service at Mt. Carmel. Among those who performed the priestly duties for this period were Rev. K. Muller, Rev. James Flynn, Rev. G. A. Hamilton, Rev. Fr. Fisher and Rev. R. Weinapfley. The services were held in private residences and the public school houses of Mt. Carmel. By 1850 enough emigrants had come from Germany to increase the congregation to about thirty Catholic families. It was then decided to erect a church and secure a resident priest. The corner-stone of the new church was laid August 8, 1851, and the dedication took place in 1854. The Rev. Burgos, who was a Spaniard, remained in charge three years. The new church was built under great difficulties, and the members of the church did the greater part of the work, the Rev. Burgos doing his share of manual labor. Among the early families who assisted in the building of the new church were those of Antone Peter, Christopher Weisenberger, Michael Berberick, Suitbert Kolb, Barney McMannaman, Gerhard Wirth, Nicholas Peter, Andreas Fearheiley, John Keyser, John Keepas, Daniel Berberick, Nicholas Goetz, Phillip Rosingol, Mike Fearheiley, Frank Fuchs, George Wirth, Mike Peter, George Freidrich, Valentine Keyser, Laurence Keppel, Nicholas Ankenbrandt, John Breivogel, Lawrence Roth, Wendelin Wetter, Michael Hockgeiger, John Weigand, John Kohlhauser and Jacob Dunkel.

In August, 1858, after an interregnum of four years, Rev. R. W. Repis came to succeed Rev. Burgos, and in six months he was succeeded by Rev. P. R. Kolopp, who was followed by Rev. Jansen, Rev. F. H. Budde, the present popular and able priest, took charge in 1895. Four successful missions have been held by the church, in 1856, 1885, 1898 and 1904. A number of young women have entered the sisterhood, but only one young man has entered the priesthood.

The flourishing congregation long ago outgrew the old church and, on March 27, 1900, the cornerstone of the present splendid and imposing edifice was laid and the building was dedicated October 16th, following. The structure, complete, cost $23,515.70, and is one of the noblest sanctuaries in Southern Illinois. In connection with the church is the large school, conducted by the Sisters of the Precious Blood, and a new and commodious priest's residence. Mt. Carmel was first subject to the diocese of Chicago, then to Alton and now of Belleville.

The church of St. Sebastian, in Belmont Precinct, was erected in 1870, and its congregation is composed of about sixty families. The first Catholic church built in the county was St. Rose, near Rochester, long since fallen into decay, and of which an account will be found in the history of Coffee Precinct.

CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.—Among the first regularly organized religious societies founded in Wabash County were those of the New Light Church, which was subsequently merged into the Christian Church, on account of their similarity of doctrine. The real fore-runner of the Christian Church in the county was the New Light Society, organized in 1816 on the east bank of Crawfish Creek, on what was known as the Eli Wood land. Elder James Poole and William Kinkade met under a white oak tree and there organized Barney's Prairie Church, which afterward became the first Christian Church in the county. Of this church there is in existence a complete official record. Upon this Mother Church all other Christian Churches in the county have drawn for membership and assistance, in various ways in times past. Among its charter members were James Poole, Angelina Poole, Peter and Jemima Keen, Joseph Wood, and Ira Wood, Enoch and Daniel Greathouse, Jacob Shadle and wife, Seth and Mary Gard, Abigail Preston, Jerry Ballard, Philo Ingram, Ransom Higgins, Levi Couch, Ira Keen.

The first church was built one-half mile east of Friendsville, where also schools were taught. In those early days people came from a great distance to attend divine service, and were dependant upon the hospitality of the local members of the congregation, for food and shelter for themselves and horses, which were generously given. It is said that such men as George Litherland, George Buchanan and Ira Keen, frequently fed from fifty to sixty guests in a single day, and that the patient and devout women, in their fervid zeal, often forgot to eat in their eagerness to return to meeting, but it is not unreasonable to suppose that, after they had fed fifty or sixty hungry people, there was little left to tempt their appetites.

Among those who were towers of strength to the church in its early days, and who are well worthy to be mentioned, are: Joseph Ballard, Joseph Wood, Jr., Elder Ira Wood, Elder James Poole, and Charlotte J. Wood. Prominent and useful among the ministers of Barney's Prairie Church have been William Courter, Sr., Elijah Goodwin, Cornelius Ades, Elder James McMillen, Elder U. B. F. Treat, Alexander Wells, Thomas W. Wills, William C. Black, Elder F. W. Black, and Elder W. R. Couch.

The Coffee Creek Church was organized at the home of Daniel Keen, in August, 1819, and has been prosperous from its origin and has a fine church and large congregation at Keensburg. The Lick Prairie Church was organized in 1830, by Elder Joseph Wasson, the Church of Christ at Lancaster in 1842, and the one at Adams Corner in 1851. They are all flourishing congregations, having commodious church structures and efficient official boards and ministers.

The Christian Church at Mt. Carmel, was founded in 1862, by Elder D. D. Miller. This congregation is one of the strongest in Southern Illinois, numerically and financially, and is one of the most vigorous and influential bodies of the Christian Church to be found in the Wabash Valley. For years it has been favored with some of the ablest ministers of the denomination, and its official board has been composed of capable, energetic and devout men, ever ready to uplift and advance the cause of the church. The congregation has a fine and desirable church property and building, yet its steadily growing membership will soon demand greatly enlarged accommodations and which are already being seriously contemplated. Elder J. W. Kilborn, is the present pastor.

The Church of Christ at Belmont was organized in May, 1876, and although for many years its growth was uncertain and many difficulties beset it, it is now on safe ground, enjoying a promising outlook for future usefulness.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.—The first church of the United Brethren in Christ was organized, at a schoolhouse near Friendsville, in 1862, through the effort of Rev. William Hovis. The class at first had a membership of thirteen. In 1866 the class was removed to Cabbage Corner, and, in 1874, it was moved to the Stoltz schoolhouse. At the last place the surroundings were so favorable that the membership rapidly increased, and in 1879, a Board of Trustees was appointed to build a church. Wm. Litherland supervised the building of the church, which was completed in 1880. It was erected adjacent to Gard's Point Graveyard, and was named Nye Chapel. The church has long maintained a numerous membership, and has been blessed with a prosperous career. It is now in charge of Rev. Fowler. There is also a United Brethren congregation having a church of its own at Adams Corner.

METHODIST CHURCHES.—Professor George W. Smith, M. A., in his excellent History of Illinois, says: "The Reverend Beauchamp, a much loved minister in the Methodist Church, was located at Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1816. He was induced by the people of Mt. Carmel to come to their town, to which he removed in 1817. He labored here faithfully for about four years, when he was obliged to give up his preaching and retire to a farm. While in the active work of preaching in Mt. Carmel, he announced the service by the blowing of a trumpet instead of the ringing of the bell." The Professor has been led into an error as to the Rev. Beauchamp's last days. His reverence was famed far and near as a camp-meeting revivalist, and the announcement of his coming drew vast multitudes to hear him. Having failed to be elected Bishop by a solitary vote, he decided to spend his life in evangelistic work, and while preaching at a great camp-meeting in Indiana, was stricken with a fatal illness.

Methodism founded Mt. Carmel, and in its history, the twain are co-existent. Two Methodist ministers—the Rev. Thomas Hinde, of noted ancestry, and the Rev. William McDowell—who had conceived the idea of founding a city on moral principles that would enable them to carry out, in practical results, what they believed to be the true ideals of Methodist faith and teaching, came from Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1816, settled on the town site of Mt. Carmel, and, in 1817, founded the city. Soon after their arrival Rev. William Beauchamp came and surveyed the site and laid off the lots. These devout proprietors prescribed a code of municipal laws by which the prospective city should be governed, and which were afterward denominated "Blue-laws." In fact, they were copies of rigid puritanical enactments, already out-grown by the spirit of the age, and were soon repealed. Excerpts from these harsh ordinances will be found in the sketch of the City of Mt. Carmel. Hinde, McDowell and Beauchamp were intelligent, scholarly, fearless and conscientious enthusiasts, who were descended from families of quality, and were resolutely determined to do some good in the world; and their honored names should be venerated by every on-coming generation of citizens of Mt. Carmel.

The father of Thomas Hinde was a surgeon in the English army. He belonged to the vessel which General Wolfe left to go ashore and fight Montcalm on the Plains of Abraham and dressed the wounds of that General, when he fell in that memorable struggle, which made North America a Protestant, instead of a French Catholic, government. The battle of Quebec was as decisive in its results as Marathon, Cannæ, Châlons, Waterloo or Gettysburg. The founders of Mt. Carmel, were actuated by pious zeal, and they intended that the town should be marked by its moral and religious status. Their ambition was to make it "The Garden of the Lord," as its name signifies. Mt. Carmel Circuit was established in 1819, and it extended from the mouth of the Wabash River to Terre Haute, and reached far into the interior of Indiana and Illinois. To traverse this vast and unsettled circuit required indomitable courage and prodigious physical endurance, but these men had both and, in addition unconquerable faith, and they accomplished wonders.

In 1819, Charles Slocomb was appointed to the Mt. Carmel Circuit, which was the first regularly established Methodist Circuit in Illinois, and preached to settlers wherever they could be gathered together. Methodism was so prosperous that, in 1824, it erected the first brick church in the State in Mt. Carmel. In 1827, the Annual Conference was held in Mt. Carmel, and was presided over by Bishop Roberts. At this conference there were assembled many men who became famous in the ministry of the Methodist Church. This conference took the initiatory step that led to the founding of McKendree College at Lebanon, Ill. In 1834, Mt. Carmel was made a station. On May 18, 1850, a resolution was passed providing for the building of a new church, which was completed within a year. The new edifice was appropriately named Beauchamp Chapel, in honor of Rev. William Beauchamp. In 1853, the Southern Illinois Conference was held here, with Bishop Scott presiding, and again in 1863, with Bishop Baker presiding. Convening in the midst of the bitterness engendered by the Civil War, and the conference being intensely loyal and boldly outspoken on the question of human slavery, which the Church of the North had so uncompromisingly assailed, its members were subjected to many serious insults by Confederate sympathizers.

LUTHERAN CHURCH, MT. CARMEL

FIRST METHODIST CHURCH, MT. CARMEL

In 1869, a brick parsonage was erected at a cost of $3,000. In 1875, the church was remodeled at a cost of $7,000, and the building was re-opened for service by Bishop Bowman, and the same year the Annual Conference was held in it, with the venerable Bishop Scott in attendance. In 1877, the church was practically demolished by the terrible cyclone, but was soon rebuilt and improved, and was used as a house of worship until the completion of the present beautiful and noble edifice, which is an ornament to the city and a credit to Methodism.

The corner stone of the present church was laid in 1899 and the church was dedicated by Bishop McCabe. It was erected at a cost of $33,000, and is the most attractive and amplitudinous house of worship outside of the larger cities in Illinois, and it is altogether fitting that the history of Methodism in Mt. Carmel, should be crowned with such a splendid monument to the record of its long and faithful service in the cause of humanity. At her altar thousands have humbly bowed and been received into fellowship with her congregation, which is one of the largest in Illinois. Its total membership is 725. The parsonage is an elegant residence and was erected at a cost of $7,000. The following, in the order named, have been pastors of the Church since its establishment: Charles Slocum, J. Stewart, Robert Delap, Samuel Hull, William McReynolds, Thos. Davis assisted by Samuel Bassitt, John McReynolds, Aaron Woods, J. Miller with A. L. Thompson as junior preacher, James McKean, James Massey, W. S. Crissy, A. McIntz, P. W. Nickolds, James Hadley, A. L. Risley, J. M. Massey, W. C. Cummings, J. H. Dickson, R. Ridgway, C. J. Houts, E. H. Hubbard, S. Elliott, John Borland, J. W. Calwell, William Cliff, James Leaton, Nelson Hawley, Albert Nesbit, J. P. Davis, R. J. Nall, G. W.

Compton (who resigned the charge to enter the union army and D. Chipman finished the year), Hiram Sears, A. B. Morrison, G. W. Hughey, T. A. Eaton, B. R. Pierce, A. B. Grant, J. L. Wallar, T. H. Herdman, Joseph Earp, R. N. Carter, J. T. Pender, William Van Cleve, C. Nash, R. E. Pierce, John F. Harmon, F. L. West, F. H. Knight, J. W. Cummins, and C. D. Shumard, the present pastor.

The Friendsville, Lick Prairie, Cabbage Corner, Asbury, Keensburg, Cowling, Allendale, McKendree, Maud and Belmont Methodist Churches have large congregations and are in a flourishing condition. Most of them were organized in the early days and have much interesting history connected with their early struggles and pioneer experience. The Asbury Society was founded about 1830, and was organized in a log barn on the Emanuel Reel farm, where a great revival had been in progress. For many years thereafter the devout little congregation used the Simonds schoolhouse, where many famous pioneer preachers expounded the gospel at great revival meetings. In 1869, the congregation built its present church, which has been the scene of many interesting and important events in the church history of Wabash County. For years it was a favorite meeting point for the Methodists from the country and Mt. Carmel, and it seemed to possess a subtle influence that drew itinerant preachers from far and near, to its popular pulpit, where ministers of various faiths, black and white, were welcomed with an unexampled tolerance, and received into the homes of its members with unstinted hospitality. In the history of Wabash County, the interests of the Methodist Church have not been neglected and the voice of the Methodist preacher has been heard, for many years in every locality.

EVANGELICAL CHURCH.—In the year 1842 the first missionary of the Evangelical Association came to Wabash County. This first missionary was Rev. C. Augenstein, who was sent out by the Ohio Conference. The mission field was composed of six counties in Indiana and Illinois, with Wabash County as the center, and from this point the missionary went for the performance of his arduous duties. This enthusiastic man went about doing good, preaching in the homes of the people and in school houses. His labors were among the German people.

The efficient labors of this first missionary resulted in laying a good foundation, upon which has been built a superstructure of Christian influence and helpfulness to the community, and of which the Evangelical Association is justly proud.

In the year 1845, the big mission field was divided, the western portion being named the Mt. Carmel Mission, and the eastern portion as the Dubois Mission. From this time, special attention was paid to the City of Mt. Carmel, and soon resulted in the forming of a congregation. In the year 1847, a little brick church was built on Fifth Street, near Cherry, and for years this little Evangelical society was known for its spirituality. On quarterly or special meetings, the Evangelicals of the county and of Grayville and West Salem would meet and have "good times" together. Many souls were converted and many lives changed, because of the influence of these deeply spiritual meetings.

In the year 1873, a new brick church was erected on the corner of Fifth and Cherry Streets, under the administration of Rev. Joseph Meir. In this church the congregation has worshipped until the present time. For many years the services were all held in the German language, but about the year 1883, it was evident that if the young people of the congregation were to be retained, there must be the introduction of the English language, and from that time until about the year 1898, the change was gradually made, and from the latter date the English language has been exclusively used.

The membership of the church through the years of its history has been made up of some of the best and most influential people of Mt. Carmel. From a few families at the beginning until the year 1883, the membership increased to one hundred members, and from that date until the present writing (1910), the increase has reached about one hundred and seventy. The following are a few of the charter members: H. Kramer, William Proetzler, N. Seitz, P. Moyer, R. Bentelman, Steven Moyer, C. Seitz and S. Mueller.

For a number of years this congregation belonged to what is known as the South Indiana Conference, but later there was a change in the boundary of some of the conferences, and it now belongs to the Indiana Conference. The pastors who have served this congregation have been among the best of the conference. The following is a list of the ministers who served as pastors: Augenstein, Lintner, Nikolai, Platz, Pretsch, Tobias, Mueller, Withaub, Trometer, Dickover, Messner, Fisher, Bockman, Fuchs, Kohlmeyer, Hoffman, Krommiller, Kleiber, Glauser, Gomen, Fisher, Mode, Meyer, Theiss, Hallwachs, Earheart, Griesemer, Schaurmeier, Markman, Buyer, Schleucher, Maas, and C. E. Geist.

At the present writing the congregation is well organized and doing effectual work. The names following are some of the organizations: Trustee Board of five members, of which Ed. Storckman is President; Missionary Society of which Rev. Schnitz is President; Sunday Schools with O. A. Unbehaun, Assistant Superintendent; Young People's Alliance, of which Miss Mame Kern is President; Woman's Missionary Society, Mrs. Geist, President; and Ladies' Aid, Mrs. Unbehaun, President.

EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The earliest records of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in this county show that the Rev. C. F. Hoyer, who was a general missionary of the church, serving first in the home mission work of this country and later organizing the first Lutheran Mission Station in Africa, first came to Mount Carmel in January, 1836, on a tour of inspection and succeeded in rallying the scattered adherents to the Lutheran faith. He gathered together the nuclei of two congregations, one at Mount Carmel, the other at Jordan Creek, which latter is now the St. Paul's of Lancaster.

In March of the same year, the Rev. H. Haverstick came on the field and perfected the organizations. The Rev. C. F. Hoyer returned later and several young members were confirmed and others gathered into the organization. Both of these pioneer ministers retired from the field soon after, and during the interim of pastorates, an attempt was made to organize a German Reformed congregation, partly out of the Lutheran organization. This, however, failed and the Rev. D. Kohler, a home missionary, sent out by the East Pennsylvania Synod, came upon the field and on March 11, 1838, dedicated the new church at Jordan Creek, and on March 27th, the Zion's Evangelical Lutheran church of Mt. Carmel was made a certainty by the adoption of certain regulations, which committed the organization exclusively to the Lutheran name and cause, yet later efforts were made to divert at least a part of the members to the Reformed Church.

The Rev. Barthol succeeded Mr. Kohler, and during his ministry the property on Second Street, between Market and Chestnut, was purchased. On the lot was a frame house and a brick blacksmith shop. The latter was remodeled into a church. Mr. Barthol was in charge up to the latter part of 1839. In the meantime a fire, communicated from an adjoining house, partially destroyed the same. The ruins were sold and removed from the site.

There was a period of inactivity up to 1841, when the Rev. Lauer, of Evansville, ministered to the people and he, in turn, was followed by Rev. Henning. Mr. Henning not being able to preach in the German language, those who preferred that language, being prompted to do so by other considerations, withdrew and organized a church of the Evangelical Association. Mr. Henning remained but a few years. To this time matters were in a very unsettled condition, the disturbing elements being the questions of language, the use of revival methods and sacramental differences. These were now practically at an end, for the German element and advocates of the revival methods withdrew. At this juncture, September 29, 1844, the Rev. Daniel Scherer became the regular pastor of the charge, and from that time forth the churches took on new life. The adoption of a new constitution followed, a debt of nearly $1,200 was provided for, most of it being collected by the pastor in the east and south. This covered two years of time and, in the meantime, a new house of worship was in contemplation. This was erected by a liberal people under the leadership of a pastor who was an efficient manager and worker. It is said that he burned the brick and did much other labor in connection with the erection of the new church. Mr. Scherer moved to Jordan Creek in 1850 for economic reasons, the church there having eighty acres of land the products of which were entailed to the pastor, he being then still pastor of the whole charge. He died on April 4, 1852, and was buried at Mt. Carmel. Mr. Scherer was not the founder of the work, but to him is due the honor of placing it beyond the point of peril, for at the time of his taking charge the fate of the Mt. Carmel pastorate was in serious doubt.

The Rev. G. Wolf was a temporary supply from the death of Mr. Scherer until September 5, 1852, when the Rev. Conrad Kuhl took charge, remaining for over three years. During his incumbency still another constitution was provided, and the old German documents and records were translated into English and incorporated in the church book.

The Rev. I. C. Hiller followed and was pastor from 1856 to 1858 and he, in turn, was followed by the Rev. John Krack, who remained until 1861. In the latter year, the Rev. J. M. Harkey became pastor and remained until 1868. During this pastorate, the unfortunate division in the general synod occurred (1864-66), and while Mr. Harkey was a pronounced advocate of the newly-formed general council, the most part of both the Mt. Carmel and Jordan Creek churches remained loyal to the general synod.

The Rev. Geo. H. Schmur then had charge for one year and was followed by the Rev. J. M. Lingle, who was pastor for more than three years. The Rev. R. E. McDaniel was pastor during 1875 and part of 1876, and served temporarily as a teacher in the public schools. Before the close of 1876, the Rev. H. C. Graussman took charge and remained until 1879. It was during Mr. Graussman's pastorate that the Jordan Creek Church was divided and a new church edifice erected at Lancaster in 1877-78. The Rev. M. L. Heisler came to the field soon after, but having received a call to the presidency of a female seminary at Parkitsville, Md., he remained only a few months.

On July 18, 1880, the Rev. G. H. Allbright, just graduated from the theological seminary at Gettysburg, Pa., took charge. The Mt. Carmel Church was remodeled, action to that effect having been taken on the first day of Mr. Allbright's ministrations. The fact is also noted that Rev. Allbright was the first pastor of Zion's Church, Mt. Carmel, as a separate pastorate, the Lancaster charge having called the Rev. I. W. Bobst as its pastor. The remodeled church was dedicated September 6, 1880, all free of indebtedness. Mr. Allbright retired from the field in the fall of 1884. September 1, 1885, the Rev. J. F. F. Kayhoe became pastor and remained with the church until January 1, 1889. During this pastorate fifty-two members were added, but a number of losses by removal and otherwise occurred.

On June 1, 1889, the Rev. J. H. Walterick became pastor and remained in charge until April 1, 1907—a period of seventeen years and ten months—the longest and, for that reason and others, the most effective to this date in the history of the church. During this extended interval, the congregation has been in a growing condition, the parsonage was improved, the church refurnished and decorated. Finally, April 13, 1902, steps were taken for the removal of the church to a more eligible site, and on March 29, 1903, it was decided to purchase the lot upon which the new church now stands. During 1904-05, the present church was erected and was dedicated early in May, 1905. The church is the second largest in the city, most eligibly situated on the northeast corner of Market and Seventh Streets, convenient in all its appointments and entirely completed except the basement, which is to be devoted to social purposes. The old church property was sold to another congregation and the old parsonage still houses the pastor and his family. The total value of the church's property approximates $25,000. Mr. Walterick welcomed into fellowship with the church 183 members during his pastorate. In a large degree the present status of Zion's Church is due to the earnest work of Mr. Walterick, sustained by the unfaltering loyalty and devotion of the entire church organization.

On the first Sunday following the retiracy of Mr. Walterick, J. C. Kauffman, D. D., of Monroe, Wis., visited the field and, a few weeks later, was called by a unanimous vote of the congregation to become pastor of the church. Later he accepted the call and on July 7, 1907, began his labors among this people. As is frequently the case after a new church has been built, there was the incubus of a church debt to contend with as soon as the new pastor was settled. This amounted to about $1,700, all of which has since been provided for, together with sufficient funds to make some desirable improvements in both church and parsonage. But this is not the only thing achieved in these three short years. There has been a general growth in interest in the church and its work, contributions to the work of the congregation and the cause of missions and other benevolences of the church have steadily increased, fifty-one new members have been welcomed, and there are now 275 baptized members enrolled, about two hundred of whom are regular communicants and faithful attendants upon the services of the church.

ST. JOHN'S GERMAN EVANGELICAL.—G. V. Kirsch and William Bosecker, both Evangelical Lutherans, came from Adams County, Ind., to Illinois, in 1890, and settled near Cowling. The next year came John Graesch, Sr., and John Graesch, Jr., John and Louis Bosecker, and Peter and Adam Kirsch. These men organized a German Lutheran Church, and named it St. John's German Evangelical Congregation. For a time they secured the services of Rev. Frank R. Tramm, of Vincennes, Ind., and afterwards of Rev. George Mohr. The services were held at such places as could be conveniently secured. In 1872, a new church was built and, on August 11th. of that year, it was dedicated and Rev. Christian Maurer, was ordained and introduced as its first pastor, who immediately baptized G. V. Kirsch, Jr.

The congregation joined the Missouri Synod, to which it still belongs. The locality in which the church is located, is one of the most fertile, prosperous and beautiful farming countries upon which the eye of man has ever looked; on its rich lands it is a common occurrence for wheat to average 40 bushels per acre and corn from 90 to 110 bushels per acre. Originally it was a low black bottom land, but its German settlers, realizing its vast possibilities, tilled and drained it, and have made it one of the veritable garden spots of earth. The early German settlers, appreciating its potential wealth, wrote of its great future to their relatives, especially in Vanderburg County, Indiana, who at once poured in to this favored locality. As a result of the great immigration to the community and its wonderful development, the church prospered and is now a strong and wealthy congregation, having a handsome church property and liberally supporting its pastor, Rev. Karl Colditz. The church is a comfortable and well appointed building and a credit to the community.

ST. JOHN'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—This parish of the One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church, usually known as the Episcopal Church, is in possession of a beautiful church and rectory at the corner of Sixth and Mulberry Streets, Mt. Carmel. The property was purchased in an unfinished condition by the late Rt. Rev. George F. Seymour, S. T. W. Bishop of Springfield, from the trustees of the Presbyterian denomination. The chapel was finished and named St. Paul's. The Rev. J. S. Lassater was appointed priest in charge in November, 1881. Fr. Lassater was also in charge of a church school for girls. In 1882 a rectory was built. It was not until St. John's day, 1892, that the parish was formally organized and the name changed from St. Paul's to St. John's. The rectory was enlarged and remodeled and the church building very considerably improved in 1907. The present rector is the Rev. Fr. T. W. C. Cheeseman, M.A., D.D. Services are held every Sunday and Friday, and on holy days. Fr. Cheeseman has also charge of St. John's Church at Albion, in Edwards County.

OTHER CHURCHES.—There are two Baptist Churches in Mt. Carmel, with small congregations and one Free Methodist Church.

Wabash County has one church to every 400 inhabitants, a proportion which, we believe, at least equals that of any other county in Illinois.

SCIENTIFIC AND FRATERNAL SOCIETIES.

EARLY PHYSICIANS IN WABASH COUNTY—FIRST MEDICAL SOCIETY—LATER ORGANIZATIONS—MT. CARMEL SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY—SOUTHERN ILLINOIS SCIENTIFIC ASSOCIATION—SECRET AND FRATERNAL SOCIETIES.

Among the early physicians and surgeons of Wabash County, some have been almost forgotten, with the generations they served, but there were many of the early practitioners who will long be remembered by the people, not only because they prolonged human life and relieved suffering, but as well because of their friendship, integrity and moral worth to the community. The first physician to practice in Wabash County was a Dr. Norton, who commenced his professional career at Palmyra in 1816, and he was followed by Dr. Reuben Baker at Mt. Carmel in 1818. From that time down to 1850, the most prominent physicians who practiced in the county were Drs. Allison, Trall, Pithian, Anderson and James Harvey.

MEDICAL SOCIETIES.—The first Medical Society was organized in the 'sixties, and prominent among its members were Paul Sears, William Graham, Francis P. Manley, Andrew Maxwell, T. J. Rigg, Jacob Lescher, James Leeds, James Strahan and T. J. McLain. The society had a brief career and there are no authentic records of its proceedings.

The records of the present society, as furnished by its secretary, Dr. J. B. Maxwell, show that it was organized July 26, 1880. Dr. William Friend of Lancaster, was elected President; Dr. Jacob Schneck, Vice-President; Dr. P. G. Manley, Secretary; Dr. J. C. Utter, Assistant Secretary; Dr. H. M. Leeds, of Allendale, Treasurer. The following signed the constitution and by-laws as members: William Friend, Thomas J. Rigg, Fay K. Wallar, Paul G. Manley, J. Schneck, William N. Nanney, Nat C. Lewis, R. J. McMurray, G. C. Kingsbury, E. D. Biddle, Paul Sears, J. C. Utter, N. Bristow, A. W. Messick, E. McJilton, James Harvey, A. J. McIntosh, H. M. Leeds, M. E. Warner and F. S. Gray. This society met at intervals until 1885, when its meetings were discontinued. It slumbered for five years when some new and enthusiastic men came into the county and then the physicians sent out a call for a meeting of the physicians of the county for the purpose of reorganizing the society. Accordingly on May 27, 1890, such a meeting was held. Dr. L. J. Leshar was elected temporary chairman, and Drs. J. Schneck, J. H. Tanquary and R. J. McMurray were appointed a committee on permanent organization. They reported as follows: Dr. James Harvey for President, R. J. McMurray for Vice-President, G. C. Kingsbury for Secretary, and W. C. Ridgway for Treasurer.

The following persons signed the constitution and by-laws of the reorganized society: G. C. Kingsbury, J. Schneck, J. H. Tanquary, J. B. Maxwell, Fay K. Wallar, H. M. Leeds, R. J. McMurray, James Harvey, J. T. Legier, John McClurkin, P. G. Manley, J. D. Kingsbury, Dr. Kelso, William Friend, C. G. Smith, Norman Leeds, C. C. Craig, L. C. Lukenmeyer, W. M. Friend, J. C. Utter and S. W. Schneck.

Since that period nearly every regular physician who has practised medicine in the county has belonged to the society. It has maintained its meetings for more than twenty consecutive years, seems to have passed through all the danger periods and reached a mature growth, and it is to be hoped that it will yet survive many years to keep alive the spirit of harmony and unity, which ought to exist between members of one of the noblest professions. Dr. C. E. Gilliatt, of Allendale, is President of the society. The various schools of medicine are well represented throughout the county by capable and popular physicians.

MT. CARMEL SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY.—For many years the Mt. Carmel Scientific Society has been recognized as the most prominent and successful literary and scientific society in this part of the State, and it has exerted a useful and extended influence along the lines of individual investigation and the study of popular science. Several of its members have done noteworthy work in the fields of science and literature. The society has had an interesting and useful career of more than a quarter of a century and is still an active and flourishing organization. Its members are the representative forces in education and scientific investigation. We copy here portions of an article relating to its history, read before the society by Mrs. Lydia Annie Hughes:

"Away back in the 'seventies two citizens of this city, imbued with a love of nature and thirsting for a deeper knowledge of her facts and mysteries, began together a systematic study of other investigators in that realm, the while pursuing original lines of work. In their weekly meetings they used playfully to style themselves 'The Mt. Carmel Scientific Society.' These two gentlemen were Dr. Jacob Schneck and Superintendent Cowan of the public schools. True to the itinerant habits of his profession, Mr. Cowan soon betook himself to another field of labor, but his place in this very exclusive coterie of students reverted, by a process of natural selection, to his immediate, as well as to several of his more remote successors, all of whom were likewise itinerants. The membership of this society was augmented in 1875 by the addition of the Rev. J. L. Wallar, and later Mr. James Pool became associated with them. Even at that early date, they prepared papers and engaged in the discussion of various subjects.

"When, in 1877, or thereabout, a call from Carbondale was issued for recruits to enlist in an association for scientific study, which was to embrace all Southern Illinois, these gentlemen promptly responded, were duly mustered in and Mr. Pool, as representative of the Mt. Carmel contingent, delivered an address on some phases of the planet Saturn, which was published.

"The Rev. Mr. Carter succeeded Mr. Wallar as a member of this little company of truth seekers, and their readings, investigations and original work were quietly but zealously pursued until the pastorate of the Rev. J. T. Pender, in 1886. Then a literary association, called the Lyceum, was formed in the Methodist Church of this city, having for its object the promotion of general culture, to which our still select scientific society attached itself.

"Among others ardently interested in the success of the Lyceum was the pastor, himself, Mr. W. H. Lee, Dr. Jacob Schneck, Mr. George L. Guy, then Superintendent of our schools; Messrs. H. H. Mason, John M. Mitchell, Otto Krug and the late Thomas J. Shannon, Jr.

"But after several months there came an utter collapse and one December evening while Messrs. Lee, Schneck, Guy, Mason and others waited in the lecture room of the M. E. Church for the audience, that never came, a plan for a non-sectarian association to be known as 'The Mt. Carmel Scientific Society,' was proposed and adopted. Thus, out of the wreck of the Lyceum, merged into the more sturdy and enduring constituency of its predecessors, was organized the society whose thirteenth annual election took place January 2, 1899."

SECRET, PATRIOTIC AND FRATERNAL SOCIETIES.—Mt. Carmel has about as many secret and fraternal societies as any city in the State except Chicago, and for a complete list of such orders we are indebted to the excellent city and county directory, prepared and published by Messrs. George B. Stein and Edward F. Eichhorn, which is as follows:

CHAPTER XVI.

NOTABLE EVENTS AND REMINISCENCES.

THE MILLER MURDER—TRIAL AND EXECUTION OF MILTON JONES—A CIVIL WAR TIME TRAGEDY—

THE SINKING OF THE KATE SARCHET—LEBANON CAMP MEETINGS—THE FLOOD OF 1875—THE CYCLONE DISASTER OF 1877—THE FAMOUS BIG TREE ON THE WABASH.

In the history of every county and locality are found the records of events and heard the traditions of occurrences, which have become epochal and are afterward regarded as landmarks by the inhabitants of the region where they transpired. While such incidents cannot always be considered properly as history, yet they have a real value and a surpassing interest in that class of literature which we call reminiscences, and which has become very popular with the general public, and for that reason we herewith attempt to preserve from oblivion a series of events which, in times past, have engaged the universal interest of the people of Wabash county.

TRIAL AND EXECUTION OF MILTON JONES.—Perhaps no occurrence in the history of the county ever created such general excitement as the trial and execution of Milton Jones, for the murder of Joseph Miller. Joseph Miller was a prosperous young merchant of Charleston, Ill., about twenty-two years of age, who had Jones employed as a clerk. Jones was a Virginian of pleasing manners, the same age as his victim, who reposed in him unqualified confidence and confided to him all his business affairs. Miller and Jones started from Charleston to Vincennes, whence Miller was to go on to Kentucky to join his young wife and child. At Miller's suggestion, Jones took along a cane gun, and frequently walked behind the buggy and shot game. While going through a dense wood in Lawrence County, Jones shot Miller in the back of the head, inflicting a terrible wound. At the report of the gun the horse took fright and ran into the woods, throwing Miller out, who was piteously pleading for Jones to spare his life, but to no avail, as the murderer hastened to his victim, and, after breaking the gun in an effort to kill Miller by striking him on the head, took Miller's knife, which he borrowed from the victim's pocket, and dispatched him by repeatedly stabbing him in the throat. He concealed the body of the deceased under some brush, then washed his hands in a brook, and took the horse and buggy and drove to Vincennes, near where he was finally apprehended by the authorities. Jones believed Miller had a large sum of money with him and the object of his crime was robbery.

Although the curtain has long been drawn over this tragedy, yet the shocking nature of the crime, the mysterious character of the defendant and his melancholy confession, and the eminent counsel employed in the case, have made it of great interest in the legal history of Wabash County.

The crime was committed May 9, 1849, and after the indictment was returned in Lawrence County, a change of venue was awarded the defendant to Wabash County. The case was put to trial September 12, 1850, the eminent Judge Harlan presiding. For the people there appeared A. Kitchell, State's Attorney, who was assisted by the celebrated Usher F. Linder, whose fame as a fervid, dramatic and thrilling orator drew people for many miles distant to hear him "plead" the cause of the people. For the defense appeared E. B. Webb, a very talented lawyer, and the stately, elegant, scholarly and eloquent Charles H. Constable. As advocates, Linder and Constable were surpassed only by such men as Tom Corwin, Ben Hardin and Tom Marshall in the West, and their fame filled the Wabash Valley. The jurors who tried this memorable case were: Robert H. Leek, John M. Stewart, William Harris, David Daily, Thomas R. Hill, William B. Kenner, William Kimbrel, Jacob Oman, Samuel Haney, James C. Ashford and Nathan Bump.

The evidence was circumstantial but conclusively proved the diabolical guilt of the defendant. Many reputable witnesses testified that they knew Jones, and that he was well-behaved, gentlemanly, upright, genteel in his manners, always kind, sober and sedate and, in fact, a model young man, and well beloved by all who knew him. The defendant was of prepossessing appearance in some respects, and very quiet and graceful in his deportment, and was called a "ladies' man," and it was difficult for those who knew him to comprehend how one so trusted by men and admired by women, and whose morals were so irreproachable, could suddenly become guilty of so foul a crime, and they refused to believe him guilty until he was convicted by the overwhelming weight of evidence and the publication of his confession.

On Saturday morning, September 14th, Mr. Kitchell, the prosecutor, opened the argument to the jury in an able presentation of the evidence and the law. He was followed by Mr. Webb, who made an earnest and able speech for the defendant. Mr. Webb was followed by Mr. Constable, who, perhaps, made the ablest forensic effort of his life. For four hours he spoke with wonderful power and his discussion of the law of circumstantial evidence was masterly. The "Mt. Carmel Register," in its report of the trial, says of Mr. Constable's effort: "Upon the whole, perhaps, so powerful a speech was never made on so poor a subject." Mr. Linder's closing argument is said to have been the greatest of all that remarkable man's oratorical efforts. He spoke for several hours, carrying conviction to every mind, and the newspaper reports state that scarcely a dry eye was to be observed in the vast assembly, either inside the court room or among the multitudes that entirely filled the court house yard. The struggle between Constable and Linder was, doubtless, one of the most thrilling oratorical contests ever heard in the courts of Southern Illinois.

Mr. Constable was an aristocratic Marylander of the old school, and Linder a Kentuckian, and endowed with a remarkable gift of spontaneous eloquence. He was the oratorical meteor of the Illinois bar. His convivial habits ultimately wrecked his brilliant career, and in later years, his splendid practice gone, his stalwart frame sinking under the inroads of dissipation, he was compelled often to appeal to the charity of others to sustain an unhappy existence.

The jury deliberated one hour and returned a verdict of "Guilty," and upon its solemn announcement the defendant, until then so calm, and looking so young and innocent, realized his awful doom and his head fell violently forward and for the first time he gave way to tears, and his hitherto stout young heart, racked with the pangs of remorse and appalled with the horror of the gallows, broke in bitter anguish. Judge Harlan's remarks upon sentencing the defendant, were a model pronouncement of judicial learning and wisdom, and constitute one of the best examples of eloquence and logic to be found in our judicial literature. For pure idiomatic English, clearness of expression and elegance of diction, they bear a not unfavorable resemblance to Lord Mansfield's address to the mob in the court of King's Bench.

Jones was hung at the foot of the bluff, below where the water tower stands, on the 11th day of October, 1850, and it was estimated that the execution was witnessed by no less than 15,000 people, a vast host in that day, many of whom had driven in wagons more than 100 miles. One company came in wagons from Paducah, Ky. For three days prior to the execution, the ferries at Mt. Carmel were crowded with people from Indiana and Kentucky, who were coming to the "Hanging."

Before his execution Jones wrote a lengthy and startling confession, and gave it to his jailer, George W. Lingenfelter, for publication, which had an extensive sale and which may be found in the edition of the "Mt. Carmel Register," dated October 23, 1850. While the case was pending in court, Jones protested his innocence with a quiet earnestness, that shook the confidence of many in the belief of his guilt, until the day of his execution, and for a time he was the recipient of many manifestations of sincere and profound sympathy. Jones, like the celebrated Eugene Aram, was a schoolmaster.

A CIVIL WAR TIME TRAGEDY.—On Tuesday evening, November 3, 1863, a bloody affray took place in the streets of Mt. Carmel, growing out of the political bitterness engendered by the war. During that great struggle there were many men in Southern Illinois, who intensely sympathized with the Southern Confederacy and did not hesitate to flaunt their disloyal sentiments in the faces of their loyal neighbors, and Union soldiers were the especial objects of their animadversion.

Wabash County, though particularly loyal, was unfortunate enough to have some of this class of citizens. The "Knights of the Golden Circle" also had some aggressive members in the county. Consequently, it was impossible to suppress expressions of opinion calculated to cause bloodshed, and as a result of this hostile feeling and the bitterness of partisan zeal, blood was shed in Wabash, as well as in many other counties in Southern Illinois.

Iiram Stanton, a staunch Union man, and a Deputy Provost Marshal, who had raised a company of hundred-days men to be mustered into the Union cause at the outbreak of the war, was attacked by George W. Besore, an attorney of Mt. Carmel, and Zachariah Newkirk, a prominent farmer, as the result of an acrimonious political controversy. Stanton was shot through the wrist and through the thigh, and though dreadfully wounded, drew his pistol with his left hand and fired at each of his assailants, who were continuing their fire, and inflicted mortal wounds upon each of them. The tragedy created profound excitement and intense partisan feeling, and of course, there were conflicting reports about the distressing affair. Newkirk and Besore lingered several days, but succumbed to their wounds. Stanton hovered between life and death for some time but ultimately recovered. He was indicted but never brought to trial. The many friends of Newkirk and Besore greatly deplored their untimely taking off, and the friends of Stanton applauded him as a fearless and loyal man who would not apologize for his convictions or shrink from danger.

THE SINKING OF THE "KATE SARCHET."—On Friday morning, June 26, 1858, the fine stern wheel steamboat, "Kate Sarchet," upward bound, in attempting to go over the Grand Rapids Dam, two miles above Mt. Carmel, was wrecked and torn to pieces in the seething whirlpool of waters below the dam, rendering the boat and cargo a total loss.

The boat was attempting to run over the dam in order to avoid the payment of "lockage," a thing which several boats had attempted, and narrowly escaping destruction, and this was certainly the last of such foolhardy adventures. Three efforts were made to cross at the abutment, on the Illinois side, and in the third trial the boat was caught in the eddy below the dam and could not be backed out. As a last resort her Captain, "Hail Columbia" as he was called, ran her across to the lock on the Indiana shore, and as she ploughed through the raging waters, her chimneys and pipes were shaken down by the commotion, and finally she crashed, headlong, into the guard wall, and upon which those on board, numbering about twenty-five souls, made their escape.

After striking, the boat careened, filled with water, and her cabin and boiler rolled off into the water. The loss of the boat and cargo was estimated at fourteen thousand dollars. The boat was owned by the Dusouchet Brothers, of Mt. Vernon, Ind., who, with their families, were aboard. The officers remained at their posts, surrounded by smoke and steam, until she struck. The pilots were Captain Stephen D. Greer, of Mt. Carmel, now eighty-seven years of age, and his son, William C. Greer, of Mt. Carmel, who stayed at the wheel until their services were unavailing. While the boat was reeling and surging in the turbulent waters, threatening every moment to go to pieces, her passengers were panic-stricken with fright, and that they all escaped seemed almost miraculous. The freight hook was the only thing saved from the wreckage at the time. The floors of the upper and cabin deck were recovered and sold for lumber, and now constitute the floors of Judge E. B. Green's residence in Mt. Carmel.

LEBANON CAMP MEETINGS.—In the early history of the Western country, one of the popular forms of religious service was the camp-meeting. It has long since been succeeded by the revival, which is its natural outgrowth.

In those days men became famous campmeeting preachers, just as now they attain celebrity as revivalists and evangelists. These early preachers, as a rule, were not men of education and culture, but were zealous, self-sacrificing and courageous, and it was essential that they should be physically strong and capable of great endurance. They preached the consoling doctrine of "Hell Fire" and "Eternal Damnation," with a vengeance, and it comforted their hearers mightily.

The Rev. Jesse Walker, a Methodist preacher, held the first camp meeting in Illinois at Shiloh, in St. Clair County in 1807. The places for holding camp meetings were selected in pleasant woods, where plenty of shade and water abounded. The friends and neighbors were called in to assist in clearing up the ground, building the rude split log seats and the clapboard tents, which were made by setting posts in the ground and fastening cross-strips to them, on which clapboards were attached for siding, and the roof was made of clapboards. When all necessary arrangements were completed, the camp ground was dedicated with prayer. To these meetings people would come for many miles, and they would stay for days, often two weeks together.

There were several noted campmeeting grounds in Southern Illinois and Indiana. One of these was the Lebanon camp ground, about three miles west of Mt. Carmel, near the Mt. Carmel and Albion road, on what was then known as the William Beauchamp land, now owned by Robert Wallace, in Section 23, T. 1, S., R. 13 West, and which was admirably located in a magnificent forest. The meetings were first held, for several years, on Greathouse Creek, about two miles from Mt. Carmel, on the farm now owned by William Chapman, but this, being low ground and subject to overflow, was abandoned. The first meeting was held about 1833, and the association kept up its meetings for nearly twenty years with great interest and success. Its meetings were attended by great concourses of people, for those days, who came for miles and miles away, and many famous campmeeting preachers annually attended these gatherings, which were held in the month of September. A large number of permanent buildings were erected on the grounds, and a two-story, clapboard hotel was conducted during the meetings, for a good many years. The services were numerous and greatly protracted. There were usually four daily services, one before breakfast, being a prayer service, one at ten o'clock, one during the afternoon and a good long one at night. The sermons were often two hours in duration, and consisted almost exclusively of the preachers' peculiar exposition of scripture, and always concluding with a detailed and vivid description of hell and the certainty of everlasting damnation for those who died in sin. Surrounded by the gloomy forest and awed by the austerity of puritanical preachers, who pronounced upon even the most amiable of human weakness the infinite vengeance of outraged Deity, and listening to the lugubrious prayers and agonizing groans of despairing sinners, commingled with the joyful songs and triumphal shouts of the converted, was enough to overcome and prostrate the hardest sinners. In the midst of such emotional zeal, scores were prostrated and carried, utterly helpless, to their tents, where they would lie, sometimes for hours, in a pitiable state of complete mental and nervous collapse, which was supposed to be the indubitable proof of their spiritual redemptions.

THE GREAT FLOOD OF 1875.

The year 1875 will ever be memorable in the history of the Wabash Valley as the year of the "Great Flood." Of all the great floods that have visited this valley, none have ever wrought such devastation and inflicted such suffering as that of 1875. It was preceded by forty days of rain and reached its crests about the 18th of August, at which time the Wabash River rose to its high water mark, showing twenty-nine feet and three inches on the railroad bridge at Mt. Carmel. In places near Mt. Carmel the river attained a width of between seven and eight miles.

The vast sea of water swept everything before it. Crops, live stock and farm buildings were engulfed and carried down the river, and the losses to farmers ran into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, and hundreds of families were left homeless. Steamboats unloaded freight at the depot, where the Southern depot now stands, and it was weeks before the deluge subsided. It has become the great landmark in the history of Wabash River floods.

THE CYCLONE OF 1877.

In 1877, at the hour of four o'clock P. M., on Monday, June 4th, Mt. Carmel was partially destroyed by the terrible cyclone, which killed nineteen people and seriously injured seventy-five more, destroyed or partially demolished 200 buildings and rendered 600 people homeless. A more detailed sketch of this disastrous and calamitous storm will be found in the sketch of Mt. Carmel in Chapter XII of this volume.

STORY OF THE BIG TREE.

"Oh, the moonlight's bright tonight along the Wabash.

From the fields there comes the scent of new mown-hay.

Through the sycamores the candle lights are gleaming.

On the banks of the Wabash, far away."

The great sycamore trees along the Wabash River have been made famous by that sweetly sentimental song, "On the Banks of the Wabash." The grand monarch of them all was certainly one of the largest trees ever known to exist between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains.

It stood on the bank of Coffee Creek, a few hundred feet from where the creek empties into the Great Wabash, at Rochester, and about six miles below Mt. Carmel, in Wabash County.

The tree was full twenty-eight feet in circumference and eight feet and eleven inches in diameter, and its height was in proportion. It was a natural curiosity and was visited by many botanists and scientific men. It was many hundred years old and in a fairly good state of preservation, when the owner of the land upon which it stood, about 1897, cut it down in order to avoid the visitations of hundreds who were constantly going to see this great natural wonder of our forests. The destruction of the tree provoked very bitter criticism and was deplored as an act of vandalism. Our largest forest trees are mere saplings in comparison with this mighty behemoth of the forest. Its antiquity must have been almost as great as the oaks of Sherwood Forest, and it was doubtless standing as a lordly sentinel "On the Banks of the Wabash," when Columbus discovered America.

CHAPTER XVII.

ABORIGINES IN WABASH COUNTY.

INDIAN TRIBES WHO HAVE CONGREGATED IN THE COUNTY—EVIDENCE OF EARLIER OCCUPATION—INDIAN MOUNDS—POTTERY AND OTHER PREHISTORIC RELICS—SITES OF VILLAGES AND BURYING PLACES—ORIGIN OF THE NAME WABASH—THE OLD INDIAN TRAILS—MODERN RELICS FOUND AT OLD PALMYRA, MT. CARMEL AND M'CLEARY'S BLUFF.

The following account of the Indians and their remains in Wabash County comprises about all that is known with certainty concerning the aborigines of this section. It is made up from notes gathered by Dr. Schneck from the early white settlers who came in personal contact with the Indians, and from the records of explorations made during the past twenty years:

The evidences that Wabash County, Ill., was occupied by a race of people prior to the present inhabitants are: 1. Accounts of the Indians that were seen here given by early settlers. 2. Artificial mounds. 3. Graves in which one or more persons are buried, either with or without implements used by Indians. 4. Ossuaries, containing miscellaneous collections of human bones. 5. Shallow excavations, sites of wigwams. 6. Shell heaps or kitchen refuse heaps. 7. Implements of flint, stone, copper, iron, bone and pottery.

First, the origin of the word Wabash may be of interest in this connection. It is derived from the Shawnee word, Oua-ba-chi-oni, meaning silver. In the Illinois dialect the letters "Ou" were changed to "W," this gave 'Wabashiwi. This name was first given by Marquette to the Ohio, but afterwards restricted to the present Wabash River. When Edwards County was divided, in 1824, that portion in which we live was very properly designated Wabash County.

When the whites first came to this vicinity, about the beginning of the last century, they found it thickly inhabited by roving bands of savages; in the eastern portion by the Cherokee Indians, in the western by the Piankishaws and Shawnees. As the Europeans became more numerous the Indians slowly disappeared, until about 1828, when they had all left. A few would occasionally return later for the purpose of barter. Their principal headquarters were at Vincennes and Shawneetown. And it is only a few years since the last traces of the old "Indian Trail," or "Trace Road," were obliterated. This led from Vincennes to Shawneetown. It passed through Old Bonpas town, near where Grayville now stands, crossed Bonpas Creek at the Grayson ford or ferry, depending on the stage of the water. This is now the E. Freese farm. It then crossed the W. Wright farm, thence through the Compton Prairie, crossed Coffee Creek at the E. B. Keen farm, passed over the sites of James Calverly's, Daniel Tilton's and Robert Chapman's farms, crossed the Crawfish Creek a short distance above where the present wagon road bridge stands, touched the Wabash River at Old Palmyra, then passed up its right bank some distance, then through the land where the Fox farms are now located; it passed northeast of the sites of Timberville and Allendale, and crossed the Wabash River at the Vallie ferry, which was situated at Vallie's Ripple, a short distance below the mouth of Raccoon Creek. In the recollection of some of our oldest citizens, this was the highway of travel for both the red man and paleface. The United States mail was carried, for a number of years, over this route from Vincennes to Shawneetown. One week the mail went down and the next came up. Along this dangerous and lonely trace our forefathers, as well as the Indians, would carry their corn-meal to the salt mines in Saline county and exchange it, bushel for bushel, for salt. Many interesting incidents are told by old settlers of their hardships and fights with Indians, which occurred along this road in those pioneer days, but we cannot stop to relate them here. After there were settlements at Timberville, Mt. Carmel and Rochester, the road was so changed as to pass through them.

INDIAN MOUNDS.—I have so far been able to locate 92 mounds in this county. I will notice them very briefly. Beginning at the northeastern corner of the county, we find a group of six mounds on the N. B. Jordan farm; near Buchanan's ferry on the Stillwell farm is another group of five mounds; at Old Palmyra is a group of 20 mounds. I have explored a goodly number of these, but can only give you a general outline of the results. They all contained one or more human skeletons; some contained flint implements and fragments of pottery; others, large boulders, and one of them more than ten bushels of mussel shells. I recognized eleven species of shells, all of which are common at this time in the Wabash River. Another contained a copper kettle and a large number of china beads and a large number of beads made from the canine teeth of bears and wolves. These last were made by boring two holes on the same side into the nerve cavity of the tooth, then reaving them on to a string. I also have record of two mounds on the J. G. Beesly farm. They are overgrown by a thicket of crab trees; on the L. W. White place is another group of five mounds, they are also in a crab orchard thicket and near one of the branches of Crawfish Creek; on the Z. Newkirk farm stands another mound from which have been taken pieces of isinglass and a sandstone pipe, carved into the form of a bird. This pipe is now in the American Museum of Natural History, New York. Near the Air Line depot, on the commons near Mt. Carmel, Ill., there was formerly a mound; the earth has all been hauled away. It contained human bones, a small brass bucket, arrow heads and a pair of copper bracelets, marked "Montreal," and a flintlock gun. In the brass kettle were the charred bones of a small animal and some parched corn. On the farm owned by Hon. S. Z. Landes is a group of 21 mounds. They stand in an old field. This is the largest group of mounds in the county. None of them have been excavated, so far as I know. There is another group of 17 mounds on Mrs. Heniken's farm. On the farm north of Rochester, T. I S., R. 13 W., is a group of six large mounds. On the J. R. Bratton farm is a mound which I am informed is 30 feet high and covers near one-half acre. On the land of the Stillwell estate is another large mound, and there is a group of three mounds on the land known as the J. O'Neal farm. The mounds are usually located near a stream or a body of water, and are generally composed of the same material as the surrounding soil, and contain various articles used by the American Indians, both of their own manufacture and of such as they could secure from the Europeans. Many of them also contained one or more human skeletons. Who were the architects of these structures? We have not the time now to attempt the full answer to this interesting question, but will at once give our conclusions, based on a slight knowledge of the most recent literature on this subject and on the results of the investigation of the mounds in this county, which we have made during the past twenty years. They were built by the American Indians who were in possession of the lands when the Europeans discovered the continent. This, we think, is true not only of the mounds of this county but also of the aboriginal earth-works throughout the Mississippi valley. The first and most important reason is, that while many of these remains are of unknown antiquity, it is proven beyond a doubt that many are of quite recent date; numerous instances are recorded where Indian tribes have built extensive mounds after the whites came among them. Many of the mounds have been found to contain articles which they must have obtained from the white traders. I have already mentioned the finding of a flint-lock gun and a pair of copper bracelets in a mound at Mt. Carmel, and of a copper kettle and china beads in one at Old Palmyra; a number of other instances could be given.

SCATTERING BURIAL PLACES.—In addition to the skeletons found in the mounds, many scattering graves have been, and are still being found in various parts of the county. Some of these contain many articles which were of use while alive, and were supposed to be needed in the spirit land. Schiller has truthfully said:

"Here bring the last gifts!—and with these
The last lament be said:

Let all that pleased, and yet may please,
Be buried with the dead,

"Beneath his head the hatchet hide,
That he so stontly swung.
And place the bear's fat haunch beside—
The journey hence is long.

"The paints that warriors love to use,
Place here within his hand,
That he may shine with ruddy hues
Amidst the spirit-land."

I dug into a grave on Mr. Jacob Seiler's farm; it contained one human skeleton and a number of table knives and forks. In another there was found, besides a set of human bones, a catlinite pipe, one small tin box filled with mica, a second tin box contained a thumb lancet. There were also two razor blades, one steel, the other flint, half-gallon red paint, iron ochre, a number of brass buttons, one pair of scissors, a large number of small square pieces of sheet copper; these were twisted into small cones and probably served as spangles on the ends of the buckskin threads which were attached to his garments. This is the more probable explanation since they were twisted around some shreds of fibrous tissue. Three trees which stood near the grave, in different directions, had been blazed, but the markings had been covered by the new growth. From the annual rings which had been made on these trees since they had been marked, I concluded the body must have been buried there for nearly seventy years. This grave was along the White River and nearly one mile from its mouth; it was about three feet deep. Many of these graves contain nothing but human bones, while in others I have also found the bones of some of the lower animals; a few contain arrow or spear-heads, while in others there are implements of chase. The bodies were usually buried in the recumbent position with the face toward the east; but in the vicinity of Rochester, many of the bodies had been placed in the sitting posture. We may learn from this that among Indians, as well as among Europeans, a certain custom may prevail in one neighborhood which is quite different from that of an adjoining neighborhood.

In the northern portion of the county quite a number of a different kind of graves have been found; they are known as ossuaries. They are grave-like openings in the ground, and are usually lined with slabs or rock; into these they cast the accumulated bones of their dead. It is a common custom with many uncivilized people to bury temporarily those who die of disease, and especially warriors killed in battle. Their bodies are placed in the ground or on scaffolds, or suspended in swings in the air. Then, at stated periods or before moving to a new locality, they gather up all of the bones and deposit them in one common grave, with high ceremonies and a feast. This custom appears to have prevailed quite extensively in the southwestern portion of the county. I have dug into quite a number of such ossuaries; they usually contain nothing but a miscellaneous heap of bones. I remember one instance in which there were eleven femori, with many other bones in one such vault.

Probably the most abundant, and to the relic hunter the most interesting, Indian remains are shallow excavations, varying from fifteen to fifty feet in diameter, and usually about three feet in depth at the center, whence they gradually slope upward to the surface. These are the sites of wigwams. The structures which were built over them were usually cone shaped, and had an opening at the top to give exit to the smoke and for ventilation. The fire was built in the center, and lowest part of the excavation, while the inmates occupied the gradually rising slope on all sides of it, thus getting the most benefit from the fire with the least loss of space. In these places one often finds charcoal, burnt sandstone, stone implements of various kinds, and especially pottery; I have also found burnt corn and mussel shell. In one instance I took seven species of shells from such an excavation. With a few exceptions these are the only places where pottery has been found in this county. A number of these dwellings were built together, forming an Indian town. On Hanging Rock, a high bluff in a sharp bend of the Wabash River about two miles northeast of Mt. Carmel, there was such a village which contained no less than forty such wigwams. In digging about this old village site, I find that many of their dead must have been buried just outside the wigwam, for I found many human skeletons buried in the spaces between the excavations. It is reasonable to suppose that these were temporary burials and that it was the intention to take them up at the proper time and give them a ceremonial burial, and that before the time the villagers were driven from the home. On the commons at Mt. Carmel is another site of an ancient village. I have counted forty-seven excavations here in the space of a few acres. I have so far failed to find any skeletons near this village.

But the most extensive and the most noteworthy village in the county is the one at McCleary's Bluff. This is a range of hills about 150 feet high, forming a steep bluff on the Wabash River and affording an excellent view of the river in both directions. It is situated about ten miles southwest of Mt. Carmel. At this point have been found by far the most interesting and the greatest number of specimens of pottery thus far discovered in this county. The immediate locality is an old field, on what is locally known as the McCleary farm. It covers about six acres of ground, and is on the highest point of the range of hills; the soil is sandy. This field was the first land cleared by Mr. McCleary after his arrival in this county, in 1816, and has now been in constant cultivation for ninety-four years; a portion of it was for a while an apple and peach orchard. It has all this time been noted for the great number of fragments of pottery and other implements which were found on its surfaces from time to time. And it is stated that, when first settled, there were a number of perfect pieces of pottery found under the roots of trees which had been blown down. But it was not until after the heavy rains and deep washes of 1875 that the most interesting and important finds were made. During that summer alone there were taken from this field two basins from eight to ten inches in diameter and about three inches deep; two bottles with long necks and of about one quart capacity; one pipe, made of the same material as the rest of the pottery. It is an imitation of an Indian woman in a sitting posture. There were also found one small long-necked bottle of one-half ounce capacity, apparently a trinket; four bowls with short, wide necks, varying from six to twelve inches in height and from six to ten inches in diameter; one large pot whose greatest diameter is 19 inches, the mouth is flaring and has two eyes, through which a bale may be fastened and the vessel swung over a fire. Two rattles made of pottery, described further on. Many other objects were found here but I will mention but one more; this is an image of an Indian head carved from flint spar. Most of the finds have been made near the centers and bottoms of these shallow excavations, and were usually near beds of charcoal, showing that they had been used and left about the fire in the wigwam. Some of the vessels were partially filled with small bones or charred corn. Some of the bones were found to be those of the wild turkey and deer. Mussel shells were also quite commonly found. Here were also found masses of the material of which the pottery is made. This consists of crushed mussel shells mixed with clay.

There are doubtless many more of these town sites in this county that have been entirely effaced by the filling up of depressions so they cannot now be recognized. There is another class of remains that is closely related to that just described. I refer to kitchen refuse heaps. They are usually near the sites of Indian towns or some noted fishing or hunting grounds. They usually consist of a miscellaneous mass of bones, teeth, shells, fragments of pottery beads, flint, etc. I have found these heaps as much as two and one-half feet thick, and in the one on Hanging Rock there were seven species of shells represented, all of which may still be found alive in the near vicinity. Near each of the three villages mentioned above I found large accumulations of such materials. They are also found at many other places along streams where no evidences of wigwams can be found. These places were probably the scenes of their ceremonial feasts. From the great number of mussel shells found in these heaps, as well as in the mounds, graves and wigwam sites, we may infer that the Indians were very fond of them. With the prairie stocked with deer, turkey and numerous other game, and the river swarming with fish, mussels and water fowls, the Indians in this vicinity could truly sing as in the language of their Great Spirit:

"I have given you lands to hunt in,
I have given you streams to fish in,
I have given you bear and bison,
I have given you elk and antelope,
I have given you brant and beaver,
Filled the marshes full of wild-fowl,
Filled the rivers full of fishes."

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE LEGEND OF TUCKAWANNA, THE RENEGADE.

(By Theodore G. Risley.)

"Down the rivers, o'er the prairies,
Came the warriors of the nation,
Painted like the leaves of autumn,
Painted like the sky of morning,
In their faces stern defiance,
In their hearts the feuds of ages."

The Miami Indians were a branch of the great Algonquin family. Their domain was vast and they were able to muster a great host of warriors. Baneroff says their dialect was the most fertile and widely diffused known to the red men.

When discovered by the French they dwelt principally around Green Bay, Wis. They had body guards for their chiefs, who received superior consideration. To them the English applied the name "Twightwees." They were cousins of the Illini, and brothers of the Piankishaws, and were a warlike tribe. In their wars with the French and their ancient enemies, the fierce Sioux, they were driven southward to the Maumee River, near the present site of Fort Wayne, Ind., where the crucial conflict between the French and English began. They were hostile to the English, and finally joined the great conspiracy of the powerful Ottawa Chief, Pontiac, whom the historian Parkman says, was the most ambitious and resourceful warrior of his race.

During the Revolutionary War they were friends of the English. In 1790 their famous chief, Little Turtle, led fifteen hundred of his warriors against General Harmar, whom Washington had sent against them, and inflicted on him a crushing defeat, and the same year this adroit chief surprised and destroyed the army of General St. Claire. Not until "Mad Anthony Wayne," in 1794, overwhelmed and defeated their bold warriors on the banks of the Maumee, could the United States make peace with this powerful tribe. After the "Treaty of Greenville" they gradually moved west and settled on the west bank of the Ouabache (Wabash River), between the Vermilion and Little Wabash Rivers.

One branch of the tribe was called Oujatanons, which had five settlements on the west bank of the Wabash River. One village, which was said to have been about twenty miles south of Vincennes, was called Oujatanous, and it had a chief who was called "Grand Door of the Wabash." This village is supposed to have been at Hanging Rock, about three and one-half miles above Mt. Carmel, and judging from the traditions of white men and the results of excavations made in the vicinity, must have had from forty to fifty wigwams. The excavating has revealed many skeletons, kitchen refuse and great quantities of mussel shells (the mussels were used for food), and heaps of the bones of smaller animals. A more picturesque and suitable locality for an Indian village could not have been found in the Wabash Valley.

To the south of this village, on the Wabash River about fifteen miles distant, in the vicinity of what is now called Village Bend, their cousins, the Piankishaws, had a village, then known as Peanquinchias. While these tribes were consins, there existed between them an ancient and bitter hostility. The Piankishaws were a fierce and marauding band, bent on plunder and bloodshed, but at the time of which we write, they had a chief named "Red Wings," who loved peace better than war, and was loth to wield the sanguinary hatchet. In his tribe there was a fiery young warrior called Tuckawanna, meaning "The Panther Hound." He was given this weird cognomen in commemoration of a daring feat which he had performed. A huge and ferocious panther was known to have its sequestered abode in the region now known as McCleary's Bluff, and at nights to lie in wait amid the trees and thickets that grew in dense clusters just above a deer lick, where the Indians were accustomed to go by moonlight and conceal themselves for the purpose of slaying deer.

The dread beast had not only killed many deer, and especially fawns, in the spring time, and frightened the grazing herds from the locality of the lick, but in its hunger during a protracted storm of snow and sleet, had ferociously attacked and desperately wounded two "braves," who were in pursuit of game for their people, who were threatened with starvation by the prolonged rigors of winter. The credulous savages had become imbued with a superstitious fear of the animal and believed it to be a supernatural creature. But the bold Tuckawanna was without fear and little given to the idle superstitions of his race, so, preparing himself with a great hunting knife, he constructed a cunning ambush at the foot of the lick and awaited the coming of the deer and the leap of the panther upon his unsuspecting prey. Upon the third night of his long and lonely vigil the timid deer came again to the lick, as did the panther. Suddenly the great beast sprang from the brushes upon a deer, pinioned it to the ground, and as he crushed its bones and began to lap its warm blood, Tuckawanna leaped from his ambush and instantly plunged the knife deep into the palpitating heart of the ferocious monster, and as he did so it uttered an unearthly shriek, released its bloody jaws, and after a short and convulsive struggle, died at the feet of the intrepid savage. The story of this daring deed filled the rest of the tribe with awe and admiration for Tuckawanna's bravery.

The hunting of the panther, the elk and the deer was too tame a diversion for the wild and restless ambition of the fiery Tuckawanna. He longed to be the chief of his tribe and thirsted for the glories of conquest. He loved war and his savage heart burned for the foray, the ambush, the spoils of warfare and its wretched captives. He was endowed with a nervous eloquence that drew the listening savages about him, while with burning oratory he taunted them with the memory of ancient wrongs and bitter terrors, painted graphic pictures of fierce triumphs, midnight massacres, the burning of victims at the stake, plunderings, scalplings and the feats of victorious warriors. With fiery zeal he would denounce their tranquil chief, Hunkahappy, or Red Wings, so named because he was in the habit of wearing a plume made of the wings of red birds, as a feeble squaw man, who was unfit to be the ruler of his tribe, which numbered about twelve hundred souls.

The romantic eloquence, the wild tales of vengeance and triumph, uttered by Tuckawanna, were lost upon the spirits of his hearers, because they believed him to be treacherous and were loyal to Red Wings. In the bitterness of his disappointment Tuckawanna repined and mourned ever his baffled ambition, but he suddenly resolved to kill Red Wings and, by his prowess and eloquence, make himself chief of the tribe. Mastered by his absorbing ambition, he grew morose, refused to join in the chase or feasts and incessantly brooded over plans to encompass the destruction of Red Wings. Upon this murderous purpose he was now fully resolved, and to which perfidious end he cunningly planned. Some distance from the village, lying in verdant beauty between the foot of the bluffs and the low bank of the river, there was a beautiful plot of luxuriant meadow, a kind of natural park, where succulent grasses, flecked with motley hued wild flowers, grew in rich profusion, and to feed upon its greensward, and drink from the river's limpid water, there would come at night time great troops of deer, besides it was nearly their favorite "lick," where Tuckawanna had slain the great panther.

Now this sylvan retreat was a favorite spot with Red Wings, and he was accustomed to go thither by night, to slay deer. He would conceal himself in the hollow of a great sycamore tree that stood on the very brink of the river, and against the roots of which the moonlit waters rippled in mournful monody, as if chanting a requiem in memory of the departed spirits of his kindred.

Tuckawanna knew that Red Wings frequented this lonely spot, and had designed that there he would take his life and cast his body into the hurrying waters of the river, and having preceded his chief to the scene of the impending tragedy and retired into concealment, he stoically awaited the coming of his unsuspecting victim. It was not long until Red Wings appeared and seated himself on one of the projecting roots of the great tree on the river side, where he was fully hidden from the sight of the approaching deer, and as he watched and waited for their approach along the narrow path that led from the "lick" down to the meadow, being exhilarated by the sweet odors of the wild crab apple, and listening to the songs of myriads of whip-poor-wills, he was soothed into tranquil meditation. Tuckawanna, who was hidden behind some immense logs, which the floods of the river had drifted against the sycamore tree, now sprang forward and with a tomahawk crushed, at one blow, the skull of his chief, whose body tumbled into the deep waters at his feet, never to be found by his tribesmen.

After the atrocious deed was done, the cruel Tuckawanna knew that he would be suspected of the fearful crime committed against his own tribe; knew that they had long mistrusted his revengeful and traitorous nature, and that, as soon as it was discovered that their chief had disappeared, he would be accused of having ensnared and dispatched him. He grew fearful of their almost certain vengeance, and abandoned his dream of chieftainship and fled to the wigwams of the Oujatanons at Hanging Rock, where he found refuge and in time was adopted into the tribe.

Tuckawanna's bold address, prowess and ready eloquence were much admired by their chief, Grand Door of the Wabash. With true savage stoicism, he, of course, concealed the reason why he had turned renegade and the cause of his now deadly hostility to his native tribe. Grand Door of the Wabash had a beautiful daughter, named Nantahalo, meaning "The Evening Twilight," who was loved by the young warrior, Callusaha, "The Sweet Waters." Soon after joining the tribe Tuckawanna became enamoured of Nantahalo, and all the arts of his fervid passion were exerted to play upon the springs of her affections, but without avail.

Grand Door of the Wabash was, however, well pleased with the stately form, the strong passions and martial fire of the infatuated renegade and looked with pleasure upon his fierce wooing of Nantahalo. It was the habit of the youth of the tribe, in the eventide, to gather about the edges and on the brow of the great rock and listen to the songs of the whip-poor-wills, watch the deer come forth to drink, tell tales of their forefathers and talk and laugh and make love together. One evening as the chief sat at his lodge door, Tuckawanna appealed to him for the hand of Nantahalo, to which request he assented, although he knew his daughter dreaded the jealous and furious renegade.

Tuckawanna was under the constant suspicion and surveillance of Callusaha, who mistrusted and abhorred him. Callusaha had a natural love of peace, was reputed to be brave and generous and had all the savage virtues of his race. He loved the beautiful Nantahalo, and believed that the treacherous renegade intended to rob him of her, whether by fair means or foul, and so, for her safety and his own, he never relaxed his vigilance over every movement of Tuckawanna. After his meeting with the chief and procuring his consent to the hand of Nantahalo, Tuckawanna again pressed his suit but only to be rejected, and then swore vengeance against her young life and vowed to wash out the stain of his degradation in Callusaha's blood. Soon after he saw Nantahalo, on a summer evening, sitting on the crest of the rock alone, and not knowing that Callusaha was near, secretly guarding against his treachery, he stealthily stole over to where she was seated and commanded her to flee at once with him to the neighboring tribe of Shawnees. This she boldly refused to do, whereupon he seized her in his great brawny arms and was in the very act of satiating his flaming rage by hurling her headlong into the river below, as he had often threatened her he would do, if she persisted in refusing his suit, when, like a tiger, leaping upon its prey, Callusaha sprang from a cluster of wild plum bushes, and with a keen hunting knife in his hand, seized Tuckawanna by his raven black hair, and with one plunge of his trusty blade laid his infuriated foe in death at his feet, rescued his beloved Nantahalo from her awful peril and rolled the ghastly corpse of Tuckawanna into the swift flowing river.

The river soon afterward, taking a sudden rise, had finally carried the body of Tuckawanna down the swollen flood and lodged it in the drift of great logs at the roots of the sycamore tree, the very spot where Tuckawanna had concealed himself the night he slew Chief Red Wings, and there it was found by some roving Piankishaws, who had known him while living in their tribe, and identified it by some fearful scars left from wounds he had received in a struggle with a great bear he had slain.

Thus perished Tuckawanna, the bold and treacherous regenade of the Piankishaws, whose grim courage and tragic fate became a lasting part of the legendary lore of the fierce and cruel Piankishaws.

BIOGRAPHICAL

CHAPTER XIX.

THE PART OF BIOGRAPHY IN GENERAL HISTORY— CITIZENS OF WABASH COUNTY AND OUTLINES OF PERSONAL HISTORY—INDIVIDUAL SKETCHES ARRANGED IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER.

The verdict of mankind has awarded to the Muse of History the highest place among the Classic Nine. The extent of her office, however, appears to be, by many minds, but imperfectly understood. The task of the historian is comprehensive and exacting. True history reaches beyond the doings of court or camp, beyond the issue of battles or the effects of treaties, and records the trials and the triumphs, the failures and the successes of the men who make history. It is but an imperfect conception of the philosophy of events that fails to accord to portraiture and biography its rightful position as a part—and no unimportant part—of historic narrative. Behind and beneath the activities of outward life the motive power lies out of sight, just as the furnace fires that work the piston and keep the ponderous screw revolving down in the darkness of the hold. So, the impulsive power which shapes the course of communities may be found in the molding influences which form its citizens.

It is no mere idle curiosity that prompts men to wish to learn the private, as well as the public, lives of their fellows. Rather is it true that such desire tends to prove universal brotherhood; and the interest in personality and biography is not confined to men of any particular caste or vocation.

The list of those to whose lot it falls to play a conspicuous part in the great drama of life, is comparatively short; yet communities are made up of individuals, and the aggregate of achievements—no less than the sum total of human happiness—is made up of the deeds of those men and women whose primary aim, through life, is faithfully to perform the duty that comes nearest to hand. Individual influences upon human affairs will be considered potent or insignificant, according to the standpoint from which it is viewed. To him who, standing upon the seashore, notes the ebb and flow of the tides and listens to the sullen roar of the waves, as they break upon the beach in seething foam, seemingly chafing at their limitations, the ocean appears so vast as to need no tributaries. Yet, without the smallest rill that helps to swell the "Father of Waters," the mighty torrent of the Mississippi would be lessened, and the beneficent influence of the Gulf Stream diminished. Countless streams, currents and counter currents—sometimes mingling, sometimes counteracting each other—collectively combine to give motion to the accumulated mass of waters. So is it—and so must it ever be—in the ocean of human action, which is formed by the blending and repulsion of currents of thought, of influence and of life, yet more numerous and more tortuous than those which form the "fountains of the deep." The acts and characters of men, like the several faces that compose a composite picture, are wrought together into a compact or heterogeneous whole. History is condensed biography; "Biography is History teaching by example."

It is both interesting and instructive to rise above the generalization of history and trace, in the personality and careers of the men from whom it sprang, the principles and influences, the impulses and ambitions, the labors, struggles and triumphs that engross their lives.

Here are recorded the careers and achievements of pioneers who, "when the fullness of time had come," came from widely separated sources, some from beyond the sea, impelled by divers motives, little conscious of the import of their acts, and but dimly anticipating the harvest which would spring from the sowing. They built their primitive homes, toiling for a present subsistence while laying the foundations of private fortunes and future advancement.

Most of these have passed away, but not before they beheld a development of business and population surpassing the wildest dreams of fancy or expectation. A few yet remain whose years have passed the allotted three-score and ten, and who love to recount, among the cherished memories of their lives, their reminiscences of early days.

[The following items of personal and family history, having been arranged in encyclopedic (or alphabetical) order as to names of the individual subjects, no special index to this part of the work will be found necessary.]

ADAMS, George.—Among the representative and successful farmers of Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is George Adams, formerly a teacher in the county and for many years a carpenter. Mr. Adams has himself cleared and improved his farm and has put it into a fine state of cultivation. He has shown excellent judgment in the conduct of his affairs and has been successful through hard work and energy. He was born in Brooke County, W. Va., February 26, 1833, and is a son of Francis and Eleanor (Green) Adams, natives of Maryland. Francis Adams was a son of Samuel and Sarah (Preston)

Adams, also of Maryland, and was married in his native State. He and his wife moved to Morgan County, Ohio, and there spent the remainder of their lives.

In his boyhood George Adams accompanied his parents to Morgan County, Ohio, and in 1854, when he reached his majority, left home, having received a good education in Morgan County schools. He proceeded by boat from McConnellsville to Evansville, and thence by train to Princeton, Ind. With others he hired a four-horse team to reach Mt. Carmel, Ill., and while traveling through the bottom, it rained so hard that they remained all night at a house on the Indiana side of the river. After reaching Mt. Carmel Mr. Adams walked to Timberville, in Wabash Precinct, and worked for others until his marriage. He spent seven winters teaching school in Wabash County and for some time followed the trade of carpenter. He later turned his attention to farming, and after his marriage moved to a forty-acre farm belonging to his wife. Only eight acres of the land was cleared and he began improving the farm at once for cultivation, becoming possessed of 150 acres all in one body, of which he cleared and cultivated all except twelve acres of timber. He gave his son, Charles F., thirty-five acres of land.

In February, 1858, Mr. Adams married Jane Wood, a native of Wabash County, daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth (Couch) Wood, and they became parents of the following children: Eleanor, Mrs. Charles Runyon, now deceased; Flora, Mrs. Linder Courter, of Mt. Carmel; Charles F., of Wabash Precinct; Myrtle, Mrs. William F. Courter, of Allendale, Ill.; Joshua, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Clara, Mrs. Webster Seibert, of Mt. Carmel; Della V., Mrs. Joseph Wright, of Wabash Precinct; Ruth, at home; George, died in 1905.

The family attend the Christian Church and in politics Mr. Adams is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. He is among the oldest residents of Wabash County and is considered one of its most useful and public-spirited citizens, being identified with the best interests of his community.

ALKA, John (deceased), who passed away at his home in Keensburg Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., November 3, 1906, was a native of the county, born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, and spent his entire life near his birthplace. He was a useful, industrious citizen, a kind husband and father, and had the respect of his friends and acquaintances. Mr. Alka was born February 26, 1863, son of Ernest and Rosanna (Ameter) Alka, both natives of Germany. The parents emigrated to the United States and settled on a farm in Wabash County. Mrs. Alka was married first to a Mr. Ameter.

The boyhood of John Alka was spent on a farm and he received his education in the district schools. When a young man he began farming on his own account on eighty acres of land in Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he remained until 1895, then sold it and bought eighty acres in Section 4, of Keensburg Precinct, where his widow still resides. The latter farm was pretty well improved, containing but six acres of timber land. He became a successful farmer and also raised considerable stock. Mrs. Alka has purchased two forty-acre tracts in Belmont Precinct. She now lives on the home place and hires the farm work done.

Four children were born to Mr. Alka and his wife, namely: Clella, born December 25, 1891; Eber Ernest, July 19, 1893; Everett Ameter, August 28, 1902; Cleo Madeline, February 14, 1905. Mr. Alka was a Republican in politics and fraternally belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Belmont. He was well known as an energetic, enterprising farmer and had many friends to mourn his loss. Mrs. Alka is a member of the Christian Church. She has shown marked ability in the management of her affairs and is wholly absorbed in rearing and educating her children.

AMETER, Christian, a well known farmer of Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., has spent nearly his entire life in the county, and has been identified with the development and improvement of his community. Mr. Ameter laid out the town of Mand, which was named by Judge Bell in honor of his deceased daughter, and for many years Mr. Ameter conducted a store in that town. He was born in Mt. Carmel, Wabash County, November 16, 1848, son of Christian and Rosanna (Stegger) Ameter, natives of Switzerland, who came to the United States in 1848. Christian Ameter and his wife lived for a time at Olney, Ill., where he died before his son's birth. His widow later moved to Mt. Carmel, where she afterward married Ernest Alka, mentioned elsewhere in this work, in connection with his son, the late John Alka. Mr. Alka and his wife lived in Wabash County after their marriage and there both died. By her first marriage she had two children, a daughter who died in infancy, and Christian. By her second marriage she had 7 sons and 4 daughters.

Christian Ameter was the younger of the two children of his parents, and after his mother's second marriage, lived with his mother and stepfather until he was thirteen years of age, when he was bound out to work for three years. He attended the district school at Olney nine months and spent nine months at McKendree College, Lebanon, Ill. In 1869-70, he engaged in teaching, following this profession during the winter and farming in summer, until 1882, when he established a general store at Maud, becoming Postmaster of the village and also conducting his store. He held the office of Postmaster until 1890, then sold his merchandise stock, but still owns the store building.

In 1879, Mr. Ameter secured land in Section 28, Belmont Precinct, where he developed a fine farm. He had but thirty-four and one-half acres at first, but kept adding to it until he now has a good farm. After the Town of Maud was laid out Mr. Ameter erected a store building and two residences there, and has sold three building lots there. He does not do much work himself but superintends the management of his farm. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is a Trustee, is also a Class-Leader and a teacher in the Sunday School. He is also Recording and District Steward and active in church work. He is much interested in the cause of prohibition and is always ready to give his support to any measure he believes will advance the public welfare. He has been School Treasurer since 1886.

In 1874, Mr. Ameter married Hattie R. Brown, daughter of Capt. G. W. Brown. Mr. Ameter and his wife never had any children, but he adopted the daughter of his half sister Elizabeth, after the latter's death. This adopted daughter, Bessie, married John Deputy, son of E. C. Deputy, and they have one daughter, Christella. Mr. Deputy and his wife reside with Mr. Ameter and Mr. Deputy helps operate the farm. Mr. Ameter is a farmer of intelligence and enterprise and was also an able and successful business man. He has shown good judgment in carrying on his enterprises and has won success through his own energy and ambition.

ANKENBRANDT, Michael.—One of the successful farmers and stockmen of Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is Michael Ankenbrandt, a native of the precinct, born February 1, 1862, son of Sebastian and Catherine (Berberich) Ankenbrandt, the former a native of Hamelburg, Germany, and the latter of Belmont Precinct. The parents of Catherine Berberich were Michael and Lucy (Schuman) Berberich, natives of Germany, who were early settlers of Belmont Precinct, where they secured land. Sebastian Ankenbrandt was left an orphan as a young boy and he came to America by himself when fourteen years of age and worked several years in a brewery in Baltimore, Md., then moved to Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, where he worked two years for others and then bought land. He has added to his possessions from time to time and now owns 620 acres, of which there are 200 acres in timber and pasture. Since locating in Wabash County he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits and attained a very fair degree of success, being a self-made man.

The children born to Sebastian Ankenbrandt and his wife were: Michael; Frank and George, of Belmont Precinct; Anna and Charles, at home; Mary, Mrs. Nicholas Waller, of Mt. Carmel; Lena, at home; Margaret, Mrs. Earl Waller, of St. Louis; Clara, died at the age of twenty years; Philip, died at the age of two years.

Michael Ankenbrandt attended the district school as a boy and remained at home, assisting his father with the farm work, until his marriage, November 23, 1892, to Anna Pfeister, born in Belmont Precinct, daughter of George and Anna (Woltz) Pfeister, natives of Germany. After marriage Mr. Ankenbrandt moved to a farm of 180 acres in Belmont Precinct. He has cleared and put 100 acres under cultivation. He has since been conducting the farm and has purchased 262 acres in Wayne County, Ill., which he rents. He plants about sixty acres of wheat and sixty acres of corn and the balance is used for pasture. He breeds registered Percheron horses and keeps an average of forty head of horses and mules on his farm. Mr. Ankenbrandt is actively interested in public affairs and in politics is a Democrat. He is a substantial and representative citizen, upright in his business dealings and highly respected. He is a member of the Catholic Church. He and his wife became parents of children as follows: William Henry, at home; Minnie Magdeline, Peter John, Carl John, Mary L., and Tina Valentina.

ANKENBRANDT, Nicholas, for many years one of the extensive stock-raisers and large farmers of Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., has been a resident of Mt. Carmel since 1905, where he occupies his comfortable home at No. 210 West Sixth Street. The retired farmers are very welcome additions to the citizenship of the town, when, like Mr. Ankenbrandt, they are men of capital and high standing and supporters of schools and churches. Mr. Ankenbrandt was born in Germany, January 20, 1830, a son of John and Dora (Wabert) Ankenbrandt, and was one of a family of seven children.

In Germany no child lacks schooling and Nicholas Ankenbrandt spent a certain time at his books before he was twenty-one years old, when he went into the German army and served during the specified time. In 1853 he came to America and as many Germans were already settled in the vicinity of Mt. Carmel, he continued his journey to this point and until the fall of 1854 being employed in various kinds of work. He then bought an eighty-acre tract of land in Belmont Precinct, which was mostly covered with timber. This property he cleared off and as he was able, kept on adding other tracts until he now has 320 acres, 120 of which he cleared off himself. This land is fine producing land and also is so situated that stock raising is profitable.

Mr. Ankenbrandt has been married three times. His present wife was born in Germany and came to America at the same time her husband did. All their eleven children were born in Wabash County, as follows: John, Nicholas, Jacob, Andrus, Joseph, Mary, Margaret, Barbara, Lena, Rosie and Dora. The eldest son John, was accidentally killed on the railroad. The family is prominent in the Catholic Church at Mt. Carmel. In politics, Mr. Ankenbrandt is a Democrat.

BAIRD, Francis M., one of the leading merchants of Mt. Carmel, Ill., who has taken an active part in local politics and public affairs in the vicinity for many years, is a native of Wabash County, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, February 11, 1848, a son of John W. and Rebecca (Stewart) Baird, the former a native of Kentucky, born in 1803, and the latter a native of Tennessee, born in 1808. His grandparents were Adam and Rebecca Baird, natives of Kentucky, and James Stewart and his wife, of Tennessee. The Stewarts were among the early settlers of Wabash County, coming in 1826 and fording the Wabash River with an ox team and wagon. They entered wild timber and prairie land in Lick Prairie Precinct, and improved it until they had a good farm. The Baird family also settled in Wabash County in 1826, securing Government land, and spending the remainder of their lives on this farm.

John W. Baird and his wife were married in Indiana, in 1825, and settled on a farm in Lick Prairie Precinct, where they resided until 1871, when they moved to Mt. Carmel to live with their son. Mr. Baird died in 1883 and his wife in 1895. They were parents of ten children, of whom three sons and three daughters are now living, namely: Nancy, widow of C. B. Root, of West Salem, Edwards County, Ill.; Foster A., of Sumner, Ill.; Adam Quincy, of Shelbyville, Ind.; Caroline, widow of Sylvester L.; Will, of Portland, Ore.; Lillie, widow of Isaac N. Moore, of Mt. Carmel, and Francis M.

Francis M. Baird received a good common school education, and carried on farming on his own account until he was twenty-two years old, when he and his brother, Adam Q., established a drug store at Mt. Carmel. Two years later they sold out and Francis M. worked in the employ of others until 1906, then again embarked in business on his own account, in which enterprise he is still engaged. He has established a good custom and enjoys the confidence and esteem of his customers and friends.

September 8, 1874, Mr. Baird married Candace A. Jennings, who was born at Cataract, Ind., daughter of Theodore and Emma (Yager) Jennings, of Kentucky and England. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Baird: Ralph J., of Long Beach, Cal., and Nora, Mrs. Edwin Marks, who lives with her father. Mrs. Baird died February 27, 1909, deeply mourned by her family and all who knew and appreciated her high character and blameless life. She was a good wife and mother and died firm in the faith of the Christian Church.

Mr. Baird has been an Elder in the Christian Church since 1895. He is a staunch Republican in political views and from 1894 to 1898 held the office of County Clerk, being the only Republican who has ever held that office in Wabash County. Mr. Baird is a member of the fraternal orders of Ben Hur, Modern America and Court of Honor. He has a large circle of friends and is an intelligent, useful citizen, who has the best interests and welfare of the community at heart.

BAIRD, Winfield Scott, proprietor of the South View Poultry Farm, in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born near the farm where he now lives, January 13, 1860, a son of William S. and Sarah (Wood) Baird. William S. was a son of John and Rebecca (Stewart) Baird, formerly of Kentucky, and was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, August 15, 1829, while his wife was born in Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, March 17, 1832, daughter of John and Catherine (Bratton) Wood, of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively. William S. Baird, Sr., and his wife spent their married life in Lick Prairie Precinct, where he was a farmer and stock-raiser. He died on his farm September 3, 1865, and his widow died on the same farm January 31, 1881. Their children were: Clayborn, born October 8, 1853, died September 29, 1876, in his twenty-third year; Romelda, born March 17, 1855, died March 15, 1876, at the age of twenty-one years; Elmira, Mrs. F. S. Briner, born September 22, 1856, died in Lick Prairie Precinct, June 27, 1885; Winfield S.; Zerah, born April 1, 1863, died January 2, 1882, at the age of nineteen years.

After finishing the course in the common schools, Winfield S. Baird, Jr., attended the normal school at Grayville, Ill., during the winter of 1879-80. He lived with his parents until their death, assisting with the work on the farm. He inherited 120 acres of the home farm, and from his sister's husband, Mr. Briner, purchased seventy acres, which he sold two years later. He has added to his land until he now has 188 acres in his home farm, and purchased twenty-two and one-half acres of land in Fordyce Creek bottom, which was covered with timber, which he has cleared, tiled and improved. At the time he took possession of his farm but fifty acres were under cultivation, the balance being covered with timber. He sold twenty acres of the original 120 acres and now has eighty acres under cultivation. During the fall of 1905 he erected the present two-story nine-room dwelling. He has also erected all other necessary buildings and has every possible convenience for carrying on his work. He has a substantial new barn 42 by 76 feet, 22 feet high, with an addition of the same height, 24 by 28 feet, and adjoining the barn is an ensilage silo with a capacity of 70 tons. Besides these he has a building which includes a corn crib, machine shed and hog house, 46 by 60 feet, and a wheat granary 20 by 24 feet. Besides general farming interests Mr. Baird has a large dairy of Holstein cows and raises German coach horses and Poland-China hogs. His wife raises Silver Wyandotte chickens.

In 1888, Mr. Baird purchased a threshing machine which he conducted until 1893, then sold out and secured another outfit of the kind, which he has since been operating, and has threshed in all parts of Wabash County. February 1, 1910, while felling trees Mr. Baird was caught by a falling tree which wedged him against another tree in such a way that his left leg was crushed from four inches above his knee to his foot, and he was held a prisoner in this condition a half-hour before he could be released. After he had been taken home, blood poisoning set in and his limb had to be amputated some four inches above his knee.

In politics Mr. Baird is a Republican and served one term as School Director previous to

RESIDENCE OF P. R. FISCHER AND FAMILY, BELMONT PRECINCT

1898, and has served in this position since 1901. He belongs to Monitor Lodge No. 235, I. O. O. F., of Bone Gap, Edwards County, Ill. He is well known and highly respected in the community and his misfortune was greatly deplored by his many friends.

Mr. Baird married October 16, 1881, Fannie S. Mayne, who was born in Clark County, Ohio, October 15, 1860, daughter of Benjamin F. and Elizabeth (Kauffman) Mayne, the former born in the District of Columbia and the latter in Pennsylvania. Mr. Mayne was a son of Adam C. and Catherine (Kemp) Mayne, and his wife a daughter of Michael and Catherine (Seitz) Kauffman, of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Mayne, Mrs. Baird's mother, died December 1, 1861, and Mr. Mayne married (third) her sister, who was widow of William Tiffany, but who died in 1880. Mr. Mayne married (fourth) Mrs. Phebe Goldberg, who died the same day as himself. He came with his third wife to Lick Prairie Precinct, in 1870. His first wife had six children who survived, namely: Leander S., deceased; Ellen, Mrs. Samuel McClure, of Springfield, Ohio; Catherine, Mrs. William Schmalhausen, a widow, living in Olney, Ill.; Philander, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Clarke, of Bone Gap, Ill.; Emma, Mrs. Samuel D. Freeman, of Lick Prairie Precinct. By his second marriage M. Mayne had one child, Mrs. Baird, and by his third and fourth marriages had no children.

Mr. Baird and his wife became parents of children as follows: Waldo Brown, born November 12, 1882, a physician and surgeon of Wabash County; Laura Ethel, born April 3, 1884, married Harry Shearer and lives in Lick Prairie Precinct and they have four children; Kittie Evelina, born May 26, 1890; Bernice Joy, born October 10, 1895, and Glenna Bernardine, born May 20, 1902, the last three all at home.

BARE, Eugene Y., one of the older merchants of Belmont, Ill., is the pioneer in that town in the line of furniture and undertaking, and has built up a good business through his own efforts. The enterprise of which he is the head had a very small beginning, but he has increased the business from time to time, and has kept up with the growing demand for his line of goods. Mr. Bare had been connected with various lines of work before engaging in the mercantile business and has been successful in all he has undertaken. He was born in Richland County, Ill., November 5, 1860, a son of Joseph and Margaret (Mesley) Bare, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Germany. The parents of Joseph Bare lived along the Ohio River in Ohio, and he became a blacksmith and operator of a grist mill. In 1872 he brought his family to Belmont Precinct. This was about the time the town of Belmont was laid out and Mr. Bare bought several lots, building a house and a blacksmith shop. He died in 1892, at the age of eighty-two years and his widow died February 21, 1900, at the age of seventy-eight. Their children were: Sanford; Elizabeth, Mrs.

Samuel Skiles, deceased; C. A.; Eugene Y.; John, of Belmont, Ill.; Mary J., Alice, and Lotie, deceased.

After receiving his education in the common schools, Eugene Bare learned the trade of carpenter, at which he worked more or less after he was twelve years old. He was married, in December, 1884, to Mrs. Alice (Crackles) Gray, widow of Richard Gray. She was born in England, and, at the time of her marriage to Mr. Bare, had two children—Myrtle, Mrs. William Smith, of Flora, Ill., and another daughter who died in childhood. Three children were born of her second marriage, namely: Bertha May, died at four weeks old; George, died at the age of four years, and Roy, in furniture business at Golden Gate, Ill.

Mr. Bare's first wife died in 1889, and he married (second), in May, 1891, Emma E. Jordan, who was born in Gibson County, Ind., a daughter of Thomas and Jane (Mauck) Jordan, natives of Gibson County. Mrs. Bare's grandparents were John and Catherine (Fletcher) Jordan, of Indiana, and Jacob and Celestina (Hartgrove) Mauck, of Indiana.

After his marriage Mr. Bare taught school in winter and worked at his trade during the summer until 1893, when he embarked in his present business. He has prospered so well that he now owns two large store buildings where his store is located. He has established himself in the good opinions and confidence of his fellow-citizens by his honest and straightforward methods. He is well fitted for his work, having attended the Meyers School of Embalming, at Evansville, Ind., and the Barnes School of Embalming, at Peoria, Ill.

Two children were born to Mr. Bare by his second marriage: Mabel C., born March 28, 1893, and Edgar T., born January 1, 1900. Mr. Bare is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in which he has served as Trustee since 1906. In politics he is a Republican and has served as President of the Town Board of Belmont since 1906, and also served several previous terms in the same office, besides several other local offices. He belongs to the Blue Lodge of Masons, of Mt. Carmel; to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Belmont, having served as Grand Master and Delegate to the State Convention of this order; and to the Modern Woodmen of America and the M. P. L., of Belmont. He is also a member of the Illinois Undertakers' Association.

BAUMGART, Joseph.—The pleasant town of Mt. Carmel, Ill., claims among its citizens a number of retired farmers who, after years of successful cultivation of their lands, desire a quiet life and closer social and church relations than the wider expanse of the country can give; hence they form a very representative portion of the substantial residents of the town. Of this class is Joseph Baumgart, who came to Mt. Carmel in 1901 and occupies his comfortable home at No. 414 West Fourth Street.

Mr. Baumgart was born in Germany, November 6, 1834. His parents were Peter and Mary (Rice) Baumgart, both of whom were natives of Germany, where they were married. They had four sons and two daughters, all born in Germany; Michael, Anthony, Lena, Joseph, Margaret and Stephen. In 1850 the parents of Mr. Baumgart came with their children to America and settled in Indiana, buying a farm ten miles distant from Evansville, on which he continued to live until his passing away at the age of seventy-two years. He was a lifelong Democrat.

Joseph Baumgart was reared a farmer and during the whole of his active life carried on farm pursuits, cultivating his lands to their fullest capacity and taking just pride in his fine stock. He continued to live in Indiana until 1883, when he came to Wabash County and bought 160 acres near Mt. Carmel and to this first purchase later added 221 acres, clearing about sixty acres of the same. He made many improvements on his land and one of these was the building of a substantial farm home residence. He left the farm, as stated above, in 1901, and since then has been a valued and respected resident of Mt. Carmel, where he is a member and a devoted attendant of the Catholic Church.

On January 15, 1861, Mr. Baumgart was married to Louisa Kuhn, who was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, March 31, 1841. She is a daughter of Wendel and Margaret (Sheffer) Kuhn, both of whom were natives of Germany. They came to America after the birth of one child and their family contained the following: Barbara, John, Adam, Mrs. Baumgart, Jacob, Margaret, Katherine, Fronie being the youngest. In Germany Mr. Kuhn owned a farm and vineyard. After settling near Evansville, Ind., he followed farming, and there Mrs. Baumgart was reared and went to school.

The following children were born to Joseph Baumgart and wife: Katherine, Lena, Stephen, Peter, Henry, Fronie, Mary and Joseph, and of these Stephen and Mary are deceased. The family all belong to the Catholic Church. In his political views, Mr. Baumgart is a Democrat.

BEDELL, George T. (deceased).—The prosperity of any community rests largely upon the character of its leading business men, and in remembering those who assisted in establishing a firm commercial foundation in Mt. Carmel, Ill., the late George T. Bedell is brought to mind, his activity continuing even after the affliction of blindness fell upon him. He was born at Mt. Carmel, June 9, 1832, a son of Moses and Elizabeth (Tombs) Bedell.

Moses Bedell was a native of Kentucky and in early manhood came to Palmyra, Ill., where he built a grist mill and operated it for a number of years. Later he moved to Mt. Carmel and opened a general store and also engaged in pork packing, shipping his produce to New Orleans. He was a Democrat in politics but led too busy a life to accept any kind of public office. His death occurred at Mt. Carmel, February 26, 1842, and his widow, also a native of Kentucky, died at Mt. Carmel, May 16, 1855.

The late George T. Bedell obtained his education in the Mt. Carmel schools, and when he entered into business for himself it was as proprietor of a livery stable which he conducted several years. He took an active interest in politics from early manhood and served several terms as Deputy Sheriff. He was considered one of the shrewd and successful business men of the county and continued his trading during the ten years of blindness prior to his death, August 20, 1902.

January 2, 1856, Mr. Bedell married Eunice Lindsay, of Vincennes, Ind., the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier. She was born and reared at Vincennes, her birth occurring August 16, 1833. She attended school in her native place and there grew to maturity, becoming acquainted with pioneer conditions. Her father, William Lindsay, was born in Virginia and served under General Washington. He was one of the earliest settlers of Knox County, Ind., and many times he and his family fled to the fort for safety from the Indians. In later life he was a contractor and owner of a brick yard at Vincennes. Mr. Lindsay married Clarissa Pryor, also a native of Virginia, and Mrs. Bedell is the only survivor of the family of two sons and three daughters, namely: Hester, Benjamin, Elizabeth, Eunice and Hiram. Mrs. Bedell is one of the three survivors of the original members of the Daughters of the Revolution. Mr. Bedell and his wife became parents of one daughter, Elizabeth Tombs, who was married, June 23, 1886, to James H. Decker, of the Grand Central Hotel. All of Mr. Bedell's life was spent in Mt. Carmel with the exception of three years, when he was in business in New Harmony, Ind. He was a man of considerable wealth and at the time of his death owned the Grand Central Hotel, the family home adjoining it, and a valuable farm, and was engaged in erecting three large business houses on Main Street. A few years before his death he became totally blind, and about a year before his decease sustained injuries as the result of a fall. He suffered a paralytic stroke which proved fatal, dying two days later. One sister survived him, Mrs. Stephen D. Greer, of Mt. Carmel.

BEDELL, John H.—In order to achieve success in any line of mercantile business, certain requisite traits of character and power of judgment are required of a man. He should also be willing to devote a large amount of his time to his business interests in order to insure attention to all necessary details. Such a man is John H. Bedell, a prominent business man of Mt. Carmel, Ill. Mr. Bedell is a native of that city, born September 24, 1871, and son of John and Mattie (Massey) Bedell, the former born in Mt. Carmel and the latter in Vincennes, Ind. His grandfather, Moses Bedell, came to Wabash County, Ill., among the earliest settlers and engaged in general mercantile business, also conducting a flouring mill and packing business. He reared a large family and died many years ago.

John BeDell and his wife were married in Vincennes, Ind., December 1, 1870, and he engaged in livery business at Mt. Carmel, which he carried on until his death, February 5, 1896, caused by a kick from a horse. His widow, Mrs. Mattie BeDell, died January 1, 1902. Their children were: John H.; William D., of Mt. Carmel; Paul S. died in infancy; Harry M., of Mt. Carmel, in the employ of the Big Four Railroad; Norman K. and Lewis T., of Mt. Carmel, and Charlotte, Mrs. Henry Graham, of Eureka Springs, Ark.

The education of John H. BeDell was received in the public schools of Mt. Carmel and when he was twenty-two years old he began working for the Big Four Railroad Company as fireman. In 1895 he went into the livery, transfer and coal business with his brother William D., and ten years later he sold out his interests to his brother L. T., who still conducts the business, in company with William. John H. then began working in the freight office of the Big Four Railroad, where he remained a year and a half, and in April 1, 1907, went to Denver, Col., and found employment as street-car conductor. He returned to Mt. Carmel, January 1, 1908, established a retail coal-yard, and has built up a good business. He pays careful attention to the needs of his business and keeps a good grade of his commodities.

March 5, 1896, Mr. BeDell married Flora M. Cowling, who was born at Cowling Station, Wabash County, in 1874, daughter of Frank Cowling. To this union two children were born: Vivian and Roy, who reside with their grandmother, Mrs. Cowling. Mrs. BeDell died May 30, 1909. Mr. BeDell takes an active interest in public affairs and is a strong adherent of the Democratic party. He was elected City Treasurer in April, 1909, and is well qualified for the office. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Mystic Workers of the World.

BELL, James.—One of the oldest native-born residents of Wabash County, Ill., is James Bell, who was born in Belmont Precinct, September 3, 1830, a son of George and Martha (Stillwell) Bell, the former a native of Botetourt County, Va., and the latter of Monmouth County, N. J. The grandparents were Robert and Mary (Caldwell) Bell, natives, respectively, of County Cork, Ireland, and Virginia, and John and Hanna (Stevens) Stillwell, natives of New Jersey. John Stillwell and his wife settled in Barren County, Ky., and later moved to Illinois, settling at Timberville, Wabash County, about 1816. Robert Bell and his wife located in Barney Prairie, Wabash County, about 1818. He served seven years in the Revolution as a member of the Light Artillery under Gen. Lafayette, in Pennsylvania and Kentucky. He settled in Friendsville Precinct and was buried there.

George and Martha Bell were married about 1820 and settled on a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct. In 1837, Mr. Bell sold out and moved to other land which they entered from the Government. Mr. Bell was born August 24, 1794, and died January 8, 1871; his wife died October 15, 1870, at the age of seventy-three years. Their children were: John, Bannab, Hiram, Eliza, James, Richard, William, Jeremiah and Ellen. The only one of these children living is James, of this biography.

James Bell attended the subscription schools of his native place, and lived with his parents until he attained his majority. He worked for a time as traveling salesman, and as Boss on Ohio & Mississippi, now the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, a short time, and taught school some. He was married, November 27, 1857, to Winnifred E. Overton, born in Gibson County, Ind., December 30, 1837, and reared in Warren County, Mo. Her parents died when she was young. After his marriage Mr. Bell settled at his present location in a log house in the woods. He had eighty-seven and one-half acres of land, of which five acres was cleared. This he has developed into an excellent farm, clearing all but about four acres, and has added twenty-six acres more in one tract and fourteen acres in another. He has sold some of this land, but at the present time owns 103 acres of as good land as is to be found in Coffee Precinct. Formerly he raised a good many horses, mules, cattle and hogs, but in 1890 retired, turning over the management of the farm to his son. Mr. Bell was a very industrious and successful farmer and has won the respect and confidence among his fellow-citizens. He has been a Republican since the time of Lincoln, and is a consistent member and active worker in the Christian Disciples Church, of which he has been Elder and Clerk. Mrs. Bell died August 10, 1909, having been a devoted wife and mother, and was mourned by a large circle of friends.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Bell and wife: Martha Irene, resides with her father; Mary E., married Philander Read, of Coffee Precinct; Permelia L., Mrs. James Boger, who died in September, 1888; Anna E., married Jacob Bradle, of Albion, Ill.; J. Harvey, who operates the home farm; Vashti B., married J. W. Williams, of Wagner, Okla., and William Henry, of Washington, Ind.

BERBERICH, John.—Among the many Germans who have located in Wabash County, Ill., most have attained a high degree of success and secured a good standing in the community. By dint of perseverance and industry, coupled with the exercise of good judgment, John Berberich, who now resides in Mt. Carmel, has been able to retire from active labor and enjoy a life of well-earned ease. He has improved a large amount of land which he formerly cultivated himself with excellent results. Mr. Berberich was born of German parents, both being natives of Byron, Germany, who came to Wabash County with their parents, in the 'thirties and were married after arriving there. John Berberich was born July 6, 1844, a son of Michael and Mary (Schuman) Berberich, who settled in Belmont Precinct after their marriage and there spent the remainder of their lives. They became the owners of a good farm and had nine children, of whom six survive, John being the second child.

The early years of John Berberich were spent on his father's farm and he attended the common schools, spending considerable time helping with the necessary farm duties. He resided with his parents until November 8, 1869, when he married Margaret Hochgeiger, who was born in Pyron, Germany, daughter of Michael and Elizabeth Hochgeiger, who came to Wabash County when she was six years old. Mr. Berberich had purchased a farm of eighty acres in Belmont Precinct. He kept adding land and improving it until he owned 240 acres, all in the same precinct. Here he carried on general farming and made a specialty of raising hogs, cattle, horses and other stock. In the fall of 1905 Mr. Berberich retired and purchased a handsome residence on West Fifth Street, where he and his wife now reside. They became the parents of children as follows: Anna, Mrs. John Weisenberger, of Belmont Precinct; George and William, on their father's farm; Elizabeth, died at the age of nine years; Leo, of Mt. Carmel; and Albert, who died at the age of one and a half years. Mr. Berberich and his family are members of the Catholic Church and are interested in its different lines of good work. He is a strong supporter of the Democratic party and served many years as School Director. He is one of the public-spirited and enterprising citizens of the community and has contributed his share to the development of the community.

BERNINGER, Amos, who has an extensive business in the line of wagon-making and repairing in Lancaster, Ill., was born in Columbia County, Pa., October 18, 1844, the youngest child of Aaron and Hannah (Rhodes) Berninger, of Berkes County, Pa., and grandson of Philip Berninger. Aaron Berninger and his wife located in Lancaster, Wabash County, Ill., in 1858, with their four children. He had been a millwright in Pennsylvania and became a farmer in Illinois. He lived in Lancaster Precinct the rest of his life, passing away in 1896. His widow died thirteen months later. Their children were: Cornelius, died in Richland County; Isaiah and Ezra, died in Lancaster; and Amos.

Amos Berninger received his education in the common schools and remained with his parents until twenty-two years of age, then began learning the trade of wagon-maker and, a year later, he and his brother, Isaiah, opened up a wagon-making and repair shop in Lancaster, continuing in partnership seven years, when the partnership was dissolved. Isaiah then began farming and Amos has since carried on the shop alone. He has won a reputation for high class work and is well patronized; is a man of honesty and integrity and considered a representative and successful business man. He is much interested in all subjects pertaining to the public welfare and in politics is a Democrat.

In 1870 Mr. Berninger married Mary Baker, who was born in Ohio, a daughter of Peter Baker, and they have one daughter, Harriet, since 1898 a teacher in the high school at Mt. Carmel. She was born in Lancaster and received her education in the State Normal Institution.

BERTLESMAN, John (deceased).—Among the German-Americans who have won success in Wabash County, Ill., through their own efforts, was the late John Bertlesman, who for many years conducted a harness-making shop in Mt. Carmel. Mr. Bertlesman was born in Hanover, Germany, July 28, 1844, and died at his home in Mt. Carmel, where he had lived forty-one years, in July, 1889, his burial taking place July 12, in Rose Hill Cemetery. He was a son of Henry Bernard and Katherine (Gohauer) Bertlesman, both natives of Hanover, Germany. The parents lived on a farm in their native country until 1870, then they brought their family to the United States, locating first at Cincinnati, Ohio.

John Bertlesman received his education in the public schools of St. Louis, Mo., and after leaving school, learned the harness-making trade. He was engaged for a time in farming, but about 1869 moved to Mt. Carmel, Ill., and there worked for a year for Philip Fredericks, after which he conducted a shop of his own. He was successful in his operations and became the owner of real estate in the community. For forty-one years he occupied the same house, situated at 831 Cherry Street, Mt. Carmel, where his widow still resides. Mr. Bertlesman became highly respected as an industrious, hard-working man and useful citizen. He was a Democrat in politics and served as Alderman of the Third Ward. He was a member of the Catholic Knights and belonged to St. Mary's Catholic Church, Mt. Carmel.

Mr. Bertlesman enlisted in 1861, in Battery L, Illinois Light Artillery, and served nearly four years in the Civil War, being discharged in August, 1865. He established a good record as a soldier, performing his duties most satisfactorily.

January 12, 1869, Mr. Bertlesman was married, at St. Mary's Church, Mt. Carmel, to Miss Barbara Peters, daughter of Michael and Margaret Peters, and they became the parents of five children, namely: Mrs. Mary (Bertlesman) Conners, born October 16, 1869; Mrs. Ida Cyr, born April 4, 1871; Frank M., born May 9, 1874; Bernard, born March 28, 1883; Edgar, born March 9, 1887. Mr. Bertlesman made many friends in Mt. Carmel and vicinity and his presence was missed in many circles. Although he has been dead many years, he is still well remembered by those who knew him and appreciated his many good qualities.

BIEHL, Charles, who now lives retired at Lancaster, Ill., became a successful farmer and miller through his own efforts and ambition, and has lived in Wabash County, Ill., since 1836, when he was brought there by his father, Abraham Biehl. He was born in Berks County, Pa., August 27, 1823, and spent his early youth in his native State. He has practically no education except what he has acquired by his own efforts, and what he has learned in the school of experience. When he first came to Wabash County it was a common thing to see bands of Indians passing through the country, and deer and smaller game abounded.

Abraham Biehl was a son of Daniel Biehl, of Pennsylvania, and came to Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, with a team and wagon. He bought 400 acres of prairie and timber land at $7 per acre, and both he and his wife died on this farm. Their children were: Daniel and John, deceased; Charles; Penrose, and Samuel and Catherine, deceased; Caroline, and Hettie, Mrs. Ephraim Stanninger.

The youth of Charles Biehl was spent on his father's farm, and he remained at home until his marriage, in 1849, to Mary Slenker, who was born in Lehigh County, Pa., a daughter of Gideon and Sarah (Fisher) Slenker. Mr. Slenker was born in Lehigh County and his wife in Berks County, Pa., and they came to Wabash County in 1823, settling in Bald Hill Prairie. After their marriage Charles Biehl and his wife moved to a farm of seventy-five acres, which his father gave him, composed partly of timber and partly of prairie, and they remained there until 1870, when he moved to the Village of Lancaster and formed a partnership with his brother, purchasing a grist-mill. Charles Biehl had various other partners in this enterprise and conducted the mill nine years, after which he sold out and has since lived retired from active life. He has added to his farm until he owns eighty-five acres in Section 7 and 120 acres in Section 12, all being under cultivation except eighty acres of timber. Mr. Biehl stands well in the estimation of his neighbors, as an industrious and useful citizen. He is a Democrat in politics and has served as Road Commissioner and member of the School Board.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Biehl and wife: Maria, Mrs. George Betebenner, of Lancaster; Sallie, Mrs. John Higgins, of Lancaster Precinct, and Caroline, who died in infancy. Mrs. Biehl, who was born October 25, 1828, died May 20, 1909, having been a fond and loving wife and mother, and was mourned by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Biehl's daughter, Mrs. Betebenner, keeps house for him. He is a member of the Lutheran Church and has served as Elder in the same for many years.

BOSECKER, Christian.—Among the many successful farmers of Wabash County, Ill., none has achieved better results through industry and enterprise than Christian Bosecker, who owns several farms in the vicinity of Cowling, Wabash County. He has now retired from actual hard work himself, but reaps good profits from the conduct of his land by others. Mr. Bosecker was born near Evansville, Ind., February 21, 1854, son of Charles and Elizabeth (Sachs) Bosecker, the former born in Saxony and the latter in Byron, Germany. Charles Bosecker located in Evansville about 1845 and Elizabeth Sachs came to the same city in 1846. They were married there and settled on the farm on which they spent the remainder of their lives. He died in 1870 and his widow in 1894. They had six children, namely: Anna, Mrs. Philip Schmidt, who died in 1909; Elizabeth, Mrs. Andrew Schmidt, living near Evansville, Ind.; William, on the home farm near Evansville; Christian; Andrew, of Compton Precinct; Charles, who died in infancy.

The education of Christian Bosecker was received in the common schools and he resided with his parents until his marriage, in April, 1875, when he was united with Charlotte Schweikhard, of Posey County, Ind., daughter of Jacob and Margaret Schweikhard, natives of Germany and early settlers of Posey County, Ind. After his marriage Mr. Bosecker operated the home farm three years, then his father died and he inherited a farm of sixty-eight acres in Compton Precinct, to which he added forty acres. Most of this land was covered with timber and he cleared it and put it under cultivation. It is mostly level prairie land and very fertile, and Mr. Bosecker prospered so well that he was able to keep adding to his possessions until he now owns five farms, consisting of 240, 376, (the home farm), 40, 139 and 68 acres, respectively. He carried on the home farm himself until 1906, then moved to Mt. Carmel and bought a handsome residence on Cherry Street, which has since been the homestead. He also owns a residence on East Fifth Street, the fine residence where his son resides and one on East Fourth Street, where a daughter lives. He rents each one of his farms separately and oversees the work on them, and all have been put into a fine state of cultivation by his efforts.

The children born to Mr. Bosecker and wife were: Elizabeth, Mrs. William Fresno, whose husband is a Lutheran preacher at Denison, Iowa; Frederick A., in clothing business at Mt. Carmel; Mary, married Theodore Wirth, who is partner of her brother, Frederick A.; and Lena M., at home. Mr. Bosecker has been an enthusiastic supporter of the Republican party and has held several county offices. He served one term as County Commissioner and has been School Treasurer of his precinct since 1886. He is a man who has the fullest confidence of his fellow-citizens and is conscientious in the performance of his public duties.

BOWERS, Col. Theodore S. (deceased), former Adjutant General on Staff of Gen. U. S. Grant.—But few soldiers of the great Civil War had a more thrilling, romantic and honorable career, in the service of their country, than the late Col. Theodore S. Bowers. His military career was particularly interesting and remarkable. But few men in the army were so near to the heart of

Gen. Grant, or so unqualifiedly enjoyed his confidence and personal esteem.

This chivalrous and brilliant hero was born in Wabash County, Ill., October 10, 1832, the son of George and Ann Maria Bowers. Born amid humble surroundings, he struggled with many difficulties and privations, but by arduous labor and unwearied perseverance overcame disheartening conditions and adversities, and early rose to a rank of influence and honor among his fellow citizens. Prior to the Civil War Mr. Bowers was a printer and, for several years, owned and published the "Mt. Carmel Register." After the beginning of the war he took an active part in organizing Company G of the Forty-eighth Illinois Infantry and, to avoid offending a friend, declined the commission as Captain of the same, entering the ranks as a private soldier. Later, being detailed as clerk at Gen. Grant's headquarters, he at once attracted the attention of the great commander, who rapidly advanced him, until, at the close of the war, he held the rank of Colonel and Assistant Adjutant-General in the regular army, and subsequently was promoted to Brigadier-General, which was his rank when he accidentally met his death in 1866. He was an uncle of Thomas and Lawrence Coleman, of Mt. Carmel, that place being his home at the time of that calamitous event.

Col. Bowers, after passing safely through the perils of all of Gen. Grant's campaigns, and having escaped many hazardous conditions and suffered many frightful experiences, was accidentally killed March 6, 1866. He met instant death by falling between two cars, while attempting to board a train which was leaving Garrison Station, on the Hudson River Railroad. General Grant, with his son, accompanied by Col. Bowers, arrived at Garrison Station, opposite West Point, on the evening of March 5th and was compelled to remain there overnight. The next day they went across the river to West Point, and the General, leaving his son at the Academy, returned to the east side with Col. Bowers. When the train arrived by which they were to return to New York, some confusion arose concerning a carpet-bag belonging to the party, which had been left in the station, and which Col. Bowers volunteered to get. Gen. Grant had then taken a seat in the rear of the car. The station agent handed Col. Bowers the wrong carpet-bag, and he said, "This is not the one." These were the last words he uttered. He then rushed for the train, which was already in motion. In attempting to get on board he grasped the railing on the platform of the car in which Gen. Grant was seated, and sprang upon the step, but striking with such violence as to break his hold, he was instantly precipitated under the wheels of the next car and ground to death. When the train was stopped, Mr. Garrison, proprietor of the adjoining ferry, said to Gen. Grant, "General, I think your Adjutant is killed." The General replied, "Something told me he was killed," and viewing the mangled form of his faithful officer and beloved friend, he sadly remarked, "That is he; a very estimable man was he. He has been with me through all my battles."

The General later directed Major Hill to arrange for the burial of the body at West Point, and sent the following telegram to the deceased's brother, who at that time was at Lebanon, Pa.:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES

"Washington, D. C., March 7, 1866.

Dr. Lorenzo Bowers, Lebanon, Pa.:

"It is with heartfelt sorrow that I communicate to you the accidental death of your most estimable brother, Col. T. S. Bowers. It occurred at 3 P. M. yesterday, opposite West Point. In attempting to get on the cars while in motion, he fell between two of them, and was instantly crushed to death. His funeral will take place tomorrow at West Point, and his brother staff officers and myself will attend in a body. Your brother had won more than esteem from all who knew him, and in his death the country sustains a great loss."

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant General."

At the personal request of Gen. Grant, Congress appropriated $5,000 for the erection of a splendid monument over Col. Bowers' grave, at West Point. After Gen. Grant became President, he stated that, had Col. Bowers lived, he would have made him a cabinet officer.

In November, 1862, Col. Bowers was made Captain and Aide-de-camp, and soon after Major and Judge Advocate in the Army of the Tennessee. In September, 1863, he became Assistant Adjutant General, with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, succeeding Col. John A. Rawlins, who had been promoted. From that time until the surrender of Lee's Army, he was Gen. Grant's Chief Assistant Adjutant General in the field, and at the close of the war, retained the same position. In September, 1864, in consideration of his eminent services, he was appointed Major and Assistant Adjutant-General of the Regular Army. Col. Bowers was with Grant at the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox. In describing that historic event, Gen. Horace Porter, in his book, "Campaigning with Grant," says: "Lee now looked greatly relieved, and though anything but a demonstrative man, he gave every evidence of his appreciation of this concession, and said: 'This will have the best possible effect upon the men. It will be very gratifying, and will do much toward conciliating our people.' He handed the draft of the terms back to Gen. Grant, who called Col. T. S. Bowers of the Staff to him, and directed him to make a copy in ink."

The tragic death of Col. Bowers was a source of personal sorrow to Gen. Grant and of overwhelming grief to the people of Wabash County, who knew so well the story of his dauntless courage and loyal devotion to his chief, and who knew, as none others could know, how he had triumphed over almost insurmountable obstacles in his splendid career. He was a man of fine character, the soul of honor, modest and generous, and as conscientious as he was brave and loyal, and the very remembrance of his beloved name and tragic fate starts the tears from many a comrade's eyes, even to this day. The Grand Army Post at Mt. Carmel was named in his honor. In the brilliant Memorial Day address delivered at Mt. Carmel May 30, 1883, by the late Judge Bell, of Mt. Carmel—who was a personal friend of Col. Bowers—the orator pronounced the following eloquent panegyric in a commemoration of his noble service rendered to his country:

"And one who, in the flesh, has trod the green aisles before us; one whose kindred slumber in pulseless hush near by; one whose honored name is borne by the Post of the Grand Army marshaled here—marred and lifeless by cruel chance in the morning of his brilliant promise—the missiles of battle hurled by him on the field in vain, but the shaft of Fate struck him down before it was yet noon of life or fame. Duty was the deity of his especial worship, and his unswerving fidelity to every trust conquered for him every gradation from the unmarked blouse to the eagle and the star. The star he won was burnished by high honor to the last; and, although untarnished and undimmed by obliquity of shame, it was less resplendent than his high soul—his high soul which never burned with greed or gain, which never quailed before a foe.

"Theodore S. Bowers is entombed in historic ground, and he fares well. Today the nation's minute guns salute his dust; the nation's musicians fill the sky above him with patriotic airs, and the flag of the stars floats over the trained platoons marching to deck the graves in West Point, 'Saint City of the Dead.'

"The Star of Theodore S. Bowers' life went down without zenith or twilight; but it is a blessed hope that that star, eclipsed untimely here, may have risen in a fairer sky and brightened in the gleam of the eternal morning."

BRADHAM, Jacob R., a veteran of the Civil War and a successful farmer of Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in Gibson County, Ind., January 25, 1845, son of Claudius and Elizabeth (Spore) Bradham, the former a native of South Carolina and the latter of Virginia. The parents of Claudius Bradham moved to Harrison County, Ind., in 1840, and there he became acquainted with his wife, Elizabeth Spore was brought by her parents, Jacob and Agnes (Dresser) Spore, from Virginia to Harrison County, Ind., where they lived some years on a farm and then moved to Gibson County, same State. After their marriage Claudius Bradham and his wife settled on a farm in Gibson County, where he became a successful farmer and an extensive dealer in hogs and cattle. Their children were: William, of Idalia, Stoddard County, Mo.; Jacob R.; Lydia and Sarah, deceased; James of Arkansas; John and Rufus, of Wayne County, Ill.

Jacob R. Bradham spent his boyhood in Gibson County and was educated in the district schools. He helped with the farm work and caring for his father's stock until he enlisted, August 11, 1862, in Company B, Sixty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, at Princeton, Ind. They were assigned to Kentucky and Tennessee, as mounted infantry, and during the Georgia Campaign, in April, 1864, they were dismounted and served under Rosecrans and Schofield, going as far as Atlanta. Turning back, they later served in Georgia, Tennessee and Virginia. They took part in numerous battles and skirmishes, but Mr. Bradham was never wounded. He was discharged January 18, 1865, and, returning home, spent two years at farming.

Mr. Bradham married, January 2, 1868, Mary Armstrong, who was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, daughter of Thomas Armstrong, by whom he had fourteen children, as follows: John, of Lancaster Precinct; James E., of Walla Walla, Wash.; T. Franklin, of Clay County, Ill.; Rhoda Alice, of Denver Col.; Logan, of Edwards County, Ill.; Otto; Eliza, Mrs. William Hahn, of Mt. Carmel; Cleveland, of Lancaster Precinct; Alonzo, died at the age of thirteen years; Jacob, of Mt. Carmel; David, member of Heavy Coast Artillery, of the United States Army; Ira and Eli Leslie, at home. Mr. Bradham's first wife died October 21, 1899, and he married (second) September 4, 1900, Mrs. Elizabeth (Moore) Cox, widow of McLain Cox, who had four children by her former husband, namely: Mary, widow of John Greemore, living at Sumner, Ill.; Lewis, of Bridgeport, Ill.; Allie, of Mt. Carmel; and Della, Mrs. William Doss, of Bridgeport. Mr. Bradham's second wife died July 12, 1909, and he married (third) September 29, 1909, Wilhelmina (Brausa-Weltz) Lecler, widow of Nicholas Lecler, whose first marriage had been to William Weltz. She had two daughters—Nancy, Mrs. Jesse Shipley, and Effie, Mrs. Theron Woodruff, both of Lukin Township, Lawrence County, Ill. Mrs. Bradham was born in Lukin Township, daughter of August and Sophia (Holsan) Brausa, natives of Hanover, Germany.

After his first marriage Mr. Bradham bought a farm in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, where he lived until 1897, then sold out and moved to a farm near Parkersburg, in Richland County, Ill., and lived there two years, and his wife and small boy died on this farm. Returning to Wabash County, he bought a farm of 145 acres in Lancaster Precinct, which he carried on two years, then sold out and bought his present farm of 100 acres in Section 32, Lancaster Precinct. This farm was well improved when he took occupation, except nine acres of timber. He carries on general farming and raises the highest grade of horses. He has handled Percheron horses ever since he began farming and at present has one imported horse of this breed and owns three stallions. He also raises cattle and registered Poland-China hogs. He is actively interested in public affairs and keeps well informed on current issues and events. In politics he is a Republican and is always ready to do his share toward the improvement of his community.

BRADHAM, John L., one of the prominent and substantial farmers of Wabash County, Ill., who is cultivating a farm in Lancaster Precinct, is a native of that precinct, born October 14, 1868, a son of Jacob and Mary (Armstrong) Bradham, and the oldest of their fourteen children. Jacob Bradham, a sketch of whom appears in this work, was born in Gibson County, Ind., and during the Civil War served in an Indiana regiment. He is now a successful farmer and stockman of Wabash County and an influential citizen.

The boyhood of John L. Bradham was spent on his father's farm and he received his education in the public schools. After he was twenty-one years of age he worked on neighboring farms through the summer and lived with his parents during the winter. He was married, January 29, 1893, to Nellie Morgan, born in Lancaster Precinct, daughter of George and Mary E. (Preston) Morgan, the former a native of Lancaster Precinct and the latter of Edwards County. Mr. Morgan was a son of Calvin and Nancy Morgan, natives of South Carolina, and his wife was a daughter of Joseph Preston, a native of Wabash Precinct.

After his marriage John L. Bradham lived with his parents part of one year, while he was engaged in erecting a house and other buildings on a farm his wife received from her parents, in Lancaster Precinct. They lived on this farm until 1901, when they traded it for sixty-four acres of the home farm of her parents, in Section 26, same precinct. This was part of the farm on which her parents settled after their marriage and was well cultivated. Mrs. Morgan died November 9, 1898, and Mr. Morgan September 4, 1906. The children born to them were: Frank, of Richland County, Ill.; Nancy Ann, who died at the age of two years; Calvin D., of Allendale; George W., died in October, 1896, at the age of thirty-one years; Jacob, of Lancaster Precinct; Joseph, of West Salem, Edwards County; Eli, of West Salem; and Mrs. Bradham.

Mr. Bradham carries on general farming and raises horses, cattle and hogs. He has added twenty acres on the Bonpas bottom, which was all timber, and has cleared and tilled this, now having it under cultivation. The children born to him and his wife were: Joseph C., born January 23, 1894; died March 2, 1896; Charles E., born October 1, 1895; Carrie B., born September 13, 1897; died March 28, 1900; Laura Pearl, born March 21, 1903; Blanche B., born January 26, 1908. Mr. Bradham is an industrious and enterprising man and has brought his land to a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the United Brethren Church and has served many years as Steward of same. In politics he is a Democrat and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 1834, of Lancaster; Lodge Number 137, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of West Salem, and his wife belongs to Lodge

No. 2192, Royal Neighbors of Lancaster. Both are well known in the community, where they have many friends.

BRATTON, Robert Henry, a prominent and influential farmer of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in that precinct November 1, 1856, a son of Amos and Sarelida (Moore) Bratton, also natives of Lick Prairie Precinct. The grandparents, William and Priscilla (Wood) Bratton, natives of Tennessee, and Eli and Irene (Hill) Moore, were all early settlers of Wabash County. William Bratton and his wife entered government land, which was all timbered, and he cleared and put under cultivation forty acres, finally dying on his farm. Amos Bratton's father died when he was quite young and he settled on the home farm after his marriage. He had lived some time with an uncle, Frank Gard, and learned the trade of wagon-making, at which he worked many years, and also made coffins. Upon settling on the homestead he remodeled the house and cleared a great deal of land. He was a prominent Democrat and took a deep interest in political affairs, also became a member of the Christian Church. A tree fell on him one day when he was at work, fracturing his skull, and he was never able afterward to bear working in the sun or endure very hard work of any kind. He died March 8, 1873, and his widow afterward married Barton Ballard, though she spent most of her life on the old farm. She died September 16, 1904.

The children born to Amos Bratton and his wife were: Priscilla Ellen, who died when sixteen years old; Robert Henry; Dora Alice, Mrs. John S. Miller, of Mt. Carmel; Pina Rosetta, Mrs. Henry E. Risley, died in Lick Prairie Precinct; Jersey May, died at the age of two years; Flotilla, Mrs. P. A. Groff, of Belmont Precinct.

Robert H. Bratton received his education in the district schools and lived at home with his parents until his marriage, November 4, 1877, to Fannie Maria Stewart, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, October 3, 1858, a daughter of John M. and Marinda (Putnam) Stewart. After Mr. Bratton's marriage his mother deeded him forty acres of the home farm, on which he erected a house. Twenty-five acres of the land was cleared and he cleared seventeen acres more. He bought out two of the other heirs and now owns 120 acres, twenty-three acres of this being in timber. Besides carrying on general farming he raises cattle and hogs.

Mr. Bratton and his wife are members of the Church of Christ, of which he has been Elder since 1890. He is a Republican in politics and served fifteen years as School Director. He is an energetic and industrious farmer and his property is kept in excellent condition. Mr. Bratton has spent his whole life in the neighborhood where he now lives and has a large circle of friends. He and his wife had children as follows: Clarence A., born August 30, 1878, lives at Mt. Carmel; Henry H., born December 8, 1879, died December 28, 1885, at the age of six years;

Maidie M., Mrs. F. Albert Doyle, born November 5, 1882, lives at Bone Gap, Ill.; Walter Amos, born January 30, 1886, died February 15, 1901, at the age of fifteen years; Flossie Exima, born January 9, 1889, at home; Paul Randolph, born March 25, 1892, at home; and Beulah Isabelle, born January 5, 1895, at home.

BRIAN, Charles Frederick, M. D., of Belmont, Ill., who practices his profession in partnership with his wife, also a physician, is a native of Wabash County, born in Linn, Ill., July 27, 1879. He is a son of Martin and H. Melissa (Schrader) Brian, the former born in Lawrence and the latter in Wabash County. Martin Brian is a son of German parents, who settled on the Bonpas Bottom, in Lawrence County, Ill., and died there. Mrs. Brian was a daughter of John Schrader, who was one of the pioneers of Friendsville Precinct, where he secured government land and became the owner of several thousand acres.

After his marriage Martin Brian settled at Orio, Wabash County, and entered into partnership with George Renschler, in a blacksmith and wagon-making shop, but soon afterward the former sold out his interest and for about seven years conducted a brick and tile factory at Orio. He then sold out and purchased a farm in Lawrence County. Since 1902 he has lived retired at St. Francisville. The following children were born to him and his wife: Dr. J. R., of St. Francisville; William, in lumber business at St. Francisville; Algia, of Melrose, N. Mex.; Samuel, William's partner; Dr. Charles F.; Austin, of Melrose, N. M.; Heber and Victor, at the university at Valparaiso, Ind.; Agnes, at home, and Roy, died in infancy.

Dr. Charles F. Brian attended college one year at Valparaiso, Ind., and then entered Barnes University at St. Louis, Mo., from which he graduated May 3, 1905, with degree M. D. He purchased the practice of Dr. Norman Leeds, of Belmont, and has since been successfully engaged in following his profession there. He and his wife are members of the County and State Medical Societies and he belongs to the American Medical Association. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and has been a Trustee of the church since 1908. He also belongs to the Masonic Order, being affiliated with the Blue Lodge of Allendale; the I. O. O. F., of Belmont, also the M. W. A., Mystic Workers and M. P. L. In politics he is a Prohibitionist. He has established a high reputation in his profession and is well established at Belmont. He is a Director in Mt. Carmel Banking & Trust Company, he and his wife together own a fine farm of 200 acres in Belmont Township, and they have an interest in the Albion Vitrified Brick Company, of Albion, Ill.

May 30, 1906, Dr. Brian married Flora Matina Tanquary, who was born in Belmont Precinct, daughter of John F. and Flora Ellen (Price) Tanquary, the former a native of Belmont Precinct and the latter of White County, Ill. Mr.

Tanquary was a son of Alfred Tanquary, and his wife is a daughter of Hansford and Polly (Ferguson) Price. Mr. Tanquary died in December, 1903, and his widow now resides at Albion, Ill. They had children as follows: Mollie, who died in infancy; Mrs. Brian; Pearl, died at the age of six years; and Blanch, John H. and Pearl Lucile, with their mother.

Mrs. Brian attended the Southern Collegiate Institute at Albion, Ill., spent one year at the Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., two years at the Northwestern Woman's Medical College, and two years at the College of Physicians & Surgeons Medical Department of the University of Illinois, from which she graduated May 24, 1904. She spent one year as interne in the New England Hospital for Women and Children, at Boston, Mass. Since her marriage she has practiced with her husband and has shared in his success. She is skilled in her profession and stands well in the community.

BRINES, Franklin, one of the largest land-owners and most influential citizens of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a representative of a family that is well known in the county, having been born on the farm which he now owns, October 15, 1835. He is a son of Lyman and Maria (Holmes) Brines, natives of New York State, and a grandson of John Brines, who settled in Wabash County at a very early date and was one of the first to enter government land there, living on his farm the remainder of his life. Maria Holmes was a daughter of a soldier of the war of 1812, who was never heard of after his service, having disappeared while in the army. She was brought to Wabash County by some of her relatives when five years of age, and at the time of the Black Hawk War was in the fort at Claypool. After their marriage, Lyman Brines and his wife settled at Centerville, the first county-seat of Wabash County, where for several years he ran a carding machine which he owned. Later he purchased 205 acres of timber land in the southeastern part of Lick Prairie Precinct and cleared a large part of it. He died in 1863 his widow surviving him until 1900, when she passed away at the age of ninety years.

Twelve children were born to Lyman Brines and wife, of whom Franklin was the sixth. Those surviving are: Mary, aged eighty years; Franklin, aged seventy-five; Ellen, aged seventy-three; Hannah, seventy; Edia, sixty-eight; Rebecca, sixty-three; and Margaret, sixty.

In boyhood Franklin Brines attended the common schools, remaining with his parents as long as they lived, then purchased the shares of the other heirs and received his mother's dowry of 205 acres. At the present time he owns about 500 acres of fine land, of which a large part is under cultivation. He erected a handsome two-story house in 1897 and has remodeled and built barns and other outbuildings. His two sisters, Ellen and Rebecca, reside with him.

Mr. Brines raises a good grade of hogs, cattle and horses, and carries on diversified farming.

He has won a reputation for industry and enterprise, is successful to a large degree, and is well known and much respected in his neighborhood. He is a member of the Christian Church and in politics is a Republican. Mr. Brines is unmarried.

BRINES, Henry (deceased).—The late Henry Brines, of Mt. Carmel Precinct, was descended from the first white settler in Wabash County, Ill., his great-grandfather having taken up government land before there were any settlements. Henry Brines was born in Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, October 27, 1866, a son of Henry and Julia (Ballard) Brines, his father being a son of Edward Brines.

Henry Brines, Sr., died before his son Henry was born, and later his widow married a Mr. Finney. Young Henry left home at the age of eleven years and began earning his own living. Before his majority he had purchased forty acres of land in Mt. Carmel Precinct, and later added twenty acres to his farm. He made all possible improvements and cultivated this land the remainder of his life. He died in young manhood, October 26, 1898, just as he was beginning to reap the fruits of his previous industry and hard work. He was a Republican and active in local affairs, taking great interest in anything pertaining to the public welfare. He was well known and highly respected, a kind friend and neighbor, and his loss was keenly felt by many. He was a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and much interested in its work.

August 26, 1891, Mr. Brines married Margaret Ann Jones, daughter of Jenkin and Sarah Ann (Martin) Jones, who was born in Gibson County, Ind., December 2, 1841. Her father was a native of Wales and her mother of England. Both died when their daughter was eight years of age and she was reared by people in Indiana. At the time of her marriage she was living in the family of Rev. Jennings, at Princeton, Ind. She is a grand-daughter of Edward Martin, who spent his entire life in England.

Mr. and Mrs. Brines became parents of children as follows: Paul Henry, born August 7, 1892; John Richard, born March 12, 1895; George Franklin, born February 16, 1898, all at home. Mrs. Brines has continued to live on the home farm since her husband's death, and has been occupied chiefly with the education and training of her children. She has conducted her affairs in a business-like, sensible manner, and has been well rewarded for her efforts. She and her children carry on farming on the land left by Mr. Brines.

BRINES, James Russell, Jr., of the fourth generation of the Brines family in Wabash County, Ill., was born in Belmont Precinct, October 31, 1876, son of Morris and Virginia (Mull) Brines, the father, a native of Belmont Precinct, and the mother of Peru, Ind. Morris was a son of Russell and Nellie (Garner) Brines, of Allegany County, N. Y., and Russell was a son of Edward Brines, who located in Wabash County in 1816, later settling in Friendsville Precinct, where he entered land from the Government. He was buried on his old farm, in what is now Hallock Cemetery. Russell Brines, grandfather of James R., was a farmer, and married and settled in Belmont Precinct, where his death occurred.

Morris Brines married and settled on land near his birthplace, in Belmont Precinct. He started in life with nothing but a horse, buying land from time to time as he was able and clearing it, finally becoming the owner of 710 acres and one of the most extensive farmers of Belmont Precinct. He raised many hogs and was successful in his operations. The children born to him and his wife were: Morris W., of Belmont Precinct; Nellie B., Mrs. J. R. Fisher, who lives on her father's home farm; Jacob S., of Belmont Precinct; Mina, Mrs. T. K. Wright, of Belmont Precinct; Eva Bell, living on the home place with her sister, Mrs. J. R. Fisher; and James R., the oldest. The father died January 31, 1902, and the mother November 21, 1901.

The early education of James R. Brines was acquired in the district schools, but later he attended the Central Normal College, at Danville, Ind., receiving a diploma in stenography and the commercial course in 1889, and in 1891 a teacher's diploma. At the age of eighteen years he began teaching school, continuing in this profession twenty winters, but working at farming during the summer months. In this time there was an interval of four years during which he did not teach. His teaching was all done in seven adjoining districts. Since the spring of 1909 Mr. Brines has devoted his attention exclusively to his farming interests. He paid his father $1,000 for ninety acres of land, while his wife owns eighty acres, and between them they now own 290 acres, all in Belmont Precinct, called the "Plain View Farm." Mr. Brines was successful in his profession and has also made his farming very profitable. He is enterprising and ambitious, and follows scientific methods and modern ideas in his agricultural operations. He was President of Wabash County Teachers' Association, two years, and has been re-elected President of the County Farmers' Institute.

May 4, 1892, Mr. Brines married Flora Viola Groff, born in Belmont Precinct, March 4, 1872, daughter of John and Harriet (Gard) Groff. Mr. Groff was born at Hesse Cassel on the Rhine, Germany, and his wife was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, in 1829. Mr. Brines moved to the farm, where he now lives, after his marriage, and here has made many improvements, developing a fine farm and erecting substantial buildings. He has always paid careful attention to all the details of his farming and has met with success accordingly. He raises Duroc Jersey hogs and Holstein cattle, and makes a specialty of Buff Rock chickens. In politics he is a Republican. Since 1900 he has been Government Crop Correspondent for Belmont Precinct. Fraternally he is a member of Lodge No. 729, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Royal Neighbors, of Belmont, and of Sugar Creek Lodge No. 7645, Modern Woodmen of America. He is a member of the Christian Church, at Maud, Wabash County, having been Clerk of the church since its establishment, May 10, 1896, and Elder since 1900. Mrs. Brines is a member of the Christian Church and a Royal Neighbor.

The children born to Mr. Brines and wife are: Mabel Ora, born May 2, 1893; Gilbert McKinley, born January 16, 1895; Naomi Pearl, born October 10, 1896; Everett Groff, born July 23, 1900; Carroll Reign Scoville, born June 15, 1906; Virgil Leroy, born July 30, 1908. Mr. Brines is an intelligent, representative citizen, and he and his wife have a large number of friends.

BRINES, Robert, one of the well known and prosperous farmers and stock-raisers of Wabash County, Ill., was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, where he now resides, September 13, 1872, a son of E. C. and Mary E. (Swain) Brines, both natives of Wabash County, the former born in Belmont Precinct. E. C. Brines was a son of Russell Brines and his wife is a daughter of William Swain. They settled on a farm in Belmont Precinct after their marriage and a short time afterward sold this land and bought unimproved timber and prairie land in Lick Prairie Precinct. He built a house and made all possible improvements before his death, which occurred August 20, 1898. His widow now resides in Mt. Carmel. Their children were: William, who died at the age of twenty-four years; Phebe, Mrs. Harry Rhodes, of Mt. Carmel; Effie, widow of Dr. Win Ridgeway, of Mt. Carmel; Mary, Mrs. Joseph Wilhelm, of Princeton, Ind.; Laura, died at the age of three years; Robert; James E., of Lancaster; and Joseph H., on the home farm.

The education received by Robert Brines was the same as most farmers' sons are given in the district schools, and he remained with his mother until his marriage, February 22, 1892, to May Wood, who was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, daughter of Nelson and Sarah (Ulm) Wood. After his marriage Mr. Brines took up his residence on the home farm and lived there some seven or eight years, then rented a farm near Maud, in Belmont Precinct, lived there three years, then moved to the Link Rigg farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct. Four years later he purchased seventy-five acres of his present farm in Section 25, Lick Prairie Precinct, and in the spring of 1908 purchased forty acres of timber land on the Bompas Creek bottom. He has cleared all the timber from his farm except fourteen acres, and is tiling and otherwise improving his land, so that he will soon have it in a high state of cultivation. He is an enterprising farmer, of prudent, industrious habits, and has won a fair degree of success through his own efforts. He raises a good grade of cattle, horses and hogs, besides carrying on a general line of farming.

Mr. Brines and his wife became parents of children as follows: Walter, born August 30, 1892, deceased; William Austin, born August 28, 1894; Lela Myrtle, born September 1, 1895; Marcella May, born February 5, 1897, died July 30, 1897; Nelson Wood, born August 1, 1898; Lola Beryl, born January 22, 1901; Ethan LeRoy, born December 20, 1906. The family attend the Christian Church and Mr. Brines is a member of Camp No. 5227, Modern Woodmen of America, of West Salem, Ill. Politically he is a Republican and takes a commendable interest in public affairs and current issues.

BROWN, George Washington (deceased), was born in the State of New York, September 30, 1814. His father came west about 1830 and rented a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill. Later the father took his available funds and went to the State of Missouri, for the purpose of finding a suitable location in which to settle, but died and was buried in that State. His widow continued to reside in Wabash County until her son George W. was grown, when they went to Grant County, Wis., and there Mr. Brown married (first) a Miss Carrollton, who died about a year later. Soon afterward, as he was driving his team on the ice in Lake Michigan, he lost his horses. He returned to Wabash County, Ill., and being without money, worked for others until he had saved something and then married Elizabeth Rigg, a native of Wabash County, and daughter of Samuel and Rachel (Beauchamp) Rigg, natives of Virginia, who were early settlers of Wabash County.

After his second marriage Mr. Brown located on a farm of 340 acres in Belmont Precinct, where he lived many years, but then moved to Kansas, where he died December 3, 1897, and his widow resided in Wabash County, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. Ameter, until her death, August 31, 1902. She was born March 7, 1819. Their children were: James T., of Missouri; Ruth E., married J. W. Oates, of Shobonier, Ill.; Francis S., of Pratt County, Kan.; Rachel H., married C. Ameter, of Belmont Precinct; Mary E.; George W., of Lone Oak, Tex.; Isabel V., died in infancy.

Mary Emily married (first) George Washington Brown, and they lived on a farm in Edwards County, Ill., two years, then moved back to her father's homestead and lived there until his death, October 9, 1881. They had two children, namely: Charles Pierce, who died at the age of seventeen years; Mary Florence, married M. W. Brines, of Belmont Precinct. Mrs. Brown lived on the farm one year after her husband's death, then moved to Belmont, where she lived until her second marriage, August 22, 1883, to Louis Glick, then moved with her husband to the Glick farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct. Three years later they purchased forty-five acres which adjoined fifty-five acres she owned on Section 33, Belmont Precinct, where they lived until their separation, in November, 1898, when the land reverted to Mrs. Glick. One-half of the fifty-five acres owned by Mrs. Glick was sold several years before the separation. She now owns eighty-four acres, which she operates in company with her children. She is a capable business woman and manages her affairs very successfully. The family attend the Methodist Church.

By her second marriage Mrs. Glick has children as follows: Ida Alice, at home; Lloyd C. and Roy G., of Eugene, Ore.; Russell C., Eunice E. and Homer H., at home.

BUCHANAN, Charles, a successful surveyor and prominent citizen of Mt. Carmel, Ill., has filled a number of offices in the county with ability and credit, and belongs to a family that has been prominent in the early history of Wabash County. Mr. Buchanan was born in Wabash County, February 25, 1856, a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Hershey) Buchanan, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Pennsylvania. Robert was a son of Walter and Jane (Gillespie) Buchanan, of Scotch parentage. His wife was a daughter of Joseph and Mary Hershey, natives of Pennsylvania.

Walter Buchanan and his wife first settled in Lawrence County, Ill., when there were few people there, coming down the Wabash River to Raccoon Creek. There they secured government land, which they cleared and improved. Mr. Buchanan was a skilled surveyor and one of the best mathematicians in the county. He spent his last days in Lawrence County, Ill.

Robert Buchanan and his wife were neighbors in childhood, living about six miles apart. He served as Surveyor of Wabash County from 1854 until 1879, and also conducted a farm of 320 acres. His death occurred in January, 1889, and that of his widow in June, 1890. Of their ten children seven still survive, namely: Alice, Mrs. John A. Harrington, of Allendale, Ill.; Isadora, Mrs. Edwin Gamper, of West Salem, Edwards County, Ill.; Ella, widow of George W. Smith, also of West Salem; Robert A., of Little Rock, Ark.; Laura, Mrs. Reuben Hill, of Bellmont, Ill.; Belle, resides with her sister Ella; and Charles. Those deceased are: William, died in infancy; Rosa, died at the age of nine years and seven days; Hannah J., Mrs. L. N. Putnam, of Bellmont, who left one daughter, Lulu, Mrs. James P. Long, of Richland County, Ill.

Charles Buchanan spent his boyhood on a farm and was educated in the common schools. He afterward attended the normal school at Lebanon, Ohio, where he took a course in surveying. He became an expert in this line and in 1879 was elected Surveyor of Wabash County, Ill., serving five years in this capacity. He then located on eighty acres of land, his share of the home farm, and in 1892 removed to Bellmont, where he conducted a general store several years, then returned to his farm, where he remained until 1906, when he was elected to the office of County Treasurer and moved to Mt. Carmel, which is now his home. He continues the work of surveying when his services are in requisition. He has established a reputation for ability and careful work, and enjoys the full confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens. Politically he is a Democrat. He formerly served as Trustee in Bellmont Precinct and is much interested in the cause of education, as well as other matters of public interest. He belongs to the Masonic Lodge No. 239, of Mt. Carmel, and to the Modern Woodmen of America, of Keensburg, Ill.

December 6, 1885, Mr. Buchanan married Elizabeth Keeper, born in Bellmont, Ill., daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Peters) Keeper, of German parentage. The children by this marriage were: Evelina, married Lester B. Putnam of Mt. Carmel, and Harry, who died when two and a half years old. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church.

BUTTERICK, James, an enterprising farmer of Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of the county, born in Compton Precinct, February 7, 1875, a son of William and Permilla (Compton) Butterick, the former a native of Yorkshire, England, and the latter of Wabash County. William Butterick is a son of John and Ann (Crackles) Butterick, natives of England, who came to the United States in 1850, and his wife is a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Compton, natives respectively of Wabash County and Virginia. Joseph Compton was a son of Levi and Ann Compton, among the earliest settlers of Wabash County. William and Permilla Compton had children as follows: Joseph and Callie, died young; Elizabeth, Mrs. Harry Milburn, of Coffee Precinct; Laura, Mrs. Lewis Groff, of Bellmont Precinct; James; Margaret, Mrs. Hugh Brines, of Edwards County, Ill.; Edward, of Compton Precinct; Nora, Mrs. William Davis, of Browns, Ill., and Mabel, wife of Grover Browns, of Browns.

James Butterick received his education in the public schools, remaining on the home farm until his marriage, in the fall of 1899, to Elsie Higginson, born in Coffee Precinct, daughter of Amzi and Alice (Kimbrel) Higginson, of Wabash County, the latter a native of Coffee Precinct. Mrs. Butterick's grandparents were Rolly and Elizabeth (Williams) Higginson and William and Tina (Compton) Kimbrel, natives of Wabash County. Mr. and Mrs. Butterick went to housekeeping on a farm they rented in Compton Precinct, and after remaining there five years, rented part of the Heigen farm, of which he and his brother Edward purchased forty-two acres. They purchased seventy-six acres of their father, where James lived until the fall of 1905, when he moved to his present fine farm in Coffee Precinct, within a half mile of Keensburg. In the spring of 1910 he and his brother had a division of the property they owned in partnership, and James Butterick received as his share the farm of seventy-six acres where he now lives. He carries on a general line of farming and follows modern methods in his work. Mr. Butterick is a Republican in political views. The family is well known in Wabash County and is identified with the best interests and development of the community.

William R Johnson

Three children were born to James Butterick and his wife, namely: William Earl, Daisy and Hazel.

BUTTERICK, John, who is extensively engaged in stock farming and dairying in Crompton Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in Lincolnshire, England, May 9, 1849, a son of John and Ann (Crackel) Butterick, both natives of England. The grandparents all died in England, but John Butterick, Sr., with his wife and three children, came to America in 1850, first, in consequence of having got on the wrong route, landing in Canada. Then, finding himself without means, he worked by the day until he could earn money enough to resume his journey, finally reaching Cleveland, Ohio, where his means were again exhausted and one child died. After remaining at work there nine weeks, he was able to proceed to Wabash County, Ill., where he was engaged in working by the day for about one year, then lived on rented land for the next three years, when he purchased land in Compton Precinct, adding thereto until he finally owned 300 acres in different parts of the precinct. Mr. Butterick died in 1875 and his widow lived in the vicinity of the old homestead until her death, in September, 1908, at the age of eighty years. They had children as follows: William and John, of Compton Precinct; Hannah, Mrs. William Root, of Enid, Okla.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Lewis Arnold, of Conrad, Mont.; Mary, Mrs. Henry Stanaker, of Scott's Bluff, Neb.; Anna, Mrs. John Vice, of Conrad, Mont. (is a twin of Mary), and Harriet, Mrs. Robert Arnold, of Bellmont Precinct.

The education of John Butterick, Jr., was acquired in the district schools of Wabash County and he remained with his parents until his marriage, in October, 1875, to Elizabeth G. Van Senden, born in Bellmont Precinct, a daughter of John A. and Samantha (Rigg) Van Senden, the father a native of Germany and the mother of Wabash County. After his marriage Mr. Butterick settled on part of his father's farm, in Section 10, purchasing 100 acres of land from his father. Forty-five acres of this land were cleared and he has cleared all except six acres of it, having 94 acres under cultivation. He has added to his land from time to time and now owns 223 acres, in Sections 2, 3, 10 and 11, all except eighty acres in one body. He carries on general farming, has a good dairy, and raises hogs, horses and mules. He is an industrious farmer and has managed his business in a manner that assured his success. He is well known for his honesty and integrity and stands well in his community. He is a Democrat in politics and has served as School Director and Trustee, and fraternally he is connected with Lodge No. 758, I. O. O. F., of Browns, Ill.

Children as follows have been born to Mr. Butterick and his wife: Lillie, Mrs. Elijah Floyd, of Urbana, Ill.; John, Carrie and Grover C., at home; Nora, died at the age of one year; Maud, died in infancy; Jessie, at home; Minnie, died in infancy; Mary, at home. The family attend the Christian Church, of Browns.

BUTTERICK, William, a retired farmer of Compton Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in Yorkshire, England, May 5, 1844, the oldest son of John and Ann (Crackles) Butterick, both natives of England. The parents emigrated to the United States in 1850, and after stopping to visit about ten weeks in Cleveland, then proceeded to Wabash County, where they began improving a farm. They secured eighty acres of land in Crackles Prairie, Compton Precinct, and 120 acres of timber nearby. The father cleared all except a few acres and erected a brick house, which is still standing. He died in 1875 on the home place, where his widow remained about fifteen years after his death, then moved to Browns, Edwards County, where she remained until her death in the fall of 1908, at the age of eighty years. Their children were: William; John, of Compton Precinct, whose sketch also appears in this work; Hannah, Mrs. William Root, of Enid, Okla.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Lewis Arnold, of Conrad, Mont.; Mary and Anna (twins) the former Mrs. Henry Stanaker, of Scotts Bluff, Neb., and the latter, Mrs. John Vice, of Conrad, Mont.; Harriet, Mrs. Robert Arnold, of Bellmont Precinct.

William Butterick received his education in the country schools and helped in the work upon the home farm as soon as he was able. He lived with his parents until his marriage, in 1868, to Permilla Compton, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Heniken) Compton, the former born in Wabash County and the latter in Virginia. Mr. Compton was a son of Levi and Anna Compton, natives of Virginia, who were among the earliest settlers of Wabash County. The Heniken family also settled in Compton Precinct at an early day.

Mr. Butterick settled on part of his father's farm after his marriage, and resided there four years, then spent seventeen years on a farm adjoining the one where he now lives, which he purchased of his father-in-law. This farm consists of 117 acres, all improved. In 1907 he erected a handsome two-story house on the natural building site where the old residence stood. This home stands on a bluff which commands a view of the country for many miles around. Mr. Butterick has his land in a high state of cultivation and has added forty acres to the farm. He carried on general farming and raised cattle, horses and hogs, but in 1906 rented his farm to his sons and now enjoys a well-earned rest. He is a Republican in politics and one of the best known and most highly respected men in the community.

Children born to Mr. and Mrs. Butterick have been as follows: Joseph, died at the age of ten years; Callie, died at the age of six years; Elizabeth, Mrs. Harry Milburn, of Coffee Precinct; Laura, Mrs. Lewis Groff, of Bellmont Precinct; James, of Keensburg Precinct; Margaret, Mrs. Hugh Brines, of Edwards County, Ill.; Edward, of Compton Precinct; Nora, Mrs. William Davis, of Browns, Ill.; Mabel, Mrs. Grover Browns, of Browns.

CALVERLEY, Charles.—Many men who have attained financial success through their own efforts and have earned a right to retire from active life and spend their last days in ease and retirement, find it difficult to content themselves without the cares to which they have become accustomed. Such a man is Charles Calverley, who owns a farm of 178 acres in Mt. Carmel Precinct. Mr. Calverley was born in Bevla Parks, England, April 28, 1839, a son of James D. and Martha (Venia) Calverley, who emigrated from England to the United States, landing at New Orleans in 1843. They came up the Mississippi River and the Ohio, to Shawneetown, Ill., then proceeded by ox-team and wagon to Wabash County, Ill., and lived four years on rented land in Mt. Carmel Precinct. They then purchased land in the neighborhood and became possessed of 498 acres of land in one body. Mr. Calverley made a specialty of raising fine horses, having paid $2,000 for one animal. His land was mostly cleared when he bought it and he was very successful in general farming. He brought from England the first Shepherd dog brought into Wabash County, which, like its master, never learned to eat corn bread. He was a devout member of the Methodist Church in England and joined the same church in his new home. His wife died in 1874, at the age of sixty-eight years, and he resided with a daughter in Wayne County, Ill., until his death, about 1900, at the age of ninety-five years. Their children were: Charlotte, Mrs. Thomas Jones, now deceased; James, deceased; Martha, Mrs. Henry Cramer, of Wayne County; Rachel, Mrs. William Harper, deceased; Mary Ann, died at the age of thirteen years; Charles; James, of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Sarah Jane, died in infancy; Henry, of Mt. Carmel.

As a boy Charles Calverley attended the Lebanon District School and afterward helped with the work of carrying on the home farm until his marriage to Maria J. Keneipp, who was born in Mt. Carmel, Ill., daughter of Silas and Jane (Harvey) Keneipp, natives of Ohio and Mt. Carmel, respectively. She is a granddaughter of Silas Keneipp and Beachamp Harvey. After this marriage Mr. Calverley moved to the farm where he still lives, which was given to him by his father. After remaining there twelve years, he retired from the farm and went to live in Mt. Carmel, buying a residence there. However, after spending eleven years in that city he became tired of a life of inactivity and returned to his farm, where he has since made his home. He makes a specialty of raising Norman Percheron horses and Red Angus cattle, also Shropshire sheep. He also carries on general farming with excellent success. Besides his farm he still owns city property, which he rents.

The children born to Mr. Calverley and his wife were: Martha, Mrs. Harry Standard, of Mt. Carmel; Maud, died in infancy; and Mary, Laura, Charles, Earl, Edgar and Raymond, all at home.

Mr. Calverley and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He takes an active interest in the welfare and progress of the community and is highly esteemed as a man of strict integrity and honesty of purpose. Politically he is a Republican. He has worked hard all his life and still takes an active part in conducting his farm, paying close attention to details and adopting modern methods.

CAMPBELL, James.—One of the most successful and substantial farmers of Mt. Carmel Township, Wabash County, Ill., is James Campbell, who has been a resident of the county for more than sixty years. Mr. Campbell has a well improved and well stocked place, on which he carries on a general line of farming. He was born in Wilson County, Tenn., May 31, 1839, a son of James and Mary Glenn (Pritchett) Campbell, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Virginia. His parents were natives of Scotland and after coming to America located in Tennessee. James Campbell, Sr., was married in Tennessee and in 1849 brought his family to Wabash County, Ill., purchasing a farm one mile northeast of Mt. Carmel. Here he spent the remainder of his life except for a short period before his decease, when he lived with his children. He died in 1881 and his wife in 1879. They were parents of children as follows: Elizabeth, Mrs. Justus Gard, deceased; Cecilia, Mrs. James C. Payne, deceased; Jane; Mrs. Washington Keen, of Wabash County; Sarah, married William Ulm, of Wabash County; and James.

The early years of James Campbell were spent on his father's farm and he received only a limited education in the country schools. He was about ten years old when the family came to Illinois and soon began helping in connection with the work of clearing and cultivating the new farm. He lived at home until his marriage, on December 31, 1861, to Martha Ann Newkirk, who was born in Friendsville Precinct, a daughter of Zachariah and Levila (Higgins) Newkirk both natives of Illinois. The following children were born to Mr. Campbell and his wife: Mary Eliza, Mrs. Josephus Johnson, of Knox County, Tex.; Charles Henry, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Clara Levila, Mrs. John Wood, of Mt. Carmel Township; Edith, Mrs. Victor Wood, of Friendsville Township. Mrs. Campbell died September 22, 1879, and Mr. Campbell married (second), December 16, 1880, Judy Adams, who was a native of Wabash County, and died January 20, 1897, having borne no children. She was a daughter of John and Catherine (Bratton) Wood, both of Illinois, March 8, 1808. Mr. Campbell married (third) Laura Jane (Briner) Frick, widow of Charles Frick and daughter of John and Ann (Briner) Briner, both natives of Orange County, Ind. Mrs. Campbell had one child by her former marriage, Allie C., who died in infancy. Her first husband, Mr. Frick, died August 25, 1895.

After his first marriage Mr. Campbell moved to a farm of eighty acres, three miles north of Mt. Carmel. There were fifteen acres of this land cleared and the remainder was in timber. A log cabin had been built on the place, and here the family lived four years; then he erected a two-story frame house and they had just moved into it when it was destroyed by fire, with all its contents. He lived with his parents until he could erect another dwelling in which they have since lived. He has added to this building since its erection and now has a comfortable, modern dwelling. He now has but ten acres in timber, and has added forty acres to the home farm, which he gave to his only son, the latter having purchased forty acres of land from his mother-in-law adjoining this land. Mr. Campbell is recognized as one of the representative citizens of his locality and is highly respected by all who know him. He has won success through his personal efforts and deserves the good fortune that has come to him. He purchased a forty-acre tract of land in Mt. Carmel Precinct for each of his children. Politically is a Democrat, and is also a member of the Christian Church.

Charles Henry Campbell, son of James Campbell, married Sarah Elizabeth Reel, a native of Wabash County, and a daughter of David and Margaret (Gard) Reel, also natives of the same county. The children of this marriage are: Fred, Pearl, Ansel, Frank and Ralph.

CANEDY, Lewis G.—Many of the older residents of Wabash County, Ill., have carried on their farms during the greater part of their lives, and when nearing old age, have retired from active life to spend the remainder of their lives in comparative ease and comfort. Among these is Lewis G. Canedy, who has been a resident of the county since 1859, and has always been identified with every movement for the welfare and development of the community. Mr. Canedy was born in Geauga County, Ohio, April 3, 1837, a son of Aden and Elizabeth (Stockwell) Canedy, both natives of Bennington County, Vt. His grandparents were Thomas Canedy and wife, and Willard and Nancy (Jackson) Stockwell, all of Vermont.

Aden Canedy and wife were married in Vermont and, about two years later, moved to Geauga County, Ohio, returning to Vermont when their son Lewis G., was six weeks old. After living five years longer in Vermont they moved to Delaware County, Ohio, and there he worked in saw-mills, until compelled by failing health to retire from this kind of work. He spent the remainder of his life as a shoe-maker and died in the fall of 1873. His widow survived him many years and died about 1892. Their children were: Lewis G. (the oldest); Lucius, deceased; James Monroe, of Nebraska; Louisa, Mrs. Joshua Buchanan, deceased; Sarah, Mrs. James Stillwell, of Allendale, Ill.; Josephine, married James Risley, and is now deceased; Mitchell, died in infancy.

Lewis G. Canedy resided with his parents until his marriage, September 14, 1858, to Catherine Wigton, who was born in Delaware County, Ohio, January 22, 1842, daughter of Augustin and Mary (Rosecrans) Wigton, both natives of Bradford County, Pa. Her grandparents were: William and Elizabeth (Price) Wigton, of Massachusetts, and Isaac and Mary (Taylor) Rosecrans, of New York and Pennsylvania, respectively. After his marriage Mr. Canedy lived about a year on a farm in Delaware County, Ohio, though he spent most of his time in carpenter work. In the fall of 1859 he and his wife came to Wabash County, Ill., and rented a farm in Friendsville Precinct six years, then bought a farm in Wabash Precinct, where they lived twenty-seven years. They sold this farm and purchased 140 acres in Friendsville Precinct, where they have since resided. Mr. Canedy carried on general farming with success until the past few years, but his health has been poor and he has been obliged to retire from active life. He had made all possible improvements and put his land into a high state of cultivation, deriving a good income therefrom.

The following children were born to Mr. Canedy and wife: Lilly May, died in infancy; Charles Albert, of Mt. Carmel; Alvin R., of Allendale, an instructor in band music; Willard, died July 25, 1908, at the age of forty-one years; Clifton L., of Mt. Carmel; Ora L., died at the age of three years; Leroy, of Mt. Carmel; Elwin H., who carries on his father's farm. Mr. Canedy is a Republican in politics and has served as School Director and in other local offices. He enjoys the full confidence and esteem of his neighbors and is considered a representative, public-spirited citizen. The family attend the United Brethren Church.

CAPOOT, George R.—Among the younger merchants who have won success in Wabash County, Ill., is George R. Capoot, of Allendale, who has lived in the county since infancy. Mr. Capoot was born at Grayville, Ill., September 19, 1873, a son of John and Amy (Hugo) Capoot. John Capoot was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, September 19, 1834, and died in Wabash County, Ill., January 20, 1910, while his wife, born in Evansville, Ind., November 21, 1845, now resides at Allendale. He was a son of Peter and Catherine Capoot, the former born in Baltimore, Md., soon after his parents' arrival from France, the latter born in Louisville, Ky., and died at Cairo, Ill.

Peter Capoot was a cooper and worked at his trade at Cincinnati, Ohio, and his son John also learned the same trade. Until his enlistment in 1861, the latter worked at his trade at Cairo and Metropolis, Ill. He served in Company I, First Regiment Illinois Cavalry, from July 25, 1861, until September 3, 1862, when he was discharged. He re-enlisted in Company B, Fifteenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, and was discharged with the rank of Sergeant, June 27, 1861, at Helena, Ark. He returned to his home at Cairo and remained there until his marriage, December 26, 1870, to Amy (Hugo) Pritchard, widow of Bertram Pritchard, who was residing in New Harmony, Ind. She is a daughter of Philip R. and Martha (Barker) Hugo, the former born in Baltimore, Md., and the latter a native of Indiana. By her previous marriage Mrs. Capoot had two children, namely: Martha, who resides with her mother, and Victor Clay, of Allendale, Ill. Mr. Capoot lived at New Harmony a short time after his marriage, and then moved to Grayville, where he lived until his removal to Allendale, in 1875. He worked as cooper in connection with a grist-mill several years, making barrels, then started a shop of his own, which he conducted until 1885, when he embarked in general merchandise business, which he continued some fifteen years and then transferred it to his son Edwin, now a farmer in Wabash Precinct.

The children born to John Capoot and his wife were: Edwin, George R. and Amy, the later dying in infancy.

George R. Capoot was educated in the common schools of Allendale and Central Normal College, at Danville, Ind. He worked in the store for his father and brother as a young man, being clerk, buyer and general agent. Later he went to Chicago and became city salesman for a rubber stamp and stationery company, and afterwards worked in a law and abstract office at Sullivan, Ind. In 1900 he returned to Allendale and there opened an office, being a Justice of the Peace and Notary Public, also agent in insurance, real-estate, coal and collecting business. On December 1, 1909, he resigned the office of Justice of the Peace, but is still Notary Public, and has established himself in mercantile business, dealing in groceries, china, glass, tin-ware, granite-ware, books, stationery, watches, clocks and jewelry, 5 and 10 cent goods, mill remnants, post cards, candy, cigars and tobacco. He also retains his agencies for coal, insurance, etc., and does a good business in all his lines. He has the confidence and esteem of his patrons and is a man of good judgment and business acumen. His store is known as the Index Store, and he has trade from many miles around.

November 29, 1906, Mr. Capoot married Mae Brodhecker, who was born at Brownstown, Jackson County, Ind., daughter of Frank and Mary (Doerr) Brodhecker, of Indiana, but of German parentage. To Mr. and Mrs. Capoot has been born one child, Miriam Henrietta, born March 24, 1910. Mr. Capoot is well known in the vicinity of Allendale, which has been his home since 1875. His parents were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as he is, and he has served in various church offices. He was for three years Superintendent of the Sunday School, and is Financial Secretary of the Church Board, Trustee and Recording Steward of the Allendale Circuit, and Superintendent of the Home Department of the Sunday School. In politics he is a Republican and takes an active interest in public affairs. Fraternally he is a member of the Mystic Workers of the World, and has been Secretary of the same since its organization.

CHAPMAN, Charles F.—One of the substantial and influential farmers of Wabash County, Ill., is Charles F. Chapman, who is descended from two of the pioneer families of the county. He was born at Mt. Carmel, April 3, 1875, a son of William Major and Ellen (Keneipp) Chapman, both natives of Mt. Carmel. William M. Chapman is a son of Robert Chapman and his wife was a daughter of Silas Keneipp. Robert Chapman was a native of England and both he and Mr. Keneipp were among the early settlers of Wabash County, where they became successful farmers. William Major Chapman was born October 22, 1840, and upon his marriage settled on a farm near Mt. Carmel, where he now resides. He has always taken a great interest in public affairs and has been a strong supporter of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His first wife died December 30, 1880, having borne the following children: Sarah, died in childhood; William, of Mt. Carmel; Nellie, twin sister of William, died in infancy; Charles F.; Laura and Clara, twins, died in infancy. William M. Chapman married (second) Madora Groff, of Bellmont, Ill., and they had the following eight children: Ethel, Flora, Ciella, John, Gladys, Ernest, Genn and Eva, all at home.

The boyhood of Charles F. Chapman was spent on a farm and he received good education in the district school of the neighborhood. He had an opportunity of learning all the details of farm work, and has all his life been engaged in agricultural pursuits. He helped in the work upon his father's farm as soon as old enough to do so, and lived at home a year and a half after his marriage; then bought the old Kisley farm of 145 acres, two miles northwest of Mt. Carmel, where he remained until 1906, and in that year bought the Kingsbury farm of 101 acres, which adjoined his first farm on the west. Mrs. Chapman also has 121 acres of land on the Wabash River near Allendale.

Mr. Chapman has been very successful in general farming and fully appreciates the value of high-grade stock, in which he is extensively interested. He has registered Hereford cattle and Duroc Jersey hogs, both of which he has found very profitable; is also a breeder of Buff Rock chickens. He is an enterprising and business-like farmer, and has his entire farm under cultivation except eight acres still in timber. Mr. Chapman is highly respected in the community, where his entire life has been spent, and is a representative of the higher type of Illinois farmers. He has a large circle of friends and belongs to the Modern Americans, of Friendsville, and the Order of the Eastern Star. Politically he supports the principles of the Republican party, and is an earnest member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, having served as Trustee in the same since 1906.

March 1, 1899, Mr. Chapman married Lovilah Courter, born at Allendale, Ill., a daughter of William F. and Mary (Fox) Courter, both of Wabash County, and six children have been born to Mr. Chapman and wife, namely: Charles Edward, William Franklin, Mary Ella, Myrtie Jane, Bernard Clinton and Madorah. William Franklin, the second child, died at the age of five years.

CHAPMAN, Robert (deceased), was born at Elixton, Yorkshire, England, July 17, 1808, came to this country at the age of nineteen years and was married to Sarah Wharram in Philadelphia. They resided at Wilkesbarre, Pa., for eighteen months, when he returned to England to participate in the settlement of the estate of Mrs. Chapman's father, John Wharram, Gent. Mrs. Chapman was a niece of the illustrious emancipator, William Wilberforce. After a year spent at their old home, they returned to America, and in 1830, settled in Mt. Carmel for a brief period, when they located in the uncleared forest to build a home and develop a farm.

Mr. Chapman was one of the rugged, persevering and forceful pioneers of the county and did much to reclaim it from primitive conditions. By his energy and sound judgment he acquired a comfortable competency, and his sterling integrity and irreproachable character won for him the confidence and respect of all his numerous acquaintances. His counsel was freely sought and highly regarded. He was the father of ten children, five of whom are still living. He attained a ripe old age and his days were filled with usefulness. His life was simple and practical, and he possessed the essence of all virtues—sincerity. He was a kindly, devoted and courageous man, true to himself and loyal to every duty, and lived to see the fruition of his cherished hopes, and enjoy the love and veneration of all who knew him. He was a loved and loving man, fearless and sympathetic, upright and absolutely honest.

CHAPMAN, Thomas W., who owns a well-improved farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is an enterprising and progressive farmer, and has spent his entire life in agricultural pursuits. Mr. Chapman was born in the township, March 26, 1847, son of Robert Chapman, who was a native of England, and came with his wife to the United States and bought a tract of land in Wabash County from the Government in an early day. This land was then mostly covered with timber, and Mr. Chapman set about clearing and improving it, adding to his farm from time to time, until at the time of his death he owned 600 acres. He died in 1892 and his wife in 1878. They had ten children, of whom Thomas W. is the eighth.

Until reaching the age of twenty-four years, Thomas W. Chapman remained at home with his parents. He received a good education in the district school and has since kept himself well informed on general subjects. At the time he left home he purchased sixty acres of land from his father, on which he has lived ever since, keeping house for himself until his marriage. He has added to his farm as he was able, and now has 185 acres in his home place, besides an eighty-acre farm adjoining on the north. He has improved all this land himself, with the exception of sixty acres which was already cleared, and has twenty acres left in timber. He has always carried on general farming with excellent results and has brought his land to a high state of cultivation, raising the crops which are best adapted to it. Mr. Chapman is well known in the community, having spent his entire life in his native precinct, and has a large circle of friends. He is a man of sterling worth and integrity, taking an active interest in the welfare and development of the county. In political views he is a Republican and he and his family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he has been a Steward since 1878. Fraternally Mr. Chapman belongs to the Modern Americans and to Lebanon Grange.

March 10, 1872, Mr. Chapman married Emma J. Risley, daughter of John T. and Jane (Arnold) Risley, the former born in New Jersey and the latter in Wabash County. Mr. Risley's father, Daniel Risley, came to Illinois from New Jersey, when the son was a small boy. Mrs. Risley's father was killed in the Black Hawk War and her mother was Elizabeth Warner. The Arnolds were among the first settlers of Lancaster and built the first house in that precinct. The children born to Mr. Chapman and his wife are: Robert Risley, died in infancy; Walter, living on part of his fathers' farm; Chester Allen, of Mt. Carmel; Lester Ella, a school-teacher, living at home. Mrs. Chapman attended the common schools until fourteen years of age, then entered the seminary at Mt. Carmel. Both she and her husband have given careful attention to the subject of educating their children, who have done credit to their parents.

CISEL, John H., one of the most prominent and influential farmers of Wabash County, Ill., is a native of Wabash Precinct, where he now owns a good farm. He was born March 6, 1841, a son of Thomas and Mary (McClain) Cisel, the former born in New York and the latter in Ohio. The parents of Thomas Cisel removed from Ohio to Wabash County, in 1821, and died in Wabash Precinct. Thomas Cisel owned a farm in Wabash Precinct, where he lived after his marriage, and acquired more land in the Wabash River bottom. Here he and his wife both died. Of their twelve children all reached maturity except one daughter who died in childhood. John H. was the sixth child.

Until his marriage John H. Cisel lived at home and helped in work on his father's farm. He received a good education in the public schools and was reared to agricultural pursuits. He married, December 25, 1866, Jemima Keen, who was born in Wabash Precinct, a daughter of Dennis and Margaret (Compton) Keen. After his marriage Mr. Cisel moved to a farm of 100 acres in Section 24, Wabash Precinct, which he cleared and improved, adding to it until he now owns 230 acres on Sections 2, 24 and 13. He carries on general farming and makes a specialty of raising fine horses, cattle and hogs. He has been very successful and is known as an enterprising, ambitious farmer. He is actively interested in all public enterprises that he considers beneficial to the community and in political views is a Democrat.

The following children have been born to Mr. Cisel and wife: Jesse Lee, of Wabash Precinct; Callie, Mrs. Harvey Pixley, of Flora, Ill.; Margaret, Mrs. Wile Pixley, of Eugene, Ore.; Levi, of Colorado Springs, Colo.; Josie, Mrs. Fred Holsing, of Allendale, Ill.; G. C., of Billings, Mont.; and Nora.

CLARK, Dutch Hamilton.—To achieve success in any line of railroad work requires steady nerves, a careful study of the details of the work being carried on and strict adherence to the rules governing the operation of the line of work in question. Dutch Hamilton Clark, of Mt. Carmel, Ill., has been engaged in railroad work of one kind and another since attaining the age of sixteen years, and has shown ability of a high order in performing his various duties. He was born in Knox County, Ind., July 26, 1855, a son of James Madison and Elizabeth (Lindsay) Clark, the former a native of Knox County and the latter of Hopkinsville, Ky. James M. Clark still lives on his farm in Knox County, where he has resided since his marriage, and has now attained the age of eighty-three years. His wife passed away March 18, 1896. They were parents of the following children: Thomas J., deceased; James M., and John F. P., also deceased; Dutch H.; and Eliza, married William Herin, a farmer of Knox County.

The education of D. H. Clark was acquired in his native county, where he attended the common and high schools, and when he left school he entered the employ of the Evansville & Terre Haute Railroad, working some six years with construction gangs, and then for two years worked as bridge carpenter. He then moved to Effingham, Ill., where he was employed as bridge carpenter on the Springfield, Effingham, Southeastern & Bloomington Railroad, now a part of the Illinois Central. Later he was employed in a similar capacity by the Wabash, now part of the Big Four Railroad, and in 1886 removed to Mt. Carmel, Ill., and for four years worked in the railroad switch-yards of that city. From 1890 until 1894 he was employed in the capacity of freight brakeman, then spent two years as conductor. About 1896 Mr. Clark decided to settle down, taking a position in the car repair shops at Mt. Carmel, where he is still employed. He is a good mechanic and stands well with his employers.

Mr. Clark was married, September 8, 1886, to Essie Steely Tomlinson, who was born in Mattoon, Ill., and was adopted in infancy by a Mrs. Steely. Four children have been born to Mr. Clark and wife, namely: James and Harry, both of whom died in infancy; Earl Owen and Helen Esther. Mr. Clark has identified himself with the best interests of Mt. Carmel and vicinity, and has won a high degree of respect and esteem from his associates and fellow-citizens. Politically he is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He is a member of the Christian Church and fraternally is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. Lodge No. 239, the Eastern Star Chapter No. 32, and the Big Four Tent of K. O. T. M., No. 273. He is a man of quiet disposition and industrious habits, and a good type of the useful, public-spirited citizen.

CLINE, Hubert Lee.—Among the enterprising farmers of Wabash County, Ill., who have appreciated the benefits arising from modern methods and ideas, is Hubert Lee Cline, who operates his farm of 160 acres in Section 36, Mt. Carmel Precinct. Mr. Cline was born in Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, October 26, 1872, a son of Andrew L. and Lucinda (Litherland) Cline, natives of Washington County, Pa., and Wabash County, Ill., respectively. Lucinda Litherland's parents, Henry and Mary (Wood) Litherland, were early settlers in Wabash County and lived in Wabash and Friendsville Precincts. Andrew L. Cline was a Southern soldier and after the close of the war moved to Friendsville Precinct, where he married and settled on a farm. He died in 1880, a comparatively young man, and his widow afterward married Jacob Doty, but died about 1900. Hubert L. Cline has a younger brother, John W., of Wabash Precinct.

After the death of his father Hubert L. Cline remained with his mother and stepfather, and acquired his education in the district schools. He remained at home until his marriage, May 16, 1895, to Sarah Bauman, who was born in Spencer County, Ind. After his marriage Mr. Cline inherited 100 acres of land in Friendsville Precinct, and lived on it until 1905, when he purchased 160 acres on Section 36, Mt. Carmel Precinct, the farm being well improved. He has erected a barn 42 by 72 feet, twenty feet high, and has set out a fine four-acre apple orchard. He has brought his land to a fine state of cultivation and, besides carrying on general farming, raises German coach-horses, short-horn cattle, Poland China hogs and Shropshire sheep.

Mr. Cline and wife became parents of children as follows: Evota, Augusta, Irma, Hubert, Alta, Orlen, Harold and Orthel Eldin. Mr. Cline is a Democrat and has served as School Director since 1906. He is a member of the Christian Church and is interested in every cause for the good of the community. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows No. 1732, of Friendsville, and the Modern Woodmen of America of Cabbage Corner, Wabash County. He is identified with the better class of citizens and is highly respected for his many good traits of character and sterling worth.

CLINE, John W.—Many men make their own way in life and achieve financial success who have not had the benefit of a good education. Such a man is John W. Cline, a prominent farmer of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., who lost his father when he was an infant.

A. E. Steen

He had little opportunity to attend school but has learned much through his own efforts and in the school of experience. He keeps himself well informed on the topics and issues of the day and appreciates the advantage of management on his farm in a scientific manner. Mr. Cline was born in Friendsville Precinct, January 11, 1873, a son of Andrew L. and Lucinda (Litherland) Cline, the former born near Pittsburg, Pa., and the latter in Friendsville Precinct. They were married in the latter place and settled on a farm there, though he was a carpenter by trade. Here he died, leaving children as follows: Hubert Lee, of Friendsville Precinct, and John W. His widow married (second) Jacob Doty and they lived on various farms in the neighborhood. She died about 1900.

At the time of his mother's second marriage John W. Cline was seven years of age and he left the parental home. He lived for a year with Henry Leek and later found a home at various places until he was sixteen years of age, when he began working at farming by the month. He was married, April 28, 1895, to Lucy Payne, who was born in Wabash Precinct, October 28, 1871, a daughter of Jonathan and Letitia (McDonnell) Payne. After his marriage Mr. Cline built a house on a farm of 136 acres in Friendsville Precinct, which he had inherited from his Grandmother Litherland and his great-uncle, Marshall Wood. In the spring of 1906 he sold this land and purchased an eighty-acre farm on Section 8, Friendsville Precinct. The place was well improved and he has put it into a fine state of cultivation. He appreciated the value of high-grade stock and raises registered Berkshire hogs and Holstein cattle.

Mr. Cline and his wife have no children of their own but have an adopted son, Otto, who was born May 1, 1905. They are members of the Christian Church and active in its good work. Politically Mr. Cline is a Democrat and is actively interested in the welfare and development of the community.

COMBS, George Washington, a leading farmer of Wabash County, Ill., was born in Lawrence County, Ill., October 11, 1862, son of George W. and Rebecca (Lutz) Combs, the former born near Columbus, Ohio, April 26, 1815, and the latter in Franklin County, Pa., July 24, 1821. George W. Combs was a son of George W. Combs, a Revolutionary soldier, who settled in Ohio, and his wife was a daughter of Henry and Mattie Lutz, natives of Germany. The parents of the subject of this sketch were married December 10, 1838, and July 13, 1839, came to St. Lawrence County, settling in Bridgeport Township, where the oil fields have since been discovered. They entered one thousand acres of land, all in timber. Mr. Combs improved some of the land and built a small house, 18 by 20 feet, also a large bank barn, 80 by 120 feet, and the first of its kind erected in that section of the State. He became one of the most extensive farmers of that region, taking care of a large tract of land himself and renting out a considerable portion of it. He was much interested in stock-raising and became very successful in his enterprises. He died July 31, 1869, and his wife passed away August 23, 1902, both being buried in Lawrence County. They had children as follows: Martin, died in infancy; Eliza E., Mrs. Walter Gray, of Bridgeport, Ill.; William, deceased; Mary J., died in childhood; Anna, Mrs. James N. Thrapp, of Olney, Ill.; Lafayette, of Vincennes, Ind.; Addie, Mrs. John Mieur, now deceased; John, died at the age of thirty years; Lyda, Mrs. Alonzo Gilsbie, who died after her marriage; Emma, Mrs. George Emerick, of Lawrence County; George W., and Jesse, who died at the age of five years.

George W. Combs began his education in Lawrence County, where he attended the district school, and helped with the work on his father's farm until his marriage, October 24, 1894, to Laura E. Schrodt, born in Mt. Carmel Township. She is a daughter of John and Anna (Bradley) Schrodt, the former born at Worms, Germany, May 4, 1830. The parents of Mr. Schrodt were John and Mary Schrodt, who were natives of Germany. He came from Germany in 1838 and entered land from the Government, part of which now belongs to Mr. Combs. The parents of Mrs. Combs were married July 8, 1851. Her father died December 23, 1887, and her mother February 19, 1882. Upon his marriage Mr. Combs moved to a farm which his father-in-law had deeded to his daughter. This land consisted of 184 acres and he also gave her 300 acres in Gibson County, Ind. Mr. Combs carries on general farming, cultivating his entire farm himself and paying special attention to stock-raising and buying. He is one of the most progressive and up-to-date farmers of his region and is always ready to adopt modern methods in his work. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he served some years as Steward, also as Trustee. He served on building committees of the church and helped build four churches, two in Lawrence County and two in Knox County, Ind., where he lived eight years prior to his marriage. In political affairs he is a Republican.

COMPTON, James (deceased), who died on his farm of eighty acres, one mile west of Keensburg, Ill. spent his entire life in Wabash County, and was identified with the best interests of his community. Although he died a young man, he had won the respect of his fellows and maintained a good standing among them. Mr. Compton was born in Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, June 1, 1826, son of John and Rebecca (Branders) Compton, of Virginia, who were among the earliest settlers of the county. The parents entered wild land from the Government and developed a farm. The Indians were just leaving the neighborhood as they settled there. James Compton received but a limited education and early began to help his father on the farm. He remained at home until his marriage, December 23, 1848, to Mary Ann Kimbrell, who was born in Wayne County Ill., April 2, 1831, daughter of William and Permelia (Webster) Kimbrell, natives of North Carolina. Her grandparents were Peter and Catherine Webster, the latter of whom came with her daughter to Wabash County.

After his marriage James Compton moved to his farm near Keensburg, where he died a few years later, in November, 1856, at the age of thirty years. His widow continued to reside on this farm until 1901. The children born to Mr. Compton and his wife were: Joseph H., a sketch of whom appears in this work; Jeremiah and Sarah, deceased; Caroline, married John G. Lovelette, of Keensburg, who died September 7, 1904. Mr. Lovelette and his wife became parents of four children: two sons, James and Count, both of Chicago, and two daughters, Sharlotta and Laura, both of whom died of lung disease.

Mrs. Compton married (second), February 3, 1861, Joshua Fifer, born in the United States, son of George Fifer, a native of Germany. Joshua Fifer resided on the old Compton homestead until his death, December 20, 1873. He and his wife had children as follows: James and Francis, of Coffee Precinct; Permelia, and William, deceased. In 1901 Mrs. Fifer went to live with her daughter, Mrs. John G. Lovelette, in Keensburg. She has been a widow for nearly forty years and has managed her own affairs in a most able manner. She has reared her children to honorable man- and womanhood and has done her whole duty by them. She is in fair health and is quite active for a woman of her years. She is revered and esteemed by her large number of friends and is honored by her children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

COMPTON, Joseph Henry, a substantial and successful farmer of Coffee Precinct Wabash County, Ill., and for ten years a merchant of Cowling, is a native of the county, born in Coffee Precinct, April 24, 1849. He is a son of James and Mary Ann (Kimbrell) Compton, both born in Coffee Precinct, and grandson of John and Rebecca (Branders) Compton, both natives of Virginia, and on the maternal side of William and Permelia (Philpot) Kimbrell, the former a native of Eastern Tennessee. John and Rebecca Compton settled in Wabash County at an early day, securing forty acres of land near Keensburg village. He was a highly educated and gifted man and served at one time in the Illinois Legislature. He taught school in Virginia and also for many years in Illinois. William Kimbrell and his wife were early settlers of Wabash County, securing eighty acres of land adjoining the John Compton farm.

After marriage James and Mary Compton settled on the Wabash River in old Coffee Precinct, on what is now known as the Blunt land, and two years later he purchased eighty acres of land adjoining the Kimbrell farm. He secured this land from the Government, improved it and died upon his farm in 1856. His widow later married Joshua Fifer, and they lived on the Compton homestead until Mr. Fifer's death in 1873, after which Mrs. Fifer continued to live there until 1901, since which she has lived with her daughter, Mrs. Caroline Lovelette, of Keensburg. She reached the age of seventy-nine years, April 2, 1910. James Compton and his wife had children as follows: Joseph H.; Jeremiah, died April 2, 1865; Sarah, died in childhood; Caroline, married John G. Lovelette. By her second marriage Mrs. Fifer had four children, namely: James M., rents the old home from his mother; Francis, of Coffee Precinct; William, died about 1890; Permelia, died at the age of twenty years.

Joseph H. Compton was but seven years old when his father died. He continued to live with his mother after her second marriage, meanwhile attending the district school, and remaining on the home farm until his marriage, August 4, 1872, to Rachel E. Stewart. Mrs. Compton was born on the place where she and her husband now live, and where her entire life has been spent, with the exception of a few years after marriage when they rented farms in Coffee Precinct. After the death of Mrs. Compton's father, William Boswell Stewart, they went to live on the farm which they now occupy and operate. William Boswell Stewart's widow, Mrs. Rosanna (Compton) Stewart, was born August 8, 1831, in Compton Precinct, Wabash County, and he in Orange County, Ind. Her parents were Eli and Mary (Lindsey) Compton, of Virginia, who were early settlers of Wabash County. Her second husband, William B. Stewart, was a son of John and Rachel Stewart, of Indiana. Mrs. Joseph H. Compton inherited the homestead of 140 acres of which forty acres were in a different part of the precinct, the homestead being in Sections 17 and 20, and the forty-acre tract in Section 21. Mrs. Compton's father died January 14, 1891, and her mother lived on the old homestead until 1896, when she went to live with her grand-daughter, Mrs. Perry D. Rosenberg, of Keensburg, Ill.

In October, 1896, Mr. and Mrs. Compton went to live on the place where she was born, all of which was in a high state of cultivation except four acres of timbers. From 1882 until 1892 Mr. Compton conducted a general mercantile business at Cowling, Ill., which he sold out in the latter year, and since that time his attention has been devoted to agricultural pursuits exclusively. He and his wife became parents of children as follows: William J., born August 23, 1873; lives in Fresno, Cal.; Charles, born September 13, 1875, died April 29, 1880; Albert B., born February 7, 1878, lives in Keensburg, Ill.; John C., born January 31, 1881, resides in Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Laura, born February 19, 1883, died February 19, 1883; Jessie H., born November 21, 1885, resides in Mt. Carmel; Clarence H., born November 4, 1887, of Mt. Carmel; Thomas H., born September 29, 1890, died August 29, 1891; George H., born September 20, 1895.

Mr. Compton is prominent in local affairs and in politics is a Democrat. He has held various township offices and has been Justice of the Peace six years. Both he and his wife are members of the Tribe of Ben Hur, of Keensburg, and she also belongs to the Royal Neighbors. Both are much interested in the good work of the Christian Church and give their support to every worthy cause. They have a large number of friends and are held in high esteem by all who know them.

COMPTON, Martin Van Buren, of Allendale, Ill., is descended from some of the first settlers of Wabash County, his father having served as Representative in the Illinois Legislature 1842-44, and his grandfather in the Constitutional Convention of 1818. Mr. Compton was born in Wabash Precinct, March 23, 1837, son of John and Drusilla (Selby) Compton, the former born in Berkeley County, W. Va., and his wife in Kentucky. He was a son of Levi and Rosanna (Phinsee) Compton, the former a native of Fairfax County, Va., and the latter of Saint Mary County, Md. Levi Compton was a son of John and Elizabeth (Hill) Compton, of Fairfax County, Va., the former born February 1, 1766, a son of John Compton, who was born in Charles County, Md., and she born in England. The wife of John Compton, father of Martin Van Buren Compton, was a daughter of Jeremiah and Nancy Ann (Levens) Selby, of English descent, who located in Wabash County, Ill., in 1807, and entered land from the Government. In 1820 Mrs. Selby died and he moved to Pike County, Ind., where he died, about 1830-31.

Levi Compton came to Wabash County as early as 1803 and settled in Wabash Precinct along the river. He raised the first corn planted in the county, and lived on his first farm until 1807, when he moved to the place now occupied by his grandson, Martin Compton, where he secured 350 acres, on Section 12, which was timber land. In 1816 he sold this land to his son, John, and moved to Compton Precinct, entering land along the river. He died there in 1844. Levi Compton was one of the most prominent men of his day and served as a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818, which prepared the Constitution for the admission of Illinois as a State. He took great interest in all public affairs.

The first marriage of John Compton was to Jane Barney and they settled on the farm, which was located where Keensburg now stands. Their children were: Perry, who died in 1847; Levi, died in 1822, at the age of four years, and Rosanna, Jeremiah and Sophronia, all deceased. Mrs. Compton died in 1832, and in 1836 Mr. Compton married (second) Drusilla Selby, and they lived at old Fort Compton, the fort being on the farm now occupied by his son. Their children were: Martin V. B.; Thomas B., killed at the Battle of Shiloh, in April, 1862; Emily, died in 1843; Ornamil K., died September 2, 1871. Mr. Compton died in 1851 and his widow died March 19, 1876.

Martin V. B. Compton lived with his mother until he was seventeen years of age, then went to Mississippi, where he chopped cord-wood for a time, then went to California, where he worked at mining and at lumbering in the woods. After spending six years in California he returned home and remained with his mother until his marriage, in 1865, to Sarah Faha, who was born in County Galway, Ireland, a daughter of John and Mary (Maddin) Faha, who came first to Bangor, Me., and in 1856 to Wabash County, Ill. After his marriage Mr. Compton located on land he had inherited from his father, and lived there until 1871, when he went to live with his mother, remaining until her death. He received 289 acres of land as his share, although he deeded land for a burying ground. His land was all in one body and here he carried on general farming with excellent success, also raising many horses, cattle, hogs and sheep. He received but a limited education in the common schools, but profited by experience, and being a man of intelligence and natural ability, won success through his good judgment and hard work. Politically he is a Democrat and served one term as County Commissioner. He took an active interest in public affairs from the time he reached his majority, but did not care much for public office. His father served in the State Legislature during 1842-43, at the same time as Lincoln and Douglas.

The children born to Mr. Compton and his wife were: Emily, Mrs. George A. King, of Mt. Carmel; John, at home; Mary Drusilla, died in 1889, at the age of four years; and Jennie May and Sarah, at home.

CORY, Francis Marion (deceased), was a successful and highly respected farmer of Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., and was identified with the best interests of his community. Mr. Cory was a native of the county, born in Belmont Precinct, November 29, 1846, a son of Lanson and Eliza (Rigg) Cory. The parents had twelve children, of whom Francis M. was the fifth.

The childhood of Francis M. Cory was spent on the farm where he was born and he was accorded the education usually given to boys in the district schools at that time. He was reared to farm work and remained with his parents until he married, September 28, 1867, Orilla Arnold, who was born in Belmont Precinct, November 11, 1845, daughter of Thomas T. and Eliza (Dean) Arnold, both natives of Wabash County, and the father a son of Ebenezer Arnold. Thomas T. Arnold and his wife had children as follows: Rohesia, widow of John McClary of Belmont; Mrs. Cory; William, Jacob and Tilford, deceased; Lewis, of Montana; Robert, of Belmont Precinct; Melissa and Ellen, deceased.

After his marriage Mr. Cory bought eighty acres of land in Belmont Precinct, where he lived nine years, then sold out and purchased seventy acres of improved land in Compton Precinct, where he lived another nine years and then bought 120 acres in Butler County, Kan. This was prairie land, which he began to cultivate and on it erected a house and barns, making all possible improvements. After living nine years in Kansas, he returned to Belmont Precinct and bought eighty acres of improved land where he lived until his death, which occurred March 9, 1898. After his death his widow moved into a house she owned in Belmont and lived there six years; then returned to the farm, where she remained with her son until August, 1905; then returned to Belmont, where she lives with a grandson. Children were born to Mr. Cory and his wife as follows: Thomas, born November 7, 1869, died July 14, 1871; Oliver C., born May 29, 1872, a barber living in St. Louis, Mo.; Oliver C. Cory married (first) Eva Belote, who bore him one son, Merrill Melvin, who lives with his Grandmother Cory. His second marriage was to Bertha Miller.

Francis M. Cory was a member of the Christian Church and served as a Trustee of the same. In early life he was a Democrat, but later became a Republican. He is affectionately remembered in the community where so large a part of his life was spent, and left a record of which his family is proud.

COUCH, Walter R., son of Hiram R. and Mary Couch, was born on the Hiram R. Couch homestead, two miles east of Lancaster, Ill., September 14, 1839. His father, of English parentage, was born in the State of New York and in the year 1816, at the age of eight years, came with his parents and others to Wabash County, Ill., locating near Friendsville. His mother, whose maiden name was Starkey and whose father was native Irish, was born in the State of Ohio, her mother being a Yankee. From such ancestry it is not hard to divine where the wit and shrewdness, which characterize the subject of this sketch, are derived from. Walter R. received his early education in the old Couch district school, being privileged, with the other children of the neighborhood, to attend from fifty to sixty days of the winter season, after the corn had been gathered and the usual autumn tasks had been attended to. Here in the old schoolhouse the boys of the district obtained their literary training, and from early fall and until the opening of spring called them to the toil of planting the new crops, with Cushing's Manual to settle all questions of parliamentary procedure, they recited their dialogues, delivered their declamations, or gravely and seriously debated the public questions of the day. Walter R. was a member of this society from the time he was nine years old until he reached twenty-one, taking an active part, that he might in every way add to his literary attainments. In such pursuits his life was passed and young manhood found him with no definite calling yet chosen, save such as the farm would afford. In those days a healthy moral and religious atmosphere prevailed in nearly all the homes that went to make up the Couch school district. The parents in those homes had respect for the Lord's Day, and loved His Word, neither taking His Name in vain nor playing cards or running horse races. About this time Walter R. entered the first session of the Friendsville High School, then under charge of the Presbyterian Board of Education, where he continued until the close of the year. The following year he attended the Battle Ground Institute, seven miles north of La Fayette, Ind., conducted under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, this being in the fall and winter of 1861 and spring and summer of 1862. In the meantime he had had to settle with his conscience as to whether he should enter the Christian ministry, which he did, and this conscience call was also God's call to him to enter actively and permanently upon that work, for the more efficient preparation for which he spent four full years in the Northwestern Christian University, receiving his B. S. degree at the hands of that institution on the 28th day of June, 1872. He had previously been ordained to the regular ministry and, during his last three years in college, he preached on almost every Lord's Day in the pulpits of some of the surrounding churches. It is worthy of remark, as showing the strenuousness with which he prosecuted both ministry and studies, to mention that, while he kept pace with his classes in the college, he held three consecutive protracted meetings, unaided by any other minister, at Old North Liberty Church, in Marion County, Ind.; Old Belleville, in Hendricks County; and Areade, Hamilton County, all in Indiana, gathering in converts to the number of 80, which, for those periods, was considered rather a remarkable achievement. During this same ministry the North Liberty Church was reorganized, and at Old Belleville the house was rebuilt. Before his graduation in June, 1872, he had been called to preach, half the time each, for Greenwood and Clarksburg Churches, both located in Johnson County, about five miles apart, the former lying some ten miles due south of Indianapolis. He received the stipend of $500 from each of these congregations and for five consecutive years ministered for these same fields, at the end of which time he severed his connection with Clarksburg, but continued to preach at Greenwood for two years more, when he resigned there also and came back to Wabash County, taking up his residence in his old home, east of Friendsville and near the old Barney's Prairie Church. It should be said with regard to his relations with the churches in Johnson County that they were always of the most happy, sympathetic and congenial nature, and are today one of the most pleasant memories of all his years of service.

At the age of twenty-three Mr. Couch was married to Miss Emma C. Wood, daughter of Joseph and Charlotte Wood, and sister to Oliver and Ogle Wood, all of this county. She was to him a true helpmeet, sharing not only his joys, but his privations and toils as well, and was the brave, loving mother of all his children. During his years of early struggle, when burdened with his college work and trying at the same time to render efficient service in the ministry to the churches to which he had been called, she it was who bore more than her share of the labors, safeguarded him with her love and prayers, and taught their children to be loyal to the Lord whom their father and mother both served. It is his testimony that the most exalting, joyful and soul-satisfying of all the years of his Christian ministry were those spent with his consecrated family on the border line between Greenwood and Clarksburg, in Johnson County, Ind.

When he resigned his work in Indiana and came back to Wabash County it was because he thought it would be better for his family, and more especially for his boys. And what was his reward? It was in the satisfaction he had in seeing every one of his sons and daughters pass from childhood into young manhood and womanhood with pure hearts, clean hands, correct habits; besides, that each one had voluntarily entered the church. And though he made his home on the farm continuously from October, 1878, to January 1, 1910, he believes that scarcely any ministry was ever more free in service than his, this being possible from the fact that he enjoyed the absolute confidence of every member of his family, which feeling was reciprocal, so that he had the encouragement and cooperation of the whole circle, enabling him to go whenever and wherever he was called, especially in attendance upon his regular appointments. It also enabled him to hold all the protracted meetings for the churches to which he ministered, this service sometimes compelling his absence from home for a month or more at a time, should the success of the meeting demand it, but even in this the family cheerfully and uncomplainingly bore any additional burdens, believing it a joy to have some share in the success of the husband and father's sacred calling. As a result of meetings in which he had no help whatever from any other evangelist, Elder Couch has had the satisfaction of seeing many members from twenty-five to sixty-five profess faith in the Christ and become active members of the Christian Church. He does not know how many he has baptized, having kept no accurate records of his work, but it is safe to say that they number many, many hundreds. It is also unfortunate that he has kept no account of those whom he married, nor of the funerals he has conducted. In both these items he has had a wide and varied experience, the marriages numbering hundreds and the funerals probably exceeding the number of weddings.

Mr. Couch was twice married, his first wife dying many years ago. Later he was united to Mary J. Cusick, then a widow, who is the loved companion of his declining years. She was the daughter of Robert H. and Margaret Leek, of near Allendale, Ill., her brothers being T. M. and John Leek, of Allendale and Adams Corners. Mr. and Mrs. Couch have sold the old family homestead near Barney's Prairie Church and have settled themselves in a cozy little home at 1106 Mulberry street, Mt. Carmel, where they expect to spend the remainder of their days, or at least until such time as something more congenial and attractive may present itself for their consideration. Elder Couch is a hearty, jovial, well preserved man, sturdily in his integrity and a splendid type of citizenship. His word is as good as his bond and the record of his life untainted with meanness or deceit. He is honored by all who know him, has made a large contribution to the good of his day and generation, and his children shall "rise up to call him blessed."

COURTER, Jacob, one of the most successful farmers of Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is descended from some of the earliest settlers of the county, and the family have always been identified with the best interests of their community. Mr. Courter was born in Wabash Precinct, December 22, 1845, and is a son of Samuel J. and Eleanor (Banks) Courter. Samuel J. Courter was born in Wabash County March 27, 1822, a son of Jacob and Rachel (Hammond) Courter, natives of Kentucky and Maryland, respectively. Eleanor Banks was born in Wabash County April 21, 1826, and was a daughter of Alexander and Nancy (Rowlings) Banks, both natives of Kentucky, who came to Wabash County about 1815 and entered land from the Government, part of it timber and part prairie. Jacob Courter, Sr., and his wife located in the northern part of Wabash Precinct and bought land, where they spent the remainder of their lives.

Samuel J. Courter and his wife were married in Wabash Precinct in 1842, and rented a farm there about five years. They then bought out the other heirs to his father's farm in Section 5. He died November 4, 1883, on his farm, and his widow died March 21, 1902, at Allendale, Ill. Their children were: James E., died in Georgia during the war; Jacob; Nancy A., Mrs. E. S. Preston, of Lawrence County, Ill.; Rachel P., Mrs. William Milligan, deceased; Samuel H., of St. Francisville, Ill.; Mary E., Mrs. A. M. Milligan, deceased; William A., of Hennessey, Okla.; Jane, Mrs. William O. Ramsey, died in Wabash Precinct; George B., of Chicago, Ill.; Mattie, Mrs. John Dunham, of St. Francisville.

Jacob Courter was reared on a farm and attended the district schools of his neighborhood. He did not leave home until his enlistment in Company B, Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in August, 1864. He was assigned with his company to the Army of the Cumberland, and participated in five important military engagements, namely: Chickamauga, Siege of Atlanta, Battles of Franklin, Nashville and Springfield, December 15 and 16, 1864. He was never wounded and was discharged in November, 1865. Returning home he resumed his former occupation and on March 12, 1868, married Sarah E. Preston, who was born in Wabash Precinct, a daughter of William and Urzilla (Smith) Preston. Her father, William Preston, was born in Ohio, January 25, 1815, and his wife in Allendale, Ill., October 29, 1818. Their parents, respectively, were: Joseph and Sarah Preston and William B. and Elizabeth (Jordan) Smith, all natives of Ohio and among the earliest settlers of Wabash County, Ill., William Smith coming to the county about 1809. William Preston died May 2, 1901, and his wife March 7, 1899.

After his marriage Mr. Courter located on a forty-acre tract in Section 5, consisting of timber, which he cleared and put under cultivation. He lived there about four and a half years, when he traded this land for forty acres in Section 22 and bought another forty acres. His wife also owns seventy-five acres adjoining. He added to his possessions many times and, at the present time, owns 140 acres in one body, and has owned much more land which he has given to his sons. He built the handsome two-story frame house which is the present family residence, in 1888. He has erected other buildings on the home farm and has made many improvements, having all the land under cultivation except ten acres which he has left in timber. Besides carrying on general farming he pays considerable attention to raising Shropshire sheep, short-horn cattle, Poland-China hogs and fine road and draft horses. He has been very successful in all his ventures and has always shown excellent judgment in the conduct of his affairs. He is an intelligent, enterprising farmer, ready to adopt modern methods and ideas in his work.

The children born to Mr. Courter and his wife were: William F., of Wabash Precinct; Edward R., also of Wabash Precinct; Sarah Viola and Walter J., at home. The family are members of the Christian Church and interested in all good work. Mr. Courter is actively interested in local affairs and is a Democrat in politics. He served as County Commissioner from 1896 to 1905 continuously, and filled the office with credit and ability. He belongs to the Modern Americans of St. Francisville, Ill., and also to the Farmers' Union, of Wabash Precinct.

CROW, Alfred Joseph.—Among the successful farmers of Wabash County, Ill., is Alfred Joseph Crow, who lives in Mt. Carmel Precinct and carries on general farming. Mr. Crow was born in West Salem, Edwards County, Ill., February 25, 1868, son of Henry and Minerva (McKinley) Crow, the latter a native of Edwards County. Henry was a son of Joseph and Jane Crow, natives of Daviess County, Ky.

The boyhood of Alfred J. Crow was spent on his father's farm and he resided with his parents until his marriage, in 1889, to Elizabeth Stum, after which he resided with his Grandmother McKinley, who was a widow. Later he moved to Missouri and lived in that State and in Indiana until he settled in Mt. Carmel, Ill., where he lived several years, and where his wife died February 21, 1901. The children were: Earl of Mt. Carmel, Precinct; Curtis and Everett, at home; Edgar and his twin, deceased; twin daughters, deceased. Mr. Crow married (second) February 22, 1905, Anna Laura (Reel) Miller, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, September 30, 1861, a daughter of David S. and Margaret (Gard) Reel, both natives of Wabash County, and the latter, widow of Raymond Miller. Her grandparents were Emanuel Reel and his wife, of Indiana, and Justus and Sarah E. (Omen) Gard. Her first husband, Raymond Miller, was born in Indiana, January 25, 1859, and they were married September 18, 1884, after which they rented a farm for one year, then bought fifty-three acres of land in Mt. Carmel Precinct and later added twenty acres. Here he carried on general farming until his death, February 8, 1904. They had three children, namely Clyde Orlando, died February 23, 1902, at the age of fifteen years and nine months; David Ernest, died October 10, 1901, at the age of eight years and ten months; Bessie Marguerite, born February 25, 1895. After his second wife Mr. Crow took up his residence on his wife's farm and there has carried on general farming with excellent success. He is an enterprising and ambitious farmer, and pays close attention to the conduct of his affairs. He enjoys confidence and esteem of his neighbors and has good standing in the community. Politically he is a Democrat and attends the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Workmen of America and the Mystic Workers of the World, of Patton Station, Ill.

DEICHER, Adam, an enterprising farmer and stockman of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of that precinct, born October 4, 1865, a son of John and Mary Eliza (Stoltz) Deicher, the former a native of Berks County, Pa., and the latter of Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County. John Deicher was a son of Jacob and Mary (Biehl) Deicher, of Berks County, and his wife a daughter of Adam and Marquet (Lipold) Stoltz, the former born in Alsace-Lorraine, and the latter in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. Adam Stoltz first settled in Pennsylvania, later came to Indiana overland, stopping for a time in Terre Haute, and then locating in Wabash County, Ill., where he married and settled in Lancaster Precinct. His father took up government land in Wabash County and his grandfather was in Chicago when it contained but two cabins and Fort Dearborn. The latter could have purchased land where the present Chicago postoffice stands at 12½ cents per acre. He went to Eastern Iowa, along the Mississippi River, where the Indians were numerous and one exciting scene he witnessed was at a time when the Indians had procured some whisky ("fire water") and were lined up on each side of the road. One Indian started to cross over to the other side, fell in the middle of the road in a drunken stupor, and Adam Stoltz felt sorry for him, helped him up, cleaned the dirt off his clothes, and then learned it was Chief Black Hawk. At this time Mr. Stoltz was on a prospecting tour and took up government land, which he afterward sold. He traveled a long way up and down the Mississippi, and finally settled in Lancaster Precinct in 1848. He died there in August, 1903, at the age of ninety years.

Jacob Deicher and wife came to Wabash County in 1855 to join his sons who had settled there in 1850, and he died in 1865. John Deicher settled on a farm of 234 acres of timber land in Lick Prairie Precinct, which he started to clear and improve, and he worked all around the neighborhood as carpenter and builder. He died in 1885 and his widow still resides on part of the old farm.

Adam Deicher attended the Stoltz district school and helped his father in clearing the land as soon as he was old enough to be of assistance. He carried on the home farm two years after his father's death, then it was divided and he received twenty-five acres, which he sold to his brother, John, two years later and bought sixty acres on Section 30, in Lick Prairie Precinct. He has about fifty-five acres under cultivation and the rest is timber. From the time of his marriage until 1908, he rented land in Lancaster Precinct, but in that year located on his own farm. He makes a specialty of raising cattle and Chester White hogs. He is an able and industrious farmer and looks carefully after his interests, thus reaping a very fair degree of success.

October 13, 1889, Mr. Deicher married Clara B. Smith, who was born in Lancaster, Ill., a daughter of Hiram and Cecilla (Betenbenner) Smith, natives of Maryland. Mr. Smith moved to Lancaster Precinct in 1860 and died there in 1888. His widow still lives there. Mr. Deicher and wife became parents of children as follows: Herbert, Mamie, Ellis and Gilbert W. Politically Mr. Deicher is a Democrat and takes an active interest in public affairs. He served seven years as Highway Commissioner and six years as School Director. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 1834, of Lancaster.

DEICHER, John, (deceased).—The Deicher family is an old and well-known one in Wabash County, Ill., and has always been identified with the best interests of the county. Although John Deicher, who had a farm in Lick Prairie Precinct, has been dead a quarter of a century, his friends and associates still remember him with kindly feelings. He was born in Berks County, Pa., December 7, 1830, a son of Jacob and Catherine (Biell) Deicher, of that State. About 1848 he came to Wabash County and worked for some time at the trade of carpenter. January 14, 1864, he married Mary Eliza Stoltz, who was born in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, July 6, 1845, a daughter of Adam and Margaret (Libolt) Stoltz, both natives of Germany. The grandparents of Mrs. Deicher were Adam and Eva (Stupple) Libolt, and Adam and Eva (Marx) Stoltz, all natives of Germany, who emigrated to the United States and became early settlers of Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County.

After their marriage Adam and Margaret (Libolt) Stoltz settled on the farm owned by Mr. Stoltz's parents, which he purchased. His wife died August 11, 1846, and he married (second) her sister, Elizabeth Libolt. Mrs. Deicher was the only child by the first marriage, and by the second were four children, namely: Henry, deceased; John, died in infancy; Lewis, deceased; Anna Margaret, Mrs. B. F. Seibert, of Lancaster Precinct.

Mr. Deicher resided in Lancaster a year after his marriage and worked at his trade as carpenter. He had erected buildings on a farm of 160 acres in Lick Prairie Precinct, this farm being mostly in timber. He set to work to clear his land and put it under cultivation and became a successful farmer and stock-raiser, continuing this occupation until his death, January 31, 1885. Since his death his widow has lived on a farm of fifty-five acres, owning ten acres and purchasing forty-five acres from her sons, and her sons James F. and Charles F. are cultivating her land. She and her husband joined the Lutheran Church in early life. Mr. Deicher was a Democrat in politics. He was a good carpenter and an industrious and energetic farmer and did his duty as a citizen and in private life.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Deicher and his wife: Adam, of Lick Prairie Precinct, a sketch of whom appears in this work; Elizabeth M., Mrs. John Seibert, of West Salem, Ill.; John, born September 5, 1869, died January 5, 1895; George Wesley, died at the age of two years; Daniel, of Lick Prairie Precinct; James H. and Charles F., already mentioned; Nora Catherine, Mrs. Joseph Brines, of Lick Prairie Precinct.

DENHAM, Albert B., a prominent farmer of Compton Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in Clermont County, Ohio, son of Benjamin C. and Aristella (Webster) Denham, the former a native of Clermont County and the latter of Maine. His grandparents were James and Sarah (Crane) Denham, of New Jersey, and Burnham and Alice (Sargent) Webster, of Maine. The Webster family were of the same descent as Daniel and Noah Webster. The parents of Albert B. Denham came to Wabash County, Ill., in 1852, with the parents of Benjamin Denham, having traded land in Ohio for land in Wabash County, Ill., and Gibson County, Ind. James Denham had been a large land holder in Ohio and became owner of about 600 acres of land in Wabash County. He died in the latter place, October 3, 1855. His sons, John M., Benjamin C. and William W., and his daughter, Rachel, came with him to Illinois, and he divided 600 acres of land among them.

Benjamin C. Denham and Aristella Webster were married in Ohio, in 1837. Her parents moved to Ripley County, Ind., while Mr. Denham and wife located on a farm in Coffee Precinct, near McCleary's Bluff, where both he and his wife died. Their children were: James P., died in 1865; Burnham W., killed in the Civil War; Sarah A., Mrs. Dinnell, of Compton Precinct; David W., on the home place, in Coffee Precinct; Albert B.; Alice Isabel, lives with her sister, Mrs. Dinnell. A sketch of David W. appears in this work.

Albert B. Denham attended the common schools in Wabash County and spent six months in Indianapolis College. He lived at home until his marriage, October 3, 1870, to Alice A. Pool, born in Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, daughter of Elhanan and Nancy (Compton) Pool, natives of Wabash County. Her grandparents were James and Mary (Keen) Pool, natives of Kentucky, and Eli and Hannah (Barnett) Compton, of Virginia. After marriage Mr. Denham and his wife moved to a farm of eighty acres in Compton Precinct, where they lived three years, then after living six months in Mt. Carmel, returned to their eighty acres, and four years later traded this for part of the old homestead. Ten years afterward they sold this land and purchased forty acres in Section 30 of Compton Precinct, where most needed improvements were made. Mr. Denham continued clearing and improving this farm and now has it all under cultivation except about four acres of timber. He carries on general farming and has been very successful in breeding and raising Hampshire hogs. He and his wife have children as follows: Otis A., of Compton Precinct; E. Garry, at home; Essie, Mrs. E. Clement Keen, of Keensburg.

Mr. Denham is an intelligent and enterprising farmer and a shrewd man of business. He has always taken a prominent part in local affairs and in politics is a Democrat. He has served at various times in local offices, such as School Director and Road Commissioner, and in 1890 was honored by election to the Thirty-seventh General Assembly of Illinois. He has given most satisfactory and able service in public office and has the entire confidence of his fellow-citizens. Fraternally he is a member of the F. M. B. A. The family attend the Christian Church, of which Mr. Denham has been an Elder since 1886. He gives his approval and assistance to all worthy causes and is actively identified with measures of progress.

A man named James Crow purchased and set out a cedar tree on what is now Mrs. Mussett's land, (See, 30) in the spring of 1857, which marks the spot where Sorghum molasses was first made in the fall of 1856. He is supposed to have been the first man in the United States to convert the juice of sorghum cane into molasses. He secured the seed from Joseph C. Orth, who in turn received it from the Government.

DENHAM, David Webster.—The Ball and Denham families, of which David Webster Denham, a farmer and veteran of the Civil War, residing in Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, is a lineal descendant, are so closely connected, that it is thought better to give a concise sketch of each, that of the Ball Family, extending to an earlier period than that of the Denham branch, being allowed the first place. (I) Allen Ball, one of the first emigrants of that name to America, was born in Oxfordshire, England, in 1614, and about 1640 came with five brothers to America, locating in the Colony of Connecticut. (II) Edward Ball, the son of Allen Ball, was born in Connecticut Colony in 1645, and in 1666 moved to the Colony of New Jersey, and became the head of the New Jersey branch of the family, of which David W. Denham, subject of this sketch, is a lineal descendant. Descendants of this branch were: (III) Thomas Ball, son of Edward, born in New Jersey in 1868; (IV) Timothy Ball, son of Thomas, born in New Jersey in 1711; (V). Timothy Ball (II), son of Timothy (I), born in New Jersey in 1738, married Esther Brewer, born in 1716, and they had a family of three children: David, Mary and Rachel.

Mary Ball, of his family, born in New Jersey April 19, 1753, on July 18, 1771, married Obadiah Denham, and they soon after removed to Virginia. Obadiah Denham was born August 5, 1844, although his exact birthplace is not known; it is believed, however, to have been either New Jersey or Virginia. They remained in Virginia but a short time, soon after removing to Kentucky, where they remained twenty-four years, and where all their children were born. In 1795 they removed to Ohio, settling in what is now Clermont County, where Obadiah Denham became the owner of 6,000 acres of land, upon which he founded the city of Bethel in Clermont County. His decease occurred June 3, 1817, and that of his wife on April 28, 1818.

James Denham, the second son of Obadiah Denham, was born in the State of Kentucky, August 14, 1782, in 1795 came with his parents to Ohio, there grew to manhood and, on December 3, 1807, was married to Miss Sarah Crane, born in the State of New Jersey, March 13, 1783, daughter of Benjamin Crane, and came with her parents to Ohio in 1800, and lived on a farm near Bethel. James Denham was a farmer and owner of a farm of 300 acres near Bethel, where he and his wife reared a family of seven children—four sons and three daughters—and where his wife died February 9, 1841, aged fifty-seven years. The father continued to reside there until 1852, when he and two of his sons traded a part of this land for land in Wabash County, Ill., receiving about 500 acres in Town No. 2 South, Range 13 West. To this they moved in October, 1852, James Denham's family then consisting of one son, John W., and one daughter, Rachel B. Denham, and his little granddaughter, Rebecca A. Hewitt. James Denham, the father, departed this life October 3, 1855, aged seventy-three years.

Benjamin Crane Denham, son of James Denham, was born in Clermont County, Ohio, May 22, 1812, and lived at the paternal home until 1837, when he married Miss Aurestella Webster, born in the State of Maine, September 2, 1811, the daughter of Burnham and Alice (Sargent) Webster, who came to Ohio at an early day.

H. F. Leach

Benjamin C. Denham remained there until 1852, and there reared a family of four sons and two daughters as follows: James Perry, born August 16, 1838; Burnham Webster, born August 2, 1840; Sarah A., born August 20, 1842; David Webster, born September 10, 1844; Albert B., born March 23, 1847; Alice P., born November 7, 1849. All the children were born in Ohio and came with their parents to Illinois in 1852. Mr. Denham was an industrious and successful farmer, owned a fine body of 320 acres of land and became prominent in the affairs of the county. He died in 1884 at the age of seventy-four years, his wife having preceded him in 1866, aged sixty years.

In May, 1864, David W. Denham enlisted in Company C, One Hundred Thirty-sixth Volunteer Infantry, for a period of 100 days, the service of the regiment being limited chiefly to garrison and scouting duty. At the termination of its term of enlistment it re-enlisted for fifteen days, and was finally mustered out and discharged at Springfield in the last days of October following. Returning home he resumed farming, remaining with his parents until December, 1877, when he married Elizabeth M. Landes, who was born in Augusta County, Va., a daughter of John and Belliah (Skelton) Landes, both natives of Virginia. After marriage he and his wife lived on his father's homestead, of which he inherited 190 acres, including the house. He has since added to his holdings until he now owns 246 acres in Section 32, Town 2 South, Range 13 West. His father had erected a handsome residence on McCleary's Bluff, overlooking the river and having one of the finest views in that section of the county. This is a natural building site, surrounded by fine shade and ornamental trees and making an ideal country home. Mr. Denham carried on general farming here, raising cattle, horses and hogs, but at sixty years of age retired from active business life, turning his farming operations into the hands of his two sons, William Clyde and Perry Elmer, these being his only children and both at home.

In 1895 Mr. Denham discovered a vein of coal at McCleary's Bluff, which has been developed to a considerable extent. In 1905 his sons opened a 3½ foot coal vein on the home place, which is in continued operation, furnishing coal to nearby farmers and residents of neighboring villages.

Mr. Denham has been especially fortunate in his investments and has been successful in his farming operations, developing a fine farm and becoming one of the prominent men of his community. In politics he is a Democrat and for several years served as a member of the Township School Board. The family attend the Christian Church and lend their hearty co-operation in support of the church and its work, and are ready to espouse any cause which they regard as for the benefit of the community.

DEPUTY, Ezra C. (deceased).—Among the successful farmers of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., who appreciated the advantages to be derived from following modern methods of carrying on their work and from raising high-grade stock, was the late Ezra C. Deputy. Mr. Deputy was born February 16, 1851, on the farm where his entire life was spent, and there died July 2, 1910, his burial taking place on July 4th in Belmont Cemetery. He was a son of William C. and Elizabeth (Arnold) Deputy, the former born in Mt. Carmel Precinct and the latter in Richland County, Ill. William C. Deputy was a son of William and Nancy (Tavner) Deputy, of Virginia, and his wife was a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Jordan) Arnold. John Arnold organized a company for the Second Regiment, Second Brigade of Illinois, for the Black Hawk War, becoming Captain of this company. He entered service May 12 and was mustered out August 15, 1832. William and Nancy Deputy were among the early settlers of Wabash County, securing a large amount of Government land. He carried on farming and died on his farm, which was on the border between Mt. Carmel and Belmont Precincts.

After their marriage William C. and Elizabeth Deputy moved to a farm in Section 21 of Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he secured 380 acres of land, all of which was covered with timber at the time he got it from his father. He died there February 17, 1881, and his wife September 6, 1876. Their children were: Sarah M., born January 19, 1849, and married Joachim Joachims, of Oklahoma; Ezra C.; Theodore, born June 6, 1854, died December 18, 1893; Clara A., Mrs. C. M. Grondon, and died May 6, 1909; William A., born August 14, 1859, died September 15, 1863; Sherman, born July 20, 1865, died December 4, 1879; Grant J., born November 18, 1868, died October 15, 1888.

Ezra C. Deputy attended the common schools and remained at home until his marriage, March 7, 1872, to Fannie A. Rigg, who was born in Belmont Precinct, March 20, 1850, daughter of John M. and Mary Jane (Ballard) Rigg, both natives of Wabash County. Her grandparents were Robert and Elizabeth McClary Rigg, natives of Virginia, and Joseph and Martha (Putnam) Ballard, all of them among the early settlers of Wabash County. After his marriage Mr. Deputy erected a residence on part of his father's farm in Belmont Precinct, and lived there until November 24, 1882, when he purchased the old homestead from his step-mother, whose maiden name was Sarah Lingenfelder and who was the widow of Mr. Staninger. She had one child by Mr. Deputy's father, Irma, who lives with her mother in Mt. Carmel.

Mr. Deputy owned 250 acres in the home place and he and his son had eighty acres a mile and a quarter south. He carried on general farming, with special attention to breeding and raising Hereford cattle and Duroc Jersey hogs. He was prominent in social and fraternal circles and had many friends. He was a member of Blue Lodge No. 239, A. F. & A. M., of Mt. Carmel; of the Mutual Protective League, also of Mt. Carmel, and of Camp No. 1745, Modern Woodmen of America, of Sugar Creek, in which he served one year as District Deputy. In politics he was a Republican, had served twenty-five years as School Trustee, and had also served as Road Commissioner. Mrs. Deputy is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is prominent in church work.

Mr. and Mrs. Deputy had children as follows: Mary E., born August 10, 1874, and died October 22, same year; Thomas, born September 3, 1875, resides in Belmont Precinct; James, born May 6, 1878, of Compton Precinct; William, born June 12, 1882, died August 17, 1896; John, born February 19, 1884, of Belmont Precinct; Matina, born February 17, 1886, at home; Laura, born August 3, 1888, now Mrs. Sherman T. Rigg, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Clark, born June 1, 1890, at home.

DINNEL, James H., an honored veteran of the Civil War, and now a successful stock farmer of Compton Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in White County, Ill., November 28, 1840, a son of William and Levina (Webster) Dinnel, natives, respectively, of Jefferson County, Tenn., and Evansville, Ind. William Dinnel was a son of Thomas Dinnel, of Ireland, and his wife was a daughter of Henry and Ellen Webster, of the north of England, who went to Georgia after coming to the United States, and afterward moved with two of Mr. Webster's cousins, named Evans, to Indiana, where they were among the first settlers. Mr. Webster was a goldsmith and cut up silver pieces of money to make change. He ran a ferry across Pigeon Creek, at Evansville and spent the remainder of his life there.

Thomas Dinnel emigrated to the United States at the age of twenty-three years, located in Tennessee and there married. After the death of Henry Webster his widow, Mrs. Ellen Webster, moved to Carmi, Ill., where she died.

After marriage William and Levina Dinnel settled in White County, living a few years on a farm which they owned there, then moved to Wabash County, a year later moving to Morgan County. They afterward returned to Wabash County, where his death occurred in 1849. His widow moved back to a farm he owned in Wayne County, and died there in 1854. She was the previous widow of John Heniken, by whom she had three children, as follows: George W., Matthew and Elizabeth, all deceased. By her second marriage to Mr. William Dinnel she had children as follows: John, deceased; James H.; Mary, deceased, was Mrs. F. M. Cowling; Julia, Mrs. Peter Barnett, of Keensburg Precinct; Jerry and Perry, twins, died at the age of seven years.

James H. Dinnel attended the common schools and lived with his parents until the death of his mother, then lived with a half-brother, Mr. Heniken, until he enlisted in Company B, Sixty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, April 9, 1862.

He was assigned to the Army of the Tennessee, serving in the Thirteenth Army Corps, under Gen. John A. McClernand for a short time, and later transferred to the Fifteenth Army Corps under Gen. John A. Logan. Mr. Dinnel participated in the battles of Vicksburg, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, Savannah, and Bentonville, N. C., as well as numerous skirmishes, and participated in the March to the Sea, with General Sherman. He was mustered out at Goldsboro, N. C., April 9, 1865. He returned to his home with Mr. Heniken with whom he farmed two years, then rented land one year, after which he purchased his present farm, which then consisted of eighty acres with a log house and log barn, boarding for a time with his brother and afterward with a tenant on his farm. He added to his possessions from time to time as he was able, and now has 235 acres, all under cultivation except twenty acres of timber land. He has been very successful in his operations and is one of the most extensive farmers of the neighborhood. He has made a specialty of raising stock.

Mr. Dinnel married, February 23, 1876, Sarah A. Denham, who was born in Clermont County, Ohio, a daughter of Benjamin C. and Aristella (Webster) Denham, he born in Clermont County and she near Augusta, Maine. Her grandparents were James and Mary (Ball) Denham, of New Jersey, and Burnham and Elsie (Sargent) Webster, of English descent. Mr. Dinnel and his wife were blessed with children as follows: Maud, Mrs. James Deputy, of Compton Precinct; Lucy E., at home. Mrs. Dinnel attended the common schools of Ohio and Illinois, coming with her parents to the latter State in 1852. She taught school in Illinois four terms. Since her marriage her youngest sister, Alice L., has resided with her. Mr. Dinnel is a Democrat in politics and has served twelve years as School Director. He and his family are members of the Christian Church of which he has been an Elder since 1886. He holds a high place in the estimation of his fellow-citizens and has many friends.

EPLER, Daniel S., a prominent business man of Keensburg, Ill., is a native of Wabash County, born in Belmont Precinct, November 4, 1865. He is a son of John and Bertha (Ravenstein) Epler, he born in Pennsylvania and she in Germany. His grandparents were Daniel and Elizabeth (Davenport) Epler and Peter and Justine (Joachim) Ravenstein, natives of Germany. Daniel Epler was one of the early settlers of Wabash County and purchased a farm near Mt. Carmel. The Ravenssteins came to Wabash County in 1855, locating on a farm he purchased in Belmont Precinct.

The parents of Daniel S. Epler were married in Wabash County and settled on a farm one mile south of the Village of Belmont, where he died June 20, 1881. His widow has since continued to live on the home farm. Their children were: Barbara, Mrs. Lewis Harper, of Edwards County, Ill.; Justine, Mrs. James J. A. Lopp.

Lance, of Belmont Precinct; Daniel S.; Catherine, Mrs. D. Z. Putnam, of Belmont Precinct; Peter, of Belmont; Flora, Mrs. William Cole, of Belmont Precinct; John, of Belmont Precinct.

At the age of seventeen years, having received a scanty education, Daniel S. Epler began farming on his own account, buying land in Belmont Precinct, which he kept until he was of age, then sold it and purchased a farm in Keensburg Precinct, where he spent three years, then sold out and bought forty acres on the northern boundary of Keensburg Village, which he uses for a stock farm. He has various other interests, however. March 1, 1893, he embarked in the livery business, and in 1898 began to deal in agricultural implements. His livery stable burned and he did not rebuild it, but continued handling implements. In the spring of 1910 he turned most of his business over to his son Edward, but still conducts a saddlery, harness, and hardware store. He is a man of good business ability and an excellent farmer. He makes a specialty of raising German coach horses and jackasses, dealing extensively in horses and hogs. He and his wife have two children: Bessie and A. Edward, both at home.

Mr. Epler is an enterprising citizen and prominent in fraternal circles. He is a Republican in politics and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows Lodge No. 939, and the Modern Woodmen of America Camp No. 2193, of Keensburg, being a charter member in both organizations. He is actively interested in the good work carried on by these orders and is also identified with the best interests of the community.

EWALD, John Jacob.—Among the successful farmers of Wabash County, Ill., may be found many who are comparatively young, but have had the advantage of special training for their line of work, and have acquired land on which many improvements were made before it came into their possession. Among the enterprising young farmers of Belmont Precinct is John Jacob Ewald, a native of the precinct, born June 1, 1881, a son of George C. and Jennie (Seiler) Ewald, the former born in Germany in 1851, and the latter born in Mt. Carmel, Ill., in 1862. The father, who is County Commissioner in Wabash County, owns 640 acres there and 820 acres in old Mexico. He and his wife had children as follows: John Jacob, Ida M., Heinrich, Clarence U., Ada Matilda Tucker, Grace Elizabeth, Paul George, Clara Bell, Ralph Waldo, Edith Vivian, Fred, and Ernest.

The boyhood of John Jacob Ewald was spent on his father's farm, and he has followed agricultural pursuits since old enough to engage in work of any kind. He married November 23, 1904, Isabella Reynolds Metcalf, daughter of Arthur and Kate (Baker) Metcalf, both natives of England. Mr. Metcalf, who died about 1895, was the owner of 160 acres of fine farming land, part of which he had cleared himself. He and his wife had children as follows: Herbert J., Charles T., Carrie, Ethel, Sidney R., Mrs. Ewald. One child has blessed the union of Mr. Ewald and wife, Ruth Metcalf, born July 25, 1906.

Mr. Ewald lives on a fine farm of 200 acres and besides carrying on general farming, raises and ships considerable stock, from which business he reaps a very fair profit. He is energetic and industrious and takes an active interest in the Farmers' Institute, of which he has been President. He has contributed a great deal to the success of this organization and has been active in promoting progress and development of his community. Mr. Ewald is serving his second term as Town Trustee and has the confidence and esteem of his fellows. He is a member of the American Lutheran Church and in politics is a Democrat. He belongs to the Odd Fellows, being affiliated with the Encampment of this order, and is also a member of the Modern Woodmen.

EWALD, William, one of the large landowners of Wabash County, Ill., and member of a prominent family in that county, was born in Hische, Province of Kirtz Gilsow, Germany, November 16, 1849. He is a son of John and Catherine (Moriel) Ewald, both natives of Germany. John Ewald was an expert cabinet-maker and won distinction in his art by producing what was known as a "master-piece," which work entitled him to the privilege of hiring others to work for him. He came to the United States in 1860 and engaged in general farming in Belmont Precinct. He and his wife were parents of the following children: William, George C. and Pauline.

William Ewald was reared in Germany until eleven years old, when he came with his parents to Wabash County, Ill. On August 16, 1883, he was married to Rosa Fisher, a daughter of John and Mary Fisher, of Belmont Precinct, and they had children as follows: John William, born July 12, 1884; Rosa Fisher, born July 16, 1885; Harmon Frederick, born August 16, 1886; Rosa Amelia, born August 4, 1888; Sophia C., born July 27, 1891; Gusta Louise, born July 2, 1894; Mary, born August 27, 1890, deceased; Myrtle, born July 11, 1897; Sherman Oneal, born July 5, 1900, and Eliza Maria, born February 1, 1903.

For the past eighteen years Mr. Ewald has been Drainage Commissioner, and in this connection has rendered valuable service to his locality. He is interested in any project calculated to benefit his precinct or county, and in politics follows the fortunes of the Democratic party. He is an Odd Fellow, belonging to the Encampment of this order and is an active member of the Lutheran Church.

Mr. Ewald owns 587 acres of fine farming land in Belmont and Coffee Precincts, a large part of which he cleared and improved. He is accounted one of the most intelligent and prosperous farmers of Wabash County and pays close attention to every detail of his business. Besides his land in this county he owns 160 acres in the Panhandle district of Texas, which he devotes to raising wheat, millet and kafir corn. He stands well with his neighbors and associates and has a reputation for integrity and reliability.

FISCHER, Philip Rudolph.—Among the most extensive farmers of Wabash County, Ill., is Philip Rudolph Fischer, who owns land in various precincts. He was born in Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, October 18, 1856, a son of John and Anna Marie (Groff) Fischer, natives of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. They came to the United States with their parents as children, and met and were married September 18, 1845, in the United States. In company with John and Jacob Groff and a Mr. Grotz, John Fischer built a flat-boat on Bonpas Creek, near the Kitchen bridge, on the Mt. Carmel and Albion road, and on it each of them loaded what corn they had for market. When a rise in the Creek came the boat was floated into the Wabash and down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers to New Orleans, where the corn was sold at 12½ cents per bushel, and the flat-boat for what they could get. Mr. Fischer made two of these trips, at one time having $6 and at the other $12 left when he reached home, after having spent about three months on each trip and walked most of the way home.

After his marriage John Fischer spent one year in Mt. Carmel Precinct, then bought timber land in Belmont Precinct. He built a small log house, with a fireplace and a mud, stick and straw chimney. He had about 300 acres, which he began clearing. He was born January 31, 1814, and died December 3, 1902, and his wife, who was born December 16, 1824, died February 17, 1883. Their children were: John, of Dexter, Mo.; a daughter who died in infancy, and a son who died in infancy also; Rhineholt, a sketch of whom appears in this work; Mary, born December 11, 1853, widow of John Howard, of West Salem, Ill.; Philip R., George L., born October 10, 1859; Elizabeth, born August 2, 1862, Mrs. George Sterl, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Rosa, Mrs. William Ewald, of Mt. Carmel, was born July 16, 1865; Emma, born December 5, 1871, died September 10, 1873.

After living several years in a little log house, with a mud fireplace and stick chimney, Mr. Fischer built an eight-room frame dwelling, the front one-and-a-half stories high. Half of this building is still standing. After the death of his wife in 1883, he lived about nine months with his son Philip R., when he moved to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ewald, where he spent nine months. In December, 1884, he returned to the home of his son Philip R., where he remained six years. Then, after some disagreement, he moved to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Howard, at West Salem, Edwards County, and there spent nine years, then moving to his son's, Rhineholt, in Belmont Precinct, where he remained until the date of his decease about three years later. In February, 1887, Mr. Fischer visited his sister, Mrs. Stricker, at Fort Adams, Miss., where he remained some six weeks, returning home about the middle of March. Both he and his wife were members of the German Moravian Church, at West Salem.

Philip R. Fischer was reared on his father's farm and received but few educational advantages. He remained with his parents until his marriage, November 6, 1884, to Harriet Henry, who was born in West Salem, Ill., August 28, 1859, daughter of Christian G. and Joanna Elizabeth (Banack) Henry, natives of Germany. Her parents came to the United States in youth and were married at West Salem, settling on a farm nearby. The father died in January, 1903, at the age of eighty-five years, and the mother died December 3, 1904, at the age of seventy-five years. They were parents of children as follows: Lewis, of West Salem; Harriet, Mrs. Fischer; Walter, of Michigan City, Ind.; Herman, died at the age of three years; Otto, of Chicago, Ill.; Herman, of Beecher City, Effingham County.

After marriage Mr. Fischer and his wife lived nine years on his father's farm, then moved to a farm near West Salem, Ill. Two years later they returned to the old home, and lived there until November, 1904, when he erected a handsome modern residence on part of the home farm. He was given 150 acres of his father's farm by his father and purchased the homestead of 150 acres of land from his brother George. He now has 402 acres in the home place; 180 acres in Lick Prairie Precinct, and two tracts, of 142 and sixty acres, respectively, on the Fordyce Bottom. He carries on general farming and has been very successful in breeding and raising Poland China hogs and Hereford cattle.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Fischer and his wife: Edna Viola, born August 13, 1885; Carrie Anna, October 3, 1887; Ora Otto, December 5, 1889; Frank Fanes, April 5, 1892; Ira Edison, February 17, 1895; Mamie Ethel, August 9, 1897; Ada Mata, May 21, 1900. Mr. Fischer is a Democrat in politics and is actively identified with the welfare and progress of his community. He is a most enterprising and industrious farmer and has well earned the success that is his. He and his wife are well known in Belmont Precinct, having the good will and esteem of a large number of friends.

FISHER, Martin (deceased).—Mt. Carmel, Ill., lost one of its valuable citizens in the death of the late Martin Fisher, who passed away November 23, 1901, at his home, 414 East Eighth Street. Mr. Fisher was a prominent Mason, having served in various offices of his lodge, and was well known as a member of the Gesangverein (German quartette) of Mt. Carmel. He was born in Westhofen, Germany, December 26, 1824, a son of John and Appalonia (Lombenheimer) Fisher, natives of Hesse Darmstadt and Westhofen, respectively. The father was engaged in farming and was also the principal miller of Westhofen, and spent his entire life at the old home there. After his death his widow emigrated with her family to the United States and settled near Mt. Carmel, Ill.

Paul G. Munley

At the time Martin Fisher accompanied his mother to the United States he was about fourteen years of age. He had received his education in his native country and, after arriving at Mt. Carmel, helped in the work on the farm. He learned the trade of shoemaker from William Seitz, but soon afterward was obliged to go south on account of poor health. He went to New Orleans, where he was naturalized, and lived in that city thirty years. He engaged in business soon after locating there and for many years conducted a shoe factory. He lost all his money during the reconstruction period, and had to build up his business anew. He joined the Masonic Order while living in New Orleans, served as Junior Warden of his lodge, and after he returned to Mt. Carmel, transferred his membership and served as Tiler of the lodge at the latter place. He was a staunch Democrat and in religious views a Presbyterian. He had many warm personal friends and has been missed in many circles. He had the esteem and regard of all who knew him and took great interest in the welfare of the community. Mr. Fisher owned the home where his death occurred, and which is now the residence of his widow. He was buried at Rose Hill Cemetery.

Mr. Fisher was twice married. His first wife was Margaret Huft a native of Germany, who had one child and died in 1865, at New Orleans, La. He married (second) June 15, 1867, Mary Vossler, a daughter of John George and Mary (Messmer) Vossler. She was born at Tubingen, Wurtemberg, May 10, 1849. Children as follows blessed this union: Flora Katherine, born February 10, 1873; Ella May, October 30, 1875; William Martin, July 16, 1879; Elizabeth Soller, March 22, 1883; Mary Clara, April 5, 1886; Estella Amy, March 16, 1889—all born in Mt. Carmel and there received good educations.

FISHER, Peter M.—Among the honored veterans of the Civil War who live in Wabash County is Peter M. Fisher, who is a native of the county, born August 14, 1840, a son of John and Ursula (Miller) Fisher. John Fisher was born in Chillicothe, Ohio, and his wife, Ursula Miller, was a daughter of Peter S. Miller, and born in Gibson County, Ind. The Miller family moved from Pennsylvania to Gibson County, Ind., about 1820, and Mr. Miller lived there the remainder of his life.

In his youth John Fisher, after learning the trade of carpenter, went to New Orleans and traveled up and down the Mississippi River working at his vocation. He was married in Gibson County and soon after moved to Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, where he followed his occupation a few years, and then moved back to Gibson County. In 1847 he moved to Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, and purchased eighty acres of land. He followed his trade in connection with farming, and he and his sons cleared most of the farm, fifteen acres having already been cleared when he moved on it. He lived on this farm until 1868, then bought 143 acres adjoining, to which he moved and cultivated until 1877, then traded for 121 acres east of his farm, where he lived the remainder of his life, and where he died in 1897. His first wife died about 1870 and he married (second) Mary (Carter) Greathouse, widow of Irvin Greathouse, who had two children by her former marriage—William, of Arkansas, and George W., of Edwards County, Ill. By his first marriage Mr. Fisher had children as follows: David, on the old homestead in Lick Prairie Precinct; Peter M.; Alameda, Mrs. Marion Sloan, a widow, living in Tipton, Iowa; John W., of Mt. Carmel; Rachel, Mrs. Homer Morgan, of Sumner, Ill.; Susan, Mrs. James Tuel, died in Lick Prairie Precinct; William, of Arkansas; George W., of Edwards County, Ill. By his second marriage Mr. Fisher had children as follows: Robert Bonner, died at the age of twenty-five years; Charles C., of St. Louis, Mo.; Frederick, resides with Peter M.; Emma V., Mrs. George Ulm, who resides with her half-brother, David.

Peter N. Fisher attended the Ridge District School, remaining with his parents until he enlisted, October 9, 1861, in Company I, Sixty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, later part of the Western Sharpshooters in the Fourteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, their first commander being Col. Burge. Mr. Fisher was with the regiment until May 1, 1863, when he went to La-Grange, Tenn., later to Fort Pickering, Memphis, and entered the Veteran Reserve Corps, doing guard duty at St. Louis, Mo., after spending six months in the invalid camp on account of rheumatism. He assisted in guarding new recruits and drafted men, and in conducting them to the places assigned them, going from Benton Barracks to points along the Mississippi River. He was discharged at the end of his term of service, October 18, 1864, and returned home. He had proved a faithful soldier and had performed his full duty at all times.

After the close of his service Mr. Fisher remained with his father until his marriage, in September, 1865, to Mary E. (Hill) Bratton, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, a daughter of Thomas and Phebe (Stewart) Hill, of Indiana, and widow of Marshall Bratton, who died in the Union Army. She had two children by her former marriage—Sarah E., Mrs. George McGregor, who died in 1902, and Oliver Howard, who died in 1885. After his marriage Mr. Fisher purchased 121 acres of land adjoining his father's farm, and in 1877 traded with his father and moved to the old home farm, where he now lives. There was only about fifteen acres of this land cleared at that time, and he has since cleared the remainder except about four acres left in timber, so that he now has some ninety-seven acres under cultivation. His land is very fertile and, besides a general line of farming, he is successful in raising a good grade of horses, hogs and cattle.

Mr. Fisher is a consistent member of the Christian Church and is active in church work. He has been a Deacon and Treasurer since 1866 and a Trustee since 1895. He is a prominent member of the G. A. R. and stands well among his comrades in the post. He is well known and highly esteemed in the community where he lives. In politics he is a Republican. Children as follows were born to Mr. Fisher and his wife: Elsie J., Mrs. Clark Mayne, of Bone Gap, Ill.; Emma, Mrs. John Marville, of Danville, Ill., and Harry U., born in 1875 died in 1885.

FISHER, Rhinehult, who is extensively engaged in stock farming in Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of that precinct, born May 20, 1851, a son of John and Anna Marie (Groff) Fisher, both natives of Germany—he born in 1814 and she December 16, 1824. John Fisher (whose name is spelled Fischer in preceding sketch of Philip R., brother of the subject of this sketch) and his wife were early settlers of Wabash County and lived sometime near Mt. Carmel. He spent one year in Mississippi before his marriage, and upon his return entered a tract of land in the northern part of Belmont Precinct, part prairie and part timber. He kept adding to this tract until he owned about 1,000 acres. He spent the last three years of his life with his son Rhinehult, and died November 6, 1902. His wife died February 18, 1883. Their children were: John F., of Dexter, Mo., born December 25, 1846; Rhinehult; Philip R., born October 18, 1856, whose sketch appears in this work; George L., born October 10, 1859; Elizabeth, born August 2, 1862, married George Sterl, who now lives in Mt. Carmel Precinct; Mary, born December 11, 1853, widow of John Howard, resides in West Salem, Ill.; Rosa, born July 16, 1865, married William Ewald, of Mt. Carmel; Emma born December 5, 1871, died September 10, 1873.

Rhinehult Fisher attended the public schools until he was twelve years old, and remained at home with his parents until his marriage, April 4, 1876, to Katherine Kramer, born January 11, 1858, a daughter of Henry and Anna M. (Shafer) Kramer. Her father born in Bavaria, and her mother in Baden, Germany. Henry Kramer was a soldier in Germany and emigrated to Buffalo, N. Y., where he worked some time at his trade of cooper. From Buffalo he moved to Evansville, Ind.; and later located at Mt. Carmel, Ill., where he worked some years, then purchased a farm near Maud, in Belmont Precinct. After occupying this farm several years, he sold out and purchased another farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he died February 27, 1880, his wife having passed away February 22, 1873. Their children were: Henry, died in infancy, at Buffalo; Henry (II) died at the age of five years; Catherine, Mrs. Fisher; George, of Compton Precinct, and Henry (III), of Denver, Colo.

After his marriage Mr. Fisher moved to a farm of 160 acres which his father gave him, this land being partially improved. He continued clearing and developing the land, bringing it into first-class condition. He also purchased eighty acres at Belmont, half of it within the corporation limits and half just outside. He also purchased a farm of 146 acres in Lick Prairie Precinct, which he rents. He has always carried on a general line of farming, with special attention to stock-raising. He and his wife became parents of children as follows: John R., born March 7, 1877, of Belmont Precinct; William H., born November 9, 1878, died December 19, 1878; May Elmira, born September 11, 1882, died May 12, 1887; Laura E., born July 5, 1885 at home; Roy D. born August 1, 1888, at home; Adam R., born July 22, 1890, died January 5, 1891; Anna Marie, born September 20, 1895, died March 5, 1896; Esther, born June 21, 1897, at home. Mr. Fisher is an energetic farmer, winning success through hard work and good management, and he has won the confidence of his fellow citizens as an upright, honorable man. In politics he is a Republican. He and his wife attend the Methodist Episcopal Church and take a prominent share in its good work. Mrs. Fisher, like her husband, had few early advantages, being able to attend school only until she was twelve years old. Both take a lively interest in the public welfare and progress, and are ready to further any good cause of which they become cognizant.

FOGERTY, Charles J., a veteran of the Civil War and a highly esteemed citizen of Mt. Carmel, Ill., although a native of England, has been a resident of the United States since he was about six years of age, and has proven himself a patriotic and useful citizen of his adopted country. Mr. Fogerty was born in Sheffield, England, February 6, 1843, a son of William and Harriet (Porter) Fogerty, who came to the United States in 1849, settling in Covington, Ky. William Fogerty was a surveyor and civil engineer and laid out the first division of the Kentucky Central Railroad. In 1852 he and his wife, with six of their children, died of cholera, and their remaining three children, including Charles J., were taken by friends to rear. Charles grew up with George H. Bussing, who was a banker at Cincinnati, Ohio, where the boy attended the common schools and received a fair education.

In July, 1861, Charles J. Fogerty enlisted in Company C, Nineteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, which was made up at Chicago. They were first assigned to service in Missouri, and soon after to Cincinnati. In the fall of 1861 they were sent to Louisville, Ky., where they entered the Army of the Cumberland. Mr. Fogerty participated in engagements in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia, several of them leading battles in which the Eastern Army took part. He received his discharge July 9, 1864, having served with credit to himself and shown a close devotion to his duties.

RESIDENCE OF WILLIAM MARVEL, FRIENDSVILLE PRECINCT

Returning to Indianapolis at the close of his service in the army, Mr. Fogerty entered the employ of the J. M. & I. Railroad as clerk, remaining in that position until 1867, then went to New Orleans and took a position as night inspector in that city. Later he held the position of United States Marshal at the same place, where he spent seven years. Returning to Indianapolis, Mr. Fogerty accepted a position as conductor for the Big Four Railroad, remaining in that capacity from 1875 until 1888, when he came to Mt. Carmel. In the latter city he became freight and extra passenger conductor for the same road, but in 1899, on account of failing health, resigned his position and has since been retired. He soon made his influence felt in the city and has rendered valuable service in the interests of the Republican party. He is now serving as a member of the City Committee of the party and Committeeman of the First Ward of the city. He takes an active interest in the progress and welfare of the community and supports any worthy cause. He is prominent in G. A. R. circles, belonging to T. F. Bowers Post, No. 125, has many warm friends in Mt. Carmel and is highly esteemed for his many good qualities.

Mr. Fogerty married, May 7, 1869, Melissa M. Mounts, of Dupont, Ind., and they became parents of one son, Harry, who died in 1880. Mrs. Fogerty died January 11, 1875, and Mr. Fogerty married (second) December 1, 1876, Henrietta Kuhlmann, who was born in Indianapolis, Ind., and they have one daughter, Eva, who married Clarence F. Stein, of Mt. Carmel.

FORDYCE, Oliver P.—Horticulture is every year receiving more scientific attention and the success which followers of this line of work are attaining comes only through careful study of the subject in hand and strict attention to details. Oliver P. Fordyce, who conducts large greenhouses at Mt. Carmel, Ill., is a young man of business ability and good judgment, and has won success through his long experience in this occupation and a natural aptitude for the same. Mr. Fordyce was born in Clark County, Ind., August 16, 1870, a son of William and Eliza (Mann) Fordyce, both natives of Indiana. His paternal grandparents, Jarius and Judith (McKinley) Fordyce, were natives of Virginia, and were pioneers of Indiana, who secured land from the Government. His grandparents, on both sides, came to Indiana about 1830 and secured government land.

William Fordyce was married in Indiana and became owner of a farm in Clark County. He died December 26, 1908, and his widow has since moved to the Village of Borden, Ind., where she lives with her daughter, Dena. She and her husband had children as follows: Dennis Link, of Princeton, Ind.; Dena, Mrs. G. M. McKinley, of Borden; Samuel J., of Borden; Addie J., Mrs. Zachariah Nicholson, of Borden; Oliver P.; Amanda, Mrs. Jesse Wade, of Borden.

After receiving a common school education,

Oliver P. Fordyce attended Borden Institute. He has been engaged in his present line of work since he was fifteen years old, starting out near Borden, Ind., where he remained three years, then moved to Vincennes, where for two years he was superintendent of a nursery. He then went to Niles, Cal., where he spent two years in horticultural work, and then returned to Illinois and took charge of a nursery at Normal a year and a half. Mr. Fordyce then became assistant superintendent of a large nursery at Shenandoah, Iowa, with D. S. Lake. A year later he was called home on account of sickness in the family, and a short time later returned to Vincennes, where he found employment for two years as superintendent of another nursery. On account of poor health he spent two years in Wyoming, then erected a greenhouse at Borden and engaged rather extensively in the line of horticulture. Several years later he sold out his interests and worked one year in Chicago for George Rheinburg, who had a large greenhouse. However, he preferred conducting his own business and bought an interest in a nursery at Warriek, Ind., where he spent three years, then sold out and started a similar enterprise at Mt. Carmel. He has many rare and beautiful varieties of cut flowers, and has had such varied experience in so many parts of the country, that he is well informed as to the best manner of conducting his business. His greenhouses cover 12,000 square feet, and he handles a general line of plants, cut flowers, vegetables, nursery stock, such as ornamental and fruit trees, shrubs, etc. He has built up a good business in his line and has one of the finest establishments of its kind in Wabash County. He enjoys the respect and confidence of his customers and all who know him, and his future outlook for business is extremely good.

In April, 1899, Mr. Fordyce married Cora V. Wade, who was born in Floyd County, Ind., a daughter of Henry and Mary (Burkhart) Wade, both born in the same county. One daughter has been born of this union, Alma H., born December 29, 1900. Mr. Fordyce is a member of the Christian Church, in which he served as Clerk eight years. Politically he is a Republican.

Since April 1, 1909, Mr. Fordyce has been associated with William H. Wetzel, who was taken into equal partnership with him on that date, and the firm is known as Fordyce & Co.

FOSTER, M. J.—Many men are able to win success in different lines of business, and such a man is M. J. Foster, who now lives at Mt. Carmel, Ill. Mr. Foster was born in Cambridge, England, October 17, 1850, a son of James and Mary Jane (Patterson) Foster, the former a native of Wittelsford and the latter of Duxford. The parents came to the United States in 1858 and settled in the northern part of Wabash County. He bought a farm in that vicinity and cultivated it six years, when he went to England on a visit, but upon his return engaged in general mercantile business at Friendsville, where he died in May, 1873. He had been a druggist in his native country. His widow married (second) a Mr. Beaird, and lived at Claremont, Ill., but while she was visiting a daughter at Olney, Ill., her death occurred, August 5, 1896. She and Mr. Foster had two children: M. J. and Ellen Mary, the latter of whom married John Beaird, her step-brother.

When he was seventeen years of age M. J. Foster began earning his own living, having received his education in the common schools. He was engaged in various occupations until 1871, when he embarked in the retail grocery business, which he continued until his father's death, then sold out his own business, which was situated at Allendale, and returned to Friendsville to take up the business left by his father. He carried on this establishment for ten years, when he sold out and accepted a position as traveling salesman for shoes. His territory comprised Southern Illinois, and for twenty-seven years he covered it successfully without losing a single day's salary from sickness or other causes. However, in October, 1909, he found it necessary to abandon business temporarily, on account of the critical condition of his wife's health.

Mr. Foster was married, in September, 1873, to Lizzie Thorn, who was born in Bridgeport, Lawrence County, Ill., a daughter of Samuel and Eliza Ann (Collins) Thorn both natives of Indiana, the former of Vanderburg County and the latter of Vincennes. Two children have been born of this union: Edgar, of Mt. Carmel, who is taking his father's place in business; and Joseph Kyle, of Flathead County, Mont.

For many years Mr. Foster has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and for a long time had charge of the music for its meetings. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Masonic Order, being affiliated with the Knights Templar of Vincennes, Ind. In politics he is a Republican and actively interested in any subject that pertains to the public welfare. He keeps well informed on all current topics and issues of the day, and is able to state his opinions on various subjects in a concise and convincing manner. He is well known in Wabash County, having many friends there, as well as throughout the entire territory where he has traveled so many years. His business associations have been invariably pleasant and profitable.

FRENCH, Bascom, Jr., an enterprising business man of Bellmont, and formerly a teacher of ability and success, was born in Lukin Township, Lawrence County, Ill., November 25, 1876, a son of Bascom and Margaret (Vanderment) French, the former a native of Lukin Township and the latter of Brown County, Ohio. The father is a son of James and Mary French, and the mother a daughter of George Vanderment, who was a minister in the Christian Church. Bascom and Margaret French became parents of children as follows: Addie, Mrs. S. A. Landis, of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Charles A., of Bellmont, Ill.; Mary, Mrs. G. C. Higgins, of Independence, Kan.; Ibba, Mrs. James Landis, whose husband is a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church; Bascom, Jr.; Ella, married Dr. W. B. Moon, of Independence, Kan.; Fred, in partnership with his brother, Bascom.

After taking a common school course, Bascom French, Jr., attended the State Normal at Carbondale, Ill., the Effingham College, and the Southern Illinois College, of Albion, Ill. He lived with his parents until his marriage, February 14, 1896, to Minnie May Groff, born in Bellmont Precinct, Wabash County, a daughter of B. F. and Hattie (Ingram) Groff, of Bellmont Precinct. After his marriage Mr. French taught in the public schools of Bellmont six years, then went to Champaign County, Ill., but soon returned to Bellmont. In 1900 he and his brother embarked in the grain business at Bellmont, then Bascom taught one year, after which he formed a partnership with his father in the same business and two years later left to teach in Champaign County. On June 14, 1909, entered into partnership with his father and brother in the grain, elevator and milling business. Their elevator has a capacity of about 10,000 bushels and they grind about fifty barrels of flour per day. Besides dealing in all kinds of grain, they also deal in horses, cattle and hogs, and do an extensive business in shipping stock. All three are hustling, energetic business men, and pay careful attention to every detail of the enterprise in which they have firmly established themselves. Their dealings with their business patrons and associates have been distinguished by honesty and integrity, and they have won a good reputation.

Mr. French is a member of the Christian Church, in which he has been an Elder since 1903. He is a Republican in politics and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America of Bellmont. One daughter has blessed their marriage: Fern Vivian, born May 11, 1898. Mr. French and wife are prominent in social circles and have a multitude of friends.

FRENCH, Howard Preston.—A successful lawyer and banker should be a man of high education and a high order of intelligence, who is able to see all sides of any financial question that may arise in the routine of business and the intricacies of his profession. He should be a man of good judgment and always ready to follow policies he has laid down for others in the conduct of affairs, understanding every detail of each operation in the line of his work.

Howard Preston French has been a resident of Mt. Carmel since 1905 and has formed a wide acquaintance and a host of friends. Mr. French was born in Lawrence County, Ill., September 8, 1879, son of P. O. and Mary Malinda (Ruark) French, both natives of Lawrence County. His paternal grandparents, Newton and Sarah A. French, born in Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively, came to Wabash County after their marriage in 1850, and a few years later moved to Lawrence County. Newton French was a cooper in Mt. Carmel, but when he moved to Lawrence County bought a farm, where he spent the remainder of his life, and where his widow still lives. The parents of Mary Malinda French came to Lawrence County, Ill., among the early settlers, moving there from Virginia, about 1815. Mr. and Mrs. Ruark were of English descent and died on their farm in Lawrence County.

J. B. Maxwell

P. O. French was married in Lawrence County and now owns a farm there near the oil wells. His wife died February 2, 1892. They had four children, namely: Dr. A. D., of Orio, Ill.; Howard P.; E. B., a school-teacher at Bridgeport, Ill.; and Grace, living at home with her father.

After receiving a common school education, Howard P. French entered college at Danville, Ind., and later the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., graduating from the law department of the latter in 1905. In September of the same year he came to Mt. Carmel and began the practice of his profession, in which he has met with gratifying success, and now enjoys an extensive and lucrative patronage. In 1907 he became affiliated with the Mt. Carmel Banking & Trust Company, of which he is Assistant Cashier, Director and attorney, being thus engaged in the active management of the institution. He is capable and aggressive, has a good standing in the community, is well-liked and popular, and promises to be a factor in the future of Wabash County.

August 7, 1907, Mr. French married Martha Binford, who was born at Greenfield, Ind., a daughter of Robert Barclay and Deborah (Butler) Binford, both of whom are living and members of leading pioneer Quaker families of that State. Mr. French and his wife have no children. He is Exalted Ruler of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Mt. Carmel, and in political views is a Democrat. He and his wife belong to the Presbyterian Church of Mt. Carmel.

FRIDRICH, Nicholas (deceased).—In the death of the late Nicholas Fridrich, who passed away February 29, 1908, Mt. Carmel, Ill., lost one of its best and most influential citizens. Mr. Fridrich was interested in every movement for the public welfare, and was known and respected by the entire population of the city. He was a friend of the poor, always kind and charitable to all, and was familiarly known among his intimates as "Uncle Nick." Mr. Fridrich was a native of the city, born October 10, 1839, son of George and Mary (Wirth) Fridrich, of Westheim, Bavaria, Germany. The parents were farmers and came to Wabash County in 1838. In his youth Nicholas Fridrich learned the trade of carpenter and worked at this trade for many years, becoming a large contractor. He received his education in the common schools of Mt. Carmel and was reared in the Catholic faith. About 1896 he and his brother-in-law, Charles Graves, purchased a furniture store on Market Street, in a central location of Mt. Carmel. They continued successfully together for about eleven years and then Mr. Graves moved to Evansville, Ind., after which Mr. Fridrich moved the business to a building of his own on Market Street. Mr. Eichhorn purchased the interest of Mr. Graves and two years later the business was sold to Courter Brothers. After disposing of his business, Mr. Fridrich lived retired until his death. Besides other buildings, he owned several residences in the city.

Mr. Fridrich served with credit in the Union army, enlisting in Company C, Twentieth Regiment Volunteer Infantry, and would have been with Sherman when he marched to the sea, but for the unfortunate mistake of becoming detached from his company and unable to rejoin them until they reached Raleigh, N. C. He was with them at the Fall of Richmond, under General Sherman. Politically Mr. Fridrich was a Democrat, and took an active interest in every measure for the public good. For many years he served as Lay Trustee of St. Mary's Catholic Church, of Mt. Carmel, in which he was a prominent and influential member. He was the soul of honor and never willingly wronged anyone. His many friends gave him their most loyal affection and esteem. At his death he left a vacancy which will never be filled, not only in his home, but in other circles as well. He was buried in the Catholic Cemetery at Mt. Carmel.

April 17, 1863, Mr. Fridrich married (first) Rachel Gard, a native of Mt. Carmel, who had one daughter that died in infancy, and Mrs. Fridrich died soon after. Mr. Fridrich married (second), January 12, 1869, Margaret Peters, who was born at Mt. Carmel, February 17, 1847, daughter of Michael and Margaret (Wirth) Peters, natives of Bavaria, Germany, who came to Mt. Carmel in an early day and settled on a farm. The children of this union were: Mrs. Elizabeth Kariho, of Mt. Carmel; Mrs. Helen Kolb, also of Mt. Carmel; Miss Ida, at home; Martin, of Mt. Carmel. The widow still resides in the old home in Mt. Carmel.

GARD, Green, an honored veteran of the Civil War, and representative of one of the most prominent families in Wabash County, Ill., since 1814, was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, October 31, 1838, a son of Benjamin F. and Mary (Bratton) Gard. The father was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, a son of Benjamin Franklin Gard, for whom Gard's Point was named, and one of the earliest settlers of Lick Prairie Precinct, where he secured land from the Government and remained on it the remainder of his life. Mary Bratton's father was a soldier in the War of 1812 and died in Tennessee, where she was born. His widow came to Wabash County and was again married there.

Benjamin and Mary Gard settled on Bald Hill Prairie after their marriage and a few years later removed to the Bonpas Creek Bottom. He bought and improved a tract of land and contributed a site for a school building. His first farm contained a whole section of land and he became the owner of many hundred acres, most of which was in Lick Prairie Precinct. He was a Whig and took an active part in political affairs. He was born April 3, 1805, and died in August, 1860, and his wife, born July 16, 1806, died about 1851. His children were: Jerusha, Susan, Mary, Harriet and Charlotte, deceased; Washington, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Wasson, deceased; Benjamin, of Indiana; Green; Franklin, Marion and Rachel, deceased; Effie, Mrs. Albin Birkett, of Oklahoma; Caleb, deceased. The two last-named were children by his second wife, who was a Miss Kitchen.

The youth of Green Gard was spent on his father's farm, and he received the usual education accorded a farmer's son in those times in the district schools. At the age of nineteen years he began working for his brother, Washington, learning the trade of wagon-making. In 1859 he began the erection of a house on a farm of 160 acres in Section 26, Lick Prairie Precinct, which his father had given him. Two-thirds of this land was prairie land and he cleared the remainder, putting it all under cultivation. At the time he began building the brush was so thick he could hardly get through it, but he brought the land to a high state of cultivation. He and his brother, Benjamin, bought a part of the home place on the Bonpas Creek Bottom, which was still covered with timber. Green Gard secured sixty-three and one-half acres of this, but has given land to his son until he now owns but thirty-two acres, besides 100 acres of the home place, having sold sixty acres in 1866.

October 18, 1861, Mr. Gard enlisted in Company 1, Sixty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, called the "Western Sharpshooters," which became part of the Fourteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, in which he served for one year, when it was transferred to the Sixty-sixth Illinois. He remained with the regiment as long as it was in service, except six months when he was on detached service, building railroads in Georgia. Mr. Gard received his discharge October 18, 1864, when he returned home, and has been employed in the management of his farm continuously ever since, except during a period in 1881-82, spent in wagon-making business in Edwards County, Ill.

Mr. Gard married, January 14, 1860, Electa Kitchen, who was born at Kitchen Bridge, Edwards County, February 6, 1844, a daughter of Leallyn and Elizabeth (Wells) Kitchen, of Indiana. Her father died when she was quite small and her mother died about 1902. Mr. Kitchen and his wife had children as follows: Martha A., who married Martin V. Hon, but is deceased; Mrs. Gard; Mary C., married Dr. Thomas McClain, of Roswell, N. M.; John E., of Bone Gap, Edwards County; William W., died in infancy. The children born to Mr. Gard and wife were: Addie, born March 12, 1861, and died November 24, 1884; Maud, born October 29, 1865, widow of Peter Andrews, and resides at Cowling, Ill.; Edward, died in infancy; Earl, born April 1, 1872, lives in Lick Prairie Precinct; Leonard, born January 5, 1878, lives at Bone Gap; Vernon, born June 28, 1881, lives in Mt. Carmel Precinct; Paul, born October 1, 1886, at home. Mr. Gard is a Republican in politics and takes an active interest in the public welfare. He is an intelligent and progressive farmer and has been very successful in his enterprises. He has a large number of friends in the county and is considered a representative, useful citizen. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

GARD, Washington.—No family is more closely identified with the early history of Wabash County, than the Gard family, which has been represented there since 1814, and which furnished one of the members of the Constitutional Convention of 1818, and of the last Territorial Legislature before Illinois became a State. Washington Gard, now living retired from active life in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, was born in that precinct, December 20, 1833, a son of Benjamin F. and Mary (Bratton) Gard. Benjamin F. Gard was born in Ohio, the son of Seth and Mary (Brown) Gard, natives of Ohio, and Mary Bratton, daughter of a soldier of the War of 1812, was born in Tennessee. Grandfather Bratton was born in Tennessee and died in his native State, after which his widow came to Wabash County and married a Mr. Wood.

Seth Gard located in old Palmyra, Wabash County, and helped lay out the streets of that town. He was one of the first Judges of the county and served in the Territorial Legislature in 1816-17, when it met at Kaskaskia. He finally settled on land which he secured from the Government at Gard's Point, which was named after him, and died on this farm in 1845. His widow died about 1856.

After his marriage Benjamin F. Gard settled on a farm near Cabbage Corner in Lick Prairie Precinct, but soon sold out there and bought land in the western part of the precinct. At one time he owned 1,000 acres of land, most of which he entered from the Government. He died August 17, 1860, and his wife died in February, 1855. Their children were: Seth, died in childhood; Mary, Mrs. John White, died at the age of thirty-five years; Harriet, Mrs. John Groff, died in 1906, in Wabash County; Charlotta, Mrs. Lewis White, died at Bone Gap, Ill., in 1909; Washington; Wasson, was killed in 1864 in the Civil War; Benjamin, of Posey County, Ind.; Green, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Franklin, died young; Rachel, Mrs. Nicholas Frederick, died several years ago, in Mt. Carmel Precinct; Marion, died young. Mr. Gard married (second) a Miss Kitchen, by whom he had two children, Effie, Mrs. Birkett, of Oklahoma, and Caleb, who died many years ago.

Washington Gard received his education in the district school of his neighborhood and remained with his parents until his marriage, November 12, 1854, to Ellen Gardner, who was born in Luzerne County, Pa., daughter of Henry and Sarah (Cole) Gardner, of Luzerne County. After his marriage Mr. Gard moved to a farm of 160 acres which his father gave him, erected a house and other buildings, and lived there until 1880, when he sold out to J. Fred Groff, and went to Pope County, Ill., and purchased 160 acres of improved land, which he traded nine years later for a farm in Lincoln County, Kan. After living there five years, he sold out and returning to Lick Prairie Precinct, bought a small farm there, on which he has since resided. He has retired from active life and is enjoying the rest he has so well earned. In politics he is a Republican and has served as School Director and Road Supervisor. While living in Kansas he was a member of the P. of H.

Mr. Gard is well known in the community where he lives as a public-spirited citizen, and is a worthy representative of the name he bears and of the family that has done so much to advance the interests of Wabash County. He and his wife became parents of children as follows: Alice and Alonzo, died in infancy; Frank; Glenburn, of the State of Washington; Nora, widow of James H. Stallons, conducts a general store at Gard's Point; George O., of Saline County, Kan.; and Rudolph, of Kansas City.

GAY, Jesse O., for many years a prominent educator in the public schools of Wabash County, Ill., is a native of Wabash County, born in Belmont, October 3, 1873, a son of Adam P. and Mary E. (Wheeler) Gay, both born in Warrick County, Ind. Adam P. Gay is a son of Adam and Elizabeth Gay, born in Pennsylvania, of Holland parentage, and Mrs. Gay was a daughter of Joshua and Ann Wheeler, natives of Tennessee. Adam and Mary Gay were married in Newburg County, Ind., and they conducted a saw-mill in the southwestern part of Indiana. Mr. Gay enlisted, at Evansville, Ind., in July, 1861, in Company H, Twenty-fifth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, became ill with the mumps at the time of the Battle at Fort Henry and was discharged at Cairo, in February, 1862, on account of disability, returning to Indiana.

He was married in 1857, when but twenty years of age, and engaged in the saw-mill business which he continued until 1870 in Indiana, then engaged in a similar enterprise in Belmont. In 1880 his mill engine blew up, and he discontinued his business, becoming a section foreman on what is now the Southern Railroad. After working three years for the railroad company, Mr. Gay engaged in farming and followed this occupation until 1893. Since 1904 he has been residing with his son Jesse O., in Belmont, and his daughter, Cora, in South Omaha. Mrs. Gay died April 18, 1898. Their children were: Mary J. and Frank, both of whom died at the age of two years; Ella, died at the age of twenty years; William, died at the age of eighteen; Jesse and Cora. Mrs. Francis L. Woods, of South Omaha.

At the age of nineteen years Jesse O. Gay began teaching in the public schools of Wabash County, and has since continued in this profession with gratifying success, having taught more years consecutively than almost any other member of the profession in the county. He received his education in the public schools of Belmont and in the State Normal School at Carbondale, Ill. He has won a reputation for ability in his profession and stands well among the educators of the region. He was President of Wabash County Teachers' Association in 1908-09.

In politics Mr. Gay is a Republican and has served as Clerk of the Village of Belmont, also acted four years as a Trustee of the Village Board, and since 1903 has been Police Magistrate. Fraternally he belongs to the Mystic Workers of the World, in which he has been Prefect since 1905. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. No. 729, of Belmont, and has been Captain of the Degree Team; is President of the Council of the M. P. L., and belongs to the U. S. Endowment of Chicago. In the fall of 1904 Mr. Gay served as Delegate to the Republican State Convention, being President of the Wabash County Delegation. In 1908 he served as Delegate to the Supreme Session of the Mystic Workers at St. Paul, and in 1910 served in a similar capacity at their session at Elgin, Ill., beginning June 7. Besides his other interests and duties Mr. Gay is a writing agent for the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. He is an enterprising and representative citizen and identified himself with every cause for the advancement of the public welfare. He and his wife belong to no church but generally attend the Methodist Episcopal services and have a leaning toward that faith.

November 4, 1897, Mr. Gay married Mary M. Weisenberger, who was born in Belmont Precinct, April 1, 1875, a daughter of George and Margaret (Groff) Weisenberger. Mr. Weisenberger was born in Timberville, Wabash County, and his wife in Mt. Carmel Precinct. Their parents were George and Rachal (Black) Weisenberger, and Jacob and Mary (Fearheiley) Groff, also of Germany, natives of Hesse-Cassel. After his marriage Mr. Gay moved to a house he had erected and furnished in Belmont, where he has since resided. November 29, 1905, he was appointed Postmaster of Belmont and his wife is Assistant Postmaster. Their children are: Hazel Margaret, born August 31, 1898; Clarence Arrol, born January 27, 1901, and Kenneth Merwin, October 2, 1905.

GILLIATT, Claud Edison, M. D., a prominent and successful young physician of Allendale, Wabash County, Ill., was born in Unionville, Ind., July 24, 1878, son of Dr. William B. and Amy Ann (Lomax) Gilliatt, both natives of Orange County, Ind. Their parents were William and Nancy (Willard) Gilliatt, natives of West Virginia, and Lentsford and Elvira (Hunt) Lomax. Dr. William B. Gilliatt graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Cincinnati, Ohio, about 1872, and began practicing at French Lick, Ind., in partnership with Dr. Bowles, who invented "Greek Fire." After spending a year with Dr. Bowles he moved to English, Crawford County, Ind., and a year later moved to Unionville, the same State, being one of the oldest physicians in Orange County. He and his wife had children as follows: Lanra, who died at the age of four years; Claud E.; and Lulu Ann, of Greenfield, Ind.

After graduating from the public schools Dr. Claud E. Gilliatt attended the normal school at Mitchell, Ind., and Bloomington (Ind.) State University, at the latter institution taking a preparatory medical course. He taught one year (1894) in Orange County, Ind., and later attended the Hospital College of Medicine, at Louisville, Ky. In 1895 he took a post-graduate course at Chicago Post-Graduate Medical School. In 1898 Dr. Gilliatt began practicing at Unionville, Ind., and in June, 1899, located at Allendale, Ill. He is a skillful physician, enterprising and ambitious, and has the largest practice of any physician in the vicinity.

Dr. Gilliatt was married, March 14, 1900, to Beulah Price, who was born at Allendale, Ill., daughter of J. W. and Sarah (McLain) Price. They have one son, James Price, who was born February 10, 1901. Dr. Gilliatt is well-known and stands well in the community, having been successful from the start in building up his practice. He is a member of the Christian Church and has been Deacon since 1908. He belongs to the Masonic Lodge, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, of Allendale, and the Tribe of Ben Hur and Lodge of Royal Arch Masons at Mt. Carmel. In political views he is a Democrat.

GLICK, James Samuel Marshall, a representative farmer and stock-raiser of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of the precinct, born on the farm he now occupies, November 8, 1858. He is a son of Louis and Mary (Dyer) Glick, the former born near Allentown, Pa., July 20, 1823, and the latter in Wabash County, Ill., September 12, 1822. Louis Glick was a son of George and Rachel (Fisher) Glick, the former born March 30, 1800, and the latter October 17, 1799, in Manatawny Township, Berks County, Pa. They were married September 1, 1822, in Pennsylvania. Mrs. Glick was a daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth Dyer, natives of Virginia. George Glick located in Wabash County in 1818, and returned to Pennsylvania to be married, then returned and entered land in Lancaster Precinct and later moved to Mt. Carmel Precinct, where the remainder of his life was spent.

Louis Glick and his wife were married in 1843 and then lived several years with his father, who owned 600 acres of land and became one of the county's most prominent men. George Glick served four years as member of the County Court, was an earnest member of the Lutheran Church, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which organization took charge of his funeral. Louis Glick died July 16, 1895, and his wife July 7, 1898. They were parents of children as follows: George Andrew, of Mt. Carmel; Elizabeth R., Mrs. Charles H. Goodge, of Evansville, Ind.; William F., of Aberdeen, Wash.; John E., of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Mary, Mrs.

Frank Wirth, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Louis J., of Oregon; James S. M.; and May, Mrs. Louis Howell, who died July 29, 1893.

James S. M. Glick remained with his parents until his marriage, and as a boy attended the district school and helped carry on the home farm. He has always taken great interest in agricultural matters and has made a study of the best methods of farming in his locality. He married, October 28, 1880, Florence B. Howell, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, daughter of Samuel and Rebecca Howell, both natives of Indiana. The children of this union were: Zelma, born January 12, 1883; Mrs. Roscoe Harper, of Beardstown, Ill.; Vitula, born July 25, 1884; Mrs. Reuben Jordan, of Keensburg; Enola, born August 9, 1886; Mrs. Benjamin Smith, of Evansville, Ind.; Ethel, born April 7, 1888. Mrs. Glick died October 14, 1888, and Mr. Glick married (second), November 26, 1891, Edith Hinderleiter, born in Lancaster Precinct, daughter of Daniel and Jane (Discher) Hinderleiter, the former a native of Wabash County and the latter of Pennsylvania. The grandparents of Mrs. Glick were: Daniel and Lydia Discher, of Pennsylvania, and Henry and Elizabeth (Fisher) Hinderleiter, of Berks County, Pa. By his second marriage Mr. Glick had children as follows: Edward F., born October 6, 1893, died January 6, 1898; Samuel L., born January 6, 1897; Archibald W., born October 21, 1904.

After his first marriage Mr. Glick lived one year on part of his father's farm later spent one year in the house with his parents, and then built a house for his family on a portion of the home farm, where he lived until his father's death, when he moved back to the home place and has since resided in the old home. His mother spent her last days with him and the property has been his since her death. He owns 135 acres, eighty-two acres of which are the home farm. He raises a good many horses, hogs and cattle, and is very successful in his operations. He has taken an active part in local political affairs and has held some minor offices. He served twelve years as School Director, was re-elected to that office, which he still holds. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Tribe of Ben Hur Lodge, Mt. Carmel. He is highly esteemed for his sterling worth and integrity and well known in the community.

GODDARD, Henry Thomas, a prominent and popular citizen of Mt. Carmel, Ill., has been identified with the banking interests of that city since 1890, and is at present holding the responsible position of President of the First National Bank. Mr. Goddard is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, his forebears having emigrated from Scotland to Cork, Ireland, and thence to America. His grandfather, James Goddard, a native of Virginia, served in a Virginia regiment in the War of 1812, and afterward moved with his family to Williamson County, Ill. His wife, Mrs. Mariah (Davis-McHaney) Goddard, was a second cousin of Jefferson Davis, President of the Southern Confederacy, and an aunt of General John T. Davis.

The birth of Henry Thomas Goddard occurred in Marion, Williamson County, Ill., June 20, 1852. He is a son of James T. and Winnifred (Spiller) Goddard, the father born in Franklin County, Va., in 1818, and the mother in Williamson County, Ill. She was a daughter of William and Winnifred (Benson) Spiller, (early settlers of Illinois Territory, coming to Williamson County from Robinson County, Tenn.) Her mother, whose maiden name was Winnifred Benson, was a cousin of General Cheatham, of the Confederate Army. James T. Goddard and his wife lived for a time at Bainbridge, Williamson County where he was engaged in mercantile business, then moved to Marion, where he embarked in the same business, and where they spent the remainder of their lives.

Henry Thomas Goddard received his early education in the public schools of Marion, Ill., and later attended the Normal University, at Normal, Ill., and Notre Dame University at Notre Dame, Ind. Upon leaving school he was employed in his brother's dry-goods store at Marion, and also engaged in banking business there for ten years. He left Marion in 1890 to accept the position of Cashier of the First National Bank, at Mt. Carmel at its organization, which he held until February, 1904, when he was elected President, which position he still holds. He is an enterprising and energetic business man and takes an active interest in the welfare and progress of the community. He has many friends and is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of the Masonic Order, the Elks and Knights of Pythias. For several years he served as District Deputy Grand Master of the first-named order and is now a member of the committee on mileage and per diem a permanent committee of the Grand Lodge of the State.

While Mr. Goddard is not actively engaged in politics and is in no sense an office seeker, he served as City Treasurer, Alderman and member of the Board of Education of Marion, and is now a member of the Board of Trustees of the Southern Normal University, at Carbondale, Ill. He is Chairman of Group 9 of the Illinois Bankers' Association, and President of the Bank of Wayne City, Wayne City, Ill.

Mr. Goddard was married, at Marion, Ill., September 4, 1873, to Mary E. Houts, daughter of C. J. and M. J. Houts. Her father was a pioneer Methodist minister of Illinois and Missouri and a co-laborer of Peter Cartwright, having spent forty-seven years in the ministry. Mrs. Goddard's mother was Jane (Randle) Houts, a descendant of the Randolphs of Virginia. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Goddard were: Lora Houts Goddard, born July 22, 1874; Lucile Houts (Goddard) Roberts, born May 20, 1876; Roy Houts Goddard, born April 21, 1878, and Henry Houts Goddard, born April 22, 1889.

Mrs. Goddard takes an active interest in charity, club, social and fraternal affairs, being Past Grand Matron of the Order of the Eastern Star of Illinois; a member of the State Board of Charities, and is connected with the Reviewers' Matinee, a local ladies' club that engaged in literary and civic improvement work. She is a woman of culture and refinement and has a large circle of friends.

GRAY, Frank S., M. D.—Among the most valuable citizens of any community are its physicians, whose influence is always widely felt. Among the well-known physicians of Allendale, Ill., is Dr. Frank S. Gray, who was born in Feeseburg, Brown County, Ohio, January 20, 1855, son of Martin Perry and Eliza (Waterfield) Gray. Martin P. Gray was born in Smithville, Monroe County, Ind., son of Peter and Mary (Dillman) Gray, of Bartholomew County, Ind. His wife was born in Brown County, Ohio, daughter of Jacob and Nancy (Metzer) Waterfield, natives respectively of Virginia and Kentucky. The Waterfield family came originally from England and settled in Virginia.

Martin Perry Gray and his wife married in Brown County, Ohio, and lived on their large farm there from 1854 until the spring of 1868, when they moved to Merom, Ind., the site of Union Christian College. They disposed of their Ohio land and, in the fall of 1878, moved to Windsor, Mo., living there until 1897, when they sold out and removed to Indianapolis, Ind. Here Mr. Gray still resides with his son, Austin W. He was born January 28, 1833, and has reached the age of seventy-seven years. His wife, who was born November 2, 1831, died in September, 1906. Frank S. was the oldest child and the others were: Alvin Scott, of Edinburgh, Scotland; Ida, Mrs. Arthur DeVore, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Edwin, died at the age of two years; Carrie, Mrs. Harry Wheelock, who died while on a visit to her parents in Missouri; and Austin W., employed in the car shops of the Big Four Railroad, at Indianapolis.

Frank S. Gray attended the public schools of Ohio and Union Christian College, of Merom, Ind., and at the age of nineteen years began teaching at Coryington, Ind. A year later he returned to Merom and taught two years in the schools of that city. He then taught two years in Sullivan, Ind., one year at Paxton, Ind., and then accepted a position as Principal of the schools at Allendale, which he held two years. July 25, 1880, he began reading medicine with Dr. McIntosh, and in the fall of 1881 entered Ohio Medical College, of Cincinnati, from which he graduated March 8, 1883, and two days later became co-partner with Dr. McIntosh at Allendale. They also conducted a drug store. Eight years later they dissolved partnership, and Dr. Gray, after practicing medicine three years, then established a drug store. Since 1896 he has had only office practice, and now has the only drug store in Allendale. In November, 1897, he was appointed by President McKinley as Postmaster of Allendale, and has since held the office by subsequent appointments. Besides the office in Allendale, he has charge of two rural delivery routes. He has been very successful in his various enterprises and has established himself in the good-will and esteem of his fellow-citizens. He stands well in his profession and has a good practice.

March 24, 1883, Dr. Gray married Rachel Belle McFarland, who was born in Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, and they became parents of children as follows: Nellie, Mrs. Haldon L. Gooch, of Lawrenceville, Ill.; Gertrude, Mrs. John C. F. Henry, of Herrin, Ill.; Carrie, at home; Frank Sylvester, attending school in Valparaiso, Ind., where he is taking a course in pharmacy; Lady Jane and Martin Paul, at home. Dr. Gray is a Republican in political views. He is a member of the Christian Church, is serving on the Board of Trustees, and has been Superintendent of the Sunday School since 1902. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen and Mystic Workers of the World of Allendale, and is examining physician for both orders and for the New York Life Insurance Company.

GREEN, Hon. Edward B.—One of the most distinguished citizens of Wabash County, Ill., is the Hon. Edward B. Green, first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, who is now making his home at Mt. Carmel, where he has an extensive law practice. Judge Green was born in Blair County, Pa., December 29, 1837, a son of Thomas and Martha (Galbraith) Green, the former being of English ancestry, the family having settled in Virginia in early days. Thomas Green was a soldier in the War of 1812, serving with the army operating in Canada and on the northern frontier, and at the close of the war settled in what is now Blair County, Pa., where he followed farming until his death in 1875. His wife was of Scotch-Irish stock, her ancestors having been early settlers of Pennsylvania, and she was born, reared and married in Blair County, that State. She survived her husband until 1889 and died in Chicago. Judge Green was the youngest of the twelve children of this worthy couple, but five of whom are now living.

Edward B. Green received his primary education in his native county, and later attended the Reimersburg and Leatherwood Academies, while still young, fitting himself for the profession of teaching, on which he entered in his seventeenth year. As an instructor he became proficient in languages and, for a year and six months previous to leaving Pennsylvania, held the chair of Languages in the Academy at West Freedom, Clarion County. On October 20, 1858, he came to Illinois, settling first at Paris, Edgar County, where, having determined to adopt the profession of law, he entered the office of his brother, Amos Green, who was in partnership with James A. Eads. In June, 1860, Mr. Green went to Carlisle, Clinton County, the home of Judge Sidney Breese, then a Justice of the Supreme Court, and was by him examined and upon his recommendation admitted to the bar. On the 20th of that month he came to Mt. Carmel and opened a law office, continuing alone until 1864, when he formed a partnership with the late Judge Robert Bell, which continued until Mr. Green's appointment to the Supreme Court in Oklahoma in 1890. The law firm of Bell & Green became widely known throughout Southern Illinois and had a large and lucrative practice in Wabash and the surrounding counties and in the Appellate, Circuit, State Supreme and in Federal Courts. Politically, Judge Green has always been a Republican, having cast his first presidential vote in 1860, for Abraham Lincoln, and in subsequent elections has remained a staunch and active supporter of the Grand Old Party. In 1877 his ability as a lawyer and his worth as a man was recognized by his nomination for the office of Circuit Judge of the Second Judicial District, and in 1879 he was further honored by nomination for Justice of the Supreme Court of Illinois, but in both instances was defeated owing to the fact that his party was in a hopeless minority in his district. In 1882 Judge Green was nominated in the Sixteenth Congressional District for Congress, and made the canvass against Judge Aaron Shaw, demonstrating that he was a strong and popular man by reducing the Democratic majority of 1476 in the district in 1880, to 628. In 1885 he was appointed by Governor Oglesby, on the Revenue Commission, to revise the revenue laws of the State and was elected, in 1886, to the Legislature, and was appointed Chairman of the House Revenue Committee. In January, 1887, he was elected President of the Illinois State Bar Association. On May 14, 1890, he was appointed by President Harrison as the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the newly created Territory of Oklahoma. The Supreme Court, with Chief Justice Green presiding, and Associate Justices John G. Clark of Wisconsin and Abraham J. Seay of Missouri, organized and held its first session in the city of Guthrie, in June, 1890, with Charles H. Filson, of Indiana, as Clerk, Warren G. Lurty, of West Virginia, as Marshal, and Horace Speed, of Kansas, as United States Attorney. This was the first court having appellate jurisdiction held under authority of the Act of Congress, approved May 14, 1890, within the boundaries of that portion of the Indian Territory designated as Oklahoma and containing more than 30,000 square miles. President Harrison failed of re-election, and Judge Green was succeeded by Mr. Frank Dale, a Democrat, appointed by President Cleveland, September 1, 1893. He was then retained by Mr. Stratton, the owner of the Independence Mine, at Cripple Creek, Colo., in litigation concerning a half-interest in this property, which is one of the largest gold mines in the United States. He was also the attorney in litigation concerning the Little Johnny Gold Mine at Leadville, Colo. When the union of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and Presbyterian Church of the United States of America was being consummated, Judge Green was general attorney for the former, which was opposed to the union. After his return from Colorado, in 1898, Judge Green formed a partnership with Theodore G. Risley, under the firm name of Green & Risley, and this partnership has continued to the present time. Judge Green has taken an active interest in education and by his zeal and energy has succeeded in connection with other members of the School Board (of which he was a member for thirteen years), in building up the present excellent graded schools of Mt. Carmel. He prepared the first curriculum of study in the Mt. Carmel High school, which, with some additions, is still in force. Judge Green has no church affiliation, but his sympathies are with the Methodist Episcopal denomination. Fraternally, he is connected with the Mt. Carmel lodges of the Masons and Odd Fellows.

On October 23, 1861, Judge Green was married to Emma E. Lutes, of York County, Pa., and three children have been born of this union: Daisy, who died March 28, 1898, the wife of S. L. Russell, leaving one daughter; and Pearl and Paul, at home.

GREER, Capt. Stephen D., who has been a resident of Mt. Carmel for more than eighty years, during which time he has seen marvelous changes take place in that city, is now living retired at his home at No. 122 West Second Street. He was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, February 25, 1824, a son of William and Elizabeth (Clark) Greer. William Greer was born in Pennsylvania, October 3, 1796, and in Bedford County, that State, was married April 6, 1820, to Elizabeth Clark, a native of the county, who was born January 8, 1802. William Greer was a printer by trade and worked at that occupation in Pennsylvania, but in 1824, with his wife and son William C., he started for the West by boat. On reaching Cincinnati he left his wife to go to Louisville, Ky., and while he was away Stephen D. was born. After his return the family went on to Louisville, where they resided for four years, and in 1829 the family, then consisting of two boys and two girls, came by the steamboat Tipecanoe to Mt. Carmel, Ill., where Mr. Greer purchased a tavern, this being conducted by his wife while he carried on operations on the Mississippi River, going to New Orleans and dealing in corn. While on one of these expeditions accompanied by Moses Bedell, he was stricken by cholera and died at Memphis, Tenn., May 4, 1835. His widow survived until February 20, 1858, when she died at Mt. Carmel. Mr. Greer is the only survivor of his parents' six children, the others being: William C., Mary Jane, Margaret Ellen, Juliana and James Monroe.

Capt. Stephen D. Greer received his education in the subscription schools of his day, but owing to his family's humble circumstances, he could not get much schooling. After his father's death he and his brother, William C., cut cord wood until the steamer Concord sank above Terra Haute in 1837. After it was raised and repaired Mr. Greer secured a position as second cook, and his brother as cabin boy. They were to receive ten dollars per month, in "wild-cat" money, but after making the first trip to Cincinnati, the boat was tied up on account of a debt and the brothers were left without money. They were finally able to work their passage back to Evansville, Ind., whence they walked home, starting out in the night and reaching home the following morning, a walk of sixteen miles. They next worked on the steamer Othello, which was engaged in transporting rock for the proposed dam above Mt. Carmel, but this boat later sank. William became a steamboat captain and helped to build the largest boat than ever ran on the Wabash River, the John M. Stockwell. In 1847 Stephen D. Greer bought the steamer Sligo, at Cincinnati, and took charge of it, running from that city to Lafayette, continuing to operate it for nine months. He then took charge of the Fannie Farrar, as captain and pilot for about a year, and was later captain and pilot of such well known vessels as the Atlanta, Kwasind and Osseo, and stood at the head of captains and pilots on the river. On the breaking up of navigation on the rivers, Captain Greer retired and has been living quietly ever since in Mt. Carmel.

On October 24, 1844, Capt. Greer was married to Winnie Ann Bedell, who was born November 14, 1829, at Bedell Dam, Wabash County, and died March 23, 1905. To this union there were born two children: William C., born August 12, 1847, and living in Mt. Carmel, married Elizabeth Masse, of Vincennes, Ind., died in 1905, leaving two children—Cabill Masse and Winnie Greer; and Mary E., born September 2, 1850, and died January 28, 1870, at Paterson, N. J.

Mr. Greer built his present brick residence in 1850, and it is still in a fine state of preservation. He and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in his political views he is a Republican, although he has never occupied any office except that of School Director. He has seen many changes in Mt. Carmel since the time when it was a typical frontier town, surrounded by heavy timber and with many bad characters, and he has done his share towards improving conditions. The Greer family has quite a military record, Captain Greer having been a 100-day man in Company H, One Hundred Thirty-sixth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, while his son, William C., served about nine months in an Indiana regiment during 1864, and his grandson, Cabill Masse enlisted in the army during the Spanish-American War and served three years in the Philippines. All three—the father, son and grandson—draw pensions.

GREY, George Byron.—One of the best-known citizens of Mt. Carmel, Ill., is George Byron Grey, a native of the State and veteran of the Civil War, and now an employe of the United States Government. Mr. Grey has had an eventful life and has been engaged in several different lines of work with fair success. He was born in Morgan County, September 15, 1850, son of Thomas and Margaret (Cunningham) Grey, both natives of Clare County, Ireland. The parents were married in their native county in 1833, when they emigrated to the United States and located on a farm in Morgan County, Ill., where they spent their remaining years. They had three sons: Thomas, of Wichita, Kan.; Richard, of Genesee County, N. Y., where he lives on a farm; and George B.

The early education of George B. Grey was received in the common schools. At the age of thirteen years he enlisted in the Sixth Missouri Cavalry, the date of his enlistment being March 14, 1863. He was first a bugler, but in 1864 became a private. He served some time in Matagorda, Tex., where he was discharged, May 15, 1865, having established a good record as a soldier.

At the close of the war Mr. Grey found employment at St. Louis, Mo., and from that time until 1872, traveled through different parts of the country, working at whatever he found to do. In that year he settled at Mt. Carmel, where he worked as a carpenter and at bridge building principally, although he spent some time also in farming. He had previously taught school eleven terms in Missouri, Iowa and Illinois, and after locating in Wabash County he taught eleven terms in Gibson County, Ind., ten terms being in one school. In 1891 Mr. Grey purchased 240 acres of land from the State, in Gibson County, which he partly improved, and spent eight years farming on the portion that was cleared and ready for cultivation. He then sold out and returning to Mt. Carmel, in 1901, secured the post of rural mail carrier out of that city, in which position he has since served. He secured the first route, called Route No. 1, and has held this route to the present time. Six other routes have since been established. He has been very faithful in the discharge of his duties and has missed very few days since he started.

April 10, 1875, Mr. Grey married Laura Troutman, a native of Gibson County, Ind., and daughter of John and Jane (Watkins) Troutman, he a native of Kentucky and she of Tennessee. To this union children have been born as follows: Theresa, Mrs. Stanley Berry, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Ellen, Mrs. Anton Reisinger, of Mt. Carmel; Gertude and Ethel, at home.

Mr. Grey is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically is a Republican. He belongs to the Modern American Fraternal Order. As a teacher he attained a high reputation, as a farmer he was very successful, and in his service during the Civil War he showed great devotion to his duty as a soldier. He has been equally patriotic in his private life, and has ever been identified with the best and highest principles of citizenship. He has the happy faculty of winning and holding the warm friendship of those with whom he is associated, and has the esteem and regard of his fellow-townsmen. Although he has never cared for public office he has kept himself well informed on the issues of the day and takes an active interest in public affairs.

GROFF, Jacob, now living retired at Mt. Carmel, Ill., is one of the venerable citizens of Wabash County who has seen this part of the country develop from a wild waste of prairie and swamp lands into prosperous farms and flourishing cities and villages. He was born December 25, 1822, near the River Rhine, and nine miles from the city of Worms, Germany, and is a son of John Frederick and Margaret Groff.

Jacob Groff was the eldest of the ten children of his parents, nine of whom came to the United States, and only one besides Jacob is now living, Fred, of Grayville, Ill. The family came on a three-masted sailing vessel to New Orleans, being forty-five days on the Atlantic Ocean, and journeyed up the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers to Evansville, Ind., coming thence by wagon to Mt. Carmel, where they rented a house until the following March. At this time John Frederick Groff paid 700 five-franc pieces for 200 acres of land west of Mt. Carmel, which could not now be purchased for $65 an acre. This land was only partly improved and on it a log dwelling and barn were erected. Here the father and his sons set to work to clear a farm, and he continued work there until his death in 1847, after which the mother and two of the sons continued the improvement of this property. Mrs. Groff died in the new residence her sons had built for her.

On November 5, 1845, Jacob Groff was married to Mary Pheirhiller and purchased eighty acres of land in what is now Bellmont Precinct. The land was wild, deer were to be found in plenty, and Mr. Groff remembers having seen twenty-six in one drove. He cleared this property and later purchased 160 acres, forty acres of this being purchased from the Government, and put it all in a good state of cultivation, and here he continued to reside until 1869, when he retired and moved to Mt. Carmel. For many years he was engaged in loaning money. On June 2, 1898, his first wife died in the faith of the Catholic Church, having been the mother of eight children, four of whom still survive, namely: Margaret Weisenberger, Mary Bann, Maria Sites and Eliza Johnson. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Groff gave his property to his children. On January 8, 1899, Mr. Groff was married (second) to Mrs. Louisa M. Rhinehardt, who was born and reared in Wabash County. Her birth occurred in 1839, she being a daughter of Frederick and Rachel (Hedrick) Maser, the former born in Germany and the latter in North Carolina. The father, who had buried his first wife in Germany, was one of the early settlers of Wabash County, was a carpenter by trade and for many years worked in Mt. Carmel. He died when Mrs. Groff was three years old, and as his widow survived him but one year, the daughter was reared by Mr. and Mrs. David Reinhardt, who came from Pennsylvania and were early settlers of Wabash County. Mrs. Groff was married (first) to John Alfred Reinhardt, July 14, 1857, who died December 31, 1875. They had six children, of whom two survive: Edward Hammond and Mrs. Viola Kamp, both of Mt. Carmel. The first railroad ever built through Mt. Carmel ran through Mrs. Groff's property.

C. D. Morgan

Mr. and Mrs. Groff are members of the Lutheran Church. He is a Democrat in politics, and for three terms has served as a member of the City Council of Mt. Carmel. He has seen many changes occur in the county, and has done his share towards the development and upbuilding of his community, and, as a good citizen and trustworthy man, is respected and esteemed by his fellow townsmen.

GROFF, John Frederick, a representative and progressive farmer of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., belongs to a family that has been represented in the county for several generations. Mr. Groff was born in Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, January 29, 1853, son of John and Harriet (Gard) Groff, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Lick Prairie Precinct. John Groff was born in 1825, a son of John and Margaret Groff, of Germany, who brought their family to Wabash County in 1840 and settled in Belmont Precinct. Grandfather Groff entered 160 acres of land which was covered with timber, and started to clear it. He died on this farm in 1848, having made many improvements including the setting out of an orchard. Harriet Gard was a daughter of Franklin Gard, an old settler of Wabash County.

John Groff, Jr., secured the old homestead, manufactured brick and erected one of the first brick houses in Wabash County, which is still standing. At one time he owned 818 acres of land. He worked for his father, received a house in payment and acquired all his land through his own enterprise and industry. He cared for his mother until her death in 1858. Mr. Groff moved to Mt. Carmel, where he lived a few years, but did not like it there and returned to his farm. He died March 4, 1905, and his widow survived him but a short time, passing away May 1, 1905. Their children were: Benjamin Franklin, of Belmont, Ill.; John F.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Thomas Davis, who died at Bone Gap, Ill.; Anna Margaret, Mrs. George Rigg, of Bone Gap; Perry A., of Belmont Precinct; Albert, who died in infancy; Frances Elmira, Mrs. Frank Cowling, a widow, living in Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Harriet M., married Major Chapman, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; William A., of Belmont Precinct; Lewis E., lives on the old homestead; Flora, Mrs. James Brines, of Belmont Precinct. John Groff gave each of his children eighty acres of land and John Frederick received his share out of the home farm.

John F. Groff received his education in the district schools and was reared to farm work. He erected a house and other buildings on the land he received from his father and after living there four years, sold it and purchased 160 acres in Section 31 of Lick Prairie Precinct. The latter farm contained an old house and about 100 acres of the land was cleared. Later Mr. Groff bought another house and built two barns, 42 by 50 and 30 by 36 feet, clearing the land of timber until there is but twenty-eight acres left in its original condition, the rest being under cultivation. He has shown excellent judgment in the conduct of his affairs and has been successful in his operations. Besides carrying on general farming he keeps imported horses and Spanish Jacks and horses for trotting and coach use. He also raises Jersey and Holstein cows for dairy purposes and Poland China hogs.

October 6, 1875, Mr. Groff married Margaret L. Brines, who was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, April 1, 1851, daughter of Lyman and Maria (Holmes) Brines, the former born in New York in 1807, and the latter in Knox County, Ind., in 1807. Mr. Brines and his wife had twelve children, namely: Ezra, deceased; Mary, Mrs. Robert Rigg, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Orilla A., died at the age of eighteen years; Hamilton, died in Lick Prairie Precinct; Franklin, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Charlotte E., lives with Franklin; Hanna, widow of Lavel Aborn, of Belmont Precinct; Jemima A., Mrs. Henry Bruce, died in Belmont Precinct; Rebecca J., resides with Franklin; Eda, Mrs. Barber Shearer, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Clara C., Mrs. Samuel Litherland, died in Belmont Precinct; Mrs. Groff, the youngest child. Mrs. Groff attended the Friends Grove District School and Mr. Groff the Groff District School. They are members of the Christian Church. He is actively interested in current events and public issues, and in politics is a Democrat. He has served as School Director. Fraternally he belongs to the Ben Hur Lodge of Mt. Carmel and to the Farmers' Union, of Lick Prairie.

Mr. Groff and his wife had children as follows: Hattie M., born November 17, 1876, widow of Rolla H. Miller, whose husband died April 19, 1906; Rosa B., born June 14, 1878, married James Hare of Lick Prairie Precinct; John L., born January 13, 1880, died February 3, 1880; William Lewis, born February 20, 1881, lives in Granger, Wash.; Carrie May, born December 29, 1882, but died in infancy; Amy Edna, born January 28, 1884, died February 20, 1884; Charles Franklin, born September 4, 1885, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Eda, born September 1, 1888, married Ora Woods, of Lick Prairie Precinct. Mrs. Miller had three children: Herman, born February 12, 1899; Benlah, born January 12, 1903; Eldon, born August 16, 1905, died July 20, 1906. William Lewis married Mattie Walker and they have two children—Virgil Frederick and Dorothy Pearl. Mr. and Mrs. Hare had three children: Cuma Bell; Stella, died in infancy, and Lorena. Charles Franklin Groff married Viola Ales, and they had three children: Hollis, died in infancy; Edna, and Cecil.

GROFF, Louis Edward.—Among the most beautiful country homes in Wabash County, Ill., is that owned by Louis Edward Groff, who has spent his entire life on his present farm in Belmont Precinct, where he was born June 9, 1867.

He is a son of John and Harriet (Gard) Groff, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Wabash County. John Groff became owner of 1,000 acres of land, most of which he cleared and improved himself. He and his wife had the following children: Frank, Lizzie, Fred, Margaret, Elmhira, Albert, Dora, William, Louis Edward and Flora.

November 30, 1892, Louis E. Groff was married, at Mt. Carmel, Ill., to Flora Butterick, daughter of William and Amelia (Compton) Butterick, the former a native of England and the latter of Wabash County. Mr. Butterick was a general farmer and brick-layer by occupation, and he and his wife had children as follows: Lizzie, Flora, James, Maggie, Edward, Nora, Mabel and Collie. Mr. Groff and his wife became parents of the following children: Maude, born February 3, 1893; Raymond, August 3, 1894; Bessie, April 25, 1896; Harold, May 25, 1898; Holland, September 3, 1900; Leonie August 28, 1904, and one child, born July 5, 1910, and died in infancy.

Mr. Groff was reared on his present farm and educated in local schools. He has spent his entire active life in agricultural pursuits and met with gratifying success in his enterprises. He pays special attention to dairying and appreciates the value of high-grade stock in securing the best results. He raises thoroughbred Holstein cattle for this purpose and finds them a profitable investment. He owns 235 acres of land and is well known for the excellence of his crops. He is actively interested in local public affairs and for three terms has served as precinct school director. He contributes considerable time and influence to the promotion of the interests of the Farmers' Union, as well as to any other cause which he believes will benefit his community. He is a member of the Christian Church.

GROFF, Perry Allen.—Among the enterprising business men of Wabash County, Ill., is Perry Allen Groff, of Belmont Precinct, an extensive dealer in agricultural implements, threshing machines and clover hullers, and well known in connection with the work he has done in the interest of the Farmers' Co-operative and Educational Union. Mr. Groff was born on the farm he now occupies, February 25, 1860, son of John and Harriet (Gard) Groff, the former native of Hesse Cassel, Germany. The grandfathers were John Groff and Frank Gard, the former having located in Wabash County in 1842, on timber land in Belmont Precinct, purchased from the Government.

After marriage the parents of Perry A. Groff settled on land in Belmont Precinct that was secured from the Government, where they spent the remainder of their lives, with the exception of three years spent in Mt. Carmel. Both died on the farm, he March 3, 1905, and she in May, 1905. They were parents of ten children.

The boyhood of Perry A. Groff was spent on his father's farm. He received a common school education, attended the normal school at Grayville, Ill., one term, and spent a year and a half at Holbrook's Normal School, at Lebanon, Ohio. He lived with his parents until his marriage, January 12, 1888, to Flotilla Bratton, who was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, daughter of Amos and Zerelda (Moore) Bratton, of Wabash County. Mr. Groff and his wife settled on part of the home farm, which his father gave him, and which contained a good house and other necessary buildings. He had eighty acres at first and has added to it until he now has four bodies of land, all in Belmont Precinct, aggregating 120 acres. He has managed his farms himself except for two years when he rented them. Besides doing general farming he raises Shorthorn and Jersey cows, draft and other horses, and a few Poland China hogs. He sells the milk from his dairy.

Mr. Groff has natural ability in the line of mechanics, and is a good carpenter, iron and brick worker, and able to run many kinds of machinery. Since 1889 he has handled harvesting machines and binders, and he has added to his line many other farming implements, handling all such machines put out by the Collins-Gale Importing Company, the Fish Brothers Wagon Company and the Banner Buggy Company. In 1894 he added threshing machines and clover hullers, as well as fodder shredders. Mr. Groff has worked up a good business in this line, and his dealings with his customers have been most satisfactory. He is a staunch Democrat and has served as Clerk of the Road District since 1896 and as School Director since 1906. He is a charter member of the Farmers' Co-operative and Educational Union of America, having served as Secretary and Treasurer since its organization. He is a member of the Christian Church and ready to support any worthy cause which comes to his notice.

Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Groff: Virgil A., died November 29, 1895, was born March 14, 1889; Mamie Pauline, born November 14, 1891; Dolice Viola, born November 1, 1893, the last two being at home.

GRUNDON, Ulysses Grant, a prominent and successful farmer of Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he carries on diversified farming, is a native of the precinct, born February 12, 1864, son of Thomas and Anna (Connor) Grundon, both natives of Lebanon County, Pa., and married in their native State. Mr. Grundon knows very little about his grandparents or where they were born. Thomas Grundon and his wife came to Mt. Carmel Precinct in 1890 and purchased a farm three miles west of Mt. Carmel, where he lived until his death, cultivating 120 acres of land. He died October 31, 1892, and his wife April 21, 1885. They were parents of children as follows: Cyrus M., of Belmont Precinct; Anna, Mrs. Henry Calverly, of Mt. Carmel; Oliver H. P., of St. Louis, Mo.; Sadie Jane, married Dr. J. B. Maxwell, of Mt. Carmel; Rose A., Mrs. Charles M. Risley, of Mt. Carmel Precinct;

E. J. Meyer

Ulysses G.; Elizabeth M., Mrs. S. S. Seiler, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; William T., of Princeton, Ind.; and James Monroe, who died at the age of five and a half years.

The boyhood days of Ulysses G. Grundon were spent on his father's farm and he received a good education in the district schools. He early learned to do all kinds of farm work and took great interest in agricultural matters, so that he is now able to cultivate his farm to the best advantage and is considered one of the most intelligent farmers of his vicinity. He married, August 30, 1893, Emma T. Seiler, a native of Mt. Carmel Precinct, a daughter of Jacob and Ann Matilda (Behm) Seiler, and they rented a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, where they lived two and a half years, then moved to a place near the farm inherited by Mrs. Grundon, where they have since resided. He erected a handsome two-story frame house on this property, which was completed March 3, 1897, and here the family have been comfortably installed since that date. He has 120 acres of land and has cleared and improved a large part of it himself, although there were forty acres cleared when he moved on to it, and he has left ten acres of timber standing. He has a good grade of horses and cattle and his fine Poland-China and Chester White hogs are profitable stock. He has shown excellent business judgment in the conduct of his affairs and has well deserved the success that has attended his efforts.

To Mr. Grundon and his wife children have been born as follows: Walter Winton, born May 24, 1895; Thomas Vern, December 22, 1897; Ruth Matilda, December 6, 1899, died May 12, 1900; Florence Elizabeth, born September 10, 1901; Leroy Grant, December 28, 1904; Edna Marie, March 31, 1907. The family attend the Reformed Lutheran Church, of which they are members. Politically Mr. Grundon is a Republican and although he does not care to hold public office, takes a commendable interest in local affairs, as well as national issues. He is a member of Lodge No. 35, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and No. 1916, Modern Woodmen of America, of Mt. Carmel.

HABBERTON, William P.—Some men are born with a special instinct for business. From childhood they show an aptitude ahead of their companions for advancing themselves. In every community there are men who dominate the business world of their locality, and one who has controlled some very large enterprises from time to time, is William P. Habberton, of Mt. Carmel, now a heavy dealer in coal and oil, and Vice-President of the Mt. Carmel Trust & Savings Bank. He was born in New York City, March 3, 1847, a son of William S. and Thodisia L. (Peck) Habberton. The former was born in England in 1811, and died in Mt. Carmel in 1865, while the latter was born in Flushing, N. Y., in 1826 and died in Mt. Carmel in 1883.

William S. Habberton learned the trade of harness- and collar-making in England, and after he had served his apprenticeship, he emigrated to the United States. For many years he worked at his trade in New York City, and being an exceptionally fine mechanic, did some excellent work. Some of his leather-work took premiums at the American Institute in New York City, in 1840, when all kinds of high-grade leather work was displayed. After coming to Mt. Carmel he invented and patented a machine for making collars for horses. In 1850 the family emigrated to Mt. Carmel, and immediately Mr. Habberton established a harness making business. His brother, Michael J. Habberton, had preceded the others and was already established as an expert wagon-maker in Mt. Carmel, and he made one of the first buggies used in Wabash County. During the 'fifties these two brothers bought horses and drove them 1,500 miles across three mountain ranges to New York City. He was a man of exemplary character and a member of the Methodist Church, as was his wife. Both were fine vocalists and, for many years, sung in the old Sands Street Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., and after coming to Mt. Carmel, were leaders of the choir.

William P. Habberton was educated in the public schools of Mt. Carmel, and while in school and for years afterward, worked with his father. Following his father's death, he assumed charge of the business and conducted it for many years. He then engaged in an express and coal business, and has since added the handling of oil to his other lines of activity. With the exception of three years spent in Vincennes, Ind., during his father's lifetime, Mr. Habberton has lived in Mt. Carmel since first coming here.

Mr. Habberton is a man who has a war record of which he may well be proud. On May 14, 1864, he enlisted in Company 11, One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was stationed most of the time in Tennessee. He was mustered out at Indianapolis, having enlisted from Posey County, September 2, 1864.

He married Helen M. Redman, daughter of William L. and Jane (Clark) Redman, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Illinois. Mr. Redman was a merchant at Bridgeport, Ill., and prior to that carried on the same business in Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Habberton have a family as follows: Ruth, wife of A. F. Orr of Mt. Carmel; Kittie Maud, deceased; Anna Belle; William L., deceased; Marguerite; Norma; William and Benjamin. The two eldest are graduates of Mt. Carmel High School, and the others are attending school.

For many years Mr. Habberton and his family have belonged to the Methodist Church and are very active in all its works. An ardent Prohibitionist, he has been very active in temperance matters and was one of the leaders in the successful movement in 1907 to do away with saloons in Wabash County. He has served as President of the Board of Education for several years and has been a member of it for a longer period. He has also served as a member of the City Council.

In addition to his other interests, Mr. Habberton is one of the Directors of the Wabash Building & Loan Association, and Vice-President of the Mt. Carmel Trust & Savings Bank. He was at one time the owner of two low-water boats which plied in the Wabash and White Rivers; they were the "Irene" and the "George T. Frank," which were used in towing timber, lumber, grain and similar cargoes. He handles annually large quantities of coal, his soft coal being from the Ayrshire Mines and his hard coal from the East.

Superintending all of his business, Mr. Habberton is kept busy with details, but is always glad to exert his influence towards the betterment of Mt. Carmel, of which he is very proud.

HALLOCK, Aaron B., one of the oldest residents of Wabash County, Ill., is well versed in the early history of the county, where most of his life has been spent, and has always taken great interest in the welfare of the community in which he lived. He was formerly very active in promoting the interest of the Farmers' Grange, and has given his financial aid to the erection of at least a dozen churches, of various denominations. Mr. Hallock's immediate ancestors were of the Quaker faith. He was born in Tuckerton, N. J., April 24, 1818, son of John and Lydia (Collins) Hallock, natives respectively of New York and New Jersey, and grandson of John Hallock and John Collins, both of the State of New York.

In 1839 the family of John Hallock moved west, going by rail to Philadelphia, thence by stage to Pittsburg, and then down the Ohio River by boat to Evansville, where a party of six hired a wagon to take them to Wabash County. There Mr. Hallock purchased 120 acres in Lick Prairie Precinct, the farm containing a one-room house. His land was on Bald Hill Prairie. Mr. Hallock tried to make things convenient for the farmers in the vicinity in every possible way, and conducted a general store, a hay press and a cider-mill.

His mother being deceased, Aaron B. Hallock started out in life on his own account at the age of fourteen years, going to the State of New York where he worked for farmers at a wage of $4.50 per month. Being ambitious to better himself, he went to Philadelphia soon after to learn a trade, but had to abandon his purpose on account of a death in his family. Soon afterward he went to New York City and began learning the profession of druggist, conducting a store for his brother some six years. Mr. Hallock has spent an active life up to the last few years, but since that time has lived practically retired from business and other cares. In his work for the Grange he has had many large gatherings at his place. He has disposed of all his land except 120 acres in his home farm.

May 5, 1842, Mr. Hallock married Asenath Ogden, who was born in Ohio, and died February 24, 1859, having borne her husband children as follows: Mary, Mrs. Joseph Shearer, a widow, living in Mt. Carmel; John, of Lick Prairie Precinct; William P., of Harrisburg, Ill.; Aaron, died in a southern hospital during the Civil War; Allen, of Harrisburg, Ill.; Martha, Mrs. Rufus Newkirk, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Lydia, Mrs. David Royer, of Centralia, Wash.; Charles, of Keensburg, Ill.; Lillie, died in infancy; James, Asenath and Amy, live with their father; Katie Finley, Mrs. Lewis Rigg, of Elbert, Colo.; Harry, died in infancy. Mr. Hallock married (second) his first wife's niece, who bore the same name, also born in Ohio. They were married in 1860 and she died April 28, 1873.

Mr. Hallock is still more active than many men of fewer years, and has a retentive memory. In religious views he is inclined in favor of Spiritualism. He was one of the first voters for the Anti-Slavery ticket in Wabash County and has since voted the Republican ticket. He served many years as a Justice of the Peace, sixteen years as a Magistrate and sixteen years as School Trustee. Many are the men who are glad to claim Mr. Hallock as their friend, and he is accorded the highest regard and respect wherever known.

HAMMAKER, Jacob A., a prominent farmer of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., has been successfully engaged in a number of enterprises. Mr. Hammaker was born in Springfield, Ohio, August 11, 1850, son of Adam and Susan (Prince) Hammaker, the former born in Reading, Pa., and the latter in Springfield, Ohio. Adam Hammaker was a son of Adam Hammaker, a native of Reading, Pa., of German descent, and Mrs. Hammaker was a daughter of Peter and Susan Prince, of Schuylkill, Pa.

The parents of Jacob Hammaker settled on a farm near Springfield, Ohio. He had learned the trade of tailor in Pennsylvania, and was but nineteen years of age when he went to Springfield, working at his trade until his marriage in 1842, when he conducted his father-in-law's farm until 1857, then moved to Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, making the journey with wagons by way of Terre Haute, where they crossed the Wabash River. Abraham Hammaker conducted a grist-mill in Lick Prairie Precinct, and there was a block-house or fort on his place to protect the white settlers from the Indians. Mr. Jacob A. Hammaker well remembers seeing the foundations of the old fort. Mr. Hammaker bought a farm of forty acres in Lancaster Precinct and lived there until 1870, when he sold his farm and moved to Mt. Carmel. His wife died in Lancaster Precinct and he lived with his son Jacob A., three years prior to his death. The following children were born to him and his wife: James and Oliver, deceased; Peter, of Springfield, Ohio; Jacob A.; Mary, widow of Sylvester Wheeler, of Keensburg Precinct; Anna, Mrs. William Roberts, of Mt. Carmel; Adam, of Springfield, Ohio; Abram, died at the age of three years.

Jacob A. Hammaker was educated in the dis-strict schools and in his youth helped his father in farm work. He lived at the paternal home until his marriage, May 4, 1872, to Mary Roberts, born in Mt. Carmel, daughter of Archibald R. and Harriet (Gardner) Roberts, the former born in Mt. Carmel and the latter in Pennsylvania. Her grandparents were Henry and Sarah (Cole) Gardner, of Pennsylvania.

After his marriage Mr. Hammaker lived in Mt. Carmel, working in a saw-mill and at various occupations. In 1878 he moved to Lick Prairie Precinct, where he bought two acres of land, a threshing machine, clover huller and saw-mill. Later he purchased his present home, erected the dwelling and other buildings, and has worked as agent for various companies, first for the Gar Scott Machinery Company, of Richmond, Ind. and later for the Buffalo-Pitts Company, of Buffalo, N. Y. He was one of the first persons to become associated with the Farmers' Wabash County Mutual Telephone Company, being one of the first stockholders. The Card's Point Exchange has been located at his home since April, 1909.

Mr. Hammaker is a Universalist; fraternally is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows No. 137, at West Salem, and of Ben Hur Lodge, No. 93, at Mt. Carmel. Politically he is a Democrat. Mr. Hammaker is well known and highly esteemed in his community, having the public welfare at heart. Children as follows were born to Mr. Hammaker and his wife: Rosa May, born November 15, 1872, married Henry Wood, of Seattle, Wash., and they have one son, Forrest, born May 15, 1889; Hattie Susan, born March 1, 1875, died September 12, 1876; Daisy Sybil, born October 30, 1885, married Frank Freeman and they have one daughter Willa Madge, born June 4, 1902; Daisy S., lives with her father and mother.

HANSON, Henry Alfred (deceased).—Among the prominent citizens of Mt. Carmel, Ill., who have been well known for their successful careers in the line of railroad work, was Henry Alfred Hanson, whose death occurred November 8, 1898. Though he has been gone from them many years his old friends and associates remember him well and still miss him. Mr. Hanson was born at Oswego, N. Y., September 9, 1846, son of Henry and Mary Hanson, natives of Oswego. He received his education in his native city, removing to Illinois in 1891. He began his railroad career in 1876, when he entered the employ of the Big Four Railroad Company, for whom he worked the remainder of his life, and at the time of his death held the position of Supervisor of Buildings and Bridges, having faithfully discharged the duties of this responsible post for many years. He had been a resident of Mt. Carmel for about seven years and was well known and respected there. In early life Mr. Hanson was an Episcopalian, but later became a Presbyterian. In politics he was a Republican and was a member of various fraternities, his lodge associations being as follows: Wabash Lodge No. 227, Knights of Pythias; Mt. Carmel Lodge No. 239, A. F. & A. M.; Mt. Carmel Chapter No. 159, R. A. M.; Mt. Carmel Chapter No. 32, Order of the Eastern Star; and Gorin Commandery No. 14, Knights Templar, of Olney, Ill. Mrs. Hanson is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star.

Mr. Hanson was married, August 21, 1877, at Rochester, N. Y., to Helen Elizabeth, daughter of James and Mary (Campbell) Hazzard. Mr. Hazzard was born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1822, and his wife was born in Oswego, N. Y., in 1820. One daughter and three sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hanson, as follows: Victoria, born at Rochester, N. Y., July 13, 1870, married Fred Herman, of Cleveland, Ohio, and later Dr. J. M. Olin, with whom she is now living in Cleveland; James Alfred, born at Cleveland, Ohio, August 21, 1872; Harry Elvin, born at Franklin, Ohio, September 21, 1879; Howard Leonard, born at Cleveland, Ohio, September 21, 1887. Victoria and James were educated in Cleveland, Ohio, and Harry and Howard in Mt. Carmel, and James, Harry and Howard are all living in Mt. Carmel. Mr. Hanson died at his home in Mt. Carmel and was buried in Rose Hill Cemetery.

HARMON, William Mitchell (deceased), who died at his home in Mt. Carmel, Ill., was a prominent attorney and had held various public offices of honor and trust. Mr. Harmon was born in Wabash County, Ill., November 1, 1830, son of Enos and Abigail Matilda (Mitchell) Harmon. The father, who was born in West Suffield, Conn., June 15, 1785, served in the War of 1812, and afterward emigrated to Illinois, settling in Wabash County. He was a man of education and culture, and by occupation was a surveyor, teacher and nurseryman. His wife was born at Granville, Mass., May 28, 1803.

The boyhood of William M. Harmon was passed in Illinois and he received his education in the public schools at Jerseyville, Ill. He was a quiet, studious child, and made the most of his opportunities for acquiring knowledge. He engaged for a time in teaching and received his legal training at Mt. Carmel, Ill., under the tuition of Judge Constable. He was admitted to the bar about 1854 and began his practice at Mt. Carmel. Mr. Harmon stood well in his profession and won the confidence of those who had dealings with him. He was active in political affairs, being an ardent Republican, and served as Justice of the Peace at Mt. Carmel and as Superintendent of Schools in Wabash County. He built up an extensive practice and won many warm friends, and after his death was greatly missed in many circles. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, having served as Grand Master of Lodge No. 35, I. O. O. F., and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Mt. Carmel. He was interested in the public welfare and gave his support to many good causes. He owned a home on Cherry Street, Mt.

Carmel, and was also proprietor of some unimproved land in Edwards County.

Mr. Harmon was married at Mt. Carmel, January 31, 1860, to Hannah Harriet Russell, who was born at Mt. Carmel, February 27, 1843, daughter of Abraham and Hannah (Stewart) Russell. Four children blessed their union, namely: Mary Eliza, born April 1, 1861; Agnes Eleanor, November 15, 1862; John Russell, April 21, 1865; Hannah Stewart, August 25, 1867. Mr. Harmon died at his home, in Mt. Carmel, Ill., November 23, 1867, and was buried in Rose Hill Cemetery.

HAVILL, Rene.—One of the most prominent citizens of Mt. Carmel, Ill., whose father was for many years one of the city's leading citizens and held many public offices there, is Rene Havill, a native of Mt. Carmel, born May 15, 1882, son of Frank W. and Elizabeth (Willman) Havill. Frank W. Havill was born at Roscoe, now Coshocton, Ohio, September 15, 1842, and his wife was a native of Mt. Carmel. The Willman family emigrated from Germany in 1830 and settled at Mt. Carmel, securing government land which they improved. Mr. Havill and his wife were married at Palmyra, now Friendsville, Ill., and settled at Mt. Carmel, where he was employed at day-labor. His enterprise and ability were soon appreciated, and he was asked to accept public office, serving first as Marshal two years, also served two years as Street Commissioner, and was alderman from the First Ward for one term. He served with distinction in the Union Army, enlisting as private in Company I, Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, July 25, 1861. He was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant and later to that of Captain, holding the latter position until his discharge, July 25, 1865. He participated in many of the important battles of the war and was with Sherman in his March to the Sea. He suffered from gunshot wounds in his left shoulder, right side and right leg.

At the close of the war Frank W. Havill returned to Mt. Carmel, and in 1877 became editor of the "Mt. Carmel Register." He was Assistant Inspector of the First Division of the First Army Corps, and served in the secret service as Adjutant of Harrison's Tennessee Cavalry, in 1863. In 1872 he became half-owner of the paper of which he afterward became editor, John H. Willman being his partner. The paper was Republican in policy until 1878, then became Democratic. In 1881 Mr. Havill was appointed Postmaster of Mt. Carmel, by President Cleveland, and served until 1888, when he resigned, at the time President Harrison took office. In 1890 he was elected Clerk of the Supreme Court serving six years, and in 1896 was elected Clerk of the Appellate Court, in which office he also served six years. In 1903 Mr. Havill was the choice of the people for Mayor of Mt. Carmel, and served one term, giving the city a good administration. He served one year as member of the Democratic State Committee, also on many other important Democratic Committees, and served his party in a multitude of ways. He sold out his business interests, November 8, 1906, on account of failing health, having been for many years the leader of his party in Wabash County. He was well known throughout the section of the State where he resided, and was regarded as one of the most useful and public spirited citizens of Mt. Carmel, having done more to advance the progress and prosperity of the city than any other man who ever lived there. He had merely a common school education to begin with, but was always a close observer and deep student, and rose to a high position by dint of great industry and perseverance. He attended the common schools until fourteen years of age and upon coming to Mt. Carmel, in 1857, soon found work at common labor, which line occupied his attention until he enlisted for service in the Army. He was highly esteemed on account of his high character and honest, upright life, and is well remembered for the efforts he made to keep his business affairs and public work up to the high standard he had set for himself. He was prominent in several fraternal orders, having held offices in all the lodges to which he belonged. These included the Ancient Free & Accepted Masons; the Knights Templar, of Mt. Vernon; the Mystic Shrine of Chicago; the Tribe of Ben Hur Lodge, Mt. Carmel, and the Order of the Eastern Star. He was also affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and its Encampment, the Grand Army of the Republic, T. S. Bowers Post, Mt. Carmel; the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Mt. Carmel, No. 125, and was a charter member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mrs. Havill was an active member of the Eastern Star and of the Rebekahs. Mr. Havill died June 5, 1907, and his wife July 30, 1906. They were parents of the following children: Guy and Fred, both of whom died in infancy; St. Clair, who was killed at Robinson, Ill., in 1893, while employed on the Big Four Railroad; Orra F., editor of the Mt. Carmel "Morning Paper," who was Chief Clerk of Chester (Ill.) Penitentiary, under Governor Altgeld, was Captain of Company G, Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, during the Spanish-American War; Duke, editor of the "Mt. Carmel Register," and private secretary of Supreme Judges, at Mt. Vernon, Ill., for six years; and Rene.

Rene Havill was educated in the common and high schools of Mt. Carmel, then attended Orchard City Business College, at Flora, Ill., after which he spent a year as his father's secretary in the "Register" office. Since 1902, he has been official court reporter in the Second Judicial District, and is now serving his second term. He is secretary of the Mt. Carmel Register Company, and inherited his father's handsome residence in Mt. Carmel on West Fourth Street. He has always been much interested in public affairs and political issues, and keeps thoroughly informed on the current topics of the day. He follows the foot-steps of his father in being active in local matters, and though young, has held important positions in the Democratic party organizations. He is now Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee and member of the State Central Committee. He is one of the promising young men of Wabash County, and has a bright future; is representative of the best interests of the community, and in business affairs has shown himself to be honest and upright, so that he has won the respect and esteem of all with whom he has been associated. He is a member of Lodge No. 239, A. F. & A. M., of Mt. Carmel, and of the Order of the Eastern Star, and of Lodge No. 715, Order of Elks.

August 11, 1906, Mr. Havill married Amy Lee Snyder, born in Mt. Carmel, January 29, 1883, a daughter of Charles and Martha (McDaniels) Snyder, natives of Gibson County, Ind., and of this union one son has been born, Frank Walden, born June 21, 1907.

HEIN, Paul J.—Among the natives of Germany who have located in Wabash County, Ill., are to be found many who have come to the county with almost nothing and by dint of hard work and perseverance have acquired a competency. Paul J. Hein, who now lives at Mt. Carmel, is one of those who have been successful to a gratifying extent in a financial way, as at the time he came to this community he was an orphan, without money and almost without friends, and is now the owner of a comfortable two-story home of six rooms, provided with modern comforts and conveniences, and a lot 100 by 200 feet, besides barns and other buildings and all necessary utensils for carrying on farm work.

Mr. Hein was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, October 17, 1850, a son of George and Mary (Willman) Hein, both natives of Germany. He was one of five children, four sons and one daughter, and by the death of his father in 1866 and that of his mother in 1878 he was left with the care of his brothers and sister. He received but a limited education in his native country and, at an early age, had to assume cares and responsibilities far beyond his years. In 1881 he emigrated to the United States, locating at Mt. Carmel. During the first year he worked for an uncle, then purchased a team and began cultivating land for others, on shares. He continued this occupation with success and profit until he finally located on his present place.

November 12, 1882, Mr. Hein married Anna Marie (Kern) Stromaer, who was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, daughter of John Michael and Barbara (Roulfosse) Kern. She had previously married George Stromaer, who died, and they had four children, namely: Catherine, who lives with her mother; Sarah, Mrs. M. Litherland, of Brunswick, Neb., and two died in infancy. Mr. Hein and wife had children as follows: Fred, who is engaged in the coal business in Mt. Carmel; Marie, Mrs. Ernest Shepard, of Mt. Carmel, and Cora, Mrs. John Shepard, of Mt. Carmel. Mr. Hein and his family belong to the Evangelical Church and are active in its work. He is ready to advance the interests of any good cause, both by personal effort and in a financial way. He is a Democrat in politics and actively interested in the welfare of his county and State.

HENIKEN, Benjamin F., a progressive and successful farmer of Compton Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of that precinct, born January 25, 1873, a son of George W. and Margaret (Frair) Heniken, the former a native of Wayne County, Ill., and the latter of New York State. The father came to Wabash County as a young man and purchased a farm in Compton Precinct, and the mother was brought to Compton Precinct by her parents when a child. They were married in Wabash County and settled on 450 acres of land in Compton Precinct, where they spent the remainder of their lives. He died in 1878 and his widow survived him many years, passing away October 7, 1895. Their children were: John E., of Cleveland, Ohio, where he is engaged as a grain inspector; Willie Ann, Mrs. G. W. Rimstidt, of Compton Precinct; Mary L., who died at the age of twenty-two years; Benjamin F., and Dora M., wife of Dr. J. H. Williamson.

After receiving a common school education, Benjamin F. Heniken attended Eureka College, in Woodford County, Ill., and took a course at Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Chicago. At the age of seventeen years he was employed by a grain-dealer at Cowling, Ill., where he remained three years, when he began farming on 120 acres of land in Compton Precinct, six years later being employed as book-keeper by a firm in Grayville, Ill., also working for a time in the grain business. Returning to Compton Precinct, he has since been engaged in farming and raising hogs and cattle. He is an intelligent farmer, an able business man and is highly esteemed by all who know him. Mr. Heniken is actively interested in general progress and welfare of the community and is a staunch Democrat in politics. He has many friends and fraternally is a member of the B. P. O. E. No. 715, of Mt. Carmel, also the Blue Lodge and Chapter of the Masonic Order.

Two children have been born to Mr. Heniken and wife, namely: Dorothy M., born September 7, 1903, and Sereno L., November 14, 1906.

HIGGINS, John F., a prominent citizen of Lancaster, Ill., formerly a successful business man and farmer, but now retired from active business life, was born in the town where he now resides, October 24, 1851, son of John and Judy (Kercher) Higgins. John Higgins was born in Cayuga County, N. Y., in 1812, son of John Higgins, who was born in England. Judy Kercher was born in Berks County, Pa., daughter of Jonathan Kercher.

John Higgins, Jr., father of John F. Higgins, was brought West by his parents in 1816. They came by wagon to Cincinnati, thence down the Ohio and up the Wabash to Mt. Carmel, with keel-boats. They drove to Lancaster and entered land, part timber and part prairie, about eighty acres altogether. Jonathan Kercher entered land near that of the Higgins family in 1818, and helped lay out the town of Lancaster, and both families made permanent settlements in Lancaster Precinct. John and Judy Higgins settled on part of his father's farm after their marriage and he purchased eighty acres of land adjoining. He finished clearing the land and converted it into a fine farm, making all possible improvements. Part of the land was in Section 4 and part in Section 5, Town 1 North, Range 13 West. Mr. Higgins died January 18, 1902, and his wife died May 12, 1891. They were parents of two sons and ten daughters.

The boyhood of John F. Higgins was spent on his father's farm and he attended the district school of the neighborhood. He helped with the farm work and lived at home until his marriage, June 2, 1878, to Sarah Ann Biehl, who was born in Lancaster Precinct, daughter of Charles and Mary (Schlenker) Biehl, natives of Germany.

John F. Higgins and wife settled on part of the home farm, which he bought from his father, and to which he added twenty acres more. He carried on general farming and stock-raising and conducted a furniture, hardware and lumber business for ten months, at Flat Rock, Ill., serving in the capacity of clerk, and also took care of the postoffice. Later he worked four months as clerk of a general store in Lancaster, and for three years served as Postmaster of that town under Presidents Grant and Arthur. November 8, 1910, he was elected Justice of Peace and has now retired from his farm. He has been successful in all his enterprises and has won the approval and respect of his fellow-men by his industry and high character. He is a member of the Christian Church and is affiliated with the Mystic Workers of the World. In politics Mr. Higgins is a Republican and served three years as Deputy Assessor. He and his wife became parents of children as follows: Charles F., of Lancaster Precinct; Adam J., on his father's farm; Naomi, the oldest child, died in infancy; Ruth E., lives with her father.

HILL, Morris (deceased).—The late Morris Hill, of Belmont, Ill., was a veteran of the Civil War and an honored citizen of the village where his last days were spent. He was representative of the best interests of his community and his loss was widely mourned. He retired April 26, 1910, and lived in his cozy little home in Belmont until his death, December 13, 1907. Most of his life was spent on a forty-acre farm in Belmont Precinct, which he purchased the summer before his marriage and carried on until his retirement from active life. He was an industrious and successful farmer and stood well in the community, having always been most upright and fair in his business dealings. It is such men as he who build up any community and promote the general welfare.

Mr. Hill was born in Atlantic City, N. J., May 17, 1833, a son of Horace and Doreas (Hackett) Hill, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of England. The parents located in Wabash County in 1836 and spent the remainder of their lives on a farm in Belmont Precinct. Of their ten children Morris was the fifth. After the death of his father, in 1840, Morris Hill lived with various families until September 1, 1861, when he enlisted, at Mt. Carmel, in Company G, Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He was discharged in December, 1863, and re-enlisted January 1, 1864, in the same company and regiment. He was discharged August 15, 1865, at Little Rock, Ark., and after living a year with a sister at Buffalo, Ill., returned to Wabash County. He participated in the battles of Shiloh, Vicksburg, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Siege of Atlanta, and marched with Sherman to the sea.

September 11, 1870, Mr. Hill married Sarah E. Tanquary, born in Belmont Precinct, May 31, 1850, a daughter of Reuben C. and Margaret (Rigg) Tanquary. Mr. Tanquary was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, a son of Fielden and Elizabeth (Beauchamp) Tanquary, and his wife was born in Belmont Precinct, her parents being Robert H. and Elizabeth (McClary) Rigg. Mr. Tanquary was an early settler in Wabash County and secured a large amount of land from the Government. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Hill has lived alone in the Belmont residence. Both she and her husband received their educations in the common schools of Wabash County. Both were members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Hill was a Republican in politics. The children born to them were: Reuben M., of Belmont Precinct; Thomas G., a clerk in the post-office at Mt. Carmel, Ill.; John A., of Dacoma, Okla.

HILL, Morris.—One of the most enterprising and progressive farmers of Wabash County, Ill., is Morris Hill, of Lick Prairie Precinct, a native of the county, born in Belmont Precinct, February 10, 1863. He is a son of Samuel S. and Ellen (Wallace) Hill, the former a native of New Jersey and the latter of Wabash County. Samuel Hill's father came to Wabash County about 1836 and died a few years later. Mrs. Hill afterward married James Wiley. Ellen Wallace's parents were natives of Ohio, who became early settlers of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, and later moved to Belmont Precinct, where their last days were spent.

Samuel and Ellen Hill were married in Wabash County and settled on a farm of Forty-acres, mostly timber, which he owned in the eastern part of Belmont Precinct. He cleared the land and brought it under cultivation, living many years on this farm, and becoming successful in this occupation. About 1901 he moved to Mt. Carmel, where his death occurred January 1, 1906, his wife dying in April, 1904. They had children as follows: Eliza, Mrs. George Olden, a widow, of Mt. Carmel; Fannie, Mrs. Curtis Brown, of Coffee Precinct; John, died young; Anna, Mrs. John Beauchamp, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Mattie, Mrs. George Amsburg, of Chicago; Morris; Dora, lives with Morris; May, Mrs. Frank Weisenberger, of Mt. Carmel; Tessie Maud, Mrs. Fred Amsburg, of Chicago; George, died at the age of six years, and Samuel F., of Vincennes, Ind.

Morris Hill attended the district school and remained at home until his marriage, October 23, 1887, to Aquila Munsey, born in Bellmont Precinct, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Towner-Sapp) Munsey. Mrs. Munsey's first marriage was to Henry Sapp, who died, having had children as follows: Albert, of the State of Washington; Marian, of Friendsville Precinct; Meander, Mrs. John Fisher, of Mt. Carmel; Ollie, Mrs. William Anthis, of Keensburg; Vina, deceased; Charles, Mt. Carmel Precinct. Mr. Munsey and his wife had children as follows: Anna, Mrs. Thomas Williams, of Coffee Precinct; Ida, Mrs. Joseph Dillon, of the State of Washington; Mrs. Hill and Priscilla, twins, the latter the wife of William Christian, of Arkansas; General Grant, died in infancy.

Mr. Hill and his wife were married in Mt. Carmel, and he then settled on a farm and worked at building the Wabash River dam for the United States Government. In the fall of 1888 he moved to a farm and three years later located on his father's farm in Bellmont Precinct, where he lived ten years, then spent another four and a half years in Mt. Carmel Precinct, a year and a half in Bellmont Precinct, and on January 1, 1909, moved to the farm of Frank Brines, in Lick Prairie Precinct. The farm on which he now lives contains 600 acres, with 400 acres under cultivation. Here he carries on general farming and makes a specialty of raising horses, Jersey cows, Poland-China hogs and other high-grade stock. He is well known in the community and has a large number of friends; he is actively interested in public affairs and in politics is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the M. W. A. of Maud, Ill.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Hill and his wife: Frank, at home; Granville, Fred; Stella, died in infancy; Clara, Oscar, Effie, Priscilla, Hazel, and Ernest.

HOLSEN, Fred, Jr., of the firm of Holsen and Dorney, who own and operate one of the largest grist-mills and elevators in Wabash County, Ill., at Mt. Carmel, is one of the enterprising young business men of his locality. Mr. Holsen was born in Luken Township, Lawrence County, Ill., February 23, 1878, a son of Fred and Nancy Jane (Keneipp) Holsen, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Illinois. Fred Holsen, Sr., was a son of a farmer and came with his parents to Lawrence County, Ill., when about twelve years old. Later the family removed to Wabash County. His wife was a daughter of James Keneipp. They were residents of Lawrence County, where he was a farmer and miller, until 1879, when they located in Allendale, where he purchased a flouring mill. Later his brother Herman was taken into the business as partner and they continued together twenty years, when he bought out his brother's interest and conducted the business alone until 1905, then selling it to his son Fred and L. A. Kemps. Mr. Holsen died in August, 1909, and his wife in May, 1892. They had children as follows: William, of Lawrence County; Charles L., also of Lawrence County; Jude L., Mrs. J. A. Prout, of Allendale; Sadie, Mrs. J. R. Brown, of Sullivan, Ind.; Fred; Edgar L., of Mt. Carmel; Hester L., Mrs. John J. McIntosh, of Allendale.

After receiving a common school education, Fred Holsen, Jr., spent one term in Hayward School at Fairfield, Ill. In 1900 he became proprietor of an elevator at Mt. Carmel, and in 1901 sold a half-interest to Henry Wetzel. A year later he bought the Bluff City Mill, which he and his partner conducted for a time, taking Poke French into partnership one year later. At the death of Mr. Wetzel, James Sagan and Mr. Holsen formed a co-partnership in the Bluff City Mill & Elevator Company, which they conducted until 1905, when they sold out and Mr. Holsen located in Allendale.

Since 1905 Mr. Holsen and F. J. Domey have conducted a good business, handling wheat, corn, clover seed, etc. They also have the only coal yard in Allendale and realize a good profit from this line of business. They also make 100 barrels of flour per day. The building was rebuilt in 1883 by Mr. Holsen's father and brother, and is now a large establishment, known for miles around for the high quality of the output from the mill and the honest dealing accorded all who have dealings with the honest and enterprising proprietors. Mr. Holsen has been associated with this kind of business since boyhood and is well fitted to carry on his share with ability and judgment.

August 11, 1896, Mr. Holsen married Josie Cisel, who was born in Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, daughter of John H. and Jemima (Keen) Cisel, both natives of Wabash County. Three children have been born of this union: Paul Jennings, Levi Sharon and Frederick, Jr. Politically Mr. Holsen is a staunch Democrat and takes a commendable interest in public affairs. He is a member of the Christian Church and fraternally belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America of Allendale, the K. O. T. M. of Mt. Carmel and the Masonic Order at Allendale.

HOSKINSON, Millard Fillmore (deceased), a former successful attorney of Mt. Carmel, Ill., had served two terms as City Attorney, was prominent in the councils of the Republican party and well known as a public-spirited and useful citizen. He spent most of his life in Mt. Carmel and there first engaged in the practice of his profession. Mr. Hoskinson was born in Owensville, Ind., August 19, 1852, a son of Bishop Asbury and Mary Ann (Myers) Hoskinson, and died December 23, 1895. Bishop A. Hoskinson was a lumber dealer by occupation and moved with his family to Mt. Carmel at an early date. He and his wife had several children, of whom three now survive: Thomas G., Clara F., and Laura D. (Mrs. M. R. Jones).

The boyhood of Millard F. Hoskinson was spent mostly in Mt. Carmel, and he received his primary education in the common schools of that place. His legal training was acquired in the law school of Wesleyan University at Bloomington, Ill., from which he was graduated in 1875. He had previously worked at the trade of tinner with Lewis Reese, of Mt. Carmel, but his natural preference led him to take up the study of law, and after his graduation he engaged in practice, building up a good practice in Mt. Carmel and standing high in his profession. He won the confidence and respect of those with whom he came in contact and was actively interested in the public welfare. He died a comparatively young man when he had bright prospects for future achievements in his profession and in public life. He was admitted to the Bar in Wabash County, January 7, 1876, and continued in active practice until the time of his death. He always adhered to the principles of the Republican party and was honored by his fellow citizens by being elected to the office of City Attorney in 1879, and again in 1891, also served one term as County Judge, being elected in December, 1886. He was popular in many circles and had a large number of warm personal friends to mourn his loss. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Hoskinson married, at Mt. Carmel, April 25, 1878, Laura Ellen Seiler, who was born in Mt. Carmel, October 8, 1854, a daughter of Sebastian and Dorcas Seiler. Children as follows blessed this union: Eldon Earl, born December 29, 1878, married Salena F. Severs, and they have one son, Charles Earl, born June 27, 1908; Roy, born August 23, 1880, married Lizzie May Campbell, and they have no children; Laurel H., born October 2, 1883, married Edwin R. Wood, who died, leaving one child, Edwin A. Wood, born July 13, 1904, and she married (second) L. W. Coffman; Theo, married W. A. Owens, and they have one child, Hazel Esther, born November 20, 1907; Raymond S., born May 1, 1887; Lisle and Leslie, twins, born December 23, 1888. Mr. Hoskinson died at his home in Mt. Carmel, and was buried in Rose Hill Cemetery.

HYNE, Major Wolfgang.—One of the venerable citizens of Mt. Carmel, Ill., is Major Wolfgang Hyne, a veteran of the Mexican and Civil Wars, who is now living retired after a long and useful life of activity in Wabash County, during which he has served in various official capacities. Wolfgang Hyne was born in Bavaria, Germany, March 20, 1826, son of Deitrich and Anna (Hibner) Hyne, natives of the same place, who died in Stewartsville, Posey County, Ind.

In 1840 Major Hyne accompanied his parents to America, the trip being made on a sailing vessel which landed at Baltimore after a long and stormy voyage. From Baltimore the family went to Pittsburg, where a brother and sister of Mr. Hyne had preceded the other members of the family, and later went to Evansville, Ind., whence they removed to Posey County, in that State. There the father engaged in agricultural pursuits and he and his wife continued living in that part of the country until their deaths. Wolfgang Hyne received his education in the schools of his native country and in Posey County, Ind., and as a young man learned the trade of a turner, and was engaged in making spinning wheels, reels, wagons, etc., at Stewartsville, until the outbreak of the Mexican War, when he enlisted under Captain Oliver and Colonel DeBetz, serving until the close of the war, when he was discharged with the rank of Corporal at Newport, Ky. He then commenced working at his trade at Stewartsville, where he was married March 27, 1849, to Elizabeth Parvin, who was born in Clay County, Ill., October 18, 1831, a daughter of Thomas and Frances (Maugrum) Parvin, early settlers of Clay County. Mr. Parvin was a cattle drover and died at Chicago, while his wife passed away at Carmi, Ill. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hyne, namely: Frances Ann, born March 2, 1850, is the widow of Mathias Huntzinger and lives at Grayville; Ida Bell, born February 10, 1854, and died at Mt. Carmel when about forty years of age, was the wife of John Williamson, a machinist; Louisa Ellen, born September 28, 1857, is the wife of Jack Warfel, and lives at Laramie, Wyo.; William Richard Owen, born August 9, 1864, is a resident of Sacramento, Cal.; and Amy Elizabeth, born June 16, 1871, is the wife of Charles Seitz, of Mt. Carmel.

Mr. Hyne continued to work at his trade until the outbreak of the Civil War, when on March 7, 1862, Company B, Sixtieth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, which he had organized and of which he was chosen Captain, was mustered into the service. The regiment's first duty was guarding prisoners at Indianapolis. While in pursuit of Morgan, Mr. Hyne was sun-struck and, for a month following, was confined in a hospital on the Mississippi River, being then sent to his home at Stewartsville. For a long time he was not even able to recognize the members of his own family, but he slowly recovered and in a few years had regained full possession of his faculties, although he has never entirely recovered from the effects of the stroke. He was promoted to the rank of Major and was discharged at the close of the war. After his health had improved, Mr. Hyne commenced working in the car yard at Carmi, where he was foreman for about twenty years, and when the yards were moved to Mt. Carmel, he came to this place in the same capacity, continuing therein until a few years ago, when he retired.

Mr. Hyne is a Democrat, politically, but believes in voting for the man he considers best able to fill the office at issue. While living in Posey County, Ind., he was elected a member of the Legislature, serving one term. He has served two terms as City Treasurer, and it was while he was acting in the capacity of Mayor of Mt. Carmel that the liquor interests were driven from the town, his vote being the deciding one as the Council stood at a tie. He has always been a staunch adherent of the cause of Temperance. Fraternally, he is connected with the A. F. & A. M. at New Harmony, Ind., and the Grand Army of the Republic at Mt. Carmel, Ill. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which he also attends. The Hyne family has always been a long-lived one, several members having lived to be more than ninety years of age, and Mr. Hyne although well past the three-score-and-ten mark, is possessed of his faculties and is very active for a man of his years. He is honored and respected by all who know him, and his record, both as a soldier and a citizen, entitles him to this honor and respect.

INSKEEP, James Edward, M. D.—The medical profession of Wabash County is ably represented by men of skill and sympathetic character, and one worthy of special mention is Dr. James Edward Inskeep, of Mt. Carmel, born in Culpeper County, near Culpeper, Va., December 29, 1851, a son of James W. and Frances B. (Hudson) Inskeep. The former was born at Mt. Pony, Culpeper County, Va., in 1824, and died on a part of his old plantation in 1895. His wife was born in the same county as her husband, in 1825, and died there in 1869. Dr. Inskeep comes of an old and honored family, his forebears having emigrated from England to the colonies in 1775, locating in New Jersey. Judge John Inskeep was the first one of the family of whom there is definite data. The great-grandfather of Dr. Inskeep, Rev. James Inskeep, emigrated to Virginia from New Jersey. His son, Joel Inskeep, later bought Mount Pony, two and one-quarter miles from Culpeper, a large plantation which is still in possession of the family.

Dr. Inskeep was the third of a family of ten children born to his parents. His father married again, and by his second wife he had six children. Seven of the first family and all of the second survive.

Dr. Inskeep was educated in Col. Lightfoot's Academy and military school at Culpeper. In April, 1872, he started west, coming to Frankfort, Ind. He had learned the trade of plastering from his father, who was a contractor and builder, and so Dr. Inskeep found ready employment in his new home where he remained two years. However, he was not satisfied, and soon began studying medicine under Dr. M. S. Canfield. During the winters of 1874 to 1877, he studied at the Eclectic Medical Institute at Cincinnati, Ohio, from which he was graduated in May of the latter year. During the summers, while attending medical college, he worked at his trade at Frankfort and Indianapolis.

Immediately after graduating, Dr. Inskeep began practicing at Merriam, Wayne County, Ill., and for thirteen years remained there, but in November, 1899, moved with his family to Mt. Carmel, which has since been his home. He is engaged in general practice.

On December 18, 1879, Dr. Inskeep married Elizabeth C. Harris, of Wayne County, a daughter of John M. and Sarah C. (Parker) Harris, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Kentucky. They were married in Kentucky, whence they came to Wayne County about 1849, locating on a large farm, the greater portion of which Mr. Harris improved. Mr. Harris still survives, and is an old man, having been born in May, 1828. Dr. and Mrs. Inskeep have had four daughters: Leonie, who died in infancy; Katherine M., of Mt. Carmel; Claribel, wife of C. A. McClure of Bone Gap, Ill., and Callie M., of Mt. Carmel. The oldest and youngest are graduates of the Mt. Carmel high school. They are members of the Christian Church, to which Dr. Inskeep is a liberal contributor.

Dr. Inskeep is a Democrat and was Chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee in Wayne County in 1882, and held that position from 1894 to 1908, a period of fourteen years. He was Coroner in Wayne County for six years, and served in the same office since coming to Wabash County, from 1892 to 1908, with the exception of four years. Since 1894 he has been President of the Columbian Building & Loan Association of Mt. Carmel. When Sheriff Alexander Compton died, Dr. Inskeep was Coroner, and he therefore became successor to the office of Sheriff until the next election, and discharged the duties pertaining to it faithfully and well. He has the record of attending all but one of the Democratic National Conventions in sixteen years, and has frequently been a Delegate to State and local conventions. He is a stockholder in the "Mt. Carmel Register," both weekly and daily. The fraternal affiliations of Dr. Inskeep are with the A. F. & A. M. and the F. O. E., and is physician to the Bluff City Aerie.

JAQUESS, Arthur L.—The Jaquess family located in Mt. Carmel, Ill., among the early settlers, and the father of Arthur L. Jaquess took a prominent part in the public affairs of Wabash County until his death. He was a son of Isaac Newton and Jane (Tilton) Jaquess, early settlers of the county. Isaac N. Jaquess was a cabinet-maker by trade and followed that occupation many years in Mt. Carmel. In his day he was probably the most influential man in the county and held many public offices. He served two terms as Sheriff of the county, and the only hanging in the county took place under his administration. Though he had never attended school more than about six months in his life, he was a man of intelligence and foresight and had a good understanding of the needs of the people. He owned the farm where his grandson, Arthur L., was born, and where he resides, on the northern edge of Mt. Carmel, adjoining the present city limits. Isaac N. Jaquess was born in Harrison County, Ky., February 10, 1811, and died at Mt. Carmel November 12, 1896. His wife was born in Atlantic County, N. J., February 7, 1818, and died July 1, 1863. They were married in Wabash County, Ill., March 20, 1834, by Reverend Aaron Wood. They had ten children, namely: Sarah E., Mary Ann, John, Laura Jane, Sarah Roxanna, Ella S., Isaac W., Charlotte F., Sarah T. and James H. The only two now living are: Laura Jane, Mrs. T. J. Rigg, of Mt. Carmel, and Mrs. Richard Weaver, of Columbus, Ind.

Arthur L. Jaquess was born in Mt. Carmel, September 16, 1881, son of Isaac W. and Mary E. (Long) Jaquess, the former a native of Mt. Carmel and the latter of Carmi, Ill. Isaac W. Jaquess was born March 5, 1818, and when a young man learned the trade of carpenter, but before his marriage engaged in farming. He was married December 16, 1875, and settled in Saline County, Ill., where he managed a farm for two years, when he returned to the home farm and remodeled the old house. He added to it until it was one of the finest residences at Mt. Carmel, being surrounded by a fine grove of oak trees. There were 108 acres in the farm, of which much was covered by timber, and he cleared and improved it, developing a fine estate. Thirty-four acres of this farm was included in the city limits and, in 1902, Mr. Jaquess succeeded in having an ordinance passed by which it should be considered outside of the limits. He was a successful farmer and stock-raiser, and for six months served as Assistant Postmaster under Postmaster John T. Stansfield. Mr. Jaquess died June 23, 1906, and his widow, who was born March 28, 1851, still resides on the old homestead. The following children were born to them: Susan, born November 6, 1874, died January 12, 1875; Sarah E., born April 29, 1877, lives with her mother; Nellie, born November 5, 1880, also at home; Arthur L., Mabel Gertrude, born August 14, 1891, at home, is one of the graduating class of 1910 in Mt. Carmel High School.

Arthur L. Jaquess attended the public and high schools of Mt. Carmel and for two weeks in two winters attended special courses at the State University at Urbana. His sisters also attended the public and high schools of Mt. Carmel. He always assisted his father on the farm from the time he was old enough, and took entire charge of the farm after his father's death. He was the first in the county to secure registered Berkshire hogs and raises more of them now than any other breeder in this vicinity. He has made exhibits of this stock at various State and county fairs, in Indiana and Illinois, and has won many prizes. He is the youngest man in this part of the State to receive prizes on his stock, and is considered one of the most enterprising and progressive farmers of the region. He has also raised some fine sheep and other stock and contemplates investing more extensively in registered grades, which he believes pay best in the long run, though the initial expense considerable. Mr. Jaquess is a Director of the Mt. Carmel Banking & Trust Company, in which his mother also holds stock. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias of Mt. Carmel, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which the family are generous contributors. He is interested in the progress and welfare of the community and has been a zealous worker in the cause of Prohibition. He is one of the most promising young business men and farmers of Mt. Carmel and vicinity, and looks carefully after his interests, being of an ambitious, industrious character.

JAQUESS, Hon. Isaac N. (deceased).—In the death of the Hon. Isaac N. Jaquess, which occurred November 12, 1896, Wabash County lost one of its most distinguished citizens, and a man who had ably served in various public offices within the gift of the people. The Jaquess family, to which he belonged, is of French origin, Jonathan Jaquess, from whom the family descended, having died previous to the American Revolution. He had four sons, Jonathan, Isaac, William and John, and five daughters, Polly, Ruth, Susan, Massy and Letty. His eldest son, Jonathan, was born April 28, 1775, went to sea when twelve years old and followed a sailor's life until twenty-seven. He married Sally Jaquess, a third cousin, daughter of Samuel and Abigail Jaquess, and she lived but thirteen months. He then married Mrs. Esther E. Koy and moved from his home in Essex County, N. J., to Kentucky, in 1789, settling near the present site of Cynthiana. His wife, Esther, died, leaving two children: Sara Christina and Isaac, the latter the father of Isaac N. Isaac Jaquess was born in New Jersey, February 1, 1786, and died June 5, 1812. He married Betsy Johnson, who died February 16, 1841, in Marion County, Mo. Her father was a native of North Carolina, and a noted Indian fighter of his day. Jonathan Jaquess, the grandfather of Isaac N., emigrated from Kentucky to Indiana in 1816, and settled in Henderson County, and from there move to Posey County, where he died. Isaac N. Jaquess was the only child of Isaac and Elizabeth (Johnson) Jaquess. He was born in Harrison County, Ky., February 10, 1811, learned the cabinet maker's trade in his youth and, in 1828, went with his mother to Marion County, Mo., returning to Posey County Ind., in the fall of 1831, to see friends, also spent a short time at Mt. Carmel on a visit to his uncle, W. T. Jaquess. Liking the town and the people he met there, he decided to remain and commenced working at his trade, at which he continued for a number of years. He served as Constable for a time, and in 1844 was elected Sheriff of the county, and continued to be reelected for a number of years. He subsequently engaged in different business ventures, merchandizing principally, until 1879, when he engaged in the lumber business and the saw-milling business in connection with his son-in-law, Mr. Chipman. In 1831, during the Black Hawk War, he enlisted in Capt. Jordan's company and served throughout the struggle, being discharged at the close.

Larner Risley

During the Civil War he was Chaplain of the Seventy-Third Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving from February, 1864, until the close of the war.

On March 20, 1834, Mr. Jaquess was married to Jane, daughter of John Tilton, and she died July 1, 1863. She was born in New Jersey, but came to Illinois with her parents when young. There were ten children born to this union: five of whom died in infancy; Sarah, who was the wife of William F. Chipman, died, leaving one son, Paul; Laura, widow of T. J. Rigg; Ellen S., wife of Richard F. Weaver; Isaac W., who married Mary Long; and James Henry, who married Dora Beachem. Mrs. Jaquess died July 1, 1863.

On October 13, 1867, Mr. Jaquess was married to Mrs. Catherine McClintock, nee McGregor, a native of Wabash County who had a child by her former marriage, William T. McClintock, who married Mildred Pool. Mr. Jaquess joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when he was seventeen years of age and continued a member thereof all of his life, his widow also belonging to that denomination. Politically, he was originally a Whig of the Emancipation school, and was always Anti-Slavery. In 1856 he was one of the few voters in Wabash County who cast their votes for John C. Fremont, and in 1860 he voted for Lincoln and for every Republican Presidential candidate who followed. In 1874 he was elected to represent his district in the General Assembly of the State, and in that capacity served his constituents well and honorably. He was an avowed and outspoken advocate of temperance, and joined the first temperance organization formed west of the Mississippi in his youth, and from that time until his death never swerved from its principles and teachings.

JOHNSON, Charles A.—One of the men who has done much to introduce high-bred horses in Wabash County, Ill., is Charles A. Johnson, of Mt. Carmel, who has been very successful as breeder and trainer of fine horses. Mr. Johnson is a native of Mt. Carmel, although much of his life has been spent in Gibson County, Ind., where for several years he conducted the farm left by his father. He was born June 30, 1863, and is a son of James S. and Eliza C. (Robb) Johnson, both born near Princeton, Gibson County, Ind. Their parents were Jacob Johnson, and wife, of Virginia, and Mr. and Mrs. David Robb, who always lived in Indiana. The maiden name of Mrs. Robb was Simpson. The paternal grandparents were among the pioneers of Gibson County and James S. Johnson, and his wife were married there.

James S. Johnson, was a farmer and owned a large farm, which he left in 1862 and locating in Mt. Carmel, there engaged in livery and transfer business, sending passenger and freight vehicles over routes to Evansville, Vincennes, Bridgeport, Princeton and other points in that section. He also carried the United States mail, and was an enterprising, intelligent business man. After carrying on this business some ten years, he traded it for a hub-factory at Mt. Carmel, and five years later sold this business and returned to his farm in Gibson County, which he carried on for the remainder of his life, although much of the time he lived in Mt. Carmel. He was always interested in livestock, being a dealer and trader in various kinds. He served for sometime as Alderman of the Second Ward, being elected for one term on the Democratic ticket and for one term as a Prohibitionist. Mr. Johnson died in 1889 and his widow survived until 1902.

To James S. Johnson and wife seven children were born, namely: Jacob, of Mt. Carmel; David, who died in Seattle, Wash., in 1909; Thomas, whose whereabouts are not known at the present time; John of New Orleans, La.; Laura, Mrs. Green, wife of Dr. Thomas E. Green, who resides in Chicago, but lectures all over the world; Charles A.; and Edie, who married Daniel Keen, editor of the "Mt. Carmel Republican."

Charles A. Johnson was reared in Mt. Carmel, Ill., where he remained until eighteen years of age. He received his education in the public schools of Mt. Carmel and Princeton, Ind., at the latter spending one year. Upon leaving home he went west and spent five years and eight months in various States in occupation as a cowboy. He then returned home and took charge of his father's farm, which he conducted four years, then began dealing in horses and brought the first French coach-horse into Wabash County. He also dealt in other high-bred horses, and during eight years, while actively engaged in this business, carried on a teaming and wood and coal business at Mt. Carmel. Returning to the farm, of which he inherited 100 acres, he carried on farming there four years, when he sold his interest and engaged in the livery business with Harvey Keneipp. Two years later he sold out his interest in this business and since then has about sixty acres of land adjoining the City of Mt. Carmel, where he deals in horses, chiefly Standard Bred.

In May, 1891, Mr. Johnson married Eliza Groff, who was born in Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Fearheiley) Groff, both natives of Germany. Mr. Johnson and his wife have no issue. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and belongs to the B. P. O. E., of Mt. Carmel. He is actively interested in political issues, and though he has followed his father's example in many things, is a strong Republican in his political views. He is a man of high order of intelligence, an enterprising business man and possessed of good judgment, having won his success through his own industry and ambition.

JOHNSON, Harrison, one of the substantial and influential farmers of Wabash County who has now retired from active life, owns a well-cultivated and fertile farm in Wabash Precinct. Mr. Johnson was born in Knox County, Ind., October 4, 1844, a son of Thomas and Nancy (Warth) Johnson, the former a native of Wabash County, Ill., and the latter of Knox County, Ind. Thomas was a flat-boat pilot for many years an important calling in the early days. Harrison Johnson's grandfather, William Johnson, was the first white child born in Vincennes, Ind., a son of one of the first white settlers of Vincennes, who came from Virginia. William Johnson married Christina Anthis, and they settled in Wabash County, Ill., where they lived many years, then moved to Lawrence County and bought land, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Thomas Johnson was a daughter of Robert Warth, of Kentucky, and after her marriage, which took place in Knox County, Ind., she and her husband continued to live in the vicinity of her old home several years. In the spring of 1849 they moved to Wabash County, Ill., and bought a tract of land in Section 6, Wabash Precinct, consisting of 160 acres, where they located permanently. He died in 1854 and his widow in 1871. Their children were: Harrison; Frances, Mrs. John Greer, who died in Knox County, Ind.; Squire died in 1872; Minerva, died in 1873.

The boyhood of Harrison Johnson was spent on his father's farm and he attended subscription schools at Allendale. He has spent most of his life on the old farm and made all possible improvements. Most of the buildings on the place were erected by him and he brought it to a high state of cultivation. About 100 acres are under cultivation and the remainder has been left in timber. He carried on general farming and raised considerable poultry, but since 1907 has rented out his farm. He has always been recognized as an industrious and intelligent farmer, and has been accordingly successful. He comes from a family well known and highly respected in the neighborhood where most of his life has been spent and is a worthy representative of same. Politically he is a Democrat and has identified himself with the best interests of the community.

Mr. Johnson married, January 3, 1864, Nancy Banks, who was born in Daviess County, Ind., daughter of William and Sarah (Johnson) Banks, of Virginia, and they became parents of children as follows: Sarah, Mrs. John Breen, of Wabash Precinct; Harriet, died in 1881; Thomas, at home; Nellie and Ida, died in childhood; Clara, Mrs. John Jordan, of Decker, Ind.; Alice, Mrs. Daniel Reiber, of Wabash Precinct; Charles, in the United States Coast Artillery, stationed at San Francisco; Anna, Mrs. Everett Banks, of Allendale, Ill.

JOHNSON, Jacob F., who has been a resident of Mt. Carmel, Ill., since 1861, and has contributed his share toward the progress and development of the city during that time, is a native of Gibson County, Ind., born October 31, 1845. He is a son of James S. and Eliza E. (Robb) Johnson, both natives of Gibson County, and grandson of Jacob Johnson and wife and of David and Elizabeth (Simpson) Robb, all early settlers of Gibson County.

Jacob Johnson (1) was born in Virginia, in 1784, and died in Indiana in 1875. In 1798 he was taken by his parents, John and Sarah Johnson, to Kentucky, and four years later they crossed the Ohio River near the present site of Evansville, and made their way on horseback to a tract of land a mile west of Princeton, Ind., where they built a shanty and spent the winter. During the winter their horses got away and started back for the old home in Kentucky, and the son, Jacob, started in pursuit, on foot, not even waiting to put on a cap. He went bare-headed through the forest, keeping on their trail, and caught them near the place where they had crossed the Ohio. On his way he passed no habitations and saw no one, but kept fearlessly on. In the spring they built a log cabin a few miles northwest of Princeton, and began improving their land. The men of the family became quite celebrated hunters and trappers. Jacob enlisted in 1813 in Hargrove's Company of Rangers. He also assisted in the survey of seminary land, being camp-keeper. John Johnson, his wife and the older children, were natives of Virginia. Their seven children were: Rebecca, Betsy, Mary, Hannah, Jacob, David, John.

Jacob Johnson first married a Miss Stewart, and after her death, a Miss Skelton, daughter of John Skelton. He had two children, by his first marriage, James Stewart and Sarah Ann, Mrs. McFetridge. By his second marriage his children were: John, Jackson, Mrs. Fairchilds, Mrs. Martha McCrea, Lydia and David. Jacob Johnson secured several pieces of government land in Gibson County and became a large landholder.

David Robb was born in Union County, Ky., May 22, 1799, and died in Gibson County, Ind., April 8, 1888. His wife, Elizabeth Simpson, was born in Tennessee February 1, 1805, and died in Gibson County, October 15, 1882. Mr. Robb served as Justice of the Peace and County Commissioner, and was prominent in his support of religious work in pioneer days.

James Stewart Johnson was married in Gibson County and inherited land from his father. He also purchased various tracts until he owned 600 acres, all pretty well improved. In 1861 he moved to Mt. Carmel, Ill., and in the winter of 1891 went to Texas, where he died, at the age of sixty-eight years, being buried at Mt. Carmel. His widow died at Mt. Carmel, about 1901 at the age of seventy-three years. Six children were born to them, namely: Jacob F.; David, who died in Seattle, Wash., in 1899; James T., who has not been heard from since 1876; Laura, Mrs. Thomas Green, of Chicago; John, of Louisiana; Effie, married Daniel Keen, editor of the Mt. Carmel Republican, and Postmaster since 1894; Charles A., of Mt. Carmel.

Jacob F. Johnson received his early education in the district schools of Indiana and for a time attended the public school in Mt. Carmel. He lived with his parents until he was eighteen years old, then put in a crop of corn which he took care of on his own account. The next year he became clerk in a dry-goods store at Bridgeport, Ill., where he remained six years, then rented a farm near Princeton, Ind., and worked on it three years, after which he again took a position as clerk in a dry-goods store, this time in Mt. Carmel. Several years later he began speculating in timber, buying the trees standing, felling them and cutting them into logs and otherwise putting them in shape for sale. He found this business very profitable and continued in it for nine years, after which he began farming on land he owned in Gibson County. He started with 200 acres, but now owns 658 acres, all in one body. He has 500 acres under cultivation and the remainder is covered with timber. Since 1861 he has lived in Mt. Carmel and his land is situated conveniently near, across the Wabash River from the city. He is an industrious, practical farmer, and carries on his farm in a manner to reap the best results and largest profits.

Politically Mr. Johnson is a Democrat and actively interested in local affairs. He is a member of the B. P. O. E. of Mt. Carmel, being the second life member. He is proud of his ancestors who were among the hardy pioneers of the region of his home, and appreciates what they did for their neighborhood and posterity in making the beginnings of fine farms and doing their share to help the cause of education and religion in the new country. Their records still live, a fine monument to their good work and high purpose.

In September, 1875, Mr. Johnson married Mary Compton, who was born in Wabash County, daughter of Jeremiah Compton, who died in October, 1876, without issue. He married (second), in October, 1881, Fannie Gibbs, a native of Indiana, who died October 30, 1884, leaving one daughter, Fannie G., who married Carl Putnam, Cashier in the First National Bank, of Mt. Carmel. The daughter was reared by Mrs. James Jeffers, of Danville, Ind., where she lived until her marriage, and since then her father has lived with her and her husband, in their handsome residence, situated at 130 East Fourth Street, Mt. Carmel.

JOHNSON, William R. (deceased), former owner of a large and fertile farm in Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in that precinct and spent his entire life there on the same farm, and at his death was widely mourned. He had the fullest confidence and esteem of his neighbors, and had many warm personal friends. Mr. Johnson was born January 4, 1865, a son of William and Rebecca (Jacobus) Johnson, born in Knox County, Ill. William Johnson was one of the early settlers of Wabash County and purchased a large tract of land in the northeast corner of the county. Both he and his wife died on the homestead, he on February 21, 1882, and his widow on May 17, 1897. They had two children: Ezekiah, born January 9, 1860, and died September 13, 1862, and William R., who died April 12, 1896.

The boyhood of William R. Johnson was spent in much the same manner as that of other farmer boys, and he received his education in the public schools. As soon as he was old enough he helped in the work on his father's farm of 251 acres, and at the death of the latter took entire charge. He carried on general farming, cultivating 100 acres, the remainder of the land being in timber. He was married, August 2, 1886, to Sarah Louisa Jordan, who was born in Wabash Precinct, February 3, 1862, daughter of William B. and Jernsha (Barney) Jordan, natives respectively of Wabash and Friendsville Precincts. Her grandparents were Varnold and Rebecca (Buchanan) Jordan.

After his marriage Mr. Johnson resided with his mother, and after his death his widow and his mother continued to live together on the home farm until the death of the latter. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Johnson's brother, Thomas, has carried on the farm. Mr. Johnson and wife were members of the Christian Church and he belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America. Politically he was a Democrat and was actively interested in public affairs. They had two children, namely: John Riley, born September 4, 1892, and William Ogle, born August 5, 1895, and they attend the district schools and assist in the farm work. Mrs. Johnson is a good manager and conducts her affairs in a manner to insure a good income. She has many friends and is much esteemed by all who know her.

JOHNSTON, Asa Williams.—Among the best citizens of Mt. Carmel, Ill., are many men who are employed on railroads and spend much of their time away from the city, but they are all interested in the progress and welfare of the community. Asa Williams Johnston, who is a passenger engineer on the Big Four Railroad, is a native of Mt. Carmel, born July 25, 1861, a son of James S. and Charlotte (Bowen) Johnston, the former born in New Jersey and the latter in Wales. Mrs. Johnston came to the United States with her parents in infancy, and was married in the East. Mr. Johnston was a cabinet-maker and worked at his trade in New Jersey and in the 'forties moved to Mt. Carmel, where he engaged in the furniture business in partnership with Henry Stees, also in the tin-smith business with Louis Reese. Later he became interested in politics and served as County Clerk sixteen years, consecutively. He was County Judge eight years and served many years as Police Magistrate. In 1879 he left Mt. Carmel for Loveland, Colo., with all his family except his son, Asa W., and an older son. Of the children five sons and three daughters reached maturity, and of these four sons and one daughter still survive, namely: Margaret, of Denver, Colo.; John, of Mt. Carmel; Asa W.; and William and Gibson, of Denver.

The early education of Asa W. Johnston was acquired in the common schools and he also attended Mt. Carmel Seminary. He took a course in a business college at Evansville, Ind., and at the age of seventeen years became employed as fireman on the Southern Railroad. In 1880 he entered the employ of the Cairo & Vincennes Railroad, in the capacity of fireman. He has since continued with this company, the line now being part of the Big Four, and in 1882 he was promoted to the position of engineer on freight trains. After twelve years' experience as engineer, he was transferred to the passenger service and now runs from Mt. Carmel to Cairo. He has the confidence and esteem of his employers and fellow workers, and is most conscientious in his discharge of his duties. He fully realizes the importance and responsibility of his work, and is well fitted by training and natural ability to hold this position. Mr. Johnston has purchased a handsome residence on Mulberry Street, in Mt. Carmel, which he has recently re-modeled and fitted with modern conveniences.

In 1889 Mr. Johnston married Catherine Dorney, of Mt. Carmel, who died in 1898, and on December 10, 1900, he married (second) Margaret E. Clarke, of Lafayette, Ind., daughter of John E. and Elizabeth (Madden) Clarke, the father born in Albany, N. Y., and the mother in Ireland. Mr. Clarke and his wife had three children, namely: Mary, Mrs. William A. Reddy, of Terre Haute, Ind.; Edward J., of Peoria, Ill., an engineer on the Vandalia Railroad; Mrs. Johnston. Mr. Johnston and his wife have children as follows: Charlotte E., born October 2, 1901; James Clarke, and Mary Lucile (twins), born March 13, 1904; Asa Edward, born August 17, 1906, died August 25, 1907.

Mr. Johnston and wife have many friends in Mt. Carmel by whom they are held in high esteem. She and the children are members of the Catholic Church, she having received her education in parochial schools. He is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party and fraternally belongs to the Masonic Lodge No. 239, of Mt. Carmel, Mt. Carmel Chapter No. 32 Royal Arch Masons, Wabash Lodge No. 227 Knights of Pythias, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks No. 715 of Mt. Carmel, and Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Division No. 400.

JORDAN, Levi (deceased), who was for many years identified with the best interests of Mt. Carmel, Ill., will be greatly missed in many circles. He was a veteran of the Civil War and was prominent among his comrades of the G. A. R., having left a record as a soldier of which his family may well be proud. He made his own way in life from the time he was a young boy, leaving home without capital to go among strangers, but finally achieved a fair degree of financial success.

Mr. Jordan was born near Owensville, Ind., October 19, 1844, and received his somewhat limited education in the common schools near his home. At the age of eleven years he felt compelled to leave home on account of the cruel treatment accorded him by his father and step-mother, and spent two years in the State of Missouri. He then returned to the vicinity of his old home and began learning the work of a stationary engineer from a man named James Hughes, who befriended him and gave him a home and employment until the time of his enlistment for service in the Union Army, which took place September 13, 1861, when he became a member of Company E, Forty-second Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was captured at the Battle of Stone River and confined in Libby Prison four months, being then discharged and re-enlisting the following day. He served until July 21, 1865, serving in all a period of three years, nine months and twenty-seven days, and during that time participating in some of the most memorable battles of the war period, including Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge, Ringgold, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta and numerous other engagements and skirmishes. After his discharge he located at Mt. Carmel, where he worked as machinist in various lines for about ten years. In 1875 he purchased twelve acres of land in the southwestern part of Mt. Carmel and established a truck garden, where he raised sweet corn, sweet potatoes and many other vegetables and plants.

December 28, 1869, Mr. Jordan married Frances Parkinson, who was born in Mt. Carmel, August 6, 1849, daughter of William and Eliza (Russell) Parkinson. Mr. Parkinson was born in Wilkesbarre, Pa., three weeks after his parents came from England, a son of Edward and Mary (Beilby) Parkinson, both natives of England. His wife was born in Mt. Carmel, a daughter of Abraham and Hanna (Stewart) Russell, the former a native of Nantuckett, Mass., and the latter born in New Jersey, her mother's maiden name being Ingersoll. Mr. Russell and wife settled in Mt. Carmel among the pioneers and there died.

William Parkinson was a merchant and carried on a business some years in Mt. Carmel, but on account of poor health was compelled to abandon his occupation, and in 1852 went to California, where for two years he worked in the gold mines. Returning to Illinois by way of the Isthmus and by ship to New York City, whence he made his way to Mt. Carmel, he engaged in work as a stone mason. He enlisted in the Union Army as member of the Fortieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was killed at the Battle of Pittsburg Landing, April 6, 1862, having enlisted during the previous month. His widow died at St. Francisville, Ill., November 27, 1895.

Mr. Jordan and wife had children as follows: Ella, Mrs. George Sharp, a merchant of St. Francisville, Ill.; Edwin, R., of Mt. Carmel; Bertha, died at the age of three years; Eliza, Mrs. Frank Kuhn, of Mt. Carmel; Amy, Mrs. Gustave Dieschauer, of Evansville, Ind. Mrs. Jordan received her education in the schools of Mt. Carmel, where her entire life has been spent. Mr. Jordan was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as also is his wife. He always took an active interest in politics, although not desirous of holding public office. He was the friend of education and ready to help all worthy causes, a kind husband and father and a good friend and neighbor. He was a prominent member of the Odd Fellows, belonging to the Encampment and to the Order of Rebekahs. He also belonged to the B. P. O. E. and the G. A. R. He had held all the offices in the Odd Fellows Lodge and took an active part in the other organizations of which he was a member. Mr. Jordan died January 15, 1910, after having been confined to his home for eight months. His widow now resides at home with her grandson, Raymond Jordan, born June 11, 1895, who has made his home with his grandparents since infancy.

KAMP, Louis W.—Among the successful German-Americans who have located in Mt. Carmel, Ill., is Louis W. Kamp, who owns and controls the stock of the L. W. Kamp Company sheet metal works and plumbing and heating establishment, is also owner of a half interest in the firm of Kamp Brothers, hardware dealers. Mr. Kamp was born in Vanderburg County, Ind., March 24, 1875, son of Louis and Sarah (Ball) Kamp, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Vanderburg County. He came to the United States as a young man and spent some time in Philadelphia, where he worked in grist mills and then proceeded to Vanderburg County, Ind., where he became the owner of a farm, also a boat on the Ohio River. Later Mr. Kamp moved to Mt. Carmel, Ill., and there conducted a flour mill from 1879 until 1891, when it burned, and he then established a plant for manufacturing ice, which he carried on three years, then sold out and retired from active life. Mr. Kamp died in July, 1903, and his wife died in August, 1899. They were parents of eight children, of whom two died in infancy, the others being: Berthold, who has a department store at Mt. Carmel; Emil L., with Kamp Brothers; Angelo, of Mt. Carmel; Eugene, of Mt. Carmel, and Clara, Mrs. Howard Sherry, of Mt. Carmel.

Louis W. Kamp received his education in the common and high schools and in 1892 entered the employ of Mr. L. Rees, a tinner in Mt. Carmel, where he remained till 1896, then went to work for the Pullman car-shops at Pullman, Ill., being employed two years as plumber, and then located in New York City, where he worked one year in a plumbing and heating plant establishment. Returning to Mt. Carmel Mr. Kamp began business on his own account, dealing in sheet metal, plumbing supplies, heating apparatus, and similar lines. The firm is known as L. W. Kamp Company, which does an extensive business throughout Southern Illinois. Making a specialty of the County Water Systems and Gas Lighting Plants. Mr. Kamp, having served time at the sheet metal, plumbing and heating business for past 18 years, has been very successful and built up a large business, carrying a complete line of up-to-date, high-grade stock.

June 1, 1908, Mr. Kamp married Jessie Reinhard, who was born in Fairfield, Ill., daughter of John D. and Betsey (Sheets) Reinhard, the father born in Mt. Carmel and the mother in Frankfort, Ky. Mr. Kamp and his wife have one child, Robert L., born December 17, 1909. Mr. Kamp is a member of the Lutheran Church, being one of its Trustees and Superintendent of the Sunday School. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M., the I. O. O. F., Elks and the M. W. A. Politically he is a staunch supporter of the Republican party and takes a commendable interest in public affairs.

KAVANAUGH, John Dillon.—Many self-made men have achieved a high degree of success and have won the highest respect and esteem from their associates. John Dillon Kavanaugh, of Friendsville, Ill., has made his own way in the world since he was seventeen years of age, and is now one of the most prominent men in his community. He was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., March 18, 1838, a son of Leroy and Rachel (Martin) Kavanaugh, born in Clark County, Ky. His father was a son of William and Anna (Hinde) Kavanaugh, of Virginia.

As a boy John D. Kavanaugh attended the district school and the public schools at Mt. Carmel. He started out for himself by helping get out timber in Indiana for a firm in Cincinnati, Ohio, and three years later went into a mill at Grand Rapids, Wabash County, learning the milling trade, at which he worked twenty-five years in that neighborhood. In 1887 Mr. Kavanaugh was appointed Deputy Sheriff, under Alfred McNair, and served two years. He purchased a residence in Friendsville in 1871, and has made this his home since. In 1881 he was appointed Deputy United States Marshal under Charles P. Hitch, and held that position four years. He spent three years in the retail grocery trade and has also followed various other occupations, though for the past few years he has been practically retired from active life. From 1903 until 1905 he served as guard at the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester. He has shown excellent judgment in his various lines of business, and his public service has been conscientious and satisfactory. He is well known and popular socially, is a member of the Masonic Lodge No. 239, Mt. Carmel, and politically a supporter of the Republican party, showing keen interest in public affairs.

Mr. Kavanaugh married, March 7, 1861, Eliza Benedict, who was born in Crawford County, Ind., a daughter of Carlton and Delila (Hyden) Benedict, and they became parents of children as follows: Elizabeth, Mrs. George Wilkinson, now deceased; Isaac C., died in 1872; Luella, Mrs. J. N. Loudin, of Mt. Carmel, Ill. The family attend the Methodist Church and are identified with every cause that has for its object the improvement of existing conditions.

KEEN, Albert B.—One of the oldest residents of Wabash County, Ill., is Albert B. Keen, of Friendsville Precinct, whose name heads this biography. Mr. Keen was born in that precinct, October 20, 1830, a son of Ira and Eleanor (Jordan) Keen, the former a native of Hamilton County, Ohio, and the latter of Bowling Green, Ky., and is a grandson of Peter and Jemima (Gard) Keen, the latter of New Jersey, and Caleb and Rebecca Jordan, natives of Kentucky. Peter Keen and his wife landed where Cincinnati, Ohio, is now located, and helped build the first cabin there. They, as well as the rest of their party, were pursued by Indians. They came down the Ohio to the Wabash River, and while on the way the Indians shot at the boat with their arrows, but he and the others escaped. He located near Timberville, Wabash County, but soon afterward moved to Friendsville Precinct, where he entered land. He cleared this from the scrub oak and improved it. After his marriage he lived at Patton Station, in Wabash Precinct, but later secured a tract of land in Friendsville Precinct, where he died in 1887, at the age of eighty-seven years, his wife having died there some years prior. She was born in 1801, two years before her parents came to Friendsville Precinct. Her father secured a large tract of land from the Government and died at the age of eighty-two years. Her mother died at the age of eighty-one.

After his marriage Ira Keen spent the remainder of his life in farming. He and his wife had nine children, the only survivors now being: Rebecca, Mrs. Thomas Wilkinson, of Friendsville Precinct; Albert B.; William C., of Wayne City, Wayne County, Ill.; Louisa, Mrs. A. D. Rutter, of Mt. Carmel.

Albert B. Keen received his education in the schools of his neighborhood and made the most of his advantages. Most of the schools in his early boyhood were subscription schools. He remained at home with his parents until his marriage, in December, 1860, to Martha Shoaff, who was born in Washington, Pa., daughter of Jacob and Martha (Wolfenbarger) Shoaff, of Pennsylvania. After their marriage they moved to a farm of eighty acres in Friendsville Precinct, where he has since resided. Mrs. Keen died in 1881. His father deeded him a farm of eighty acres at Patton Station, which he afterward sold. He began clearing the timber from his land and improving it, and added twenty acres to it. He discovered coal on his land and sunk a shaft, which he mine many years, the vein, which is soft lump coal, varying from 30 inches to four feet in depth. He rented out several tracts of his land, on which three shafts were sunk. He has received a good income from this industry and has also been successful in his farming operations. He has practically retired from active life, but takes great interest in every detail of the work carried on.

The children born to Mr. Keen and wife were: Elizabeth, Mrs. Marcellus Andrus, died at Poplar Grove, Mo.; Robert and Herschel, died in infancy; Romana, with her father, and Alberta, Mrs. Thomas Besley, of East St. Louis, Ill. Mr. Keen is a Democrat in politics and served one term as County Commissioner. He is a member of the South Star Odd Fellows Lodge No. 732, of Friendsville. He is well known in the county and universally esteemed for his many good qualities of heart and mind. He keeps fully informed on the topics and issues of the day and is much interested in public affairs.

KEEN, Daniel E., is a native son of Wabash County, Ill., being a descendant of one of the pioneer families of this section. His father was the late Hon. Ezra B. Keen, a sketch of whose life also appears in this volume. His mother is Mrs. Lucinda (Knowles) Keen, whose parents were among the early settlers of Gibson County, Ind. He was born November 21, 1864, on the farm just north of Keensburg, where his grandfather settled in the second decade of the last century. His youth was spent on the farm in the performance of such tasks as usually fall to the lot of the farmer boy. During the winters he attended the public school of the neighborhood. After acquiring such an education as this institution afforded, he entered the Southern Indiana Normal College at Mitchell, Ind., from which he graduated in 1884 with the degree of B. S. Upon his graduation he was chosen as one of a body of young teachers from the North, selected to compose the faculty of the Milan Normal College, at Milan, Tenn., where he taught successfully for two years, the last year as Associate Principal.

During his residence in Milan, through his acquaintance with the publisher of the local paper, Mr. Keen acquired a taste for newspaper work, and returning to his native county purchased the "Mt. Carmel Republican," then owned by Thomas L. Joy. He began the publication of the "Republican" April 15, 1888, and has been in charge of the paper continuously from that day to the present time. His early experience in the newspaper field was not encouraging. The "Republican" possessed an equipment that was meager in the extreme and the opposition was far stronger than that usually encountered by a new candidate for public favor. Having little to recommend him but his own strength of character and honesty of purpose, his progress was slow indeed and the struggle was often severe. As the years passed, however, the paper gradually won its way to the front, the office was given a more fitting equipment and the publication was accorded a standing equal to that of any of its contemporaries. On September 4, 1899, the publication of the "Daily Republican" was commenced, this being the first daily paper ever established in Mt. Carmel and its publication at first undertaken as an experiment. Its existence was rather precarious for a time, the town being scarcely large enough for its support; but it, too, won the favor of the public and, in due course has become one of the firmly established institutions of the city. The publisher now has the satisfaction of knowing that the "Republican," Daily and Weekly, is regarded as one of the foremost papers of Southern Illinois, and fully up to the standard of the country press of any section of the State, while the old hand press, broken jobber and worn-out type, have given place to the linotype, the cylinder press and a complete modern equipment in every respect. In his editorial capacity Mr. Keen has always endeavored to stand for decency, honesty and fair-play, not only in strictly local matters, but in politics and affairs of government as well. His influence has always been thrown in favor of progress, and the elevation of public morals and the betterment of conditions under which we live.

Mr. Keen's position as editor of the Republican party organ, of necessity has caused him to take a somewhat prominent part in politics, and his worth in this line was recognized by his appointment in 1898 as Postmaster at Mt. Carmel. He was re-appointed in 1902 and again in 1906, making his term of service in this position longer than that of any other incumbent, save one, who held the office during the days when Mt. Carmel was but a village. His administration of the affairs of the postoffice has been marked by a wonderful growth of the postal service. Largely through his efforts the present extensive rural free delivery service was established, and a little later city free delivery was added. During his incumbency the expenditures of the office on account of local service have grown from about $2,300 per annum to a total of almost $18,000.

In this youth Mr. Keen became a member of the old Coffee Christian Church, later removed to Keensburg, of which his grandfather, Daniel Keen, was one of the founders in 1819. He retains his membership there at the present time, though naturally his attendance is at the Mt. Carmel Church of the same body. He has been a member of the Order of Knights of Pythias since 1889, having been one of the charter members of Wabash Lodge No. 227, of Mt. Carmel, which he has frequently served in various capacities. For many years he was a member of the Grand Lodge of the order in Illinois and had the distinction, as Chairman of the Committee on Aged Pythians and Pythian Orphans' Home, of presenting the report establishing the magnificent home for the dependents of the order, recently erected at Decatur.

Mr. Keen was united in marriage, September 24, 1902, at Palmer Lake, Colo., to Miss Effie K. Johnson, of Mt. Carmel. One daughter, Eleanor J., was born to them November 28, 1906. Mr. Keen is extremely domestic in his tastes and practically all his time, not taken up by business affairs, is devoted to his family and his home.

KEEN, Hon. Ezra B. (deceased), who, at the time of his death, was the oldest native citizen of Wabash County, Ill., came from a race of pioneers and was a worthy representative of the hardy stock from which he sprang. His family were among the founders of three States. They came originally from New Jersey, of which State his grandfather, Peter Keen, was a native. Soon after the Revolutionary War the grandfather removed to the Northwest Territory, settling near Cincinnati, then but a struggling frontier village. In 1814 he sold out and, gathering his effects together, removed to the Territory of Illinois, settling on what is known as the Fox farm, two miles south of Allendale, in what is now Wabash, but which was then a part of Edwards County. He was one of the original proprietors of the ill-fated town of Palmyra, which was the first county-seat of Wabash County. He died in 1840 on a farm near Friendsville, to which he had removed. His wife was Jemima Gard, a sister of Seth Gard, another pioneer and a man of prominence in his day, who was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818, and of the Territorial Legislature in 1817. One of the children born to this family was Daniel Keen, who became the father of the subject of this sketch.

Daniel Keen was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, in 1794, and was a young man when the family came to Illinois. He was married in 1815 and removed to the southern part of the county, settling on a tract of wild land in Coffee Precinct just north of the present town of Keensburg. There he opened up a farm upon which he remained until 1852, when he returned to the northern part of the county, but later came back to end his days on the old place, dying there in 1875. He was married, in 1815, to Mary Compton, daughter of Levi and Rosanna Compton, who came to Illinois from Virginia in 1802, and who are said to have been the first settlers of this part of the State. Levi Compton was one of the prominent men among the pioneers of Illinois, was the colleague of Seth Gard as Delegate from Edwards County to the Constitutional Convention of 1818, the year Illinois was admitted into the Union as a State, and Representative from the same county in the First General Assembly (1818-20). His son Joseph was the first male child born within the limits of what is now Wabash County. Mary (Compton) Keen died in 1831, the mother of five sons and two daughters, the subject of this sketch being one of the former. Daniel Keen was married in later years to Judydia, daughter of Thomas McClain, who survived him at his death.

Ezra Baker Keen, the third son of Daniel and Mary (Compton) Keen, was born on the old homestead near Keensburg, December 1, 1821. He grew up on the farm and was subject to all the privations and trials which marked the pioneer life of those days. He received a limited education in the subscription schools, the only kind then in existence in that part of the State, and in the old log school houses with puncheon floors and greased-paper windows, he learned to read, write and cipher. His only opportunity for a more advanced education came when for a short time under the tutelage of a shrewd Yankee, Reuben Fox, he was given instruction in English grammar in addition to his other studies. Meager as were his early educational opportunities, he never ceased to add to his store of information, and through travel, reading and contact with men, acquired a broad knowledge of affairs that made him one of the best informed men of his time.

In his youth the waterways afforded practically the only means of communication with the outside world, and his desire to learn something of other sections of the country led him early to turn his attention to the river. At the age of eighteen years he made his first trip to New Orleans, as a flatboatman, and the aptitude which he at once showed for the work caused him to be in great demand as a pilot for these rude craft, which constituted the only means by which the early settlers could get their produce to market. In the intervals of farming he followed the river for many years, making 25 round trips to New Orleans, a record perhaps equaled by no other person in his section. He had many stirring adventures and the story of his experiences would fill a volume. He inherited a rugged constitution and his physical prowess made him a leader among the young men, few of whom could best him in a wrestling bout or equal him in lifting with the hand-spike, the favorite methods of determining physical superiority in those days.

Mr. Keen taught one term of school at Lick Prairie and a little later located in Mt. Carmel where, in partnership with the late D. S. Harvey, he conducted a store for a short time. He could not be content, however, to be trammelled by the restrictions of a business career, and, soon disposing of his interests, returned to farming, purchasing the old homestead, upon which he remained until the day of his death. He was progressive in his methods as a farmer and, before his days of activity had passed, acquired quite a comfortable competence.

In 1856 Mr. Keen was united in marriage with Lucinda Knowles, of Gibson County, Ind. Mrs. Keen is a daughter of Ephraim and Cynthia (Kimball) Knowles. Her family came originally from the State of Delaware, but her father was a native of Georgia, emigrating to Indiana in 1811. Jesse Kimball, the maternal grandfather, was a soldier of the Revolutionary War, removed from his native State of Connecticut to Kentucky and later to Indiana, where he died in 1858, at the advanced age of ninety-seven years. Six children were born to the union of Ezra B. and Lucinda Keen, of whom three are living, namely: Mrs. E. A. Bueholz, of Keensburg; Daniel E., of Mt. Carmel, Postmaster and editor of the "Mt. Carmel Republican," and Marshall G., of Chicago.

Politically, Mr. Keen was a Republican of Republicans. Originally a Whig, when the break-up came, his opposition to human slavery led him to identify himself with the party of freedom. He voted for Lincoln in 1860 and continued a leader in his party almost up to the time of his death. He was a Republican throughout the troublous times of the Civil War, when to be so required courage, both moral and physical. In 1880 he was nominated by his party for Representative in the General Assembly in the old Forty-fourth District, being associated on the ticket with the late Governor John R. Tanner, who, as a candidate for State Senator, was just then beginning his political career. He was elected and served with credit to himself and his constituents.

In character Mr. Keen was a representative of all that was best in the rugged ancestry whence he came. He was absolutely fearless in his stand for the principles in which he believed, and allowed no opposition to swerve him. He was generous and honorable in all his dealings, and his word was ever as good as his bond. He was charitable to the poor, and no hungry man was ever turned from his door unfed. For almost two generations he was a leading member of the Christian Church, known as the Old Coffee, and afterwards as the Keensburg Church, giving freely of his time and means for its support. In earlier years his home was a haven for the ministers of the church and a gathering place for those who came from a distance to attend the services. He always took a deep interest in the progress of the neighborhood and gave his support to all movements for the betterment of conditions therein. For many years he served as a member of the School Board and in every way possible did what he could for the advancement of education. The positiveness of his character caused many to disagree with him, but none failed to accord him the full measure of respect and esteem to which his patriarchal character entitled him.

The last several years of his life were spent by Mr. Keen quietly at his home near Keensburg, where he passed away, Tuesday, May 4, 1909, at the age of eighty-seven years, five months and three days, his death occurring almost within a stone's throw of the spot where he was born. The interment was in the old Coffee Cemetery, to which other members of his family preceded him.

Those who have come upon the stage of action at a later date have but little comprehension of the vast changes that took place during Mr. Keen's lifetime, or how far back into the history of his country that lifetime reaches. When he was born the Union was yet in its infancy; Illinois had been a State but three years and Wabash County had not been created. The entire country in this section was a howling wilderness, from which the footprints of hostile savages had scarce been obliterated. The railroad was as yet unknown and the telegraph was a generation in the future. The steamboat had but recently been invented and as yet had scarcely made its way to western waters. He lived under all but four of his country's Presidents and voted in seventeen of the regular presidential elections, beginning with William Henry Harrison and ending with William Howard Taft.

tory of Wabash County more intimately connected, and few indeed have borne a larger part in its development and progress, or left a stronger impress for good upon the community in which they lived.

KEEN, William E., a prosperous merchant of Keensburg, Ill., and a citizen of Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, is a native of the precinct, born May 8, 1849, son of Ornamil H. and Margaret P. (Sproul) Keen, the former a native of Coffee Precinct and the latter of Lexington, Ky. Ornamil H. Keen was born in 1817, a son of Daniel and Mary (Compton) Keen, natives respectively of New Jersey and Wabash County, and Margaret P. Sproul was born in 1824. Peter Keen, the father of Daniel, was born in Trenton, N. J., and came to Wabash County in 1812, settling on the prairie at Friendsville. Mary Compton was a daughter of Levi Compton, a native of Virginia, who in 1804 located at Timberville, now Allendale, Wabash County. Both the maternal and paternal grandparents of William E. Keen were married in Wabash County, as were also his parents, the latter settling in Coffee Precinct where Keensburg now stands. They were all farmers. The father served several times as County Commissioner and laid out the town of Keensburg on his farm in 1872, the same being named in his honor. Mr. Keen was a large land holder and an extensive stock farmer. He died at Keensburg, August 30, 1877, that town having been laid out on his farm, and his widow died about 1890. They had children as follows: William E.; John M., died in infancy; Ornamil H.; Oliver P., died at the age of twenty-five years; Daniel, died in infancy. By a previous marriage, to a Miss McClain, Mr. Keen had one daughter, Mary L., who married D. F. Moyer, and died in Mt. Carmel about 1898.

The boyhood of William E. Keen was spent at Keensburg and he received his early education in the public schools. He also attended the Presbyterian school at Friendsville and the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind. He remained at home with his parents until his marriage, June 24, 1874, to Hattie A. Burns, who was born in Grayville, White County, Ill., a daughter of Neil C. and Hannah Ann (Gilbert) Burns, the former born in Posey County, Ind., and the latter in Philadelphia, Pa. The Burns family, which was of Scotch descent, early settled in Eastern Illinois. Mr. Keen engaged in mercantile business soon after his marriage and did his share toward the progress and development of the thriving town of Keensburg, and still conducts a general store there, carrying dry-goods, household furnishings and various farm appliances and implements. There were three children born to Mr. Keen and wife, namely: Elery C., Helen B. and Mary. Elery C. Keen married (first) Bertha Harrington, who died in the spring of 1906, leaving three children, Elizabeth, William and Neil B., and married (second) Aurestella Denham, by whom he had one son, Oliver P. Helen B. Keen, who lives at home, is now attending school at Huntington Hall, Los Angeles, Cal. Mary died in infancy.

Mr. Keen is a member of the Christian Church and in politics is a Democrat. He has been active in local affairs and is an influential and useful citizen. He served as Clerk of the Circuit Court from 1876-80, during which time he resided in Mt. Carmel. Fraternally he is a member of the Tribe of Ben Hur, of Keensburg.

KELLER, John H., a prominent merchant of Mt. Carmel, Ill., member of the firm of Keller & McClung, has been successful as a farmer, manufacturer and merchant, and has acquired his present position through his enterprise and perseverance. Mr. Keller was born in Heilmandale, Lebanon County, Pa., March 12, 1855, a son of John and Sarah (Richard) Keller. His paternal grandparents, John and Elizabeth (Lynts) Keller, were natives of Strassburg, Germany, and his maternal grandparents, John Peter Richard and his wife, were born in England. John Keller was a farmer in Pennsylvania.

John H. Keller received his education in the common schools of his native county and remained at home until he was twenty-one years old, then went to Wichita, Kan., and remained there three months, after which he walked back as far as Bloomington, Ill., having not a cent of money. He worked on a farm in McLean County until he had money enough to take him to Hoopston, Ill., and worked on a farm near there six months, during which time his parents had moved to Mt. Carmel. He then returned home and worked for them until his marriage, May 27, 1883, to Alice Risley, a native of Mt. Carmel, daughter of John T. Risley.

After his marriage Mr. Keller rented a farm near Mt. Carmel from his brother-in-law, and a year later a cyclone destroyed all his property. He then located in Mt. Carmel and engaged in business for one year, when he bought a farm five miles north of Mt. Carmel, which he carried on three years, then rented it and purchased another farm two miles north of Mt. Carmel, where he lived two years. Mr. Keller then moved to Mt. Carmel and engaged in the lumber business, in company with D. F. Rheinhardt and M. R. Jones, the firm name being J. H. Keller & Company. They continued in business a year and a half, when Mr. Keller sold his interest to his partners and for two years engaged in farming; he then bought the brick yard which was owned by George G. Blood, just north of Mt. Carmel, and conducted this enterprise with success seven years. He sold the brick plant and two of the nine acres, there being a fine brick house on part of the land. He also sold out his farms in Wabash County and purchased the hardware business of W. S. Merritt, in partnership with George A. McClung. The firm of Keller & McClung have since carried on the business and carry a good line of general hardware merchandise, having one of the best stores in Mt. Carmel. They are both men of enterprise and business acumen and pay proper attention to the needs of their customers. In March, 1906, they purchased a 300-acre farm in Knox County, Ind., under the name of Keller & McClung. This is well improved, fertile land, and all under cultivation except forty acres of timber.

Mr. Keller and his wife became parents of children as follows: J. Everett, at home; Lee, at San Diego, Cal.; Arthur and Ralph, at home. Mr. Keller is a member of the B. P. O. E., No. 715, Mt. Carmel, the Modern Americans and the Modern Woodmen of America. In political views he is independent, voting for the man he considers best fitted for office. In 1903 he was elected Alderman of the Third Ward in Mt. Carmel on the Democratic ticket, and discharged his duties with ability and good judgment. He takes an active interest in public affairs and keeps himself informed upon the issues of the day.

KENEIPP, Alexander P.—Among the substantial and enterprising farmers of Wabash County, Ill., one of the most successful is Alexander P. Keneipp, who owns a farm just outside the city limits of Mt. Carmel, besides considerable property in the city. Mr. Keneipp was born in Mt. Carmel, May 9, 1852, son of Silas and Jane (Harvey) Keneipp. Silas Keneipp was born in Painesville, Ohio, son of Charles Keneipp, a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and his wife, who was born in Bedford, Ohio, was a daughter of Beauchamp and Hester (Saylor) Harvey.

The parents of Silas Keneipp died when he was but eleven years of age, and he came to Mt. Carmel with his uncle, Andrew Keneipp. He remained in that city, while his uncle went to Lawrence County, Ill. Silas Keneipp learned the trade of blacksmith and afterward bought out his employer, conducting the shop until 1878, when he sold out and purchased a farm of 120 acres just west of Mt. Carmel. Besides operating his farm he conducted a saw-mill, but retired from active business several years before his death, which occurred about 1882. He was born July 29, 1811, and his wife, who was born October 17, 1817, died about 1873. They had children as follows: George M., died in 1898; Edward B., of Mt. Carmel; Mary E., Mrs. Major Chapman, deceased; Cyrus H., of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Benjamin F., deceased; Maria J., Mrs. Charles Calverly, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Alexander P.; Judith Hester, married A. M. Orr, of Mt. Carmel Precinct.

Until six years of age Alexander P. Keneipp lived in Mt. Carmel, when his parents moved to their farm a little way outside the city limits. He attended the district school and Central Normal College, at Danville, Ind. After his father's death he inherited the homestead. He was married, May 18, 1885, to Gertrude Ebert, born July 6, 1863, in Byron, Germany, daughter of Andrus and Margarita Ebert. Her parents died in Germany and she came to Mt. Carmel when nineteen years old, living with a sister until she found employment. She and her husband were married in Mt. Carmel. Mrs. Keneipp died December 19, 1902, and her loss was widely mourned. She was a conscientious Christian, discharging her duty to her family, a kind neighbor and true friend. Mr. Keneipp and his wife have had children as follows: Mary Elizabeth, born April 12, 1886, at home; Laura Gertrude, April 5, 1888, married Paul H. Kolb; Catherine Jane, born November 23, 1889, at home; Judith Esther, born September 20, 1891, died August 17, 1892; James Silas, born June 3, 1893, died August 25, 1894; Helena Margaretta, born June 13, 1894, at home; Albion W. Tourgee, born September 12, 1897, and Frances Wilhelmina, born November 17, 1900, at home.

Mr. Keneipp is a most intelligent and enterprising farmer and gives close attention to all the details of his work. He taught school a few winters before his marriage, but has since devoted his entire time and attention to his agricultural operations. A Republican politically, he has been prominent in political affairs, has served fifteen years as School Director, and has been identified with every movement for public improvement and the general welfare. In religious views he is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church and has contributed his share to the work of his church. A useful and representative citizen he has a large number of friends.

KENEIPP, Cyrus Harvey, a farmer of Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he owns an extensive farm, is a native of the precinct where he resides, born July 26, 1846. He is a son of Silas and Jane (Harvey) Keneipp, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Wabash County, Ill. Mrs. Keneipp's father and mother, Beauchamp and Hester Harvey, were natives of Ohio. Silas Keneipp was one of the earliest settlers of Mt. Carmel, and the land he secured was all covered with timber. Upon his marriage he settled a mile and a half southwest of Mt. Carmel, and here spent the remainder of his life, passing away about 1876. His widow survived several years and died about 1889. They were parents of children as follows: George M., deceased; Edward, of Mt. Carmel; Ellen, deceased, wife of Major Chapman, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Maria, Mrs. Charles Calverly, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Alexander, of Mt. Carmel; Frank, died at the age of eight years, and Judith, Mrs. A. M. Orr, of Mt. Carmel.

The boyhood of Cyrus H. Keneipp was spent on his father's farm near Mt. Carmel, where he resided with his parents until his marriage, in December, 1869, to Catherine Wilhelm, daughter of Conrad and Gertrude (Smith) Wilhelm, both natives of Worms, Germany. Mr. Wilhelm's father, Conrad Wilhelm, and his wife's father, William Smith, came to Wabash County in an early day, and here Mrs. Keneipp's parents were married. They settled on a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he died, about 1858, and his widow lived in Mt. Carmel until her death, in 1890. After his marriage Mr. Keneipp moved to his farm of eighty acres, one and a half miles southwest of Mt. Carmel. He had to clear a large part of this land, erected on it modern buildings and made all possible improvements, adding to his possessions from time to time, until he is now the owner of 332 acres, all well improved. He raises registered Hereford cattle and has a good grade of horses and hogs. Mr. Keneipp is independent in political matters and votes for the man he considers best fitted to hold office. He belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church of Mt. Carmel, ranks as one of the intelligent and successful farmers of Wabash County, and is held in high esteem by all who know him. He takes an active interest in political affairs, although he does not care for public office.

Mr. Keneipp and his wife have one son, Stewart, born June 11, 1871, who resides on part of the home farm. He married Maud Murray, born in Mt. Carmel, daughter of William and Lucy (Bonminger) Murray, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Mt. Carmel. Three children have been born of this marriage: Helen and Richard, at home, and Wilhelm, born in August, 1898, but died in May, 1907.

KENEIPP, Capt. George M. (deceased), a highly honored citizen of Wabash County, Ill., and a veteran of the Civil War, died on his farm a mile and a half west of Mt. Carmel, October 14, 1889. He had spent his entire life in Mt. Carmel and vicinity, with the exception of three years and eight months' service in the Union Army. He was a most generous and kind-hearted man, honest and upright in his dealings, conscientious in his relations with his fellow-men, pure in politics and faithful to his church, and was mourned most sincerely by his family and a host of warm personal friends. He had served his country most faithfully and fulfilled his every duty in public and private life, and had won the highest esteem of all who knew him.

Captain Keneipp was born at Mt. Carmel, March 18, 1838, son of Silas and Jane (Harvey) Keneipp. Silas Keneipp was born July 29, 1811, near Winchester, Geauga County, Ohio, and came with his uncle to Mt. Carmel, in 1827. There he learned the trade of a blacksmith with James H. Beall, afterward buying a shop of his own and carrying on business in this line for a quarter of a century. In 1859 he moved to his farm near Mt. Carmel, where he spent the remainder of his life, and died April 18, 1883.

The founder of the Keneipp family in America was Christian Keneipp, a Hessian soldier, who was captured at Trenton, and later joined the Continental Army. After the war he married and located in Geauga County, Ohio. Many of his descendants settled in Wabash and Lawrence Counties, Ill.

Captain Keneipp received his education in the public schools of Mt. Carmel, and then learned the blacksmith trade in his father's shop. He moved to the country with the family in 1859, and there followed farming until his enlistment in the war, September 1, 1861. He became private in Company G, Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and November 19, 1862, was commissioned First Lieutenant, and on March 24, 1864, promoted to the rank of Captain, his entire service being in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Army Corps, Army of the Tennessee. He was wounded by a shell April 6, 1862, at Shiloh, and again wounded by a gunshot in the hip, at Jonesboro, Ga., September 1, 1864, while commanding his company on the advance skirmish line. He was a member of T. S. Bowers Post, No. 125, Grand Army of the Republic.

Captain Keneipp was married, February 17, 1864, at Mt. Carmel, Ill., to Miss Rosalind Murray, daughter of Henry and Marilla A. Murray, who was born at Oxford, Holmes County, Ohio, December 20, 1844, and moved with her parents from Coshocton County, Ohio, to Mt. Carmel, Ill., November 1, 1858. Five children survive Capt. Keneipp, namely: Dr. E. P. and Hugh, of Washington, D. C.; Rolla, of Illinois; two daughters, Rosalind and Mary Ethel, who reside with their mother, in Mt. Carmel. Capt. Keneipp owned 102 acres of land near Mt. Carmel, and had operated this farm several years, with success. He was buried in Rose Hill Cemetery. His widow moved to Mt. Carmel in 1894.

KENNARD, Frank, who has a well developed farm in Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of that county, born in Bellmont Precinct, February 2, 1859, a son of Robert and Sarah Jane (Paul) Kennard, natives of Mason County, Ky. The parents were married in Kentucky and soon after removed to Wabash County, buying a farm in Bellmont Precinct, where they lived for a time, then purchased another place in the same precinct. In 1876 they moved to Coffee Precinct, and he and his wife both died in the village of Rochester. Their children were: Nancy, married Joseph Kennard, of Bellmont Precinct; Angeline, married George Adamson, and died in Coffee Precinct; Henry, of Griffin, Posey County, Ind.; Frank; Ella, died at the age of sixteen years; Emma, Mrs. Robinson, of Sullivan County, Ind.; Alvin, died at the age of twenty-eight years; James, of Sullivan, Ind.; Fannie, Mrs. Owen Gard, of Griffin, Ind.; Laura, Mrs. George Smothers, of Missouri.

The education of Frank Kennard was acquired at the Mud Prairie and Ridge District Schools, and he lived with his parents until his marriage, March 27, 1885, to Victoria Willyard, of Coffee Precinct, a daughter of Wesley and Elizabeth (Degan) Willyard, both natives of Wabash County. Mr. Kennard and his wife first rented a farm in Coffee Precinct, where they lived four years, then moved to old Rochester, where they purchased a farm, and after living on it four years rented the Keen farm, also in Coffee Precinct, which they occupied four years. They then moved to the Village of Keensburg, where they resided six months, after which they purchased the farm of eighty-one and a half acres in Coffee Precinct, adjoining Rochester. This place was only partly cleared and he has since continued clearing and developing it until he had but five acres of timber, which he had lately cleared and put under cultivation. He has erected on it substantial buildings and has an excellent farm. He also owns eight lots in Rochester. He does general farming and raises cattle and hogs. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kennard, namely: Alfred, at home; Ephraim, a school teacher, also lives at home; Essie, Mrs. Robert Strauthers, of Keensburg; Charles, at home.

Mr. Kennard has always been an industrious and energetic farmer and has followed the most approved and modern methods of carrying on his agricultural work. He is well known and much esteemed in the community which is his home, and has a host of friends. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Keensburg. In political views he is a Democrat and served ten years as School Director, having also served as Drainage Commissioner since 1907.

KINGSBURY, Alonzo M.—A man who has served in several positions of public trust and has been a successful farmer and business man, is Alonzo M. Kingsbury, now living in Mt. Carmel, Ill. The family has been prominent in Wabash County for many years, and has contributed a fair share to the growth and development of public and private enterprises. Alonzo M. Kingsbury was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, April 13, 1854, a son of Wooster P. and Elizabeth Ann (Reel) Kingsbury, mentioned in connection with the sketch of Theodore H. Kingsbury, to be found also in this volume.

After completing the course in the district schools of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Mr. Kingsbury took a business course at the Normal School at Danville, Ind. After reaching his majority he taught school in winter and worked on a farm during the summer for eight years, and after his marriage began farming on his own account, on a farm which was owned by his wife, in Coffee Precinct. Two years later the home was burned and he then bought forty acres adjoining this farm upon which he built a residence where the family lived ten years. Mr. Kingsbury then traded this place for the farm owned by his wife's parents, which joined the home place, then rented his farm and went to Decatur, Ill., for the purpose of affording his children good educational advantages. However, he spent but one year in Decatur, then locating in Mt. Carmel, where he is employed weighing grain. He rents his farm and through the summer months looks after it somewhat himself. He is a business man of superior judgment and has been very successful in his transactions. He is a man of enterprising and industrious nature and has been well fitted by experience and training, for the position he now occupies.

Mr. Kingsbury was married, April 5, 1883, to Julia E. Heniken, who was born in Coffee Precinct, a daughter of George W. and Margaret J. (Frier) Heniken, the father a native of Wayne County, Ill., and the mother of New England. Children have been born to Mr. Kingsbury and wife as follows: Ethel J., Mrs. Benjamin Johnson, of Dexter, Ill.; and Leah D., Gladys Naomi, Alonzo D. and Robert L., all at home. Mr. Kingsbury is well known in Wabash County and has spent almost his entire life within its limits. The spring of the year when he was twenty-three years old he went to Girard, Crawford County, Kan., where he spent one year, working on the farm through the summer and spending the winter in Girard.

Politically Mr. Kingsbury is a supporter of the principles of the Republican party. He served two terms as Justice of the Peace in Coffee Precinct, a period of eight years, and served three terms of three years each on the School Board. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America No. 2193, of Keensburg.

KINGSBURY, Theodore H.—Many men are able to acquire success in several different lines of work, and among the residents of Wabash County, Ill., who have been fortunate in investing in and carrying on, various enterprises, is Theodore H. Kingsbury, now a resident of Mt. Carmel. Mr. Kingsbury was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, October 26, 1859, a son of Wooster P. and Elizabeth Ann (Reel) Kingsbury. The father was a native of Meigs County, Ohio, and the mother of Wabash County, Ill. The grandfather, Emanuel Reel, of Indiana, was among the first settlers in Wabash County and became a successful farmer of Mt. Carmel Precinct. He died in 1890, at the age of eighty-five years. The paternal grandparents were also early settlers of Wabash County and later moved to Richland County, where they conducted a store, and sometime afterward returned to Mt. Carmel, Wabash County, where the grandfather died about 1875, at the age of sixty-three years, having spent his last days in Friendsville.

Wooster P. Kingsbury and his wife were married in Wabash County and owned a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, although for eleven years after their marriage they traveled through that part of the State in the interest of a Bible Society. Mr. Kingsbury then turned his attention to farming and served as a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church. About fourteen years before his death he moved to Ponca, Neb., where he died June 17, 1896. His wife died in March, 1887, and he married (second) Mary Ann Scott, by whom he had no children. She now lives at Owensville, Ind. By his first marriage his children were: A. M., of Mt. Carmel; L. E., of Chicago, Ill.; Laura V., Mrs. H. B. Andrews, of Knoxville, Ill.; Theodore H.; Clarence A., an attorney-at-law, at Ponca, Neb.; Emery S., an attorney living at Evansville, Ind.;

Paul Sears

Luella May, of Decatur, Ill.; Mary J., of Chicago; Elmer B., who conducts a newspaper at Ponca, Neb.; Rosa E., Mrs. Rudy Bachman, of Ponca, Neb.

Theodore H. Kingsbury received his education in the common schools and, when old enough, began farm work for others. He continued in this line of employment until his marriage, in March, 1887, to Martha A. Lincoln, who was born in Milltown, Harrison County, Ind., a daughter of Mordecai and Mary (Spencer) Lincoln. After his marriage Mr. Kingsbury rented a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct for a year and a half, then bought thirty-two and a half acres of land, which was a part of his Grandfather Reel's farm. Two years later he sold this and bought his father's farm which was his birthplace, and on which he carried on farming three years, after which he bought eighty acres in Mt. Carmel Precinct. This he cultivated two years, when he sold it and bought another farm, where he lived three years. He then traded his last purchase for city property at Mt. Carmel, and eight months later traded this property, taking in its place his father's old farm, which he carried on seven years. Then having sold this out, he purchased another farm, but without operating it himself located in Mt. Carmel and there engaged in real estate business for one year, after which he embarked in his present business, dealing in stock feed and seed-grains, in which he has been very successful and has built up a good trade.

The children born to Mr. Kingsbury and his wife are: Everett E., of Mt. Carmel; Grace May, Mrs. A. A. Kuhn, of St. Louis, Mo.; Elsie E., at home; Vern E., also at home. The family are members of the Christian Church and in political affiliations Mr. Kingsbury is a Republican, although he takes no very active part in public affairs, being chiefly absorbed by his business affairs. In his dealings with others he has invariably proved himself a man of probity and high honor, and those who have transacted business with him have been fairly dealt with. Fraternally he belongs to Columbia Camp, No. 1619, Modern Woodmen of America, of Mt. Carmel, and Knights of Pythias, Wabash Lodge, No. 227.

KITCHENE, George Theodore, a former citizen of Wabash County residing in the vicinity of Mt. Carmel, but now a resident of Vermontville, Mich., was born in Charleston, Coles County, Ill., June 30, 1871, a son of Georgius and Belle Perryman Kitchene, natives respectively of Paris, France, and Pana, Ill. The father emigrated to the United States when a young man and became a telegraph operator in the State of New York. Later he secured a position with the Big Four Railroad, at Charleston, Ill. He and his wife had two children, namely: Georgius, who died at the age of two years, and George T. When the latter was about six months old his mother secured a divorce from her husband and subsequently married Dr. J. T. Dollohan, a dentist of Sumner, Ill., where he died August 14, 1902. His widow still resides at Sumner. They had children as follows: John Franklin, a traveling salesman in Illinois; Harry Keeley, also a traveling salesman, and Nellie Isabel, widow of John Lature, who has one daughter, Laverne, and lives with her mother.

After receiving his education in the public schools George T. Kitchene started working as a painter and paper-hanger, and followed this occupation at Sumner and Olney, Ill., some time, then engaged in conducting a feather renovator, which he continued in Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri and Texas. He married, September 1, 1895, Katie Reel, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, and is a daughter of David S. and Margaret (Gard) Reel, both natives of Wabash County. Her mother, who was born March 10, 1822, still resides in Mt. Carmel Precinct, and Mr. Kitchene's maternal grandmother, Mrs. Marks, who was born in April, 1831, now lives in Olney, Ill. The children born to Mr. Kitchene and wife were: Marie L., born May 3, 1898; George A., born June 30, 1900; Mabel E., born October 4, 1903.

After his marriage Mr. Kitchene lived in Mt. Carmel one year and then bought a ten-acre tract of land two miles north of Mt. Carmel, to which he later added nine acres, and also owned a five-acre tract one-half mile east. He rented out his land and followed the business of renovating feathers. His wife is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and active in church work. Mr. Kitchene is a Republican in politics and fraternally a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge No. 35, of Mt. Carmel, and Encampment No. 11, his wife also being a member of the Rebekah Lodge No. 441. He also belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America No. 916, of Mt. Carmel, and his wife is a member of Royal Neighbors No. 1177. He is a man of energy and industry and has established himself in the good opinion and respect of his neighbors. During the year 1910 Mr. Kitchene removed to his present home at Vermontville, Eaton County, Mich.

KNOWLES, James, a veteran of the Civil War and a most highly honored citizen of Keensburg Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., has lived more than half a century in the county and has been actively identified with its progress and welfare. Mr. Knowles was born in Gibson County, Ind., September 28, 1821, son of Ephraim and Cynthia (Kimball) Knowles, the former a native of Georgia and the latter of Gibson County. The grandparents were James and Elizabeth (Marvel) Knowles, of Georgia, and Jesse and Sarah (Rolloson) Kimball, natives respectively of New England and Pennsylvania. Jesse Kimball was a Revolutionary soldier and came to Posey County, Ind., at an early day. There he spent the remainder of his life, except the last few years, which he spent with his daughter, Mrs. Knowles. James Knowles and his wife located in Gibson County, Ind., in 1812, securing a tract of government land near Owensville. He was a prominent Whig.

After their marriage Ephraim Knowles and his wife settled on a farm in Gibson County, where he died August 17, 1882, being about eighty-five years of age, as his birth occurred in 1797. His wife was born April 1, 1809, and died October 4, 1865. They were married October 20, 1825, and their children were: William and Polly, deceased; Lucinda, widow of Ezra B. Keen, of Keensburg; James; Elizabeth, widow of Milton Westfall, of Findlay, Ohio; Patience married Henry Pollard and died at Owensville, Ind.; Almira, Mrs. Harvey Maricle, of Boone, Neb.; Mahala, married Florin Martin and died in Wabash County; Cynthia, Mrs. Coleman, died in Boone, Neb.; Jesse, of Canon City, Colo.; Eli and Frank, died in Gibson County, Ind.; Eliza, widow of Henry Burke, of Mt. Vernon, Ill.

James Knowles, the subject of this sketch, lived with his parents in Gibson County, Ind., until he was twenty-four years old, then located in Wabash County, Ill., and there worked for a time at farming and wood-cutting, finally purchasing 280 acres of land in Section 7 of Keensburg Precinct, where he developed a fine farm. He has been married three times. His first marriage took place October 30, 1856, when he was united with Mary McLean, a native of Wabash County and daughter of Henry and Susan (Grayson) McLean. Children as follows were born of this marriage: William Harvey, born July 24, 1857, died in January, 1888; Susan A., born November 17, 1859, married Clarence Harvey, of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Ephraim H., born May 31, 1862, lives with his father; and Cynthia, born April 21, 1868, also at home. Mrs. Knowles died February 19, 1898.

The second marriage of Mr. Knowles occurred March 27, 1900, when he was united with Mrs. Ellen (Braxton) Francisco, a widow, whose death occurred November 17, 1905. Mr. Knowles married (third) December 23, 1906, Fannie McAllister, born at Marietta, Ohio, June 5, 1867, daughter of James A. and Mary (Noffsinger) McAllister, natives of Morgan County, Ohio. Her grandparents were Andrew and Hannah (Cramer) McAllister, natives respectively of Virginia and Pennsylvania, and James and Jane (Lynn) Noffsinger, the former born in 1799, in Greene County, Pa., and the latter in 1805, in Belmont County, Ohio. James Noffsinger was a son of Mathias and Nancy (Brill) Noffsinger, the former a native of Pennsylvania and a soldier in the Revolutionary War, son of Jacob Noffsinger, who came from Germany to the United States, crossing the ocean on the ship "Brotherhood," and locating in Philadelphia. Nancy (Brill) Noffsinger was a native of Virginia. James and Mary (Noffsinger) McAllister came to Indianapolis in 1899 and there their daughter was married to Mr. Knowles.

Before his first marriage Mr. Knowles had purchased a tract of land in Wabash County, mostly covered with timber. He set about clearing and improving it and eventually put practically all of it under cultivation, and there carried on general farming with excellent success. Some years since he moved to Belmont and engaged in business with his son William Harvey, but after the death of the latter in 1888, the father returned to his farm, where he erected a handsome residence. Later he bought a lot and erected a home in Mt. Carmel, living there three years, then moved to Paoli, Ind., where he owned property, and lived there in retirement four years, then sold out and returned to the home farm. He has rented his land for many years and has sold seventy acres of it, now retaining 210 acres.

Mr. Knowles enlisted, in February, 1864, in Company K, Sixty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and marched with Sherman to the sea. He was discharged in July, 1865, having never been wounded or taken prisoner. He is a member of Bowers Post No. 125, G. A. R., of Mt. Carmel. In religious views he is a Congregationalist and in politics a Republican. He is one of the best known men in his community and has a large number of friends.

KOLB, Adam.—Many farmers in Illinois attain success to such an extent that, in their old age, they are able to retire to some neighboring town or city, and spend the remainder of their lives in comparative ease and comfort. Among such residents of Mt. Carmel, in Wabash County, may be mentioned Adam Kolb, who carried on his farm thirty-three years, then sold out and retired. Mr. Kolb was born in Bavaria, Germany, February 22, 1835, a son of Snitbert and Elizabeth (Dunkel) Kolb. The parents came to the United States and bought a farm a few miles from Mt. Carmel, where they built a log cabin and began clearing their land, which was mostly covered with timber. Mr. Kolb increased his holdings from eighty to 160 acres, and died in 1885. His widow moved with her family to Mt. Carmel about 1896, and died there in 1906, having reached the age of about eighty-nine years. She and her husband had nine children, of whom six survive, namely: Adam, the oldest; Lawrence, of St. Maries, Jasper County, Ill.; John, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Joseph, of Mt. Carmel; Mary, widow of Henry Ernest, of Mt. Carmel; Margaret, Mrs. Joseph Herberholt, living near Grayville, Ill.

The childhood of Adam Kolb was spent on a farm and he was reared to hard work. He remained at home until his marriage, then bought a farm near Rochester, Wabash County, but after the death of his wife sold this and bought another farm three and one-half miles northwest of Mt. Carmel, where he remained after his second marriage, and until September, 1901, when he sold out and bought three houses and lots in Mt. Carmel. Since then he has not engaged in any active work.

Mr. Kolb married (first) in 1860, Josephine Mecher, who was born in Louisville, Ky., and they had two children, who died in infancy.

J. H. Seiler

Mrs. Kolb died in 1863. Mr. Kolb married (second) on February 11, 1867, Anna Kohlhaas, who was born in Wabash County, daughter of John and Mary Ann (Libolt) Kohlhaas, the former born in Prussia and the latter in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. Coming to America Mr. Kohlhaas landed at Baltimore, Md., August 1, 1836, and went directly to Natchez, Miss., where he worked for a short time and then worked on the railroad to reach Louisville, Ky., where he married. His wife had come there with her parents. Soon after their marriage they located in Louisiana and, a few years later, moved to West Salem, Ill., where they spent five years, then located near Friendsville, Wabash County, where they bought a farm of 160 acres. His wife died March 4, 1856, and he resided with his son-in-law, Mr. Kolb, until his death, December 1, 1875, at the age of eighty-one years.

Mr. Kolb had children by his second marriage as follows: Charles, of Chester, Ill.; George, an attorney practicing in Chicago; Peter J., an attorney at Mt. Carmel, given extended mention elsewhere in this work; Mary, Mrs. Joseph Ankenbrand, of Cleveland, Ohio; Laura, Mrs. Joseph Moeller, of Mt. Carmel. Mr. Kolb is a staunch supporter of the Democratic party and takes an active interest in current issues and events; is a Catholic in religious belief. He and his wife have reared a family of whom they may well be proud, and in this way have deserved all the honor and respect which they are accorded. They have a large circle of friends and are universally esteemed.

KOLB, Peter J.—Among the prominent young business men of Mt. Carmel, Ill., may be mentioned Peter J. Kolb, who is successfully engaged in the practice of law and is interested in several local enterprises, and is also prominent in political affairs. He was elected State's Attorney of Wabash County, serving from December, 1904, until December, 1908, and in November, 1909, was appointed Master in Chancery, of Wabash County. Mr. Kolb was born three miles west of Mt. Carmel, August 5, 1874, a son of Adam and Anna (Kohlhaas) Kolb, the former a native of Thulba, Bavaria, Germany, and the latter of Wabash County, Ill. The grandparents were Suihbert and Elizabeth (Dunkel) Kolb, of Bavaria, and John and Mary (Leipold) Kohlhaas.

The Kolb family came to Wabash County in 1840, and settled on a farm northwest of Mt. Carmel. Some time later Mr. Kohlhaas came to America, making the trip in a sailing vessel and spending three months on the ocean. He landed at Baltimore, then worked his way west, finally locating near Mt. Carmel on a farm. Adam Kolb was married in Wabash County in 1867, and then settled on a farm where he and his wife lived until September, 1900, when he sold out and moved to Mt. Carmel, where he and his wife now reside. They had the following children: Charles H., in business at Chester, Ill.; George, who is practicing law at Chicago; Peter J.; Mary, Mrs. Joseph Ankenbrand, of Cleveland, Ohio; Laura, Mrs. Joseph Moeller, of Mt. Carmel.

Peter J. Kolb received his education in Wabash County schools and lived at home until nineteen years of age, then began teaching in the district schools of Wabash County, which he continued for four years, when he came to Mt. Carmel and taught in the high school one and a half years. In December, 1898, he resigned to accept the position of Deputy County Clerk, under George King, which office he held two years. He had attended the Illinois Normal University at Carbondale, during the winter of 1892-93, and the following winter engaged in teaching, as before mentioned. During the summer of 1895 he attended the Indiana Normal at Danville, Ind., and during the summer of 1896 attended Austin College, of Ellingham, Ill. In the fall of 1896 he began reading law with Messrs. Leeds & Ramsey, at Mt. Carmel, and the following summer (1897) attended school at Bloomington (Ill.) Law School. Mr. Kolb was admitted to the Bar in December, 1899, at Mt. Vernon, Ill., and September 25, 1900, formed a partnership with Judge S. Z. Landes, which association continued until the first Monday in December, 1903, when Mr. Landes was elected County Judge and Mr. Kolb continued in practice alone. He had acquired valuable experience through his association with Judge Landes and has been very successful throughout his professional career, standing high in the estimation of all with whom he has been associated.

Besides his public offices, the duties of which Mr. Kolb has performed with marked ability, he is Vice-President and Director of the First National Bank, of Mt. Carmel, and is also President and Corporation Director of the Columbian Building and Loan Association, of Wabash County. In November, 1906, he and A. E. Smith purchased the "Mt. Carmel Register," from F. W. Havill, and conducted the paper until February, 1908, when the business was incorporated under the name of the Mt. Carmel Register Company. Mr. Kolb is one of the most public-spirited and enterprising young men of Mt. Carmel and has done much to interest others in its welfare. He organized the Knights of Columbus in that city, October 18, 1908, and since then has served as Grand Knight. He is a member of the B. P. O. E., No. 715, of Mt. Carmel, and he and his family are members of the Catholic Church.

Mr. Kolb married, October 15, 1902, Helen Fridrich, who was born in Mt. Carmel, August 25, 1879, a daughter of Nicholas and Margaret (Peter) Fridrich, and two children have been born of this marriage: Margaret, born January 21, 1904, and Walter, born December 6, 1908.

KUHN, Christian.—Among the natives of Germany who have met with success in Mt. Carmel, Ill., is Christian Kuhn, who was born in Langenbrücken, Baden, February 5, 1875, son of Wendelin and Sophia (Haffner) Kuhn, who died in Germany. At the age of seventeen years Mr.

Kuhn left his home and native land, and came to Illinois to start life on his own account. He worked first in a wagon-shop for his uncle, Joseph Kuhn, and four years later went to St. Louis and worked nine months in the butchering business, but selling out his interests on account of poor health, for two years worked for others. Later, he again embarked in the butchering business in Mt. Carmel in company with Harvey Keneipp, but one year later bought out his partner and continued the business one year alone, when he sold out and worked five months for others. He then started business on his own account, but a year later sold out and returned to Germany on a two months' visit. Upon returning to Mt. Carmel he engaged in the livery business with Benjamin Moore (now Sheriff of Wabash County) and Harvey Keneipp, but four months later sold out his interests to his partners and opened a butchering establishment at Princeton, Ind., carrying on this enterprise one year. He then returned to Mt. Carmel and opened a butcher's shop there, which he sold two years later, but after being out of business six months took up the same business in partnership with H. P. Lowry on Market Street. They have built up a fine trade and have an attractive line of salt and fresh meat and fish. They also handle a large amount of poultry and are both able, intelligent business men, ready to take good care of their customers' needs and supply the best of everything. They have established a reputation for honest and upright dealings, and those who do business with them feel assured of fair treatment.

September 6, 1905, Mr. Kuhn married Effie M. Files, who was born in Grayville, Ill., her parents being both natives of Wabash County. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kuhn are: Mildred, Hazel and Fred.

Mr. Kuhn is considered one of the enterprising and representative citizens of Mt. Carmel, taking an active interest in all worthy causes and doing his full share toward the development of the community. Politically he is a Republican and is a member of the Evangelical Church. He was educated in the common schools of his native country, but has been ambitious to improve his knowledge of the English language and has learned much through his own efforts and in the school of experience. He is a member of the K. of P. and the I. O. R. M., of Mt. Carmel, and has a large number of friends.

LANDES, Hon. Silas Z. (deceased).—Few men have been better known in Wabash County, Ill., than was the late Hon. Silas Z. Landes, who practiced law at Mt. Carmel for nearly half a century, and was prominently identified with the public interests of the city and county for a long period. As a lawyer Judge Landes will be ranked as one of the most eminent, faithful and successful practitioners of Southern Illinois. He was a devoted and consistent member of the Catholic Church and a liberal contributor to its support. By his energy and fine business ability he had acquired a handsome fortune and was liberal in his efforts to relieve suffering and distress, but was extremely modest about his charitable deeds. By nature he was ardent, positive and honest, and always fearless and resolute in prosecution of his purposes. He possessed indomitable energy which, combined with his capacity for physical endurance, made him almost invincible in his professional, political and business undertakings. His loyalty to his friends and to any cause he espoused, was absolutely unflinching and he labored and wrought with unwearied zeal.

Judge Landes was born May 15, 1842, in Augusta County, Va., whence he was brought by his parents, John and Delila (Skelton) Landes, to Edgar County, Ill., in 1856, the family later moving to Henry County, Mo. John Landes died in Wabash County, Ill., December 1, 1888, his wife having passed away in Edgar County, April 28, 1864. The early education of Silas Z. Landes was secured in the subscription schools of Virginia, and later he attended the academy at Paris, Ill., where he made up his mind to adopt the profession of a lawyer, subsequently entering the office of Amos Green, at Paris. During the time he was studying law he supported himself by teaching in the schools of his vicinity. He pursued his studies diligently and, at the August term of the Supreme Court in 1863, held at Springfield, he was examined and admitted to the Bar. In May, 1864, he came to Mt. Carmel and opened an office, and that city was the field of his practice until his death. His practice was large and lucrative, the direct result of close application, studious habits and unflagging zeal and industry in the cause of his clients.

A Democrat in his political beliefs, Mr. Landes at various times represented his party in numerous positions of trust and honor. In 1872 he was nominated and elected State's Attorney for Wabash County, was re-elected in 1876 and again in 1880, and in that capacity earned the reputation of an able and vigilant prosecutor. In April, 1878, he was appointed Master in Chancery and held that office until 1883. In 1882 his zeal and fidelity to his party made him a suitable candidate for Congressional honors in his district. In the convention which met at Olney to nominate a candidate for Congress, he was placed in nomination and led all competitors for about 350 ballots, but withdrew from the race in the interest of harmony, although he was the strongest man in the convention, and his withdrawal resulted in the nomination and subsequent election of Judge Shaw as Congressman from the Eighteenth District. In 1884 he was the nominee of his party for Congress, and was elected, being re-elected in 1886, and served from 1885 until 1889. He was a member of the Democratic State Central Committee in 1876. On the first Monday of June, 1891, he was elected to the Circuit Bench, performing his duties in this connection with exceptional credit for six years.

Louisa Kisly Seiber

On October 31, 1865, Mr. Landes was married to Clarissa Sears, who was born in Mt. Carmel, daughter of Paul and Eliza J. (Gibson) Sears. Dr. Paul Sears was born near Zanesville, Ohio, June 5, 1820, a son of Dr. Nathan Sears, who was born in Massachusetts and graduated in medicine in Boston, studying in the office of Dr. Bryant, the father of William Cullen Bryant. After his graduation Dr. Nathan Sears came to Zanesville, where he practiced his profession until 1834, when he removed to Wayne County, Mich., and in 1839 came to Mt. Carmel, Ill., continuing a resident of the latter place until his death, February 1, 1848. Dr. Paul Sears received his early education at Granville, Ohio, and Elyria (Ohio) High School and College, and went to Michigan with his father. He commenced the study of medicine with his father and in 1843 entered the Ohio Medical College, at Cincinnati, from which he received his diploma in 1845, after which he came to Mt. Carmel, where he soon built up a large practice in the city and vicinity, not infrequently riding sixty miles in twenty-four hours to call upon his patients. He was known in almost every household in Wabash and the surrounding counties. Later he opened a drug store in Mt. Carmel and also engaged in other enterprises, and achieved success professionally and financially. On May 5, 1841, Dr. Sears married Eliza J. Gibson, of Cincinnati, daughter of Alexander and Martha (Sturges) Gibson, and there were three children born of this union: Dr. Alfred Alexander, who died December 13, 1867; Charles Nathan, who died August 18, 1864, and Clarissa, who became the wife of Judge Landes.

To the marriage of Judge and Mrs. Landes eleven children were born, two of whom survive, viz.: Mrs. Pauline S. L. Eichhorn and Bernard S., both of Mt. Carmel. One son, Herbert S., a young man of promise, died after being practically grown, but the remaining children died in infancy. The mother of these children died November 7th, 1905. Judge Landes died May 23, 1910, being at the time of his demise sixty-eight years of age. He enjoyed the affection and admiration of his multitudes of friends, and the esteem and respect of his opponents. He was always a student and a clear thinker and his mind was ever under the dominion of serious and earnest thought. He was frank, decisive and masterful in every situation. He had strong passions and intense convictions, but was conservative and judicious. He was a popular, strong and resourceful citizen, who profoundly impressed his life upon the affairs and the people of Wabash County.

LEACH, Horace J.—A man who is able to embark in an enterprise with very small capital and influence, and make a success of it through his energy, ambition and persistence, deserves his good fortune. Horace J. Leach, of Mt. Carmel, Ill., has built up a good business and since 1903, has been Manager of the Mt. Carmel Telephone Company, of which he is principal owner, and which he organized and promoted. Mr. Leach was born at Bone Gap, Edwards County, Ill., November 8, 1858, a son of Daniel B. and Maria (Root) Leach, the former a native of Smithville Flats, N. Y., and the latter of Virginia. Daniel B. Leach left home in 1839, at the age of seventeen years, and began farming in the neighborhood of Bone Gap, and his wife came with her parents to Edwards County, Ill., about the same year. At the time of their marriage he had to send to his home in New York for money to pay for a license, and when a five-dollar bill returned he found it difficult to dispose of it. However, he found a man who was going to New York, and who was willing to take it in exchange for five silver dollars. Mr. Leach entered land from the Government, part prairie and part timber, and used a team of oxen in plowing the virgin soil. He lived on this farm from the time he was twenty years old until his death, in February, 1909, and his widow still resides on the home place. He was a devoted member and a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church and often filled vacancies in neighboring pulpits. Of their twelve children eleven lived to maturity and Horace J. is the third from the youngest.

In boyhood Horace J. Leach attended the district schools and helped with the work on his father's farm until sixteen years of age, and then he and two brothers traveled through Wayne, Edwards and Wabash Counties, with a portable saw-mill. He continued in this enterprise until he was about twenty-seven years of age, then sold out and engaged in farming on Sugar Creek, four miles southwest of Mt. Carmel. He carried on his farm until 1896, when his left ankle being broken, necessitated his giving up this kind of work, so he looked about for some other occupation. For two years he traveled for the New York Life Insurance Company, and during the following year for the Diamond Publishing Company, of Minneapolis, Minn. Soon afterwards he engaged in the telephone business, and in 1903 promoted and incorporated the Mt. Carmel Telephone Company (Independent), with which he is still connected. He had very little capital of his own and almost no experience in this line, but by hard work, determination and perseverance he has made a success of the enterprise.

In opposition was an old established Cumberland Bell Company with its equipment already installed, but by using new and improved methods and giving fair treatment, the new company soon out-distanced the old company and has had a phenomenal growth from its inception. This fact has caused the old company to make numerous flattering offers and propositions to the new company to sell out to them, but this Mr. Leach has stubbornly and persistently refused to do. Probably not one man in one hundred, unaided and alone, would have had the courage to undertake the establishment of a business in face of the strong opposition that existed at that time. Mr. Leach can certainly be proud of what he has accomplished.

January 23, 1883, Mr. Leach married Anna M. Schrodt, who was born in Sugar Creek Precinct, Wabash County, daughter of Peter and Amanda (Reel) Schrodt. Mr. Schrodt was born in Germany and his wife in Wabash County. The children born of this union are as follows: Loren E.; Olive R., now Mrs. Guy Mundy; Virgil H., at home; Herschel B., who met his death at the age of thirteen years, as the result of an injury received when a log rolled on him in December, 1904; and Lester R., Edgar S., and Lottie R., all at home. Mr. Leach is a Republican and has served four years as Justice of the Peace. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, of Mt. Carmel. He and his wife are well known in the community and have many friends. Their oldest son, Loren, has been deaf since he was five years old, and received his education at the State School for Deaf and Dumb, at Jacksonville. He graduated from this institution and has now secured a good position in a furniture factory at Salamanca, N. Y.

LEEDS, Edgar Francis.—Many men have reason to be proud of their ancestors, not so much for important public positions which they have held, but because they have been sturdy pioneers in a new country and have lived in a manner that left conditions better for their having lived and worked in it. Edgar Francis Leeds, a prominent farmer of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is descended from several pioneer families of the county. He was born in Mt. Carmel, April 28, 1862, a son of Philip and Mary (Danforth) Leeds, the former a native of Dayton, Ohio, and the latter of Friendsville Precinct. The grandparents were Benjamin Leeds and his wife, the former of English parentage, and George and Ruth (Brown) Danforth, early settlers in Friendsville Precinct. Benjamin Leeds was one of the first merchants at Rochester, Wabash County, and also conducted a store at Mt. Carmel. George Danforth was a farmer and in later life moved to Sumner, Lawrence County, Ill. He died in 1902, at the age of eighty-nine years, and his wife died in 1906, at the age of ninety years.

After his marriage Philip Leeds located at Mt. Carmel and worked at the trade of carpenter. He also became a contractor and builder and erected many of the finest buildings in the vicinity. He died in February, 1885, and his widow now resides in Anna, Ill. Their children were: George, deceased; Edgar F.; William, deceased; Hattie, Mrs. Charles Harris, of Mt. Carmel; Harmon, deceased; Russell, of Tokio, Japan; Fannie, of San Francisco, Cal.

Edgar F. Leeds remained at home with his parents until ten years of age, then went to live with his uncle, Joshua Strop, four and one-half miles northwest of Mt. Carmel, where he remained until he reached his majority, meanwhile receiving his education in the district and

Mt. Carmel public schools. He started working on a farm as a young man and was employed in various places in Wabash County. In 1889 he purchased a farm of 160 acres on Section 22, Friendsville Precinct, and later sold it to such good advantage that he doubled the purchase price. He later moved to the home farm, to which he added forty acres about 1892. There were many improvements on the farm, to which he has added largely, and now has the entire place under cultivation. He has the buildings in good order and the whole place shows careful attention to details, which is one of the greatest attributes of success. Mr. Leeds fully understands the line of work in which he is engaged and endeavors to reap the maximum of profit from his work. He is industrious and thrifty and is considered one of the intelligent, representative farmers of his neighborhood.

Mr. Leeds married (first) in April, 1892, Merola Gardner, who was born in Friendsville Precinct, and they had two children—Larner and Verner, both at home. Mrs. Leeds died July 12, 1896, and June 10, 1897, Mr. Leeds married (second) Eva Litherland, who was born in Cherokee County, Kan., daughter of Ananias and Mary Jane (Gard) Litherland, the former a native of Indiana, and the latter of Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County. Her grandparents are: William and Susan (Hall) Litherland, of Indiana, and Justus and Elizabeth (Campbell) Gard, the latter of Tennessee. The Gards were early settlers in Wabash County. By this second marriage Mr. Leeds had children as follows: Ruth, May, Mary Bell and Blanche Marie. Mr. Leeds is a Socialist in political affiliations, and served for a time as School Director.

LEEDS, James A., among the prominent and influential farmers of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was for many years engaged in mercantile business at Allendale, and has been successful in all of his various enterprises. Mr. Leeds was born in Friendsville Precinct, September 6, 1858, a son of James and Annis (Ballard) Leeds, natives respectively of Dayton, Ohio, and Wabash County, Ill. His maternal grandparents were James and Vashti (Barney) Ballard, she born in Friendsville Precinct, daughter of William and Jerusha Barney, among the earliest settlers in the precinct, who located on Barney's Prairie and entered land from the Government where Friendsville is now located. James Ballard also settled in Friendsville Precinct and spent the remainder of his life in farming.

James Leeds was a physician and located in Mt. Carmel, where he practiced some years, and in 1849 removed to Friendsville. He was married at the latter place and practiced his profession there until his death. He and his wife had children as follows: Harry, M. D., of St. Francisville, Ill.; Edith, of Poseyville, Ind.; Mrs. Robert Tilton; James A.; Lyman, died in Mt. Carmel; Norman; Clara, Mrs. Grant Hall, of Mt. Carmel; Anson, of Colorado; Simon died at the age of eighteen years; Eva, Mrs. Robert Wallace, of Mt. Carmel Precinct.

RESIDENCE OF F. C. SEILER AND FAMILY, MT. CARMEL, PRECINCT

The education of James A. Leeds was obtained in public and private schools of his neighborhood and he lived at home until twenty-four years of age. He was married in June, 1884, to Miss Della McNair, born in Friendsville Precinct, daughter of Alfred and Lucinda (Newkirk) McNair, both of Friendsville Precinct. Alfred McNair, who served two terms as Sheriff of Wabash County, was born July 24, 1835, and was a son of Charles McNair, a pioneer settler of Wabash County. The younger man served with credit during the Civil War in Company I, Thirty-second Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and after his return developed into one of the leading citizens of his community. His entire life was spent in the county, and his death occurred, in 1905, on the farm where he was born. His first wife, who was a daughter of William Newkirk, died a few years after their marriage, having had but one child, Mrs. Leeds. After the death of his first wife Mr. McNair was married to Miss Mahala Snyder, who bore him two children, of whom one daughter, Dora, lived to young womanhood.

Mrs. Della Leeds died in March 1907, missed by a large circle of friends and most sadly mourned as a devoted wife and mother. She was well known for her good influence and example and her high character made her universally admired and esteemed. She and her husband had children as follows: a school teacher in Mt. Carmel public schools; Jessie, a clerk in the general store of J. W. Price, at Allendale; Margaret, works in the telephone exchange at Allendale; Harvey, a school teacher, and Cora, at home.

After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Leeds lived on his father's farm one year, when he moved to Allendale, and there embarked in business, selling drugs and groceries, having been in business but three months when his store burned. He afterward entered business in the line of hardware and implements, in company with George McFarland, and after this connection had continued ten years, Mr. McFarland sold his interest to Charles Saunders, who continued the business with Mr. Leeds two years, when they sold out and Mr. Leeds spent two years traveling in the employ of the McCormick Harvester Company. He followed the trade of carpenter six years and then, in the spring of 1907, moved to a farm of 160 acres which had been left to his wife by her father, located three-quarters of a miles north of Friendsville. Here he has since carried on general farming and raises considerable stock—cattle, horses and hogs. Politically Mr. Leeds is a Democrat and takes a lively interest in the progress and welfare of the community, although he does not care for public office.

LENNERT BROTHERS.—One of the leading business establishments of Mt. Carmel, Ill., is that of Lennert Brothers, harness-makers, who have been identified with the business and public interests of the city for a long period. Adam E. and Joseph B. Lennert, twius, were born at Evansville, Ind., July 26, 1861, sons of Peter and Elizabeth (Schafer) Lennert, the former born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, in 1836, and the latter at St. Joseph, Ind., in 1846. Peter Lennert came to the United States with his parents in 1853, first locating in New York and later in Pennsylvania, where for three years his father drove the stage-coach from Dalton to Susquehanna over the Allegheny Mountains. He then went to Evansville, Ind., where he continued to reside during the remainder of his life.

The Lennert brothers have, throughout their lives, manifested the greatest affection for each other, and neither has been satisfied in any undertaking unless he was accompanied by his brother. They were educated in the common schools of Evansville, Ind., and when about fourteen years of age, began learning the harness-makers trade, serving three years and nine months as apprentices, and then working at the bench for four years for J. O. Flickner & Sons. In 1886 they came to Mt. Carmel, Ill., and immediately opened a harness-making shop there under the firm style of Lennert Brothers—a partnership which has continued to the present time and is numbered among the old firms of the city, there being but six firms now in business that were here when the brothers first came. They are fine mechanics and make all of the harness they sell, disdaining to handle factory made goods. In addition to their business, which is a large and lucrative one, they own 150 acres of fine farming property in Gibson County, Ind.

On May 8, 1888, Joseph B. Lennert was married to Dora L. Verhiley, who was born in Wabash County, Ill., and they have two children: Peter and Emil. On June 21, 1891, Adam E. Lennert married Carrie M. Krauz, and they have had four children, Laura and Elizabeth (who are deceased), Bernard and Edward. Mrs. Carrie M. Lennert was born at Evansville, Ind. Both families reside in the same house, and all are members of the Catholic Church, of which Joseph has been a trustee for the past nine years. The brothers are Democrats in politics, and Adam has served two terms as Alderman of Mt. Carmel and is now a County Commissioner. Ever since coming to Mt. Carmel the brothers have been members of the volunteer fire department, which was organized about that time and which is still in existence. Joseph B. Lennert was appointed Fire Chief under Frank W. Havill serving two years, and is now acting in the same capacity under Mayor Strickman. Both are members of the Catholic Knights of America, the Knights of Columbus and the St. Joseph Benevolent Society.

Both of these brothers are shrewd business men, public-spirited citizens and good neighbors. Their resemblance to each other is striking and it is difficult for the casual observer to tell one from the other. They have always been foremost in all movements which promise to be of benefit to their community, and are classed among Mt. Carmel's most useful and representative men.

LESCHER, Jacob, M. D.—The late Dr. Jacob Lescher was born in Lancaster, Pa., and early decided upon entering the medical profession, in which he afterwards became so eminent. In 1832 he moved to Ohio from Pennsylvania, but remained only one year, feeling that better opportunities awaited in Mt. Carmel, and this city continued to be his home and the scene of his successful practice until his demise, August 31, 1854.

Without doubt he was a man far ahead of his times, being well informed upon almost every subject, and holding very advanced views with regard to some matters. Some of his theories are now proven facts. His great delight was his large library composed of standard and miscellaneous works, where he spent his leisure moments engaged in study. Generous to a fault, he gave his services many times without thought of recompense, traveling miles to see a patient who, as he knew, could never remunerate him for his time and trouble.

Although he never identified himself with any religious organizations, he lived entirely according to the Golden Rule, and carried out the Divine teachings in his charities and sympathies. In his death Wabash County lost not only its most beloved physician, but a loyal citizen, and its people a devoted friend who could always be depended upon in any emergency.

LIDDLE, David Runyon, of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born on the farm he now owns and operates, which was purchased by his paternal grandfather. Mr. Liddle was born October 2, 1863, a son of Steven L. and Eliza M. (Vermule) Liddle, the former born on the farm now owned by his son David, and the latter a native of New Jersey, born in 1837. Steven L. was a son of Ralph and Mary (Rigley) Liddle, the former a native of England, who came to Wabash County, Ill., and there located permanently. A portion of the land purchased by Ralph Liddle was prairie, and he accomplished a great deal in the way of improving it and bringing it under cultivation. He died on this farm.

The first marriage of Steven L. Liddle was to Mary Cusic, by whom he had one son, who died in infancy. He owned 100 acres of his father's old homestead, and here he settled after his marriage. He married (second) Eliza M. Vermule, and continued to clear and improve his land, adding to it until he owned 200 acres at the time of his death. He died February 3, 1906, at the age of seventy-three years, and his widow still resides on the home farm with her son. Their children were: Ella L., Mrs. Charles A. Seibert, of Friendsville; George E., of Friendsville Precinct; David R.; Clara, Mrs. Frank Taylor, of Friendsville Precinct.

David R. Liddle was educated in the district schools of the neighborhood where he was reared, and early learned the important features of farming. He has spent most of his life on the old homestead and since the death of his father has had full charge of it. He makes a specialty of registered stock, raising Berkshire hogs, Percheron horses, Holstein cattle and Leghorn chickens. He has adopted modern methods of carrying on the work and has found his investment in high-grade stock a well-paying one. He is one of the most successful and prosperous farmers in his vicinity and enjoys the respect and esteem of his neighbors.

Mr. Liddle married, March 18, 1885, Laura Hinderliter, who was born in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, a daughter of Daniel F. and Mary J. (Deischer) Hinderliter, the former a native of that precinct and the latter of Pennsylvania. Mr. Hinderliter is a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Fisher) Hinderliter, of Pennsylvania, who came overland to Wabash County and entered the land where their son and his wife now live. The following children have been born to Mr. Liddle and his wife: Mabel B., Mrs. Henry Deiber, of Wabash Precinct; Ethel G., Mrs. Ollie Leighty, of Friendsville Precinct; Mary E., Mrs. Mac Leighty; Floy Eulalie, Virgil Sylvan, V. Fern and Ruth Ivalou, at home. Mr. Liddle is a Republican politically and has served two terms as School Director. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the Royal Neighbors, of Friendsville. In anything that pertains to the public welfare and progress, he shows a keen interest and is ready to support every worthy cause. Mrs. Liddle is a member of the Lutheran Church.

LIDDLE, Robert Ralph.—A large number of the farmers of Wabash County, Ill., appreciate the advantage of raising only registered high-grade stock, and their neighbors are shown what can be accomplished by good judgment and care in selecting the kind of stock in which to invest. One of the enterprising farmers of Friendsville Precinct, who has become convinced of the value of this branch of farming, is Robert Ralph Liddle, who has one of the best kept farms in his neighborhood. Everything upon his farm bespeaks care and neatness, and he is considered one of the most intelligent and industrious farmers of the precinct. Mr. Liddle was born in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., December 26, 1863, a son of William and Emma (Rounding) Liddle. His grandparents, Ralph Liddle and wife, and Thomas Rounding and wife, were all natives of England and early settlers in Wabash County. Thomas Rounding paid a visit to his native country and on his return died as soon as he reached the American shore. Ralph Liddle settled on a farm two miles north of the village of Friendsville, where he died about 1898. His widow has since lived in Friendsville, where they had lived about ten years at the time of his death.

The education of Ralph R. Liddle was secured in Friendsville schools. He was the seventh of twelve children and, after he reached the age of eighteen years, worked at various occupations. He worked six months building fences for the Southern Railroad, and later worked a year for the Big Four Railroad, with a bridge gang and in the car-shops at Mt. Carmel. He then worked on various farms by the month until his marriage. February 24, 1889, he married Amy Alice Mundy, who was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, a daughter of Ezra and Amy (Litherland) Mundy, both natives of Wabash County. After his marriage Mr. Liddle settled on a twenty-four acre farm in Friendsville Precinct, belonging to his wife, and three years later purchased forty acres of land which adjoined another forty acres owned by his wife, thus making 104 acres, on which he built a house, later adding thereto twenty-nine acres, so that they now have 133 acres in one body. He has taken great pride in improving this farm and operating it to good advantage. He has registered Polled-Angus cattle, Poland-China hogs, Shropshire Down sheep and draft horses.

The following children have been born to Mr. Liddle and his wife: Bonnie, Mrs. Granville Rigg, of Postle, Okla.; Bessie, at home; Carrie, died in infancy; Ezra R., died at the age of two years and five months; Addis Alvin, Dewey R., Winnie Bell, Roy John, Dudley French, and Fay Millie, at home. Mr. Liddle is a Republican and has served as School Director. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, of Friendsville.

LOPP, Judge J. A., one of the most prominent members of the Wabash County Bar, was born in Edwards County, Ill., August 10, 1863, a son of Jacob and Eliza J. (Craver) Lopp, the former born in Edwards County in 1832 and died there in 1889, and the latter born in the same place in 1842 and died there in 1908. The paternal grandfather, John Lopp, was one of the very early settlers of Edwards County. Both he and his wife came there from Forsyth County, N. C., in the early 'twenties. The maternal grandfather, Jacob Craver, came with his family from Davidson County, N. C., in the 'twenties. Both were farmers, taking up government land in Edwards County, which they improved and lived upon the balance of their lives. The Lopp family still owns the land secured by John Lopp. Jacob Lopp, father of Judge Lopp, was born and lived on a portion of the farm his father entered from the Government until his death.

Judge Lopp was graduated from the Northern Indiana Law School at Valparaiso, Ind., in 1891, and was admitted to the practice of law in Illinois before the Supreme Court the following year. In 1895 he removed to Mt. Carmel, Wabash County, since which time he has carried on a general law practice. He makes a specialty of abstracting and examining titles. A strong Democrat, Judge Lopp has borne his part in public affairs. In 1904 he was appointed Master-in-Chancery of Wabash County, in 1906 was elected County Judge for a term of four years, and in 1910, was re-elected for a second term by a greatly increased majority. Mr. Lopp married Arletta Brenzel, who came from Pontiac, Ill., a daughter of George H. Brenzel, who resides at Mt. Carmel, and one daughter was born of this union, Fredreka M. Judge Lopp is a member of the Odd Fellows Fraternity, also being affiliated with the Order of Rebekahs and the Encampment; also belongs to the Masonic Order, the Red Men, Modern Woodmen and Modern Americans. He is a Past Grand in the Order of Odd Fellows and Past Grand Conductor of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Illinois. In his business relations Judge Lopp is a Director of the Mt. Carmel Trust & Savings Bank. He is a conscientious Judge, a learned lawyer and a good citizen, of whom the county has reason to be proud.

LUTZ, William Rudolph, who is a prominent and successful farmer of Wabash County, Ill., has spent his entire life on the farm which he now owns and occupies in Mt. Carmel Precinct. He is a son of Nicholas Lutz, who was born near Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, February 2, 1816, and came to the United States in 1833, locating in Wabash County and there spending the remainder of his days. He was married three times and his first two wives were sisters, both of whom died in Mt. Carmel Precinct. His third wife was Elmina Good, who was born in Pennsylvania, and they settled down on a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he became owner of ninety-four acres of land. In his later years he retired from active life and moved to Mt. Carmel, where he died, in 1903, his wife having passed away in 1900. They were parents of children as follows: Fannie, Mrs. Henry Hilbert, of Mt. Carmel; William R.; John, of Wabash Precinct; Laura, died at the age of twenty-two years; Ella, Mrs. Allen Groff, of Mt. Carmel; Victoria, Mrs. Allen Wier, of Belmont Precinct; and Adam, of Mt. Carmel.

William R. Lutz was born February 5, 1859, and was reared on his father's farm, where he learned the details of successfully operating the same. He received his education in the common schools and helped his parents as soon as old enough. After the death of his father he continued on the farm, purchasing the interests of the other heirs. He is a general farmer, paying special attention to the breeding and raising of horses and mules. He is a man of good judgment and superior intelligence, and stands well among his fellows in the community in which his entire life has been spent.

On September 27, 1891, Mr. Lutz married Mary Rosignol, born at Mt. Carmel, January 26, 1865, a daughter of Adam and Caroline (Willman) Rosignol, natives of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and grand-daughter of John Willman. Mr. Rosignol came to Mount Carmel before his marriage, in the 'forties, and his wife came in the 'fifties. The children of Mr. Lutz and his wife were as follows: Albert, Glenn and George, at home; Pauline and Christine, twins. Christine dying in infancy; Philip, Frances and Paul, at home. Mr. Lutz is a Republican in politics and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MALONEY, Patrick J.—The subject of this sketch, P. J. Maloney, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, May 24, 1860, a son of Daniel and Margaret (Moran) Maloney. They were both natives of Ireland who emigrated to America in early life, and to them were born six children: Mary, P. J., John, Dennis, Margaret and Helen. Daniel Maloney was connected, for many years, with the Ohio & Mississippi (now Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railroad, and was able to give his son the information derived from much practical experience, and inculcated in him a resolute ambition to make himself a valuable and successful railroad manager.

Mr. Maloney was united in marriage to Mary Leonard, at Covington, Ky., October 24, 1888. Mrs. Maloney was the daughter of Michael and Margaret (O'Rourke) Leonard, who were born in Ireland. On coming to America they made their home at Covington, Ky., where all their children—Dennis, Nellie, Mary, Michael, John, Josephine and Margaret—were born. To Mr. and Mrs. Maloney have been born three children: Raymond D., born August 29, 1889; Margaret, born November 19, 1891, and Helen, born November 29, 1893, all of whom are still members of the family circle.

Mr. Maloney is a man of clear convictions, frank in manner and liberal in his views, and has a natural faculty for winning and holding the friendship of people, and the simplicity and cordiality of his manners elicit the confidence and esteem of those with whom he comes in contact, either in business or in a social way. He is energetic, prompt and self-poised, is ready to assume just responsibility and initiate active enterprises. He possesses the quality of dealing with men on fair terms, and securing their earnest co-operation in matters where joint interests are at stake.

Politically Mr. Maloney is a Democrat, was brought up in the Catholic faith and is devoted to the work of that great church, is also a member of the Knights of Columbus. He is public-spirited and his heart responds fervently to the meritorious appeals of charity.

Since he was ten years of age Mr. Maloney has followed the business of railroading. At that tender age he began work as a water carrier for the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad, and has faithfully and persistently worked his way up, through privations and by unremitting toil, to the responsible position of Superintendent of the train service of the Cairo & Danville Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, which he has so capably filled since May 15, 1906. This branch of the service has since been enlarged and improved until the number of men under his supervision has been increased from 200 to 2,000, and the monthly pay-roll from $20,000 to $80,000, of this sum about $60,000 being expended at Mt. Carmel. At the present time the road is being double-tracked from Danville to West Union, in Clark County. Between 50 and 75 miles will be double-tracked during the year 1910, and it will be within a period of only four to five years when the whole line will be double-tracked from the coal-fields at Harrisburg, in Saline County, to the city of Chicago. Mr. Maloney is one of the most efficient and popular officials that has ever been connected with the Cairo & Danville Division of the "Big Four." He is a man of enterprise, has constructive capacity and is a thorough railroad man by impulse and training, and as a consequence his advice and recommendations are highly regarded by the managers of the line. He is also a valuable citizen and is favored with a most estimable family. From a humble beginning, by unflagging industry, and the patient and successful discharge of every duty entrusted to him, Mr. Maloney has demonstrated his ability and won for himself the respect and confidence of his superiors and a wide circle of friends.

MANLEY, Addis R.—Mt. Carmel is the home of some of the most progressive business men of the county, and one who is profitably engaged in production here, is Addis R. Manley of the Mt. Carmel Gas & Electric Company, a stock company which furnishes the city with its light. Mr. Manley was born in Bellmont Precinct on a farm, July 12, 1869, being a son of Frank C. Manley, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work. Mr. Manley was educated in the Bellmont schools and the Normal University at Carbondale, Ill. He then taught school for a time in Wabash County. The West then claimed him for a year, during which time he clerked for a concern in Slaughter, Wash.

Returning home he entered his father's store, and when the elder Mr. Manley moved to Mt. Carmel, Addis R. went with him. Later he clerked for J. G. Stanfield and for Mark Wise. During these various experiences he gained a valuable knowledge of business methods, and when in 1902 he organized the Mt. Carmel Gas & Electric Company, he was able to make it a success from the start.

In 1891, Mr. Manley married Martha Rigg of Mt. Carmel, a daughter of John Maek Rigg of Bellmont. Two children have been born to them, namely: Frankie and Helen. Although his time is closely occupied with business affairs, he is interested in securing good government and supports any improvements he believes will work out for the ultimate good of the majority.

MANLEY, Frank C.—Wabash County is the home of some of the most solid and representative men in the State, and one who has borne his full part in the struggle of life is Frank C. Manley of Mt. Carmel, born in Bellmont Precinct, Wabash County, July 29, 1844, a son of Francis Perry and Maria (Wiley) Manley. The family is one well known in the military history of the country, as the representatives did their full duty whenever called upon. The

Sebastian Seiber

Wiley family was not found wanting, either, and James Wiley, the father of Mrs. Manley, was a soldier in the War of 1812. He came to Illinois with a Dr. Baker and worked for him a year to defray the expense the latter incurred in bringing him from New Jersey.

Frank C. Manley had few opportunities of attending school. Being the eldest of the sons, the labor of providing for the support of the others devolved upon him after the death of the father in 1862. Starting out with but a meager education, by close study he fitted himself to become a teacher, following that occupation during the winter months and working at farming in the summer for six or seven years. In 1877, he moved to Belmont, Wabash County, and for ten months clerked in a store. Then, in 1877, he purchased a stock of groceries, and continued in that business until 1879, when he sold out. In 1878 he was appointed Postmaster of Belmont, and served for several terms, when he resigned. However, he was re-appointed in 1883, and continued for some years, eventually resigning again. As early as 1863 he had learned the printer's trade in the office of E. L. Merritt, of Salem, Ill., but not liking the work abandoned it after two years' experience.

In the spring of 1880, Mr. Manley formed a partnership with W. H. Knowles, for the purpose of handling agricultural implements, and this association continued until July 26, 1882, after which he continued in the same line alone. He later formed a partnership with his brother, Dr. Paul G. Manley, at Keensburg, in 1888, with Mr. Manley in charge of it. In less than a year, however, Mr. Manley sold to his brother, who continued the store. In December, 1889, Mr. Manley came to Mt. Carmel and engaged in a livery business, which he continued for nearly five years. He then sold it to become a real-estate dealer with R. T. Wilkinson, and they continued together for four or five years, when the partnership was dissolved, and he continued alone.

Mr. Manley has always been a strong Republican, and in addition to his serving as Postmaster so efficiently for a number of years, he was elected Justice of the Peace at Belmont, but resigned one year after election.

On August 22, 1868, Mr. Manley married Louisa M. Cory, born in Belmont Precinct in 1843, a daughter of Alanson W. and Louisa (Hunter) Cory. Mr. and Mrs. Manley have had five children, as follows: Addis, a sketch of whom appears in another part of this work; Nora Olive, wife of Joe E. Degan of Mt. Carmel; Leonard, of Mt. Carmel; Frank died when six weeks old; and Bertha, wife of Frank Goche, now of Vincennes, Ind. Mr. and Mrs. Manley are members of the Methodist Church, in which they are deservedly popular, as they are among their wide circle of friends.

MANLEY, Paul G., M. D., a representative citizen of Mt. Carmel, Ill., and one of the best known physicians and surgeons in Wabash County, was born at Bald Hill Prairie, six miles west of Mt. Carmel, January 14, 1855. His paternal grandfather, Benjamin F. Manley, came from Vermont and settled near Zanesville, Muskingum County, Ohio, whence he removed to Mt. Carmel, Wabash County, Ill., in 1839. His wife, whose maiden name was Julia Ford, and whom he had married in Ohio, died in 1854, after which he moved to Logan County, Ill., and there his death occurred a few years later. He had three sons, of whom Francis Perry Manley was the father of our subject. He was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, in 1821, and accompanied his parents to Illinois, at the age of eighteen. He married and settled on the home farm in Bonpas Precinct in 1841. He began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. Paul Sears at Mt. Carmel in 1854, and continued in the practice of his profession until his death, which occurred December 11, 1863. He married Maria Wiley, who was born near Gard's Point, Wabash County, and died in April, 1863, daughter of James Wiley, an early settler of Wabash County. There were nine children born to Dr. and Mrs. Manley, of whom four survived their parents: Laura, wife of William Hamilton; Frank C., Alfred P. and Paul G.

Paul G. Manley's opportunities for obtaining an education were somewhat limited, but he studied hard and read all the books which fell in his way. When he was eight years of age his parents died, leaving the family without means, and young Manley was compelled to become self-supporting at a tender age. At seventeen he had secured sufficient education to teach school, which he did for five terms. While teaching, he decided to enter upon the study of medicine, commenced reading standard medical works and also pursued his studies a part of the time in the office of Dr. Lemen, at Olney, Ill., who later became President of the Board of Health of Colorado and Dean of the Denver Medical College. Later he studied with Dr. Paul Sears of Mt. Carmel, and in the winter of 1876-77, entered the Miami Medical College of Cincinnati, graduating therefrom in March, 1879, and receiving the highest percentage of any in his class. During the last year of his college term, he was physician at the Free Dispensary at Miami. In the spring of 1879 he commenced practice at Keensburg, Wabash County, where he met with flattering success and remained there until 1883, when he went to New York City and commenced a year's work in the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, from which he graduated in spring of 1884. He then returned to Keensburg, where he remained until July, 1893, at which time he moved to Evanston, Ill., and took a year of post-graduate study in Chicago Post-Graduate Medical School, Cook County Hospital and Dr. Senn's Clinics at the Presbyterian Hospital and Rush Medical College. In May, 1894, he returned to Wabash County and began his practice at Mt. Carmel, where he has been particularly successful. It is said that he has a wider circle of friends and acquaintances than any other physician in the county, is numbered among the leading members of his profession in the State, and is honored and respected by all for his upright character and moral conduct. In political matters he is a Prohibitionist, and his religious connection is with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

On April 6, 1876, Dr. Manley was married to Mary E. McClure, who was born in Lawrence County, Ill., a daughter of Capt. Richard and Mary J. (Earls) McClure. To them have been born six children, five of whom lived nearly to adult life, and four of whom are still living (November, 1910). They are: Dr. Richard S., Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Paul S., of Medina, Mexico; Mrs. Mary Mason, of Washington, D. C.; and John A., who graduates in 1911 from the College of Liberal Arts, at Northwestern University, in which institution they have all been educated, including Pauline P. Manley, the twin sister of Paul S., who died at school in 1898.

MARVEL, William.—One of the finest farms in Wabash County, Ill., is owned by William Marvel, who owns ninety-five acres of land in Friendsville Precinct. Mr. Marvel was born in Gibson County, Ind., October 10, 1858, son of Wesley and Jenetta (Davis) Marvel, both natives of Gibson County. His grandfather, John Marvel, was a native of Kentucky. Abijah Davis, the father of Jenetta Davis, was also a native of Kentucky, and came to Gibson County, Ind., in an early day. Both he and John Marvel were farmers and among the earliest settlers of Gibson County, where they spent the greater part of their lives. Mr. Marvel died in Wabash County, Ill. Wesley Marvel and wife, were married in their native county and settled in Montgomery Township, that county. Their first home was a log cabin and their land was heavily timbered, mostly with black walnut and yellow poplar. Mr. Marvel cleared a large amount of land and put it in cultivation and became a large land-owner. He has kept for himself 189 acres of land, and gave each child a farm or its equivalent, upon reaching their majority. He was born October 22, 1829, and his wife in 1834, and both are still strong and active. They live on the home farm with a son and a daughter. Their children were: John, who died in infancy; Abigail, widow of Alfred Simpson, resides with her parents; William; Julius, living at home with his parents; John, who was killed by a runaway horse about 1875; James, of Gibson County; Flora Bell, Mrs. Elza Mount, of Gibson County; Ella, Mrs. Massey, of Owensville, Ind.

The education of William Marvel was received in the district school, and he early began learning the science of farming. He has been engaged in farming since he was old enough to be of assistance to his father, and when he reached his majority, received from his father eighty acres of land in Wabash County, in Section 31 of Friendsville Precinct, which was partly improved. He has made many other improvements and has brought it into a high state of cultivation. He has added to his farm and now owns ninety-five acres, in one body. In the fall of 1899 he erected a fine frame house, and he has put up other substantial buildings. Besides carrying on a general line of farming, he pays special attention to raising a good grade of horses and cattle.

March 4, 1879, Mr. Marvel married America Dougherty, born in Gibson County, Ind.—where they were married—a daughter of William F. and Jane (Montgomery) Dougherty, the former born in Adair County, Ky., and the latter in Gibson County, Ind. His parents, Stephen Dougherty and wife, were natives of Kentucky, and Mrs. Dougherty's parents, James and Nancy (Cook) Montgomery, were natives of Indiana. Mr. Marvel and his wife have no children. He is prominent in public affairs, is a member of the Prohibition party and took a strong stand in the recent movements in the cause of temperance which have agitated the public of Illinois. He is an earnest and sincere member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he has served as Trustee many years. He belongs to the Tribe of Ben Hur, No. 97, Mt. Carmel. He is a progressive farmer and reaps good profits as the result of his enterprise and industry.

MARX, John Henry, an enterprising and prosperous farmer of Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., owns part of the farm on which he was born, October 26, 1861, the son of Philip H. and Margaret (Stephens) Marx. Philip H. Marx was born in Pennsylvania, son of Michael and Margaret (Barnhardt) Marx, natives of Germany, and his wife was born in Indiana, daughter of George and Margaret (Miller) Stephens, natives of Germany, who became early settlers in Lancaster Precinct. Philip Marx and wife located in Lancaster Precinct after their marriage, and still live on their farm, where he owns 154 acres, and his wife forty acres. They had children as follows: Samuel C., of Lancaster Precinct; William, of Belmont, Ill.; John Henry; Catherine, Mrs. Charles Seibert, of Evansville, Ind.; Mary E., Mrs. Edwin Seibert, of Lancaster Precinct.

In his boyhood John H. Marx attended Stoltz District School and helped in work on his father's farm as soon as he was old enough to do so. He resided with his parents until his marriage, in September, 1885, to Amelia Seibert, who was born in Lancaster Precinct, daughter of John Seibert. The children born to them were: Orrie E., living with her paternal grandparents; Katie C., Mrs. Robert Storkman, also with her father's parents. The first wife of Mr. Marx died in September, 1888, and he married (second), in April, 1889, Flora Orilla Baird, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, a daughter of Fletcher and Luretta (Mundy) Baird. By his second marriage Mr. Marx had children as follows: Callie, Mrs. Lewis Morgan, of Gibson County, Ind.; Josie E., Mrs. Frank Fessel, of Lawrence County, Ill.; and Effie M., Jessie G., Fern Anetta, Raymond Baird, Ida E., Mattie Bell, at home.

After his marriage Mr. Marx lived on his father's farm in a separate residence from his parents and managed the place until 1891, when he went to Seattle, Wash., and spent fourteen months in that State. He purchased twenty acres of land in Kitsap County, where he lived three months before his return home. When he reached home his father gave him forty acres of the home place, where he erected a house and barns and continued to improve it. He carries on general farming and raises horses, cattle, and Poland China and O. I. C. hogs. The Marx family is well known in the community and have always taken an interest in the improvement and development of the same. John H. Marx is a Republican in politics, though he takes no active part in public affairs, and he is a member of the Evangelical Association. He can always be depended upon to support any cause that will tend to promote the general welfare and is considered a representative citizen.

MARX, Philip Henry, one of the oldest citizens of Wabash County, Ill., has been a resident of the county since he was four years of age and has always been identified with its best interests. Mr. Marx was born in Northampton County, Pa., April 21, 1832, a son of Michael and Margaret (Buesch) Marx, natives of Germany. The parents emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1829, and lived there until 1836, when they entered 120 acres of government timber land in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, and there erected a log hut and began clearing the land. Mr. Marx later added to his possessions until he owned several hundred acres, and he and his wife died about 1875, within two months of each other. Six children were born to them, namely: Barbara, Mrs. Jonas Deischer, deceased; Samuel, died in Lancaster Precinct, about 1895; Philip H.; Lena, Mrs. George Schafer, died at Mt. Carmel; Margaret, Mrs. William Schafer, died at Mt. Carmel; Mary, Mrs. Martin Stephens, of Lancaster Precinct.

The education of Philip H. Marx was received in the district schools and remained with his parents until his marriage on March 5, 1857, to Margaret Stephens, who was born in Warren County, Ohio, December 23, 1837, daughter of George and Margaret (Miller) Stephens, natives of Germany. Mr. Stephens and his wife moved from Ohio to Shelby County, Ind., in 1838, and lived on a farm there until 1852, then bought land in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County. Mr. Stephens died in Wabash County. Children as follows were born to Mr. Marx and wife: Samuel C., of Lancaster Precinct, a sketch of whom appears in this work; William M., of Bellmont Precinct; John H., of Lancaster Precinct, whose sketch appears in this work; Catherine, Mrs. Charles Seibert, of Evansville, Ind.; Mary, Mrs. Edwin Seibert, of Lancaster Precinct.

After his marriage Mr. Marx moved to a farm his wife secured from her parents, in Lancaster Precinct, where they lived about six years, then moved to the home of his parents, which was deeded to him. He has erected all the buildings now on the place and has made many improvements, bringing the land to a high state of cultivation. He has added to his possessions until he now owns 200 acres all in one body. He is well known and much esteemed in his community, is a Democrat and has served on the School Board. He is a member of the Evangelical Association and contributes his share toward its support.

MARX, Samuel Clinton.—Among the enterprising farmers of Wabash County, Ill., who are making a specialty of raising high-grade stock is Samuel Clinton Marx, who has developed a fine farm in Lancaster Precinct. He has been prominent in the Democratic affairs of the county and has served as Justice of the Peace since 1890. Mr. Marx is the oldest child of Philip H. Marx, whose sketch also appears in this work. Philip H. Marx was born in Berks County, Pa., and married Margaret Stephens, a native of Shelby County, Ind. They still live on their farm in Lancaster Precinct.

The early education of Samuel C. Marx was acquired in the common schools, and later he attended Friendsville (Ill.) Seminary. After reaching the age of twenty years he taught school in Lancaster Precinct, every winter for eighteen years, working at farming during the summer. He married, September 4, 1881, Julia A. Burton, who was born in Lancaster Precinct, daughter of James and Martha (Adams) Burton, who were natives of Nashville, Tenn. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Marx settled on the George Glick farm, in Lancaster Precinct, where he rebuilt the house and barns, and put up all the improvements. This farm was on the edge of Long Prairie, on the border of Bonpas Creek. Mr. Marx also received 100 acres of his father's homestead, all of which he has under cultivation except twelve acres of timber. This farm is located in Section 7, Town 1 North, Range 13 West, and he also owns forty acres in Section 2, Town 1 North, Range 14 West, all of which he cultivates except five acres of timber.

Mr. Marx carries on general farming and makes a specialty of raising short-horn registered cattle, Jersey Red hogs, horses for general purposes, and Plymouth Rock and Leghorn chickens. He is a member of the United Brethren Church, has held all the church offices, served four times as Delegate to the Annual Conference, and since 1895 has been Superintendent of the Sunday School. He is a charter member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 1834, of Lancaster, which was instituted in 1892, has held all the offices in the same and has served as Delegate to the State Lodge. Mrs. Marx is a member of the Mystic Workers of the World, of Lancaster. Both have many friends and are popular in social circles.

Children as follows have been born to Mr. Marx and his wife: Bertha, at home; Della M., Mrs. H. C. Hinderliter, of Lancaster Precinct; Henry E., died in infancy; Alvin C., died at the age of eight years; Martha E., at home; James Stephenson, died at the age of six years; Samuel Burton, Philip Herman, Fay Beatrice and Alma Edith, at home.

MAXWELL, J. B., B. S., M. D.—Perhaps one of the best known physicians of Wabash County, Ill., is Dr. J. B. Maxwell, whose skill has proved a mine of comfort to the afflicted in times of sickness and distress. He was born at Friendsville, Ill., in 1859. Although in youth he obtained a good ordinary education, he was not satisfied, and entering the Central Normal College at Danville, Ind., there took a scientific course. He then taught school for six years in Knox County, Ind., and in White and Wabash Counties, Ill., gaining a well-earned reputation for the thoroughness of his methods which made his services valuable to those desiring a conscientious instructor.

In spite of his success as an educator, he decided to study medicine. His father, A. M. Maxwell, M. D., was a successful physician who had been educated in the Medical Department of the Michigan State University. Dr. A. M. Maxwell was born in Lycoming County, Pa., and practiced medicine from 1853 until his death in 1888. The son entered Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1887, and graduated therefrom in 1890, following which he began practicing in the office where he continued for twenty years. He has gained the confidence and gratitude of a wide circle of patients, many of whom have retained him as a family physician for years. He is a member and secretary of the Wabash County Medical Society, The Illinois State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He has written and has published in the various medical journals of the country, articles upon the subject of epilepsy, and through his personal agitation a bill was passed by the State Assembly for the establishment of a State institution for the treatment of patients suffering from this disease.

In 1891 Dr. Maxwell was married to Miss Sarah J. Grundon, of Mt. Carmel. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Masonic order, in religious matters is a Presbyterian, and in politics a Republican. Dr. Maxwell is a public-spirited citizen, and is interested in the welfare and prosperity of the community. He is the owner of considerable property in Mt. Carmel, and has several fine farms in the country adjacent thereto.

McCLANE, Edwin B. (deceased), formerly a well-known and prosperous farmer of Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in that precinct, August 6, 1837, a son of Charles and Louisa (Sloan) McClane, and grandson of John Sloan. The parents were early settlers of Belmont Precinct and spent the remainder of their lives there, she dying many years before her husband. He owned several different farms. Their children were: Henry and Edwin, deceased; Thomas, M. D., of Roswell, N. M.; Mary J., deceased; Julia, Mrs. Alpheus Adis, living in the State of Washington; Rebecca and Malinda, deceased; Edwin B.; Hannah, deceased.

Edwin B. McClane received his education in the public school and helped with the work on his father's farm in boyhood. He remained with his parents until his marriage, January 13, 1859, to Mary E. Brines, born in Belmont Precinct, April 27, 1835, daughter of Russell and Nellie (Garner) Brines, the former a native of New York and the latter of Connecticut. The father was a son of Edward Brines and the mother's parents were Charles and Margaret Garner, all of whom settled in Wabash County, the Brines family in Belmont Precinct and the Garners at Timberville, in Wabash Precinct. Russell Brines and his wife were married in Wabash County and settled at Bald Hill Prairie, where both died, having had children as follows: Morris, who died in Belmont Precinct; Jane and Julia, deceased; Mrs. McClane; Henry and Russell, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Harvey and Edwin C., deceased.

After their marriage Mr. McClane and his wife settled on a farm of eighty-six acres, of which there was but six acres cleared, and they lived there in a log house for many years. He developed a good farm and carried on general farming most successfully for many years, and then retired to live in Mt. Carmel, where his death occurred, November 3, 1871, about two years after they had left the farm. His widow remained for a time in Mt. Carmel, then returned to the home farm, where she rented the farm five years but now hires the farm work done. She is an excellent manager and her affairs have prospered under her care. She has many friends in the community and is highly respected for the manner in which she has reared her children to be useful men and women. The children born to this couple were: Henry Allen, of Belmont Precinct; William M., died in infancy, in November, 1862; Ida, Mrs. Otto Bradham, of Edwards County, Ill.; Virginis Gertrude, Mrs. Jerry Ginther, of Bone Gap, Ill.; Edwin Baker, of New Baden, Ill. Mr. McClane was a member of the Christian Church and in politics was a Democrat. He was an industrious and energetic farmer, an excellent neighbor, and a kind husband and father, and was much respected by his fellow-citizens.

McGREGOR, George Henry, who for many years, carried on extensive agricultural operations in Wabash County, Ill., and is now living in retirement in the village of Belmont, is a native of Wabash County, born in Friendsville Precinct, May 5, 1842, a son of Asa and Mary (Ulm) McGregor. Asa McGregor was born in Wabash County, his father, Henry McGregor, being one of the early settlers of Palmyra, once the county-seat. Henry McGregor was a native of Ireland and came to the United States as a young man. He secured government land and developed a farm, passing his last days in Palmyra. Mary Ulm, who was born near Chillicothe, Ohio, was a daughter of Edward and Catherine Ulm, both natives of Ohio, who were among the first settlers of Mt. Carmel, where Mr. Ulm built the first mill for grinding corn. This was a tread-mill run by horse-power. Mr. Ulm was a shoemaker as well as a miller. He first entered land near Mt. Carmel, but later sold out there and moved to Wayne County, Ill., where he died.

Asa McGregor and his wife settled in Friendsville Precinct after their marriage, and there he conducted a farm until his death, March 7, 1857. His widow continued on the farm and married John T. Risley. Some time after her second marriage she went to live in Mt. Carmel, where her death occurred about 1882. Mr. McGregor and his wife had children as follows: George Henry; Sarah, Anna, Scott and Harry died in infancy; Samuel died in 1898, in Gibson County, Ind.

The education of George Henry McGregor was acquired in the district schools and he remained with his mother until her second marriage; then began working on a farm by the month, continuing this until he attained his majority, when he came into possession of 120 acres of the home place. He carried on the farm until his brother, Samuel, was twenty-one years of age, when he sold his interests to the latter, buying a farm of 160 acres, of which about forty acres were cleared. This farm contained some old log buildings and here his first wife died, after which he lived in the log cabin by himself, hiring a man to help him. He continued to improve his farm and cleared about sixty acres in all. He sold this farm later and purchased 120 acres in one part of Lick Prairie Precinct and 160 acres a few miles south, putting it all under cultivation except twenty acres of the first farm. He sold the farm of 120 acres and lived on the one of 160 acres until February, 1910, when he purchased two lots and a residence in Bellmont, where he now lives. He rents all his land and has retired from active business life. Mr. McGregor has always been a most enterprising and intelligent farmer and achieved a very fair degree of success. He is a public spirited citizen and actively interested in the public welfare, giving his earnest support to the cause of Prohibition.

The first marriage of Mr. McGregor took place in February, 1866, when he was united with Elizabeth Shearer, born in Vermont, a daughter of William and Joanna (Older) Shearer, who were very early settlers of Friendsville Precinct. The children born to this union were: Lewis, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Charles, of Seattle, Wash.; Laura, Mrs. William Brians, also of Seattle; Mark, of Aberdeen, Wash. Mrs. McGregor died in 1873.

Mr. McGregor was married (second), on September 13, 1875, to Fannie Wood, who was born in Friendsville Precinct, a daughter of Victor and Eliza (Armstrong) Wood. One daughter was born of this union, Eliza, wife of William Garrett, on Mr. McGregor's farm. The second Mrs. McGregor died in 1877 and Mr. McGregor was married (third), on February 6, 1880, to Sarah E. Bratton, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, a daughter of Marshall and Elizabeth (Hill) Bratton. To this latter union were born children as follows: Mabel, Mrs. Elmer Wetherholdt, of Jasper County, Ill.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Samuel Woods, on her father's farm; Asa, of Danville, Ill.; Howard and Hollis, on their father's farm; Opal, died in infancy. The third Mrs. McGregor died in 1901, and Mr. McGregor married (fourth), on September 6, 1905, Mrs. Maria L. (Rigg) Brown, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, a daughter of Thomas and Mary J. (McCleary) Rigg. Her first husband, Samuel G. Brown, was born in Miami County, Ind., and died November 26, 1897, in Bellmont Precinct. Mr. Brown and his wife had children as follows: Elmer, died in Mt. Carmel, in 1904, leaving three children—Allison, George and Della; Thomas, died in infancy; Victor, died at the age of thirteen years; David is engaged in the management of a threshing machine and saw-mill, owning one of the best outfits in the county—resides in Bellmont Precinct; and Alonzo, who died in infancy. David was twice married, (first) to Ethie Campbell, who bore him one son, Carl Raymond, and (second) to Joselyn Gray, of this union there being three children—Earl, Davis and Charles.

Mr. McGregor is a man of upright character and honest intentions, and his many good qualities of mind and heart are widely appreciated by his many friends. He is well known in Wabash County and held in high esteem.

McINTOSH, John Jerome, M. D., a prominent physician of Allendale, Ill., whose father was the second practicing physician in Wabash County, and who had a diploma from a medical college, is a native of Allendale, born July 2, 1881. He is a son of Dr. Andrew J. and Jane (McFarland) McIntosh, the former born at Timberville, Wabash County, and the latter in Wabash Precinct. His paternal grandparents were Samuel and Eleanor (Mathews) McIntosh, he a native of Paris, Bourbon County, Ky., and she of Sullivan County, Ind. Samuel McIntosh was a son of John Ogg and Sarah (Bennett) McIntosh, the former born in Invernesshire, Scotland. He was an assistant surgeon under Cornwallis in the Revolutionary War, and was appointed presiding Judge at the organization of Wabash County. Jane McFarland was a daughter of James Alexander and Rachel (Osborn) McFarland, the former born in Christian County, Ky., and the latter in Lawrence County, Ill. James A. McFarland was a son of John and Mary P. (Thompson) McFarland, the former born in Elkton, and the latter in Christian County, Ky.

In 1814 Samuel McIntosh and John McFarland, came to Wabash Precinct and County and settled on farms, the former being a wheelwright, veterinary surgeon and farmer. He served in the War of 1812, and entered land from the Government. Dr. Andrew J. McIntosh married and settled at Allendale, being the second physician to practice in the county who had a diploma. He graduated from the University at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1869, although prior to this he had practiced ten years. He served many years as Coroner of Wabash County, and his widow died May 9, 1908. His first marriage was to Sarah Grayson, by whom he had two daughters: Jennie, Mrs. W. C. Burns, of Danville, Ill., and Sarah, Mrs. David Crawford who died in Tennessee. Mr. McIntosh married (second) Jane (McFarland) Fox, widow of Hiram Fox, by whom she had one son, Hite, Assistant Cashier of the First National Bank, of Allendale. The only child of the second marriage was Dr. John J.

At the age of sixteen years John Jerome McIntosh entered the university of Vincennes, Ind., two years later matriculated at Center College, Central University, Kentucky, and two years later entered the medical department of the Northwestern University, of Chicago, Ill., from which he was graduated Cum Laude in June, 1905. He was elected to membership in the Alpha Omega Alpha (Honorary Medical Fraternity). While a student he was an active member of the Phi Beta Pi Medical fraternity. After serving eighteen months as interne in the Cook County Hospital, he returned to Vincennes, Ind., where he remained for six months in order to secure a life certificate for service in the State of Indiana. In July, 1907, he located in Allendale, and took up the practice of his father, to which he has added materially, and now has the satisfaction of being well established and very busy. He has established himself also in the confidence and esteem of all with whom he has associated, and is considered one of the leading young physicians of the county, being well fitted by natural ability and training to rise in his profession. In the fall of 1908 he was elected to the important office of County Coroner and is discharging the duties of same with credit.

Dr. McIntosh married, October 3, 1908, Hester Holson, born at Allendale, Ill., a daughter of Fred and Nancy (Keneipp) Holson, he born in Germany and she in Lawrence County, Ill. They have one daughter, Mary Jane, born July 21, 1909, and one son, John Jackson, born August 9, 1910. Dr. McIntosh is a devout member of the Christian Church and is a deacon of same. Politically he is a Democrat and fraternally a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp 1799, and the Masonic Lodge, No. 752, of Allendale. He has many firm friends in the county and takes a lively interest in everything that affects the welfare of the people. He is a typical young physician of today, keeping well informed on the latest discoveries and theories of his profession, and taking an intelligent interest in other current topics and issues.

McKOWN, Larry H.—Among the enterprising young business men of Mt. Carmel, Ill., is Larry H. McKown, who has built up a good business in the line of mortgage loans. Mr. McKown has been engaged in several lines of business and is well fitted by experience and ability to conduct his enterprise successfully. He was born near Greenville, Floyd County, Ind., December 6, 1878, son of M. C. and Anna (Sheets) McKown, both natives of Floyd County. His grandparents were Hiram McKown and wife, natives of Virginia, and Jacob Sheets and wife, the former born in West Virginia and the latter in Indiana. Hiram McKown was a farmer in Indiana.

M. C. McKown was married in Indiana, where he owned a farm and also conducted several cooper shops, which business he had learned when he was a young man. He lived in Indiana five years after his marriage, when he became ordained a minister of the Methodist Church and was located at different places. At this time he sold his farm to be able to devote his time entirely to his pastoral duties. He is now located at Bellmont, Ill., where he has been living since the fall of 1908. Four children were born to Mr. McKown and wife, namely: Eva, died at the age of eighteen months; Louis S., of Shawneetown, Ill., a Methodist minister; Larry H.; Harriet, Mrs. Bert Wilkes, of Mt. Carmel.

Larry H. McKown received a common and high school education, then attended the De Pauw University at Greencastle, Ind., and Vincennes University. He made the most of his educational advantages and became well fitted for making his own way in the world. He lived with his parents until his marriage, then lived for a time at Cannelton, Ind., where he conducted a tailor shop six months. Then moving to Louisville, Ky., he worked two years in a wholesale clothing house, when he removed to New Albany, Ind., and there took up life insurance business, which he followed two years, after which he worked about six months in a wholesale clothing house in Chicago. August 1, 1906, Mr. McKown located in Mt. Carmel and engaged in his present line of business. He has won the confidence and regard of all who have had dealings with him, in the way of business or socially, and is considered a representative, useful citizen. He is a Republican in politics and is much interested in local affairs. He belongs to the Methodist Church and to the B. P. O. E. No. 715, of Mt. Carmel.

Mr. McKown married, December 3, 1901, Mabel Rogers, who was born in Loogootee, Ind., daughter of Byron L. Rogers and wife, of Kentucky. Mr. McKown and his wife have one daughter, Lella Ruth, born December 30, 1904.

McNAIR, Charles E., of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., comes of a family well-known in the county for nearly a century, and always identified with its best interests and progress. The grandfather of Mr. McNair entered land three-quarters of a mile north of Friendsville, and was one of the pioneer settlers. Charles E. McNair was born in Friendsville Precinct, January 13, 1853, a son of James P. and Margaret A. (Dennison) McNair, the former a native of the same precinct and the latter of Lawrence County, Ill., being born near Bridgeport. James P. McNair married and located on an eighty-acre farm one-half mile east of his father's home, this land having been given him by the latter. He built a house and entered forty acres more on the Crawfish bottoms. He died May 17, 1898, and his widow died August 5, 1900. Charles E. was their second child, the others being George, who died at the age of sixteen years, and Mary, who died at the age of seventeen years. Nearly the entire life of Charles E. McNair has been spent on the home place. He attended the district school in boyhood and came into possession of the farm at his father's death. Here he carried on general farming and raised cattle, hogs and horses, until February, 1902, then sold out and purchased ninety acres one-half mile west of Friendsville, where he has resided since September, 1906.

Mr. McNair married (first) Sonora Jones, who was born in Gibson County, Ind., daughter of Charles and Rachel (Newsom) Jones, and they had two children: George, who died in infancy, and Maggie, married William L. Crum, of Lancaster Precinct, and they have one child—Beatta Ruth, born October 29, 1903. Mr. McNair married (second) on December 30, 1891, Mary Ellen Courter, born in Wabash County, a daughter of Daniel and Rebecca (Ashcraft) Courter. Her parents died when she was a small child, and she was reared in the family of Gifford Runyon, of Friendsville Precinct. By his second marriage Mr. McNair has one child, Effie, at home. He and his wife are well-known and popular and have a large circle of friends. He is a Republican in politics and served as School Director one term. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, of Friendsville, and the Farmers' Union, of the same place. He is interested in every good cause. Like his father and grandfather before him, he is greatly interested in the development and welfare of the community, and is one of the public-spirited citizens of the county, being representative of its highest interests.

MEYER, H. A., proprietor of a general store at Bellmont, Ill., carries everything necessary in the way of household and farm furnishings and appliances. Mr. Meyer was born in Freeport, Ill., September 20, 1863, a son of Harm and Catherine N. (Ravenstine) Meyer, natives of Emden, Germany. Catherine Ravenstine's father, located on a farm in Bellmont Precinct in 1851. Harm Meyer was a sailor and after spending fifteen years on the ocean located at Ulim, Wis. There being only Indians living there at that time he later moved to Wabash County, Ill. After his marriage he and his wife located near Freeport, and two and a half years later they moved to Effingham County and bought 300 acres of farm land. He died there in 1902 and his wife on March 17, 1909. Their children were: H. A. Meyer, subject of this sketch; Peter L., living in Bellmont since 1904; John H., of Mt. Carmel; Justus, died at the age of seven years, being the third child.

At the age of nineteen years, having been educated in the common and high schools of Effingham County, H. A. Meyer began working as clerk in a store at Bible Grove, Ill. Two years later he went to Terre Haute, Ind., and took a two years' course in telegraphy and bookkeeping, after which he became manager of a general store at Dieterich, Ill. Mr. Meyer became a resident of Bellmont in 1889, when he took the position of station agent on the Southern Railroad, remaining in this position until 1905, when he embarked in the mercantile business with his brother Peter. This partnership was continued until March 7, 1908, when Peter withdrew from the concern and H. A. Meyer has since carried on the enterprise alone. He keeps a large stock of standard grade goods and has built up a good trade, as well as a reputation for honest dealing. He stands well in the community and is successful in a financial way.

Mr. Meyer married, July 3, 1893, Kate E. Maidlow, born in Vanderburg County, Ind., a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Earl) Maidlow, also natives of Vanderburg County. Children as follows were born to Mr. Meyer and his wife: Helen Frances, Ivy Gertrude and Edith Laura, all at home. Mr. Meyer's first wife died in April, 1903, and he married (second), on June 20, 1907, Fannie Avis Maidlow, sister to his first wife. They have no children.

Mr. Meyer is an enterprising citizen and actively interested in public affairs; is a member of the Republican party and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. No. 729, the M. W. A. Camp No. 4671, the Royal Neighbors and the Mystic Workers, all of which meet at Bellmont.

MITCHELL, John Minton, who is one of the best-known business men of Wabash County, Ill., President of the American National Bank of Mt. Carmel, and interested in many other public and private enterprises, has been a resident of Mt. Carmel since 1883 and has identified himself with the progress and welfare of the community. The Mitchell family is of Scotch-Irish descent and came from England to America. They settled in Illinois about 1816 and the grandfather of John M. Mitchell served as Colonel in the Forty-eighth Illinois Cavalry during the Civil War. Mr. Mitchell was born in Franklin County, Ill., July 16, 1862, son of Jesse G. and A. E. (Marvel) Mitchell. The father was born in Franklin County in 1835, and the mother in Gibson County, Ind., in 1837. Jesse G. Mitchell was for many years Postmaster of Locust Grove, Franklin County, and was also a farmer, school-teacher and merchant. He became an extensive dealer in grain, tobacco and stock, and was successful in many lines. He was a natural leader of men and a man of influence in the community in which he lived, where he won many warm friends. He was naturally an optimist, and his liberality, good nature and high character were strongly felt by all who had any dealings with him. He also served as a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1880 he sold his farm and moved to Benton, Ill., where he engaged in mercantile business. He and his wife had six children, one of them dying in infancy.

The early education of John Minton Mitchell was received in the public school, and he later attended the Southern Illinois University at Carbondale and the Central Normal College at Danville, Ind., graduating from the latter institution at the age of eighteen years. He spent his boyhood on his father's farm and early learned the habits of industry which he has since followed. Upon leaving school he began working in his father's store at Benton, Ill., and in 1883 located in Mt. Carmel, where he engaged in the clothing business on his own account. After continuing in this business a few years he embarked in the dry-goods business. In 1894 he sold his mercantile interests and entered the banking business as President of the Wabash Savings Bank, and later became President of the American State Bank, which in 1901 became the American National Bank. Under his able management the affairs of this institution have prospered and it is considered one of the sound financial institutions of this part of the State. Mr. Mitchell is well fitted to fill such a position, having had considerable experience in the business world, and his patrons naturally feel a confidence in his judgment and discretion in directing to the best interests of all concerned, the investments and other business interests that come under his supervision.

Mr. Mitchell has been identified with many business enterprises besides the American National Bank, being President and owner of the American Exchange Bank, of Browns, Ill.; Receiver for the Mt. Carmel Gas & Electric Company and for Mt. Carmel Light & Water Company, and Treasurer of the Wilcox Wholesale Grocery Company. He is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Mt. Carmel; President of the Board of Trustees of McKendree College, of Lebanon, Ill.; President of the Southern Illinois Laymen's Association Southern Illinois Conference, and of the Southern Illinois Conference Claimants' Society; a member of the Finance and Executive Committees of the Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Church of the World, and served as delegate to the General Conference of the church held in Chicago in 1900, and of the one held in Baltimore in 1908. For the past fifteen years he has served as Superintendent of the Methodist Sunday School, Mt. Carmel, is member of its Board of Trustees and served four years as District President of the Epworth League for the Mt. Carmel District, and served eight years as President of the local Epworth League. Fraternally, Mr. Mitchell is a member of the Masonic Order, a Knight Templar and Mystic Shriner (affiliated with Medinah Temple, Chicago), and is also identified with the Odd Fellows, Woodmen and the Tribe of Ben Hur. In politics he is a Republican.

June 1, 1886, Mr. Mitchell was married, at Mt. Carmel, Ill., to Miss Della Russell, who was born in Mt. Carmel, March 28, 1868, a daughter of Charles R. and Frances Russell. The Russell family was identified with the early progress and development of Mt. Carmel, the grandfather of Mrs. Mitchell, Abraham Russell, settling there in 1817. They are of rugged, pioneer stock, and have always been public-spirited, useful citizens. Three daughters have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, namely: Grace Rand, born March 9, 1887; Frances Russell, May 28, 1890; Elinor, October 14, 1892,—all born in Mt. Carmel. Mr. Mitchell owns the family home on East Fifth Street and other city real estate, besides large holdings of Texas lands. He is a genial, whole-souled optimist, not easily discouraged in any undertaking in which he has embarked, is by nature industrious and conservative, but the friend of real progress and believes in modern enterprise. He is socially inclined and greatly enjoys the company of his friends and intimates. Both he and his wife are prominent in church and social circles.

MOORE, Benjamin Franklin.—One of the representative men of Wabash County who has been before the public in various capacities during the past few years is Benjamin Franklin Moore, Sheriff of Wabash County, and a well known citizen of Mt. Carmel. He was born December 26, 1861, near Metropolis, Massac County, Ill., and is a son of Benjamin Franklin and Emily (Tanner) Moore.

The father of Mr. Moore was born in Perry County, Tenn., in 1826, and there married Emily Tanner, who was born in the same county in 1834. In 1860 they moved to Massac County, Ill., there bought a farm, and in 1861 Mr. Moore enlisted in Company B, One Hundred Thirty-first Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry. While on a scouting expedition near Atlanta, Ga., Mr. Moore was captured by the Confederates and sent to Andersonville Prison for several months, but finally, in company with four others, he managed to escape and made his way to his home in Massac County, arriving in a nearly starved condition. Being unable to rejoin his regiment, he went to Caseyville, Ky., and there joined the Third Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, with which he remained until the close of the war. After the close of hostilities he bought a farm in Union County, Ky., which he operated until 1871, then moved to Saline County, Ill., but subsequently went to Johnson County, where his death occurred in 1885. His wife survived until 1903, when she passed away at the home of one of her daughters, having formerly lived with her son, Benjamin F., for some time.

Benjamin Franklin Moore was educated in Union County, Ky., and Saline County, Ill., and remained at home until eighteen years of age, when he went to work in the coal mines at Spillertown, Williamson County, working for John Wilerford for a little over a year. He then went to Murphysboro, Ill., where he worked for a short time in the mines, then becoming a brakeman on the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, a position which he held for six months. In 1881 he came to Wabash County, Ill., and first worked in a mine near Maud, working for a few months for Jacob Zimmerman, then going to Saline County, Ill., and assisting in opening a mine at Clifton. He worked there until his marriage, July 3, 1883, to Lida Van Seuden, born in Wabash County, a daughter of J. A. and Samantha (Rigg) Van Seuden. After marriage Mr. Moore worked for Harvey Hughes in the Clifton mines until the following spring, when he commenced farming, his first venture being on the farm of his father-in-law, near Maud. The following year he rented the Jack McLain farm on Bonpas Prairie, which he sold and moved to Pratt County, Kan. He next went to Metropolis, where he conducted a livery concern for three years, then going to Johnson County and serving as City Marshall at Burnside, and as Deputy Sheriff of the county under Sheriff M. A. Hankins. Moving back to Wabash County in 1900, he came to Mt. Carmel and bought a livery business on Fourth Street, and in 1903 was elected Alderman on the Republican ticket. In 1904 he sold his business on Fourth Street and bought the old Woods House and a lot adjoining on which he erected a livery stable. In addition to these, he owns three other properties in Mt. Carmel. In the fall of 1906, Mr. Moore was nominated for the office Sheriff and Collector of Wabash County, his opponent being Alec Compton, who defeated him. Twenty days after the election, Mr. Compton was murdered, and at the subsequent special election necessary to fill the vacancy, Mr. Moore defeated James Williams, his Democratic opponent, by 160 votes, in a county that ordinarily has a Democratic majority of 300 to 400. He has been one of the best officials Wabash County has ever had and has the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Moore has a daughter, Carrie, and an adopted daughter, Gladys. He and his wife are members of the Christian Church. Fraternally he is connected with the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen, the Tribe of Ben Hur and the Order of Elks.

MORGAN, Calvin Douglas (deceased).—The Morgan family has been prominent in Wabash County, Ill., for many years, and its members have been representative of the highest type of citizenship. Calvin D. Morgan, who was a prosperous farmer of Wabash Precinct, was engaged at various times in other pursuits, but again turned his attention to farming, and became the owner of a large farm. He was born in Lancaster Precinct, April 29, 1861, a son of George W. and Mary (Preston) Morgan, the former of Lancaster and the latter of Friendsville Precinct. The grandparents were Calvin and Nancy (Guntton) Morgan, of Tennessee and North Carolina, respectively, and Joseph Preston and wife, all early settlers and farmers of Wabash County, where they died.

After his marriage George W. Morgan settled on a farm in Lancaster Precinct and became an extensive farmer. He died in 1906 and his wife in 1901. Their children were: Frank, of Edwards County, Ill.; Calvin D.; George, deceased; Jacob, of Lancaster Precinct; Joseph and Eli, of West Salem, Edward County, Ill.; Nellie, Mrs. John Bradham, of Lancaster Precinct.

Until his marriage Calvin D. Morgan resided with his parents, then settled on part of the home place, where he carried on farming. He also conducted a portable saw-mill and a threshing machine, and a clover huller. Later he moved to Allendale, and continued to operate the threshing machine and saw-mill until the date of his death, during which time he purchased 160 acres of land in Wabash Precinct, and continued to add to it until he had 367 acres, all river bottom land except nine acres where the house and other buildings are located. He was an extensive corn-grower, dividing his time between this industry and operating his threshing machine and saw-mill. He was a Democrat in political belief and had served as School Director. Fraternally he belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Mystic Workers of the World, of Allendale. He and his wife won a large circle of friends and became important factors in the social life of the neighborhood. They always espoused the cause of progress and showed interest in every worthy cause. Both became members of the Christian Church of Allendale.

Mr. Morgan's marriage occurred January 11, 1882, when he was united with Laura B. Roberts, born in Mt. Carmel, Ill., January 30, 1865, a daughter of Rudd and Lucinda (Montgomery) Roberts, both natives of Wabash County. The children born of this marriage were: Clara, Mrs. Cain Clark, of Wabash Precinct; Albert, Mamie and Gladys, at home; Flora, who died at the age of nine years; and seven children who died in infancy. Mr. Morgan's death occurred August 22, 1910.

MOYER, Charles Wesley, a prominent and highly esteemed resident of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., where for many years he has carried on general farming, is a native of Princeton, Ind., born February 14, 1857, a son of Joseph and Sarah (Stone) Moyer, the former born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Wabash County, Ill., and grandson of Peter Moyer, who was born in Pennsylvania, and William Stone, born in England. The grandparents were all early settlers of Wabash County, Ill., where Joseph and Sarah Moyer were married. They moved to Indiana and lived on a rented farm six years, but returned to Wabash County, where both died, he about 1882 and she about 1880. Their children were: Maria, Mrs. George Wilson, deceased; William, of Mt. Carmel; Charles W.; James, of Mt. Carmel, and Franklin, deceased.

Until he was twenty years of age, Charles W. Moyer lived with his mother and received his education in the public schools. He worked about ten years at farm work for others, and when thirty years old, rented land and farmed for himself, continuing this occupation until 1900, when he purchased six acres of land in the eastern part of Mt. Carmel. He rents sixty acres of land near his home and here carries on general farming. He has been successful in his work and is well known for his industry and thrift. The Moyer family has been identified with the history of Wabash County and its members have been among the highest type of citizens, doing the best for themselves and their community.

Mr. Moyer married, in September, 1881, Emma Stroh, who was born in Wabash County, daughter of Isaiah and Eliza (Seitz) Stroh, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Wabash County. The children born of this union were: Leslie L., of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Nora E., Mrs. Lyman Stultz, of Friendsville Precinct; Maud, died in infancy. Mrs. Moyer died in January, 1902, and in September, 1903, Mr. Moyer married (second) Mrs. Flora (Wirth) Kern, widow of Thomas Kern, who had seven children by her former marriage, namely: Mame, of Mt. Carmel; Laura, Mrs. Fred Baringer, of Los Angeles, Cal.; John, of Danville, Ill.; William, of Wabash County; Maud, Mrs. Christ Orphy, of Estherville, Ia.; Fred, of Mt. Carmel; Martha, of St. Louis, Mo. By his second marriage Mr. Moyer has one child, Paul, born March 12, 1905. In politics Mr. Moyer is Independent and votes for the man he considers best fitted to hold office. He is a member of the Evangelical Association and fraternally is a Modern American. He stands well in the community and has a large circle of friends.

MOYER, Edward Joseph (deceased), who died at his home in Mt. Carmel, Ill., September 18, 1903, was for many years prominent in public affairs in Wabash County and had served in city and county offices. He was a staunch supporter of the Democratic party, took a deep interest in political matters, and is kindly remembered by all who knew him. Mr. Moyer was the friend of education and of all worthy objects, devoting both time and money to the promotion of any cause which he believed for the interest of the people. He was a man of sterling honesty and integrity and, in his business dealings, was actuated by the highest principles of fairness and honor. He was a kind, indulgent husband and father and gave his children the best educational advantages he was able, always feeling a deep interest in their being fitted for useful lives.

Mr. Moyer was born in Mt. Carmel, July 23, 1842, a son of Paul and Mary (Alender) Moyer, both natives of Pennsylvania, being born in Allentown, where their marriage took place. Paul Moyer went to Wabash County to make a home for his family, and after spending a year there, returned for his wife and they came back as far as Princeton, when their funds being exhausted, they found it necessary to walk the remainder of the way to Mt. Carmel, where they settled down. He performed any kind of work he could find at first and for some time clerked in a store.

In 1873 his wife died and in the fall of 1875 he married (second) Susan Ramer, of Marshall, Ill., where they lived until 1894, when Mrs. Moyer died. Mr. Moyer finally returned to Mt. Carmel and lived with his daughter, Mrs. Fred Kern, until his death, November 9, 1903.

Edward J. Moyer received his primary education in the common schools and also attended Mt. Carmel Academy. Between the ages of seven and twenty-one years he learned the trade of cabinet-maker with Mr. Cosier, of Mt. Carmel. He then went to Evansville, Ind., and worked as a mill-wright until his marriage, November 14, 1867, to Mary E. Collins, of Vincennes, Ind., where she was born January 8, 1850, a daughter of Alexander and Delilah (Elder) Collins. Mr. Collins was born in Tennessee and his wife in North Carolina. He was a stationary engineer and in 1856 moved to Patoka, Ind., where he died in February, 1875, and his widow in May of the same year.

After his marriage Edward J. Moyer took up his residence in Mt. Carmel and for many years was employed as clerk. He was afterward employed by various firms as buyer, and in 1898 began working at book-keeping for different concerns, as his services were needed. In 1895 he purchased a handsome residence on East Ninth Street, Mt. Carmel, where his widow still resides. The following children were born to him and his wife: Cloten, a school-teacher, of Kingman, Kan.; Frank, of Cairo, Ill., a yard-master in the employ of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, married Helen Gallagher, of Marshall, Ill.; Ethel, married Deloyd Malloy, of Chicago; Cora, Mrs. Paul E. Pepper, of Mt. Carmel; Lyman T., of Galveston, Tex., freight clerk for a railroad company; Muriel, married Joseph L. McClellan, an engineer for the Big Four Railroad Company, living at Mt. Carmel; Helen, attending the high school.

Mr. Moyer served several times as Alderman of Mt. Carmel, and in the fall of 1902 was elected to the office of Treasurer of Wabash County. He discharged the duties of each office in a satisfactory manner, and was considered a competent official.

MUNDY, Hon. Mahlon H., who is one of the most prominent Democrats in Wabash County, Ill., and has served in several public offices in the State, as well as in local offices, has been engaged in the practice of law at Mt. Carmel, Ill., since 1880. Mr. Mundy was born in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, March 8, 1850, a son of Henry and Mary (Penson) Mundy, the former a native of Edwards County and the latter of Wabash County. Henry Mundy was a son of Samuel and Phebe (Reed) Mundy, both born in New Jersey, the former in 1785 and the latter in 1787. Phebe Reed was a daughter of William and Rachel Reed and a cousin of President Pierce, and her husband was a son of Samuel and Abigail Mundy.

Samuel Mundy and his wife were married November 30, 1809, and in 1818 they came to what is now Wabash County, Ill., then a part of Edwards County. Their children were: Griffith, born June 22, 1813; William, born May 26, 1815; James M., born June 6, 1817; Henry, born February 26, 1820; Nelson, born February 16, 1822, died January 3, 1824; Caroline, born May 21, 1824; Samuel, born December 25, 1825; John Q. A., born October 15, 1827; Phebe A., born July 23, 1829; Julia A., born November 1, 1831; Jersey A., born November 12, 1834. The Penson family were natives of Connecticut and were early settlers of what is now Wabash County.

Henry Munday married and settled on a farm in Lancaster Precinct. He was born February 26, 1820, and his wife March 12, 1824. He died on his farm, June 7, 1896, and since then his widow remains on the old homestead. Their children were: Carl, died in infancy; Allen, deceased; Mahlon; Samuel, of Mt. Carmel; Maria and Frances M., deceased; Sarah Jane, Mrs. W. A. Risley, of Mt. Carmel; Mary Ellen, died in 1888; Phebe A., Mrs. John Mason, of Edwards County, Ill.

The early years of Mahlon H. Mundy were spent on his father's farm and he attended the common schools. He remained at home until he reached his majority and then worked a year and a half on a farm, after which he went to Warrenton, Warren County, Mo., and attended the Central Western College two years. Returning to Illinois he went to Edwards County and taught four years, then began reading law with Judge Phinney D. Preston, of Olney, Ill. Three years later he came to Mt. Carmel and engaged in the practice of law there, January 1, 1880. He has been successful from the start and stands high in his profession.

In political views Mr. Mundy is a strong Democrat and is active in party affairs. He served from 1884 until 1896 as State's Attorney, and as a member of the Forty-third and Forty-fourth General Assemblies of Illinois. He held the office of Master in Chancery from 1905 to 1909, and was elected City Attorney in 1882 and again in 1884, serving two terms of two years each. Fraternally he is a member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, No. 715, of Mt. Carmel, and has many friends among all classes. He is well known among business men and is looked upon as a representative, patriotic citizen of the city, county and State.

Mr. Mundy married (first), January 6, 1884, Mrs. Isabel Phipps, who was born in Lawrence County, Ind., widow of Larkin Phipps, and daughter of David and Catherine Boyles, of Lawrence County, Ind. By her first marriage she had two children: Harry M., of Mt. Carmel, and Minta, Mrs. J. F. McDonald, of Virginia. One daughter was born of her marriage to Mr. Mundy, Hazel, Mrs. Fred Lewis, of Columbus, Ind. Mrs. Mundy died September 21, 1894, and Mr. Mundy married (second) October 18, 1895, Mrs. Emma L. (Koegley) Robinson, widow of John Robinson. She had two children by her first marriage: Estella, Mrs. J. S. Campbell, of Marion, Ill., and Hattie, who lives with Mr. Mundy and her mother. By his second marriage Mr. Mundy had no children.

MUNDY, William R. (deceased).—The late William R. Mundy, of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., spent most of his life in the county, where his parents were among the earliest settlers. The family have been useful members of the community and have helped build up the local institutions and promote the general welfare. Mr. Mundy was a prominent member of the Methodist Church and served many years as a steward. He was active in political affairs and served several years as County Commissioner, being a Republican in his views. He was active in the Farmers' Grange and was much interested in its progress. He has been missed from many circles and his many friends remember with gratitude his public spirit and many good traits of character.

Mr. Mundy was born in New Jersey, May 26, 1815, the son of Samuel and Phebe Mundy, also natives of New Jersey, who located on a farm in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, when the surrounding country was a vast prairie and almost entirely unsettled. They entered land from the Government and lived on it until a few years before their deaths, then moved to Mt. Carmel. William R. Mundy lived at home with his parents until his marriage, and was educated in the country schools of the time. He and his wife began housekeeping on a farm in Lancaster Precinct, and he afterward entered a farm of 160 acres in Lick Prairie Precinct, part of it in timber. He improved the land and erected a house, developing a fine farm. He became an extensive stock-raiser and was an energetic farmer, making the most of his opportunities. He became very successful and had a good standing in the community.

Mr. Mundy married (first) December 30, 1838, Sarah Risley, who was born in Wabash County, a daughter of Jeremiah and Rachel Risley. Mrs. Mundy died in June, 1859, having had children as follows: Phineas, born April 9, 1840, died at the age of a year and a half; Frances C., born October 23, 1841, married Isaac Breese, who died, and she now lives in Mt. Carmel; Henry Clay, born June 3, 1844, died at the age of a year and a half; Ezra Green, born January 12, 1846, deceased; William Hardin, born January 3, 1849, deceased; Charles Miller, born June 11, 1851, deceased; Sarah Alice, born May 31, 1854, now Mrs. Eli Knowles of El Paso County, Colo.; Asenath Adeline, born October 5, 1857, married Simon Epler, and died at Albion, Ill., in 1908; Anna Isabel, born June 19, 1859, now Mrs. Jacob Epler, of Glendora, Cal. Mr. Mundy was married (second) March 20, 1860, to Mary Ann Risley, born in Mt. Carmel, Ill., May 20, 1835, daughter of Daniel and Eliza (Harland) Risley, natives of New Jersey, and grand-daughter of Jeremiah and Rachel (Tilton) Risley, also natives of New Jersey, who were early settlers of Wabash County, Ill. By his second marriage Mr.

Mundy had no children. His death occurred November 7, 1899, since which time his widow has lived on the home farm, which she rents out. Mrs. Mundy is well known in the vicinity of her home, having spent her entire life in Wabash County, and she has a large circle of friends.

MYERS, Albert, who, for some fifteen years conducted a saw-mill and threshing machine, besides conducting his farm in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., now confines his attention to the cultivation of his land. Mr. Myers is active in public affairs, is a Republican in politics, and has served several terms as School Director. He was born in West Salem Township, Edwards County, Ill., March 28, 1852, a son of John and Emily (Niphong) Myers, the latter a native of North Carolina. No complete record regarding the family of John Myers is in existence, as he was working on a flat-boat on the Mississippi River and died of cholera at Natchez, Miss., the year his son Albert was born. Emily Niphong was brought by her parents to Edwards County, Ill., when she was a small child and, in 1832, married (first) Peter Snider, a cabinet-maker, who was born in 1806 and died at Mt. Carmel, March 11, 1839. They had children as follows: Mary C., Cynthia A., William H., and Susan A., all deceased. John and Emily Myers had five children, of whom Albert was the youngest. They were: Joseph, of Edwards County, Ill.; Martha, deceased; John, of Burton, Kan.; Mathias, of West Salem, and Albert. Mr. Myers had been married before and had three children: George, who died in January, 1910; Philip, of Richland County, Ill.; Jane, Mrs. C. Cunningham, deceased. After the death of her husband Mrs. Myers married (third) Anthony Wilkinson, by whom she had no children. She died April 5, 1893.

The education of Albert Myers was secured in the common schools of Edwards, White and Wabash Counties, and he remained with his mother until he was sixteen years of age, then worked five years for Rosander Smith, on a farm in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County. He worked one summer at Bone Gap, Edwards County, and then bought a farm of forty acres in Section 1, of Lancaster Precinct, of which only two acres were cleared. He made all the improvements on the place and added twenty acres, having it all under cultivation except six acres of timber. He first erected a log house, in which he lived fifteen years, and it is still standing, being now used to hold cattle fodder. He has since erected a modern residence and has built all the barns and other buildings on his farm. In the fall of 1875 he sold out and went to Rockdale, Tex., where he remained two months, then returned and bought back the old farm; about fourteen years later engaged in conducting his threshing machine and saw mill, which he discontinued in 1905. He has been successful through his own efforts and is a self-made man. He belongs to the Church of Christ, of Berryville, Ill., and is much interested in every good cause.

September 28, 1876, Mr. Myers married Anna E. Hinderliter, who was born in Lancaster Precinct, March 7, 1857, daughter of Henry and Caroline (Seibert) Hinderliter, the former born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Lancaster Precinct. The paternal grandparents were Henry and Elizabeth (Fisher) Hinderliter, of Pennsylvania, who came to Lancaster Precinct when their son Henry was a child; and on the maternal side John and Mary Ann (Carriger) Seibert, who were also from Pennsylvania, and among the first to settle in Lancaster Precinct. Two children were born to Mr. Myers and his wife: Rosa Jane, who married Elder S. O. Pool, a minister of the Church of Christ, now at Wenatchee, Wash., and they have five children—Minnie Inez, Jacob Esson, Paul Sharon, Eunice Joy and Leon Myers, and John Wilbur, of West Salem Township, Edwards County, Ill., who married Bessie McKenzie and they have four children—Morley Lavine, Lester Albert, Roy Kenneth and Clifton Samuel.

NEWKIRK, Paul, one of the most extensive farmers in Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, was born on the farm where he now resides, and upon which his father settled as a young man. He is a son of Zachariah and Eliza A. (Greathouse) Newkirk, and was born October 20, 1851. His father was a native of Ohio, and had two brothers, Hugh and William, who were early settlers of Wabash County. Eliza A. Greathouse was a daughter of early settlers of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, where she was born.

The first marriage of Zachariah Newkirk was to a Miss Higgins, and they had two children: a son, who died in infancy, and Martha, who married James Campbell, and had four children—Mary Eliza, Clara, Charles and Ada. After his second marriage Mr. Newkirk located on the farm where his son Paul now lives, and began housekeeping in a very modest manner. For their wedding supper he and his wife had corn meal mush. However, he was ambitious and industrious and became the owner of a fine farm of 640 acres. But little of this land was cleared and he cleared and improved most of it himself. Part of this land he secured from Geary W. Smith, who had entered it from the Government. Mr. Newkirk was a successful farmer and raised a large number of cattle, horses and hogs. He died on this farm November 7, 1863, and his widow died in August, 1876. Their children were: Mary E., married Jackson Buchanan, deceased; William H., deceased; Paul; Clara, married James Buchanan, who died, and she afterwards married Clate Hutchinson, of Wabash Precinct; Eliza Ann, Mrs. Albert Sapp, of Washington; James Enoch, of Mt. Carmel Precinct.

Paul Newkirk was reared on his father's farm and also spent two terms in the Friendsville High School. At the time of his father's death he came into possession of sixty-six acres of land, helped his mother as long as she lived, and after her death bought 149 acres from the other heirs. He has added to his land until he now owns 338 acres, all of which except forty acres, is under cultivation. He is an enterprising and intelligent farmer and, besides carrying on general farming, has invested in high-grade stock, raising Oxford and Shropshire sheep, Poland China hogs, registered Durham cattle and draft horses.

Mr. Newkirk married, November 22, 1877, Catherine L. Stroh, of a well known pioneer family in Wabash County. She was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, daughter of J. B. and Elvira (Leed) Stroh, natives of Pennsylvania and Mt. Carmel, respectively. Children were born to them as follows: Eliza Ann, born May 8, 1879, died January 7, 1901; Bertha, born July 4, 1880, married Glenn Shephard and they have a daughter, Catherine, born April 23, 1906; Lillie May, born March 9, 1882, of Olney, Ill.; Herbert Nelson born January 12 1884 married Blanche Wilkinson, who was born in Friendsville Precinct, September 10, 1883, and they have one child, Virginia May, born March 6, 1909; Joshua Bernard born February 10, 1883, lives at home. Herbert Nelson and his family reside on a part of the home farm. Mr. Newkirk is a member of the Christian Church and has been an Elder since 1905. He is an Independent Democrat, and fraternally belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America; the Tribe of Ben Hur of Mt. Carmel, and Modern America of Friendsville. He sunk a well on his farm in 1908. The family have a large circle of friends and are well known in the community.

NEWKIRK, Rufus M., an enterprising and public-spirited citizen of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., who is actively identified with every movement that tends toward the welfare and development of his community, was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, February 6, 1849, a son of William and Sarah (Crooks) Newkirk, the former born in New Jersey and the latter in Maryland, and grandson of Abram and Grace (Loper) Newkirk, natives of New Jersey, and Robert and Elizabeth (Brelsford) Crook, of Ireland. Abram Newkirk was killed when his son William was but six years of age, and his widow brought her family to Wabash County, Ill., between 1845 and 1850. William Newkirk did not come to Wabash County until 1858 and in 1856 he purchased a tract of land in Section 35, Town 1 North, Range 13 West, in Friendsville Precinct, half prairie and half timber. He had 160 acres in the home farm and 160 acres south of Friendsville, where Jacob Zimmerman now lives. Mr. Newkirk made all possible improvements and erected one of the first brick houses in the county. He was killed by the memorable cyclone at Mt. Carmel, June 4, 1877, and his widow survived him until December, 1891. Their children were: Mary Jane, Mrs. Jairus Great-house, died at Anna, Ill., in 1908; Clarinda, Mrs.

Alfred McNair, died about 1861; Nathan Henry and Clarissa, drowned in 1852, and Rufus M.

Rufus M. Newkirk was the youngest child of his parents and has spent his life on the home farm since he was brought there a small child. He attended the district schools and Friendsville Academy and received a good education. His father gave him the homestead, to which he has added twenty acres. He has cleared it and put it under cultivation except about fifteen acres of timber land. Besides carrying on general farming he makes a specialty of raising Red Polled, Durham and Jersey cattle, and has a fine dairy herd. He also raises Poland-China hogs, and horses for general use. He is a Republican in politics and served twenty years as School Director. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Order, being affiliated with Lodge No. 329, of Mt. Carmel, and also belongs to the Ben Hur Tribe, No. 97, of Mt. Carmel. He is an ambitious farmer and has developed his farm to a fine property.

Mr. Newkirk was married, in September, 1874, to Martha Hallock, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, daughter of Aaron B. and Acenih (Ogden) Hallock. Children as follows were born to this union: Sarah Catherine, Mrs. Adelbert Shearer, of Centralia, Wash.; Anna, died in infancy; Gertrude and Grace, twins, the latter of whom died in infancy, and Gertrude is wife of Vern Mundy, of Cherry, Colo.; Amy, at home; William, died at the age of two years; a son and daughter who died in infancy; Allen, at home; and another daughter who died in infancy.

NOLLER, William, a successful business man of Mt. Carmel, Ill., is a native of that city and inherited his present business from his father, who established it in 1853. It is, therefore, one of the oldest enterprises in the county and has been constantly doing business for more than half a century. William Noller was born November 21, 1864, and has spent his entire life in the city where he now resides, having received his education there and also his business training. His father, Carl Noller, was born in Germany, at Geildorf, and his second wife, Margaret Zindel, was born near the same place. They were married near Mt. Carmel and became the parents of four children. He was a cabinet-maker and worked for some time at his trade in Evansville, Ind., and later established a furniture factory in Mt. Carmel, in connection with a retail furniture and undertaking establishment. By 1864 he had steam-power for carrying on his work at the factory and in time had a very good trade. He died January 1, 1906, leaving his entire business interests to his son. His wife died in 1872. His children were Amelia, Mrs. J. Q. Herschelmann, of South Dakota; Louisa, who married Michael Walsh, of Springfield Mo.; Wilhelmina, Mrs. Michael Smith, of Grayville, Ill., and William.

Mr. Noller worked with his father until he was twenty-one years old when he became his father's business partner, and the firm name was Noller & Son. He has continued the business and also makes a specialty of repairing turniture. Under his father's instruction he had learned the full details of the work carried on, and was well fitted to take charge of the establishment. He stands well in the community and has been successful in a financial way. He carries a good stock of modern goods and gives careful attention to his customers' wants.

Mr. Noller is well informed on current topics and the issues and events of the day, and takes an active interest in the welfare and progress of the community. He is well known in Mt. Carmel and has a large circle of friends. Politically he is independent, and is a member of the German Evangelical Church. He is unmarried.

ODOM, James, one of the most extensive farmers of Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., has become the owner of considerable land as the result of hard work and earnest effort combined with excellent judgment. Mr. Odom was born in Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, April 3, 1857, a son of Zedekiah and Louisa (Leasor) Odom, the former a native of Iowa. When James Odom was but three years old his father died, his widowed mother later marrying Matthew Crackle, of Compton Precinct, where they continued to live. Mr. Crackle was killed during the Civil War, about 1863, and his widow afterward married Shuble Jordan, and they moved to Posey County, Ind. After living about six years in Posey County, they moved to Gibson County, Ind., where Mr. Jordan died in 1875. His widow then returned to Compton Precinct, Wabash County, where her death occurred in 1879. By her first marriage she had two sons: James, subject of this sketch, and William, who died at the age of fifteen years. By her third marriage she had five children.

As a boy James Odom attended the district schools in Indiana and helped in the work on his step-father's farm. At the age of seventeen years he began working on a farm in Posey County, living three years there and three years in Gibson County, Ind. He then moved to Compton Precinct, Wabash County, where he was married, September 8, 1878, to Mary E. Painter, who was born in Compton Precinct, a daughter of Henry and Martha (Gray) Painter. After marriage Mr. Odom rented various farms in Coffee and Compton Precincts until he purchased forty acres of land in the former, where he lived six years, and then moved to Belmont Precinct, where he bought 280 acres of land in two tracts. He has since sold forty acres and there are eighty acres in the home place, which is the old Nick Ankenbrand farm. Mr. Odom is a most energetic farmer and an excellent manager, and has brought his land to a high state of cultivation. He raises excellent horses for general purposes, a good grade of cattle and registered Poland-China hogs. He is a public-spirited and useful citizen, and much interested in the welfare of his community. In political views he is a Republican, is a member of the Christian Church and affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Odom and wife: Ida, at home; Susan, Mrs. William Rigg, of Belmont; Maud, Zelma, Verla, John and James, at home.

O'DONNELL, Thomas, for many years a successful business man of Mt. Carmel, Ill., and other cities, but now living in retirement, is a well-known and popular citizen and actively interested in public affairs. Mr. O'Donnell was born in Bridgeport, Ill., September 29, 1869, a son of Charles and Mary Ann (Monahan) O'Donnell. Charles O'Donnell was born in County Donegal, Ireland, a son of Patrick O'Donnell, and Mary Ann Monahan, the latter born in Hamilton County, Ohio, a daughter of Owen and Bridget Monahan. Mr. O'Donnell came to the United States as a young man, landing in New Orleans, and proceeding to Lawrence County, Ill., where he became a farmer and extensive stockman. He was killed there September 25, 1894. His widow lived on the farm a few years longer, then moved to Vincennes, Ind., where she now resides. The farm contains twenty-two oil-wells, which produce from 50 to 500 barrels of oil per day.

Of the fourteen children of Charles O'Donnell and his wife eight survive, namely: Charles B. and James M., of Vincennes, Ind.; Thomas; Alance B., Mrs. L. J. Mooney, of Indianapolis, Ind.; Margaret, Mrs. Eugene Quinn, of Vincennes; Mary E., married Dr. John Downey, of Vincennes; Hugh, of Vincennes; Berdine, Mrs. William Vetz, of Indianapolis.

Thomas O'Donnell lived at home until twenty-two years of age and received his education in the common schools. He then went to Indianapolis and worked in a butcher shop until the death of his father, which necessitated his returning home to take charge of the home farm, which he carried on until 1900. He then engaged in the liquor business in Bridgeport one year, then conducted a saloon at Enfield, Ill., after which he located in Vincennes and worked one year with his brother, Charles. June 20, 1903, Mr. O'Donnell purchased a liquor cafe in Mt. Carmel, which he conducted until July, 1907, then had charge of a billiard parlor until January 20, 1910, since which he has lived retired from active business. He has been successful in a financial way and is a devout member of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, of Bridgeport, Ill., and affiliated with the St. Joseph's Fraternal Benevolent Society, F. O. E., No. 1145, of Bluff City.

January 10, 1899, Mr. O'Donnell married Carrie Dillon, born near Princeton, Ind., a daughter of Joseph and Bridget (Maher) Dillon, both natives of Ireland. The following children were born of this marriage: Blanche Catherine, William Joseph, Philip Francis and Mary Elizabeth. Mr. O'Donnell and his wife have a large circle of friends and are esteemed by all who know them. In politics he is a Democrat, and is actively interested in the welfare and prosperity of the community.

PARMENTER, Aden Theodore, an extensive farmer of Wabash County, Ill., was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, May 19, 1857. He is a son of Henry and Nancy Jane (Putnam) Parmenter both natives of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, grandson on the paternal side of Isaac and Mary (Utter) Parmenter, natives of New York State, and on the maternal, of Eber and Trifosa (Ballard) Putnam, of English descent. The Parmenter family were early settlers of Bald Hill Prairie, Mt. Carmel Precinct. Isaac Parmenter and his wife lived at Centerville, Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he was a carpenter and farmer. Before coming west he had owned land in Rochester, N. Y. His wife came to Wabash County with her parents and they were married in Wabash County. At the time of his marriage, Mr. Parmenter was Sheriff of Edwards County, of which Wabash County then formed a part.

Henry Parmenter and wife were married in Wabash County and about 1854, moved to Coffee (once Keensburg) Precinct, where he purchased 167 acres of land, twenty acres of which was cleared, the balance being in timber. There was a double log house on the farm, also some log barns. After living eighteen years in the log house, they erected a large frame dwelling. He kept adding to his land until he had about 336 acres. He cleared up a large amount of his land and developed one of the best farms in the county. Mr. Parmenter died January 16, 1900, and his widow died May 15, 1906. Their children were: Lester, died at the age of thirteen years; Aden T.; Letta Ann, married George Graham, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Sarah Melinda, married Alonzo Anderson and died in Coffee Precinct; Marian, widow of John Alka, lives in Coffee Precinct; Harry, died February 1, 1906, on the home farm; William Franklin, of Coffee Precinct.

Aden T. Parmenter received his education in the district school and lived with his parents until his marriage, August 4, 1877, to Mary Alice Bristow, born in Pike County, Ind., daughter of Dr. Nathaniel and Maria Jane (Canada) Bristow, natives, respectively of Kentucky and Illinois. After his marriage Mr. Parmenter moved to the old log house in which his parents had formerly lived, remaining there about one year, then bought a farm on Bonpas Creek, remained there three years, when he sold out and spent one year on the home place, after which he bought eighty-eight acres of the Brumfield farm in Belmont Precinct, where he resided twenty-two years. Mr. Parmenter returned to the home place in 1906, buying all except twenty acres of it. He is now the owner of 333 acres of land, eighty acres in Belmont Precinct, 165 in Coffee Precinct, and eighty-eight acres along the south line of Belmont Precinct. He raises cattle and hogs and has always done general farming as well. Mr. Parmenter is a good manager and an excellent farmer, and has been most successful in his operations.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Parmenter and his wife: Frances and another child who died in infancy; Daisy A., Mrs. J. S. Brines, of Belmont Precinct; Ben, a physician, at Belmont; Anna F. and George H., at home; Milo Aden, of Belmont Precinct; Mary Alice, Mrs. Hiram Myers, of Belmont Precinct; Effie, died at the age of one and one-half years; Harry B. and Winnifred, at home. Mr. Parmenter is prominent in public affairs in the community and has served as School Director and Drainage Commissioner. In politics he is a Republican, is well known and has many friends.

PARMENTER, Ben, M. D.—Among the younger physicians who have established themselves successfully in the practice of their profession in Wabash County, Ill., is Dr. Ben Parmenter, of Belmont. Dr. Parmenter is a member of a family that is well known in the community and has identified himself with its best interests. He was born in Belmont Precinct, December 8, 1881, son of Aden Theodore and Mary Alice (Bristow) Parmenter, the former a native of Wabash County and the latter of Gibson County, Ind. Aden T. Parmenter is a son of Henry and Jane (Putnam) Parmenter, of Wabash County, and his wife is a daughter of Nathaniel and Maria (Collins) Bristow, the former a native of Kentucky. Henry's father, Isaac Parmenter, was one of the earliest settlers of Wabash County, when it was part of Edwards County, coming from the State of New York. He was a farmer by occupation and served as Sheriff of Edwards County. Aden T. Parmenter was married in his native county and settled on a farm of 255 acres in Belmont Precinct, where he reared his family. He has always been engaged in farming and owns another farm of eighty acres. He and his wife had children as follows: Daisy A., Mrs. J. S. Brines, of Belmont Precinct; Dr. Ben; Anna and George H., at home; Milo, farms part of the home place; Mollie, married Harm Myer, a merchant of Belmont; Harry and Winnifred, at home.

After receiving a public school education, Ben Parmenter entered the Southern Collegiate Institute, at Albion, Ill., from which he graduated at the age of twenty years. He taught two years in the public schools of Belmont, then served one year as Superintendent of Schools in Norris City, Ill. He received his professional training at the Barnes University, St. Louis, Mo., from which he graduated in medicine and surgery in 1900. Dr. Parmenter has had a very good practice in Belmont since locating there and stands high in the profession. He is prominent in social and political circles, is a Republican and is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, No. 720, of Belmont, and the Modern Woodmen of America of St. Louis, Mo., Olive Camp. Dr. Parmenter is unmarried and makes his home with his sister, Mrs. Myer.

PHILLIPS, William E. (deceased).—In the death of the late William E. Phillips, of Mt. Carmel, Ill., the community lost one of its best citizens. His tragic death was a great shock to his many friends and he left a place in their hearts which will never be filled. Mr. Phillips was highly esteemed and his relations with all who knew him were pleasant and satisfactory, whether in the nature of business or friendship. He was born in Troy, Perry County, Ind., December 18, 1850, a son of John H. and Elsie M. (Sanders) Phillips, both of Indiana.

John H. Phillips was a common laborer and a hard-working man. He and his wife are now deceased. William was the oldest of their nine children, the others being: Rebecca, Mrs. John Southwood, of Troy, Ind.; Thomas, of Troy; Mary, Mrs. James Hall, died in Troy; George, who was killed while at work on a railroad at Henderson, Ky.; Mary, Mrs. Sanders, died at Poplar Bluff, Mo.; Hettie, Mrs. James Hawkins, of Huntingburg, Ind., and her twin sister, Bettie, Mrs. Wesley Hawkins, of Evansville, Ind.

After reaching the age of thirteen years William E. Phillips was employed by the farmers of the neighborhood. He received his education in the common schools and, being the oldest child, early began to earn his own living. When about twenty-three years of age he removed to St. Francisville, Ill., and became employed in the construction of the Cairo Division of the Cairo, Vincennes & Chicago Railroad, now a part of the "Big Four System," and later became a bridge carpenter for the Big Four.

April 9, 1882, Mr. Phillips married Rosa Courter, who was born near Lancaster, Wabash County, daughter of Newton J. and Esther C. (Couch) Courter. Mr. Courter was a soldier in Company I, Sixty-sixth Regular Sharpshooters, and in February, 1864, at the Battle of Lookout Mountain, was shot in the hand, crippling it for life, serving however, until the close of the war. Before the war he had been a blacksmith, and after returning home after the war, taught school seven years, then was ordained a minister of the Christian Church, in which field he worked until his death. Mr. Courter died February 16, 1873, and his widow has since lived with her children. She and her husband had ten children, five of whom died young and five still survive, namely: Mary Alice, Mrs. William H. Moore, of Vincennes, Ind.; Hiram, died in infancy; Sarah Elizabeth, died at the age of eleven years; Susan Olive, Mrs. George W. Maurer, living near Sumner, Ill.; Mrs. Phillips and Lillie, twins, the latter, Mrs. V. J. Tyrrell, of Chicago; Charles Clinton, Hattie May and Frankie, died in infancy; and William A., of Peoria, Ill., who married Laura Page, of Vincennes, Ind., and has five children—John Newton, Lambert Maurice, Esther Louise, Charles Albert and Martha Alice.

After his marriage Mr. Phillips continued to live at St. Francisville some time, being employed as bridge carpenter one year. December 1, 1883, he moved with his family to Mt. Carmel, where he was employed in the round-house of the railroad company. Later he was promoted to the machinery department, but soon after began work as fireman. After serving fourteen years in the latter position, he became an engineer on the road, but about one year after being promoted to this position was fatally injured in a head-on collision at Harrisburg, Ill., September 9, 1904, dying there two days later, and being buried in Mt. Carmel Cemetery, September 13. His widow still resides in Mt. Carmel, where she has erected a handsome residence on West Ninth Street. She is Secretary of the Mystic Workers Lodge. Mr. Phillips was a member of the Christian Church, with which the entire family is connected, and in politics was a Republican; was also a prominent member of the B. of L. E. of Mt. Carmel.

The children born to Mr. Phillips and wife were: Charles Augustus, born December 12, 1882, a boiler-maker at Mt. Carmel, who married Dora Followell, and they have one child—Alice Marie, born February 15, 1910; and Clyde J., born March 29, 1885, a switchman at the Big Four Yards at Mt. Carmel, who married Rose Wolf, a daughter of Frank Wolf of Mt. Carmel, but they have no children. Besides the residence where Mrs. Phillips lives, she also owns and rents a house on West Fourth Street.

PHIPPS, Harry M., States-Attorney, Mt. Carmel, Ill., and one of the leading young lawyers of Wabash County, was born in Seymour, Jackson County, Ind., February 10, 1877, a son of Larkin and Isabelle (Boyles) Phipps. The former was born in Sparta, N. C., and died September 24, 1883, aged thirty-four years. He was an engineer on the old Ohio & Mississippi, now the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. His wife was born in Sparksville, Ind., and died September 21, 1904, aged fifty-two years. She married after her first husband's death, M. H. Mundy, the present Master-in-Chancery of Wabash County. Mr. Phipps has a sister, Minta, now the wife of Joseph McDonald, living at Richmond, Iowa, and the two were the only children born to their parents.

About 1889, Mr. Phipps and his sister came to Mt. Carmel to live with his mother, who had by this time married again. He attended the public schools of Mt. Carmel, from which he was graduated in 1897, after which he attended McKendree College for one year, at Lebanon, Ill. From there he went to the Wesleyan University at Bloomington, from which he was graduated from the law department in 1899, and immediately thereafter began practicing at Mt. Carmel. His offices are in the Cowling building. A strong Democrat, he has received recognition at the hands of his party, being appointed in 1902 and again in 1904 Master-in-Chancery. In November, 1908, he was further honored by election to the office of State's Attorney of Wabash County, for a period of four years. In religious faith he is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is a Maccabee.

On August 23, 1898, Mr. Phipps married Ida Farnsworth, born at Parkersburg, Ill., daughter of I. N. Farnsworth, who is now a resident of Mt. Carmel, but is a traveling salesman. One son has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Phipps, William Farnsworth Phipps. During the first three months as State's Attorney, Mr. Phipps succeeded in convicting a woman and son of murder, and they were sentenced to imprisonment for life. This was the famous Lucas case.

PICKERING, John M., one of the most substantial and prominent citizens of Allendale, Ill., has risen to a position of trust and responsibility by his habits of industry and reliability. Mr. Pickering was born in Lukin Township, Lawrence County, Ill., the oldest of eight children of Jordan and Mary (Keneipp) Pickering, natives of Pickaway County, Ohio, and Lawrence County, Ill., respectively. She was a daughter of Solomon and Nancy Keneipp. Jordan Pickering was a carpenter and cabinet-maker and married in Lawrence County. In later life he became a farmer in the same county. John M. Pickering was born August 16, 1840, by his father's first marriage, and lived with his parents until his marriage, being educated in the common schools.

In 1864 John M. Pickering moved to Claremont, Ill., and worked at the trade of Cooper, making flour barrels one year, then removed to Bridgeport, Ill., and worked at his trade a year and a half longer, after which he returned to the home farm and conducted same until 1882. At that time he moved to Allendale and became engineer in a grist mill. After working one year in the mill he took a position as Exchanger on the floor, and also run the engine, until 1904, when he was made chief miller, and has held this position since in the plant of the Holsen & Dorney Milling Company. He is an expert in his line and has the complete confidence of his employers, caring for their interests as though they were his own. He has sold the property left him by his parents and invested in real estate at Allendale. Politically he is a Democrat and has served as School Director. While living in Lawrence County he served one term as Assessor of Lukin Township. He is devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and has been a Class-leader since 1898. Mr. Pickering is a well-known and popular member of society, and is considered a representative and public-spirited business man.

March 3, 1864, Mr. Pickering married Sarah Woodward, who was born November 3, 1841, in Connecticut, a daughter of Samuel Woodward, also a native of that State. Of this union children were born as follows: Samuel, died in 1865; Marion, of Vincennes, Ind.; Mary Caroline, keeps house for her father; George A., of Robinson, Ill., Solomon, died in infancy; Harriet J., Mrs. Reeder Courty, of Wabash Precinct; Horace of Lawrence County, Ill.; and Viola, who died in infancy. Mrs. Pickering died August 12, 1881, mourned by a large circle of friends, remembered as a kind neighbor and a devoted mother and wife, as well as a devout Christian.

POOL, Andrew, a prosperous farmer of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born in Lewis County, Ky., November 5, 1860, a son of John and Serena (Pell) Pool. He is a grandson of Thomas and Mary (McKenzie) Pool, natives of Maryland and Kentucky, respectively, and Henry and Sarah (Arms) Pell, natives of Virginia and Kentucky. The Pool and Pell families were farmers in Lewis County, Ky., where they entered land and where their deaths occurred. John Pool and his wife were married and settled on a farm in Lewis County, Ky., where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. Pool died in August, 1895, and his wife in 1865. They had children as follows: Mary, Mrs. R. H. McCann, who died in Kentucky; Sarah, died at the age of seven years; Andrew; and Henry C., who died in infancy. After his first wife's death Mr. Pool married (second) her sister, Maria Pell, by whom he had one son, Paris, of Vermilion County, Ind.

The boyhood of Andrew Pool was spent in his native State, where he remained with his father until his marriage, October 28, 1885, to Nellie McVane, a native of Lewis County, and daughter of Aaron and Caroline (Harvey) McVane. Mr. McVane was born near Philadelphia, Pa., October 9, 1809, and his wife in Lewis County, being a daughter of William and Sallie (Martin) Harvey, of Maryland and Kentucky, respectively. Aaron McVane and his wife had children as follows: Moses, of Lewis County, Ky.; Mary, married W. W. Thurman, of Lewis County; William, died in Kentucky, in 1899; Sallie, Mrs. W. H. Gorman, of Fleming County, Ky.; Mrs. Pool, the youngest, born August 13, 1867.

Mr. Pool and his wife began housekeeping on his father's farm, November 24, 1885, and lived there until his removal to Wabash County, Ill., in February, 1896. He purchased a farm in Bellmont Precinct, where they lived about six years, and then traded it for a forty-acre farm on Section 1 of Town 1 North, Range 14 West, Lick Prairie Precinct. Mr. Pool has replaced many of the old buildings on the farm with new ones, and has made many other improvements. In June, 1901, he purchased forty-eight and one-half acres more in Lick Prairie Precinct, on the Fordyce Bottoms, and has all his land under cultivation. Besides carrying on general farming he raises horses, cattle and hogs and makes a specialty of chickens.

The children born to Mr. Pool and his wife were: Flossie, born April 24, 1888, at home; John, born October 5, 1890, died at the age of one year; Fred, born January 28, 1893, Ralph, born February 14, 1895, Caroline, born February 21, 1902, and Garnet, born June 18, 1908—all at home; and the oldest, Goldie, born October 4, 1886, wife of Elmer Arnold, of Beaver County, Okla. Mr. Pool is a Republican in politics and is identified with the best interests of the community. He is actively interested in public affairs and ready to support any movement which he considers is for the benefit of the public. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church and fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Bone Gap, and the Tribe of Ben Hur, of Bellmont.

POOL, James, of Friendsville, Wabash County, Ill., is a grandson of James Pool, who came to the county in 1810, with a brother, William, and took up a half-section of prairie land in Friendsville Precinct, where he spent the remainder of his life, and died in March, 1855. He preached in the Christian Church, the first funeral sermon in Wabash County, and besides being a preacher, was also a successful farmer and tanner. The subject of this biography was born in Wabash Precinct, March 26, 1851, a son of Lemon and Mary (Potts-Swaney) Pool, natives of Friendsville Precinct and Dresden, Ohio, respectively. The mother was the widow of James Swaney at the time of her marriage to Lemon Pool, who was a son of James and Angeline (Keen) Pool, both natives of Ohio, while she was a daughter of William Potts, also of Ohio.

After his marriage Lemon Pool settled at St. Francisville, Ill., and for three years worked in a saw-mill. He then took a trip through the Southern States and conducted a saw-mill one year in St. Francisville, and upon his return purchased the shares of the other heirs to his father's homestead. After carrying on the farm four years he moved to Hazelton, Ind., in Spring of 1861, where for four years he followed the trade of carpenter. He then returned to his farm, where the remainder of his life was spent. He died October 13, 1895, at the age of seventy-nine years. His children were: James (the oldest); John, of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Peter, of Evansville, Ind.; Lemon H., of Friendsville, Ill.; William, a Methodist Episcopal minister; Charles, who died in Evansville in 1908.

James Pool was educated in the public schools and Friendsville Seminary, and when eighteen years of age began working in a foundry and machine shop in Vincennes, Ind., removing six months later to Evansville, where he spent six months, in a machine shop, later returning to Friendsville, where he erected a general repair shop. He also taught Natural Philosophy and Astronomy in Friendsville Seminary. Three years later he embarked in the manufacture of scientific instruments, such as telescopes, microscopes, batteries, etc., and continued in this enterprise eight years, and then worked eight years in various machine shops in Mt. Carmel. He returned to Friendsville in 1888 and in 1897 was appointed Postmaster, which office he has held to the present time. He has also carried on other business in connection with the postoffice, for ten years did general job-printing, and since has conducted a general merchandise store. He is an expert mechanic and in 1876 made the first electric telephone ever used in the county. In 1902 he made the first automobile ever run on public roads in the county, first trip November 24, 1902, and since turning his attention to other lines has shown business acumen and good judgment in the conduct of his public and private affairs. He is one of the most prominent Republicans of Wabash County and served four years in the United States Signal Service, four years as Justice of Peace, eight years as School Director, and one year as Overseer of the Poor in Wabash County. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, is well known in social circles and highly esteemed by his associates and neighbors. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Pool married, September 7, 1880, Anna Simonds, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, a daughter of William and Mary (Hill) Simonds, and they became parents of children as follows: Vitula, Mrs. Harley Geissler, of El Reno, Okla.; Eugene E., a mail clerk on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, his run being from St. Louis to Nashville; Nellie, cashier in a bank at El Reno, Okla.; Ethel, a stenographer at El Reno, Okla.; and Robert, Harry and Lenora, all at home.

PRICE, James W.—One of the leading citizens of Allendale, Ill., is James W. Price, who helped lay out the town and was the first Postmaster of the place. He is proprietor of one of the oldest stores in Wabash County, the oldest and largest of its kind, and also owns 500 acres of farm land, all in Wabash Precinct, which he rents. He is one of the oldest residents of the county and took the State census of same in 1855. He is one of the most prominent Democrats in the region and some years ago served as Postmaster of Timberville, a village a mile and a half south of Allendale. Mr. Price was one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Allendale, and has since been its President, the other officers being: William F. Courter, Vice President; William M. Price (son of James W.) Cashier, and H. A. Fox Assistant Cashier. Mr. Price has made his own way in the world, against great odds, and although he has been a cripple from boyhood, his ambition and energy have triumphed over difficulties and he has forged his way to financial success and position.

Mr. Price was born in Richland County, Ohio, July 28, 1830, a son of Benjamin, Sr., and Sarah (Wolf) Price, the former a native of Delaware and the latter of Virginia. His grandfather, John C. Price, settled in Ohio, where he carried on farming until his death. Benjamin Price, Sr., was married in Ohio and he and his wife moved to Lawrence County, Ill., where he bought a farm, and where he died in 1844. Later his widow moved to Allendale, Ill., where her death occurred in 1875. She and her husband had six sons and five daughters, James W. being the sixth child.

Until he was seventeen years of age James W. Price lived with his mother, and then began to work out on a farm. While he was hauling a load of wheat a man with a gun asked for a ride, and while they were going through a marsh, the gun was accidentally discharged and the ball entered Mr. Price's left knee, injuring him so severely that he was obliged to spend six months in bed and when he recovered sufficiently to walk, was obliged to use crutches for a year. His leg was doubled and stiff and he has never recovered from his injury. When able to work he secured a position, driving cattle to Chicago, and later bought cattle for himself and made two trips from Southern Illinois to Chicago. He then embarked in business on his own account at Timberville, in Wabash County, and kept a general mercantile and grocery store there from 1856 until 1870, when he assisted in laying out the town of Allendale. The railroad was then being built through Allendale and he moved his business to that place, where he has since remained, having greatly increased his trade as the town grew. He is one of the most enterprising merchants in the county and keeps a fine stock of up-to-date goods. He has established a reputation for strict honesty and integrity in his business dealings and has the entire confidence of his patrons.

Mr. Price was married (first) in 1855, to Jane Compton, who was born in Wabash Precinct, a daughter of Perry Compton. They had two children, namely: Addie, who died in infancy, and Harvey, in business with his father. His wife died in 1863 and on September 22, 1864, he married (second) Sarah I. McClain, born in Wabash Precinct, a daughter of William and Margaret (Crossen) McClain, both born near Cincinnati, Ohio. The children by this marriage were: Eva L., Mrs. Lyman Leeds, who died at Allendale, Ill.; William M., of Allendale; Emma, died at the age of twenty-nine years; Sharon H., in business with his father; Beulah G., married Dr. Claud E. Gilliatt, of Allendale and James Noble, who died in infancy. Mr. Price attended school less than two years in childhood, but has always tried to improve his opportunities to acquire knowledge, studying on his own account and learning much from experience. He is well informed on current topics and is much interested in the welfare of his community, as well as his county and State.

PRICE, William M.—The bankers and successful business men of any place have great influence on the progress and welfare of their community, and are necessarily men of prominence and stability. The financiers of a farming country are usually conservative and careful in their business dealings, and are so well known by their patrons, who are also their neighbors, that they have gained the confidence and respect of all who know them. The First National Bank of Allendale, Ill., the only institution of its kind ever established in that town, was organized by a number of leading men who resided in the vicinity, their names being: James W. Price, William M. Price, Fred Iolsen, Sr., William F. Courter, H. A. Fox, James Stillwell, and H. T. Goddard of Mt. Carmel, Ill.

William M. Price was born at Timberville, Wabash County, Ill., August 15, 1869, son of James W. and Sarah I. (McClain) Price, the former a native of Richland County, Ohio, and the latter of Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, Ill. (For list of their children see sketch of J. W. Price.)

The education of William M. Price was received in the public schools of Allendale, Ill., after which he began working in his father's store, following this occupation until 1906, when he participated in organizing the Allendale Bank.

The officers of The First National Bank, of Allendale, are: James W. Price, President; William F. Courter, Vice President; William M. Price, Cashier, and H. A. Fox, Assistant Cashier. Mr. Price has been Cashier since the organization of the bank and is well fitted by training and experience for this responsible position. The bank is one of the chief financial institutions of Wabash County and stands well in that part of the State.

September 11, 1895, Mr. Price married Cora B. Tracy, born at Chapel Hill, N. J., a daughter of Elizabeth R. Tracy. To this marriage one son was born, James Tracy Price, born June 11, 1896. Mr. Price is a member of the Christian Church, in which he is a Deacon, having held that post since 1904. He is a sound Democrat and served seven years as a member of the Democratic Central Committee. Fraternally he belongs to A. F. & A. M. No. 752, of Allendale; Chapter No. 159, of Mt. Carmel; Knights of Pythias, No. 227, of Mt. Carmel, and Modern Woodmen of America No. 1799, Allendale. He is well known in Allendale and vicinity, and has many warm personal and political friends. He has discharged the various duties that have come to him in private and public capacities to the best of his ability and has won the approval of all with whom he has had dealings.

PUTNAM, Lafayette F., a substantial farmer of Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of that precinct, born October 26, 1861, a son of Alfred D. and Rebecca (McClane) Putnam, both natives of Wabash County, the former born in Mt. Carmel Precinct and the latter in Belmont Precinct. The grandparents—Eber and Trifosa (Ballard) Putnam and Charles and Louisa (Sloan) McClane, were all from the East and among the early settlers of Wabash County, where they became extensive farmers.

After their marriage Alfred D. Putnam and his wife settled on eighty acres of timber land, which he cleared and put under cultivation. Later they sold this farm and purchased 300 acres five miles northwest of Belmont, where both died, he on April 4, 1878, and she August 20, 1888. They were parents of children as follows: Louisa, Mrs. John Groff, died in Belmont; Lester, Allen, Lafayette; Williams, died in Belmont; Zoll, of Belmont Precinct; Elton, of Colorado City, Colo.

Lafayette F. Putnam received his education in the district school and remained with his parents until he was married, March 1, 1882, to Clara E. Barker, born in Rockport, Ind., daughter of Henry and Hattie (Drum) Barker, both natives of Indiana. Mr. Barker and his wife located in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, in 1866, and he died there in 1875. His widow continued to live on the farm and in Belmont until she married (second) George West, when they moved to Loveland, Iowa, where she now resides, a widow.

Mr. Putnam and his wife moved to eighty-two and one-half acres of land in Section 22, Bellmont Precinct, part of the home farm, which was deeded to him, and of this he cleared forty acres from timber and now has the place all under cultivation. He erected a house and other necessary buildings and has developed an excellent farm, where he carried on general farming. He also raises a good grade of cattle, hogs and horses. He is an energetic and industrious farmer and has met with gratifying success. Mr. Putnam is a member of the Christian Church and Assistant Superintendent of the Sunday School. He has also served as Deacon of the church. In political affairs he supports the Democratic party and has served as Justice of the Peace and Deputy Assessor. Fraternally he is a member of Lodge No. 729, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Bellmont.

Children as follows were born to Mr. and Mrs. Putnam: Loretta, Mrs. Riley Duke, of Bellmont Precinct, has one son, Raymond, born July 10, 1906; William A., of Bellmont Precinct, married Mary Johnson, and they have one daughter, Fern, born May 25, 1908, and a son, Vern Lafayette, born May 3, 1910; Bertha, Mrs. Lewis (Berberich) lives with her father and has one son, Emmet Eugene, born July 26, 1910, Amy who died at the age of three years and Mina, at home.

PUTNAM, Samuel R. (deceased).—For many years the late Samuel R. Putnam was actively engaged in a large law practice in Mt. Carmel, Ill., and was not only one of the best known lawyers in Wabash County, but was before the public frequently as organizer in matters of a business and financial nature. Mr. Putnam was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., October 19, 1849, the eldest son of Chester F. and Elizabeth (Baird) Putnam. When he was sixteen years of age the family moved to Bridgeport, Ill., but about two years later located in Mt. Carmel, which was Mr. Putnam's home until the time of his death. His father being a man of limited means, young Putnam had to make his own way in the world, and immediately after completing his public school course he entered the law office of Bell and Green, one of the most widely known legal firms in Southern Illinois. He was admitted to the bar in the spring of 1870. In the practice of his profession, Mr. Putnam was one of the most successful of Wabash County attorneys. He made no attempt at oratory and rarely argued a case before a jury, but as an office lawyer and counsel he had few equals. He was a director of the First National Bank from its organization and Vice President from 1897 until his death. He was President and Director of the Wabash Savings Bank until it was sold out, now being the American National. He was Secretary of the Friendship Mutual Fire & Lightning Insurance Company for fifteen years and for twelve years served as City Clerk of Mt. Carmel. He was a lifelong Republican and believed in the principles advocated by that party, but was broadminded enough to vote for men rather than for party in local matters. He was connected with the Order of Elks. Although quiet and unassuming by nature, he stood high in his community and his life was one of usefulness and wielded a mighty influence for good. On May 30, 1907, just as the funeral procession of Mrs. Katherine Stein (Mrs. Putnam's foster mother) was leaving his home on Third Street, he died. He had reached the walk on the street with his wife, intending to get into his carriage to go out to the cemetery, when suddenly he fell in an unconscious condition and, on being carried into the house, died in a few minutes without regaining consciousness, his death being probably caused by heart failure. Mr. Putnam had not been in the best of health for some four or five years, but his condition had not been considered serious, and there had been no noticeable change. His death under these conditions, so closely following that of Mrs. Stein, proved such a shock to Mrs. Putnam that it is doubtful if she will ever entirely recover from it.

On April 21, 1878, Mr. Putnam was married to Agatha Weinbach, who was born in Mt. Carmel, Ill., December 20, 1854, daughter of Frederick and Margaret (Schafer) Weinbach. Mr. Weinbach was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, October 27, 1829, and died at Mt. Carmel November 5, 1864. He came to the United States with his parents in 1831, the family first locating at Cairo, going thence to Evansville, and finally to Mt. Carmel, where a wild farm was purchased about one mile from the town. Margaret Schafer was born at Mt. Carmel in 1834 and died there in 1856. She was a daughter of John and Agatha Schafer, natives of Germany who came to Mt. Carmel, Ill., from Pittsburg at an early day. Frederick and Margaret (Schafer) Weinbach were married in Mt. Carmel. He was a carriage-maker by trade, following that occupation throughout his life. He and his wife had two daughters: Mrs. Putnam, and Clara, the latter the wife of Albert Corie of Tuscola.

Karl F. Putnam, a son of Samuel R. and Agatha (Weinbach) Putnam, is Cashier of the National Bank of Mt. Carmel, with which he has been connected ever since his graduation from the Northwestern University. He married Fannie Johnson, daughter of Jacob F. Johnson, and they have a daughter: Anna Elizabeth.

RAMSEY, George P., formerly States-Attorney of Wabash County, is one of the leading representatives of the Bar, and a man widely known and universally respected. He was born at Xenia, Ill., January 19, 1863, a son of Dr. Ramsey, who died in 1901 while engaged in active practice at Xenia, Ill. Mr. Ramsey was graduated from McKendree College, Class of 1882, and then began his law studies with M. Thompson, of St. Louis, which he continued there with Felix Corwell of Clay County. After a careful preparation, he was admitted to the Bar in 1885, and locating at Tuscola, Douglas County, began practice immediately. By December of the same year he was appointed Deputy County Clerk, but resigned to return to Clay County. On June 3, 1891, he came to Mt. Carmel, which has since been the scene of his work. He took up the practice of Judge Landes, upon the election of the latter to the office of Circuit Judge. Always popular and a strong Democrat, he was elected City Attorney for two years, in 1893, and re-elected to the same office in 1895. In November, 1896, he was elected on his party ticket to the office of State's Attorney, and during his term, was fearless in his administration of justice, and his prosecution of crime.

On July 16, 1884, occurred the marriage of Mr. Ramsey to Amanda L. Phillips, and they have two children: Mary E. and Edgar P. He is a member of the K. of P., of which he has been Chancellor Commander twice, and also belongs to the A. O. U. W. and Elks.

Strong in the councils of his party, a liberal, far-seeing man and eloquent lawyer, Mr. Ramsey is one of the most valuable citizens of Wabash County, and one whose services have always been at the command of his fellow-citizens.

RAMSEY, J. Eli, who all his life has taken an active interest in the welfare and progress of the public schools of the State of Illinois, and who has served twelve years as County Superintendent of Schools for Wabash County, is well known to educators through Southern Illinois in consequence of the work he has done in the interests of the cause in which there is so much need of constant activity. Mr. Ramsey has now engaged in another line of work, but retains his interest in school work and rejoices when any good has been accomplished along the line of his many years of endeavor. He is a native of Wabash County, a son of Robert and Rachel (Wood) Ramsey, both natives of Wabash County. His grandfathers were Dr. James Ramsey, a native of Ohio, and Eli Wood.

Dr. James Ramsey was one of the early settlers of Wabash County and was a veterinary surgeon, practicing there many years. Robert Ramsey and wife were married in Wabash Precinct, and he became the owner of three farms in the county, besides two in Lawrence County, though he spent most of his life in the former. He died, however, on one of his Lawrence County farms, November 18, 1894, at the age of sixty-two years. He was an extensive stock-raiser and a successful farmer. His widow now resides in St. Francisville, Ill. Eleven children were born to them, as follows: J. Eli, the oldest; Mary, Mrs. Edgar Pixley, of Friendsville Precinct; James M., of Mt. Carmel, dealer in fine stock; William R., an attorney in Chicago; Belle, who died at the age of twenty-five years; Cary W., an attorney living at Goldendale, Washington; Florence E., Mrs. Ezra Vandermark, of Crossville, Ill., whose husband is a furniture dealer and undertaker; Linder, living at home; Essie M., Mrs. Harley Orr, of Bicknell, Ind.; and Maud, Mrs. Charles Spencer, of Bridgeport, Ill.

J. Eli Ramsey spent his boyhood on a farm and upon reaching manhood spent his summers at farm work and his winters in teaching school. He received part of his education in the seminary at Friendsville, Ill., and also attended the Normal College at Danville, Ind. After teaching some years he attended the Southern Illinois Normal University, at Carbondale, Ill., from which he graduated in 1890, having completed the full classical course. He served one term as President and held other offices in the Southern Illinois Teachers' Association, and has held offices in other educational associations. In 1890 he was elected County Superintendent of Schools and rendered an able administration of affairs. He then entered the employ of the Prudential Life Insurance Company at Mt. Carmel, and two years later was appointed Assistant Superintendent. After holding this position he became business manager of the Mt. Carmel Register Company. At the same time he has been actively interested in the real estate business, in connection with the life and fire insurance business, and has met with gratifying success.

Mr. Ramsey was married, July 7, 1887, to Elizabeth Mundy, who was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, daughter of James and Irene (Wood) Mundy, and to this marriage children were born as follows: Clarence, who died in the fall of 1907, at the age of nineteen years; Leota M., a teacher in the public schools of Mt. Carmel; Everett E. and Fred W. E., at home. Mrs. Ramsey died April 18, 1896, and in February, 1899, Mr. Ramsey married (second) Maggie C. Copeland, born in Mt. Carmel, daughter of James Copeland, one of the old settlers of Mt. Carmel.

Mr. Ramsey has been Deacon several years in the Christian Church and is now an Elder. He is a teacher in the Sunday School and served eight years as Superintendent of same. He is also the chorister. He is a member of the Wabash County Sunday School Association and for some time gave instruction in music in various counties in Illinois. He takes an active interest in all kinds of church work and is an active member of the various societies of Mt. Carmel Christian Church.

In political affiliations Mr. Ramsey is a Democrat and is much interested in political affairs. He has been very prominent as a member of the State Teachers' Association, and is a member of the Scientific Society of Mt. Carmel. He belongs to Lodge No. 839, A. F. & A. M., of Mt. Carmel; also to the I. O. O. F., the K. O. T. M. and the M. W. of A. He and his wife have a large circle of friends and are well known for their generous hospitality.

RAVATT, Daniel S., one of the most extensive farmers in Wabash County, Ill., owns one of the largest farms in his part of the State and carries on his work according to modern theories and methods. Mr. Ravatt was born in Middletown, Monmouth County, N. J., in 1852, son of William S. and Emma (Seely) Ravatt, both natives of Monmouth County. His grandfather, William Ravatt, was a soldier in the Revolution from New Jersey. William S. Ravatt and his wife had six children. The parents died in the East. The father was a farmer by occupation.

About 1872-73 Daniel S. Ravatt moved to Wabash County, Ill., and rented land there for twelve years, then purchased about 1,000 acres in Wabash Precinct. This land was very much run down and he found it necessary to nurse it back to a state of productiveness, which he has been very successful in doing. He now has as fine an estate as is to be found in the county and also owns 150 acres in Lancaster Precinct. Of his larger farm about 600 acres has been left in timber. He raises considerable wheat, corn and oats and makes a specialty of stock-raising, having Polled Angus cattle, draft horses, a registered Percheron stallion and Poland China hogs. The handsome and comfortable house where he now resides was erected in 1908 and contains many modern conveniences.

In 1894 Mr. Ravatt married Alice Staley, born in Colorado, but they were divorced in 1907, since which time he has lived alone. Mr. Ravatt has demonstrated a high degree of business ability in conducting his agricultural affairs, and takes great interest and pleasure in what he has accomplished along this line. He is a member of the Christian Church, a staunch adherent of the Democratic party and belongs to Masonic Lodge No. 752, at Allendale. He has become well known and popular in his locality, and is looked upon as a valuable public-spirited citizen.

REEL, David S., one of the oldest native-born residents of Wabash County, Ill., was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, March 1, 1830, a son of Emanuel and Nancy (Simonds) Reel, natives of Indiana and Ohio respectively. The parents were early settlers of Wabash County, where they were married, and located on a farm north of Mt. Carmel, where both died. Children were born to them as follows: David S. (the oldest); Elizabeth A., Mrs. Wooster Kingsbury, now deceased; Amanda, Mrs. Peter Schrodt, deceased; Jacob, died at Camp Butler, during the Civil War; Cynthia E., Mrs. Fielden Muncy, deceased; Oliver, of Mt. Carmel; Benjamin, deceased; Susan, Mrs. John Beard, of Mt. Carmel.

The education of David S. Reel was obtained in the Simonds District School and he lived with his parents until his marriage, November 15, 1855, to Margaret Gard, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, March 10, 1832, daughter of Justus and Anna (Oman) Gard, natives of Ohio and of Rochester, N. Y., respectively. Justus Gard was a son of Seth and Amelia (Fout) Gard, the former born in Ohio and the latter in Pennsylvania. Mrs. Gard was a daughter of George and Anna Oman, of Rochester, N. Y., who came west with their family on a houseboat down the Allegheny and Ohio Rivers, to Vincennes, Ind., then on to Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, in 1818. They secured government land began improving their farm. Seth Gard and his wife brought their family to Gard's Point, in 1814, and secured a large tract of land, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. Gard was a New Light preacher, a soldier in the Black Hawk War and served as a member of the last Territorial Legislature of Illinois, 1816-17, and member from Edwards County in the Constitutional Convention of 1818.

Justus Gard and his wife were married and settled at Gard's Point, where he bought land, and also entered land in Lick Prairie Precinct. A tannery was erected on the place, and Dr. Baker conducted it. Mrs. Gard died in 1855, at the age of forty-eight years, while her husband survived until February, 1870, dying at the age of sixty-two years.

After his marriage David S. Reel took up his residence on a forty-acre tract of land northwest of Mt. Carmel, also became owner of forty acres two miles north of Mt. Carmel. August 14, 1862, he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until June 25, 1865. Upon his discharge he returned home, where he found his wife and children had had many hardships during his absence. He participated in many battles, was wounded several times, and his head having been injured, he was assigned to the hospital corps, where he served the remainder of his time. He had sold his farm before going to war and after he was gone his wife moved to the original place he had owned, which was all covered with timber. She was left with four children, the oldest six and the youngest less than a year old. Her neighbors banded together, cut trees and erected a log cabin. She hired a man to put on a roof, cut and made fence rails, cut cord wood and often she and her children went hungry. After the return of the husband they were a happy family and prospered well. He was sick a great deal for a few years but managed to clear off the timber and put his farm under cultivation. He improved his land as much as possible and erected good buildings, adding as many modern conveniences and appliances as he was able. He died March 21, 1899, since which time his widow has continued to reside on the farm, with one servant.

The children born to Mr. Reel and wife were: Mary E., Mrs. George H. Higgins, of West Salem, Edwards County, Ill.; Emanuel S., of Friendsville Precinct; Justus G., of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Anna L., Mrs. Alfred Crow, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Frank, who died in infancy; Sarah Elizabeth, Mrs. Charles Campbell, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Catherine D., Mrs. George T. Kitchene, of Mt. Carmel Precinct. Mr. Reel was well known throughout the county and highly esteemed for his patriotism and high character. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in politics was a Republican. He was a representative citizen and his loss was widely mourned.

REEL, Justus Gard, who is well known for the fine registered stock he raises, on his farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of the precinct, born April 5, 1860. He is a son of David S. and Margaret (Gard) Reel, natives of Wabash County. Their parents were Emanuel S. and Nancy Reel, natives of Indiana, and Justus Gard, of German parentage, all of whom were early settlers of Wabash County, where they entered land from the Government. The Reels settled at Reel's Corners. David S. Reel and wife settled where their son Justus was born, the land then being covered with timber and the latter well remembers the time when deer, wild turkeys, and other wild animals and fowls were plentiful. The father served in Company C, One Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, enlisting in 1862 and serving until the close of the war. While helping clear a road through the woods for artillery to pass through, a tree fell upon him and he had to remain in the woods a week or ten days until he was able to join his regiment, as they were not able to get him to a hospital. At the close of the war he continued to clear and improve his farm, and carried on this work until his death, in March, 1903. His widow still resides on the home farm, having reached the age of seventy-five years. They were parents of children as follows: Mary Ellen, married James Wiggs, who died, and she afterward married Arthur Higgins, of Salem, Ill.; Emanuel S., of Friendsville Precinct; Anna, Mrs. Alfred Crow, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Justus G.; Frank, died in infancy; Elizabeth, Mrs. Charles Campbell, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Catherine, Mrs. Theodore Kitchene, of Mt. Carmel Precinct.

Justus G. Reel spent his childhood on a farm and received but a meager education in the district schools. He began working on his father's farm as soon as he was able to help, and was reared to hard work and habits of thrift. When he reached his majority he left home and began to work for his uncle, Peter Schrodt, where he remained until his marriage. He was married February 21, 1883, to Mary, daughter of John and Maria (Bradle) Schrodt, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct. Her parents were natives of Germany, the father born in Hesse-Darmstadt. Mary Schrodt married (first) Fred Guagy, who was killed in the cyclone at Mt. Carmel in 1877. By her first marriage she had but one child, Serena, who died in infancy. After his marriage Mr. Reel moved to the farm given them by his wife's father, which consists of 127 acres, where they still reside. He has bought land himself, ninety-four acres in one tract and seventy-four in another, both in Mt. Carmel Precinct, and his wife also owns 160 acres in Mt. Carmel Precinct. He has raised registered Shropshire sheep and Berkshire hogs, and has found high-grade stock to be a profitable investment, a line in which he has been very successful. He is an enterprising, progressive citizen and takes an active interest in public affairs. Politically he is a Republican and he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America of Mt. Carmel.

The following children have been born to Mr. Reel and his wife: Daisy L., Mrs. Frank Seiler, of Chico, Cal., who has one child—Bernice Reel, born January 9, 1909; Rosa, married Paul Hilbert, who lives near her father, and they have two children—Geneva Aline, born March 23, 1903, and Violet Bernadine, born September 20, 1909; Mamie, married Charles Trover, of Mt. Carmel, Ill., but has no children; Beatrice, resides at home, won a four years' scholarship in 1909, and is attending the Southern Illinois Normal College at Carbondale.

REEL, Manuel S.—The Reel family is one of the best known in Wabash County, Ill., where its members have always stood for the best interests of their community. One of the representative members of this family is Manuel S. Reel, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, September 16, 1858, the son of David S. and Margaret (Gard) Reel, natives of Mt. Carmel Precinct, whose parents were Emanuel and Nancy (Simonds) Reel, and Justus and Anna (Oman) Gard. David S. Reel and his wife are mentioned elsewhere in this work. He was a soldier in the Civil War and served with honor and distinction, during his absence in the field, leaving his wife to care for the children.

The early education of Manuel S. Reel was obtained in the district schools, but after reaching his majority, beginning to appreciate more fully the value of a higher education, he borrowed money with which he paid for private instruction, and this has since proved to him worth the time and money expended on it. He remained with his parents until his marriage, July 23, 1884, to Maggie Parkinson, who was born at Grand Rapids, Mt. Carmel Precinct, February 18, 1859, a daughter of Edward and Sarah (Hodgson) Parkinson. Mr. Parkinson was born at Westmoreland and his wife near Leeds, England, the latter a daughter of Edward Beahy and wife, who came to the United States in 1841, making the trip in a sailing vessel and landing at Philadelphia after three months spent on the ocean. They then proceeded to what is now Wabash County, then a part of Edwards County, Ill., where they located permanently. Mr. Parkinson was brought to the same county by his parents in 1825, when but two years old, the family settling in Mt. Carmel. He was married in Mt. Carmel in 1846, and worked there at his trade as a millwright, also being engaged at different times in various other lines of work. He died February 18, 1868, and his wife on January 18, 1892. Their children were: Anna, Mrs. George W. Shilling, of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Joseph, of Salt Lake City, Utah; Mary and Esther, died in infancy; Lena, Mrs. Jacob Marks, of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Mrs. Reel; Alice, Mrs. John Ritter, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Laura Ellen, died at the age of three years, and William, died in infancy.

After his marriage Mr. Reel lived for some time on rented land in Mt. Carmel Precinct, and then bought his present farm of forty-one acres of well improved land in Friendsville Precinct. In 1892 he added sixteen acres and about 1905 six acres more, in Mt. Carmel Precinct, near the Wabash River. Besides carrying on a general line of farming he raises Poland China and Berkshire hogs, as well as a good grade of cattle and chickens. The following children were born to him and his wife: Anna Lanra, Mrs. Frank Shurtliff, of Friendsville, Ill.; whose first husband, Harvey Wetzel, died; Herman M., of Mt. Carmel Precinct, married Pauline Briner; Esther Pearl, of Mt. Carmel; David William, Sarah and Amy Marie, at home; Nellie and Ethel, twins, and Robert Edward, all at home.

Mr. Reel is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, having served as Trustee, Steward and Sunday School Superintendent, and is now District Steward. In politics he is a Republican. His wife was reared in Mt. Carmel, where she attended the common and high schools. Fraternally Mr. Reel belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, No. 732, of Friendsville; Modern Woodmen of America, No. 2074; Royal Neighbors No. 4032, to which his wife also belongs; both are also members of the Order of Rebekahs, and Mrs. Reel belongs to the Modern Americans No. 34, to the Eastern Star Lodge and also to the Royal Neighbors. Both have many friends in the community and are popular in social circles.

REES, Lewis (deceased).—One of the oldest settlers of Mt. Carmel, Ill., during his later years was Lewis Rees, who was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, February 8, 1833, and whose death occurred September 29, 1910. He was a son of Henry and Margaret (Fogle) Rees, natives of Germany, who came to Cincinnati in 1830. Henry Rees learned the trade of tailor and later became a contractor, working on the Whitewater Canal, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., which he continued until 1840, and then conducted a hotel at Lawrenceburg. In the early 'forties he joined the regular United States Army and took part in the Mexican War. While located at Fort Green Bay he purchased a farm there. Later he re-enlisted at Chicago, serving until the end of the war. After being mustered out at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., he died, at St. Louis, in 1848. Meantime his wife had bought a farm in St. Clair County, Ill., but later moved to St. Louis, and after her husband's death married again and returned to St. Clair County, where she died in 1864. Lewis Rees was the second of three children, the others being: Henry, who died at New Richmond, Ohio, in 1903, and Caroline, who died at Leavenworth, Kan., previous to the death of her brother Henry.

At the age of nine years Lewis Rees began learning the tinner's trade, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., remaining in that city until 1848, when he went down the Ohio River to Newburg, Ind., where he spent a month, on January 6, 1849, locating at Mt. Carmel, Ill. He worked there two years as a journeyman tinner for the firm of Cuqua & Kosier, and in November, 1850, bought the interest of William Kosier, the firm then becoming Cuqua & Rees. A year later this partnership was dissolved and Mr. Rees worked for various employers until the spring of 1852, when he formed a partnership with Messrs. Tilton &

Johnston, a year later he and Mr. Johnston buying the interest of Mr. Tilton. In 1860 Mr. Rees bought out Mr. Johnston's interest and carried on the business alone until 1903, when he sold out to Kamp Brothers. He had built up a good trade and carried a good stock of stoves, hardware and tinware. From that time during the rest of his life he conducted the tinshop for Kamp Brothers. He built up a large business from a small beginning, and was considered one of the leading merchants of Mt. Carmel.

In March, 1852, Mr. Rees married Sarah J. Wilson, who was born at Mt. Carmel, in August, 1833, a daughter of J. L. and Sarah (Thrapp) Wilson, natives of Ohio, who were early settlers of Wabash County. Mr. Wilson came to Illinois in 1824 and conducted a grist-mill, saw-mill and foundry. Mrs. Rees was one of the first pair of twins born in Mt. Carmel. She died June 5, 1908, and was buried in Rose Hill Cemetery, at Mt. Carmel. She had borne her husband children as follows: Frances C., born May 18, 1853, married James V. Hurd and died February 15, 1882; James Henry, born December 14, 1854, died May 23, 1857; Agnes M., born November 22, 1856, married John Steckler; William Lewis, born April 16, 1859, died February 27, 1863; Luella, born September 3, 1861, died March 5, 1867; one daughter died in infancy; Nellie, born July 31, 1867, now Mrs. B. H. Kamp, of Mt. Carmel. Mrs. Hurd had two children: Leila, born August 22, 1871, died August 8, 1876; Hattie Rees, born October 24, 1877, now Mrs. Frank Orland, of Mt. Carmel, who has one daughter, Frances Hurd, and one son, Lewis Rees Orland. Mr. and Mrs. John Steckler have two children: Lillie M., married A. F. Ray, of Detroit, Mich., and they have one son—Marion; and Gladys W., born November 12, 1888, is at home. Mr. Rees and wife celebrated their golden wedding in March, 1902.

Mr. Rees was a self-educated and self-made man, having begun his career at a tender age, and attended school only four months. He learned much in the school of experience and from personal observation. He manifested good judgment in his business operations and was successful to a gratifying degree. He was a member of Wabash Lodge No. 35, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Mt. Carmel, which he joined March 12, 1854. Politically he was a staunch Republican and always took an active interest in local affairs, especially in the growth and development of his home city of Mt. Carmel. He served two terms as Mayor of the city and twenty-eight years as Alderman of the First Ward, and was a village Trustee long before Mt. Carmel became a city.

REIBER, Andrew.—Among the prominent and successful German-Americans of Wabash County, Ill., none are accorded higher respect than veterans of the Civil War, who supported the cause of their adopted country so courageously and defended its interests with their greatest treasure—even life itself. Among the thinning ranks of these veterans may be found Andrew Reiber, of Wabash Precinct. Mr. Reiber was born in Hesse-Cassel, Germany, April 23, 1812, a son of Henry and Margaret Reiber, who came to the United States in 1846. The parents settled in Newcastle, Pa., where for some time the father worked at his trade of blacksmith. They moved to McKeesport, and later to Philipsburg, Pa., and in 1857 Mr. Reiber and a neighbor, with the latter's son, removed to Lancaster, Ill., where they located. Here Mr. Reiber conducted a blacksmith shop with the help of his three sons. He was born May 13, 1813, and died July 2, 1884, and his wife, who was born in January, 1815, died July 20, 1893. Of their twelve children the following grew to maturity: Mary, Mrs. Samuel Biehl, now deceased; John, of Missouri; Andrew; Catherine, Mrs. Henry Biehl, of Brazil, Ind.; William, died October 3, 1883, at the age of thirty-seven years, ten months and four days; Elizabeth, Mrs. Daniel Seibert, of Lancaster Precinct.

Andrew Reiber remained with his parents until August 21, 1862, when he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. They were ordered to Springfield, Ill., where they were drilled a short time, thence went to Cincinnati, then being assigned to the Army of Kentucky. Mr. Reiber took part in a battle near Nashville, Tenn., then was taken sick and sent to a hospital at Nashville. After spending a few months in the hospital he was examined and put in the veteran reserve corps, remaining in that body until his discharge, although he had previously been orderly in the War Department at Washington, D. C. As a part of the Army of the Cumberland, the regiment took part in a number of the most memorable battles of the war, including Chattanooga, Resaca, Nashville and the pursuit of Hood through Northern Alabama, and received repeated commendations for bravery. It was mustered out at Nashville June 11, 1865, and received its final discharge at Springfield, June 23, after which the Mr. Reiber returned to Lancaster.

Mr. Reiber married, January 6, 1863, Catherine Schafer, who was born in Mt. Carmel, daughter of Henry Schafer and Margaret (Weinbach) Schafer, natives of Germany. After his marriage Mr. Reiber worked with his father until 1879, then moved to a farm near Allendale, which he has since cleared and put under cultivation. While living in Lancaster he bought forty acres of timber land, which he has improved and put under cultivation. He had conducted a shop in Lancaster three years before locating near Allendale. Mr. Reiber lived one year in a log house on his farm, but his wife's father having died his land was divided among his children. Mrs. Reiber receiving twenty acres and the home, so that Mr. Reiber bought the interests of some of the other heirs and has 180 acres in his present home farm. He also bought forty acres of the James Sandlin farm adjoining his place on the northwest. Mr. Reiber carried on farming until 1900, since which he has lived retired from active life.

The children born to Mr. Reiber and wife are: John, of Oklahoma; Margaret A., Mrs. Frank Courter, of Wabash Precinct; George W., of Lawrence County, Ill.; Fred E., at home; Anna E., died July 31, 1880, at the age of two years; Julia E., Mrs. Herman Stillwell, of Wabash Precinct; Fannie, Mrs. Clinton Payne, of Wabash Precinct; Daniel P., of Wabash Precinct.

Mr. Reiber received his education in the common schools in Lancaster and learned of his parents habits of sturdy honesty and thrift. He is a member of the United Brethren Church and politically is a Democrat. He has drawn a pension since 1875, and since September 1, 1908, has received $17 per month. He has been a hard worker all his life and has well earned the days of rest and comfort that now await him.

RIGG, Dr. Thomas Jefferson (deceased).—In the death of Dr. Thomas Jefferson Rigg, which occurred February 3, 1896, the city of Mt. Carmel, Ill., lost its oldest practicing physician and one of its most distinguished citizens. For over thirty years he had been prominently identified with the public, educational and medical interests of Wabash County, and few men have rendered more valued services to their community. Dr. Rigg was born at Catlettsburg, Ky., April 17, 1829, a son of George and Cynthia Rigg, natives of Kentucky. They had five children, all deceased, namely: Thomas Jefferson, Alfred, Harvey, Robert and Cynthia Stimpson.

When still a youth Dr. Rigg accompanied his parents to Wabash County, Ill., and the greater portion of his time until reaching manhood was spent on the home farm, his education being such as was afforded by the country schools of his day, which he attended during the winter terms. Later he taught school for a time at, or near, Cabbage Corner, but determining to become a physician, he went to Chicago and entered Rush Medical College, and after being graduated therefrom in 1860, practiced his profession in that city for a time, being also engaged in the drug business. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was appointed Assistant Surgeon in the Seventh Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and was with Grierson in many of his famous raids, participating in some of the most stirring scenes of the war. Before its close he had been promoted to the position of surgeon, with the rank of Major. After the close of hostilities, Dr. Rigg came to Mt. Carmel, where for a short time he was in the drug business in partnership with his father-in-law, the Hon. I. N. Jaquess, but after disposing of his interests in this line he devoted himself entirely to the practice of his profession and was so engaged up to the day of his death. In disposition, Dr. Rigg was most kind and genial, and was devoted to his family. He always had a pleasant smile and kind word for whomever he came in contact with, was a great favorite with children, and one of the secrets of his success as a physician was the cheerful manner in which he entered a sick room. He was an honored citizen and after a long and useful life, died firm in the belief of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was always a staunch and loyal Republican in politics, and at one time was a member of the City Council. He was a strong advocate of the cause of education, and for twelve years in succession and at different times afterwards, he served as President of the School Board. He belonged to the Odd Fellows, the Masons and the Grand Army of the Republic, while his profession connected him with the Wabash County Medical Society. Dr. Rigg's death came suddenly, and it is a co-incidence that he had always expressed a desire that it should so be. On the afternoon of the day of his death he had been around town, apparently in better health and spirits than usual, even for him, and had remarked that he felt better than he had in a long time. The funeral was held from the Methodist Episcopal Church and was conducted by Rev. J. F. Harmon and largely attended.

Dr. Rigg was married (first) to Sarah Clark, who died in 1856, having been the mother of two children: George E., of Mt. Carmel, and Mrs. Mary Contright of Edwards County. In 1866 Dr. Rigg married Miss Laura Jaquess, and there were three children born to this union: Nellie, died in infancy; Mrs. Ida R. Curtis, of Mt. Carmel; and Mrs. Dr. C. P. Danks of Washington, Ind.

RISLEY, Charles Miller, whose parents and grandparents were all early settlers in Wabash County, Ill., is a native of Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he now resides, being born August 27, 1857, a son of Ezra and Margaret H. (Wallace) Risley. Ezra Risley was born in Wabash County and his parents, Daniel and Sarah Risley, were natives of New Jersey and early settlers of Mt. Carmel Precinct. Margaret H. Wallace was a daughter of Elijah and Jane Wallace, natives of Virginia and early settlers of Mt. Carmel Precinct, who spent the remainder of their lives in that vicinity.

The marriage of Ezra Risley and his wife took place in Mt. Carmel Precinct, where she was born, and where he died in 1902. His widow continued to live on the home farm until three or four years ago, when she went to live with a daughter, Mrs. J. E. Seiler, of Mt. Carmel Precinct. The children born to Mr. Risley and wife were: Louisa V., Mrs. F. C. Seiler, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Charles M.; Mary Ida, died at the age of forty years; Will S., of Friendsville Precinct; Harlan E., resides near Seattle, Wash.; Emma, Mrs. J. E. Seiler, a widow; John and Fannie died in infancy.

Charles M. Risley spent his boyhood on his father's farm, helping in the farm work as soon as old enough. He remained at home until his marriage, December 4, 1882, to Emma Dyar, born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, a daughter of John D. and Elizabeth (Seiler) Dyar, natives of Germany and Pennsylvania, respectively. Mr. Risley's first wife died in February, 1885, and on March 15, 1887, he married (second) Rosanna Grundon, born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, a daughter of Thomas and Annie (Connor) Grundon, natives of Pennsylvania. To this union children were born as follows: Annie G., Charles Oliver, Fred G., May Belle and Nellie Enola.

Mr. Risley's farm is in Mt. Carmel Precinct, in Section 1, on land that he had bought from his father. It was partly cleared at the time he purchased it, but contained no buildings. He had erected a house prior to his marriage and continued improving the land, so that now he has all except five acres under cultivation. He has also erected other necessary buildings of a substantial character, and has one of the best kept estates in Wabash County. Mr. Risley has ninety-six acres of land in what is called the "Sugar Tree Front Farm," where he carries on diversified farming and raises registered Poland-China hogs, Jersey cows for his dairy, and Percheron horses. He received his education in the local schools and has spent his entire life near his present home. He is well known and much esteemed, having a host of friends. Politically he is Independent and in religion is a Lutheran. Mr. Risley and his wife are members of the Tribe of Ben Hur fraternal organization. He is descended from some of the pioneers of Wabash County, who took the keenest interest in the public welfare and progress and is a worthy representative of his race.

RISLEY, John T., was born at Little Egg Harbor, N. J., in 1813, and coming to Wabash County, Ill., in 1822, lived there seventy-five years. In 1837 he was married to Sarah J. Arnold, a daughter of Captain John Arnold, who commanded a company in the Black Hawk War. She died in 1858. In 1860 he was married to Mrs. Mary McGregor. By his first marriage there were born two sons, Larnier and Edwin, and six daughters, Mrs. Sarah Lewis, Mrs. Thomas W. Chapman, Mrs. G. W. Sharp, Mrs. J. H. Keller, Mrs. Mary Wolfe and Mrs. Laura Hallock.

Mr. Risley was a sturdy and enterprising pioneer, who toiled earnestly to subdue the wilderness and overcome the privations of pioneer life, and greatly helped to build up and advance the welfare and prosperity of Wabash County. He was a man of firmness and energy, honest in all his transactions and successful in business. His temperament was hopeful and he kept himself abreast of the times. He was unpretentious, but his sterling integrity, clear judgment, progressive character and fidelity to friends and neighbors made him influential. He was beautifully devoted to his children and constantly solicitous about their happiness and welfare, even to the very end, and in his last days they comforted him with unfeigned devotion. Mr. Risley's long and useful life will fill a bright and honored page in the history of the brave and generous forefathers of our county. The moral example of such a life is rich with sweet influences and redolent with honors that bless succeeding generations. He was one of the first Abolitionists of the county, always a loyal Republican in politics, and evinced a deep interest in public affairs. He was endowed with an alert intelligence and unusual penetration and sagacity, which would easily have qualified him for a superior part in the larger affairs of men, had he given rein to ambitious purposes.

RISLEY LINEAGE.—Richard Risley, ancestor of the American branch of the Risley family, immigrated to Massachusetts from near Boston, England, in company with Thomas Hooker and John Cotton, clergymen of the church of England, in March, 1633, "Risley Hall," in the east of England, still standing, was the ancient family seat. The party, emigrating from Newton to the present site of Hartford, there purchased a tract of land from the Naubuck Indians, which was apportioned among the settlers, in 80 acre tracts, and to Richard Risley fell the tract on which stood the famous Charter Oak. A family coat of arms, which represented a body of water, on which were ducks floating, with a shield surmounted by a greyhound, was registered in 1634, as appears from the office of the Registrar of Vital Statistics in London. One member of the family was a General who commanded a portion of Cromwell's Army on the Field of Rowton Moor, where King Charles I. from the Watch Tower on the walls of Chester, saw his last Royal Army defeated and scattered in flight.

Richard died in Hartford in October, 1648, and his name is graven on the monument erected to commemorate the pioneers of Connecticut, which stands on State Street, in Hartford. The record of his will is on file in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth of Connecticut. His son Richard died in 1729, leaving four living sons. He possessed a valuable estate in Hartford County. Careful research tends to show that all the Risleys, except the family that went from England direct to South Carolina in 1723, are descended from Richard I and Richard (II) and his four sons.

The Risleys were among the first settlers of Oneida County, N. Y., and Little Egg Harbor, N. J. At the latter place the subject of this sketch was born in 1811. He was the son of Jeremiah Risley, who was the son of Samuel Risley who was in direct line of descent from Richard (I). Jeremiah emigrated from New Jersey to Wabash County, Illinois, in 1827.

RISLEY, Larner (deceased), was born in Wabash County, Ill., August 31, 1839, where he resided until his death, which occurred November 22, 1909. He was the eldest son of John T. and Sarah Jane Risley, who were prominent among the pioneers of the county. On February 14, 1864, Mr. Risley was united in marriage with Mary J. Chapman, a daughter of Robert and Sarah Wharram Chapman, who came from Yorkshire, England, in 1830. She died January 19, 1865. Mrs. Risley was a young woman of most amiable character, esteemed and beloved by all who knew her. She was of studious habits, and a devoted member of the Methodist Church; was intensely loyal to the cause of the Union during the dark days of the Civil War, and spent much time in writing beautiful, patriotic and inspiring letters to the soldier boys of her acquaintance. Her early demise was deeply deplored, and the memory of her sweet and beautiful life is fondly cherished by all who came within the sphere of its beneficent influence. She died leaving one child, Theodore Granville Risley, now of Mt. Carmel, Ill.

In September, 1871, Mr. Larner Risley was married (second) to Mary Lois Roberts, daughter of Archibald and Polly Roberts, well known residents of the county. By this union there were born the following children: Mary A., who died in infancy; Elma L., married Allen I. Veihman, who died June 14, 1897; Charles B., formerly of Princeton, Ind., but now a resident of Mt. Carmel, Ill., and Roy T., of Mt. Carmel. Mrs. Risley departed this life May 22, 1910, having outlived her husband just six months. She was an intelligent Christian woman and was zealously devoted to the welfare of her family.

Mr. Larner Risley was a successful farmer and stockman, and for years one of the county's prominent and influential citizens, and enjoyed the deserved esteem and confidence of a large acquaintance throughout the entire county. He was conservative and retiring in temperament, but of firm convictions, sound judgment and strong common sense. He was eminently fair, and his opinions were highly regarded. In politics he was a devoted Republican and took much interest in political matters, always keeping himself well informed on questions of public interest. He was a member of the Methodist Church but quite liberal in his theological views. He was a man of irreproachable character and lovable disposition. His earnest, patient and devoted life shed a benign influence upon all who came within its radiant circle.

Mr. Risley was a man of enterprise and energy and never ceased his business activities until his death. He grew old beautifully, and his heart always seemed young and in full sympathy with the vital currents that animate the meridian of life. He was a fearless, hopeful, conscientious and devoted man, and the memory of his pure and useful life is a legacy of honor to his posterity.

RISLEY, Theodore G., was born in Wabash County, Ill., December 4, 1864, was raised on a farm and, after the usual course in a country school, attended school at Lebanon, Ohio, and afterward spent two years at the Geneseo Normal school, from which he graduated. He completed the law course at Wesleyan University, Bloomington, Ill., and after graduation went to Olympia, Washington, where he was engaged for a time in reportorial work for the "Portland Oregonian," the "Tacoma Ledger" and "Olympia Partisan." During this time he canvassed the territory in the statehood campaign, under the auspices of the Republican Territorial Committee.

Mr. Risley at the age of twenty-four was appointed Clerk of the United States District Court, at Guthrie, Okla., organized the office and for more than three years conducted its great volume of business in a manner that elicited high commendation from the Department of Justice at Washington, upon his retirement. While in Oklahoma Mr. Risley was twice elected President of the Territorial Republican League clubs, was Secretary of the Republican Territorial Committee four years, and its Treasurer two years. After five years' residence in Oklahoma, he returned to Mt. Carmel and engaged in the practice of law.

In 1896, and before he had been home long enough to be again a legal voter in Illinois, the Republican Congressional Convention nominated him, over several strong candidates, for Presidential Elector in the Twenty-third District, as he would be a legal voter before election and to this office he was elected. In that memorable campaign he took the "stump" on the 1st of August and continued in the canvass, throughout the State until the election, speaking the last ten days in Chicago.

In 1898 the Republicans of the Twenty-third Congressional District appealed to him to make the race for Congress against that eloquent and resourceful Democratic campaigner, Hon. J. R. Williams, who had attained distinction as a redoubtable debater in the Halls of Congress. Mr. Risley was nominated and, although the district was normally Democratic by 3250 majority and the democracy had nominated a candidate who was recognized as one of its most formidable champions in the State, he entered into the canvass with relentless energy and boldly challenged his opponent to confront him in a discussion of the leading issues before the people.

Both candidates entered upon a seven-weeks' speaking campaign, making two speeches a day, and, while defeated, Mr. Risley succeeded in reducing the Democratic majority about 1700 votes. By request of Senators Cullom and Mason, in 1900, he accepted the appointment of Supervisor of the Census for the Fourteenth District of Illinois, and in 1901, Hon. Charles G. Dawes appointed him Special Counsel to the Comptroller of the Currency, and assigned him to conduct a legal investigation as to the liability of the Directors of the failed Pyncheon National Bank, of Springfield, Mass. As a result of his work, the Directors assumed the payment of about $150,000 to the receiver for the benefit of the creditors, as a liability for having illegally underwritten securities of the American Writing Paper Company, of Holyoke, Mass.

In 1905 Comptroller Ridgley assigned Mr. Risley to the same class of work in connection with the failure of the First National Bank, of Furbault, Minn., and after completing the investigation, in connection with Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, of St. Paul, Minn., President Roosevelt's "Trust Buster," Mr. Risley instituted suit against the Directors of the defunct bank, and they settled by the payment of $100,000 in cash to the receiver. In 1906, the Comptroller sent Mr. Risley to succeed Receiver Eugene T. Wilson, of the Aetna Banking & Trust Company, of Butte, Mont., and after assuming charge of his new trust, he was appointed by Judge Bourquin of that State, Receiver of the Aetna Saving and Trust Company, an allied concern of the celebrated copper mine and frenzied finance manipulator, F. Augustus Heinze.

These large concerns, with all their complicated affairs, he practically closed up, acting as his own attorney, within seventeen months.

Mr. Risley is widely known as a campaign speaker, as an orator on public occasions, and has made hundreds of speeches on various subjects and in many States, several of which have attained celebrity and been extensively published as political documents. He has given much attention to the question of protection of American industries, and has traveled in Europe for the purpose of studying the industrial conditions of the old countries. He has been invited by the National Republican Committee and numerous State Committees to make political speeches for his party, and has always responded, when possible, both as a speaker and party manager and worker. He first took the stump for Blaine when eighteen years of age.

The law firm of Green & Risley, of which Mr. Risley is the junior member, has a large practice, and has been employed in some celebrated cases. Judge Green was formerly President of the Illinois State Bar Association.

Mr. Risley's closing arguments for the defendants, in the famous Showalter and the Adams murder trials, were pronounced by jurists and lawyers who heard them, as being among the very ablest and most eloquent forensic efforts ever made in the courts of Southern Illinois. He devotes his time almost exclusively to his profession.

Mr. Risley is Vice-President of the American National Bank, of Mt. Carmel, and is engaged in the breeding of pure bred Hereford cattle and farming. He takes an active interest in all public matters pertaining to the welfare of his city and county.

He has been urged to become a candidate for various offices, but since his candidacy for Congress has declined to be a candidate for any other office, yet has thrown his whole strength into every campaign, local, State and National, on the stump, in party councils, and at the polls for the success of his party. His standing in the public estimation is such that his counsel and assistance are sought and requested in almost every class of affairs that interest the public or tend to promote local progress.

His family consists of his wife, Edith L., and two sons, Maynard C. and Sherwood B.

RITTER, John E., a substantial farmer of Mt. Carmel Precinct, living four miles northwest of Mt. Carmel, Ill., is a native of Wabash County, born at Rochester, January 23, 1855. He is a son of George and Susan M. (Donnell) Ritter, the former born in Pennsylvania and the latter in Illinois. George Ritter came to Wabash County, Ill., about 1835, and was there married. He settled at Rochester and lived there on a farm until about 1860, when he moved to Knox County, Ill., where he and his wife died, he in 1870 and she prior to that date. He was a farmer and also worked at his trade as cabinet-maker.

John E. Ritter spent his early years on his father's farm, and was educated in the district schools of Knox County. He spent his boyhood like other farmers' sons and was reared to habits of industry and thrift. At thirteen years of age he began working his way in the world, and at the death of his parents came to Mt. Carmel and worked on a farm in that vicinity. He married, August 14, 1881, Alice Parkinson, who was born in Mt. Carmel, a daughter of Edward and Sarah (Hodgson) Parkinson, both natives of England, who came to Mt. Carmel among the early settlers. Mr. Parkinson managed the first grist-mill in Wabash County. After his marriage Mr. Ritter rented different farms until 1906, then bought his present farm of sixty-one acres from C. A. Johnson, upon which he carries on general farming and raises considerable stock. He has brought his land to a high state of cultivation and makes the most of his opportunities, following modern methods with good results.

The following children were born to Mr. Ritter and wife: Leroy, of Mt. Carmel, a mail carrier; Fannie Ruth, Mrs. C. C. Cannon, of Water Valley, Miss.; Sarah, Mrs. Guy Case; Mary Jane, Mrs. Lin Hunt, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Robert, who died in infancy; Lyman, Delbert, Katie and John, at home; Joseph, died in infancy. Mr. Ritter is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and served many years as Superintendent of the Sunday School. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, of Mt. Carmel, politically supports the principles of the Republican party, taking a commendable interest in public affairs. A public-spirited and enterprising citizen in his business dealings, he has ever shown himself to be actuated by the highest principles.

ROBERTS, Charles Henry, one of the most successful among the younger business men of Mt. Carmel, Ill., has built up a good trade and established himself in the confidence and esteem of the people who have dealt with him. Mr. Roberts carries a complete stock of jewelry and fine china, as well as similar goods, and also does watch and clock repairing. He has been engaged in this line of work since leaving school and is a skilled workman along this line. Mr. Roberts was born in Mt. Carmel, February 28, 1874, a son of Charles and Jersey (Mundy-Manley) Roberts, both natives of the East, who were married in Mt. Carmel. Charles Roberts was a manufacturer of shingles and was engaged in this business in Mt. Carmel. He died in 1873 and Charles H. was his only child. His widow continues to reside in Mt. Carmel. By her first marriage to F. C. Manley, she had three children, namely: Ella, Mrs. George M. Burleigh, of Mt. Carmel; Samuel M., deceased; and Frank C., Mrs. H. E. Tuttle, of Hammond, Ind. After the death of Mr. Manley his widow resided in Mt. Carmel until her marriage to Mr. Roberts.

The education of Charles H. Roberts was obtained in the common and high schools of Mt. Carmel, and when seventeen years of age he became apprentice to learn the trade of jeweler, spending fifteen years in the employ of Rush & Smith, after which he embarked in a similar line of business on his own account. He stands well in the community and is considered a useful, representative citizen. In politics he is a Democrat, and takes great interest in the public welfare. Fraternally he belongs to the R. A. M. of Masons, No. 349, R. P. O. E. No. 715, and the M. W. A. of Mt. Carmel.

Mr. Roberts married, June 1, 1905, Lucile Houts Goddard, who was born in Marion, Ill., daughter of H. T. and Mary (Houts) Goddard, both also natives of Marion, but now residents of Mt. Carmel, where he is in the banking business, as President of the National Bank. Mr. Roberts and his wife have one son, Henry Goddard, born October 21, 1907.

ROSE, George W., a prominent farmer of Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born near Keensburg, not far from his present residence, August 28, 1870, a son of Philip and Ruth Anna (Eastwood) Rose, the former a native of Windheim, Germany, and the latter of Belmont, Ill. The father was a son of George and Dorothea Rose, who came to the United States in 1853 and settled in Cincinnati, Ohio, where they died, after which their son Philip came to Wabash County, Ill. Philip Rose worked for others in Belmont Precinct until his marriage, October 22, 1862, when he began farming on his own account. His wife was a daughter of William and Mahala (Stewart) Eastwood, early settlers of Wabash County.

Philip Rose enlisted in Company G, Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for service in the Civil War, and was later transferred to Company H of the same regiment. He was discharged at the close of the war, August 15, 1865. Upon returning home he lived on the Peter Barnett farm in Coffee Precinct, which he bought, and in February, 1875, traded for eighty acres of land near Rochester, where he died. He secured 369 acres of land, all in Sections 14 and 15, Coffee Precinct, and all under cultivation except twenty-five acres of timber. Mr. Rose died May 23, 1909, and his wife April 8, 1896. Mr. Rose married (second) October 23, 1896, Mrs. Mary A. Weir. Her first husband, by whom she had one child, was Joseph Groff, and her second husband, by whom she had four children, was Sylvester Weir. Philip and Ruth Anna (Eastwood) Rose had children as follows: Sarah J., born November 21, 1863, lives on the old homestead; Dorothy M., born September 30, 1867, lives with her sister Sarah J.; George W., the youngest.

George W. Rose lived with his parents until his first marriage, December 25, 1892, to Mary L. Pepple, who was born in Lawrence County, Ill., January 8, 1873. The young couple began house-keeping on part of his father's farm, where he rented land until his father's death, since which time he has owned 127 acres of land, of which 122 acres are under cultivation. Here he carried on general farming with good success. His first wife was accidentally burned and died from her injuries, April 5, 1900, leaving no children. Mr. Rose married (second) January 9, 1901, Emma M. (Putnam) Courter, widow of Eben W. Courter, who was born in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, January 23, 1872, daughter of William H. and Miriam W. (King) Putnam.

Mr. Rose is a member of the Christian Church, in which he has been a Deacon since 1906. He is Prohibitionist in political views and is actively interested in public affairs. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America No. 2493, of Keensburg, and has been clerk of the order since 1900. Mr. Rose is an enterprising and representative citizen and is generally held in high esteem by those who know him.

SAPP, Marion T., one of the substantial and progressive farmers of Wabash County, Ill., was born in Clermont County, Ohio, January 8, 1850, a son of Henry and Elizabeth (Touner) Sapp, natives of Ohio, the latter a daughter of Abraham Touner. Henry Sapp and his wife came to Wabash County, Ill., in 1854 and bought a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he died in 1860, and two years later his widow married George W. Munsey and lived sometime in Mt. Carmel Precinct, then moved to Lick Prairie Precinct. Mr. Munsey finally sold his farm and moved to Mt. Carmel, where he died about 1888. Mrs. Munsey died while visiting in Keensburg in 1890. Mr. Sapp and his wife had children as follows: Meander, Mrs. John Fisher, of Mt. Carmel; Albert, of Machias, Wash.; Marion T.; Lavinia, died about 1877; Loreta, Mrs. Robert Peters, of Evansville, Ill.; Charles, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Olive, Mrs. Lynch, of Keensburg, Ill. Mr. Munsey and his wife had children as follows: Diana, Mrs. Thomas Williams, of Keensburg; Ida, of Seattle, Wash.; Priscilla, Mrs. William Christian, of Kansas; Aquilla, Mrs. Morris Hill, of Belmont Precinct, the last two being twins.

The boyhood of Marion T. Sapp was spent on a farm and he attended the district schools. He remained at home until seventeen years of age, then worked at farming by the month until his marriage, December 2, 1870, to Sarah Melvina Martin, born in Washington County, Ind., daughter of William and Mary (Pickler) Martin, of Washington County. After his marriage Mr. Sapp began living on a rented farm in Friendsville Precinct, and afterward moved to another farm in the same precinct, where he remained two years, spent one year on another farm in the neighborhood and then spent one year on his brother's farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct. He purchased a small place in Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he lived eighteen months, but later sold it. He lived four years on a rented farm in Friendsville Precinct, spent nine months in Harrisburg, Ill., and returning to Friendsville Precinct, worked for his brother Albert, and for eight years rented a farm in Friendsville Precinct.

In April, 1901, Mr. Sapp purchased eighty-five acres in Section 26 of Friendsville Precinct. This land was in poor condition and he had to make many improvements. He has fifty acres in the home place, twenty-five acres forty rods north of it, and has it all under cultivation. He raises considerable stock and makes his farming pay well, using scientific methods and modern ideas. He is well known and stands high in the community, being recognized as a public-spirited, useful citizen and a man of high character. He takes an active interest in the public welfare and belongs to the Republican party. He is a member of the Christian Church and is ready to contribute time and money to any good cause.

Two sons were born to Mr. Sapp and his wife: Albert Glen, of Friendsville Precinct, and Carl Edgar, at home. The latter is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Friendsville, also of the Order of Rebekahs and the Modern Americans.

SCHAFER, George E., who has developed a fine farm in Wabash County, Ill., is a native of the county, born in Compton Precinct, near his present home, May 21, 1875. He is a son of George P. and Emma (Compton) Schafer, the former born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and the latter in Wabash County. The father died when the son, George E., was but fourteen years of age, and the latter lived with his brother William H., until his marriage, which occurred in August, 1895, when he was united with Jennie Billett, a native of Lawrence County, Ill., and daughter of John and Mary Ettie (Shroyer) Billett, both of German descent.

After his marriage Mr. Schafer moved to a farm of 120 acres on Section 18 of Compton Precinct, where he erected a suitable house and other buildings. A large part of this land was timbered, which he has cleared and put into cultivation. He has added eighty acres and all his land is in Coffee Precinct except the forty acres containing his buildings. Mr. Schafer has been successful in raising stock and breeds Duroc Jersey hogs, Jersey cattle and German coach horses. He carries on a general line of farming and is one of the enterprising, up-to-date farmers of his community, always ready to consider modern methods and theories.

Mr. Schafer is a Republican in politics and has served fourteen years as School Director. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Tribe of Ben Hur, of Keensburg. He has spent his life in the community, received his education in School District No. 53, of Wabash County, and has won a large number of friends. He and his wife have four children, namely: Florence, born May 25, 1896; Mildred, born February 3, 1899; William, born Dec. 28, 1902; and Ross, born March 4, 1907.

SCHAFER, William H., proprietor of the beautiful "Village Creek Stock Farm," in Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of the county, born in Coffee Precinct, June 19, 1857, a son of George P. and Magdalena (Marx) Schafer, the former a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and the latter of Wabash County Ill.

The parents were married in Wabash County and settled on a farm of seventy acres in Coffee Precinct. He kept adding to his possessions until he owned 220 acres. Mr. Schafer cleared and put most of this land under cultivation, and died there in February, 1889, his wife having preceded him about 1863. He served during the Civil War in Company K, Sixty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Four children were born to him and his first wife, namely: William H.; Mary, Permelia and Georgiana, died in infancy. Mr. Schafer was married (second) to Susan Compton, by whom he had two daughters: Nancy, married C. M. Batson, of Coffee Precinct, and Nellie, married Charles G. Seiler and died in Coffee Precinct, in 1904. The second Mrs. Schafer died about 1870, and Mr. Schafer married (third) Emeretta Compton, by whom he had two children: a daughter who died in infancy, and George E., of Coffee Precinct, a sketch of whom appears in this work.

William H. Schafer received a common school education and remained at home until his marriage, May 14, 1879, to Miss Mary C. Compton, born in Coffee Precinct, a daughter of Noah and Louisa (Lance) Compton, the former a native of Wabash County and the latter of Indiana. After his marriage Mr. Schafer moved to a farm of thirty-seven acres which he had purchased preparatory to establishing a home, and he has since added to this tract until he owns 485 acres, all in Section 7 and 18 of Coffee Precinct, the buildings being on Section 7. Besides his own residence he has erected two comfortable houses for the occupancy of his employees.

Mr. Schafer makes a specialty of breeding and raising registered Shorthorn cattle and Berkshire hogs. He has established a pasture of 140 acres which he uses for no other purpose, but has the remainder of his land under cultivation. Since 1903 he has had annual sales of blooded stock on his farm, and is a regular advertiser in the "Breeder's Gazette" (of Chicago), and the "Chicago Daily Provers' Journal," where the dates of his extensive sales are given. Breeders from all sections of the United States are visitors of his extensive stock farm, of which Wabash County is justly proud, and a visit to the same is a pleasure and a revelation of the great possibilities of this industry. No county in the State is better adapted to the raising of stock, as Mr. Schafer has amply demonstrated, having been a pioneer in this line in his section of the State.

His usual herd numbers about 100 head of pure Scotch breeding, at the head of which may be mentioned Imported Roan Archer No. 160074, Imported Royal Fusilier No. 282940, also Primrose Sultan No. 294634, grandson of White Hall Sultan, champion bull of the world. This herd includes six imported cows. In the line of Berkshire hogs Mr. Schafer keeps such stock as sons of Masterpiece, Lord Premier and Riley's Premier; in fact, the highest breeding in the country.

In September, 1906, Mr. Schafer lost two of his large barns by fire, with about 100 tons of hay, but at once replaced these buildings by others that are modern in every respect. He has his land well tiled and carries on operations on a large scale, following approved modern methods and using up-to-date machinery and appliances. His land is unexcelled for raising corn and he has been most successful in all his ventures. He has erected several substantial and sanitary barns and other buildings and in 1891 built a handsome residence, which he has equipped with a hot-water heating plant and has installed an excellent water system in the same. He has fitted it with many other modern comforts and conveniences and takes great delight in providing everything possible for the well-being and enjoyment of his family. He is a man of generous nature and kind heart, and has a host of warm personal friends. He is a Republican in politics, takes an active interest in the conduct of public affairs and is a supporter of the Christian Church, of which all his family are members. Fraternally he belongs to Lodge No. 939, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Tribe of Ben Hur, of Keensburg.

Seven children blessed the union of Mr. Schafer and wife, namely: Stella M., married Dr. H. R. Lovellette, of Keensburg, and they have two children—Iris and H. R., Jr.; Albert and Fredonia died in infancy; Maud, married Charles G. Isenhower, of Martinsville, Ind.; Ida, at home; Mary died at the age of four and a half years; Marie, died in infancy.

SCHERER, Peter.—Among the most successful business men of Wabash County, Ill., are to be found many men who are natives of Germany or of German parentage. The proprietor of the oldest harness-making establishment in the county, Peter Scherer, is a native of Wabash County, born on Stulz Prairie, November 15, 1842, a son of Peter and Catherine (Fischer) Scherer, both natives of Germany, he born in Rein-Byron and she in Hesse-Darmstadt. The father served in the Prussian Army from July 17, 1827, until his discharge, July 17, 1833. He was a blacksmith by trade and, a few years after leaving the army, came with his brother to Cincinnati, Ohio. He lost track of his brother and never again heard of or from him. When Mr. Scherer settled permanently he located in Wabash County, because he had friends there, and he found employment at first among the farmers. He bought forty acres of land and was married at Mt. Carmel, his wife having come to Mt. Carmel from Germany with her mother, a widow. Mr. Scherer died in 1847 and his widow remained on the home farm until her brother came for her from Wilkinson County, Miss. They returned with him (Peter Fischer) to Mississippi and there Mrs. Scherer married Jacob Stevens, in April, 1852, and returned with her entire family to Mt. Carmel, where they spent about two years, then moved to the Lutheran Church property on Jordan Creek, and three years later moved back to the home place, where they settled permanently. The four children born to Mr. Scherer and his wife were: Peter (the oldest); John, killed in the Union Army during the rebellion; Elizabeth A., Mrs. August Fornoff, now deceased; and Barbara P., of Evansville, Ind.

Peter Scherer, Jr., resided with his mother and sisters while his brother and step-father served in the Union Army at the time of the Civil War, and received only a common school education, but he has a fine command of the English language and has learned much by his own efforts and in the school of experience. When twenty-one years old he went to Fort Branch, Ind., and worked on a farm until July 25, 1864, when he went into a harness-making shop and began learning the trade. In 1866 he located in Lancaster, Ill., and bought a shop, which he conducted until 1890, and established his business in Carmel, but a few months later moved it to Mt. Carmel, where he has since carried on an extensive business. He is a skilled workman and is recognized as one of the leading business men of the city. He stands well in the community and takes an active interest in public affairs, discharges his duty as a citizen and working in the interest of every cause which he believes to be for the promotion of the welfare and prosperity of city and county. He is a Democrat and served seven years as Postmaster at Lancaster, Ill., half of this time under Grant and the other half under Cleveland. He is a prominent member of the Masonic Order and a Royal Arch Mason, being connected with the Chapter at Mt. Carmel. He is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and is one of the Stewards. He has also been class leader and Sunday School Superintendent.

September 12, 1872, Mr. Scherer married Mary Angeline Tiffney, born in Xenia, Ohio, and they became parents of eight children, five of whom died in infancy, the others being: Emery K. and Kirby E., of Evansville, Ind.; and Zelma E., Mrs. Henry E. Seip, of Evansville. Mrs. Scherer died June 17, 1893, and Mr. Scherer married (second) April 16, 1895, Mary Jane Eves, born in Illinois, her parents being natives of Delaware. They have one son, Charles J., born June 11, 1897.

SCHNECK, Jacob (deceased).—No history of Wabash County would be complete without special mention of the late Dr. Jacob Schneck, physician, surgeon, botanist, author and veteran of the Civil War, and one of the most universally popular men the State has ever known. Dr. Schneck, was of German extraction, his ancestry dating back to the sixteenth century, the family originating from Westphalia, Germany, whence they were driven by wars and persecutions, subsequently changing their residence to Stuttgart. Many of the family have been able and learned men and noted writers on theological subjects.

John F. Schneck emigrated to America in 1839, settling in Lancaster County, Pa., whence he removed in 1843 to New Harmony, Posey County, Ind. He died in 1857, leaving six children. Of these, Dr. Jacob Schneck was born near New Harmony, Ind., December 11, 1843, and died at Mt. Carmel, Ill., December 18, 1906. He lived on his father's farm until the latter's death, attending the common schools of Posey County. On November 13, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company E, Sixtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was taken prisoner while on the skirmish line at the battle of Jackson, which occurred after the fall of Vicksburg. He was paroled, but owing to an irregularity in the exchange, he failed to rejoin his original company, but on May 18, 1864, enlisted in the naval service at Brooklyn, N. Y., and was assigned to duty in a vessel that had a roving commission engaged in the capture of blockade runners. Afterward he was assigned to duty on the Metacomet and took part in the naval campaign off Mobile under Admiral Farragut at Fort Morgan and Spanish Fort. He was mustered out of the service at Philadelphia, May 31, 1865, and returned to his home at New Harmony. At that time his education was very limited, he being able to read and write only slightly, and feeling the necessity of obtaining a better education, he entered an academy at Owensville, fitting himself for the profession of teaching. In 1867 he taught school at Olney, Ill., and decided while there to fit himself for the practice of medicine under Dr. Goslin. The following year he came to Mt. Carmel and further advanced himself, and during the winter of 1868-69 he took a course in the Chicago Medical College, but his funds becoming exhausted, he was compelled to resume teaching. After earning sufficient money, he re-entered the college for a second course and graduated in March, 1871, with the degree of M. D. He entered upon the active practice of medicine at Mt. Carmel, where he resided and continued to practice his profession to the time of his death.

On November 28, 1872, Dr. Schneck was married at Mt. Carmel to Miss Mary Hartman, daughter of John Hartman. Mr. Hartman was born in the Grand Duchy of Hesse-Darmstadt, January 10, 1813, and died at the age of eighty-three years. He came with his parents to America in 1826, locating at Allegheny City, Pa., where he remained until attaining his majority. In his boyhood he had learned the trade of a blacksmith, at which he became an expert, and after visiting various parts of the country, located in Mt. Carmel in 1844, where the remainder of his life was spent in various occupations, including blacksmithing and foundry work manufacturing wagons and buggies, selling clocks and buying furs, and was also in the grocery and mercantile lines. His first wife was Mary Beal, to whom he was married February 22, 1840, at New Orleans, La., and who died September 9, 1890. She was born in Beckenheim City, Germany, August 7, 1824, came to America in 1839, and to Mt. Carmel with her husband in 1844, and here she died when past sixty-six years old. There were seven children born to this union: Mrs. Mary Schneck, Mrs. Caroline Crone, of Pittsburg, Pa., and Mrs. C. L. Kenner of Mt. Carmel, who are living; and John, Mrs. Vinnie Smith, Mrs. Tula B. Oberheilman, Ellen Belle and Charles, deceased.

To Dr. and Mrs. Schneck was born one son, Sereno W., who is practicing medicine in Mt. Carmel, having graduated at the same school as his father. His wife and one sister, Mrs. Barbara Sanders, of Grayville, Ill., and two brothers, Charles, of Hot Springs, Ark., and Henry, of New Harmony, Ind., also survive.

Dr. Schneck was for many years, and up to the time of his death, an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a member of the Masonic Lodge of Mt. Carmel, in which he for some time filled the office of High Priest. He was one of the charter members of the Mt. Carmel Scientific Society and always took an active interest in its meetings. He also acted in the capacity of local surgeon for the Big Four and Southern railroads.

It is a prevailing custom to laud the good deeds and noble characteristics of those deceased and to throw the shroud of forgetfulness over their faults upon such occasions. However, it may be said with perfect freedom that, in this case, language would scarcely suffice to enable one to sufficiently laud the noble deeds or emphasize the praiseworthy traits of character of Dr. Schneck. He was a man whose highest ambitions in life was to make himself a useful individual in the community. It was not a desire to shine before his fellow men or to accumulate riches that prompted him to follow a life of intense activity, but merely his unselfish love for his fellow men. Educationally, he was one of the best informed men in the State. He was a student of natural sciences, and in the science of Botany he bore a national reputation, being the original discoverer of several branches of plant life, the existence of which were therefore unknown to science. Several varieties of these have been named after him particularly a beautiful oak, "Quercus Schneckii," and he was frequently quoted as an authority on scientific subjects. His constant and unceasing effort was to add to his vast store of information rather than to store up riches. He had visited all the points of interest in the United States, particularly those of natural interest, for he loved Nature and communed with her as few men do. He also made an extensive tour of Europe a few years ago. He was a careful observer and kept note of all his travels, never tiring of conversing upon these matters. He also frequently delivered lectures upon subjects connected with his travels. Professionally, he was held in the highest esteem by patients and colleagues alike, as well as by the general public. No hardship was too great, or condition of the patient in life too menial, for his uttermost endeavors for the welfare of those who placed themselves in his care. In fact, had he been less zealous in the pursuit of his professional duties and taken some of the rest and recreation he so richly deserved in the latter years of his life, he might have been spared to us for a long time to come. He had a most gentle disposition, was an indulgent husband, a kind father, and was extremely simple in his tastes and habits. There is no man in this county that will be more generally missed or whose death will be more universally mourned than that of Dr. Schneck. In the life that is gone out is typified the noble sentiment that is so aptly expressed in the beautiful lines penned by Oliver Wendell Holmes:

"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll;
"Leave thy low vaulted past
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from Heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea."

Dr. Schneck exists now as only a precious memory in the hearts of his family and many friends. The funeral took place at the Methodist Church, and the services were both impressive and beautiful. The casket was banked with flowers; perhaps never has there been such a beautiful offering, and this was as it should be, as Dr. Schneck was such an admirer of them.

No more fitting close could be given to this, all too brief, sketch of a noble life, than to quote from the beautiful memorial tribute written by Dr. Schneck's lifelong friend, G. L. Kenner:

"Dr. Schneck was a lover of nature and Nature's God; he admired all things of His creation and appreciated the beauties of His handiwork; he beheld His smile in the sunshine and heard His voice in the murmuring breeze. To him there was a benediction in the opening buds of spring-time and the sere leaf of autumn; to him the heavens declared the glory of God; the stars were his delight, he called them by their names; unto him the dumb stones unfolded their long guarded secrets and the birds sang their sweetest songs; to him there was music in the laughing brook and in the moaning of the forest trees; his greatest delight was to labor for humanity and for his Maker; though often wan and weary, his hopes were ever bright; God was gracious unto him and kind; for sixty-three years he was permitted to tarry with us ere He called him home; thou good and faithful servant, a brief farewell.

"Sleep in peace, oh brother dead,
 Rest in thy narrow tomb.
 We scatter o'er thy peaceful bed
 The sweetest flowers that bloom.
 When we shall join that happy band
 Upon the other shore
 We'll clasp a brother's friendly hand
 Where tears are shed no more."

SCHNITZ, Joseph Sylvester, a prominent farmer of Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., who has been successful largely through his operations in high grade stock, has been a resident of the county about twenty years. Mr. Schnitz was born in Huntington, Ind., July 8, 1866, a son of William and Elizabeth (Schlencher) Schnitz, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Germany. William is a son of George Schnitz, a native of Germany, who located on a farm in Ohio as a young man. When William was a boy his father moved to Indiana, and in that State William Schnitz and his wife were married and still reside. Mrs. Elizabeth Schnitz was brought to Indiana by her mother when she was fourteen years old. She has now reached the age of ninety-two years, is enjoying good health and is strong and active. She and her husband had eleven children, all of whom survive except one.

The education of Joseph S. Schnitz was received in the common schools of Indiana, and he was reared on his father's farm. He was the fifth child of his parents and remained at home until he was twenty-three years old, then began working at the trade of carpenter. Later he learned telegraphy and worked eighteen months for what is now the Big Four Railroad. In April, 1890, he moved to Lancaster, Ill., and worked there three years at the trade of carpenter, after which he moved to a farm of 240 acres in Sections 6 and 31, Lancaster Precinct, which belongs to his wife. He has since operated this place, carrying on general farming and raising registered Durham cattle, Poland-China hogs and horses for general use.

Mr. Schnitz was married, August 18, 1892, to Laura E. Cunningham, born in Lancaster Precinct, daughter of William C. and Mary (Crowell) Cunningham. Mr. Cunningham was born in Lancaster Precinct, a son of John Cunningham, a native of Virginia, who was one of the earliest settlers of that precinct, and Mrs. Cunningham was born in Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County. Mr. Cunningham died January 1, 1910. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Schnitz, namely: Mary E., Cora May, Herman W., and Pearl Ellen. Mr. Schnitz and his wife are interested in church work and belong to the Evangelical Association. Mr. Schnitz has served as Sunday School Superintendent since 1905. In politics he is a Democrat. He is much respected in the community as an industrious, useful citizen, and has many firm friends.

SCHRADER, William S., one of the substantial and prominent agriculturists of Wabash County, resides at Lynn, Friendsville Precinct. Mr. Schrader is a native of the county and his parents and grandparents were among the earliest pioneers of the State. He was born in Lancaster Precinct, November 29, 1834, son of Jacob and Elizabeth (Cunningham) Schrader, natives of Eastern Tennessee and Lancaster Precinct, respectively. The parents of Jacob Schrader located in Lawrence County, Ill., among its early settlers, and there secured a quarter-section of timber land. The parents of Elizabeth Cunningham were very early settlers in Lancaster Precinct, securing prairie land.

Jacob Schrader and his wife lived on his father's place after their marriage. Soon after that event he bought and entered land in Lancaster Precinct, and both he and his wife died there, he in 1862 and she many years prior. He was married three times and William is a child by the first marriage, the others being two sons and three daughters. By his second marriage he had five children.

Until he was twenty-one years of age William S. Schrader lived with his parents, and acquired his education in the country school. When he reached his majority he began working on a farm in Indiana, whence he went to Richland County, Ill., and worked in a grist- and saw-mill one year, then returned to his old home and married (first) in 1858, Hannah Hazleton, by whom he had children as follows: William and Mary, deceased; Julia, Mrs. William Smith, of Mt. Carmel, Ill. Mrs. Schrader died May 25, 1874, and Mr. Schrader married (second) April 27, 1875, Sarah (Greenhood) Harper, widow of John Harper. Mr. Schrader's second wife died and he married (third) November 19, 1885, Emily K. Greenhood, born in Lawrence County, Ill., daughter of William and Caroline (Beesley) Greenhood, natives of England and early settlers in Wabash County.

After his first marriage Mr. Schrader moved to a farm in the northern part of Friendsville Precinct, where he remained until 1888, then moved to his present home at Lynn, in the same precinct. He owns 113½ acres here and also sixty acres in Lawrence County. He has always carried on general farming and makes a specialty of raising stock. He is one of the representative men of the county and in his business dealings has always shown strict honesty. He is much respected and has many warm friends. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church and served some time as Trustee of the same. He is a Democrat in politics and has served many times as School Director.

By his third marriage Mr. Schrader had children as follows: Charles, now on the home farm; Jacob, born October 6, 1888, died November 11, 1888; John Leroy, of Lawrence County; Robert, born February 14, 1896, and died August 7, 1897.

SCHRODT, John H.—The Schrodt family has been well represented in Wabash County, Ill., since 1838, when John Schrodt, the grandfather of John H. Schrodt, came to the county with his wife and oldest son, Peter. John H. Schrodt was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, April 25, 1861, son of Peter and Amanda (Reel) Schrodt, the former a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and the latter of Mt. Carmel Precinct. Peter Schrodt, son of John and Marie (Rader) Schrodt, is mentioned elsewhere in this work. He and his wife were parents of four sons and two daughters, namely: Anna, Mrs. H. J. Leach, of Mt. Carmel; John H.; George and Lincoln, both of whom died when about two and a half years old; Rosa, Mrs. Jacob Steine, Jr., of Mt. Carmel; J. Ellsworth, resides at home.

The education of John H. Schrodt was secured in Sugar Creek District, Mt. Carmel Precinct, and he resided on his father's farm until his marriage April 17, 1882, to Mary Seiler, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, daughter of John and Mary (Mauck) Seiler, the former a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. After his marriage Mr. Schrodt moved to a farm he had bought two miles northeast of Mt. Carmel, where he lived until 1892, when he rented another farm nearer the city and lived on it four and a half years, then bought from his mother and she heirs his present twenty-four-acre farm. He has lived on this farm ever since, and has added twenty-eight acres to it. Mr. Schrodt still owns the first farm he purchased, which contains 118.23 acres, which he rents to his son and son-in-law, and he deeded the twenty-eight-acre farm to his daughter and son-in-law. In the month of April, 1906, when Mr. Schrodt was working in the field, he suffered a slight paralytic stroke and the team and wagonload of fifty-two bushel of wheat went over his chest, since which time he has been unable to do any actual work, although he looks after his land.

Children born to Mr. Schrodt and his wife are as follows: Ethel Agnes; Marshall, born May 5, 1886, died July 26, 1888; Alvin, born November 9, 1888, died November 6, 1889; John Estes, born June 23, 1890, is at home; Mary Leona, born November 20, 1893; Edna Charlotte, born December 31, 1896, died August 14, 1899. Ethel Agnes was married, October 24, 1904, to Rolla Vernon Veihman, who was born in Wabash County, May 21, 1887, and they have one child, Camille Cecilia, born June 12, 1907. Mrs. Schrodt's mother was born in Harrison County, Ind., a daughter of Christly and Catherine (Hump) Mauck, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Schrodt is a faithful member of the Lutheran Church, of which he has been a Trustee since 1901. Politically he is a Republican and served nine months as Highway Commissioner, then was elected County Commissioner and served one term of three years. He has been a School Trustee since 1897. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America No. 1916, Independent Order of Odd Fellows No. 35, Rebekahs No. 441, all of Mt. Carmel, and his wife is also a member of the Rebekah Lodge. He is well known and highly respected and has been a successful farmer through his energy and industry. He is a representative of the best type of citizen and is much interested in questions affecting the public welfare.

SCHRODT, Peter, one of the prosperous and successful German-Americans of Wabash County, Ill., has been a resident of the county since he was one year old. He was born in Westhofen, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, January 2, 1837, a son of John and Marie (Rader) Schrodt, also natives of Hesse-Darmstadt, and grandson of John Schrodt, who lived all his life there. In September, 1838, John and Marie Schrodt settled in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, and bought an eighty-acre tract of timber land, which he set out to clear. When about sixty years of age he moved to an adjoining farm, where he died in 1863. He divided his 1,000 acre farm among his six children in 1860, having added to his land as he was able. His widow died at the age of sixty-seven years. Their children were: Catherine, Mrs. Michael Broadel, deceased; John and Conrad, deceased; Peter; Mary, Mrs. Melcher Libolt, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Margaret, widow of Jacob Steltzer, of Mt. Carmel Precinct, now deceased.

As a boy Peter Schrodt helped his father at clearing land as soon as he was old enough and attended school only a year and a few months. He lived at home until his marriage, April 8, 1860, to Amanda M. Reel, born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, daughter of Emanuel and Nancy (Simonds) Reel, natives of Ohio and Indiana. After his marriage Mr. Schrodt moved to a farm of ninety-six acres that was given him by his father, all timber except twenty-five acres. He started clearing it and placing it under cultivation, adding five and three-quarters acres to it. He erected a house from brick which he manufactured on his farm, and cultivated this land until 1898, then turned over its management to his son, Jacob E.

In 1892 Peter Schrodt began grain and stock-dealing and carried on this business some years in connection with his farm. He now devotes his whole attention to his business interests. His wife died February 22, 1896, after which he bought a tract of an acre and a half where Schrodt Station on the Big Four Railroad stands. There was a small general store on this land, which he also purchased, improved and added to it, occupying it until 1908, when he erected a store building, 24 by 44 feet, twelve feet six inches high. Besides a stock of general merchandise he keeps a large variety of household goods, farm appliances, coal, paints, oils, etc. He has handled agricultural implements for the Rock Island Plow Company. Mr. Schrodt is a man of friendly, jovial character, being of large physique and very good-natured. He has a multitude of friends and is successful in a business way. Politically he is a Republican.

The following children have been born to Mr. Schrodt and wife: Anna M., Mrs. Horace N. Leach, of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; John N., of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Rosa C., Mrs. Jacob J. Stein, of Mt. Carmel; Jacob E., on his father's farm, and two now deceased. The family stand well in the community and are representative of its best interests.

SCHRODT, Philip, member of a family that is well known in Wabash County, Ill., was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, April 22, 1866, a son of John and Mary (Brodle) Schrodt, both natives of Germany, and grandson of John Schrodt. The grandparents were all early settlers in Wabash County, and secured timber land in Mt. Carmel Precinct. They were among the first Germans who located there and became large land-owners.

The parents of Philip Schrodt were married in Wabash County and settled on a farm near Mt. Carmel. The father acquired about 2,500 acres of land, of which part was in Mt. Carmel Precinct, part in Coffee Precinct, some in Lawrence County, Ill., and one farm in Gibson County, Ind. Mr. Schrodt was born May 4, 1830, and died December 22, 1897, and his wife, who was born January 20, 1835, died in 1881. They had children as follows: Mary, Mrs. Justus G. Reel, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Philip and B. F., the latter of whom died in August, 1909; George who died many years ago; Laura, Mrs. G. W. Combs, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Daniel B., died about 1895; Ellen, died in childhood; Catherine, Mrs. Fred Goke, died in Mt. Carmel; several other children dying in infancy.

Philip Schrodt attended the Sugar Creek District School and assisted in the work on his father's farm until his marriage, February 22, 1887, to Hattie Nunley, who was born in Mt. Carmel, a daughter of Robert and Mary (Cope-land) Nunley, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Mt. Carmel. She is a grand-daughter of Samuel and Phebe (Keneipp) Nunley, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Ohio. After his marriage Mr. Schrodt began farming on McCleary's Bluff, on the Wabash River, in Coffee Precinct. Most of the land was cleared and it had some log buildings on it. He erected a modern dwelling and substantial barns, as well as other necessary buildings, and now has one of the best farms in the county. There were seventy-seven acres in the farm originally, and he has kept adding to it until he now owns 380 acres, known as the "McCleary Bluff Stock Farm," all cleared except thirty acres of timber. He raises registered short-horn cattle, horses for general use, and a mixed breed of hogs. He manages the entire farm, which is in the garden spot of the county, and has been most successful in his operations. He is prominent in social and fraternal circles and accounted one of the representative men of the community. He belongs to The Tribe of Ben Hur, Independent Order of Odd Fellows No. 939, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Mystic Workers, and the Royal Neighbors, all of Keensburg. In politics he is a Republican and is a member of the Christian Church.

Mr. Schrodt and wife became parents of the following children: John Robert, Leora H.,

Harry P., and Lela E., all at home. The family home is well situated and one of the most pleasant and comfortable in the county.

SCHRODT, William, an industrious and successful farmer of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of that precinct, born November 9, 1861, a son of Conrad and Catherine (Ackert) Schrodt, the former a native of Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, and the latter of Switzerland. Their parents, John and Anna Mary Schrodt, and John and Anna (Walters) Ackert, were all early settlers of Wabash County, where they became prominent and useful citizens. John Schrodt brought his family to Mt. Carmel Precinct, where he secured unimproved land and developed a fine farm. John Ackert and his family came to New York, by way of the canal to Buffalo, thence by boat to Chicago, and from there drove to St. Louis, where they took a boat by way of the Ohio and Wabash Rivers to Mt. Carmel. His wife's brother, John Walters, induced them to locate in this locality, where they both died.

Conrad Schrodt was married in Wabash County and settled on a farm near Mt. Carmel, where he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives, he passing away February 13, 1907, and she June 2, 1906. They were parents of nine children, of whom five survive, namely: William; Margaret, Mrs. W. H. Crossley, of Fairfield, Ill.; Jacob, of Dallas Tex.; Fred C., of Jackson, Miss.

William Schrodt was reared on a farm and was early taught habits of industry and thrift. He received a fair education in the district school in his neighborhood, and helped with the farm work when still quite young. He has carried on farming all his life, with very satisfactory results, and has made a careful study of modern theories and methods of farming, so that he is considered a wide-awake and progressive man. He lived with his parents until his marriage. He has been active in public affairs and served fifteen years as School Director. He is a staunch Republican in political views. Fraternally Mr. Schrodt is a member of Sugar Creek Camp No. 7645, Modern Woodmen of America, and he and his family attend the Lutheran Church, of Mt. Carmel.

December 25, 1882, Mr. Schrodt married Christina Baumgaertner, born in Mt. Carmel, daughter of John and Barbara (Knorr) Baumgaertner, natives of Germany, who came to New York before they were married. They located in Mt. Carmel and there he died in 1862 and his widow in 1879. Mr. Schrodt and his wife became parents of children as follows: Sereno, Katie, N. and Clara J., all at home.

SCHUH, Philip, one of the many German-Americans of Wabash County, Ill., who have won success by industry and perseverance, is a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, born November 25, 1840. He is a son of Philip and Elizabeth (Hummer) Schuh, and grandson of Henry Schuh and of Philip and Elizabeth (Weinbach) Hummer, all of whom died in Germany. The boyhood of Philip Schuh, subject of this sketch, was spent on his father's farm in Hesse-Darmstadt, and for eight years he attended school there. In 1860 he entered the Hesse-Darmstadt Division of the German Army, serving until February, 1866, when he emigrated to the United States, landing at New York. He came to Mt. Carmel, Ill., and worked nearly four years on the farm of John Schrodt, then began farming for himself in Coffee Precinct. For ten years he rented land of John Schrodt, near his present home, then bought 113 acres on Section 7 of Compton Precinct, at Horse-Shoe Bend. Forty acres of this land was cleared and it contained an old log house in which he lived fifteen years. He erected a comfortable two-story, frame house on this land and has kept adding to it until he now owns 640 acres in one body, besides two other farms—120 acres in Section 31 and eighty acres in Indiana. He has cleared 350 acres of this from timber and has about 500 acres under cultivation. He managed the entire place until 1904, when he began renting the land and retired from active business life. He also purchased 120 acres of improved land in Coffee Precinct, which he rents.

Mr. Schuh married (first) in 1870, Hulda Maxwell, a native of Virginia, and they became parents of one daughter, Anna, Mrs. John Hoffman, of Compton Precinct. Mrs. Schuh died in 1872, and Mr. Schuh married (second), in 1873, Missouri Douglas, born in Gibson County, Ind., and they became parents of children as follows: Ida married Wesley Merideth, living on part of the home farm, and they have two children—Manvil and Ethel; Mary married John Heil, and they live on Mr. Schuh's farm in Coffee Precinct, and have five children—Maggie, Carrie, Edward, Bernie and William; Effie married Richard Ashworth, of Posey County, Ind., and they have two children—Milford and Margaret; Benjamin, on the home farm, married Lelia Finnel, a native of Wabash County, and they have two children—Bonnie and Elba. Mr. Schuh's second wife died in 1888 and he married (third) in September, 1891, Margaretta (Gardner) Boutz, widow of William Boutz, of Posey County, Ind. She was born in Aldagrona, Hesse, Germany, and by her first marriage had six children, namely; Margaret, Mrs. Fred Sandwald, of Evansville, Ind.; Louisa, was accidentally burned and died of her injuries, at the age of three years; John and Adam, of Mt. Vernon, Ind.; Catherine, married Stephen Underwood, of Texas City, Saline County, Ill.; Elizabeth married George Morlock, of Mt. Vernon, Ind.

Mr. Schuh is a member of the Evangelist Church and in politics is a Republican. He has been one of the most successful farmers of his community and through his own efforts has acquired a large amount of land. He has won many friends, who greatly respect him for his many sterling qualities.

SHULTZ, Charles, of Keensburg, Ill., is engaged in the grain, live-stock, coal and seed business, with which he has been connected since 1895. Mr. Shultz was born in Olney, Ill., December 14, 1866, a son of Charles and Sarah E. (Gaddy) Shultz, the former born on the River Rhine, in Germany, and the latter a native of Richland County, Ill. The paternal grandfather of Charles Shultz started for the United States in 1848, and died just before the vessel landed at New Orleans, his widow dying two years later at Claremont, Ill. Sarah E. Gaddy was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Gaddy, her mother's maiden name being Jordan. The father was a native of Tennessee and the mother of Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., where the former taught school and where they were married.

The marriage of Charles and Sarah E. Shultz took place in Olney, Ill., where he was engaged in grocery business. He served as a sutler during the Civil War and afterward resumed his business in the grocery line, but two years later established a general mercantile business, which he continued until 1895, when he confined his business to dry-goods, clothing and similar lines, and he is still proprietor of the Shultz Department Store at Olney, Ill. In 1885 he established a seed-store, which he conducted until 1908, which he then turned over to his son, Arthur E. His two daughters are in partnership with their father in the dry-goods business. Children as follows were born to Mr. Shultz and wife: Nettie, married E. C. Feutz, of Olney; May, died in infancy; Charles; Bertha and Anna with their parents; Winnifred, Mrs. William Gray, of Kimmunity, Marion County, Ill.; Edward, died at the age of two years; Arthur, Harry and Cleveland, of Olney.

Charles Shultz, the subject of this sketch, received his education in the common and high schools of Olney, and when he reached his majority engaged in the dry-goods business at Lawrenceville, Ill., in partnership with E. A. Powers, of Olney. Two and a half years later they sold out this business and Mr. Shultz began working for his father, remaining one and a half years. In the spring of 1890 he bought the dry-goods business of Dr. P. G. Manley, but two and a half years later sold this and bought a grain elevator and grist-mill, which he conducted four years. He then formed a partnership with M. L. Rosenberger, and two years later they took into partnership, H. H. Wetzel, the firm assuming the name of Wetzel, Shultz & Company. A year later Mr. Wetzel sold his interest to Mr. Shultz and Mr. Rosenberger. In 1904 their establishment was burned and they rebuilt a grain-elevator on the same site. In the spring of 1908 Mrs. A. P. Bumb bought out Mr. Rosenberger and six months afterwards Mr. Shultz bought out the interest of Mrs. Bumb, which later underwent various changes. This company has been successful despite the misfortune of loss by fire. The members of the firm are men of energy and ability, fully understood every detail of their business, and have been able to build up an extensive enterprise from a small beginning. Mr. Schultz has been largely responsible for the success of the company. Besides doing business at Keensburg, they have a branch at Cowling, Ill.

Mr. Shultz is a Democrat in politics and has served as a member of the Democratic Central Committee. At the incorporation of Keensburg he was elected President and held the office one term. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias of Olney, of Henry Dobbins Lodge No. 174 of Masons, at Lawrenceville, Gorin Commandery, No. 14, K. T. of Olney; Medinah Temple Shrine, of Chicago; Mt. Carmel Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, No. 715; the Modern Woodmen of America and the Royal Neighbors, of Keensburg. He is identified with the progress and welfare of the community and prominent in social circles. Mr. Shultz is unmarried.

SCOTT, Alfred Winfield, who conducts a machine shop, blacksmith and repair establishment, and an agricultural implement business in Bellmont, Ill., was born in Leach Township, Wayne County, Ill., October 30, 1849, a son of William and Narcissa (Hunt) Scott, the former a native of Wayne County and the latter of Edwards County, Ill. The grandfather, William Scott, was born in Scotland, and his wife in Illinois. They were the first settlers of Scottsville, Wayne County, which was named in their honor, and here Mr. Scott worked at his trade of blacksmithing. Narcissa Hunt was a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Edmonson) Hunt, of Indiana.

The father of Alfred W. Scott was a blacksmith by trade and all his active life conducted a shop at Scottsville, where he died about 1900. During the latter part of the Civil War he served a year and a half in the One Hundred Thirty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. In politics he was a Republican. His widow died in February, 1908. They had children as follows: Alfred W.; Laura, Mrs. John Stroup, of Ellery, Ill.; Emma, of Arkansas; Nettie, Mrs. Henry Skinner, of Mt. Vernon, Ill.; Francis E., of Bone Gap, Ill.; Amos and John, who died when small and were buried in the same coffin.

Alfred W. Scott learned the trade of blacksmith after receiving a common school education in a log school house in the country. He worked with his father at this trade until 1876, then moved to Merriam, Wayne County, Ill., where he conducted a shop on his own account until February 24, 1892, when he located in Bellmont. He conducted a blacksmith shop in Bellmont for ten years, then erected the building he now occupies, where he also does wagon, carriage and automobile repairing and similar work in a well equipped machine shop, where his power is furnished by a gasoline engine. He also handles agricultural implements, wagons, carriages, etc. He has built up a good trade in the surrounding country and is a first-class workman.

Mr. Scott married October 12, 1873, Cynthia Ann Copeland, who was born near Fairfield, Wayne County, daughter of James and Elvira (Hodges) Copeland, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Wayne County. Children as follows blessed this union: Prundy, died in infancy; Effie, married William Bruce, of Terre Haute, Ind.; Myrtle, married John Epler, of Bellmont Precinct; Maud, married Ed. Hilgeman, who conducts a brick and tile factory at Bellmont; Herschel, of Bellmont, in partnership with his father; William, of Bellmont, in the concrete manufacturing business with his brother-in-law.

Alfred W. Scott is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in politics is a Republican. He has served three terms on the Town Board in Bellmont and three on the School Board, and while living in Wayne County, served as Highway Commissioner. Fraternally he is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows No. 729, of Bellmont. He is actively interested in the progress and welfare of the community and is an enterprising, energetic business man, who has been successful in building up one of the leading enterprises of his community.

SEIBERT, James F.—Among the prosperous farmers of Wabash County, Ill., who have demonstrated the advisability of following modern methods of carrying on their work and investing in high-grade stock, is James F. Seibert, who has spent most of his life on the farm where he now lives in Lancaster Precinct. Mr. Seibert was born on his present farm, June 21, 1860, a son of Jacob and Mary Jane (Williams) Seibert, the former a native of Lancaster Precinct and the latter of Tennessee. Jacob Seibert was a son of Jacob and Catherine (Fritz) Seibert, of Lehigh County Pa., and grandson of Solomon Seibert, a native of Pennsylvania, whose parents came to America at the time of the Revolution. Mary Jane Williams is of Irish descent, a daughter of James Williams, who married a Miss Campbell.

The paternal grandparents of James F. Seibert, Jacob Seibert and wife, came to Wabash County on horseback in 1832, settling in Lancaster Precinct, on land they entered from the Government. The Williams family came down the Ohio River to Evansville, Ind., then drove from there to Mt. Carmel. Mr. Williams was one of the early mail carriers from Mt. Carmel to Olney, kept a toll-gate, and worked at various other occupations. Jacob Seibert, Jr., and his wife settled on a farm in Lancaster Precinct after their marriage. He was a carpenter and worked on the first church built in Mt. Carmel. He also worked on many other buildings in the community. In politics he was a staunch Democrat. Mr. Seibert died in November, 1903, at the age of seventy-one years, and his widow now resides at Lancaster, having reached the age of sixty-nine years. They were parents of children as follows: James F.; Charles, of Evansville, Ind.; Antoinette, Mrs. William Marks, of Bellmont; Catherine, Mrs. Isaac Guisewitt; Robert Lee and Clarence, of Lancaster Precinct; Mary Jane, with her mother; Laura, Mrs. Thomas Moore, of Lawrence County, Ill.

Martin Waller

James F. Seibert attended the common schools of his neighborhood and the normal school at Danville, Ind. He lived with his parents until his marriage, June 16, 1884, to Maria Elizabeth Staninger, a native of Lancaster Precinct, daughter of Ephraim and Esther (Biehl) Staninger, natives of Lehigh County, Pa. For twelve years Mr. Seibert taught school in winter and worked at farming during the summer, being successful in his profession. In 1890 he purchased a house and lot in Lancaster, being elected to the office of County Treasurer at that time and serving four years in that position, during part of which time he was interested in mercantile business. In 1892 he purchased a half-interest with D. G. Seibert in a general store at Lancaster, which he held ten years, then sold out to N. E. Couch. Mr. Seibert now has 280 acres in two farms, one of them including the homestead of his father. He also owns forty acres of timber in Phelps County, Mo. Mr. Seibert cultivates all his land in Wabash County himself, and makes a specialty of raising registered American trotting horses, Hereford cattle, Poland-China hogs and Shropshire sheep. He also raises some fine poultry.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Seibert and his wife: Myrtle, Ernest, Iva, Ralph and Sheldon. Mr. Seibert is a Lutheran in religious faith and in politics is a Democrat. He has always favored every movement that he considered for the best interests of the public.

SEIBERT, Reuben A., was born in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., August 20, 1862, a son of Reuben and Mary (Markley) Seibert, both natives of Berks County, Pa., and a grandson of Abraham Seibert, who was born in Germany. His grandparents were all born in Germany and came to America, settling in Pennsylvania, Berks County, about 1790. In 1833 they removed to Wabash County and settled in Lancaster Precinct on the northwest quarter of Section 2, Township 1 North, Range 13 West. The land was purchased from the Government and is yet in the hands of the family.

Mr. Seibert's parents were married in this county and settled on the farm his father had purchased from the Government and lived there until their death which came June 16, 1884, for his mother, and April 8, 1893, for his father.

Reuben A. Seibert was educated in the common schools of Wabash County and remained on his father's farm until his marriage to Sarah A. Marx, daughter of Samuel and Fannie (Schlanker) Marx, May 17, 1885. After his marriage he settled on a rented farm near West Salem, in Edwards County. He remained here only a year, after which he removed to Wabash County and again settled on a rented farm in Lick Prairie Precinct and afterwards in Lancaster Precinct.

In August, 1895, Mr. Seibert purchased a forty-acre farm in Section 21, and soon removed there, after having erected comfortable buildings.

He has added to this farm until he now owns 120 acres, which he has developed into one of the best in the community equipped with all necessary modern improvements. He was an extensive farmer and stock-raiser and for fourteen years was engaged in the live-stock business where he made countless friends by his honest dealings with everybody. In 1909 he was the unanimous choice of the Democratic party for County Commissioner and in November of the same year he was elected by a handsome majority.

In the spring of 1910 Mr. Seibert engaged in the farm implement business in Mt. Carmel, with his son Alvah A. and Mr. A. M. Carter. All indications are that the business will be very successful, as the proprietors are industrious men and possess good business judgment.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Seibert has been blessed with three children, two sons and a daughter, Alvah A., the older son, who was for six years one of the leading school teachers of the county and for one year teacher of grammar and arithmetic in the Southern Collegiate Institute of Albion, Ill., is now engaged in the implement business with his father. He is a Woodman, an Odd Fellow and a Mason. Gideon E., who is now engaged in farming on his father's farm, was married to Miss Jessie Thompson, February 12, 1910. He is a Woodman and an Odd Fellow. Josie G., the daughter, resides with her parents in Mt. Carmel.

In religious faith Mr. Seibert is a Lutheran and has served as Deacon since 1900 and as Church Treasurer since 1907. Fraternally he is a Woodman and an Odd Fellow. His wife is a member of the Royal Neighbors and the Rebekahs.

SEILER, Frederick Christian, Justice of the Peace in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., where he owns a well-improved farm of 240 acres, is a native of that precinct, born August 8, 1848, a son of Jacob and Ann Matilda (Behm) Seiler, the former born in Westhofen, Germany, and the latter in Lebanon County, Pa. The parents of Jacob Seiler were Frederick (born September 15, 1788) and Elizabeth (Copp) Seiler, born February 3, 1782. His wife's parents were Rudolph and Mary Ann (McKee) Behm, the former born January 27, 1798, the latter July 27, 1808, and both natives of Pennsylvania. Frederick Seiler brought his family from Germany to New Orleans, thence by water to Evansville, Ind., where they remained one winter. Jacob Seiler was seventeen years of age when he came to the United States, and during the winter of 1833-34 he cut cord wood where the city of Evansville now stands. The family settled on a farm of eighty acres in Mt. Carmel Precinct, all timber land except about twenty acres, which was cleared. A log cabin had been built there and the father and mother spent the rest of their lives on this land. Jacob Seiler lived with his parents until his marriage, then settled on his father's farm. His wife's parents had moved to Wabash County in 1832. He secured the homestead after his father's death and also became the owner of several other farms. He was a farmer all his life and became influential in Wabash County. He served one term as County Commissioner and many years as Township School Treasurer. He was born December 16, 1817, and died November 12, 1900, while his widow, born August 7, 1829, died in 1902. They were parents of eleven children, of whom Frederick C. was the oldest. The others were: Mary Ann died in infancy; David, of Chico, Cal.; John G. died May 26, 1902; Elizabeth, Mrs. J. O. Wood, of Friendsville Precinct; Jennie, Mrs. George Ewald, of Belmont Precinct; Amelia died in infancy; Sebastian and Jacob E., twins, the former living in Mt. Carmel Precinct and the latter died March 16, 1902; Clara M., Mrs. C. S. Andrus, of Friendsville Precinct; Emma, Mrs. U. G. Grundon, of Mt. Carmel Precinct.

Frederick C. Seiler remained at home with his parents until his marriage and received his education in the district schools of the neighborhood. He married, May 31 1877, Louisa Virginia Risley, who was born at Mt. Carmel, December 18, 1854, daughter of Ezra and Margaret H. (Wallace) Risley, he born in Mt. Carmel Precinct and she in Virginia. Mrs. Seiler's grandparents were Jeremiah and Rachel Risley, of New Jersey, and Elijah and Jane Wallace, of Virginia. After his marriage Mr. Seiler took up his residence on a farm of 120 acres given him by his father, all timber land. He cleared a space and in December, 1876, began building a house, which was ready the following spring. The following year he erected a good barn and began extensively clearing his farm, and soon bought another 120 acres, all in timber except thirty acres. He now has 160 acres of land under cultivation, upon which he has a magnificent new residence of ten rooms, with all modern improvements. He has been very successful as a farmer and raises short horn cattle for market and Jersey cows for dairying purposes. He also raises Poland China hogs and German coach-horses. He is well known and highly respected in the community and has taken an active interest in public affairs. He is a Democrat and was elected County Commissioner in 1888, serving three years. He has been a School Trustee since 1892 and since the fall of 1909 has been Justice of the Peace. He was a very active member of the Patrons of Husbandry of Wabash County and Past Overseer of the State Grange of Illinois. He and his family are members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church and are active in supporting every worthy cause. The following children have been born to Mr. Seiler and wife: Nellie V., born August 2, 1878, a school teacher; Lottie E., born March 19, 1880, living with her grandmother Risley; Beulah L., born December 29, 1881, married J. W. Heinrich, live in St. Louis, Mo., and they have three children—(William, born August 13, 1904; Lottie, born August 19, 1906; and Walter Frederick, born July 17, 1910); Mabel Grace, born February 29, 1884, at home;

Ethel, died March 27, 1891, at the age of two years; Everett E., born June 28, 1886; Irving S., born January 4, 1891; Waldo F., born December 25, 1892; Freda E., born January 1, 1895.

SEILER, George, member of a family that has been prominent in Wabash County, Ill., for several generations, was born in Gibson County, Ind., March 3, 1854, son of John and Mary (Manck) Seiler. John Seiler was born in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, and his wife in Harrison County, Ind. He was a son of Frederick Seiler, who brought his family to Wabash County, Ill., in 1830. Mary Manck was a daughter of Christley and Mary Manck, the former born near Alexandria, Va. Mr. Manck brought his family to Gibson County about 1860, and about 1880 he and his wife moved to Owensville, but died at Fort Branch, Ind., about 1885.

John Seiler and his wife were married about 1860, in Gibson County, and after living with her father a couple of years, they moved to Wabash County and purchased an eighty-four acre farm in Mt. Carmel Township. This farm contained some of the most heavily timbered land in the county, and he at once set out to clear and develop it. He brought it to a high state of cultivation and became a successful farmer. He died there July 12, 1909, his wife having passed away November 16, 1903. They were parents of children as follows: William and Farley, died in infancy; George; James and Catherine, on the home farm; Mary, Mrs. John H. Schrodt, of Mt. Carmel Township; and Christley and Margaret, on the home farm.

The early days of George Seiler were spent on the home farm, and as soon as old enough he began assisting with the work of operating it. He attended Sugar Creek District School and there received a good common school education. He lived at home until his marriage, September 14, 1893, to Ida B. Tilton, born at Mt. Carmel January 6, 1870, daughter of Isaac and Mary L. (Shadle) Tilton, both natives of Wabash County. She is a grand-daughter of Daniel and Phebe (Walters) Tilton, the former a native of New Jersey, and the latter of Gibson County, Ind., and of Samuel and Barbara (Dale) Shadle, the former a native of Pennsylvania. After his marriage Mr. Seiler moved to a farm of eighty-four acres, which he had purchased a few years prior. He has placed the entire farm under cultivation, and although there was a house on it, he has installed all other improvements and has left but eight acres in timber. Besides general farming he raises a good grade of horses, cattle and hogs. He and his wife became parents of children as follows: Lowell E., born September 16, 1894; Harry Fay, born March 16, 1897; and Mary Aleta, born May 21, 1903. Mr. Seiler is a public-spirited, useful citizen and actively interested in the welfare and progress of the community. He is a staunch Republican and served three years as School Director.

SEILER, Jacob Ellsworth (deceased).—Among the farmers of Wabash County, Ill., who have been more than usually successful and have been considered among the most useful and public-spirited citizens of the county, have been many members of the Seiler family, which has been well represented here since Frederick Seiler (born in Germany, in 1788), came to the county with his family in 1830. He was the progenitor of a large family, most of whom have followed agricultural pursuits. His grandson, Jacob Ellsworth Seiler, was born in Wabash County, June 22, 1862, son of Jacob Seiler, of Mt. Carmel Precinct. Jacob Seiler was about seventeen years of age when his father came to America, and he inherited the farm which his father secured in Mt. Carmel Precinct. He and his wife, Ann Matilda (Behm) Seiler, are given somewhat extended mention in connection with the sketch of their son, Frederick Christian Seiler, to be found elsewhere in this work.

The late Jacob E. Seiler was born on the farm where his entire life was spent, and at the time of his marriage, his father deeded the homestead to him, with the provision that he was to provide a home for his parents as long as they lived. This was the farm his Grandfather Seiler had secured and started to clear. The portion of the farm which was given Jacob E. Seiler was 130 acres containing the house, and to this tract he added until he owned 173 acres in one body. Here he always carried on general farming and stock-raising, and was up-to-date in his methods. He had received a good education, having taken a course at the University of Illinois, and another at the Danville (Illinois) Normal School. He made the most of his opportunities for securing learning and culture, and was an intelligent, well-read man, keeping in touch with current topics and events. He was a member of the Lutheran Church and fraternally belonged to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Pythias, of Mt. Carmel. He was a staunch Democrat and served two years as Master in Chancery, also four years as Justice of the Peace.

December 8, 1889, Mr. Seiler married Emma Risley, born at Mount Carmel, September 11, 1868, a daughter of Ezra Risley, and to this union children were born as follows: Jacob Oliver, born December 1, 1890; Lyman Eston, born May 14, 1892; and Herman Manley, born May 23, 1895.

Mr. Seiler died March 16, 1902, mourned by a large circle of friends and missed by the entire community. He had been a kind neighbor and sincere friend, and was well liked by all who had dealings with him, for his many good traits of character and sterling honesty and integrity. His widow and children reside on the homestead and carry on the home farm.

SEILER, Peter Jacob.—A retired farmer and business man, living in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of that precinct, born September 12, 1857, a son of Henry and Margaret (Oswald) Seiler, natives of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, the former born in 1815. The father came to New Orleans in 1835, and worked there eight years as a mill-wright, then coming to Wabash County, Ill., where he was married about 1845. Returning to New Orleans after his marriage, he worked a few years at his trade, and then bought a farm two miles west of Mt. Carmel, which was partly improved. Here he carried on farming until his death, February 6, 1876, though several years before his death he was an invalid and had to leave the actual work to others. His wife died December 26, 1869. They were parents of children as follows: Lewis, deceased; Elizabeth, died in 1869; John F., deceased; Peter J.; and Edward, deceased.

Peter J. Seiler spent his boyhood on the home farm and attended the district school, helping with the farm work as soon as old enough. He was about eighteen years of age at the time of his father's death, and then received his portion of the estate, where he began farming on his own account. He built a house and barn, and in April, 1883, he and his brother, Lewis, bought out the shares of the other sons, and later divided the land, Peter receiving as his share eighty-three and one-half acres in Section 30. To this he added eighty-four acres, which he bought from his brother, John, and nineteen acres from Louis Glick, a half-mile from the home place. He has made all possible improvements and has erected substantial buildings for his stock.

April 3, 1883, Mr. Seiler married Elizabeth Hart, who was born in Bavaria, Germany, a daughter of Gerhardt and Gertrude (Celtz) Hart. Mr. Hart died in Germany and his widow brought her family to Wabash County in 1876, where she was afterward married to Nicholas Peters, of Mt. Carmel. The following children were born to Mr. Seiler and his wife: Gertrude, born April 28, 1884, at home; Louis H., born November 14, 1886, a machinist of Mt. Carmel; Peter Jacob, died September 16, 1909, born September 10, 1889; and Edward Franklin, born June 21, 1893, at home.

Mr. Seiler was very successful in his farming operations and since 1877 has operated a threshing machine, with good results. He is prominent in Democratic circles and has filled several offices. He was elected County Commissioner in 1906 and served three years; has been School Trustee since 1900 and served eleven years as School Director. Fraternally he is a member of Camp No. 1916, Modern Woodmen of America, of Mt. Carmel, and he and his family are members of the Catholic Church. He has raised considerable stock on his farm, which he now rents and lives retired from active life. He is well known in the community and held in high regard by all. He is a public-spirited, useful citizen, and has done his share in advancing the interests of his locality.

SEILER, Sebastian (deceased).—In the death of Sebastian Seiler, which occurred at Mt. Carmel, Ill., October 21, 1892, Wabash County lost one of its substantial citizens, and a man who had done his full share in bringing agricultural conditions up to a very high standard, as well as lent his influence to the betterment of the community. He was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, November 26, 1820, a son of Frederick and Anna Elizabeth (Copp) Seiler. The father was born September 15, 1788, and died October 28, 1861, and the mother born February 3, 1782, died December 17, 1866, both natives of Westhofen, Palatinate, Germany. In 1835 Sebastian Seiler accompanied his parents to the United States, the voyage being made on a sailing vessel, which landed the travelers in New Orleans. From there they came by water to Evansville, Ind., and from that point to Wabash County, Ill., where the father purchased a partly improved farm located about five miles from Mt. Carmel. On that farm the parents passed the remainder of their lives.

Sebastian Seiler was one of four children, all of whom are now deceased. He attended school first in Germany and later in Wabash County. He was his father's helper until he reached manhood, when he purchased a farm for himself, consisting of 160 acres of land near his father's farm, and this was then nearly in its virgin state. On this land the young man built a modest log cabin and began clearing his property, and in the course of time the cabin was replaced by a nice brick residence. After fencing his land with split rails, Mr. Seiler toiled perseveringly to develop every resource of his farm, meanwhile adding to its extent by acquiring 188 acres more in the same vicinity. In 1875 he moved to Mt. Carmel and in 1887 erected the comfortable residence on the corner of Sixth and Mulberry Streets now occupied by his widow, and there his death occurred. He is remembered as a kind neighbor and a good citizen. He was a staunch Republican and fraternally was connected with no other organizations than the historic order of Odd Fellows. He was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which his widow still attends.

In 1851 Mr. Seiler was married to Dorcas Gibbons Dyar, who was born in Wabash County in 1834, a daughter of Andrew F. and Elizabeth (Rigg) Dyar. When Mr. Dyar first came to Wabash County, from Virginia, he found the country in a wild and uncultivated state, with wild game and wilder Indians roaming the fields and forests. He was a surveyor, being employed by the Government to survey land in Wabash County, and also owned several pieces of property, his last farm being a fine tract of 188 acres, which was later purchased by Mr. Seiler. He was a Republican in politics and a Methodist in religious belief. For many years he served as Justice of the Peace in the community where he had first settled when there was only one other white family in the county.

To Mr. and Mrs. Seiler there were born six children: Elizabeth, the wife of J. R. Stein, of Mt. Carmel; Mary, wife of T. B. McIntyre, of Missouri; Laura, widow of F. M. Hoskinson; Zula, who lives with her mother; Eliza, wife of H. E. Johnson, of Michigan; and Maude, who resides at home.

SEILER, Sebastian Seigel.—A prominent farmer and stock-dealer of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is Sebastian Seigel Seiler, who is interested in various enterprises besides his agricultural business. He is a native of the precinct, born June 22, 1862, a son of Jacob and Matilda (Behm) Seiler, the former a native of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and son of Frederick Seiler, and the latter a native of Lebanon, Pa. Sebastian S. Seiler is a twin brother of Jacob E., and his parents had three sons and three daughters older than they. He lived with his parents until his marriage, except when away at school. He received his early education in the common schools and attended the Independent Normal, at Carmi, Ill., a short time. He also took a short agricultural course at the Illinois State University, at Urbana, which he has found of much benefit to him in his work.

October 18, 1887, Sebastian S. Seiler married Mary Elizabeth Grundon, born June 5, 1866, daughter of Thomas and Anna (Connor) Grundon. Mr. Grundon was born in Dauphin County, Pa., July 1, 1820, a son of Thomas and Mary (Magee) Grundon, the former born in Ireland, in 1783, and the latter in Chester County, Pa., in 1789. The grandfather of Mrs. Seiler was married in Pennsylvania, March 27, 1807, and he died in Pennsylvania, in 1828, and his widow in Mt. Carmel, Ill., in 1843. Thomas Grundon and wife, parents of Mrs. Seiler, located in Wabash County in 1860, and after spending one year at Mt. Carmel, bought a farm in the precinct, where both died, the former October 29, 1892, and his wife April 21, 1885. They were parents of twelve children. After his marriage Mr. Seiler located on a farm of 127 acres, given him by his father, in Sections 34 and 35, Mt. Carmel Precinct, to which he has since added three acres. This farm was partly cleared and improved and Mr. Seiler cleared thirty acres more, putting the entire farm under cultivation. He has carried on general farming and makes a specialty of raising registered Shorthorn cattle. Since 1892 he has made a business of buying and feeding cattle, hogs, horses, mules and sheep, which he ships to market. He has embarked extensively into the business of buying and selling live-stock, which he has found very satisfactory.

Two children have been born to Mr. Seiler and his wife namely: Leah, born August 31, 1889, died October 8, 1890; and Lela, born June 30, 1893, is at home. Mr. Seiler is a stockholder in Mt. Carmel Banking & Trust Company and is President of the Albion District Mutual Windstorm & Cyclone Insurance Company, of Albion. He takes great interest in the welfare and progress of the county, and in political principles is a Prohibitionist. He is a member of the Lutheran Church and always ready to support any measure he believes to be for the public welfare. He served one term as School Director, but is not an office-seeker. Mr. Seiler belongs to Wabash Lodge No. 35, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Modern Woodmen of America, of Sugar Creek. He is highly esteemed for his many good qualities of mind and heart, and is a representative and public-spirited citizen.

SEXTON, Sydney A.—The art of photography requires careful study and long years of practice before proficiency is reached, and in this line a man has an opportunity to exercise his artistic taste to a gratifying degree. The principal photograph studio in Mt. Carmel, Ill., is owned and operated by Sydney A. Sexton, who has established a good business and stands well in the community. Mr. Sexton was born in Odell, Livingston County, Ill., June 5, 1869, a son of Alonzo and Mary (Wanchope) Sexton, the former a native of Hartford, Conn., and the latter of Livingston County. Alonzo Sexton was a farmer and owned land in Livingston County. He served in the One Hundred Twenty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and during his service was crippled by rheumatism. In 1879 he sold his farm and moved to Grayville, Wabash County, where he owned a place, and some years later he moved to Lacon, Ill., where he died. His widow now lives with her children. They had two children, Sydney A., and Annie, Mrs. J. W. Johnston, of Springfield, Mo.

When he reached the age of eighteen years Sydney A. Sexton began earning his own living. He had been educated in the common and high schools and began life on his own account as salesman for a house that enlarged photographs. He traveled two and a half years through the Southern States, and one year in Indiana and Illinois, and during this time took up the study of photography in Warren and Grayville. He then took up the business of taking views on his own account, traveling through Wabash, Edwards and White Counties, Ill., two years, then went to Indiana and spent two years in similar business. He first opened a studio at Lacon, Ill., and after spending eight years there looked for a larger town in which to establish himself. In October, 1902, he located in Mt. Carmel, Ill., and by the 10th of that month had his studio ready for business. He is an expert photographer and does all kinds of work in this line, also enlarges photographs and does crayon work. His studio is 25 by 100 feet, and is fitted with all the latest cameras and appliances. He has erected a handsome frame residence on North Market Street, just outside the city limits.

July 8, 1896, Mr. Sexton married Rosamond Shepherd, who was born and reared at Grayville, Ill., a daughter of Joseph and Laura (Battson) Shepherd, natives of Keensburg, Wabash County. They became parents of children as follows: Margaret, died at the age of six and one-half years; Mabel Grace, born February 1, 1899; Stanford, born March 11, 1903; Elizabeth, born January 14, 1907.

Mr. Sexton is a prominent and active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in politics is an Independent Republican. He is affiliated with the Mystic Workers of the World and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, No. 35, of Mt. Carmel. He and his wife have a wide circle of friends and are highly esteemed.

SEYBOLD, Charles.—Among the successful German-Americans of Illinois are to be found many who came to the United States without any other asset than their youth and strength, coupled with a willingness to work hard in the struggle to gain a foothold in the new country. Such a man is Charles Seybold, of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County. Mr. Seybold was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, March 8, 1839, son of John and Madeline Seybold, the latter of whom died when Charles was but six years old. As a boy Charles Seybold attended school in his native country and at the age of sixteen years came to America, locating in Bartholomew County, Ind., where he worked at farming by the month until his marriage, August 2, 1866, to Elizabeth Boman, born October 25, 1845, in Decatur County, Ind., daughter of Samuel and Margaret (Anderson) Boman, of New Jersey. Mr. Boman and his wife removed to Indiana in an early day and there the latter died, after which he removed to Wabash County, Ill., and lived at Lancaster at the time of his death.

After his marriage Mr. Seybold lived on a rented farm in Bartholomew County for a time, then bought twenty acres of land in Vigo County, where he lived nine years, then sold out and moved to Crawford County, Iowa, where he purchased seventy acres of land and lived on this farm a year and a half, then sold out and purchased eighty acres in Shelby County, Iowa. Mr. Seybold remained four years in Shelby County, then sold out and bought a farm in Lancaster Precinct, Wabash County, living there from 1882 until 1894. In the latter year he traded for a farm of 120 acres in Friendsville Precinct. Later he added another twenty acres, seven acres being timber land. He has made all possible improvements on his farm and carried on general farming and stock raising. He has lived retired from active life since 1904, though he still resides on his farm, which is carried on by one of his sons. He has been a firm believer in high-grade stock and has raised some of the best in the locality. He is a progressive and enterprising farmer and has taken careful note of all details of his work, thus being able to attain a high degree of success. He has many warm friends in the community and has proven himself a good neighbor and valuable citizen.

Eight children were born to Mr. Seybold and his wife, namely: William, of Lawrence County, Ill.; Edward, who operates the home farm for his father; Charles C., of Friendsville Precinct; Ellen, Mrs. Luthie, of Mt. Carmel; two children died in infancy; Mary, deceased, left two children; Martha, deceased, left one child. Mr. Seybold is a Republican and served two terms as School Director. He became a member of the A. F. & A. M. at Denison, Iowa, and now belongs to Lodge No. 752, Allendale, and to the Eastern Star at Mt. Carmel.

SHARP, Frederick.—One of the most successful farmers of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is Frederick Sharp, a native of the precinct, born on the farm he now occupies, November 14, 1868, a son of George J. and Rebecca (Chapman) Sharp, both natives of England. The father was a son of Burghley Park and Elizabeth (Page) Sharp, natives of Stamford, England, and the mother a daughter of Robert and Sarah (Wharham) Chapman, natives of Yorkshire, England. Robert Chapman and his wife came to the United States in 1830, crossing the ocean in a sailing vessel. They settled near Wilkesbarre, Pa., where they were married and lived seven years. In 1835 they went to England on a visit and remained there a few months, after which they returned to Pennsylvania. About a year after their return from England they settled on a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, where they became owners of a large tract of land. Mrs. Chapman died in 1875, and her husband, having survived her several years, passed away in 1892 at the age of eighty-four years.

George J. Sharp and his wife were married in Wabash County, to which he had come in 1860, from Canada, where he had landed and lived a short time. After their marriage they bought a farm of 114 acres in Mt. Carmel Precinct and Mr. Sharp died there in 1876. His widow lived on the place some years, then kept house seven years for her brother, William Major Chapman, but returned to the home farm in 1883. She died in 1904. Their children were: Granville W. and Minnie, who died in infancy; Albert G., who died in 1894; Frederick, and Sarah Ella.

Frederick Sharp attended the public school in his home district and spent one term at Lebanon Normal School. When twenty years old he began teaching and continued six years in this profession. He has always taken an active interest in any question connected with the public welfare and gives his substantial support to every worthy cause. He has lived on the home farm since retiring from the profession of teacher and he and his sister, Sarah Ellen, have added to it until they now own 251 acres in one body. Since 1893 their aunt, Elizabeth Chapman, has lived with them. Mr. Sharp carries on general farming and raises a good line of cattle and hogs for the market, as well as a good grade of horses. He is energetic and industrious and has been very successful in a business way. For ten years he has been a Director of the American National Bank of Mt. Carmel, and is Secretary and Director of Mt. Carmel Canning Company. In politics he is a Republican and served two and one-half years as District Road Clerk. In 1910 he was the Republican candidate for County Treasurer.

Mr. Sharp is a man of recognized probity and business ability and has been administrator of several estates. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, served as Assistant Class Leader and Assistant Sunday School Superintendent, and was for two years President of the Sunday School Association of Mt. Carmel Precinct.

Mr. Sharp was married July 3, 1910, to Miss Susan Stoltz, an intelligent and popular young lady, who is descended from one of the pioneer families of the county. His sister, Sarah Ella, was married April 10, 1910, to Mr. Beauchamp Rigg, who was born and raised in Wabash County, and is a member of one of its best and most favorably known families, and who is at present Cashier of the American Exchange Bank at Browns, Edwards County, Ill.

SHEARER, Barber Austin, a retired farmer of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is an honored Civil War veteran and has been a resident of the community where he now lives for more than half a century. Mr. Shearer was born in Franklin County, Mass., July 5, 1836, son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Canedy) Shearer, the former a native of Massachusetts and the latter of Windham County, Vt. Joseph Shearer was a son of William Shearer, of Boston, and his wife was a daughter of Thomas Canedy, of Vermont. Joseph Shearer married (first) a Miss Gregg, in Massachusetts, and was a soldier in the War of 1812, removing to Mt. Carmel about two years after the war. Mrs. Shearer died in Mt. Carmel and her husband returned to his native State, where he remained until his second marriage, to Elizabeth Canedy, and in 1854 he brought his family to Wabash County, buying land in Friendsville Precinct, where he spent the remainder of his life. He died in 1857 and his widow survived him ten years. They had children as follows: Joseph, of Loveland, Ohio; Jane, died in Massachusetts, a year ago; Barber A.; Christopher, deceased; Lura, Mrs. John Dardeen, now deceased; Thomas, died while serving in the Union army; Lucy, Mrs. Lorin Jordan, of Alamosa, Colo.; Lucinda, Mrs. James Payne, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Laura A., died in childhood; Angeline and Jonathan, died in childhood, in Massachusetts.

The education of Barber A. Shearer was acquired in the common schools of Franklin County, Mass., and he remained with his parents in Wabash County until the father's death, then, with his mother and two sisters, started back to Massachusetts on a visit. They made the journey in 1861, and when they had proceeded as far as Olive Green, Delaware County, Ohio, Mr. Shearer learned of the President's call for 75,000 men. Mr. Shearer enlisted, in April, 1861, in Company I, Fourth Ohio Volunteers, spending a week in training in Columbus, then being sent to Camp Dennison. His regiment was assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and Mr. Shearer remained constantly with his regiment except when he spent three weeks in a hospital and was engaged in many important engagements, including the battles of Antietam, the Wilderness, etc. He received his discharge in the summer of 1864, then returned to Illinois and purchased 120 acres of land in Mt. Carmel Precinct, living on this farm thirty years and making all possible improvements. He then traded it for the James Mundy farm in Lick Prairie Precinct, where he has 230 acres of fine land, all improved except thirty acres of timber. Mr. Shearer has been retired from active life since 1890, and his son Harry and his son-in-law, Otto Marx, operate the farm. He is well known for his energy and industry and has been one of the most successful farmers of his community.

Mr. Shearer married, in July, 1866, Edith Brines, who was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Brines, natives of Wabash County and New York, respectively. Children as follows have blessed this union: Thomas, of Centralia, Wash.; Mary, Mrs. Fred Palmer, of Seattle, Wash.; May, Mrs. Otto Marx, on the home farm; Harry, on the home farm, married Ethel Beard.

SHEARER, George C. (deceased), who was a veteran of the Civil War, discharged with the rank of Sergeant, developed a fine farm in Friendsville Precinct and worked many years at the trade of carpenter in Wabash County. Mr. Shearer was born in Franklin County, Mass., October 3, 1836, a son of Joseph and Elizabeth Shearer, of Massachusetts. He remained in Vermont, whither his parents had moved, and received a common school education in that State.

Mr. Shearer married, December 24, 1859, Catherine Case, who was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, January 9, 1841, a daughter of Jonathan and Theresa Jane (McDowell) Case, of Orange County, N. Y. Mr. Case and wife were married in New York and became early settlers of Wabash County, entering land from the Government, which they improved and occupied until a few years before his death, when they moved to Mt. Carmel. Mr. Case died in 1852 and his widow survived him many years, passing away in 1887, at the age of eighty years. They had children as follows: David and Chauncey, deceased; Julia, widow of Benjamin Fuller, of Tell City, Ind.; John, died in the Union army; Charles, died at the summer home, at Sleepy Eye, Minn.; Theodore, of Sleepy Eye; Clark, of Sumner, Ill.; George, of Valley Center, Kan. Mrs. Shearer is the fifth child.

After his marriage Mr. Shearer rented a farm in Lick Prairie Precinct. At the time of the Civil War he responded to the call of his country and enlisted, in the fall of 1861, in the One Hundred Fifteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until the end of the war, making a good record as a soldier. He participated in many important engagements but was never wounded. While he was away his wife remained with her mother and upon his return he remained with his wife's people until 1875, when he purchased ninety acres of unimproved land, which he began to cultivate and develop, erecting a comfortable house and other buildings. He worked at his trade of carpenter also, and built a good many houses in the vicinity. He was enterprising and energetic and became successful in his undertakings. At the time of his death he owned eighty acres of fine land, on which his widow now resides. He was much interested in the cause of education and every movement he deemed for the good of the community. He was a Republican in politics and served many years as School Director. He had a host of friends and was highly esteemed among his army comrades in particular, and by all who knew him and grew to appreciate his many good qualities. Mr. Shearer died at his home, January 8, 1896, and was buried at Gard's Point.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Shearer and his wife: George Henry, of Ontario, Ore.; Nora Angeline, Mrs. Alfred Putnam, of Wabash County; James, of Centralia, Wash.; Frank and Samuel, died in infancy; Adelbert, of Centralia, Wash.; Clarence, of Mt. Carmel, Ill.; Lucy Bell, Mrs. Lemuel Malone, of Washington; Fannie Maria, Mrs. Joseph Majors, resides with her mother; Carl, of Centralia, Wash.

SHOAFF, Ross.—Many men who have led an active life are not willing to retire from their work, even after they have passed the age at which most men rest from all labor and prepare to spend their remaining days in ease. Such a man is Ross Shoaff, who was born in Washington County, Pa., October 3, 1834, and has for many years been engaged in contracting in Wabash County, Ill. He is a son of Jacob and Martha (Wolfenburger) Shoaff, both natives of Lebanon County, Pa., and a grandson of John Wolfenburger, of Lancaster County, Pa.

Mr. Shoaff received his education in the district schools of his native county and there in 1850 learned the trade of bricklaying and plastering. In 1854 he came with a brother to Terre Haute, Ind., and though they had plenty of "wildcat" money, this was of no use to them on account of the failure of so many banks. Ross Shoaff began working at his trade and a year later returned for his parents, who came with him, bringing their daughter also. They then moved to Friendsville, Ill. Ross Shoaff built up a good business in the line of contracting and erected a great many of the best buildings of Mt. Carmel, as well as other buildings throughout that region. He made his home in the village of Friendsville until 1868, when he traded his village property for a tract of land in Friendsville Precinct, and in 1870 he exchanged that in turn for his present home one mile east of Friendsville, where he owns fifty-nine acres. He continues his business of contracting and at times employs from six to ten men. He has been successful in this line of work, is a man of executive ability and business judgment.

Mr. Shoaff married (first) May 9, 1861, Dorthula Keen, who was born in Coffee Precinct, daughter of Daniel and Julydia (McClain) Keen, natives of Ohio. Two children blessed this union, namely: Maggie, married Dr. William L. Farr, who died, and she married (second) Scott Severns, of Edward County, Ill.; Orion, died at the age of three years. Mrs. Shoaff died February 7, 1870, and Mr. Shoaff married (second) December 9, 1874, Mary Ellen Pixley, who was born in Friendsville Precinct, a daughter of William and Laura (White) Pixley, the former a native of Aurora, N. Y., born December 7, 1793, and died December 7, 1876, and the latter born in Boston, Mass., November 10, 1799, and died August 1, 1895. Mr. Pixley and his wife were married in 1820, after which they lived on the prairie in Friendsville Precinct, on the farm where he died, after which his widow spent the remainder of her days with her daughter, Mrs. Shoaff. Mr. Pixley was a soldier in the War of 1812. He walked to Vermont and back on an errand for his father, a distance of about 1,000 miles. Mr. Pixley was a son of Job and Abigail (Patchen) Pixley, of Vermont, and his wife was a daughter of John and Lydia (Woodruff) White. Mrs. Laura (White) Pixley started with a sister for the West, coming down the Ohio River and stopping over Sunday in Kentucky. Seeing a cabin on the opposite side of the river they went across, and while playing on a sand bar they saw a man and woman named Evans. A town had just been platted and the man said it was to be named for his nephew, Robert Evans. This was in 1816. The family came to Wabash County in that year and entered land in Friendsville Precinct in 1818. One child was born by the second marriage of Mr. Shoaff, Bertha E., Mrs. Philip Kine, of Golden Gate, Wayne County, Ill.

Mr. Shoaff is a member of the Christian Church in which he has been Deacon since 1880. In politics he is a Democrat. He has always been interested in public affairs and has contributed his share to the progress and development of his county. He is a good type of an ambitious, useful citizen, and is held in high esteem wherever he is known.

SIMONDS, William (deceased).—In the death of William Simonds the people of Mt. Carmel, Ill., lost a good man and a representative citizen, one whose long life was full of usefulness. He was born October 25, 1825, a son of Elijah and Katherine (Ulm) Simonds. Elijah Simonds was born in Ohio and came to Wabash County when a young man, settling in a still uncleared part of the county, where he subsequently engaged in farming. He married Katherine Ulm, who was of German descent but was born in Ohio, and they had three children, William being the only one to survive infancy.

William Simonds obtained his knowledge of books in the district schools of Wabash County. From early youth he was of a serious cast of mind and united with the Methodist Church, later becoming a local preacher and in that calling visited many parts of the county and became well and favorably known. When his father died he inherited the home farm of eighty acres, a large portion of it yet remaining uncleared. To the clearing up of this land and to its improvement and cultivation, Mr. Simonds devoted himself, these cares restricting somewhat his labors in the local ministry, although to the close of his life he was an active and useful member of the church.

On August 12, 1846, Mr. Simonds was married to Mary R. Hill, born February 7, 1827, in New Jersey and was brought to Wabash County by her parents in 1837. She was a daughter of Horace Hill, a native of that State, who formerly followed the sea. He married Dorcas Hackett, also a native of New Jersey, and they were the parents of three sons and three daughters who survived, two children being born after the family came to Wabash County. The names are as follows: Sarah, Rhoda, Mary R., John, Samuel, Morris, Aaron, Ann Eliza and Harriet. Horace Hill located at first on Bald Hill Prairie, entering forty acres from the Government, a part of which he cleared up and improved and continued to live on that place until the close of his life.

To Mr. and Mrs. Simonds eleven children were born, all on the old Simonds homestead. They were given the following names: Cyrus, Nathan, William, Edward, Maria, Eliza, Abraham, Alfred, Anna, Ellsworth and James. Of these: Cyrus, Nathan, William, Abraham and James are deceased.

In his political sentiments, the late William Simonds was a Republican and he was ever a loyal supporter of the Government. During the great Civil War he served one year as a soldier in Co. 1, Thirty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being discharged on account of disability. He was identified with both the Masons and the Odd Fellows. Mrs. Simonds died April 18, 1910.

SMITH, Edwin, a life-long resident and representative farmer of Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born December 4, 1851, a son of George and Mary (Banks) Smith, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Lawrence County, Ill. George Smith and his wife were children of John and Rebecca (Ballard) Smith, of New Hampshire and New York, respectively, and Alexander and Nancy Banks, all pioneers of Wabash County. John Smith was a farmer and tinsmith. George Smith and his wife married and settled in the northwestern corner of Wabash Precinct, where they acquired 300 acres of land, on which he made many improvements. He died in December, 1860, and his widow died in February, 1902, at the age of eighty years. Their children were: Helen, Mrs. Daniel Hershey, a widow, living in Oklahoma; Rebecca, Mrs. Theophilus Smith, who died at Bridgeport, Ill.; Nancy Ann, Mrs. Newton Schrader, of Lawrence County, Ill.; Mary, lives with her brother Edwin; James B., died in Wabash Precinct; Edwin; Sarah, Mrs. Abner Wood, of Mt. Carmel; Hester, Mrs. Edwin Curry, died in Wabash Precinct; George B., of Wabash Precinct.

In his boyhood Edwin Smith attended the public schools and as soon as old enough helped in the work on his father's farm. Having lost his father when he was about seven years of age, he lived with his mother until he was thirty-six years old, although he had purchased a ninety-five acre farm on Section 9, Wabash Precinct, which was partly improved. He now lives on his own farm, which he has all under cultivation except twenty acres of timber. It was partly improved, but he has erected all the buildings on it and added many other improvements. He does a general line of farming and stock-raising, and through his industry and good judgment has won a gratifying degree of success. His sister Mary has been his housekeeper since the death of his mother. Both are unmarried. Mr. Smith is a public-spirited, useful citizen and actively interested in the public welfare. He is a Democrat in political views.

SMITH, Dr. James Edward.—Many prominent physicians of Illinois have acquired their medical educations through their own efforts, and have found it necessary to work very hard to earn the money with which to pursue their studies. Dr. James Edward Smith, of Mt. Carmel, who is a veteran of the Civil War, and present member of the United States Pension Examining Board, has taken a prominent part in public affairs since living in Wabash County, and enjoys a lucrative practice in Mt. Carmel. Dr. Smith was born in Campbell County, Ky., December 11, 1838, a son of George Washington and Rhoda (Jenner) Smith, both natives of Campbell County.

When George Washington Smith was a small child his father died and he was reared by an uncle, a Mr. Harrison, with whom he lived until his marriage. He became a farmer in Kentucky and in June, 1840, came with his family to Richland County, Ill., making the journey by horse and wagon, and settling near Olney. He entered 120 acres of government land, eighty acres of prairie and forty of timber. He improved the former but retained the timber. He died in 1868, his wife having passed away in March, 1865. They had eleven children, of whom James E. was the second.

Dr. James E. Smith remained with his parents until he was twenty-two years of age, then spent his summers in farm work and taught school in the winter until April 17, 1861, when he enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but the company in which he enlisted being already full, he was not accepted. In June of the same year he enlisted in the Eleventh Missouri Volunteers, but his father having been disabled by an accident, he found it necessary to withdraw his name until his father's recovery. On August 5, 1862, he re-enlisted at Olney, Ill., in Company B, Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and his company was first assigned to duty at Louisville, Ky., but being taken sick at Bowling Green, Ky., he was there placed on detailed duty until January 1, 1863, when by order of General Rosecrans, all detailed soldiers reported for duty at Murfreesboro. Upon reaching Murfreesboro in January, 1863, he was assigned to Wilder's Brigade, and the next spring they were mounted. They were engaged in service in Tennessee, opposing the progress of General Morgan, and in June, 1863, Wilder held the pass at Hoover's Gap, against the Confederates. Dr. Smith was placed on duty in the field hospital, where he had to stand guard in his turn, the same as the other soldiers. He was a member of the division that captured Jefferson Davis, near Macon, Ga. After his discharge at Springfield, July 5, 1865, he returned home.

After the war Mr. Smith continued teaching during winters and worked at farming during the summer, until 1870, when he began the study of medicine under Dr. D. Bates, of Calhoun, near Olney, Ill. After spending a year there he attended the Eclectic Medical College at Cincinnati, and a year later began practicing medicine at St. Francisville, Ill., where he remained four years, then for twenty-seven years practiced his profession at Allendale. His work was mostly in the country and, in 1902, he gave up his practice at Allendale and removed to Mt. Carmel, where he is engaged in city practice only. He has sold his Allendale property and bought a residence in Mt. Carmel.

April 7, 1867, Dr. Smith married Nancy Howay, who was born in Arkansas, and they had children as follows: Lena, died at the age of one year; Hayward died at the age of nineteen months; Zillah, Mrs. G. W. Klindera, of Tulare County, Cal., has two daughters; Edwin Freeman, killed at Harrisburg, Ill., in August, 1900; Elmer, ticket and passenger agent of the Iron Mountain & Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, at Memphis, Tenn., is married and has two children; Morris, ticket agent for the Big Four Railroad Company at Mt. Carmel; Mattie, married Ed. L. Holsen, Deputy Circuit Clerk of Wabash County, and they have two daughters and one son; Vera Grace, at home.

In 1877 Dr. Smith re-entered the Eclectic Medical College, at Cincinnati, and graduated therefrom in 1878, receiving his degree. He is a staunch Republican in politics, having cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln, and served four years as Postmaster at Allendale, under President Harrison. He still has in his possession a draft on the United States Postoffice Department which was sent to him at the close of his service in the department, the amount of the same being one cent, the number 6276 and the Auditor's Report Number 38535. Dr. Smith was appointed a member of the Pension Examining Board February 15, 1904, and served some time as Secretary, but is now its Treasurer. He is prominent in Grand Army circles and is a member of T. S. Bowers Post, No. 125, of Mt. Carmel. He belongs to the State Eclectic Society. He has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since he was fourteen years of age and is active in church work. He stands well in his profession and has the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

SMITH, Rozander, who has resided in Wabash County, Ill., nearly ninety years, is a son of one of the earliest settlers of that region, born April 9, 1817, in Utica, N. Y., and brought to Illinois by his parents in 1821. His parents, Rausler V. and Mary (Ormsby) Smith, were both natives of New York, the former a son of Benjamin F. Smith, who served seven years in the Revolutionary War. Rausler Smith and his wife came down the Allegheny to the Ohio River, thence on to the Wabash, up which they came to Old Palmyra, in Wabash County. They settled on government land in Lancaster Precinct and later bought land, part prairie and part timber. At that time there were many deer, bears, panthers and wolves in the neighborhood, as well as Indians. The mother died at Lancaster, in 1823, and was the first person buried in the cemetery there. Mr. Smith married (second) Jane Turner, and lived in the northwestern part of Lancaster Precinct. He died in Evansville, Ind., in 1844, having lived there about six months. By his first marriage he had four children, of whom Rozander was the oldest, the others being: Rosella, deceased; Lucetta, Mrs. Barney Higgins, of Berryville, Richland County, Ill.; and a daughter who died in infancy. By his second marriage Mr. Smith had five children, as follows: Perrin, deceased; Abner, and Simeon (twins), Franklin, and Jane, all deceased.

When fifteen years of age Rozander Smith was bound out to George Glick, of Lancaster Precinct, for whom he worked three years before securing his freedom, then continued in his employ a few years longer, for two months of that time, helping to build bridges on the first railroad constructed through Mt. Carmel, Mr. Smith and John Sproul started in a canoe for New Orleans, and after they had proceeded about twelve miles down the Wabash River, they were halted by a crew of men who were raising a building, one of the crew pointing a gun at them and asking them to come ashore. Mr. Smith pointed a gun at him in turn, advising that he and his comrade did not care to disembark, and they were allowed to go on their way. They landed that night at the home of Eli Compton, who was building a boat, and they made a contract with him to help him in return for their passage to New Orleans. By the time the boat was finished the river was frozen over. Mr. Sproul and Mr. Smith proceeded to Shawneetown on foot and worked two days there in a saw-mill, cutting slabs, then secured a position cutting hard wood, at which they worked several days, then engaged to go to New Orleans, securing forty dollars apiece for the trip. Their boat was sunk at Plum Point, being run into by another boat. They then secured passage to Vicksburg, where Mr. Smith and Mr. Sproul obtained passage on a coasting boat, hiring out for one dollar a day and board. After these adventures and mishaps, they finally reached New Orleans, worked there four days and then started back, after reaching Evansville, Ind., walking the rest of the way to their home. Mr. Smith was twenty-one years old at the time of his return and soon after found employment as pilot on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, making seventeen consecutive trips upon the river.

In 1844 Mr. Smith married Rebecca Hubbard, a native of Lancaster Precinct, and daughter of Lindsey and Patsie (Jordan) Hubbard, natives of Tennessee, who were early settlers in Wabash County, coming there about one year later than Mr. Smith's parents. Mrs. Smith died in 1864, and Mr. Smith married (second), April 14, 1867, Cynthia Snyder, a native of Wabash County, who died October 9, 1907.

After his marriage Mr. Smith bought the farm in Lancaster Precinct that had belonged to his father, paying $60 in gold and giving his note for $40 for eighty acres of land. He has since resided on this farm and added to his possessions from time to time until he became the owner of 700 acres of land in one body, all in Wabash County. He has sold much of this land, and now owns but 106 acres in the home place. He has turned over to each of his sons eighty acres of land, for which they pay him one-sixth of the product of same. He has been a member of the Universalist Church since 1860 and has held offices in the same. In politics he is a Democrat and has always taken an active part in local affairs. He served sixteen years as Justice of the Peace, four years as Associate Justice, eight years as Notary Public and one term as County Commissioner. He is one of the best known citizens of the county and is well versed in its early history, taking great interest in the development of the region from a wilderness to a scene of prosperity and thrift. Mr. Smith had children as follows: George, who died in infancy; and Frank, of Lancaster Precinct, by the first marriage; and William, Levitt and Edward by the second marriage. Though an old man, Mr. Smith is still in possession of much vitality, and it is a pleasure to his many friends to converse with him on past and present issues and events.

SPURLING, Henry.—Among the most successful stock farmers of Wabash County, Ill., is Henry Spurling, of Lancaster Precinct, who was born in Shelby County, Ind., December 31, 1845, son of Elijah Spurling, a native of Ohio. Elijah Spurling and his wife died when their son Henry was a mere infant, and the latter was taken in charge by the family of John Heitz, in Indiana. The Heitz family moved to Wabash County when Henry was seven years of age, and settled on the farm where he now lives.

Mr. Spurling was an inmate of the Heitz home until his marriage, March 25, 1870, to Hester Jane Biehl, born in Lancaster Precinct. Mrs. Spurling is a daughter of John and Hannah (Darney) Biehl, natives of Pennsylvania. Her mother died when she was three years old and she was reared in the family of Ephraim Staninger, where she made her home until her marriage. Mr. Spurling and his wife began housekeeping on eighty acres of land, a part of the home place, which he purchased of Mr. Heitz. He also purchased eighty acres on Section 18 of Lancaster Precinct, on the Bonpas Creek bottom, which tract he sold in 1881. He purchased seventy acres adjoining the home farm and forty-two and one-half acres nearby. Mr. Spurling has 140 acres under cultivation and forty-seven and one-half acres in timber. He has always carried on diversified farming and raises mules, cattle and hogs. He formerly dealt extensively in cattle, which he bought as calves, fattened and sold. He also raises Shropshire sheep. Mr. Spurling is a prominent Democrat and actively interested in anything pertaining to the public welfare. He has been Treasurer of the Independent Farmers' Telephone Company, which has an exchange at Lancaster. He is the friend of progress and contributes his share towards its cause. In religious affiliations he is a Lutheran and has served as Deacon since 1904. Four children were born to him and his wife, namely: Edward, who died in 1909, at the age of thirty years; Elijah, of Lancaster Precinct, married Ella Mayne and has six children; John Franklin, and Harvey Wilson, at home.

STEEES, Rudolph K., who represents one of the oldest families in Mt. Carmel, Ill., has now retired from active life, but is deeply interested in everything that pertains to the progress and welfare of the city, county or State. His father was one of the early Postmasters of Mt. Carmel, and served several years after his appointment in 1849. Rudolph K. Stees has also served in various public offices and is very well known throughout the county, having been Postmaster of Mt. Carmel for seventeen years, from 1865 to 1882. He was born in Covington, Fountain County, Ind., February 2, 1839, a son of Henry and Susanna (Kelker) Stees, the former a native of Union County and the latter of Lebanon County, Pa. His grandparents were Frederick and Mary (Riblet) Stees, of Pennsylvania, and Henry and Elizabeth (Grunenwalt) Kelker, natives of Switzerland. The Stees family originally came from Germany, the first in America, being sold by a shipmaster to pay for his passage to the United States. He was an iron worker and did some work on cannon used by Revolutionary soldiers at the Battle of Brandywine. The family became prominent in Snyder and Lebanon, as well as in Berks County, Pa., and Frederick Stees had a carding mill, in addition to carrying on a farm. He and his wife lived all their lives in Pennsylvania.

Henry Stees was married in Lebanon County, Pa., and moved to Marion, Ohio, and later to Covington. He lived in Indiana from 1837-39, then located in Mt. Carmel and started a tin-shop, which he conducted ten years, after which he conducted a grocery and notion store six years. He was a strong Whig and, besides serving from 1849-53 as Postmaster at Mt. Carmel, was for many years Justice of the Peace. In 1865 he retired from active business and his death occurred in July, 1868. His first wife died in November, 1843, and after her death he married her sister, Mary M. Kelker. By his first marriage he had four children, namely: Mary, resides with her brother Rudolph; Elizabeth, married Henry Harrington and both are deceased; Catherine, married Hiram Barcus and died at Pekin, Ill.; and Rudolph. By his second marriage Mr. Stees had no children.

At the age of sixteen years Rudolph K. Stees began working as clerk in a drug store. For his first year's work he received $25, for the second $50 and for the third $60. From December, 1860, until November, 1861, he clerked in a drug-store in Lawrenceville, Ill., then served one year as assistant to the County Clerk. In July, 1862, he became Assistant Postmaster under his father. April 1, 1865, he succeeded his father as Postmaster at Mt. Carmel, and held this office continuously until 1882. During this period he also conducted a book and news stand, and after retiring from office, continued to conduct this business until 1892, when he retired. In 1878 he erected a handsome brick residence at 419 Cherry Street, and here he and his sister Mary, neither having married, reside together. He is a strong Prohibitionist and an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is Steward and Treasurer. He is identified with the best interests of the community and has contributed to every good cause that appeals to his judgment as being worthy his support. He is well known and popular in Mt. Carmel and has a large circle of warm personal friends. He has served the public well while holding office, and in a private capacity has fulfilled the duties of good citizenship.

STEIN, George B.—George B. Stein was born in Mt. Carmel, Ill., August 17, 1872, the son of Jacob and Julia (Gross) Stein, prominent pioneers of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Stein were married in 1851 and, on February 23, 1901, celebrated their Golden Wedding. Mr. Stein was educated in the public schools of Mt. Carmel. His youth was spent on his father's farm. For fifteen years he was engaged in a general merchandising business, but for the last six years has been writing insurance, in all its branches, and has built up an extensive and prosperous business. He is thoroughly familiar with all classes of insurance, and his diligence and reliability is an assurance to his patrons that their interests are perfectly safe in his hands. He is now Public Administrator of Wabash County, by appointment of Gov. Deneen, and makes a capable and trustworthy official.

Mr. Stein prepared and published, in conjunction with Mr. E. F. Eichhorn, the first City Directory of Mt. Carmel and "Gazetteer of Wabash County," a publication of excellent merit. He is a very prominent and influential member of several fraternal orders, being Esteemed Leading Knight of the Elks Lodge, Master of Exchequer of the Knights of Pythias and a social member of the Modern Woodmen of America, associated with the local Lodges of Mt. Carmel.

Mr. George B. Stein and family are influential members of the Lutheran Church. In politics he has always been a zealous, active and prominent Republican, always looking for an opportunity to do some honorable and valuable service for his party. He is a man of unrelenting energy, always alert and striving with persistent industry to accomplish whatever he sets his hands to do, and consequently becomes a leader in nearly every political, social or public matter in which he takes a part. He is obliging, liberal, frank and generous, and quick to see and avail himself of the first opportunity to render assistance in cases of individual or public necessity. He is athletic and fearless, a fine angler and successful hunter, provides bounteously for his family and hospitably entertains his friends.

On December 26, 1894, Mr. Stein was united in marriage to Miss Ella Harris of Olney, Ill., who was born and raised in that city. Mrs. Stein, on the maternal side, is a direct descendant of Lord William Berkeley, Colonial Governor of Virginia. Her father's family settled in Virginia in the seventeenth century. Both families were owners of large estates in Albemarle and Culpeper Counties. The Harrises left Virginia because of their opposition to slavery, going first to Ohio and, in 1840, removed to Illinois.

Mr. and Mrs. Stein have four children: Maurice Harris, born January 9, 1896; Dorothy, born February 11, 1899; and Frank Berkeley and Bernard Jacob, born January 23, 1908.

STEIN, Jacob, Sr.—Jacob Stein, Sr., was born in West Hoven, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, January 23, 1821. He came with his father's family to America in 1849 and located in Mt. Carmel in 1850. He was a cooper by trade and, for a quarter of a century, conducted an extensive business in Mt. Carmel. Subsequently he engaged in farming and was successful in all his business undertakings. He was a man of clean judgment and strict integrity, and his sterling virtues were admired by all. He was of an amiable disposition, though firm in his convictions and frank in expression of his opinions. He enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all his acquaintances.

On February 23, 1851, Mr. Stein was married to Julia Groff, and on February 23, 1901, they celebrated their Golden Wedding on the premises where they went to housekeeping, having lived there continuously. Mrs. Stein was born at Ensheim, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, May 16, 1831, whence she came with her parents to this country in 1840. Mr. and Mrs. Stein were the parents of ten children, of whom these are still living: J. Fred; George B.; Jacob, of Wabash County; Lewis, of White County, Ill.; Mrs. A. Maggie Tucker; Mrs. Clara L. Geiger; Mrs. Carrie H. Seibert, and Miss Allie, of Mt. Carmel.

Mr. Stein died July 30, 1901, and Mrs. Stein departed this life April 15, 1907. They were honest, moral, industrious Christian people, who were respected and beloved by all the people of Mt. Carmel, among whom it was their happy lot to spend so many useful, prosperous and happy years. They were always amiable, cheerful and buoyant with hope, and even at their great ages seemed still to be young and inspired with the vigor and animation of youth. The memory of their noble lives will be a precious legacy of honor to their many descendants.

STELZER, John J., a successful and enterprising farmer of Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was born on the farm where he now resides, and part of which he now owns, June 21, 1874. He is a son of Jacob and Margaret (Schrodt) Stelzer, the former a native of Bladersheim, Germany, and the latter of Mt. Carmel, and a daughter of John and Anna M. Schrodt, natives of Germany.

Jacob Stelzer came to New York City when twenty years of age and later removed to Oshkosh, Wis., where he visited an uncle. He went from there to Wabash County, where he married, May 19, 1872, and moved to a farm of eighty-four acres given the young couple by Mr. Schrodt. He followed farming and stock-raising, and he and his wife together became owners of about 500 acres of land, all in Mt. Carmel Precinct, and in a single tract, except 100 acres in Coffee Precinct. His wife died April 12, 1901, and he married (second), December 5, 1901, Sarah G. Glick, a widow, and native of Wabash County, whose maiden name was Wirth. After his second marriage he retired to Mt. Carmel and lived at ease until his death. He was killed while walking on the tracks of the Southern Railroad, January 21, 1910. He was born January 10, 1847. He was a prominent man in public affairs and was well known in the county. By his first marriage he had two children: John J., and Mary M., Mrs. Robert Woolard, of Mt. Carmel Precinct.

John J. Stelzer has spent his entire life on the farm which his Grandfather Schrodt secured as a homestead, and was educated in Sugar Creek District School. His farm is in Section 36, where he carries on general farming and stock-raising. His father gave him about eighty acres of the home farm, and here he settled after his marriage. He has added ninety acres and now has a fine farm of 356 acres, 50 acres of which are in Coffee Precinct, which he has put into good condition and has improved as much as possible. He is a progressive and enterprising business man, carrying on his work in a manner to give him the maximum of profit from his operations.

December 29, 1895, Mr. Stelzer married Claudie Stillwell, born in Wabash Precinct, January 7, 1875, a daughter of Samuel J. and Sophia Sabina (Kaiser) Stillwell, the former a native of Wabash Precinct and the latter of Hesse-Cassel, Germany. Mrs. Stelzer's grandparents, Samuel and Elizabeth (McKinney) Stillwell, were among the earliest settlers of Wabash County, and secured land from the Government, most of which is still owned by the Stillwell family. The following children were born to Samuel Stillwell and his wife: James K., of Wabash Precinct; Pauline, Mrs. William C. Brown, died March 4, 1896; Elizabeth, Mrs. Charles W. Mason, of Keyport, N. J.; Mrs. Stelzer; Samuel J., of Wabash Precinct; and George W., on part of the home place. The children born to Mr. Stelzer and his wife are: John Jacob, born August 21, 1897; Ozle Beryl, born November 15, 1899; and Cecil Everett, born December 9, 1902. Mr. Stillwell was born June 6, 1832, and died June 24, 1895. His wife was born November 1, 1836, and still resides on the old homestead.

Mr. Stelzer is an earnest member of the Christian Church, as also is Mrs. Stelzer, and is liberal in his support of the same. He favors the principles of the Republican party, and although he does not care for public office, takes an active interest in public affairs.

STERL, George L., a representative farmer of Wabash County, Ill., and a native of the county, was born in Rochester, Coffee Precinct, April 18, 1857, a son of George and Catherine (Broedel) Sterl, of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, the latter a daughter of Leonard and Mary Broedel, who came to the United States and settled in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, at an early day. George Sterl came to Mt. Carmel as a young man and there married and worked at his trade of blacksmithing. Later he owned a shop at Rochester and later moved to Deputy Corners, where he bought a forty-acre farm and also conducted a blacksmith shop. He died in 1865, at the age of thirty-eight years and his widow went to live with her father near Mt. Carmel. She afterward married John Sebrott and lived some years in Mt. Carmel, where he conducted an elevator. After the death of Mr. Schrodtt she moved back to the old home farm and lived with her son there up to the time of her death, December 26, 1907, at the age of seventy-three years. The children of Mr. Sterl and wife were: Mary, who died in infancy; George L.; Elizabeth, died at the age of eighteen years; Rosa, died at the age of twelve years.

J.B. Wright Jr

The only child to reach maturity in the family of George Sterl and wife was George L., their only son, and he lived with his mother and helped her until his marriage, March 24, 1886, to Elizabeth Fisher, who was born in Bellmont Precinct, Wabash County, a daughter of John and Mary (Groff) Fisher, natives of Germany. The children of this marriage were: Rosa May, a trained nurse employed at the State School for Girls at Geneva, Ill.; John William, Frank T. and Grace M., at home.

After his marriage Mr. Sterl and wife lived on the old Sterl farm until the spring of 1893, when he bought a farm of 120 acres in Mt. Carmel Precinct, to which he later added eighty acres. He has a fine farm, all under cultivation, and also owns 200 acres in Bellmont Precinct. He and his wife together own 480 acres of land in Wabash County, and he inherited 160 acres in Wayne County from his mother. He also owns 627 acres near Stratford, Sherman County, Texas. His sons cultivate about 240 acres and he rents the remainder. He makes a specialty of raising short-horn cattle, Duroc Jersey hogs and German coach horses. Mr. Sterl has always worked at farming and still helps his sons carry on the farm. He is a progressive and enterprising man of business and has interests outside his farm. He is a stock-holder and Director in the Mt. Carmel Banking & Trust Association and is much esteemed by all who have had dealings with him in a social or business way. He is a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Association and is a Republican in politics. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, of Maud, Ill., Sugar Creek Camp, and to the Farmers' Co-operative Union. Mr. Sterl and wife are well known in the community and have a large circle of friends.

STEWART, Wesley C.—Few men are better known throughout Wabash County, Ill., than Wesley C. Stewart, of Lick Prairie Precinct, an honored veteran of the Civil War, and formerly engaged in conducting a threshing machine and saw-mill in the county. Mr. Stewart is still actively engaged in farming, having disposed of his other business interests. He is a native of the precinct where he now resides, having been born on the farm he now owns and occupies, January 31, 1845, a son of John M. and Miranda (Putnam) Stewart, the former born in Dubois County, Ind., and the latter in Wabash County. The grandparents of W. C. Stewart were John and Rachel (Shively) Stewart and Samuel and Relief (Chaffee) Putnam. Mr. Putnam was a native of Connecticut and his wife of Vermont, and they became very early settlers of Wabash County, Ill.

John and Miranda Stewart were married in Wabash County and settled on a farm in Lick Prairie Precinct, where they lived a few years, then moved to another part of the precinct. He learned the trade of wagon-maker, at which he worked some years. He finally purchased a farm on Section 32, Town 1 North, Range 13 West, where there was a log house and a few acres cleared. Later he manufactured brick to erect a house to replace the frame one which burned. His farm contained eighty acres, and in addition to cultivating it he operated a wagon-making, repair and blacksmith shop. He was born in 1821, and was killed by the running away of a team of horses with a land roller, in September, 1877. His widow, who was born in 1827, lived on the farm several years longer, then lived with her children until her death in September, 1907. They had children as follows: Wesley; Edwin F., deceased; Amanda, deceased, Mrs. John Gard; Virginia C., married Samuel Nundy, of Mt. Carmel; J. Chester, of California; Emma, Mrs. George Robinson, of Edwards County, Ill.; Fannie M., Mrs. R. H. Bratton, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Oliver S., of Colorado; Minnie M., Mrs. John Snider, of Louisville, Ky.; Tessie M., Mrs. George Jessup, of Eastonville, Colo.

Wesley C. Stewart was educated in the district school and remained at home until his enlistment, in October, 1861, in Company I, Sixty-sixth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, organized as Fourteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, mostly made up from Illinois men, and enrolled as sharpshooters. They spent their first winter in Northern Missouri, then took a boat to the Ohio River, and thence went to Fort Henry, Tenn., where they were assigned to the Army of the Tennessee. They participated in the Battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth, then took part in the Atlanta campaign and were one hundred days under fire, after which they marched with Sherman to the sea. Mr. Stewart took part in the Grand Review at Washington and was mustered out of service July 19, 1865, being discharged at Springfield, Ill. Though he took part in many important engagements, Mr. Stewart was never wounded, taken prisoner or sent to a hospital. At the close of the war he returned to Wabash County, where he remained until after his marriage.

In March, 1868, Mr. Stewart married Cerville R. Hill, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, daughter of William S. and Anna (Moore) Hill, natives of North Carolina and Tennessee, respectively. After his marriage Mr. Stewart moved to Greenwood, Kan., soon afterward to Elk County, that State, and pre-empted 160 acres of Indian land. He erected a house, put his farm under cultivation and lived there about six years, then traded it for a flour and grist mill at Longton, Kan. After operating this mill for four years, he sold it, and in 1879 returned to Wabash County and there rented a farm. Soon after his return he bought a threshing outfit and saw-mill, which he conducted until about 1905, when he sold out to his sons. In 1902 he purchased the shares of the other heirs to his father's old homestead, and has since been engaged there in farming. He raises Poland-China hogs and keeps dairy cattle. Children as follows were born to Mr. Stewart and wife: Anna M., at home; Agnes L., married T. H. Gilkinson, of Friendsville Precinct, and died at the age of twenty-seven years; W. Claud, of Lick Prairie Precinct, married Etta Williams, daughter of H. Williams; Winter C., of Lick Prairie Precinct, married May Smith, daughter of William and Abigail (Payne) Smith; and John W., who died in February, 1909, at the age of twenty-two years.

Mr. Stewart is a devout member of the Christian Church, of which he is an Elder. He is a Republican in politics and served twelve years as Justice of the Peace in Illinois, also two years in the same office while living in Kansas. He is a broad-minded and reliable citizen, much interested in the public welfare, and highly respected wherever he has lived, having earned a reputation for reliability and integrity.

STEWART, William B. (deceased), was for many years a successful farmer of Compton precinct, Wabash County, Ill., where his death occurred January 14, 1891. He was born in Sulphur Springs, Orange County, Ind., in June, 1822, a son of John and Rachel (Shively) Stewart, became a resident of Wabash County, Ill., when about twenty-three years of age, and there was married, April 2, 1854, to Mrs. Rosanna P. (Compton) Vincent, widow of James Vincent and daughter of Eli and Mary (Barnett) Compton. The latter was born in Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, August 8, 1832. Her parents were well known in the county and her grandparents, Levi and Rosanna (Phinesy) Compton, natives of Virginia, were among the first settlers in Illinois, coming from Kentucky, where they lived a few years. He settled on Compton Prairie, which was named in his honor.

James Vincent was born in Compton Precinct, in 1829, a son of Joseph and Susan (Garner) Vincent, of Wabash County, and after his marriage he rented a farm in Compton Precinct two years, then bought seventy acres in the same precinct. He died there February 14, 1854. He and his wife had children: Susanna, who died at the age of sixteen and a half years, and James, who died at the age of thirty years.

William B. Stewart lived on various farms after his marriage and finally settled on a farm of forty acres in Compton Precinct, to which he later added 100 acres more. After the death of Mr. Stewart his widow lived on the farm until 1896, when she went to live in a residence which she had erected in Keensburg, and where she now resides. Her granddaughter, Myrtle, Mrs. Perry Rosenberger, with her husband and children, live with Mrs. Stewart. By her second marriage Mrs. Stewart had one daughter, Rachel, who married Joseph Compton, of Coffee Precinct. Mrs. Stewart has spent her entire life in Wabash County and is universally esteemed by her many friends. She is in good health for a woman of her years and takes an active interest in her surroundings.

STILLWELL, James F.—Many farmers of Wabash County, Ill., have adopted modern methods in carrying on their work and have seen the advisability of raising high-grade stock in preference to common. One of these enterprising men is James F. Stillwell, who owns 162½ acres of land in Wabash Precinct. Mr. Stillwell was born on the farm where he now lives, April 7, 1879, a son of James and Sarah (Candy) Stillwell, natives of Illinois and Ohio respectively. The parents had children as follows: John H., of Allendale, Ill.; Mrs. John Trimble; Mrs. Lyman Brooks, of Lawrence County, Ill.; William, died in infancy; Lewis G., of Allendale; James F.; Joseph, died in infancy; Mrs. Harley Collison, of Lawrence County. Mr. Stillwell and his wife resided on their farm until 1892, when they moved to Allendale, where they now reside.

The education of James F. Stillwell was received in the common schools and he lived on a farm until his parents moved to Allendale, then remained with his parents in that city until his marriage, July 15, to Bert Armstrong, daughter of Burk and Angeline (Price) Armstrong, natives of Wabash County. Burk Armstrong is a son of Judge Thomas and Martha (Crane) Armstrong, natives of Wabash and Lawrence Counties, respectively, the former a son of John Armstrong, a native of Ireland, and one of the earliest settlers of Wabash County. Angeline Price is a daughter of Benjamin and Sarah (Wolf) Price, natives of Virginia.

After his marriage James F. Stillwell and his wife moved to the Stilwell farm of 162½ acres, which his father gave him. He here carries on general farming with much success and raises registered Clydesdale and Percheron horses. Mr. Stillwell is an intelligent young man and takes great interest in the development and moral progress of the community. In October, 1909, he accepted an agency for the Regal automobile, in Lawrence and Wabash Counties, and has made a good beginning in this business. Politically he is a Democrat and a member of the Christian Church. He belongs to the Farmers' Union and stands well among his neighbors, having many friends.

Children as follows have been born to Mr. Stillwell and his wife: Ida Margaret, born April 19, 1900; Clara Myron, born May 23, 1901; Martha Angeline, born August 11, 1908.

STILLWELL, William.—The grandparents of William Stillwell, Samuel and Elizabeth Stillwell, both natives of New Jersey, were among the early settlers of Wabash County, Ill., where they entered government land and began developing a farm. They endured the hardships incident to pioneer life and were among those who helped to pave the way for the prosperity and comfort of their descendants. William Stillwell was born in Wabash Precinct, October 2, 1880, the son of James D. and Anna C. (Keiser) Stillwell, the former a native of Wabash Precinct and the latter of Hesse-Cassel, Germany. The father of Anna C. Keiser died in Germany when she was a small child and she came to Wabash County, Ill., with her mother. She was married to James D. Stillwell in that county and they began housekeeping on land in Wabash Precinct his father had entered from the Government. He remained on this farm until his death, in May, 1902, his widow still residing there. They were parents of eleven children, of whom the following eight survive: Siddy L.; Samuel, of Lawrence County; Odella, Mrs. Walter Short, of Corning, Ark.; Arizona, Mrs. Charles Canedy, of Mt. Carmel; Herman, of Wabash Precinct; Mary, with her mother; James, of Wabash Precinct; and William.

The education of William Stillwell was received in the district schools. He was the third child of his parents and lived at home on the farm until his marriage, June 10, 1900, to Florence R. Smith, born in Wabash Precinct, October 11, 1883, daughter of George W. and Harriet Amanda (Wood) Smith, of Wabash Precinct. The parents of George W. Smith were John and Lucy A. (Hanks) Smith, the former born in Wabash Precinct and the latter in Lawrence County, Ill. Mrs. Smith's parents were Obed and Mary Abiline (Daily) Wood, of Wabash County.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Stillwell located on a forty-acre farm he had inherited from his father, to which he has added twenty acres. They lived five years in an old house which was located on the farm and then erected a new story and a half frame house, with modern conveniences. He has also erected new barns and outbuildings and has made many improvements, having sixty-two acres under cultivation. Besides carrying on different varieties of farming, he makes a specialty of raising horses, mules and hogs, in which he has been successful. He is a young man of enterprise and intelligence and a representative of the highest class of citizen. He is up to modern ideas in carrying on his work, and stands well among his neighbors as upright and honest in all his dealings.

Mr. Stillwell and his wife became parents of children as follows: Elva Lois, born December 23, 1900; Lilla Jane, born December 3, 1902; Florence Catherine, born February 25, 1905, and Clara Smith, born January 1, 1908. Mr. Stillwell is a member of the United Brethren Church. Politically he is a Democrat and has been School Director since 1907. He belongs to the Mystic Workers of the World, of Patton, Ill., and to the Farmers' Co-operative Union. He and his wife are well known in the community and have a large number of friends.

STOLTZ, Edmond L.—The Stoltz family has been prominent in Wabash County for several generations, and its members have contributed their full share toward the progress and development of that region. The first to come to the county was the grandfather of Edmond L. Stoltz, who came with his wife and family from France to Berks County, Pa., and later settled on a farm near Friendsville, Ill., where he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives. Edmond L. Stoltz was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, June 9, 1861, a son of Lewis and Maria P. (Lescher) Stoltz.

Lewis Stoltz was born in France and was an infant when his parents brought him to Berks County, Pa. His wife was a daughter of Jacob and Mary (Bricker) Lescher, both of Germany, and she was born in Womelsdorf, Pa. Mr. Lescher came to Wabash County, Ill., in 1835, and was one of the earliest physicians in the county. He settled in Mt. Carmel. Lewis Stoltz was a tailor and was engaged in business at Lawrenceville, Ill., two years after his marriage, then settled on a farm near Mt. Carmel, which he purchased and conducted until his death, June 10, 1898. His widow died in March, 1900. They were parents of eight children, as follows: Charles, died in infancy; William E. and George H., of Mt. Carmel; Henrietta, died in March, 1888; Mary L., Mrs. L. L. Coleman, of Mt. Carmel; Samuel L., of Leesville, Tex.; Edmond L.; Lillie M., Mrs. Samuel Spencer, of Mt. Carmel.

The boyhood of Edmond L. Stoltz was spent on his father's farm and he lived at home until his marriage, receiving his primary education in the district schools. He later attended the Elliott Business College, at Burlington, Iowa. He was married, in September, 1888, to Fannie Fearheiley, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, daughter of Andrus and Mary (Peters) Fearheiley, natives of Germany. After his marriage Mr. Stoltz resided at Bellmont, and was engaged in the agricultural implement business there until 1892, when he sold out and moved to Mt. Carmel, where for six years he worked at the trade of carpenter. In 1898 he moved to the old homestead and carried on the home farm four years, then returned to Mt. Carmel, where he has since been engaged in carpentry and contracting work. He has established a reputation for skill and thoroughness in his work, and his dealings with his fellows have shown good judgment and business acumen in his various investments. In 1892 he erected a handsome residence in Mt. Carmel, where he now resides.

The children born to Mr. Stoltz and wife are: Roscoe, died in infancy; Charles, at home; Noble E., died in infancy; Hubert, at home; Marie, died in infancy; Lester and Russell, at home. Mr. Stoltz is proud of his family, as he has every reason to be, and is a worthy member and representative of his name. His Grandfather Lescher was a prominent citizen of Mt. Carmel and highly respected. Of his ten children but one is surviving, Mrs. Margaret Kelsner, who now resides with Mr. Stoltz, but before taking up her residence with him had lived twenty-five years in Nebraska. Mr. Stoltz is a Republican in politics and served one term as Alderman of the Fifth Ward. He is a prominent member and a Trustee of the Carpenters' & Joiners' Union. He has established a good business through industry and thrift, and is looked upon with confidence and esteem.

STOLTZ, William George, a member of the well-known and highly esteemed Stoltz family who have contributed so much to the development and welfare of Wabash County, Ill., was born in Lick Prairie Precinct, near his present farm, September 5, 1867, a son of Henry and Hester (Deisher) Stoltz, both of Lick Prairie. Henry Stoltz is a son of George and Margaret (Hinkle) Stoltz, natives of Lancaster, Pa., and Virginia, respectively, who were early settlers of Wabash County. Hester Deisher is a daughter of William and Sarah Deisher, natives of Alsace-Lorraine, who were also early settlers of Wabash County. Henry Stoltz and his wife have spent most of their lives in Lick Prairie Precinct, at their marriage settling on Stoltz Prairie, where they lived until 1892, then sold their sixty-four acre farm to Arthur Williams and moved to Lawrence County, where they bought 138 acres in the oil belt. They carry on this farm and live there, both having reached the age of sixty-eight years. They had children as follows: William G.; Ollie, Mrs. Gideon Gardner, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Effie, Mrs. John J. Collison, of St. Francisville, Ill.; Ada, Mrs. Buren Highsmith, of St. Francisville; Nora, the third child, died in infancy.

The boyhood of William George Stoltz was spent on his father's farm and he was educated in the Stoltz District School. He remained with his parents until his marriage, October 18, 1891, to Nellie Roe Williams, who was born in Friendsville Precinct, daughter of Arthur and Esther (Williams) Williams, natives of Wilson County, Tenn., the father a son of James Williams, of Tennessee. After his marriage Mr. Stoltz moved to a forty-acre farm in Section 29 of Lick Prairie Precinct, which he improved and erected a house and barns. The land was cleared but not fenced. He has added to it and now owns eighty-three acres, nine acres of timber, the remainder under cultivation. He carries on a general line of farming and specializes in raising horses, cattle and Poland-China and O. I. C. hogs. His father-in-law died February 11, 1908, since which Mrs. Williams has made her home with Mrs. Stoltz and another daughter. Mr. Stoltz has carried on the Williams farm since 1904.

Two children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Stoltz, namely: Forrest Authwin, born August 23, 1894, and Oma May, born May 7, 1897. Mr. Stoltz is a member of the United Brethren Church and has served as Superintendent of the Sunday School. He is a Democrat in politics and has served as School Trustee since 1907. He is interested in the Independent Telephone Company and is clerk of the exchange at Gard's Point. Fraternally he belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 1834, of Lancaster, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, No. 732, of Friendsville, and to the Farmers' Union. He is considered a representative and useful citizen and is well liked by his associates. He is well known in the community, having spent his entire life there and has become successful as a farmer.

STRINE, James.—Among the self-made men of Wabash County, Ill., who have been successful in the line of farming, is James Strine, of Lancaster Precinct. Mr. Strine is a native of Kosciusko County, Ind., born March 26, 1853, son of Matthias and Anna (Nine) Strine, the latter a native of Indiana. Matthias Strine was a son of Jonathan and Mary Strine, and his wife a daughter of Matthias Nine. Matthias Strine was married four times and had children by each wife. James is the son of his second wife, with whom he lived in Indiana until 1863, when he moved to Wabash County, Ill. Mr. Strine died in Lawrence County, Ill., in 1886.

The education of James Strine was somewhat limited, as he had to hustle for himself in his youth and attended the district schools but a few terms. As soon as he was old enough to work away from home he engaged as a farm hand, chiefly in Wabash County, where he was married, in December, 1881, to Elizabeth Weyl, who was born in Lancaster Precinct, a daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Weyl, natives of Germany. Mr. Weyl and his wife settled down to farming on timber land in Lancaster Precinct, and he developed a fine farm where he erected the first brick house in the county. He died on this farm about 1880, and his widow died about 1895. After his marriage Mr. Strine lived with his wife's parents for a year, then spent one year in Wayne County, where he worked by the month, and returning to Wabash County, purchased six acres of land from his mother-in-law. He rented other land, purchased a team and began farming on his own account, which he has since continued. He has added to his land from time to time, and has it all except ten acres in a high state of cultivation. He owns 142 acres in Sections 17 and 18, and in 1903 erected his present handsome residence. In 1904 he erected a commodious barn. He carries on general farming and raises a good many cattle and hogs.

J. Zimmerman

Children as follows were born to Mr. Strine and wife: Eva, married Paul Bleakley, and died in Lancaster Precinct; Minnie, of Fairfield, Ill.; Dolphie, married Mary McCrary and lives in Lancaster; Ethel, George, James, Vera, Ellis and Clifton, at home; Bessie, died in infancy. Mr. Strine is a representative of the best class of citizen, industrious and steadfast, always ready to take advantage of any opportunity for bettering his own condition or that of the community. He is a member of the United Brethren Church and in politics is a Democrat.

TANQUARY, John F. (deceased), who spent most of his life in the vicinity of Bellmont, Ill., was born in that village, January 1, 1846, a son of Alfred and Susannah (Parker) Tanquary, the father a farmer by occupation. Alfred Tanquary was born in Ohio and accompanied his parents to Wabash County when he was five years of age. John F. Tanquary spent his childhood on his father's farm south of Bellmont, and acquired his education at the Bethel public school and Friendsville Seminary. After leaving school he first engaged in teaching, which he continued for some eight years, and later took up farming near Bellmont. He was industrious and enterprising in his methods and consequently met with gratifying success in his work, becoming the owner of about 680 acres of land. He paid special attention to stock-raising and brought his farm to a high state of cultivation. He lived in Section 1, Township 2 South, Range 14 West, until 1892, then moved to Albion, Edwards County, where he purchased a comfortable residence and there spent his remaining years retired from active business life. He had been an active member of the local Grange Organization, and was always much interested in the public progress and welfare.

At the age of thirteen years Mr. Tanquary joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he remained a faithful member until his death. In early life a strong supporter of the Republican party, several years before his death he advocated the principles of the Prohibition party, being convinced of the righteousness of that great cause. He was always respected as an upright, God-fearing man and a most desirable citizen, and won a large number of sincere friends, who greatly deplored his loss.

The marriage of Mr. Tanquary occurred at Carmi, Ill., September 11, 1874, when he was united with Flora Ellen Price, born at Grayville, Ill., May 30, 1854, a daughter of Hansford and Polly (Ferguson) Price, the father born in Indiana in 1819, and the mother in Kentucky in 1812. To Mr. Tanquary and wife children were born as follows: Mollie Parker, born August 27, 1875, died April 29, 1876; Mrs. Matina (Tanquary) Brian, born March 26, 1879; Lydia Pearl, born March 22, 1883, died November 23, 1889; Mrs. Blanche (Tanquary) Runcie, born April 16, 1887; John Hansford, born October 9, 1890; Pearl Lucile, born September 23, 1893. Mr. Tanquary was a kind and indulgent husband and father and a true friend of all who reposed confidence in him. His death occurred December 13, 1903, at his home in Albion.

TILTON, Mark Lake, who is master of one of the most important lines of industry in any section—one on which every community is more or less dependent for all its material growth—is a carpenter, builder and contractor and his home is a beautiful residence at Mt. Carmel, which he built in 1895. He was born near Mt. Carmel, Wabash County, Ill., January 17, 1841, and is a son of Daniel L. and Phebe Jane (Walters) Tilton.

Daniel L. Tilton, now deceased, was one of the best known and most active business men of Wabash County for many years. He was born in New Jersey and was brought to Wabash County when nine years old, by his step-father, with whom he learned the shoemaking trade, near Mt. Carmel. Later he engaged in teaming and still later bought a flat-boat and carried commodities to New Orleans and other points for about eight years, then bought a farm of eighty acres near Mt. Carmel and to the first purchase added eighty acres more. He cleared and improved this land to some extent, but subsequently went into the butchering business in connection with farming, and built up a large meat trade which was very profitable during the Civil War and in which he continued for twenty-five years. During this time he also bought and sold cattle, hogs and sheep. For a time he was also interested in a peddling business, representing a mercantile store at Mt. Carmel. He was a life-long Republican in his political views. He belonged to the Masonic fraternity and also to the Sons of Temperance. For a large portion of his life he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He lived to the age of seventy-three years.

Daniel L. Tilton was married first in 1840, in Gibson County, Ind., to Phebe Jane Walters, who died in 1851. She was the oldest daughter of Reuben Walters, born in the city of New York and was seven years old when her father moved to Vincennes, Ind. Later he moved to Fort Branch, Gibson County, Ind., and kept a stage stand for years on his farm. To Daniel L. Tilton and his first wife the following children were born: Mark Lake, Ruth, Sarah Jane, Isaac C., Mary A., Lydia E., Clara F. and Laura E., all born in Wabash County. Daniel L. Tilton was married a second time, to Mrs. Mary Sissel, a widow, there being no issue. He was married (third) to Mrs. Alice Wood, a widow, and to this union a son was born, Charles C.

Mark Lake Tilton obtained his education in the country schools and at Mt. Carmel. He helped his father in the latter's enterprises and assisted in the clearing of the first seventy-five acres and helped to improve that tract. In 1861 he left home and spent his winters until 1864, in teaching school, spending three winters in Wabash and the rest in Gibson County. In 1864 he enlisted for service in the Civil War, entering Company C, One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served until the final close of hostilities, having filled the office of Sergeant. He was a good soldier and has a clean record.

Mr. Tilton resumed farming on the old place near Mt. Carmel, and also was engaged in butchering for five years and then moved into town and opened a brick and tile factory, which he operated for twenty-five years. His natural leaning was in the direction of mechanics, and the carpenter trade he learned almost without realizing his skill until he applied himself. In 1904 he sold out his factory and went into the contracting and building supplies trade. He is numbered with Mt. Carmel's representative business men.

On October 22, 1868, Mr. Tilton was married to Miss Lydia M. Simonds, who was born and reared in Wabash County and is a member of one of the old pioneer families of the county. They have had four children, the two older ones being deceased: Harry W., Mabel, Fred D. and Beulah R. Mr. Tilton and family belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics he is a representative Republican and served one term as County Commissioner. He is identified with the Order of Elks and the G. A. R.

TRIMBLE, John G.—One of the most progressive farmers and stock-raisers of Wabash County, Ill., is John G. Trimble, who is a native of the county, born in Coffee Precinct, April 5, 1858, a son of William and Priscilla (Glick) Trimble, the former born in Kentucky and the latter in Pennsylvania. Priscilla Glick was a daughter of Thomas Glick, a native of Germany, who located in Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, among the early settlers, becoming a large landholder and a man of wealth. William Trimble was an early stage-driver from Vincennes, Ind., to Grayville, Ill., and died when his son John G. was but two years old. The widow moved from Coffee Precinct to Mt. Carmel, and there John G. Trimble received his education in the public schools and the seminary.

As a young man John G. Trimble began rearing around Mt. Carmel and, after he was eighteen years of age, engaged in farming, which he continued until his marriage, March 4, 1892, to Minnie E. Stillwell. Miss Stillwell was born in Wabash Precinct, a daughter of James and Sarah (Canedy) Stillwell, natives respectively of Wabash County and Ohio. James Stillwell was a son of Richard and Mary E. (Schier)

Stillwell, of New Jersey. After his marriage Mr. Trimble moved to a farm east of Allendale, in Wabash Precinct, owned by his father-in-law, and later rented another farm three years. He then moved to a farm two and one-half miles north of Allendale owned by his wife and later bought eighty-five acres nearby. On the latter and on his wife's 124 acres, he does general farming. Mr. Trimble is a firm believer in the advisability of raising high-grade stock and has made a specialty of registered Hereford cattle, Percheron horses and Berkshire hogs. He and his wife have made many improvements on the place and in the fall of 1905 erected a handsome residence with modern conveniences and comforts. The following year they erected a large barn.

Mr. Trimble and his wife became parents of children as follows: Earl, born June 9, 1893, died December 8, 1898; Susan, born December 24, 1894; William, born June 5, 1897; Ina M., born October 31, 1900; Sarah Alice, born September 12, 1905. The family are well known and highly regarded by their neighbors. Mr. Trimble has been successful through energy and enterprise and has conducted his affairs in an able manner. He is a member of the Christian Church and a Democrat, and fraternally belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America of Allendale and to Lodge No. 715 B. P. O. E., of Mt. Carmel.

UTTER, John Charles, M. D., who is conducting a large medical practice at Mt. Carmel, Ill., was born there December 14, 1859, a son of Abraham and Elizabeth (Penston) Utter. The father was born in Allegany County, N. Y., March 11, 1812, and died on his farm near Mt. Carmel, September 15, 1872. His wife, who was born in Atlantic County, N. J., May 22, 1820, died at Mt. Carmel. She was the daughter of John and Sarah (Lake) Penston, natives of New Jersey, who came to Wabash County, Ill., in 1823, and settled in Mt. Carmel, soon thereafter, however, moving to Bald Eagle Prairie. The paternal grandfather of Dr. Utter was Major Henry Utter, who was born in Allegany County, N. Y., where he married his first wife, who died leaving four children. He subsequently married Rachel Hendricks, whose father was a Revolutionary soldier. Henry Utter was a soldier of the War of 1812 and rose to the rank of Major, by which title he was afterwards known. In 1817 he came to the Territory of Illinois and settled in the old town of Palmyra, the first county-seat of Edwards County, of which Wabash County was a part. The next spring he went to Bald Eagle Prairie and remained there until his death. He was a millwright by trade, and one of the well known and highly esteemed men of his community.

Abraham Utter, father of Dr. Utter, remained with his parents until twenty-one years of age, and then went to Schuyler County, Ill., where his brother was living and, for a few years, peddled fanning mills. Later he returned to the Wabash County home, in 1836 purchased the interest of the others in the estate, and soon afterwards purchased a place near Centerville, which he improved and on which he lived for fifteen years. He then purchased the place near Mt. Carmel, and there the remainder of his life was spent. He was a man of energy and industry, possessed of good business judgment and foresight, and accumulated a large amount of property. He was of a quiet disposition and reserved manner, but quick to take advantage of a good business proposition. He was domestic in his habits and tastes, and a faithful member of the Christian Church. Nine children were born to Mr. Utter and his wife, namely: Mary Gordon, born May 18, 1840; Josiah, who died in his second year; Henry, born June 7, 1845; Edwin, born November 21, 1850, died in 1856; Lewis, who died in early childhood; Robert Carroll, died in infancy; John Charles; Elizabeth Beamon, born September 15, 1862, and lives in Mt. Carmel.

John Charles Utter was educated in a private school in Kentucky, afterwards taking a three years' course in Eureka College at Eureka, Ill., from which he was graduated, and then spent three years at Miami Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio. He began the practice of his profession at Pueblo, Colo., where he remained until 1893, and then returning to his native county, took up his practice at Mt. Carmel. At Waco, Texas, on September 25, 1884, he married Frances H. Scarborough, a native of Mississippi and daughter of Daniel Scarborough, an early planter of the latter State. Mr. and Mrs. Utter have two daughters living: Camille, born July 18, 1886, married George D. Karsch, a civil engineer, living at Mt. Carmel; and Marie, born June 9, 1890, married Hugh F. Harbin, a farmer residing in Wabash County, and they have one child, Mary Frances, born September 2, 1909.

Mr. Utter has been very successful in his practice, owns a fine farm and valuable city property, and is also interested in coal deposits in this district. His skillful treatment of many complicated cases has won for him the confidence of the people of his community, and his practice has been, correspondingly large. He is a member of the Wabash County and State Medical Societies. Religiously he belongs to the Episcopal Church.

VEIHMAN, Frank S.—The farmers of Wabash County, Ill., as well as many throughout the State, have found it profitable to invest in high grade stock of all kinds, and one of the progressive farmers of Mt. Carmel Precinct, who has been very successful in this line, is Frank S. Veihman. Mr. Veihman was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, July 17, 1869, son of John H. and Mary (Epler) Veihman, the former born in Mt. Carmel Precinct and the latter in Pennsylvania. The father was a son of John H. Veihman, a native of Germany, and the mother a daughter of Daniel Epler, a native of Pennsylvania. The Eplers came to this country in 1734 and the grandfather of Daniel Epler was an artilleryman in Washington's army. Daniel Epler carried on farming in Pennsylvania until he removed to Mt. Carmel Precinct, Wabash County, in 1845. The Veihman family came to the county before 1840, and the grandfather of Frank S. Veihman worked in Wabash Precinct at his trade of shoemaker.

John Veihman, Jr., and his wife were married in Mt. Carmel Precinct and rented a farm for two years, then bought his present farm of eighty acres and later another forty-two acres. He has since carried on farming and is an industrious, useful citizen. Mr. Veihman was born in 1838 and his wife in 1841. They had children as follows: Ananda and Edgar, at home; Frank S.; Allen, of Mt. Carmel Precinct, whose farm adjoins that of Frank S.; Daisy, died in infancy; and Rolla V., of Mt. Carmel Precinct.

Frank S. Veihman remained with his parents until his marriage and received his education in the district school. He bought a farm of ninety-four acres eighteen months before his marriage, and this farm has been brought to a high state of cultivation through his efforts. He is a most progressive and wide-awake farmer, and has met with gratifying success. He has raised Percheron horses, registered Shropshire sheep, registered Short-horn cattle and registered Poland-China hogs, all of which have received his most careful attention. Mr. Veihman makes the breeding of Poland-China hogs a specialty.

Mr. Veihman was married, September 12, 1894, to Rosa Coleman, born at Mt. Carmel, November 17, 1869, a daughter of Thomas and Mary (Doell) Coleman, of Belmont Precinct. Mr. and Mrs. Veihman were parents of one daughter that survived, Irene, who was born August 15, 1897, and lives with Mr. Veihman's parents. Mrs. Veihman died May 30, 1900, and Mr. Veihman married (second), March 20, 1901, Hattie Barber, who was born in Lawrence County, Ill., November 27, 1870, daughter of John and Rachel (Litherland) Barber, natives of Illinois. Two children have been born of this union: Roy E., born May 13, 1905; and Gladys, born December 21, 1907. Mr. Veihman and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in political views he is a Prohibitionist, having been active in the recent agitation of the temperance question throughout Illinois. He is always ready to support every good cause for the benefit of the community at large, and is a man of good standing and influence; is well known in the county and has hosts of friends who appreciate his many good qualities.

WALTER, Louis, of the firm of Walter & Sons, who conduct the Old Reliable Furniture House, one of the oldest business establishments in Mt. Carmel, Ill., is one of five brothers who own the Walters Block, comprising five separate brick buildings which are all connected to form the block. They carry one of the largest stocks in the line of undertaking supplies and furniture in Southern Illinois, and have a floor space of 13,000 feet for displaying their line. Louis Walter was born in Mt. Carmel, November 4, 1862, son of Martin and Amelia (Schmidt) Walter, the father born in Alsace (then France but now Germany), and she in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany. He was born June 29, 1833, and died January 5, 1899, and she born October 13, 1841, died January 23, 1906. He was a son of Martin Walter. The mother, Mrs. Schmidt, was a widow when she came to the United States and brought her children with her. About 1854 she came to Mt. Carmel.

Martin Walter came to Coshocton, Ohio, about 1850, to escape service in the German Army. In Ohio he learned the trade of cabinet-maker and in 1855 located in Mt. Carmel, where he worked at his trade and became a foreman in a furniture factory. He also had a planing mill. About 1856 he went to Colorado, where there was great excitement over gold mining, going with several others who drove across the plains. He returned to Mt. Carmel and in 1860 was married. He worked at the carpenter trade until February 25, 1868, when he purchased William Kosier's furniture store on East Fourth Street, and in 1870 purchased a lot, 400 by 200 feet, on the corner of Sixth and Main Streets, where he erected a building, conducting a furniture store in front and in the rear manufacturing furniture and coffins, making the latter to order as needed. This was the beginning of the present large enterprise carried on by his sons, which is the oldest establishment of its kind in Wabash County. He had a partner for two years, whom at the end of that time he bought out. His six sons worked for him in the factory and store and, in 1897, he took the four eldest in as partners, later turning over the business to them. William M. died in September, 1901, and the three others continued the business until January 15, 1907, when John and Louis bought out the interest of their younger brother, Rudolph J. They have since continued the business and have a $10,000 stock of modern furniture, one of the finest in the county, as well as a complete line of undertaking supplies, and have a large patronage from both the city and surrounding country, making a great effort to keep good stock and cater to the wishes of their customers. Their reputation has been established for many years and they have the complete confidence and esteem of all who know them. They have two fine funeral cars and an ambulance.

Louis Walter was educated in the common and high schools of Mt. Carmel, and when old enough began working in his father's establishment. October 27, 1897, he was married to Amelia Bender, born at Mt. Carmel, daughter of Fred and Ida (Hoffman) Bender, natives respectively of Jasper County, Ind., and Mt. Carmel. Children as follows have been born to Mr. Walter and wife: Norman, Frederick, Robert, Helen, Clara and Richard. Mr. Walter is a member of St. Mary's Catholic Church, as are the other members of his family, and they are active in church work. He is a Director and Vice President of Mt. Carmel Banking & Trust Company. He is a Democrat in politics and a member of the Knights of Columbus of Mt. Carmel No. 1343, and has been a Trustee of the society since its organization. He also belongs to the B. P. O. E. No. 715, of Mt. Carmel, and to the St. Joseph's Benevolent Society.

WEIGAND, Sebastian, who was for many years known as an educator in Wabash County, Ill., has served with ability in several public offices and now makes his home in Mt. Carmel, though devoting his time to carrying on his farm near there. Mr. Weigand is a member of a family that is well known in the county, having been represented there over half a century. He was born in Mt. Carmel, October 9, 1864, a son of John and Clara (Stanger) Weigand, natives of Bavaria, Germany, who came to the United States in a sailing vessel in 1844, the passage occupying forty-eight days. His grandfather, Andrus Weigand, was a soldier under Napoleon from 1803 to 1812, and witnessed the burning of Moscow. He was a lumberman and worked at hewing timber. About 1857 he followed his son John to America and lived with this son until his death, a few years later.

After his marriage John Weigand and wife settled in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he worked at general labor until December, 1855, when he bought a farm in Wabash County, Ill., carrying on farming until his death, in 1886. His wife died in 1873. Their children were: Andrew, died in infancy; Samuel, deceased; John D., of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Charles and Mary, died in infancy; August A., of Mt. Carmel; Catherine, died at the age of nine years; Sebastian; Charles, died in infancy.

At the age of sixteen years Sebastian Weigand began teaching school in Wabash County and for twelve years taught through the winter months. During the summers he gave his attention to farm work and attended school himself. He first attended Cecilian College, in Hardin County, Ky., the county in which Abraham Lincoln was born. He later attended the Normal School of Lebanon, Ohio, two terms, and spent one term at the Normal School at Valparaiso, Ind. From 1890 until 1894 he served as County Clerk and Auditor of Wabash County, and proved an able official. He owns a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, which he looks after, while residing in Mt. Carmel.

January 20, 1892, Mr. Weigand married Margaret Fearheily, who was born in Mt. Carmel, a daughter of Andrus and Catherine (Peters) Fearheily, natives of Bavaria, Germany. Her grandfather, Michael Fearheily, was a soldier under Napoleon, and the family were among the earliest German settlers of Wabash County, where they have been prominent since 1837. Mr. Weigand and his wife became parents of children as follows: Clara C., at home; Margaret F., died at the age of two and a half years; Arthur A., at home. Mr. Weigand is regarded as one of the most intelligent and enterprising citizens of the county, where he is well known and highly esteemed. He is a member of the Catholic Church and belongs to the Knights of Columbus, of which he is Chancellor.

RESIDENCE OF JACOB ZIMMERMAN, FRIENDSVILLE PRECINCT

WEISENBERGER, George, a veteran of the Civil War and a successful farmer of Belmont Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of the county, born in Wabash Precinct, October 12, 1842, son of George and Racina (Black) Weisenberger. The parents were both natives of Hesse-Cassel, Germany, where they were married, and about 1835 they emigrated to the United States locating at Timberville, now Allendale, Wabash County, Ill. There Mr. Weisenberger purchased forty acres which he sold later and moved to Mt. Carmel, living on rented land until his death a few years later. His widow married (second) Nicholas Getz, who died about 1890, and she then sold her property and lived among her children until her death in 1903, at the age of eighty-seven years. By Mr. Weisenberger she had children as follows: Benjamin, deceased; John, of Belmont Precinct; George; Mary, married John Ingersoll and died at Olney, Ill.; Alexander, died in Wayne County, Ill., in August, 1909; Frank, died in 1865. By her second marriage Mrs. Getz had children as follows: Nicholas, died in Mt. Carmel; Simeon, died in Belmont Precinct; Henry, died in Mt. Carmel.

The education of George Weisenberger was very limited in his youth, but he has learned much in the school of experience. He attended Groff District School a few terms, and at the age of eighteen years began working for farmers. In 1864 he went to Douglas County, Ill., and February 13, 1865, went to Bureau County, Ill., where he enlisted in the One Hundred Fifty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry. His company was sent to Tennessee, later to Columbus, Ga., and to other points. They were discharged at Columbus, Ga., January 24, 1866. Upon Mr. Weisenberger's discharge from the army he returned to Wabash County and resumed farming.

Mr. Weisenberger was married June 23, 1867, to Margaret Groff, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, September 4, 1846, daughter of Jacob and Mary (Fearheily) Groff, both natives of Germany. Mr. Groff was born in Hesse Darmstadt December 25, 1822, and died at Mt. Carmel December 8, 1909, and Mrs. Groff, who was born February 28, 1828, died June 2, 1898. Mr. and Mrs. Groff were married November 5, 1845, and they had eight children, four of whom survive, namely: Mrs. John Sites, Mrs. Charles Johnson, Mrs. George Weisenberger and Mrs. W. M. Baum. In January, 1899, Mr. Groff married (second) Mrs. Louise Reinhard, who survives him. After his first marriage Mr. Groff located on a farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct and later purchased a tract of wild prairie and timber land in Belmont Precinct, which he improved. In his later years he was a respected citizen of Mt. Carmel, having retired from active life. For a year before his death he had been suffering from cancer, from which he died.

Mr. Weisenberger and his wife began house-keeping on a rented farm in Belmont Precinct and lived on various farms until 1875, when they moved to the farm of her parents, where they have since resided. They have eighty acres in the home farm and forty acres on the Bonpas Bottom. Mr. Weisenberger has been very successful in general farming and also raises hogs, cattle and horses. Children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Weisenberger as follows: Jacob, of Browns, Ill.; George, born in 1869, died in 1871; John, of Mt. Carmel; Mary, married Ora Gay, of Belmont; Edward, of Sullivan, and Laura, at home. Mr. Weisenberger is a Democrat in politics and takes a commendable interest in public affairs in the community. He has spent his entire life in Wabash County, where he has won a large number of warm friends.

WETZEL, Henry (deceased), for several years previous to his death an extensive grain dealer in Wabash County, Ill., was well known throughout that region, where he was highly respected as a successful business man and a public-spirited, useful citizen. He was a man of high character, whose probity and honesty were recognized by all. Mr. Wetzel was born in Lawrence County, Ill., August 24, 1859, a son of Henry and Wilhelmina (Bowden) Wetzel, both natives of Germany. Henry Wetzel, Sr., came to Illinois in an early day and entered government land, spending his last days in Lawrence County. He had held a high position in his own country, being of noble family. However, through some misfortune, he had lost his holdings, and as it was not considered proper for one of noble blood to do any kind of work, he emigrated to America in search of a new home and an opportunity to make his fortune. He cleared his land of timber and gave each of his children a farm, his son Henry (whose name appears at the head of this sketch) receiving the original homestead. An uncle of Henry Wetzel, Sr., Lewis, was a famous Indian fighter, and known as a brave man in the part of Illinois where the family located.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wetzel, who reached maturity, were: Carl, of Richland County Ill.; Josephine, Mrs. John Ponomoff, of Lawrence County; Henry, Jr., and Louis, of Sumner, Ill. Henry lived at home after the death of his father, who passed away in 1864, and after his marriage in 1878, remained with his mother two or three years longer, then built a home for himself on the home farm and remained there until 1887, when he removed to West Salem, Ill., where he spent two years in a grist-mill. He then erected a grist-mill in Grayville, which he conducted until it was destroyed by fire, March 14, 1896. He rented a mill at Bellmont a year, and then engaged in buying and selling grain, shipping it from Grayville, which he continued about a year, then purchased an interest in a grist-mill and grain elevator at Keensburg, remaining in that city three years. Upon selling out his interests in Keensburg, he purchased an interest with Fred Holson, in the Bluff City Milling Company, of Mt. Carmel, which he held until his death.

Mr. Wetzel had received a fair education in the public schools and was a man of superior intelligence and energy, making his own way in life and achieving success through his own efforts. In 1878 he married (first) Elmo Wooden, who died in December, 1885, having borne him two children: William H., of Mt. Carmel, and Harvey, who was killed on the railroad, in February, 1906. In 1887 Mr. Wetzel married (second) Tillie Keiling, and they had two children who survived: Irving H., of Mt. Carmel, and Elsie, a school teacher. Mrs. Wetzel died in 1893, and in April, 1896, Mr. Wetzel married (third) Rilla Banks, a native of Daviess County, Ind., a daughter of Levi and Lettie (Gregory) Banks. To this union were born children as follows: George H., born June 29, 1898; C. Harry, born April 29, 1900; and Helen Marie, born March 15, 1902. The death of Mr. Wetzel occurred at his home in Mt. Carmel, August 21, 1903, and his remains were interred in the cemetery at Lancaster. He had many friends who sincerely mourned his loss. In political views Mr. Wetzel was a Democrat, and he attended the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was affiliated with the Knighted Order of Tented Maccabees, in which he had insurance to the amount of $2,000, which was divided equally among his widow and seven children.

William Henry Wetzel was born in Lawrence County, Ill., August 24, 1882, and remained at home until his father's death. He received his early education in the common schools and later attended the high schools of Keensburg and Mt. Carmel, and the Southern Collegiate Institute, of Albion, Ill. At the age of eighteen years he began teaching in the district schools, and three years later became Principal of the school at Lancaster, where he remained one year, and then took a similar position at Keensburg, which he also held one year. On account of ill health he decided to abandon the profession of teaching and became clerk in the hardware store of McClung & Keeler. One year later he became partner in the florist business with Mr. Fordyce, at Mt. Carmel. At the death of his father William Henry Wetzel came into possession of the original homestead of forty acres. Since 1903 his brother, Irving Herman, has lived with him; the latter is a civil engineer in the employ of Guy Courter, County Surveyor.

February 6, 1904, William Henry Wetzel married Margaret Wood, born near Friendsville, Ill., a daughter of Louis L. and Tempe (Adams) Wood, of Allendale, Wabash County. Her paternal grandparents, Alexander and Lucinda (Simonds) Wood were natives of Wabash County, and her maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Adams, were also natives of this county. Mr. Wetzel and his wife became parents of two children: Lewis Henry, born February 2, 1905, and died February 13, 1906; and Marguerite Elsie, born March 20, 1908. Mr. Wetzel is a member of the Christian Church, of which he has been Deacon since 1907. Politically he is a Democrat and is interested in public affairs. He is a young man of stability of character, a representative, useful citizen, and has considerable influence in the community.

WHITE, Milburn Judson, eldest son of Dr. Samuel N. and Mary (Sitherwood) White, was born March 24, 1873, at Beaucoup, Washington County, Ill. Doctor White was descendant of the old Virginia Whites, who were among the earliest settlers of the Virginia Colony, and his wife was a direct descendant of the house of McMichael, the royal family of Scotland.

In 1877, when Milburn was but four years old, his parents moved to Okawville, Ill., where Dr. White continued to practice his profession until his death two years later, August 20, 1879. From this time on the care of the family devolved upon the mother, who soon after the father's death, was appointed Postmaster at Okawville, in which capacity she served for eighteen years.

Here, amid the peaceful environments of country village life, our friend passed his boyhood days, attending the village schools during the winter months, and assisting the family by working as a hired hand on neighboring farms during the summer months. His mother was a woman of unusual character and energy,—a noble, Christian woman. His father was a man of highest repute and scholarly attainments, and desired that his family should be brought up creditably and receive the best educational advantages he could provide. That his death should not end his plans for his children's bringing up, his widow continued the fight along the lines her husband had planned, and by her untiring energy and faithful teaching inspired her son, who though but a boy in years, was the man of the home, to work cheerfully onward toward the goal he kept constantly before his mind, that of an upright and honorable manhood, adorned by a liberal education. Thus influenced and encouraged, he was inspired with an ambition to obtain an education beyond that which the home schools afforded. So, after being out of school an entire year, during which time he saved a meager amount from funds earned by hard work, a part of which was chopping cord wood in the Kaskaskia River bottoms over two miles from home, which distance he walked morning and night going to and from his work, he entered McKendree College at Lebanon, in the fall of 1890. After attending one year and exhausting his hard-earned savings, he found it necessary to seek employment to enable him to provide funds to continue his course in college. He secured a position as teacher of a country school near his home town, and acquitted himself so creditably as a teacher that the directors offered to increase his monthly salary by ten dollars a month, which was then regarded as an unusual inducement, if he would teach another year. The offer was inviting, but the desire to continue his studies in college was stronger, so he returned to college again, where he remained three years, working his way through by obtaining employment after school hours and on Saturdays. These were years of privation and sacrifice, but that they were well spent cannot be gainsaid. While in college he was popular with the student body and with his teachers on account of his gentlemanly deportment and studious habits. He was a leader in all of the college activities and distinguished himself as a member of the Platonian Literary Society, by reason of his proficiency as an orator and a debater. Although he carried his full quota of studies and earned sufficient to pay his board, he also figured prominently in athletics, especially distinguishing himself as a member of the foot-ball team, which he served as Captain and Full-back the last year he was in college.

Being thus busily engaged with the serious matter of securing an education, enlivened by a moderate indulgence in healthy, manly sports, our friend found no time for the acquirement of extravagant tastes or useless and hurtful habits and his clean life, as much as his scholarly attainments, recommended him for the position of Principal of the Enfield High School when he had finished his college course. In this position he served with pronounced success for three years, when he was elected Superintendent of the City Schools at Eldorado, Ill., where he served with equal success for three years. While serving his third year as Superintendent of Schools at Eldorado, he was elected Cashier of the Bank of Eldorado, the tender of the position coming to him unsought. His Board of Education being unwilling to accept his resignation, he occupied the dual position of School Superintendent and bank cashier for a period of six months, after which he gave up the teaching profession to enter into the banking business. Soon after his connection with the Bank of Eldorado, that institution was reorganized. The First National Bank of Eldorado resulting. Mr. White was active in the reorganization and became a Director and the Cashier of the reorganized bank. Here he served until the close of the year 1905. About this time The Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Nashville, in Washington County, was being organized, and it is a strong testimonial to the esteem in which he was held in his home county, that Mr. White was invited to that field for the purpose of completing the organization of that bank, and taking the active management of it as its Cashier. In this enterprise he was unusually successful, building up a large and prosperous business in a short time.

When at the beginning of the year 1908 the American National Bank of Mt. Carmel tendered the position of Cashier to Mr. White, the most serious question that had confronted him during his business career was before him for solution. Being in absolute charge of a large and rapidly developing business surrounded by those who had been friends and neighbors during his young manhood, and possessing their confidence and enjoying their esteem, it was difficult to even consider severing such agreeable ties and launching out among strangers to begin anew the work of establishing agreeable social and business associations. But here again we find the good taste and sound judgment that had been his best asset asserting an influence in the decision of this perplexing problem, with the result that he decided to accept the new position and become a citizen of the Bluff City on the banks of the Wabash. Here he has become a fixture among the figures prominent in the commercial as well as in the social and fraternal life of the city, and that he has found Wabash County an agreeable abode for himself and family is not surprising to those who have knowledge of the excellency of her citizenship and the splendid advantages her County Capital affords to a young and enterprising spirit.

It would be an injustice to Mr. White to speak of him without mention of his estimable family. In the year 1897 he was married to Miss Mary May, daughter of Captain William May, of Enfield, Ill. Their family consists of three bright boys, all fine specimens of "Young Americans."

If there is anything Mr. White is proud of, it is that he is a Southern Illinoisian, he having resided in this part of the State all his life. His honorable and successful career is a splendid illustration of what can be accomplished in the way of worthy attainment here in Egypt, by the boy of limited financial assistance, who is animated by lofty motives and is willing to strive honestly and laboriously to the attainment of high ideals.—CHARLES H. DORRIS.

WILKINS, Ellison L., who has been engaged in the occupation of engineer most of the time since he was sixteen years of age, now holds a responsible position in Mt. Carmel, Ill., as first engineer at the plant of the Electric Light and Gas Company. Mr. Wilkins was born near Fort Branch, Gibson County, Ind., September 25, 1868, son of Sharp and Fannie E. (Martin) Wilkins, the latter a native of Vanderburg County, Ind. Fannie Wilkins was a daughter of John and Lucena (Marvel) Martin, and was married at Evansville, Ind. He became employed as engineer in erecting machinery, but finally died in Oakland City, Ind., where he was engaged in the milling business. His widow still makes her home at Oakland City. Their children were: Ellison L.; Gertrude, Mrs. Oscar Verling, of Evansville, Ind., whose husband is a conductor on the Evansville &

Terre Haute Railroad; and Clarence, chief engineer at the Electric Light plant, Princeton, Ind.

When a boy Ellison L. Wilkins attended the public school and, as a young man, took a course in the Scranton Correspondence School, later taking up the study of steam engineering and electrical work. He lived at home until his marriage, although he was engaged in engineer work on stationary engines from the time he was sixteen years of age. He was married, March 20, 1895, to Mary Mayhall, born at Lynnville, Ind., daughter of George and Nancy (Bohall) Mayhall. Soon after marriage Mr. Wilkins began work as engineer in a flouring mill at Oakland City, Ind., where he had worked some years previously. At the time the electric light plant was installed there he became its first engineer and, a year later, became chief engineer of the plant at Princeton, Ind., remaining there five or six years, then accepted a similar position at Washington, Ind., where he remained until August, 1903, when he became chief engineer of the plant of the Mt. Carmel Gas & Electric Light Company. He and his wife have no children.

Mr. Wilkins has attained his present position through his own intelligent effort, and took a thorough course in the technical study necessary to become an expert in his line. He has established a reputation for ability and integrity, and looks well after the interests of his employers. He is a Democrat in political views. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Blue Lodge of Masons at Oakland City, Ind.; the Royal Arch Chapter of Mt. Carmel, No. 159; the Knights of Pythias of Oakland City, Ind.; N. A. S. E. No. 7, of Evansville, and the Royal Arcanum of Washington, Ind. He is well liked in Mt. Carmel and is generally respected and esteemed.

WILLIAMS, Henry Howard, a successful stock farmer of Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., is a native of the county, born in Lancaster Precinct, September 8, 1850. He is the oldest son of Robert G. and Susan A. (Penton) Williams, the former born in New York and the latter in Wabash County. Robert G. Williams, a sketch of whom appears in this work, was a son of Joseph and Eliza Williams, both natives of Ireland, and early settlers of Wabash County.

Henry H. Williams received his education in the Armstrong District School and was reared to farm work. He resided with his parents until his marriage, in October, 1876, to Elizabeth McManaman, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, daughter of Barney and Sarah (Gupton) McManaman, natives of Tennessee. After their marriage Mr. Williams and his wife located on a farm of 120 acres which he purchased, part in Lick Prairie and part in Lancaster Precinct. This land was but little improved, about twenty acres being cleared of timber. There was a log house with barns and an old frame house on it.

They lived in the latter until 1886, when Mr. Williams erected a story-and-a-half frame house (32 by 50 feet) where the family now live. He has been constantly clearing and developing the land and now has 100 acres under cultivation. He has been successful in general farming and in his operations in live stock. He breeds horses for general purposes, Durham and Hereford cattle, and Poland-China and Berkshire hogs.

Children as follows have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams: Luella and Ora, both died at the age of eighteen months; Effie May, married Claude Stewart, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Oma Bell and Ferbie Elizabeth, at home; Forrest Lake, of Lancaster Precinct. In politics Mr. Williams is a Democrat, and has served many years as School Director and Highway Commissioner. He also served two terms, 1903-07, as County Commissioner. He is highly regarded by all who know him, and in his business dealings has been actuated by high principles. Mr. Williams is well known and has many friends. In his religious views he is a Universalist.

WILLIAMS, James S., an enterprising and successful merchant of Keensburg, Ill., was born in Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., December 20, 1862. He is a son of Jeremiah and Mary (Hall) Williams, both natives of Kentucky. The parents were married at New Albany, Ind., where for many years he was employed as a ship builder. They afterward moved to a farm in Jackson County, Ill., and in 1857 he purchased a farm in what is now Coffee Precinct, Wabash County, where he died in the spring of 1876. His widow survived him many years and passed away in 1890. They were parents of children as follows: Louisa G., widow of John Martina, of Bloomington, Ill.; Franklin A., of Arkansas; Thomas M., of Keensburg; Joseph W., died in Keensburg, at the age of forty-seven years; James S.; William, of Wanette, Okla.

The early education of James S. Williams was acquired in the common schools in Wabash County and he spent one year in the Southern Indiana Normal School at Mitchell, Ind., where he took a teacher's course and also studied book-keeping. He lived with his parents until his marriage, October 4, 1885, to Edith M. Kimbrel, born in Coffee Precinct, daughter of James A. and Annis (Skinner) Kimbrel, natives, respectively, of Wabash and Edwards Counties, Ill. The young couple began farming on part of the home farm, of which he inherited 120 acres, and this was their home until 1903, when he rented his farm and moved to Keensburg, where he bought property.

Mr. Williams sold his farm in 1909, and August 8, 1909, bought a business block in Keensburg, stocking a store with groceries and hardware, where he has built up an extensive retail trade. He is well known and has many friends, enjoying the full confidence of his patrons. He carries a very complete stock in his various lines and carries on his business with energy and ability.

Children as follows have been born to Mr. Williams and his wife: Goldie, married Andrew J. Fern, of Hudsonville, Ill.; Edna, married William N. Fisher, of Keensburg; Glenn G. and Lawrence, at home. Mr. Williams is a Democrat in politics and served as County Commissioner from 1896-99. Fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, Camp No. 2193; Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Lodge No. 999; Royal Neighbors and Tribe of Ben Hur, all of Keensburg. In religious views he is member of Christian Church.

WILLIAMS, Robert Graham (deceased), for many years a resident of Wabash County, Ill., was born in the State of New York, September 1, 1824, son of Joseph and Eliza (Graham) Williams, natives of Ireland, who came west and settled at Albion, Ill., where for many years the former served as Postmaster. Joseph Williams had children as follows: George, Fleming, Robert G., James, Joseph, John, David, Serena, Eliza J., Susan,—all deceased.

When he was twenty years of age, Robert G. Williams began learning the trade of tanner, in Edwards County, Ill., and three years later established a tan-yard on the farm where his widow now resides, which he conducted many years, then for many years operated a threshing machine. He also carried on general farming. He first purchased forty acres, adding to his possessions from time to time as he was able, until he owned 184 acres, forty acres being located in Edwards County. He died on this farm, November 21, 1876, having been active and industrious all his life. He was greatly missed in many circles and left a number of firm friends to mourn his loss.

Mr. Williams married, December 21, 1848, Susan A. Penston, who was born in Mt. Carmel Precinct, April 7, 1828, a daughter of John and Sarah (Lake) Penston, the former born in Boston, Mass., and the latter in New Jersey. The parents of Mrs. Penston, Daniel and Alma Lake, of New Jersey, moved to Illinois at an early day, becoming very early settlers of Wabash County. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Williams has continued to reside on the home place. They were parents of children as follows: Henry, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Eliza, Mrs. Tobias Blakeney, of Vermillion County, Ill.; Fleming D., of Lancaster Precinct; Ada, Mrs. Oscar Swartzbaugh, of Edwards County, Ill.; Robert G., who died October 21, 1904, always resided with his mother, married Mary E. Brines, July 17, 1898, and they had one son—Samuel R.; Effie, Mrs. Joseph Walter, of Evansville, Ind.; Harriet and Serena E., deceased. Robert G. Williams, Jr., was first married to Amanda McGary, by whom he had three children: Leo, who died at the age of eight years; Winnie Pearl, and Nora Ethel. His widow resides with her mother-in-law on the home farm.

Robert G. Williams, Sr., the subject of this sketch, was much interested in public affairs and in politics was a Democrat. He was a Universalist in religious belief.

WOOD, Abner.—The Wood family came to Wabash County at an early day, and Alexander Wood, the grandfather of Abner, was one of the pioneers of Friendsville Precinct. His maternal grandfather, Ira Keen, was also an early settler in Friendsville Precinct and a soldier in the Black Hawk War. Abner Wood was born in Friendsville Precinct, October 16, 1850, a son of Ira and Rubina (Keen) Wood, both natives of that precinct. Alexander Wood was a native of Kentucky and Ira Keen from Hamilton County, Ohio. Ira Wood was married in Friendsville Precinct, where he was reared, and settled on a farm of 200 acres. He died in 1873 and his widow continued to live on the home farm several years, and then spent the remainder of her life with her children. She died in Mt. Carmel, March 26, 1908. They had four sons and five daughters, of whom those surviving are: Abner; Emily, Mrs. George Goodhart, of Mt. Carmel; Clinton, of Mt. Carmel; and Eleanor and William, of Friendsville Precinct.

The early days of Abner Wood were spent on a farm and he attended the district schools. He resided with his parents and after the death of his father, remained in charge of the home farm until his own marriage, June 11, 1876, to Sarah Smith, who was born in Wabash County, a daughter of George and Mary (Banks) Smith, both natives of Wabash Precinct. George Smith is a son of John and Rebecca (Ballard) Smith, he of Vermont and she of New York, daughter of a Methodist circuit-rider. Mr. Smith was married in New Hampshire and was a turner by trade. He came down the Wabash River on a flat-boat while the Indians were still living in Wabash County, and secured timber land from the Government, which he improved and developed into a good farm. The paternal grandparents of Mrs. Wood, Alexander and Nellie (Rawlins) Banks, were early settlers in Illinois, the latter a native of Lawrence County, Ill., and the former of England.

After his marriage Abner Wood lived on his farm and made a specialty of raising stock. About seven years later he moved from this farm of ninety acres, locating in Mt. Carmel in the fall of 1902. He still looks after his farm, but devotes the most of his time to buying and selling hogs, cattle and sheep, a business which he has found very profitable. He has established a reputation for fairness and honest dealing in business and is highly esteemed for his many good qualities. The following children were born to him and his wife: Ira, of Mt. Carmel, a school teacher; George, a physician and surgeon of Indianapolis, Ind.; Della, Mrs. Emery Davidson, of Mt. Carmel Precinct, and Dora, Allie and France, at home. Mrs. Wood was educated in the common and high school and is a refined, cultured woman, who is interested in many good causes in the community. Mr. and Mrs. Wood are members of the Christian Church. He is a Democrat in politics and a member of the Modern American Society.

WOOD, Francis Marion (deceased), formerly a successful farmer of Wabash County, Ill., died January 20, 1881, but is still kindly remembered by his many friends, who revere his memory for his high character and many worthy deeds. He was a good friend and neighbor and always had at heart the welfare and progress of the community. He has been missed in many circles and will not be forgotten as long as those who knew him live. He was prominent as an active supporter of the Democratic party and took great interest in public affairs. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Ben Hur Lodge and Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. Wood was born in Hardinsburg, Ind., June 20, 1852, a son of William Adolphus and Margaret Wood, both natives of Indiana. The father was a saddlemaker and in later life became a farmer. He moved to Wabash County and both he and his wife died there.

Francis M. Wood remained with his parents until his marriage, January 27, 1875, to Emily Jane Shadle, who was born near Friendsville, Wabash County, Ill., October 19, 1853, a daughter of Samuel and Barbara (Deal) Shadle, the former a native of Pennsylvania. Both Mr. Shadle and his wife died when their daughter Emily was a small child and she was reared by a family living near Allendale. At the age of sixteen years, wishing to be independent, she began earning her own living by working in various families, continuing until her marriage. She and her husband started housekeeping in Wabash County and lived on a farm until his death. They had several children, but the father was cut off in young manhood. His widow remained on the farm two years, then bought a residence in Mt. Carmel. In August, 1903, she erected a modern ten-room house, where the family now reside. The children were: Asa S., John Walter, and Mary Elizabeth.

Of these children, Asa S. Wood married Sarah Ellen Trunks and they had the following children: John Austin, Mabel Irene, Juanita Ruth and Nina Mildred. Asa S. Wood was a mason and contractor, and died September 29, 1900. John Walter Wood is a brick mason and contractor and lives at Mt. Carmel. He married Anna Woods and they have two children, Merle and Doris. Mary Elizabeth Wood married James Edwin Peters, a native of Mt. Carmel, son of Robert and Loretta (Sapp) Peters, of Wabash County. He is a grocer of Mt. Carmel, and they have three children: Garnet Mar-etta, Naomi Fern and William Howard.

WOOD, Nelson.—The Wood family is one of the oldest in Wabash County, Ill., having been represented there since 1809. Nelson Wood, of Lick Prairie Precinct, is a native of the county, born in Friendsville Precinct, February 27, 1834, a son of John and Catherine (Bratton) Wood, natives of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively. The father of John, also named John Wood, was born in England and came to the United States in 1770, becoming an officer in the Revolutionary War. He married a Miss Ogle in Maryland, and afterward lived for a time in Virginia, moved from there to Kentucky, and in 1809 entered land in the southern part of Friendsville Precinct, Wabash County, mostly prairie. He erected a fort in which the family lived for protection from the Indians. He developed a fine farm and died on it about 1838. His son John married Catherine Bratton, whose father died in Tennessee, after which the widow brought her family of three daughters and two sons to Wabash County. The mother married John Wood, Sr., and her daughter married John Wood, Jr., the former spending her last days in Edwards County, Ill., where she died about 1875.

John and Elizabeth (Bratton) Wood were married in Wabash County and settled down on part of the land his father owned, where both died, he on January 20, 1891, and she in the fall of 1878. Their children were, Livona, who was Mrs. Sidney Miller and later Mrs. Bradshaw, died in Mt. Carmel; Victor, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; Avaline, died at the age of twelve years; Sarah, Mrs. William S. Beard, died in Lick Prairie Precinct; Nelson; Clark and a daughter (twins), the former of whom died in infancy, and the latter in Wabash County in August, 1908; Judy, Mrs. James Campbell, of Mt. Carmel Precinct; John R., killed in Mt. Carmel, in 1906; Catherine, Mrs. John Leek, of Wabash Precinct; Niles, died in the Civil War; William, died in Mt. Carmel Precinct; and Stephen, of Mt. Carmel.

Nelson Wood attended the Shadel District School and received the same education as was given to most farmers' sons in the vicinity at that time. He remained at home until his marriage, April 11, 1858, to Sarah Ann Elm, who was born in Clay County, Ill., daughter of William Elm. In September, 1861, Mr. Wood enlisted in Company I, Thirty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being mustered in at Springfield, Ill., and assigned to the Western Army, under General Grant. He participated in the Battle of Shiloh, April 6 and 7, 1862, was afterward taken ill and as a consequence was discharged for disability, November 22, 1862. He made a good record as a soldier and acquitted himself creditably in the line of his duty to his country. Returning home after the war he resumed farming, and after his marriage located on a farm of 160 acres in Lick Prairie Precinct, upon which were fifteen acres of cleared land with an old log house standing on it, where the family made their home about ten years. He erected a good frame house about 1868, and in 1883 erected a new frame dwelling with modern conveniences, to which he added in 1893, making a fine home. He has developed a fine farm, all of which he has under cultivation except twenty acres of timber land.

Mr. Wood's wife died on February 15, 1878, and he married (second), December 1, 1878, Mary E. Ulm, a half sister of his first wife, whose mother was Sarah (Campbell) Ulm, of Tennessee. By his first marriage Mr. Wood had nine children, namely: Bertha, born February 6, 1859, died March 18, 1872; Rosella, born September 12, 1860, married Glenn Goddard, and died; Catherine, born December 21, 1864, married Lewis McGregor, is now deceased; Victor, born August 6, 1866, died December 15, 1886; Austin A., born January 3, 1868, resides in Eugene, Ore.; John H., born May 4, 1869, resides in Wabash County; Florence May, born July 7, 1871, married Robert Brines, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Sarah Melissa, born December 31, 1873, died March 17, 1875; Lenora, born January 29, 1876, died June 25, 1883. By his second marriage Mr. Wood had children as follows: William M., born November 29, 1879, died December 12, 1879; Elbern A., born December 22, 1883, resides with his parents; Judy L., born February 6, 1885, married Glenn Couch, of Mt. Carmel; Arva V., born May 29, 1887, and died October 5, 1903; Estes L., born May 22, 1894, resides with parents.

Mr. Wood is a member of the Christian Church, of which he has been a Deacon for many years. In politics he is a Republican and has served a few terms as School Director. Mr. Wood is identified with the best interests of his community and is a worthy representative of his family, which has been highly respected in Wabash County for more than a hundred years.

✓ WOOD, Oliver H.—Among the oldest families of Wabash County, Ill., are the Wood and Keen families, who have been represented there for several generations. Oliver H. Wood was born in Friendsville Precinct, November 6, 1845, a son of Joseph and Charlotte (Keen) Wood, and a worthy representative of his race. Joseph Wood was a son of Joseph and Leah (Greathouse) Wood, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Kentucky, and his wife was a daughter of Ira and Eleanor (Jordan) Keen, the former born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and the latter of Kentucky. Joseph Wood came down the Ohio River and up the Wabash to Palmyra, formerly the county-seat of Edwards County, then drove to Friendsville Precinct, where he secured government land, there married and spent the remainder of his life. Ira and Eleanor Keen were very early settlers of Wabash County, he being brought there by his parents when a lad, and the family took up government land in Wabash Precinct. Ira Keen married and settled in Friendsville Precinct, where he died at the age of ninety-two years.

Joseph and Charlotte Wood were married in Wabash County and settled on land they bought and entered, adding to it until they owned 500 acres. He died April 27, 1859, at the age of thirty-nine years and she died April 18, 1884, at the age of sixty years. Their children were: Eximia, married W. R. Conch and died in Friendsville Precinct; Oliver H. Mary, Mrs. S. A. Williams, of Springfield, Ill.; Horace, died at the age of thirty-five years; Joseph O., of Friendsville Precinct; Linder, died at the age of twenty-seven.

Oliver H. Wood lived with his mother after his father's death and took charge of the farm, remaining at home until his marriage, December 21, 1871, to Mary E. Milburn, born in Friendsville Precinct, daughter of Harrison and Emily (Shoaff) Milburn, the former a native of Patoka, Ind., and the latter of Pennsylvania. After his marriage Mr. Wood and his wife moved to his farm in Friendsville Precinct. This land had been previously improved and tiled and buildings erected on it by him. He has since added thereto until he has 135 acres, and here carries on farming, raising Jersey cattle and registered Poland-China hogs. He and his wife have two children, Clifton J., who is in partnership with his father in carrying on the farm, and Nora E., Mrs. George Schrader, of Friendsville Precinct. Mr. Wood and his son have made a specialty of breeding Barred Plymouth Rock chickens and White Holland turkeys. Mr. Wood is much interested in this industry and formerly served as President of the Wabash County Poultry and Per Stock Association. As a boy he attended the district school and the Presbyterian parochial school at Friendsville. He is now a member of the Christian Church and has been an Elder in the same since 1890. Politically he is a Republican and served three years as County Commissioner, from December 5, 1887. He takes great interest in anything that pertains to farming and has always liked this class of work, in which his whole life has been passed. He is an able and industrious farmer and has reaped results accordingly. He is now President of the Wabash County Fair Association, and his administration of its affairs has been most satisfactory to all concerned.

WOOD, Victor.—One of the enterprising and successful farmers of Wabash County, Ill., who has brought his farm from an unimproved state to its present productiveness, is a native of the county, born in Friendsville Precinct, December 4, 1828, a son of John and Catherine (Bratton) Wood. John Wood was born in Kentucky and his wife in Tennessee, he a son of John and Patsy (Ogle) Wood, natives of England and Bohemia, respectively, and she a daughter of David and Rachel (Greathouse) Bratton, of Tennessee. David Bratton was a soldier in the War of 1812, and on his way home at the close of the war was taken sick and died from yellow fever at Memphis, Tenn. His widow was on her way to Wabash County, Ill., when she heard of her husband's death and came on with the family to her destination. John Wood, Sr., was one of the earliest settlers of Wabash County, going to the county in the spring of 1809, and entering 160 acres in Friendsville Precinct, there built a home for his family. In the fall of the same year he returned for his family. Half of his land was prairie and the remainder timber, and there he and his wife spent the remainder of their lives.

The marriage of John Wood, Jr., took place in Wabash County and they settled on a farm in Friendsville Precinct, which he operated until his sons were able to take care of it; then took up the trade of gunsmith, which he followed until his great misfortune of becoming blind, about three years before his death. He was born in 1803 and died about 1885. He and his wife had thirteen children who lived to maturity and the following four still survive: Victor; Nelson, of Lick Prairie Precinct; Catherine, Mrs. John Leek, of Allendale, Ill.; Stephen T., of Mt. Carmel.

Victor Wood is the oldest child of his parents still living and resided with his parents until his marriage, December 7, 1851, to Eliza Armstrong, born in Lick Prairie Precinct, Wabash County, daughter of Ephraim Armstrong, of Kentucky. After his marriage Mr. Wood moved to an eighty-acre farm in Section 6, Mt. Carmel Precinct, all timber land, given him by his father. He has made all the improvements on this place and has cleared much of it. He has also added to his farm until he now owns 140 acres. The following children were born to Mr. Wood and his wife: Fannie, Mrs. George McGregor, now deceased; Seth; Joshua, who died at the age of seven years. Mrs. Wood died November 26, and Mr. Wood married (second) May 24, 1857, Harriet Ulm, born in Mount Carmel Precinct, daughter of William Ulm, and she died October 4, 1864, having borne the following children: Sarah C., Mrs. Samuel Moyier, of Friendsville, Ill.; Alice, Mrs. Louis Glick, now deceased; William, who died at the age of four years; Joseph L., of Friendsville Precinct. Mr. Wood married (third) May 25, 1866, Susan W. Carter, born in Posey County, Ind., daughter of Benjamin and Rachel (Williams) Carter. Two children were born of this union: John H., of Mt. Carmel Precinct; and Victor B., of Friendsville Precinct. Mr. Wood's third wife died October 19, 1876, and he married (fourth) Rachel Montgomery, widow of Thomas Montgomery, who had one son, Burgess, of Gibson County, Ind. Two children were born of this union: Cora, Mrs. Franklin Dantworth, of Granite City, Ill., and her twin-sister, Dora. Mrs. Wood died April 28, 1880. Mr. Wood married (fifth) October 28, 1880, Margaret (Frost) Campbell born in Allen County, Ky., a daughter of William and Margaret (Nix) Frost, the father a native of Kentucky and the mother of Tennessee. Mrs. Campbell was the widow of William D. Campbell, who was born in Tennessee and died in Edwards County, Ill., in 1876. She and Mr. Wood had one daughter, Jessie May, Mrs. Clinton Hinderliter, of Waterloo, Iowa. The following children were born to William D. Campbell and wife: Mary D., died in infancy; Indiana, died at the age of eight years; James, of Friendsville Precinct; John, and Almira (Mrs. Joseph Shillings), both of Mt. Carmel.

Mr. Wood is an enterprising and progressive farmer, and is always ready to adopt modern methods of carrying on his work. He is a member of the Christian Church and his wife of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Politically he is a staunch Republican and is much interested in the welfare of his community and highly esteemed.

WRIGHT, Edwin D.—The Wright family were among the very early settlers of Wabash County. Joseph and Margaret (Buchanan) Wright, the paternal grandparents of Edwin Wright, having come to the county from Ohio, securing land from the Government. Edwin Wright was born on the farm in Wabash Precinct, where he now lives, July 20, 1863, son of John R. and Rosanna (Keen) Wright, both natives of Wabash Precinct. Rosanna Keen was a daughter of Dennis and Margaret (Compton) Keen, the latter born at old Compton Fort in Wabash Precinct. The Comptons entered land from the Government and became prominent farmers of Wabash County.

The marriage of John R. Wright and his wife took place in Wabash County, and they then settled on land in Wabash Precinct which she had inherited from her father. There were eighty acres in this tract and part of it was covered with timber. He cleared the farm and lived there until 1870, when he bought 100 acres near by and later added more land. He died on his farm and his widow still resides there with her son, Van C., who carries on the home farm. Their children were: Margaret A., widow of Fred Holsen, Sr., of Allendale, Ill.; Edwin D., of Wabash Precinct; Joseph T., died December 22, 1909; Clara E., wife of Kent Adams, of Wabash Precinct; Van C., with his mother.

Edwin D. Wright received his education in the public schools and lived with his parents until his marriage, November 8, 1883, to Mary C. Hines, who was born in Pulaski County, Ky., and at the time of her marriage was living with her brother, Hardin Hines, near Allendale. After his marriage Mr. Wright purchased a farm of ninety-three acres which adjoined 120 acres given him by his parents. He erected a comfortable house and substantial barns and made many other improvements, clearing about sixty acres. He carries on general farming and raises draft horses, also buys and feeds hogs and cattle for market.

Mr. Wright and his wife have had children as follows: Emma Leota, Lyman Newell and Doreen, at home; Maggie, who died in 1899, at the age of eight years; Edwin Burns, died in 1900 at the age of sixteen months; M. Lucille, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Wright are well known and popular in social circles, having many friends. He is a member of the Christian Church, in political matters is a Democrat, and a member of the fraternal order Modern Woodmen of America, No. 1799, of Allendale. He is a public-spirited citizen and actively interested in the welfare and development of the community.

WRIGHT, John Robinson (deceased).—The late John Robinson Wright, of Wabash Precinct, Wabash County, Ill., was a large landowner and extensive stock-raiser. He was one of the best known men in the county and was regarded by all with the highest esteem. Mr. Wright was a native of the county, born in Wabash Precinct, in 1831, son of Joseph and Margaret (Buchanan) Wright, very early settlers of the region. The parents secured land from the Government and both died in 1842. He attended private schools when a small boy and began working at farm work as soon as he was old enough to do so. For a few years the orphan boy lived with various families in his native county, and then rented ninety acres of the home farm.

Mr. Wright married, February 24, 1853, Rosanna Keen, who was born on the farm where she now resides, January 24, 1835, daughter of Dennis and Margaret (Compton) Keen. Mr. Keen was born in Ohio and his wife was the second white child born in Wabash County. Their parents were Peter and Jemima (Gard) Keen, natives of New Jersey, and Levi and Rosanna (Burk) Compton, who came from Virginia. After his marriage Mr. Wright went to California, where he spent seven years, working in gold mines, herding sheep, etc., then returned and bought 107 acres of land from his wife's brother. His wife inherited 150 acres in Section 1, Wabash Precinct, and altogether they became owners of about 400 acres. He carried on general farming and became an extensive stock-raiser. Mr. Wright died June 6, 1892, but his widow still resides on the farm. Mr. Wright was a very industrious, ambitious man, and brought his land to a good state of cultivation, making all possible improvements. He witnessed the development of the county from wild prairie and timber to well-kept farms, dotted with comfortable houses, and in his youth had to bear the many hardships and privations common to pioneer life. He was a Democrat in politics and a member of the Christian Church.

Children as follows were born to Mr. Wright and wife: Margaret A., widow of Fred Holsen, Sr., of Allendale; Edwin D., of Wabash Precinct, a sketch of whom appears in this work; Joseph T., died December 22, 1909; Clara E., Mrs. Kent Adams, of Wabash Precinct, and Van C., who lives with his mother on the old farm. Mrs. Wright is a woman of high character and has many friends. Like her husband she witnessed the many changes that have taken place in the county for more than half a century, and well remembers the conditions and mode of living which prevailed in her childhood. Both bore their part in assisting in the developing and improving of their community.

WRIGHT, Thomas B., Jr.—Among the successful business men of Mt. Carmel, Ill., is Thomas B. Wright, Jr., who has many financial interests in the city, being the owner of considerable property, and one of the most widely known and most popular citizens in Wabash County. Mr. Wright was born in Hamilton County, Ill., October 9, 1870, a son of Thomas B. and Mary (O'Neil) Wright, the former born in 1843 and the latter in 1845, both in Hamilton County. The grandparents were Charles Henry and Elizabeth (Webb) Wright, the former born in Tennessee and the latter in Illinois, and John William and Jemima (Marshall) O'Neil, he born in England and she in Ireland. The maternal grandparents came to the United States as children and were married in this country. About 1840 they located in Hamilton County, Ill., where John William O'Neil became a pork packer. He also shipped meats and other produce to New Orleans and was an extensive grain-dealer. He died in 1882, having been one of the leading business men of Hamilton County. When he began his business the only means of long distance transportation in his part of the country was by water, and he lived to see great changes in business methods.

Charles Henry Wright was one of the early settlers of McLeansboro, Hamilton County, Ill., and he and Henry McLean laid out the town. There he erected and operated the first grist-mill in that part of the State, operating the same until 1861. He then enlisted in the Union Army, and served as Captain of a company in the Eighty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry to the end of the war. [The report of the Adjutant General of Illinois gives the name of James H. Wright, of McLeansboro, as Captain of Company E, Eighty-seventh Illinois Volunteers during the Civil War.—THE EDITOR.] Returning home, Mr. Wright engaged in business in the line of general merchandise, which he continued until 1872, when he went to Black Hills, S. D., where he died in 1894, at the age of eighty-four years.

John W. O'Neil also enlisted in the Union Army, in 1861, as a member of the Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, and served to the end of the war. A part of the regiment was with Sherman in the "March to the Sea," and after the Battle of Bentonville, N. C., 193 men and 12 officers took passage on the steamer Gen. Lyon, on the way home to be mustered out. When off Cape Hatteras the steamer caught fire, during a storm, and was totally destroyed, some 500 lives being lost, of whom 200 belonged to the Fifty-sixth. Of 28 persons who escaped, five belonged to the Fifty-sixth, Mr. O'Neil being one of that number. Mr. O'Neil had previously served in the Mexican War and was at Alamo just after the fight there. He died in 1882.

Thomas B. Wright, Sr., enlisted in 1861 and served in the Sixth Illinois Cavalry as spy and sharpshooter to the end of the war. He was a member of the Grierson's raiders of 1863, who comprised some of the bravest and most fearless men of the Union Army. He had one knee-cap shot off, was shot in his right arm, his elbow being carried away, had three horses shot under him, and had many other narrow escapes. At one time he was captured, but managed to escape. After his discharge he returned to McLeansboro and was married to a lady who was a graduate of St. Vincent's Catholic School and a woman of culture and refinement. Mr. Wright engaged in mercantile business in McLeansboro, where he continued until 1884, when he sold out and embarked in the lumber business, which his sons conducted. In 1886 he was ordained a minister of the Missionary Baptist Church and has been able to do good work in the cause of the church. He resides at McLeansboro and does evangelical work throughout his part of the State. His wife died in 1888. They were parents of six children, namely: J. W., of McLeansboro, who conducts a business of his own and is a leader in the lumber trade in Southern Illinois; Judge S. M., of Mount Vernon, Ill., who is a graduate of Ann Arbor Law School, was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one years and elected County Judge of Hamilton County two years later; Thomas B., Jr.; Charles Henry, who after attaining his majority was partner of his brother Thomas at Carmi and Mt. Carmel, Ill., from 1897 until his death, February 8, 1905, at San Antonio, Tex., whither he had gone for the benefit of his health; Dollie, born in 1880 and died at the age of nine months; Mollie, married Allen L. Spivey, editor of the "News Gleaner," and Postmaster of Shawneetown, Ill. Judge S. M. Wright was Adjutant in the Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Spanish-American War. He is interested in several large lumber yards and is the selling agent of some of the largest lumber concerns in the United States.

Thomas B. Wright, Jr., received his early education in the public schools and later attended the Northwestern University at Evanston, also the Rush Medical College at Chicago, and read medicine for a time with Dr. Halls in McLeansboro, but never completed his medical course. He later engaged in wholesale produce business at Cuba, Mo., where he had headquarters, with branches at Rolla, Salem, St. James and Sullivan, in the same State. He afterward located in Mt. Vernon in the same business, then went to Nashville, Tenn., where he remained a year and a half, when he and his brother Charles II. went into wholesale and retail lumber business at Carmi, Ill. In 1901 Mr. Wright opened a wholesale and retail lumber business at Mt. Carmel, and at the death of his brother in 1907, he bought the entire interest of the business and is now sole proprietor. He has other business interests and is the owner of much improved property in the way of houses and lots. He stands high in business circles and is President of the Illinois, Indiana & Kentucky Lumber Dealers' Association. He has always shown high honor and integrity in his business dealings and has an enviable business reputation.

June 15, 1892, Mr. Wright married Ida May Siddall, born at McLeansboro, Ill., daughter of Joseph Robert and Rebecca (McGirr) Siddall, the former born in the South and the latter in Marietta, Ohio. Mr. Siddall is a son of William and Martha (Maltby) Siddall, of England, and his wife is a daughter of William McGirr, a Quaker and a native of Philadelphia. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wright: Wilma, born April 5, 1893, at home; Robert Bernard, born February 22, 1895; Thomas Gilbert, born February 1, 1907. Mr. Wright is a Presbyterian in religious faith and politically is a Republican. He has taken an active part in local affairs and in 1907 was elected Mayor of Mt. Carmel, serving one term of two years. He was a candidate of State Senator in the fall of 1909, but was defeated by a small majority. He belongs to the B. P. O. E. No. 715, of Mt. Carmel, and to Iloo Hoo, No. 1861. Mr. Wright is now erecting a handsome residence on Seventh and Mulberry Streets, which will be one of the most modern buildings of the kind in Southern Illinois. He has the faculty of making and retaining warm personal friends, and he and his wife are well known and much sought in social circles in their city.

YOUNG, James A. (deceased).—In recalling the business men of Mt. Carmel, who once were most active and useful among her citizens, the late James A. Young is brought to mind, many of the substantial buildings of the place having been erected through his skill and the lumber furnished for many more from his mills. He was born near Mt. Carmel, Ill., August 10, 1831, his father being a farmer in Wabash County and a native of New York. Later the family moved into Mt. Carmel, the father selling his farm lands at that time and there James A., with others of the large family, attended school for a time.

James A. Young learned the principles of merchandising in Oregon, and when he came back to Mt. Carmel he went into the mercantile business for himself, but after conducting a store for several years reverses fell upon him and he failed in business. Earlier he had learned the carpenter trade, and to this he again turned after settling up his mercantile affairs, and during the following years put up a large number of buildings. He then went into saw-mill work and continued for twenty-five years being compelled to abandon this on account of an accident from which he later died.

On March 28, 1869, Mr. Young was married to Mrs. Mary E. (Shannon) Miller, widow of

S. P. Miller. Mr. Miller was born in Maryland and was brought to Wabash County by his parents in boyhood. He was reared and educated at Mt. Carmel, where he taught school for some years, and was also a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He left three children: James S., Otto P. (deceased), and Sarah H., all born at Mt. Carmel. Mr. Young was a member of the Methodist Church to which Mrs. Young also belongs. He was a man who was very highly respected by all who knew him.

ZIMMERMAN, Frederick H.—Among the successful farmers and stock-raisers of Wabash County, Ill., is Frederick H. Zimmerman, who has a fine fertile farm in Mt. Carmel Precinct, on which he was born October 17, 1864, son of Jacob and Belinda B. (Hinde) Zimmerman, natives of Pennsylvania and Illinois, respectively. Jacob Zimmerman and his wife had children as follows: Frederick H. and Charles Bradford, who died at the age of four years. Belinda B. Hinde, the mother of Frederick and Charles, died in 1865 and was the daughter of Thomas S. Hinde, the founder of Mt. Carmel. Letters of the Association which founded Mt. Carmel were taken out at Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1818, and are now in possession of the subject of the above sketch.

The education of Frederick H. Zimmerman was acquired in the common and high schools of Mt. Carmel and, as a young man, he moved to Fort Smith, Ark., where from 1883-86 he and a cousin, Harry H. Hinde, conducted a grocery store. He then returned home and remained with his father on the farm where he still resides. The farm was turned over to him on his marriage, July 13, 1902, to Agnes M. Oldendorf, born at Mt. Carmel on May 3, 1872, a daughter of Peter and Mary S. (Wise) Oldendorf, of Wabash County. They became the parents of two children: Jacob Hinde and Belinda Rebecca.

Mr. Zimmerman's farm, which contains about 350 acres, is situated at the dam in Mt. Carmel Precinct. He is an extensive farmer, raises fine trotting horses and feeds cattle and hogs for the market. He is prosperous and industrious and is reaping a good profit from his work. He is independent in politics. Fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Pythias of Mt. Carmel, having been Chancellor Commander of his lodge and filled the other chairs; is also a member of the Uniform Rank of same order, having held the rank of Captain for four years.

ZIMMERMAN, Jacob.—One of the best known and most popular citizens of Wabash County, Ill., who has been prominent in Democratic politics throughout his part of the State, is Jacob Zimmerman, who has served two terms in the State Legislature and has held several local offices. Mr. Zimmerman was born near Greensburg, Pa., September 27, 1831, son of Henry and Elizabeth (Steelsmith) Zimmerman, natives of Westmoreland County, Pa., and grandson of Peter Zimmerman, of Berks County, Pa., and of Jacob Steelsmith, who married a Miss Williams. Mr. Steelsmith was a carpenter, farmer and millwright. All the grandparents of Mr. Zimmerman spent their entire lives in Pennsylvania. Henry Zimmerman was married in Greensburg, Pa., where he lived until 1840, when he moved to Stark County, Ohio, where he lived four years, then removed to Upper Sandusky, Ohio, and bought land which had belonged to the Wyandot Indians. Here he and his wife died, he at the age of sixty-one years and she at eighty-one. Their children were: Jacob, the oldest; Rebecca, Mrs. Jones, now deceased; Margaret, of Upper Sandusky, Ohio; Susan, of Bellefontaine, Ohio; Mrs. Jerome Gould, who died in Mt. Carmel, in 1909; Bela B., deceased; Henry, of Upper Sandusky, Ohio; Bell, widow of Charles N. Lamason, a very prominent citizen of Lima, Ohio; Mary, and one other who died in infancy.

The education of Jacob Zimmerman was received in the common and select schools of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, and at the age of eighteen years he began learning the trade of a printer. In 1849 the man for whom he was working got the "gold fever," and left the conduct of his business in the hands of Mr. Zimmerman and Robert Dumm, and a year later their employer, Mr. Giles, turned his business over to his brother. Mr. Dumm and Mr. Zimmerman went to Tiffin, Ohio, and worked on a newspaper there until March, 1852, when the latter went through Kentucky and Indiana, and finally located at Marshall, Ill., where he worked on a Democratic paper a few months; then he and James C. Robinson purchased the paper and a Whig paper and, combining the two, named their paper the "Eastern Illinoisan." In 1856 Mr. Zimmerman sold his interests and went to Urbana, where he established the "Constitution," also established a paper at Greencup, Ill., which he sold a few months later. In 1860 Mr. Zimmerman sold his interests in Urbana and moved to Mt. Carmel, where he took charge of a Democratic paper, conducting it until the latter part of November of that year, when he went out of the newspaper business. Mr. Zimmerman at this time owned an interest in an estate which his wife had inherited, and after her death he purchased the interests of the other heirs, becoming sole owner of 245 acres of land in Mt. Carmel Precinct, near the Grand Rapids of the Wabash River.

While living at Marshall, Ill., Mr. Zimmerman introduced the primary election method, which became universal. While living in Champaign, he was instrumental in securing the adoption of township organization in the county. Wherever he has lived he has been actively interested in public affairs and has identified himself with the cause of progress and improvement.

Mr. Zimmerman married, December 25, 1856, Belinda B. Hinde, born in Mt. Carmel, daughter of Thomas S. Hinde, a native of Kentucky, and one of the original proprietors of Mt. Carmel. The two children born of this union were: Charles, who died at the age of four years, and Fred H., of Mt. Carmel Precinct. Mrs. Zimmerman died June 20, 1865, and Mr. Zimmerman married (second), April 13, 1875, Emma Harris, born in Mt. Carmel, a daughter of John R. and Mary B. (McNair) Harris, both natives of Wabash County. Her grandparents were Elijah and Elizabeth (Hogeland) Harris, he of New York and she of Holland, and Charles and Amelia (Gard) McNair, natives of Ireland and Ohio, respectively.

From 1860 until 1903 Mr. Zimmerman lived near the Grand Rapids of the Wabash, then purchased 160 acres in the southeastern part of Friendsville Precinct. He has devoted most of his time to agricultural pursuits since 1861, and raises Jersey cows and registered Holstein cattle, registered Shropshire sheep and also draft and driving horses. By his second marriage he had two children: John, living on part of the home farm at Grand Rapids, and V. Hugo, living with his parents. Mr. Zimmerman was elected on the Democratic ticket to the Illinois Legislature, in 1878, and afterward was elected for another term. During his first term he obtained the appropriation for building the Wabash County court house, and during his second term was instrumental in securing the appropriation for placing the statue of General Shields in the House of Fame, at Washington, D. C., for which service he was publicly thanked by the daughter of Gen. Shields. He has also served as County Commissioner and Highway Commissioner. He has given efficient service in whatever office he has filled and has been so mindful of the interests of his constituents that they have delighted to honor him in any way they could. Mr. Zimmerman has been a member of the Masonic Order since 1852, and also belongs to the Mt. Carmel Chapter. He served as Worshipful Master of the lodge at Mt. Carmel a number of years, and at the conclusion of his service his lodge brothers presented him with a unique Pastmaster's jewel.

ZIMMERMAN, John Henry, though a young man, has shown himself possessed of considerable business talent and has been successful in various lines of enterprise. Mr. Zimmerman was born in Section 9, Mt. Carmel Precinct, February 22, 1880, a son of Jacob and Emma J. (Harris) Zimmerman, of Wabash County, the latter born in Mt. Carmel. They had three children, all boys.

The early education of John Henry Zimmerman was received in private schools until he was about seventeen years of age, and he afterward graduated from the high school at Mt. Carmel. When eighteen years of age he became employed as a clerk in a shoe and dry-goods store in Mt. Carmel, and about four years later engaged in farming on sixty acres of his father's farm. Here he carries on diversified farming and makes a specialty of hog raising.

November 14, 1902, Mr. Zimmerman married Clara Shryock, born near Olney, Ill., a daughter of Valentine and Margaret Shryock. One son has been born of this union, J. Richard, born July 2, 1904. Mr. Zimmerman is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in politics is a Democrat, though he does not care for public office. He has taken great pride in developing and improving his farm, and the results have been highly satisfactory. He is considered a representative and useful citizen and stands well in the community.
